MR. CARDINAL: Mr. Speaker, that's a good question. In 2001 there was a committee set up actually of public members and stakeholders to study the consequences of introducing exactly the question the member is asking about, a one-day licence. The committee used a range of data and information sources and really looked at the issue carefully over a period of a year. The committee's recommendation at this time of course is not to introduce a one-day licence, and there are a number of reasons for it. Basically, one is fairness in relation to licences, because we don't have that process available to Albertans or other Canadians, and to have it available for a non-Canadian visiting would be not fair.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. HORNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My next question is also to the same minister. Can the minister tell the Assembly if it's too costly compared to other jurisdictions for the average Albertan to go fishing for a few days?

MR. CARDINAL: Well, Mr. Speaker, our annual fishing licence for Alberta is $18 a year plus an $8 WIN card, which you could use for a five-year period. Visitors to Canada pay $20 either per day or per week or per year plus the $8 WIN card, which lasts five years. So I believe it is a good deal, especially for Americans that do come to visit. With the dollar exchange difference, their fees could be considerably cheaper than what Albertans and other Canadians would pay.

At the same time, we are trying to keep the fees affordable for all Albertans and also of course to be fair and encourage non-Canadians that come into Alberta. The advisory committee actually surveyed over 500 people and conducted focus group research and talked to other officials from other provinces and found that what we are doing here is reasonable. We do have to have a balance. We have to have revenues to sustain our resources, and at the same time it has to be affordable. Part of the money goes to the Alberta Conservation Association, which does a lot of good work in preservation of our habitat in the province. Therefore, some of the money is returned to them, and we keep some in order to restock the lakes.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. HORNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final supplementary to the same minister is simply to ask if the minister would consider reviewing this policy and the allowing of one-day licences.

MR. CARDINAL: Yes, Mr. Speaker. We always continue monitoring situations of this nature, and I promise you that we will do that, but at the same time it is important to note that we do have some free fishing opportunities in Alberta already. For example, we have two free fishing weekends per year. As well, seniors over 65 and youth under 16 can fish for free year-round in Alberta. So we do have that, and I am confident that the licensing that we currently have in Alberta is achieving the balance we require.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

School Funding

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Parents claim that they are both directly and indirectly raising money for school basics. They further claim that they are covering a shortfall in government school funding. My questions are to the Minister of Learning. How does the department determine the actual costs of operating school programs?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

DR. OBERG: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We fund school boards, not individual programs, and we divvy out the dollars to the school boards based on an allocation formula that has been in place for roughly five or six years. We are constantly looking at finding new ways to divvy out the dollars in a fair way, but we do not look at specific programs.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you. To the same minister: how can you allocate dollars to programs if you don't know what they cost?

DR. OBERG: Quite simply, Mr. Speaker, the dollars go out to the schools to run the programs. We do have things like English as a Second Language which we give specific dollars to, but in general we give the dollars to the school boards to allocate out to their particular schools.

DR. MASSEY: Again to the same minister: how do you determine what goes out to the schools if you don't know what those programs that the boards are going to pay for will cost?

DR. OBERG: Mr. Speaker, I guess I'll repeat it again: it is the school boards who divvy it out to the schools.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, followed by the hon. Member for Dunvegan.

2:10 Electricity Deregulation

MR. MASON: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Electricity deregulation in Alberta has meant higher prices for consumers and a complicated electricity system that no one really understands. One of these strange creatures in this complicated scheme is the Balancing Pool, which is a fund that's been set up to manage the transition to deregulation. On December 31 of 2001 the Balancing Pool took a billion-dollar write-down in its financial assets. Now, it's the average consumer of electricity who is responsible for making up any shortfalls in the Balancing Pool by having those charges added to their electricity bills. My question is to the Premier. How much does the Premier expect that electricity bills of the average Albertan will go up because of the huge hole that is developing in the Balancing Pool budget?

MR. KLEIN: I don't have any expectations, barring some unforeseen circumstances such as an extreme hike in the price of gas, natural gas – that could be one of the contributing factors. Another contributing factor could be a number of generators shutting down for mechanical reasons at the same time. Another factor could be renewed economic activity that, you know, results in an increased demand for electricity, Mr. Speaker. If everything stays the same, then I would suspect that electricity prices will average out to a reasonable level. I would point out that the monthly average for April in the year 2000, under a totally regulated environment, was 9.4 cents a kilowatt-hour. That's in the year 2000. You can get this information anywhere. If the hon. member prefers to look on the Internet or to go to any source he wants, the figures don't lie. In April 2000 the monthly average was 9.4 cents a kilowatt-hour. In April 2002, just last month, the monthly average was 4.5 cents a kilowatt-hour.

MR. MASON: Mr. Speaker, my eyes are watering because the Premier is blowing so much smoke.

Given that the annual report of the Balancing Pool states that “to the extent the proceeds from any sale” – and this is of the Balancing Pool – “do not cover the fixed cost obligations under the PPAs, the Balancing Pool will be required to fund the difference,” will the Premier admit that the last answer he gave is just a bunch of nonsense?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I really do take strong exception, and I take exception on behalf of the public service employees who are charged with preparing these figures on a month-to-month basis. This hon. member – and I use that term loosely – is calling a dedicated member of our public service a liar. That's what he did.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. If the Premier doesn't understand how our deregulated electrical system doesn't work, how can he expect average Albertans who have to pay their power bills to understand it?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, nothing could be clearer than the figures I just quoted, and he said that those figures are wrong. They were prepared by the public service of this province, and what he's saying is that they are deliberately somehow misleading the Alberta public. I'll repeat those figures. Nothing could be simpler. Nothing could be more elementary, elementary enough so that even this hon. member can understand. The average price in April of 2000, in a totally regulated environment, was 9.4 cents a kilowatt-hour. In April of 2002, in a deregulated environment, it was 4.5 cents a kilowatt-hour. I was asked by the media yesterday: what was the price of power? On May 6, yesterday, of 2000, it was 3.7 cents a kilowatt-hour. On May 6, 2002, the average daily price was 1.6 cents a kilowatt-hour.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Dunvegan, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

PDD Boards

MR. GOUDREAU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Over the past few weeks I've received numerous calls, letters, and visits from individuals who are concerned about PDD. Some are concerned about existing budgets that have varied over the past year. Service providers and clients want to know what they can anticipate from their regional boards. My question to the Minister of Community Development: when will our service providers be given the clear budgets and guideline directions that are so important for their operations?

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Well, Mr. Speaker, we go through a particular process every year about now starting with the budget estimates, which, as the hon. member would know, were provided to all of our community boards and to all members of this House a few months ago. Then over the course of several weeks thereafter, we have our discussions here, and we set what we believe to be our best estimates of what those budgets will be. Particularly during the month of April through our community regional government process our PDD Provincial Board sits down and discusses with each of the CEOs and/or board chairs in the six regional areas what their particular targets are going to be. Those numbers will fluctuate from time to time, but we had a bit of an anomaly last year because of September 11. So there were some minor inconsistencies that had to occur naturally because all government departments were asked to trim back 1 percent. However, the upshot of it all for all areas across the province really was that they still shared in an 8 percent increase last year, and they're going to share in an 8 percent increase again this year.

In the case of the PDD Northwest Community Board, Mr. Speaker, our estimates showed about a $14.2 million budget or thereabouts, and they can expect about a 7 to 8 percent increase over and above that once we finish our negotiations with the PDD Provincial Board. So that's about as clear as we can be.

MR. GOUDREAU: My second question is to the same minister. Can the minister assure us that PDD contract renewals will be clear and not subject to inconsistencies and various interpretations?

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Well, Mr. Speaker, indeed clarity in our contracts and our contract renewals is something we always do strive for. Having said that, I think we need to understand that actually it's the regional community boards who do that contracting or that contract renewal function for government. In doing that, they will review a lot of factors that might have come into play over the last year. Indeed, it's all centred around the quality of service that local agencies are able to provide.

I would say, Mr. Speaker, that we are really quite happy with the agencies that the community boards are able to contract with, and I hope that no one is undergoing any contract renewal difficulties. If they are, then perhaps there might be, you know, some reasons for that. Otherwise, I think the member can look forward to some pretty positive developments in all areas of the province in that regard.

MR. GOUDREAU: My final question is again to the same minister. Will the minister encourage his staff to have frank and open nonconfrontational discussions with local PDD agencies and service providers, especially in the northwest region?

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Well, my staff, so to speak, which are Community Development staff, don't frequently get involved directly with the community service agencies. It is more often the case, in fact almost exclusively the case that contracts and things of that nature are the responsibility of the community boards and their staff, who in turn will get together with the community agencies and their staff so as to arrive at a mutually agreeable process and budget amounts and so on.

In answer to the question of openness and frankness or whatever it was, I certainly always encourage that with my staff working with community PDD staff, working with local agency community staff, because after all, we are all serving the same individuals. So it's very important, Mr. Speaker, that we do have those kinds of frank and honest discussions, and I'll do everything I can to ensure that they continue in that vein.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The upcoming G-8 summit in Kananaskis presents many security and access concerns for the province. My first question is to the Minister of Community Development. What plans does this minister have in his department to maintain recreational access and control random camping in the Kananaskis area during the summit?

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I recall, about 95 percent of Kananaskis Country will remain open for normal usage. We are just finalizing some other negotiations which in the end will not only provide for the utmost of security, as I answered earlier today, but will also ensure that strict adherence – or as strict as we can make it – to the acts and the policies and conservation methods is indeed followed.

Now, there will be certain access points, hon. member, that will be shut off and monitored very closely so that we are able to deliver on these promises that we're making. As soon as the federal government is able to release some of that, they will. In the meantime, there is a web site that has been set up. I have that if you'd like it, and I'll give it to you later.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second question is to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. What specific actions is his department taking to mitigate the risks to the forests and the wildlife during this summit?

MR. CARDINAL: Of course, Mr. Speaker, that's a very, very important issue and a very important area to our department and to all Albertans. We will of course continue to monitor the situation very closely. At this time of course it's pretty wet out there, and there's a lot of snow in that region. I don't think there's any danger of fires at this time, but you can be assured that as time goes on, we will be better prepared for that major initiative. We will monitor it closer, and if it requires some action to be taken in relation to fire in the region, we will do it accordingly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My third question is to the Environment minister. What plans has his department developed to address water access and contamination issues during the summit?

DR. TAYLOR: Mr. Speaker, we have a constant plan to address those issues. We have the Water Act certainly, that goes forward, and we monitor and enforce our river basins and will continue to monitor and enforce our river basins. Particularly during this time frame we will be having more staff in this area.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, there was one school group that arrived a little late. Would it be appropriate and okay for the members to allow the hon. member to introduce them?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests
(reversion)

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

MR. GRAYDON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I get so few guests that come to visit me that I want to introduce the same group twice, you see. I would like to introduce to you and through you to our colleagues here a group from the Grande Prairie Christian school. They are a group of nine visitors. With them are some group leaders: Mrs. Debbie Landis, Mr. Dennis Landis, and Ms Larissa Zatkovich. They're joining us and have watched the last few minutes of question period. I'd like us to give them a warm welcome. If they could rise, please.

Thank you.

head: Members' Statements

THE SPEAKER: Now, hon. members, I'm going to call upon an hon. member who became a grandfather for the second time last evening to participate first in Members' Statements, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Children Living in Poverty

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

We are the world

We are the children

We are the ones who make a [better] day.

So wrote Michael Jackson and Lionel Richie in 1985. This week Canada will be talking about helping children in poverty so that they are able to make that better day. From May 8 to 10 our country will participate in the United Nations special session on children. One wonders how much life will change for our children living in poverty as a result of this latest world gathering. Why? We are a country of adults seemingly long on rhetoric and short on action.

In 1989 the House of Commons passed a unanimous resolution to eliminate child poverty in Canada by the year 2000. A year later Canada was one of six countries that called for children to have the first call on resources, in good times and bad, at the 1990 World Summit for Children. What have we done since? The number of poor children in Canada has increased by 39 percent. The number of children living in families earning less than $20,000 has increased 32 percent. Social assistance benefits have decreased 19 percent. Average postsecondary tuition fees have increased 126 percent, and the number of visits to food banks has increased 90 percent. Making a better day may be difficult for the 121,000 children in Alberta who live in poverty. Making a better day may be difficult for poor children who live in substandard housing. Making a better day may be difficult for poor children who see their richer peers two and a half times more likely to attend university. Yes, children are the ones to make a better day, and for that to happen, we need to stop talking and to get to work.

Campaign 2000 has some suggestions. In the next provincial budget let's make children and young people a real priority. Second, make sure the views of children and young people are heard in this Assembly. Third, each of us can support at least one organization that is fighting child and family poverty.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

North American Occupational Safety and Health Week

REV. ABBOTT: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, May 5 to 11 is North American Occupational Safety and Health, or NAOSH, Week, which focuses the attention of employers, employees, and the general public in Canada, the United States, and Mexico on the importance of preventing illness and injury in the workplace. Alberta's economic growth is among the fastest in the nation, and large numbers of people are moving here because of our excellent job opportunities. We also have many new, inexperienced workers entering our jobsites, and they are far more likely to be injured on the job.

As the chair of the Council on Workplace Safety I have the unfortunate task of reviewing workplace fatalities on a quarterly basis. These injuries and fatalities must stop. We must make sure that employers focus on injury prevention and take extra care with new workers, particularly since we know that 50 percent of all injuries happen to workers in their first year at a job. Mr. Speaker, I'm happy to report that there are Alberta employers who have already greatly reduced their number of work site injuries. They are the models for the rest of the province, but it will take government, labour, and employers to make all provincial work sites safer. Representatives of all these groups will attend the Workplace Safety 2.0 Forum, where we will develop a joint government and industry safety strategy to make Alberta work sites safer.

Appropriately, the forum will take place tomorrow, on May 8, in the middle of NAOSH Week. It is appropriate because through NAOSH Week we are striving (a) to increase understanding of the benefits of investment in occupational safety and health, (b) to reduce workplace injuries and illness by encouraging new safety and health activities, and (c) to inform employers and workers so that they can make their work sites safer.

A list of NAOSH Week contacts and activities has been provided to each MLA office. I encourage my colleagues to attend some of these activities or offer your help to local NAOSH committees. Workplace safety is a shared responsibility, and NAOSH Week reminds us of that.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Redwater.

Redwater Olefin Facility

MR. BRODA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last Tuesday I had the pleasure of having two of my colleagues, the Member for Calgary-Mountain View and the Minister of Economic Development, attend a ribbon-cutting ceremony at the Redwater olefin facility owned and operated by Williams Energy group. This hydrocarbon liquids conservation project is designed to extract and separate NGLs and olefins from off-gas, a by-product of the oil sands upgrading process. Previously these components were used as fuel in Suncor's heaters and boilers. The recovered liquids and olefins are transported in batches via Suncor's oil sands pipeline to the facility in Redwater.

The highlight of this facility is the propylene splitter, which is over 300 feet high. Annual expected production is 130 million pounds of polymer grade propylene, which can be processed into polypropylene, used in making items such as carpet fibres, bottles, and containers. Propylene currently produced in Redwater is shipped to U.S. markets, as there are no facilities that manufacture propylene-based products in Alberta.

Value-added upgrading of Alberta's energy resources remains a priority of the Alberta government. Hats off to Williams Energy for their commitment of close to a $1 billion investment in the Redwater area, and I look forward to further development.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Wayne Hampton Canadian Principal of the Year

MRS. GORDON: Mr. Speaker, one year ago, in fact on May 31, 2001, I stood before this Assembly to recognize and congratulate a truly remarkable educator, Mr. Wayne Hampton, a long-time principal of the Lacombe Upper elementary school in Lacombe, Alberta. Last year Wayne most deservedly was named Alberta's principal of the year.

Today I stand before you and ask for this Assembly once again to help me and join me in congratulating Wayne Hampton. He has recently been told that he now has been named the Canadian principal of the year, indeed a most distinguished and prestigious national award, a title only one school administrator in all of Canada wins annually. This award is indeed one of the highest forms of recognition you can receive as it is bestowed upon him by his peers and colleagues, the Canadian Association of Principals.

For the last 14 years Wayne has given of his time, expertise, and energy to the students of Lacombe Upper elementary school. He continues to demonstrate his commitment to these young minds, their parents, and his staff, fostering always a positive learning environment that encourages all to look and think outside the box. He often questions what could be done differently, how best we can change or should we change the status quo. However, in questioning same, Wayne always provides a constructive, well thought-out alternative.

Mr. Hampton was instrumental in my bringing forward Motion 505, recently passed by this Assembly. Motion 505 urged the government to initiate an overall review and re-evaluation of achievement testing in Alberta.

Thank you, Wayne, for all you have done and will continue to do for education, for all the students of this province. It is indeed an honour and a privilege for me to congratulate you, for truly you are an outstanding individual, a proud Albertan, one of our province's best educators, and now a recognized national leader. Well done, Wayne. Well, well done.

head: Introduction of Bills

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Bill 28 Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act, 2002

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I request leave to introduce Bill 28, the Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act, 2002.

This bill makes minor changes to two pieces of provincial legislation and repeals a spent act for our province.

[Motion carried; Bill 28 read a first time]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Bill 29 Intestate Succession Amendment Act, 2002

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I beg leave to introduce as well Bill 29, the Intestate Succession Amendment Act, 2002.

As all members of the Assembly are aware, the Intestate Succession Act has been successfully challenged in our courts because it does not address the needs of people involved in committed interdependent relationships other than marriage when one partner dies without a will. Bill 29 will amend the existing act to include the new term "adult interdependent partner," which will satisfy the requirements of the court. I would advise the House that we are making the most modest of amendments to this act in order to comply with the requirements of the court, because it is our intention to introduce a second bill which will deal more fully with the question of adult interpersonal relationships.

This bill will be required to be passed this spring in order to meet with the requirements of the court.

[Motion carried; Bill 29 read a first time]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Bill 30 Adult Interdependent Relationships Act

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would beg leave to introduce Bill 30, being the Adult Interdependent Relationships Act.

Mr. Speaker, one of the most difficult challenges of government is to achieve two fundamental values of Albertans, which values are sometimes seen to be in competition. In Alberta marriage is an institution that has traditional, religious, social, and cultural meaning for many Albertans, and it is recognized by Albertans as a fundamental principle that marriage is a union between a man and a woman to the exclusion of all others. The terms "marriage" and "spouse" have particular meaning for Albertans, and government policy has been that we will protect those terms even to the extent, if necessary, of using the notwithstanding clause.

But there is also another fundamental value of Albertans, and that's a fundamental value of fairness and equal access before the law, and it is appropriate, when Albertans are in interdependent relationships outside of marriage, to define a legal context for the nature of those interdependent relationships and set out the applicability of Alberta laws to those relationships.

Bill 30 will amend several Alberta laws that address the financial and property responsibilities for people involved in committed nonmarriage relationships that involve economic and emotional dependency. The act covers a range of personal relationships that fall outside the traditional institution of marriage, including committed platonic relationships where two people agree to share emotional and economic responsibilities. The bill is based on the interdependent relationships model introduced in the family law reform project in January 2002.

Mr. Speaker, committed relationships of all kinds create financial dependencies. It's the responsibility of government to ensure that our legal mechanisms help Albertans to deal with disputes when these relationships come to an end. It's our responsibility to ensure that there's fairness before the law. The Adult Interdependent Relationships Act will ensure that Alberta legislation is constitutional, recognizes the values of Albertans, and because this act has the prospect of impacting a great number of Albertans who are in committed relationships, it's our intention to introduce the bill now for public scrutiny and to debate it more fully in the fall.

[Motion carried; Bill 30 read a first time]

MR. HANCOCK: Mr. Speaker, in my enthusiasm I neglected to ask to introduce three people. Can I ask for unanimous consent to do that at this moment?

THE SPEAKER: Anybody opposed?

[Unanimous consent granted]

THE SPEAKER: Proceed.

head: Introduction of Guests (reversion)

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Three individuals and more in our department have devoted copious quantities of time, energy, and study to family law and to the interdependent relationships project. I'd like to introduce to this House and have this House give a thanks for a lot of work that's been done and a lot more work to be done to Nolan Steed, who is a director in civil law, and to Tanya Stewart and Sarah Dafoe, who have been working with him on these projects. If they would rise and receive the traditional welcome of the House.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish to table the appropriate number of copies of a letter addressed to me from Marguerite Shewchuk with the Sturgeon Foundation, which is the management body for the senior citizens' housing of Chateau Mission Court and Northridge Lodge in my community. She is requesting my advocacy for additional government funding to the provincial seniors' housing industry.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. A couple of tablings today. The first tabling is the appropriate number of copies from Wendy Ettinger, who is the president of the Edmonton Evergreen Community Association, commenting that since the inception of the smoking bylaw in the city of Edmonton it's reduced that association's volunteer base for working the bingos. They would prefer to have paid floor staff, although they understand that each bingo association has to make their own decision. They're in support of the recommendation by the Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission.

Then I have three tablings to do with Operation Drivesafe, petitioning the Premier to allow the War Amps access to the driver's licence information. The first is from Robert Raimondi; the second, from Kristi Hansen; and the third, from Salvatore Raimondi.

Thank you very much.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have one tabling today. It's the third in a series of tablings, nine pages of examples of health care fraud cases involving health care businesses in the U.S. today totaling over 1 and a half billion dollars.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. With your permission I would like to table the appropriate number of copies of a decision from the Queen's Bench of Alberta between Thomas Shuchuk as plaintiff and Randy Wolfert, the Workers' Compensation Board, Gene Mudry, Dr. Paul Green, and Dr. Gordon King as defendants and two very important parts of this decision. One was that the immunity of quasi-judicial tribunals was discussed in Dechant v Stevens . . . AJ No. 172; 2001 [Alberta Court of Appeal] 39 (discontinuance of application for leave to appeal to the [Supreme Court of Canada]).

The other particular section here that's of prime importance, particularly as we discuss Bill 26, is section 41:

Therefore, with respect to that portion of the Plaintiff's claim which can be construed as a claim of abuse of public office against Wolfert and the WCB, the appeal against the Master's decision is allowed.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have one tabling today, and it is a letter that has been sent to Ray Pinkoski, a director, and Duncan Brook, president of the Edmonton-Gold Bar Liberal Constituency Association. This letter is from the Commission on the Future of Health Care in Canada. It's signed by Roy Romanow, and it is a letter of appreciation for that organization's contribution to the public consultations on the future of health care in this county.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table appropriate copies of a letter from Joan Trettler, president, Public School Boards' Association of Alberta. The letter is dated May 1 and is addressed to the Minister of Learning regarding the proposed education commission. The association is making many constructive suggestions towards expanding the commission's mandate, composition, and terms of reference, and we are all holding our breath for the minister to make public the names of people he will appoint and hope that the commission will be up and running very soon.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first is a letter from Janice McTighe, executive director of Renfrew Educational Services in Calgary. She is extremely concerned about the government's decision to cancel the Calgary community lottery board funding.

The second tabling, Mr. Speaker, is a letter from Kim Turcotte, the program director of the Abbottsfield Youth Project in Edmonton. She's asking the government to reinstate the community lottery board funding as well.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, the chair would like to table five copies of a memorandum from the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View requesting that Bill 207, the Alberta Wheat and Barley Test Market Act, be given early consideration in Committee of the Whole.

The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table today five copies of responses to questions raised during Committee of Supply for the Department of Justice and Attorney General.

head: Orders of the Day

head: Government Bills and Orders

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, after continuing communication on this issue with the Official Opposition and the third party, I seek the unanimous consent of the Assembly to waive Standing Order 58(4) to allow this afternoon's consideration of the estimates of the Department of Municipal Affairs to go beyond two hours, with the vote on these estimates to take place no later than 5:15 p.m. as per Standing Order 58(5) or sooner if no one wishes to speak.

head: Committee of Supply

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: We shall call the committee to order.

head: Main Estimates 2002-03

Municipal Affairs

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: As per our Standing Order the first hour is allocated between the minister and members of the opposition, following which any other hon. member may participate.

The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

MR. BOUTILIER: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to present . . . [some applause] Especially I thank the hon. Member for Calgary-North West for the resounding applause to my presentation as I was there presenting to him, especially for the very unique comments that the hon. member made during that time.

I'm pleased to present the estimates for Alberta Municipal Affairs, but before I begin, I would like to introduce three individuals who are seated in the members' gallery that are from the Ministry of Municipal Affairs. We have Brad Pickering—he's the acting deputy minister—as well as Lothar Hellweg, who is the senior financial officer; and Laurent Auger, the executive assistant in the minister's office. I would like to say before I ask them to rise that Alberta's public service and the people that work for this government are without question, I believe, certainly committed to serve all Albertans. I believe that these three individuals along with the many others that are within our ministry clearly are there serving the best interests of all Albertans. For that, I would like to ask the three gentlemen to rise and thank them publicly for their hard work in serving Albertans and this Assembly and for the good work they do in terms of dealing with Municipal Affairs. So I ask the three gentlemen to rise and receive the warm welcome. With that, I would like to say to them: thank you for coming.

To members of the Assembly: our ministry is committed to working with a variety of stakeholders to ensure that Albertans live in safe, sustainable communities and are served by open, effective, and accountable local governments. If I could, for a moment I'd like to put it into context in terms of Municipal Affairs. Did you know that in Alberta we have 360 municipalities as of December 31, 2001? Of the 360 municipalities there are four specialized, 64 rural municipalities, 10 towns, 105 villages, 52 summer villages, seven improvement districts, three special areas, and 15 cities. The total number of local elected officials in Alberta this past year at the civic elections in October was 1,946, be it as a mayor, an alderman, a councillor, a reeve, or a trustee, and it really speaks well of the service of these people representing municipal government in terms of letting their names stand and publicly serving.

If I could also add, it's very seldom that you use the term "trillion," but in terms of equalized assessment for the year 2002, there will be close to a quarter trillion dollars of equalized assessments for Alberta that will take place within municipalities, and that's quite substantial. The number is $237,757,008,505. So it really gives you the magnitude of the role that municipal governments play in Alberta.

Now, it's interesting to note that approved funding for approximately 600 underground petroleum storage tank sites, approximately 80 municipal tax recovery sites, as well as 430 active retail sites are also part of a program that we have approved and in fact are going to be moving forward to the safety council that is not reflected in our budget, that I draw to the members' attention.

What I would like to do, though, is say that in the coming year we will pursue six goals: "an effective, responsive, cooperative and well-managed local government," as I mentioned, serving the 360 municipalities and almost 2,000 elected leaders; "a well-managed and efficient assessment and property tax system in which stakeholders have confidence"; a very "comprehensive safety system that provides an appropriate level of public safety"; "a disaster services program that enhances and supports local emergency preparedness for . . . emergencies and disasters"—I'll speak later about the opening we had just yesterday where the hon. member from Red Deer as well as the hon. Member for Wainwright joined me with the new emergency system that was launched in the Red Deer region.

I think it's also important to recognize that from a perspective of expenditures for 2002-2003, the operating expense and capital investment voted for Municipal Affairs totals $133 million. The funding is broken into four main areas including the local government services division, the public safety division, the Municipal Government Board, and the ministry support services.

For a moment let's talk about revenues. Pertaining to revenues, our ministry statement of operations by program indicates that our revenues will be approximately $42.2 million. Now, I might add that we will be spending over $133 million in serving the municipalities that I spoke of earlier, but we will receive about $40 million from lottery revenues, we'll receive $12 million in support of financial assistance provided under the municipal sponsorship program, and $28 million to support the unconditional municipal grants. The remaining $2.4 million comes from the services rendered to municipalities for assessment as well as the sale of licences and fees associated with safety certificates and a cost-sharing arrangement with the federal government for some of our disaster preparedness programs.

When we take a look at the specifics, let's for a moment look at local government services. This division is responsible for a significant part of the ministry's estimates at $108.4 million. It's important to note that $90 million will be like a drive-through window that we evaluate and then send out to municipalities. A number of the key initiatives will be carried out under a variety of nongrant portions of local government services budget, which total about $18.4 million, and one of our key initiatives will be to encourage and help develop regional partnerships. I'm very proud of that. It is taking place as we speak and a real full credit to the partnerships that the Municipal Affairs folks have in fact partnered with in terms of the municipalities.

Pertaining to the ministry's Roles and Responsibilities in the 21st Century, that's been talked about in this House, I'm pleased to say that the Ministry of Municipal Affairs has clearly put together an excellent framework for which we've received positive feedback from the majority of municipalities relative to looking into the 21st century as opposed to the terminology that we used to hear in the 20th century.

I want to say that in terms of grants to municipalities, what I believe is the real work of this ministry, local government services administers the department's major grants to municipalities according to the $90 million of its estimates. The major grants, if I could just for a moment, are the unconditional municipal grants program, the municipal debenture interest rebates, the grants in place of taxes program, and the municipal sponsorship program. These are so very, very important and I think are recognized, in partnership with our municipalities, as serving all Albertans well in terms of the dollars being used and taking a dollar and being able to stretch it a lot further than a dollar. That's a real credit to our local municipal governments.

For the public safety division, on the specifics, this accounts for about $11.6 million, and this is a significant decrease from last year. I expect a question from the opposition on this point, but because of the underground petroleum storage tank remediation program ending on March 31, 2002, this accounts for about a $70 million reduction. What I am very pleased to say is that the conditional and unconditional grants have not in any way, shape, or form been reduced from last year's estimates, and I'm very pleased with that and the decision that had been recommended by Treasury Board.

We will continue to improve our ability to communicate and cooperate with municipalities in terms of using information technology to its best advantage. The electronic permit system that's being implemented and accredited to municipalities is an excellent example of technology.

We'll continue to promote and help establish regional partnerships delivering safety code service. The hon. member has brought up an important aspect of Municipal Affairs being the safety code volunteer group, a paid group that works for Municipal Affairs, and I can say that they do a very good job. In fact, on Thursday we'll be recognizing the folks from the Safety Codes Council for helping all Albertans. We'll continue to ensure that safety codes and standards are appropriate and also continue to monitor and enhance where deemed appropriate.

We'll also strive to reduce personal and property loss because of fire by putting more emphasis on education programs for children and aboriginal peoples. I think this is also very important.

I can say, Mr. Chairman, that the Municipal Government Board plays an important role, which accounts for about $2.6 million. This has jurisdiction in terms of property: deciding the linear property and equalized assessment appeals, limited subdivision appeals, annexations, and intermunicipal disputes.

From the ministry support perspective, the area of the ministry that I want to touch on, it talks about local government services and public safety divisions with legal, financial and communication, human resources, and information technology as well as strategic central reports.

Finally, to conclude, I'd like to believe that we in Municipal Affairs have a good game plan in the business plan that was drawn up. We also have a solid budget for accomplishing the goals and objectives that we have set out for ourselves over the next period of time. I look forward also to hearing from the members of this committee today in terms of what they have to say and the questions they have regarding our estimates. I want to assure everyone in this House that I'll do my very best to answer the questions brought forward, and I thank the members of this Assembly and this committee for listening.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It is a pleasure to rise this afternoon and speak to the estimates of the Department of Municipal Affairs. I would like to thank the minister and his staff who are present here today for handling what is probably the one ministry which is closest to all Albertans. I'd also like to mention that it is a great opportunity to witness how the minister, who's had vast experience in municipal government, has carried that experience over into the department and is doing a great job of forming partnerships with our municipalities and how in the end this will certainly benefit all Albertans.

Now, then, as I mentioned, the Alberta Municipal Affairs department works in partnership with Alberta's municipalities, other government departments, local authorities, various organizations that focus on local issues, and the private sector to ensure that Albertans live in safe and sustainable communities and are served by open, effective, and accountable government. As I mentioned, Mr. Chairman, there cannot be any program that is more grass roots than this. As the services of any government department ultimately go to Albertans living in municipalities, there are few departments with which Municipal Affairs does not have joint projects or initiatives.

year, 2002-2003. I notice that the gross operating estimates for the department of $133.081 million reflect a $70.933 million decrease. That's 34.7 percent from the 2001-2002 budget. I also see that the department's operating expense from 2001-2002 is forecast at 15 percent under budget. The largest budget reduction came from the cuts to the underground petroleum tank program, that the minister has already mentioned in his opening remarks. As well, the capital investment forecast for 2001-2002 is 175 percent of the original budget. The budget was $830,000, and the forecast is $2.288 million. There was $1.2 million invested in disaster services, branch management and programs. There was also an additional $258,000 spent on capital investment from support services. So those are the highlights of the budget.

As well, Mr. Chairman, we have to look at this whole issue of taxation and look at the fairness and appropriateness of any tax, and it can be judged by a very simple principle. Of course, that principle is that he who pays the piper calls the tune. This is known as fiscal equivalence. We also note that taxes that are poorly designed and implemented can promote urban sprawl, which leads to more transportation and infrastructure problems, which leads to more financial problems. Again, in discussions with our communities we certainly realize that one of their major issues is that they want predictable, sustainable funding.

Now, when we were at the AAMD and C convention last fall, we had municipal leaders who got up and said – and this was quite an observation and I think something that none of us expected. Municipal leaders were getting up and saying: how do you expect us to develop business plans which run from three to five years when we have budgets coming down that don't last three to five days? At that time it was a very good comment and I think one that we have seen as it unfolds – certainly many different segments in our society are saying: what is happening with this whole budgetary process?

So I think that what we have to see, Mr. Chairman, are fundamental changes to the budget management process in Alberta to create certainty in our communities: predictability, stability, and sustainability for health authorities, for school boards, for postsecondary institutions, and especially for local governments. This is particularly important in a province where our revenues are cyclical, where they are still tied to a great extent to the price of crude oil and natural gas.

The Official Opposition has certainly introduced two programs that are gaining a tremendous amount of support. One is the fiscal stability fund. This particular fund, Mr. Chairman, is quite unlike the heritage savings trust fund. This would be a short-term savings account meant to smooth out the peaks and the valleys of our volatile economy. Quite simply, during good years money would be put into this particular account, and when our revenues fall, such as times when the price of oil falls, money would be drawn so that essential programs like health care, education, and our municipalities would be maintained and continued as planned. We wouldn't have to see situations such as we saw in the past year, where even though we've had the second highest revenues in the history of this province, we still were required to make cuts in the budget to essential services.

Now, as well, Mr. Chairman, the second fund would be a targeted savings account called the infrastructure enhancement fund. As we all know, certainly in years such as the previous year to this one, there was a lot of money to go around. So during these years we would be able to put money into this fund to pay for the acceleration, the enhancement of infrastructure projects in the following year. This means that once the money is in the bank, projects can be announced and contracts signed. When we talk to the Roadbuilders and Heavy Construction Association here in the province, this is certainly something that they require, particularly when they are planning for the long-term sustainability of their businesses and they are buying equipment which is in the millions of dollars and then find out that they don't have work the following year because of cutbacks, huge cutbacks certainly as we had this year. This certainly impacts the whole industry.

One of the impacts that we have is a number of skilled types of labourers or operators or whoever who must be laid off, and they are certainly going to go where the work is. So we lose them to the industry, and as well during these periods when we have a great number of cutbacks in the heavy construction industry and roadbuilding, once those workers are laid off, they move on and find employment elsewhere. Even in good times for us to be able to get those workers back and involved is a very, very difficult procedure.

So we do have a situation where an infrastructure enhancement fund would certainly prevent this type of roller-coaster ride. As well, what it will allow, Mr. Chairman, is the companies that don't have work this year because of the major cutbacks, that probably will go out of business – it would keep these people in business and certainly keep the availability of companies that can do this type of work, keep them going in Alberta so it wouldn't be feast or famine for them as well.

Now, then, in looking specifically at the estimates, we look at program 2, local government services. For some of these answers if the minister wishes to reply later in written form, that's fine, or for the questions for which he does have the information here, he can answer when we're finished, and that's fine if that works for him.

When we look at local government services, if the minister could please provide for us how many full-time equivalents are employed under program 2, local government services. If the minister could also provide for us the breakdown of full-time equivalents by the four subprograms: divisional support, municipal services, assessment services, and financial assistance programs.

On line 2.1.1, division support, if the minister could provide us with more details on what capital goods were covered by the $705,000 for capital investments under program 2.1.1 in 2001-2002. Why is this budget increasing to $820,000 for 2002-03 from the $705,000 the previous year.

Now, then, on line 2.2.1, municipal services, we look at the budget for this particular program, 2.2. Why is the budget for municipal services increasing from $7.262 million to $7.780 million? This is only a 7 percent increase, but it would be interesting to know how this increase will benefit municipalities.

As well, Mr. Chairman, moving down to line 2.3.1, assessment services, why is the budget for assessment services, program 2.3.1, decreasing from $5.953 million to $5.909 million. The dedicated revenue is not increasing, so where are the cost savings going to be achieved under line 2.3.1?

Now, then, line item 2.4, financial assistance programs. I want to look first of all at line 2.4.1, unconditional municipal grants. Why has the funding for unconditional municipal grants shifted from general revenues to lottery funds? Last year there was $36.147 million available, but it all came from general revenue. Now there is $38.626 million in the budget, but $28 million of that is from lottery dollars, so if the minister could please tell us why there was a shift from the funding coming out of general revenue to where now some of the funding is coming out of lottery dollars. If he could please as well indicate in his response what changed to make these eligible for lottery dollars. If the minister could also indicate how these dollars will be handed out.

Certainly I think this is an area of interest to all MLAs here in the province. Some MLAs in the past certainly have had the opportunity to pass out dollars but not particularly in their own constituencies, and some MLAs have had that opportunity to distribute these dollars in constituencies other than their own while the MLA for that constituency does not get that opportunity. So if the minister could please elaborate on exactly what process is going to take place in handing out these dollars.

As well, under unconditional municipal grants, if the minister could also please tell us what is the application process. Of course, the grants to our municipalities certainly have taken on a whole new meaning and level of importance when we look at $51 million that was removed from direct community control in this particular province when we did cut out the lottery boards. So, again, this is a question that I know Albertans in every constituency throughout this province are quite interested in learning the answer to. Certainly there are many, many organizations in the communities who were relying on lottery dollars this year that did not get those. As yet we wait patiently for somebody to outline what is going to take the place of these lottery boards or in fact if they are going to be replaced. Are some of these dollars going to be flowing through the unconditional municipal grants?

I know that the minister certainly is also very concerned about funding to various organizations, particularly in a community such as his, a very rapidly growing community where many new organizations are getting involved. I think back to the Centennial Cup.

MR. MacDONALD: Where was that played?

MR. BONNER: That was played in Fort McMurray two years ago, I believe. I don't recall who the winner of the Centennial Cup was that year. Certainly, through my involvement with the Canadian Hockey Association, they were extremely impressed not only with the job that was done in Alberta in hosting this national event but particularly the great job that the people of Fort McMurray had done in hosting this particular event. They had a firsthand glimpse at Alberta hospitality, and they enjoyed it immensely. I know that the minister was very closely involved in those particular activities, and he and his committee certainly did a magnificent job. So if he would pass that on to the people that worked on that, I would thank him very much for that.

Now, then, as well, we were talking about the application process when we look at unconditional municipal grants. Again I would like to ask the minister: what monitoring is in place to ensure that these funds are used as intended?

Mr. Chairman, I have other questions that I know I'll get an opportunity to ask the minister later. Thank you.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

MR. BOUTILIER: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I first of all want to thank the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry. For those who may not be aware, both of us had the opportunity of attending Quebec City, if I remember, where the Canadian national hockey annual general meeting was held, and Alberta was bidding on being able to host the national championship and helping all Albertans, and I was pleased to be the co-chair at the time. I want to publicly thank the hon. member because as we were lobbying other members of other provinces, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry in his capacity representing this region played a key role in making some key votes for us to ensure that Alberta received the national championship that year. He had the opportunity of visiting and obviously in this House two years ago had the pleasant duty of in fact recognizing the young Albertans who were part of the national championship. I want to thank the hon. member because he helped Alberta receive the bid to host such a national championship, that in fact was televised all across Canada. I want to thank him for that.

I also want to thank the hon. member for his comments regarding the grass roots relative to municipalities. He is so on the mark when he talks about the grass roots of our democratic system being at the local level, and he is absolutely right in terms of the important role that we work with in terms of municipal councils.

Also, he touched on an important point, on partnerships. You know, I don't think anyone in this Assembly will argue that a partnership is: what can we do for you that you can't do, and what can you do for us that we can't do? Really the ability is in being able to take a dollar and stretch it into $3 and at the end of the day serving that same taxpayer, the Alberta taxpayer.

MR. SNELGROVE: There's only one.

MR. BOUTILIER: There is only one, as the hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster has indicated.

I want to say that the hon. member has raised some very important points, and I would like to work on some of the very good questions that he's asked this afternoon. I certainly have always appreciated his good advice, because at the end of the day we're here to serve all Albertans.

He did ask a question regarding the application process in terms of the grants that are administered throughout Alberta. We have an evaluation process that we use as all of the applications for grants are evaluated. They're compared to each other. We have a rating system where in fact we look at important criteria such as the partnership with others. In fact, the exact point that the hon. member mentioned earlier relative to partnerships: the more we see municipalities working with their neighbours, I think, the more we're able to see a dollar being able to be stretched from $1 into $3. Again, that's a very useful task.

I want to say, too, that all of the applications that we've received from the municipalities, all of the 360, are very good applications, but we want to be able to prioritize them in terms of this evaluation, in terms of: do they partner with their adjacent neighbour so that they can work together in terms of bordering municipalities? These are important criteria that we use in our evaluation.

I must admit that I have not had the opportunity to share with this House the positive feedback. I know that many of the MLAs in this Assembly have received feedback from their elected mayors, Reeves, and councillors thanking them for their support of the regional partnership program and the municipal grant program and also the unconditional grant program, because they know that it really is helping and serving the grass roots, that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenarry has rightfully brought to the attention of this Assembly.

Another important point that I believe the hon. member has raised is the issue of certainty, greater certainty for municipalities. During my time studying in Boston, we spent time on Wall Street and on Bay Street, and one of the things in financial markets that investors look for is certainty. It's no different from a municipal perspective. We look for the certainty of knowing what's out there for the years to come. In fact, some of the feedback that I just recently received at the AUMA and the AAMDC – and I want to thank the hon. member. He attends like many other members of this Assembly because we recognize the grass roots in terms of democracy, in terms of: how do we take a dollar, stretch it further, but work in partnership with these programs that we have relative to the important points system that we have? I'm very pleased with the fact that we continue to work with our municipal associations, and I want to say to both the rural association, Jack Hayden, the president, as well as George Rogers, the president of the AUMA, that they continue to play an important role in terms of our partnerships that we have.

Now, one point that was made relative to that certainty – and I'm pleased to say that the hon. Minister of Finance has indicated that we are having a financial management review committee. Part of the objectives of the financial review committee, I do know, is thinking outside of the box, thinking outside of the box in terms of reflecting the 21st century. Things that might have worked in the '80s and '70s and '90s – maybe we need to think differently today in terms of how we are looking at providing greater certainty to municipalities, which I support one hundred percent, because the more certainty the better decision-making, and with better decision-making the better we are at serving our citizens.

So the financial management review committee, that the Minister of Finance mentioned, that the Lieutenant Governor mentioned in the Speech from the Throne, will be of course going forward with its work. I'm pleased to say that the associations will be contributing as well as our new minister's council on roles, responsibilities, and resources. I know that the hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne is very familiar with the fact that that committee will be presenting to the review committee along with the two associations as well as the mayors of the two biggest cities in Alberta, Edmonton and Calgary. I think that this is an important component of working towards what the hon. member has rightfully mentioned; that is, certainty so that we know better.

One of the comments that was brought up, Mr. Chairman, was that our financial and fiscal year starts on April 1 and goes to March. What I have observed during my time in my former capacity as mayor and now as MLA and minister is that many of the financial reports are staggered. Some municipalities such as mine in Fort McMurray start their fiscal year on the calendar year, January 1. So what happens is that they're attempting to put a budget together in January, yet the provincial budget doesn't come out until April. So there is somewhat of a transitional period there. I think that one of the proposals that has been suggested is that perhaps – be it the federal government, which goes from April until March, or municipalities, which stagger, sometimes January to December – they could try to avoid uncertainty when it comes to the important initiatives that we're trying to endeavour.

The hon. member brought up an important point regarding lottery boards, and I'm pleased to say that the minister of lotteries is doing a review of the lottery board based on avoiding duplication but at the same time ensuring that that $51 million will still get to the grass roots of communities, and in some form that may be enhanced from what we originally had. I do want the hon. member to know that my colleague is endeavouring to go forward with a review of exactly that, the lottery board, and how we can best serve Albertans relative to that.

The hon. member brought a couple of other points to our attention. He asked, relative to the workforce, the numbers that we have by division, and I would like to say that in this comparable budget year of 2001-2002 we had 317 full-time members of our ministry, and in the estimates for 2002-03 it will be 311. I would like at this time to break it down, as he asked, by division. From the local government services the estimate for the comparable budget of 2001 was 139.5 full-time equivalents; there is an increase of one in the budget estimate this year of 140.5, which is a .7 percent increase. From a public safety perspective in the estimates of 2002-2003 we'll be going to 103, down from 112.2, which is about an 8.2 percent reduction in full-time equivalents of staff.

Relative to ministry support services, we are basically staying the same, at 51, and from the feedback that we have received from the Municipal Government Board, based on the very active work by a group of volunteers, an incredible service to Albertans, we're going to be going from 14 up to 16 and one-half individuals.

That basically covers the 317 down to 311. So it is a reduction of six individuals, but I am very confident with the staff that we have. We're again trying to look at better ways of serving Albertans, and towards that end it's reflected in our budget estimates for this coming year.

Another point that was made, an important point, was relative to assessments. I would like to just for a moment deal with the issue of assessment in terms of how it impacts our budget. If I could draw the hon. members' attention to page 365, I will endeavour to elaborate on that. From the assessment services perspective, in the comparison of 2002-2003 to 2001-2002 we have a decrease of about .1 percent. The branch is establishing property assessment standard audits. Of course, it monitors the quality of property assessments, and it prepares equalized assessments on behalf of the ministry for every municipality in the province; of course, 360. This branch also is preparing the assessments of all linear properties including wells and pipelines and regulated power supplies, telecommunications and cable systems. So the net decrease that the hon. member had mentioned is limited savings in manpower and overhead costs arising from vacancies and staff adjustments but also the savings from the reduced requirement for contracted services, I'm very pleased to say.

Relative to unconditional municipal grants, there is an increase actually from 2001-2002 of about 1.8 percent, and that $679,000 is a restructuring grant. These grants are actually going to be provided to reduce the debt of dissolving municipalities to address major infrastructure deficiencies in the communities. This component also includes funding for regional partnerships, which the hon. member, I appreciate, has also mentioned. Also, the unconditional funding, the remaining $31.6 million, is for the ongoing unconditional grants to municipalities for municipal services.

Now, I would also like to indicate that from the unconditional municipal grant perspective, the ministry forecast is lower because of some restructuring again in the fiscal year, but this has resulted where the restructuring I believe is a better use of our resources and again being able in some cases – if I could give you one example of a municipality such as Warspite. The decision to carry on as a municipality is revised a year or two later when the residents recognize the threat to municipal viability. So, in addition, more regional partnerships are being organized, and I'm very pleased to say that these regional partnerships are reflected, because we now have more applications for funding, and of course evaluating those types of situations is very important.

I would like also to take the time to say that from a municipal debenture interest rebate we have a decrease of about 17 percent, and this grant subsidizes the interest on certain debenture borrowing from the Alberta finance corporation. The reduction in these estimates is due to the high interest rate debentures being repaid at their terms, and therefore fewer high-interest debentures requiring subsidy remain. So certainly that's a very important initiative as well.

Let me just say in conclusion that the divisional support area from an operating perspective, such as an increase of about 1 percent in operating expense – some of this is due to the fact that we are doing some increase in contract funding to review the department's relationship with the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association as well as the Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties but also with the Federation of Canadian Municipalities. I'm very pleased to say that Alberta has been invited to attend the Federation of Canadian Municipalities – and the hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne will be attending with me – where in fact we will be speaking about again what is called out-of-the-box thinking with the roles, responsibilities, and resources in the 21st century. I want to thank the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View and also the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford as well as the hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne, who participates in that.

The hon. member has raised some good questions, and I want to say that I appreciate his interest and also his co-operation. Clearly, I believe that the positive relationship we have in terms of him asking questions – our ultimate intent is to serve Albertans better, and I appreciate the hon. member's questions relative to our estimates.

Thank you very much.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you, Mr. Chairman, and thank you, Mr. Minister, for those comments. Again, your comments certainly indicate a good understanding of the whole issues that concern the ebb and the flow of communications between municipalities and government at the provincial level.

One of the things that I would like to refer back to is the example you gave of how the fiscal year ends in Fort McMurray at the end of the year whereas in the province our fiscal year-end is the end of March and how there is this transitional period. We have to adopt a system where all municipalities, irregardless of when their year ends, can look at this whole idea of equitable and stable and predictable funding. So rather than just looking at this whole process as a budgetary process which ends at the end of a fiscal year and tries to project it to the next year, then certainly we have to look at what the budgets of our municipalities are going to be from year to year.

I think that particularly it serves us with two purposes. Number one, for those communities that have relatively stable needs, then certainly we can look at the fact that their budgets are going to probably increase at the rate of inflation each particular year. But with our booming economy in some sections of Alberta – and I think of Fort McMurray again as one of them and Calgary as another and other areas, Grande Prairie for certain – we look at areas there and how critical it is that we take those projections as to what those particular centres are going to need and be able as a government to set up a system where that funding will be available based on projections of needs rather than communities having to have the one- or two-year lag because we are not looking at projections far enough down the road to provide that financing.

When we look at the fact that these municipalities do an excellent job in developing their business plans, business plans which operate for three to five years, this certainly would be a better way to service Albertans, to service our communities, by providing them with the type of financing that they require in order to fulfill their business plans, in order to lessen, particularly in the areas of great growth, the impact of that growth on those communities. As the minister knows and all members know that have been in situations where there is rapid growth, that certainly puts a great deal of strain on the infrastructure of these communities, so with a change in our budgetary process we could fulfill those financial concerns of our communities.

Now, then, getting back to line item 2.4.1., the unconditional municipal grants, I think we have seen over the past few years the benefits of forming partnerships with others. Certainly we want to stretch those dollars, as the minister said, and we want to look at the most efficient way that we can use those tax dollars. We do know that there are a lot of efficiencies, but we also know that communities have the great concern that in some areas they may be forced into partnerships because of funding arrangements. So what communities and municipalities certainly wish is that the whole process is open and transparent, where they can see that there is a benefit for them to be in partnerships, that they can see that they are not being forced into partnerships, yet it's a win/win situation for everybody.

[Mr. Maskell in the chair]

When the committee is making these unconditional municipal grants, if the minister could inform all members of the House as to whether this whole process is open and transparent, whether our community leaders are well informed as to not only what decisions were made but why they were made, this would certainly be of great benefit to our various communities in Alberta. You know, we have so many situations in the province, particularly in recent years, where there has been a great sharing of information, where communities and municipalities have agreed to work on projects and share the costs of projects. I think of the new recreation area which is currently being built somewhere between Spruce Grove and Stony Plain and just what a great facility that is, and I've heard nothing but great remarks. I don't think that, say, even five years ago a project of this nature would have taken place, because of people having the ownership of their own particular local regions. So, again, certainly an example of where the formation of partnerships has benefited a whole region.

When we do look, then, at these unconditional municipal grants, as I said, if the minister could outline for us how the process works, which of these unconditional grants are given top priority, and of course the whole structure as to which particular grants that are given out have the least priority. If the minister could also, Mr. Chairman, indicate to us, even though these are unconditional grants, just what sort of guidelines municipalities have when they get these moneys. Again, I think that comes into play with what the priorities or the setup is for communities or municipalities to get these grants. If the minister could also please indicate to us how much of the money in this program goes to municipalities and how much is used to cover administrative expenses.

Now, then, under program 2 I want to look at line item 2.4.3, grants in place of taxes. A question for the minister: why was the full budget for grants in place of taxes not spent in the year 2001-2002? As well, under line item 2.4.4, financial support to local authorities, for the minister again: why is the budget for program 2.4.4, financial support to local authorities, increasing from $730,000 to $1.001 million? If the minister could please tell us: how will the increase in these particular funds be spent for financial support to local authorities?

The next line item, 2.4.5, municipal sponsorship. We look at this particular line item and see that last year the budget document showed that the operating expense from the municipal sponsorship program was to be $1.5 million, but these documents show $500,000. What is the reason for this particular difference? I do have other questions in regard to line 2.4.5, municipal sponsorships. If the minister could please tell us: will there be any changes to the types of funding that can be applied for under this program? How will small types of projects such as, for example, street paving or signs or computers and employee wages and other requirements of the community be covered under this grant?

As well, how does the ministry monitor to make sure that funds are spent as applied for? I know that the municipalities do certainly have a wish list. They send in these requests for funding, and certainly the ministry would provide moneys based on these requests by the municipalities. Again, if we could find out if there is any system with checks and balances that would cover this particular situation. Now, then, as well, has the ministry ever requested funds to be returned because they were not spent or they were not spent as intended?

At this point, Mr. Chairman, I'll just take my seat and let the minister answer those questions on program 2. Thank you.

THE ACTING CHAIR: The minister.

MR. BOUTILIER: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Again, I thank the hon. member for raising some important points that I would like to address. Certainly in looking at budgets from year to year, ultimately the objective of this ministry is to have equitable, stable, and predictable budgetary numbers of course for municipalities so that they can best plan in serving, as the hon. member mentioned, the grass roots in terms of serving our citizens.

I would like to, though, in addressing his questions use some examples of partnerships that some hon. members had brought to my attention. The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti dropped off the Daily Herald-Tribune relative to the city and the county. They have just put together a co-operative deal to be announced. It's a regional partnership between the city and the county of Grande Prairie, ending months of intense negotiations. In addition to existing co-operative emergency services the new agreement will include sharing of leisure services.

The hon. member mentioned some of the initiatives going on relative to Spruce Grove and Stony Plain, and I must say that I am very pleased with that. If I could just for a moment use Wayne Ayling, the mayor of Grande Prairie, where he says:

Today we are able to announce two new agreements between the city and the county. What people don't understand is [that] we have 26 agreements on areas where we co-operate [already].

So we want to continue to build on that regional co-operation.

He's mentioned some other components that I would like to raise as well this afternoon, but on some of the questions that he has raised, which I think are very important, on high-growth areas like Fort McMurray or Calgary or Grande Prairie, clearly . . .

MR. DOERKSEN: Red Deer.

MR. BOUTILIER: Red Deer, of course. That goes without saying. In fact, just yesterday in Red Deer I had the pleasure of opening their new emergency public warning system, and of course that was an investment that we've put forward since September 11. I'm really pleased to say that it's again another regional partnership that is taking place, serving over 2 and a half million people. We're not quite there yet though. We still have close to another half a million Albertans that we want to reach by 2004. I'm so pleased to learn that people are coming from all over North America to study what Alberta is doing because it's the only kind of emergency public warning system in the entire country and for that matter in North America.

Yesterday, as I mentioned, I had the hon. members for Red Deer-North and Red Deer-South as well as the hon. Member for Wainwright attend with me. I'm also pleased to say that the mayor of Stettler was there and the mayor of Red Deer was there, as well as the reeve from the county and numerous other mayors, which I think is so important in terms of demonstrating that partnership.

I would also like to take the time, since the hon. member sitting next to me to my right played a leadership role – and that had to do with the Future Summit. The reason I say this is that the hon. member has raised an important point regarding future planning. As we know, European cities today plan for 25 and 30 years out. In fact, companies do that as well. We have a three-year planning system that we continue to review and revise, but the Future Summit, which certainly relies on growth, I think was the best example of what's happening 10, 15, 20, 30 years out there.

I know that all members of the Assembly can say that the members involved – and certainly the hon. Minister of Revenue played a key role, and I know that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry participated. I think it was very important to have Albertans from all walks of life participate in terms of future planning for the next 20 years: what Alberta will look like, not what it is today but what it will look like. I call it the Panasonic way, slightly ahead of our time in terms of thinking out relative to the way we want to go. So I thank the hon. Minister of Revenue for his futuristic initiative in moving 25 to 30 years out in the future.

The hon. member asked some questions relative to section 2.4.1. I want to say that there is no administration relative to these grants, and I think that's important. I'm glad the hon. member did ask that because what we really are doing is using our existing overhead to be able to administer these grants.

Under 2.4.3 the hon. member also asked relative to the grants in place of taxes, where we had a decrease of about 9 percent, about $2.8 million. As you know, municipalities cannot collect taxes on Crown property, and in municipalities where the Crown owns property, municipalities may apply each year for a grant in place of taxes for, to those who may not be aware, certain properties that would have been taxable if they were not owned by the government of Alberta.

Now, the primary cause of the decrease in the 2002-2003 estimates is that municipalities have not been raising taxes as much as we previously expected. The province, therefore, has been disposing of the properties, albeit at a declining rate than in previous years.

I also can say that under 2.4.4, which the hon. member asked about, relative to financial support to local authorities, the grants budgeted under the program include grants that go to an evaluation. For instance, $44,000 went to an evaluation for the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association, which represents a lot of the urban municipalities. Grants have also gone to the Association of Municipal Districts and Counties. As well, we've given grants to institutions. This provides the ministry's financial contribution to the Intergovernmental Committee on Urban and Regional Research. That amounted to $30,000, but it's an all-important component of regional thinking.

We also have a mediation grant. Again, the local governments have benefited substantially from mediation grants. We have been able to assist municipalities. The ministry will step in with its officials to help only if they are asked to by the local government at the grass roots. I'm very pleased to say that we've been able to assist in that regard as well.

If I could for a moment break down, as the hon. member mentioned, the budgets for municipal grants. We have about $38.6 million that goes to unconditional municipal grants, and this will provide unconditional grants to municipalities for their parks, public transit system, local policing as well as restructuring and other municipal services. Again, it is exactly what it says; it's unconditional.

I've mentioned grants in lieu of taxes. We provide grants in place of municipal taxes. That amounts to almost $29 million. As well, in terms of financial support to local authorities – the hon. member raised that point – this provides conditional financial assistance to municipalities and municipal associations and other agencies with a local government focus. That amounts to over a million dollars. Last but not least, about $12.5 million goes to municipal sponsorship. These provide limited-term conditional assistance which targets specific municipal needs that they identify. What's really interesting is that rather than the provincial government identifying the top priority, we think it is better for the municipal government to identify their top priority so they best know where they can use their money. We want to continue to encourage that in terms of including, promoting intermunicipal co-operation and innovative projects that are taking place.

Going back just for a moment – I apologize to the hon. member – to the capital investment that he asked about in his previous questions, I want to say that the capital investment budget increased to about $820,000 from last year. This is due in part to an increase in IT capital projects, particularly those related to the implementation of our municipal excellence program. Our view is that when we have municipalities demonstrating and acting in the grass roots of democracy, helping citizens, we want to share that municipal excellence with the other 360 municipalities we have. So we've undertaken a new program. It's called the municipal excellence program. We're working in partnership with the Alberta urban and Alberta rural associations, and I'm very pleased to say that the first one, which I know the hon. member will be attending, we will be presenting this fall to municipalities in recognition of municipal excellence.

So that's where some of our capital investment dollars are going. I think it is a very worthwhile project in terms of recognizing best practices and municipal excellence. We want to share with all of the 360 municipalities. We do not want to reinvent the wheel. If something is working well, then why wouldn't we share it with our neighbours or share it with people in the northern parts of our province or southern parts of our province? Of course, we always take that opportunity during the annual and spring conventions when we're meeting with our urban and rural associates to share with them the municipal excellence program. This is the first one of its kind, and again the first recognition pertaining to these initiatives will take place this upcoming fall.

I hope I've been able to answer some of the important points that have been raised. Just let me conclude by saying that from a public safety perspective we continue to go forward from an emergency perspective with the safety and protection of all Albertans, and I'm very proud to say that with the announcement yesterday in the launch of our public warning system. It's not going to be able to stop a tornado or severe weather, but what we're going to be able to do is protect citizens by giving them advance notice.

We know the situations that have taken place over the last couple of years. We want to be able to keep Albertans best prepared, and we want to keep them informed. Today I also want to thank the public broadcasters, because this is a private/public partnership with government, where in fact the public broadcasters are there in terms of their role in communicating to citizens, and I really take my hat off to the public broadcasters who have again been able to step up to the plate and partner with our ministry. So that's important I think as well.

With that, Mr. Chairman, I will take my seat and again endeavour to continue to answer the very good questions that the hon. member is asking this afternoon.

THE ACTING CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I've been again sitting and listening with a great deal of interest to the questions from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenarry and the responses from the hon. Minister of Municipal affairs. I listened with particular interest to the last exchange from the hon. minister and the commitment that was made at the Future Summit to have long-term planning by this government, and I'm pleased to see that finally there's going to be some long-term planning from this government. It's my view – and it's a view that's shared by many people in the constituency of Edmonton-Gold Bar – that this government plans elaborate public relations schemes that are going to get it by the next general election, and that's it.

I look at the plan here on page 44 of the fiscal plan tables, and it's noted there that from the year 2002 through to 2005, in particular with Municipal Affairs, there is to be in the next three years planned spending that is relatively unchanged, and with the growth that is occurring across the province – and that growth is because of the exploitation of our natural resources and the demand that there is in the international markets for those resources. The growth is occurring because of that, not because of some outstanding planning that's been going on with this government, in this member's view.

If we were going to follow the Future Summit, why do we not have a long-term plan displayed here? If one looks at the budgetary documents for the state of Alaska, for instance, if we want to use a comparison, they have 10-year plans, and they seem quite willing to live with them. Why is this government not doing the same?

Now, on page 46 of the fiscal plan tables under Municipal Affairs, the support for infrastructure has ranged from $11 million to $70 million in budget 2001-02, and the 2001-02 forecast was $39 million. Then for the next three fiscal years there is no money. Can the minister please provide us with the details on this? I am certain that there's going to be an answer forthcoming. Whether it's going to be transferred to another department, whether it's just the binge-and-singe budgeting that has occurred leading up to and after the election, or if it's to deal with the tank farm issue, if I could have some clarification on that, I would be very grateful.

Then further on in the fiscal plan tables, on page 49, there is an item here – I'm going to have to make sure, Mr. Chairman – for regional planning and development, $92 million. How much of this $92 million is spent on planning, and how much is spent on regional development? If I could have a breakdown of this, I would be very grateful to the hon. minister.

Further on we get over to the section on the Alberta advantage. Some people in the province refer to this, whenever they visit the constituency office in Edmonton-Gold Bar, as the government's brag book. The charts and the graphs in here I find are quite selective, and oddly enough they change from one budget year to the next. The electricity prices: now, that changes yearly, whenever we want to compare ourselves to others. Page 99 says: "Leaving more [tax] dollars in the pockets of Albertans." Lately – and it's not the first time this has occurred, Mr. Chairman – there have been public musings by the Premier about sharing or increasing the scope by which municipalities can raise taxes. Certainly it states – and I would note this for all members of the Assembly – that "Alberta has by far the lowest combined provincial and municipal tax burden among the provinces, at 59% of the national average." Now, is that the tax room that the Premier was musing about whenever there was a discussion about changing the tax structure so that municipalities could have some more flexibility with collection of taxes? What specifically would the minister have in mind if the municipalities were going to be given greater taxation powers? Would there be a little bit of a tax there on sales at the municipal level? Would there be a tax on hotel rooms? Would it be on automobiles? What exactly is the Premier and the government contemplating there? I would appreciate some detailed information from the hon. minister on that issue.

Also, we're always hearing about the low debt and the priority to pay off what debt we have in this province at a rapid rate. In fact, we seem to want to do it before the next election or in that election year, and there are other programs that have been cut because of this preoccupation. We have in this province 4 percent of the GDP of the province owed in debt, and that, as I've said here before in this Assembly, is a very modest amount, and it is looked at with a great deal of envy by other governments. I believe the hon. minister said that there are 360 municipalities. If the minister knows or if the department knows, what is the amount of debt currently held by these 360 municipalities? I certainly know what the school boards' debt is, and I would be interested to know what exactly is the debt of the 360 municipalities, because certainly they have been a victim of downloading by this government over the last number of years.

Now, Mr. Chairman, at this time I also have some specific questions in regard to program 1, the ministry support services. We're looking at about 10 and a half million dollars there for ministry support services. There are a lot of issues here for the minister, and if an answer is not available this afternoon, an answer in writing at a later date, hopefully before the first day of summer, I would appreciate. I regret having to put a deadline on this hon. minister because of my experience in the past, certainly with the Minister of Energy and that department, that one has to wait a long, long, long time for answers, and then when we get answers, they're usually very short answers. A very long, long time.

Hon. minister, please, how many full-time equivalents or employees are employed under ministry support services in the year 2002-2003? What is the breakdown of the full-time employees – I'm going to get rid of that "equivalents" again – by the three subprograms: the minister's office, the deputy minister's office, and support services? Now, on line 1.0.1 we're looking at the minister's office. What is the breakdown, please, of the minister's office budget, which is $281,000, for salaries for permanent positions, salaries for nonpermanent positions, and salaries for contract positions? How many contract positions are there in the minister's office? Or is it like the Public Affairs Bureau, where everybody, as far as I know, is a contractor of some sort? That'll be interesting to see at some point: the Public Affairs Bureau, the contracts there and how they pay their WCB premiums. But that's not dealing with estimates for Municipal Affairs this afternoon.

Travel expenses are also interesting: if we could have a breakdown of that. Advertising and hosting expenses: that's always of interest.

Now, the deputy minister's office on line 1.0.2. Again, what is the breakdown of the $487,000 deputy minister's budget for the year 2002-03, again by salaries for permanent positions, salaries for nonpermanent positions, salaries for the contract positions, the travel expenses, and advertising and hosting expenses? For support services on line 1.0.3, to the minister, please: why is the capital investment for support services at 200 percent over budget? I believe the original budget was $125,000, and the forecast is for $383,000. If I could get an answer regarding that, I would appreciate it. Again, what is the breakdown of the $9.4 million operating estimate for support services in 2002-03 by business planning and corporate support, communications, financial services, human resource services, information technology, and legal services?

I would like to now talk a little bit, please, Mr. Chairman, regarding public safety. On line item 3.1, division support, why is the division support budget increasing from $775,000 to $856,000? The minister was talking earlier about public safety, and I would like to know: why is the forecast $30,000 over budget from the previous year? Now, certainly with safety services and fire protection, fire protection is without question very, very important to all Albertans. There has been some concern by Albertans expressed to this member regarding the effectiveness and the reliability of this entire safety code system, and I'll get to that later this afternoon.

Why are program management costs for safety services and fire protection 89 percent over budget? Why, despite the forecast being 89 per cent over budget, is the 2002-03 budget set at $356,000? What services are provided under program management? In technical services, line item 3.2.2, why are the forecast costs for the technical services program 30 percent over budget? And, Mr. Chairman, how do these services benefit municipal governments and Albertans? Getting to line item 3.2.3 regarding regional services, what services are provided under these regional services? Again, how do these services benefit municipal governments and Albertans? For the fire commissioner, why are forecast expenses for the fire commissioner's office $121,000 over budget from 2001-2002? Does that reflect some of the concern that has been expressed to this member from various parts of the province regarding the integrity of this whole system?

Now, the underground petroleum storage tanks. The government was very loud and proud when this program was introduced, but the cancellation of this program seems to be quite a bit quieter. There has been a lot of work not completed. There are other provinces which demand that industry clean up their own mess, but here we're getting the taxpayers to do it. How many tanks are still out there waiting for the next round of oil money to come in so they can be cleaned up? Where are these tanks? Where are the locations of these tanks, and are there any public health advisories or warnings being issued to the public in regard to these sites? Particularly, at some of these sites there can be a significant seepage away from the exact location to various areas, depending of course on which way the underground watercourses are. It depends on gravel; it depends on sand. There are a lot of factors, Mr. Chairman, that can influence how far particularly leaded gasoline can travel.

Now, disaster services, branch management and programs on line 3.3.1. What unbudgeted capital investment was done for the $1.2 million under branch management and programs for disaster services? Why were operating expenses 40 percent over budget from 2001-02? What services are provided under branch management?

I don't see any questions that this member has, Mr. Chairman, regarding disaster recovery nor assistance for municipal emergency response training. There was certainly in my view a test of this at Pine Lake unfortunately, and I think people worked as hard and as long as possible under those circumstances.

At this time I have questions further on this afternoon, but I would take my seat, Mr. Chairman, and await the response from the hon. minister. Thank you.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

MR. BOUTILIER: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. First of all, I want to say at the outset that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar indicated commentary to the point of "elaborate public relations schemes," so I would like to set the record straight. If elaborate public relations schemes are meeting with Alberta urban associations and Alberta rural associations, meeting with mayors and reeves, then I'm all for elaborate public relations schemes if it means meeting the local elected officials, and I'm sure the hon. member would agree that this is a worthwhile service in terms of working with our partners relative to the fact that we sometimes don't have all the answers, but I'm not afraid to ask my municipal colleagues and partners in terms of what they think. In fact, that's exactly what we have been doing. The Future Summit was an ability to go and ask Albertans what they think as opposed to a government trying to do something. One of the things we do as a government and certainly from Municipal Affairs is ask for their input relative to the important initiatives that we have been viewed across this country as leaders at.

The Municipal Government Act in Alberta is viewed as one of the most progressive and permissive parts of legislation in this entire country. That was recognized by the vice-chair of the Prime Minister's urban task force. He indicated that he views Alberta as a leader. In fact, that was on May 2 on CHED radio. I'd like to take the opportunity now that the hon. member brought this issue to my attention. The hon. member is a Liberal MP, and his name is Bryon Wilfert, and he's the vice-chair of the Prime Minister's urban task force, the Liberal caucus in Ottawa. He was interviewed on CHED radio on May 2, and let me quote for you what he said about Alberta. Could I tell you what he said about Alberta?

AN HON. MEMBER: Tell us. Quote it.

MR. BOUTILIER: He said, and I quote: Alberta is the most progressive when it comes to the new Municipal Government Act. He said: they were very progressive in having municipal governments at the table making decisions along with the province and the federal government on infrastructure. I might say that the hon. Minister of Transportation is here.

DR. TAYLOR: What did he say about the Minister of Environment?

MR. BOUTILIER: He did make reference that they certainly appreciate the Minister of Environment's comments relative to Kyoto.

He goes on to say, and I quote: Alberta has always been in my view very forward looking. I just want to say that I appreciate the federal vice-chair of the Liberal Party who mentioned that, and I think that's very important.

Now, the hon. member also asked about the issue of debt in a very general sense, and I'd like to take this opportunity to say that on a Visa card – he was asking about the debt that Alberta owes and when are we going to retire it – nobody likes to pay interest. That's why over the past many years this province has reduced its interest by over a billion dollars that we don't have to pay to a banker. I don't like paying a banker. The hon. member may like paying a banker interest, but I don't. That's why I try to make sure my Visa card is paid up to date, so I don't have to pay 1 cent of interest.

Now, there's no question that governments across this country actually do have debt. Our province is leading the way, which he said was the envy of many, but I would like to say this. I met and had the pleasure of meeting with the federal Minister of Finance just a few weeks ago. The federal government has a debt of almost $600 billion, and they're paying interest of over $50 billion a year – a federal budget of about $130 billion, but in fact $50 billion of that goes towards interest, where $80 billion goes to service and $50 billion goes to interest. So I'm so pleased the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar actually brought the point up that I'm very proud, and I thank him for his comments relative to debt reduction. At the end of the day we do not in any way, shape, or form want to leave a mortgage to our children. What an incredible solid foundation to be left to children. It is popular but it may not be exciting, but at the end of the day when people review this time in history, they'll say that the Alberta government was there to not leave a debt to its children's children. They're willing to burden the responsibility today and deal with it today, and I want to say I'm very proud of that and certainly proud of our Premier's leadership to arrive at that. That's why all other provinces are looking at the taillights of Alberta, and I can say that it's because of the leadership that is here.

I would like to say that the hon. member has brought up some important points, and I'd like to clarify for the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar's benefit that in actual fact big companies do not see one single cent of the underground petroleum tank program. This is for ma-and-pa retailers who own a gas station. I know that the Minister of Environment, who's watching and listening intently, is aware that for an environmental remediation program we are leading. We have addressed all of the high-risk underground petroleum storage problems. In fact, I had the pleasure of visiting the hon. Member for Ponoka-Rimbey, where we saw a ma-and-pa who we were able to remediate. They were able to receive a hundred thousand dollars for remediation, and that is an important part of our program that I'm very proud the Alberta government in fact has initiated. It is not at all completed. The Safety Codes Council will be using this over the next year and, I'm pleased to say, will continue to do a very good job on that. So I want to say that I thank the hon. member for bringing that to my attention as well.

Also the hon. member asked some questions relative to full-time equivalents, and he specifically asked relative to the ministry support services, and I'd like to give him the answer directly, as he asked. In the budget of 2001 and 2002 we had 51.1 full-time equivalents in ministry support services. This year we have 51. So ultimately we have a .1 reduction, and I want to say to the hon. member that we are in fact going from 317 to 311 because of the efficient use of the resource that we have within our budget, and I appreciate aiding him.

Also the hon. member asked about support services in terms of the operating expense and the increase of about $84,000, and he asked if I would break it down by the different branches, and I'd like to do that at this time. The following table, which I'm going to list for you, shows you the difference at the branch level relative to the prior year's forecast and the actual expenditure. In the year 2002 under legal services it was $376,000. In the upcoming year, 2002-03, it's $296,000. In communications it was $286,000 and now is $309,000 for 2003. In information technology services – this is a very important initiative – we originally had $5.567 million, and it's broken down now to $6.095 million. Also from a business services perspective, a slight change, it's going from $2,054,000 to $2,100,000. As well, in human resources I'm very proud to say that we're partnering with Government Services. We're partnering with them and sharing human resource initiatives and government services. It's a shared service that we're doing, so the hon. Minister of Government Services benefits again with the Ministry of Municipal Affairs. That's going from 754 to 662 because again we're pooling our resources together, and that's something Albertans have told us. So ultimately we have gone from $8.937 million to $9.462 regarding this, and that the hon. member has asked.

Regarding the detail relative to the support services area, I'm very pleased to be able to also provide him with these numbers, and of course the increase is due to just simply marginal manpower costs as a result of the recently negotiated settlements and higher costs related to the contract revisions of information technology services.

As you know, we are in the 21st century when it comes to technology, and technology I think is a real key when it comes to planning for the 21st century.

The hon. member also mentioned long-term planning. I believe I addressed that with the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry. I made reference to the Future Summit and the fact that this government is willing to think outside the box and look to the next 10, 15, 20, 25, and 30 years and ask the question: what will Alberta look like? One thing for certain is that we will not look like a government that has debt. We will be there because we believe in shouldering the responsibility to ensure that we don't leave a mortgage for our children and our children's children, and that's exactly what we're doing, and of course I encourage all governments at all levels throughout this country to take the same approach. It may not be fancy and it may not be exciting, but clearly it's leaving us all a foundation in terms of sustainability, in terms of the fundability in dealing with municipalities.

The hon. member asked a question relative to how we are going to be, from a public relations perspective, dealing with issues. Quite contrary to the hon. member's comments, we established the roles, responsibilities, and resources committee, where we're talking and meeting with our partners at the municipal order of government. I say orders of government, not levels of government, because we are serving the same taxpayer here, so why would we have levels of taxation when ultimately we're serving the same taxpayer? Ultimately I do believe roles, responsibilities, and resources in fact is doing exactly that in consulting with our important municipal leaders. At the end of the day municipal leaders know best when it comes to dealing with the delivery of the local services. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry – and I appreciate his comment – indicated that they know sometimes what's best, and I can assure you that in my 12 years of municipal government experience that I share that with the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry, because at the end of the day we want to do what is right and what is best for Albertans in partnership with our municipalities.

With that, Mr. Chairman, I would like to say that I'm very pleased with the remediation programs. I'm very pleased with the work that we're doing, and again I'm so pleased to say that we've been able to address the highest priorities in terms of our underground petroleum program relative to site remediation, and I want to say that I've enjoyed meeting with many of the sites relative to the remediation. Now they're becoming healthy and prosperous areas that don't remain economically stagnant, so they are going forward. I certainly appreciate the Minister of Environment's attention to this issue, and I thank him so very, very much for his input relative to this exciting program. I thank him for giving me the thumbs-up on that. With that, I'll take my seat.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. Just two issues I want to touch on that are springing directly from the comments made by the Minister of Municipal Affairs. I just forgot the first one, so it wasn't that memorable. The second one was his talking about intergenerational transfer of debt, and I'm just wondering how he reconciles what he said with the fact that a generation ago, even 10 years ago, it was uncommon for a graduate with a university degree to come out with a $20,000, $25,000, $40,000 debt unless they were in a faculty like medicine or perhaps law, and now it is commonplace. How does he reconcile that? To my mind that is an intergenerational transfer of debt, and this government managed to achieve it in less than a generation. In less than 10 years they managed to transfer a debt that would have been carried by an older generation over some period of time, like a 25-year mortgage. They managed to transfer it down to the post-secondary student population in less than 10 years, and those students now start their adult life with an average of $25,000 in debt, so just a little comment there.

The second issue I would like to bring up with the minister is that when I look on page 213 of the lottery fund, I notice and in fact the minister referenced that Municipal Affairs receives $40 million through the lottery fund: $12 million for municipal sponsorship and $28 million in unconditional municipal grants. In fact, I think to be fair, in the past we would have had to add $50 million to that, because certainly the municipalities were the prime recipients of the $50 million from the community lottery boards. What we're see now is that the municipalities are really feeling the expectation shift to their shoulders to be funding the same community organizations, nonprofit groups and charities, that were previously funded through the community lottery boards. In fact, I think to be accurate, that figure should have been the $40 million plus the $50 million, which is $90 million that Municipal Affairs was recipient of, moneys from the lottery funds, and now of course that $50 million has been pulled by the cancellation of the community lottery boards. So what I'm interested in is: how much input did the Minister of Municipal Affairs have in the decision to remove $50 million that was directly affecting those municipalities that are under his direct control? What plans does he have or what input did he give for how those municipalities are supposed to be making that money up?

Certainly in the city of Edmonton, which is the one that I know the best, those arts groups and culture groups, sports and amateur sports, helping associations, Big Brothers, Big Sisters, the CANDO society, and the Abbotsfield group – I've tabled dozens and dozens of letters in this Assembly from organizations that all received support through the community lottery board. They of course are now going to be looking to the city of Edmonton to replace that money, and I don't know that the city of Edmonton has that money to replace, to be able to make up the difference. So I'm interested in what part the minister played in the decision to remove the money and what advice he's giving those under his ministry or associated with his ministry on how to make up the money.

Now I'd like to move on and look at my favourite: goals, strategies, and performance measurements. Almost nothing better on a chilly May afternoon to do. When we look at goal 1 on page 308, we have "an effective, responsive, cooperative and well-managed local government sector"; that's the goal. As I follow through on the key strategies, I notice that 1.2.1 says: "Provide governance, administration and management, and land-use planning advice to local governments and associated local service delivery organizations." So I'm wondering: is the plan to develop and maintain these provincial land use policies going to include pulling more authority from the municipal jurisdictions where it now belongs? Is the idea that the government is going to take over more of this? This is particularly of interest when we look at intensive livestock operations. Under this the province took away the municipal councils' right to make local land decisions. Who knows why? I know there's a great deal of supposition and suspicion about how much influence the land developers had over the province. So the question there is around the land use planning advice and authority. Will we continue to see the province pull authority away from those municipal and local governments?

Still under goal 1, I'm wondering: what is the status of the capital region governance review? I'm also wondering: are there programs that are being developed to encourage self-evaluation of excellence?

In other words, what's the status of the minister's give-a-gold-star program for municipal excellence?

I think this question might have been touched on before, because I noticed that the Minister of Environment was being pulled into the discussion. But in my notes I have a question I'd like to ask about the support that's being provided for the reduction of greenhouse gases at a municipal level. Of course, it does involve all levels of government, and given what municipal bylaws have control over, certainly each level of government has a say in how we're going to approach this. So what support is being provided to the municipalities, and what can we look to come out of the Ministry of Municipal Affairs around reduction of greenhouse gases?

I'm wondering what specific land use planning advice or support the department does provide, specific examples. I've come up with a couple. But what are the rest of the examples, or is that it?

I remember that in one of my first years in the Assembly as a rookie there was an impassioned speech, I think maybe even a motion, coming from the then minister of agriculture, who was making a plea against urban sprawl, the point being that some of the most arable and productive land in Alberta has new housing developments being built upon it. So I'm wondering what the ministry is doing to make sure that municipal tax structures are not encouraging urban sprawl and the effect that that also brings on increasing transportation and infrastructure costs. I mean, the further and further and further out we get, the more roads we have to build, the more sewers, the more electricity lines, and all the rest of that infrastructure. That all costs the original tax base money. So where is that?

I'm still on goal 1, page 309. In the performance measurement it seems odd that the level of satisfaction with the local government services division would be based on the division achieving individual performance targets. It's unclear here whether it means that it's the minister's satisfaction that's being measured or who is setting the target. Whose satisfaction is being measured here? That's not clear.

Now, if I move to goal 2 on page 310, "Financially sustainable and accountable municipalities," why was the target for the number of municipalities meeting the criteria of financial accountability lowered from 98 percent in 2000-2001 to 95 percent in 2001-2002? I mean, it's minor; it's 3 percent. Okay; I'm quibbling. Still, it's interesting that we would have an actual from 2000-2001 of 98 percent and we've got a target in 2001-2002 of 95 percent. Why did we expect to go backwards? Then if I follow along in the three-year business plan, we expect 95 percent in '02-03, 95 percent in '03-04, but by '04-05 we're going to increase back up to 97 percent. This is the goal 2 performance measurement: "Percentage of municipalities meeting Ministry's criteria of financial accountability." So what caused the 3 percent drop? Correspondingly, what, after three years of flat-lining at 95 percent, is going to bounce the ministry up to 97 percent? There must be some specific event or change in structure that's anticipated to bounce you up in that last year. So if I could know what that is, please.

Under goal 4, which appears at the bottom of pages 311 and 312 under core business 2, "Safety services and fire protection," the goal is "a comprehensive safety system that provides an appropriate level of public safety." Okay. The performance measurement for goal 4 is based on "the percentage of assessed accredited municipalities, corporations, agencies, and delegated administrative organizations administering the Safety Codes Act that achieve a satisfactory rating." So what is the rating scale, and is there just satisfactory versus unsatisfactory, or are there other levels that are involved here? What performance indicators are measured to determine satisfactory or unsatisfactory? And what support is given to those that receive an unsatisfactory rating? Is there some sort of remedial program that they get, or what assistance is given them to correct that?

When we look at this particular measurement, I'm wondering: is there consideration given to the volume of work done by a corporation or agency or DAO? I would think that that would make a difference. If you've got a group that handles a large number of safety inspections and they had an unsatisfactory rating, that's going to have far more impact than if you had a number of smaller organizations and one of those gets an unsatisfactory. So there's a question here of – how do I describe this? – equity but also size of organization versus their performance measurement. It can have much more effect. I mean, let's face it. If IBM has a problem, that's going to have far more effect than if a small systems group is offering the same kind of service. So if I could just get an expansion on the detail of how this measurement is arrived at and how remedial corrections are anticipated, that would be helpful.

Now I'm going to goal 5 under core business 3, "Disaster services." Goal 5 is "a disaster services program that enhances and supports local emergency preparedness for major emergencies and disasters." The performance measurements here are interesting, and I'm sure that there's a good answer for this. There is significant fluctuation in the goal for the number of municipalities that have emergency plans and test them every three years. So in '98-99 the actual number was 41.7 percent, but then this rises to 75.1 percent the following year, and then further improvements in 2000-2001 go up to 87.4 percent. The target for this last year was 100 percent, and then it drops to 40 percent. So again there must be a precipitating event here, that either more municipalities were brought into the group that was being measured or you changed the way you were measuring or something, because you started at 41 percent, you steadily improve, and then you've got a target now in 2002-03 of 40 percent; that's the year we're in. Then next year you expect to go to 70 percent, the year after 85 percent, and then back to 100. So it almost looks like there are two cycles here. You start around 40 percent and in four years work yourselves up to 100 percent. Then what? Drop back again to 40? Why do you have this cycle in here? Again, it could be because you're just including a bigger sample size as more municipalities are required to have the plans. I don't know.

I would also like to get some information about the number of Albertans who are living in communities that meet this performance goal. If we have 95 percent of Albertans who are living in communities that meet this goal, then we know that it's probably a couple of smaller communities that don't have these plans in place. We'd want to be equally concerned about those smaller communities, but nonetheless you're covered for a large majority of the population. So I'm just wondering if we can get some more detail on that.

Finally, I look under goal 6 on page 314. We're under core business 4, "Municipal Government Board." Goal 6 is "an independent appeal system that issues timely and impartial decisions of high quality." I'm looking at performance measurement 3, "Percentage of stakeholders who feel they received fair, unbiased hearings." I'm wondering how many stakeholders – well, there was a new measurement last year, so there's no baseline, no benchmark available. I'm wondering how many stakeholders were in the group that's being included in this, and that would tell me whether it was a large or a small group. How many appeals does the Municipal Government Board hear in a year, and will every person that appeals be surveyed? Who conducts the survey? Is this the department or a private contractor that comes in to do this? How was the figure of 85 percent arrived at? Without seeing what was previous to this, I don't have any context to place the 85 percent in. I'm sure it wasn't just grabbed out of the air. Please, I hope it wasn't just grabbed out of the air. That does happen in some ministries, but I hope not in this one. So what's it based on? There must be something, some information that we don't have here that I can't tie it to.

I'm also wondering why it remains stagnant. You hit the 85 percent and you carry right on for three years. So you're not anticipating any improvement, or you don't want any improvement, or you're doing nothing to get any improvement. You know, the whole thing about performance measurements is that they can be invaluable management tools, but if you don't carefully craft that performance measurement, it's next to useless to you. This minister is a graduate of a prestigious university with business degrees and public administration degrees, so he understands what I'm talking about. When I look at this, I go: huh? Well, interesting measurements but what did they hook to? How do we put this in context and know whether this is a helpful measurement or not?

I'm still frustrated with this government's haphazard approach to performance measurements. Some ministries are better at it than others. Some are really taking the time and working through and reviewing and adjusting, but they also give all the information so that you can see where they were trying to go and why they changed what they were measuring, if they did that. This government, having started into a plan where you had business plans and you did three-year forecasts into the future, somehow developed your first series of performance measurements, and then most ministries just left it and never went back and started to bring those forward. Performance measurements are hard to get right, and the chance that you'll get them right the first time out is, like, nil. Very few of the ministries have actually tried to go back and develop their performance measurements along, to give them information that's a good management tool and is giving valid information to managers to make decisions on. I'm just pushing a bit here, but I feel that it's worth it to push.

My time is almost up, and I appreciate the opportunity to go through those goals, which are all the goals and core businesses that were available for me. I've made my points on the community lottery boards, and I'll expect an answer back. Of course, I'm always appreciative of answers in writing if the minister doesn't have the time or doesn't have all the information at his fingertips.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

MR. BOUTILIER: Thank you, and I want to thank the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre. She raises some very good points. I'm having a 10-year deja vu because I feel like I'm back at Harvard Business School right now in terms of what she speaks of in terms of goals and objectives, and I'll endeavour to answer the questions. Those that I don't have at my fingertips I certainly will provide in writing to her.

The first point I listed, if I was able to keep up – I'm not quite good at shorthand, but I made about 10 points, different issues that you raised that I'd like to address. I'd like to commence with first and foremost that one regarding education and the issue of debt relative to, as you mentioned, 10 years ago. Hon. member, certainly I discovered that our educational system, that the hon. Minister of Learning governs – of course, we have a cap of 30 percent of tuition that will actually go towards covering the cost. I think the point that we don't want to lose is that 70 percent of our costs are covered by the ministry. Certainly I believe and I know the hon. member agrees and that members of this House agree that the 70 percent of government dollars that go towards furthering learning relative to postsecondary is a good investment.

Certainly I know that during my time my wife and I got a quick example of the expense that Americans experience. After remortgaging our house and selling our vehicles and also building up debt, I began to realize and appreciate the very good postsecondary education system that we have in Canada. I discovered that two years in the United States will actually get me 15 years in Canada in terms of the actual true costs. That's a real credit to the folks that run the postsecondary institutions in our province and also to the Minister of Learning, I might say. So I would like to just briefly say that it is an important investment of time.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre raises an important point on the issue of community lottery boards. For a point of clarification it is actually not $90 million. There was $52 million for community lottery boards. The $40 million that we have – it's not $90 million. Ultimately $52 million of that is in the ministry of lotteries budget.

What I also would like to say is this. I'm very pleased that my colleague the minister of lotteries is in fact doing a review in looking at ways we can enhance the actual community lottery program to be able to provide the efficiencies, to avoid duplication, and very importantly, though, to continue to serve municipalities. The spirit and the point of her question is: how are we going to continue to serve municipalities? Well, I think this review will reflect that, and I look forward, as she does, with interest to the review that the minister of lotteries is doing in terms of how we serve our municipalities, because, yes, it does benefit municipalities.

If I could, during my 12 years on city council we never had a community lottery program, yet we still were able to endeavour and work and be creative and be innovative in what we did. I want to say that as much as the program began to be a very positive one, we're always willing to look at a way of enhancing it. One of my colleagues once said that, you know, the characteristic of any business is in fact flexibility, and if there's a better way to enhance it, we want to look at it. I'm optimistic that that will be the result of the review that the minister of lotteries is doing, so I look forward to that.

The $40 million, as you know, is of course utilized within municipal government, but the $52 million again is solely within the ministry of lotteries in benefiting, as the hon. member mentioned, municipalities.

Regarding the issue in terms of our goals on providing advice, we certainly provide land advice when it comes to regional planning and the land advice that we have. But it is that; it is advice. I do support that. Municipalities at the land use designation will ultimately have the decision to make on zoning. Recently a question was asked here by the hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose regarding the city of Calgary on a land use issue. In actual fact, of course, I sent an advisory to the 360 municipalities giving them advice in terms of land use designation. In fact, we have a situation where perhaps the bylaw established is too broad. So we're certainly willing from Municipal Affairs to provide that advice, and we will continue to do that in partnership with our municipal partners.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre raised an important point on the Hyndman report. Of course, I've had the opportunity to talk to the members across the way relative to this, and I'm just so very proud of the work that the report had done with the 22 municipalities through the Alberta Capital Region Alliance. I want to say that the 22 municipalities that are there are working closely. They're proposing a business plan to come forward. It's my expectation that it's going to be back before summer. Hopefully that will be a warm summer day when they will be providing their business plan. I'm encouraged and I'm quite prepared for this government to assist when it comes to regional partnerships with the alliances that the 22 municipalities are making.

I want to thank the hon. member for bringing up the Hyndman report and the good work of ACRA. Just last week I spoke to ACRA when they met in Parkland county. They've done some very good work, and they're working eagerly, the 22 municipalities, on their business plan, which will address some of the issues on how we better serve our taxpayers within the 22 municipalities.

The hon. member also mentioned urban sprawl, which is an important issue as well. At the end of the day the taxation system we have at the federal, provincial, or municipal order of government needs to be fair and equitable. I think that's the principle that we've got to be guided by. I had the pleasure of course of working with 13 communities during my time as mayor, when we actually had an amalgamation. But I'm proud to say that it wasn't forced by this province; it was actually something that our municipalities came up with by working together in partnership.

My belief is simply this: I don't believe that one size fits all. I believe that what may work in northeastern Alberta may not work in another area. What I'm encouraged by from the Alberta Capital Region Alliance is how proud they are of the 22 municipalities in terms of their identity. So the question is: how do we ensure that their identity remains strong but at the same time they still pool those resources so that in fact we don't have a snowplow stopping at a municipal border and lifting its snowplow blade, going through a city, putting its blade down, and carrying on within its jurisdiction. Actually, that happened in the municipality that I was mayor of. I'm pleased to say that we sat down and we realized that we could keep our own identity but at the same time work together in serving our taxpayers. I'm pleased that the hon. member has brought up the principle of fairness and equity in terms of municipalities working together. It needs to be.

I'm very pleased to say that the hon. Member for Peace River – we have four municipalities that are working relative to some disputes that were going on. Our Municipal Affairs people were able to devote some of our resources in a mediation process, and they have actually signed a deal. Full marks to the local municipal leaders, because they know how best to serve their taxpayers. I'm pleased to say that Municipal Affairs just had a small role to play in terms of offering some facilitation and mediation, which I think is also very important.

I don't subscribe to the point that one size fits all, because at the end of the day I believe I'd prefer to have municipalities go forward in partnership. The Hyndman report was a good start to that. The Alberta Capital Region Alliance is working with that, and I'm encouraged by the fact that they know what's best at the local level, as the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenarry said when he talked about the grass roots of our democratic system.

Regarding municipalities, the hon. member has brought to my attention our being at 95 percent and that we've slipped by 3 percent. She's right, and I appreciate her indicating that. Maybe she's a little bit nitpicky, but the point is that we want to continue to have the attitude that we can do better. I would also like to be able to say that what we have done under goal 5 is that we have taken the cumulative percentage over four years in order to reach our 100 percent. That's what our objective is, and I appreciate the point that the hon. member raised. It's not intended to be confusing, but if there is some clarification, I wanted to offer that today. I thank the hon. member for bringing that to my attention.

Point 7 was the issue of assessing the percentage of accreditation, goal 4. Ideally what we'd like to do is have as many municipal officials as possible accredited, and we're moving in that direction. All municipalities are not there yet, but we want to continue to get there, and certainly we're trying to provide that support in order for them to get there.

You know, in dealing with the unsatisfactory rating, what we want to be able to do – I'll provide it in writing in terms of how we deal with that. I don't have that at my fingertips. But I do know that we're always willing to ask municipalities: what are you doing; what's working well; what can we do better? I'm very proud of the kind of performance ratings that Municipal Affairs has been getting and that we want to continue.

When you do talk about goals, certainly an important point – and I agree with the hon. member – is that the characteristic is flexibility. It's a changing environment. But in a changing environment, then, the question is that we do not want to lose – in fact, I was just reading a book. Jack Wells, the former chairman of General Electric, who spoke in my class while attending Cambridge, said: if it's not measured, it's not done. I couldn't agree more with the hon. member when she says: what is the performance? If we realigned different ministries and departments with the changing environment externally or based on what input citizens say, we still need to be able to bring that historical data with us so that the measurements at the end of the day are there, so they're meaningful and they're measurable, so we can continue to do that evaluation. I want to say that I'm pleased with the folks in Municipal Affairs for doing that, and they do know that it is something that I believe is very important in terms of that measurement and relative to how we can again even do better, which certainly is something I continue to work on with our ministry people.

Just before I take my seat, I would like to say that under the issue of the goal of municipalities in terms of going from 41.7 to 75.1, certainly we'll get more information to you on that. I don't have it with me. I want to say that we want more municipalities, though, from an emergency planning system; we want them involved. In light of the events that have taken place, we're dealing with things like contingency planning in terms of ensuring that we have plans in place if there's some public safety event that takes place, that we have to have contingent planning, and that we have all of that type of facility ready to go if in fact there were an event. We're investing significant dollars on that in the upcoming year.

I want to say that from a public safety perspective, from a program perspective, the hon. member raises an important point that we're going to be looking at regarding the issue. The word escapes me right now, but from a technical perspective we want to be able to come forward in terms of ensuring that there are plans in place. For instance, if this Legislative Assembly for whatever reason was not able to function, we would be able to go to a subsequent facility and continue. The government will go on. It never sleeps, and this Legislative Assembly goes on, so we need a place for us to congregate if in fact for whatever reason we were under some type of threat. That kind of contingent planning is very important, also at the municipal level relative to our emergency planning. I had the pleasure of meeting with 75 of our emergency planners from across Alberta, and we actually talked about the example of the Y2K bug and how we were able to reimplement that program with the infrastructure from the variety of ministries that go on.

Regarding stakeholders in terms of appeals under the Municipal Government Board, the hon. member asked some questions, and I would like to share with you what actually took place under the Municipal Government Board and what we anticipate. We're increasing by about $722,000, and it's important to note that property appeals went from under 2,000 appeals in 1998 to over 8,000 in 1999 and linear complaints doubled from 6,000 to 12,000. So they're a very active group of volunteers, and the actual number of hearings conducted by the MGB has increased from 400 to 700.

Obviously, people are willing to take those kinds of appeals to the Municipal Government Board, and I want to take this opportunity to compliment Gerald Thomas and his entire team of people that in fact serve on the Municipal Government Board. I also thank the members who highly recommend people who are good candidates to sit on the board and who have a variety of municipal experience, which I think is equally important.

Before I take my seat, I'd like to go back to the issue of learning, and on the issue of learning I think the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre raises good questions regarding the fact that we don't want students and I am quite confident the Minister of Learning does not want students going out with huge amounts of debt. Learning is an investment in our future. One of those students who is attending university may be the doctor that comes up with the cure for cancer or may be the new Einstein who comes up with another example of how we can split the atom – who knows what could happen? – or the doctor that may in fact come up with the cure for diabetes, something that would be a very worthwhile investment. We're very proud of the Edmonton protocol and Dr. Shapiro and his team of people, that in fact is now in 13 countries across the world – and it's really quite amazing – in light of the good work the University of Alberta is doing. Certainly I'm onside in terms of how we want to see lots of continued resources going there, and I thank the hon. Minister of Learning for continuing to ensure that gets there. The fact that I had to mortgage my home and sell my two cars when I went to school south of the border – let me conclude by saying this. Two years in the United States actually would have got me 15 years of university in Canada, so it does speak of the tremendous opportunity that in fact we have in postsecondary training right here in Canada and specifically here in Alberta.

So I thank the hon. member for her questions.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'm sure the hon. minister was happy that he was in Boston at the time he was and not this particular year after events that just occurred there last week, and I was very happy to see those events, shades of Ken Dryden as a rookie. We might be seeing this all over again, and it's exciting.

Just a few more questions on the Municipal Government Board. Now, this appointed board I believe is a tribunal and certainly does work well, and it does conduct the independent and impartial quasi-judicial adjudication functions outlined in the Municipal Government Act with respect to property assessment appeals, linear property assessment complaints, equalized assessment appeals, subdivision appeals, annex recommendations, and intermunicipal planning disputes.

Now, then, when we look back over the last few years, it seems that the Municipal Government Board is always just a bit over budget, not that much but just a few hundred thousand. If the minister could please explain why this particular board seems to be consistently over budget. Again, is this from the fact that perhaps their caseloads are unpredictable, or have we had a consistent number of caseloads over the years? Do we have an increasing number of caseloads, which would certainly lead to this shortfall each particular year? If the minister could also please inform us as to the backlog of cases for the Municipal Government Board at this time. As well, if he could also inform us of how many appeals did the Municipal Government Board hear in the year 2000. How many would be considered major appeals, requiring a significant amount of the board's resources, or how many were not in this category? Also, if the minister is evaluating the success of mediation disputes, and if he could also inform us how this particular mediation process is working.

So those are just a few questions that the minister could please elaborate on at this time in regard to the Municipal Government Board. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: Hon. minister, do you want to respond?

MR. BOUTILIER: Sure. If I could.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

MR. BOUTILIER: Thank you. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry raises an important point. I would like to say, though, that in terms of complaints, we've had complaints increase from 400 to 700 when it comes to appeals, and that's quite a substantial increase. Of course, I think it's reflective of the busy things that are going on in our province. In the 2002-2003 estimates the increase above essentially the budget requirement dramatically increased to hear and decide on significant increases in the number of property and linear appeals. As I mentioned earlier, the property appeals went from under 2,000 in 1998 to over 8,000, so it's almost like a 400 percent increase. I appreciate the hon. member recognizing that our board has not grown by 400 percent, in fact quite contrary to that, yet they are dealing with an incredible workload. I want to take the opportunity again to recognize their good work. Many are former mayors and councillors and people that are active in the community and want to serve in a public service way. Again I want to thank the chair, Gerald Thomas, and his staff, who do a very good job.

I want to say that it is a quasi-judicial body. We hear appeals on decisions of municipal assessment review boards. We hear complaints about assessments for linear property. We hear appeals on equalized assessments. We hear appeals on certain subdivision planning decisions, intermunicipal disputes, annexations, disputes between housing management bodies and municipalities, disputes involving regional service commissions, and any other matter referred by the minister or cabinet. So ultimately it has a huge responsibility. I want to say that, yes, it is an increase, but it's reflective of the very busy activity that Albertans are bringing to them. I think and I'm sure all members of this Assembly would agree without question that they are fair, that they will listen to all sides of the arguments and then make a decision in the best interest of all parties affected.

So with that, I'll take my seat, and I thank the hon. member for raising the question.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. In the last few minutes remaining I would like to take this opportunity to make sure the minister knows that I value the work he does, and therefore I have some interest in asking some questions about his budget and the business plan. Most of the questions related directly to the dollar figures I think have been asked.

I have a question to the minister, Mr. Chairman, related to goal 1 in the business plan. It's goal 1.1.6, "Work with municipalities on challenges of climate change initiatives, including the reduction of greenhouse gases." Now, what I want to ask the minister about this is if he would tell me exactly what his plans are, what kind of resources he's committing, and if those plans are at such a stage of development that they are ready to be implemented. Maybe they are already being implemented. Where in the budget are the resources allocated to addressing that particular commitment made in the strategy in goal 1?

My second question relates to key strategies.

Establish and support the Minister's Provincial/Municipal Council on Roles, Responsibilities and Resources in the 21st Century to clarify the government's working relationship with municipalities and support a mechanism to address major municipal-provincial issues.

Is this council already in place? The revision of some regulations that the minister has been circulating having to do with the ability of municipalities – it's the control of corporations regulations. Are the proposed changes, which we in the House spoke about and that we think threaten the ability of municipalities to manage their own affairs – I think the hon. Member for Medicine Hat had some concerns specific to Medicine Hat, but those concerns are broader, I think, and certainly relate to the situation in Calgary and Edmonton. Is that revision of the regulations going to go before that council? Is the council in a position to have public input on the discussion on any proposed changes to the regulations?

So those are my two questions. We have three minutes for the minister to answer, I guess. Thank you.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. minister.

MR. BOUTILIER: Thank you. I thank the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona for bringing attention to that. I would like to say on goal 1.1.6, climate change – and I want to apologize to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre because she also asked a similar question relative to this important initiative. I could give just one example of where we're working very closely with municipalities. As you know, Alberta is the only province that's developed Climate Change Central, which is, I believe, very important. It falls under the Minister of Environment's purview, and I know he has funding for that as well. I want to say that I had the pleasure of chairing the cabinet committee on climate change. I want to say that the best example is that in the town of Hinton, where the former mayor, Ross Risvold, was involved, who sat on Climate Change Central, they built a new town hall, and they were able to get funding through the regional partnership program to be able to make it the most energy efficient.

What's really interesting is that energy efficiency is the way of the future. When we have municipalities that are constructing, through the co-operation of the Minister of Infrastructure as well as the Minister of Environment, the funding there – if we have more efficiency in the long term, as we look out in the next 20 years, we're actually saving dollars because we're energy efficient. We're reducing greenhouse gases. So it's an important initiative that mostly falls under Infrastructure, and I know that our public service within the government of Alberta has reduced greenhouse gases substantially. Every ministry has a role to play. I might add, for the hon. member raising the point, that every Canadian has a role to play in dealing with the issue of climate change and global warming. It's everyone's responsibility, and I appreciate the hon. member bringing it to our attention. That's just one example of regional partnerships we've used.

I would also like to be able to say that under the roles, responsibilities, and resources council that was formed, this includes membership from the Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties as well as the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association as well as the two big-city mayors, which are the mayors of Edmonton and Calgary, as well as . . .

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs, but pursuant to the understanding agreed to unanimously by the Assembly earlier this afternoon, I must now put the following question. After considering the business plan and proposed estimates for the Department of Municipal Affairs, are you ready for the vote?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

Agreed to:
Operating Expense and Capital Investment $133,081,000

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: Shall the vote be reported? Are you agreed?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: Opposed? Carried.
The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I move that the committee rise and report the estimates of the Department of Municipal Affairs.

[Motion carried]

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

MR. MASKELL: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of Supply has had under consideration certain resolutions, reports as follows, and requests leave to sit again.

Resolved that a sum not exceeding the following be granted to Her Majesty for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2003, for the following department.

Department of Municipal Affairs: operating expense and capital investment, $133,081,000.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Opposed? So ordered.
The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I seek the unanimous consent of the Assembly to revert to Introduction of Bills to allow for the introduction of Bill 27, the Appropriation Act, 2002.

head: Introduction of Bills

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Appropriation Act, 2002

MRS. NELSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 27, the Appropriation Act, 2002. This being a money bill, Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Government, having been informed of the contents of this bill, recommends the same to the Assembly.

[Motion carried; Bill 27 read a first time]

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would move that we adjourn until 8 this evening.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:19 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Tuesday, May 7, 2002

8:00 p.m.

Date: 02/05/07

[The Speaker in the chair]

THE SPEAKER: Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Guests

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, before we call on the hon. Minister of Justice, in the galleries tonight are young representatives from throughout the province of Alberta who are with us in Edmonton this week as part of the Forum for Young Albertans. The gentleman that has co-ordinated this project on their behalf for nearly 14, 15 years, Mr. Blair Stolz, is with them. They've had a busy itinerary in the last two days and will have for the next number of days.

I want to thank all hon. Members of the Legislative Assembly who have taken time during their schedules during the day to meet with them, to participate with them. All hon. members should know that earlier today they were here in this Chamber. They sat in the desks of hon. members and participated in a seminar with the chairman, and this evening we had our annual opportunity to host them. Again, I want to thank the hon. members who were able to join with us and attend and to thank all of them for taking the time during this part of their school year to be with us. They are in grade 10, grade 11, and grade 12 from various parts of Alberta, and six of them were here a year ago to participate in Mr. Speaker's Alberta Youth Parliament.

A number of them have indicated that as the years go into the future, they would look forward to finding a suitable spot in this Assembly on behalf of various people in the parts of Alberta that they will be living in. So if you would join with me in welcoming them, that would be very nice.

head: Government Motions

Appointment of Information and Privacy Commissioner

25. Mr. Hancock moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly concur in the May 2, 2002, report, part 2, of the Select Special Auditor General and Information and Privacy Commissioner Search Committee and recommend to the Lieutenant Governor in Council that Franklin J. Work be appointed Information and Privacy Commissioner for a five-year term.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There has been a select committee of this House to interview and go through the process of recommending to us a new legislative officer for that position, and I think this House would be well advised to abide by the decisions of that committee.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. At this time, regarding Government Motion 25 to appoint as Information and Privacy Commissioner for a five-year term Mr. Franklin J. Work, I too would like to state that the entire Assembly should recognize the efforts of the committee, and I wish Mr. Work well in this five-year appointment. Certainly if this hon. member had his way, there would be an increase in the scope of the work for the Information and Privacy Commissioner. One always must remember that there's a delicate balance between providing information and protecting the privacy of individual citizens.

Thank you.

[Government Motion 25 carried]

head: Government Bills and Orders
Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Tannas in the chair]

THE CHAIR: Good evening. I'd like to call the Committee of the Whole to order. For the benefit of those in the gallery I'll explain what the committee is. This is an informal part of the Legislative Assembly, and it enables members to ask an unlimited number of questions and to ask more than one time. They can be up and an answer can be given and they can go back and speak again, so they can speak an unlimited number of times. It is a vulnerable stage where it could take many, many, many hours or a brief time. It's where we deal with the clauses of a bill item by item and make amendments and that kind of thing.

The informality you can already see as a number of gentlemen have removed their jackets and that kind of thing. Also, as we see, people are able to move around, and if you're trying to follow your sheet, the members will not be where they're supposed to be except when they're speaking. We have a convention here in the Chamber that we try and remember to abide by, and that is that we only have one member standing and talking at a time. You can see the importance of that later on.

Municipal Government Amendment Act, 2002

THE CHAIR: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

MR. VANDERBURG: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm very proud to rise today to speak on Bill 23, the Municipal Government Amendment Act, 2002. As the Member for Edmonton-Glengarry noted in his comments, the bill does reflect the wishes of stakeholders and will help to improve and strengthen the Municipal Government Act. The amendments outlined in the bill will provide a consistent standard of liability protection for municipal officials and for the municipal boxing and wrestling commissions and will improve the equalized assessment process. The proposed amendments provide a standard of good faith for liability for municipal officials and for municipal boxing and wrestling commissions. The proposed amendments also improve the equalized assessment process by eliminating the one-year lag between the preparation of the current year's municipal assessments and the preparation of the equalized assessments.

The Municipal Government Act is a legislative framework for municipal governments in Alberta and is viewed as one of the most progressive legislations of its kind across Alberta. The proposed amendments will help to improve that framework, sir. These amendments are based on consultation with the municipalities, the AUMA, the AAMD and C, and other stakeholders. Maybe I should say: AUMA is the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association; AAMD and C is the Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties. I thank them for that valuable input. These are very, very valuable stakeholders in this process, and, sir, I really do want to end this by thanking the Minister of Municipal Affairs and his staff for allowing me to make these amendments here tonight.

Thank you.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm happy to respond in committee on Bill 23. As we see it, the highlights of the bill are that it changes some of the dates for filing property assessment information, and it will be for the year just past instead of the year before that, which is good. Now this is possible because information will be submitted on-line rather than on paper forms, which of course is also good. As much as sometimes we may complain about the increased workload we have from dealing with e-mails and on-line information, there are times when it is very beneficial, and this would be a good example of that.

We also agree with this bill making the amendment so that municipal employees, volunteers, councillors, and boards of directors for boxing commissions will be held to the same standard of performance in good faith as provincial and federal employees. A very important change, and one that we can support. This is one of those rare occasions when there's been a great deal of co-operation between government and the Official Opposition. We have had the time and the opportunity to consult with stakeholders, and they are by and large very supportive of this bill. So we are pleased to not only support this bill but to support a call for the question.

[The clauses of Bill 23 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

THE CHAIR: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE CHAIR: Opposed? Carried.

Tobacco Tax Amendment Act, 2002

THE CHAIR: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Minister of Revenue.

MR. MELCHIN: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd just like to respond to some of the questions that were raised with respect to second reading. One of the first questions in debate had to do with cigars manufactured in Canada being treated differently than cigars manufactured in the United States and asked whether that would raise an issue in North American free trade, and I'd just like to respond. There's no real difference in the tax treatment between the domestic and foreign cigars. The base price on which tax is calculated is the price charged on the first sale in Canada. In other words, in the case of cigar manufacturing in Canada that's the price charged by the manufacturer; in the case of foreign cigars it's the price charged by the importer. Since there's no difference in treatment, there'll be no challenges under NAFTA.

Another one was that the percentage increase in tax was different for cigarettes than loose tobaccos and cigars, and that's in relation especially with respect to loose tobacco and cigarettes. They would be increased to be the same rate per gram, so loose tobacco would equal the same effective tax cost as it would on cigarettes. That would be to discourage any switching from one form of tobacco to the other.

The other question was with respect to a wellness fund, linking the tax to a wellness fund in particular. This bill is in response to raising the revenue. Our revenue sources aren't dedicated revenue sources. None of our tax policies are dedicated revenues; they're for general revenues of the government. For the smoking cessation programs you'd have to refer to the minister of health's programs in his department with respect to the Alberta Alcohol and Drug Abuse Commission.

I think I'll end my comments there. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. This Bill 22, the Tobacco Tax Amendment Act, 2002, is such a classic Conservative bill. They tell everybody that they're lowering taxes.

AN HON. MEMBER: And they are.

MS CARLSON: Through the front door, but through the back door they're increasing all these other head taxes and all the sin taxes that they just love to increase.

What are we talking about here? A hundred and twenty-eight percent on cigarettes, 183 percent on cigars, and 300 percent on tobacco. Everybody says: well, what does it really matter, because we want people to quit smoking anyway, so this is a good tax; right? [interjections] Yeah; clap. Go ahead. But the fact is, Mr. Chairman, that it does nothing to eliminate addictions, which is the basic problem with people once they start smoking. Do you think people want to pay 10 bucks a pack for smokes out there? No way. Lots of them that I have talked to have said that now with these increases, when there are two people in the family smoking, they're paying a mortgage payment just to buy cigarettes.

The best example I got was from our new member's constituency when I was out there in the by-election from a fellow who was working in a hardware store.

AN HON. MEMBER: You just wasted your time, then.

MS CARLSON: It wasn't a waste of my time at all. It wasn't a waste of time for any of the Liberals who were out there working, because you'd be quite surprised at the information we gathered. We had an increase in votes out there. There's a huge dissatisfaction with government and some of the really stupid decisions they've made in the last little while, particularly all the flip-flops, so don't tell me it was a waste of my time.

What this fellow said to me is that he and his wife smoke: $300 a month for each of them. That's $600. That's more than their mortgage payment. This fellow is working for a very low salary in the service industry, and they're having real problems making ends meet. I said to him: what should the government have done? He said: if they're serious about us quitting smoking to lower the health care costs, then what they should have done was initiated some kind of wellness program like making the patch available to people or other kinds of programs. That's what he said.

I think that's a great idea. That would be part of the solution to eliminating the health risk we have for everybody who is associated with smokers but particularly for smokers. What does this government do? No way. You talk to them about some of the solutions they could have if they're going to raise these taxes and put them into general revenue. We just heard from the Minister of Revenue, when someone said to him, "How come there isn't dedicated money then going to providing preventative programs for smokers?" he passes the buck, which is again a classic Conservative ploy in this particular government, and says: "It's not my fault. It's not my department. Talk to the Minister of Health and Wellness."

Well, in fact it is his responsibility, Mr. Chairman. If he's going to increase the taxes and he's going to see that there's a reason for the decrease overall in smokers, then it's his responsibility as a part of this government to see that the money flows through to the end use where it can do the most good. Perhaps this government's policy is not to have dedicated revenue and dedicated sources, but when you're picking the money out of the pockets of Albertans, then there are some instances when it's very important to dedicate that revenue.

I would suggest that gambling, alcohol, and cigarettes are prime examples of that. If they're going to increase these taxes, then we should see a subsequent increase in dollars dedicated to preventative programs and to elimination of health risks. This minister has the responsibility and, I would suggest, the ability to do that when they're deciding where money gets dedicated, and particularly given this minister's background, I would suggest that he get on the record saying that he's quite happy to do that. Two hundred and eighty-one million dollars in increased taxes they have received from this, and I do not see a corresponding $281 million going to AADAC or to Health and Wellness. That's the challenge that we have for this minister to deliver to Albertans.

With that, Mr. Chairman, I will take my seat, and we can have the vote.

THE CHAIR: Before I recognize any other members in this debate, I wonder if we might have permission to briefly revert to Introduction of Guests.

head: Introduction of Guests
(reversion)

THE CHAIR: The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

MR. AMERY: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's my pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly Mrs. Janis Marz, the wife of the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills. Mrs. Marz just came back from Spokane's Bloomsday. She is seated in the public gallery. I would like to ask her to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Minister of Learning.

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. After those provocative words, I deemed it necessary to stand on my feet and give my two cents worth as well, and it is not very often that I do stand on my feet with the bills.

Mr. Chairman, what I will say is that the $600 per month multiplied by 12 is yes indeed $7,200, but the health risks that these people are going through by smoking that one pack a day – a 20-pack a year cigarette smoker, for example, you can almost guarantee will develop lung cancer. The health care costs of that are included in the $6.795 billion that we just voted on today on first reading of Bill 27, the Appropriation Act, 2002.

When you talk about preventative programs, take a look around North America. Those constituencies, those areas that have high costs of cigarettes have lower consumption, and that is proven time and time again, Mr. Chairman. I am certainly not one to advocate higher taxes. I am one, though, to advocate higher taxes for cigarettes, and I commend the minister for bringing this forward.

MS CARLSON: Well, Mr. Chairman, then I have a question for this particular minister. Did he at the cabinet table suggest that all of this money be revenue dedicated to prevention and to elimination of smoking because that's where the money needs to go?

THE CHAIR: Hon. minister, I'm not really sure that you're the sponsor of this bill, but we'll allow.

DR. OBERG: I would love to speak again, Mr. Chairman. Cigarettes cause a huge toll on the general public of Alberta. They cause a huge toll on the health of smokers in this province. The amount of dollars that are spent on smoking-related illnesses – be it diabetes, be it heart attacks, be it lung cancer, be it ulcers; you name it – is astronomical. So to say quite simply that it should be spent on preventative practices is ignoring the whole cost of health care by cigarettes, which is to the acute health care system. When I was in active practice, if you could eliminate smoking, quite frankly you would have eliminated 30 to 40 percent of the reason people came to see doctors. This bill goes a long way in doing that.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, and then we'll go to Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to ask the Minister of Learning whether or not he feels that preventative programs are as effective as raising the price of tobacco and whether or not it wouldn't be a sound investment for the government to spend considerably more on preventative programs given the costs to the acute health care system that he has just outlined.

Chair's Ruling
Question and Comment Period

THE CHAIR: Hon. members, we have before us a bill entitled Tobacco Tax Amendment Act, and yes, some of these are debating points, but the minister responsible and who is supposed to answer is here. I know it's wonderful to be able to get the Minister of Learning into the debate. I did allow it before, and if the hon. Minister of Learning wants to take this on – but you're not obliged to. Okay.

MR. MASON: A point of order, Mr. Chairman.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands is rising on a point of order. Would you share with us the citation?

Point of Order
Question and Comment Period

MR. MASON: Standing Order 13(2) permits any member other than the person introducing or responding to the bill or closing on the bill to be asked a question. That does not simply apply to members who are not members of Executive Council, Mr. Chairman. Any member who rises except for the first, second, and last speaker is entitled to be asked questions by any member, and the chair ought not to be interfering in that.

THE CHAIR: Okay. What the hon. member is saying is absolutely correct. The new Standing Orders do permit that on second reading and third reading. This however, hon. member, is committee. In committee members are allowed to stand up for unlimited periods of time. The rule that you're invoking really is only for the other two readings, and besides that, your citation was incorrect.

MR. MASON: I apologize, Mr. Chairman.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford on Bill 22, one trusts.

MR. McCLELLAND: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'll be very, very brief, to the comfort of everyone here. I think that it's very important to make the point that there is a very direct relationship between the price, the elasticity of cigarettes, and the take-up, particularly by the young. The opposition knows that and knows that full well. There are times when we know that the opposition must oppose for the sake of opposition. This may not be one of them.

MR. MASON: Now that I'm in sync with everyone else, Mr. Chairman, I'd just like to make a few comments. I did speak to this on second reading. I certainly do not disagree with higher taxes on tobacco, but I certainly do believe that the money ought to be going towards prevention. Given the state of this budget as a whole, I see this as nothing more than a tax grab and, as has been pointed out, from the lowest income group in our society. At the same time that the government is reducing corporate income taxes, as we well know, it seems to me that in this particular case it's not, as some members opposite would have us believe, simply a careful, well-thought-out plan to reduce the incidence of smoking and the related costs in our society. It's not, and I think that's the point.

The relevant point is that this is a tax revenue item. It is considered by the government to be a politically acceptable way to raise taxes after they've repeatedly promised that they would not do so. If it were intended strictly for the prevention of smoking, I'm sure that I would support it and I'm sure that other members in the opposition would support it, but that's not what it is. It's a revenue item. The government is desperate because it's put itself into such a terrible box with the fundamentalist fiscal policies it keeps following that give it no leeway: cutting taxes, no deficits, and lots of promises to the public about increasing program spending. There was no other way out for the government but to raise taxes on cigarettes. So let's dispense with the hypocrisy opposite, Mr. Chairman. This is a tax grab.

[Title and preamble agreed to]

THE CHAIR: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE CHAIR: Opposed? Carried.
The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I move that the committee rise and report bills 23 and 22.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

MR. VANDERBURG: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following: bills 23 and 22.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Does the Assembly concur in this report?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Opposed? So ordered.

head: Government Bills and Orders Third Reading

Bill 2 Child and Family Services Authorities Amendment Act, 2002

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Justice.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would move Bill 2, the Child and Family Services Authorities Amendment Act, 2002, for third reading.

The bill essentially, as has been discussed at second reading and in committee, provides for various amendments to the structure and operation of the child and family services authorities, and I would commend the act to the House.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to make a few comments about Bill 2, the Child and Family Services Authorities Amendment Act, 2002, at third reading. The object of the bill is really twofold. One, it gives the Minister of Children's Services more control over the authorities, and the second one is to actually reduce the size of the board of each authority. We've spoken in the past about the benefits I think of some of the amendments in this bill, Mr. Speaker. I think that the publicity that children's authorities have received in the last several months points out the importance of these authorities and how crucial it is that the government get it right in terms of the makeup and the operation of the authorities.

One of the questions we're continually faced with is: are those authorities effective in doing the kinds of tasks that were put under their purview in 1999? When we address this particular bill, I think we have to ask: will this make them more effective or simply more responsive to direction from the government? I think that on balance, Mr. Speaker, we would agree that it has the possibility of making the authorities more effective, and for that reason we're supporting the bill at third reading.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 2 read a third time]

Bill 4 Public Health Amendment Act, 2002

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure on behalf of the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness to move Bill 4 at third reading, that being the Public Health Amendment Act, 2002.

I think that all members here would agree that health care remains an intensely important part of our proceedings in our daily living, and it depends on very highly skilled and highly trained individuals to make it all happen. Using these individuals as effectively as possible will help meet a very growing and changing demand for health services in our province.

The Public Health Amendment Act before us supports an expanded and more flexible role for registered nurses. In particular, if I could highlight a couple of points, Mr. Speaker, it creates the formal title of nurse practitioner, and it provides authority to make regulations on training, experience, or conditions of employment. I might add how appropriate it is to see third reading of this bill at this particular time given that we are celebrating Nursing Week throughout our province. I wear their badge on my lapel very proudly, as I promised Sharon in my office I would, and I say that because I have many friends who are in the nursing profession and I know how reliant we are upon their services.

Mr. Speaker, to make sure that nurse practitioners have the supports they need, this legislation sets criteria that employers must meet instead of simply listing who can be an employer. Health region CEOs and nurses themselves support these amendments, and this is a very positive step for both rural and urban health regions. I know that we are all very pleased to provide Alberta's registered nurses with opportunities to take on expanded duties, and other health professionals can also look forward to welcoming more nurse practitioners to the health care team.

So on that note, Mr. Speaker, I will cede the floor and look for everyone's support of the Public Health Amendment Act, 2002.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As we have at the various other readings, we will be supporting Bill 4, the Public Health Amendment Act, 2002. Besides the definition changes that we heard about here, the main change in the bill introduces moving restrictions on who can employ nurse practitioners out of the act and into the regulations.

Moving this requirement out of the act and into regulations could be seen in two ways. In the first way, Mr. Speaker, it ties in with recommendation 11 of our own discussion paper, Making Medicare Better, which states that "the Alberta government should act quickly to ensure that all health care professionals can fully utilize their training and expertise."

In Alberta we are not making the best possible use of our medical professionals; that's well known inside and outside of the industry. These amendments could be seen as a positive use of these professionals, positive by allowing more flexible work arrangements for the nurse practitioners, better use of multidisciplinary teams in clinics, which we have asked for for a long time. Up until now nurse practitioners have only been able to work in areas designated as being under service by Alberta Health, and proposed changes to the regulations could help ensure that these nurse practitioners are better utilized, something we have called for for many years. According to government documents proposed changes to the regulations will allow other organizations such as nonprofit community groups to directly engage nurse practitioners, which of course will be positive on a cost perspective.

The amendments could also be seen as negative for the public health care system. Moving into the regulations the requirements on where nurse practitioners can work takes away some of the legislative oversight we would have over these issues as opposition, a group that is left out of the regulatory process. Moving more power out of the legislation and into regulations can be seen as negative, and we have seen often in this Legislature, Mr. Speaker, that the devil is in the details, and those details are in regulations. We see the nonpositive effects of those regulations and their impacts consistently on legislation that goes through this Assembly.

We will be supporting the bill. However, we are putting up a red flag to say that we will be watching to see what comes through in the regulations and will be certainly kicking up a fuss if we see something happening down the road that isn't supportive to Albertans, to the profession, and to health care in general.

Thank you.

Bill 5

Interjurisdictional Support Orders Act

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

MR. RATHGEBER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed a pleasure to rise today to move third reading of Bill 5, the Interjurisdictional Support Orders Act.

I consider this proposed legislation to be of great benefit to all Albertans and specifically to Alberta's families. I have seen situations where a former partner, a parent, or, most sadly, a child goes without the support they deserve because the person required to pay support resides outside Alberta. I've also seen frustrated payers of support who feel that the amount of maintenance they pay should be reduced but who must wait up to two years for a variation application they commenced to be heard in Alberta, a provisional order to be granted, documents to be transferred to the recipient's jurisdiction, a confirmation hearing to be conducted there, and the final confirmation order to be returned to Alberta, all before their support amount can be decreased or their arrears reduced, as the case may be.

I understand, Mr. Speaker, that in September 2000 Canada's ministers responsible for justice unanimously approved an initiative to strengthen the enforcement of child support payments when the parents are living in different jurisdictions. They adopted an interjurisdictional maintenance and enforcement protocol aimed at ensuring that provincial and territorial borders are not barriers to child support. In November 2000 Canada's deputy ministers responsible for justice considered and approved a model interjurisdictional support orders act to be implemented by all Canadian provinces and territories. In August 2001 Canada's Premiers agreed to pass their respective versions of this act within one year.

As one can see, Mr. Speaker, Bill 5 is the result of a series of commitments by all of Canada's jurisdictions to harmonize their reciprocal support order legislation in order to assist Canadian families: parents and, most importantly, children. Given Canada's increasingly mobile population, I'm very happy to see Alberta move so quickly to realize this important objective through the implementation of Bill 5. When the establishment or enforcement of a support order is delayed, parents and children can suffer serious economic hardship. They may also find it necessary to rely on government assistance in that interim.

In reading Bill 5, I am confident that the Interjurisdictional Support Orders Act will make the ability to obtain, vary, or enforce a maintenance order faster and easier. By reducing the number of court hearings in most cases from two to one, I suspect that much of Alberta's court time and courthouse resources will be freed up so that they can deal with more important matters. Indeed, a courtroom, a court clerk, and a judge will only have to be booked for support applications coming into Alberta. Outgoing applications would only involve the completion of an application package forwarded to the other jurisdiction for a hearing there. If court resources are no longer needed for up to half of the reciprocal support cases under provincial legislation that now require two court hearings, this will mean that documents will be able to be transferred more quickly between jurisdictions and matters will be able to be heard more readily. I should also mention the possibility of non support-related matters being resolved more quickly as a result of this newly available and created court time.

Mr. Speaker, I also think that Bill 5 is very well conceived, because it preserves the ability of both parties to have their evidence heard before the court. Claimants and applicants get to put their case forward in their paper application, attaching legal authorities and their sworn evidence. Respondents have the opportunity to appear in court to convey their side of the story. Further, courts have the ability to request further information from either party if they require it to grant the most appropriate and beneficial court order.

Mr. Speaker, I've also noted Bill 5's appeals mechanisms and its requirements for judges to give reasons for refusing to grant or vary a support order or for declining to set a foreign order aside. These provisions further ensure justice and fairness in all matters of interjurisdictional support.

I am confident, Mr. Speaker, that the streamlined procedures of the Interjurisdictional Support Orders Act will achieve the efficiency that Albertans have been seeking when they are involved in matters of support with someone outside the province. Quite clearly, orders granted in other Canadian provinces and territories should be given priority equal to orders obtained in Alberta. Why should an Albertan have to wait to have their order enforced or face any other obstacles just because their order happens to be from, for example, Newfoundland, Northwest Territories, Prince Edward Island, or Manitoba? I appreciate the way that Bill 5 has removed the need for people in those types of cases to wait 30 days before their order may be enforced. Waiting 30 days just means that arrears can accumulate under that court order. Quite simply, the faster a court order may be registered and enforced, the faster the parents and children get the support they require to meet their daily needs.

Mr. Speaker, national co-operation is crucial in matters that involve the well-being of children. I am glad that Canada's 13 jurisdictions have come to an agreement to pass virtually identical legislation in the form of their interjurisdictional support orders acts. It is encouraging to know that the principles and mechanisms for reciprocally obtaining, changing, and enforcing support orders will be essentially identical across Canada: only one court hearing in most cases, fewer delays in transferring documents between jurisdictions, fewer costs to the parties involved, and faster enforcement of all Canadian maintenance orders.

It is also very encouraging to see Alberta so committed to co-operating with other jurisdictions in matters of spousal support and child maintenance. I see in Bill 5 the possibility for further co-ordination in such areas as the creation of application forms, service of documents, the translation of documents, and the conversion of support amounts granted in foreign currency.

In brief, Mr. Speaker, Bill 5, the Interjurisdictional Support Orders Act, is a very beneficial piece of legislation because it improves and simplifies the way that individuals can obtain a court order under provincial legislation and the way that both payers and recipients can vary an existing order because their circumstances have changed.

This legislation will be welcomed by my constituents and indeed by all Albertans.

I know, Mr. Speaker, that there was great support for this bill in second reading and in Committee of the Whole, and I encourage all members to support Bill 5 in third reading, as I have no hesitation in supporting this piece of legislation. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you. I'm pleased on behalf of the Official Opposition to support Bill 5, the Interjurisdictional Support Orders Act, spring 2002. The objective of the bill is to improve the process for obtaining and varying support orders where the claimant and respondent live in separate jurisdictions. [interjections] I thought we'd say it maybe four times, Mr. Speaker.

At third reading we of course return to the principles of the bill, and I think that that's appropriate. The principles here are important ones, indicating that no matter where you happen to live, that shouldn't be an impediment to you seeking the kinds of orders and relief that you require in terms of the cases you're involved with and that you shouldn't be hampered by jurisdictional requirements in terms of seeking relief in support orders.

So I think the principles that are underneath the bill are sound principles. It should make it easier for claimants to obtain an initial support order from reciprocating jurisdictions. It streamlines the court proceedings. It makes them more efficient in processing applications, and it's extremely important that it be consistent with legislation in other jurisdictions.

With that, Mr. Speaker, we'll be supporting Bill 5.

[Motion carried; Bill 5 read a third time]

Bill 6 Student Financial Assistance Act

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Learning.

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to move third reading of Bill 6.

This is a very good bill that allows for further harmonization with the federal government on student loans. It also allows for direct lending on student loans. I will say, Mr. Speaker, that this has been brought into the House after a considerable amount of consultation with the student bodies, and I will say that all the student bodies are in favour of this bill.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We appreciate the opportunity at third reading to speak briefly to Bill 6, the Student Financial Assistance Act. As the minister has indicated, this is a bill that has wide student support. It's a good move in bringing student loans under one roof and making the province the financing agent to be responsible for agreements for financial assistance to students, and it gives the minister the power to I think make the loan system a better system and to respond to student needs more appropriately.

As we have from the beginning, Mr. Speaker, we will be supporting Bill 6.

head: Government Bills and Orders

[Mr. Tannas in the chair]

THE CHAIR: I'd call the Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 26Workers' Compensation Amendment Act, 2002

THE CHAIR: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont.

MR. HERARD: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It's with a great deal of hope and anticipation that I rise to speak in committee on Bill 26. It's been a long time coming, and before I get into the actual clause by clause, I need to make a few comments with respect to this bill, because it is in essence some of the clauses of this bill that I find that some injured workers are asking me questions about. They don't necessarily understand the intent, so I wish to make a few comments with respect to that.

Having worked on both of these committees, I want to begin by thanking the Minister of Human Resources and Employment for having taken I guess the pleadings of MLAs throughout the province from both sides of the House and having looked at doing reviews that in essence today are leading to their logical conclusions in this bill that we are discussing in the House tonight. I wish to thank the minister very much because I recall that when I first got elected, I think one of the first things that I got involved with in 1993 was some WCB claims.

I can certainly remember at the time not knowing exactly where I was coming from and where they were coming from, and essentially I had to make a somewhat hard decision by saying to injured workers, "Look. I'll do what I can for you until the day that I find out that you're lying to me, and then it's over." Some of those injured workers did not come back, but those who did – and I've been working with them for years – were telling me the truth all along. So I want to thank the minister very, very much for the opportunity to speak to this legislation tonight, and I want to thank everyone who worked on both of those committees to make these changes that we are trying to make to the WCB Act a reality.

I want to express a very special thank you to Judge Sam Friedman, who chaired the appeal system review and who taught us a great deal about fairness and gentle persuasion. I also want to thank the hon. Member for Red Deer-South, who chaired the other committee, as well as all the committee members and all of the people who participated and who I think did a great job of defining precisely where some of the problems are that we're trying to address in this legislation.

But I have heard from a number of injured workers who are not too impressed with this legislation. They have concerns with the clauses that we're discussing this evening, and they want to see specific changes or specific clauses that address each and every recommendation that was made and that was accepted by government. To my knowledge – and I've been involved in every stage of developing this legislation – all 45 or so recommendations are being addressed. Some are being addressed in legislation, some are being addressed in regulation, and some are being addressed by policy statements. So for those injured workers who do not see all 45 or so recommendations falling directly into clauses of the bill, that's the reason. It's because not all of it can be addressed in legislation. Some can be addressed in regulation and some through policy statements.

As I understand it, the only recommendation that is not being addressed in this WCB Act is the WCB authority, who were proposed to be a body between the board and the government, and they were to monitor the implementation of the recommendations that were made by both committees. That is not being recommended anywhere in this legislation. So here I have to suggest to the hon. minister that there is a need to monitor the progress of the changes because organizations do what is measured and don't necessarily do what isn't measured. So, Mr. Minister, I urge you to announce how you intend to monitor how well the WCB are implementing the recommendations of both of these committees.

One of the biggest concerns that is being addressed is the concern about medical panels and how to implement medical panels. I had the honour and pleasure of meeting just yesterday with Dr. Ohlhauser, the former registrar of the College of Physicians and Surgeons, to try and understand the process that he is implementing with respect to medical panels. I've got a lot of respect for Dr. Ohlhauser, because in my nine years here I've dealt with Dr. Ohlhauser a number of times and I've found him to be up front, forthright, and a man with a lot of energy to do the right thing. He answered all of my questions, and I'm confident that he is putting together a framework for medical panels and building a system that will be evidence based, impartial, timely, and fair.

One of the other issues with respect to medical panels was this whole issue of something called independent medical examiners. There were a number of people who would relate the extent to which an independent medical examiner would spend some time with them when they were sent there by the WCB to have an independent medical examination. Many people would say: well, you know, I talked to the doctor for a few minutes, and that was it, and he wrote a report. One of the things that's happened since then is that the College of Physicians and Surgeons have put out a document called Medical Examinations by Non-Treating Physicians; NTMEs they call them. So there are no longer IMEs.

This is a protocol that essentially outlines what a physician needs to do when engaged to do a nontreating medical examination. This I believe should be of interest to injured workers, because exactly what needs to be done with respect to independent medical examinations is now published. So that's another major improvement that has occurred as a result of all of this work that all the members in this Assembly and in the committees did. This will help to ensure that best practices are followed with respect to the future of each individual that goes through a medical examination.

One of the interesting things that was also recommended by the committees was an alternate dispute resolution process, and the recommendation that came about through I believe the appeals committee was to bring early resolution to claim difficulties. As we understood it at the time, other jurisdictions had implemented processes that essentially provided a mediator very early in the dispute to look and see whether or not early resolution of the conflict could in fact occur without having to go to an appeal. Those jurisdictions, some of which are in Australia, have had phenomenal results with this sort of alternate disputes mediation process. What has happened is that there's been improved worker satisfaction and there have been fewer appeals, all resulting in lower costs of claims.

That is what was proposed. That's not exactly what's happening. The WCB is currently doing an early resolution initiative, which is a pilot project. I'm not going to stand here and suggest that there's anything wrong with it, because I think it's too early to determine whether or not this particular pilot is going to work. All I do is applaud their initiative to try and come up with an early resolution initiative that will work in the province of Alberta. Again I urge the minister to monitor the progress of this pilot, and without putting a body in place to do that, it's going to be very difficult to see just exactly what progress we're making.

Another major issue that injured workers were concerned about was the accountability to the courts. In this act we are broadening the privative clause to allow an appeal to the Court of Queen's Bench on a question of law and jurisdiction, which is considerably better than what existed, because what existed was something that had to be patently unreasonable. I'm not a lawyer, but if you talk to lawyers, there are very few of those cases that ever succeed. So this again should be an encouragement to injured workers because of the accountability that is being put in this act.

The last thing I want to speak about is long-standing claims resolution. As you know, there are still a number of issues with respect to that. The minister has asked the hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake, the Member for Calgary-Cross, and myself to try and bring some consensus with respect to that process. I just want to share with you that I believe that what has happened is that employers have quite correctly reacted to misinformation. Initially there were rumours that there could be up to 24,000 such claims, that this could cost – I've seen numbers all the way up to a billion dollars, but $250 million is one of the numbers that was bandied about. I can't blame employers for being a bit nervous with respect to that, but there's been a lot of work done since all that was brought into place, and I think that we need to sit down with employers and discuss the facts from the perspective of good, solid research that's been done since these rumours first began. It's my view and it certainly has been my experience that when you sit down with an employer and you discuss the reasons why we need to look at outstanding long-standing contentious claims, the reason always is that some claimants were denied natural justice. When people understand that that's what we're dealing with, they all say: gee, if I had known that that's what you were dealing with, I wouldn't be opposing this.

So I believe, Mr. Chairman, that as this committee does its work, we will find that employers care about their workers. I believe that employers will understand that this is not about getting a number of files off our desks; it's about doing what's right.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure to participate in debate this evening on Bill 26, the Workers' Compensation Amendment Act. I certainly have been receiving a great deal of feedback from supposedly, as they're described, stakeholders from across the province, not only from injured workers but from industry, so I can effectively say from both employers and employees. There are reservations about this bill expressed by both parties.

Now, the hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont stated that every recommendation as discussed by retired Justice Samuel Friedman, by the hon. Member for Red Deer-South, and by various other groups, which so far in this debate have not been mentioned, who participated in this consultation process have been incorporated into the legislation or the regulations that are to be proposed. I don't know how this can occur. Certainly, if it's not there, then it will be in the policy at the WCB. There are many individuals who are expressing the opinion: no, what's in this bill was never discussed. Whose wish list is this bill? This member certainly does not know.

When we're looking at this item by item, line by line, as we must thoroughly do during committee, we cannot do this in haste. We cannot pass this legislation in a cavalier fashion. We must have a good look not only for ourselves but for employers and employees. This is a major piece of legislation. It has been a long time in the making. With the consultation process and with the studies that have been done, I'm disappointed with this legislation. I think that instead of making less visits to respective MLA offices regarding injured workers and their lack of treatment by the WCB or their perception that they are not being treated in a fair and equitable fashion, this bill is going to increase the traffic. It's not going to reduce it. Whether it is another three years or another 12 years representing that fine area of Calgary, I think that the hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont will eventually conclude that there are several major flaws in this bill.

Now, it's going to take a while to go through this, and it is this member's view that it's going to take a considerable amount of work and effort to improve it, because we just simply cannot pass this legislation as it stands. There are just too many deficiencies in it. We must take our time and we must have a good look at this and we must do the right thing.

Calgary-Egmont suggested to the hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment a process to monitor the progress of this bill, and the first thing that would come to my attention is: why then would we reduce the amount of time that the board of directors is to meet? This legislation is going to allow the board of directors to meet perhaps, if they so desire, quarterly, every three months. If we were to have an effective monitoring process of this bill, then one would have to consider demanding that the board of directors – this is a billion dollar outfit – should be meeting on a monthly basis, not reducing the amount of times that they are to meet. How are they to monitor the progress of this legislation if they're to have four meetings a year, one of which is going to be the annual general meeting? I don't understand that, and I am astonished by that proposal. This is, as I said before, a billion dollar outfit. I think it needs hands-on leadership, and that has to be provided by the board of directors. If they're not meeting and communicating with one another on a monthly basis, then I don't understand how this can be done.

Now the Appeals Commission: as I said earlier, in second reading, if this were the only change that was to be made, then perhaps it would be acceptable. I don't know why we have to give the WCB intervenor status with the Appeals Commission. Surely we can have faith in the Appeals Commission. This notion that the board can "make representations, in the form and manner that the Appeals Commission directs": I can't understand why they should have that right to intervenor status. Now, perhaps in the course of this debate my mind can be changed, but we need to wait with the Appeals Commission. I can see how people would want to wait and see how the Appeals Commission deals with their new powers here, because there are some new powers. But binding the Appeals Commission, as suggested in 13.2(6)(b), where the Appeals Commission "is bound by the board of directors' policy relating to the matter under appeal": if the hon. minister could explain why this is happening, I would be very grateful.

Further on here: "The Board is bound by a decision of the Appeals Commission." I have to question: what will happen to the board if there's a breach of this? Is there a penalty? If so, what is that penalty to the board of the WCB? The idea that one can go "to the Court of Queen's Bench on a question of law or jurisdiction": how is this the same as the privative clause discussion and the suggested amendment that was provided in Justice Samuel Friedman's report? If the hon. minister could explain that, I would be very grateful.

Further on here, the “consensual resolution process” I think is a good idea. It will be certainly a less expensive way to deal with issues.

But there are other things further on here that in my view are not very good ideas. When we go through this and we get to the section dealing with “persons deemed workers,” my interpretation of this is that we are excluding small subcontractors. I thought everyone was going to be included, as I understood it, because certainly if you have someone who is injured or unfortunately killed on the job who was working as a subcontractor and was a principal of a company, then that allows a steady parade to the courts. I thought that with this we were going to clean that up. We need to clarify better or more distinctly who is a worker. I’m of the opinion that small subcontractors should not be allowed on a site unless they have WCB coverage regardless of whether they’re a principal of the company or not. A clarification on that certainly would be appreciated.

Now, we all are aware of the change in the family farm. Certainly the growth of the corporate farm in Alberta has in the last 10 years been significant. It would be this member’s view, Mr. Chairman, that it should be specific regardless of where one works, that if one is paid a wage, then there should be some WCB coverage. This would certainly exclude the family farm. But I was horrified, as was a large percentage of the Alberta population, when two employees of Drain Doctor were gassed and unfortunately died on the job on, as I understand it, a corporate farm. How is this legislation going to deal with events like that in the future? The last I heard, the families of those two deceased workers were going to have to pursue some sort of resolution through the courts.

There has been case after case after case in this province of farm workers without WCB and without any form of coverage. They’ve been injured on the job, and now they’re living very modestly on some other income support program, most of the time off the farm that employed them. How is this legislation dealing with their predicaments? I don’t believe it is.

The time limit for claims, the notion that this is going to be for two years, section 26(1): I can certainly support that. But if it’s good enough there, why is it not good enough at the claims adjudication level? Now, certainly section 46(1) currently states:

Where a person has a direct interest in a claim for compensation in respect of which a claims adjudicator has made a decision, that person may, within one year from the day the decision was issued by the claims adjudicator, seek a review of the decision by a review body appointed under section 45. That will be the new review body. It’s reflected there. But if it’s good enough over here, the time limit for claims at two years, why is it not good enough also in section 46?

Now, spin-off companies. What studies have been done to evaluate the cost of this to premiums in this province? Within the meaning of section 134, does this include spin-off companies of, say, a construction company in this province? Can they use cheaper WCB rates in Alberta to operate in, say, Chicago, Illinois, at a construction site? Perhaps the accident rates are much higher in Chicago, Illinois. How is this going to work? Is this going to be a subsidy to certain Alberta companies? Are we going to find that small businesses in this province are going to wind up subsidizing the payrolls of large multinational corporations?

We look at the oil well servicing industry in this province, and we recognize that many of these companies have international offices and deal with many different countries. I would remind all members of this Assembly that regardless of where you go, there are different sets of occupational health and safety rules. Some would be stronger than we have here; in Norway, for instance. The Soviet Union, I would suggest, has very few. How is all this going to work? Who is going to pay for this? What cost-benefit analysis if any has been done on this amendment? My interpretation of this is that this could turn out to be a gigantic subsidy paid for by small and medium-sized businesses in this province to the big shots. Now, if the minister could clarify that for me at this time, I also would be very grateful.

Certainly there is section 33, notice by employer. I have some things to say about that, but I will do that later on, Mr. Chairman.

Now, at section 33(1)(c), to be specific, I think we need to clarify again the difference between first aid and medical aid. My question to the hon. minister would be: what is first aid as determined by the board in comparison to medical aid? That definition could lead to a lot of disputes: “Oh, I didn’t report it because, well, it wasn’t medical aid. I thought it was first aid.” I can hear all this now. I think there has to be a specific definition for this, the reporting of both first aid and medical aid. I think it could certainly solve a lot of issues that this member sees developing in the future.

Now, the medical panels. This in my view is not what was discussed. The role, again, of the GP: how are they going to be able to get involved? There were recommendations in both the Friedman report and the report from the hon. Member for Red Deer-South. I would appreciate a clarification on this as well. Certainly when we see that the medical findings of a medical panel are binding on the board, the Appeals Commission, and all other persons with a direct interest in the claim, that in my view is completely usurping the authority of the Appeals Commission. This needs further explanation as to how this is going to work. At this time I cannot see that working.

Again, the rate stabilization reserve has been struck out, and I think this is just a lame excuse for the WCB to plead poverty and not pay claims out to the frustrated injured workers, the contentious long-standing claims. I think this has been done on purpose. There’s no other reason why this fund was initiated and then canceled.

Thank you.

MR. DUNFORD: Perhaps just as we go along here, I will provide some explanation so that we keep ourselves focused. Some time ago – and I don’t remember the exact date – it had been my practice to get together with opposition critics to go over the sections of a bill that I would be bringing forward, so I want to make sure that that conversation wasn’t lost on the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar. There are two types of amendments that are in Bill 26. There are those amendments that are dealing with the Friedman/Doerksen reports and with what we are trying to do through a series of symposiums and feedback from the industry as it pertains to some issues as to an injured worker trying to deal with their particular appeal. So we’ve contemplated things that would happen inside the WCB. We’ve contemplated things that would happen with a more independent system. We’ve contemplated things that would happen with a medical panel pilot. We’ve contemplated things that would happen in the courts.

A couple of the amendments the member seemed to raise issue with, and that’s fine. I just want to remind the hon. member that these were amendments that were provided to us by the WCB with the assertion that stakeholder support was behind those amendments. I’d made it very clear that I was not willing to accept an amendment from the WCB that was beyond routine or beyond the agreement of the stakeholders that the WCB has to respond to, primarily of course employees and employers. In working with some of these, such as the fact that it doesn’t extend itself to farm workers, I think it should be patently obvious, then, as to why it's not there. As far, then, as the first aid definition and medical panels, again these are amendments that have come forward from the WCB with stakeholder support.

The question has been asked: why would we provide the opportunity for the WCB to intervene at appeals? It's really quite straightforward in my view, and that is that if you're going to take something away, you have to consider how you then give back so that the situation can be handled. One of the things that we heard from injured workers from the get-go, from the first time that I ever dealt with an injured worker in my MLA office and certainly the first time I ever dealt with an injured worker after I was called upon to be the minister of this portfolio, was: how was it that the Appeals Commission could make a decision but that because of section 8(7) of the current act, the decision basically could be turned around and almost as if it were at the whim of the WCB? So a very, very major amendment to the current system is the fact that section 8(7) disappears from the act. I'm sure that all hon. members and especially the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar will agree with that.*

In order to do that – of course, it dealt with the fact of matters of policy – if you're going to not provide the WCB, then, with the opportunity to automatically reverse a decision because they're concerned about a policy issue with what the Appeals Commission has determined, there has to be another outlet for them. You complete the circle. So we now provide the fact that the WCB can make representations on such matters.

The second item, as I was listening, that the hon. member talked about was worker definition. Again this is a WCB amendment provided to us with the agreement of stakeholders, but as I understand it, it was to simply allow that small contractor the continued choice that he or she currently enjoys.

In terms of time limits the hon. member will recall that it was in this House where in terms of the statute of limitations we went to a basic time period of two years, so on the principle of making an appeal, it was deemed necessary, then, for us to provide the same opportunity to injured workers as we would to any other citizen of Alberta in bringing a matter forward. So that is there.

I don't know that it was even subtle, but the hon. member was talking about how it's going to take so much time to get through these amendments, and I have as much time as the hon. members, and we'll follow their particular lead on this.

I was talking to another hon. member and missed some of the questions during part of his discussion, so I'd invite him to bring those up again. To this point I've dealt with what I've been able to hear and concentrate on. Thank you.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I rise to speak to the Workers' Compensation Amendment Act, 2002. I guess we have to start and look at the parts of the act now that we've talked about the process of getting things in place. When we deal with the specifics of how we're going to see some of the different phases or the different parts of the act actually put in place, you kind of question the good parts of it that are there, and some of them are going to be a significant improvement in the way the WCB works, but others probably raise just about as many questions about the process as we see being solved by the rest of it. So, you know, you have to balance out what parts of the act will achieve the fairness and the opportunity for both the workers and the employers as they deal with the crises or the issues that come up.

I think we have to look at it from the point of view of kind of the overview. The first part of it starts to talk about the new approach, the new system that they're going to set up. They talk about increasing the openness of the WCB, and this is going to be done through a series of annual meetings, but when we start to look at what's going to happen there, it's really basically a presentation of an annual report much more than really a debate of the kinds of things that need to be done to improve or change or refocus the WCB. So you question whether or not it's really going to achieve the two-way dialogue that's necessary to keep the WCB responding to the concerns both of the employers and the workers, whether regular on-site workers or the injured workers that are in the claim process.

What we're going to have to wait and see, then, is whether or not this actually does build into a constructive process at these annual meetings. If it's just going to be a presentation of the annual report, you know, kind of a report from the WCB about what they've done without the opportunity for that second feedback, then it does in effect create some opportunity for increased openness, but it's only an information flow out from the WCB as opposed to any kind of constructive dialogue that could lead to the board being proactive in dealing with changes. I guess even if there is a question period at the end of the annual meeting, that might even facilitate some responsiveness and that would be better than what we've got now.

The other part of that accountability that they talk about is in the context of how they're going to have a review or an audit by the Auditor General. Now, this is an extension of what came out of the reports where they were talking about outside audits, and now we're seeing the Auditor General being the one designated to do that. I think that's probably as good a relationship as we could ask for, because it's the Auditor General's function to basically deal with both the financial audits and the performance indicator audits of the government, and given that the WCB has that relationship through the minister, we might as well have the same consistency and process. So I think that will probably improve the operation, at least the perception of accountability.

Now, an issue comes up here, Mr. Chairman, in terms of all of the same issues that we run into every time we have a report come from the Auditor General in the sense that they go through and say that they find the operation of the agency or the ministry being consistent with the guidelines and with the performance indicators, but in other cases you'll see where there'll be a series of recommendations, and what you end up with is those recommendations coming back year after year after year because the minister or the agency doesn't respond. So I think that if we're going to make a commitment to even having the Auditor General expend the resources that are associated with the kinds of audits that they do, where they look at the broad perspective of both the financial and the performance indicator aspects of the agency, we'll have to make sure that there's a commitment both from the board and from the minister that some degree of legitimacy is going to be given to those recommendations, that Albertans can feel confident that those recommendations from the Auditor General will be given a good hearing and a good possible review as to whether or not they will improve the operation of the WCB.

This goes in, too, to the sections that talk about – and I guess this is more in the minister's promises than it is in the wordings of the bill – the performance measures that are going to come out through regulation, and this is going to be an interesting exercise to watch as we go through this. You know, the minister keeps promising that this kind of accountability will be there, but we see that in a lot of the other agencies and ministries there are performance indicators that are not based on a causal effect, you know, in the sense that the performance indicator measures a broad spectrum of the activity but they don't really deal with it in the context of the response to initiatives by the agency.

So what we're going to have to deal with here in terms of performance measures is making sure that we're dealing with the degree to which workers get back to work in a reasonable, specified period of time in a healthy way whether or not there are secondary effects caused by the primary injury. These are the kinds of things that we have to look at, because the main objective under those performance indicators has to be: is the worker properly looked after and does the worker get back to work in a healthy condition? All of that has to be done in the context of the premiums that are charged to the employers, but the primary part of that performance measure has to deal with the productivity of our employer/employee relationship, and that's making sure that employees stay healthy and, if they are injured, return to work in a healthy condition quickly. That should be the objective. So those have to be kind of the grass roots of the performance measures that come out of here.

Just talking about whether or not Alberta's premiums charged to an employer class compared to another province – Mr. Chairman, to me that wouldn't be a good performance indicator, and we've got a lot of the ministries that use those kinds of sounds good, feels good but doesn't mean anything type of indicators. I would hope that the minister takes some real initiatives here to make sure that these indicators that will be put in place do develop a true relationship with what the mandate of the WCB is; that is, making sure that any Alberta worker that is injured gets back to work, gets proper care, and doesn't have any secondary issues coming out of the injury that they suffered in the workplace. We have to make sure that we do that. You know, talking about performance indicators and having an auditor look at the relationship between performance indicators doesn't really mean very much, because all you're dealing with is a transitory change in something that may not really reflect the mandate of the WCB. So we'll be watching very closely to see whether or not those indicators or the performance measures that they put in place do really reflect what we perceive as the mandate of the WCB.

We're also looking at sections of the bill that deal with improvements in decision-making of the board, and some of the other members have dealt with those a little bit.

One of the big issues that comes up a lot when we deal with WCB cases in our offices, when an injured worker comes in, is the relationship between what their doctor is telling them, what the WCB medical staff are diagnosing, and how that works into both a treatment program or in the case of a denial into an appeal process. I would suggest that some of the changes we're seeing here, where the employee's medical team, if you want to call it that, will potentially have a more active role in determining the outcome – I think this has a lot of opportunities to really build confidence with the injured worker and build confidence in the medical community that right now is very frustrated with the way the WCB is handling their patients.

If we look at some of the options that are being proposed, the fact that the medical opinions of the workers will have more significant input I think is going to have to be tested with time, and we'll see how that really does come out, especially when we get to the appeal processes where these kinds of situations that we've heard on a number of occasions in the past have really raised a lot of concerns by the injured workers about whether or not there is a fairness there in the context of their medical team saying that this kind of injury is there, that it resulted from this kind of an accident, and that this is the treatment process or the treatment regime that should be put in place to help the worker, yet we have the WCB saying no. I would ask here – and I don't see it quite there, but again it's one of these things that we'll have to find by practice – what the role is going to be between the infamous pre-existing condition that has come up so many times when we've had cases come to our office.

I guess here, Mr. Chairman, if we're going to continue to rely on this kind of an out, I guess, for the WCB, what we then have to make sure is that in effect if we're going to say that pre-existing conditions do have a role to play in whether or not complete treatment is provided, then we better be looking at the possibility of dealing with an ongoing physical for employees and do it under the umbrella of the WCB. If we're going to say that a pre-existing condition is relevant, then some degree of awareness of that condition must be a precondition to an employee knowing that they are putting their health at risk by accepting the job.

I see some real tough issues when we have to start talking about how we deal with that. I think that as we see this new relationship in terms of both medical opinions and the findings that are possible developing out of an injury, we have to make sure that we're looking at these from the point of view of how we make sure that employees who go in in good faith and take a job don't end up being the ones who bear the brunt of any kind of finding that may relate to what has so commonly now been called a pre-existing condition, when in effect the injured worker didn't even have any kind of chance of knowing that they were putting their health in jeopardy.

The other issue that I think comes up is the independence of the appeal process and moving the Appeals Commission away from the WCB. I just listened to the minister talk about how this relationship was going to really improve the independence of that commission. Again, I'll accept the comments that the minister made and make sure that as we go through watching how that part of it unfolds, we see how it does work. We really have to make sure that when an appeal process is put in place, there is the independence that we expect. We end up basing a lot of our concept of appeals on what is normally a concept that comes out of the judiciary section of our governments. In there, there is an absolute set of rules and guidelines about the relationship of a hearing, and we haven't had that in the WCB. So I'm really pleased to see this section come in and the minister talk about how that ability of the WCB to influence the Appeals Commission is going to be removed. We'll be watching to make sure that that happens, because we really don't want these kinds of interactions to continue where there is basically an administrative interference in a fair hearing process through this appeal.

I guess when we get right down to the bill and we look at what many people were expecting in this bill as we led up to it, it was some kind of a resolution of the long-standing claims. Now, this it seems is going to be just a commitment there that something's going to be happening. There's a committee struck to look at how it can work out, but it's basically delayed again. I guess if there's a real disappointment in here, it's the fact that the consultations that have gone on already haven't provided the minister with enough information to really be able to recognize the fact that these long-standing claims are in many cases a result of the very things that he's correcting in the act, both in terms of medical opinions and in terms of the independence of the appeal process. That should be enough to recognize that these claims need to have a final resolution and a final process. The longer we put them off, the longer we're going to end up with the complications.

So as we go through, I know that both of the opposition caucuses are going to have some amendments that will help make the bill even better. We have to address those in terms of how they work through.

Mr. Chairman, just as I conclude, I think I've got a couple of other comments that I want to raise, and one of them has to deal with the administrative review or the administrative supervision that's going to be there and the fact that there will be more ability by the WCB to go out and in effect make sure that there isn't any abuse in the system. When he's putting in this new section, especially when he's increasing the penalties in it, I would ask the minister: does he have information that kind of justifies the degree to which there is any misuse of the WCB, and would more resources put in there trying to apprehend abusers really justify that additional cost? You know, the information that I've had from talking both to some of the WCB administrators and to the people involved in doing reviews of it is that the issues of misuse of the WCB to the extent that you might expect, given the changes that are coming forth in this act, don't seem to be there.

So why is it that we're trying to make sure that more resources are there, to increase premiums to do that, so that we then end up with in effect a group out there who are running around trying to make sure there's no fraud in the WCB? Is it a problem now? Why do we have to increase the number of agents or the number of staff out there chasing down abusers? I don't think that's the kind of thing that sends a good message, especially if the information that we've had in the past is reasonably accurate, that there doesn't seem to be really a preponderance of any abuse. Some of the other changes that we've talked about in terms of this act, in terms of giving employees better hearings and better support from their own medical professions, would tend to reduce that.

I end on those comments, Mr. Chairman, and we'll look forward to some of the amendments that are coming up.

MR. DUNFORD: Well, I'd like to thank the hon. Leader of the Opposition for his comments this evening.

I just want to make sure that every member here in the Assembly is aware that the first annual general meeting open to the public by the WCB is going to be held here in Edmonton on May 30. Of course, I encourage those of us who are not only interested but also available that it might be an interesting meeting to put on your schedules. I'm sure that it being the first, it will probably be crude, but it will be I think similar to any other organization: as you do it more often, then of course you evolve a better system. Certainly we would anticipate that there would be some energy and some controversy that would be surrounding the actual carryings-on in that meeting. It will be interesting to see how it all works out.

At some point in time this bill will be passed, and at some point in time the items that are contemplated will be put into place and we'll start to have some feedback and some way to analyze how it is that we're doing. One of the main things that we have to accomplish – I was going to say “if nothing else,” but there's more than just this that we have to accomplish. Everyone – injured workers, employees, employer groups, individual employers – has pleaded at one time or another that we have a more open and a more accountable system. That's what we're trying to deliver here. Of course, the inclusion of the Auditor General immediately gives at least the perception of the accountability that we've been looking for. KPMG, who do my taxes, by the way, and seem to treat me very well, I'm not sure would resonate throughout the province as much as the Auditor General will. I hope my friends at KPMG forgive me for using them here tonight.

You know, in terms of his audit, again I have to agree with the comments of the hon. member. The performance measures are going to be critical. A previous speaker tonight talked about: what gets measured gets done. That's the good news. The bad news is that what gets measured gets done. So you want to make sure that you're measuring the right things obviously, but certainly that is going to be a key test. That reminds me, then, to pick up on a comment that was made by the Member for Calgary-Egmont. Yes, we need to get a monitoring system in place and get it under way.

Back to the performance measures. One that I agree with is getting the worker back to work in a healthy condition. This is extremely important, because it won't matter whether the severance from the workplace is through unemployment or through disability; the longer the person is severed from that workforce, the harder it is and the longer it takes to ever get them back into meaningful employment again. So I would accept almost as an automatic that that would be one of the things we'll be looking at. Again, I agree that we need to have more than just some sort of comparison with other jurisdictions.

If I could plead my case at this particular moment in time as to why I could be trusted in this particular matter, it's because we have just recently changed a performance measure in our own business plan. At one time and as recently as last year we were measuring ourselves in terms of workplace health and safety that as long as we were in the bottom third in terms of workplace statistics as it related to injury, then we were satisfied that we in Alberta were doing the right thing. We have completely thrown that out. We are no longer content, we are no longer complacent to be even ranked with other jurisdictions in Canada, because we've now come to understand and to learn that Canada is a very dangerous place in which to work. So we're no longer going to be complacent with that kind of measurement.

As a matter of fact – and I think some of you have registered – tomorrow morning at the Westin hotel here in Edmonton we're going to be talking about Workplace Safety 2.0. We're going to be talking about what we – “we” meaning government and “we” meaning industry, which is made up of both the employers and employees – are going to do about reducing injury incidence in this province by 40 percent. I think it's reasonable to expect that if we get into any kind of performance measurement in terms of assessment rates or anything like that, I won't be content with just the fact that we might measure up well against another jurisdiction.

The medical opinion, medical panels. Again this is key in order for us to be seen as doing something significant, but it is uncharted water as we speak here tonight, and that is why we are proceeding with the legislation that's enabling, so that a pilot project can get under way and it can be seen, then, whether or not it's workable with what has been suggested. The Member for Calgary-Egmont talked about that a little earlier. Before we enshrine something in legislation, we want to make sure that we have something that's workable.

Pre-existing conditions, I agree, are a tough issue; there's no way to get around it. But hopefully with the medical panel we'd be able to have not only expert eyes within that field of medical specialty, but we'd also have more medical eyes looking at it and coming to an agreement.

Long-standing claims. Yes, it is delayed. The government decision on this is that we want higher stakeholder agreement as to how we move forward with this.

The final concluding comment on the administrative penalties. I don't have it in front of me as to the degree, but any degree of fraud or offence is considered too much, so because of the stakeholder approval that the WCB had, we agreed to include this amendment.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to rise again and make some comments with respect to some of the specific clauses of Bill 26, and what I'd like to deal with now is the appeals committee and the medical panels in particular. I just want to indicate that I think that the major and significant change to the structure of the Appeals Commission is that it will be independent of the WCB and will be reporting to the department. Now, originally one of the recommendations was that it should be responding to and responsible to the Ministry of Justice, I believe, but I think that having it respond to this department is probably acceptable. It creates the condition I think that is necessary towards rebuilding some trust in the whole appeals process of the WCB. In this case justice not only needs to be done; it must be seen to be done. I think the minister has taken the appropriate general step to get things going in that direction, so I commend him for that particular change.

The question really is whether or not the Appeals Commission is going to be actually independent and function in a way that actually ensures fairness for workers. Section 13 of this act indicates that the Appeals Commission needs to buy in to the policy as set by the WCB. That seems to us a reasonable thing. You can't have two bodies competing, dueling establishing policies and so on, but there are some problems relative to that. Section 13.2(6)(c) permits the board to go to hearings. It says that the Appeals Commission shall permit the Board to make representations, in the form and manner that the Appeals Commission directs, as to the proper application of policy determined by the board of directors or of the provisions of this Act or the regulations that are applicable to the matter under appeal.

Now, it's fair to say that the Appeals Commission has the power to determine the form and the manner of these representations, but what really happens here, Mr. Chairman, is that the board gets a second kick at the cat. They not only set the policy in the first place and apply it in the first place and the Appeals Commission is not just required to adhere to that policy in its decisions, but the board, the WCB, gets another kick at the cat and is allowed to come before the Appeals Commission to not only tell them what the policy is but how they should apply it. Now, this is I think a case of the WCB having too much control, wanting too much control, and not being willing to give it up. Of course, we know that the situation that exists now, before this act was introduced and even today, gives the WCB an enormous amount of latitude, forcing the Appeals Commission, which it appoints and so on, to revisit its decisions if it doesn't agree with it.

This is one of the fundamental conflicts of interest, I would say, that exists in the present legislation. So this particular section is a step forward in that respect, but it still has that vestige of the paternal control of the WCB over the Appeals Commission, and I think that the Appeals Commission ought to be able to make its decisions without the WCB always poking its nose in and trying to tell them how to do that. So I'm going to come back to that, Mr. Chairman. I have an amendment with respect to this particular section which I would like to introduce.

I've got some other things I want to deal with, and one is the question of time lines for appeals. There doesn't seem to be a fixed time line for the processing of an appeal, and there should be a guarantee, in our view, to workers that their appeal will be heard and decisions rendered within a reasonable period of time. We believe that that should be included in the act.

I want to talk about the appeal to the courts. In section 13(4) the Court of Queen's Bench may be appealed to "on a question of law or jurisdiction." Now, that's good and it's bad. It's good because claimants can actually go, if there's an error in law, to the court, and I think that that's a positive thing. But it also allows the WCB easier access to the courts, which I don't think that they need, and the WCB, if it wants to act in a way that is spiteful or unco-operative or just mean-spirited – and I think that there have been times when that has been the case in recent years, so it's not just some paranoid fantasy that I'm dredging up. If they wanted to be unreasonable and if they really wanted to prevent a particular worker from getting what the worker wanted, they could use their superior resources to tie these things up in court, and what's the guarantee against that happening?

Injured workers – and this will be no surprise – cannot possibly match the financial resources or even the amount of time available to deal with a court case as the WCB. So there need to be some guarantees that the WCB is going to operate in good faith if we're going to lower the judicial bar, and I think that that's important. I think that there should be some provision, if the WCB makes an appeal, for assistance to the injured worker, financial assistance in order for them to deal with their case in the courts. In general we believe that unless there's a point of law specifically that's been violated, the Appeals Commission should be final.

Now, I want to talk a little bit about medical panels, and I know that there are some injured workers who want the medical panels to make the final decision and make them in a binding fashion; in other words, they want the medical panel to resolve the claim. But we think that it's important that medical panels be limited to medical questions. Their decisions should be binding, but quite frankly their area of competence is on the medical issues which are a key component but not the entire content of a decision by the WCB or by the Appeals Commission. So I think it's probably headed in the right direction on this particular point.

The question is how medical panels are set up and who really controls the way they operate, and it looks to us like the WCB is going to be the gatekeeper of the medical panel. It calls the panel together if it doesn't agree with the medical assessment. If the client's physician has a bona fide medical opinion, the panel can be called, but it's the WCB which determines what constitutes a bona fide opinion. The panel of course is composed of a physician appointed by the worker, a physician appointed by the employer, and a physician appointed by the WCB. So we'd make the same criticism of this that we made about the arbitration panels that were set up around the teachers' dispute, that it's potentially stacked against the workers.

So you've got a committee and it's got three members. One is appointed by the worker, one is appointed by the WCB, which presumably has already got medical opinions indicating that the worker's claim should be denied or reduced, and then the employer gets in on the act and appoints somebody. So what would we normally expect somebody appointed by the employer to do? If it was a question of judgment, which side would they err on in a lot of cases? I think common sense indicates that a lot of these medical panels might find 2 to 1 against the worker. So I would really prefer if we just had a medical panel in which the WCB's medical person and the medical appointment of the worker could jointly determine another physician from a list of people, much as is done in arbitrations normally. I think that there are better ways to do this to ensure that medical panels in fact operate in an objective way.

Now, of course, the first level of appeal, just jumping back to the appeal for a minute – the claim review committee is being eliminated, and we certainly welcome that provision. That was a fairly useless stage, which only served in many cases to delay workers getting their fair day in court. We understand that there's going to be a WCB pilot project around alternative dispute resolution, and we look forward to hearing a little bit more about that and certainly think that that approach would be considerably preferable to the claim review committee process.

Mr. Chairman, I don't know how you want to proceed or how the minister wants to proceed. I do have an amendment that I'd like to make, and I can make it now, or the minister, if he wishes, can respond before I introduce the amendment. What is your preference?

THE CHAIR: Just so we understand, once the amendment is on and not yet voted on, then we have to deal with the issues of the amendment.

MR. MASON: If the minister would prefer, I'll stand up and make the amendment when he's done.

THE CHAIR: Okay. The hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

MR. DUNFORD: All right. Thank you very much. I appreciate the comments on the Appeals Commission, and I agree. I think it will clarify roles. As I understand things to be, the amendment might have something to do with 13.2, that he talked about, so I won't spend any time right now on that other than to correct an earlier remark that I made. I was talking of section 8(7). For clarification and to correct myself, it's actually section 13(7).*

Just quickly on the medical panels I want to, as best I can, talk about: how do panels in any kind of a situation get selected? It's similar to – and perhaps I would fall back on something I have experience with. That would be under the Labour Relations Code and under a grievance arbitration where the grieved party, through their collective bargaining agent, selects an arbiter. The employer who's grieved against selects an arbiter, and the two of them come up with the chairman. It is not unusual, hon. member, to have unanimous decisions. It's not unusual at all. When you put together an expert panel, they are there to deal with the facts that are in front of them, and I see no reason to expect that medical doctors of a particular specialty that's being looked at under a conflicting medical opinion would be any different than professional arbitration people.

The system can't work if all that happens is that because somebody is picked by somebody, they have to toe that somebody's line. It wouldn't work in workers' compensation boards. If that was to be the way that people were to administer themselves, I'd put my foot down on appeals commissions and say: to hell with it then; I'm not going to have employer and employee reps. I mean, the whole idea is that employer groups and employee groups have somebody that they trust, somebody that they select and that they would put forward, then, to a position on a tribunal, on a board, or on a medical panel that are going to deal with the facts. These people would be professional enough in order to do that.

Now, I don't want to take away anybody's fire in their belly on this type of thing, but really it is a matter of professionalism. If I am selected because of my expertise in that area, you would not lose your integrity, then, by just toeing some line of somebody that picked you. I have, because of my experience as an arbitration member, great confidence in that institution, and I see the medical panel following along with that. So I would encourage all members to know and to understand that as a pilot and as a pilot proceeding, this is worthy of support.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I am going to move an amendment: that Bill 26, the Workers' Compensation Amendment Act, 2002, be amended in section 7 by striking out the proposed section 13.2(6)(c).

THE CHAIR: Do you want to just move the amendment? We'll call it amendment A1, and we'll ask the pages to please hand it out first to people who are actually sitting at a desk.

MR. MASON: So I move amendment A1. Mr. Chairman, while it's being distributed, I'll just indicate that it would delete section (c) of subsection (6), which would say:

In the hearing of an appeal under this section, the Appeals Commission . . .

- (c) shall permit the Board to make representations, in the form and manner that the Appeals Commission directs, as to the proper application of policy determined by the board of directors or of the provisions of this Act or the regulations that are applicable to the matter under appeal.

It would delete that section altogether.

I indicated in my earlier comments, Mr. Chairman, that I think that this particular section is inappropriate, that it continues the paternalistic relationship that exists with the WCB, and it allows. . .

THE CHAIR: Hon. member, in your haste to get this ready for us, I think you forgot to sign it.

MR. MASON: Do you want to come back to it tomorrow night then, Mr. Chairman?

THE CHAIR: Hon. member, do you have an original somewhere?

MR. MASON: I don't think it came back from the photocopying, Mr. Chairman.

With the advice of the Government House Leader, I'd be prepared to come back to this tomorrow night. My apologies for the confusion, Mr. Chairman.

THE CHAIR: Hon. member, perhaps we'll assume that since we've seen that you've already signed it now and that it is being replicated as we speak, maybe we could continue with the debate and get this nicety finished after the debate has gotten under way.

So we'll invite the hon. member to speak further on his amendment A1.

MR. MASON: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. This particular clause which I'm proposing to delete allows the board to make representation to the Appeals Commission as to the proper application of policy determined by the board of directors or the provisions of this act or the regulations that are applicable to the matter under appeal. You are still retaining a relationship between the Appeals Commission and the WCB of subordination, where you have an Appeals Commission that gets told how to apply the policy by the body whose decisions it's appealing. So the commission is not fully equal or fully independent of the WCB, and it should be. This is I think a weakness in the otherwise laudable direction that's been established in this legislation for a completely independent Appeals Commission. So it is on that basis that I'm making an amendment and would urge all hon. members to support it.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. In regard to this amendment A1 as proposed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, in respect to my comments earlier this evening in debate on Bill 26, this certainly allows intervenor status by the

WCB in regard to matters before the Appeals Commission. I would urge all members to consider this amendment. I think it is very reasonable. I would urge all members to support this amendment. Certainly this must have been an oversight. I cannot see the rationale. I think we should let the Appeals Commission do their work, and we have to live by that.

In the past there have been cases that have been documented regarding the board, and I don't think that we should be giving the board any more discretionary power. This "shall permit the Board to make representations." Now, regardless of whether it's "in the form and manner that the Appeals Commission directs," it is about policy. Let the Appeals Commission make the decision. It would be my view that they would be capable of this and they will do it. This is just allowing another chance, another opportunity for the board to be even more adversarial. I would congratulate the member at this time for proposing this amendment.

Again, Mr. Chairman, I don't think that there is any need to provide intervenor status specifically here for the WCB in matters before the Appeals Commission. I would urge all hon. members to please, in conclusion, support this amendment. I will cede the floor to the hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont.

Thank you.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont.

MR. HERARD: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Although I'm getting older, this is one thing I remember quite vividly in terms of the discussion, this particular part. You know, as a concept, having the WCB with intervenor status certainly is not what is intended here. I think that if you read it very carefully, you'll see: "shall permit the Board to make representations, in the form and manner that the Appeals Commission directs." What was essentially intended was that if an issue arose in the course of an appeal that dealt specifically with a policy matter, the board should have the opportunity to explain its policy. That doesn't mean to say that the WCB can sit there in the room and attend the hearing, because "in the form and manner that the Appeals Commission directs" means that they would be invited at the appropriate time to make their presentation that deals with a policy matter but would not be allowed the normal intervenor status of being in the room for the entire thing. So I think it's only fair that if an issue arises that deals with policy, they have an opportunity to explain themselves, not to take part in any other part of that hearing but simply to make the clarification on policy.

MR. DUNFORD: First off, I think it is understood and must be understood by all members that the Appeals Commission cannot make policy as it relates to the mandate of the Workers' Compensation Board under the Workers' Compensation Act. So we must defeat this amendment not only because of the reasons just stated by the Member for Calgary-Egmont but because the amendment calls for a deletion with no replacement and therefore would leave in the new act a current 13(7), that says:

In the hearing of appeals under this section, the Appeals Commission is bound by policy determined by the board of directors that relates to the matter under appeal.

That's fine. Nothing wrong yet. But here:

And where the board of directors considers that the Appeals Commission has not properly applied that policy or the provisions of this Act and the regulations that are applicable to the matter under appeal, the board of directors may in writing direct the Appeals Commission to rehear the matter and to give fair and reasonable consideration to that policy or those provisions.

I would submit to all members that the amendments that are in front of us under Bill 26 are immeasurably better than the proposed deletion of 13(7).

With that, I would ask, when it's time to vote, that we vote against this amendment.

MR. MASON: To close, Mr. Chairman, I certainly do not accept the minister's contention that deleting this part of the bill before us leaves in place the section of the old bill which he has quoted. If that were the case, I would vote against it too. That is not what's going to happen because those sections are gone by the passing of this bill. It's just this particular section of the bill that would be deleted.

I guess I take the hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont's points on this, but I would just point out that the wording of this clause which I propose to delete doesn't talk about the WCB explaining what the policy is, and the legislation certainly would bind the Appeals Commission to follow WCB policy. We have nothing against that at all. What it says is that the board may make representations as to the proper application of the policy – in other words, that their application of the policy is in fact the only correct one – and also the provisions of the act or the regulations that are applicable.

The only thing that speaks in favour of it, as Calgary-Egmont has pointed out, is that the representations need to be in the form and manner directed by the Appeals Commission. Still, the wording of it implies that the Appeals Commission must not only follow WCB policy but must follow the application of the policy as set out in the representations by the board, and that is the problem.

Thank you.

[Motion on amendment A1 lost]

THE CHAIR: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Yes, Mr. Chairman. In light of the good work that we've done this evening, I would move that we adjourn debate, and if I may, in the same motion I would move that we rise and report progress.

[Motions to adjourn debate and to report progress carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

MS GRAHAM: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports progress on the following: Bill 26. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Does the Assembly concur in this report?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Opposed? So ordered.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that we adjourn until 1:30 p.m. tomorrow.

[Motion carried; at 10:39 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Wednesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Wednesday, May 8, 2002

1:30 p.m.

Date: 02/05/08

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

THE SPEAKER: Good afternoon and welcome.

As we pray, let us also commemorate Victory in Europe Day with the words of Winston Churchill given in London on May 8, 1945.

God bless you all. This is your victory! It is the victory of the cause of freedom in every land. In all our long history we have never seen a greater day than this. Everyone, man or woman, has done their best. Everyone has tried. Neither the long years, nor the dangers, nor the fierce attacks of the enemy, have in any way weakened the independent resolve of the British nation. God bless you all.

Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Guests

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Peace River.

MR. FRIEDEL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday morning a number of northwestern MLAs met with the Persons with Developmental Disabilities, northwest region board of directors, and unfortunately because they had to continue the board meeting, they were not able to join us in question period yesterday. Of course, some of them had to travel home last night. One member, however, was able to stay over, and I would like to recognize her as a representative of the PDD board for the excellent work that they do in our area. I would like to introduce to you and to the members of this Assembly Helen Ficocelli, who is seated in the members' gallery, and ask her to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

MR. SNELGROVE: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed a pleasure for me to have another classroom to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly today. These special kids are from Kitscoty in my constituency. There are nearly 47 of them in the members' gallery. They are accompanied today by their teachers Judy Gerich, Kim Aitken, and Bev Toullelan. Their parent helpers are Paulette Williams, Rena Gramlich, Debra Smith, and Kathy Jeffrey.

Before I ask them to rise, Mr. Speaker, I would ask you to convey our appreciation to your people in the Assembly that work so hard to show these students around the building for this particular session and the many. They do such a great job of being our ambassadors. So I hope you will convey to them our appreciation.

At this time I would like all the students to rise and accept the warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

MR. HORNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly two ladies who have gotten very comfortable at telling me where to go: my legislative assistant, Shelly McCrae, who is also the Member for Dunvegan's legislative assistant; as well as my constituency assistant, Carol Stewart. With them is our STEP student this year,

Kathy Stachniak, who has joined the ranks to help out for the summer. Currently she is enrolled at Grant MacEwan College in management studies and is a graduate of Spruce Grove composite. As all members know, our jobs could not be done as effectively as they are without the help of people like these working behind us. They are seated in the public gallery, and I would ask that they please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the House.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

MR. LUKASZUK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed a pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly three severely overworked and somewhat underpaid Albertans. Those would be my constituency office manager, Miss Cherry Robinson; my legislative assistant, Miss Barbara Letendre; and my STEP student, Mr. Robert Majeed. I would like them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce a well-treated and well-respected employee of my office. I'd like to introduce him to the Assembly through you. He's working in my Edmonton-Riverview constituency office for the summer months, and his name is Adam Pommer. Adam has completed his third year of studies in the political science department at the University of Alberta with a minor in English. I'd like to welcome Adam and ask him to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Redwater.

MR. BRODA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the Members of the Legislative Assembly Ilke Colakoğlu, who is in our province on a one-year student exchange from Turkey. He is sponsored by the Rotary Club of Morinville. Accompanying Ilke is Connie Lewis, who is one of the hosts from a number of Rotary families that Ilke will be staying with throughout the year. They are seated in the members' gallery. I would ask them both to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly Ania Dudek, who is also an exchange student, from Lublin, Poland, who is visiting our province for one year. The St. Albert-Parkland Rotary Club has sponsored her, and she is joined today by Ilke and Connie, who were formerly introduced by the Member for Redwater. She is visiting the Legislature and is seated in the members' gallery. I would ask her to please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I take this opportunity to introduce to you and through you to the House three highly valued and very special individuals, all of them sitting in the public gallery. They are Signe Ziegler, a Calgarian, a political science and economics degree graduate from the University of Calgary who is currently working in our legislative office; Rosalie Anderson with a bachelor's degree in social work from the University of Victoria and a Grant MacEwan College social work graduate, who is doing a wonderful job of managing my constituency office in Edmonton-Strathcona while I toil in this House. The third person is Kristy Harcourt, bachelor of arts, honours, University of Alberta, who has worked with many nongovernment organizations including the Gay and Lesbian Community Centre of Edmonton, and she'll be working in my constituency office over the summer months. I would now ask all three of them to please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Seniors.

MR. WOLOSZYN: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm honoured to introduce to you and through you to the Assembly two young ladies. The first one is Jill Jespersen, who is spending her second summer working in my constituency office under the STEP program. In April Jill graduated from Peace River Bible Institute and is planning on taking the licensed practical nursing course. She will be taking some time off from the office this summer because she'll be spending three weeks in the jungles of Ecuador to help build a school. She is accompanied by my constituency assistant, who has been with me basically since I got elected, Carol Guenette. I'd ask Carol and Jill to please stand and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

MR. BOUTILIER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As part of the public service orientation tour which your office organizes, it's my pleasure today to introduce some public service folks from Municipal Affairs, financial and information technology services. We have with us today Yvonne Arnold, Paulette Takacs, Janna Lloyd, Aaron Nissen, and Rubena Hassan. I'd like to ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly two young women who work in my constituency office. Cindy Ho-Pasichnyk, my constituency assistant, is the enthusiastic and expert person who provides most of the advice and help to constituents of Edmonton-Whitemud and is the very pleasant voice that you hear on the phone in our office. She is accompanied today by Stephanie Wilson, a STEP student who has recently joined our office and will be working with us over the summer. They are seated in the members' gallery. I'd ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the House.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Environment.

DR. TAYLOR: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Once again, as part of the tour that you have encouraged employees to do, to visit the Legislative Assembly and learn about what happens, we have 11 members from Alberta Environment here. They are the strategic direction part of our department. They are the good thinkers in this department that keep us all on the straight and narrow. I'd ask them all to stand and receive the warm welcome of the House.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

MS KRYCZKA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am very pleased to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly this afternoon two very capable members of the Seniors Advisory Council for Alberta. I would have to say that both of them in earlier careers have been very successful educators. They have traveled here today to meet with the Minister of Seniors regarding a council proposal for a supportive housing option for seniors. Would Carol Blyth, member from Calgary and area region, and Dennis King, member from southern Alberta region, who lives in Lethbridge, please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

head: Oral Question Period

THE SPEAKER: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Electricity Pricing

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the Premier reported selective price comparisons for the wholesale price of electricity in the Power Pool without explaining why total bills are still more today than they were before deregulation. The examples used by the Premier can be misleading to Albertans who are trying to understand why their power bills cost more. My question is to the Premier. Why did the Premier suggest that all electricity costs in the April Power Pool averaged 4.5 cents per kilowatt-hour when there is not a single retailer in Alberta charging only 4.5 cents per kilowatt-hour? The contracts are all higher than that.

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, my answer was based on the best information I had at that particular time. I think that what we need to do is keep our eye on the big picture. The simple fact is that deregulation is working. When you move from one system to another, you can expect some bumps along the way, but as I said at the outset, let's keep our eye on the big picture. Over the long term as the market develops, we can expect to see increased power generation. As a matter of fact, we are seeing that already with significant new megawatts of power now coming onstream. We can see over the long term better customer services. We can see over the long term a downward pressure on prices, and we can see more options for consumers. That's what the big picture is all about.

Power prices, contrary to what the Leader of the Official Opposition says, have already started to come down since regulated times. Again I'll quote the figures that I have from the Department of Energy. In the year 2000 the average wholesale price was 13.3 cents per kilowatt-hour, compared to 7.1 cents in 2001, albeit with the rebate, and 3.8 cents per kilowatt-hour so far this year on average, Mr. Speaker.

There are some problems in some areas of the province, particularly the west-central area where service charges associated with electricity bills are higher than normal. Both the ministers of Energy and Government Services are looking into this matter. Yesterday, I understand, there was a meeting with the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board, and I believe that Thursday or Friday this week there will be a meeting with the power companies to get to the bottom of this.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. If the prices are going down, can the Premier explain why the current regulated rate option, which is based on the old cost of electricity structure, is cheaper than any of the current contracts offered by the marketers in this province?

MR. KLEIN: Well, Mr. Speaker, that's an option we offered in terms of letting consumers have the option to stay on a regulated rate over a specified period of time – I believe it was five years – but I believe firmly that when that five-year period is over and we're in a completely deregulated environment, then market forces will have prevailed and prices will be lower. That is my prediction.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Doesn't that information confirm that if you have a cost-based structure for determining your price of electricity, it's cheaper than a market base that deals with marginal cost pricing?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I don't know of any incidents where a monopoly-controlled or a state-controlled situation necessarily leads to competitive pricing. It's always been the philosophy and policy of this government and, I believe, of the Liberals to some degree that the market should prevail, and competition generally brings prices down.

THE SPEAKER: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Unsigned Memo

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. According to government policy cabinet approval was required for the sale of the Holy Cross hospital. Through FOIP the opposition obtained a copy of a memo from the then Minister of Health and Wellness, Mr. Jonson, to the Premier recommending the proposed sale of the Holy Cross hospital. This memo is not marked as a draft and has a file number. However, this memo is not signed, is not dated, and is not on letterhead. My questions are to the Premier. Can the Premier explain why a memo from a minister of the Crown to the Premier and members of Executive Council involving a multimillion dollar deal was left unsigned, undated, and was not on letterhead?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I have no idea whatsoever, and I don't even know if the memo was sent. I would have to see it. Is it typed? Is it handwritten? I have no idea. Perhaps the hon. leader of the Liberal opposition would be courteous enough to send it over so I can have a look at it and perhaps provide him with an answer.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It was sent to the Premier's office on Monday. He's had it since then.

Is it typical procedure for memos involving multimillion dollar deals to be sent unsigned, undated, and not on letterhead when you're dealing in cabinet?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, if it was sent on Monday of this week, I have no recollection of receiving an unsigned memo written by some anonymous person. Perhaps the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition would send the memo or the piece of paper over so I could have a look at it.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader. [interjections] The hon. leader. [interjections] The hon. leader. Three times. Please.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just wanted to make sure that the Premier had a chance to look at it again. It does have the minister's name at the bottom. It is written to the executive, to the Premier. My question again is: is it normal process for letters to be sent from one minister to Executive Council without signature, without a date, and without letterhead? It was received through FOIP from the minister's office in the data that they provided to us. It must have been delivered.

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I haven't seen this document. Perhaps it went to Peter Elzinga. I don't know. You know, it's not dated. [interjections] Right. You know, it's . . .

THE SPEAKER: Why don't we move on to the third question. Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Holy Cross Hospital

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The government's own policy on the sale of property owned by health authorities requires assurance that the property being sold "would not be needed for health care delivery in the future." Similar restrictions were made perfectly clear to all parties bidding on the Holy Cross hospital. The bidder that was ultimately successful in buying the Holy Cross was originally rejected from the shortlist of finalists because it failed to respect this policy, but this bidder was allowed back into the process, bought the hospital, and within weeks of signing the bill of sale had a deal with the CRHA paying for surgical services, a contradiction of the terms of the bid process and of government policy. To the Premier: how can the Premier justify this process when one set of rules was applied during the bidding and those same rules were then ignored once the successful bidder was announced?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I'll remind the hon. member that there was a process put in place, and it was completely arm's length from the government. This sale was completely managed by a disposition committee made up of city councillors, clergy, community leaders, and Calgary RHA representatives. I see that the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie is not with us, but certainly he was on the committee as the city councillor for the ward in which the institution was located. Their stated preference, according to my discussions with him and RHA officials, was to have the site sold to someone who would use it for health-related services. Of three offers received, the committee accepted the highest offer. While the Liberals might think the price should have been higher, there's an old rule in real estate that says that the value of a piece of property is really what people are willing to pay for that piece of property, and for that site we received the most that people were willing to pay. Looking at what has happened on that site, that facility now houses a multitude of health services, including long-term care beds, a pain management clinic, several eye doctors, psychiatric services, and others. So I think the people of Calgary are getting a great deal of value for the sale.

DR. TAFT: I should remind the Premier that it's government policy that cabinet approves, government approves the sale.

Given that the losing bidders said that they were shocked – and that's a quote – to learn that the disqualified bidders won the process, why were the original finalists not allowed to resubmit their proposals under the same terms offered to the winning bid?

MR. KLEIN: Well, Mr. Speaker, I would think that the hon. member ought to sit down with the disposition committee or those members who are still around, understanding that he's going back about – what? – six years now. I think it was in 1996 or 1997 when this negotiation took place, when this disposition committee was in place. I mean, a number of things have changed since then. The city councillor who was on the disposition committee is now an MLA, and the bishop who was on the committee at that time is now retired, I believe, Bishop O'Byrne. I think that other people have gone. They've done their job, and they did the best they could. As far as I know, we got the best possible value for the property.

DR. TAFT: Can the Premier tell us if it is a conflict of interest for the leader of the successful bid to be simultaneously an employee of the RHA selling the property?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, that is a matter for the Ethics Commissioner to adjudicate. I can't comment on whether that individual is in conflict of interest or not. There are rules that apply to regional health authorities, and those rules come under the purview of the Ethics Commissioner of this province. I would ask the hon. member to refer that matter to the Ethics Commissioner if he has a problem.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party, followed by the hon. Member for Leduc.

Children in Care

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Almost four years ago this government made a commitment to a zero tolerance policy for hotel placements for foster children. Yesterday the Minister of Children's Services gave a novel meaning to the term "zero tolerance" when she admitted that there may be as many as 30 or more children today in Edmonton motel rooms. Today the New Democrats have learned that it's not just teens and preteens being put into motel rooms, but toddlers and newborns as young as a day and a half old are also being deprived of an appropriate foster or group home environment. My questions are to the hon. Premier. Why has the government not lived up to the zero tolerance promise it made in a June 23, '98, memo it sent to all child welfare managers and service providers and agencies?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I don't know if the incidents referred to in the hon. member's preamble are true or not true. All I can say is that child care workers act in the best interests of the children. If there are no other facilities available, they try to make sure that the children and their families are housed in the best possible circumstance.

DR. PANNU: Mr. Speaker, it's not a good enough answer by the Premier when children are being put in unsafe places.

Will the Premier at least make a commitment to properly fund group homes and foster parents so that the practice of putting toddlers into hotel rooms can be consigned to history?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, certainly adequate resources have been put into Children's Services. There have been subsequent increases at least for the past three years to this particular and very important department.

Relative to the specific question, Mr. Speaker, if there is no foster parent available to take a child, then the child care worker will do what he or she has to do to secure the safety of the child, and in some cases the only available option, on an emergency basis only, might be a motel or hotel room.

DR. PANNU: Well, Mr. Speaker, what we need are group homes so that children can be placed there.

In June '98 there were 27 children in Edmonton hotels. Has any progress been made by this government, or is the Premier completely uninterested in putting resources into anything other than horse racing?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, that's an insulting question, to say the least. The minister has pointed out that when an appropriate long-term care facility can't be found – it will eventually be found, but where we have to deal with a child on an emergency basis, it may be that that child will be put into a motel or hotel. I have to stress that it would be with 24-hour supervision. It is a situation where the children are not left alone at all but where they are closely monitored and adults are with them to secure their safety.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Leduc, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

U.S. Agricultural Subsidies

MR. KLAPSTEIN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The United States government intends to put into place billions of dollars in subsidies for their agriculture producers. Their Congress approved the bill last week, and it's speculated that the U.S. President will sign off on the bill as early as next week. When this bill goes through, it will have a devastating effect on our agriculture industry, and producers I have heard from are furious and horrified, worried that these subsidies could possibly put them out of business. My question is to the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. What is the Alberta government going to do to protect the livelihoods of Alberta farmers from the effects of this bill?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Premier.

MRS. McCLELLAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, there is no question that we're bitterly disappointed with the recent actions that are portrayed in the U.S. farm bill. This is in addition to subsidies or, we believe, trade-distorting measures that are in the previous bill. We're especially disappointed that they've seen fit to include pulse crops this year. That includes crops such as chickpeas, lentils, and beans, which previously have been excluded. Using measures like this is not very productive. They are not useful to farmers in the long term, and they are certainly not the way to encourage competitiveness and a global marketplace. We're disappointed because we've worked very hard at the WTO level to encourage the complete elimination of farm subsidies both domestic and nondomestic, and to see a major country come forward with additional subsidies such as these certainly is disappointing to us.

Ministers of agriculture from across Canada have asked our lead analysts to look at the bill. I have to say, Mr. Speaker, that it is still a bit of a moving target. The numbers change often, and we don't know what the absolute final details will be, but we've asked for a complete analysis of this. We've asked for a determination of level of injury, and I think that when we have that information, we'll be better prepared to know how to respond.

MR. KLAPSTEIN: Well, my first supplementary question is also to the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. What is Alberta's stance on trade injury compensation to make up for the economic injury caused by foreign subsidies?

MRS. McCLELLAN: Well, Mr. Speaker, ad hoc programs are never the answer long term either for governments or for producers. Producers appreciate it when we are able to provide them some support to counteract measures such as this, but producers prefer to act with some predictability and stability. We are encouraging that we work through our safety net programs, through our risk management programs to develop long-term programs that will indeed counteract some of this injury.

I think it's difficult to say at this juncture, until we understand indeed the total effect of what this injury might be, what measures should be taken. Mr. Speaker, again I have to say that the producers I talked to are very concerned about this, but they would like a long-term solution. They would like something so that they know that they can carry out their operations throughout the year, not ad hoc programs.

Mr. Speaker, I just want to add that in the year 2000 the Alberta government provided about $405 million additional in an acreage payment to producers, paid on our own, to deal with low commodity prices which we believe come from distortions in the international marketplace. That was 2000. In 2001 a similar amount cost shared between the federal and provincial government was provided to producers for the same reasons. In year 3 we're having the same discussion. That tells me that ad hoc programs don't work and that we need to deal with the long-term solutions.

MR. KLAPSTEIN: My final supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, is also to the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. How will this action by the United States affect future trade negotiations?

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, the hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations may want to supplement my answer, because he certainly has the lead in Alberta as the minister who interacts with our federal negotiators. But I would say this: we have been very supportive in this province on the reduction and elimination of subsidies. We've played, we think, our part except when we were unable to do so. We're encouraging as agricultural ministers our federal minister to work through the World Trade Organization, WTO, which is one avenue for us. We have the NAFTA agreement, the North American free trade agreement, which also has a mechanism to deal with this, and I remind everyone that we have the Canada/U.S. free trade agreement, or CUFTA as it's known, to also deal with this. On the issue of how this would affect future negotiations, I would say that the Minister for International Trade is most closely connected to this.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Power Purchase Agreements

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Details on how Enron controlled power prices in California are now being reported. Here in Alberta the EUB concluded on April 16 that TransAlta's hydro offer pricing strategy caused undue increases in the Power Pool price in certain hours of 2000 to the ultimate detriment of customers. The board ordered TransAlta to make a compensation payment of $3.7 million within two weeks. My questions are to the Premier. Why were hydrogenerating units such as Bighorn and Brazeau, which are owned by TransAlta, excluded from the original power purchase arrangement auctions?

MR. KLEIN: I have no idea other than maybe – Brazeau and Bighorn I believe are hydro projects. Perhaps the rivers were frozen over. I don't know.

MR. MacDONALD: Astonishing.

Again to the Premier: why are actual water rental and associate charges paid by TransAlta regarding the matter also determined by TransAlta?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I don't want to be facetious. I don't have the answers to those questions. I will take the question under advisement and refer it to the appropriate minister.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: why are so many terms of the hydropower purchase arrangements confidential and therefore withheld from the public, who are owners of the water, the resource that's used to generate the electricity?

MR. KLEIN: A reasonable question, Mr. Speaker. I don't have the answer, and again I'll take it under advisement or under notice and refer it to the appropriate minister.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Workplace Safety

MR. GRAYDON: Mr. Speaker, this week is North American Occupational Health and Safety Week, and communities across the province are hosting safety events. While two of the largest fines in provincial history have just been levied for two separate workplace fatalities, I heard that last week another worker lost his life on an Alberta jobsite. To the Minister of Human Resources and Employment: what is the minister doing to ensure that Albertans come home at the end of the day?

MR. DUNFORD: There are two things, Mr. Speaker, that we need to do. One is to educate; the other is to enforce. On the enforcement side we've added to our field inspectors. We've more than doubled the actual work site inspections that we carry out. On the education side we've opened a call centre, we've opened a web site, and we've hired an occupational safety nurse and also a researcher. But we can't do it alone, and that's not enough. There's more involved here in getting workers home safely at night than just the government. So there's a challenge that's been put out by our department to the industry generally but includes both industry and government to reduce workplace injury claims by 40 percent by the year 2004. As a matter of fact, as we're here today, there are something like 150 people that are over at a hotel here in town that are developing a strategy that both government and industry will be able to utilize to reduce this accident toll.

Just to close on a serious, serious note, the hon. member talked about fatalities last week. Well, we had another one last night. This is serious stuff.

MR. GRAYDON: My first supplemental to the same minister. Getting ideas from Albertans is a great start, but do the 150 people that are meeting today truly represent Albertans, or is this just another meeting of the safety community that's going on?

MR. DUNFORD: As I looked at the registration list, Mr. Speaker and hon. members, certainly we do have safety professionals that are there in attendance today, but I think that as importantly we have CEOs of companies, we have labour representatives, worker representatives, injured workers, and all of the kinds of perspectives that we're going to need as we move forward with a very ambitious goal of reducing workplace injury in Alberta by 40 percent. What we're saying with that 40 percent, hon. member, is that we're just no longer complacent in this province, that we're setting goals, that we're going to do something about this.

MR. GRAYDON: My final supplemental to the same minister: obviously some good ideas, but how can we be sure that those ideas will be translated into concrete action?

MR. DUNFORD: That's always the challenge – isn't it? – how we go from the rhetoric to positive action. This is one of the things of course that will be of primary concern. Now, the important thing about what's happening today and as we move forward is that we have to have commitment at the very top levels of organizations. To show the commitment of this government, we had the safety initiative actually detailed in the Speech from the Throne. So the government is on record as supporting this initiative. Part of what's happening today and part of the things that we've been doing with industry is getting the commitment from the top down through those organizations of the industry. While many things involved in human relations and human resources can bubble up from the bottom, safety is not one. You have to have commitment at the very top levels before it's ever going to happen throughout the organization, and we're seeking that today. I'm asking for the commitment of these people today, and thank heavens and thank goodness for Alberta workers, we seem to be getting it.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood.

Road Construction and Maintenance Funding

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The government exempts certain groups from paying the provincial fuel tax when the gasoline or diesel is purchased for a vehicle that is intended for off-highway use. This exemption policy shows that the tax is supposed to pay for highway construction and maintenance. To the Minister of Transportation: given that the fuel tax will add almost $600 million to the government coffers this year, money that is intended for road maintenance and construction, why is your department only spending $526 million on road infrastructure?

MR. STELMACH: Mr. Speaker, I thought I answered that question yesterday, but let's give it a try. There's approximately $600 million collected annually from the provincial fuel tax, which is 9 cents a litre. There's about $700 million collected by the federal government, which is a 10-cent-a-litre road tax. Of the $600 million, all of that money, not by some dedicated revenue but general government policy, goes to the Department of Transportation. Included in that are some fees: licence fees and registrations, permit fees, et cetera, that go towards that same department.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. BONNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given that Albertans pay 9 cents per litre at the pump to fund transportation, why does the government want to double tax Albertans with a new road tax on toll roads?

MR. STELMACH: Mr. Speaker, nobody is in any position to double any tax. There was some musing by the federal government to increase road tax by 10 cents a litre. It was supposed to go to the Kyoto offset. However, I'll defer to the Premier, because I believe that what the opposition is trying to get at is some musing that the Premier made a few days ago that got into the paper, and now they're raising it as a question.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, the purpose of question period is to deal with government policy, not musings. Now, if the Premier wants to proceed, go ahead.

MR. KLEIN: Well, Mr. Speaker, who knows? You know, you muse. It is not government policy vis-a-vis toll roads, but I indicated to the media that certainly there are projects that are currently under consideration, and it's no secret. It's been widely reported that one of those projects, the roadway proposed through the Tsuu T'ina First Nation in Calgary to be part of the southwest bypass, would be a toll road. So discussion in a very broad sense about tolls has been going on for some time, and basically the conversation has boiled down to that if – and I underline that "if" – it ever comes about, certainly there would have to be alternate routes that would be free. It wouldn't apply to existing roadways. It would apply to selected new roadways if it ever came about, but that is the policy discussion that we have not had.

As I explained to the reporter – and I don't know if the hon. member was there, but certainly his boss was, the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition. When the reporter asked the question relative to the specifics of tolls, my answer was that you're about 500 miles ahead of yourself. [interjection] Right; 500 miles ahead of yourself. But there's an old saying in politics that yes means yes, maybe means yes, and no means maybe.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. BONNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Transportation: since toll roads will be a double tax – Albertans already pay the fuel tax for road infrastructure – will the minister say no to toll roads right now?

MR. STELMACH: Mr. Speaker, quite frankly, Alberta has always led in introducing new policy in the country of Canada in outsourcing, engineering, design, project management. That saved us considerable operational dollars in the department. Currently we're trying to do two things. One is trying to get at least a few pennies of the 10 cents a litre we send to Ottawa, and if we ever got that, the last thing we'd be talking about, musing about is toll roads.

However, we know quite well that the very tough fiscal policies of this government over the last year have encouraged tremendous growth, an increase in population, people moving from other provinces to Alberta, but when they come here, they don't bring their roads and they don't bring their schools nor their hospitals. As a result we have to look at some new and innovative ways, and it's a policy discussion. I believe that maybe part of the committee that was struck by the hon. Finance minister will look at new ways of helping us build new, badly needed infrastructure in the province of Alberta.

Prime Minister's Caucus Task Force on Urban Issues

MR. MASZYK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On May 2, 2002, the Prime Minister's Caucus Task Force on Urban Issues released an interim report that included recommendations for improving the way municipalities are funded and improving relations between municipalities and other orders of government. My question is to the Minister of Municipal Affairs. Given that many of the report's recommendations indicate involvement of provincial governments, what is Alberta's response to this report?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. BOUTILIER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I do want to point out that we are reviewing the recommendations upon the report's release, and I'm very proud to say that Alberta has been viewed by the federal task force as a leader. In fact, this province and its ministry were the first to meet with the federal task force. In fact, the hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti joined me when we met last August with them.

If I could, just for a moment I'd like to quote from the vice-chair, who is Liberal MP Bryon Wilfert. This is what the vice-chair said about the task force when he was speaking about Alberta when they visited Alberta. He was interviewed on CHED radio on May 2, and this is what he had to say about Alberta. I quote from a Liberal Member of Parliament: Alberta has been very progressive when it comes to a new municipal act; they were very progressive in having municipal governments at the table making the decisions along with the province and the federal government on infrastructure – and I want to first of all recognize the ministers of Infrastructure and Transportation for that – but Alberta has always been – in his view – very forward looking in terms of thinking outside of the box.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MASYK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister give examples of how Alberta is seen as being head of the pack, so to speak?

Thank you.

MR. BOUTILIER: Well, Mr. Speaker, I can in fact name numerous recommendations that are being made by the federal report relative to what Alberta Municipal Affairs has already started with and are somewhat ahead of the game with. First, as I mentioned in this Assembly, our roles and responsibilities council, which is considered an ongoing consultative and advisory body, is one of the recommendations which of course we have been doing now. The second recommendation was fostering research and best practices. We have established a municipal excellence program to do exactly that in partnership with our urban and rural associations. Three, a regional partnership program for economic development has done a fantastic job supporting regional economic growth strategies with our urban and rural partners. So there are many recommendations. Would you like me to go on? I am not sure if the Speaker would permit me at this time, but I would like to say that we're well on our way on this very important initiative.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: It sounds to me that the minister answered his own question.

The hon. member.

MR. MASYK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Those are very good answers, and I do appreciate them. Thank you very much.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Water-for-life Initiative

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The government's water-for-life initiative has just concluded, and there is a great deal of skepticism amongst Albertans regarding the government's agenda. My questions are to the Minister of Environment. Why did the Minister of Environment, who is supposed to at least look like protection is part of his mandate, include in the water-for-life booklet the statement that Albertans will have to choose between the sustainability of aquatic ecosystems and economic growth?

DR. TAYLOR: Well, first of all, I'd like to point out to the member that there is not a great deal of skepticism about this process. We have had a number of meetings around the province. We originally had scheduled 12. We have had 15. We've got one more scheduled yet in northern Alberta, and we've had wide consultation with Albertans. In fact, Mr. Speaker, we've had 40,000 hits on our web site since April 15 on this particular issue.

AN HON. MEMBER: How many?

DR. TAYLOR: Forty thousand. Now, I know that member will find that number astonishing, but that is in fact the case, Mr. Speaker. So Albertans have participated in this project. They are not at all skeptical about it, and there will be more participation as we go forward.

MS CARLSON: Mr. Speaker, perhaps this time he'll answer the question. Why did you include the statement: Albertans will have to choose between the sustainability of aquatic ecosystems and economic growth?

DR. TAYLOR: Well, Mr. Speaker, we put out a workbook that was in the neighbourhood of 15 or 18 pages long with a number of questions in it. Certainly one of the questions is, if she's reading it correctly, about Albertans making some decisions about a balance between economic development and environmental sustainability. That is what this ministry is about: it's about a balance between economics and protecting the environment.

MS CARLSON: How does the minister address concerns that this initiative is setting the stage for a push for bulk water transfers?

DR. TAYLOR: I think the member is reading her own press and dreaming wild dreams at night. This is in no way indicated in this position at all.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The U.S. farm bill increases subsidies to U.S. agriculture by 70 percent, and subsidies to U.S. farmers will increase by 73 and a half billion dollars over 10 years. These U.S. actions are going to seriously hurt Alberta farmers, yet compared to our neighbouring provinces of Saskatchewan and Manitoba, the Alberta government has been silent and passive. My question is to the Premier. Does the government support the call by the Premiers of Manitoba and Saskatchewan for a federal $1.3 billion trade injury payment to compensate Canadian farmers, including Alberta farmers, given the damage the U.S. farm bill will do to their livelihoods?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I'll have the hon. Deputy Premier respond in fuller detail, but what the hon. member says is entirely false and wrong. Only two hours ago I had a conversation with the Premier of Saskatchewan, Lorne Calvert. That's the second conversation this week I've had on the U.S. farm bill issue and a plan of action that is being contemplated. I don't know what that plan of action is at this particular time. I know that there is going to be a meeting on Friday. I'll be sending the Deputy Premier to that meeting, which will involve I believe the Premiers of Saskatchewan and Manitoba, to discuss a possible solution to this particular problem.

I know that the hon. Deputy Premier just returned from an agriculture ministers' meeting in Ottawa where that subject was brought up. There are perhaps a number of approaches that can be taken, but as the hon. Deputy Premier pointed out, one of the worst things that we can do at this particular time is to go into a situation that is ad hoc, that provides no sustainability whatsoever. But we are fully onside with the governments of Saskatchewan and Manitoba in terms of challenging what we consider to be an unfair bill under the bodies, the organizations available to us: NAFTA, the Canada/U.S. free trade agreement, the World Trade Organization, and all the mechanisms within those organizations.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, given that the Premiers of Saskatchewan and Manitoba have already developed an action plan and that that includes a federal challenge of the U.S. agricultural subsidies before the World Trade Organization—they've already put out news releases; they've been meeting—why won't the Premier support a federal challenge to the WTO to protect Alberta farmers?

MR. KLEIN: I am going to have the hon. Deputy Premier respond, but before I do, the statement made by the hon. member is absolutely false, and I wish he would withdraw it. A plan has not been developed. A plan has not been developed by the governments of Manitoba and Saskatchewan. What they want to discuss on Friday is the development of a plan. I'll have the hon. Deputy Premier respond because she was privy to the telephone call, and by the way, Mr. Speaker, he wasn't.

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, first of all, as I indicated earlier today, we do not have a complete analysis of the U.S. farm bill. We don't. The figures were changed yesterday. It's a moving target. It isn't through the process. The President hasn't signed it.

I was at a meeting with all ministers of agriculture yesterday. We discussed this issue fully, and we all agreed that that analysis must be completed before we could discuss a complete course of action. I can tell you and I think evidence will show, if you look at the difference between what agricultural producers have in Alberta and they do in the other provinces, that first up to a microphone isn't the best policy always.

MR. MASON: Mr. Speaker, given that this news release of the Saskatchewan government states, "Premier Calvert and I are jointly calling on the Canadian government to challenge these new subsidies before the WTO," and given that the Premier is not going to this meeting with other Premiers but is sending the Deputy Premier, why isn't he fighting for Alberta farmers?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I am fighting for Alberta farmers. First of all, the Deputy Premier will be going to the meeting with the position that we support Premiers Calvert and Doer in calling on the Canadian government to challenge these new subsidies before the WTO and other organizations like NAFTA. We have some problem with there must be federal funding to [at least partially] . . . level the playing field for Canadian producers and to sustain our agriculture industry against the damage caused by this latest anti free-trade action by the United States.

As the hon. Deputy Premier pointed out, we want something more than an ad hoc approach.

Mr. Speaker, if the socialist governments of Saskatchewan and Manitoba really want to do something to help farmers—to help farmers—perhaps they would get on the Alberta bandwagon and convince the federal government that the Canadian Wheat Board, that monopolistic agency, should allow dual marketing so that we can add value to our crops and reasonably market them.

head: Recognitions

Esquao Awards

MR. HORNER: Mr. Speaker, it's my pleasure to rise today and recognize a function that will occur on the 24th of this month. It's the seventh annual Esquao awards. The purpose of the awards is to bring attention to the valuable role of aboriginal women in their communities and throughout the province. At this year's ceremonies 29 individuals will be presented with awards. The theme this year is Angels among Us, honouring the struggles of women and their strength to persevere.

It's my pleasure to recognize a constituent of mine, an award winner in the community involvement category, leadership/mentorship, Chief Victoria Arcand of the Alexander First Nation. She's the mother of five children, grandmother of 14, and a great-grandmother of three. She's a tireless and devoted worker for her community and has served as band councillor, secretary, and bookkeeper for the Alexander First Nation for many years. Through all of this, she has also completed her education and achieved a diploma in justice from Grant MacEwan College.

In addition, Mr. Speaker, I wish to also recognize one of our own in this House. The hon. Minister of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development is being awarded the Circle of Honour award for the enthusiastic and unflinching support that she's given to the aboriginal women in this province from the very first Esquao award.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Lauren Chykalsky Premier's 4-H Award Winner

MR. MARZ: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to recognize the winner of the 2002 4-H Premier's award, Lauren Chykalsky from Vermilion, Alberta. Lauren also attends the college in Olds. The Premier's award is the highest honour of the Alberta 4-H program, and Lauren is the 39th recipient of this award. She was selected out of 117 candidates during the annual 4-H selections program held this last weekend in Olds. As the Premier's award winner, Lauren also takes on the challenge of becoming the 4-H ambassador and will spend the next year promoting 4-H across the province and across the country. She will be joined by 15 more ambassadors who were also chosen during the selections weekend based on their leadership skills, their enthusiasm, and commitment to their communities and rural Alberta.

I had the pleasure of meeting Lauren and other ambassadors and all the outstanding 4-H leaders during the weekend's events, and I want to say how impressed I was with their enthusiasm and commitment to community service. Please join me in congratulating Lauren and all of the ambassadors and young 4-H members on their wonderful achievements.

SummerActive

MRS. O'NEILL: Mr. Speaker, I rise to recognize SummerActive, a community-based initiative that aims to increase awareness about the importance of physical activity to health. Earlier today I was pleased to join the Minister of Community Development to officially launch this year's program. SummerActive's focus is to target inactive individuals – that's myself – and give them opportunities and encouragement to pursue an active lifestyle. The goal is to meet the nation's target of decreasing inactivity by 10 percent. Physical inactivity remains a serious public health problem. About two-thirds of Alberta's population, including more than one-half of our children, are not active enough for optimal health benefits.

An active, healthy lifestyle has health, economic, and social benefits that reduce the risk of many chronic diseases, increase quality of life, and reduce early mortality. From May 8 to June 21 events and activities will be planned across Alberta. We invite Albertans to participate and to develop their own SummerActive plan.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Interdependent Adults

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'd like to recognize all of the GLBT folks and Equal=Alberta, EGALE, GALA, Julie Lloyd, Murray Billet, Delwin Vriend, and many others, queer and straight, who have continued to work toward equality for same-sex couples in Alberta.

Yesterday the Minister of Justice introduced Bill 30, the Adult Interdependent Relationships Act, for first reading, and while this bill is by no means the end of the road, it is certainly a milestone to commemorate. What all of these people and organizations – and I include current and former members of the Liberal caucus as well – were trying to achieve is recognition, protection, and legal remedies for same-sex couples and for individuals.

The road to get here took us past the Supreme Court ruling on Delwin Vriend's case to include sexual orientation under the Human Rights Act, and now the road pauses briefly at Bill 30 to include some legal remedies and benefits for same-sex couples like those available under the law now for other couples in domestic relationships. It is only eight acts of more than 50 that are included in this new definition, and it's certainly not the whole road but a step along the road in the right direction. I'm very proud to be along on the march.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Edmonton Minor Soccer

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today it gives me great pleasure to rise and recognize what is an important sport to many Edmonton families. The arrival of spring signals the start of another outdoor soccer season not only in Edmonton but all around Alberta. Soccer has provided endless opportunities for many individuals to form friendships while maintaining good physical health. The Edmonton Minor Soccer Association, or EMSA, was formed 26 years ago with the involvement of 30 teams. Today the EMSA boasts the involvement of 1,500 teams. The massive increase in popularity of this sport over the years has been overwhelming. Roughly 24,000 players will take part in the 2002 outdoor soccer season. Soccer is a sport that requires much time and dedication from those involved. I would like to recognize the efforts of all volunteer coaches and league executives who will be participating in this season. It is my pleasure to recognize the 80 communities in Edmonton that were actively involved in minor soccer. Congratulations to everyone involved with making Edmonton's minor soccer a very successful event.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Asian Heritage Month

MR. CAO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I rise both to recognize and to remind this Assembly that the month of May is Canadian Asian Heritage Month. This is a unique opportunity where our fellow Canadians having ancestral roots in the continent of Asia will have the opportunity to share the culture through various artistic, historical, and educational events.

Our fellow Canadians of Asian heritage have a legacy that has been established by generations of committed, hardworking individuals who have contributed to the settlement, growth, and development of this province. These individuals and many others like them have built this province alongside the pioneers from many different parts of our globe, and today, as in the past, their efforts continue in helping to build and strengthen our communities because of the deep commitment to the quality of life we all enjoy in this province.

I invite all members of this Assembly and all Albertans to join in the festivities of Asian Heritage Month in celebration of our Albertan cultural/social/economic enrichment. Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Leaders of Tomorrow Awards

MR. JOHNSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to rise in the House today and acknowledge some outstanding young individuals who were recently recognized in my constituency. The leaders of tomorrow awards ceremony was held in Wetaskiwin on April 22. Awards were presented to young volunteers in age categories ranging from six to 21 years of age who demonstrated outstanding dedication and excellence in their community service and work. The awards were sponsored by Reynolds-Alberta Museum, Wetaskiwin Credit Union, Rotary Club of Wetaskiwin, and county of Wetaskiwin, who made this event possible and have the thanks of all who attended.

Thirty-three exceptional young people from Wetaskiwin and surrounding areas were nominated to receive the leaders of tomorrow awards. Of those, Katherine Fraser, age 12; Dylan Graff, age 15; and Jody Parchewski, age 16 were the recipients of the awards in their respective age categories. Congratulations to these outstanding volunteers of today and leaders of tomorrow.

Thank you.

head: Presenting Petitions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two petitions to present today. The first is signed by a number of Albertans who petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the government of Alberta

“to ensure that Mr. Stockwell Day is made personally liable for any funds required to settle his defamation litigation and that no public funds are used for this purpose.”

The second petition is signed by several Albertans who petition the Legislative Assembly of Alberta “to ensure that maximum penalties are enforced for all crimes committed with weapons and that all youth involved in weapons related crimes be tried in adult courts.”

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, I wish to table today the annual report of the Alberta Agricultural Products Marketing Council for the year ended March 31, 2002. In the interests of preservation of materials or not inflicting materials people might not want, I would just tell members that if you would like a copy of this document, they are available through my office.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

MR. BOUTILIER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In question period the other day the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glangarry raised some important points relative to teleposts, and as I committed to this Assembly, I would table from the professional association of engineers their report, which ultimately says that there are no concerns regarding public safety relative to the question that the hon. member did raise.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

MR. CAO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table a report from a constituent of Calgary-Fort, Mr. Allan Jobson, who was very knowledgeable and active in the WCB legislation and injured worker issues. His report contains analysis, questions, and recommendations to Bill 26, Workers' Compensation Amendment Act, 2002. Along with this tabling my constituent also asked me to hand deliver a copy of the report to the Minister of Human Resources and Employment, the hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont, and the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glangarry.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. My first tabling is a letter from the Candora Society of Edmonton, signed by 51 individuals and addressed to the Minister of Gaming. These individuals are asking the government to “reverse its decision and restore the Community Lottery Board” funding.

The second tabling is a letter from Dave Hegland, president of the Alberta Pulse Growers, addressed to the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. The Alberta Pulse Growers is deeply concerned with the budgetary cuts in the minister's department, especially those supporting the on-farm demo, regional variety trials, and agricultural research associations.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have one tabling this afternoon, and it is a handout I received at the Shaw Conference Centre earlier today. It's brought forward by the United Food and Commercial Workers Union, local 401, who are organizing a barbeque for inner-city residents and striking workers there today. This leaflet indicates that the workers desire “to be treated with dignity and respect” by their employer.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a number of tablings today. The first is from William Kelly, who is a constituent of mine and is very concerned about the proposals for canned hunting in this province.

The second is from Jayne Russell, who's sent a letter to the Premier and who is very concerned about confined feeding operations in the province.

The next one is from Jean McKinney. This is a copy of a letter that she sent to the Premier and a number of MLAs. Very concerned about the Bighorn recreational area access management plan.

The next tabling is the appropriate number of copies of The Leading Veg, a newsletter published by the Vegetarians of Alberta Association. This group is a “registered non-profit society formed in 1989 to serve people who are interested in learning about, adopting and/or maintaining a vegetarian lifestyle.” They are a nonpolitical and nonreligious volunteer organization. They were also one of the many groups that braved the wind on Sunday, May 5, to participate in Edmonton's belated Earth Day celebrations.

The next tabling is from Margaret Scaia from Lake Louise, Alberta, who is very concerned about the discussions to delist therapeutic abortions as a medical procedure under Alberta health care.

The last tabling is letters from Grace Millenaar of Edmonton, Darrell Nieberding of Edmonton, Larry Dyck of Calgary, and Barry Dahlseide of Leduc, and these Albertans want the government to maintain some access for off-highway vehicles in the Bighorn.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. One is a set of documents, the appropriate number of them, indicating government policy on the sale of RHA properties, market appraisals of the Holy Cross hospital, and correspondence concerning the sale.

The second tabling is I think the fourth in series on the cost of health care corruption in the U.S., six pages of examples of health care fraud involving health care businesses in the U.S., totaling today over $443 million.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, any others? Then the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview on a point of order.

Point of Order Member's Apology

DR. TAFT: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm rising to apologize to the Assembly and to the Premier. I understood that the material referred to during question period relating to the Holy Cross hospital had in fact been delivered to the Premier's office on Monday. Due to a misunderstanding it hadn't been. It has been as of now. So I apologize for that misunderstanding.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests

(reversion)

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

MR. YANKOWSKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and through you to this Assembly my constituency office STEP student, Jonathan Roshko. Jonathan is enrolled in a business course at Grant MacEwan College. Jonathan is seated, if he's still here, in the members' gallery, and I would like to ask him to rise at this time and receive the welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

MR. STRANG: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is a great pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to the Assembly 28 great grade 6 students from the Pine Grove school in Edson. With them today are teachers Mrs. Leah Holt and Mrs. Myrna Field. The parents and helpers that they've got are Mrs. Janet Murphy, Mrs. Lonni Saken, Mrs. Noella Robinson, and Mr. Louis Giannitsos. I'd ask them to please rise in the members' gallery, and I'd like us to give them a great round of applause.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

MR. MARZ: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a very close friend of mine and a very active member of the constituency of Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, Mr. Pat James. Pat is also a councillor with the county of Mountain View as well as on the board of directors with the Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties. I'd like to ask Pat, who is in the members' gallery, to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Second Reading

Appropriation Act, 2002

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Finance.

MRS. NELSON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased today to rise and move second reading of Bill 27, Appropriation Act, 2002.

Mr. Speaker, the members of this Assembly have spent the last number of days since March 19, when we brought our budget forward, debating the estimates of the departments and going through detailed analysis of the various ministries and have asked some extremely good questions. I'm sure that most have enjoyed the debate through this session and have taken each department and have voted for the estimates. This appropriation bill basically pulls all of the budget documents and information together, and I'm very pleased with the response from the Assembly. So without too much discussion again I move second reading of Bill 27.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to be able to rise and in second reading begin to comment on the principle behind Bill 27, the Appropriation Act, 2002. I always find myself in an interesting situation when we come to debate these appropriation acts. The minister is correct: we debated quite a bit on various departments. I myself asked a number of questions, which is part of my decision-making process, and of course I wasn't able to necessarily get all of the answers to my questions. Part of that happens because the amount of time for each department is fairly limited, two hours or two and a half hours at the most, and in all of the asking of questions, there may not be enough time for the minister to fully respond with all of the answers, so there's always an agreement that we will receive the rest of the answers in writing.

Well, given that we just finished the very last department yesterday, it's impossible for the staff to keep up with that kind of pressure and provide us with the answers within a very short period of time. In fact, I have received answers back in response to two of the ministries that I have debated, that were the very first ones being debated. I have not received the answers back on the other three portfolios that I'm responsible for, so it's a small crisis of faith for me as to whether I vote in favour of the appropriation bill, in order to help everything move along and provide money for various programs that I support and that I know my constituents really need to get access to various programs, or whether in fact I say: "Whoa. No. Sorry; I can't support something if I don't have all the answers to my questions and on principle alone do not support the Appropriation Act."

There are a couple of other issues that are unresolved for me. I'll put them forward now in second reading, and maybe I can get one of the ministers to respond back to me during Committee of the Whole. One of the issues that has been most troublesome to both my constituency and the communities that are underneath the portfolios that I represent was the abolishment of the community lottery boards. I asked a number of questions during debate. I asked a number of questions in question period. I have to be honest; I don't really feel that I got answers to my questions. People still don't understand why these boards that were working so well for them, for which there were so few complaints out and about, were cut. It also affects of course a number of different ministries, because the grants that were being allocated on a local decision-making basis in each of the 88 regions, I think, may well have come out and paid for projects that would normally fall under a number of other ministries.

For example, I've been talking to the – it's a new organization. I'm sorry; I'm not going to remember the full and correct title for it, but under the auspices of the Edmonton Social Planning Council there was a legal guidance centre that was set up. Now, they had secured an amount of funding in the previous fiscal year from the community lottery board and had a working agreement that they could expect fairly securely to receive an equal amount of money from the current fiscal year, and that would have given that project a good start. They would have been steady on their feet and would have been able to carry on.

Now, of course, they weren't able to secure the second year of funding. She said: "Well, what do I do now? I mean, I've got this project half up. It's half rolling, and my source of funding has disappeared." I said: "Well, it doesn't fit under CFEP, it doesn't fit under Wild Rose, and it doesn't fit under AFA." This is a legal guidance thing. You know, where could she possibly go? All I could do was say: go straight to the minister. That's frankly what I've been recommending to a number of different organizations that have come to me asking: where do I go now? I've said: go to the minister that's ultimately responsible for that department.

So there is a very large and very unanswered situation in Alberta, and it's around these community lottery boards. We've now heard, in answer to some of my questions in question period, that there may in fact be a replacement program. Well, again all the same sorts of questions come up. You know, first of all, what was considered wrong with the old program, and is it going to be fixed with the new program? Again we're not hearing about that.

Another of the groups that has been in touch with me with concerns is the Edmonton Federation of Community Leagues, and of course they have a counterpart in Calgary. I don't know how many members in here know – probably the senior members are aware – that Alberta is fairly unique in the community league programs that we have here. I know that Edmonton with its 140 community leagues is the largest volunteer-based organization, I think maybe in Canada. It has something “the best of” behind its title because it is involving so many people volunteering for the betterment of their communities. So when the Edmonton Federation of Community Leagues speaks, I listen. They're representing a lot of people at a grassroots community level.

They're very concerned with the loss of the community lottery boards, because many of their community leagues of course applied for and received moneys to make improvements and to run programs in their communities. Here's a small sample of what she was telling me. The community lottery boards in Edmonton awarded about 3 and a half million dollars to community leagues and community league affiliated groups in Edmonton. I'll just stop right there and say that that 3 and a half million dollars is a lot of money to lose out of a sector, especially when there's no solution in sight about where there might be a replacement for that money.

I've heard a number of people get up and in response go: well, you know, communities didn't have this money before the community lottery boards, so they can just get on and do whatever the heck they were doing before, and it will be the same thing. Well, that's partly true except that a lot of things have changed in these intervening four years, and one of those changes has been a fairly consistent and continuous transfer of responsibility for programs from the government down to the municipal level and in some cases to the community-based level. We have an expectation that certain programs are going to be carried on in the community now that weren't four years ago, and that's partly what the community lottery board was in fact paying for. So to say “Well, they can just go back and get money wherever they were getting it, you know, precommunity lottery board” is not necessarily true. The program in fact may have been paid for and entirely under the auspices of the government four years ago, and now it's community based. All things have to be taken into consideration here, and we really have to compare apples with apples and oranges with oranges.

Back to the Edmonton Federation of Community Leagues and the over 3 and a half million dollars that they were able to secure in grants. Now, out of that 3 and a half million 58 percent went towards park and playground development; 11 percent towards rink construction; 19 percent, hall renovations and furnishings; 4 percent, facilities, equipment, and programs for children and youth. Five percent was towards employment, and 3 percent towards other innovative projects.

Remember that before I was talking about how these community lottery boards had impacted far more than just the Ministry of Gaming or even the Ministry of Community Development. This is really affecting what I think is also happening in Municipal Affairs. We were talking about that yesterday, the Minister of Municipal Affairs and myself. In fact, that ministry is getting some $40 million out of the lottery fund, but really I think they had to include the $50 million from the community lottery boards as well. For the most part that money directly benefited the municipalities because there was enhancement that the city wasn't paying for and certainly that those groups will now look to the city to get.

These community lottery board funds filled an important gap in funding to recreation organizations, and there are a number of reasons why. In some cases groups like the community leagues – let's use them as a particular example – are not eligible for some other programs because they're not considered charitable. So where there's a criteria that only allows charitable programs through a number issued by Revenue Canada, they're excluded from applying for funds to a given funding source. The community lottery boards were set up in a way where they were very flexible about who they would consider grants from.

One of the other issues that has come up is: well, these groups can just go to CFEP, the community facility enhancement program. Yeah, uh huh, in some cases they can, but in at least three cases the projects that were funded were over the cap that is placed on the CFEP grants. You cannot get a grant for more than $125,000 through the CFEP program. I'm thinking of the Kenilworth Arena, the Citadel Theatre, and the Edmonton Police Service projects, all of which have been truly left in the lurch, and there's been no answer forthcoming from government on how they are going to be accommodated.

These three groups had been successful in getting a grant, an agreement from the Edmonton lottery board that they would receive grants. The Kenilworth one sticks in my head; I think it was $300,000 to fix their arena and rink. When the government chose to do cuts back in the fall, six months ago, the lottery boards also gave up the cut as asked, and in the case of the Edmonton Community Lottery Board they went back to some organizations and said: “We can't afford to give you this money right now, but you will get it in April. Would that be okay? Are you willing to accept that?” And the groups, believing of course that the money was coming in April, said: yes, fine, you can postpone the money. Now, if you had gone to them and said, “We're not going to give you the money now, and we think the government might in fact cut the whole program at the end of March. Would you agree to postpone your grant?” they would have said no, because they're out the money, frankly. And that's exactly the situation that they've been left in.

So on those three projects, for example, there's been no answer about how they will be handled. I've heard the suggestion: well, you know, we're talking about renovation and things, fixing up – the Citadel was about access for the disabled and hearing enhancement programs and that sort of thing – oh, well, that sounds like CFEP; why don't they go there? Well, as I said, CFEP has a cap of $125,000. These were for grants, at least in one case, of double that. So they can't apply. I mean, they can apply, but they're going to get less than half of what they were looking for. I've asked repeatedly if that cap would be raised for either of these three groups or for all, and I've had no response back.

So, again, I'm reluctant to support a budget that can't answer these questions and in particular can't reassure me that these groups that have relied on the honesty and integrity of the government can continue to rely on that honesty and integrity, or if in fact they're just going to be dumped.

One of the other issues that was brought up to me and that I mentioned in the debate on Community Development very briefly and didn't have an opportunity to flesh out a bit is around what's happened with the restructuring of grants in that particular department. Now, part of this was around only one grant. The Department of Community Development instituted a rule that said that you can only get one grant. As part of that, some sort of odd things have happened that I don't think would be the intention of the minister. Nonetheless, I'm going to point out something that's resulted from this, and maybe during Committee of the Whole I can get him to get up and talk back with me about whether he would consider adjusting the program or finding some other way to alleviate the problem that's ensued from this decision.

We have some artistic touring programs specific to children, and I'm going to use one example by name here, and that's the touring opera. They're not an artist-in-residence program particularly. They are a production. They come in. They do their opera. The kids watch it. The group leaves. What's happened is that their grant program, the touring performing program, got rolled in with the artist-in-residence program. So in combining those two programs the criteria for it sort of got combined. Now there seems to be an expectation on these touring groups that they're also going to do some kind of artist-in-residency program, which may not in fact be appropriate to what they're doing.

It may also be financially impossible for the group to do that. There's a five-hour artist-in-residence requirement here. So there's an expectation that if you're going to be paid by the school, you're going to show up; you're going to do at least five hours of artist-in-residency and then do your performance. Well, for Alberta Opera Touring they need to be doing 200 shows a year to stay alive, which means they have to be doing at least two shows a day. Well, if you're now requiring them to go in and do a five-hour residency plus the performance, that knocks them out right away. They're down to one performance a day. They can't make it at that. So right away that's caused a problem, that kind of artist-in-residency requirement.

The second thing that's happened is the way the grants are administered. That company, again, for example, Alberta Opera Touring, made one grant application – actually two, because it applied for its operating program plus the touring grants – and that would be it. Then they would contract with the various schools that wanted to have them in. Because of the change in the way the program is being administered now, there's an expectation that the schools will make the grant application to apply for the money to have the group come in. Well, those schools, as we know, are already working pretty hard, so they just throw their hands up and go: we don't have the time to do this at all.

Now the onus is in fact upon the member who is running the touring company to do the 210 grant applications for all of these different school groups on their behalf, and of course he's one guy. He's writing the plays. He's doing the tour booking. He's hiring the performers. He's performing in it himself. And now he has to do 210 grant applications? It's a bit much to ask of anyone. That's another problem that's come out of this change in the way things are being approached.

There's some question as well with the change and this requirement or expectation that there'll be an artist-in-residence. There's some question about quality control on what you're getting there. I'm not going to go into that one because I'm not understanding all the issues well enough, but I think it's enough that we be concerned about the fact that we're imperiling some touring groups under these new requirements and under the new grant program, and we don't want to lose those groups. It's not easy to tour. It's hard to tour. I can speak from experience on that one. It's a labour of love, and it's not always easy to get people that are willing to go on tour and to tour into rural areas in Alberta and to tour to schoolchildren. Yet this is something that we all know is a great endeavour. The kids really love it, and everybody really benefits from it, so we don't want to make it any harder than it already is or any less economical than it already is for these touring groups. So I need the minister to take another look at this program, because I think there are some serious problems there in an area that's already difficult to administer.

I know that in the case of Alberta Opera Touring he was mentioning to me that he thought the change in this program was effectively going to cut $30,000 out of his budget. Again, I told you that this is essentially a one-man operation. This is pretty lean and mean. You don't get any leaner and meaner than that, where you've got one guy writing the thing; he's acting in it; he's casting it; he's doing the tour arrangements. That's pretty good. We're making it even harder on him and taking away a good source of his money as well.

There's also a question somewhere else in there I think I raised earlier with the minister on the whole question of why we're expecting the arts sector of Community Development to be paying for what could be deemed an educational component for kids, and that is seeing these touring productions, whether they be the ballet, the opera, a theatre production, or whatever.

So those are the couple of points I wanted to raise. In principle I can't support this appropriation bill until I get the answers to the questions that I had put out there, and I look forward to receiving those answers.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Happy to add my comments to second reading of Bill 27, the Appropriation Act, 2002. First of all, I'd just like to spend a moment or two talking about the process of budget this time. We had some new rules to go by, and this is the time when normally we would evaluate them with regard to how the budget process worked, whether or not this was an effective way to deal with budget. It is one of the more effective systems I think that we've had over the course of my history in this Assembly. I do have a few suggestions that I would like to put on the record for consideration next year.

What happened this time is that we went to budget after Monday night's private members' business and then Tuesday nights and Wednesday nights. Because of the government's wish for haste in getting out of the Assembly, we ended up doing quite a bit of work after 10 o'clock at night on other bills that had to be discussed in the Assembly. While that speeds up the process of how long we're in session, it also creates a great workload for us in terms of research and properly analyzing the bills and sending them out to stakeholder groups, getting the feedback in, and then being on our feet debating issues in the afternoon and evening and then late into the evening. It's very tiring for everyone, not just for us but I would suggest for all members in this Assembly.

AN HON. MEMBER: Poor you.

MS CARLSON: No, it's not a poor me kind of statement. It's a reasonable statement to be made given that people need to work effectively and efficiently. There have always been parts about the process, Mr. Speaker, that I have liked, and for those parts that I don't like, I always put them on the record. It's clear that the government whip would choose to enter into debate on this, and I would welcome that, because we hardly ever see her stand on her feet in this Assembly, so she will have an opportunity . . .

MRS. NELSON: Point of order.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Finance on a point of order.

Point of Order Relevance

MRS. NELSON: Mr. Speaker, on relevancy. I believe it's 453 or 457. I'm sorry; I don't have my Beauchesne's handy. I thought we were debating the appropriation bill and not the procedures of the House, rules that were determined prior to us coming into this session.

THE SPEAKER: On the point of order, hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie?

MS CARLSON: Yes. I would suggest that there is no point of order. In fact, the budget process and how we debate the budget over the course of the time allocated is very much relevant to appropriations and to the point that I'm getting to, which is in terms of relevant answers and time spent.

THE SPEAKER: Well, hon. members, on this very important point of order, as the chair refers to citation 453, it says, "A dissolution of the House immediately puts an end to all outstanding orders for Returns." So that clearly is not the appropriate citation.

Citation 457 says:

The Speaker plays no role in determining the correctness of the translation of texts. Members who take issue with the translation of a text before the House should propose an amendment to the motion or bill at the appropriate stage.

So that certainly is an inappropriate citation as well.

Look; the point of it all is that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie was making comments. It appears to the chair anyway that there was some movement of mouths from another part of the House, and the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie responded in kind. That led to another kind of thing. The hon. Minister of Finance stood up on a point of order, saying that that exchange was totally irrelevant. And you know what? The chair agrees: a totally irrelevant exchange – totally.

So would the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie continue her remarks.

MRS. NELSON: Could I just say . . .

THE SPEAKER: Finished. Dealt with. Dealt with.

MRS. NELSON: I apologize for not having Beauchesne handy. It was 459 that I was referring to. I'm sorry.

THE SPEAKER: Well, that's good.

Debate Continued

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to continue with my remarks. In terms of the process of how the budget debates have gone, in terms of our being able to spend relevant time on them and give government members an opportunity to respond prior to the vote on the particular budget, I have a suggestion to make. That is that perhaps next budget session we take a look at debating budget estimates on Monday night after private members' business and on Wednesday evening, leaving Tuesday evening free to deal with other bills that are on the Order Paper.

That accomplishes a couple of things. It makes some progress in terms of where we're going on other agenda items, and it also gives us a little more time to review budgets, to go out to stakeholders and get feedback from them, and to be prepared in the Assembly. It also gives ministers an opportunity for themselves and their staff to review the questions that were asked and to supply answers to us in a timely fashion, and we see a timely fashion as being prior to the appropriation bill coming before the Assembly for a final vote. It is quite frequent that we don't receive the answers to the questions from the budget until sometime after that point, in fact. Often it's certainly after we have taken a recess from the House and sometimes it is well into the next session before the answers come.

Now, there are a few ministers who always strive to give us timely responses, and that we very much appreciate. In fact, I had an opportunity to review the responses from the Minister of Transportation that hit my desk yesterday, which of course was very timely in terms of this budget debate. I have to tell you that the Minister of Transportation is a minister I quite like, and it seems that he tries very hard to do a good job of performing his duties, but in this particular instance I was very disappointed in the kinds of answers that I got back. I had some very legitimate and detailed questions that I requested answers to, and I thought that in the debate I had outlined that rather well. Obviously that was not the case, Mr. Speaker, because the answers I got back were not acceptable by any stretch of the imagination.

One of the questions I had asked him was about transportation grants to all areas of the province and the kinds of cutbacks we've seen, and he went on to talk about the increased grants and the reversal of the decisions that had been made in terms of Calgary and Edmonton. Specific to my comments during that budget debate were concerns that Albertans had expressed to me about this government having an Edmonton/Calgary corridor mentality, and he responded by giving me an answer that only deals with those two cities. In fact, my questions specifically were directed to other areas of the province and the transportation grants there. So I was very disappointed. I thought that we could have some good answers that we could send out to municipalities and to people who were worried about transportation in the outlying areas, and we got back something that is actually good for me and for the Official Opposition in terms of confirming in those people's minds that this government has that particular mind-set. It was less than what I expected in an answer.

I'm hoping that the minister will review those questions and then subsequently the answers that he provided and perhaps upgrade the quality of the answers to something that I can send out, because in the absence of a good answer I'm going to send out the answer that he gave me. People in the province are not going to like it, and I'm sure that he is going to hear from them and that in fact it will cause him and his staff a great deal more work than if he'd just answered the questions in a relevant fashion to begin with.

Some of the answers that I got were pretty good and covered most of the areas that I had asked about, although I have to say that I am waiting for the answers from Sustainable Resource Development and Environment. I'm hoping that they will provide those.

It's always been my position, Mr. Speaker, that I prefer a budgetary process where we can have access to deputy ministers and other key support staff in departments for the budget process, because while ministers know their departments quite well, they often don't know the specifics of some of the details of the programs, and it's very nice to have access to that staff to get that level of detail in answers. In previous budgets we have had that ability. I know a lot of people didn't like being upstairs for the budget debate, but it was very helpful to get some level of detail on some of the issues, and it was particularly helpful to me. It wouldn't be necessary for all the departments but for some.

Sustainable Resource Development does a very good job these days of having briefing sessions for myself and support staff on issues, where we do have access to people who can give us some detailed answers and some feedback on how policy initiatives and changes in direction have been received, as they perceive it, and a perspective on how the policy that they are implementing should be implemented. While that always isn't in accordance with how we think things should be done, it certainly is very, very helpful to have access to that information.

In Environment, which is one of the other portfolios that I monitor, we have random meetings but certainly not that degree of access to staff, and it would be helpful to have that.

As well, Economic Development. Now, I know that the minister is definitely a cheerleader for Alberta, and that is his job, no doubt about it. But what we hear are only the ministerial statements in the House. We don't get additional information or support from that department, and that would be helpful.

International and Intergovernmental Relations: the same thing; we don't get an overview of what's happening and specifics on direction. What happens, Mr. Speaker, is that if we have access to that kind of information particularly during budget debate, it cuts down on the number of questions in the House or it makes the questions in the House more relevant and therefore better for the use of Albertans. So I would suggest that the Government House Leader and the ministers consider that when we talk about how the budget process will be undertaken next year.

Once again here we are being asked to vote on appropriations, which are substantive in amount, and we haven't got all the answers. So that's a very tough thing to do. If we'd had the budget a little earlier and there were some sort of mandatory requirement that answers be provided prior to the votes being taken, it would certainly be a lot easier for us to vote on these issues. We're talking about nearly $17 billion this year, $2 billion down from last year. So we'll see what happens over the course of the year. I'm quite sure that we'll see revisions over the course of the year or certainly surpluses being built into this year's budget given the way oil and gas prices are going now.

I'd like to spend a few moments talking about what happened to the budget this year. This has been a very interesting budget year. We have seen government bring in a budget on one day and the very next day talk about extra money they had available. We've seen at least three . . . [interjection] Well, that's an interesting point, Mr. Speaker. We hear the Government House Leader saying that the announcement that was made the day after the budget was introduced dealt with surplus moneys from the year prior. I agree that that's where those moneys came from.

The point here is that when you are giving people information on money matters, it is very important that full disclosure in terms of all the moneys available and all the relevant information available to the person in charge of the information be made to those who need the information. In this case it's Albertans. Appearances during that time period – it looked like there were some other protocols being met, not necessarily that of full and open disclosure at the time that moneys were available. Now, I know that the Minister of Finance won't like that, but let's take a look at the optics of that situation; they did not look good.

Subsequent to that we saw two or three more flip-flops on money issues. Before the budgets were decided, we saw the great big . . .

MS BLAKEMAN: Why didn't they flip-flop on the one they needed to?

MS CARLSON: Well, that's right. My colleague from Edmonton-Centre makes a very good point: why didn't they flip-flop on the one they needed to? That's an outstanding issue that we believe we are going to see a flop on probably over the summer when most people in this province are on holidays. At that time the media doesn't give the same kind of scrutiny to decisions that are made by government.

No doubt, the elimination of community lottery boards in this province created a very big uproar from corner to corner of the province because it's an issue that hits every single community. Now, we have heard lots of reasons why these dollars were discontinued, and certainly the lamest of these reasons was that there was no money for them, Mr. Speaker. There is money for everything this government wants there to be money for, and certainly this is no exception. The support of those organizations . . .

REV. ABBOTT: Yeah, we wish.

MS CARLSON: Well, you know, it's too bad that other people don't get involved in the appropriations debate, Mr. Speaker. They're quite happy to chirp away and add in, and Drayton Valley-Calmar is the first amongst those to engage in debate off the record, so we'll just put those comments on the record for him. [interjection] Yes, just heckling; that's true.

The fact is, Mr. Speaker, that we had many people in this province who were very upset about what happened with community lottery boards. The money is there. We're going to see as this year unfolds that they'll find some other way to provide photo ops for MLAs to present those cheques, not opposition MLAs.

MRS. NELSON: I don't think so.

MS CARLSON: Well, that's right. The Minister of Finance says: I don't think so. The question is: is she saying "I don't think so" to there being any photo ops for opposition MLAs? Well, I don't think that's true either. Is the answer "I don't think so" that there will be no other venue for community lottery board dollars to be disbursed? Well, I think they're going to come up with some new way for those dollars to get into the hands of community members, and it will be interesting to see how that happens.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Rocky View.

MS HALEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wanted an opportunity to speak on the Appropriation Act because I think it is, as the hon. member across the way indicated, an important piece of legislation. It is important. We've spent many days and many nights in here dealing with these.

As per the earlier comments about the process, yes, I agree that it is tiring, but everything in this Assembly every session is tiring. This year for the first time in years we have a system where all the debates on the budget are done inside this Chamber as opposed to being designated out in subcommittees upstairs where we had two budget discussions going on at the same time, where we had Friday mornings or Friday nights or Saturday mornings or Monday mornings at 8 o'clock, trying to deal with four or five designated subcommittees on the budget. Every single department of government is being debated inside this Chamber, as it should be. So I can agree that it is tiring, but I also think that it's an incredibly huge improvement over where we were.

The beauty of all that is that it came about through a Standing Orders debate and discussion and co-operation between House leaders: our Government House Leader, their leader, and the ND leader. So I think that it's kind of an important point that there was an agreement on this. You know, if you're not happy with it, then I would suggest in all honesty that you speak to the Government House Leader about it, and perhaps we can come up with a way that suits you better.

Going back to the actual appropriation bill, I think it's important that we put on the record what it is that we're actually talking about here. So let's start with that, with what's actually in the bill.

It starts with support to the Legislative Assembly of $34,930,000, which is kind of important to everybody that's here, as to the functioning of this building, from security to visitor services to information systems to you name it. It's in there. That's what makes this whole place run. I think that's an important vote.

The office of the Auditor General, which is absolutely crucial to the oversight of government spending and making sure that things work well. The office of the Ombudsman, the office of the Chief Electoral Officer. The office of the Ethics Commissioner is very important to all of us. We all report to him annually, and by the way that's coming up in the next few weeks, so everybody should make sure they've gone. The office of the Information and Privacy Commissioner: that's in here too, Mr. Speaker.

Then it gets into the government expenditures. You know, you have Aboriginal Affairs, $20 million; Agriculture, Food and Rural Development, $305 million, not nearly enough, by the way. Nevertheless, I know that our minister will do a great job with it.

Children's Services, something that's been asked about repeatedly in here during question period, always indicating that it's not enough and it's not right, it's $673 million. I remember when the now minister of sustainable resources was minister of family services, and at that time the children's component of it was about $186 million. That was back in 1993-94. It is now $673 million, a phenomenal increase in the amount of money, and I do know that there's an increase in children in there as well but not nearly as much as the increase in the rate of expenditures. You know, if you judge things by money, then you also have to judge it by the increase in the expenditure and the sincerity with which people are trying to help and deal with those serious issues of protecting children in this society. It's sad, Mr. Speaker, anytime that you have a child that needs protecting, but I'm glad to know that we have frontline workers and great people out there trying to perform that service.

We have Community Development, $569 million, and I know that a portion of that is for the PDD program, which was moved over there this past year. I know that the minister does a very fine job with that particular program, and there again an annual increase is going into it. Can you keep up with the demand? I'm not sure, but knowing that the increases are there, at least we can help to offset some of the pain and distress that exists in our society. Yes, that was where community lottery boards were as well, and it is unfortunate that that program had to be removed at this time.

Every once in a while we need to maybe touch base with reality here on what it is you're trying to do with education, with health care needs, with acute care, with long-term care, with PDD, with children's services, with clean air and water, and a thousand other things that are must-haves, actual you need to have them, not just want to have them. Community lottery boards were a great program to have, but it was never necessary. It was never: wow, the whole world will fall apart if you don't have a community lottery board. You've got CFEP. You've got Wild Rose. You've got the Alberta Sport Council. You've got the Alberta Foundation for the Arts. On top of that, you have about $180 million a year that's being raised by casinos and bingos for charitable purposes in this province. Over a billion dollars is going back in through these communities, whether it's through health care or education or whether it's through charitable contributions.

You know, this $50 million of which about half was actually a duplication of funding mechanisms through CFEP, Alberta sport and recreation, and Alberta Foundation for the Arts may not have been the absolute best use or the only use for that $50 million. There's a commitment by the Premier and by the minister to review those programs and find the people who are falling through the cracks that can't apply under the other programs and try and find a way to change guidelines so that they can in fact do so, and I accept them at their word on that.

Economic Development, $51 million, I think one of our truly more important departments as small as it may be in comparison to the overall spending. As an exporting province this is absolutely crucial to the future of everything that we do here.

Our Energy department, $101 million; Environment, $103 million, and that's an area where if I could spend a little bit more, I'd probably spend some of it there on water and air to make sure that this province stays as wonderful for our children as it is today for us.

We have our Finance department. We've got Gaming, which brings in a huge amount of revenue for us, and I'm very thankful for that, because when they weren't spending it here, they were spending in Vegas anyway, and I'm glad that it's staying here. I think that's as it should be.

Human Resources and Employment, a billion dollars, very important programs there. Again there was an increase in that one.

Infrastructure for this year, $847 million. I wish that could be more, and if it hadn't been for the downturn in revenues of almost $2 billion last year, I think it would be more, but maybe next year things will improve again. In an environment like ours, with the most volatile economy in all of North America, where you can have 15 and 20 percent swings in your revenue – you know, we tried to help out with onetime funding when we had a surplus. When things don't work out, it also has to come back out, because we do not run deficits in this province. I am hopeful that the minister's commission will in fact come up with some ways that we can do infrastructure and transportation spending perhaps a little more logically so that planning can be done not only by government, by communities, by schools, and by municipalities but also by construction companies that make their living here as well.

Innovation and Science, one of my favourite areas. The Supernet I think is just a phenomenal thing for this province. I mean, it's put us just miles ahead of every other place in the world.

Our International and Intergovernmental Relations. I know that it's a small department, but it's incredibly important. It came up again today in question period as to how important our international and national relationships are. If the U.S. is going to go back into huge subsidies for agriculture, where does that leave us? Where does that leave our farmers? Our minister will help us with that, to try and sort that out and take us through the proper procedures so that we can either deal with it at a legal level or have to deal with it at a financial level later, because one way or another you are going to deal with it.

We have Justice and Learning and Municipal Affairs, all incredibly important. Our Revenue department is just small, but it works well with our other minister. There's a great connection there. The Seniors department, incredibly important again. I have aging parents, and I know how important the seniors' benefit program is, and I also know how important the extended health care benefit package was. I know that our Minister of Seniors is working on that, and we will have a solution to that one as well.

Sustainable Resource Development and Transportation. Our transportation system again ties back into Infrastructure, and I know that eventually we'll have a solution for some of those problems.

You know, there's been an awful lot of angst and anxiety and time spent talking about community lottery boards, and I think that one of the things that you need to consider at the end of the day is that of an almost $20 billion budget, everybody is really complaining about $50 million, and that's just not too bad as far as I'm concerned. So thank you for this opportunity, Mr. Speaker.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, are you rising on a point of order?

MS CARLSON: No, no. A question. Mr. Speaker, is the Member for Airdrie-Rocky View saying that community lottery boards weren't a priority for this government?

MS HALEY: I think that if you'd actually been listening to my comments, I would have said to you that they had provided a service, that there were areas where there was a duplication between it and CFEP, Alberta sport and recreation, Alberta Foundation for the Arts, and that, yes, it was important, but it is not as important as health care, acute care beds. It is not as important as trying to find a minimum of a 6 percent raise for teachers. It is not as important as making sure we have some money left for seniors.

If I were to complain about one thing, it would be the extended health care. I wish we hadn't had to do that. It was part of an overall package transfer, and if there were one thing I could put money back into, it wouldn't be community lottery boards. It would in fact be something for the senior citizens.

MS CARLSON: Another question, Mr. Speaker. So is the member saying that if there are organizations who fall through the cracks and don't have funding, the government will find other ways of funding those projects?

MS HALEY: I believe that that's been answered several times in question period by the Minister of Gaming, and he indicated over and over again that the guidelines were all being reviewed. We will look at CFEP. We will look at Alberta sport and recreation. We will look at the Alberta Foundation for the Arts. We will look at the Wild Rose Foundation. For the ones that don't fit now, we will see if there is a way to accommodate them. I also think it's important to note that there were people who were applying for those grants under community lottery boards that weren't getting funded either. They weren't getting funded then, and they may not get funded in the future, because they simply don't fit any of the criteria.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Any other questions or comments? The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

REV. ABBOTT: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm just wondering if this is a decision that the hon. Member for Airdrie-Rocky View made by herself, or was this a decision that was made collectively by our entire caucus, that was elected by the citizens of Alberta?

MS HALEY: Well, as the member well knows, we have a very active caucus participation system, starting at standing policy committees, going up through cabinet, back through to caucus, and through Treasury Board and agenda and priorities along the way as well, so it was never made by just one person. As a matter of fact, there were a lot of people that participated in it, and it was an unfortunate decision. There's not one of us that wouldn't wish that we had a $7 billion surplus this year and that the worst problem that we would have is where to allocate some of those funds. The problem was that we had a $2 billion shortfall in revenue instead.

MS BLAKEMAN: Oh, thank you for that question and that answer.

My question to the member. She's pointing out that the Minister of Gaming will be looking at criteria for CFEP and Wild Rose and looking to accommodate groups under that, but we're talking about missing $50 million. Is she anticipating, then, somehow or does she know somehow that government will be coming up with the additional money to put into those existing grant programs to cover off taking care of these groups?

MS HALEY: You know, in all honesty, no, I don't really think that we'll coming up with an additional $50 million, but I do think that there might be $14 million, as indicated in the business plan, in the next year for CFEP.

I want to re-emphasize this point. When I indicated that there was $25 million worth of duplication, I meant that there was $25 million of duplication. If a group could go through several granting mechanisms and get money from all of them, was that actually what it was intended to be set up for? The answer is: no, I don't think so. Nor was it intended to be set up for the big major groups. [Ms Haley's speaking time expired] Oops, I'm out of time again, Mr. Speaker, and I'm having such a good time.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to make some comments at second reading about Bill 27, the Appropriation Act, 2002. As is the practice, we are to devote our comments at second reading to the underlying principles of the bill. I think the principles are abundantly clear to those of us that have studied the budget and have been in the House. The government has outlined the principles rather clearly in the budget documents. Budget 2002, the fiscal plan, lays out the budget principles. There are five really major principles that the budget is structured around.

The first is that the budget will be balanced every year. I think this is a principle that everyone in the House endorses and that we've endorsed formally through the Fiscal Responsibility Act and the Government Accountability Act in the past, but having agreed with the principle, I think what is equally important is how that balance is attained each year.

The how is where we often, I think, have disagreements in the House, as to how that process will be undertaken. The example of course is the one from last year, where the fall cuts that were made to the budget at that time were in fact very, very painful. There were a number of groups. I met with some of the disabled adults who were living in group homes and their advocates. Having a budget cut appear at the time in the fiscal year that it did worked a great hardship on those individuals. They had committed themselves to workers and to contracts that just didn't have a 1 percent reduction possible in them, so they were looking at some pretty serious adjustments as a result of those cuts. So as important as the budget being balanced is, how we do that balancing has to be a major priority, and that wasn't the only department.

I think the department that of course drew a great deal of attention was Children's Services. There were 18 programs in this city alone that were cut and curtailed, and unfortunately among those programs were a great many that were preventative in nature. I'm afraid that when the fiscal crunch comes, it's the prevention programs that usually are hurt and done away with first, and with respect to Children's Services, doing away with those preventative programs is really short-term gain for long-term pain. They are critical if the future is to be better and if costs in any of those areas are going to be eventually reduced. So while we endorse "the budget will be balanced every year" as a principle, how that balancing is done has to be very carefully thought through.

A second principle that's outlined in the fiscal plan put forward by the government and debated in the estimates is that "debt will be repaid." There has been a great deal of attention arising out of the experiences in the '80s to debt and the ills of the province being deeply in debt and the wasted resources that are sacrificed to interest payments on huge debts. Again, while it's a principle that we all would endorse, the question has been asked and it continues to be asked in terms of: how fast are we paying down the mortgage? How fast is the debt being paid down? This fiscal plan indicates that we are now nine years ahead of schedule, and that I guess is what has been the source of a number of questions about: is that prudent budgeting? Is it wise to pay it down that rapidly or to follow a plan, the kind of thing that most families do when they're doing their budgeting, that allows for a balance between the pay-down of debt and financing and appropriate spending that needs and should be done. I think it's a question that we have to look at very seriously.

If you look at the infrastructure across the province – I look at schools and colleges and universities and the huge amount of money that's going to be required for infrastructure and the comments by the Auditor General that we in fact are remiss in not having a plan in place to appropriately replace facilities as they age and to upgrade them. I think it's a worrying development that the race to get rid of the debt may be sowing the seeds for some other long-term and very expensive costs that are going to have to be borne in the future.

A third principle that the plan outlines, Mr. Speaker, is that "revenue forecasts will be prudent." I think we all agree, given the kind of volatility that Alberta faces with respect to revenue, given that it's based so heavily on resource revenues, that prudence is needed. But the question again is raised: is it prudent to vastly, vastly underestimate revenues to produce surpluses? Again, it's a question that's going to be debated and will continue to be debated, but the forecasts have been wild over the last number of years. There is some basis for it, but you wonder if there doesn't need to be some discipline in making those forecasts.

A fourth principle that is often part of our budget debates is that "spending plans will be affordable." Again, we can all agree that you have to live within your means. You can't live otherwise without going back into the kind of huge debt that we faced in the past, but I think there are two words that might be added to that principle: that spending programs will be "appropriate" and "affordable." It's the appropriateness of this spending that we have spent the last – I don't know – 30 days debating, because it's in the details of the various departments that we try to make judgments about the appropriateness of the spending that's placed there. There have been some serious questions raised during the budget debates about the various departments and the appropriateness of the allocations that have been made there.

A fifth principle is that "the government will be open and accountable to Albertans," and it's one that the government prides itself on in the number of references that are made to this principle. One of the ways that the openness and accountability is practised is through the business plans, and the business plans have come a long way from those that we saw first in the early '90s. Some of the departments have business plans that are really quite excellent in terms of the public, citizens trying to follow what's actually being done and with the appropriate indicators for citizens to make some judgments. Mr. Speaker, I think in particular of the Innovation and Science department and the business plans that they have put forward. They're still in development, but I think that what they have there is really fairly well done and might serve as a model for other departments.

One of the difficulties we have – and I think, again, the Auditor General has made reference to it – is the changing of business plans. The changing of performance measures and the performance indicators from year to year makes comparisons very, very difficult and makes any kind of history-tracking of specific items really very, very difficult.

There's also a lack of common definition in terms of what is an indicator, what is a performance measure. So it would be very helpful in terms of future business plans to have some cross-department agreement in terms of what those terms mean. By now the indicators, for the most part you would think, would be settled down for departments, and I think it would be very useful in budget examinations to have those plans be fairly consistent year to year so that judgments could be appropriately made.

If you look at the plan as outlined by the government, the priorities are listed as three in the plan. First, Health and Wellness is a top priority, and it takes up 36 percent of this year's budget, Mr. Speaker. Learning is a second priority, and it takes up 24 percent of the budget. The third priority is assistance for those in need. One of the frustrations of the Health and Wellness budget – and this appears year after year – is the huge amount of activity there seems to be. I don't know how many different plans we've had. There was a 90-day plan back in the early '90s when the system was going to be fixed. There have been groups studying the health care system. It's just a most frustrating area in terms of all of that activity actually resulting in a health and wellness system that we're comfortable with and that doesn't seem to be under constant stress.

There are concerns still, I think, within that budget about mental health services and how they're being delivered. I think there were some good items in it, and I think the $9 million to reduce tobacco use was well spent and well placed, but it's a budget area that I'm still pessimistic we have a handle on.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 27 read a second time]

Bill 28

Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act, 2002

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I introduced Bill 28 yesterday, indicating that it made some fairly minor and nonsubstantive amendments to two acts, the Employment Pension Plans Act and the Railway Act, and that it repealed a third act, and that is the Small Business Term Assistance Fund Act. In the practice of the House the miscellaneous statutes are agreed to by all parties before they're introduced and usually don't require much more debate than that. This, as I say, is nonsubstantive, and I would commend it to the House.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure to rise and speak to Bill 28, Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act, 2002. It's been the custom in recent sessions to try to minimize the work done through miscellaneous statutes and to ensure that it is minor in nature, and it has been the custom of the government to send over miscellaneous statutes suggestions to us as early as they can in the process so that we have a chance to review them and decide whether or not we are going to support them. If we feel that there are substantive changes, then we ask for sections to be withdrawn. If we have any concerns about sections laid out in the bill, we ask for them to be withdrawn.

This time, as the Government House Leader indicated, three acts were brought forward for what we see also as being relatively minor changes, Mr. Speaker, and we will be supporting a speedy passage of this particular miscellaneous statutes act through the House.

[Motion carried; Bill 28 read a second time]

4:00

Intestate Succession Amendment Act, 2002

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to move second reading of Bill 29, the Intestate Succession Amendment Act, 2002.

As I'm sure all members of the Assembly are aware, the government has embarked on, as I've mentioned a number of times, an all-encompassing review of family law statutes. In addition, we have also examined the legal treatment of committed personal relationships that fall outside the traditional institution of marriage. Bill 30, which was also introduced yesterday, the Adult Interdependent Relationships Act, addresses the status of such personal relationships insofar as they have access to the laws of the province.

That act is based on the fact that there are Albertans who are in personal relationships of interdependence outside of marriage, people who are emotionally and financially committed to one another on a long-term basis, and the definition of those interdependent relationships is set out in that act and will include long-term relationships, including platonic relationships, which meet the requirement of the act. It's a stiff test but an important one, and it's our intention that the Adult Interdependent Relationships Act will remain on the Order Paper after the end of the spring sitting and over to the fall so that Albertans may have a look at it, may satisfy themselves as to how it applies to them or how it doesn't apply to them, and have the opportunity to examine that. It's important that it sit over because the implications of the act may apply to many people, and they should have that opportunity to understand it before it comes into effect.

However, that being said, it is necessary to deal with one piece of legislation this spring. The Intestate Succession Act in April of 2001 was subject to a court action and crucial provisions of it were struck down by the Court of Queen's Bench in Alberta on the basis that they extended a benefit to a married couple that is not extended to a same-sex couple. The court suspended the declaration of the invalidity of that act until the end of the spring 2002 sitting of this Legislature or until the end of June, whichever occurs first.

Now, that wasn't the first deadline the court had imposed. They had given us 90 days to deal with the act and then extended that to the beginning of April and then extended it at our request until the end of June, and we appreciate the fact that the court understood the arguments that we made, that we were dealing with the fullness of the whole discussion of personal relationships. But we didn't feel it appropriate to go back to the court to ask for yet another extension, notwithstanding that the Adult Interdependent Relationships Act is not going to be passed until this fall.

So we ask the House now to deal with this amendment to the Intestate Succession Act, which will be superceded hopefully in the fullness of time with the debate on Bill 30 by that particular act. There are more provisions and different provisions in that act which take this further. However, in Bill 29 are the amendments which are needed to keep these crucial sections of the Intestate Succession Act alive until Bill 30 is passed.

The reason we're putting a different definition in Bill 29 than is in Bill 30 is that we did not want to prejudge the Legislature in terms of what the final analysis of Bill 30 will be. The definition of an adult interpersonal relationship in Bill 30 is fairly expansive. It's new ground. It goes further than any other jurisdiction has gone, and it stands to be debated in this House. Personally, I think it's a very good approach that's been taken. It's been well thought out. We've worked on it over the course of the last year and longer in terms of reviewing the act, but it still stands to be debated in this House to be determined. So the difference here in Bill 29 is that we've taken the definition only so far as is necessary to keep those crucial sections of the act alive and no further. That's not for any reason other than so that there are not a great number of different variants available to people who have to avail themselves of the Intestate Succession Act.

What we're asking the House to do is relatively strange but nonetheless I think important, and that is to put this narrow definition and extension into the Intestate Succession Act so that we can keep those provisions of the Intestate Succession Act alive until we have the full debate on Bill 30 this fall. I'd ask the House to understand that provision.

I expect that members of the opposition and others will be very critical of me as the Minister of Justice and of government for not having moved earlier and faster on this, but as I've explained many, many times, this is a crucial area of law, and the whole family law area is crucial and important to many Albertans. It behooved us to do careful study and to come out with what we think is the right approach and then to have Albertans look at that approach. That's the process that we've been using. It has taken longer than perhaps many people would have liked, but I think it's better to be careful and to do it properly. That's what we're trying to do under Bill 30. We need now to amend the Intestate Succession Act as proposed in Bill 29 until we can deal with Bill 30, and I'd ask the indulgence of the House in allowing us to do that.

I would want to say one other thing before concluding my remarks, and that is that the Intestate Succession Act applies where people do not have a will, where they have not taken care of their personal arrangements before something happens to them. That happens because sometimes people are involved in accidents. They didn't expect to die, so they hadn't prepared for it. But the best thing people can do is not to rely on the law to take care of their personal affairs but to take care of their personal affairs themselves. I would encourage Albertans not to rely on the government to keep this law alive.

I admit it was facetious, but at one point in time I said: perhaps what we should do is let this act die and spend some money advertising and letting Albertans know that they should go out and write their will, not just buy a drugstore manual on how to write a will. Get proper advice. It's worth doing. Get proper advice, and do your estate planning. It's the best thing you can do for your family and your loved ones, whatever relationship you happen to be in.

While we're amending the Intestate Succession Act to allow for the provision of other relationships in the Intestate Succession Act so that the law can provide for the distribution of property in unfortunate circumstances, again I would encourage all Albertans to take their own affairs into their own hands, to write a will, to take care of their loved ones, and to take proper care of their relationships so that there don't have to be divisive court actions to determine how property is distributed.

I'd ask this House to vote for Bill 29 on second reading.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak in second reading to Bill 29, the Intestate Succession Amendment Act, 2002. I listened carefully to the minister's remarks, and I was considering whether it was possible to congratulate him on something he was ordered by the courts to do. I've decided it is possible to congratulate him, even though he did it because the courts ordered him to, because the truth is that we have had examples in the past in Alberta where that has not been followed through and in fact the province has decided to fight the case further and take it in one case all the way to the Supreme Court, which is costly, and the taxpayers pay for that eventually. The heart of what we're talking about here is people looking after one another and enabling people to look after one another. So I'm willing to give congratulations to the minister.

I'm just going to go back . . .

DR. MASSEY: What about the hire-a-lawyer commercial?

MS BLAKEMAN: Well, we'll come back to the hire-a-lawyer commercial a little later.

I'm just going to review what led us here, because people may not be particularly aware. What happened was that we had a gentleman, Larry Sand, who in fact had been married and had two children, was divorced, and sometime later went into a same-sex relationship, which he'd been in for a long period of time, eight or nine years I think. At this point, he had an untimely death in March of 2000. He was out walking his dog and was crossing the street and was hit by a vehicle. He survived for a couple of weeks in the hospital and finally died in April of 2000, and he died without a will. The point is that one of his children came forward and claimed the estate and didn't share it with the partner.

As a result of that, his partner in fact hired a lawyer, Julie Lloyd, who took the case forward to the courts saying: look; here's a situation where we have two people that were trying to look after each other. They lived their lives "in a fashion that was analogous to a conjugal relationship . . . they socialized as a couple with friends and family, they shared bank accounts," they purchased a vehicle together, "they roughly shared expenses, they purchased a house together as joint owners, and in essence were an interdependent social and economic unit." They even had retirement plans that were already all figured out. So all of that planning and all of that comingling of assets, and they didn't write wills. Nonetheless, there obviously was a partnership there.

What happened was that the partner was left in a bad financial situation as a result of this, and the point is that when we have people that come together and share a life together and that want to look after each other, they should be allowed to look after each other. That's an equality issue, and when this case was taken forward, the courts in fact agreed with that. Part of that section I just quoted was out of the court documents.

I'll just quote a bit more here from the judge's decision: "The remaining remedy is that of a declaration of invalidity relating to the impugned provisions of the ISA," Intestate Succession Act. However, the judge notes that "the legislature ought to be given some latitude to address the social and public policy issues and concerns." So when people talk about judge-made law, this is not judge-made law. The judge is very clearly saying: this is a problem that needs to go back to the Legislature, and that's where I'm going to send it.

"The legislature should have latitude to devise its own approach, consistent with the Charter" – that means you have to be equal – "and having regard to how an intestate's estate ought to be distributed in a fair and equitable manner, where the intestate had intimate relationships and dependants." Accordingly, the judge directed that "there will be a temporary suspension of a declaration of invalidity of the impugned provisions of the [Intestate Succession Act] for a period of nine months," which in fact took us to January of 2002. The judge notes:

Given the complexity of the issues and a new government (voted in on March 12, 2001), the nine month period ought to be ample, having regard to the fact that the [Alberta Law Reform Institute] has constructed in its report of June 1999 . . . a detailed blueprint for overhauling the [Intestate Succession Act] except for the issue of same sex cohabitants.

So I don't have to chastize the minister. Everyone else was doing it. Very clearly the judge said: Okay; this needs come back to the Legislature to fix what they wrought in the first place or didn't bring forward in an equitable matter that withstands the Charter.

So we do in fact now have – what is this? – on the 8th of May this Intestate Succession Act before us. As the minister pointed out, all it's doing is putting in a definition of an adult interdependent partner.

- (a) "Adult interdependent partner" means, in reference to an intestate, a person, including a minor, who lived with the intestate in a conjugal relationship, outside marriage,
 - (i) for a continuous period of not less than 3 years immediately before the intestate's death, or
 - (ii) of some permanence immediately before the intestate's death, if there is a child of the relationship by birth or adoption.

So that's the definition that we're working with that defines that adult interpersonal relationship. What it's trying to set up is that in situations like we had with Sand and Johnson, it allows and it recognizes that there's a relationship in place that should be treated the same as if there was a spouse. So what it's saying is that if an intestate dies leaving no surviving spouse but leaving a surviving adult interdependent partner, the surviving adult interdependent partner shall be treated for the purposes of this Act as if he or she were the surviving spouse of the intestate.

So it allows all of those things that follow through from this act regularly to follow through to an adult interdependent partner.

It also makes it clear that "if an intestate dies leaving a surviving spouse and a surviving adult interdependent partner," then we're looking at a timing issue, and it lays out how that would be followed as well.

So the larger issue here, as the minister did outline in his opening comments, is that the government hasn't been very good in Alberta in keeping our legislation up to date. They are trying to go through a period of updating and now subjecting legislation to a review every five years or every seven years so that we can try and stay up to date. We do have to look at our understanding of family, look at our understanding of how society operates, understand and incorporate the principles of equality into what we're doing, and understand that in some cases the legislation as it currently sits in a number of different areas is precluding people from looking after one another. Thus we have Bill 30, the Adult Interdependent Relationships Act, being brought forward by the minister at the same time, and that act is looking at changing eight other acts at the moment, one of which of course is the Intestate Succession Act. As the minister said, he wishes to leave that bill for debate and discussion for a longer period of time. He is obliged by the courts to complete the change in the Intestate Succession Act; thus we have this act, Bill 29, coming through on its own.

Also, as the minister pointed out, there is a definition that may be subject to a change. The definition in Bill 29 is different from what is anticipated under Bill 30. It could be better; it could be worse. I won't comment on that, just that it is different, and in fact it may well be changed once we get to debating Bill 30.

The minister did speak about: if only people had just filled out their wills. He was sort of making a joke, but he was also serious, and I'm serious when I talk about this as well. There are two issues involved here. We should take care of ourselves. We should have RRSPs. We should write wills. We should write down where we left things . . .

MRS. McCLELLAN: On a daily basis.

MS BLAKEMAN: . . . on a daily basis.

We should sign our organ donor card. We should do many things, but, you know, people are human, and a lot of times they don't, as much as they mean to: good intentions, sticky notes on the mirror, and everything. It just doesn't happen for them. That's part of what we're having to capture with a definition like "adult interdependent relationships." It's the same reasoning, because people are human and often they don't take the steps to make an overt act. So they may mean in their head to sign that organ donor card and they believe in it and they're going to do it, but they just never get to it for whatever reason.

We have the same thing when we look at relationships. Some people do take that step. They get married, and it's licensed and certified and everything else that happens. Lots of other people don't. They move in together. That's the beginning of the relationship. There's no ceremony. There's no marking of that. There's a small celebration if they manage to get a pizza sent in and maybe a bottle of champagne that's shared with friends in the living room on the unopened boxes once they've found a place to live together. They never take that step. They never make that overt act beyond that. We have to be willing to capture those people in our legislation.

When we're looking at remedies and benefits that are available to one set of people, we have to make sure that we're capturing that second set of people in our legislation, and that's why we need things like a definition such as we have in Bill 29 and such as is considered in Bill 30, the Adult Interdependent Relationships Act, that will be considered in the fall.

There are two other things that have been proposed. Interestingly, they're not in this act. One of them was long championed by my colleague the former MLA for Calgary-Buffalo. He championed a written contract agreement where two people could with the advice of a lawyer enter into a contract that essentially said, you know, that such and such an act would apply to the relationship and would bring everything into play. Again, it's something that people have to consciously do: go and talk to a lawyer and get it all signed and figure it all out. People just don't do it.

There was a second proposal, that was put forward by someone else who is now a member of this Assembly, the MLA for Edmonton-Rutherford, who was talking about a registry: again an overt act that people had to take. They had to go down there, and they had to take whatever ID or whatever they needed and sign up and get it registered. Fine ideas both of them, but they don't take into account that most people don't bother to do that. [interjection] Some people don't want to do that. Okay; that's fair.

How do we then make sure that the laws that we have in place that truly affect the dissolution of a relationship – how do we make sure that the laws we're putting in place protect people, that there are remedies available to people who are getting the wrong end of a deal, and for those that are receiving some kind of benefit, that there is equality in how that is distributed, that we're not just giving it to one group of people and for no good reason, no fair reason, and no Charter-challengeable reason we are not giving it to another group of people? So that's what we're trying to do here with both Bill 29 and Bill 30.

I'm certainly willing to support the speedy passage of Bill 29. I've noted the differences in the legislation; that is, the differences in the definition of adult interdependent relationship that's available in Bill 29 versus Bill 30 and therefore possible changes, that being that it is not making reference to a written agreement, that it is making reference to conjugal in Bill 29. That does not appear in the wider definition that the minister has outlined that will appear in Bill 30.

I think that this is what we want people to do. Yes, we want people to write wills. That would save us all a lot of time and trouble and grief. There might be fewer lawyers around because we wouldn't need to be getting all that legal advice after the fact. We do wish people would take steps to make clear to themselves and to everyone around them and to the authorities what they wish to have happen should things go wrong, and a deal by which everybody understands the rules when you're talking about a relationship dissolving or breaking up. The truth of the matter is that people don't, and we cannot allow a law to stand which does not offer a remedy or a benefit to those individuals simply because they did not take a particular action. It's not fair. It's not justice. It's bad business.

We can ultimately set up a situation where a couple can have arranged to have looked after one another, but our laws don't allow that particular couple, those particular two people, to look after one another, and we can end up with one of those people applying for government assistance because they weren't able to be looked after. Now, that is a tremendous irony when you look at it: that we would have laws that would stop people from taking care of each other and they would end up on society's ticket, society's payroll, because we had decided that a certain group of people wasn't deserving of that. Let's be honest. We're talking about same-sex couples here. That is what we're talking about. We have decided as a society – the overwhelming majority look at this situation and say: fine; if those two people want to get into a relationship, support each other financially and emotionally, fine. They should certainly be entitled to do that. More than that, we should make sure that we don't do anything in our laws that would stop that from happening, that would stop those two people from looking after one another. That is the essence of what we're trying to do with this legislation both in Bill 29 and with what we're looking at in Bill 30.

I, too, regret that it's taken us some time to get here. I understand, just given timing, that that first deadline in January was difficult for us. We would have had to have this legislation before us in the fall session, and that just wasn't possible. The government didn't call us to the Legislature for this spring sitting until the end of February, so we'd already missed that deadline there, and the minister had to apply to the courts to have that extended. So here we are in May of 2002, and I'm very happy to see this legislation in front of us. I'm very happy to know that my constituents, my friends, my neighbours will be looked after, that the legislation will allow them to look after each other, will allow their wishes to be carried through.

I urge all Members of the Legislative Assembly to support Bill 29 in second reading. Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 29 read a second time]

Third Reading

Bill 23
Municipal Government Amendment Act, 2002

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

MR. VANDERBURG: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to move third reading of the Municipal Government Amendment Act, 2002.

These amendments will improve the act by providing a consistent standard of liability protection for municipal officials and for municipal boxing and wrestling commissions. The proposed amendments will also improve the equalized assessment process in which requisitions for cost-shared programs are calculated. As I have mentioned earlier, these amendments were developed in consultation with municipalities, municipal associations, and other stakeholders.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to thank the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Acting Deputy Minister Brad Pickering for their assistance with Bill 23. As well, the staff – Susan Thomson, Boyd Oberhoffner, Ron Cust, and Blaine Alexander – have done an outstanding job preparing documents and getting me up to speed on the issues covered in Bill 23.

In my concluding comments, Mr. Speaker, I'd also like to recognize the contribution of the opposition Municipal Affairs critic, the Member for Edmonton-Glengarry, and that of others in this Assembly and ask for their support.

Thank you, sir.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Happy to speak to Bill 23, the Municipal Government Amendment Act, 2002, in third reading. It is our opinion that this bill does in fact reflect the wishes of the stakeholders. This has been, I believe and my colleagues believe, a good example of where Albertans were listened to and appropriate changes were made, and these changes will, as we see it, improve the assessment practice. We see that this will also improve the liability protection for municipal officials and, of course, the boxing and wrestling commissions, as has been outlined in debate at the various readings. We believe also that in general this will strengthen the Municipal Government Act and will make it more current. So we are happy to join with government members on this and support this piece of legislation.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne to close the debate?

[Motion carried; Bill 23 read a third time]

Child Welfare Amendment Act, 2002 (No. 2)

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Rocky View on behalf of the hon. minister.

MS HALEY: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise to move Bill 24, the Child Welfare Amendment Act, 2002 (No. 2), for third reading.

As you have heard previously, Bill 24 is being proposed to validate temporary guardianship orders that have been technically invalidated by a court ruling. The Child Welfare Act requires that a child's care plan must be filed with the court within 30 days of a TGO being granted. The plan must outline services to be provided to the child and their family while the child is in care. The court and the child's guardian have access to the filed plan. Most social workers file the plans with the court within the required time, but some workers have not.

It is important to point out, Mr. Speaker, that social workers do prepare plans of care. Make no mistake; these plans are prepared and shared with the appropriate parties, but in some cases they just had not been filed with the court. The courts have been reviewing unfiled plans of care for years. Filing the plans with the court is a formality that has not been strictly enforced by the court itself until now.

Amendments in Bill 24 have very limited application and will apply only to the TGOs invalidated by the court's ruling. The amendments will allow care plans to be filed after the 30-day time limit so long as they are filed within 30 days of the amendment coming into force. They will also allow a temporary guardianship order to remain valid even if a plan of care was not filed within 30 days of a TGO being granted.

On behalf of the minister I want to assure the house, Mr. Speaker, that children will not be placed at risk. In future, plans of care for TGO children will be filed in compliance with the Child Welfare Act. The Minister of Children's Services has brought the issue to the urgent attention of all CEOs of the 18 child and family services authorities. The social workers have been creating and sharing these plans of care all along, but the minister has now asked them to ensure that these plans are filed with the courts within the required period of time.

I ask for support of Bill 24. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to have the opportunity to make some comments about Bill 24 at third reading. At third reading we usually go back and centre our remarks on the principles of the bill, but Bill 24 is an unusual bill. It's a bill that is designed to remedy a mistake that has been made by the department, and for that reason it's unusual. It's also unusual in that it's retroactive legislation, and I'd like to speak about that more in just a moment.

The heart of the matter is temporary guardianship orders. Those orders are the ones that are secured by the children's services director under section 31(1) of the Child Welfare Act. I'd like to just review that section, Mr. Speaker, because I think it lays out very carefully how important the care plans are. It says:

The Court may make an order appointing a director as a guardian of a child for a period of not more than one year if it is satisfied that

- (a) the child is in need of protective services, and
- (b) the survival, security or development of the child may not be adequately protected if the child remains with the child's guardian, but it can be anticipated that within a reasonable time the child may be returned to the custody of the child's guardian or, if the child is 16 years of age or older, the child will be able to live independently.

It's a very serious matter. These are children that can be in danger. They are cases that cannot be taken very lightly. The care of a youngster is going to be transferred from the parent or guardian to the government, so it's a very, very serious matter.

It goes on in subsection (3), and this is the section that has caused the trouble:

Not more than 30 days after an order is made under subsection (1), the director shall file with the Court a plan for the care of the child, including a description of the services to be provided.

That again is an important part of the act, that having obtained an order to take a youngster into care, the director then has an obligation to make sure that there's a plan that is in place for everyone that's involved with that youngster's well-being and rearing to follow, a plan that lays out the obligations. The plans usually outline the kinds of immediate needs that have to be fulfilled – the shelter, the kind of environment, how the environment is going to be secured – and then also it outlines the long-term list of needs such as permanency of place, where the youngster is going to end up once the temporary guardianship order ends.

The plan is extremely important to parents. Parents and guardians who expect to get youngsters back need to know exactly what they are to do. What is their role in making sure, over whatever the amount of time that it takes within that one-year period, that they get that youngster back into their home? If the parents need treatment, if they need to have counseling, if there is need for special training, then that's all outlined in that care or case plan. If there's medication, if there's medical help, then that, too, is part of a case plan. So for the parents it's a crucial, crucial document and one that the proper care of the youngster can't proceed without.

For social workers and for judges and for others that are involved, it's an accountability document. This is a document that lays out their obligations, and it will have the assurance in the plan that the resources that are going to be required to carry out the plan are in place. They're important to the court because it lays out to judges that in caring for the child, everyone involved – the parents, the social workers, and everyone that's going to be involved – clearly understands what their tasks are and what their responsibilities are. So they're very important documents.

They indicate the time lines in terms of a youngster being returned to parents. They also lay out the alternative living arrangements or, if they're going to be different, adoption or private guardianship. They cover really, really crucial matters. The minister has told the House and I think the previous speaker indicated that there were care plans developed for all the youngsters, for the 620 youngsters, I believe it was, whose plans were not filed with the courts, and I'm not sure that's true. I say that having spoken to the minister's office and asked that specific question: were there case plans for all of the youngsters? The response to me at that time was they could not assure me that case plans did actually exist for all youngsters.

I found that rather devastating, because the importance of case plans became a real issue with the death of the Cardinal boy in the mid-1980s, the suicide hanging. An investigation into that hanging resulted in the recommendation that there be a case plan in place for every youngster taken into care. In that case there wasn't a plan. The youngster had been bounced around from home to home. There was no plan for bringing some kind of stability to his life, and the result was a disaster. So case plans, as I said, were a recommendation that came out of that, a recommendation that the government adopted and, not only adopted, incorporated into the Child Welfare Act under section 31, and it was deemed to be important.

One of the things that's hard to understand in all of this is how the practice came about that they weren't filed. We've heard some explanations that the court clerk said that it was too much paperwork and that they had no storage space, yet I find that really very difficult to accept as an explanation as to why they weren't filed. When the government was in court on one of the cases, they explained to the court that one of the reasons they hadn't filed them is that their resources were scarce, that they were precious, that the social workers would be better spending their time with the youngster than they would be at their desks writing case plans and spending time filing those with the courts. Again I find that an unsatisfactory explanation, because the case plan is the basis for all action, and you would think that with every youngster there would be a great deal of time and effort and care in preparing those plans. I still am puzzled as to why the plans were not filed, and I'm even more puzzled and I guess disturbed by the thought that in many cases or even in a few cases case plans may not have been actually drawn up at all and didn't exist.

The reason for Bill 24 has been made clear. The Child Welfare Act requires the filing of a case plan by the director of child welfare within 30 days of the temporary guardianship order being granted by the court. It didn't happen, and it didn't happen in 600-plus cases, and the courts put their foot down. The case came before them. They decided that they would not grant a temporary guardianship order because the case plan was not there. It didn't come to a head because there were other ways for the director of child welfare to operate. They could secure permanent guardianship under the act. So there were other routes, and it didn't make this that important, but when the courts invalidated the 600-plus cases, then there was a real problem for the department.

I have asked what kinds of solutions the department considered, and one of the answers was that they could have reappraised all the 600-plus cases if they could find them. There were problems with communicating to the parents of those 600-plus children, so it was really a very difficult problem that the Children's Services department faced. The result was Bill 24. It was deemed the simplest solution; that is, to simply come before the Legislature and pass an act that says that it doesn't matter, that the failure to file a case plan no longer invalidates the temporary guardianship orders, and that any of the orders made before February 21, 2002, are "deemed to be valid" regardless of the court's decision or the filing of a plan. Further, the director is deemed to have complied with the legislation if a case plan is filed before or within 30 days of the coming into force of the new provisions, and that also applies to all orders granted before February 21, 2002. So the legislation is a law that allows the government off the hook, makes legal all of those case studies.

It is a very distasteful bill, Mr. Speaker, one that is rooted in error and has as its solution retroactivity. Retroactive laws I think are a special case of laws and ones that, when they're passed, have the potential of calling into question the stability of our legal system; that is, we have to operate on the assumption for the most part that the laws of the land, the laws that are passed in the province, are stable and can be relied upon. The whole system is predicated on that assumption. When a government has to pass an act that goes back and changes or annuls a previous law, then I think there is major, major reason for concern.

I think that throughout the debate on Bill 24 we've tried to express that concern. We've had representation by a number of citizens who are concerned with what's happening, who have asked that we do everything to delay the passage of Bill 24, yet in the final analysis, Mr. Speaker – and I said this before – I think we all have to hold our noses and pass the bill. I expect that the government feels no better about the bill and having to propose such a bill to the Legislature than we do in having to agree with it.

So I think that with those comments I'll conclude, Mr. Speaker. Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll take this final opportunity to speak to Bill 24, the Child Welfare Amendment Act. This is one of the most distasteful bills that I've seen in my time in the Legislature, and it is a clear symptom that something is seriously wrong with the Children's Services department in this province. That we have to pass retroactive legislation which deals with the inability of the department to have adequately provided information that was requested by the courts is a very sad day for the province and makes this one of the saddest pieces of legislation we've had here, not in terms of the drafting but in terms of the reason why it's necessary.

If we reflect on what we've heard during this session on Children's Services issues and what we've heard in response to this particular bill, we still don't have the answers, Mr. Speaker. What is wrong with the department? Is there a level of arrogance within the department that they feel that they don't have to comply with judicial laws? Or is this a cry from the staff of the department stating that they don't have the time or the resources to adequately deal with the paperwork and the follow-up plans for the children? There is clearly some sort of systemic problem in that department that I do not feel has adequately been addressed with the passage of this bill.

We have heard primarily excuses. We have heard a denial of responsibility by the government for children. We have heard repeatedly the minister and a variety of other front bench people state that it is the parents' responsibility to provide for these children, and I don't deny that it is the parents' responsibility. It is the first responsibility of parents, to take care of their children. When there are the cases which we clearly see happening, in this case more than 600 that just weren't dealt with properly by the department, clearly there are more out there where parents for whatever reason don't take care of their children. Be it because they are incompetent parents, be it because they have addiction problems, be it because they don't know how to get out of bed in the morning and feed and clothe their children, whatever the reasons, there are cases in this province, too many cases in this province, where parents can't or won't take care of their children.

Then there is a role for the government to step in and provide that service for the children and to provide more than that service: to provide some stability, some continuity, and whenever possible some training to get those parents up to speed so that they can once again take on their responsibility in parenting. So there is definitely a role for government to step up and be responsible where children are concerned when that responsibility is not provided by the parents. That is not the direction that we have heard with regard to this bill and other issues that are being brought forward.

Temporary guardianship is a real problem for the kids who are taken into temporary guardianship, because it means that they do have families and that the relationship within their family has become so unstable that they have to be withdrawn from that environment. So you're dealing with kids who have faced rejection, who have faced unloving or uncaring or unproviding situations. They are yanked out of that and put someplace. We've heard today about the number of children that are placed in hotel rooms and about the lack of foster parents to provide that kind of interim support during temporary guardianship points in time. I feel that this is going to be my only opportunity to speak to this particular issue during the remainder of this session in terms of the issues that arise out of temporary guardianship orders, so I will take it.

Who should be providing for those children in the interim are foster parents, while a plan is laid out for care with the foster parent and with the parent so that they can take back custody of the kids. My parents were foster parents for many years, and most of the foster parenting that they did was for children who were under temporary guardianship. So I have firsthand experience of what it's like to deal with those kids who are yanked out of their homes, often in the middle of the night, and need to be placed someplace else. Often it's kids, not one child, so we're talking about siblings who are yanked away from their families and placed somewhere in limbo.

What do they need? Those children need stability, they need love, and they need understanding. They do not get stability, love, or understanding in a hotel room. They do not get stability, love, or understanding when there is no plan in place for their future. What happens then is that they sometimes get left in hotel rooms for a longer period of time, which seems acceptable to the government. I personally feel that no time in a hotel room for any child of any age is acceptable, but they get left there or they get bounced around from foster home to foster home or they get placed back with the parents when there is no plan in place for the parents to be adequate providers. So the government then becomes an accessory to providing instability in that child's life. This government needs to seriously take a look at how they view their responsibility in that particular relationship, and I hope they do.

I believe that this minister takes that role seriously, and I hope that she spends some time this summer reviewing the government's role in providing support for those kids and that she sees that her primary role is to provide a stable environment for those kids to thrive in. That means adequately providing for plans. That means adequately providing for places of residence. If there aren't enough foster parents in this province, then we need to ask the question: why? Why is it that people feel that they can't provide that service?

I have many foster parents in my constituency, and I know that a lot of the reasons come down to money. People say that you should do it for the love of children, and they do. That's why they're there, for the first reason, but the fact is that they still have to pay mortgage payments, for groceries, utilities, extra rooms. The clothing allowance for foster children is not adequate. There isn't enough in terms of resources for sports and recreation, for cultural activities, all of those things, all the add-ons such as school fees. Transportation is a big issue. All of those things lumped together make it impossible for many foster parents to be foster parents these days, so the government needs to re-evaluate that process and ensure that we have the funds in place so that we can provide loving, stable, and responsible environments for those kids to thrive in.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I will take my seat on this particular bill, and I look forward to seeing some significant and substantive changes in this particular department.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thanks very much. I'd like to speak in third reading to Bill 24, the Child Welfare Amendment Act, 2002. I want to recap a bit about why we got into this and what the effect of this bill is expected to be.

Essentially, when a child is made the subject of a temporary guardianship order, the director of child welfare according to law, according to the Child Welfare Act, within 30 days from the granting of an order – and that's a court order – must file with the court a plan for the care of the child, including a description of the services to be provided. Now, part of the reason for filing it with the court is that it becomes a public document and others can get access to it, including in some cases the parents or the guardian of the child, to find out what the plan is for care. Understand that a temporary guardianship order is intended to be that: temporary. So there needs to be a plan that shows how the child will be returned to its originating situation in whatever time is expected, usually three to six months, the guardians having utilized the services or followed the provisos or achieved the goals that were set out in that care plan. In the absence of a plan it's very difficult for a guardian or parent or whomever to know what it is they are supposed to be doing in order to get the child returned to them, and we want the child returned because we're looking to provide and to ensure stability in that child's life.

We came into this particular way of doing things as a result of a child who had no stability in his life, and it's an irony to me that now, 15 years later, we're unable to fulfill the commitment that was made to that kid. I mean, that's in effect his memorial, these care plans. We need those care plans so that the guardians and the parents know what's required of them, but we also have them there so that the department and the department staff know what's required of them. In fact when you look, the court has a provision for reviews of temporary guardianship orders which mandates that the court consider whether the director has followed the plan for the care of the child filed with the court. So that's empowering the courts to look and say: "Okay. Did the director of child welfare do what they were supposed to do? Let's have a look at the care plan." Well, the care plan has to be filed with the court in order for that to happen.

We understand that at the end of a TGO a child isn't necessarily returned instantly. If the child is still in need of services, then the director just has to fill out the required forms and reaprehend the child, and they never leave the foster home where they are. But what is incorporated in this is that the director now has to explain why they weren't able to achieve putting that child back into the home, why they weren't able to achieve all of this during the terms of the temporary guardianship order, and therefore what the department is doing or not doing in providing these services to the guardian and to the child.

So when I look at this bill, in effect what it's saying is that the department doesn't have to follow its own rules, and when it gets caught, it's going to turn to the Legislature to clean up the mess that it's made. I think that ultimately, certainly for the people that I've served out of my constituency office, it's the guardians that lose on this and therefore I think indirectly the children that lose because the guardians weren't able to know what was in the service plan. They didn't know what they were supposed to do to get their kids back in most cases. I've had those people in my office, and they don't know what to do. A service plan should have laid that out for them.

We've heard during the discussion and debate on this bill and through questions that have been asked in question period that the orders all existed. Well, if they all existed, why weren't they filed? Well, maybe they didn't all exist; maybe just some of them existed. You know, there was a reason that we wanted those care plans. They should have been done. They weren't done, so why aren't we going back and saying, "Then do them and do them properly"? Instead, Bill 24 essentially says: forget all of that; we're going to sweep the plate clean and start over again. Well, that's hard news for a lot of families.

My colleague from Edmonton-Mill Woods talked about having to hold his nose and vote for this bill just in order to get this whole thing moving again for these kids. Boy, I find that very tough to do as a legislator when we cannot write legislation well enough and ensure that the government's departments are able to fulfill that legislation. I find it very difficult to then have it come back into this Assembly and go: okay; well, forget it then; it was just too hard. That's unacceptable to me.

There's a degree of arrogance that's in this bill that really doesn't sit well with me. Just the wording:

Despite any decision of any court, a temporary guardianship order for which a plan for the care of the child has not been filed in accordance with section 31(3) is deemed to be valid from the date the order was made.

There's just an arrogance in that statement: well, we'll just override the courts; we'll just change it all then. I think that there's something underneath that that's much worse than simply not upholding what the courts have said.

I think that when we look at words like "taken into care" and "custody" and "protective services" and "guardianship," that's all language that we use around the care of children in this province, and when the family is not able to care for the children for whatever reason, then the state or the government steps in and they assume the role of protector, of intervenor. They're going to make it right. And that's what those temporary guardianship orders are about. How do we make it right? What does everybody have to do to fix this situation? Well, if you're not willing to do that plan that tells everybody what they have to do to make it right, then we're never going to accomplish this and move it forward for these kids.

A little earlier in the debate this afternoon the Member for Airdrie-Rocky View talked about how impressed she was with the Children's Services budget going from 160 some odd million dollars 10 years ago to $600 million in this budget, and isn't that great, and doesn't that prove how we're doing right by our kids in Alberta. Well, yes, but at the same time I go: gee, how many kids did we have in protection? For how many children was the state a guardian 10 years ago, and how many now? We know that it's more now. So it's appropriate that there's more money now. It's not that that's some great benefice of the government. It isn't. It's necessity. They have to provide for these children.

I'm disappointed – "disappointed" is not the right word – when the government doesn't fulfill that role of guardian, of protector, of intervenor with vigour. I think it's symptomatic of much deeper problems underneath. As we had come out of the court documents, you know, they're saying that they don't have enough resources to do this job. Well, if this is the job that the government is mandated to do as guardian, then they need to provide the resources for it.

I think that this bill has brought to the surface a number of very unhappy situations both within the ministry and within the government, and I'm very sad to see it and angry to see it. I hope that this bill may well inspire the government to do a lot of things a lot better simply because they've been embarrassed into it.

Thanks very much.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Rocky View on behalf of the hon. Minister of Children's Services to close the debate?

[Motion carried; Bill 24 read a third time]

Bill 7

Agriculture Financial Services Amendment Act, 2002

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Leduc.

MR. KLAPSTEIN: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour for me to move third reading of Bill 7, the Agriculture Financial Services Amendment Act, 2002.

The contents of this legislation will give the Agriculture Financial Services Corporation expanded responsibility for the business assets, obligations, and opportunities of Alberta Opportunity Company. In other words, appropriate sections from the Alberta Opportunity Fund Act are being incorporated into the AFS Act to allow the business of lending and financial assistance presently conducted by AOC to carry on as part of AFSC. So upon proclamation of this amendment the Alberta Opportunity Fund Act is repealed.

Mr. Speaker, this legislation also allows several changes to be made relative to AFSC's involvement in providing crop insurance and other safety net products. As well, the act changes the individual lending limit from $1 million to $2 million to enable the corporation to deal with some projects it cannot deal with now. As we know, the size of project investments being financed has grown substantially in recent years due to the cost of land, buildings, and equipment.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, this legislation will allow AFSC to act as a seeding insurer or an intermediary through which reinsurance can be offered to other government departments to ensure that fluctuating costs due to unforeseen disasters are not a strain on budgets.

The details of this legislation have been discussed in second reading and in Committee of the Whole. In view of the foregoing I would ask the House to pass this bill now.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Happy to have a final couple of words on Bill 7, the Agriculture Financial Services Amendment Act, 2002. This merger is, as we see, proposed as a means of building on the strengths of both corporations and as a means of saving a million dollars. This is a bill that we have supported and are happy to continue to do so. We'll support the government in calling for the question on this particular bill.

[Motion carried; Bill 7 read a third time]

Bill 9
Child Welfare Amendment Act, 2002

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Finance on behalf of.

MRS. NELSON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Minister of Children's Services I'd like to move third reading of Bill 9, the Child Welfare Amendment Act, 2002.

This act will amend current legislation to allow for interprovincial movement of children who are involved in child welfare. The proposed amendments would allow an apprehension order carried out in another province or territory to be considered as an apprehension in Alberta. The proposed amendment will apply where it is determined by child welfare officials in both the apprehending jurisdiction and in Alberta that it is in the child's best interests to be cared for in Alberta.

Bill 9 will also streamline the telephone application process for apprehension orders. A justice of the peace will be authorized to handle telephone applications for apprehension orders. Through Bill 9 a child welfare worker would be able to speak directly to a justice of the peace rather than have to page the judge on call.

The bill will also allow the Child Welfare Appeal Panel to be bound by the policies of the resources for children with disabilities program. As the Minister of Children's Services has told the House, this amendment will ensure that programs are being administered by policy and not by appeal. Currently the appeal panel is not bound by policy, so the Child Welfare Appeal Panel may overturn decisions concerning matters related to the resources for children with disabilities. The amendments are necessary, Mr. Speaker, to have the program policies upheld and thereby maintain the integrity of the resources for children with disabilities program.

Mr. Speaker, I would ask the House to support third reading of Bill 9.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to have a chance at third reading to make some comments about Bill 9. Bill 9 has upset many parents with handicapped children in the province. They indicated that the future of their disabled children is being threatened by one particular provision in Bill 9, and that's the provision with respect to the appeal panel. The appeal panel in the past has been free to make wide-ranging decisions, and some of those decisions have resulted in youngsters gaining service and therapies that have made an immense difference in their lives. The fear is that a narrow policy would rule out innovative new therapies and constrain the appeal panel to act in a way that might not always be in the best interests of disabled youngsters.

There's been a great deal of discussion back and forth. I know that there have been meetings with the minister, and the good thing that's happened as a result of those meetings is that the minister has promised that she won't proclaim the bill until the policy has been developed. So it's my understanding that the mandate of the appeal panel will not be changed until the minister puts before parents the policies that are going to guide that panel in the future. I think that that's a welcome development with respect to Bill 9.

There's still a great deal of uneasiness among parents with disabled children that their children are going to be hurt in the long run. I think that at this point we have to take the minister at her word that the policies will not be restrictive, that the policies will result in fair adjudication of appeals that are brought before it.

With those comments I'd like to conclude debate on Bill 9. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 9 read a third time]

Bill 10
Public Works Amendment Act, 2002

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

MR. SNELGROVE: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to move third reading of Bill 10, being the Public Works Amendment Act, 2002.

The bill simplifies the administrative process. It reflects the relevant court decisions and makes it consistent with the Builders' Lien Act.

Mr. Speaker, I would encourage all hon. members to support Bill 10. Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In third reading on Bill 10, the Public Works Amendment Act, 2002, I'm happy to report that we will also be supporting this bill. It's a situation where we see that the government has done extensive stakeholder consultation, and when they do that, then there doesn't seem to be any problems that come up with the bills. As we understand it, stakeholders do not have all that they want, but they're satisfied with the compromise in this bill.

No doubt, tendering is a complex process, and it's very important to protect taxpayers' money while still giving the government enough flexibility to get projects done. It's good to see that the act now matches the Builders' Lien Act, which we have asked for for some time. We still have some concerns that the time lines in that act may not be sufficient, so perhaps we'll see the government consider reopening the Builders' Lien Act at some point in the future. We would certainly support that. For the time being, not a bad job, and we'll be supporting it.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster to close the debate?

MR. SNELGROVE: No. Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 10 read a third time]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In light of the progress that we've made this afternoon, I would move that we adjourn until 8 o'clock this evening.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:18 p.m.]

Third Reading

Bill 11 Energy Information Statutes Amendment Act, 2002

MR. STRANG: It is with great pleasure tonight that I move third reading of Bill 11, the Energy Information Statutes Amendment Act, 2002.

Mr. Speaker, the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar made reference to paramountcy proposed under the Electric Utilities Act. Perhaps the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar missed the point of the information provided to him during the briefing by the department staff with regard to the concept of negotiated settlements. It is incorrect for the member to characterize a negotiated settlement as a sort of secret deal between two parties regardless of how much they will charge a third party such as residential consumers for electricity. A more accurate way to describe a negotiated settlement is that it is a deal between many parties, all of whom are affected by the deal.

Mr. Speaker, the negotiated settlements that the Energy and Utilities Board has approved relating to electricity rates have involved a number of consumer representatives, with consumer representation generally ranging from residential to industrial customers. A negotiated settlement can be viewed as a process. It is not a decision on or approval of electricity transmission, distribution, or regulated rate tariff. The decision on what those tariffs will be is always made by the EUB even if a settlement has been negotiated.

Mr. Speaker, the EUB negotiated settlement guidelines describe negotiated settlements as "a process that is alternative or complementary to the traditional hearing process in dealing with utility related issues such as tolls, tariffs, and terms and conditions of service." For example, ATCO Electric's 2001 and 2002 transmission facility owner tariff negotiated settlement involved ATCO, representatives from consumers, and the transmission administrator. All of the parties agreed on the amount that ATCO would be paid for the use of its transmission facilities during 2001-2002. Some of the consumer representatives in this particular negotiated settlement included the Alberta Federation of REAs, the Consumers' Coalition of Alberta, which is residential consumers, the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association, the Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties, the Public Institutional Consumers, which is made up of schools and hospitals, the city of Calgary, the city of Red Deer, and the city of Lethbridge. In total there were 16 parties that participated in and signed this negotiated settlement.

Mr. Speaker, a negotiated settlement is generally only filed with the EUB for approval if all or almost all of the parties are in agreement. It is also important again to emphasize that the EUB, with its public interest mandate, must approve any negotiated settlement. This means that the EUB reviews the settlement to ensure that it was fairly arrived at and that it is fair to all consumers affected by it. In approving a negotiated settlement the EUB is required to use the same criteria legislated by the Electric Utilities Act as if a traditional hearing was held. Now, the tariff must be just and reasonable, it must provide for incentives for efficiencies that result in cost savings or other benefits that can be shared in an equitable manner between the utility and the customers, and it must not be unduly preferential, arbitrary, or unjustly discriminatory.

As I've indicated, Mr. Speaker, consumers are represented during the process. This is required by the EUB negotiated settlement guidelines, which state that "all parties with an interest must be given the opportunity to participate fully and have their respective interests properly addressed."

The proposed amendment to the Electric Utilities Act included in Bill 11 only applies if the EUB accepts confidential information as part of a negotiated settlement. The provision for the EUB to accept confidential information in respect of a negotiated settlement is not new. The 10-year time frame simply provides direction to the EUB regarding how long confidential information must be kept confidential. Ten years was chosen to ensure that a sufficient period of time has passed before confidential information might be released, so that any party to a settlement is not harmed or disadvantaged by the release of this information.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, I am a little put out by the Member for West Yellowhead's opening comments and the tone of his comments. We can make this an easy process tonight, or we can make it a very tough process. We've been very co-operative the last afternoon and evening, passing no fewer than 12 pieces of legislation very quickly, in all cases except for two agreeing with the government, sometimes even with reservations but still voting with them. Then we come to the opening comments on Bill 11, the Energy Information Statutes Amendment Act, which we have had significant problems with throughout debate, and we get the Member for West Yellowhead beginning his comments in a rather chippy manner. And that, you know, could lead to a number of us speaking out on this particular bill at the last opportunity to do so.

MS BLAKEMAN: I'm on fire.

MS CARLSON: There you go. It could be a long night.

We have a number of concerns with this legislation. While we understand, Mr. Speaker, that there is a need for protection of information, it's not clear that this particular bill is a necessary step, amending six acts to, as they say, contain confidentiality provisions for information gathered or acquired by various reporting entities. It's not clear that the FOIP Act endangers that information, and I can say that being one of the sitting members on that committee right now. All six acts amended here already have confidentiality provisions that can provide guidance to the FOIP office anytime it needs to make a decision regarding access or privacy, and it has been my experience in this Legislature that since FOIP was enacted, that office errs on the side of confidentiality rather than releasing excess information. What we need to remember is that FOIP is not about unfettered access to information. There are limits and guidelines, limits and guidelines that are being reviewed by an all-party committee at this moment.

Is it necessary to have this legislation? We don't think so. In fact, by bringing in this information at this time, you wonder how this affects the FOIP review that's happening right now. It is quite common in some cases for this government to make changes or bring in legislative changes just as open reviews are happening, and you have to wonder why. Is it, Mr. Speaker, because there's a lack of government confidence in the government's own legislation or in the review process? Are there doubts that the existing confidentiality provisions are enough? Are there doubts about the FOIP legislation, doubts about the FOIP commissioner? I don't think there should be. I think that there is a proven track record of the legislation and of the commissioner in handling these kinds of areas with sensitivity. This act, the FOIP Act, was the flagship bill back in September of '93, and now it's saying through this particular bill, Bill 11, that the FOIP Act isn't adequate. So how interesting that these changes are brought in right now, as we're just starting a review of the FOIP Act.

Why can't we just wait for the review committee to meet and report before bringing in new changes? There are going to be recommendations coming out of that committee, and I wonder how the Member for Edmonton-Calder, who chairs that committee, feels about this legislation being brought in at this time. It's so bad, I think, that the government shows lots of vigilance and enthusiasm about information in the energy sector but not for the private information of individual Albertans, and we've seen many examples of that. We see them go to bat for information that's protected twice, being exempted in the FOIP Act and other current existing legislative provisions, yet the government is weak in some areas such as protecting personal health information and private information on the private sector.

Too bad that this is happening now, at this time. We have to ask ourselves the question, Mr. Speaker: if this bill is passed, what changes? How are things going to change? The only difference is that any department or entities affected would have to review their confidentiality guidelines and perhaps in some cases would be required to make a submission to the FOIP commissioner. Then that commissioner would make a ruling guided by the legislation that's there. That's why we have that act, that's why we have a commissioner, and that's why we don't need this legislation right now. At the very least, we don't need this legislation until the FOIP review has been completed.

With that in mind, Mr. Speaker, I would like to move an amendment that people have on their desks before them on behalf of my colleague from Edmonton-Gold Bar. It states that third reading of Bill 11, Energy Information Statutes Amendment Act, 2002, be amended by striking out all the words after "that" and substituting the following:

Bill 11, Energy Information Statutes Amendment Act, 2002, be now read a third time but that the order for third reading be discharged, the bill withdrawn, and the subject matter referred to the Select Special Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act Review Committee.

Mr. Speaker, I think this is a very important amendment at this particular time because this government needs to put some faith in its own committees and in the chair that it itself appoints. Wait till that review is done, and then decide at that point whether or not this legislation is in fact necessary. This is a government that always prides itself on being less government, yet here we see more interference, more legislation where we really don't need it.

With those comments, Mr. Speaker, I would urge all members of this Assembly to support this particular amendment.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. members are reminded that this will be called amendment A1, a deferral amendment. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre on amendment A1.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I wouldn't usually have risen to comment on Bill 11, but I have to say that I was inspired by the Member for West Yellowhead. So I will rise to speak in favour of this amendment, which frankly is just making a lot of common sense to me.

I'm deeply suspicious when I see the government trying to wiggle out from underneath laws put in place to control the reach of government and to compel the government to release documents and to be forthright about their doings. There are a fair number of acts that are being wiggled with here. We've got the Coal Conservation Act, the Electric Utilities Act, the Mines and Minerals Act, the Natural Gas Marketing Act, the Oil and Gas Conservation Act, and the Oil Sands Conservation Act, all of these having to do with a sector that's very, very important in Alberta and one to which the government has exceedingly close ties.

When we have legislation like FOIP in place to make sure that our government is doing what it should, revealing what it should, and gives the public an opportunity to get access to documents and to compel the release of documents from the government, I just have to question why we would see a piece of legislation that is so eager to try to get the government out from underneath those obligations. So I'm pleased that the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie has moved an amendment, that was proposed by the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, proposing that "third reading be discharged, the bill withdrawn, and the subject matter referred to the Select Special Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act Review Committee."

The timing is very good for us, or perhaps we have this act before us because the timing is very interesting, what with this select special committee out touring the province and holding hearings and examining things. Maybe that's exactly why we have this legislation brought before us. The timing is certainly a point of interest and I'm sure could be a point of debate for those that are interested. Since we do have that select special committee available to us, then we should be taking advantage of it, particularly where we have legislation that is specifically looking to wiggle out from underneath the provisions that compel the government and all of those questions that follow about why these particular acts and why a sector that is so important to Alberta and that the government has such close ties to.

This, I note, is an all-party committee as well; isn't it? So we have the members from Edmonton-Gold Bar, Edmonton-Ellerslie, and Edmonton-Highlands all sitting on this Select Special Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act Review Committee. Well, good. That reassures me quite a bit that there will be some thorough investigation and thorough thought going into reviewing our FOIP legislation. It's now been around for the required – whatever it is – five or seven years when we get this automatic review. I think that for the most part it's been a very useful document and a useful process to all Albertans. Certainly even the people that we get joining us in the gallery, like we have tonight, in fact can make use of FOIP as well to get access to information that they wouldn't normally be able to get access to. I'm sure there are many Albertans that are interested in why exactly these are all being proposed to be exempted from the FOIP legislation, because that is in fact what Bill 11 is looking at doing. Especially when we have a reregulation of the electrical industry and a number of changes that are being anticipated in that sector with coal and new plants plus changes that are anticipated in the oil and gas sector, there's no better time to be reviewing what's underneath this.

So I think this is a good amendment. It's certainly a timely amendment. We might as well take advantage of the organizational apparatus that is available at this point since the committee is available to meet and to consider this matter. I think this is the perfect time then to approve this amendment that's been proposed, amendment A1, and to indeed put this bill in front of that select special committee for review and a bit more delving into why these acts are being considered for withdrawal from the freedom of information and protection of privacy legislation.

I would urge members to vote in support of the amendment. Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Any comments or questions?

Bill 13
Administrative Penalties and Related Matters
Statutes Amendment Act, 2002

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. STEVENS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise on behalf of the hon. Minister of Environment to move third reading of Bill 13, the Administrative Penalties and Related Matters Statutes Amendment Act, 2002.

This bill amends five acts currently administered by Alberta Environment and Alberta Sustainable Resource Development and will ensure that regulated parties face the same administrative penalty process regardless of what laws they have broken. Bill 13 ensures that this government has consistent and efficient administrative penalty processes and is able to respond fairly, quickly, and efficiently when environmental and natural resource laws are broken. Mr. Speaker, over 45 stakeholder groups including industry, recreational groups, and municipalities were invited to consult with Alberta Environment and Alberta Sustainable Resource Development regarding the proposed changes.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Happy to speak to Bill 13, Administrative Penalties and Related Matters Statutes Amendment Act, 2002. When the government brings forward good legislation, we are quite prepared and very pleased to be able to support it, and we are happy to see that the minister is addressing the need for increased and more stringent penalties. We've been asking for this for a long time on this side.

Our concern with this legislation, which still hasn't been addressed even at this late stage, is that it's at least as important if not more important to have a sufficient number of enforcement officers and the funding to support those officers. The minister can bring forward all the legislation and rewrite all the regulations he wants, but if there is insufficient staff to monitor and enforce, then the legislation means nothing. So we do have some concerns about that. This government's reliance on self-reporting is also a problem. We think that there should be more random spot checks or else a significant increase in the penalties for failure to report while self-reporting, but we don't think that it replaces officers and random inspections. Especially as we see this province having an increased pace for resource development, it becomes increasingly important that enforcement be carried out.

We're very happy to see the provision in this bill that increases the personal responsibility for directors for the work done by their companies. It's nice to know that they can't hide behind corporate structures with this legislation. I look forward to seeing how this actually plays out in the business world.

Overall, probably two and a half steps forward and half a step backwards, so we're quite pleased to support this bill and support a call for the question at this time.

[Motion carried; Bill 13 read a third time]

Bill 14

Gaming and Liquor Amendment Act, 2002

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Gaming.

MR. STEVENS: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure this evening to rise and move third reading of Bill 14, the Gaming and Liquor Amendment Act, 2002.

As I've stated on a number of occasions, Mr. Speaker, integrity is paramount to the Ministry of Gaming. The Gaming and Liquor Act provides a framework for integrity, and the amendments contained in Bill 14 will ensure that this framework is updated and improved upon. It includes broadening the Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission's ability to impose sanctions against licensees and registrants who have violated the act as well as strengthening the authority of the Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission's board to direct that funds raised through charitable gaming activities are used in an appropriate manner.

Bill 14 is a sound piece of legislation, Mr. Speaker, and it will help to ensure that Albertans continue to receive the maximum benefits from gaming and liquor activities in this province.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I'm glad to have the opportunity to rise in third reading and debate the anticipated effects of Bill 14, the Gaming and Liquor Amendment Act, 2002. This is a bill that I think has both good and bad in it. That might be too black and white a description. It has both useful and curious parts to it. Certainly I don't object to the minor housekeeping and sanctions that are put in place that allow the commission to better control and fine and get access to premises and ensure that they're able to follow through and chase down people that should be receiving fines: that sort of thing. I have no difficulty with that.

There are some other areas that have come out of the gaming review that I think are contentious. One example that springs to mind fairly quickly is the paid workers that are allowed through this act. Prior to this all who worked bingos and casinos and things – particularly bingos, I think – were volunteers. What will be enabled through this and actually through the regulations that flow from this is allowing a charity or a nonprofit group to pay the floor workers that are selling the bonanza tickets and the odds and evens and those other tickets for them on the floor. This is an issue for some groups that are small and want to concentrate their volunteer resources on doing whatever their particular activity is.

I think that when I spoke in second reading, I was talking about a very small theatre group that I support here in Edmonton called Azimuth Theatre. Since then I've tabled a number of letters from various organizations – the Evergreen association and the Vic Redmen cheerleading squad – supporting the ability for their groups to pay people to work the bingos for them.

I still have the concern. I've raised it; I put it on the record during debate of this bill. I'm not relieved or assured by the minister's response, because I do feel that this sets up another distancing from the charitable model. The minister is very fond of talking about this charitable model, but I still have concerns that the further the groups are allowed to move away from what was the original charitable model in Alberta, the easier it becomes for the government to use the argument: well, we're so far away from that original charitable model that really this charity shouldn't be getting the full amount of the proceeds of a given bingo or a given raffle or whatever; they should be given only part of it, or it should be prorated on the number of volunteer hours that are going into raising this particular money at this particular activity or other scenarios like that. Certainly for the nonprofits in Alberta that are depending on those revenues to support what they're doing, every penny counts there. I wouldn't want to see them put in a position where for some reason they were now getting less of the proceeds.

That whole question of the charitable model that we have in Alberta: we're the only one that really has exactly this one, and it's by far the most focused on the charity. You know, other provinces each have their own scheme, and they each manage to work fairly well, it's my understanding. I've always felt that ours was the best because it remained rooted in the community and with the volunteers, but it does require a great deal of effort from those volunteers.

Overall, what we have in this legislation are a number of house-keeping and regulation-keeping changes. There's a section where it's correcting omissions from previous legislation where they could go and find someone who was contravening their liquor licence but they couldn't get at them if the person had gone out of business or in fact if they were conducting business before their liquor licence start date, and this allows some very specific sanctions to take place there. But as I said, there are some other things that make me uneasy.

There's been some discussion as well about having a privative clause in here which would apply to the commission. I personally am less concerned about that in this case, but I know that there are others that felt very strongly that a privative clause, whenever it appears in government legislation to do with a government commission or agency, should be strongly challenged. I certainly raised that point while we were debating this in earlier stages of the bill, and essentially that's section 35 of the amendment act, "A decision of the board under this Act is final." In fact, I think you can still appeal this to a criminal court or a civil court if you want to, but it's meant to stop a sort of never-ending series of appeals by individuals going back to the commission over and over and over again not because the decision was wrong but because the people are unhappy with the decision that was made and somehow want it to be a different decision. This was just to say: "No. The decision that's made is final, and you can't go anywhere else to get it changed."

In fact, I think you can always go into the courts if you wish to get it changed, but then it's on your dime, and certainly for charitable groups that's very, very difficult for them to do. They only have enough money to carry out their activities, and some would argue that they don't even have enough money to do that. So the thought of trying to chase something through the courts is beyond what most groups would be capable of doing, and therefore that's the end of it. Justice is not carried through, simply because people can't afford to do it. There are some that feel very strongly that that privative clause shouldn't be in there. I'm less concerned about it in this case, but I think it's always worth raising the concern.

The act is renaming the VLTs and the slot machines to come under one name called "gaming terminal." Now, I've already raised my concern with the minister that that not be a sneaky way of getting out from underneath the caps on the number of machines, because they specifically talked about VLTs or slots and I didn't want this to be a way to wiggle out from underneath that. The minister has responded to that, and we have him on record there. So I have to assume that that one is going to be okay.

We have the section in here that's gotten the most publicity, which is about minors now not being allowed in areas where there is drinking going on. So if they could have been allowed into a casino before and now it's licensed premises, of course the minor would not be allowed onto the premises. The result of that is that if you were using that minor as a volunteer, you can't do it anymore, but frankly since they introduced liquor into the casinos some six, seven years ago, that would have been the case for minors from that point on anyway.

So there are some things in here that need to be done and other things that I wanted to put on record that we need to watch, and we need to hold the government to what it's put on the record here in response to my questions to make sure they stay on the straight and narrow there.

I did raise the case of my constituent businessperson around what was happening with the sort of monopoly tunnel that happens with the liquor side of the Gaming and Liquor Commission and the distribution centre there. It does come into a narrow point through the distribution warehouse, and that can cause some problems. So I'm still awaiting a response from the minister on that one that I can pass on to my constituent.

Beyond that, it's hard for me to wholeheartedly support what's in this legislation, but there are a number of things that we need and that allow the commission to carry on business as it's needed. I'm just always on guard that we are not allowing changes to be made that would lessen the importance of the charities and that would lessen their standing or take away any of their opportunities to generate additional income for themselves. This is a business where you can make a heck of lot of money, and I think we always have to stand on guard in Alberta to make sure that the money is going to flow back to the charities and not flow to operators or other people that get involved in the stream here.

With those comments, I'll thank you for the opportunity to speak in third reading.

[Motion carried; Bill 14 read a third time]

Bill 15 Dairy Industry Omnibus Act, 2002

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development.

MRS. McCLELLAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to move third reading of Bill 15, the Dairy Industry Omnibus Act, 2002.

As all members know, this is really, aside from doing some necessary cleanup in the act and housekeeping, turning over the authority to manage the affairs of the dairy industry to the industry themselves, a very positive move. They have proved over the years and to now that they are certainly mature enough and competent to do this.

I do want to take this opportunity, Mr. Speaker, in third reading to thank my colleague the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar for his work on the bill; he has put in a lot of time. To all of the members who have spoken on the bill, our appreciation for your comments, suggestions, and I believe support for this move.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Happy to have an opportunity to speak at third reading to Bill 15, the Dairy Industry Omnibus Act, 2002. I believe I've been present for the debate on Bill 15 at the various stages and have heard I think a good definition of what the act intends to do and the various responses, questions, and feedback, and it seems like we are in agreement with the minister on this particular bill. Hopefully it works out as well as is anticipated. If not, I'm sure that we'll be back here. Hopefully the milk board will be able to fulfill its duties as outlined here, and we look forward to monitoring progress on this particular piece of legislation and its outcomes.

So with that, we will support this bill.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

REV. ABBOTT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just wanted to rise today to respond to some additional questions that were raised during Committee of the Whole on the Dairy Industry Omnibus Act, 2002. There appear to be three areas identified which require further explanation, so I'd be happy to do that for my colleagues as well as those on the opposite side of the House who asked the questions. First of all, consumer concerns about competition in the market; secondly, producer entry into the industry; and thirdly, consumer input into the decision-making process.

I'm just going to touch briefly on the first question of competition. As we speak, there are 18 dairy-processing companies operating in the Alberta marketplace, a number, I suggest, that bodes well for competition. So this is definitely not a monopoly situation, and I remind members that it is not these processing companies who set the price of fluid milk, the milk that ends up on our cornflakes or our Cheerios; rather, it is the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board which will continue to set that price.

In regard to the price of milk for processing, that is negotiated between producers and processors. Those prices reflect market conditions and allow both producers and processors to earn a fair return. Now, as far as the industry is concerned, there are certainly opportunities for those producers who have set their sights on entry into the dairy industry. Last year alone we saw 14 new producers join Alberta's dairy industry.

There is no doubt, Mr. Speaker, that there is a high cost associated with dairy farming. However, I would argue that buying a quota is no more cost prohibitive than buying a large grain farm, especially when you consider the cost of land and the cost of equipment. I have heard the comparison that buying a quota is very much like purchasing a franchise. There is a cost associated with the stability in income associated with supply management in the same way that there is a cost associated with buying a brand name company like, say, Tim Hortons for example. These dairy quotas are bought and sold in the open market, and the new board will not be involved in those private transactions, only in licensing of the new producers.

Then the third and final area of questions on this legislation dealt with consumer input into the decision-making process. Certainly under this legislation consumer interests will continue to be protected. This board will be operated in a similar fashion to all other producer boards in the province, including chicken, turkey, and eggs, and I think you will agree that there have been no serious concerns raised about the lack of responsiveness to consumers in these areas. An industry advisory committee with both producer and processor members will be set up under the new board. The committee will look at a broad range of policy issues including consumer concerns such as food safety and quality and will make recommendations back to the board. In that way, the new board will be well informed of changes in the industry, including changing consumer preferences and demands. The new dairy board will still operate under provincial legislation. It will be supervised by the Agricultural Products Marketing Council, which reports directly to the hon. Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development.

Mr. Speaker, that concludes my research and response into questions raised during Committee of the Whole. In closing, I'd just like to acknowledge the hard work of the governance team members who worked on this project. That team includes dairy producers and processors as well as staff from the departments of Justice and Agriculture. Their time, energy, and commitment were invaluable. This truly was a team effort, and the results are the legislation that we have before us today.

I urge all my colleagues to support Bill 15 in third reading as we move forward into a new chapter in Alberta's dairy industry. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise to speak to third reading of Bill 15, and I accept the undertakings of the government and the minister that the dairy industry is fully capable of operating the system that is currently operated largely by the government and that we will continue to have an efficient dairy industry in this province and that we'll continue to get good milk, good prices.

I take some solace from the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar's assurance that the EUB will continue to regulate milk prices. Actually, I did not know that it was the EUB that regulated milk prices, although I knew generally that milk prices were in fact regulated. I hope that the government does not go off on another misadventure and deregulate milk prices in this province, because to be sure, in the short term while they're bringing on additional supply, Mr. Speaker, we would see sudden spikes in milk prices. There would probably be additional user costs that everyone would have to pay for milk prices. We would probably have people from one herd having to sell all of their milk to someone who owned another herd, and the person who owned that herd would have to sell their milk to the other herd. There would be a balancing pool in which the milk would flow in and out, but if there was a shortfall, then of course the costs would be passed on to the consumer or to the 7-Eleven store, whichever is first, but the Premier wouldn't know anything about it.

MS CARLSON: How much would it cost in an election year?

MR. MASON: The other problem, of course, would be that preceding an election year the government would insist that the milk producers sell the milk for less than they paid for it, but they could make it up in the two following years after the election. So, Mr. Speaker, I am taking great, great relief with the assurance of the Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar that milk prices will continue to be regulated in the province of Alberta.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The minister to close debate?

[Motion carried; Bill 15 read a third time]

Bill 16

Racing Corporation Amendment Act, 2002

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Gaming.

MR. STEVENS: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and move third reading of Bill 16, the Racing Corporation Amendment Act, 2002.

This legislation is as a result of the racing industry in Alberta approaching the government with unified voice requesting certain amendments. Particularly there is a restructuring and renaming of the governing body of the industry to speak and act with one voice, thereby enhancing the industry's ability to manage and promote itself effectively. Bill 16 also has new reporting requirements that will broaden and strengthen industry accountability. The industry is required to submit three-year business plans complete with performance measures and report annually against these plans. Bill 16 meets the needs of the industry stakeholders and this government.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to speak in third reading on Bill 16, the Racing Corporation Amendment Act, 2002. You know what? I've looked back over my notes and the questions I've raised and the few answers that I received from the minister and I remain unconvinced that this is in the best interests of all Albertans. I understand that the industry itself approached and asked for a number of these changes and the restructuring, but frankly when I looked at this, they restructured so there was supposed to be more of a balance between the horse owners' wishes and the others that are involved in the industry. You know, they expanded the number of members that are on the board, but then they expanded the number of opportunities for the horse owners to hold a seat on the board. So I don't think we got any further ahead there, and I don't see a balance coming out of this. The inequities that they were concerned about seemed to have been carried over but in a slightly different proportion. Nonetheless, they are still there.

Some of the concerns that were outlined by the Auditor General have in fact been incorporated in here around reporting requirements, in fact giving the ministry and the gaming commission the ability to direct the activities and the reporting and to compel a business plan, which the AGLC was struggling with in the previous incarnation, the Alberta Racing Corporation, in which the racing corporation just wouldn't listen to what was being asked of them and resulted in the AG putting in some fairly pointed remarks in his report.

My major concern about this bill is that it's trying to inject money into an industry whose day has passed. Some would use the words "propping up an industry whose day has passed." Well, okay. That's probably fair.

MS BLAKEMAN: Yeah, it's a rich man's hobby.

It seems out of step in today's Alberta, where we're trying to have better access for more people or moving things into a very – it's either general access for people or it's very exclusive. In many ways this is very exclusive, and the government is helping it to be very exclusive. If the real concern here was that it's a labour-intensive sector and there were a lot of people that had employment from this area, okay, but what's in Bill 16 is not going to improve their circumstances one bit. So if we were really looking for improvement for those working people and their conditions, this wasn't the way to do it.

We have an accompanying budget line item that injects $33 million a year into the racing industry through this Horse Racing Alberta. This just isn't going over very big out in the population. I've had a number of calls. I know that other MLAs have as well. Actually, people are pretty outraged about this.

As usual, I see the government coming in to inject money into this sector too late. It's moved on. It's changing, and when I look in other places to see what's happening, the industry is globalizing, if you want to call it that. The smaller centres are making use of technology through simulcast. The betting that's happening, yes, it's happening in Edmonton, but they're betting on races that are simulcast out of the United States or Europe. Our actual racing, you know, hooves on ground, is diminishing here in Alberta, and those people that are riding and grooming and training aren't going to see much benefit coming out of this bill, but those that are owning horses will probably see a fair amount.

I've raised this issue outside of the House, and it's been raised a number of times in the media, and the response is: "Well, you know, these were friends. What's wrong with that? It's a little bit of entertainment." Well, it's a lot of money for someone's little bit of entertainment; let me put it that way. I just can't support this bill. I don't think that this is a smart approach, and I use that in quotations.

The government is very fond of saying: let's use technology; let's be global; let's get ahead of the game here; let's be competitive. That's not what I see in this bill. What I see is: quick; let's go backwards; let's entrench our privilege and try and make it law and protect ourselves. We're not interested in this anymore, and I think all this bill is going to end up doing is entrenching something that dies or shrivels all that much faster, and in the meantime Albertans will have forgone the revenue that's coming out of the slot machines that are in these racing entertainment centres. They will have forgone that revenue that could have been used for a number of other worthwhile community ventures for a number of years until finally it's obvious that it's just not a viable industry anymore. I think that at this point it is viable, but it needed to reinvent itself, to rejuvenate itself in a different way. This is not the way. So I'm not recommending support of Bill 16.

Thanks very much.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. minister to conclude debate?

[Motion carried; Bill 16 read a third time]

Bill 18

Social Care Facilities Review Committee Amendment Act, 2002

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader on behalf.

MR. STEVENS: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise on behalf of the hon. Minister of Children's Services and move third reading of Bill 18, the Social Care Facilities Review Committee Amendment Act, 2002.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have spoken at earlier stages to this bill, and the more I read the bill and the more I consider it, the more concerned I am about it and the more strongly I am opposed to it. The effect of this bill in substantial ways I think is to gut the Social Care Facilities Review Committee. The bill removes inspection abilities from the committee. It brings the committee under much closer purview of the minister, so its independence is reduced, and generally the ability of the committee to do the job that it was envisioned doing when it was first formed is I think greatly restricted.

I can give some examples as I've gone through the bill. I think of the effect this is going to have under the mandate that has served the Social Care Facilities Review Committee for the last 20 years or so. They've had the ability to go into child care facilities "in which care, supervision or lodging is provided for 4 or more children under the age of 18." That could have included potentially the day home in St. Albert that's the source of some controversy. No longer will that be a possibility, and I think that's unfortunate. I think our kids, regardless of the size of the facility they're in, deserve the right of a certain amount of protection.

There are also a number of other facilities that are removed from the purview of this committee: emergency shelters, residential alcohol and drug abuse treatment centres. Those were facilities I know that members of this committee at one time visited and visited on behalf of the people who used those facilities and tried to understand how those facilities were functioning from the perspective of the residents getting treatment in those facilities.

Let's see. Will day care be covered? Yes, a day care facility is covered, so that's good, but group homes for the physically and mentally handicapped may not be and various other centres may not be either. So I'm concerned as I'm reading this act and in discussions that I've had with the minister before that we are reducing the number of people and the number of facilities that could benefit from the protection of this committee.

I also note the tightening of the minister's hold on the committee. There will be a new section added, as it says in the legislation, to emphasize that the committee is accountable to the minister. The very early vision for this committee was that it would be accountable to the Legislature, and unfortunately that's being lost. My concern is that sometimes the minister needs to have somebody watching over his or her department, and we're going to see less and less of that now, and we'll see either a committee or a watchdog that only operates at the behest of the minister rather than watching the minister's activities directly, so I am concerned about that.

Beyond that, the legislation removes the ability of the committee to investigate complaints. The old act read:

If a complaint is made to the Committee by or on behalf of a person in a facility, the Committee shall investigate the care and treatment and the standards of accommodation received by that person.

That whole section is now repealed, so the capacity of this committee to investigate complaints is going to be if not eliminated certainly seriously reduced, and that's unfortunate. I bet we all get calls as MLAs from people who are wondering who will investigate a particular kind of facility, and it's nice to have a committee like this to refer people to. It's not clear now that that will be their role. In fact, the role of this committee, the ability of this committee to investigate complaints and to appoint complaint officers is removed. Section 13 of the old act allowed the committee to designate "a member of the Committee" or indeed "an employee of the Government . . . under the administration of the Minister" to act as a complaint officer. That's gone, and I know there was a time when this committee would work with the department and select highly qualified professionals from within the department to help them investigate complaints. That's gone now. What's the benefit of that? Who's going to benefit from that? Certainly not the dependent people who are in the facilities that are under this committee.

Beyond that, the new act will then require the committee to report to the minister after a visit or investigation is made. Again, that seems just like a bringing of the committee under the direct control of the minister, and I don't think that's healthy. I think every government, this government and every government, needs to have people watching out independently for its actions and watching out independently of the government on behalf of the people under its care, whether that's the Children's Advocate, whether it's the Social Care Facilities Review Committee, whether it's the Health Facilities Review Committee, or whether it's the Ombudsman. It's a principle that we should be strengthening, not weakening, yet what are we doing in Bill 18? We are weakening that principle.

So, Mr. Speaker, because this reduces the capacity of this committee to investigate complaints, because it narrows the scope of facilities under the committee, because it brings the committee much more directly under the minister rather than under this Legislature, I remain unequivocally opposed to Bill 18, and I would urge all members to join me in opposing Bill 18.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 18 read a third time]

Bill 19

Veterinary Profession Amendment Act, 2002

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

MR. DANYLUK: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am very pleased to rise today to move third reading of Bill 19, being the Veterinary Profession Amendment Act, 2002.

In conclusion, I wish to acknowledge the significant contribution of the Alberta Veterinary Medical Association, which worked closely with the staff of Alberta Human Resources and Employment to develop these proposed amendments to the Veterinary Profession Act.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am happy to speak once again to Bill 19, the Veterinary Profession Amendment Act, this time in third reading. I think basically we are in agreement with it. Am I correct in assuming that we still have the pharmacists onside with this particular decision? That was of course our main outstanding concern about it. Other than that, things seem to be in order with it, and we'll see how it unravels as time progresses. I'm sure that if people have concerns, they will bring them forward to us, and we may see any tightening up or cleaning up of this bill come forward hopefully in nothing more than a miscellaneous statutes act, which would be minor kinds of changes to it.

So with that, Mr. Speaker, I will take my seat, and we will agree to support this bill at this particular time.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: On Bill 19, the hon. member to close debate.

MR. DANYLUK: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd just encourage everyone to support it. Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 19 read a third time]

Bill 20

Justice Statutes Amendment Act, 2002

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader on behalf.

MR. STEVENS: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General it's my pleasure to move third reading of Bill 20, the Justice Statutes Amendment Act, 2002.

This bill deals specifically with six pieces of justice legislation ranging from civil enforcement to the administration of traffic ticket fines. Most of the amendments to the act in this bill are of a housekeeping nature and were the subject of substantial debate in second reading.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to have the opportunity to rise and speak in third reading on Bill 20, the Justice Statutes Amendment Act. I did have a goodly amount of time to be able to bring forward concerns and discuss what's being changed under this act, although that was appropriate because there's more than one act that's being changed by this bill. In fact, there are eight different acts that are being changed. Under the old Standing Orders in fact we would all have had half an hour to debate this in each stage. Because it was changing more than two statutes, it would be considered an omnibus bill. Actually, I think the government got off easy in the amount of time we debated this considering how much time it would have been debated as eight separate acts.

Essentially the bill is amending civil enforcement, fatal accidents, interpretation, limitations, motor vehicle accident claims, provincial offences procedure, public trustee, and survival of actions. Under the Civil Enforcement Act for the most part those revisions were remedial and appropriate. In the Fatal Accidents Act the changes were substantive and I think positive. The corollary act, the partner act to that was the Survival of Actions Act. Certainly that was contentious. Nonetheless I think the right steps are being taken with those two acts in combination. I think that's the best legislation and serves Albertans the best.

In the Interpretation Act the changes are relatively minor and positive. In the Limitations Act the changes are more substantive. Some people feel that they're problematic; others feel less so. Unfortunately, at this time I think only time will tell as to whether that precludes people from being able to bring forward actions because they've passed the limitation or not. I hope we've done the right thing here, but as I say, I'm not sure, and I think time may tell on that one.

In the Motor Vehicle Accident Claims Act the changes are again positive and I think remedial. The Provincial Offences Procedure Act: now, I had questioned the government pretty closely about this, because this is where the government is able to claim back some money for the administration of collecting fines on behalf of municipalities. They needed a way to be able to pay their administration costs, and that's what is being done here. There was some concern on my part that this would affect the amount of money going into the victims' fund, but in fact the minister came forward very quickly and pointed out that it would actually increase the money because the percentage that is always taken off the top for the victims of crime fund is now being taken off a larger amount as a result of the changes being made here. So I'm happy to support that.

The Public Trustee Act again was controversial because there were concerns there about whether the guardians of minors could be pushed or manoeuvred into allowing an action to commence before the minor reached 18. The other side of that argument is that it now equalizes the position of a minor with a guardian and a minor that doesn't have a guardian. They're now in exactly the same position.

For those young ones that have a guardian and a trustee, if someone did want to bring an action against them, both the guardian and the trustee would have to be notified. I think that gives a counterbalance and an opportunity to make sure that a minor is not taken advantage of. Now, that is in combination with the Limitations Act, and I still have a little hesitation about that, but overall I think it should be fine.

So there is quite a bit of cleanup, housekeeping, minor and major changes that have been made under this act, and I'd prefer to see these come forward in smaller pieces. There's always the chance when they get clumped together like this that we miss something and as an Assembly embarrass ourselves. But I know that different bits and pieces have either been brought forward by the Alberta legal research institute or have been brought forward as a result of a legislative review or a review by the Law Society or various other legal bodies, so I'm sure those changes and what was proposed under those processes should be fine.

I did propose an amendment really for clarification and ease of administration, and in fact it was accepted. Rather than putting in a five-year review following from proclamation – you know, who knows when proclamation is going to be, and it's not written in the act, so it's very hard to determine when your clock started ticking to know when in fact it's going to stop ticking and you're at the next review point. The amendment just asked that a specific date be put in, and in fact that date is June 1, 2002, so we now know that the next review must happen by June 1, 2007. That amendment was accepted.

I know that there are still lawyers and some members of community groups, in particular MADD and PAID, Mothers Against Drinking Drivers and People Against Impaired Driving, that were not happy about the changes in the Fatal Accidents Act and Survival of Actions Act. They wanted to be able to use that combination of statutes to bring retribution upon people who had caused the death in particular of a child. But as I said during the debate, I think there are other ways to do that that are better suited to it. In fact, if a punitive measure is what's being sought, there are other ways to do it. I didn't think that this was appropriate. I think that what they gave us in the Baddeley case was a wake-up call to write clearer legislation. Certainly the courts are entitled to do that. When they see something that they don't think is very clear, they can bounce it back to us. In essence that's what happened here.

So I hope that what we've done clarifies it and that it will stand the test of time. I think it is an improvement. None of us ever want to contemplate losing someone, particularly an individual who is the breadwinner, the economic provider in a family. We want to make sure that the family is protected and that they have access to all possible programs that are in place for them. The Fatal Accidents Act does give us a set amount of money that takes a lot of worry out of the process. You don't have to go to court. I mean, as soon as you've established the facts, that's it; the amount of money is available for you. And it's a substantial amount of money at this point. The amounts are being raised to $75,000 for an adult and $43,000, I think it is, for a minor. I think that's appropriate.

So after careful consideration I'm willing to support Bill 20, the Justice Statutes Amendment Act, in third reading. Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 20 read a third time]

Bill 21

Alberta Personal Income Tax Amendment Act, 2002

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Finance.

MRS. NELSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to move third reading of Bill 21, the Alberta Personal Income Tax Amendment Act, 2002.

This bill combines a lot of harmonization between our own tax legislation and the federal tax legislation through our tax collection agreement. It's fairly straightforward. I reread the Hansard for the debate and the dialogue. It does move us into a compatible relationship with the federal tax. It also deals with the situation with the NHL tax.

I would ask hon. members to support this bill in third reading.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Happy to speak to Bill 21, the Alberta Personal Income Tax Amendment Act, 2002, in third reading, more commonly known as the hockey tax. This is an interesting bill.

MR. MASON: That's an offside comment.

MS CARLSON: An offside comment, thank you, for someone who doesn't like hockey. I know that it's not an Alberta sentiment to not like hockey, but in fact I think it is one of the most vicious and obnoxious games that there are. Having said that, I still defend them in terms of the government having their hands in their pockets too. It just seems to happen that every time we turn around, that where the government's hands are.

There doesn't seem to be much opposition to this, and it's interesting to note that the government spins this as an attempt to provide funding for Alberta's two major professional hockey teams without involving direct taxpayer money and that the administration costs will be withheld from the teams to cover the costs of implementing the tax.

So I guess we're going to see what happens with this one, like we do with all the others, see what this tax grab actually looks like. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Well, Mr. Speaker, just very briefly. I can't let the offside comments of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie slip through my glove. I just want to indicate that I'm as patriotic an individual in this country as anyone else. I also want to indicate that once again my concern is that the government needs to be taking more active measures to keep NHL hockey in Edmonton and Calgary than just this particular tax. I remind the government that when Edmonton provided assistance to Mr. Pocklington, it was in exchange for a signed, written agreement that the team would have to stay in this city or be offered first of all for a fixed price to local investors. That agreement in fact was triggered despite the attempts of the owner at that time to sell the team. It has remained in Edmonton. It has proven its value, but it is running out in 2004. It might be a good centennial project for the government to find some way to prolong that agreement and extend it perhaps to the Calgary Flames as well.

This particular tax is another one of the nontax taxes that the government said that they would never bring in. Like the smoking tax, to which there's very little public opposition, it's very hard to be against taxing rich hockey players from out of town. I'm not going to do that, but I am going to say that the government, in providing assistance to the hockey teams, ought to consider what it gets in return, and that ought to be some extension of the agreement to keep the NHL teams in Alberta. If we have a strict free market system when it comes to hockey, our teams could go the same way that the Winnipeg Jets and the Quebec Nordique went.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 21 read a third time]

Bill 22

Tobacco Tax Amendment Act, 2002

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Finance on behalf of your colleague the hon. Minister of Revenue.

MRS. NELSON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to move Bill 22, the Tobacco Tax Amendment Act, for third reading on behalf of the hon. Minister of Revenue.

There has been a very good debate on the bill and I believe good support within this Legislature. The amendments contained in this bill will increase tobacco taxes, which is part of the overall tobacco reduction strategy that has been put forward. The amendments will also help to equalize the tax rate on loose tobacco and increase the tax on cigars. In addition, there are provisions that tighten up the control to reduce the ability to smuggle tobacco products into the province. We are also delighted to see, Mr. Speaker, that other provinces have followed suit in their quest to reduce tobacco use and to try and guide our young people from the use of tobacco by increasing their taxes at least across western Canada, and we understand that the move is moving east.

So I'd like to again on behalf of the Minister of Revenue ask for the support of the House for third reading of Bill 22.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We have had, as the minister has indicated, reasonably good debates on this bill, and I think we will be supporting it. It's a case where we took two steps and we could have taken a couple more. I would have liked to have seen a couple more. The steps we've taken are to raise the price of tobacco, which will discourage smokers and especially I think discourage young kids from starting smoking, a commendable and important step forward. I think it is encouraging some people to quit smoking, and that's commendable.

My hope, which grew briefly through the fall and I suppose through January, and in fact one of the things that I actually agree with in the Mazankowski report is the notion of a wellness fund and boosting wellness.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar, you have a seat. Please remain in it.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The revenue from this tax will be in the range of $300 million, I believe. When we put that in the perspective of the total provincial budget, of course every dollar counts; every billion counts. In fact, it would have been – what is that? – hardly 1 percent, 1 and a half percent or something of the total budget and less than 5 percent of the health budget.

If that $300 million had gone into a wellness fund – and I would urge the government to consider this for next year – we could have had I think a genuinely revolutionary effect on the wellness initiatives, the wellness programs and business of this province. The long-term benefits of that for health would have been enormous, a huge, huge step forward, if we had taken the revenue generated from this tax and put it into a wellness fund. Now, there is a dream. There is something for our government to latch onto and to run with. Maybe the government will consider that for next year. You have a chance here, by dedicating the revenue from this tax to wellness initiatives, to make a genuinely historic difference to Alberta and indeed I think as an example to all of Canada and potentially the world. So two steps forward; let's take two more steps maybe in the next budget.

With those comments, I'll wrap up and indicate that we'll be supporting this bill. Thank you.

MR. MASON: Mr. Speaker, I'm just going to indicate once again that I have a real concern about this bill. I do not believe that the stated purpose behind the bill, that being the reduction of smoking, is the only reason behind the bill. I believe that this is another example of the government selecting taxes to which there is little public opposition as a means of increasing its revenue, and I want to remind the government once again that this tax increase will fall disproportionately on low-income Albertans. Thirty-nine percent of people who did not complete high school smoke compared to 14 percent of people who have a university education, and people in the lowest income households were nearly twice as likely to be current smokers, 30 percent, as were those in the highest, which is 16 percent.

At the same time as the government is introducing tax reductions for corporations, I think that we cannot support this just on the basis of the approach of increasing taxes on low-income Albertans while reducing them for the wealthiest.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 22 read a third time]

head: Government Bills and Orders
Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Tannas in the chair]

THE CHAIR: I'd call the Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 26
Workers' Compensation Amendment Act, 2002

THE CHAIR: I would invite comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I have a signed amendment which I would like to introduce, and I'll just provide that to one of the clerks.

THE CHAIR: Hon. member, would you move it? Once you've moved it, then we'll call that amendment A2, and we'll give everybody a copy.

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I will move that Bill 26, the Workers' Compensation Amendment Act, 2002, be amended in section 48 in the proposed section 157.1 by adding the following after subsection (4):

- (5) If a fund is established pursuant to a regulation made under subsection (2)(a), the Board must increase employer premiums by an amount equivalent to 3 cents per employee, the proceeds of which shall be directed to the fund.

Mr. Chairman, one of the biggest disappointments for me and for many Albertans who were looking forward to this act was the fact that an agreement or a solution to the question of the outstanding claims issue had not been achieved before the legislation was drafted and brought before the Assembly. So what the minister has done is to simply delegate these matters to the cabinet to resolve and given the power to the cabinet to approve through regulation whatever solution ultimately is considered palatable by all of the stakeholders. In this case, I think primarily it's several business organizations that have been leading the charge against the onetime tribunal that has been recommended to deal with this.

The difficulty is of course that that leaves everybody in limbo while the work goes on, and we think it ought to have been included in the act. We think that a stronger section would be preferable, one that lays out exactly how the tribunals will be established and how the awards will be adjudicated and who will pay for them. Those are the questions that need to be resolved.

Mr. Chairman, I have taken the opportunity to communicate in writing to the minister on this matter because the amendment as it's set out here really only deals with a small part of what I think a solution might look like. The only piece that this deals with is the establishment of a fund and setting a rate for a fund that would deal with a fund to pay out the onetime costs. I'm going to take the liberty of reading from the letter that I've sent to the minister, which sort of lays out what we think a solution might look like a little bit more.

The New Democrat Opposition is disappointed that Bill 26 doesn't contain a clear resolution to this issue, but rather leaves the matter to be resolved later, delegating authority to implement whatever solution is reached by the cabinet. Nevertheless, we acknowledge the difficulty in reaching a consensus among the stakeholders around this contentious issue.

A key difficulty has been the active opposition of certain business organizations to proposals for a one-time tribunal to resolve long standing contentious claims. As we understand it, there are two main objections: First, these claims are the financial responsibility of businesses active at the time the injuries occurred and ought not to affect rates of currently active businesses. Second, the costs of reconsidering these claims are unknown and may be excessive, driving rates beyond what businesses can afford.

Since it is obviously impossible to retroactively charge businesses which may no longer be active for the costs of settling these claims, the alternatives are to charge businesses now active, which, I might add, includes many of the businesses active at earlier times when some of the injuries did occur, to place the financial burden on all Albertans, or to deny justice to injured workers. In our view, the only realistic alternative that meets the Meredith principle that the Workers' Compensation system is founded on, is the first one. It is not the general taxpayers of Alberta who should be responsible for the costs of compensation, but rather employers as a whole.

Despite inflated estimates promoted by some business organizations, uncertainty over the ultimate costs of resolving these claims and the effect on WCB rates is legitimate. As these claims are extraordinary and their costs are one-time expenditures, it may make sense to separate them from the regular rates through the use of a temporary surcharge. The use of a temporary surcharge could be at a fixed and affordable rate. We suggest that 3 cents on employer WCB premiums might be a reasonable amount, which would not place an undue burden on businesses. It would remain in place until the extraordinary and one-time costs of these contentious claims were met, and then would be canceled.

A surcharge also has advantages relative to the uncertain final cost of resolving the contentious claims. The surcharge can be implemented before the final costs are known, and continued until all costs are paid out. If costs are higher than expected, the surcharge does not increase, but is collected for a longer period. If costs are less than expected, the surcharge can be lifted sooner.

We believe this proposal merits consideration as part of a resolution of the difficult issue of resolving long standing compensation claims. It ensures that legitimate claims can be paid, keeps taxpayers off the hook and keeps rates for business affordable.

We urge the minister and we urge members of the Assembly to give our proposal careful consideration.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

THE CHAIR: On amendment A2. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Chair, I am quite happy to support this amendment I think as it stands, because it sure seems like a way better idea than what I've seen so far in the legislation or in discussions from the minister or from WCB.

I have a real problem with the way this onetime tribunal has been set up without any funding. Injured workers for years and years have been looking forward to this review of the WCB. They have been looking forward to a fair or at least a reasonably fair process where if they were injured and were unfairly dealt with in the past, there would be some sort of tribunal set up where they could be legitimately reassessed through an independent kind of process, where if it was determined that they were in fact more injured or injured differently than WCB had originally decided, there would be the appropriate funds to support that claim. My expectations were that those appropriate funds would be retroactive.

Well, of course, what we see come in is good, the tribunal, in a fairer than before process, also good. But where's the money? Once again the government ducks and hides when it comes to cash on the line for things that they don't support. If it's business, good; if it's injured workers, bad. So I don't see how this tribunal is going to be any good at all if it doesn't back up its position with money, and this amendment puts money on the table. I'm not sure if this is the exact formula or the right way to get there, but it's sure better than what we have right now.

I can't tell you the number of times that I've had injured workers in my office who are frustrated beyond belief. I represent a primarily blue-collar, first-generation immigrant community in my constituency, and that means those people are workers. They work with their hands for the most part, are involved in physical labour or the kinds of work where there are a lot of associated injuries, and these people often don't have a lot of other options in terms of retraining or educational opportunities or different kinds of work. So when they get injured at the workplace, they often have very few other options than WCB. Now, I know that WCB has said: we can retrain anybody. But I'll challenge that, and I'll talk about that in a moment.

First of all, I want to talk about what happens when these injured workers come into my office. They are the breadwinners of their families. They work hard. They believe in working for a living. They believe in fair treatment between themselves and their employers and in the implicit contract they have with the government and with WCB, that if they get injured in the workplace, they're going to be taken care of and taken care of in a fair process. They give a good day's work for the dollars that they earn. They keep their end of the bargain, and then when they get hurt, what happens is that WCB slides away from their side of the deal in many, many cases. So what happens then is that not only don't they have the coverage they thought they did; they don't have any money coming into the family, they're injured, hurt, can't work to the same ability or to any ability. They have fights at every single step of the way through the WCB process to try and get assessed, to try and get assistance, to try and get the money that they feel is due to them, and when they are stalled and blocked at every step of the way, they become very frustrated and they become very, very angry. We've all heard of cases in the past where these injured workers have spun out of control.

If you were to walk into that WCB building just north of us here now, you'll see the bulletproof partitions everywhere and high level of security that they have because of past incidents. I don't condone that kind of violence at all, but I see how injured workers get to that point. They are completely frustrated by the process. They cannot put food on the table for their families. They have been in most cases the sole provider or at least a key provider forever for their families, and now they can't do any of that and they don't know where to turn. They turn to their government, and the government also turns them away and doesn't give them any help.

We have been dealing with cases, like our colleague from Calgary-Egmont said the other night, for years and years and years, trying to get legitimate workers dollars or retraining or retraining in jobs that they can actually do. I have many cases. The one that stands out in my mind the most is a person who is a really good friend of mine. He is a first-generation immigrant, and his English isn't perfect by any stretch of the imagination. He has worked very hard all his life, and he has done a great job of supporting his family. Well, about six years ago he got injured on the job. A pallet fell on his leg, and a great big chunk of his calf was torn away, all the muscles and so on. He was in the hospital for a long time, in rehab for a long time, and at the end of the day what does he get assessed by WCB? That he is 20 percent impaired.

His leg, by his own doctor's standards and by an independent orthopedic surgeon's standards that he went to, is half an inch shorter than it used to be, which creates all kinds of physical problems and pain problems. A chunk of his leg is missing, the calf muscle, and it's gone forever, and there are lots of things he can't do. The WCB doctors measure it and find it one centimetre shorter one time, and the next time they don't find it shorter at all. Now, you tell me about those inconsistencies. What do they say? The guy can work. What can he do? He can be a parking lot attendant. So fine. Parking lot attendants. We all know how they work: they have a stool to sit on, but mostly they stand at their job and mostly it isn't protected from the weather.

Well, this is a guy who's in severe pain, on severe pain killers all the time, who needs to lay down for at least 15, 20 minutes at a minimum every two or three hours. You tell me how he's going to do that being a parking lot attendant. It's not possible to do. [interjection] Well, you know what? It's a real problem for him, and because of the long history of problems there have been an insurmountable amount of problems with him and his family. They nearly lost their house. They, too, were subject to the secret police that we now have a memo on, that the Minister of Justice says don't exist but who actually sent us a memo, so we can confirm tonight that there are secret police.

The secret police monitored him. He walks with a cane – we saw the video – and they monitored him over three successive days. [interjections] It's on the amendment, Mr. Chairman, specifically with regard to why employer premiums must be increased so that when people go to this tribunal, they can get recourse, because in the past it hasn't been.

So in the monitoring of this, what do we have? Three really, really boring days of watching this guy walk around periodically outside with his cane as he should be, watching his son lay down sod in the backyard. Of course, they were hoping to catch him laying the sod. I know exactly what they were up to, but it didn't work, because he can't. Why? Because he's severely injured and can't lift things and has serious problems with anything that requires bearing any weight on that particular leg.

Is this fellow going to have any recourse in this situation as it stands now? You know what? They're going to find that he is more injured and less employable than previously determined. But I'll tell you what, Mr. Chairman: so what? It's not going to make one penny's difference in his pocket. In fact, it's going to increase his frustration level, because this government is going to say that they don't have enough money. So unless I see the minister respond in a way that lays out a better option for these people, I am very happy to support this particular amendment because at least it finally addresses the money issue, which is the issue of paramouncy that's missing from this particular legislation.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre on amendment A2.

MS BLAKEMAN: Okay. Well, this is interesting. I remember the minister saying that the point of WCB was that current employers pay for current employees. I need my glasses on; I can't see him nod. I think that's what he said: current employers' premiums are to pay for current employees.

MR. DUNFORD: That's the general gist.

MS BLAKEMAN: That's the general idea. Okay. I think that under normal circumstances that's probably the truth, but the problem is that we didn't have a process in place in the past that treated those workers who had concerns and who were not treated fairly at the time or who feel that they weren't treated fairly at the time. That process wasn't funded adequately, and they did not get awards that allowed them to retrain or to have a pension or whatever would have been the outcome of that. The money wasn't called for at that time to support whatever those decisions were. To say now, "Oh, well, too bad; the sins of employers past shouldn't be visited on today's employers," just doesn't work, because what it ends up doing is leaving out a group of people who have been failed by the system.

The interesting thing – and this was partly addressed by the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie – is that normal people expect that processes will be in place for them when they need them. When they call the police, the police will come. When they need an ambulance, the ambulance will come or the fire department. They know or they believe that there is a workers' compensation process in place for them so that if they get hurt as a worker, they will be looked after. That's what they believe. They don't understand until they actually get hurt and they're not feeling well and they're not thinking as fast, when they're not as alive to all the different nuances of what's taking place around them, that in fact that's not necessarily so or that there are provisos in play so that there are limitations on something or there's a set minimum that's available for X. They get into a system and they go: "This isn't what I thought the deal was. I thought the deal was that as a worker I go to work on time with my tools, sober, and I work hard. If I get hurt as a result of being on the site or doing my job, there's a deal in place whereby I will be looked after."

When I talked about this act the last time, I talked about the origin of the WCB and how this was not an altruistic gesture on behalf of employers. It was in fact to save themselves from getting sued for causing the death or severe disability of workers. So the employers come out of this with their end of the deal intact, but the workers don't, and there is I think both a perceived and a very real inequity in what is happening. The minister has acknowledged that in the past. I think that this legislation was going to be an attempt to address that. When the legislation came forward, the minister was still saying that we were looking at the contentious long-term claims process, and while this legislation has been up before us in the House, there's been a withdrawal from that saying: well, you know, the employers don't want to pay for that, and the government is certainly not going to step into this.

What's being proposed in this amendment being brought forward by the Member for Edmonton-Highlands is a scheme by which a fund could be established that would pay for awards for these long-term claims. I think it's still debatable. Maybe there is a place for the government in this particular area. I mean, if the government didn't have the processes in place in the past that would have made those contentious claims work out better or be resolved more fairly or however you want to put it, maybe the government should be stepping up to the plate now. Given what I'm saying, I would think that the government would be eager to support what's being put forward by the Member for Edmonton-Highlands, which is proposing that in fact the employers pay for it.

Now, you know, people think of Edmonton-Centre as being the head offices, the big businesses, the corporate downtown, big companies, but in fact there are a lot of small businesspeople in Edmonton-Centre: all of those food kiosks and newsstands and photocopy outlets.

DR. TAFT: How small are they?

MS BLAKEMAN: Oh, lots of them are a one-person or a family operation. Some of them have become quite successful, and they have 10 or a dozen employees now. You know, there are more small employers downtown in fact than there are large employers if you just want to look at numbers alone. How would they handle this amount of money, increasing an employer premium by an amount equivalent to 3 cents per employee? Three cents per employee doesn't sound that bad, but it ends up being 3 cents per employee for every hundred dollars of payroll. So it changes it from a hundred dollars of payroll to $100.03 per payroll. That's probably manageable for a small employer who's looking at five or six employees.

It's a tough decision, but I think that somebody has to step up to the plate here. We can't keep passing the buck around. This is a possible solution, and at this point I'm willing to accept it until I see something better. I don't see the government coming forward with anything better frankly. All that happens is that we dither and the Rome of some workers' lives burns while we try and figure out how to get somebody else to pay for something here. I don't get a lot of WCB claims in Edmonton-Centre, but with those claims that I get, boy, you know, those people have been through a very difficult time. It's frustrating for them and it's frustrating for me when I can't help them.

So at this point I'm willing to support this amendment, as I say, until I see the government come forward with something better. Thanks.

THE ACTING CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure to rise and participate in the debate this evening and specifically on amendment A2 as proposed by the Member for Edmonton-Highlands. I certainly can see the merit or in this case the wisdom behind the hon. member's amendment here to create a fund to deal with long-standing and contentious claims of the WCB. Now, there are various reports as to what amount of money is specifically needed and how many workers are going to be affected by this. I've heard as low as 300 workers would be going before the long-standing, contentious claims tribunal and as high as 15,000 workers that have been wronged through the WCB process. I have heard figures as low as $50 million and higher than $200 million to finance the program to address the wrongs of the injured workers.

Now, certainly remarks were made here in the Assembly not only by this member but several others, and these remarks centred around the elimination or the termination of the rate and benefit stabilization fund, that had been wisely introduced by the WCB in I believe the year was 1996. This had grown into a fund that had millions of dollars in it before it was reduced and then terminated in I believe it was the last annual report. It is my view that if this fund, the rate and benefit stabilization fund, had been left in place, there would be no need today for this amendment as proposed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, and there would be no need to have a debate on whether we can afford to deal with long-standing, contentious claims. We had the money, and we spent it or we put it into the accident fund. When we spent it, in this case, employers' premium rates did not increase, and this was convenient around election time. We didn't want to upset the business community and have skyrocketing WCB premiums, but as soon as the election was over, we saw two double-digit increases, Mr. Chairman. I understand that there's another one coming this year. It's $1.81 or $1.82 to have full payment – $1.81 per $100 of payroll – to meet all the commitments of the WCB. [interjection] About 11 cents less than that? I could stand corrected.

MR. DUNFORD: One sixty-eight.

MR. MacDONALD: One sixty-eight. Thank you very much, hon. minister.

The elimination of the rate and benefit stabilization fund has now allowed us to plead poverty on this issue. We have no money to settle these claims, so we have this proposal in amendment A2.

I have the following questions, and hopefully the hon. member or another member of the Assembly can help me with this, Mr. Chairman. If this fund was to be established pursuant to subsection 2(a) in the proposed section 157, the board, it indicates here, "must increase employer premiums by an amount equivalent to 3 cents per employee." How much money are we looking at here? Is it 3 cents per $100 of payroll? How long is this money going to be collected? I think we're going to wind up with a sizable sum here. I have no idea, and if the hon. member could tell me this, I would be very grateful, because I don't know whether I can support this amendment without that information.

I would think that this is a sizable amount of money. I would think that if this amount is to be put in a fund, then at some time we're going to have to check for the administration of this fund. I don't want to give the new Auditor General, Mr. Dunn, any more work, but I think this would be an ideal place for the Auditor General and his staff to work from, Mr. Chairman, to keep an eye on this fund and to see that it's being managed correctly. I certainly would like to know precisely how much money per year will be raised by the establishment of this regulation. In light of the fact that we're now pleading poverty on this issue and we have no money, as I said before, I think the rate and benefit stabilization fund was created was to deal with issues just like the outstanding contentious claims. We had the money, but we got rid of it unfortunately, and now we are to deal with this. If the hon. member could clarify for the Assembly how much money is going to be raised, I would be very anxious for his comments on this.

This is an improvement. There are other issues that I think we're going to have to debate with Bill 26 regarding the long-standing, contentious matters, but this amendment certainly would provide a source of revenue to start the whole process of hearing from the frustrated workers who for one reason or another have been unjustly treated by the entire WCB process. I don't think there are legions of these injured workers, Mr. Chairman, but certainly I think the number is much greater than 300, and hopefully it's much less than 15,000.

This is a debt. If these injuries are related to the workplace, this is a debt owed. It cannot be considered a future or current cost. These people were legitimately injured in the workplace, and their injuries have been ignored. Their lives have been as a result diminished. Many of them are frustrated; their families are frustrated with this. We can't continue with further study on this issue. We know what needs to be done. I would encourage the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands to please explain, if he has the data here regarding the pool of money, how much will be raised. Will it be specific to long-standing, contentious claims?

If I could, Mr. Chairman, at this time cede the floor to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands. If he could provide that answer, I would be very grateful. Thank you.

THE ACTING CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to respond to the member. In my opening comments I did deal with a number of these questions, but I certainly don't mind going through them again.

The idea is that these are onetime claims. They're not ongoing claims, and they ought not to affect the general rate that businesses pay for WCB. So the idea is that there would be a surcharge that would be put on that would be a fixed amount. This can be modified. I'm certainly not wedded to this, but I understand that it's about 3 cents on the current amount that is paid, and the minister can correct me if I'm wrong. The standard rate is about $1.86 that businesses pay, and that's per $100 of payroll. Is that correct?

MR. DUNFORD: A dollar sixty-eight.

MR. MASON: A dollar sixty-eight, and this would be a 3-cent surcharge. The idea is that you fix it and then you run it as long as is necessary to pay the costs. You can start collecting it before the costs are known, but if the costs of the contentious claims are more than you expect, you collect it a few more years. If they're less, you terminate the surcharge earlier. When the contentious claims are gone and paid for, the surcharge is canceled. So it's a temporary thing. It's a reasonable price that businesses can pay.

We estimate – and this is just us with our small, limited resources – that the 3-cent charge would collect about $11.7 million per year that would be put in the fund. Depending what the costs are of resolving the contentious claims, that surcharge would run for more years or less years to pay them off.

We also think that it's reasonable because you can tell businesses right away how much it's going to be and that it won't go up. You know, they may pay it a bit longer if the costs are higher than expected, but you can fix that and they can fix that in their business plans and their budgets and so on. So that's the general idea. I hope that helps.

MR. MacDONALD: Yes. Thank you. I would like to express my gratitude to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands in regard to amendment A2. Certainly whenever we consider that there has been this plea of poverty that we cannot afford to make these adjustments or have a fund to deal with the long-standing, contentious claims, this certainly is a step in the right direction. I don't know if it's everything that is needed at this time, but when we consider that the rate and benefit stabilization fund was created to deal with just such a matter as this and it was, as I understand it, a standard policy pertaining to the insurance industry that funds be established to deal with emergencies, then this seems to be a solution that has been put forward. It is going to be certainly in the statute for everyone to see.

I would at this time encourage all hon. members of this Assembly to have a close examination of this amendment A2. It may not be perfect, but when we eliminate the rate and benefit stabilization fund, this is the next best thing. I would encourage all members to please support this amendment. Thank you.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

MR. DUNFORD: I'd like to begin by thanking the Member for Edmonton-Highlands for providing an opportunity to debate an amendment such as this. I want to indicate right from the get-go that I'll be urging members of the Assembly not to support the amendment, but that doesn't mean that your amendment is not for consideration. What we'll be doing is taking this type of a process and handing it over to the committee that we've already announced in the House. That's the committee made up of the MLAs from Calgary-Egmont, Bonnyville-Cold Lake, and Calgary-Cross. What they are responsible for is trying to find a process that we can get stakeholders to all agree to so we can move forward.

I want to make sure that the member understands that I appreciate the effort that's been put into the amendment that we have before us. I think it showed some thought. I think it showed a willingness to try to find a solution, to try to understand the current dilemma that the minister finds himself in. On the one hand, by having section 157 here in this bill, I am making a clear statement to injured workers that I haven't given up on this situation, that we're still in the face of some fierce opposition to this, that we're still trying to find a way to resolve it. When I listen to some of the other members' comments tonight, all I can conclude, Mr. Chairman, is that again I've found a perfectly Canadian solution to some situation: nobody agrees with it. You know, instead of having people recognizing that one side of the issue is strongly opposed to it, instead of looking around and trying to find some sort of understanding and some support from the other side, well, they've got the other side against it as well.

Nevertheless, Mr. Chairman, we will sort through this, and we'll be able to sort through it as long as we continue to have amendments with the thoughtfulness and the sincere concern that we see here in A2. It's too bad it has to go down tonight, but it's a suggestion that will live on after tonight in the committee.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to express my appreciation to the minister for his comments. I certainly was expecting that the amendment may not pass. I've been called a slow learner tonight, but I'm not that slow a learner.

Nevertheless, I appreciate his comments. I do believe that we need to try and resolve this issue and all put our best efforts forward because I think the injured workers certainly are expecting it. I understand some of the difficulties the minister has been facing and certainly would like to do my best to help him resolve it, but ultimately it's his responsibility to resolve it. We will certainly be holding him accountable if he fails to do so, but in the meantime he can be assured of our full co-operation.

Thank you.

[Motion on amendment A2 lost]

THE CHAIR: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. STEVENS: Yes, Mr. Chairman. I move that we rise and report progress on Bill 26.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

MR. LOUGHEED: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration a certain bill. The committee reports progress on the following: Bill 26. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Does the Assembly concur in this report?

HON. MEMBERS: Concur.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Opposed? So ordered.
The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. STEVENS: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I move that the Assembly stand adjourned until 1:30 tomorrow afternoon.

[Motion carried; at 10:16 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Thursday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Thursday, May 9, 2002

1:30 p.m.

Date: 02/05/09

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

THE SPEAKER: Good afternoon and welcome.

Let us pray. Our divine Father, as we conclude for this week our work in this Assembly, we renew our thanks and ask that we may continue our work under Your guidance. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Guests

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

MR. JOHNSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased and honoured to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly Mr. Walter McNary of Camrose, who is seated in your gallery. Mr. McNary was a part of the department of agriculture for many years in this province and is responsible for many programs which continue today. Mr. McNary is a pioneer in the agriculture industry and was involved with the 4-H program where he started the public-speaking component of the program in the late '50s. He is also the founder of the farm green certificate training program, which has served our province so well for so many years. Later on I will be giving a member's statement on the green certificate program.

Accompanying Mr. McNary is his wife, Myrtle, and Doug Taylor, who was Mr. McNary's first employee in the department of agriculture under Hugh Horner in the early '70s, and he continues to work in the department on the green certificate program.

I would like to ask Mr. McNary and Myrtle and Mr. Taylor to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

MR. SNELGROVE: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed a pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly a very special couple from my hometown of Vermilion. Mr. Walter Scott has been involved with the department of agriculture for many years, too, and was instrumental in working with the green program. Mrs. Jan Scott has just recently retired from the Vermilion health care complex in Vermilion and was instrumental in keeping the reputation of Vermilion as providing the best patient care in Alberta. I say that in all truth, and everyone in Vermilion knows that. They are also, incidentally, the very proud parents of Canada's Olympic – and I'm sure it will be announced soon – silver medalist, Ms Beckie Scott. So it's with extreme pride that I introduce them to you and through you to the people today. I would ask them to rise and please accept the warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

MS GRAHAM: Thank you. I'm pleased this afternoon to introduce to you and to members of the Assembly a young constituent of mine from Calgary-Lougheed, Ms Roseanne Warren, who is seated in the Speaker's gallery. Roseanne is a grade 10 student at Western Canada high school in Calgary, where she is enrolled in the full IB program. She's a well-rounded student, participates in many athletic activities, and is also completing her grade 10 in piano. She is considering a career in law, hopefully followed by politics. She was very enthusiastically looking forward to participating in Mr. Speaker's Youth Parliament this year until it unfortunately had to be canceled, but we have arranged for her to be here today to tour the building. Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the meeting with you and for the picture with you, and she will be joining us for question period. I'd now ask Roseanne to rise in the Speaker's gallery and be recognized by the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

MR. HORNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of myself and the hon. Member for St. Albert it's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you today to all members of the House six guests from St. Albert and Edmonton who are seated in your gallery. These were guests of mine and the hon. Member for St. Albert for lunch today. The group contributed a substantial amount to the St. Albert Rotary auction earlier this year to be with us today. We had a wonderful lunch and a great discussion at noon as well as a tour of the Lieutenant Governor's office and your office, Mr. Speaker. They are Lauren Robertson, Jeri-Lynn Robertson, Mike O'Dell, Charlane O'Dell, Cal Malhiot, and Don Milligan. I would ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this House.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Medicine Hat.

MR. RENNER: Well, thank you very much. You know, it's a true sign of spring around this place when buses full of children from Medicine Hat start making the six-hour trek from southeastern Alberta to visit us in the Legislature. I have a group of such students to introduce this afternoon, but, Mr. Speaker, with your indulgence I would also like to mention that this morning I had another group from Medicine Hat, who unfortunately were not able to join us for question period. I would like to acknowledge that 26 students and I think around eight parent helpers from St. Louis school in Medicine Hat, accompanied by their teacher Mr. Buday, toured the Legislature this morning. Unfortunately timetables necessitated that they be other places this afternoon, but I'd like to acknowledge them, and I look forward to visiting them as soon as the photographs that we took this morning are completed.

This afternoon, Mr. Speaker, through you I would like to introduce to all Members of the Legislative Assembly a group of 90 students who, as I mentioned, have joined us from Crestwood school in Medicine Hat. They are accompanied by a number of parents and teachers. I'd like to identify their principal, Mr. David George; the vice-principal, Mr. Mark Traber; teachers Mrs. Karen Shaw, Mrs. Kathy Western, Mrs. Jackie Sehn, Mr. Wade Lawson, Mr. Gary Ziel; as well as parent helpers Mr. Barry Bitz, Ms Deb Kopp, Mrs. Barb Klein, Mr. Bruce Hill, and Mrs. Edith Heim. They are seated in both galleries, the members' gallery and the public gallery. I would ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome from all members of the House.

MRS. GORDON: Mr. Speaker, it gives me a great deal of pleasure today to rise and introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly a number of guests from the Multiple Sclerosis Society of Canada, Alberta division. May is Multiple Sclerosis Awareness Month in Canada, and the carnations placed on your desks today are representative of one of the society's major fund-raisers, their annual Carnation Day. Over the next few weeks other fund-raisers are also planned in many of our communities across Alberta: the MS bike tours as well as the MS Super Cities walking tours. Our hon. minister of health earlier today agreed to bike on behalf of MS. I encourage all to participate. Help us raise much-needed dollars for ongoing MS research. Seated in the public gallery are Ms Joyce Kropiniski, board member; Ms Kim Dowie, board member; Mr. David Johnston, president; Mr. Jim Robinson, vice-president; Mr. Kim Cassady, manager, social action; and Ms Heidi Erisman, the new executive director of the Edmonton chapter. I would ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Premier.

MRS. McCLELLAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today we have a very special guest in your gallery, Linda Chupka. Linda is a longtime employee of Alberta Agriculture. She's presently the executive assistant to my deputy minister, but today Linda is here to observe the work of one that she is very proud of, and that is her son Craig Chupka, who is one of the pages in the Assembly. I ask you, Linda, to please rise, and could we extend Linda the very, very warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

MR. HANCOCK: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly 12 elementary school students and their parents – Anita Labreche, Greg and Pamela Galan, and Claudia Shaw – from the Brookside home school in my constituency of Edmonton-Whitemud. They're of course here today to observe and learn with keen interest about our government. They're seated in the members' gallery, and I'd ask that they please rise and receive the warm welcome of the members.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

MS KRYCZKA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'm very proud to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly two constituents of mine from Calgary-West. Jerry Lehoux has been in Edmonton for a SCONA conference, SCONA being Scholarship Consultants of North America. Jerry is involved in the administration and distribution of USC education savings plans, which are really RESPs. Brenda Wood is the founder and now executive director of the very successful and ever growing Friends of Seniors Foundation, a program in Calgary which won a minister's seniors service award in 2001. I would ask Jerry and Brenda, who are in the members' gallery, to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

head: Oral Question Period

THE SPEAKER: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Holy Cross Hospital

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Premier has referred in recent days to the work of the Holy Cross disposition committee and has indicated his confidence in its proceedings. Documents obtained by us show that the disposition committee originally planned to reject the bid from Enterprise Universal. Within days, however, this decision was reversed, the letter was revised by the CRHA CEO, and Enterprise Universal was invited to resubmit. It's clear that the disposition committee was not arm's length in its decision-making. My questions are to the Premier. Was the Premier ever contacted by the backers of the Enterprise Universal bid concerning the purchase of the Holy Cross?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, perhaps I was. I would like to know who Enterprise Universal Inc. or company is.

DR. NICOL: The people who bought the Holy Cross.

My second question, Mr. Speaker, is: was the Premier ever made aware that the Holy Cross was appraised at up to $20.6 million?

MR. KLEIN: According to my information there were a number of appraisals based on the best and possible use, and according to the note that was provided to me, there was an upside value if the property was to be zoned to its highest possible use and if indeed there was a buyer who wanted to buy the property at that particular price. But as I understand it, Mr. Speaker, there were some complications associated with this particular site in terms of demolishing the hospital, the removal of the asbestos, and so on, the environmental cleanup, and to the best of my knowledge no developer wanted to go to the expense to undertake that very expensive cleanup. Therefore, the disposition committee accepted what they deemed to be the best offer.

In answer to the hon. member's first question, if he's alluding to the Huang brothers – Peter, Ian, and John – as the proprietors, or the owners, of that particular company, yes, they did approach me, and I indicated to them that a disposition committee would be struck to make a proper adjudication of this.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: given that cabinet approval was necessary for the sale of the Holy Cross, were any supporting documents or copies of appraisals provided either to the Premier or Executive Council before the approval?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I can't recall if formally any particular documents were provided to me or any other members of cabinet. Perhaps the then Minister of Infrastructure or public works – I forget what it was called at that particular time – might have received some documents. Clearly, one of the proponents visited me – I believe it was in Calgary – to outline what their proposal was, and I indicated to them that this would be a subject for adjudication by the disposition committee.

THE SPEAKER: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We have a hospital sold shortly after $20 million was spent on renovations. We have a disqualified bidder allowed back into the process who wins the bid and then is allowed terms unavailable to any other bidder, and it turns out that the leader of that bid was a senior official of the Calgary health region. We have a hospital on 8.6 acres of prime land in the hottest real estate market in Canada being sold for one-quarter of its appraised value. My questions are to the Premier. Does the Premier consider it acceptable practice to have a public tendering process in which bid conditions are changed for one bidder and not for the others?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, again this is going back many, many years. I would remind the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition that the sale was managed by a disposition committee made up of city councillors, clergy, community leaders, and RHA reps. Their stated preference, as I understand it, was to have the site be sold to someone who would use it for health-related services. As I understand it, this was advertised nationally, not just locally but nationally, and of the three offers received, the committee accepted the highest offer. While the Liberals may think that the price should be higher, there's an old rule in real estate that the value of a piece of property is what people are willing to pay for it. For that site the RHA received the most that people were willing to pay. The fact is that in that facility there now are a multitude of health services, including I believe it's some 40 long-term care beds, a pain management clinic, several eye doctors, psychiatric services, and others. I simply don't know what the Liberals are driving at.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the government is prepared to sell our public hospitals and has cited the Holy Cross as an example of how it should be done, will the Premier freeze the sale of all health facilities in this province until a full investigation into the irregularities of the Holy Cross sale is completed?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, there are no irregularities, and to suggest that there were is I believe an insult to the good-thinking people and the community-minded people who served on the disposition committee. What he is suggesting is that they brought about some irregularities, that what they did was in some way underhanded, and that is wrong. He's talking about people the likes of former Bishop O'Byrne. He's talking about a Member of this Legislative Assembly, the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, who was then a well-respected member of Calgary city council, and a lot of other people, community leaders and so on. You know, I have to stand up and stick up for these people. They're good, solid citizens who did the best possible job.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Premier: given all the irregularities, will the Premier call for a judicial inquiry into the sale of the Holy Cross, where we can subpoena witnesses and have the truth come out?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, why? You know, this is six years old. We want to get on with the future. I mean, this sale took place a long, long time ago. To my knowledge it was a perfectly normal sale under the circumstances of the day, and it was properly adjudicated by a disposition committee.

THE SPEAKER: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the Official Opposition tabled a memo from then Minister of Health Jonson to the Premier and Executive Council. We obtained the memo through FOIP, and it contains a FOIP index number and an action request number. To the Premier: can the Premier explain why the memo states that, quote, the Calgary regional health authority board entered into negotiations with Enterprise Universal in September 1996, end quote, when requests for proposals to sell the facility had not even been sent out then?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, first of all, the Liberal opposition tabled this. I received a note of apology, and I understand that the hon.

member did apologize to the House for saying that it had been delivered to my office when in fact it hadn't been, but there's nothing untoward about this. This is a copy that is attached to the original, and I have the original in front of me. To answer my question, it says:

Following independent appraisals the property was listed at $4.9M for over a year. There have been limited enquiries, mostly at the $2M range. In September 1996, the Board entered into negotiations with Enterprise Universal Inc. which have resulted in an agreement under which Enterprise Universal Inc. will purchase the property for $4.575M. This offer appears to be the best purchase price currently available and represents fair market value. The sale would also eliminate the reported annual expenditure of $1M by the RHA to maintain the safety and security of the property.

I assume that that took place following the recommendation to the RHA by the disposition committee. There's no reference to that here in the memo. I don't have all the correspondence on it, but I hardly think it's worth the time and effort that the Liberals are spending on this particular issue unless they want to come clean and tell the Legislature and the public what they're after.

DR. TAFT: Given that we're not going to get offers on a property if we don't ask the full value of it and given that every appraisal available valued the property at well above $4.9 million, can the Premier explain why the memo he refers to indicates that the property was listed on the market at $4.9 million, well below appraised value?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I have no idea, and I'm just making some assumptions here, because, as I say, this matter is over six years old. It says:

The Agreement [also] has been reviewed with respect to the Provincial Policy on the Sale of Property Owned by Health Authorities and found to be compliant with the Policy. The Agreement requires the purchaser to agree that the property will not be used to provide private hospital or acute care inpatient health services.

That should be good news to the Liberals. "However, it does not preclude the use of the facilities to provide outpatient, day surgical services or supportive long term care programs" – and that's exactly what the site is being used for – "in compliance with existing legislation." As far as I know, everything is in compliance with the existing legislation. "The purchaser is proposing to use the property to deliver post-secondary education services," not bad, "residential development" – I guess maybe there's something around there; I don't know – "and a variety of complementary health services," which I do know are being provided. What is the problem here?

DR. TAFT: Well, given his quotes here today and given that government policy on the sale of property owned by RHAs, which we tabled in the Legislature yesterday, clearly states that property being sold should not be needed for future health care delivery, why does this memo as he just quoted it substantially contradict that policy? Is policy just made on a whim here?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, it does not contradict or violate in any way the policy. It says that it can't be used for acute care. It can't be used for a hospital, a private hospital. It accommodates a number of clinical applications, and that's perfectly permissible under the Health Care Protection Act.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. the Premier, it would be helpful, too, if that memo would be tabled in the Assembly at the appropriate time if it hasn't already been.

MR. KLEIN: I'll be happy to table it. I'll have those copies. That was the original, not the stuff they tried to table yesterday.

THE SPEAKER: At the appropriate time we'll have the right thing. A point of order?

MS CARLSON: A point of order.

THE SPEAKER: Okay. We'll deal with it later as well. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

U.S. Agricultural Subsidies

MR. MASON: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Tomorrow in Regina there's a key meeting to chart a plan to protect prairie farmers from the protectionist U.S. farm bill. Every Premier and every leader of the opposition from the three prairie provinces will be there except the Premier of Alberta. The Alberta government's silence on this issue is deafening. My question is to the Premier. Why is the Premier refusing to attend this crucial farm summit tomorrow in Regina?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, first of all, I'm unable to attend tomorrow's meeting because of prior commitments that I have in Calgary. I am meeting with senior energy officials in Calgary to receive a briefing that is essential to my upcoming mission to London and Ukraine. I explained this to Premier Calvert on the telephone, and he understands. He's fine with it. I don't know; if he's fine with it, why isn't the hon. member? The Deputy Premier, who's also the minister of agriculture and our rural lieutenant, will be at the meeting. Alberta producers, farmers can be confident that their concerns will be addressed.

Now, I've had two substantive phone calls with Premier Calvert. He has offered to lead the western provinces' response to the U.S. farm bill matter, and I've indicated to him that Alberta supports his leadership role and that we will co-operate in the development of a joint plan of action. What that plan of action at this particular time might be, I don't know, but as the Deputy Premier said yesterday, the Alberta response to this important matter can't be judged by who's first up to the mike or by how many news releases are issued and that it can sometimes be more of a public relations exercise than it is substantive action.

We are working with other provinces. We'll continue to work with other provinces and the federal government on a thorough evaluation of the U.S. legislation and its potential impact on farmers, and once that evaluation is completed, this province will participate in a joint plan of action. We also have to be careful – and I think the minister emphasized this – that any aid programs, whether federal or provincial, don't simply spark a subsidy war that would end up hurting the agriculture industries in both countries.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. How many people will lose their farms while this government is getting its act together?

Given that the Premiers of Saskatchewan and Manitoba . . .

THE SPEAKER: Hon. member, please. I heard a question.

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, I'll be happy to assist the hon. member with that question. This government has put in place, far ahead of the other provinces, programs that would ensure the sustainability of Alberta farms. I would remind the hon. member that while the other areas were having discussions, maybe some press releases, maybe the odd news conference, this government put a disaster assistance program in place. Some years later others joined, including the federal government. I would also remind the hon. member that this province has the best safety net program of any province in Canada for its producers. If you want to look at the viability of farms in this province, I will undertake to get for the hon. member the sales of land and values of land in the two provinces that he is referring to, and then he could draw his own conclusion as to which farmers are best supported by their government on a long-term basis.

MR. MASON: Mr. Speaker, why does the Premier put a priority on a briefing about things in Ukraine ahead of fighting for the interests of Alberta farmers? Why isn't he leading the Alberta delegation to Regina?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I have the greatest confidence in the Deputy Premier, and so do Albertans. Secondly, this hon. minister knows more about agriculture than that member would ever hope to know about farming. When this hon. member falsely and maliciously talks about people losing their farms, he's talking about this hon. member, who is a farm woman. Her livelihood is at stake, as are the livelihoods of many members of this caucus who also depend on farming to support their families, unlike this hon. member, who, you know, has been stuck in the city for so long that he has no understanding of what farming is all about.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Little Bow, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. McFARLAND: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions today coincidentally still deal with something called a U.S. farm bill, and I hope our minister of agriculture will accept a question from a real farmer, not somebody who is born again. Along with many rural constituents of mine who are full-time professional farmers and don't totally understand things like the U.S. farm bill, I want the question directed to the minister to be worded this way. Minister, we understand that the President of the United States has not yet signed this bill, but at the same time what is the exact status of the bill? What inference does it have to my farmers, to me, and to the others of us in this Assembly that do farm?

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, as I understand, the process with the farm bill was ratified by the Senate last evening in fact, and it is expected that it would be signed off by the President sometime in the next two weeks. That's the legislative process of this bill.

Mr. Speaker, what does it mean for farmers? Well, you know, it's interesting. The actual amounts of dollars in this bill are not much different than what were paid out last year, contrary to what you would think by reports. What it does is take the baseline of support for U.S. agriculture and adds the onetime payments or ad hoc payments into the base and carries them out over six years, so in fact it would appear at first blush that it may be even slightly less in actual dollars. However, the breadth of this bill is what is of concern. This bill doesn't just cover payments to producers. It covers things like export credits. It covers conservation, environment. It covers food aid and many things like that. So the complexity of this bill is what makes it somewhat difficult to do a very quick analysis and a very quick response. We want to take the time to have that in-depth analysis and make sure that the response that we have, whatever it is, is meaningful to our producers.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. McFARLAND: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I hope I'm not in a conflict of interest for asking the question.

Particularly with respect to cereal producers and pulse growers what impact will this proposed bill have on those particular producers?

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, certainly it locks in the subsidy levels on grains and oilseeds, and as I indicated yesterday in the House, what is even more bitterly disappointing to us is that it also draws in this year pulse crops, a growing opportunity and expanding crop in this province. So despite the fact that we've been dealing with subsidies on wheat, oilseeds, and other grains, this is added to it as well. Those subsidy levels are there in the bill. They're locked in for a period of time, and of course it takes away the competitive advantage that the efficient farmers in our province have. Very difficult for farmers in Canada to compete against treasuries of countries like the U.S. and the European Union.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. McFARLAND: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A final question: should this bill prove a financial hardship on Alberta farmers, what programs do you contemplate or what programs are available to assist our producers here in Alberta?

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, there's no question that there is a comprehensive set of safety nets in this province and in many areas in Canada. First of all, the farm income disaster program, which has been mentioned, does deal with loss of income and responds only on a disaster basis, so if you have a continual set of low prices, that obviously isn't the answer. The second thing that is available is the NISA program, of which there are significant accounts, and that can be drawn on by producers in times of low payments. The other program though, that is I think more apt to respond to this and could respond to it in the long term, is your safety net program in crop insurance. Crop insurance prices are set with an anticipation of what the initial world price will be. You take your production risk into account. There is some cost of production factored into that, and if you have a crop failure or a shortfall, you can draw on that program.

Mr. Speaker, I want to take less than a minute to say that we have been working with the two prairie provinces over the past year to try and include in that safety net program a revenue component. Indeed, had that been put in place for this crop year, we probably wouldn't be having this conversation today to this degree. Unfortunately, they weren't able to come to the table with that program.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Electricity Pricing

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Many Albertans are real angry at this government because of real high electricity prices. This has been caused by the electricity deregulation scheme that was proposed by this government. Now, a recent Power Pool Council report determined that through a practice known as the silver bullet, the Power Pool Council in Alberta is concerned about price manipulation at the Power Pool. My first question is to the Premier. What steps is the Premier taking to avoid this silver bullet, which did not exist before the government moved to a marginal pricing system?

MR. KLEIN: Well, that's a real interesting question. Mr. Speaker,

I have no idea what a silver bullet is, you know, other than the Lone Ranger. I don't know. Perhaps the hon. member can explain what this silver bullet is all about.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: what is the additional cost of surveying the bidding process for the Power Pool considering the new incentives for pricing manipulation that come with your now ideologically defunct electricity deregulation scheme?

MR. KLEIN: Well, deregulation certainly is not defunct, Mr. Speaker. It is alive and well and providing the environment for more competition. We see more power coming on almost on a daily basis, and over a period of time it will provide a competitive climate, which should result in a downward pressure on prices. So deregulation is hardly defunct. It's alive and well. There are a few bumps along the road. One of them is due to service charges connected with electricity bills, and both the ministers of Energy and Government Services are looking into this matter. I understand they'll be meeting with the power companies tomorrow. They've already met with the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board, and hopefully we'll get this ironed out. But on the whole prices are not on average abnormally high. They are high in some areas but not on average and throughout the province.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MacDONALD: Mr. Speaker, thank you. Again to the Premier: will the Premier please commit to tabling in this Assembly on Monday the Cap Gemini report on billing practices and the London economic study on the electricity industry overhaul and overview in Alberta, to provide full transparency and accountability for the practices in this province before there's a backbench revolt in his own caucus because of high government involvement in the electricity industry?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, there is, needless to say, not a backbench revolt in this caucus. As a matter of fact, the MLAs who have constituents who have been affected by high service charges connected to power bills have been very diligent in bringing these concerns to caucus, and it's a result of those concerns being expressed in a straightforward, forthright manner that the appropriate investigation was undertaken by both the ministers of Energy and Government Services.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Energy Research Strategy

MS DeLONG: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Many of my constituents are concerned about climate change, and some of them are grappling with whether Canada should sign the Kyoto protocol. We've recently been hearing something new about an energy research strategy. My question is for the Minister of Innovation and Science. Can the minister tell us what it is about and how it was developed?

MR. DOERKSEN: Mr. Speaker, indeed innovation and research is a critical component in Alberta's approach to climate change. Before I outline some of the key principles in the energy strategy, I would encourage all members to check out the Alberta Energy Research Institute web site on the worldwide web at .aeri.ab.ca or .gov.ab.ca, and you can find the entire strategy.

The ultimate goal of innovation and research in our province is to make sure we extract value from our vast resources of coal and oil sands while maintaining our commitment to the environment. Mr. Speaker, there are five primary goals that the Energy Research Institute has set out. The first one relates to using our high-grade, low-sulphur, clean coal in the production of energy. We're also looking at upgrading technology, the management of carbon dioxide, or CO₂, which is one of the climate-change components, improved oil production, and looking at fuel cells and our hydrogen economy. The whole research strategy is a fundamental part of Alberta's approach to climate change.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MS DeLONG: Thank you. My first supplemental is to the same minister. How will this research institute strategy help us develop our made-in-Alberta approach to climate change?

MR. DOERKSEN: In fact, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Environment is developing an Alberta approach to the Kyoto alternative in conjunction with the Ministry of Innovation and Science, the Minister of Energy, and in fact all of our colleagues. The Prime Minister is starting to agree with the Alberta position that we need to obtain credit for our clean energy exports, and in our relentless pursuit of excellence towards zero emissions in coal production, we expect that we will obtain clean energy credits for our coal energy production as well.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MS DeLONG: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: can the minister tell us how this strategy will benefit the province?

MR. DOERKSEN: Mr. Speaker, the Alberta Energy Research Institute, which of course is capably co-chaired by our colleague from Bonnyville-Cold Lake, took over from where the Alberta Oil Sands Technology and Research Authority, commonly known as AOSTRA, left off. We have seen the results of that research in the past over a great length of time paying us huge dividends with respect to jobs and royalties in our oil sands production. Furthermore, we can take the technology that we develop and actually adapt it to other areas, and I'll use a very small example. The coating that we use in pipelines to prevent pipeline corrosion has been adapted to be used inside of soup cans to prevent the soup cans from corroding. As we use technology in one area, we can adapt that into other areas and export the knowledge that we have in Alberta. So things are very positive from a value-added point of view in our province.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Community Lottery Boards

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Gaming has said that the decision to cut the community lottery boards was for financial reasons, and yesterday in the appropriation debate the Member for Airdrie-Rocky View confirmed that the entire government caucus participated in this decision. My questions today are to the Premier. If it was a financial decision to cut the $50 million community lottery board program, where was the new money to come from for this modified program that the Minister of Gaming has lately made reference to?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, we always said that we would try to find a way to enhance CFEP, and that is being worked on right now. The details certainly haven't been announced, but we want to be able to come up with a program that is available for those who truly need help and for those organizations that fall through the cracks.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, given that the only budget increase for the existing lottery programs or foundations was a $2.5 million increase for CFEP, how is the $50 million cut going to be addressed? In other words, which other groups now getting grants from the existing lottery foundations are going to get dumped so you can give the money to the community lottery board applicants?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, it's all speculation on the hon. member's part at this particular time. There are ways of moving dollars around within program budgets, and money can be moved around to provide for those organizations that truly need the money. There is an assumption on the hon. member's part that it's going to be $50 million. Well, we don't know. We do know through our assessment of the community lottery board program that about 60 percent, I believe it was, of the programs were receiving funding from other lottery programs as well as from community lottery boards, so that leads one to speculate and to wonder whether $50 million is in fact the right figure. So we're working on this. It's going to involve some shuffling, but it's also going to involve the identification of some priorities relative to community services that really are needed in the community.

If the hon. Minister of Gaming wishes to comment further, I'll have him respond.

MR. STEVENS: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We've been taking a look at the community lottery board program in the past year, and I think there are some very interesting statistics that come out of it. One of the things that we've said is that we want to address those smaller applicants who did receive funds and who were falling between the cracks. What I can tell you, for example, is that applicants who received under $50,000 comprise some 95 percent of the applicants who received funds from community lottery boards, making up 62 percent of the money that was allocated. If we take a look at those who received $25,000 or less, that made up 87 percent of the applicants, who received about 41 percent of the funds. So what that indicates is that that particular program was very, very good for small applicants, and I think that's one of the things that we have to address as we work through this particular issue.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Will groups such as the Carstairs library or the skating and gymnastics clubs that were previously funded by Community Lottery Board No. 66 in Kneehill county be deemed worthy and needy under this new criteria for this new program?

MR. STEVENS: One of the things that we're looking at again is identification of where the funds went to, Mr. Speaker. There were about 10 different categories that the community lottery boards dealt with. They had community services, sport, recreation, parks, environment, culture, social services, health, libraries, and education, and there was widespread funding throughout each of those areas. I think it's fair to say that as we review this particular issue, we're going to be mindful of those groups that do not have access to existing granting programs, and that is one of the things that we're going to look at very carefully. It may well be that the two groups that you refer to fall into that category, and we will take them into account as we work through this issue.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Enoch First Nation Development

MR. MASKELL: Mr. Speaker, I understand that the proposed Enoch destination development would be a significant development and would be built on the corner of Winterburn Road and 79th Avenue. These are both city of Edmonton roads. With a development of this magnitude there'll be a huge increase of stress on a pair of already heavily overloaded roads. In fact, at the moment they are country lanes. These roads need to be replaced by roads of freeway standard. The plan is already in place to extend the Whitemud Freeway to highway 60. I am sure that the city of Edmonton and the Enoch First Nation have already approached the Minister of Transportation about the roads. The Edmonton-Meadowlark constituents and the community of Lewis Estates are outraged by this proposed development happening at all. My first question is to the Minister of Transportation. Who is going to be responsible for the cost of these roads, and what is the schedule for construction?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. STELMACH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Public Highways Development Act only applies to those roads and land that are adjacent to a provincial highway network system. As put by the hon. member, the roads in question are not adjacent to any provincial highways, so as a result the roads are the responsibility of the municipality. The current location proposed by the developers is 79th Avenue about four kilometres east of highway 60. I will say that even though the development is not adjacent to a highway, we are interested, though, as to how this development, given the amount of traffic that it will generate, will affect the roads away from the development, even four kilometres away. My information is that representatives from the developer have been meeting with our Department of Transportation, and we are requesting further information with respect to the development.

MR. MASKELL: My first supplemental is to the Minister of Gaming. Given that this is good economic development without a casino, how can the community of Lewis Estates block the inclusion of a casino in this development?

MR. STEVENS: Well, Mr. Speaker, on March 1 of this year a moratorium that had been in place on new casino applications was lifted. That moratorium had been in place since December of 1999, and during that moratorium period we worked hard to establish clear and transparent rules with respect to how new casino applications would proceed.

The particular development that the hon. member refers to is a potential First Nation casino, and the rules with respect to First Nation casinos are essentially identical to those with respect to traditional casinos. So there must be consent from the members of that particular reserve by way of a band resolution. Thereafter, a complete application has to go to the Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission, which is the body that is responsible for evaluation and ultimately the decision with respect to whether a casino is ultimately approved. They have a set of rules which addresses such issues as integrity, facility and operational standards, and they have to work through those. That process will have as part of it the ability of groups to raise concerns or objections, if you will, with the AGLC. It will be necessary for the AGLC to address those appropriately as they arise. They understand that, and I'm sure that that's what they will be doing.

MR. MASKELL: Mr. Speaker, my final supplemental is to the same minister. If the casino becomes a reality, how do some of the casino profits flow to the community outside of the Enoch First Nation for community services such as roads?

MR. STEVENS: I think it's important, Mr. Speaker, to understand that the First Nation gaming policy was put into place in January of last year and that it was part of the overall gaming policy. The splits with respect to the slot revenue, which I'm sure is what the hon. member is referring to in his question, are essentially the same as the traditional casino. There's 15 percent that goes to the operator, there's 15 percent that goes to the charity, in this particular case a First Nation charity – and those funds have to be used appropriately – and 70 percent goes to the Alberta lottery fund, as is the case with a traditional casino. In the First Nation's situation 40 of that 70 percent goes into a fund called the First Nations development fund, which will be under the auspices of the hon. Minister of Community Development, but that leaves 30 percent that goes into the Alberta lottery fund, which is used for the benefit of all Albertans.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Alternative Communications Policy

MR. BONNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Recently I had the pleasure of meeting with several members of Alberta's deaf community along with some representatives of interpreter services groups. They expressed to me serious concerns regarding a lack of interpreters and the government's failure to implement its alternative communications policy from 1995. My questions are to the Minister of Community Development. What has the government done to facilitate the implementation of its alternative communications policy since it was released in 1995?

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Well, Mr. Speaker, I have met with some representatives from that particular community, and unfortunately we haven't made the kind of progress on that particular issue that you would probably be referring to. But if you have some specific people in mind that you'd like me to meet with, I'd be happy to meet with them. Frankly, I haven't heard from them for a little while, but it is something that I will be reviewing over the summer period. It's on the radar screen.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. BONNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given that a document entitled Recommendations for an Alternative Communications Service, from the Premier's Council on the Status of Persons with Disabilities, states that "the current reorganization of government departments . . . [has] created an uncertainty with regards to accountability and responsibility for the immediate funding and provision of interpreter services,” can the minister tell us what his department has done to streamline services for the deaf?

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Yes. In fact, Mr. Speaker, last year the Premier’s council did an extensive consultation throughout the province, and we’ve now just about completed the Alberta disability strategy. That will be available very soon, and I think all members will be quite happy with that. It was an extremely good process. I don’t have the number in my head of people who actually participated in that process, but we did go to various parts of the province with the issues that are of importance, some of which the hon. member has raised. So as soon as that’s available, I’ll be happy to provide copies of it for the public’s consumption.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. BONNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given that one of the recommendations from the Premier’s Council on the Status of Persons with Disabilities is for “an increase of $400,000 . . . to address the immediate needs for interpreter services in Edmonton, Red Deer and Calgary,” can the minister tell us whether this recommendation was accepted, and if so, how the money was allocated?

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Well, Mr. Speaker, I’m familiar with the number that the hon. member is referencing. I have seen that, and that is perhaps one point of view with respect to the dollars that might be needed should a program like that in fact be endorsed. If you’ll just wait for the report to come out, I’ll be happy to comment further on that. I don’t have a specific amount of money targeted for that specific point at this stage.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

Interdependent Adults

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Alberta government in an effort to mollify right-wing supporters who wish to deny rights to gay and lesbian couples has decided to create a tortured definition of an interdependent adult relationship. No other province has gone this route, but the Alberta government needed a way to satisfy the courts without upsetting social conservatives. However, the government has failed to publicly acknowledge that the federal legislation which extends pension benefits to same-sex couples will not recognize platonic interdependent relationships as valid grounds for those claims. My questions are to the Minister of Justice. Would it not be easier to be honest about what the government is doing, namely extending civil rights to these Albertans, rather than hide behind the thinnest of veils to satisfy a political need?

MR. HANCOCK: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think that the premise that the hon. member has put forward is absolutely wrong. What I’ve said time and time again in this House and outside of this House is that we took a very careful and thorough examination of family law, a very careful and thorough examination of the results, and we’ve brought forward I think very forward-looking and progressive legislation to deal with all types of personal relationships. Some people think that it’s impossible or difficult to say the word “gay.” I don’t believe that, but gay is not everything. There are lots of relationships, and all of those relationships must be dealt with. There’s no sense going piecemeal and dealing with one thing at a time. It’s much, much better to do a thorough and complete analysis of the law, understand the fundamental principles under the law about fairness and who should have access to the law and extend that fairness and access to all appropriate groups at the same time.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Fair enough.

If the notion of legally recognized and platonic relationships does not receive public support, will the government continue to move forward with the legislation to end discrimination to same-sex couples as the courts are demanding?

MR. HANCOCK: Well, Mr. Speaker, that asks for speculation, and it’s not appropriate in question period to deal with issues of speculation. What I can say is this: we’ve done a thorough and complete analysis of the law, we’ve brought forward a very careful and well-thought-out bill, in my humble opinion, and I think that the Legislature and the people of Alberta will be pleased to adopt it.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: will the government at least make the changes to its own pension and benefit plans to allow and accept same-sex relationships so that gay and lesbian Albertans don’t have to drag the government through expensive, long court battles all over again?

MR. HANCOCK: Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member would know if he’d been paying attention that in January certain amendments were made to some of the government’s pension legislation, and I presume that once we’ve done a thorough review of all the regulations, other amendments may well be brought forward.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests

(reversion)

THE SPEAKER: The hon. the Premier.

MR. KLEIN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me a great deal of pleasure today to introduce a friend and a remarkable Albertan and a remarkable Canadian. He’s a Second World War hero. He’s a former Member of Parliament – as a matter of fact, he was Canada’s delegate to the United Nations – a former Member of the Legislative Assembly, a former member of Calgary city council, and a member of the Order of Canada. He has done a tremendous amount of work throughout this province, particularly in the city of Calgary, most recently with the Homeless Foundation. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Legislature Mr. Art Smith. I would ask Art to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

head: Members’ Statements

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Friends of Seniors Foundation

MS KRYCZKA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Friends of Seniors

Foundation is an eight-year-old Calgary community service based charity that successfully creates caring partnerships between teens and seniors in care centres. Its mission is to foster friendship between youths and seniors to enhance their quality of life. Founded in 1994, it began with 24 students and 12 seniors volunteering to have a lunch date with each other. Today FSF has grown to 224 students matched with 108 seniors, and there's a waiting list of 15 schools and care centres. Even the founding member, Brenda Wood, did not anticipate this huge demand.

In addition, over the past few years the foundation has also been asked to assist organizations outside of Calgary in setting up similar programs. The Friends of Seniors Foundation encourages a sense of leadership and social responsibility in our youth by partnering students who are looking for a chance to explore career paths, develop social skills, and experience volunteerism with seniors who often are isolated and lonely but have a wealth of knowledge and wisdom to share. One of the FSF's initiatives has been to produce a biography guide available to the general public for the recording of family history and life stories. When given the opportunity to connect, the result is an increase in well-being for both groups and their communities, and the relationships that develop are incredibly caring, deep, and often flourishing into long-lasting friendships.

FSF has grown far beyond lunch dates, and its programs definitely help to meet the need created by the increasing strain of an aging population on our support systems. FSF's goal is to offer their programs to every interested school and care centre in Calgary and to be available to other communities by offering a licence agreement that would provide a program and a resource manual, train the trainer workshops, and ongoing professional support. This incredible intergenerationally based foundation should be highly commended for wanting to share its experience and expertise by modeling their program provincially and nationally. The Friends of Seniors Foundation is truly a unique and successful program that is enhancing the quality of life for many of our precious resources, our seniors and our youth.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Environmental Report Card

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As we near the end of this legislative session, I am pleased to rise and provide the government with an environmental report card including grades and suggestions about how they could improve their performance.

On forests: B, nearly a B plus. While some resource companies are working together on better forest management practices, the government should acknowledge its responsibility and ensure that forest management plans are not secondary to drilling operations. Completing a report called Beyond Merchantable Timbers: Seeing the Forest as a Vital Ecosystem would be a good starting point.

Water: an incomplete so far, pending the results of the water-for-life initiative. The Minister of Environment has put on a very lovely road show, but Albertans aren't ready to trust him yet. We'll wait to see what actions come out of this. A ban on interbasin water transfers would improve this grade when it's assigned. Albertans are not pleased with the freshwater that is being used to enhance oil recovery. Unless the plan is to have us drink oil, there should be some study in this area. More action on watershed management plans would also be appreciated.

Air, soil, and water quality: a B minus. In this area the government could benefit from making policy decisions using baseline and cumulative impact studies. Standards should be set with an eye on best practices based on scientific research, not just on shareholder reports. Having a more active role in the promotion of new technology should be given some consideration.

Fish habitats: sadly, Mr. Speaker, a solid F. The government needs to quit blaming the cormorants and clean up its act. Committing sufficient resources for fisheries management is essential. A report on what really caused the mess in the commercial fishing industry is a good summer research project. Too many people were allowed in, or the rules were not enforced. We'll be looking for some answers here. Less talk and more action would help this grade. There are a number of groups in the province anxious to assist in this area.

Albertans look forward to the government following up on these suggestions so that we have still some nature left to appreciate.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Green Certificate Program

MR. JOHNSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Agriculture continues to be a major contributing factor to the success of our economy in Alberta. The success of the industry can be partially attributed to the programs that have been developed that encourage and train our youth in the agriculture industry. In co-operation with the farming industry since 1975 Alberta Agriculture, Food and Rural Development has managed an apprenticeship-style skill-training program for youth called the green certificate. Thousands of graduates have learned cow/calf, dairy, beef, crop, sheep, and swine skills. These people have filled jobs as technicians, production supervisors, managers, and family farm partners. The success of the program would not have been achieved if it had not been for one man: Walter McNary. Mr. McNary developed the green certificate program in the early 1970s, and the program was based on teaching students an on-the-job approach to learning the agriculture industry. Along with his first employee, Doug Taylor, and then Walter Scott the program was developed and began to grow. Doug Taylor and Walter Scott, previously introduced today, continue to lead the program.

Today the green certificate program has evolved into an extremely successful avenue for young people to become trained and pursue a career in the agriculture sector. It boasts thousands of graduates and has become a blend of the interests of trainees, trainers, and employers to improve the overall standard of performance in farming. A recent development in the green certificate program was to have the program accepted by Alberta Learning, and now hundreds of high school students are accessing the program to learn valuable work skills. The program also has become a great rural development tool, which shows that Walter McNary's vision still lives on within the program.

Walter McNary recognized the need for skilled training on farms in Alberta and in Canada. He is clearly a pioneer in our agriculture industry, and I would like to thank him on behalf of my constituency, which he is still a part of, for starting a program that is widely revered across Alberta.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Electricity Deregulation

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Premier, the Energy minister, and the Government Services minister have all failed to address concerns about electricity deregulation presented to them by not only the Official Opposition but also one full year ago by their own market surveillance administrator. As a result, cabinet members and even the normally tame backbenchers have begun to revolt.

The Power Pool Council wrote a decision based on the market surveillance administrator's work which identified a number of issues in electricity billing. The report noted that for small customers "the actual hourly consumption is never known," and the subsequent need for profiling "means that there still remains a source of some error." In some cases unaccounted for energy represents 25 percent of a bill. Furthermore, the computer programs designed to settle energy consumption were incorporated without having undertaken the rigorous testing that one would normally expect in such situations.

The settlement systems code developed by the government for deregulation "is silent on the relationship between the retailer and its customer. This relationship is subject only to normal commercial laws that apply in Alberta and is not specifically addressed in any regulations." This lack of concern for consumers is epidemic in this government's electricity deregulation scheme. Deregulation was not developed for consumers but for corporations, and that is why it is the corporations who are benefiting, not consumers. The report reinforces this when it states that the system settlement code deals only with the relationship between the [load settlement agent], the Power Pool and the retailers, but does not include customers. There is a basic issue of fairness to be assessed with respect to the treatment of customers.

EPCOR and Enmax are not to be blamed. It is the government that set these rules. That is where the blame lies. Electricity should be a service, Mr. Speaker, not an expensive commodity.

Thank you.

head: Presenting Petitions

THE SPEAKER: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, I rise to table a petition which is signed by some 117 Albertans petitioning the Legislative Assembly to urge the government of Alberta to roll back postsecondary tuition fees by 30 percent.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Notices of Motions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise pursuant to Standing Order 34(2)(a) to give notice that on Monday I will move that written questions 5, 6, 7, 8, and 9 be dealt with on that day. Since there are no written questions or motions for returns beyond those which I have just cited, there will be none requiring a motion to stand and retain their place. We will have dealt with them all, and we're very pleased to announce that.

Thank you.

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to table five copies of the memo which was referred to by the Premier earlier in question period today.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development.

MR. CARDINAL: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise in the Assembly today and table the appropriate number of responses to questions raised in the Committee of Supply on April 16, 2002. There were indeed some very good questions put forward by the opposition and our members that afternoon. I am very confident that the responses our ministry has developed are very informative and appropriate to these important issues raised.

Thank you again, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

MR. BOUTILIER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to table the requisite number of copies of the special areas trust account audited financial statements as of December 31, 2001.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings today. The first is a letter from Shirley Heather-Kalau, chief administrative officer for the village of Coumts, noting that the mayor and council for the village passed a resolution on April 10 in support of the reinstatement of the community lottery boards.

The second is a letter from Patricia Barr on behalf of the Carstairs library board again asking that the community lottery board program be reinstated.

My third tabling, Mr. Speaker, is from Don Hepburn, chairman of the Normandeau Cultural and Natural History Society. He's writing to the Premier and the members for Red Deer-North and Red Deer-South asking for the community lottery boards to be reinstated.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have one tabling today. It's the appropriate number of copies of eight pages of examples of health care fraud cases involving health care businesses in the U.S. Today's series totals over $1.025 billion.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have one tabling today. It is an information letter regarding the Shaw Conference Centre strike. This letter is presented by the UFCW local 401, and it encourages everyone to call the mayor, the city councillors, the Citizen Action Centre, and EDE to see if there can be a successful resolution to this labour dispute.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table one set of 21 letters from residents of Edmonton addressed to the Premier. These residents are concerned about the lack of housing for people suffering from mental illness and physical disabilities, and they are urging the government to work with the municipal and federal governments in ending homelessness in Alberta.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to table the requisite number of copies of the annual report of the Mental Health Patient Advocate and also my responses to motions for returns 5, 6, and 8.

head: Projected Government Business

THE SPEAKER: The Acting Official Opposition House Leader.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd now ask the Government House Leader to provide us with the projected government business for the week of May 13 to May 16.

THE SPEAKER: The Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On Monday, May 13, at 9 p.m., under Government Bills and Orders I anticipate that we'll deal with Government Motion 26. We would then go into third readings on Bill 27, the Appropriation Act, 2002, and Bill 29, the Intestate Succession Amendment Act, 2002, Committee of the Whole on Bill 26, third reading on Bill 26, and as per the Order Paper.

On Tuesday, May 14, prior to Government Bills and Orders we anticipate introducing Bill 31, the Security Management Statutes Amendment Act, 2002. We anticipate the attendance of Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor to provide royal assent to bills passed by this House and thereafter as per the Order Paper. It is potentially anticipated that we may be moving an adjournment motion on Tuesday afternoon pursuant to Government Motion 26 if that's passed by the House.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie advised earlier in the question period that she'd be rising on a point of order. Is someone proceeding on that point of order?

MR. MacDONALD: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Point of Order
Allegations against a Member

MR. MacDONALD: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise on behalf of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie. The citation I would like to use is Standing Order 23(h), "Makes allegations against another member." The hon. Premier in an exchange with the Official Opposition in question period – and I don't have the benefit of the Blues; I don't believe they're here yet. The response was inappropriate.

Now, the opposition has no authority over what comes from FOIP, and FOIP, freedom of information and protection of privacy, as we all know, never provides anyone with an original copy. In regard to the document this certainly has an action request on it. It is action request 47315, and it has a six-digit control number from the FOIP co-ordinator, 000060. It is a document that has been presented to the opposition, and the opposition brought it forward in the Assembly. It is not improper, it is not incorrect, nor is it incomplete.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The fact of the matter is, though, that the hon. member has missed the whole point of it. What happened apparently, it would seem – and one has to make assumptions on these things – is that the members opposite provided a FOIP request and got copies of documents. An hon. member in the House in the first exchange then asked a question about why a document would not be on letterhead and not be signed. Well, the reasonable answer to that presumably might be – but it would be speculation – that they got the file copy from the file that they FOIPed. The document is obviously addressed to other people. It's addressed to the Hon. Ralph Klein, Premier, and members of Executive Council, and of course the signed copy of the memo and the letterhead copy of the memo might reasonably be found on the files of the people it was sent to.

But the question was raised in the House in an attempt to make some suggestion of impropriety, I would suggest, so the hon. members themselves on the opposite side who brought argumentation into the process and tried to suggest impropriety by talking about an unsigned memo that was not on letterhead – that was the insinuation the opposite side brought forward. So when the hon. Premier comes forward with a memo on letterhead and signed, which one might reasonably find on the files of the people to whom it's addressed, and then refers to the fact that they're doing "stuff" – I think "stuff" is a very, very polite reference to what was being attempted by the opposition. [interjection]

THE SPEAKER: No. Just once, hon. member. It's not a debate. No. The hon. member has already made his case.

As far as the chair in attempting to understand this – umbrage was taken by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie and the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar when the hon. leader of the government responded and basically said the following after the chair had asked the hon. Premier to table the material: "I'll be happy to table it. I'll have these five copies. It is the original, not the, you know, stuff they tried to table yesterday." This may be a disagreement in the utilization of words, but it's not a point of order.

Speaker's Ruling
Decorum

THE SPEAKER: However, the chair would like to advise that an hon. member did very clearly violate Standing Orders this afternoon, and that's Standing Order 13(4). There was no intervention of the chair because the chair has chosen repeatedly never to intervene when an hon. member is making a member's statement, but when the hon. Member for Calgary-West was providing her statement, there was a clear violation of 13(4), and 13(4) states that "when a member is speaking, no person shall . . . pass between that member and the Chair," and one individual did.

head: Orders of the Day

head: Government Bills and Orders
Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Tannas in the chair]

THE CHAIR: I'd call the Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 27
Appropriation Act, 2002

THE CHAIR: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I have not had an opportunity yet to speak regarding Bill 27, and certainly I still have a number of outstanding questions. One has to look at the entire schedule, the votes that are presented, whether it's the Legislative Assembly Office or the various departments of the government – Aboriginal Affairs through to Children's Services, Energy through to Transportation – look at this bill and see the solid figures and wonder how a government that had prudent fiscal management could somehow spend 20 percent of its budget outside a fiscal framework. Now, I certainly hope this is not going to happen with this bill, but one must learn from our mistakes.

We look at the planning that has gone into the budget, and we look at some of the flip-flops that have occurred and some of the doublespeak that has been heard by various groups across the province. We look at the changes to the transportation grants. We look at the uproar that caused with not only the mayor of Calgary and the mayor of Edmonton but various municipalities across the province that all had concerns about this. It was changed; it was very quickly changed to consider the interests of the citizens of those respective communities.

Now, we look at Gaming and what has occurred there. When we look at this entire budget – many individuals in this Assembly are reluctant to speak in this Assembly regarding the issues because there's another process for those hon. members, and that's the standing policy committees. They can go to the standing policy committees, which are not accessible to members of the opposition. Our constituents expect us to analyze the budget in this Assembly, but hon. members of this Assembly who can attend the standing policy committees and have a part to play in the proceedings can, it is suggested, influence the budget.

Now, whatever department we're looking at at some point, Mr. Chairman, is going to go before a standing policy committee. I'm going to speak specifically about Gaming and the changes to the community lottery boards at this time. How this termination of the $51 million or $53 million program happened, I'll never know, but I can happen to guess the discussion that must have taken place. It must have been a vigorous, heated political debate at that standing policy committee to decide that we're going to terminate this program, and it was with a great deal of excitement and fanfare that the program – I believe it's 1998 – was initiated, and it was terminated. Now, I of course am not allowed to go there, but I can only assume that this happened after this vigorous debate in the standing policy committee.

In light of the referendums and the votes and the discussions that occurred across this province regarding the whole issue of VLTs and whether it was right or whether it was wrong to accept money or the profit from those machines, the community lottery boards were a compromise. It was supposedly the political fix to appease a lot of people who were uneasy for one reason or another about accepting this form of funding, and it was very well run. The volunteer boards throughout the province certainly knew the communities, because the majority of those volunteers would of course live in those communities, and they knew where the money was needed. How we could in this process of discussing the budget before it is tabled in this Assembly at the standing policy committees eliminate or terminate that program is beyond me.

We're going to take a significant amount of the gaming revenue and use it for debt repayment. It wouldn't surprise me if our debt, which is currently near $6 billion, is not as great as one would think, and perhaps this surplus that we're looking at is going to be greater. Mr. Chairman, I can only imagine what might occur in this Assembly if that event were to happen long before the centennial year of 2005 and what a great deal of fanfare. The public relations experts would be, to say the least, zooming around and making sure that every Albertan was aware of this event.

Now, part of the reason for the success is going to be because of course we had to cancel that one program: the community lottery boards. We can even have up here in the corner by the brass rail a trumpet, and you would think that this would be from the medieval courts of England. There would be a banner on the trumpet that will say, "Debt reduction achieved," and it will roll down as the player begins to play his tune. That's fine, I suppose, but what sort of damage is already going to be done to the Alberta communities as a result of this canceling one program and concentrating specifically on debt reduction?

When you look at total revenue, it is going to be impossible for this goal to be achieved. The economy is not that robust. Personal income tax is scheduled to be roughly 24 percent of our revenue. Nonrenewable resource revenue is going to be roughly 19 percent. Corporate income tax is going to be 8 percent. Premiums, fees, and licences are going to be roughly 8 percent. Well, we know that there have been significant increases in premiums, fees, and licences. We know that nonrenewable resource revenue is at the moment going to be much greater than what was anticipated in the budget. How much greater? We certainly don't know, and we can't rely on it. It astonishes me that so few Albertans realize that conventional oil production has been in a state of decline in this province and conventional oil production has been in a state of decline for 30 years. We still make a sizable amount of money on conventional oil royalties, but it is not nearly what we make in royalties from natural gas. As the price of natural gas increases, so does the royalty rate, but we certainly are, whether it's because of geopolitics or economic activity, seeing quite a surge in oil prices, Mr. Chairman.

Now, there is a robust economy and personal income tax that may be a little greater than perhaps what was anticipated, and the same can be said for corporate income tax, but we cannot have this flip-flop all the time. A budget must mean something. If Albertans are suspicious of this process and this budget, you can't fault them for having suspicions, because leading up to the election, we saw some undeniably uncontrolled, unexplained spending patterns. You couldn't keep up with the announcements. The large majority was achieved, and then there was again this plea of poverty, and oops, we may have overestimated some things, and there has to be, certainly, reductions. I don't know if those policies are planned, are thought out well enough.

If we're going to have this concentration or this emphasis on nonrenewable resource revenue in this province and everything is going to depend on the price of oil and the price of natural gas and other natural gas liquids, I would have to say again that it's time for the government to swallow their pride and adopt the fiscal stabilization fund, the idea that has been proposed for a number of years by the Official Opposition. It is a bill that is before the Assembly under the name of the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East. I don't know how to encourage or to sell the government members on this idea, but at least over the period of the summer study this idea, acknowledge that the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East is right and that it's the right thing to do.

I see that at the front of this booklet we have the title The Right Decisions for Challenging Times. Well, one of those right decisions is the establishment of the fiscal stability fund, and particularly now that we're going to be lucky enough to have perhaps a few more dollars than we had anticipated whenever this document was being drafted and this bill was being drafted, perhaps now is the time to put some of this money away in the Nicol fund. That's what we could call it, Mr. Chairman. Yes, I think that's a suitable name for the fiscal stability fund. When we have the next downturn in resource revenue, this money could be drawn off. It could be perhaps used to help finance Economic Development. It certainly could be used in the Health and Wellness portfolio so that the regional health authorities, regardless of how many of them there are going to be, whether there are going to be seven or 17 or maybe two – I heard a number today that there could be as few as two: one in the north and one in the south. Certainly the officials there would know, whenever they're doing their budgets, that regardless of the commodity prices that are set internationally or in the case of natural gas in North America, there would be money available to fund the programs.

The same would apply to Human Resources and Employment. In fact, it would allow the minister there to perhaps plan to have an increase at least to match the rate of inflation or to consider the consumer price index to allow the citizens of this province who are living very modestly on SFI benefits or on AISH benefits to know that there would be an annual increase in their benefits to match at least the cost of living increases. We all know, Mr. Chairman, that rents have gone up because of increased economic activity and citizens moving to Alberta from other places in Canada, from other places around the world for that matter of fact. They're driving up rents, because of course accommodation is scarce, and one of the first groups to be affected by this is citizens who are living modestly on those benefits, and that's through no fault of their own. Many of them have disabilities of one form or another that prevent them from participating in the workforce. So the Minister of Human Resources and Employment in planning the budget of that department would certainly be a beneficiary of having a fiscal stability fund.

Now, infrastructure. Gosh, we have projects that are planned, and then they're canceled. We have contractors who are looking two and three years down the road, sometimes beyond that whenever they're financing construction machinery. Some of this machinery is very, very expensive. Whenever they're purchasing this equipment, they sort of have to look a little bit into the future, and while they gamble a bit, they make a business decision that, yes, I'm going to be able to utilize this machine in my operations and eventually pay for it. If we had a stability fund, there could be much better planning for infrastructure projects, whether they're overpasses or roads or bridges or maybe even the highway that hopefully will be built from Fort McMurray across to the Peace district. Hopefully, this highway will at some point in the future be built. I don't know what we'd name that highway either.

AN HON. MEMBER: Cardinal Drive.

MR. MacDONALD: Cardinal Drive is one name that has come forward for that highway. It would certainly be a long drive. I'm told it would be four hours at 100 kilometres an hour. That would certainly be a long drive. Before we construct Cardinal Drive, I think we need a fiscal stability fund.

Now, certainly with Learning when we look at what happened recently with the public education system across the province, we had no money to settle the teachers issue. Suddenly we had I think it was $51 million to put on the table to discuss the issue of the pension liability with the teachers. I'm grateful that someone found the money somewhere. That is interesting, because while this whole issue was developing, Mr. Chairman, I and several others in the Liberal caucus thought that there was a sensible solution to this in the money that was already set aside for debt repayment. Some of that could have been used, and certainly that plan would have worked. It certainly would have worked at the time, and it would have prevented so much confusion. It would have prevented all the bad feelings that have occurred between the government and the teachers across the province. Hopefully, those relationships between the teachers and the government will improve, but if we had a fiscal stability fund, we wouldn't have had relations that way either.

At this time, Mr. Chairman, I will cede the floor to a colleague. Thank you.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

MR. STELMACH: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I don't normally rise and participate in some of the debates in the House, but I just wanted to clarify some information from the hon. member across the way – and it will be recorded in Hansard – that isn't true. He said that the Transportation budget has been changed. The Transportation budget has not been changed. You're still voting on $893 million. So don't again try and confuse Albertans by our fourth-quarter results, which ended on March 31, 2002. We started a new budget on April 1, so what we're voting on is from April 1, 2002, to March 31, 2003. What was done before March 31 according and pursuant to the rules of the Fiscal Responsibility Act, again on the preliminary fourth-quarter results, was to put back some of the money that Transportation had given up in the October correction for very good reason: we could not end the year in a deficit. Okay? So $155 million of the $300 million that was given up in October came back to this department.

However, the only way that we could give that money back or use that money in the Department of Transportation was to then give it to municipalities, which brought all of their funding back to historic levels of the previous year. We could not take any of that money and put it into our own infrastructure, the provincial highway network system, because the rules say that we can only progress pay. We don't build roads in January and February in this province, so we had nothing to progress pay.

There was no flip-flop of any kind on the budget. The budget that I brought forward through Committee of Supply was $893 million, and that's what we're voting on. We're not voting on any additional money.

The reason we did what we did was to ensure that we kept the municipalities whole at least to March of 2003 to give both the government of Alberta and municipalities an opportunity to work out some sort of a new arrangement pursuant to the Financial Management Commission, that's now in the process of hearing various presentations from many stakeholders. That will give us a better idea of how we can put more predictability into the Infrastructure and Transportation budgets of the province. I just want to again reiterate: no flip-flop; we followed the rules.

Where did the money come from? We knew that corporate tax revenue was payable by the end of February, and that was about $200 million over what was forecast. Given the unbelievable cold weather in March – nobody predicted that in October, I know that for sure, the coldest March in 122 years, I believe – we knew the gas volumes as a result of that cold weather. Of course, I suspect that the colder it is, the more gas people use to heat their homes and that industry uses as well. As a result we then had the better predictability of what our royalties would be on that volume of gas sold during that period of time.

So for the purposes, Mr. Chairman, of just ensuring that we have the correct facts in Hansard, that the public is going to read tomorrow, I thank you for the opportunity to just put some of that information on the table and correct it.

Thank you.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. MacDONALD: Mr. Chairman . . .

THE CHAIR: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, Edmonton-Glengarry had indicated last time that he wished to speak.

MR. MacDONALD: Yes. Mr. Chairman, he was gracious enough to provide me with an opportunity to respond to the remarks that have just been presented to this Assembly by the hon. Minister of Transportation.

Last year certainly the budget was $1.5 billion, and as the hon. minister noted, there is a significant reduction this year. There's more to this than salt, sand, and gravel. There certainly is. Everyone knows that the winters are cold in this area of the world. When we have that much of a flip-flop from one year to the next, it is very, very difficult for anyone to plan.

Now, perhaps the hon. minister sent a memo and said that we're going to have a cold winter, and perhaps as a result of this I don't know what my budget is going to be, but it may be reduced. I don't know that. A lot of municipalities across this province, certainly from what they expressed in the rotunda here after the budget was announced, didn't get the memo. The hon. minister is entitled to his opinion, and so are Albertans.

Thank you.

MR. STELMACH: Just for the record, I wasn't expressing an opinion. I was simply stating fact. You know, in terms of opinion the opinion was that it would be nice if we could predict the weather six months hence, but sometimes it's difficult to predict it two days in advance, let alone half a year.

The truth is that our budget again is from April 1 to March 31, and I hope the hon. member across the way knows what he's going to be voting on, not on fourth-quarter results.

Knowing how cold the month of March was and the volume of gas that was used during that period of time and the fact that we knew that we had $200 million more in corporate tax, that would have all gone against the debt by March 31 if we hadn't given it to municipalities, not returned it to the department, had been silent on it. Can you imagine the kind of uproar or the flip-flop that would have occurred in June when the municipalities would have found out that we had this money and we didn't restore some of the historical funding to them? So I think the decision was right. There wasn't any kind of a flip-flop. We said that any new money coming in the same fiscal year in the fourth quarter would go back to those departments that gave it up. So we did exactly what we said we were going to do in the month of October.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry, followed by the hon. Minister of Finance. Just back and forth.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure to get up and speak to Bill 27, the Appropriation Act, this afternoon and certainly to make some comments about the whole process that we've endured this year. I suppose it all started for me when I attended an AAMD and C meeting in south Edmonton. So many people at that meeting that particular day expressed concerns about how Municipal Affairs wanted our municipalities to have three- to five-year business plans in place, ready to go, and the comments that came back at that particular meeting were: how do you expect us to have three- to five-year business plans when you are running one- to three-day budget plans?

Certainly the municipalities were very, very frustrated with this whole process of the budget this year. The AUMA was very frustrated with this whole process. The road construction industry in this province was set on their heels. Because of what had been forecast that they would have for spending in upcoming years, they had made plans based on this. Of course, when revenues aren't there, then certainly things have to be cut back.

As well, when we are looking at the whole budgeting process, there is a much better way to do it. We can't certainly look at year to year from here. We have to look at next year as well, and we have to look at what our costs are going to be next year. We have to figure in things like inflation. We have to have stable, predictable funding in order that those businesspeople in this province that make huge investments to supply the services and the skills that we require can fulfill those and won't be left holding the bag when all of a sudden we have a hiccup wherever it may occur and the money isn't there. So, yes, we do have a lot of work to do in this province on budgeting.

If you look at any good budget, there is a stretch factor not only in revenues. There's also a stretch factor that comes into play in our expenses. Now, unfortunately that stretch factor has only been factored into expenses, and we saw that last year when so many dollars were allocated to various types of programs in this province, were based on projections that money was paid out, and all of a sudden we had to put the brakes on and say that there is not going to be enough revenue, enough cash flowing in the way the economy in the world was going and the way we had prices in natural gas and oil being cut back. So we do have to look at both sides of this issue, and that, Mr. Chairman, was totally, totally unforgivable when you think that that year was the year when we had the second greatest revenues in the history of this province, and we are making cutbacks. Now, that tells us that there is a serious problem with our budgeting process.

When I look at this year – and again I'm going to refer to the government's own document. I'm going to refer to Budget 2002: The Right Decisions for Challenging Times, the fiscal plan. We look and we see in here on page 31:

There is a wide range of views about what balance will actually be achieved between these factors. Oil price forecasts range from US$18.00 per barrel to over US$26.50 over the next three years. Budget 2002 assumes that oil prices will average US$20 per barrel for the next three years.

Now, certainly there isn't much flex there. There certainly isn't much stretch. We are going to be basing our budgets on a lowball forecast, yet we certainly aren't doing that to our expenses. So what we do is we make these grand announcements of all the projects that are going to happen, of everything that is going to happen in settlements to our various public services, yet when the revenues aren't there, then of course we have to start scaling back. We have to start making cutbacks if we are going to fulfill our own laws that we have made in this province.

As well, the Minister of Transportation has outlined here that because of situations and the way our economy goes and a cold March, we certainly can't predict accurately those extra revenues that would flow in in March. We all know that we've been having not only different weather patterns in this province for many centuries, but we've also been having this whole cyclical type of revenue where it is a boom or a bust. We are going to have good years where moneys flow in; we're going to have difficult years. I can only think what sort of shape this government would have been in if they would have had to endure the $10-per-barrel oil prices that the Getty government had to. Does that mean we stop education in this province, we stop health care? Or do we run a deficit, as they had to do? Yet in the year when we have the second-most revenue in this province's history, we are making cutbacks. What does that say about the whole process? It tells us that we're not very good.

Now, then, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar once again mentioned this whole idea of a stability fund. This is starting to gain widespread acceptance across this province, and it certainly is one of those programs that will make certain that we don't have to make cuts to essential services when we do have a cutback in revenues, as we had in the past year. We didn't only have the cutbacks in revenues because of our oil and natural gas prices; we had a tragedy in New York that impacted the entire world.

So it is time in this province that we did have some prudent fiscal management, and as part of that management, we don't base it on hoping that we have large sums of money at the end of the year to pay off a debt while we're making cuts to essential services, while we have provincewide strikes in education. It isn't working.

So when we do look at a number of programs that are impacted here, we also have to look at some other things. I noticed when the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar was talking about us having a Cardinal Drive, the Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs said: well, we should call it Liberal Drive, where you can only go in reverse. But I'll tell you what: Albertans would have loved it if so many of these fees that have been announced, user fees in place of taxes, would have gone in reverse instead of increased. In the year that we have the second-most revenues, we increase user fees to Albertans. [interjections] Mr. Chairman, I would invite any of the hon. members to please join in the debate. They have the opportunity. I know that their constituents would love to hear from them. They would like them to fulfill their promise from the election that they will be the voice in this Assembly for their constituents, but not in the form of comments like the Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs. No. They certainly don't want to see their driver's licence renewal . . .

MR. MacDONALD: And they even campaigned on health care premiums.

MR. BONNER: Ooh. Yes. Well, I'm getting to that too, I think. Yes.

Driver's licence renewals: the current fee going from $40 to $55. Very good. Not a tax. A user fee. A driver's licence reclassification is going from $5 to $13, and agent services fees, which have increased $7 on the same service where they didn't have that before. We have name or address changes going from zero dollars to $13, and again an agent service fee is $7. We have reinstatement for alcohol suspension going from $140 to $200. We have reinstatement for nonalcohol suspension going from $25 to $50.

Now, when we look at vehicle registrations, Mr. Chairman, we have many Albertans affected by this. I think that we have probably as high per capita number of cars as any other province in Canada. When we look at that, we look at passenger vehicle registration. The current fee is $48 going up to $61. We have motorcycles and off-highway vehicles going from $30 to $36. We have recreation and other trailers, onetime fee going from $30 to $100. Commercial trailers up to 34,000 kilograms: the range was from $96 to $1,848, and that's going up to a minimum $106 to an upper fee of $2,033. We have commercial trucks that range from $66 to $3,138, and that's going to increase to $73 as the base amount to a high of $3,452. Now, we also have restricted commercial vehicles, and again these fees are going up. Government plates: onetime fee going from $16 to $61.

School buses, the vehicles that transport our students to and from class: certainly we have much more reliance on school buses in this province at this particular time, simply because we're not building schools. I heard the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs at a public forum tell his constituents how they were going to have a new high school in Castle Downs, but I haven't heard any announcements of that yet. As well, public buses, this price is going up. Mr. Chairman, this government hasn't done very well.

We've had a campaign going on in Afghanistan to wipe out terrorism. There are threats that we're going to have further campaigns to wipe out terrorism, possibly in Iraq, and the price of oil keeps going up. We continue to have more and more revenue pouring in, yet we keep increasing user fees.

Now, then, we had hon. members in this House – in fact, I believe it was the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning who proposed that we eliminate health care premiums. I thought that was an excellent motion, and I supported that motion, especially when I think that we are one of the two provinces in Canada that continues to have health care premiums that must be paid by individuals.

Everyday we hear in this Assembly about the Alberta advantage. Where is the Alberta advantage for these people that have to pay health care premiums? Where is the Alberta advantage for all those people that had an increase in their fees? Where is the Alberta advantage, Mr. Chairman, when we have the biggest strike in the history of the province in our public education system? Where is the advantage when we have parents that must be out fund-raising for essentials in education? And how sad it is that we are looking at bringing legislation into this House which will eliminate parent fund-raising for essentials in education.

I see, as well, that certainly the people that are involved in the horse race industry are experiencing the Alberta advantage. They have a $33 million line item in the budget. I see the people that are operating Swan Hills are getting $26 million. This is to process hazardous waste from outside the province. Now, then, we look at our community lottery boards, the very grass roots of the people of this province, the people in a local situation, the people writing their propositions, their requests for funding, the people that know where that funding should go, and we cut out the community lottery boards.

As well, we have seen, certainly since the budget came in, flip-flops on the fuel tax revenue sharing. We have certainly seen a flip-flop on what's happening with students taking grade 10 credits. We have seen the education minister in the press, not in negotiations and certainly not at the local school board level, where it should have occurred, offer $53 million to teachers' pensions, withdraw it, and now we see it's back on the table, and it is to stop job action that has taken place. Certainly we've bungled this whole issue with the teachers.

AN HON. MEMBER: We?

MR. BONNER: Yes, "we." Because I'll tell you what. I sit in this Legislature along with 82 other members, and we better take responsibility for what happens in this province, and I certainly don't have any problem standing up and saying that on that particular issue we didn't do a very good job.

AN HON. MEMBER: Do you think the three of you can handle the whole government?

MR. BONNER: I think we're going to get the opportunity.

Now, then, we did have work stoppage in education. We did have work action by teachers. We had protests. We had protests in St. Albert. We had protests out here on the steps of the Legislature. We had protests by all levels of education. We had the chairman of the Edmonton public school board certainly not supporting a letter from the provincial chair that complimented the government on their handling. We are looking here at a very, very poor budgeting process.

We also know, Mr. Chairman, that we have what we call the Alberta advantage. We certainly have had a huge influx of people to this province, and they have moved into Calgary, Edmonton, Fort McMurray, Grande Prairie, I believe Brooks as well. These people have had incredible influxes of people moving into their communities from other parts of Canada and the world. Yet when this occurs, they place just a tremendous pressure on the infrastructure. It places tremendous pressure on our hospital system. It places tremendous stresses on our schools. It places tremendous stresses on the transportation systems. I still think of the number of people in Calgary and what's occurring here in Edmonton as well – our transportation systems are being taxed with the number of people on them.

Mr. Chairman, I know my time is winding down here, and I must say that this particular budget has fallen short of what Albertans expected. This particular budget didn't deliver what Albertans need, and they certainly don't need user fees that are increased instead of taxes. They don't like being told they live in the province with the lowest taxes when user fees go up. So I look forward to further debate on this issue.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

MR. LUKASZUK: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's always difficult to follow an astute and an eloquent speaker. It's a good thing that I don't have to worry about that today.

But I do want to thank the previous speaker for bringing up the topic of a high school in Castle Downs. He may be aware of the fact that despite his lack of involvement Edmonton Catholic school board has reprioritized its infrastructure and expenditures and will be building a high school in Castle Downs, and I believe it has not much to do with this particular member of this House. However, if he does want to do away with all the user fees and expenditures that he is not happy with, at the expense of which programs, and would it be at the expense of a high school in Castle Downs that he would do away with those expenditures?

THE CHAIR: The hon. member.

MR. BONNER: Oh, thank you very much. It always is a pleasure to respond and . . .

THE CHAIR: The hon. leader of the third party was standing up? No.

Okay, sorry. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Yes, it is an honour to respond to that, and certainly, Mr. Chairman, the whole point of my address was – and I'm sorry that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs missed it – if we budget properly, we do not have to cut. Certainly I've had a very long involvement with the Edmonton Catholic school system . . . [interjection] Oh, we can handle that. Give us a shot. We're going to show you how to do that in the near future.

As well, Mr. Chairman, I've had a long association with the Edmonton separate school board going back to 1969, when I had the opportunity to student teach at St. Cecilia's junior high and then again to have employment in Edmonton separate schools with Mount Carmel, with St. Cecilia's. I had quite an extensive time coaching various sports at Archbishop O'Leary. In fact, one particular year our basketball team managed to get to the 4A provincials, and we were doing a very good job there. As well, I've had three children that have gone through that system, that have received just excellent education, and I certainly take my hat off to all those teachers who entered education and remained in education and, you know, had full-time employment for a number of years and certainly got a great view of what happens in the school systems. It's unfortunate that those people who tried to enter education and for whatever reasons didn't stay in education have a very narrow focus on what happens.

As I was saying, Mr. Chairman, there are many, many needs in this province which continue to go unmet even though we have tremendous revenues flowing in at this particular time. As well, when I look at our school system, we had I think last year in the budget $800 million committed to infrastructure in our school system, yet those had to be deferred, and I wonder in many cases if they ever will see the benefits of what at one time was put out there for them.

Of course, Mr. Chair, I certainly welcome the opportunity to address those issues raised by the Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs, and I certainly enjoyed that, and now I would like to cede the floor so other members may participate in the debate today. Thank you.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I move that we adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

3:50

DR. TAFT: Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Point of Order Recognizing a Member

DR. TAFT: I feel unquestionably that I had risen well before the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud to participate in the debate, and I wasn't recognized.

THE CHAIR: You certainly were. My indication was that the minister was going to – but in any event, the precedent is that if you are having a debate, which we've been having this afternoon for – what? – an hour and 20 minutes or so, and it's been back and forth and back and forth, so right now it's forth. The chair has no means of discerning what contribution any member might make to the debate, but those are the rules. Then if there's a tie, it is usually to the person who first goes. As you know, hon. member, we often have lists.

DR. TAFT: Just to point out that under Standing Order 17 it reads, "When two or more members rise to speak, the Speaker calls upon the member who, in his opinion, first rose in his place." It's my view that I rose several seconds before the Member for Edmonton-Whitemud.

Thank you.

THE CHAIR: The chair would agree wholeheartedly with what you said. You did rise ahead, but as I was saying, when you're in a debate, it goes back and forth. The opposition doesn't have the right to have continuous speakers on an item, and we've had several government speakers on this occasion, and as I say, the chair indicated that he understood that the Government House Leader was going to speak on the item. The chair has no knowledge of what that might be.

On the point of order the hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Yes, Mr. Chair, if it would help, I would assure the hon. member that we have no intention of precluding debate. There are a couple of other items that we had understood we'd move to this afternoon, and we have to come back to this item, in any event, this afternoon. So he'll have the opportunity to speak to it, presuming that the other matters get dealt with, as was our understanding.

THE CHAIR: Okay. We did have a motion. It was voted on, and the motion was to adjourn debate on Bill 27. We've now done so.

Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act, 2002

THE CHAIR: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. At this time I have just a few remarks regarding Bill 28, the Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act, 2002. Certainly this has been discussed by the Official Opposition caucus. There was no hesitation in supporting the Employment Pension Plans Act. This is, to say the least, housekeeping.

The Railway Act: at some time there was a considerable amount of discussion in caucus regarding this, whether we should support this or not. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry, long before his days as a teacher in the separate system in the city, had some experience as a railroader, as I understand it, and his knowledge of the railroads of this province is much more detailed than mine. I do notice that there is a slight change here in the amount of notice that has to be given publicly whenever the railways change, and I have been assured that this is not significant.

THE CHAIR: Hon. member, you from time to time go and begin to talk to the row of people next to you. It's impossible to hear you, and I don't know whether Hansard has any problems. I've got this cranked up as high as I can, and I'm missing it.

MR. MacDONALD: Yes. I apologize for that, and I'll try to conduct myself more appropriately in the future. With that, I will conclude my remarks on Bill 28, the Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act, and I will cede the floor to another colleague. But in my defence, Mr. Chairman, I must say that I have few friends in this Assembly, and this gentleman is one of them.

Thank you.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I do appreciate the opportunity to rise and particularly talk about the section on railways in this particular act. As we know, since the early 1900s we've had quite a change in railways in this province. We saw first of all a very rapid growth in railways in the early years of this province and in the growth of branchlines, and it seemed that everybody at that particular time was getting into this whole idea that railroads were the way to go. Certainly Alberta was the place to build them or one of the places, because we did have such a vast agriculture industry, as we still do today, and we did develop these lines.

Now, as well, what a lot of members in this Assembly might not know – and I'm referring to this book called The Golden Province.

MR. HANCOCK: Point of order.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Government House Leader on a point of order.

Point of Order Brevity

MR. HANCOCK: Yes, Mr. Chairman. We're in committee on Bill 28, and while the rules don't specifically preclude debate on any bill in this House, this is the Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act, and the custom and practice of parliaments is that the Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act is agreed to by all parties before being introduced in the House and does not in this case, I might say, suffer debate. So there's nothing to preclude debate in the rules, but it is the custom and practice and the understanding of all parties that anything that's in the House has already been agreed to. Therefore, it's unusual that we would have more than the introducer and perhaps one perfunctory response. So I'm wondering if the rules have changed, if we don't have that custom and practice in our parliament as is customary in all the parliaments across the British parliamentary system.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry on the point of order.

MR. BONNER: Yes. Well, I appreciate the opportunity to respond to that point of order. I must say that the minister's department certainly took a great deal of time and effort to inform us on the sections of the bill, and certainly I agree with the comments that the hon. minister has said, that, yes, we do in fact agree with the bill, and we're certainly not proposing any amendments or changes. We're supporting the bill. We just had a few comments, and I would like that opportunity to comment on this, if I may.

So that being said, Mr. Chairman, and before the hon. minister rose on his point of order . . . [interjection] Yes?

THE CHAIR: That concludes your comments on the point of order?

MR. BONNER: That's correct.

THE CHAIR: Okay. On the point of order there's no rule or citation offered with respect to it. Certainly it is the custom and practice that the chair has experienced in 13-plus years; nevertheless, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry, as he says, has only a few comments to make, and perhaps we should hear them.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much for that ruling, Mr. Chairman, and I will keep my comments very brief to keep in the spirit of the House.

Debate Continued

MR. BONNER: As I was saying, this particular book, The Golden Province, is a history of the province by Ernest Watkins. I'm sure most members in this House do not realize that at one time in this Assembly we actually had a minister of railways. We did, and it was Premier Rutherford* that also assumed that title as minister of railways. As I promised, I will keep my comments brief. The department certainly has done a very good job in the latest change in the way railroading is done in this province. Certainly with the number of branchlines that are no longer in use in this province or have been taken over by different operators than our major national companies that used to run the railways, there were requirements that had to be put in place. They have done an excellent job through consultation with all the various providers of these lines, and the requirements that were necessary to have been fulfilled.

I would again want to thank the House for this opportunity to make those comments. Thank you.

Intestate Succession Amendment Act, 2002

THE CHAIR: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It is also a pleasure to participate in debate in committee on Bill 29 this afternoon. Certainly this is a bill that has caused considerable interest throughout the province, and the hon. Minister of Justice has provided an explanation in this House regarding Bill 29. I believe it's at least adequate in its response to the Johnson versus Sand case of April 2001, ensuring that Alberta's Intestate Succession Act complies with the Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

The Charter of Rights and Freedoms has been discussed at length in this Assembly. Some hon. members of this Assembly may have significant difficulty – they certainly expressed that publicly – in that it was a rather I believe shameful document, but I don't think those remarks would be reflective of the Assembly and the members. It might be just targeted to one or two isolated members, Mr. Chairman, but certainly not to everyone, and this bill would be a reflection of that.

Now, Mr. Chairman, this bill also adds a definition of a personal partner to the Intestate Succession Act, and it also deals with a surviving personal partner and the recognition that they will receive the spouse's share under the act so long as there is no surviving spouse. Certainly at this time I believe that this act, as discussed earlier, will be compliant with the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. When we think of legislative leadership, I guess I could call it, as has been displayed here by the hon. Justice minister, I think we have to recognize the leadership that has been displayed here, because I believe that this will prevent or halt any further decisions to proceed to a different level of court on a matter of what is considered basic rights for every human being. It is a bill that one has to support.

With those remarks, Mr. Chairman, at this time I will cede the floor to another hon. member of this House. Thank you.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

MR. MARZ: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. In looking at this and reviewing it over the past weeks, I find it difficult to speak to this bill without speaking about Bill 30 as well. I think the two are intertwined, and by dealing with Bill 29 first, I think we're putting the cart before the horse.

The bill speaks to amending a number of provincial acts to extend benefits and obligations to people involved in committed interdependent relationships, but it leaves it up to the courts to decide what is committed and what is not committed. Because there are no signed agreements required, they're optional. No vow is publicly made as in a marriage relationship. So as I read this, it comes to me that it's attempting to make all types of relationships equal to or perhaps even more equal than marriage relationships in the fact that it doesn't require a written commitment or vows, and it leaves it to the courts.

Perhaps the minister would respond to some of my comments or questions. In section 3.2 it states:

If an intestate dies leaving a surviving spouse and a surviving adult interdependent partner,

- (a) the surviving spouse shall take no part in the intestate's estate, and
- (b) the surviving adult interdependent partner shall be treated for the purposes of this Act, except clause (a), as if he or she were the surviving spouse.

I'm not a lawyer, but just on the surface it would look to me that a surviving interdependent partner would take precedence over the intestate's spouse.

The other thing I've got a concern about is leaving it up to the courts without a signed agreement. What constitutes a legal interdependent partner? If you have two people that decide to share a room together for three years – it could be college students – and one came into an inheritance from his deceased parents and then got killed in an accident, although the relationship may be just that of roommates, it might provide an opportunity for the other roommate, whether it was a male/female, male/male, or female/female type of relationship, to claim that there was an interdependent relationship actually established but that they were keeping it secret. So then you'd have the issue before the courts to have to decide this. As I said, not being a lawyer, perhaps there could be a good case made for that particular thing, to have a former roommate decided by the courts to suddenly be an heir to an estate. If that's what the bill is proposing, I would certainly have problems with it.

I believe that it's just another step in normalizing all other types of relationships and granting them the same status as marriage between a man and a woman, and it would be unfortunate, I think, if that happened, because I believe that already marriage relationships have a degree of discrimination against them in government policies, such as benefits for seniors. If they decide to move in together, they no longer get paid the same rate they would as singles. They get reduced, so they're not being treated equally as married couples. I believe, from the scientific evidence of dealing with situations in my own constituency office with children from uncommitted couples, whether either from failed marriages or common-law relationships that have had children as a result, those types of situations seem to have more problems than the very committed ones. I don't seem to have any problems with people coming into my office from very committed married relationships and dealing with irresponsible parents that have left children to one or the other and not properly looked after them. It just seems like we're going down a path of eroding that institution of marriage instead of looking at ways to reinforce it as a government and recognizing that the best opportunities for children are with a committed father and mother, and that is through marriage.

So those are my general comments, Mr. Chairman, and if the minister would like to respond to some of the questions that were raised, I'd be happy to hear his response. Thank you.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. A couple of concerns have been raised with respect to Bill 29 coming forward now and the relationship between Bill 29 and Bill 30, and I would be the first to suggest that it would be preferable to have the opportunity to deal with Bill 30 and not have Bill 29. Unfortunately, as I mentioned in second reading, we are under a deadline where the Intestate Succession Act, or portions of it, will become of no further force and effect at the end of the spring sitting of the Legislature or the end of June, whichever comes first, if we do not make amendments to the Intestate Succession Act. In making a determination about the contents of Bill 30, it was considered to be, and quite appropriately I think, important for Albertans to understand the implications of Bill 30, to have the time to understand that and have the time to determine how it might have implications for any relationships they might be in, and therefore to debate that in the fall. So unfortunate though it may be, we have to bring forward Bill 29 now and have it passed by the Legislature this spring in order to preserve the efficacy of the Intestate Succession Act.

I appreciate the comments that have been made by the hon. member, but it is necessary because it would be a worse situation not to have the Intestate Succession Act than to have the Intestate Succession Act amended by Bill 29. The hon. member referenced the comment in section 3 in 3.1 and 3.2: "as if he or she were the surviving spouse of the intestate." Again, the language is changed in Bill 30 in those precise sections to other, perhaps more appropriate language. The problem with using the language that's in Bill 30 in this bill is that you also have to amend a number of other acts such as the Administration of Estates Act and the Wills Act, which refer to the Intestate Succession Act definition of spouse. So in order to make the change that we need in order to keep the Intestate Succession Act alive – I understand the chair is looking over at the corner there at others who might want to participate in debate.

THE CHAIR: The chair would invite the four busy fellows in the back corner to withdraw from the Chamber and go out into the Confederation Room and carry on their lively and funny discussion there rather than drowning out your own Government House Leader.

The Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. The point that I was making was that there are other acts which refer to "spouse" as provided for in the Intestate Succession Act. So we do not wish to redefine the term "spouse" in a manner we don't wish. We have to put language in the act for the time being, until Bill 30 comes forward, to say that if there's not a spouse, someone stands in the spouse's place. That doesn't make them the spouse, but it makes them stand in the spouse's place. That's the reason for the circuitous language here. It's unfortunately necessary if we don't want to amend all of the other acts, and we don't wish to amend all of the other acts until we deal with them in Bill 30.

With respect to the example of the two college students one of the things that we should put on the record, Mr. Chairman – and I think it needs to be stated over and over again – is that when people enter into relationships, they take on responsibilities. Sometimes they do that without knowing or making conscious decisions about what responsibilities they're entering into. There are court challenges right across this country on various acts and various definitions. For example, if an individual owns a house and decides that their boyfriend should move in with them, they may be unwittingly exposing themselves to a dower claim. That has not been determined as yet by the courts, but it could very well come before the courts and be determined. There may be people in our province who are exposing themselves to claims under the Dower Act and are not aware of it. They're not aware of the responsibilities they've taken on by entering into a relationship, by moving into a circumstance. All it takes is one person to challenge the act. So it behooves us to clear up the law to make sure that the law is very clear for people, and Bill 30 will do that. Bill 29 will do it on a temporary basis with respect to the Intestate Succession Act.

We also have some experience with the courts in terms of defining these relationships, and while it is entirely possible, as the member suggests, that somebody could bring forward an unwarranted claim, make a claim about a relationship that they did not have, one of the things Albertans respect – we know this from discussions we've had; we know this from polling we've had – is the court's ability to make a decision with respect to when relationships exist and when they don't exist. That's a decision based on facts, the facts as found by the court and put forward. That relationship is based on a number of factors.

So it's not just a question of two college students or two people being lumped together because they happen to decide to share the same residence. There are other factors which have to go into it. There would have to be proof in the case of Bill 29 of a conjugal relationship. In the case of Bill 30 and more appropriately in terms of the broader context there would have to be proof of more than just the fact that the two people were living in the same house. We found such relationships in common-law situations already under the law, and the law has continued to be expanded and expanded. It behooves us to make sure that Albertans have a clear understanding of how the law might apply to them and when they might be able to access the law in order to deal with situations when the relationship comes to an end. That's really what we're talking about here. It's not creating relationships, but when a relationship comes to an end, how do you take care of the dependencies that have been created, and how do you distribute the property?

I hope that clears up some of the questions that the hon. member asked.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. It's my pleasure to speak to Bill 29, a bill which has been a long time coming before this Legislature. Yesterday during second reading of Bill 29 the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre deliberated on whether or not the minister should be congratulated for this piece of legislation. On the one hand, as the member observed, the minister has been forced to make these changes because of a court decision just over a year ago. On the other hand, this government has a track record of forcing gay and lesbian Albertans to challenge unjust laws in courts and before the Human Rights Commission. In the end the hon. member decided that congratulations were in order if only because the minister has not chosen to drag Albertans before the Supreme Court once again in a futile attempt to save patently unfair legislation.

The New Democrats, however, Mr. Chairman, cannot be so generous. It is not enough that the Minister of Justice is finally amending one piece of legislation more than a year after being told to do so by the Court of Queen's Bench. In her comments yesterday the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre gave a fairly detailed account of the court battle that led to the decision regarding the Intestate Succession Act, so I won't say too much more on the subject other than to congratulate and thank Brent Johnson and his lawyer, Julie Lloyd, for their dedication and hard work in this fight. There is of course an entire community of Albertans who are involved in this struggle, but in this case Mr. Johnson and Ms Lloyd deserve special recognition.

The reality of why we are currently amending the Intestate Succession Act goes further than last year's Court of Queen's Bench decision. In fact, the roots can be traced to the Supreme Court's decision in 1998 that sexual orientation should be read into Alberta's human rights legislation as protected grounds and the Supreme Court's May 1999 decision that same-sex couples deserve the same rights and obligations as their heterosexual counterparts. So really we have Bill 29 before us today because the Tories have finally understood what the rest of Canada has known for two years. It is no more acceptable to treat people badly, to exclude and marginalize them because of their sexual orientation than it would be acceptable to marginalize them because of their race or age or religious affiliation or level of income.

The strategy of this government regarding the obligations to gays and lesbians in Alberta has been to delay, delay, and further delay again. The government fought Delwin Vriend all the way to the Supreme Court, delaying the inevitable and necessary inclusion of sexual orientation in our human rights legislation. The government fought Brent Johnson in a spiteful attempt to exclude him from the protections guaranteed by the Intestate Succession Act. Let's be clear. While the government delays, real people lose out economically, socially, and emotionally. Real people, Mr. Chairman, suffer real discrimination.

Let's be clear on another point. While this government has stalled, delayed, and retreated, eight other jurisdictions, led by New Democrat governments in Saskatchewan, British Columbia, and Manitoba, have passed omnibus legislation to update their statutes and promote equality for their citizens. In Ontario alone over 60 pieces of legislation were amended and have been amended for nearly two years.

In Alberta two years after the M versus H decision and four years after the Vriend decision, what do we have? On the one hand, we have Bill 29, which is a patch. We have legislation that does the bare minimum to protect the Intestate Succession Act. On the other hand, we have a complex and unwieldy piece of legislative quicksand, that is bound to create more problems than it solves.

It's not my intention to debate Bill 30 here, but given that the minister intends to replace the patch we're currently debating with the provisions of Bill 30, I would like to raise some initial concerns. The first concern is that it's not a good way to approach legislation. The approach of the government in bringing forward Bill 29 and Bill 30 is an attempt to pretend that gays and lesbians don't exist in this province. It is an attempt to tell Alberta social conservatives: "Don't worry. This bill isn't really about recognizing the love and commitment in same-sex relationships. It's about creating economic contracts between two Albertans, preferably severely normal Albertans." In their attempt to placate one group of Albertans at the expense of another, the government has raised a whole new set of concerns. What if three sisters, for example, move in together and would like to form an interdependent partnership? Which two would be included and which one would be excluded? What would happen to the third person?

By creating the fiction of interdependent relationships, Mr. Chairman, we have opened a whole can of worms, that I think is going to create problems for the government and for the legislation. Do we expect that conflict of interest laws should be the same for spouses as they will be for interdependent partners? Bill 30, the companion to Bill 29, will produce a raft of unintended and unanticipated results. This is particularly ironic given the very simple results that the government should have been targeting. First of all, amend the 80 pieces of legislation that discriminate against same-sex couples. Second, give clear recognition of the validity of same-sex relationships.

It comes down, Mr. Chairman, to a question of political will and timing. This is a government that passed the very harsh and contentious Bill 12 in a matter of days and a government that uses closure more than any other in this country. They clearly have no problem getting legislation passed when they want it. So we are left asking why it has taken four years to bring the smallest amount of rights to gay and lesbian Albertans when it took only four days to restrict the rights of teachers in Bill 12. Given this government's track record on issues of civil liberties, open debate, and inclusive democracy, perhaps it is not such a mystery. It's no wonder that a recent national poll showed that Canadians by a very wide margin, including Albertans, trust the courts more than Legislatures and governments to protect civil rights of Canadians. It's no wonder, and one of the main reasons is this government itself.

The New Democrats will support this legislation, Mr. Chairman, but we will not congratulate the government for doing now what it should have done years ago.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate the opportunity to make some comments on Bill 29. I recognize that it's part of a larger plan of legislation that the government has. It's a plan of legislation that I expect, as it all unfolds, we will work with the government to implement. As a number of other speakers have commented, it's a plan and it's legislation that is long overdue. It seems to have been a painful birthing process, and it will continue to be a painful labour I'm sure for some of the members of the government, but we will do our best to ensure that justice is done and that human rights for everybody are respected. This is not about giving anybody special rights; this is about respecting everybody equally.

One of the strange things that always strikes me in these kinds of debates is how relationships end up being viewed. It's gradually come to me that long-term relationships are assumed to be all about sex. That's the great concern in this kind of legislation, that the fundamental basis of a relationship is sexual. Actually I think that what we need to be talking about and recognizing is that long-term relationships aren't about sex. They're about love; they're about caring. They're about caring for other people regardless of their gender, regardless of whom they may be. It's simply in a long-term relationship a matter of commitment, and that's what matters. That's what counts, and that's what we should recognize as a society.

There was a famous quote by Pierre Trudeau that the government has no business in the bedrooms of the nation, and I think that's true. We need to recognize that principle in law, and we need to recognize that everybody in a long-term relationship has some rights regardless of the gender of the people involved in that relationship. Relationships of the kind that are discussed here I think are about people making themselves complete as individuals. We are by nature social human beings. There's almost nothing more desperate than somebody who is enormously lonely, and there's nothing more sad than people who are isolated and left to themselves and are ultimately and fundamentally incomplete. I think that it's a basic drive of human beings to look for social companionship, to look for people with whom they feel that through a long-term relationship they can complete themselves.

So I think the basis of a long-term relationship is ultimately about love and fulfillment, and the sexual aspects of it in the long run are secondary, and I think we should regard them as secondary. Unfortunately, too often in these kinds of debates that principle is ignored, and we get all wrapped up in the supposed eroticism of relationships or the sexuality of them. I just think that's misguided.

When we're looking particularly at Bill 29, I think anything that sorts out confused inheritance and estate issues is a good thing, and I think that we are moving in that direction with Bill 29. It's a step in the right direction there. It was forced on the government by the courts, as any number of observers have said, but finally the government has come around to address it.

So the fact that there will be more clarity and there will be a recognition of a broader range of relationships through Bill 29 I think is to be commended. For those reasons, I will be supporting this bill and looking forward to Bill 30 and the rest of the legislative program of the government to address these issues.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Justice.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move Bill 28, the Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act, 2002, for third reading.

As is the custom and tradition of Canadian parliamentary democracies, miscellaneous statutes are agreed by all parties ahead of time and should not require debate.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Just one note. In my brief comments that I did make to enlighten members of the House of the rich history of railroads in Alberta, I mentioned that I thought Rutherford was the minister of railways, but in reviewing the case, the minister was John Boyle,* a young Edmonton lawyer and Liberal Member for Sturgeon.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 28 read a third time]

Bill 29 Intestate Succession Amendment Act, 2002

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move Bill 29, the Intestate Succession Amendment Act, 2002, for third reading.

Mr. Speaker, I won't dwell on the act, as we've talked both at second reading and committee about the need for and why we're proceeding with this act in advance of Bill 30, which we'll deal with in the fall. I did want to just respond briefly to the remarks by the Member for Edmonton-Highlands in terms of two characterizations. First, that anybody has been dragging their feet with respect to dealing with the issue. I for one do not believe that it's dragging one's feet or in any way inappropriate to do a complete and thorough review of the law to understand the philosophy behind the law and the underpinnings of the law before one brings forward amendments to the law. If that thorough and complete review has resulted in the fact that we have to make a minor amendment to one bill in order to keep it alive until the full debate can happen on Bill 30, then that is entirely an appropriate process. I would have preferred that we didn't have to, but we do have to in order to keep those sections of the law alive.

With respect to the comments that were made about trying to hide behind a broader definition, we should be I think quite proud of the fact that we can look at the whole concept of how society develops. We each as individuals have responsibility for how we live our lives, and it's not the government's responsibility to tell us how to live our lives or government's responsibility to tell us what kind of relationships we can have or not have. It is government's responsibility to make sure that when relationships break down and if parties have not taken care of their loved ones and their dependants, those loved ones and dependants have some access to fairness before the law. It is not for us to determine what type of loved ones or dependants they might be, but only that loved ones and dependants do exist in relationships.

Many of us would encourage the concept of married relationships in society as being a stable way to have families and to promote our society, but many other people live in different relationships, whether they're common-law relationships or same-sex relationships or relationships that have nothing to do, as the Member for Edmonton-Riverview mentioned, with the concept of sex at all. Quite frankly, the whole concept of personal relationships and the question that's here under the Intestate Succession Act has nothing to do with sex. It has everything to do with loving relationships, relationships where people share property and unfortunately where they haven't taken care of some of the essential details with respect to their own personal relationships before they die, and that's what we're dealing with in the Intestate Succession Act.

One thing I'd like to put on the record yet again, Mr. Speaker, that's very, very important for all of us to remember is that people should take care of their personal affairs, and then they don't need the law to do it for them. If they take care of their personal affairs and write a will, the Intestate Succession Act need have no applicability to them. A family member might still have access to an estate through the Family Relief Act, which provides for those where people have dealt within their will in a manner which didn't take care of people who were dependent upon them, but under the Intestate Succession Act most Albertans avoid any need for the Intestate Succession Act to be applicable to them, and all Albertans can avoid it by writing a will. I would encourage all Albertans to do that because it is a far preferable way to avoid any dispute, to avoid any question about who gets property, to avoid almost all need to go to the court, and does it in a manner which is much fairer to the family, leaves the family intact, reduces any ability for squabble within the family, and is a much, much fairer way to leave your dependants and your loved ones when you go.

So while it's necessary for us to deal with the Intestate Succession Act this afternoon and to pass this amendment in order to keep it alive, I think it would be preferable if all Albertans were to take care of their affairs through writing a will, and I would encourage them in the strongest terms to attend to that right away and not wait for disaster to happen in their family or to a loved one.

head: Government Bills and Orders

[Mr. Tannas in the chair]

THE CHAIR: I call the Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 26
Workers' Compensation Amendment Act, 2002

THE CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. This is again legislation that is going to take considerable time in this member's view to debate. It is unfortunate that we have the closure motions that are on the Order Paper today, not only for committee but also for third reading. When one considers the effort that has been made by various groups in the province, the two reports of significance that there were on the activities of the WCB, and various stakeholder meetings, it is unfortunate that we would have to use closure on this bill at two stages. However, I have a number of questions still outstanding, and the most disturbing thing is that again we are having a bill that is in my view going to allow too much discretionary power to the WCB.

Now, to the Human Resources and Employment minister. There are various sections here that are going to have to deal with the administrative penalties or the fines that can be given out by the WCB, by the SIU. Mr. Chairman, it is interesting to note that there has been this notion that they're only for employers, these administrative penalties, and if the hon. minister could clarify this, I would be very, very grateful.

Certainly there are offences here listed in the new section 152.1(1). When the board "is of the opinion that a person has contravened section 19," which deals with an offence, a person who, for instance,

- (a) fails to make prompt and explicit answers to an inquiry made under section 18 . . .
- (b) fails to comply with a notice given under section 18 . . .
- (d) otherwise obstructs, hinders or interferes with the Board, or a person acting on its behalf, in the making of an investigation under section 18 is guilty of an offence.

Now, that individual or that group of individuals would be eligible for an administrative penalty.

You can go on to 33(1), which is notices by employers. How much of a problem is this currently for the WCB regarding notices by employers? We can go here a little further, Mr. Chairman, down to section 87, and that's on transportation of injured workers. Now, again, how often has there been noncompliance in regards to this?

Section 103 is the section that's going to deal with the statement of wages by employer, section 105 would deal with an employer commencing business, section 106 deals with an employer ceasing to be an employer, section 108 is dealing with employers' records, section 109 deals with persons who might be employers, and section 110 deals with separate statements for each industry. Section 138 deals with board order ceasing to employ workers, section 139 deals with unauthorized deductions, and section 140, agreements to waive act void, and posting of notices, section 145.

Now, if individuals, Mr. Chairman, assume that these are administrative penalties that are going to be levied on employers, then that's the end of it. But I would like an explanation, and there have been some assurances given throughout the province that these administrative penalties that can be levied by the special investigative units do not apply to employees.

Section 147(3) on confidentiality of information. This can be reviewed "notwithstanding subsections (1) or (2) of section 34(4), where a matter is being reviewed or appealed under section 46," which is the section on panels, "or 120" to deal with the review of the decision by either the current claim services review committee or some other alternate means. But these administrative penalties – is this not going to force injured workers to keep everything secret in their dealings with the WCB? We all know what the Canadian Charter of Rights states about freedom of the press and the media's ability to report. Will this section in this amended act prevent an injured worker from going to the press with their story? We have to consider this.

Now, there are members in this Assembly that are shaking their head at this member's interpretation. But I think that is wrong, and it is further intimidation, and the potential for abuse by the WCB towards injured workers could increase if this is the case. Why? The culture of denial that was expressed so eloquently by Justice Samuel Friedman is certainly continuing with this section.

Section 151(1) is also dealing with the person and that person certainly in these cases could be an employee. Why do we need this law or this rule that will allow and increase the powers, give this special investigative unit sweeping powers? I cannot accept this.

If we could go even further, into the new section 152, we're going to add after subsection 4:

(4.1) A person who pays an administrative penalty under section 152.1 in respect of a contravention may not be charged under this Act with an offence in respect of that contravention.

Now, that tells me that the WCB does not want this to go to court and risk full public disclosure, and as I said earlier in second reading, I don't believe that this is right. Are we giving the WCB board here the authority to level Criminal Code offences? Is that what we're doing with this section? I can't understand why we need this.

There have been many groups that have expressed frustration.

There are many groups that have contacted this member and have stated that they are not going to support this legislation, because all these legislative initiatives were not part of the discussions. I would like to know, Mr. Chairman, how this happened. How was this bill drafted, and why are so many people now claiming that all these discussions took place? There was never any mention of this in the review process.

Now, the Industry Task Force Association in their analysis and comments on Bill 26 stated that before they could support this bill, "the following are amendments to Bill 26" that have to be made. In section 13.1(1) they question that "sub-section 8 was removed during the final meeting." What meeting they're referring to I cannot say, but it's their view that this "should not be included in Bill 26." They go on to say that subsection 9, Mr. Chairman, in the same section 13.1(1) "was not discussed during the review process and should not be included in Bill 26." Those sections would be concerning the Appeals Commission.

Subsection 8 is quite interesting. I would have to ask the Legislative Assembly for guidance on this. Can favourable claims also be readdressed? Can that be reversed where there's a claim in favour of the injured worker? Could that also be readdressed?

Now, section 26(1):

Sub-section (1)(a) with regards to increasing the 12 months to 24 months was not discussed during the review process. The [Industry Task Force Association] does not agree with the increase because Section 26(2) does not confine a worker or dependant to the 12 month time frame.

That's another issue they had.

Now section 33(1), Mr. Chairman. Again the Industry Task Force Association states:

except in those cases where only first aid, as determined by the Board, is rendered, . . . was not discussed during the review process. Workplace Health and Safety has jurisdiction over the First Aid Regulation for the province. The WCB should not be defining first aid.

That is another concern of this Industry Task Force Association.

As was expressed earlier, section 151.1 – and this is the wide-sweeping powers again: "Sub-sections (1), (2) and (3) were not discussed during the review process and should be removed from Bill 26." I would be very grateful for an explanation of this by the hon. minister.

Now section 152. The Industry Task Force Association's comments regarding this:

Sub-sections (1) and (2) with regards to increasing . . . fine of not more than $25,000.00 . . . a further fine of not more than $10,000.00 for each day . . . was not supported during the review process. The concept of increasing fines to gain compliance in this case is not justified. To the best of our knowledge the WCB has never enforced the present legislation. The rationale of the increasing fines is not supported by any data which suggests that there would be an increase in compliance with the increase in fines. The [Industry Task Force Association] does not support the increase in fines.

Section 152.01. Again, "this section was not discussed during the review process and should be removed from Bill 26." This deals with:

Where a corporation commits an offence under this Act, any officer, director or agent of the corporation who directed, authorized, assented to, acquiesced in or participated in the commission of the offence is guilty of the offence and is liable to the punishment provided for the offence, whether or not the corporation has been prosecuted for or convicted of the offence.

Now, this Industry Task Force Association feels that this was not discussed, the administrative penalties.

Section 152.1: "Sub-section (1), (2), (3) and (4) with regards to the increase in fines was not supported during the review process . . .

The [Industry Task Force Association] does not support the increase in fines."

Now, the Industry Task Force Association goes on to say: "In conclusion, if Bill 26 is not amended as per the cover letter and the above, the ITFA cannot support Bill 26." That would confirm to this member that as good as this consultation process was, perhaps the spirit and the intent of the various reports are not reflected in this bill.

Mr. Chairman, I at this time would like to propose an amendment to Bill 26, and I would like to have one of the pages circulate the amendment, please, first a copy to the chair and respectively to all members. This amendment is to move that Bill 26 be amended in section 5 in the proposed section 7(1) by striking out "3 months" and substituting "1 month." I believe this amendment shall be referred to as A3? Is that possible, Mr. Chairman? Yes.

This amendment as proposed, amendment A3, would certainly be a reflection of what was mentioned earlier in debate by the hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont, who said that there must be a continuous monitoring of the progress of this bill. I thought the hon. member was absolutely right, because with all these changes that are going to be going on with the WCB, regardless of whether this member agrees with them or not, Mr. Chairman, it would be more beneficial if the WCB board of directors met more often, not less often. It astonishes me why the board of directors – there could be the possibility of them meeting quarterly or four times a year. In respect of what the hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont said, I don't think the quarterly meetings would be adequate to monitor the progress of the WCB. It is a huge corporation with millions and millions of dollars in the budget, and there certainly are many, many concerns. For instance, if we look at the premium increases, that's only one concern of employers.

Mr. Chairman, in conclusion, I would urge all members at this time to support amendment A3.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: I'd like to move that we adjourn debate on Bill 26.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 27 Appropriation Act, 2002

THE CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate the roundabout way in which I'm getting the opportunity here to speak, the final comments we can make on the massive Appropriation Act, Bill 27. This in many ways drives the whole legislative timetable for the spring session. There's simply an immense amount of money involved in this legislation. I think it is the one that our constituents, all of them, want us to be the most thoughtful on and to express the most comments on. So I'm going to take just a few minutes here to put some of my wrap-up thoughts on this piece of legislation.

I need to again hammer home the concern – and it just grows and grows and grows; it grew again today with some comments that came out in question period, and it came out yesterday even in Public Accounts – that the budget process of this government is out of whack, it's out of line, and it's out of date. We have a situation where the government through its quarterly budget updates and so on I think is in fact allowing itself to get buffeted and rearranged and redirected every three months. It gets pushed off its priorities far too easily because of the nature of the budgeting process, and I'm certain that that's going to happen again. We saw that happen over the last year, over the last few years, and I'm sure other MLAs are hearing this same concern. Municipalities are saying: what kind of budget process is this? School boards: what kind of budget process is this? Regional health authorities. Heavens, we're still in a situation now, six weeks into the fiscal year, where the regional health authorities are trying to sort out their budgets. It's a process that needs to be completely revamped.

I've thought about how we've got to this position and what our inspiration is. What is the government's inspiration for this particular approach? I think that in many ways the government has been influenced by the budgeting practices of the petroleum industry. The petroleum industry is an industry that by necessity turns itself on and off on a few weeks' notice. It can crank up when the price of oil or gas goes up, and it can crank down very, very rapidly. Because that industry is so important to this government, to this province, we have taken on the culture of that industry in our budgeting process, and I think that's a profound mistake. You don't see other businesses behaving that way, and you shouldn't see governments behaving that way: cranking things up, cranking them down, cranking them up, cranking them down month by month, quarter by quarter, year by year. It is no way for us to be managing the wealth of this province and the budget and the finances of this government, and I strongly encourage the government to reconsider the way it has handled and does handle its finances.

I'm on the record many times, but I repeat this. If I'd had the chance to respond to comments from one of the government members earlier in the afternoon – the question came up: well, if we want to stabilize things and spend more money, where are we going to get that money? We should, I believe, reverse the decision to go with a flat tax. That decision has cost the coffers of this Treasury over a billion dollars, and it has fueled the roller-coaster ride of finances that we're stuck on now. Every time things go up or down, we're following like a roller coaster. The most reliable, predictable source of income for any government in the developed world is income tax. It's steady. It doesn't go up and down particularly rapidly in the way that corporate taxes go. It certainly doesn't go up and down at all in the way that royalties go up and down. Yet what have we done? We have shrunk that basis of our income to a dangerously low level, and I am not at all in isolation in making those comments. Indeed, I know right-wing economists who have said the same thing.

We have got ourselves into a difficult position with that decision. We have also got ourselves into a position of profound injustice. We are in a situation . . . [interjections]

THE CHAIR: Hon. members, if you wish to speak, please give the speaker the courtesy that you would like to have for yourselves and speak in your turn. Right now it's Edmonton-Riverview, not an assorted group of others.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The other concern I have with the flat tax is that it is fundamentally unjust, and when we combine the flat tax with the health care premiums, which by any other definition is a tax, we are now in a province where the highest percentage tax is paid by the working poor, and that is just unfair. Why do we have people who are working full time and earning $30,000 or $40,000 or $50,000 a year paying a higher percentage of their income in taxes than people making $200,000 a year? It is regressive, it's wrong, and we should reverse it.

I want to make a number of other points here, and I'll just run through them quickly so that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands can have a couple of minutes before we adjourn from committee. The way we've handled Children's Services in this budget I think is shameful, and in our budget process I think it's shameful. The fact that we are at this time reducing or tightening up preventive children's services when, if anything, we should be expanding that expenditure is just craziness. We're short-term there to the point of being self-destructive, and I think that's very bad practice.

Municipalities have expressed to us in no uncertain terms that they cannot manage under the kind of budgeting practices that we have now. There's not enough money in this budget to allow the municipalities to fulfill their responsibilities. Health care premiums have gone up dramatically, and there are indications that if the Mazankowski report is followed, they will go up even further, a tax grab that hurts the working poor the worst. It should be reversed. As my colleague from Edmonton-Glengarry pointed out, there are only two provinces in this country with health premiums, and we should ensure as soon as we can that there is one, and that would be B.C.

So, Mr. Chairman, I have many grave concerns with Bill 27. I have many grave concerns with the entire process through which we arrived at Bill 27. I hope that the next time we're up here debating an appropriations act, in 2003, we have a very, very much improved system on how this is handled so that we can vote as legislators knowing what the business plans of the health authorities are, knowing what the needs of the school boards are, and not facing a situation which is inevitable today, where just weeks or months from now there are going to be changes to the budget. What's the purpose of this?

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview ceding the floor so that I could have a couple of minutes. I would like to express my disappointment with the manoeuvres this afternoon of the Government House Leader, which have really precluded a lot of time for debate on this $18 billion appropriation bill. It looks like I'm only going to get about two minutes to talk, so that's about $9 billion a minute.

I do want to talk about some of the issues. The main issue is that I believe this budget is the chickens coming home to roost for a whole set of misguided, overly fiscally conservative, hawkish even, policies that the government has knitted around itself. It's painted itself into a corner on the whole budgetary mission: the ridiculous debt reduction policy of this government, which requires so much of the money to go toward debt reduction; the repeated policies of deliberately underestimating revenue of the government so that it looks like there's no money at the start so that they've got every excuse to cut every program they want to cut and do anything they want, and then they look like financial geniuses at the end of the year because they've got billions of dollars in surplus. That is not genius at all; that's just smoke and mirrors.

The flat tax that the government has brought in trims off a vast amount of income tax paid by the wealthiest Albertans and gives them great tax cuts but does very little to benefit the majority of Albertans who work for a living. The continuing emphasis on corporate income tax cuts at the same time as they're bringing in so-called nontaxes like increases in smoking, health care premiums, and so on hurts the working families. They're continuing on the backs of the working people of this province to cut corporate taxes. They have become, as the Member for Edmonton-Riverview has indicated, overly dependent on oil and gas revenue, which is extremely volatile.

So we see the spectacle this session of the minister cutting children's preventive services, one of the best investments a government can make, because the price of oil and gas is less than expected. You see the Finance minister running around in a very frightened fashion, cutting and hacking, taking a percent off every department, because the price of oil and gas is less than is expected and she's afraid that if she runs a deficit, she's going to go to jail. You know, we see the increasing dependence on lottery revenues, over a billion dollars of revenue, and again that's a tax on people who can least afford it; it's an attack on vulnerable people.

So, Mr. Chairman, I am completely opposed to Bill 27. I talked as fast as I can, given the government's disregard for the financial accountability that this Legislature provides.

Thank you.

THE CHAIR: Under Standing Order 61(4) I must put the question proposing the approval of the appropriation bill on the Order Paper for consideration by the Committee of the Whole. So we have for our consideration, then, Bill 27, Appropriation Act, 2002.

[The clauses of Bill 27 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

THE CHAIR: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

SOME HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE CHAIR: Opposed?

SOME HON. MEMBERS: Opposed.

THE CHAIR: Carried.

The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would move that the committee rise and report Bill 27 and report progress on Bill 26, such as it may be.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

MR. LOUGHEED: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports Bill 27. The committee reports progress on Bill 26. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Does the Assembly concur in this report?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Opposed? So ordered.

The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that we adjourn until 1:30 p.m. on Monday.

[Motion carried; at 5:18 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Monday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Monday, May 13, 2002

1:30 p.m.

Date: 02/05/13

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

THE SPEAKER: Good afternoon and welcome. Hon. members, I would ask you to please remain standing after the prayer for the singing of our national anthem.

Let us pray. Our Father, we thank You for Your abundant blessings to our province and ourselves. We ask You to ensure to us Your guidance and the will to follow it. Amen.

Now would you please participate in the singing of our national anthem in the language of your choice. We'll be led by Mr. Paul Lorieau.

HON. MEMBERS:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
The True North strong and free!
From far and wide, O Canada,
We stand on guard for thee.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

head: Introduction of Guests

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

MRS. TARCHUK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to welcome a very special and distinguished group seated in the Speaker's gallery. They are called the CCAF fellows and are participants in a nine-month international fellowship program based in Ottawa. They are visiting us today as part of a weeklong tour of western Canada. The fellowship program is a collaboration between the office of the Auditor General of Canada, the Canadian Comprehensive Auditing Foundation, and the Auditor General of Quebec. The program is sponsored by the Canadian International Development Agency and is designed to expand knowledge and understanding of public-sector accounting and auditing as practised in Canada. Fellows work with the audit teams, attend pertinent courses, and their experience is designed to help them address auditing issues in their home environment.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to now introduce Mr. Jashim Uddin from Bangladesh, Mr. Claudio Castello Branco from Brazil, Mr. Bachchu Dahal from Nepal, Mr. Abdoul Madjib Gueye from Senegal, Mr. Robert Cheyo from Tanzania, and Ms Hend Gongi from Tunisia. They are here today with Mrs. Donna Bigelow from the office of the Auditor General of Canada, Kimberley Speek from the CCAF, Lori Trudgeon and Dale Borrmann from the office of the Auditor General of Alberta. Again, they are seated in the Speaker's gallery, and I would ask that they please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

MR. HORNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the House a gentleman seated in your gallery who is a constituent of mine and a friend. Our guest is also a councillor from Sturgeon county in the Calahoo area. Mr. Paul Kolesar is also a buffalo rancher and is very interested in expanding Alberta's buffalo industry. I would ask Mr. Kolesar to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the House.

MR. GOUDREAU: Mr. Speaker, it's also my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly a great group of energetic and dynamic grades 6 and 7 students from the Lloyd Garrison school of Berwyn. They're energetic because some of them had to get up at 4:45 this morning to drive down to be with us here this afternoon. Berwyn is approximately 500 kilometres northwest of here in the heart of the Peace country. This group is very special to me as it is the first school group that I've had the pleasure of introducing in the Legislature. They are seated in the public gallery, and they are accompanied by their teacher Mr. Rob Hoban and parent helpers Mrs. Davies, Mrs. Sukeroff, Mr. Shaw, Mrs. Reyda, and Mrs. Savoie. I would like them to stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two introductions today. The first is a group of 21 students who are here from Keenooshayo elementary school in St. Albert. They are seated in the members' gallery, and they are another class of grade 6 students here at the Legislature for the week. They are accompanied by their teacher Mrs. Barb Hubbard and her assistant, Mrs. Ann Proulx, and by parent Mrs. Dawn Elhalabi. They are seated, as I said, in the members' gallery, and I'd ask them all to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. the Premier.

MR. KLEIN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly Brier Merrifield, who is seated in the members' gallery. Brier has recently begun working in my Calgary office at McDougall Centre as a summer student through the STEP program. Brier is a third-year student at the University of Calgary, and we are very pleased that she has joined us and has already proven very valuable on several projects. Brier, welcome. I hope that your experience with us this summer also proves to be both valuable and enjoyable. I would ask that she stand now and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two school groups to introduce this afternoon to you and through you to all hon. Members of this Legislative Assembly. The first one is from the north end of the Edmonton-Gold Bar constituency, and that's the Terrace Heights school. There are 20 fine and hardworking and capable students from Terrace Heights this afternoon visiting the Legislative Assembly. They are accompanied by Mr. Tom Jaques, teacher, and also by Mr. Rob MacLean and Mrs. Wendy Loney. They're in the public gallery, and I would now ask them to please rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of this House.

Mr. Speaker, the second is a school group from the southern half of Edmonton-Gold Bar constituency, this time from St. Brendan school. There are 34 in total in the delegation from St. Brendan school. They are led by teachers Edwina Schwede, Shauna Smith, Jose Mendoza, and Jennifer Spearman. Also accompanying the group this afternoon are parent helpers Janine Campbell, Arlene Thompson, Gloria Pigat, and Lori Rackel, who also is the volunteer president of the Ottewell Community League, one of the most progressive and largest community leagues in the entire city. These grades 5 and 6 students from St. Brendan are from one of Canada's greenest schools. I believe they're all in the public gallery, but some of them may be in the members' gallery. Would they please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development.

MS CALAHASEN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I have the distinct pleasure of introducing a very special couple who are friends of mine. Jonathan and Allison Lorentzen have recently come from Slave Lake. In fact, they have been very active in the community, so active that they've been major supporters and volunteers of mine for the last three elections. He's one of the reasons I'm here today. After the 1997 election he was so pleased and he felt so lucky that he decided to marry Allison, one of the greatest joys of his life. They now live in Medicine Hat. They are seated in the public gallery, and I'd ask that they rise and receive the warm welcome of this Legislature.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The other introduction I'd like to make to you and through you to members of this Assembly is two very accomplished young women who live in St. Albert. Amy Venne, who manages the constituency office of St. Albert, is seated in the public gallery, and she is accompanied today by Laura Harrison, who is a third-year political science student at Carleton University in Ottawa but makes her home in St. Albert. They are seated in the gallery, and I would ask them both to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's with pleasure I introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly two individuals. The first is Pat Edmonds. Pat is the manager of the constituency office in Edmonton-Mill Woods and has been capably at that job since 1993. She's accompanied by Denise Varga. Denise is a social work student who's finding plenty of opportunity for her to practise her craft in our constituency. They're in the members' gallery, and with your permission I'd ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

MS EVANS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my privilege and pleasure to introduce to you and this Assembly very special guests today. I have three groups. I'd first of all like to introduce the My Alberta contest winner from the Lesser Slave Lake constituency. She lives in High Prairie. Her mother works for Alberta Children's Services as an assistant manager. Her mother's name is Judy Delorme, and Danielle is with us. She did a picture of an Alberta rose that's exemplary. I'd ask her to stand with her mother. She's in the members' gallery. Look at that beautiful little girl. Thank you, and thank you, too, Mr. Speaker, for arranging to meet with them.

I'd also ask some very stalwart volunteers and mentors of mine in Sherwood Park to stand. They are Donna Clarkson, Maggie Carr, Brenda Whitlock, June and Gordon Ash, Ed DeGrande, and Penny Young. They're here today to observe the proceedings in the Assembly. They're seated in the members' gallery, and I'd ask if they would stand and we'd give our warm and traditional welcome.

Last but not least, Mr. Speaker, I'm not sure if the 33 students from Archbishop Jordan have arrived yet, accompanied by teachers Yolande Joly as well as Audrey Gordey and parent Lorraine Forbes, but they are expected here this afternoon. If they would please stand if they're here. If they're not, I think they might be a little late.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmor.

REV. ABBOTT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is also a pleasure for me to rise today and introduce two very capable people. They both work in my constituency office in Drayton Valley. One is my office assistant, Terri Johnston, and the other is my summer student under the STEP program. Her name is Jody Kok. She's here for the summer. I'd just like them both to rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of the House, please.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Economic Development.

MR. NORRIS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to introduce an old friend, but I say that in the kindest of terms. We've known each other since we were 10. That makes her about 22. I see her sitting in the members' gallery. Would Peggy Louis please rise and be recognized by the House. Give her the warm welcome she so rightly deserves.

head: Oral Question Period

THE SPEAKER: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Holy Cross Hospital

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Premier has claimed time and again that the Holy Cross disposition committee operated at arm's length from the government. However, the Premier admitted last week to having met with the owners of Enterprise Universal Inc. about their bid to buy the Holy Cross hospital. My question is to the Premier. Is it normal practice for the Premier to meet with individuals who are in the midst of a bidding process on government assets?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I meet with thousands of people, literally, have met with thousands of people since I've become the Premier and before that as Minister of Environment, before that as the mayor of the city of Calgary. During bidding processes if there's a process in place, the message is simple: there is a process, fulfill the process, abide by the process, and fine. That's all there is to it, and I don't mind looking at any proposal at any particular time.

Mr. Speaker, what bothers me about this is that the Liberals do not have the courage to say directly – but they do it through implication, through innuendo – that there were some irregularities in the sale of the Holy Cross hospital site. They will never stand up in the House or outside the House and say what the problem is. You know, this is so typical of the Liberals. They try to sow the seeds of distrust and wrongdoing, and they have absolutely no evidence to support their innuendo.

Mr. Speaker, the Member for Edmonton-Riverview and his left-wing friends at the Parkland Institute routinely produce flurries of paper, so-called academic papers in their vain efforts to discredit the government. The member seems particularly obsessed with finding something evil in the work of the fine people of the Calgary regional health authority. If I may paraphrase a scholarly quote of my own: this sound and fury signify nothing. So far their efforts have only produced yawns and lawsuits.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader. [interjections] The hon. leader has the floor.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Will the Premier tell the House whether or not at the meeting with the owners of Enterprise Universal they discussed the plans to use the site under contract with the CRHA for insured day surgery?

MR. KLEIN: I have no idea, Mr. Speaker. I recall vaguely seeing their proposal and saying: "Lookit; there's a process in place. Go to the disposition committee and take it up with the RHA. Interesting proposal."

Mr. Speaker, this type of dirty politics has hurt the Liberals in the past – and we've seen that; that's why there are seven over there and 74 over here – and it will continue to hurt them. Albertans have shown time and time again that they don't like the politics of personal mudslinging.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Did the Premier take any actions on behalf of Enterprise Universal after that meeting?

MR. KLEIN: No.

THE SPEAKER: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In complete contradiction to what the Premier said last week, the confidential report made by the disposition committee for the Holy Cross says that the Holy Cross site "was not to assume any ongoing financial or contractual support from the CRHA . . . The 'health care' usage could not be insured services under the Canada Health Act." Yet within weeks of the sale the new owners were being paid by the CRHA to conduct procedures insured under the Canada Health Act. None of the other bidders were told that this was possible. To the Premier: did the Premier's meeting with Enterprise Universal have anything to do with the terms of the bidding and contract being changed?

MR. KLEIN: No.

DR. NICOL: To the Premier: why was one bid given preferential treatment over the others?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I don't know. Again I defer to the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, who was a city councillor at the time, was on the bid committee. I'm advised that there were something like 12 proposals received, that the disposition committee was made up of someone appointed by the mayor of the city of Calgary, appointments from the RHA. Former Bishop O'Byrne was on the committee, as I understand, and a number of community people. They adjudicated all of the proposals. As I understand, it was advertised nationally. The proposal that was eventually accepted was the best proposal received. As a matter of fact, I'm informed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie that in one case the proponent actually asked the RHA to pay the proponent to take the site off his hands. So it seems to me that there was hardly a tremendous effort on the part of the proponents to pay what the Liberals say was the appraised value at that particular time.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. How can the Premier justify a process where one set of rules was used during the bidding and those rules were then ignored once a successful bidder was announced?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I don't know the details following the sale of the land and the arrangements that were made between the RHA and the proponents, nor do I get involved in that kind of detail. Unfortunately, the House rules don't permit me to ask the minister at the time to comment. This goes back six years, and I have no idea – no idea – what arrangements were made between the RHA and the successful proponents. All I can say is that there's been a review of this particular situation. Everything was found to be aboveboard, but again I will ask the Liberals: if they have an accusation to make, then make it. Make the accusation. You know, show the courage and stand up and make an accusation of wrongdoing, but do it outside the House, because you know, there's already one lawsuit against one of the hon. members relative to one of the proponents associated with this issue. Perhaps there might be more. Who knows?

THE SPEAKER: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Legislation and policy are clear. Regional health authorities are not under the jurisdiction of the Ethics Commissioner, yet last week the Premier told this Assembly that conflict of interest rules for RHAs "come under the purview of the Ethics Commissioner of this province." That is not true. To the Premier: why did the Premier tell this Assembly that RHAs come under the Ethics Commissioner when surely he knows that is not true?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I stand to be corrected, but I thought that we had amended the guidelines to put RHAs, municipalities, school boards, and so on under the same rules of ethics and FOIP that we're under.

DR. TAFT: Given that RHAs are – and I've confirmed this with the Ethics Commissioner – beyond the jurisdiction of the Ethics Commissioner, can the Premier tell the Assembly if it is a conflict of interest for the leader of the successful bid for the Holy Cross to be simultaneously an official with the RHA selling the property?

MR. KLEIN: I have no idea, Mr. Speaker. The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness is not here. I don't know who's responsible. [interjection] Well, I'll have the hon. acting minister respond. Maybe he can shed some light on this.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm not intimately familiar with the exact question that is being asked by the member, but I will undertake on behalf of the Minister of Health and Wellness to ensure that he receives a proper answer as soon as possible.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Will the Premier admit that well-connected Tories got the inside track on the bidding for the Holy Cross?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, there was a process. I've gone through the process a dozen times. A dozen times. I don't know if the disposition committee knew that the proponents – first of all, to set the stage, about 70 percent of the people in this province are Tory supporters. Thank God. It goes without saying that all I can meet with are 30 percent of the people. You know, about 15 or 20 percent of those would be Liberals and the others NDs, and who knows where the others are from. That means I can't meet with any of our supporters. I think it's very, very fortunate that we have so many supporters in this province, and I apologize to no one for meeting with our supporters. As a matter of fact, as I said, I've had thousands of meetings since I've been in this government, and I would imagine that the vast majority of those people would be our supporters.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Security Management Legislation

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Tomorrow, after 37 days, the government is pulling the plug on one of the shortest spring sittings in recent memory. The government has decided to wait until the final day of this very short session to introduce a bill that deals with as yet unspecified threats to security in this province. My questions are to the Premier. Will this legislation help actually do anything to increase the security of Albertans?

THE SPEAKER: Whoa. It's kind of hard to ask questions about something that is yet to be introduced, and I just put that caveat on any kind of response here. The Legislature has not seen such a bill that I'm aware of.

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, you're absolutely correct. A bill has not been tabled. It's on the Order Paper, I'm advised, for tomorrow. Notwithstanding the intention to table the bill that to my knowledge will be a bill that will introduce a number of minor amendments, I believe, housekeeping kinds of things, there have been a number of steps taken from a policy point of view to address the events and the security of this province post September 11. Indeed, there have been ongoing discussions led by the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations. The Solicitor General has been involved with various phases of industry, authorities responsible for security, and generally, as I understand it, security has been beefed up or the issue has been addressed in a very significant and in a very serious manner.

If you wish, Mr. Speaker, I can have the hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations supplement.

THE SPEAKER: No.
Proceed.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Since this legislation was supposed to respond to the events of September 11 and the subsequent events, why has it taken the government so long to enact such legislation, especially since it won't be passed until November 2002 at the earliest?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, it is quite correct that we have been working on legislation suitable for the needs of Alberta with respect to security, and I acknowledge the leader of the third party's point, and that is that it is a piece of legislation which will probably take some time to discuss and to have before the public for reaction, but that has been the case with all governments tackling the whole issue of security as far as the legislative framework is concerned that is best for a province or for a country. We want to make sure that the legislation we put in place will do the job in the long term. Unfortunately, the whole issue of there being a concern and a risk as far as security is concerned is something that is not going away within the next few months. We're in it for the long term, and we want to have the best legislation possible.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. PANNU: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My second supplementary is to the Premier. Will there be any erosion of the civil liberties or privacy rights of Albertans as a result of the government's antiterrorist legislation, and if so, in what ways?

2:00

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I think it's sort of stretching it a bit, to say the least, to say that this is antiterrorism legislation. Certainly the bill speaks to boosting security and making some amendments, some adjustments to the way we do things, but it is hardly an antiterrorist bill. I believe that has been addressed by the federal government.

No, Mr. Speaker, to answer the question, it will not in any way, shape, or form violate the civil rights of Albertans or other Canadians for that matter.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Agricultural Policy Framework

MR. DANYLUK: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's and Canada's agriculture and agrifood sectors are key contributors to the high quality of life enjoyed by citizens across our province and country. Lately I've been reading and hearing reports about the development of a new agricultural policy framework that is being worked on by the federal and provincial governments. I understand that there was an announcement made at the conclusion of the meeting on the development of a formal agreement on this framework. My question is to the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. Can the minister advise us on the progress of the framework and how it will positively impact producers?

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, the agricultural policy framework certainly is a work in progress. It began in Whitehorse last June with agreement from all of the provinces, territories, and federal government that there were five chapters that we needed to work on. Those were food safety and quality, environment, sector renewal, risk management, and science and research, all vital to the sustainability of this industry. I'm pleased to say that at our meetings last Monday and Tuesday in Ottawa we reached agreement on those chapters and have asked our officials to do some final work, which we believe will lead to the signing of an umbrella framework at the end of June in our official meetings.

I think the U.S. farm bill, the actions of that speak very much to the need for this agricultural policy framework for this country and certainly for our province to take this industry into the future. Mr. Speaker, critical to that will be the chapter on safety nets and risk management. Our producers don't like ad hoc programs. Governments don't like ad hoc programs. We like predictability and sustainability, and we believe that this agricultural policy framework will lay out a road map for this important industry and for the future.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. DANYLUK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: can you expand on the five chapters and their progress and benefits?

MRS. McCLELLAN: Well, Mr. Speaker, there's no question that all five chapters are very important to the industry. I've mentioned risk management and safety nets, but I think that food safety is one of critical interest to all Canadians, in fact to all people who receive our quality produce. We have a reputation in Canada for producing a very high-quality, safe food, and we want to build on that reputation. We believe that we can brand Canada as a safe, reliable source of food.

The other sector that I'll just mention, Mr. Speaker, although they're all important, is science and innovation. Actually, the reason that our agricultural industry has been so successful and is now an $18 billion contributor to this province's economy annually is largely due to science and research. This has allowed our producers to introduce new crops, new technologies, new processing methods, which has led it to be the largest single manufacturing sector in this province. So we encourage further work in that area, and we're working very closely with the Minister of Innovation and Science in our province for an agricultural research strategy for Alberta.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. DANYLUK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second supplemental to the same minister: who is responsible for the monetary support for this new framework?

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, the risk management safety net side of it is already funded pretty well in whole. There may be some adjustments in that area. We are having discussions with the federal government on the other four chapters. Certainly it has been recognized by the federal government that programs that we have in place will be recognized and can be recognized as a sharing. For example, in the environment the agricultural environmental sustainability initiative has done great work. We have worked through the CARD program. We've increased our funding in food safety in this province in each of the last two budgets, and we expect that to be recognized. Traditionally the funding has been 60-40; 60 federal, 40 provincial. We don't see that changing, and we'll work out the details on funding after June.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood.

Education Funding

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To protest the underfunding of schools, parents in Banff, Canmore, and Exshaw are considering withdrawing their children from provincial achievement tests. They would join 50 parents in Calgary who have made the same threat. My questions are to the Minister of Learning. Why are parents being forced to such extremes to have their funding concerns addressed?

DR. OBERG: Well, Mr. Speaker, over the past couple of weeks we just passed the budget – I believe it's in third reading today – which saw a huge increase into the Department of Learning of roughly 4 and a half to 5 percent that was increased in the Department of Learning budget. So when it comes to funding, the school boards have received 3 percent on their general grant this year plus a guarantee for teachers' salaries. So there is the money there.

With respect to the specific concern about parents withdrawing their kids from achievement tests, I would just put it out to the parents that I really would urge you not to hold your kids hostage in this. The achievement tests are something that is excellent for kids. It helps us to improve our curriculum, Mr. Speaker. We have the number one curriculum and the number one school system in the world and part of that obviously because of the teachers and the students, but part of that is also due to the achievement tests, where we continually look at the curriculum. So I caution the parents not to do that when ultimately it's their kids that will suffer if that occurs.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It doesn't make sense. If there's money available, why are parents taking such drastic action?

DR. OBERG: Well, I agree with you: it doesn't make sense. I think it does not make sense to hold their kids hostage in situations like this. I don't think it makes sense to cause the kids to not have an improved curriculum. Mr. Speaker, it is quite unfortunate. I agree with the member: it just doesn't make sense.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you. Again to the same minister, Mr. Speaker: has the minister threatened to disband parent councils who participate in the protest?

DR. OBERG: No.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Landlord/Tenant Legislation

MR. MASZYK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. One of my constituents who is a landlord has brought to my attention the frustration he's having with the length of time it's taking to have a tenant evicted. My question is to the Minister of Government Services. What recourse is available to landlords in a situation where they are finding it difficult to evict a tenant in a timely manner?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. COUTTS: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I certainly am aware of some of the concerns around the cost and the timeliness of the eviction process in terms of landlord/tenant disputes, particularly when you have a difficult or maybe an unruly tenant. I certainly can appreciate the frustrations that are put forward by landlords. But that being said, the legislation that we have in place serves both landlords and tenants, and it's called the Residential Tenancies Act. It sets out the rights and the responsibilities of both landlords and tenants in this particular province.

What we do have are some mechanisms that landlords can use if there has been what they feel is a breach of the contract or a breach of the landlord/tenants act. It gives a landlord the opportunity to go through Provincial Court rather than the conventional Court of Queen's Bench so that it can be speeded up and get an eviction notice out. However, they do have to let the tenant know that an eviction notice is coming, and it gives the tenant an opportunity to write back and voice their objections.

As well, I should point out that there is a lawyer referral service that can provide the names of lawyers that your constituent could consult, and the first half hour of that service is free to tenants. There are other mechanisms such as alternative dispute mechanisms that can be used, but, Mr. Speaker, most of the landlord/tenant disputes can be referred to our office so that people can really find out what the landlord/tenant act is all about and what their rights and responsibilities are.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MASYK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental question is to the same minister. My constituents believe that the balance is tipped in favour of the tenants. Are there any plans to bring new legislation to protect the rights of the landlords?

Thank you.

MR. COUTTS: That is a very good question, Mr. Speaker. I want to point out for the hon. member that Government Services gets a lot of complaints about the landlord/tenant act from landlords and tenants alike. What we find is that landlords think that tenants have all the rights and tenants think that landlords have all the rights. So what we're doing is we're currently reviewing our Residential Tenancies Act in Alberta today. We've gone through a research stage where we're looking at various landlord/tenant situations across Canada, and we're taking that information and putting it together along with our own Residential Tenancies Act, that is presently in place, and looking at ways that we can upgrade it to facilitate landlord/tenant disputes.

We'll be going out with a consultation very, very shortly this summer. That consultation will look for input from both landlords and from tenants. What I'd like to point out to the hon. member and to all members of the House is that currently there are about one million renters in this province, and of those one million renters, the few complaints that we do have coming in in comparison to the amount of renters that are out there show me that in Alberta today the majority of tenants and the majority of landlords really understand their roles and responsibilities to the act and the legislation as well as to their communities. So I'm very, very pleased at the fact that there are so few problems, considering the numbers of people that we have renting.

MR. MASYK: My final question is to the same minister, Mr. Speaker. How would my constituents get involved with the review?

MR. COUTTS: Mr. Speaker, certainly we'd like to see landlords and tenants get involved with the consultation, and when the consultation paper becomes available, I'll make sure that all constituency offices have a copy of it. As well, particularly you can get the consultation review to your constituent so that he or she may be able to get involved as well as any constituents that you have in the constituency that have had difficulties in the past with understanding landlord/tenant disputes or the Residential Tenancies Act. We'll make sure that that is available and publicized throughout the province.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Medicine Hat.

Electricity Pricing

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just as Enron, an enthusiastic promoter of electricity deregulation, was a spectacular failure, so too was this government's expensive electricity deregulation scheme. My first question is to the Minister of Energy. Why did the government decide to go to marginal pricing, where the last highest bid for electricity sets the price for all bids, rather than stay with incremental cost dispatching, where power is brought on in the cheapest, most cost-efficient way possible?

Thank you.

MR. SMITH: Mr. Speaker, the policy is a matter of record.

MR. MacDONALD: Again to the same minister: why did the minister choose a pricing system that favours generators over one that favours consumers while still providing generators with a healthy profit?

MR. SMITH: Well, Mr. Speaker, I was just looking at the average Power Pool price for 2001. The January price average is 13.1 cents, a cumulative 2001 average of 7.1. The price to date, 2002, 3.8 cents a kilowatt-hour. When you have prices cut in half, it's very hard for me to believe that a generator would benefit from that. So what has to happen is there have to be pathways and choices for consumers to be able to access the same price points that wholesalers are able to offer in the Power Pool. Also, with large companies and large industrials, for the price that they purchase power at, we should be able to have everyday consumers purchase power at that same price.

Mr. Speaker, that's very much a part of what we're working on today with the individual transmission companies, who have the regulated side to offer, as well as the generators and the utility companies that offer this and the great number of stakeholder and consultation groups that the government has used to get through this policy of deregulation. That has resulted in lower prices overall, and it certainly prevented any type of blackout from ever occurring in this province.

MR. MacDONALD: To the same minister: if prices are lower overall, when will the consumers see on their bill the $345 million that's currently outstanding in the Balancing Pool deferral account? When are you going to add that to their bill?

MR. SMITH: Mr. Speaker, we are not going to add that to their bill. The member clearly knows that the Balancing Pool, that was around during regulated times, is also around in deregulation. In fact, that entity gets money from the sale of the power that it manages as well as incurred the costs when regulated, inefficient power was running. That's also added to their cost. It's a very public process. Those documents are available in the public domain, and in fact it's simply an equation of money in, money out, which makes for either a rebate, which would be a surplus measure, or a negative number, which would be a deferral account.

Mr. Speaker, this process was a culmination of some eight years of consultation with consumers, with generators, with utilities, and with other members of the Alberta public. We do know that competition has the ability to lower prices or certainly lower the increase in prices. If in fact we would have been under the regulated model, we would have had to spend in excess of $4 billion just to bring the power that's here today.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Medicine Hat, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Zero Tolerance Policy in Provincial Parks

MR. RENNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Over the past 15 to 20 years a growing popular trend has seen camping trips during the May long weekend become the unofficial kickoff for high school graduation celebrations in my area. Out of concern with the increasing rowdiness in provincial campgrounds and to ensure the safety of both young people and other campground users, park officials instituted a zero tolerance policy on enforcement of alcohol-related offences last year within Cypress Hills provincial park. My questions today are to the Minister of Community Development. Can the minister advise what analysis has been conducted within the provincial parks administration to determine the effectiveness of last year's clamp-down on campground activities?

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Well, yes, Mr. Speaker. We're all aware of the upcoming grad season and the desire of young people to get out and explore our wonderful parks areas. I'm sure that numerous people will be visiting the very beautiful area in the Elkwater region. But to directly answer the question, we have done some analyses and reviews of the zero tolerance program which the hon. member refers to, and it will tell us information with respect to rowdy behaviour, what has worked and what perhaps has not worked to curb that type of behaviour, and also with respect to safety and precautionary measures that worked very effectively last year. I just want to say that the parks staff are working very closely out there on these reviews with local RCMP, the city of Medicine Hat police, Red Cross volunteers, and with the mobile unit people. So there's quite a bit of information that has been comparatively looked at, and it appears that the zero tolerance policy has been quite effective.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. RENNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What feedback if any has the government received regarding the zero tolerance policy?

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Mr. Speaker, in a general sense the feedback that we've been receiving as a result of zero tolerance in the area referred to has been very positive. We've heard from students who used the park facilities last year. We've heard from the counselors and teachers and parents and other uninvolved parties such as day and night parks visitors, and all of those analyses and all of those results indicate that we're on the right track there. We want to ensure the safety of our users and of the students in particular in this case, so we're very pleased with the feedback that we've been receiving. Overall, hon. member, you would be pleased to know that we've seen a decrease in the total number of incident-related activities.

2:20

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. RENNER: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. My final question: does the government intend to pursue the same zero tolerance policy again this year?

MR. ZWOZDESKY: The short answer, Mr. Speaker, is yes. We will be following the same procedure. In fact, we'll be stepping it up a little bit. Again we will be sending notices out – and some have gone out, I understand – to the schools in the area, to the students, and to the parents. We'll be doing some infomercials on local media outlets. There will be talk show appearances to highlight this particular circumstance. In the end, from our point of view as Community Development and responsible for parks and protected areas, we'll be increasing the number of conservation officers and again will be working on this zero tolerance policy very closely with the Check Stop people, the local RCMP, and other highway maintenance individuals so that we ensure a very safe and a very enjoyable experience for the students, the parents, and other park users.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Temporary Employment Agencies

MR. BONNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Premier and this government should have a greater appreciation and sense of urgency for the plight of the homeless and the poor. They are, after all, the last to share in the benefits of Alberta's current economic growth. One such group that has been left to the ravages of the streets are those who visit labour exchanges for temporary employment. Some of these labour exchanges are unfairly capitalizing on people who seek a way out of poverty and unemployment. To the Minister of Human Resources and Employment: given that temporary workers may be sent to jobsites for which they are hastily prepared, will the minister review workplace safety training at temporary employment agencies?

MR. DUNFORD: Mr. Speaker, the answer to that will be yes. I'm glad that the member has raised this particular issue. We're about to embark on a huge initiative here in the province to reduce workplace injuries by 40 percent. Of course, whether it's permanent or temporary work, if somebody is injured on the work site, then they come into our system, so we want to deal with it.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. BONNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: will the minister explain why the government allows temporary employment agencies to charge a worker who leaves an unsafe work site with the cost of bringing another labourer to that same site?

MR. DUNFORD: The hon. member will have to send me details on the issue, Mr. Speaker. I don't know the answer to that specific question as we are here today.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. BONNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given that a temporary employee who leaves a work site for any reason, including unsafe conditions, may be denied payment for hours already worked, will the minister review the business practices of temporary employment agencies?

MR. DUNFORD: Mr. Speaker, we have employment standards in place. Of course, it's always contemplated under that legislation that if someone is working and an agreement has been made as to the rate of pay and the work is done, then that rate of pay should be forwarded. I would indicate to the hon. member and to other members here in the House that if they are aware of those kinds of situations, we have employment standards offices around the province. As a matter of fact, we have a call centre that actually handles an incredible number of calls each and every year, and we're very proud of that information we're providing. So restitution is available if we hear about the specific cases.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, followed by the hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Programs Review

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Last July and August a five-person committee of MLAs consulted extensively on low-income programs. Holding these consultations last summer was justified because the government said that there was some urgency to address concerns about the inadequacy of these programs. How times and priorities change. The Minister of Human Resources and Employment has had the two reports since last October, and they've been buried ever since in a great, deepening pile of dust on his desk. To the minister of Human Resources and Employment: why is the minister attempting to evade the scrutiny of the Legislature by delaying the release of the low-income review until the session is over?

MR. DUNFORD: Mr. Speaker, one report is titled What We Heard, and the other report that apparently has found its way into the public domain through some sort of technique – I'm never sure how it happens – is called What We Recommend. The government response has to go with that MLA recommendation. We've made it a matter of process in this particular case that all three reports would be released at the same time. As much as the hon. member knows how capable I am in these situations, we have run into a couple of wrinkles, and we're not going ahead with it until we're satisfied that we have the government response. Also, I want to assure the hon. member that just in case – just in case – the leak came from anywhere near his domain, I will not change my agenda because of leaked documents.

MR. MASON: How convenient, Mr. Speaker.

Why doesn't the minister tell the Assembly before it adjourns for the season if he's going to accept or reject key recommendations of the MLA committee such as adjusting shelter allowances to market levels or using a market-basket approach to ensure that AISH and social assistance recipients can afford increases in the cost of living? There are many people in dire straits that have been waiting months and months and months for this, Minister.

MR. DUNFORD: In answer to the specific question the answer will be yes; we will be accepting some of the recommendations. We will be accepting other recommendations in principle, and we'll be modifying other of those recommendations. When we release all three reports, certainly it'll have the indication for each and every recommendation with it.

MR. MASON: How enlightening, Mr. Speaker.

This is to the Deputy Premier. Since Albertans had expected government action not only on the low-income programs review but also on the expert panel on delisting health services, the ambulance services review, and the adjudication of long-standing WCB claims, why is this government showing disdain for this Legislature by putting off these political hot potatoes until the Legislature has finished sitting?

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, contrary to the methods that the third party might use, we look to having good consultations, making sure that we understand the issues, and having an appropriate response before we come out with these issues.

Mr. Speaker, the ambulance report was mentioned. This is a very complex area. It involves private ambulances. It involves municipal ambulances. It also involves some volunteer areas, and some hospital ambulances probably are still operating. It's important, when we take these issues on, that we approach them through the consultation process and that when we have recommendations, we give those recommendations the courtesy of a thorough airing and discussion and respond with appropriate recommendations. This government has a history of doing that, and we will do it in all of these cases.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Future Summit Report

MR. JOHNSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My constituents, the people of Wetaskiwin-Camrose, played an important part in the Alberta Future Summit 2002 consultation as I held two successful MLA forums in both communities last fall. I've been asked by many of these people for an update on what is going on with the Future Summit following the February 4 and 5 gathering in Red Deer. My question is to the Minister of Revenue. As co-chair of this public consultation initiative when do you expect the Future Summit final report on those strategies and ideas for action Albertans deliberated over to be presented to government?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. MELCHIN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose is right. He participated substantially throughout the process of the Future Summit consultation last fall and through Red Deer on February 4 and 5 of this year. As well, many of the members of this House have participated as well as Albertans all across this province. It's been an outstanding process. We anticipate that the report should be delivered to us by the end of May. It was co-chaired by the Alberta Economic Development Authority and the government. Doug Mitchell, the other co-chair, and I will be looking forward to receiving that report in the last week of May.

MR. JOHNSON: To the same minister. As one of the publicized recommendations from the Future Summit was that government should establish some sort of revenue-balancing or leveling fund, can the minister give us an idea if government has examined this strategy?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. MELCHIN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There were many great strategies articulated by delegates at the Future Summit. We look forward to getting the report so that we could look at those recommendations in more detail. We can say, though, in respect to that one concept of stability and sustainability and predictability of revenues and a stabilization fund or otherwise that we have been examining a revenue framework inside the Department of Revenue over the past year. There's also one other committee that's very instrumental in this; that's the Financial Management Commission, that's been appointed by the Minister of Finance, that's looking at some of these accounting and financial issues. We look forward to both of those reports in the near future.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. JOHNSON: Thank you. To the same minister. Skeptics would say that this report could end up on the shelf collecting dust. How are you going to ensure that this doesn't happen?

MR. MELCHIN: Mr. Speaker, it's been the commitment from this government and certainly from Premier Klein at the onset when this Future Summit consultation process was put out that we will review and act upon the strategies. We will take part. We will commit to a full response by government this fall. We're looking forward to having a chance to review it amongst our processes. But it doesn't stop just with the government; this is part of all Albertans. It's going to be everybody in all Alberta participating in the future and the formulation of those policies.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Grizzly Bear Protection

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Since 1997 I have been asking questions in this Assembly about the protection of grizzly bears. Each time the minister responsible assured Albertans that the government was monitoring and studying but made no commitment to action. Let's see if the government can improve on its record today. My questions are to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. Will the minister upgrade the status of the grizzly bear from "may be at risk" to "threatened with extirpation," as recommended by the Endangered Species Conservation Committee?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. CARDINAL: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. That's a very important question. The recommendations from the conservation committee, which is chaired by the Member for West Yellowhead, I just received a while ago in my office. We're reviewing the recommendations, and I am in the process of forwarding a letter to the member indicating some of the changes that we'll be looking at in relation to that report.

In relation to the grizzly bear situation, Mr. Speaker, there are about a thousand grizzly bears in Alberta and another 40,000 grizzly bears in B.C., adjacent to Alberta. We have a well-managed hunting season for grizzly bears. Out of the thousand there are only about 15 taken out each year. This is something we need to monitor very closely. It is critical. It has to be monitored because one of the dangers of the wildlife out there today – and a lot of us may not be aware of it – is that a lot of the animals become too tame and urbanized, which in turn is creating a major problem to our urban centres and also to the public out there as far as safety. So I believe that a balanced hunt and a balanced protection of animals is necessary for the benefit of the animals also, not only the public.

MS CARLSON: Mr. Speaker, will the minister make a commitment to reviewing and upgrading the status by the end of May, which is what the committee has been requesting?

MR. CARDINAL: No, Mr. Speaker. Again, you know, the Liberal way would be just to close it, to just close everything down. That's the way the Liberals go. We don't do that. What I said earlier is very, very important, that in order to keep our wild animals healthy and productive, we need to make sure they remain wild. What has happened in the past 10, 15 years is that a lot of our wild animals, including deer, elk, moose, cougar, wolf, and coyotes and other animals, have become too tame and are now in conflict with the public. In fact, with deer and elk alone last year there were 6,000 accidents with cars. Now, there is something wrong with our system. That is why it's so critical that we study the area, monitor the area, and make the proper decisions.

MS CARLSON: All these years and still no commitment.

Mr. Speaker, given that the minister stated earlier in this Assembly that he will be immediately initiating recovery plans for the grizzly bears, will he make those plans public and table them in the Legislature?

MR. CARDINAL: All I'm saying, Mr. Speaker, is that the recovery plan has to be flexible. Protecting animals the way we've protected animals here the last 15 or 20 years has worked to a certain extent. In fact, maybe it's worked too well. The animals have become too tame, and we have too many on our roadways, too many on our farms, and too many in towns wandering all over amongst the people. So there has to be a balance. It's very important that the animals remain wild for their protection.

head: Recognitions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Dr. Linda Pilarski

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On April 5, 2002, Dr. Linda Pilarski was awarded the prestigious Cinader award at the annual meeting of the Canadian Society for Immunology in Blue Mountain, Ontario. The Cinader award, the top immunology award in Canada, is given annually in recognition of excellence in scientific research and contributions to the field of immunology, the study of the white blood cells that protect our bodies against infections.

Dr. Pilarski, a resident of Spring Lake, is professor of oncology at the University of Alberta and senior scientist at the Cross Cancer Institute. She previously received the YWCA woman of distinction award in science and technology as well as a McCalla professorship and a Killam professorship from the University of Alberta. She has published over 150 papers in scientific journals. Dr. Pilarski and her colleagues are currently working in the field of nanobiotechnology, the science of the very, very small; in this case, manipulation of individual molecules from individual cells to design devices able to provide rapid automated testing for genetic abnormalities in aggressive cancer cells.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Grant MacEwan Literary Awards

MS DeLONG: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to recognize the recipients of the Grant MacEwan author's award and the Grant MacEwan young writer's scholarships, who were honoured at the 2002 Alberta book awards on May 11. It was my pleasure to attend this event on behalf of the Minister of Community Development.

The Grant MacEwan literary awards were launched by the Alberta government in recognition of the late Dr. Grant MacEwan and his achievement in literary excellence. A prominent writer, politician, and historian, Dr. MacEwan was very involved with the development of culture and education in Alberta, and the awards help to nurture Alberta's literary talent in the spirit of this legacy. Every year an author's award of $25,000 is presented to an Alberta writer for a book that is reflective of Alberta and Dr. MacEwan's interests, and scholarships of $2,500 are presented to four young Alberta writers for essays of the same criteria.

There was a tie for the Grant MacEwan author's award, and the winners were Ken McGoogan of Calgary for Fatal Passage and Aritha van Herk of Calgary for Mavericks. The young writer's scholarships winners are Sarah Beamish of Edmonton, Timothy J.G. Cole of Calgary, Lindsay Stamhuis of Edmonton, and Brenna D. Wilson of Edmonton.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

2:40 Alberta Cattle Commission

MR. JACOBS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and give recognition and congratulations today to the Alberta Cattle Commission for being a winner of the 2002 international gold quill awards announced by the International Association of Business Communicators, sponsored by Mercer Human Resource Consulting. "We are honoured to receive this award, especially with it being an international award where we were judged against entries from around the world," says Joanne Lemke, Alberta Cattle Commission manager of public affairs. The Alberta Cattle Commission captured a gold quill excellence award for the refreshed If It Ain't Alberta, It Ain't Beef image campaign presenting real women from the industry, the RancHERS, as ambassadors for Alberta beef. "It was a total team effort, involving our staff, our promotion committee of cattle producers, our agency partner Communication Incorporated, and of course the RancHERS," adds Lemke.

The Alberta Cattle Commission was specifically acknowledged for media relations and the profile created by the Alberta beef campaign. The campaign competed among other projects in Australia, Belgium, Brazil, Canada, China, Croatia, England, Hong Kong, Japan, Mexico, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Philippines, Saudi Arabia, Scotland, Slovenia, South Africa, Switzerland, and the United States. Winners will be honoured at a gala banquet on June 10, and winning work plans will be on display during the International Association of Business Communicators 2002 international conference.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, you can have two minutes.

Vaisakhi Day

MS CARLSON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Today I would like to recognize the Edmonton Sikh community, who celebrated Vaisakhi day with a religious parade through the streets of Mill Woods on Saturday. Vaisakhi, the birthday of Khalsa, comes about this time of spring. It's close to the Christian festival of Easter and Jewish Passover, both festivals celebrating spring, goodwill, and new beginnings. Vaisakhi, traditionally on April 13, is a traditional harvest seasonal festival of northern India. The harvesting of wheat is started at this time and is considered a harbinger of wealth and prosperity. It is important and celebrated by all communities in India, but within Sikhism it has special significance. On this day the Tenth Guru, Guru Gobind Singh, created the order of Khalsa.

Thousands of people lined the streets in Mill Woods on Saturday between Gurdwara Siri Guru Singh Sabha on Gurdwara road and Gurdwara Mill Woods to witness hundreds of participants, and the parade included sword-fighting demonstrations, music, and floats. We congratulate the community and particularly the organizers on the successful completion of the fourth annual Nagar Kirtan parade.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Stettler.

Multiple Sclerosis Awareness Month

MRS. GORDON: Thank you. May is Multiple Sclerosis Awareness Month. Canada has one of the highest rates of MS in the world with Alberta having the highest prevalence in all of Canada, and closer to where I live, one of the neurologists practising in Red Deer estimates, between eight and 10 David Thompson health region residents are diagnosed with MS each month. Although the cause of MS is unknown, its course unpredictable, and its cure is as yet undiscovered, many exciting strides have been made. We now have some exciting new drug therapies that are helping considerably, particularly those afflicted with the relapsing/remitting type of MS. The MS Society continues to be a leader in funding much-needed MS research in Canada. However, as this research is very expensive, fund-raising is necessary. Many fund-raising events will be held across Alberta this month and next – bike tours, super city walking tours, charity golf tournaments, and of course the annual carnation campaign – where dollars raised could well blossom into a cure. As honorary spokesperson for the central Alberta chapter, whose bike tour will be held on June 22 and 23, it is contingent upon me to encourage you, your family, and your friends to participate in one of these most worthwhile events. MS lives here. Can we count on you?

Dr. Stuart Iglesias

MR. STRANG: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure to rise today to recognize one of my constituents, Dr. Stuart Iglesias, a Hinton area physician, who is the first recipient of the new rural physician distinction in practice award. Sponsored by the government's Alberta rural physician action plan, the rural physician distinction in practice award honours all rural physicians who provide outstanding medical service to Alberta's rural communities every day.

Dr. Iglesias was selected as the 2002 recipient for his superb contribution to rural medicine, rural anesthesiology, and obstetrics. Aside from running a busy family practice for the past 18 years and teaching family medicine at the University of Alberta, Dr. Iglesias has also found time to volunteer for a number of community organizations.

Dr. Iglesias will receive his award June 19 at a celebration cohosted by the Alberta rural physician action plan and the Hinton community. I'd ask all to join me in recognizing Dr. Stuart Iglesias, recipient of the rural physician distinction in practice award.

Thank you.

Beverly Towne Community Development Society

MR. MASON: Mr. Speaker, I rise to recognize an outstanding organization in my constituency of Edmonton-Highlands. The Beverly Towne Community Development Society are recipients of the Solicitor General's community crime prevention award. Beverly Towne Community Development operates the youth options program, an initiative that identifies the needs of youth at risk and provides them with alternatives, those being recreational activities.

Colleen Fiddler and Lorne Demchuk, two staff members, develop activities such as a summer golf program, a Friday night basketball program, and a number of others. As well, they oversee the youth council, who has taken on some interesting projects: a community garden project and a toxic materials roundup day. My congratulations to them for receiving this award and for the fine work they are doing in Edmonton-Highlands.

head: Presenting Petitions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to present a petition signed by 82 Albertans petitioning the Legislative Assembly to urge the government to not delist services, raise health care premiums, introduce user fees, or further privatize the health care system.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

THE CLERK: Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 37.1(2) I wish to advise the House that the following document was deposited today with the office of the Clerk by the hon. Minister of Revenue: responses to questions raised on April 24, 2002, Department of Revenue, 2002-2003 Committee of Supply debate.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

MR. BOUTILIER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to table the requisite number of copies of the Safety Codes Council annual report for the year 2001 as well as a commentary by the chair of the Safety Codes Council, Dr. Ken Sauer.

MR. DOERKSEN: Mr. Speaker, I also want to table copies of the 2000-2001 annual report of the Alberta Ingenuity Fund, which of course is the trade name of the Alberta Heritage Foundation for Science and Engineering Research. As usual, Members of the Legislative Assembly and all Albertans can get additional copies on the worldwide web at albertaingenuity.ca.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

MR. DUNFORD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to table with the Assembly the responses to questions that were asked during the estimates on April 11 that I was unable to answer at that particular time. We now have the written answers.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

MR. LORD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table the requisite number of copies of a memo addressed to the government members' research team.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

MR. McCLELLAND: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today on behalf of the Minister of Community Development to table with the House five copies of a document from Human Resources and Workers' Compensation Consulting regarding Bill 26.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

MR. MARZ: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. One is from the town of Carstairs and the other is from the town of Didsbury. They are both resolutions of nonsupport for the Kyoto protocol, and the appropriate number of copies are all here.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table copies of 87 letters from people who want the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development to adopt the recommendations of the Endangered Species Conservation Committee regarding grizzly bear protection.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm rising to table the appropriate number of copies of what I think is an enormously important document brought to my attention by a constituent. It's a new physician charter that was simultaneously published in February in both the Lancet and the Annals of Internal Medicine. It was developed through an international effort including the European Federation of Internal Medicine, the American Board of Internal Medicine, the American Society of Internal Medicine, and the American College of Physicians, and I recommend it to anybody who's interested in health care.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to make two tablings today. They are both letters. I have appropriate copies of the first letter that's written by Ms Marie Miller, president of the ladies auxiliary to the Grimshaw/Berwyn and district community health centre, addressed to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Ms Miller is expressing deep concern about the future of their hospital in view of the proposed budget cuts being made to the Peace health region.

The second tabling, Mr. Speaker, is a letter from Mrs. Marlene McCann, chair of the joint board, Coaldale United Church. This letter is addressed to the Chinook regional health authority expressing her congregation's serious concerns with the reduction of health services in Coaldale and the transporting of patients to other communities that this might cause.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first is a letter from the Ital-Canadian Seniors of Edmonton. These seniors are very disappointed with the government decision to cancel the Edmonton Community Lottery Board funding.

The second tabling is a letter from Mrs. Audrey Marie Borden addressed to me. Mrs. Borden is a client of Alberta Easter Seals and is concerned with the hardships that disabled people like her are facing due to the government's elimination of community lottery boards.

THE SPEAKER: Additional members?

Hon. members, might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests

(reversion)

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

MR. DUNFORD: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. There are a couple of young women that are in the Legislature today performing job shadowing on this particular minister, and I'd like to introduce them to you and through you to the Assembly. We have Jolene Moscaluk and Andrea Matias. If they would rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

head: Orders of the Day

head: Written Questions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, proper notice having been given on Thursday, it's my pleasure to move that written questions 5, 6, 7, 8, and 9 be dealt with today. It was already noted earlier that there are no motions for returns to come forward.

[Motion carried]

Health Care Premium Accounts

Q5. Dr. Pannu moved that the following question be accepted. As of April 1, 2002, what is the total number of employer health care premium accounts and the total number of individual/family health care premium accounts, and of the individual/family accounts what percentage are seniors' accounts?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to respond on behalf of the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness and indicate to the member requesting this response and to all members that we will be accepting Written Question 5.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member to close the debate.

DR. PANNU: I want to thank the minister for his response, Mr. Speaker.

[Written Question 5 carried]

Health Care Premium Accounts

Q6. Dr. Pannu moved that the following question be accepted. For each of the fiscal years 1999-00, 2000-01, and 2001-02 how many health care premium accounts were in arrears by one day or more, by three months or more, and by one year or more, what is the total amount of those arrears in each of these three fiscal years, and what percentage were employer accounts, individual/family accounts, and seniors' accounts?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Once again on behalf of the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness I'm pleased to advise all members that the government will be accepting Written Question 6 under the hon. member's name.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona to close the debate.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I again rise to express my appreciation for the government's acceptance of Question 6.

Thank you.

[Written Question 6 carried]

Students Finance Board

Q7. Dr. Pannu moved that the following question be accepted. Upon completion of studies what was the average debt load of postsecondary students who had received assistance from the Students Finance Board in the fiscal years 1990-1991, 1995-1996, and 2000-2001?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Learning.

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In keeping with this government's spirit of openness and accountability, we'd be more than happy to accept this question.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona to close the debate.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm really delighted to hear from the Minister of Learning that he's open to answering such questions. I appreciate the fact that he accepts this question without reservations.

Thank you.

[Written Question 7 carried]

Human Rights Complaints

Q8. Dr. Pannu moved that the following question be accepted. What was the average waiting period from the filing of a complaint with the Human Rights Commission to conciliation in the fiscal years 1990-1991, 1995-1996, and 2000-2001, and what was the average waiting period from conciliation to investigation of a human rights complaint in these same fiscal years?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, this is a very well-intentioned question, and quite frankly it's one which I've spoken with the member about and we're going to accept with some amendments. I understand that those amendments have been circulated to all members present, and in fact I did have a bit of a discussion with the hon. member. I would like for purposes of the record at the appropriate time to explain why the amendments are necessary. In the meantime what I'd like to move is the amendment, if that would be in order.

The amended written question would read as follows:

What was the average waiting period from the date a complaint was accepted by the Human Rights and Citizenship Commission to the date the file was assigned to conciliation in the fiscal years 1999-2000, 2000-2001, and 2001-2002, and what was the average waiting period from the date conciliation was concluded to the date complaints were assigned to investigation in these same fiscal years?

Mr. Speaker, speaking to the amendment, if I might just proceed, I just thought it would be beneficial to share with members of the House what prompts the amendments, just to be clear. First of all, when accepting a question, we need to put it into the proper parlance of what it is that is being sought here. I just say that because since we started a new tracking system called CHRIS, which is patterned after the Canadian human rights information system, some of the wordology has changed ever so slightly. The first part of this amendment deals with striking out, for example, "from the filing of a complaint with" and substituting the words "from the date a complaint was accepted by." This amendment aligns the written question with the different stages of complaint handling within the Alberta Human Rights Commission such that potential complaints, when they are submitted to the Alberta Human Rights and Citizenship Commission for review and assessment, undergo a bit of a testing, if you will, because not all complaints, when they are first brought to the attention of the Human Rights and Citizenship Commission, are necessarily accepted by the officers who work there.

Of course, the logical question is: well, why not? Part of the answer, Mr. Speaker, is because some of those complaints that are referred to the Human Rights and Citizenship Commission may fall outside the commission's mandate or jurisdiction, that is quite common, or perhaps the complaint, at the time it was made, was not made within a certain time period that may or may not be applicable in that particular case. So once staff members do speak with or review with a potential complainant the nature of that particular complaint, then they determine whether or not it is accepted, and then the process starts from there.

Adding the words "and Citizenship" before the word "Commission" simply clarifies the exact body.

By striking out the words "to conciliation" and substituting "to the date the file was assigned to conciliation" is one other point I'll comment on briefly. This amendment aligns the written question again with the different stages of the complaint-handling process. A complaint that is accepted by the commission may not be immediately assigned to conciliation. The amount of time that it sometimes takes for the conciliation process itself will of course vary among the different files, and it's also dependent on the parties and the progress they're able to make amongst themselves.

The second last change, Mr. Speaker, deals with the fiscal years that were requested versus the years being advanced. I should say that the information that has in fact been requested is simply not available in the form that you would like for the years prior to 1999-2000 because, to be very clear, data from previous years was not converted into the commission's new case management system since it came into force in 1999-2000. That's the CHRIS system. Although the commission did have a case management system prior to CHRIS, it did not provide the type of information in the form and manner in which the member was originally asking. So even if performance indicators such as were requested were available for earlier years, it just wouldn't be comparable to the 2001-2002 year, for example, for which we have the most current information.

The complaint resolution process, Mr. Speaker, has undergone some major changes and some very good improvements since that time. For example, the term "conciliation" and the term "investigation" are now separate processes. They used to be sort of wound together, but they were not separate processes back in 1990-91, which I think is the first date the hon. member was inquiring about. Today they are separated, and they're much more easily identifiable and distinguishable for it.

The final point, Mr. Speaker, is the request in my amendment to strike out "from conciliation to investigation" and substitute "from the date conciliation was concluded to the date complaints were assigned to investigation." Again, this amendment would align the written question with the stages of the complaint-handling process, because if conciliation is not successful or in some cases even if it's declined by either of the parties in question, then the complaint may be assigned to investigation. So there may be a waiting period between the completion of the conciliation stage and the assignment of the complaint to the investigation stage by a human rights officer, and that primarily is due to a very large volume of complaints that the commission might receive in a given period of time for processing.

Those are the reasons, for the record, Mr. Speaker, with respect to why the amendment is posed in the way it is. I want to just conclude by saying that I've always tried to make as much information available on all the questions. On behalf of the ministry I that represent, I think we can say that we've always tried to be very forthright and very forthcoming with responses to these questions, particularly when we're dealing with as sensitive an area as human rights.

So, hon. member, I'm doing the best I can to provide the information, and I hope that's acceptable to you, as we discussed last week. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: On the amendment. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First off, I want to thank the minister for the detailed explanation that he's given for the amendments that he's proposing but in addition for the personal consultation that he engaged in with me prior to today. So thank you, hon. minister, for both of those acts of kindness.

Some of the amendments that the minister is proposing are most reasonable. They make sense. For example, amendment (b), adding "and Citizenship" before "Commission": that's the official title of the commission. So that's fine. Some of the others are clarificatory, and in that sense they're helpful.

I have concern, however, with the problem that the new tracking system has caused with respect to your ability to address my question going back to '90-91, and I want to explain to you why I sought the information at five-year intervals, from '90-91 to I think '95-96, and then 2000-2001. It was to give us some sort of measure of the changes in response time, if there are any, from the initiation of the complaint to the conclusion of the complaint, and I'm sure you would be as much interested in finding out whether or not that time period has gone up or shrunk.

The question was initiated or instigated in the first instance because I had received some complaints in my constituency office from a few of my constituents who complained about the fact that they didn't really know, since there is no regulated or legislated period within which the commission must respond and conclude the investigation, the whole process. They were very frustrated in the fact that they didn't know how much time it takes typically for complaints to be heard so that they could compare their own waiting period with that and see whether or not that's reasonable. Given that, that was the reason for the request going back to '91.

Just because the data from the period prior to '99 cannot be easily converted to the new tracking system that you use in my view is not a good enough reason not to try and put that kind of information up front, make it public so that those judgments can be made by Albertans who are concerned about the way the commission works, especially because the commission's resources have remained frozen over the last 10 years and in fact have slightly declined over the last three. That's why people wonder whether or not the ability of the commission to address their concerns and complaints in a reasonable time is being eroded by the freezing of the resources of the commission, thereby impairing the ability of the commission to do precisely what Albertans expect this government to do, which is to make sure that human rights violations or complaints related to those are addressed fairly and accurately and in a reasonable time. So I'm disappointed, and I find it difficult to support (d), number 4 in your proposed amendments, Mr. Minister.

And the last point I want to make, Mr. Speaker, has to do with the last part, which says: by striking out "from conciliation to investigation" and substituting "from the date conciliation was concluded to the date complaints were assigned to investigation." When the minister spoke to me last week about this matter, I wasn't able to point out to him why it is that I find it difficult to accept this part of the amendment, but I've thought it over, and at least for those cases that move from initial probing to the acceptance of the request, for those I think we need the data going all the way back from the day the initial complaint was received through the date of acceptance and from that point on forward to the conclusion of the matter, whenever that ends, whether it ends at conciliation or whether it ends at investigation later on. I don't know why it would be difficult for the minister to provide the information on those cases which ultimately get accepted, to go all the way back to the date from which the complaint was first received to the day the complaint was finally disposed of.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: Recognition of the hon. Deputy Government House Leader at this time would conclude the debate on this amendment. The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I don't wish to prevent others from speaking at this stage, but maybe they'll speak at the next stage. I thought it would be important just to shed a little bit more light on the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona's points and specifically some of the questions that he raised. I want to be perhaps clearer than maybe I was. I thought I had been, but maybe I wasn't as clear as I had hoped to be.

The information that is being requested that goes back to the 1990-91 period theoretically in a perfect world could be found and brought forward, but, hon. member, honestly, the amount of time it would take to go back and reconvert that information that you are requesting, the length of time that it would take to do that – the cost, the time, and the number of staff people that we have there – would simply be, in my view at least, an unbearable length of time. Just because the two systems – the one we use today and have been for the past three years is now more of a nationally based approach. When I compare that with the business of getting on with the complaints that are before the commission and respecting its independence and letting it do its own thing and so on, simply suggests that we'll give you what we can that can be done in a reasonable period of time. I think that when you see the information that might come forward, the point that you are trying to address will show up, and that is: what is the government's record, if you like, in terms of how quickly some of these cases can be dealt with?

With respect, then, to the specific point about the response times having perhaps what you might call bookends, Mr. Speaker – in other words, from the date something is received – can we put in stone a certain date by which it must be resolved? I wish, I truly wish that were possible, but the types of cases that come forward – and while I don't ask for this information, I do have people writing to me about their particular cases, so I am familiar in that vicarious way with some of the cases that might be coming in from time to time. Having looked at all of that, I can tell you with some great assurance that some of the cases are indeed very complex. I don't know where one would begin to say justice had been served if you put a time limit within which it must be reviewed and done.

My experience – and I've been through this as a private member, and I'm sure you have as well – is that you want to be thorough about it. Obviously, you want to be expeditious and expedient, but you want to be so thorough about it. I fear that we would be perhaps risk being counterproductive if we put too firm a time line on it. Nonetheless, the point is made and accepted by the hon. member asking it that we do need to be more vigilant about the time frames taken here, and I think that's really what is sort of at the heart. So I will undertake, when this information comes out, to not only share it with you but to speak with you again about it and see what we can do to address those areas in need.

The other issue, Mr. Speaker, is with respect to the point about the different methods used to arrive at some form of resolution. Perhaps it should be stressed that the first attempt to resolve a complaint, as I understand it, is the conciliation approach. That is the first thing that happens. This is voluntary. It's a nonadversarial approach to resolving these disputes. It involves having a neutral person or a conciliator, which, as most members should know, helps both the complainant and the respondent to identify the issues, to discuss the factors surrounding the issues, and to generate possible solutions. I should say that the objective of conciliation is simply to reach a settlement which is acceptable, totally acceptable or for the most part acceptable to both parties without having to go through the other stage, which would be investigation. Nonetheless, investigation is another method of resolving.

Just very briefly for the record the investigation stage is an impartial gathering, an impartial collection, an examining of the facts that surround the points raised by the complainant and within the complaint itself. The objective of investigation is to try and determine whether or not the complaint has merit. If the complaint does have merit, then obviously a different route may be taken. An investigation that is conducted if conciliation is inappropriate, unsuccessful, or declined by either party could well be the outcome. If the hon. member likes, I could provide you a little bit more in writing to augment that, or we could chat about it as we did before.

Having said that, Mr. Speaker, I do want to conclude just by saying that human rights are very fundamental. They're extremely important to all of us, and we're doing everything that we can to ensure that those rights are not only protected but that when those complaints about potential human rights violations are received, they are dealt with as expeditiously as possible.

In my final comments I just want to say that I also respect the independence of the Alberta Human Rights and Citizenship Commission. They're doing I think a very good job in addressing this most fundamental and most important area of all. So I hope that that gives a little bit more information with respect to why we are hoping to proceed with this amendment and why I hope it will carry some favour in the end with all members of the House.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: All parliamentarians in the House will have noted that the last series of comments from the hon. Deputy Government House Leader were entirely out of order as they violated Standing Order 25(2) whereby "no reply is allowed the mover of an amendment." There was such great synergy here this afternoon in the House that we proceeded with it, but we will not consider this to be a precedent for the future.

So we currently have before the Assembly an amendment to Written Question 8 as moved by the hon. Minister of Community Development.

[Motion on amendment carried]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona to close the debate.

DR. PANNU: Mr. Speaker, I just want to thank the minister for the undertaking that he has given to me. We will work together to resolve some of the concerns that I have, and I hope I won't have to bring further questions to the House in written form on this issue.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Written Question 8 as amended carried]

Health Care Premiums

Q9. Dr. Pannu moved that the following question be accepted. Of the moneys the government received from health care premiums for the fiscal years 1999-2000, 2000-2001, and 2001-2002, what amount was remitted by employers, and of that amount how much was paid by employers on behalf of employees?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure on behalf of the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness to indicate to the House that both he and the government will be accepting Written Question 9 as requested.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona to close the debate.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to thank the Minister of Health and Wellness and the Deputy Government House Leader for this good news, particularly the Deputy Government House Leader for being the bearer of the good news.

Thank you.

[Written Question 9 carried] head: Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders

Third Reading

Bill 206
Fisheries (Alberta) Amendment Act, 2002

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

MR. DANYLUK: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is with pleasure and some relief, I'll admit, that I rise today to move and begin debate on Bill 206 as it is read a third and final time.

I would like to start by thanking all the members of the Assembly for their thoughtful contributions to the debates that have taken place about the Fisheries (Alberta) Amendment Act, 2002. There have been a great deal of valuable ideas that have come forth from both sides of the House as we have discussed this legislation, and I am pleased that all members of this Assembly have taken such an interest in the idea.

I think that the high level of interest has been generated out of the necessity to find sustainable solutions for Alberta fisheries. For many years now Albertans, aquaculturists, commercial fishermen, and anglers have expressed their unending frustration with an unchecked predator that has hindered the stability and growth of Alberta fishing. As I have said before, this legislation will help promote and support growth in Alberta's fishing industry in conjunction with responsible fishing. It is one piece of the puzzle that we hope can align with other initiatives to enhance and help Alberta fisheries become more sustainable.

As members of this Assembly we are all aware that Bill 206 deals primarily with pest control. As we have discussed repeatedly, the double-crested cormorant has been identified as a major pest in my constituency. Preyed upon by rats and snakes, the cormorant has no natural predators in northern regions of our province. The absence of a natural check and balance for this species has allowed it to flourish at an incredible rate. The overwhelming numbers of birds are helping deplete our fish stocks to dangerously low levels.

Stop for a moment to consider that we have been stocking the lakes and streams around the province for decades in order to combat low fish stocks and instill stability. With each attempt to encourage fish population growth, there has been a marked and corresponding increase in activity of cormorants. Mr. Speaker, this leads me to believe that the stocking strategy that has been used has unintentionally provided cormorants with an easy food supply. I think that this legislation is an excellent complement to those worthwhile stocking strategies while stopping its negative consequences.

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

Mr. Speaker, in a four-lake area in my constituency last year there were approximately 46,000-plus cormorants, and it is estimated that they consume about 6 million kilograms of fish each year, realizing that all are not edible, game, or sport. This figure far surpasses the fish limit of 465,000 kilograms placed on commercial fishermen over a 25-lake area in the zone; in fact, 12 times the commercial limit.

AN HON. MEMBER: How many times?

MR. DANYLUK: Twelve times.

Mr. Speaker, I think that we can all see that figures like these clearly show that there is a problem, and we need to address it. In the same manner that Alberta farmers have the ability to control pests that prevent them from achieving maximum efficiencies in their agricultural endeavours, Alberta's aquaculturists will be able to practise the same manner of control over pests that affect them. Through this legislation I think we can recognize the importance of the Alberta fishing industry.

Pests come in all sorts, Mr. Speaker, whether they are mosquitos in the park, gophers in the field, or coyotes in the pasture. We have come to accept that pests like the ones I have just mentioned need to be controlled. The cormorant is another pest just like them, and it is essential to the stability of Alberta fisheries that we start to implement measures of control over the cormorant.

Alberta is not the first jurisdiction to acknowledge these foul fowl as a problem. U.S. Fish and Wildlife has begun searching for options to deal with the cormorant problem south of the border. The affected area stretches from Texas to New York and over to Oregon and into Canada. It is definitely not localized. The birds are a real problem, Mr. Speaker, and I am thankful that there is enough support for us to begin dealing with them here.

This legislation has not been brought forward on a whim. This legislation has been drafted and debated because of a problem that is the most prevalent in northern Alberta constituencies in this province. My constituency is especially troubled, and that was my initial motivation for bringing Bill 206 forward. I have now been educated to realize that we are not isolated.

I would like to ask the members of this Assembly to join me in support of the Fisheries (Alberta) Amendment Act. Your support is essential to the sustainability of Alberta fisheries.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am happy to address Bill 206 at third reading. I had an opportunity to speak to it earlier when it was introduced in second reading and subsequently an opportunity to talk to a number of organizations and people since the time of its introduction. What I have discovered is more people and more organizations who don't like this bill than those that we had first listed when we debated this in second reading. To the credit of the member who introduced this bill, I know that he has done some follow-up with some of those organizations, so I was a little surprised with his opening comments, that as part of this educating process he didn't refer to the concerns that they had shared with him. Perhaps he should have addressed those concerns as he wrapped up his comments on this bill. So that's too bad. Perhaps someone else in that caucus will bring those concerns forward.

The Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul is correct when he says that there is a problem with fish stocks in this province, and I have been talking about that problem since 1993 in this Legislature. [interjections] Well, it's too bad – I know that the Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar likes to just barge into debate without standing and taking his place – but this isn't the right thing to do, to bring in this kind of a bill.

This isn't actually solving the problem. This is addressing a symptom, not the actual problem. We have talked for years about what the basic underlying problems are surrounding fish stocks, and I commiserate with the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul, particularly for his commercial fishing people in the region who rely on fish stocks for their livelihood. What we have here are classic problems, most of them stemming from the government's lack of action on addressing what has been a growing problem here in this province.

We see problems that have contributed to this fish issue of unlimited harvests. We've seen supplies that have been decimated. A lot of it is a problem with staffing in the department. There hasn't been consistency or co-ordination. The department's been renamed, reorganized, economized, downsized, privatized. Knowing what the responsibilities are and having the adequate staff to follow through and monitor have been a particular problem with this department. We haven't seen any continuity even in the restocking that they've done.

In the time that I have on this particular bill I would like to address some of the concerns that were brought forward by the Alberta Wilderness Association. I'm hoping that the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul also got a copy of their release. He didn't refer to it in his comments, but then he didn't refer to any of the conversations that he's had with the people who are opposing this bill. The Alberta Wilderness Association released a press release on May 1 with Bill 206, the Fisheries (Alberta) Amendment Act, as the subject. The title of their press release is "Bill 206 is a Red Herring," of course quite an appropriate name for this particular bill. What they talk about here is that this private member's bill actually creates the impression that the government itself is doing something on this legislation. Now, I know that private members don't represent government position officially, but we often see private members' legislation introduced in this Assembly that subsequently is at least a trial balloon for government policy that comes down the road, or sometimes it is used as kind of a band-aid solution to address a bigger problem.

Their concern here is that this private member's bill "gives the appearance that the government is doing something to protect our fisheries" and that it "treats the symptoms not the causes." I completely agree with that statement, Mr. Speaker. I believe that that is what's happening here. They talk about this bill allowing "the Minister to order any regulated measure to deal with any animal or bird that is deemed a threat to fish or fish habitat." This bill is a problem from more than just the cormorant's position. It indiscriminately covers native and non-native species as well as natural habitat and fish farms. The bill is aimed at controlling increasing populations of double-crested cormorants and their predation on fish farms and lakes.

You would think that if that was the only species that they were specifically identifying and going after, it might not be quite as big a problem, aside from the fact that this is more of a feel-good measure than actually addressing the systemic problems here. What

Dr. Richard Thomas, who is the AWA spokesperson on this particular issue, says is that targeting the cormorant is a real red herring . . . Studies done on Lake Winnipeg, and Alberta Fish and Wildlife Division's own data conclusively demonstrate that increased numbers of cormorants are actually a symptom and not the cause. The actual cause is human overexploitation of the province's fisheries.

He goes on to say that the ecological process being demonstrated is that "over fishing removes large predatory fish such as walleye and pike." We know that's been an ongoing problem. We know that that's been the subject of numerous studies by Alberta fish and wildlife. We know that that's part of the reason why now we're starting to see limits going into lakes and commercial fishing being stopped. One of the other processes being demonstrated here is that "baitfish populations, upon which the cormorants primarily feed, are 'released' from predation and grow in numbers rapidly," and "cormorant populations expand in response to the greater availability of food."

In essence what they're saying is that the government's poor planning and inability to properly manage the fish stocks is the cause of the increase in the cormorant population. So now you're going to penalize a species and other species that haven't been causing problems, potentially, because the government hasn't been able to properly manage fish stocks, and that is the wrong answer to this particular issue. Dr. Richard Thomas goes on to state that he wonders if the member who introduced the bill "has stopped to consider that fishermen and industrial development regularly affect fish and their habitat." Sorry. That's not attributed to Richard Thomas; that's Jillian Tamblyn, the AWA conservation specialist.

"AWA recognizes the need to conserve and restore Alberta's fisheries," they state in their press release. "Better management of fishing pressure, native fish stocks and habitat protection should be the core of any new legislation," says Tamblyn. "Fish farms and ponds are not natural systems and need to be looked at separately," she says. And that's very true. We now start to see some preliminary measures occurring within the responsible department on this issue, but it's closing the barn door a little late, Mr. Speaker.

We're in a situation now where we've seen the only legislation that the government talks about bringing in are regulations that will be reducing the number of commercial fishermen in this province, and then because they're forced into a situation where these people are going out of business, the government is then going to pay them to get out of the business of fishing. So because of mismanagement over a series of years and one particular industry we see the government having to bail out business again. Totally irresponsible, lack of foresight, and too bad it had to happen in this province. It didn't have to go there at all, Mr. Speaker, had we started to address these issues much sooner than what actually occurred. I don't think the government has the answers now in terms of how to repopulate fish stocks in the province.

I talked to a number of people on the weekend who were very surprised that this would be the kind of legislation that would go through here in the Assembly. I would urge the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul to work closely with the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development in pushing him to ensure that we have a management and restoration plan in place as soon as possible for restoring fish stocks in this province, because it is certainly a very key issue. Many people make their living from fish in this province from a commercial perspective, from the commercial fisheries being able to keep some prices down in the next level of industry, which is primarily restaurants and resale. Also, fishing provides a great deal of tourism dollars to this province and recreational opportunities for people who live within the province.

If we lose this particular industry, Mr. Speaker, we are facing great economic losses, not to mention the kinds of problems that will occur in the food chain and ecological cycle of this province. So I urge people not to support this bill at this time.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to participate this afternoon in the debate on Bill 206, the Fisheries (Alberta) Amendment Act, 2002. I have listened to various speeches in this Assembly and have certainly read in the newspapers the accounts that some hon. members of this Assembly have had with the double-crested cormorant. If you look at a book on the birds of Alberta, Sangudo would be just on the extreme western section of its range. It certainly, from what I can read, has been a very destructive resident of Sangudo, and the range of this bird pretty well goes north of Slave Lake right to the national park at Wood Buffalo. Now, it will reside in our province from April through October. There are quite a few claims made about its consumption of fish, but I believe that habitat and species management certainly goes beyond giving permission to destroy birds on Crown land.

I've been looking at the information that's available on this bird, and certainly they do have anywhere between, Mr. Speaker, two to four eggs in the nest. I don't know what proposals have been made or whether it's been a consideration that there be just complete nests destroyed or whether there be eggs removed from the nests. I don't know what is the answer, but I'm not convinced that we have taken all the measures that are necessary. The cormorant populations are a concern, as I understand it, across Canada. In the United States the cormorant can be easily seen on the Seal Rocks near San Francisco at Cliff House or even on the coast of Maine. They're almost on every buoy and channel stake in the harbours in Florida. But to think that they are the reason for the decline in our fish stocks I think may be overstated.

Now, I don't know what sort of research has gone into the drafting of this legislation, whether there is scientific background to this. Certainly the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul quoted the tonnes of fish that have been consumed by these birds, but there are other factors, I believe, in the decline of our fish stocks. We look at the increase in forestry. We look at oil and gas development. We look at irrigation projects. They would certainly all threaten in some way fish habitat.

I think we should get more information before we pass this bill on just exactly how the cormorant is impacting fish stocks. To order the destruction of an animal or animals based on hunches or hearsay I don't think is sufficient. I would question this government in how many resources have been utilized to determine the status of fish stocks across the entire province and how much of this science-based research has been done to determine why stocks are at the current levels. Is it simply the diet of the cormorant, or is it a series of factors?

Now, we look at question period a little earlier in this session, Mr. Speaker. There were certainly questions directed to the government on their plans to buy back fishing licences, and this has to show that perhaps there is some cause for concern there for our declining stocks. I think we should be addressing these issues before we look at killing the cormorant. I mean, it seems quite odd that we would resort to this tactic.

The cormorant has large colonies as I understand it. My research indicates that there could be up to 3,000 pairs. This bird certainly has family values, and I thought this was something that was relished and cherished by this government. The males have elaborate courtship dances, including dances in the water where he presents the female with material to build a nest. The male will also dance to mark out a nesting site for the couple. Now, most of these nesting sites, as I understand it, are at ground elevation, so if one wanted to remove one or two eggs from those nests, perhaps it would be easily done. I don't know how aggressively they defend their nests.

AN HON. MEMBER: Very.

MR. MacDONALD: They are very aggressive in defence of their nests.

Now, there is, as I said earlier, Mr. Speaker, a clutch between two and four and sometimes maybe more in that nest, but both parents take part in the incubation as well as care for the young. The young are covered in black down and certainly have aggressive appetites, eating food provided of course by the parents, and the young are fed about six times a day. Once they are about a month old, certainly with our climate here and the need to I guess fly south in October, development progresses quite quickly. The birds begin to fly about a month and a half after they are born, and they divide up into small groups. They feed during the day by swimming and diving for fish, and it's interesting that they swim and dive for fish so aggressively in Alberta, but in other areas where they're observed, they don't swim or fly too far from land. So they seem to be living differently, shall I say, around Cold Lake. They have problems where they have to dry their wing feathers, and for that reason biologists indicate that they don't normally travel great distances over water. Perhaps another hon. member of this Assembly can explain to me if they have different behaviours here, or is that just the narrative from fish and wildlife biologists?

Now, it's interesting, as I said, that the nests can sometimes be found in trees but are more commonly found along the ground in crowded colonial sites. This, at some time after there was research done, would perhaps be a suitable time to remove one or two eggs from the nest, but to shoot these birds I think is wrong, and I will not support this bill at this time.

Thank you.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to make some comments about Bill 206. I think that if we first of all look at the background of the problem, there's really been little attention given to the cormorant numbers and very little attention given to the problem itself. There is, you know, the material that's been presented to us during debate. There's been little scientific knowledge brought to bear on the issue. Certainly there have been none of the kind of long-term studies that one might expect given the kinds of action that the bill proposes in terms of a particular species.

The history of the cormorant is that they were low in numbers when the sport fish populations of northern pike and walleye were healthy. So as long as those two species were plentiful, the numbers were always low, and populations only increased after northern pike and walleye stocks collapsed. The increased cormorant numbers are speculated, at least, to be more a reaction to the collapsed pike and walleye populations than the cause of the declines. Better management I guess is what the bill demands, better management of our fishery resources, and that in the long run is probably the best solution in terms of keeping the cormorant population in balance.

So I think there are a couple of issues. The fact that there hasn't been the kind of study that such a move as proposed in the bill would anticipate and the fact that the attributes given in terms of the increase in cormorants are maybe incorrect I think should lead us to have second thoughts.

One of the problems is that the provincial fisheries managers don't have the kinds of resources they need to conduct the field studies, the long-term studies that would be useful when we're trying to make a decision about supporting or not supporting the bill in front of us. If those managers did have the resources that they required, then there would be early warning signs. We wouldn't be left to find ourselves in the situation that we do today, having to react to what is in fact a crisis. We would have the kind of data that we need to make I think more appropriate long-term decisions. But it seems to be more typical of the province; they continue to move into a reaction kind of mode, particularly with the fisheries.

Since 1995 Alberta has had to put in place recovery plans for the bull trout, Arctic grayling, northern pike, and walleye. There's some indication that similar action is being planned for lake trout and yellow perch. So we seem to be in a position of having to react rather than to be in a position of having information that we use to plan and control and make better long-term decisions. I think most of those interested observers would agree that it's really time that the province got out of this approach to fisheries management – that is, a crisis management mode – and gave the kinds of resources that are needed to the provincial fisheries managers so they can do the job that one might expect of them.

I guess the message is that we should be doing the science first and that before you take action, you identify what the problems are and you put in place a management plan and you monitor what's happening. There are relatively few preliminary studies in terms of even the cormorant numbers and no studies we can come across that seem to study why the number of cormorants seems to be increasing. Again there isn't a provincial management plan for the cormorant, and that's really what's needed. There has been no real study of the preferred control methods, of what is the best way to control that population. It seems that we end up coming forward with management activities before we've properly studied the problem. Here we are putting in place control measures without really having any kind of information on the repercussions of that approach to the problem.

I think that we've all received a number of e-mails on this, and I have drawn my remarks from some of those e-mails, Mr. Speaker. One of the points that I think has been made is that if nothing else Bill 206 has really been very useful in terms of raising public awareness as to the kinds of fisheries and aquatic resource problems that we have. If for no other reason it's been useful in that public relations aspect.

I think it's also been pointed out to us that there is existing legislation where exactly the kinds of things that are anticipated under Bill 206 could have been done, and that's the federal Fisheries Act and Alberta's Water Act. Those two pieces of legislation allow for what's being done in Bill 206 and, furthermore, could provide many more benefits to Alberta's fishery resources than Bill 206 does. So there is existing legislation there. This action can be taken.

I think the other point that needs to be made, Mr. Speaker, is that we do need a long-term monitoring program for fish populations which includes water quality and water quantity studies and that it's not good enough to lurch from crisis to crisis. I think the government has an obligation to start to put the dollars back into the aquatic resources budgets that would allow them to do the job they are hired to do and would allow them to begin monitoring and making sure that before laws like Bill 206 come before the Assembly the proper study and background work has been done.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul to close debate.

MR. DANYLUK: Mr. Speaker, I do have to answer a couple of questions; I'm sorry. First of all, I would just like to suggest to the members opposite that I have referred in the Committee of the Whole to some of the points that were brought up by a number of organizations. I would also like to suggest that this is not a presentation that was done on a whim. It was one that was science based. There is no doubt some question as to what is science based, because there are numerous groups and numerous organizations that have biologists, and I very much value their input.

I have also concurred with members opposite that my bill addresses a small part of the challenges that face fish populations and the attention and dedication that is needed to enhance fish stocks through the province. I would also like to suggest that the bill will support the positive initiatives that the government has taken. I would also say that no one has the exclusive answers for the fish stock challenges, but this government is doing something about it. I do not want to stand by and be part of the demise and the destruction of fish stocks and the collapse of our lakes. I believe that this bill does enhance fish stocks in Alberta, and it is a small part that I believe I can play.

Thank you very much.

Bill 207

Alberta Wheat and Barley Test Market Act

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

REV. ABBOTT: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It is my pleasure to rise today to speak on Bill 207, the Alberta Wheat and Barley Test Market Act. This bill would establish test market conditions for a 10-year period where Alberta farmers could operate within the freedom to sell their product to whomever they choose at any price under any conditions. I stand today in wholehearted support of Bill 207.

In this discussion there is important information that should be made known. The entrenched institution, the Canadian Wheat Board, which from hereon in I will refer to as the CWB, sustains myths and misinformation to guide our beliefs. Mr. Chairman, I am not prepared to accept the board's self-serving trade methods at the expense of our farmers' livelihoods and our grain industry. The farmers of Drayton Valley-Calmar and the farmers of Alberta deserve better.

With my time today I would like to analyze the current monopoly situation and put it in the much-needed perspective of current farming and distribution needs in Alberta. In doing so, I'll explore the benefits of Bill 207.

Mr. Chairman, this bill at its core is about the disruption of a monopoly. The benefits in this case would be widespread for Alberta farmers and eventually the Canadian grain market as a whole. Any situation where a monopoly exists legally or illegally breeds inefficiencies. That is to say that it encourages inefficient production simply by not rewarding innovation and personal cost efficiency. Further, by limiting supply, it certainly infringes on our growth. Economic profits go unrealized. This represents a dead-weight loss felt in the end by the farmers themselves. By untying their hands, these profits would be realized automatically and distributed efficiently.

Mr. Chairman, the monopoly situation can be clearly seen under certain conditions. Let's look at OPEC. The demand for oil is so steady and the product differentiation so limited that above-normal profits can be realized through collusion among parties. This end is undermined when a party either refuses to participate in the first case or turns on the original collusion agreement. We see these textbook monopoly cases mostly in global commodity markets where international law is undefined, and this collusion, generally illegal under fair business tribunals, is allowed to exist.

Here, Mr. Chairman, the CWB ensures complete participation; that is, farmers are forced, legally required to sell their grain exclusively to the CWB. Since 1919 farmers' choice to sell has been wholly dictated. The CWB's argument attempts to emulate the OPEC economic motivations. They say:

The delivery monopoly and the control it gives the CWB over the western Canadian inventory of wheat and barley are essential to carrying out the sales strategy . . . Without the monopoly, the CWB would be selling in direct competition with other sellers of Canadian grain. Such competition among sellers would quickly reduce the market price for a given quality of grain.

Mr. Chairman, this assumes too much. This assumes that the world market demands a homogenous product with a very steep demand curve. This assumes that Canadian downstream industries and consumers take the board's price as law when making their own business decisions. This assumes that innovation and market-affecting cost efficiency at the ground level are needed. This assumes that all competition is negligible with regard to its own pricing decisions, and this assumes that a monopoly seller does not limit effective selling or pricing options.

Mr. Chairman, first, we can agree that wheat products are in high demand. What differentiates this industry from a true monopoly situation is that great diversity exists and the market accepts and desires even more diversity. The argument for a monopoly structure doesn't hold when a product is sufficiently diversified. There is a growing market for variety and quality that is simply not being addressed under the CWB's control.

Secondly, under the CWB structure whatever price they say is the price that goes. Consumers and downstream agents take this price as given, heaven sent if you will, and make all individual decisions based on this given price. With such far-reaching effects from flour producers to transport ships to a family's loaf of bread, let us hope that the given price is indeed the most advantageous price. Mr. Chairman, this is simply impossible for the CWB to achieve. The only way to guarantee efficiency in this sense is to let market forces prevail and let the market itself determine the equilibrium price. So consumers and other downstream agents are paying inflated prices that ultimately skew consumer decisions, and in industry investment and research and development budgets can be affected also.

Thirdly, in this increasingly attractive and competitive global industry there is a distinct need for innovation, new developments, and cost efficiency. Currently under the CWB there can exist no independent reward mechanism. All of the product goes into a pool, and the price they give you is the price you get. So this offers no incentive whatsoever to improve methods or quality and no incentive to find new ways of doing things. In any other industry this restrictive policy would not be accepted.

Fourthly, we clearly do not find ourselves in a pure monopoly situation because the commodity market supports a few large players. In effect, we are operating within oligopoly conditions and pricing under a monopoly structure. So by giving farmers the freedom to sell privately, we will maintain our dominant output position and allow competition on price, variety, and quality.

My fifth and related point, Mr. Chairman, argues that selling limitations are tied directly to these pricing limitations. There are large markets available with increasing demand that simply cannot be fully captured by the CWB working alone. From port arrangements to term contracts to hedging agreements to trade provisions our industry would be better served if the farmers themselves were in control. For instance, a farmer could choose to set up long- or short-term contracts across a variety of markets.

Mr. Chairman, I urge the members of this Assembly to join me in my support of Bill 207. This bill will aid farmers across Alberta and encourage improvements throughout the industry. Over 80 percent of Alberta farmers want the ability to sell their grain to any buyer, which includes the Canadian Wheat Board, in domestic and export markets. Let's give them this chance. Let's get behind our farmers in this very significant and profitable local industry.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I rise to speak against Bill 207. I know for many members opposite that's heresy, but it only underlines the fact that this is a religious rather than a political thing. It shows that the members have a religious belief in markets which is not borne out in any scientific way.

This is a bill which is intended to undermine and ultimately destroy the Canadian Wheat Board, and it is part of a government policy of favouring the growth of large-scale corporate farms at the expense of small producers. This bill will be in our view another nail in the coffin of the family farm in western Canada, and there are lots of people from all political walks of life who believe that preserving the family farm is something that is worth doing. I would remind the hon. minister of industry of that.

There are some very simple things that I think need to be identified. If you're selling a product and you're the only one that has the product and there are many, many buyers out there, the market power is with the seller, with you, and you can get any reasonable price for your product, depending on how badly the group of buyers needs it, but if there are multiple vendors of a product, in this case wheat, and only one or two buyers, then the power of course resides with the buyers. If you examine the market, it's the latter model that exists. There are many, many farmers who sell their grain to very few buyers.

The people who talk about the free market are the same people who make the mistake in the energy industry in terms of the production of electricity. Where there are so few producers, it's reversed. There are so few producers of electricity and it costs so much to be involved that in fact no real market can exist. In this case, eliminating the Canadian Wheat Board – and that's what this bill is really all about – will favour agribusiness. It will favour large-scale corporate farms, and it will accelerate the elimination of small and medium-sized farms in western Canada.

It attempts to set up a dual market. Now, it's interesting that the Canadian National Millers Association, which represents the value-added processing industry that this bill is supposed to help, argues that a dual market would create supply uncertainty and discourage value-added processing in Canada. The Canadian National Millers Association supports either an open market altogether or a single desk but not a dual market.

I want to talk a little bit about the myth, Mr. Chairman, that there are an unlimited number of buyers out there, that farmers will have a choice and be able to sell their grain, because in fact that's not the case. There are a relatively limited number of companies that will buy the grain plus some brewers and so on, but there's a relatively small number of potential purchasers of the grain. So to suggest that farmers will have a free market to deal with when they sell their grain is just completely false, and again it speaks to the fact that this is more an article of theology with some of the Conservative members than it is a scientifically proven theory.

I think that another myth that exists is that there would be greater choice, but in fact there are only a few multinational corporations, a handful of brewers and millers, as I said, and these processors themselves are constantly amalgamating and growing larger and fewer. Farmers are then expected to increase their efficiency by expanding their operations, and that doesn't actually increase production. It only reduces the number of farmers by having fewer farmers farming larger sections of land. So the Canadian Wheat Board is therefore not limiting choice. Rather, it's ensuring that farmers are able to put collective pressure on a small number of buyers.

Now, the federal Auditor General's report of February 27, 2002, found that the Canadian Wheat Board has been fairly successful at predicting prices and has increased its accuracy over the last three years. The Auditor General's report also notes that the market is becoming increasingly complex because of global competitiveness and found that the Canadian Wheat Board's marketing capacity was a major strength.

Another myth that's being spread by proponents of killing the Wheat Board is that farmers will benefit from increased prices. The Canadian Wheat Board plays a key role in procurement and transportation, and without that, the farmer or the purchaser will have to bear those costs.

A myth also associated with the proponents of this bill is that an open market can coexist with the Canadian Wheat Board. Advocates of the dual market would like to take advantage of the risk sharing which is created by pooling while capitalizing on the occasional high prices in the cash market, and that would mean that when prices are high, grain would be marketed privately while the Canadian Wheat Board pool prices lag behind. When prices are falling, the pooling prices would again lag but this time would be above the prices achieved through private marketing. Farmers would therefore prefer to sell to the Canadian Wheat Board at this time. However, the Canadian Wheat Board would therefore be operating in a deficit. When prices are rising, farmers would not sell their grain through the Canadian Wheat Board, and when prices drop, farmers would sell through the CWB, causing the pool to sell larger quantities at lower prices and in a tougher marketing environment.

Mr. Chairman, one of the last things I want to deal with is the proposition by proponents of the bill that getting rid of the Canadian Wheat Board will increase the value-added sector in Alberta. Value is added because the Wheat Board is able to consistently guarantee high-grade grains. Purchasers already benefit from the stable procurement offered by the Canadian Wheat Board. Value added through processing would not be passed on to farmers.

I just want to say in conclusion that there is a whole complex of policies of this government which seem designed to develop a corporate model for agriculture in this province where large-scale, investor-owned operations predominate. It's not just this act, but we see it in any number of other policies of this government. The government is not being clear with Albertans about where it's taking agriculture. They're certainly not being open and honest about that policy direction, because quite frankly many Albertans would not support it if they knew. So we see this act. Instead of just saying that we want the Canadian Wheat Board to be eliminated, it sets up dual marketing, knowing full well that dual marketing is going to undermine and eventually lead to the destruction of the Canadian Wheat Board and therefore the livelihoods of many family farms and farm families.

So, Mr. Chairman, in conclusion I would urge all members to oppose this bill. Thank you.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

MR. DANYLUK: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman, for the opportunity to rise today to address Bill 207. I will be supporting this bill because it will benefit my constituency and it will benefit this province.

Section 2(2) of this bill outlines how any deal with the federal government and the Canadian Wheat Board would have to include the right of Alberta farmers to sell their wheat or barley to either the Canadian Wheat Board or to any buyer of their choosing. This is a very important section and in essence the heart of this bill.

Mr. Chairman, I proudly represent a northern constituency, one where people place a great deal of importance on rugged individual freedoms. This is not only the way of the north, but it is also a creed of this province. Bill 207 speaks to this and the individual freedom of farmers, be they from Athabasca or Drumheller, to control the product they grow and maximize the potential for profit.

This bill, Mr. Chairman, could have called for disbandment of the Canadian Wheat Board, but it didn't. This bill could have denied choice to farmers much the same as the Canadian Wheat Board has done to our farmers, but it didn't. Instead, Bill 207 calls for the establishment – and I stress “establishment” – of a test market that offers Alberta producers choice. They can continue to market their wheat and barley through the Canadian Wheat Board, or if they feel that they can get a better deal elsewhere, then absolutely they should have the ability to do so.

When allowed choice and the opportunity to control their own destiny, Alberta farmers have always accepted the challenge. In fact, we can see the strength of choice and the freedom in the oat market. I recently was reading about Alberta's oat industry in the spring 2002 edition of Alberta Food for Thought. The article interviews Mr. Ray Lottie, oat buyer for General Mills. Mr. Lottie helps to buy oats to make Cheerios, the best-selling cereal in North America. Cheerios is made of whole-grain oats, and virtually every last oat in this cereal is Canadian-grown with a significant portion coming from – you guessed it – Alberta. General Mills has a one-third share of the $12 billion North American market for ready-to-eat breakfast cereals.

That translates into a huge need for produce, Mr. Chairman, a need that saw General Mills buy roughly 12 percent of the entire Canadian oat crop in 2001. That accounts for around 300,000 acres of Canadian oats. As the magazine points out, “Even though oats from Manitoba and Saskatchewan are closer to the company's Minneapolis-area processing plants, and therefore cheaper to buy,” General Mills still comes to Alberta to purchase oats. The people at General Mills demand quality and specifically look for certain physical and nutritional qualities. Alberta farmers help to provide that quality. Mr. Lottie points out that “a bowl of Cheerios packs a lot of nutrition, and that's due in large part to the quality of the oats. Alberta's a great place to grow oats, and we are pleased to be a major buyer.” High praise indeed, Mr. Chairman, a testament to our producers' ability to produce a high-quality product and capture a share of the market.

I think it is no coincidence that domestic processing of oats has increased 12-fold since it was removed from the CWB in 1989. We need the same ability for our producers to take control of their lives and products when it comes to wheat and barley. Bill 207 will allow us to move in this direction. Bill 207 will also help us capture a greater share of value-added processing. This is an area where western Canada has fallen behind, and for an entrepreneurial province such as ourselves it is an area where we can do much better.

Mr. Chairman, one can only look at the numbers to see how we are falling behind in value-added processing. It is a fact that western Canada produces 95 percent of Canada's wheat but has only about 31 percent of the flour milling capacity. Eastern Canada does the vast majority of wheat processing. It is a fact that when we look at our immediate neighbours to the south, there is two to three times more wheat milled in the northern tier American states compared to Canadian provinces. The volume of durum processed in the northern tier states is also higher than in the prairies. It is a fact that if we were to look at a percentage of grain production that is processed domestically, the ratio has increased from 10.7 percent to 11.9 percent in Canada since 1989. It is also a fact that over the same period of time the same ratio of domestic grain processing has increased in the United States in excess of 60 percent. It is a fact that the U.S. processes more than twice as much malt barley as Canada, yet they have only about half the barley production relative to Canada.

It is also interesting to note that the domestic crush of canola has increased 125 percent and that canola oil and meal shipments have doubled over the five-year period from '93-94 to '97-98. I don't think I need to remind hon. members that canola is a crop that has somehow miraculously escaped the protection and assistance of the Canadian Wheat Board.

Mr. Chairman, the Canadian Wheat Board does not add value for western farmers. It adds costs. In fact, the Canadian Wheat Board's general and administrative expenses have increased by 45 percent over the past five years and have doubled over the last 10 while export values have fallen. It is time that we add competition to the marketing industry to benefit this province and her proud producers.

Mr. Chairman, I would urge all members of the Assembly to support this bill and, as the hon. Premier said in question period last week, get on the bandwagon to convince the federal government that the Canadian Wheat Board should allow dual marketing so that we can add value to our crops and reasonably market them.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. Member for Redwater.

MR. BRODA: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It is my pleasure to rise today to speak on the Alberta Wheat and Barley Test Market Act, Bill 207. With this opportunity I would like to offer a few points of support for Bill 207. I will show how the CWB's restraints are at the core harmful, and I will highlight some of the major benefits of the proposed bill, 207.

Currently, Mr. Chairman, farmers are obligated to sell their products to the Canadian Wheat Board. Farmers have no other choice. The CWB then has exclusive decision-making control on pricing, selling arrangements, marketing, and quality pooling. When you take these powers away from the farmers, you negatively influence and limit their production decisions all along the line. For instance, our farmers are unable to best choose the desired output or how to best offer quality variations. These decisions can only be made in response to supply conditions. By keeping our farmers operating blindly, the CWB's control inevitably hurts the farmer's position, profit, and prospects.

Our province's wheat and barley industry, Mr. Chairman, is being handled by regulations that are restrictive, harmful, and distinctly anti co-operative. Our farmers produce in a globally competitive market, and specifically the goal of economic efficiency simply cannot be met with state agency control. It's vital at this time to put decision-making and flexibility into the hands of the farmers. Also, it should add the same flexibility to the CWB.

Mr. Chairman, this bill offers many benefits. First, an Alberta farmer would be operating under free market conditions. Alberta wheat and barley producers would receive market value for their product, which could very well be higher than the CWB's imposed price. The ability to compete and succeed freely in a competitive market is a fundamental principle in Alberta. Indeed, the opportunity for success through our own efforts is a key ingredient of the Alberta advantage. It's distinctly unfair that the hardworking farmers are not afforded standard marketplace freedoms. Certainly they should be rewarded based on their own decisions and their own product, not as set by the CWB rate.

Second, the bill helps Alberta farmers make better production decisions. At the end of the day, Mr. Chairman, a farmer offers up a product to sell. In order to make important decisions, a farmer must be able to gauge market demand and interact with consumers directly. These decisions include whether to invest in new technology or develop new methods or how much quantity to produce and which varieties or characteristics are demanded. It seems that presently farmers produce for the CWB to satisfy the CWB's limited pool requirements. This is an unacceptable framework which is ultimately harmful to the consumer.

Bill 207 enables the farmer to produce directly for the consumer. Let's suppose that there is new or increased demand for a particular type of wheat. An individual farmer is able to better respond to this increased demand, because under Bill 207 the farmer sells directly to the buyer. This establishes a personal business relationship, making communications and feedback much easier. Bill 207 creates an incentive to cater to buyers that is not present under the CWB's control. Competition ensures that the buyer's needs are best met. The farmer who offers the product closest to that demand wins the business.

Third, this new marketing environment could bring secondary processing investments to Alberta. As the supply market changes to better serve actual demand, new opportunities for processing will become available. For example, suppose there is a demand for a specialty or heavily refined grain. The CWB's limited pool categories cannot satisfy this market. Under Bill 207 a farmer can choose to offer the product perhaps by making a capital investment in new refinery equipment. If not, that opportunity is available to whoever can provide it most efficiently and at the best price. Here we see the possibility of secondary processing investment. This could mean farmers diversify their operations, or it could mean the emergence of value-added industries. Either way, Bill 207 can only improve the position of Alberta farmers and the agricultural industry.

Fourth, Bill 207 provides for market opportunities both in Canada and internationally. Farmers will be able to personally market their products. This will lead to searching out new markets and fighting to capture them. Likewise, there will exist the motivation to retain and expand existing markets. In a competitive environment this process is ongoing. Globally we see an ongoing shift towards the elimination of barriers to trade. Tariffs are being reduced, and transportation is becoming more efficient and accessible. These globalization changes are causing huge markets to open throughout the world. A new opportunity, for example, is South America.

Bill 207 facilitates individual incentives. These global trends will be fully incorporated into the farmers' production and marketing decisions. This will only help to eventually increase sales on international markets. Allowing free competition will not sabotage our goals of capturing market and making profit. It will increase our markets, allowing us to increase market share and allow profits to be fully realized by farmers on an individual level.

Lastly, Mr. Chairman, let me note that Bill 207's aim is not to abolish the WCB. The bill proposes a 10-year test marketing allowing the government of Alberta to explore the . . .

AN HON. MEMBER: You're on the wrong bill.

MR. BRODA: Okay. The CWB then, the Canadian Wheat Board. My apologies if I've been making that mistake. It's almost similar, you know.

In fact, Mr. Chairman, if the CWB is concerned with farmer profit, industry innovation, growth, and quality assurance, then the bill allows them to work alongside independent farmers to contribute in a free market atmosphere.

In conclusion, I am glad that my colleague the Member for Calgary-Mountain View has brought forward this bill. It is well considered, relevant, and overdue. I suspect, Mr. Chairman, that other provinces will be drawn to our decision, and I suspect that this decision will gain speed. This bill gives our farmers the freedom and opportunity they need to best compete in a competitive environment. It is important for farmers and their families, our regions' farming industry, and the province as a whole. I recommend that all members support Bill 207.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: Hon. members, before I recognize the next speaker, I just wish to draw your attention to Beauchesne 458, which states: "Members are not to cross between the Chair and a Member."

The hon. Member for Lloydminster-Vermilion.

MR. SNELGROVE: I think that's an excellent procedure.

Well, Mr. Chairman and colleagues, it's truly a pleasure to stand here today and give you my take a little bit on the Wheat Board issue.

AN HON. MEMBER: Sing us a song.

MR. SNELGROVE: I'll testify.

The thing I'd like to put forward to some of the opposition concerns – one is that somehow this bill may damage the Canadian family farm. Well, in fact since 1963, when we had 221,000 permit holders, we're now down to 100,000 completely under the control of the Canadian Wheat Board. If that's a friend of the family farm, I'd like to see an enemy. There's no question that when you have no one to compete with to buy your product, then you're at their mercy. However, it was also said, you know: there's just no one else out there to buy the wheat. Well, duh. They won't let them buy the wheat. From the minute you seed your crop, it's not yours. It's unfortunate that in this country we feel that it's all right for Ontario and Quebec to have a choice to market, but western Canada can't. That by itself should be enough to trip the lights that say that there's something wrong in Canada when half of the country doesn't have a choice that the other half does.

It goes back to the discussion the federal government had about the Wheat Board. It was unfortunate at the time how boring it was to have to watch the TV, but at the time, Mr. Chairman, 22 Reform members that had been involved in farming all their lives were debating 14 lawyers from Ontario about the future of the Canadian Wheat Board. You know they're going to lose that argument, but it's unfortunate those decisions are made down there.

I just want to go on a little bit about an example on my farm. We came out as a government a few years ago with a program to help the farmers with $10.29 an acre, and that was supposed to help. The cost to our farm to sell our malt barley to the plant at Alix worked out to $60 an acre. Picked up by trucks in our yard and dumped at Alix, never got near an elevator, never got near a rail line, never got near a Wheat Board office, but the cost to our farm was $60 an acre. Now, that's just a little bit excessive, but there's no one else who can buy it.

I understand the position that when you're selling grain, if you're the only one that's selling it, if you've got all the marbles in the marble game, you win. That's fine for an export market. That would work if in reality we were the only ones with wheat to sell, but that's not true. The biggest problem we have is that we see how connected we are to the world markets, and the American farm bill is a concern of ours. The only way around that is to have value-added industry in our province and our country, because we cannot stop what they're going to do. It's that simple. The European countries and the Americans have no interest in our little game here.

They don't care if we play or not. So to worry about what they do at this point seems a little bit irrelevant.

The thing I'd like to point out too that I think we've lost out on – so much of it is Alberta's history, and it's been an advantage that we don't promote; this isn't really a topic that comes up too much – is the simple fact that we are the only province that's rat free. If you've ever had the occasion to go to the ports on the coast and watch the trains unload your grain, which comes – in Alberta, for example, if you show up with a load of grain and there's any trace of deer waste in it, it's condemned. The entire load goes to feed. Yet all across Canada we can have rats run through all of our food with no questions asked. As long as we keep it under the acceptable amount, then we can make flour and sell it.

Well, in Alberta the acceptable amount of rat manure in our wheat would be zero. Now, to market our flour around the world to a lot of countries with wealth and with the demand and say, "This is the only flour in the world that's rat free" – and that is a simple fact – we have never tried to promote that, but we can't, because the Wheat Board owns our wheat the minute we plant it. We've had a tremendous job done in Alberta by the Alberta beef association and the Canadian Cattlemen's Association selling the best quality product around the world, and it works. We have the best product. We would also have and do have the best wheat, along with Saskatchewan, our neighbours. They have rats. You put yourself in the spot of most housewives when you go to the grocery store and there is a bag of flour that is completely rat manure free. It's just another marketing tool we've never tried. In fact, we mix all of this together and ship it off. As a matter of fact, when the wheat is full, we dump more screenings back in it to get the tonnage, and then we add water to get the weight. There's no quality sold around the country with our wheat to suggest that we do have good wheat till it gets to the coast, it's true, but after that it's not.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to say this: there's a lot to it. The Wheat Board may have served us back in the '40s and '50s, but its time has come and gone. The train has left. Let's get on with it. Let's give people the right to sell what's theirs and make them make the choice.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I just rise today to express a few comments on this bill. One of the things that comes out as we go through and look at the idea that we have to have choice and we want to have choice in marketing our products – I don't think that in effect creates a lot of discussion for very many people when you start raising that issue, and Alberta farmers recognized that in their plebiscite. I guess the issue that comes up in the context of the bill that I've tried to figure out over the last month or so when I've been spending time and thinking about this is: how do we go about actually implementing it in the context of a test market? We've got a lot of the services that are associated with marketing grains in Canada that are undertaken by the Canadian Wheat Board. In the U.S. and in Europe these are done by different agencies, not the marketers. So in effect some of the margin differential that we experience here in Canada is a reflection of that different service provided within the context of that market. In other words, some countries are using tax dollars as a subsidy for what we're paying through the Canadian Wheat Board margin.

I think the real issue that we have to start looking at is the process that we go through here. I think it must have been about '95 or so that we had a plebiscite in Alberta about grain marketing, both for the barley growers and the wheat growers. We ended up thinking about how we deal with the issues of giving them choice. I read through a lot of the material that was in Hansard and listened to a lot of the discussion today that hasn't got into Hansard yet, and we keep talking about monopolies. Well, in the context of the Canadian Wheat Board the term "monopoly" is irrelevant. What it is is a legislated single marketer. It's not a monopoly, because a monopolist has to have the ability to control price, and the Canadian Wheat Board doesn't. What you've got is that in effect the Wheat Board markets into the international market, into the domestic market, pools the prices, and takes off the margin. So it's really a marketing agent as opposed to somebody who buys, takes the risk, and resells. In effect, it's a single-desk marketing agent which has, you know, a very significant margin when we compare it to a lot of the other grain marketers out there who actually buy, take ownership, and then resell with their own risk involved.

So if we're going to do this, I guess the question that I ask as well is in terms of how we go about implementing it. One of the things that the agricultural products marketing act does is it commits to Alberta farmers the process of market co-operation, depending on how that gets defined. The process under that AG marketing act is that a business plan is put forward by a group, it's promoted across the industry, and it's then voted on by the industry whether or not they as an industry want to enter into that kind of a market strategy. If we look at how these choices are made, here what we're doing is we're basically saying that we're going to change a marketing plan that's under legislation, although it's federal, without that same kind of commitment to the producers of this province where they in effect will have the democratic right to approval of their market choice. I think that's got to be a critical part of this bill. I would hope that if it becomes implementable, what we'll see is a true grassroots approval process put together with the farmers in the province. I would hope that that wouldn't be as broad based, in the context of "Do you want choice?" because in many ways what we've got to do is look at the current structure that's there. The domestic market is very, very corrupted, if you wanted to say, by the relationship between the producers, the Wheat Board, and the buy-back provisions.

You know, I had a couple of the Wheat Board executive and staff come in and try to explain to me how their domestic resale or buy-back provisions were supportive of the industry. But in many ways they're making sure that every producer pays the marketing margin no matter whether they sell through the board or in effect sell down the street through the board, where the costs associated with that marketing margin mostly are associated with the international market. So what we need to do is make sure that one of the things that we deal with in the context of an option – in listening to how both the federal government and the Canadian Wheat Board actually operate, I would guess that section 2(1) under the act is almost an unachievable part of the bill, because it says in there: "enter into an agreement with" the minister or the Canadian Wheat Board. Well, I can't imagine either one of these at the federal level ever agreeing to this.

But if we can in effect look at it from the point of view of how it gets operated, part of this process is that we've got to make sure that the domestic market gets to have more competition in it, a better reflection of the true costs of marketing within the domestic market as opposed to the total market margin that's there, associated with the international market, which includes all of the country intelligence, which includes all the market intelligence, which includes weather, all of these kinds of issues that the Canadian Wheat Board undertakes. We've got to see if there are ways that that can be worked out as part of trying to provide more opportunity within the domestic market.

Mr. Chairman, I really see that if we look at it from the point of view of where we could make some progress, it would be in the context of this domestic choice that we're talking about. If we start dealing with the international market, then we end up getting much more involved with the federal jurisdiction, interprovincial issues, but if we were to take and deal with it from the perspective of a domestic market for our value added – you know, a lot of the movement of the value-added from Alberta to the east has been associated with the historic grain transportation subsidies, more so than the Wheat Board, but that is now past us. We are in a situation now where western Canada doesn't really have in a sense the local volume to justify value added, so we've got to make our value-added industry an international component, and that's where we have to work.

One of the things that we've read a lot about in the last 10 days especially – but it's been brewing for two or three months – is this new U.S.S farm bill and how it is really going to have an impact on Canadian grain producers especially. If we look at it from the point of view of how they go about providing support to their industry, in effect a lot of their industry support comes through value-added purchasing, which raises the local price and supports the margin of the value-added producer. So we end up in effect creating a government subsidy direct to the value-added industry to establish in the U.S.

What you end up with, then, is these producers looking at: should we establish in the tier right below Canada, get access to similar but not as good quality grains in the northern U.S., and then have access as well to Canada? That's one of the things that they're looking at when they make these choices, because they do have that federal, quote, farm bill component that subsidizes their production under the activities of the support for value added. So what you end up with, then, is not really having the international choice that we would like to see for individuals to locate their value-added industries, and you know, I had already indicated that I see some real issues with the buyback margin that is charged by the Canadian Wheat Board, but it is, as I said, reflective of those costs.

The other thing that we look at is the issue of how much competition we're really going to have. I've been surprised in the last little while as we saw some of our grain handling groups in effect give up co-operative status and become shareholder corporations, and the producers are losing control of those entities as well. How long before they start to become part of the international food conglomerates and deal with the issues of how to in effect give up some of the control that we had here?

One of the things that we really have to also look at is the whole issue of: is there a way through actions like this by the government, by the producers that we can in effect facilitate greater differentiation of quality to cover the issue that we heard from the previous speaker in terms of, you know, the purity of our grain so that people get the product they're buying? This needs to be brought out.

I guess, Mr. Chairman, that what I'm trying to do is talk a little bit about some of the options that we should be looking at, that we should be pursuing, trying to make sure that our producers do get some choice, some options, even though under this umbrella, if it were to happen that the Canadian Wheat Board was to allow a test market or the minister was to allow a test market in Alberta, that would all be rolled under. We may have to do this on an incremental basis rather than go for the full issue, because what we're going to see is that there will be I think a less friendly reception to this at the federal level.

I guess that as the act moves along, if we can get some kind of an idea of how they would see the actual marketing plan being presented to farmers, to get their input in terms of their choice of whether or not it's right before we go and negotiate with the federal government or the Wheat Board – that would be something that I'd be looking for as well. You know, we've got to make sure that this is the kind of issue that the farmers in the province recognize.

One of the things that came out very plainly after the plebiscite on producer choice was the fact that a lot of individuals felt that they wanted to be able to still use the Wheat Board, but they wanted to give their neighbours a choice if they wanted to. They're going to have to have assurances before a new program is put in place that choice still will exist. I guess what we want to look at is that if you decide to opt out of the Wheat Board as a province or provide choice as a province, if a producer wants to market through the Wheat Board or market through a choice alternative, then what are the options for in-and-out movement? Can they be provided with an opportunity to move back into a choice situation or do they have to stay in the Wheat Board if they choose to stay at the start or the other way around?

One of the things that is imperative for the Wheat Board to operate is a degree of certainty of supply. They're trying to achieve that now with more contract, but they're also going to have to have an option that if a producer takes the choice route, they in effect stay there. Similarly, if they choose the Wheat Board route, will they be required to stay there? So what we need to do is make sure that the movement in and out is fully defined, so we can then deal with it from the perspective of how producers in effect would be able to, you know, make their choice. Would they have to signal at the beginning of the year with a contract? Would they have to basically sign up for a two- or three- or four-year program? A lot of the marketers deal with long-term delivery contracts. These are a bunch of the issues. We need to make sure that producers all have a chance to discuss and to discuss at length before they end up committing to a test market. We need to make sure that producers understand what they're getting into.

I wasn't able to find in some of the information that I looked at on this bill what the implications are of a choice situation. The ability to deal with the market, how we share the costs of marketing that are developed and are in the public domain under the Wheat Board: how do we get those put in place?

So, you know, in the end, Mr. Chairman, I think that before this act moves forward and moves into a position where farmers are going to feel either comfortable with it or totally opposed to it, a lot more information has to be provided to them. I know that I've had a few calls: support this. I've had a number of calls saying: don't support it. Basically, it boils down to: how is it going to be implemented? That's the question that almost everybody is asking, in the sense of: what are the trade-offs? How will they deal with it from the perspective of moving from one market to the other? What would be the relationship between the Alberta producers in the Wheat Board versus the Alberta producers operating under a choice situation?

So, Mr. Chairman, I think that with those few comments I'll take my seat. I'd really appreciate some clarification on some of those points that I've raised, if it is possible, to see exactly how we would go about implementing it. You know, to say that we're going to create a choice situation sounds good and sounds easy, but in the operational aspects of it it's very complex, very complicated and is going to require some really tough decisions between how the relationship between all producers and the Wheat Board works, because the Wheat Board provides more than just the single-desk marketing.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. Member for Peace River.

MR. FRIEDEL: Thank you, Mr. Chairman, for the opportunity to speak on Bill 207, the Alberta Wheat and Barley Test Market Act. We've heard a number of opinions – most of them I agree with – but I want to add my two bits' worth on why I think this bill is important; namely, to touch on some of the benefits and also to make a comment or two on a few of the skeptical comments that I've heard.

First of all, Mr. Chairman, the core of Bill 207 is all about the idea of choice. We know that free markets have always been important for all of our industries, and Bill 207 would give our farmers a similar choice, and that choice would be whether to participate in the Canadian Wheat Board or to market their product independently. This freedom is enjoyed by the eastern provinces of Ontario and Quebec, and the Wheat Board's monopoly control over prairie grain farmers is not only unfair, but it's a downright insult. This bill simply asks for the same choices that other provinces now enjoy.

Personally, I see the Wheat Board monopoly as nothing more than a central government effort to retain control. We know that 80 percent of Canada's agricultural land is located in the western provinces, yet this archaic central institution continues to manage the product of our agricultural land. It was set up 67 years ago to deal with wartime conditions, but our federal governments – and that includes all of them since then – have either never figured out that these conditions have since changed or they assume that our farmers are not intelligent enough to make market decisions on their own. Now, this control has to end, because our farmers deserve the same market choices that eastern farmers and other Canadian industries have.

The Canadian Wheat Board justifies its monopoly by claiming that it has the farmers' best interests in mind. It's that old we know what's best for you mentality, and I intend that to be in the most sarcastic way. I'm not suggesting that this is a move to undermine Alberta farmers, but what's at stake here is whether the farmers can choose to be represented by the Wheat Board. It is after all the year 2002. All our markets are global, and why is it that only prairie farmers are told what's best for them? I believe that the farmers are as capable as anyone else of choosing this for themselves.

Let's use the comparison of going to a stockbroker to manage your investments. Wouldn't you want to choose a broker that you are comfortable with? Wouldn't you want one that represents your best interests? Don't you think that the ability to make that choice yourself is rather essential? How would you like it if you had no choice in this regard? How would you feel if you were simply assigned a broker and your business was going to be lumped together with everyone else's?

Mr. Chairman, in view of the time I would move that we adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would move that the committee now rise and report progress.

[Motion carried]

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

MR. LOUGHEED: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration and reports progress on Bill 207.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Opposed? So ordered.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, in view of the hour I would move that we now call it 5:30 and adjourn until 8 p.m.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:17 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Monday, May 13, 2002

Travel Assurance Fund

508. Mr. Amery moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to introduce legislation to establish a travel assurance fund to compensate airline consumers who do not receive travel services purchased from a registered travel agency due to the agency's bankruptcy or insolvency.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

MR. AMERY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is with great pleasure that I rise this evening to begin debate on Motion 508. This motion encourages the government to establish a travel assurance fund so that Alberta consumers traveling at leisure would be protected in the event that they do not receive the services that they have purchased from a travel provider. Many Albertans have asked for a travel assurance fund that could help them if they were left stranded at points around the world as the result of a travel provider going out of business. Recent world events have bolstered that request.

As we all know, the events of September 11 changed the mood towards and the methods of travel for people in North America and all around the world. The demand for air travel services dropped drastically due to the fears that resulted from the horrific tragedy that occurred. When the demand for travel services began to decline, planes began taking to the skies with a lot of empty seats and airlines began to lose a lot of money. Financial woes grounded a number of carriers as part of the fallout from September 11, including Swissair, Belgium's Sabena, Canada 3000, and Ansett Australia.

In the month of October, Mr. Speaker, Canada 3000 was facing losses that were too much to overcome. The airline was forced to declare bankruptcy and put a full stop to service on November 11, 2001. This action taken by Canada 3000 was the only option available to the carrier. However, it left thousands of Canadians either stranded at locations across the globe or out of pocket for the cost of a ticket that they could not use or both in some cases. When you consider that Albertans as a population are taking around 12.5 percent of the trips made by Canadians with only 10 percent of the national population, it is safe to assume that a significant number of those stranded by Canada 3000 were Albertans. Unfortunately, many of those Albertans affected were left with no formal financial protection against the failure of a travel provider.

Mr. Speaker, there are several forms of protection that consumers can purchase to protect their investment in the event that the trip that they have planned does not go according to plan or not at all. One option is cancellation insurance, which consumers can purchase directly from the airline. Cancellation insurance allows travelers to recoup their ticket expenses if they are unable to take the trip for a limited number of reasons. While it is a valuable option that many consumers use, this form of ticket insurance cannot be claimed against in the event of airline bankruptcy.

Mr. Speaker, travelers can also expect certain levels of consumer protection from some credit card companies, that would reimburse them if they were unable to receive the goods which they had purchased due to supplier error or bankruptcy. Additionally, there is the Internet sales contract regulation, which sets out to protect Alberta consumers who make purchases over the Internet as well as those abroad who make Internet purchases from Alberta companies. These forms of protection undoubtedly help the consumers in their quest to get a fair deal for their dollar and to receive what is entitled to them after making a purchase.

However, these remedies do not suit or are not available to all Albertans. Despite the general movement towards e-commerce many consumers are still hesitant to make purchases over the Internet. If they do not purchase their holiday tickets over the Internet, then the Internet sales contract regulation cannot apply to the ticket that they purchased. For travelers who pay with cash, in the event that the travel services purchased are not delivered, then there is no form of protection available to them.

Mr. Speaker, that leaves the consumer protection policies offered by credit card companies as the remaining measure of protection. Many young Albertans as well as those with troubled credit histories are unable to obtain a credit card. As well, some card companies don't offer consumer protection. Because they are unable to obtain a credit card or the right kind of card, these people will have no protection available to them in the event of an airline failure.

Despite the convenience and added benefit of consumer protection, not everyone holds a positive view of credit cards and credit card use. There are people who have credit cards but would rather pay for goods and services in cash despite our movement toward a cashless society. Many families from across the province have values and ideas about money that include avoiding the use of credit cards. Many of my constituents use cash for all of their purchases. As a result, I have several constituents who were left facing a significant loss of airline tickets because their trip was canceled when Canada 3000 declared bankruptcy and stopped service. I also had constituents who were left stranded in different countries across the world with no one to turn to.

I believe that it is time that we as a government took a step to protect Albertans from financial loss due to airline failure. Mr. Speaker, Motion 508 would do just that. Its purpose is to urge the government to examine an instrument of protection for airline consumers who have no protection against airline failure in these turbulent times for the travel industry. It is possible to establish a travel assurance fund that is supported, financed, administered, and distributed by the travel industry. A travel assurance fund would make consumer protection available to those Albertans who cannot access it or will not access it by other means. In the event that an airline that Alberta consumers have purchased travel services from through a registered travel agent should declare bankruptcy before they are able to deliver the goods purchased, Albertans would have an avenue to access compensation.

Mr. Speaker, the fund that I envision would be paid into directly by travel agencies without government money. The fund would offer protection to consumers through Alberta travel agents on leisure travel purchases in the event of carrier bankruptcy. Both the liability fund and the administrative costs would be paid for by the industry. The travel agents of Alberta would put a small amount, around half a percent of gross earnings perhaps, towards a general fund. In turn, the travel agents who pay into the fund would be able to offer their clients an assurance that the money they have put into the trip will be refunded to them in the event that their trip does not take place due to bankruptcy or insolvency.

Mr. Speaker, under such a fund new and existing travel agents in Alberta would register with the administrative body of the travel assurance fund and make an initial payment into the fund as well as smaller payments over time based on their total sales. If and when the assurance fund reaches the predetermined maximum figure necessary for liability claims, the travel agents of Alberta will no longer have to pay into the fund, at which point if a claim is made against the fund and it is drawn upon, then the travel agents would resume their payment schedule until the fund has been replenished to the predetermined level.

Mr. Speaker, currently in British Columbia, Ontario, and Quebec there are programs very similar to the one I have described up and running that offer protection to consumers who do not receive the services that they have purchased from travel services providers or travel agents. The programs are established by government legislation, funded by the travel industry, and then administered and distributed by industry. All three of the provinces have programs that are slightly different. Each has different qualifications and standards regarding who and what should be covered under the liability fund, and each makes an interesting case study. I believe that a lot could be learned from these provinces if we were to implement an Alberta model. I also believe that by taking a closer look at the programs that are already in use, we could provide Albertans with protection against an unstable airline market in a turbulent post-September 11 world and enable Alberta travel agencies to offer a value-added product.

A travel assurance fund would provide an opportunity to create a registered association of Alberta travel agents, who could unite to promote their services and increase their business by presenting a value-added product to consumers of travel agent services. Under the travel assurance fund, Mr. Speaker, the industry would have self-regulated control over the collection of funds and the distribution of settlements. The industry would establish the administration office and hire the personnel to run it. The fund would then provide Albertans with a choice to use travel agents and receive the benefits of the travel assurance fund.

Mr. Speaker, in light of recent world events I believe that this is a reasonable and responsible step that we as government can take to protect our citizens. The travel assurance fund would provide consumers with a choice, not an obligation. It would provide travelers with peace of mind that they can recoup their money in the event that a travel carrier went out of business.

Mr. Speaker, I believe it is time that we as government took this step to provide our citizens with an option for protection against airline failure, and I urge all members of the Assembly to join me in supporting this motion.

Thank you.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Before I recognize the next speaker, would all members who have electronic gadgets please turn them off, especially if they're making noise? Laptops are allowed. Thank you.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to speak to Motion 508. I listened carefully to the comments of the sponsoring member, and they made a lot of sense to me, so that must confirm that it's a good idea. Certainly, as the hon. member indicated, the fallout for the travel and tourism industry after the attack on the World Trade Center was profound. We all heard of the experiences of people caught in airline collapses and travel agent bankruptcies and especially Canada 3000 airlines.

I know of people who had purchased tickets and paid for the tickets and were never able to use them, although I also know of somebody who had actually purchased tickets on a credit card that was registered in Ontario, and they were able to get their money refunded because they hadn't done it in Alberta. They had done it in Ontario, and Ontario had taken steps, as the hon. member indicated, some time ago to protect their travel consumers. So this is maybe an area where we ought to look seriously at catching up to other provinces. In fact, it's not just B.C., Ontario, and Quebec; I think a number of other provinces have one form or another of protection for their traveling public.

The value of tourism in Alberta is enormous. It hasn't grown perhaps in the last few years as much as we would like. There have been changes and cutbacks and turmoil and so on in Travel Alberta. I hope that that's settled down, but I'm not sure that it is. The kinds of wonderful investments that we saw drive tourism in Alberta in earlier years, things like the great museums – the Tyrrell museum and the Remington museum and the Reynolds museum and so on – all those things that are so important to tourism have fallen a bit by the wayside, I might say. Certainly we've not seen very many new initiatives like those, and as a result the tourism industry in this province has slowed and actually in some areas is in a bit of a recession. So I think that this symbolically would indicate that as a Legislature we do recognize the importance of travel and tourism as an economic stimulus.

I think we should also remember how important travel is to people's getting out into the world, to their own personal growth, to their education, formal or informal, to their ability to look at the world from many points of view, understand different cultures, different languages, even different cuisines, which I'm always interested in. So I would certainly argue that travel is very important. Tourism is very important, and steps like this, which seem pretty reasonable, will help those industries and those activities.

Consumer protection is important. Consumer protection I think every civilized country in the world recognizes as vital. Consumer protection goes along with free marketplaces. There are tremendous theories and tremendous theorists who put forward the notion that marketplaces in fact cannot survive without regulation and without things like consumer protection. I'm thinking for example of some other people here – some of you may have heard of a fellow named Joseph Stiglitz, who was until recently the chief economist of the World Bank.

AN HON. MEMBER: Is he a Liberal?

DR. TAFT: One of the members is asking if he was a Liberal. He's I think American and British by heritage, but if he lived here, he might well be a Liberal.

He's actually broken ranks – this is the chief economist of the World Bank until about two years ago – with the so-called Washington consensus, the formal position of the World Bank and the IMF, and has argued that there needs to be more government intervention, more things like consumer protection in marketplaces. This is a fellow who's widely expected to win the Nobel prize in economics. He's already walked away with every other major prize in economics.

So he's arguing for consumer protection, for the need for government intervention in marketplaces, for the idea that unregulated markets are not sustainable. When somebody like that speaks, I think we should all listen, and I think this is the kind of initiative that his arguments, his theories, and he himself personally would probably support. In fact, not only that; he would probably say it is necessary for the healthy survival of the travel business and the tourism industry. Consumer protection of course is something I think that our record as a Legislature is a bit spotty on. This would be a step to erase one of those spots, but I wish we would maybe see other motions here, other activities on things like protection for electricity consumers, for example, who are feeling right now quite left out to blow in the wind with their concerns, or maybe we should be looking at protection for consumers of family day homes. We've certainly got an angry group of people around family day homes. So there are spots, a number of spots on our record in consumer protection, and we all know that one of those has been around the travel industry. This private member's motion will, if it's acted on by the government, address one of those concerns.

I can't speak for my other caucus colleagues – we have a free system over here – but I think I'll be advocating with them to wholeheartedly support this motion. I can't see any drawbacks to it. The way it's been described to me is that funding will be provided by the industry and the fund itself would be, if I'm correct, administered or managed by the industry. Now, how complex that becomes, I don't know. It may be that it's better to have it administered through a government agency. I'm not sure. I don't know if this would require legislation, a particular act, maybe something like a travel industry protection act or something like that, to establish the rules and to ensure that all the funds are properly accounted for and properly audited, properly distributed to make sure that people actually got the protection that they were expecting.

But those things I think could be sorted out. They have, as the hon. sponsoring member indicated, been sorted out in other provinces, so I have no doubt that we could sort them out ourselves. In fact, I wonder why we haven't done this sooner. Is there a reason that we fell behind other provinces in providing this kind of protection for the traveling public of Alberta? Undoubtedly, hundreds and perhaps thousands of Albertans have lost a substantial amount of money each personally and cumulatively – maybe millions of dollars; I don't know – through travel agencies going bankrupt or for other reasons failing to meet their obligations.

So, Mr. Speaker, I'm a wholehearted supporter of this particular motion. From what I've heard so far, I can see, at least I hope eventually to see, other points of view brought forward. Maybe new information will come along that changes my mind on this, but I'm in favour in general of consumer protection. As I said, I think it's essential for business and commerce to succeed, so I think this is a great step, and I'll be looking for further debate on it.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Highwood.

MR. TANNAS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to add a few thoughts on the debate on Motion 508, as proposed by my colleague the hon. Member for Calgary-East. In the mid-70s my wife and I established a travel agency and ran it for approximately 13 years, and then we sold it. Ten years later our son repurchased our old travel agency. Because of this connection with the travel industry and travel agencies both in the past and in more recent years, I spoke to the Ethics Commissioner before agreeing to speak on this private member's motion. I have some anxiety about the wording of the motion, and I'll just read bits of it anyway:

to establish a travel assurance fund to compensate airline consumers who do not receive travel services purchased from a registered travel agency due to the agency's bankruptcy or insolvency.

The part I like is to "urge the government" to look at it. I have some anxiety, as I said.

I am pleased that the Member for Calgary-East, though, has brought the matter to the Legislature for discussion. The goal of course is a laudable one: protection of the consumer. I think it's a commendable goal, but I think the wording and hopefully the operation of this thing would be made much better.

First of all, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to review for members for a few moments anyway how you acquire an airline ticket, as the motion suggests, "from a registered travel agency." However, that's an interesting one, because the hon. member has suggested that maybe the registered travel agency would contribute to this assurance fund, and of course we all know now since September 11 that most airlines won't pay the travel agency zip. Air Canada, Air New Zealand, Qantas, United, American Airlines, Delta, and on and on and on no longer pay even 1 cent to a commission. Years ago in the good old days it was 8.25 percent on the ticket, so that's interesting that they would pay for something that they don't even receive a benefit from unless they surcharge. A little irony there.

How else can you acquire a ticket? Well, there's the airline's city desk. Most airlines of any import have an airline city desk in the city which they fly into and out of. At the airline's check-in counter at the airport you can also buy them, purchase tickets and so on. You can also phone the airlines and by mail and cite your credit card or whatever, and they'll either mail it to you or you can pick it up. You can also do it on-line, and if you're not dealing with a reputable agency online, then that's another issue. There are travel clubs where you can get them. Many corporations and companies employ in-house travel agents. It's not a travel agency, but it's a travel agent within that company, and they make travel arrangements for company employees and officers. They also will provide sort of as a gratuitous service holiday travel for company employees. There are credit cards and other kinds of promotions that you can get. You know, air miles – you buy at Safeway or at Shell or something like that, and you can get your airline tickets from those rewards from the Royal Bank of Canada, and there are some other methods I'm sure which escape me at the moment except for the ones that buck-a-shops can get.

In the motion we're only going to deal with one source of airline tickets, when I've just outlined nine sources. Okay, given that there's a wide variety of ways to acquire an airline ticket, this motion then deals only with the first source of airline tickets and would not protect consumers who acquire their airline tickets from any of the other sources. So this is where I think the "urge the government" to look at is an important element of this. I would submit that all ticket sources must participate in the proposed travel assurance, because they too themselves may face bankruptcy or insolvency, and that might be either the seller themselves or the customer that would acquire them. We only have to look at the recent example of Canada 3000. It should be noted that Canada 3000 had sales desks in malls all across Canada, and if you get too specific on this one, it would miss all of those kinds of ticket counters. I don't think we've seen the complete fallout of the Canadian event on travel agencies, insurance companies, and credit card users.

Mr. Speaker, there are at least four currently existing situations or opportunities to protect the traveling consumer. First, many travel agencies sell travel insurance policies as well as insurance agencies sell travel insurance policies, and some of these policies include within them bankruptcy protection in addition to the trip cancellation for health reasons or a traveling companion unable to go with you or whatever it is, but many of these policies are limited as to the total amount that can be paid out. So that's one possibility. A few travel agencies actually carry their own protection for their clients. I know of one Alberta group of travel agents that covered all the losses for anyone who traveled on Canada 3000 and refunded their money.

A third method of protection is the method of payment, payment through certain gold or platinum or specific kinds of credit cards that carry within them cancellation, bankruptcy protection as a service to the special card owners. The holder would need only to check with those issuing credit card companies to find out if they're covered or how they can be covered and change their grade of credit card. A fourth method that I can think of is that if it is a travel agency and they are issuing tickets and they are approved by IATA, the International Air Transport Association, there's a limited form of backup on air tickets, as each registered company has to have a dedicated deposit or a term deposit that covers a big percentage of their monthly amount that they take in. That is held by IATA, and that is to be used to pay for airlines tickets in case of bankruptcy.

But I think we're missing something, and that is: people are doing some other kinds of travel and holidays besides airlines. There are other products sold by travel agencies and other kinds of businesses. Cruises comes to mind, and there you can be into big money. You can, if you want to go around the world, pay up to $125,000. There are other kinds of travel, and they may or may not have an air travel package. So I think that if we're going to really get into this, we have to consider all of the kinds of things that consumers have at risk, and that certainly would be one. Bus tours are a very popular kind of holiday travel, whether it's in Canada, the United States, or Europe. Train travel for many people is an adventure in itself, whether it's through the Rockies or the Orient Express or across the Australian desert. There are a number of holiday tour companies, which in my experience on occasion are subject to bankruptcy. We only have to recall that Sunflight, the largest tour company in Canada, went out of business 20 years ago, so a lot of people got burned on that. I know one travel agency that made sure that all of its clients were not burned.

As one travel agent said: if all points of sale of travel products were required to contribute or collect a premium for the insurance fund, it might be a level playing field, but to single out the registered travel agency is shortsighted and would be unfair. That's why this motion needs to be considered as an invitation to the government to consider all aspects of the travel industry before legislating compulsory insurance to protect the traveling public.

I thank the Member for Calgary-East for bringing this matter before the Assembly for our consideration. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have a few comments on Motion 508 as presented by the hon. Member for Calgary-East. It is certainly different for this Assembly to be discussing the issue of consumers and consumer protection. Certainly whenever we look at electricity deregulation, consumers were the last thing on the mind of the government, and it's consumers that are now forced to pay sky-high electricity bills. To see an hon. member of this Assembly come forward with a motion that I think is at least examining a deficiency in our consumer protection laws that was made only too evident to Albertans just this past Christmas with yet another example of an airline that had financial difficulty – I regret that I missed the opportunity to hear the hon. member's speech regarding Motion 508. However, at this time I do have a few questions.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Is this travel assurance fund to be set up with, say, a 50-cent surcharge on a ticket, or is it going to be some form of tax issued on each ticket that's going to be pooled? Hopefully it would never be needed, but unfortunately with so much deregulation on the go now, certainly there are spectacular failures and consumers are left holding the bag. How is this fund, in the hon. member's view, to be established? Is it going to be the consumers, is it going to be industry, or is it going to be shared by both? Has the hon. member in the drafting of this motion ever considered that perhaps there should be a bond set by the airlines themselves? There should be a performance bond very similar to what an auctioneer or an auction house would have to have so that in case something does go wrong, well, the bond is there, Mr. Speaker. Has that idea ever been discussed when this motion was being drafted?

At some point, I think for the convenience of all hon. members of this Assembly, just precisely what are other jurisdictions doing? I understand that B.C., Quebec, and Ontario have some form of consumer protection. As I understand, their law is different. If during the course of debate I could have those questions answered, Mr. Speaker, I would be very grateful.

Again, in conclusion I would like to commend the hon. member for bringing forward this motion in light of the fact that consumers across this province, not only in the tourism industry or the travel industry but in many other incidents, are left holding the bag.

Thank you very much.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

MR. CAO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for allowing me the opportunity to join in the debate on Motion 508, which asks the government to establish a travel assurance fund. As the Member for Calgary-East pointed out earlier, when we saw airlines like Canada 3000 fold abruptly last year, when we saw many Albertans, indeed many Canadians left in the lurch. I mention Canadians deliberately. This is truly a Canadian problem. However, in the absence of a viable national airline strategy and the virtual national monopoly given to Air Canada, it is obvious that federal legislation designed to clean up this mess will not be forthcoming. This is nothing new. However, it is often the case that we as a province ought to work to ensure a fair and predictable market for Alberta consumers when other levels of government will not do so. Motion 508 provides the key to doing so.

Mr. Speaker, since our two national airline carriers were combined into one, our skies have been governed by a virtual monopoly. Many smaller companies, such as Canada 3000, Royal Airlines, and CanJet, amongst others, have gone out of business. Although CanJet has a plan to re-establish itself in the east, these other companies will remain out of business. However, they don't all go out of business. Some, like our excellent airline from Calgary, WestJet, a good Alberta company, have fought the odds to make very good strides.

The issue raised in Motion 508 is another case of the federal government not knowing when to open up the airline business to real competition for the benefit of consumers. Although I understand that the upcoming federal legislation will severely limit Air Canada's ability to oust smaller carriers from the discount market, it still doesn't end the virtual monopoly, and it still doesn't make me comfortable about the state of the airline industry in Canada. It'll be a long while before I am comfortable with the way the industry operates here in Canada, and I'm sure that many Albertans feel the same. This is why Motion 508 is so important.

Mr. Speaker, I support 508 because for once the consumer is put first in the airline industry. It says that as a government we understand the turmoil that Alberta consumers have been put through, and it says that we are willing to help the travel industry set up an arrangement through which the consumer can be assured that they'll either get their flight or get their money back.

I want to make it clear that the arrangement proposed by the hon. Member for Calgary-East will not cost the government or the public a cent. We will be the legislators of the fund and not its operators or its financiers. This is very important. Regular Albertans should not have to compensate for the hard luck of put-out travelers. Although if through the use of a registered travel agent consumers willingly pay a slightly higher price to ensure that they receive their flight, then who are we to get in the way?

In the end it is up to each travel agency to enter into the fund or not. If they don't want to enter, they do not have to. This only means that they will not be able to offer to customers the peace of mind that the fund provides. But that's their choice and their business, and it's not our job to tell them how to run their businesses. However, if we can take nonintrusive measures that help them to operate more easily, why wouldn't we do it? Mr. Speaker, Motion 508 suggests such a nonintrusive measure. It provides the consumer with more assurance that they will not be left on the tarmac without a flight or their hard-earned dollars due to the airline going out of business suddenly.

At its roots, Motion 508 can help to ensure that consumers will be more confident in the tourism industry. They'll then spend dollars, which helps our Alberta travel agents. This confidence is a win/win situation for business and consumers alike.

This model has a precedent, too, Mr. Speaker. Ontario, Quebec, and British Columbia have travel assurance funds which are legislated by the government but not funded by the government. We should not forget that travel assurance protection is something that both travelers and travel agencies alike have called for. Both the Alliance of Canadian Travel Agents as well as the Canadian Association of Tour Operators have called for legislation in this area of passengers' protection as well, so this isn't an idea that has come from the blue, from nowhere. It is a reasoned motion supported by industry and intended to solve an immediate problem that many Albertans have faced or are afraid of facing. Better yet, it is an industry- and consumer-driven solution.

Mr. Speaker, I have real cases in my constituency. A number of my senior constituents had lost their money, quite a sum of hard-earned savings, I should say, during the collapse of the Canada 3000 airline, and in that light I urge all members of this Assembly to support Motion 508.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Government Services.

MR. COUTTS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise this evening and join the discussion on private member's Motion 508. I'm quick to rise tonight because of some of the things that I had heard during the 45-minute debate we've had on this at this point in time. I really want to applaud the hon. Member for Calgary-East for bringing this particular thing forward, because I'm very confident that the hon. member brought it forward out of a concern for his constituents. I'm sure that after the collapse of Canada 3000, when people had their flights canceled or found themselves stranded somewhere else or were in an airport or maybe even on their way to an airport to take a Canada 3000 flight for that dream holiday that they'd saved a lifetime for, he got some calls from his constituents wondering just what the government could do to help alleviate the particular situation that these folks found themselves in with the airline, who had basically taken the dollars to provide the service and then didn't deliver on that service.

It's his concern, not necessarily to be concerned about electricity and all of those types of things but a concern for his constituents, to see if there were a mechanism by which they could, if they didn't pay by credit card or if they didn't pay by other means that had some kind of security behind it, take advantage of what might be present for the government of the day to help bail them out and to actually see if he could get some action through the airlines. So I applaud the member for that.

Many of these consumers and constituents of the hon. member instantly, when the Canada 3000 situation happened, pointed to Ontario and to Quebec and to British Columbia and asked why there was no such fund in Alberta, and that was a very good question. I think, Mr. Speaker, your comments when you were sitting as the hon. Member for Highwood and your expertise and your background pointed out how complicated the travel business is, and exactly who's responsible for what makes it very, very difficult to administer these kinds of funds.

As a matter of fact, if we go and take a look at the province of Ontario, the Ontario compensation fund basically simply shifts the burden to the travel agent industry, and that carries the responsibility to reimburse the consumers if a provider fails to deliver the service. The lack of provincial jurisdiction over airlines keeps that province from persuading the airlines to support the fund directly, so you know who it goes back to. It goes back to the people that bought that particular package from that particular travel agent, and a portion of those funds would go into an assurance fund. As a result, particularly in Ontario's case, the fund would not apply to consumers who book travel and pay money to travel agents, nor to consumers who book directly with an airline. The fund still only protects a select number of consumers, and the travel agent industry in Ontario has expressed some very deep concern over the responsibility that it must carry for the travel service providers when the particular situation is out of their control.

So it's because of concerns like that and the history of the travel agents' network, which, when consulted about putting in an assurance fund a number of years ago, said: well, maybe it's just not the right thing for Alberta, and how would we do it, particularly when the federal government controls this industry? It's because of these concerns and the many concerns that have been brought forward to our office of consumer protection that my department is going out and reviewing the travel industry. They're not only reviewing it here in Alberta, but they're also reviewing it in other jurisdictions and seeing what does work in Ontario, Quebec, and British Columbia and what doesn't work in those provinces. Therefore, what we want to do is we want to determine a solution that could meet Albertans' needs in an effective way.

Unfortunately, it has become apparent to us that there are many issues which would keep a travel assurance fund from being a fully effective way of protecting consumers. Provincial travel compensation funds have in the past been established to compensate consumers only if a travel agent goes out of business. Attempting to regulate compensation when a travel provider like an airline fails is problematic because many travel providers are beyond provincial control, as I mentioned, the problem they have in the Ontario model. This fact makes it difficult for the province to persuade our providers to help finance such a fund. In fact, the airlines have already voted against Canada's participation in a global passenger protection plan which would have protected Canadian air travelers against airline failure. That was similar to a checkoff type of fund, but the airlines have said that they don't want to have anything to do with that.

Even if airlines were within provincial jurisdiction, there are many other travel providers to consider. The hon. Member for Highwood brought a number of those instances to case, and particularly cruises and prepackaged vacation tours are also fast growing segments of our travel industry. And as we found out, travel clubs and the regulations that we have had to put around them have also changed the travel industries. Cruise lines are also out of provincial jurisdiction and are often governed outside of Canada.

The travel industry has changed and continues to change, and the solution that we choose in Alberta needs to be flexible enough to respond to those changing conditions. The question of who would pay for a travel assurance fund must be considered. In a day and age when consumers must pay a host of security fees and other charges in order to travel, we would evaluate whether or not Albertans are willing to pay the additional charges needed to maintain an assurance fund, and that will be part of our review. Even when the fees are levied on travel agents, the fees are generally passed on to the consumers, and of course we would have to look in our review at the whole facet. We would talk to the travel industry, we would talk to the motor carriers, we would talk to the airlines, and we would talk to the travel agents, travel clubs, and everyone affiliated with booking an experience.

So, Mr. Speaker, these factors and any possible alternatives to an insurance fund are certainly at this time being examined by my department, and it is only after this particular work is done and completed that I believe we can be in a position to properly address the situation. But I really want to commend the hon. member for bringing this particular motion forward as a solution, as another part of the solution for protecting his constituents. He deserves our just regard for that.

Thank you.

8:50

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you for the opportunity to speak to Motion 508. I must admit from the outset that I do have concerns with Motion 508 and the call for the establishment of a travel assurance fund. Having said that, I do understand and appreciate the motives of the hon. Member for Calgary-East for proposing this motion. The instability within the airline industry can be frustrating for both corporate and leisure travelers, especially when that instability results in an airline going bankrupt. Different financial realities have forced the hand of many airlines, including Canadian Airlines and more recently Canada 3000.

All members of this Assembly I am sure have heard from friends or constituents affected by the closure of these airlines. The story of Canada 3000 is especially striking in that over 50,000 Canadians were affected by the bankruptcy of this airline. Several of those lived in my constituency. Many Albertans were not only left stranded around Canada and foreign lands, but many passengers also had to face the tough reality that they had to pay for a trip that they could no longer take and that potentially would not be refunded by the company. In the instance of one my constituents, they had paid for a trip that was not to be taken until the 15th of December. However, they could not be reimbursed by virtue of their credit card until after the trip was to have taken place, so their whole family was out all of the money that they were planning to spend on their Christmas vacation. So it was not a pleasant nor an easy nor a comfortable situation for them.

It is of course in this climate that the hon. Member for Calgary-East brought forth this motion. His consideration and regard for these individuals is commendable, and ultimately something does need to be done to protect passengers from the instability found in the airline industry. I don't know, however, if Motion 508 is the answer.

The motion calls on the government "to establish a travel assurance fund" that would be used "to compensate airline consumers who do not receive travel services purchased from a registered travel agency due to . . . bankruptcy or insolvency." I assume the hon. member would have the government set up a fund similar to those found in our sister provinces of British Columbia and Ontario. In both instances the fund is established legislatively by the government but is administered and funded by provincial travel agencies. While it has been stressed that there would be no direct cost to government, I am concerned that an unforeseeable event that might plunge an airline company into financial problems would leave the government and ultimately the Alberta taxpayer on the hook to cover compensation under this fund. While it is unfortunate that travelers could face problems when an airline goes bankrupt, such as the case of Canada 3000, I do not believe that the taxpayer should be responsible for insuring a service that should be governed by the general principles of buyer beware.

Even at that, Mr. Speaker, protection is already available for consumers today without the assistance or guidance of government. Travel experts have been recommending for years that potential travelers should use their credit cards when booking flights to ensure that the consumer is protected in case the flight does not proceed. This is the advice that the United States Federal Maritime Commission was giving consumers who booked with American Classic Voyages, which filed for bankruptcy in October of 2001. Clients were told by regulatory authorities to get charge-backs from the credit card companies, and in fact they did receive them. I would imagine that the majority of travelers use their credit cards and would be eligible for assistance.

Another concern that I have with respect to this fund is the idea that those eligible for assistance are only those customers that purchased their trips through a travel agent. This is the way that the travel industry compensation fund is governed in Ontario. Media Metrix Canada, which measures Canadian's use of the web, has reported that 16.4 percent, or 2.1 million Canadians, visit travel web sites, and growing levels of comfort for people pursuing financial transactions over the Internet will only see this use increase with time. Travel industry experts have commented that the way the industry is evolving, it appears that more and more airlines are issuing their very best offers on their own web sites, thus encouraging more individuals to comparison shop on their own. These trends all point to a general movement away from the use of travel agents and a general emphasis on the individual to make their own travel plans. One has to wonder, Mr. Speaker, if we would be moving forward on an issue where the people of this province would be moving in a different direction. That is certainly not to say that the many travel agencies that exist and service the residents of St. Albert and beyond are not very scrupulous and diligent in delivering service to their customers.

Another concern that I have has to do with the proposed passenger protection plan. This plan was worked out over the past four years by the International Air Transport Association, representing the world's scheduled airlines, and the Universal Federation of Travel Agents Association, which represents the world's travel agencies. The plan would have an airline passenger pay a mandatory fee of about $1 to $1.20 Canadian. That levy would be considered an insurance premium and would provide for complete refunds the next time a scheduled carrier declares bankruptcy. The plan has been endorsed by France, Spain, Switzerland, Italy, and several countries in the Middle East and Africa. While it has not yet been adopted for Canada, industry officials are hoping for another vote on the plan to proceed sometime this year. Why, Mr. Speaker, would we move ahead on Motion 508 when industry is responding with what seems to be a reasonable plan to protect consumers? Would our plan be significantly different from what is being proposed under the passenger protection plan? I think we need to answer some of these questions before we establish our own fund.

My final concern, Mr. Speaker, deals with why it would be incumbent upon this government to respond to this situation. It seems to me that the federal government is responsible for regulating and overseeing the airline industry. It is also apparent to me that it has been the federal government's policies that have unnecessarily shackled competition in this nation to prop up and maintain a former Crown corporation, a Crown corporation that now monopolizes an industry to such an extent that it routinely bullies and browbeats competitors.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Member for St. Albert, but the time limit for consideration of this item of business on this day has now concluded.

Adjournment of Session

26. Mr. Hancock moved:

Be it resolved that when the Assembly adjourns to recess the spring sitting of the Second Session of the 25th Legislature, it shall stand adjourned until a time and date as determined by the Speaker after consultation with the Lieutenant Governor in Council.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: This is not debatable under Standing Order 18(3).

Third Reading

Bill 27 Appropriation Act, 2002

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader on behalf of.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd move Bill 27, the Appropriation Act, 2002, for third reading.

We've spent since March 9 in full and complete discussion of the various estimates provided for, and it would be timely to vote the appropriation and allow government to get on with the business.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm glad that I get the opportunity to speak about the anticipated effect of Bill 27, the Appropriation Act, in third reading. I wanted to make just a couple of points, sort of a cleanup. In the last week or so people that I've chatted with in the community have pointed out that we are debating the third reading of the Appropriation Act tonight: were there any sort of last points they wanted to make sure were raised for the government to think about as this budget is implemented throughout the year? A couple of things have come up again.

One was issues around historical sites and heritage preservation and museums. The issue there that was put to me was around support for this sector. I think that at this point it's a question of infrastructure support to make sure that our facilities are being kept up and maintained. Certainly we've had changes in the way that many of these sites are administered, with it being transferred to the friends-of organizations. That seems to be going fine at this point, although I've never seen any evaluation of the change. We are going into I think our third year under that structure, so I would be interested if the Minister of Community Development can provide us with some sort of evaluation of whether in fact this change in administration has accomplished what they said it would at the time. I think that we went into that structure in '98, so we're four years into it at this point.

In particular I was speaking to someone that had been active for a long time with historical preservation, and her concern was simply just around the resources that are available for that sector to keep the museums up and to keep collections going and I think to keep up the expertise of the people working in that sector as well. You know, there are always new possibilities around that. I'm thinking in my constituency of what's going on around the Rosedale power plant, which was the site I think of the second Fort Augustus, and the First Nations burial grounds that are located there. We're starting to find in Edmonton that in fact we do have much more of a history than we thought we had, and we need to start actively working with that. So I was asked to raise that issue, and I'm happy to do that for her.

I also spoke briefly with a neighbour who works in the medical sector, and his point was that there were not enough doctors. I think that we've all been seeing in the paper responses from people working in the health care sector that they're feeling overworked and have just run out of steam, that they can't cover off the cracks that people are falling through anymore. There are a couple of different approaches to that. I don't know that it's automatically about: there should be more doctors. I think that there are ways of restructuring the health care system that we still have not done that could make the delivery of health care services more effective and more interesting. One of those is around changing roles, the roles that we have the doctor in and also the support staff. Nurse practitioners and midwives for example are one way of changing and updating our health sector that we haven't really looked at with any kind of dedication, and I think that there are both savings and efficiencies there but also a better delivery of health care for many people. Certainly there's been a demand for midwifery services.

The third issue that I wanted to just cover off before I move on is the additional comments that were made by the Premier and the minister and some others around the community lottery boards during question period last week. One of these that has really come home to me is around the fact that the government has been saying that groups that were applying to the community lottery boards in fact were eligible to apply under the CFEP grant, which is the community facility enhancement program. In fact, that's probably true for those groups that were looking for money for renovations of buildings – in other words, bricks and mortar – or for equipment, the purchase of particular items that are going to be used in the location: tables, chairs, lighting instruments in a theatre, that sort of thing. I think that's true, but what needs to be remembered here is that these grants are structured differently.

I've just been asked to write a reference for one group. They were applying or were going to apply or had applied to the community lottery board for money for lighting and sound equipment for a theatre space. I believe they needed $40,000 to do this, and under the community lottery boards they could have applied for the $40,000. Now, I know that they've already raised other funds to support this. The $40,000 isn't the total bill by any means, but there's no community lottery board left for them to apply to, so they're having to apply to CFEP. Well, with CFEP they can't apply for the $40,000. They're going to have to apply for $20,000 and come up with another $20,000 through their own fund-raising endeavours. They are already raising additional money there. So the 50-50 matching from CFEP puts additional onus on the groups to go out and do even more fund-raising than they were already doing, and that's a significant difference from what was being offered by the community lottery boards.

So it's disingenuous of the minister and the Premier to indicate: oh, well, they could just go and apply under CFEP. It's not the same thing at all. I've actually been surprised at some of the statements coming from the government's side about how these different programs did work, because I think there's a level of knowledge that is lacking there.

Finally, the attitude that seems to have been brought forward around the community lottery boards from questions in question period last week that somehow a number of these groups are nefarious. They're bad. They're double-dipping. They're nasty little groups, and they shouldn't be eligible to apply. This was part of the reasoning why the community lottery boards were taken away. This really surprises me, because most of these grants, as was pointed out, were in fact under $50,000 an application, or they were applying for less than $50,000 or less than $25,000. These are small community groups. So I'd be interested in hearing more from the minister or from others or individuals as to what dirty dealings were afoot here. What's the accusation that this money was somehow being misspent or wasn't being accounted for or that these groups were somehow double-dipping and weren't accounting properly for the use of these funds?

My experience has been that they were generally very small organizations, and the money was very valuable to what they were doing. Just because they can't afford a chartered accountant to do their audit, I don't know that that makes them somehow unscrupulous or that they have nefarious dealings. So I think it's only fair that if there are going to be those kinds of accusations made or innuendoes made, we hear a little bit more about that just for the sake of those groups.

So Bill 27, the Appropriation Act: passing the budget that's been proposed. It's been an interesting budget. Well, I think it's been a budget of broken promises. We had the promises to the seniors in 1997 that there would be no increases in health care premiums for them, that there would be no increases ever again. Well, that promise was certainly broken, because seniors are all paying the higher health care premiums along with everyone else. So there was a broken promise.

MR. MacDONALD: I heard that some people campaigned on that.

MS BLAKEMAN: Oh, yes. A lot of people campaigned on that.

Another thing that was widely publicized and talked about prior to the election was how teachers would be rewarded and could believe that they were going to be rewarded along the same lines and with the same percentages as those that were granted to the doctors and nurses. That certainly didn't happen, and many teachers and others feel that that is a broken promise. There were promises from the children's summit about early prevention programs for kids. There are broken promises, as most of those were in fact reduced or cut. So I don't think it's a budget to be proud of by any means. I think it is a budget of broken promises, and certainly a number of citizens feel that way.

I think that there are some other philosophical agendas that are being put forward under the economics of this budget, and one of the things that I'm noticing is that this is a budget that was removing local decision-making from areas like municipalities or the community lottery boards and putting that decision-making behind closed doors.

A number of examples of that – we've got the community lottery board program being canceled, and we don't know what's being anticipated to replace it, but it's been made pretty clear that it won't be local decision-making that will be involved. The decision will be made by the government behind closed doors or perhaps through one of the existing lottery foundations. We've had decision-making taken away from the RHAs as we look at consolidating the RHAs down to five or six of them from the 17 that we've got. We had the closure of the Agricorp and the consolidation there, going from a number of locations in almost any town of any size down to a phone line, a call centre, just a couple of them that are actually still open for a walk-in. So, again, taking it away from the local vicinity – the municipality, the grass roots, the community – and centralizing the service or the decision-making behind closed doors.

We've got the children's authority, same thing: no, no, no, the children's authority isn't really allowed to make those decisions; they'll be made behind closed doors with cabinet approval. We've got the school boards who've lost some of their ability to make their own decisions in negotiating with teachers, taken right away from them with Bill 12, another example of government pulling all the reins into their little hands and going behind closed doors to make those decisions. It's much more difficult for citizens to know why the decision is made or even what decision is made. It's certainly more difficult to view the decision-making process and to hold people accountable.

I also see as sort of an offshoot to this that decision-making or at least research functions are being handed to sort of handpicked friends, and this concerns me when I see friends of the government from the corporate sector being chosen to head up things like the delisting of medical services. So there we have someone who has spent their life in the corporate sector, in the business sector, in the energy sector who is now going to head up a committee that's supposed to be deciding how a public service is going to be administered or distributed.

DR. TAFT: These companies lobbied for electricity deregulation.

MS BLAKEMAN: Yeah.

You know, it's just a small thing, but it sure makes me curious about the direction that things are going in. So we have decision-making being pulled into tight little fists that then go behind closed doors and make decisions. Then their friends are sent very carefully out to manage this information-gathering, decision-making process, and their expertise is coming from the private sector when we're talking about delivery of public-sector programs like health care.

I don't think that this has been a happy budget, particularly, for the government. There have certainly been some hot moments for them, and I don't think it's been a happy experience for Albertans.

DR. TAFT: Not the ones I've spoken to.

MS BLAKEMAN: No. Not the ones that have been in touch with us. Certainly not.

I think those local communities, again, like the municipalities, the school boards, the child welfare authorities, the Agricorp offices, community lottery boards – it's a power grab by the government. They're taking all of the decision-making away from the grass roots, from the people that can look around and know exactly where the money is going or who needs it or who's got a good reputation, and it's all being centralized.

I think that another part of the big broken promise is around the VLTs. It's important that we remember what the history is there before it gets erased and rewritten on us. Essentially the community lottery boards were put in place as a response to the municipalities' vote in the '98 municipal elections. There was a plebiscite that would allow communities to vote to have VLTs removed from their community. Now, let's not forget how much money this means to this government. This government doesn't get the DTs; they get the GTs. They've got those gambling tremens. [interjection] There it is. The Minister of Economic Development is demonstrating it for us all. Boy, they've got to get that fix. They've got to have that gambling money, especially from the VLTs. That's where most of it comes from. I mean, the vote was very close. It was almost 50 percent either way, and the government response was: "Okay. Fine. We'll put some of this money back into your community."

Now, you've got to remember that there are hundreds of thousands and in some cases millions of dollars being vacuumed, being sucked, being snorted out of Alberta communities. [interjections] My goodness, they're all getting excited at that one. Well, it gets a strong response. That money was leaving those communities, and those people didn't like it. They wanted some of that money back into their communities, and they wanted to be able to control what it was used for. Thus we have the community lottery boards put in place, which were distributing back a minuscule portion, a tiny, tiny percentage of the money that was being vacuumed out of these communities. Now that promise has been broken. That money has been taken away. That money is no longer going back into those communities. They no longer have the local decision-making to decide where that money is going to go, which group is going to get it, and what are the activities, programs, and services that are going to benefit from lottery dollars in their particular community.

This was a budget of a couple of flip-flops, and I was really hoping that the government was going to go for a hat trick. They had the gas tax distribution. They flipped on that one, flipped on the transportation. They flipped on the credits for grade 10. They were going to put a cap on how many credits a grade 10 student could take, which was essentially capping how much class they could take. The government was only going to pay the school for X number of credits. Thereby every school would now have to reduce what they were doing.

MR. MacDONALD: Those were the flips.

MS BLAKEMAN: Well, those were the flips. So those were two. I was hoping they were going to go for a hat trick, which would have restored the community lottery boards, but no hat trick.

MR. MacDONALD: Is the flop their credibility?

MS BLAKEMAN: Oh, yeah. I can see that my colleague is getting really excited by this debate. He's likely to jump up and talk about it.

I think what we've got on the one side are these flip-flops, this indecision, this sort of bad planning, and on the other side we have the broken promises, so I'm not surprised that the government is looking to have this third reading hustled through for Bill 27, this Appropriation Act. I think that in the end run the groups that have paid the highest for this – it is really balancing this budget on the backs of children: the cuts to children's services and the cuts to the schools. That's what I'm going to remember this budget of 2002-2003 for. It's balancing on the backs of Alberta's children.

Thanks, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Before we go further, I wonder if we might have unanimous consent to briefly revert to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Community Development.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed a pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the House this evening two very special constituents of mine who have popped by to take in a few of the proceedings this evening in the House. I believe it's likely their first visit to the Chamber, so I do want to welcome them. They are here for a meeting with myself and the hon. Minister of Transportation surrounding some very important issues out in the Hurstwood area. They are two advocates for the constituents who live there, and they're wonderful gentlemen. I would ask now that Kevin Nero and Bill Bock please rise and receive the warm welcome of all members.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Are you ready for the question?

[Motion carried; Bill 27 read a third time]

head: Government Motions

Time Allocation on Bill 26

27. Mr. Hancock moved:

Be it resolved that when further consideration of Bill 26, Workers' Compensation Amendment Act, 2002, is resumed, not more than two hours shall be allotted to any further consideration of the bill at Committee of the Whole, at which time every question necessary for the disposal of this stage of the bill shall be put forthwith.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We have now been in discussion of Bill 26 for some five hours. It is a very important bill. With the passage of this particular motion it would provide for another two hours, and then there would of course be the opportunity for further discussion at third reading, which I would anticipate would take at least another two hours. With the five hours that have been in debate so far and the four hours additional, at least that I anticipate, that'll be nine hours. With nine hours of debate Bill 26 will be in the top 10 of bills debated in this House over the last 10 years, and that puts it into very good company.

AN HON. MEMBER: That's shameful.

MR. HANCOCK: Now, Mr. Speaker, the other matter. The member opposite yells "shameful," but in the process of this House in the time that I've been House leader, I've discovered one truism, and that is that if the opposition really wants to bring forward an amendment which they think is purposeful and has merit, they share it with the government in order that we can consider it and see whether we can pass it. If they're simply bringing forward amendments for posturing purposes, they don't do it, and we just spend time debating in the House. In seeing the debate that's proceeded so far in Committee of the Whole, it appears to me that the latter is extant, so I would commend the House.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, you have up to five minutes to debate the motion.

DR. TAFT: Okay. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I respond, I'm sure, on behalf of all members of the opposition and even members of the third party if they were here to respond. The concern we have is that what's happening here, for everybody to understand, is that closure is being invoked. We have, on the basis that we've already debated one of the largest and most important bills of this session for a total of five hours, the government now arguing that that's enough and it's time to restrict the time that's left. So they will allow us a further four hours to finish up in committee and third reading, and I think that's an affront to democracy. I see a number of people in the gallery. I would imagine that they would agree. Nine hours of debate, grand total, for a bill that is going to affect every significant business – small, medium, and large – in this province and beyond that every single worker who's covered by WCB or who was once covered by WCB. It deserves more than nine hours of consideration.

As MLAs every one of us here has any number of files in our offices, tragic files of people with broken lives and broken bodies because of the WCB or because of their work, and the WCB they feel has not attended to their concerns. We can deal with all of that in this Legislature, the one place that's really where debate is on the public record. Can we deal with all of that in a total of nine hours? The government feels that after a mere five hours it's time to shut it down and limit us to only two more hours at each remaining stage of the bill. I am standing to object on behalf of democracy. This is no way to run a democratic society. This is no way for this government to earn the respect of its citizens. [interjection] The hon. Economic Development minister is yelling at me to stop it. The WCB is crucial to the economy of this province. If you think it's so important for us to shut it down, you stand up and justify why you believe that after five hours your government has a duty and an obligation to shut us down.

Mr. Speaker, I don't have confidence but I hope that tomorrow this government at least suffers some repercussions in the media for this sort of closure, and I hope that as this habit gets stronger and stronger – I think this is the government that has the record in Alberta history for invoking closure the most often.

MS BLAKEMAN: Oh, by far.

DR. TAFT: By far, I'm told. Sooner or later this will catch up to this government because the people will recognize this arrogance for what it is.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Hon. minister, there are no further discussions on this.

[Government Motion 27 carried]

head: Government Bills and Orders
Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Tannas in the chair]

THE CHAIR: I'll call the committee to order.

Bill 26
Workers' Compensation Amendment Act, 2002

THE CHAIR: We have anticipated this moment. We ask for further comments, questions with respect to amendment A3, which is currently the topic that we're on. That amendment was proposed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar on A3.

MR. MacDONALD: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It's different with this amendment A3 now that we have closure on this bill. The government can put whatever spin they want on this, but certainly the closure motion that was discussed a little earlier is just a silk glove over an iron fist, because to describe this as being in the top 10 in bills that are going to be discussed in this Assembly in the time requirements is totally wrong.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview talked earlier about how important this is to Albertans. We need to have increased accountability not only in this Legislative Assembly but of the WCB. That's why I proposed amendment A3, to move that Bill 26 be amended in section 5 in the proposed section 7(1) by striking out "3 months" and substituting "1 month." This does not mean that because an amendment is suggested by a member of the opposition, it is somehow frivolous, that we have to run to the hon. minister's office like delinquent children to the principal's office. That is not what democracy is all about. An Assembly is a place to exchange ideas.

Whenever you have, Mr. Chairman, a bill such as this, an extensive overhaul of the WCB where you had public consultation after public consultation and now you're going to have more public consultation, are you going to tell me that you're going to limit this committee to nine hours so that they can only have nine hours to discuss the outstanding contentious claims? Talk about not understanding the spirit of democracy and the function of a Legislative Assembly. For the hon. House Leader to propose Motion 27 and then I believe it's going to be Motion 28 later on tonight is wrong. That is why we have to increase the accountability of the WCB, and to think that we are going to increase their accountability by reducing the number of times that they meet in a year is wrong again.

Now, the possibility of the WCB meeting every three months indicates to this member a hands-off approach by the board of directors. I think we need more meeting times of the WCB, not less, particularly if this bill is going to be rammed through this Assembly without any public scrutiny at all. [interjection] No, there is no public scrutiny when you have closure.

What exactly are we going to be doing here, and what message are we sending to the board of directors? This amendment relates to how often the WCB must meet. The current legislation requires the board to meet every two months. In the interest of openness, transparency, and accountability, all needed for the WCB and welcomed by the Minister of Human Resources and Employment, the minister will now be extending the requirement for meetings to quarterly, or every three months. It is my view that the board should meet more often, not less.

Let's have a look at some of the reasons why the board perhaps should meet. The hon. Minister of Economic Development is talking always about how unique the situation is in Alberta. Well, this is one of the unique situations that employers are having to deal with, and that's double-digit increases in their premiums. Many employers are not in favour of this Bill 26, and I don't have to go to the hon. minister's office to explain this to him. We've had a 27.4 percent increase in premiums this year. We're going to have another double-digit increase in the near future. In the last five years we've had the number of workers covered by the WCB increase from roughly 1 million to 1.3 million, and the entire workforce has not expanded at the same rate, Mr. Chairman.

The number of new claims reported has gone from 118,000 to 146,000, the number of new lost-time claims has gone from roughly 37,000 to 41,000, and the number of fatalities accepted is unfortunately roughly over two Albertans a week. Yet we are going to have closure on this bill. We have no respect for democracy, and with this closure motion I'm told that we have less respect for those who have lost their lives on Alberta work sites. We have the opportune time in this Assembly now to try to work and improve this. But what are we doing? We're going to have four hours of debate on this.

Now, when you see the problems that the board of directors has to deal with whenever you see the percentage of new lost-time claims and you look at two of the major issues that the WCB board of directors is going to have to deal with, the first one is certainly the growth of claims and claim costs. It's skyrocketing. The number one problem is the direction the WCB is going in its health care procurement. They're increasing their delivery through the private operators, and that is driving up costs. Whenever we think of the increase in claims and claim costs witnessed recently – and it is expected to continue – we've got to recognize, Mr. Chairman, that there's certainly sustained growth of the economy and the workforce, as I said earlier, but employers are paying these costs. We need to ensure that the board of directors is doing everything possible to ensure that this is a very well-managed corporation, I'll call it. When you consider the growth of claims and claim costs, I would urge all members of this Assembly to support this amendment A3.

One of the next most important policy issues for the WCB in the future in this member's view is the challenge to the workers' compensation monopoly, and if the compensation board is going to be meeting quarterly, perhaps that's not often enough to discuss this issue. There are certainly issues for them to discuss, but one of the issues is going to be how we deal with the workers' compensation system as it comes under increasing pressure from groups urging the introduction of competition. Now, we all know that whenever you introduce competition to health care, it doesn't work. We all know that it doesn't work with electricity deregulation. Perhaps it's going to work with compensation, and this is why we're so cavalier in this legislation and so cavalier with our use of closure. If this pressure is to grow and is to be felt by all the stakeholders and the government, the WCB should be meeting more often, not less, to analyze the current system and to be accountable to those that are paying the premiums, the employers.

It's fine to have an annual meeting and to have it open to the public, but I'm curious as to how long that public meeting is going to last. Is it only one hour? Is it going to be two hours? Is it going to be three hours with a lunch provided for all the public who come? It is my understanding that historically the WCB chairperson used to travel the province and rent a meeting room in a local hotel and hear firsthand the experience of Albertans in their dealings with the WCB.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I would urge all members of this Assembly to support this amendment and think before you vote on this that we need to have an openness, a transparency, and a WCB that's accountable to both employers and employees. Reducing the dates in the year on which the board of directors is to meet I think is unwise, and I would urge all members at this time to vote in support of amendment A3.

Thank you.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview on A3.

DR. TAFT: Yes. Directly on the amendment, Mr. Chair. Thank you very much. I think we have said from time to time that there are things in this bill undoubtedly to support. One of the things, however, that jumped out at me right away as a concern is the idea that the board should meet less often rather than more often. The fact that they were only meeting six times a year as it was for a very major organization struck me immediately as a question, and reducing that to only four times a year seems like an even bigger concern. So when I look at this amendment and I see that it is to require the board of directors of the Workers' Compensation Board to meet monthly, I think it's a good idea.

I think that if there were time, if there were provisions, we could perhaps have an amendment to the amendment and maybe allow 10 meetings a year or something like that, but there's no question at all that there is a need to have the board of the WCB meet more often, not less often. That's exactly what this amendment is driving at. If we allow this bill to pass unamended on this particular point, we'll have the board of directors of – what's the budget of the WCB? – a multibillion dollar organization meeting four times a year, and each one of those meetings is a few hours long. It just seems like a real breakdown in accountability, an abdication of this government's expectation that the WCB board will even pretend to be accountable.

So it is vital. It is vital for both the workers benefiting from the WCB and the employers paying for the coverage through the WCB that they see that their organization is meeting more often. The board of directors is there to hold the organization accountable. That's why a board of directors exists. Indeed, I find myself wondering if there are not legal concerns at some point for members of the board of directors if they don't meet often enough, because there is, as I'm sure we're all aware, becoming a well-established body of law that directors of major corporations can be held personally accountable for the activities of that corporation. Well, at what point does a member of a board of directors fail to meet reasonable standards of accountability by not attending or not holding enough directors' meetings? So I think we may be getting to that point soon if we continue in this trend.

I also wonder – and maybe the minister could fill me in on this – if the proposed quarterly meetings, four meetings a year, for the board of directors includes the annual general meeting or if that is a separate, special meeting on its own, because that could become even more of a concern. If we have one AGM and three other board of directors' meetings, then that's simply woefully inadequate.

MR. MacDONALD: Does the Tory caucus meet that often?

DR. TAFT: Certainly they meet more often than that. They meet weekly during session, and so they should. So they should. They have a lot to be accountable for, as does the WCB.

I hear frequently not just from workers covered by the WCB but from employers, especially small business employers, in my constituency who have issues with the WCB. They might in fact like to have the opportunity to present to the board of directors of the WCB directly. Now, wouldn't that be a refreshing idea, if maybe four or five times a year the WCB held public meetings, half of them for workers and half of them for employers? Were you suggesting this, Hugh? They could be open to the public, and they could listen directly, face to face, to their supporters, who pay their premiums, and to their workers, who are covered, and hear their concerns. But they will certainly not have time to do that if this amendment is not passed.

So I would encourage government members – I can see they're paying attention here – to support amendment A3 and require not less accountability and less frequent meetings of the board of directors of the Workers' Compensation Board but more accountability and more frequent meetings so that the people of Alberta, the employers of Alberta, and the workers of Alberta can see that a job is being done the way it should be done.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont.

MR. HERARD: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I wasn't going to get up, but we've been listening to the hon. members chastise us for not spending enough time to try to make this bill better, yet we get amendments like this one. Essentially this particular clause states that they can meet at any time, but at no time shall more than three months elapse, so that means they could meet every week if they have to. I don't know why it is that we're not spending the time of this House, now that the hon. member knows that he's got a limited amount of time, to deal with important issues within this bill.

I know that the hon. member probably has, you know, the goodwill to try and improve this bill, and I would certainly listen to amendments that make sense to make this bill better, but to spend this kind of time on this kind of a clause to me means that it's not a very serious thing. Yet there's a family in the city of Calgary tonight, you know, who have a father in the hospital and two sons and a wife in a vigil for an injured worker who couldn't take it anymore. So let's get serious.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Amendment A3 is certainly a serious issue. This is a billion dollar organization. When we give in Bill 26, as it's been presented to this Assembly, flexibility for the board of directors if they wish to reduce the amount of meeting times, then that is wrong and that is not considering the needs of any injured worker or any employer in this province. Sorry.

Thank you.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre on amendment A3.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to speak on amendment A3, which is proposing that section 7(1) strike out "3 months" and substitute "1 month." As the Member for Calgary-Egmont has noted, that is in fact the minimum period of time that can elapse between meetings. So what's been changed here and what the government is proposing as part of the changes under Bill 26 is that instead of having to meet at least every two months, it would have to meet at least every three months. And the Member for Calgary-Egmont is correct; they could in fact meet more frequently. They could meet every week or every day or every hour if they wanted to. It's not precluding that, but what tends to happen in these cases is that people look at what the legislation says. It says three months, and that minimum becomes the norm. It becomes the ceiling. It becomes the benchmark that everybody shoots for. So if it says three months in the act, that's when everybody is going to meet, once every three months.

Okay. Well, is that a problem, to have the board of directors for the Workers' Compensation Board only meet every three months, four times a year, potentially having the AGM as one of those four times? Yes, I think that is a problem. So we have an amendment brought forward by the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, who is proposing that the minimum be every month, that the board of directors for the Workers' Compensation Board would have to meet at a minimum every month. I think that's reasonable for the amount of money that the Workers' Compensation Board is dealing with, for the number of people's lives that it affects, both the employers and the workers, for the number of regulations that have to be adhered to, and for the programs and services that are being offered by the Workers' Compensation Board. I don't find that a monthly meeting, at a minimum, of the Workers' Compensation Board is unreasonable to expect, coming from this institution.

Part of what's involved here is the responsibility, what we would call the duty of care in the nonprofit sector, the duty of care of a director. The director is under an obligation to be informed about what's going on, and a director should, then, be using that information to make good decisions. Ideally, that's what is being set out here. As the Member for Edmonton-Riverview pointed out, particularly in the States, which always tends to be more litigious, we are seeing an increasing number of court cases where people are being held individually responsible for those decisions that they're making in the context of sitting on a board of directors, whether that's a corporate board or a nonprofit board. It's happening in both places.

I think there is an onus on directors to be meeting often enough to be kept up to speed on what's happening. Okay? With an organization as big as the Workers' Compensation Board, how often would they need to meet to stay on top of what's happening in the programs, how many new cases are being opened, how much money is flowing out, any changes that are being anticipated, pressure from the community? Is it unreasonable to say that they should meet at least every month to stay on top of that information and to be able to make good decisions? Let's face it; without good information you don't make good decisions. So how do we try and set up legislation so that the board of directors of the Workers' Compensation Board can meet frequently enough to have a good exchange of information and, further to that, make good decisions?

So I'm more than willing to support amendment A3, brought forward by the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar. Is there a good reason not to do this? Is there some reason why it would be a bad thing to have these directors meet, at a minimum, every month? I don't know. Is there not enough money to pay the directors for their time spent at meetings? Is that too large a figure? Well, given the controversy we've been following in the newspaper recently about the pay scale for the CEO of the Workers' Compensation Board, it seems to be felt that the six-figure income is fine; that's to be expected working in that kind of sector. I'm assuming that directors are paid for their appearances or at least reimbursed for their travel expenses, but I don't think the amount of money that it's costing them to bring these directors together should be a deterrent to having them meet at least every month.

I was also intrigued by the suggestion from the Member for Edmonton-Riverview that perhaps with that many meetings they could open some of these to the public. That I find very interesting. I don't know if it's opening it to the public so much as opening it to its own stakeholders; that would be the employers, who are paying the premiums, and the workers themselves. It can often be very instructive to come and watch how people get information, what kinds of reports they're given, what kind of briefing they're given by the administrative staff, the surroundings they meet in even, how long they meet, what time of day they meet. It can be very interesting.

We've got a number of people joining us in the gallery tonight, and I'm sure they're finding it a very interesting experience to see how a time guillotine is used in place of closure in Alberta. I'm sure they're learning a lot about how decision-making happens here, what kind of information is provided to people and the level of discourse that takes place in the Assembly.

I understand that members of the government caucus are frustrated. I understand that they've already decided this behind closed doors and they know what they're going to do. They've had their five-minute briefing on it, and they're frustrated. They don't want to be in here. They don't see this as contributing to democracy at all.

MR. SNELGROVE: Speak for yourself. We're having a great time.

MS BLAKEMAN: I'm so sorry. Evidently they're having a great time talking and chatting with one another. Fine. If that's how they want to spend their time in the House, fine.

I understand that government members are frustrated with this process of being in the Legislative Assembly, with having members of the public come in and listen to what's happening.

MR. NORRIS: It's an honour to be here. We like being here.

MS BLAKEMAN: Oh, I'm glad to hear that. That's the most positive thing I've ever . . .

THE CHAIR: Hon. members, hon. minister, if you wish to speak to this amendment, I would be happy to recognize you when the next occasion arises. Right now we have the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, and then after that I will recognize you if you so desire.

Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you. That's excellent. I'm glad that we're able to engage the minister.

I was talking about how willing people were to spend the time in this House debating this and the importance of having an open process where people can come and watch how you make decisions and what kind of information you have when you make those decisions. I think that's a good process, an important one that needs to be upheld in a democracy. So I'm certainly in favour of the additional suggestion from Edmonton-Riverview that some of those meetings happening at a minimum of once a month would in fact be open, as I said, not necessarily to the public but certainly to the stakeholders that have an intimate concern with how the WCB operates and how it makes its decisions. That seems perfectly reasonable to me. In a day and age where money counts and there's a lot of it around, accountability is very important, especially when you're taking hard-earned money from employers. Of course, I'm always more concerned about the effect that government programs and services have on small- and medium-sized employers. That's hard-earned money for them. They need to know that the decisions that are being made and the programs that are being put in place are going to serve them well too.

So I'm glad I had this opportunity to get up and speak in favour of this amendment. I think it's a good idea to set up the legislation so the board has the discretion or the leeway to call meetings at least every month and more frequently if they so wish. I think that at least a monthly meeting is very reasonable and is probably prudent in light of the complexity of the affairs of the WCB and the amount of money that is being distributed and contemplated in their decision-making process.

Thank you very much.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Minister of Economic Development.

MR. NORRIS: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would like to speak on the amendment and would just like to remind the hon. member that when she casts aspersions about our intentions, there's not one member in this government that doesn't want to make things better. We're trying to make it right, and we're doing the best we can. For you to sit there and say that we aren't here for the honour of the people that put us here is absolutely false and malicious, and I'm not going to take it.

MR. DUNFORD: Well, Mr. Chairman, I think it'd be important to put on the record just what's happening here tonight. I think it'd be important, and I think members of the opposition would almost hope that my words show up on a page other than one their speech is on. The rhetoric that has been involved in this amendment tonight is worthy of sending to your constituents. There's no question about it. But the thing that disturbs me in this House tonight, based a little bit on what the Member for Calgary-Egmont talked about, is that there are serious situations out there regarding injured workers and their relationship with the appeals system of WCB. What Bill 26 is there for is to provide for a more open and accountable WCB system.

Now, in order for that to happen, I took the unprecedented move of meeting in my office with the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry, and the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, and I did the unprecedented thing of working with a document that normally is not seen by opposition members, but this was how important in my view it was to move this legislation forward so that we could start to see the policy change, the legislative change, and the regulation change that's required in order to make the WCB system in Alberta one that is even better.

What is apparent to me now is that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar has not talked to his caucus about the situation that happened. I listened to the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, and I've listened to him now for a number of years. I understand the way that he approaches topics, and that is fine. But for him to allow the Member for Edmonton-Riverview and the Member for Edmonton-Centre to then stand up and talk about an amendment from a focus that this was a government amendment – and of course it is, because it's in our bill. But not to have explained to them that this was a WCB amendment that was forwarded for us to consider – WCB said: look; if you're opening the act because you want to do something for injured workers, we have some housekeeping things that we would like to have looked after at the same time. I said: "You know, that'll be fine, but it'll have to be routine. I am not prepared to accept an amendment from WCB that is controversial in any way. I'm going to have enough controversy with what I'm trying to do for injured workers in this province without getting into some of the particular battles that they might have." It was explained to the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar and it was explained to the Member for Edmonton-Highlands and the Member for Edmonton-Glengarry that there are two sets of amendments here that you need to be looking at: again, one that is initiated by WCB and the other that is initiated by this government and what we're trying to do with the injured workers.

We have now spent – I don't know. Is it 45 minutes? There must be a timer. We have spent 45 minutes listening to the rhetoric about the concern they have for injured workers, the concern they have about democracy on an item that has come to us as a routine matter from WCB, accepted by the stakeholders of WCB. We were assured as a government caucus that the amendments initiated by WCB had been fully explained and fully agreed to by their stakeholders. So what have we here tonight then? We have a bill that is to bring a more open and accountable WCB system on behalf of injured workers, and we're spending 45 minutes wondering how often the board of directors should meet. Not only that, but other than these three esteemed members there's nobody else opposed to it. The employees group from WCB, the employers group from WCB, all of their stakeholders said: this is a routine amendment, and we're bringing it forward for you while you have the bill open for this to move forward.

So rhetoric and posturing tonight – I don't know if we've ever seen this kind of stuff before. We've got injured workers in the gallery that have to sit and listen to a discussion about when the board of directors should have to meet. Ladies and gentlemen, members, we are here to provide an open and accountable system for the WCB, not to worry about when directors have to meet.

DR. TAFT: I appreciate the passion with which the minister raised his comments, but this Assembly needs to understand that this is where the ultimate public debate on bills occurs. This is where accountability for the government and its agencies, including the WCB, rests, and this is where it is absolutely reasonable to discuss how often the board of directors of the WCB is required to meet. So it is well within our rights, indeed it is within our responsibilities as representatives in a democratic society and members of the Legislature of Alberta to raise these kinds of issues and to debate them. I see absolutely nothing wrong with that. Where else am I to hold this debate?

Thank you.

[Motion on amendment A3 lost]

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Now, we're going to continue with debate on this bill, and certainly there are many amendments which will improve this bill. First, in discussion of this bill I have to wonder: if the government is so sincere about the health and welfare of injured workers and about employer premiums and openness and accountability of the WCB, why did it wait so long after it had all those reports, whether it was the Friedman report or whether it was the report from the hon. Member for Red Deer-South, before doing anything, before any actions were taken?

Again, good legislation has everyone involved. It is true that there was a meeting in the hon. minister's office regarding this. But I am like the Industry Task Force Association; not everything that was in the three-column document was discussed. Just because an individual has a chance to have a consultation process with the minister does not necessarily mean that there's going to be concurrence. That is a notion that this hon. member, as it was discussed by the Minister of Human Resources and Employment – perhaps there is a lack of understanding of what a democratic process is.

Mr. Chairman, I have another amendment that I certainly would like to discuss this evening, and at this time I would ask one of the pages, please, to distribute it to all members.

Now, the Member for Calgary-Egmont . . .

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: Hon. member, just one minute while we at least get a copy at the table. Hon. member, we require an amendment that has an original signature of yourself.

MR. MacDONALD: Okay. I inadvertently left it off.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: We have this amendment before us, and we shall refer to this amendment as amendment A4. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Amendment A4 on Bill 26, Workers' Compensation Amendment Act, 2002, would read that Bill 26 be amended in section 6 in the proposed section 7.1(4) by adding the following after clause (b):

- (b.1) a report outlining the termination benefits payable to the President;
- (b.2) a report outlining bonuses exceeding $500 paid to a member of the board of directors and any employee of the Board.

There have been many issues put forward this evening about improving the accountability and the openness of the board of directors of the WCB, and this is another one, Mr. Chairman.

Now, the Premier expressed some concern – and I don't have the exact quote from the Premier. But when the Premier was informed that the last termination benefit paid to a retiring president of the WCB – and this is going back to I believe the spring of 1998. It was $580,294. That was the retirement allowance paid to the president, and this was in accordance with the contract of employment. When the Premier of the province was made aware of this by reporters, he was astonished. I forget again, Mr. Chairman, what the exact words were, but the Premier thought it was excessive.

We think of compensation and how many of the injured workers feel so frustrated. They have a great deal of difficulty understanding how we can have a rich compensation package or a termination package for the president, yet injured workers have to go through hoops, and some of them are unsuccessful when they deal with the WCB in getting compensation for their injuries.

Again, I think it would be in the interests of having a better WCB. Certainly the recruitment process is going on for a new president. It may be over for all this member knows; certainly the hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment would know better than I. But I believe that the termination contract should be a public document. I believe that whenever this bill was drafted, it was simply overlooked, and I at this time would like with this amendment A4 to ensure that it is not and ensure that that information will be public information. The next time that employers across this province have a double-digit premium increase, whether it be 11 percent or 27.4 percent or perhaps 10 percent, they will be able to consider this rather lucrative secret contract. That's one reason why I think everyone should support amendment A4.

Of course, the next issue is the whole issue of bonuses. There are those in this province that say that there is a system of achievement bonuses in the WCB that is based on the number of files. Certainly this member doesn't know that to be fact or fiction, but to think that there would be bonuses paid to WCB employees based on whether or not an injured worker were to receive benefits would be wrong in my view. This amendment would again allow public scrutiny of this whole issue of bonuses – why they are given, who they are given to, and when – and it certainly would increase in my view the trust factor between workers, their employers, and the WCB. Certainly I think it would reduce the anxiety and the frustration of all injured workers across this province. I would urge all members to accept this amendment. Even though it wasn't cleared with the Human Resources and Employment minister's office before it was presented to this Assembly, don't let that stop you. Support amendment A4 to Bill 26.

I think that in the little bit of time that we have, we can take a bad bill, discuss it publicly, where it should be discussed, and try our best to improve it. The first thing that has to be done – the entire board has to be accountable to the citizens, and this would increase that level of accountability, Mr. Chairman.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont.

MR. HERARD: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm going to try again. I know that the hon. member must have some serious amendments that would make an improvement to this bill, but to look at this amendment, "a report outlining the termination benefits payable to the President" – the hon. member knows that the Auditor General will be looking and overseeing the WCB as a result of this bill. The same thing with the second one: "bonuses exceeding $500 paid to a member of the board of directors and any employee of the Board." Again, the Auditor General will be able to report on those things. I would really urge the hon. member to call the question on this and get on to some serious amendments.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to speak to amendment A4, presented by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar. I'm inclined to support this particular amendment because I think it's generally trying to inject a little more accountability in terms of the functioning of the board, but it doesn't really get to the basic matter. The basic problem with the WCB in my view in terms of the structure of the board and matters related to that is the model that's being used. Instead of a normal public board that is accountable, we've established some sort of private-sector model of a board in which it operates, in my view at least, too far at arm's length from the Legislature, too far from the minister, and not under the normal rules that apply to public boards.

We've seen for example a dramatic escalation in salaries that are paid. It doesn't meet the normal tests of openness. This whole idea that it's spun off as a corporation I don't think has served either the workers well or served the Legislature well. I think that the hon. member is trying to get at this, but I certainly don't understand why we have to pay $300,000-and-up salaries to the president of the WCB when civil servants, senior officials of the government, deputy ministers, and so on, get a fraction of that money and have more responsibility. I don't understand it.

I know that members opposite have criticized the president of EPCOR for making all the money that he's making and probably rightly so, yet here's a board directly under our control, under the government's control, which can be controlled. That is a choice. The fact that it's an independent board is a choice made by the government and by the Legislature. That is exactly my point: you don't have to make that choice. In my view, you should not make that choice. You should not make it completely independent, and you should not let them irresponsibly waste employers' money, that's supposed to pay for workers' benefits, on things like excessive salaries, excessive separation benefits, and things like funding international sporting events with money that should belong to the workers. Obviously, the independent model is not appropriate, at least in our view, and it should be replaced with a model that existed before, where you have a public board with higher degrees of accountability, higher degrees of transparency, and lower levels of pay for the senior officials.

I think that the hon. member is trying to get at that with this amendment, so in this case I will support it.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Again this is an issue of accountability. It's being dismissed in some comments as unimportant, but I think that if we went to the taxpayers of Alberta and to the employers paying benefits, we would find that indeed they would be very interested in this amendment, which after all is a small amendment but it is significant. I know and I think we all know that the public and workers and employers were all very concerned about the termination settlement for the previous president or two presidents ago now. They're very concerned about the settlement package that was provided to the president who recently left, and they will want to know what that information was. There's no reason in the world that I can think of that this can't be put through.

Similarly, we hear rumours – certainly the very good report by the hon. Member for Red Deer-South admitted that there were rumours or stories going about – that employees of WCB were being paid bonuses to deny requests. Well, if we can clear that sort of thing up, why don't we do it? If we can have a record that spells out exactly why and when bonuses are paid, why not do that? Why not take away some of the suspicion and some of the mystery that surrounds the WCB? That's all this amendment is about. It's simply about better accountability and better transparency. So I think it's well worth considering, and I hope some other members of this Assembly would agree in that.

All of us hear concerns about the mysterious operations of the WCB. Some of that undoubtedly is myth. Some of it is rumour. Some of it is false. Maybe some of it is true. Whatever we can do to shine light on it we ought to be doing, and this amendment here, amendment A4, would help do that. It would achieve that. So it serves everybody. I don't see a downside to this. It serves the workers. It serves the employers, who pay their premiums. It serves the public. It serves the board of directors, and I think it would serve this Legislature, because it would show that we are concerned about open, transparent, accountable government agencies like the Workers' Compensation Board.

So I will be supporting this amendment. I heard the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands say I believe that he would support the amendment, so I hope some of the government MLAs look at that as well.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to support the amendment. I'm a little disappointed in the government member taking the opportunity to comment on the quality of the amendments. I think the substance of the amendments is what's under debate. To indicate that the salaries of the president and the chief executive officer are not a significant issue I think is to ignore the very actions of this government, which has said that the salaries of board employees and those organizations dealing with the public are very important and in fact made a number of moves to make public the salaries of public board members, the superintendents of schools, and a whole host of salaries that in the past had not been part of the public domain this government worked very hard to have declared. So I think it's unfortunate that the government member decided to ignore the amendment and make comments about the validity of it, at least in that member's eyes.

[Mr. Tannas in the chair]

This particular motion is one that has been the subject of public debate. There was a great deal of outrage when the salaries of the president and the chief executive officer of the WCB were made public. We had calls to our constituency office about it, and I'm sure that most members of the Assembly had similar communications from a public that was really quite outraged at the magnitude of the salaries. It cast a rather striking dichotomy. Here were injured workers who claimed that they were being denied in many cases rather modest claims by an organization that had this very, very rich, to say the least, salary grid in place for executive members. So I think that that public outcry was not lost on government members or members of the WCB.

[Mr. Tannis in the chair]

If we look at the kinds of arrangements that have been made with the previous CEO, I think the fact is quite evident that that information needs to be made public, and that's what this amendment will allow to happen, Mr. Chairman. It outlines the termination benefits payable to the president and the bonuses exceeding $500. When you look at the provision in the last CEO's contract, termination benefits of $580,294, being the retirement allowance paid to the president and chief executive officer in accordance with the contract. That's a huge amount of money, Mr. Chairman, and one that I believe the public in the public interest has the right to have reported on an annual basis, should that change.

So with those comments I urge members of the Assembly to support A4. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I welcome the opportunity to rise this evening to speak to Bill 26, the Workers' Compensation Amendment Act, 2002, and specifically to the amendment proposed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar. His proposal is to section 7.1(4), adding the following after clause (b): "(b.1) a report outlining the termination benefits payable to the President." I think this is an exceptionally good amendment. It is an amendment that is welcomed not only by employers but by injured workers. In light as well, Mr. Chairman, of the comments made in Judge Friedman's report, where he says that "each Committee member has expressed concern about what seems to be a well-entrenched culture of denial within the WCB," I think this is just one other area where that culture of denial takes place.

When we look at the annual reports of the WCB – and we're using their figures totally here – and we look in 1996, the termination benefits were $704,000. Now, in 1997 these rose to $925,566, and in 1998 $1,166,372. As we continue along, in 1999 we had termination benefits of $1,304,452. Probably the one that's most upsetting is when we look at termination benefits for the year 2000. Those have now risen to $2,344,044. I don't know how any hon. member in this House could say that this is a frivolous amendment and one that shouldn't be considered not only by the members of this House but for the good of all Albertans. If we are truly going to make the WCB a transparent and accountable organization, then this is certainly a first step. When I see that in 1996 we had termination benefits of only seven hundred and some odd thousand dollars and now we look at the year 2000, which is the last we have recorded, where we have termination benefits of over $2.3 million, what an incredible rise in termination benefits over that short period of time. So this is an exceptionally good amendment.

Now, as well I have other concerns that I think this amendment will address. I see again the amendment put forward by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar: "(b.1) a report outlining the termination benefits payable to the President." Of course, when we look at the previous CEO to the one that just retired earlier this year, the termination benefits were absolutely outrageous. In fact, they were so outrageous that the Reader's Digest even featured the type of termination that this particular individual was granted. Again we had a situation here this year, in early 2002, when we had the president and CEO of the board resigning, terminating her contract one year before she had to. Yet with the way our reports come out, Albertans won't have any idea what her termination was until the 2002 report comes out, which I believe is June 1, 2003. So this person will not have been an employee of the board for somewhere in the neighbourhood of 14 to 15 months, yet Albertans won't know what type of separation package she got. This is totally unacceptable to injured workers, who at this particular point are the focus of the Workers' Compensation Amendment Act, 2002, Bill 26. It's totally unacceptable when they have benefits that have been denied them, and we are having a tribunal system set up in order to deal with these cases. As well, it's totally unacceptable to employers, who see the premiums continue to rise and rise, yet they don't get an opportunity to look at termination benefits to the president.

So definitely I am in full support of amendment A4. I know that employers in this province are in support of this, and I know that injured workers in this province are in support of it. I cannot understand why members in this House would not support this exceptional amendment.

Now, then, as well the second part of the amendment, "a report outlining bonuses exceeding $500 paid to a member of the board of directors and any employee of the Board." Again, Mr. Chairman, we have had numerous complaints, and I must commend the minister on listening to those complaints and certainly taking the action first of all of having two reports done, one by Justice Friedman and one done by the MLAs. Both reports focused on a particular group of injured workers. These are the 15 percent of injured workers who are not satisfied with the WCB. This is the 15 percent of injured workers who have been denied, cut off, had their benefits limited over this time. With one fell swoop of the pen they've had benefits terminated, reduced. They don't know how they're going to pay rent, buy food, and get medication. They certainly realize that they're never going to go back to the type of employment they had before. This can be done to them, yet they don't have any way of checking out the very bonuses that those people that did that to them have. As well, these injured workers are subjected to surveillance if there's even the slightest question . . .

MR. BONNER: Surveillance.

. . . that perhaps we could use surveillance to limit their benefits. Here we have injured workers who are subjected to surveillance, and they are put into a position where they are having to scrape by. In many of these cases, Mr. Chairman, these people end up losing their wives, losing their families, losing all their possessions, losing any savings that they've had just to try and eke out a living. We have people who work as case managers, as adjudicators, as supervisors, as managers, and we have people working in surveillance that get bonuses, yet injured workers are not afforded this basic human right of the Meredith principle, and that is that because they're injured at work, they should not become a burden to themselves, to their families or friends, or to society. They cannot get the basic requirements from WCB to exist from month to month, yet we cannot provide a detailed list here of bonuses exceeding $500, which I think is quite reasonable.

So I'm in full support of this very worthwhile amendment A4, and I would certainly hope that all members in the Assembly will support this amendment. Thank you very much.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm happy to speak to this amendment A4, that's before us on the floor. This has been something that we've asked for for a long time. We waited and waited and waited for a very long five hours of debate that we've seen so far on this bill prior to this evening's work – and five hours doesn't seem like very much to us, but I know that other people feel that it's been a very long time – but lo and behold there's been no good amendment come forward. Of course, the best thing would have been if we had seen this as a change proposed in the legislation, Mr. Chairman, but perhaps that was too much to expect. We have seen instances where the government has supported amendments, and this would certainly be an act of good faith not only to all the injured workers out there but to the employers, who are paying the premiums and are therefore paying the bonuses of these people in this organization.

I have a fundamental problem with people working for an insurance company, which this in essence is, being paid bonuses to kick people out of the program. It seems obvious the kinds of problems that can be within an organization that pays bonuses to people to kick those very people that they're supposed to be supplying a service to out of the system. Definitely the incentive for the workers is to get people out and off the system. Definitely that is not what the program was intended for, and I don't think that that was the intention of the employers either, who are paying the fees. They are paying an insurance premium to take care of injured workers. They expect, therefore, administrative costs to be as low as possible. They do not expect, I believe, that their premiums go to pay bonuses to employees within the system.

So I have a real problem with the way that this whole system has been operating over the past years. From a philosophical perspective I am completely opposed to the bonuses. If they must exist, then at the very least what we can do is have openness and accountability and transparency throughout the entire process. That would do exactly what this amendment says, and that is "a report outlining bonuses exceeding $500 paid to a member of the board of directors and any employee of the Board." When? Not after the fact, as we see it appearing in schedules of salaries and benefits, but as they're occurring. That's exactly what this amendment is asking for, to amend in section 6 the proposed section 7.1(4) by adding the following after clause (b): "(b.1) a report outlining the termination benefits payable to the President." Not way after the fact once that person's long gone and likely long gone out of this province. Also "(b.2) a report outlining bonuses exceeding $500 paid to a member of the board of directors and any employee of the Board."

Openness and transparency: that's all we're asking for. That's what this government campaigns on. That's what this government says it does all the time. So put your money where your mouth is and just be open and accountable. Support the amendment, and we will see that happening. I will be the first person in this Assembly to stand up and applaud the government for having taken that direction every single time that we see that information tabled in this Legislature. I would like the minister to tell us what would be wrong with that kind of a system. I can't see anything with it, and I see it as a much better system.

I imagine at some point in the near future, when we see premiums rising again on WCB premiums to businesses, businesses are going to start to demand that kind of transparency because they want to know where their money goes and they want to know that they're getting good value for the dollar. I believe that knowing what those bonuses are is part of that good value. So I would urge all members in the Assembly to support this particular amendment, a very good and worthwhile amendment.

MR. DUNFORD: Mr. Chairman, I think we could be somewhat sympathetic toward the amendment if there was taxpayers' money involved here, but the opposition knows full well that WCB is a system entirely funded through assessments to employers. So all of this heartbreak and angst that they have over openness and transparency is already there. Now, maybe none of them are employers. Maybe none of them have ever had employees. I don't know that, but certainly they have employers within their constituency that they could be working with to access this information.

I obviously was feeling some frustration and perhaps even anger over the length of debate on A3, but now that we're into A4, Mr. Chairman, I'm gaining a great amount of confidence. What I realize now is that amongst the group across the way, they seem to be almost in full, entire agreement with what we as a government are trying to do to make a more open and accountable system as it relates to the appeal process, as it relates to something that would really help injured workers.

On the two amendments that we've been dealing with tonight, in the fact that they're based on the operations of WCB, if they want to use their two hours this way – and clearly they do – then that's fine. The Member for Calgary-Egmont and certainly myself have spoken. I know the frustration that other members on the government side are feeling about how we're not progressing toward hearing what should be done for injured workers. They're spending all of their time concerning themselves about the board and now about the CEO. I think, hon. members, that we should take this as a good sign. This is a good sign that the opposition doesn't have much by way of constructive amendments to what we are already trying to do. I think we should accept that as an endorsement of what it is.

Of course, in defeating A4, I mean, that's a matter of perhaps some concern to the member that brought it forward, but I'd like to thank the member for continuing to bring these kinds of amendments forward, because then it shows the support that he's providing us in trying to deal with injured workers.

[Motion on amendment A4 lost]

THE CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Mr. Chairman, I would like to propose an amendment to Bill 26, and I'm always pleased to stand up to the hon. minister of industrial development.

I move that Bill 26, the Workers' Compensation Amendment Act, 2002, be amended in section 19 in the proposed section 46.1 as follows: (a) by adding the following under subsection (2):

(2.1) a claimant may request the Board or the Appeals Commission to refer his or her medical issue to a medical panel, and such a request must be supported in writing by the claimant's physician.

And (b), in the proposed subsection (4) by striking out "The Board may make rules governing" and substituting "The Board and the Appeals Commission shall jointly make rules governing."

THE CHAIR: Hon. member, are you prepared to share these with the rest of the committee? This will be called amendment A5.

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

THE CHAIR: Hon. member, please proceed.

MR. MASON: Ready to rock and roll there, Mr. Chairman? Okay.

Mr. Chairman, I am proposing this amendment because I think not just me but people who follow this on the workers' side as well have made the suggestion that while the medical panels are a good idea and constitute a real improvement, the way they function is still too much under the control of the WCB. This amendment is an attempt to strengthen the independence of the medical panels, to give the workers more equality in the functioning of the medical panels, and to as well make sure that the Appeals Commission has the same authority with respect to medical panels as the WCB itself.

What we have right now is that the WCB is the gatekeeper of the medical panel. It's the WCB that calls the panel together if it doesn't agree with a medical assessment. If a client's physician has a bona fide medical opinion, the panel will be called, but it's the WCB that determines what a bona fide opinion is. As well, as I've mentioned earlier in debate, the panel is composed of a physician appointed by the worker, one by the employer, and one a physician appointed by the WCB, so that can lead to a medical panel which is stacked against the worker.

I know that the minister has talked in the past about, you know, the professional ethics of the physicians involved and how this provides protection for the worker because everybody's just going to be entirely objective. I think that if this were the case, Mr. Chairman, we would not have seen the physicians employed by the WCB in such conflict and such consistent conflict on one side of the question, in favour of denying workers' claims, which has led to other problems that we're still grappling with. So I think there's a principle, and it needs to be taken into account. That is that he who pays the piper calls the tune, and that is only partly offset by professional responsibility. I think the evidence is clear that physicians who are appointed by the WCB have taken positions which are consistent with the policy of the WCB at that time, so I'm not convinced.

But to come back to the amendment, specifically it says:

A claimant may request the Board or the Appeals Commission to refer his or her medical issue to a medical panel, and such a request must be supported in writing by the claimant's physician.

That means, on the principle the minister has outlined of professional ethics and responsibility of the physician, if that physician puts forward a position that there's a certain cause of an injury and it's work related, that needs to be taken into account, and they can then make a request in writing for a medical panel. That's both at the WCB and at the appeals level.

The second clause of the amendment says simply that "the Board and the Appeals Commission shall jointly make rules governing" the operation of medical panels. That again balances the power of the WCB, which is still unfettered in this act with respect to medical panels. It gets to make all the rules and forces a situation where the Appeals Commission can also be involved in setting the rules.

So I think those two pieces together would strengthen the act, Mr. Chairman. I would urge members on both sides of the House to support this because I believe that it is in the best interests of workers in Alberta and would strengthen the legislation and provide a fairer and more level playing field with respect to the operation of the WCB and its Appeals Commission. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre and then the hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I'm glad to see this amendment and have the opportunity to speak to it because this may answer some of the questions and concerns I had around medical panels, but then again it may not. So I have a couple of questions, and maybe the mover of the amendment, the Member for Edmonton-Highlands, can answer that.

When I look at section 19 of Bill 26, which is amending section 46, I'm not seeing the specifics that I was expecting to see. It doesn't talk about the three members that were going to be on the medical panel. It doesn't talk about them not – sorry. Let me start over. The situation we have now with the medical panels seems to be one that causes a lot of problems; I think that can be agreed upon. This needs to be changed. But when I look at what's being put forward under this section for medical panels, it isn't as thorough as I was expecting to see. So I started looking through the information that has been produced by the government in support of this act and generally in discussion, going through news releases and things.

In a news release from April 22 under a bullet it says, "Create a medical panel process to resolve differences in medical opinion that affect a worker's claim." Okay. Yes, indeed, that is what we need. I think the situation that's of most concern is where we have a medical panel, a WCB medical panel, which contradicts the medical opinion of the worker's physician or specialist, and in many cases this medical panel does it by paper. It doesn't actually interview or examine the worker. So that's what we wanted fixed. Certainly the recommendations that came out of the Review Committee of the Workers' Compensation Board Appeal Systems, chaired by Judge Samuel Friedman, was talking about a much more careful setup for this medical panel.

When I look at a backgrounder on Bill 26, on page 2 now it starts giving the sort of information that I was looking for. It says:

Where there are conflicting medical opinions, it is intended that a medical panel can be initiated by the WCB, by the Appeals Commission, or by the physician of an injured worker to get an independent, expert, consensus-based medical opinion.

Aha. Where is that in the legislation? I don't see it. It is in a backgrounder and I appreciate that, but is someone supposed to be 10 years from now waving around this backgrounder to say that this is what the government really meant, or is it intended that the specifics of this come out in regulations?

There is a pilot project running. There are performance measurements that are being submitted to the minister, and the "medical panels will be established from a list of physicians prepared and approved by the College of Physicians and Surgeons of Alberta." So this is all in the backgrounder to Bill 26, but it's not included in what's in there. Now we have an amendment. I don't see that the amendment is giving us this information or the specifics of it either.

There is an issue in here that I'm a little concerned about. When it's looking for a request that "must be supported in writing by the claimant's physician," one of the problems we've had in trying to assist constituents is that they can't get their doctor to co-operate, for whatever reason. I know that it could possibly be because the physicians are not paid to prepare letters and requests and things like this, so that tends to get put on the back burner of any physician, with all the work they have to do. I'm just wondering if by including this, had the mover anticipated that it can be difficult to get a written response from a physician? And if we're making this that the request "must be supported in writing by the claimant's physician," that could be putting a worker in a very difficult position trying to get that information. I'm a little concerned about that, so maybe the member can answer me there.

I understand the impetus behind having the Appeals Commission and the board jointly making rules, but I'm a little concerned about how cumbersome that would be and if that in fact is going to resolve where the problems are here. I'm asking this because I'm just thinking of the kinds of cases that I get in my office. I've got one case running now – I'll call him W – which is ongoing. I mean, it's a file that's an inch and a half thick of continued conflict between what his own feelings are about his condition, what his physician is saying, what specialists are saying, and what the medical panel then says in denial of benefits. There have been reinjuries in this case, which are also very difficult to track, and at times it seems like you've got battling medical opinions.

Okay. Medicine is not an exact science. Sometimes it's an art. Nonetheless, for these workers trying to get this sorted out, it can be very onerous. I think there's an underlying concern that the medical panel supplied by the WCB needs to be actually examining the worker but without putting the worker into a position where they become a ping-pong ball. They just go to this office and get examined by this person and then this person and then this person, and then everybody argues about what the correct medical diagnosis is or who should be held responsible for it.

So I guess I'm looking for a bit of an expansion of what was intended, if I could get the mover to speak to that. Having explained what I'm looking for, I don't know that this is in fact answering that. There are some things I'm interested in supporting in this amendment, but I am concerned about the request in writing, and I am also concerned about it not addressing the other problems that we're seeing with these medical panels.

Thanks, Mr. Chairman.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont.

MR. HERARD: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Just a few comments with regard to this. I think that (2.1) is essentially already there, and it could be that the hon. member has not had the opportunity to look at the background documents that the Member for Edmonton-Centre quite correctly identified. Just for the record – and this is, you know, being put together by Dr. Ohlhauser, whose job it is to bring all of the rules under which this will operate – the initiation of medical panels can be at WCB request, appeals body request, or when a medical opinion is provided by a physician that the WCB disagrees with. In your case, when you've got a physician that has an opinion and the WCB disagrees with it, well, that's a conflict of medical opinion automatically, so the physician can initiate it, the board can initiate it, or the appeal body can initiate it.

I think the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre was quite right by saying that there is essentially a pilot project going on to establish all of these processes.

The second part of the amendment is talking about the board and the Appeals Commission jointly making rules governing – I haven't been able to think through that, but the Appeals Commission is a quasi-judicial body, and I'm not sure that I can find any examples where a court gets involved with the service provider in making rules. We call that judicial activism, I think. I'm not sure that would work, but I do have a concern with respect to part 4(b), where it says: "the determination of what constitutes a difference of medical opinion for the purposes of subsection (2)."

I understand from having had a discussion with Dr. Ohlhauser that essentially how they contemplate doing this is that whenever there is a contention that there is conflict of medical opinion, it won't be decided there. It'll go to Dr. Ohlhauser's operation, and that's where it's going to be decided. So I have a feeling that this pilot project is going to work very well. I understand the hon. member's concern, but I don't think we need these amendments because they're redundant.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar on amendment A5.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much. Yes, on amendment A5. Mr. Chairman, this is an interesting amendment. It astonishes me how whenever this legislation was drafted – I consider this a correction of an oversight, and I would commend the Member for Edmonton-Highlands for bringing it forward this evening. Certainly in the Friedman report and also in the report from the hon. Member for Red Deer-South there was considerable attention paid to the role of the general practitioner, the family physician, or the attending physician in regard to an accident. In the time that I have had to look at this amendment, I think this would increase the role or hopefully increase the influence of the attending physician or the claimant's physician.

Also, I'm encouraged by the fact that since the Appeals Commission is going to be bound by the medical panel and its findings, they are going to have more of a role in outlining

- (a) the appointment of the members of a medical panel,
- (b) the determination of what constitutes a difference of medical opinion for the purposes of subsection (2), and
- (c) the practice and procedure applicable to proceedings before a medical panel.

I would at this time remind all members of this Assembly who are currently present that the Appeals Commission is bound by the medical panel. There are those who thought – and I certainly am one of them – that the medical panel is usurping the authority of the Appeals Commission, but this goes in some way to correcting that, and I would encourage all members of this Assembly to support this legislation.

We need to consider the difference of a medical opinion arising in the course of the board's evaluation of a claim for compensation under this act and where a difference of medical opinion occurs when a specialist medical opinion is refuted by a board's consultant that does not have equal medical qualifications or expertise related to the area of injury as the Appeals Commission case law requires. Now, in the course of the debate on amendment A5 if that question could be answered perhaps by the Minister of Human Resources and Employment in the time that we have left unfortunately, I would be very grateful.

However, Mr. Chairman, at this time I would encourage all members to please vote for amendment A5, as proposed by the Member for Edmonton-Highlands. Thank you.

MR. DUNFORD: Just a couple of things on amendment A5, Mr. Chairman. First of all, to congratulate the Member for Edmonton-Highlands again for the thought that has been put into the amendment and, of course, for the prenotice of the amendment. I've had this amendment in my possession now for quite a number of days, and we've been able to examine it. I want to provide the hon. member some time to speak, to perhaps close the debate on A5, so I'll be quick.

The Member for Calgary-Egmont said it I think as good as I possibly can, and that is the fact that a conflict that is in existence creates the need for the medical panel. It's quite appropriate that that would come, then, from the attending physician of the claimant or in this case of course an injured worker.

The way in which (2.1) is written is really striking at the heart of the idea, but I recognize that it perhaps wasn't as clear in my opening statements when we got into this particular area. It's the medical panel that's one of the key ingredients of course of Bill 26. As we all know, it's a difference of a medical opinion that has led to a lot of the injured worker files that we as MLAs all have on our desks. So I'm encouraging members of the Assembly that (2.1) is not necessary and that it be defeated.

On the second one the reason that we wouldn't want the Appeals Commission making the rules is again as the Member for Calgary-Egmont had indicated, but also, hon. member, we're trying to get the conflicting medical opinion done with before it even goes to the appeal. Now, we have to provide provisions, as we're doing in the pilot project, for the Appeals Commission to call a panel, but if we can be successful in having an operation where the conflicting medical evidence is handled before the claimant moves on to the Appeals Commission, we in fact then, I think by definition will have negated the need for many appeal hearings that we currently are involved in.

So I'd encourage all hon. members to defeat A5.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman, and thanks to the hon. minister and the hon. members who have raised issues with respect to this. I just want to indicate, first of all, to Calgary-Egmont that it's not the background documents or the administration or the policies outside the act that we're debating, because those can change very easily. We need to look at the legislation specifically, and it's the wording of the legislation that we need to be concerned with. So I appreciate what he is saying, but I don't think it affects the amendment particularly.

To reiterate, I guess, or just to conclude on the reasons for this, section (2.1) – and I don't believe it is redundant – makes it clear that the claimant has the right to “request the Board or the Appeals Commission” – and that's an important piece – “to refer his or her medical issue to a medical panel,” and then that has to be supported by the claimant's physician.

THE CHAIR: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, but pursuant to Government Motion 27, agreed to May 13, 2002, after two hours of debate all questions must be decided to conclude debate on Bill 26, Workers' Compensation Amendment Act, 2002.

[Motion on amendment A5 lost]

[The clauses of Bill 26 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

THE CHAIR: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

SOME HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE CHAIR: Opposed?

SOME HON. MEMBERS: No.

THE CHAIR: Carried.

[The voice vote indicated that the request to report Bill 26 carried]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 11:30 p.m.]

[Ten minutes having elapsed, the committee divided]

Third Reading

Bill 26
Workers' Compensation Amendment Act, 2002

MR. DUNFORD: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to thank everyone for the participation up to this point, and I'd like to move third reading of Bill 26.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise tonight to speak to Bill 26, the Workers' Compensation Amendment Act. You know, in conclusion as we get into third, we have to talk now about what this bill is going to do as it gets implemented, whether or not it's going to work, whether or not it's going to do what we set out to achieve with it. I think the big issues that we see in it still have to do with how the medical panels get struck, how they operate, whether or not they truly are independent as true mechanisms to deal with kind of a consensus-building process so that both the injured worker and the employer and the process work. I think that there's still really some question in the bill about whether or not the injured workers will have a fair hearing through the process of the medical panel, whether or not they will be able to bring out fully all of the issues that are appropriate as they seek to have a solution.

I guess the main thing here is that we have to make sure that the opinions that are brought in are intended to build a consensus and that they don't even have a perception of being biased one way or the other in the context of how the material that is presented can be heard. I think there seems to be a sense right now that we're going to have to see how this works, because in the context of whether or not the injured worker's family physician or primary physician is going to have the input that's appropriate still needs to be looked at.

I guess the thing that was expected a lot in Bill 26, as we worked up to its introduction and process through the House, was whether or not there was going to be a resolution process in it for the long-standing claims. What we see is that there's no really easy solution to those that's going to be proposed by this. We still get to wait to see how they're going to be dealt with, yet this was one of the most critical issues that precipitated the whole review of the WCB, to see whether or not it was working. I think you would expect that with the amount of review that they went through and the amount of input that was there to look at what happened and how these cases came to be long-standing, unresolved cases, there should have been a real mechanism that could have been developed to really look at these cases.

If the issue was one about who pays and who doesn't, I think it's quite appropriate that we should be looking at the fact that in the process something fell through so that it didn't actually work.

Maybe instead of having these long-standing claims fall back to the current employers as a financial penalty, we should be looking possibly at the idea, because it was a process that was put in place, because it was the process that was bad and not the judgment of either the employer or the employee, of relieving the employers from that and maybe dealing with a taxpayer support for that long-standing part of it. You know, these are the kind of things that would look at it from the point of view: when everybody works to the best of their ability with the rules that are in place, how do you go back and review those processes when you find out that the process was at fault, not necessarily any of the participants in it?

I think that this is something that we should really make an effort to move quickly on so that the injured workers that are still facing uncertainty, still facing more time before they find out where their case is going can actually get a sense that something is being done for them. We want to make sure that, you know, we can move on. If the new processes that we're putting in place here are going to be given a chance to work, they can't be biased or in any way influenced or kind of given a bad environment to work in if these other claims are still going on, because what we'll have is the public perceiving some of the long-standing claims – they'll think of it as being a new claim. They'll think of it as being something different. We need to work that out so that we can get that out of the way and see if this new process actually does work.

I think that we really need to review critically and monitor critically whether or not the new medical panels will really provide that degree of objectivity and impartiality that's intended. We don't want the WCB to have the kind of absolute power that it had under the old processes, where they can just in effect continue through until their solution is the one that comes to the front. That's not a fair hearing for anybody involved, neither the injured worker nor the employers. So we need to make sure that that works out okay.

I guess one of the other things that we have to look at is basically whether or not the decision-making processes in the WCB are going to be in a sense improved. That was another one of the objectives that we were setting out to achieve here. If that is going to work, if this is going to develop and grow and be monitored, then we'll have to make sure that the decision-making processes through the board, through the Appeals Commission, that the independence there really works to facilitate quick resolution of the cases and resolution that can be accepted on both sides.

When I spoke the other day, Mr. Speaker, I made a comment to the fact that we have to start looking at some of the issues that come up as we go through these and deal especially with the medical opinion part about how we deal with the tendency that we've seen with the WCB lately to have every injury blamed on a pre-existing condition. If that's the case, then how are we going to deal with that in the context of employment offers and employment options? If we hire an employee in good faith, then we have to assume that that employee is acting in good faith and believing that they are able to carry out that activity. It's not appropriate for us then to go back through a WCB process and say: well, you shouldn't have taken the job in the first place. That doesn't appear to be an appropriate response. If we actually take someone on, we take them on in the condition they take the employment. We shouldn't be falling back on pre-existing conditions as a means of getting out in effect of giving them coverage under an injury. I guess as we move through the whole process, we have to make sure that it does work.

The annual meetings now are going to have to be held in the open on a regular basis. We'll see whether or not that does give the WCB a more open perception. I guess, Mr. Speaker, we've all seen meetings where you can come and have good debate. Other meetings you can go to and it's in effect a presentation. In other words, the board or the CEO stands at the front, gives you a report, and the meeting's over. There's no debate, no feedback, no interaction. So it's going to be a matter of time until we see how interactive and how informative those annual meetings can be.

The other part of the accountability that we were seeking here was the role of the Auditor General. I think this will bring out some really good aspects of a review and an accountability practice within the WCB, because the Auditor General is effectively the watchdog over all government agencies. So, you know, it would in effect create some consistency in measuring process and in measuring accountability so that we can look at it relative to other agencies or other departments within the government and see whether or not this kind of action and activity that goes on under the WCB really gives a sense of any kind of improved accountability.

The final area that I had on my notes that we were trying to talk about in terms of getting some improvement here in the context of the material was how we develop performance measures for the WCB and whether or not that in effect is going to be useful in measuring how they deal with injured workers. I guess to the minister I would suggest that some of the things we need to look at here are, you know, the degree to which we get people back to work, the speed with which we get them back to work, and the completeness with which we get them back to work. It doesn't do a worker much good to go back to work and two days later have a relapse or a supplementary injury resulting from a weakness that was still there from the previous injury. So it is important that we look at that kind of performance measure and that we have some benchmarks in terms of both the effectiveness from the employers' point of view in terms of getting their employees back with minimal disruption, but also the most important one has to be the complete recovery of that injured worker in the sense that they're back into a productive employment situation. If it isn't the job that they were injured in, then there had better be performance measures in there that include looking at retraining options, alternative employment options, light-duty options, all of the different aspects that come about with trying to make sure that the injured workers do get back into a sense of contribution and self-control over their life.

That's the whole purpose of employment. Out of all the WCB claimants that I've had in my office in the last nine years, Mr. Speaker, I don't recall one of them being in there not wanting fair treatment, not wanting to be an active participant, not wanting to be able to go back to work. That's just the nature of the people in this province: they want to feel part of it. So we've got to make sure that they do get a chance to get back into some kind of a productive activity. In the individual and the infrequent cases when disability is permanent, when disability is to the extent that re-employment or retraining is not possible, then we have to make sure that the workers are treated with the dignity that they need to have and that they deserve to have in the context of having contributed and having been injured in that contribution, because they still have been an important part of our province and an important part of what we are as a society. So, you know, we don't want to just kind of shuffle them off to a back room and forget about them. They have to be able to live with a degree of dignity and sense of contribution. That's part of what we want to make sure these processes provide to them. So as we go through that, we need to look at it for all of these kinds of issues.

I guess the other aspect of the accountability is where we're looking at the increased role for the monitors, the review agents, the investigators, to see whether or not any fraud is occurring on either side. You know, it's an unfortunate part of any kind of an operation, but I think it's something that we need to look at and make sure that there is a relationship between the effort and the dollars spent on that and the incidents of real abuse of the WCB system. It would be interesting to see if there was any information out there that shows the extent to which abuse of the system is ongoing and whether or not additional resources as suggested by the bill will really contribute to a better system. You know, when I asked for it earlier, there was nothing provided that said that this is the degree to which we need to have additional investigative services because this is the number of cases that we know are going on out there or that we suspect are going on out there that don't have proper monitoring and where there could be abuse. If that's the case, then what we've got to do is make sure that there are, I guess, good judgments made as to whether or not those resources are being used properly or being used wisely.

I think the idea that we're out there looking over the shoulder of everybody just to make sure that they're following the rules is a little bit severe in the context of the perception of the trust that's implied between this kind of a self-insurance type of system, where it's put in place supposedly for the well-being of everybody, the cost reduction of everybody. To assume that individuals are going to be taking advantage of it would not, I think, be appropriate. So I guess it boils over to where we're going to go with the trust that we build up in this whole process. As we move through and look at some of the other issues that come up, we need to make sure that we end up not pushing people into a paranoia in the context of, you know, somebody always going to be looking over their shoulders.

But if we follow through, the main thing that we have to look at is that the medical appeal panels have to be there. I think we're always going to have trouble with conflicting information. Mr. Speaker, our basic assumption in our health care system is that the individual and their family physician and associated specialists have played the central role in our health care systems. We have to make sure that that same trust and same health delivery model is kept in place as we move through the process of trying to resolve both the long-standing claims and any new claims that go through to the medical review, because what we want to do is make sure that in effect there's no sense of one side having more power than the other, especially not for the board.

We had amendments in committee that looked at how the bonus structure applies and whether or not it should apply and how it should be reported. I think this is something that we still need to look more seriously at because the idea of the objective of the WCB should be in the context of fair treatment of the employee, the injured worker, getting them back to work and not having an excessive cost for the employer. But if we're going to be creating bonuses based on the quickness or the speed with which a case is resolved or the number of cases that are cleared, what we're doing is that that whole bonus structure is predicated on the idea that we can basically short-circuit or shorten the process time to get somebody back healthy, get them back to productive work. That should be the basis of measuring any kind of a bonus system instead of just the number of cases that you close or the number of cases that you're operating.

I think this is the kind of system that if there has to be one, that's where we should be going with it instead of this process that's out there right now. It's hard to imagine how a bonus system to get people off, get them out of the active file group is consistent with the idea that somebody should be back to work in a productive way, in a quick way. I guess the only way you could do that is in a long-after-the-fact process: make sure that if there are going to be bonuses, they're based on if that person is back to work and still working, say, a year after. Is that person back to work in a relative time span compared to other individuals with similar kinds of injuries?

I'm not so sure that with the basic self-insurance or co-insurance process that we had in place for the WCB, bonus systems really are functional. They don't work in that kind of a competitive model because we're not dealing here with looking at what are competitive economic processes; we're looking at a service model. We need to have the bonuses built around the delivery of that service, again if we really have to have those bonuses in the first place.

As we look through it, I think the main thing is to make sure that as we move into the next phase of the WCB under this new act, the processes are going to work, that we end up making sure that we carry through with the promises of ongoing solution that have been made to both the people of the province and the injured workers that, you know, this process doesn't stop with the passage of this bill and the implementation of this bill. This process has to be a continual dialogue between the employers, the workers, the injured workers, and the board, because they are the administrative unit that overlooks it.

I guess if we see anything in the bill that really doesn't move in the right direction with the WCB, it's that unless you can interpret it into some things that I haven't been able to see, there doesn't appear to be any new mandate for the WCB that's associated with facilitation. It still is a closed shop. It still is a top-down process. They still have the option to make sure that the appeals panel effectively gets their opinion, the process of requiring that the appeal panel hears the medical evidence from the WCB, yet the bill doesn't have the same requirement that they have to hear the medical information from the injured worker's panel of doctors. We've got to make sure there's a perceived balance in it and that it works out so that there are some processes that can come together.

Mr. Speaker, I think that kind of covers the points that I wanted to bring up at the end of this bill. We need to make sure that, as I said, we don't let it stop here. There are still a lot of things that are outstanding. There are still a lot of things that the minister has promised us are in development or will be improved, so we've got to make sure that we have a kind of commitment from the minister that these processes and this progress will be actively reported to this Legislature, the people of Alberta, the injured workers of Alberta, and the employees of Alberta. That's how this system will continue to grow and continue to actually carry through the intent that was expected to be covered by this bill, which in effect wasn't covered by the bill in a lot of cases because there were a lot of areas where people were expecting to see something in the bill and it didn't end up being fully or evenly partially covered in it.

This kind of ongoing dialogue needs to be kept in place, some kind of monitoring that goes beyond just an internal review by the WCB. The minister needs to continue to do that kind of review so that Albertans, especially injured workers, have a chance to get their input to the minister so that they can feel that if there are still processes that haven't been fully resolved, they can be worked on. You know, I hope that we don't have to wait as long for another amendment act as we did for this one, because it just builds up both a caseload and a frustration level. I don't think that any of us want that at this point, when we're trying to make a system here that works.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I'll take my seat and let someone else comment.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd move that we adjourn debate on Bill 26.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Time Allocation on Bill 26

28. Mr. Hancock moved:

Be it resolved that when an adjourned debate on third reading of Bill 26, Workers' Compensation Amendment Act, 2002, is resumed, not more than two hours shall be allotted to any further consideration at this stage of the bill, at which time every question necessary for the disposal of this stage of the bill shall be put forthwith.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the brief time that's allotted to speak to the motion, I would just indicate, as I did earlier today, that up until the time we commenced discussion in Committee of the Whole, we had spent five hours on the bill. We've now spent another two hours and 45 minutes on the bill. It is an important bill. We've heard a lot of comment in the House. But it's clear, and it's been made clear to me as House leader that if the bill was to be passed in a reasonable time frame without further delay, time allocation would be necessary.

Time allocation is an appropriate methodology. In discussion on the moving of time allocation in Committee of the Whole I might say that members of the opposition, either in speaking to it or yelling about it – I don't remember which – had indicated that this government has a reputation for using time allocation, or closure as they put it inappropriately, more than any other government. The fact of the matter is that time allocation and closure both are used far more frequently in the federal House by their Liberal cousins than ever has been done here. Time allocation, however, does have its place, and its place is in order to deal with a matter which is clearly not going to come out of committee because the opposition, in doing their job, brings forward amendment after amendment and clearly with the indication of delaying or not allowing the debate to close. That was clearly the case in committee.

Now we're in third reading. Two hours in third reading is more than enough time to allow every member of the opposition to speak, but it does not allow for amendments such as a hoist amendment or a deferral or referral to committee, which would be only delay tactics in any event. Therefore, to prevent those sorts of tactics taking place, I'm taking the opportunity to move the motion now.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar in the five minutes.

MR. MacDONALD: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Again I have to express my disappointment and my dismay. This closure motion – there are so many issues left that have not been discussed regarding Bill 26, and this is the forum where they should be discussed. There are so many outstanding questions.

When we think of what is not going to be discussed, it certainly would come to this member's mind that the definition of a material change, which is very important whenever one considers that the special investigative unit of the WCB can issue a penalty because someone, an injured worker perhaps, failed to inform the board of a material change – we're not going to have an opportunity to discuss that with this closure motion. We're certainly not going to have the opportunity to discuss how much discretionary power we are now giving the board of directors of the WCB. We are not going to be able to discuss in detail the termination of the rate benefit stabilization fund and allow the WCB to plead poverty in relation to the issues put forward for and on behalf of injured workers.

There are so many issues that we're not going to have the opportunity to discuss. Meanwhile, WCB premiums are going through the roof. There is no one – and the hon. minister spoke earlier about people not consulting with the office of the Human Resources and Employment minister. However, all the questions that were asked in second reading have not been answered by this minister. Some of those questions are relating to the premiums and the increases in premiums. How is Alberta business to operate with ever increasing WCB premiums?

The definition of a worker: who is going to clarify that? There were questions expressed, but there were certainly no answers. There is no chance now of getting any answers.

There's the issue of the subsidization of Alberta companies that are going abroad. Who is to pay for those WCB premiums? Are they going to be paid for by the small businesses of this province, or how is it going to work?

All these questions were asked, but there are no answers from this government. All this government can do is invoke closure and try to pretend again that it is a silk glove, and in reality it's a silk glove over an iron fist. There is a large majority in this Assembly. This debate on this bill allows the opposition an expression, and in a democracy they are entitled to that expression. All members are. There were a lot of stakeholder meetings. Certainly this hon. member was not invited. But this forum, this Assembly, is where every member can express their view on this bill.

To put a time limit on this bill when there is so much currently wrong with the WCB and to allow the special investigative unit sweeping powers, powers to fine – there is no guarantee that due process will or can be followed. It's wrong to suggest that the administrative penalties are just for employers, because in section 147 and in section 151 they're also for employees. I don't think it is reflective of Alberta or the intentions of its people for an outfit such as the WCB to have this wide, sweeping discretionary power, and that's to set their own laws and set their own penalties. I will be very surprised if this over the course of time stands up in court.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The time is up.

MR. MASON: I would request unanimous consent to have five minutes as well.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: All right. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands is requesting five minutes on the motion. This requires unanimous consent.

[Unanimous consent granted]

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: You have it, hon. member. [some applause]

MR. MASON: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, but I don't think they're going to be thumping when I'm finished.

12:20

AN HON. MEMBER: We'll all be sleeping.

MR. MASON: I don't think they'll be sleeping either.

Mr. Speaker, there is clearly a difference of approach here between the New Democrat opposition and the Liberal opposition about how to deal with this bill. I happen to think that there is some merit to this bill, although I'm not going to be supporting it in third reading because I think it fails to deliver the goods. The Liberal opposition has taken a different approach and is using a different set of tactics. The fact of the matter remains that this motion by the Government House Leader is completely uncalled for. If the Liberal opposition, if the New Democrat opposition, if, heaven forbid, some members of the government caucus wish to make amendments and wish to talk on this bill, there is no reason – we were told at the outset by the Government House Leader that he expected this session to last until the first week of June. Now, some of us are not quite that naive, but the fact remains that there is a great deal of time left in the anticipated schedule of this session of the Legislature to hear every single amendment and to hear every word, even if some of those amendments might be frivolous and vexatious. What is that? In a democracy what is that? Is that such a terrible thing to have to suffer for democracy?

This government double-shifts its Legislature so that it can push things through faster than many, many Legislatures in this country. We sit fewer days than all but a few Legislatures in this country, and I can't believe that in a province as vigorous as Alberta, as strong and as developing – thanks more to oil and gas than to the policies of this government, I might say – we have a Legislative Assembly that uses closure so often, that uses time allocation, that has to be out so that everybody can be back to their constituencies and out to the cottage for the weekend instead of debating what needs to happen in this House.

I think it's a shame that the government is using closure. We were afraid of this when these new rules were brought in. We were afraid that it would be altogether too easy for the government to make use of these elements of legislation, and it's coming to pass. It's so easy for them to put in time allocation. Oh, you've got two hours. We spent five hours debating this bill. Well, you know, the workers had to camp out. The workers had to go on hunger strikes. They had to force the government to deal with it. We have a bill that would take some steps in the right direction but clearly is not going to address all of those concerns that those workers fought for years for, and this government wants to deal with it in seven or eight or nine hours. Well, I'm sorry. It's not enough. If opposition members want to introduce amendments – there's no excuse for this. There's no excuse.

I would like to close, Mr. Speaker, by thanking the Assembly for giving me unanimous consent to say what I had to say. Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Hon. members, having heard the motion as proposed by the hon. Government House Leader, does the Assembly agree with Motion 28?

[The voice vote indicated that Government Motion 28 carried]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 12:24 a.m.]

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I want to rise to speak to Bill 26 on third reading and indicate that I'm disappointed. Much was promised with this bill; somewhat less has actually been delivered. There are some things that it does that are very positive. It creates I think an independent Appeals Commission. It sets it apart. It will not be subject, as it was in the past, to the dictate of the WCB. It will report to the minister. So it will be structurally independent, and I think that's a positive thing. There are going to be public meetings of the WCB and the Appeals Commission, and I think that's positive as far as it goes. It does allow people who have a concern or a grievance with the WCB to come and at least watch the WCB and listen to them and hopefully raise some concerns.

Third Reading

Bill 26
Workers' Compensation Amendment Act, 2002

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, this is inevitably on its path to becoming law, and I genuinely believe that the minister has the best interests of workers and of employers at heart. I think what we're looking at is a bill that is a result of compromise and debate and give-and-take, and unfortunately it's pretty obvious that some of us aren't fully satisfied with the results here, but it is what it is. It's going to be law, and we're going to have to live with it, and the person who has to make it work ultimately is the minister.

Tonight I was visited by an injured worker, a man whose life for 25 years has been profoundly damaged and permanently derailed by a fall during some construction work. This is a man who feels that justice has not been done under the Workers' Compensation Board to this point. He's had a long, long string of frustrations and failures, of denied medical appeals, of tests and tests and tests, of lawyers helping him out, and he is desperate. He is desperate, and there are dozens, probably hundreds of people like him in this province. Ultimately, they are now looking to the minister to help them as they struggle to survive, and in some cases I worry they actually lose the will to survive.

So when we look for example at part 8.1, "long-standing contentious matters," and I see so much of that section, as I understand it, under regulations and therefore so much directly in the hands and the decisions of the minister, then I have to do nothing less, I guess, than plead with the minister to take these cases seriously, to consider what he holds in his hands as he weighs out what goes into these regulations. It is literally people's lives. It is families, it is bank accounts, it is dreams, and those are his to hold, to make, or to destroy.

As I go through this file, there is test after test at the Misericordia community hospital and health centre, lawyers' letters, Alberta Mental Health Board, all kinds of testament to how this man has suffered and how he deserves another break.

So I leave it with the minister. Take these issues to heart. Stand up to the people who do not want these workers treated the way they should be treated. Justice should be done, and it lies in your hands.

Thank you.

It creates medical panels that create the opportunity at least of resolving some of the issues that have arisen repeatedly over and over again where there are disputes between an injured worker's physician and the paid physicians of the WCB who found, in my view as a matter of policy, pre-existing conditions and injuries as a way of reducing the financial drain on the WCB in order to protect employers' premiums. I think this is one of the major mechanisms, one of the most important ways in which the serious issue of long-standing appeals has arisen.

The bill also provides for the oversight of the Auditor General, and I think that is a positive thing and may well give the Legislature at least some additional insight into the operations and some increased accountability.

The bill is deficient as well. The bill fails to give enough teeth and true independence to the Appeals Commission. In some ways it remains subordinate to or at least lesser than the WCB in key areas. It doesn't have the same authority with respect to the rules under which the medical panels operate, for one thing. The public meetings are fine, Mr. Speaker, but in lots of ways they're window dressing too, because obviously they're just an opportunity to provide some exchange between the WCB and people that may have an interest in it. Obviously the board will continue to meet however often and will be able to make decisions in private, and that's where the decision-making of the WCB lies, not in the public meetings, which are simply a reporting mechanism. So they're good as far as they go, but we shouldn't assume that they really mean that the WCB is going to be accountable to the public unless the WCB wants to be accountable.

I think the problem remains of the model that's been chosen, not chosen by this minister but chosen some time ago, of a fairly independent body in which the accountability is as much to the people who pay the bills as it is to the government. We have seen what I consider to be abuses of that power, and it's not good enough to say that it also occurs in other provinces where they have similar structures. The problems arise because of the structure that's chosen, and they'll arise in any political jurisdiction if you pick a particular model or structure that removes public accountability for the WCB. Because it's not taxpayers' money supposedly, you will get the same kind of thing as we've seen: inflated salaries, inflated severance, and not enough attention to the worker.

The medical panels that have been set up are still dominated in many respects by the board of the WCB, which remains the gatekeeper and sets the rules under which they operate and under which they are called, and we have not leveled the playing field in that area, as much as it is a step forward, Mr. Speaker.

The biggest disappointment of all with the act and the area where it has most clearly failed to deliver the goods is on the question of the onetime tribunals which were proposed and endorsed as well by the minister. I guess the minister ran out of time in attempting to get stakeholder consensus on this issue. I don't know if he's ever going to get full consensus from the stakeholders. But the fact remains that these injuries occurred, and if in fact the tribunals find that they were work-related injuries and that people didn't receive what they were entitled to or received less than they were entitled to, then it is the responsibility of the employers to pay that. The government must simply express that position clearly, without naively expecting that businesses are automatically going to buy into it. There needs to be the political will to enforce that solution. Particularly this last issue, the failure to deal in the legislation with a solution to the onetime issues of the contentious and long-term cases, is the reason that I can't support the bill. That is the deal breaker, I think, as far as we are concerned.

I want to say, though, that in terms of working on this bill with the minister, I do recognize when someone is trying to do the right thing, and I believe that this minister is trying to do the right thing. I hope that ultimately when the cabinet deals with the onetime cases, the onetime tribunals in the last section of the act, that delegates the authority to resolve it to the cabinet, in fact a good solution is found, but I think it's going to require that the government simply must work out the best possible solution and bring it forward. I wish that they had done it before the bill came before the Assembly. I wish the minister luck in resolving that issue. I'm sorry that I cannot support the legislation, because I think a considerable amount of effort went into it, and most of that effort has been in the right direction, as far as I'm concerned, Mr. Speaker. I hope that it does provide at least a significant step forward for workers in this province and hope that that does come to pass.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Unfortunately we are already at third reading of Bill 26, and even more unfortunate than that, we are now under the hammer of time allocation. It's very unfortunate that this government felt that they had to take the heavy-handed tactics of time allocation. If we work out the numbers, what does it look like is the maximum amount of time that we could have spoken to this bill? If everybody took their full 15 minutes, which second speakers get, and everybody had the full five minutes of questions and answers like they could have had at third reading, the very maximum amount of time that we could have been on this bill in third reading is another five hours. That's one more day, afternoon, evening sitting, and it's over with. Then within the legislative process, according to the Standing Orders that we have in this Assembly, it would have been done. Would that even have occurred, Mr. Speaker? That would have meant that everybody took their turn to speak. A hoist amendment was brought in. We all spoke again. Five hours maximum time.

What have we seen so far? We've seen two speakers now in third reading who haven't used the maximum amount of time available to them and no questions and answers. So would it be going the full five hours? No. Absolutely not. For sure not with this government in charge, because now we're limited to the 120 minutes plus the approximately 27 minutes that our leader spoke to this bill. That is absolutely shameful when we talk about a bill that affects so many people's lives, that so many people have a legitimate interest in seeing being the best possible bill to deal with workers' compensation issues.

When we take a look at this legislation now really in the final moments before it becomes law, can we really answer the basic questions, the concerns, and the problems that people have brought forward to us? I would say no, that the outstanding issues haven't been resolved. There have been cases in this Legislature where the government has brought in legislation that could be improved with amendments, and they've accepted them and gone forward. Some of the amendments that we've seen brought forward in this Legislature have been legitimate amendments that have dealt with concerns, particularly of injured workers. Injured workers have brought forward concerns and organizations who work on behalf of injured workers have brought forward those concerns to us. Yet the government dismissed them as being not substantive and is not going forward on any of them to make the legislation that is still flawed – it could have made it better, but that's not the choice that the government makes.

I have to give full credit to the minister. He has worked very hard on this, and he's done some good work on this bill. There are no two ways about it. I really respect the fact that he's been in this Assembly, that he's been up answering questions and trying to explain his perspective on the issues. Sometimes I've agreed with what he's said, sometimes I haven't, but he has put in a big effort on this particular bill and I think needs to be recognized for that. [some applause] Well, it's true. You can clap for that, because he has worked hard on this legislation.

Unfortunately, it's not going to be as good as we could have hoped. Does it actually address the ultimate concern that I have with all of those injured workers that I see in my office who expected the system to protect them once they got injured and who for a variety of reasons were virtually abandoned by the system in most cases, with the people who come in who are so frustrated, who are absolutely at the end of their rope, often who are financially destitute or certainly in a much less stable financial situation than they expected to find themselves in even after being injured? Will this solve those problems, those long-standing files of people who have been seriously injured? Are they going to get the treatment now that they deserve to get from the WCB? The answer is still, I believe, unfortunately no.

I'm not satisfied with the way the appeal panels will be run. We have all kinds of documentation coming in to us from a variety of sources that the medical panels and the way that they're going to be implemented is still significantly flawed.

We have more information on the secret police, Mr. Speaker. It's unfortunate that the memo that was sent to my colleague from Edmonton-Gold Bar and CCed to the minister wasn't also sent to the Government House Leader, because it clearly outlines that there is a secret police force within the WCB, as we had talked about. [interjection] Yes. Absolutely. He and I got into some debate on this bill on a previous night when he said to prove it, and now the proof is here. They in fact sent the memo to all of us.

Am I satisfied that this legislation ensures that those people that work in this department are working in the best interests of injured workers? The answer to that is still an unqualified no. When we even see the information that they sent forward here, Mr. Speaker, and which we haven't really had, I don't believe, adequate debate in this Assembly on, they state that "there is no doubt that most claimants and employers are honest and forthcoming, with only a small number of people that engage in fraudulent activity." That statement is true. My colleague from Edmonton-Gold Bar tells me that less than one-tenth of 1 percent of the WCB claims are fraudulent, yet I know in my own constituency from workers who have come into my office that more than that percentage just in my own constituency have been subject to investigation by this particular unit.

They go on to say that all SIU members, special investigations unit members, "are duly registered peace officers under the Police Act and subject to its requirements." Secret police, Mr. Speaker. They do a public relations aspect to their work. They investigate the employers as well as the employees. They say, "There is nothing secret about this unit, although we do try to protect the privacy of everyone and to not unduly embarrass people caught in fraudulent behaviour."

Then they do go on to say that they do perform surveillance activities, so I think that's the part of the secret police that we were talking about. They say that their investigations that are commenced "must pass the legal test of 'reasonable and probable grounds' first and the members of the unit have access to legal advice and the Crown Prosecutor's office if any issue is in doubt." What qualifies, then, Mr. Speaker, as reasonable and probable grounds? They talk about: "All persons who have the opportunity to defraud the Accident Fund are subject to investigation by the SIU and this includes workers, employers and service-providers such as medical practitioners." So in fact every single person that has anything to do with WCB meets the test of reasonable and probable grounds. I think it's very important that Albertans know that this is part of the mandate and that in fact you have a high likelihood, not a low likelihood, of being followed by private investigators and surveilled by this particular department if you place a WCB claim or if you in fact are registered as an employer that pays WCB funds. I don't think people know that, and I think it's important that that be brought out here.

AN HON. MEMBER: The secret is out now.

MS CARLSON: Yes. It certainly is.

They say that they saved the fund $11 million last year, and that's very good. I'd like to see a breakdown of that, Mr. Speaker. We haven't had the time in this Assembly to get that kind of information. They say that they've saved it, but what did they cost the system? We don't see that breakdown either, so I think that that information should be available. I think employers and workers need to know the costs of running this surveillance team and other aspects of the SIU's job description as they lay it out here. That's an issue that's unresolved as we come to the vote on this particular legislation that I think hasn't been fully or adequately discussed.

We have a number of questions that are still outstanding at this time, and I would like to just address a few of those. Most of these questions that I will be addressing come from information provided by Kevin Becker of Lethbridge. He sent the information to the minister and to members of the Assembly, telling in his opening comments here a review of when he first asked for information and when he received information back from the department. He states here:

Although we expressed our concerns to you in detailed correspondence dated January 29, 2002 it was not until today, April 24, 2002 that I received a response from your office beyond your cursory correspondence acknowledging the receipt of said document and the referral of this document to your department.

So we have February, March, and most of April just to get some responses back.

The department clearly feels that that's a reasonable time line, yet the government does not feel that spending 10 hours in debate on this particular bill is reasonable to do. So, Mr. Speaker, there is something wrong with that particular kind of time allocation as we see it being imposed here in this Legislature. If it's okay to spend nearly three months to respond to correspondence, then it should be okay to spend at least 10 hours of debate on a bill that is substantive and does in fact affect many people's lives.

One of the questions still outstanding is:

Will the Government of Alberta amend this draft legislation removing the 46.1(5) which stipulates that medical panel findings are binding on all parties and therefore not open to appeal?

This, as I have heard in debate, is probably the biggest outstanding issue that hasn't been adequately addressed.

Another one.

Will the Alberta Government ensure that the claimant's treating physicians will have the right to provide input to and appear before the WCB medical panels and that this right will not be subject to the medical panel chair's sole discretion?

A very good question, one that we've often had to deal with in our office in dealing with these claims.

Will the Government of Alberta ensure that the claimant's health-care providers who agree to participate in or provide input to WCB medical panels will be afforded appropriate remuneration?

Also a very good question.

There are many more questions here that are still outstanding. My time is running short. I'll just go through a couple more of them.

If a claimant is wrongfully denied tomorrow and they appear before the tribunal and are successful in a further appeal a year later, are they any less entitled to the retroactive benefits they would have received the year prior having received a fair and impartial hearing at the onset?

A lot of it is the money in this case because these people often are unable to find reasonable or gainful employment after being hurt. This appeal process is onerous. Getting the settlements is an onerous task and puts a great deal of hardship on families.

Will the Government of Alberta consider legislation that allows claimants the choice to request a review by the WCB Board of Directors under section 8(7) as well as the right to proceed to the Alberta Court of Appeal?

It's been touched on by the minister, as I hear it, but hasn't been adequately addressed, as I can see.

"Who will be responsible for hiring WCB appeals advisors?" A very good question and one that's been talked about here by my colleague from Edmonton-Gold Bar extensively.

Fully another four pages of questions and information and another two pages of recommendations reported as being implemented that this person has concerns about, stating that they're not evidenced as being practised at this particular time.

At the end of the day, Mr. Speaker, can I go back to my constituency office and look these injured workers in the eye, not fraudulent injured workers but legitimate injured workers, and say that this bill is going to substantially improve how injured workers in this province are treated? Unfortunately, I can't, and that is really, really unfortunate in this particular case. In some cases I'll be able to tell them that things will have improved. Overall do I believe that injured workers in this province are going to be better off tomorrow than they were today? The answer to that is: not substantially.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to have the opportunity in third reading of Bill 26, the Workers' Compensation Amendment Act, 2002, to review the bill in its final form after the kind of shaping that's gone on in previous stages. Of course, unfortunately there hasn't been much formal shaping of the bill with the rejection of the amendments, but there has been I think much public shaping of the bill, just as there was a public perception of the WCB that extended far beyond those who had direct involvement with the organization. There is a shaping of the bill, and I think that if we at third reading go back and look at some of the principles and what that shaping seems to have done with respect to those principles, it will give us a better idea of how the bill may actually operate in practice.

There are a number of principles embedded in the bill. I think one of the paramount ones was that the WCB had to be made more accountable. That has dominated the activity of government, the two committees that reported, and the kinds of presentations that were made to them was this whole notion that the board had to be more accountable both to employers and to injured workers. There are a number of provisions in the bill that have actively worked to try to support that principle. The involvement of the Auditor General in overseeing the work of the board and the Appeals Commission is part of this accountability. Much of it has yet to be developed, and we heard the minister comment on this in Committee of the Whole.

One of the basic concerns in terms of the accountability is some assurance of fairness. Fairness I guess has been at the heart of most of the controversy surrounding the board, and it is certainly for workers who appear at our office an overriding major concern. The charge has been that they weren't dealt with fairly and their claims weren't dealt with fairly. There are going to be performance measures developed, and the ones developed surrounding fairness I think are going to be some of the most important.

There is a concern about the timeliness of decisions, and the bill tries to in part address that, but again there are going to be some more measures developed, and they'll add to the kind of accountability that I think people expect.

There's a concern about the financial stability. Again, there'll be some performance measures developed in that area that will help the accountability concerns.

The concerns about returning injured workers to their jobs and how that can be tracked and how that can be expedited I think sets up another set of performance objectives. One of the major concerns is this whole business of communication. The myths that surround WCB and its operations have to be almost as numerous as the complaints, so the kind of communication that's developed and the kind of standards that are set for those communications I think are going to be important. So a major thrust to the bill and a major concern is making the WCB more accountable. If we're asking how the debate has shaped that principle, I think for a good part in many ways there is more accountability under Bill 26 than what there was previous and I think that in some sections it has satisfied concerns about accountability, but it is a work in progress, as I indicated and as the minister has indicated.

A second principle that seems to be very important in the bill is balancing. There must be a balance between the interests of workers and the interests of employers, and that's really a very, very difficult balance to achieve. In many ways their interests are diametrically opposed to one another, although at some point they do converge in terms of putting in processes and mechanisms to have disputes resolved, but getting that balance between their interests is an extremely important part of the bill. There have been a number of injured workers who have been in the gallery night after night watching the bill proceed through the Legislature, and certainly their perspective is that the bill does not reflect their interests. Now, how widespread that perception of the bill is remains to be seen, but at least there is a core of injured workers who believe that the employers are the big winners in terms of this particular bill. I think that's balanced by the fact that there was no agreement on how the costs for contentious claims could be resolved. I think that in large part we won't know how well that principle has been imbedded in the bill until we actually see the bill in operation for some time.

A third principle that guided the bill is that the WCB had to be more open, and there are some mechanisms built into the bill, some specific mechanisms. We're promised that there are going to be newspaper ads and some attempt to publicize the annual meetings of the board and the Appeals Commission, and there will also be an annual report that will contain information that will supposedly shed more light on the operation of those two bodies. As I already indicated, the Auditor General is going to be involved in reviewing the financial operations of the two bodies. So there have been some specific moves to make it more open, obviously not enough in terms of the operation of the investigative unit. There's real concern over how that unit operates, and the kind of openness and in fact even the legality of some of the things that are undertaken remain questions to many people. In terms of that principle, I think the judgment is mixed in terms of the shape of the bill.

A fourth principle that the bill supports is that the Appeals Commission must be more independent of the board. Again, we've achieved this in part, maybe in large part, through having the commission report to the minister and also by taking away the WCB's ability to direct the Appeals Commission. I think those are two moves that go a long way to establish the independence of the board. How that will actually work in practice remains to be seen.

A fifth principle is that more definitive time lines must be followed when the Appeal Commission's decisions are implemented. Again, it's been a contentious area. Injured workers in our offices complain constantly about time lines that are missed or time lines that are never established. I think the bill has taken some moves in the right direction to make sure that the appeals are handled in a timely manner and decisions announced in the same timely manner. If you're an injured worker, those time lines become extremely important, and I think it's positive to see the couple of provisions in the bill that deal with those time lines, although I suspect there are still some concerns that need to be addressed.

A sixth principle that seems to be embedded in the bill is that medical differences should be resolved by a medical panel, and that that's an independent panel. Again, there are some concerns about that. The panel seems to be a good way to go about trying to resolve those, but there are concerns that those panels will usurp the power of the appeal panel itself, ending up with a situation which may not be the most satisfactory. Again, I think it's one of those things that is only going to be played out when the bill is passed and becomes legislation and we see the whole business in operation.

There are many more principles that could be identified, Mr. Speaker, but the last principle is the one that long-standing, contentious claims must be resolved. I guess this is one of the major concerns about the bill. In fact, I guess it's a significant failure that this really, really very difficult issue hasn't been resolved, or there isn't a process. I guess there's a process in place to try to resolve it, but it's really very unfortunate that the kind of work that is now under way was not done so that it could have been a part of the bill.

So going back to just that limited number of principles, Mr. Speaker, I think the report card on them is uneven. I think the reporting in the media about the bill has certainly shaped public perception. I would suspect that for many people it's: let's bide our time and give the bill an opportunity to work. They'll reserve their judgments until they actually see it in operation.

I think for injured workers there's been so much distrust of the WCB over the years that almost anything that is done is going to be judged very, very suspiciously. I think that that suspicion is out there still, and it's only going to be the successful operation of these changes that will help to eventually dispel that. But it's a long history of workers being dissatisfied and in recent time employers being dissatisfied that has to be overcome, and it's a large order for a bill.

So with those comments, I conclude. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

MR. STEVENS: Mr. Speaker, I move that we adjourn debate on Bill 26.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would move that we adjourn until 1:30 p.m. today.

[Motion carried; at 1:20 a.m. on Tuesday the Assembly adjourned to 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Tuesday, May 14, 2002

1:30 p.m.

Date: 02/05/14

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

THE SPEAKER: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. O God, life and health are precious. When they are lost, all of us are impacted. Let us remember those who are no longer among us with the most positive of thoughts, and let us reach out with compassion, understanding, and prayer to those who suffer. May God bless them all and extend eternal salvation in the heaven of peace. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Guests

MR. LOUGHEED: Mr. Speaker, before I introduce the family of a fine young man, our head page, Brent Shewchuk, I'd like to mention that today is Brent's last day with us. He's been a page since November of 1999. Brent, we appreciate your service.

With us today in your gallery, Mr. Speaker, are Brent's father, Dr. Michael Shewchuk, a dentist in Edmonton; Mrs. Sharon Shewchuk; Jeff Shewchuk, Brent's older brother and a student at the U of A – he's just finished his third year in sciences – Ryan, Brent's younger brother, who attends Jean Vanier in Sherwood Park; and as well sister Vanessa, who's a student at Father Kenneth Kearns in Sherwood Park. I'd ask the Assembly to give them the traditional warm welcome.

MR. BRODA: Mr. Speaker, on your behalf I would like to introduce to you and through you Mr. Raymond Westbrook and Mrs. Karen Westbrook, who reside at Thunder Lake in your constituency. Mr. and Mrs. Westbrook have resided in the Swan Hills area for the last 15 years. They are seated in your gallery this afternoon, Mr. Speaker. I would ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

MS KRYCZKA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to introduce to you and through you to the Assembly this afternoon two very special and capable young adults who look after both my constituents and my government work in the Legislature: Lisa Hofmeister, who is the assistant in my Calgary-West office and formerly worked for a Liberal member in Fort St. John, B.C.; and Warren Chandler, who works in my Edmonton office as a leg. assistant and formerly worked for the hon. Member for Lethbridge-West. I would ask these two young people to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Legislature.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Rocky View.

MS HALEY: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a real privilege for me today to be able to introduce to you and through you 10 incredible young people that we've had the privilege of getting to know and work with, particularly during the last year but essentially over session, when we really make them work hard writing speeches and greetings. They do all of the research on private members' bills and motions, and they've just done an outstanding job. I'd like them to rise as I name them and to receive the warm welcome of this Assembly once I've introduced all 10 of them. I'd like to start with Carla White, our senior researcher who's just done an incredible job of herding this group of young people around; Matt Steppan, our number two, who just got married a week ago; Jason Ennis, who came from the Airdrie-Rocky View constituency, as did Jeff Haley; Frank Ostlinger, just a wonderful man that joined us; Gregory McFarlane; Kelly Nicholls, who's unfortunately going to leave us this summer but has been a tremendous asset to us; Mike Simpson; Bartek Kienc, our summer student but who also worked for us part-time during the winter; and Alan Ferrier, our latest recruit. So please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have three introductions today. I'm pleased to introduce two new members of staff in the Liberal caucus office. Kirsten Odynski is a recent honours political science graduate of the University of Alberta and has joined our staff as a research analyst. Elaine Jewitt-Matthen, who is entering her senior year's studies at the U of A and is also a student of politics, is our STEP employee this year. They are joined today by Susanne Glenn, my researcher.

MR. BONNER: And mine.

MS CARLSON: And also this member's researcher. She keeps us on-line and on track and does just an outstanding job. I would ask that Kirsten, Elaine, and Susanne please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

MR. LUKASZUK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We have the honour of being visited today by five members of the 408 tactical helicopter squadron. Among us today in the public gallery are Captain Colin Coakwell, Captain Ryan Tyler, Captain Leslie Wenzel, Captain Jason Tuckett, and Honorary Colonel Bart West. I would ask them to rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of this Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, also among us are two constituents of mine, tireless volunteers in many societies and associations within Edmonton-Castle Downs and greater Edmonton. They are Ms Vicki Lindsay and Mrs. Winnie Bogosoff. I would also ask those fine ladies to rise and receive the traditional welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Energy.

MR. SMITH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As you know, there are meetings constantly held throughout the Legislature today. There was one with UtiliCorp Networks, EPCOR. Also, it's good to see ATCO represented in terms of Colonel West. It's nice to see him here as well. I'm asking Fauzia Lalani, seated in the public gallery, to please rise and receive the warm welcome and recognition of the Assembly. She is the chief executive officer for UtiliCorp Networks Canada and is an Albertan with a number of years of customer service experience.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Revenue.

MR. MELCHIN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to be able to stand this afternoon and introduce constituents of Calgary-North West. I'm delighted to welcome them here to the Assembly. Marilyn Marks is accompanied by two other members of the Alberta grandparents' association, Jim Keating and Helen Zadorozny. We're delighted to be able to welcome them. They're here as concerned grandparents about access rights to their grandchildren. I'd like all members to give them the warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure this afternoon to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly employees from Alberta Justice judicial libraries and from the Court of Appeal. These individuals are here on the public service orientation tour, getting to know us better in terms of the public side of government, the elected side of government, and what's happening with respect to the Leg. Assembly. These tours have been promoted by your good office and the Legislative Assembly Office. From judicial libraries Sylvia Martin, Beth Ernst, Mary Baxter, and Susan Frame; and from the Court of Appeal Sandy Timmer, Marge Smith, Verla Sharp, Sandra Bachand, Kim Nayer, Julie Antunes, Lynne Krause, and Margaret Pawlikowski. I'd like them all to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome and a strong thank you from this Assembly for the good work that they do for Albertans.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

MR. STELMACH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed a pleasure and an honour today to introduce to you and to every Member of the Legislative Assembly 63 very enthusiastic and keenly interested visitors from Tofield high school. They are seated in the members' gallery, and they are accompanied by Mr. Fred Yachimec, who is no stranger to this Assembly as he has been a wonderful volunteer with Mr. Speaker's Youth Parliament, as well as Mrs. Deedee Perrott and also a lady that has worked very closely with our department over the years, who is also the chief administrative officer for the town of Tofield, Mrs. Cindy Neufeld. I would ask these wonderful students to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It gives me a great deal of pleasure this afternoon to introduce to you and through you to all Members of the Legislative Assembly my STEP student for the summer, Cheryl Pereira. Cheryl is attending the University of Alberta, and the many people who served here in the 24th Legislature will recognize Cheryl. She was a member of our page corps here and did a fine job at that time and is doing a fine job in Edmonton-Glengarry. So I'd now ask Cheryl to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce another STEP student, who will be working with the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar. Her name is Linda Wilcox. She's already proven to be a great addition to our team. I'd ask her to rise and receive the warm reception of the Assembly.

Thank you.

head: Oral Question Period

THE SPEAKER: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Provincial Water Strategy

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Late this morning the government released the summary of their water-for-life consultation. This gave Albertans an opportunity to share their thoughts and ideas on the future of Alberta's water within the constraints that the government set for them. Of course, the government didn't tell the Official Opposition what they were up to. All my questions go to the Minister of Environment. In light of the opposition to limiting water policy to the four fundamental objectives identified, will the minister commit to expanding these objectives?

DR. TAYLOR: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I pointed out the other day, we heard from a lot of Albertans. We had 40,000 hits on our web site, and what we heard now goes to the minister's forum. We asked Albertans a number of questions in the workbooks. That information all goes to the minister's forum, which is going to be happening in Red Deer on June 6 and 7. There will be stakeholders at that minister's forum from industry, from environmental groups, from water users, from irrigators, from cities, from rural Alberta. It's a broad spectrum of Albertans which will then look and analyze this data and make recommendations to the government from there. Right now this is just information. We will be getting recommendations to the government from this minister's forum.

MS CARLSON: Mr. Speaker, will the minister answer the question that Albertans asked him? How does the minister define sustainable economy?

DR. TAYLOR: Well, Mr. Speaker, sustainable economy is one that balances both the economic development and the environment. You cannot move forward on economic development that destroys the environment. That is very clear. We heard that in our sessions, and that has been our policy consistently, but there is a myth, that this opposition likes to perpetuate, that you must separate a healthy environment from a healthy economy. There's a World Bank study and there's the World Economic Forum study that clearly point out that a healthy economy is equivalent to a healthy environment and a healthy environment is equivalent to a healthy economy.

MS CARLSON: Mr. Speaker, if that's the minister's position, then why does the Environment minister's business plan call for a move away from strong, enforceable regulations to weak, suggested codes of practice?

DR. TAYLOR: Well, that's absolutely ridiculous, Mr. Speaker. We are not moving away from enforcement and enforceable codes. What we are doing is providing education to people so that people clearly understand what our codes mean and what they say. We believe that once people clearly understand this, they will live up to their commitments. I can assure you that if they do not live up to their commitments, they will be enforced heavy and hard.

THE SPEAKER: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Mr. Speaker, I do agree that it is ridiculous, but it's the minister's business plan, not ours.

The minister's business plan describes the current regulatory system for protecting our water resources as intrusive. To whom is he catering with his plans to move forward towards unenforceable codes of practice?

DR. TAYLOR: Mr. Speaker, we are not moving forward to unenforceable codes of practice. I have very clearly said that. We have a very strong enforcement division. We will continue to enforce. I just passed out a document about two weeks ago in this House that pointed out all the enforcement actions that we have taken, over a million dollars in fines that we have assessed last year, and we will continue to do that. Because we're trying to educate people and prevent a mess before it happens does not mean that we are not enforcing.

MS CARLSON: Good answer; not correct.

The government has already given a break to intensive livestock operations by having a code of practice rather than enforceable regulations for handling manure when other water-reliant industries are looking for the same treatment, and where is he going with this policy of lowering the current regulations?

DR. TAYLOR: Her initial statement is certainly not true, Mr. Speaker. In fact, it might be characterized as a puffball question. Once again I will repeat my answer: we are not lowering our standards. Does she not hear?

MS CARLSON: Mr. Speaker, given that a water policy based on conservation rather than diversion makes sense environmentally and economically, will the Environment minister make a commitment today, then, to strengthen conservation regulations rather than doing what his business plan says and moving to weaker codes of practice?

DR. TAYLOR: Well, Mr. Speaker, I would insist that we are not moving to weaker codes of practice. I have said that; I repeat that. But she does make an interesting point that conservation is very important, and as part of this water strategy that we are developing, certainly conservation must be a very large part of that strategy. I can give you a couple of examples. Urban Calgary has 50 percent of the city metered and 50 percent of the city not metered. In the 50 percent that's not metered, the water usage is twice, doubled. Conservation would make sense to put meters in all of Calgary. That's a very practical example. So conservation certainly has to be very much part of what we do, and it will be part of what we do. I will agree with the member on that, and we will continue to monitor these situations as we go forward.

THE SPEAKER: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Children's Services

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In response to questions raised in the Assembly, the Minister of Children's Services has made a number of promises to Albertans. My questions are to the Minister of Children's Services. On March 7 the minister promised to provide more information about the tragic death of Aaron Grey, who died in care last December. Is that information now available?

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, about a week ago I read and reviewed a report and asked for some adjustments. It will be available very soon.

Mr. Speaker, if I can just take a moment. There are some special case reviews that are not complete because of various stages of their investigation, and there are some of the other processes that are taking a little time. I would just beg the hon. member's indulgence and would commit to providing what I'm able to provide, noting confidentiality requirements, as soon as possible. I have done in fact the follow-up on the member's behalf about those issues that we committed to during this session, and it will still be forthcoming.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you. To the same minister. On March 18 the minister promised to implement the recommendations of the Corvette Crier fatality inquiry. Has that been done?

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, many of those recommendations have been done, in fact were worked on and commenced as early as 1999. I can be more specific and provide the status of all those recommendations, and I think a very good-news story is that we're working very much in a partnership to review the files and the administrative things on the Kasohkewew First Nations authority and receiving a lot of co-operation and finding in fact that many of the recommendations from that earlier report had been accomplished and are still looking forward to completing our work there.

DR. MASSEY: To the same minister, Mr. Speaker. On April 24 the minister promised to table the regulations that protect children in private day cares. Has that been done?

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, not only with day cares but with day homes we will be coming back. It's taking a little longer than we had hoped. We have a number of proposals that have been received again recently from some of the people that are operators. We want to very carefully look at those. They will be taken through the standing policy committee process. When in good time we are prepared to bring them forward, we will, but it's taking some time.

Mr. Speaker, I had hoped again that we would have those available by now, but we do not have them available, and when we have them available, we will release them. I also hope that we'll be able to satisfy the hon. member that our work has been something that has netted some very positive results.

We're still in the process, Mr. Speaker, of implementing some of the early child development programs that have been initiated, and taking that opportunity to have very positive outcomes for children as part of the overall plan has taken a little longer than we'd hoped.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

Provincial Fiscal Policies

MR. MASON: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Taxes, fees, and health premiums for average families went up. Schools were needlessly put into turmoil while corporations got tax breaks and horse racing got handouts. That pretty much sums up the spring session of this Legislature. If we were handing out gold stars for bad budgeting, the easy winner would be the Minister of Finance, who brought down what is probably the worst budget in the entire history of Ralph's world. My questions are to the Minister of Finance. How can the minister justify sticking Albertans with $722 million in tax hikes, including a 30 percent tax hike on health care premiums, just so that the government can look like heroes by paying off the remaining debt before the Premier rides off into the sunset?

MRS. NELSON: Well, I thought, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. member may have paid attention during the lengthy debate of the budget process in this Legislature. There certainly was ample opportunity to have a review of every department that came forward in that process. I must say that while he may be critical of the fiscal situation in this province, almost everyone who reviews financial situations of provinces and other governments has in fact given Alberta a gold star. In fact, once again a week ago we received the triple A rating for our foreign debt. So we are the only government in all of Canada and possibly North America who has had triple A ratings from three major bond-rating agencies. The investors groups have applauded us for our plan, as have the major banks: the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce, Scotiabank, et cetera.

This budget, Mr. Speaker, dealt with priorities. It dealt with the priorities in health care, and it dealt with the priorities in education through the Learning ministry. It also dealt with priority spending. The difficulty was that it didn't have everything for everyone in it. It was a budget that dealt with realities. It dealt with the economic times that we're facing in not only Alberta but the country.

So what's the position of the province? Well, quite frankly, we are a province that has the lowest overall tax regime in the country. That means that dollars stay in the pockets of Albertans, not in the government's hands, and they can make the decisions on how to spend their money. It's a province that has the best economic growth. It is the province that is well sought after by people migrating to this province on an annual basis, actually to the size of the city of Medicine Hat. All the positives are there, Mr. Speaker, and it's unfortunate that this hon. member has gone through this session without recognizing those positives that are here in this province.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. How is it that the Premier can provide financial information about our projected surplus to selected members of the news media, telling them that last year's budget surplus will be more than half a billion dollars, while the Minister of Finance refuses to disclose that financial information to this House when she is asked in question period and in budget debate? Why won't the minister tell the House the facts?

MRS. NELSON: Well, Mr. Speaker, I presume that the hon. member is referring to the fourth-quarter final results from last year's budget. I have said in this House a number of times that the actual final numbers will be ready around the 1st of June and that they will be presented as soon as they are in fact available. What the hon. member doesn't understand is that while there are lots of estimates that can be made as to what those numbers will look like, the final actual numbers will not be available until just about 60 days after the final production occurs in oil and gas, which was March 31, so I don't have those final numbers. I wish I did, but I don't have them, and as soon as I do have them, I will make them available to Albertans.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. If there is another huge accidental-on-purpose budget surplus this year, will the government commit to scaling back the 30 percent hike in health care premiums, or does the government think it's more important to further reduce corporate taxes?

MRS. NELSON: Mr. Speaker, striking the balance is always a difficult task when one has to look at having the best economic advantage in the country. That means having the lowest tax regime. It also means having priority spending taking precedence, and let's not forget paying off our debt, which is another important aspect of the triangle of striking the right balance in this province.

In this year's budget I believe that we have met the priorities in some very challenging times within this budget structure, and we're moving forward, Mr. Speaker. I think it puts us in good stead within the province, but let's remember always that the one advantage we have in the province of Alberta – and we're the only government in all of Canada – is that every quarter we fully update Albertans as to the fiscal situation within this province with the quarterly updates. We will continue on that path so that Albertans are always aware as to what the fiscal picture is for the province of Alberta.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

North Edmonton Ring Road

MR. VANDERMEER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Anyone who drives the Yellowhead through Edmonton is immediately aware of the need for a ring road around the city. The northeast corner of our city is a significant contributor to the city's economic well-being and to the surrounding region as well. Traffic volumes and the city's economic well-being demand attention to be given to the northern segment of Edmonton. Building the northern extension is necessary for continued economic growth, jobs, and tax revenue to pay for health and education, and as an added benefit a ring road would relieve congestion on the Yellowhead. My question is to the Minister of Transportation. Could he please tell us if the province has any plans to accommodate a ring road around the north of Edmonton in the near future?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. STELMACH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. At the moment we are proceeding with the most southerly western portion of the north/south trade corridor. This will be connecting highway 16 west to the Calgary Trail, which will lead to highway 2. That project is currently under way. The balance of the ring roads will be built as budgets are determined in the future. Obviously, the member makes a number of very good points in terms of relieving all of the traffic pressure on the Yellowhead and also on the Whitemud. In fact, I believe that by 2005-2006 transportation officials in the city of Edmonton are indicating that the Quesnell Bridge will be at capacity.

MR. VANDERMEER: Mr. Speaker, my first supplemental question is to the same minister. Land costs are a major portion of highway construction, and the northern extension of the ring road is a significant project. Does the province anticipate buying any more needed land there?

MR. STELMACH: Mr. Speaker, this government in the '70s had invested a considerable amount of money into what's called the transportation utility corridor. This is about $600 million invested by the taxpayer in land around the city of Edmonton and the city of Calgary. The land is in place. The Minister of Infrastructure is just completing some final details, maybe buying some additional parcels where the anticipated interchanges will be going in, but definitely the land is in place, and when the dollars are available, we can proceed with the ring roads in both cities.

MR. VANDERMEER: The final question to the same minister, Mr. Speaker: what can the minister do to accelerate construction of these necessary roadways?

MR. STELMACH: Well, Mr. Speaker, thanks to the input from government members and input and direction given by the Minister of Finance in forming the financial management review committee, these are of course issues that the committee will be looking at: how we can fund some of this badly needed infrastructure in the future, possibly looking at different strategies but knowing quite well that this infrastructure has to be put in place as soon as possible because we do have a tremendous congestion in two of the largest centres here in the province of Alberta, where the population is simply increasing annually.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Electricity Deregulation

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last summer the Minister of Energy welcomed Enron's entry into the electricity industry in Alberta as vindication that the anticipated deregulation scheme is working more or less as promised and said at the time, quote, Enron's announcement is a signal that this power market is here to stay, end quote. Just as Enron was a spectacular failure, so too was this government's expensive electricity deregulation scheme. It doesn't help to have a minister who only provides false, glib assurances. My first question is to the Minister of Energy. Since this minister still hasn't been able to complete his industry restructuring review almost eight months after first anticipated, how long will he delay the findings of the new task given to him by the Premier, a task he was incapable of undertaking on his own?

MR. SMITH: Mr. Speaker, actually I think the fact is that this power market is here today, this power market is here to stay, Enron is gone, and certainly half of his members are gone from last year.

MR. MacDONALD: Mr. Speaker, given that what else is gone is the credibility of this government as far as the electricity deregulation scheme goes, can the minister, who has so far refused to do so, please explain to Albertans who are paying more for electricity each month why their bills have gone up?

MR. SMITH: The deferral accounts that cover the price of power bought in 2000 and in the year 2001 have, through the EUB and through a discussion with a consumers' advisory group at each utility, been placed on these bills. In fact, Mr. Speaker, the bills from the ATCO service network do not have a rate rider, and the price of electricity there today is 4.76 cents.

MR. MacDONALD: Again to the same minister, Mr. Speaker: why does the minister continue to offer false assurances to his colleagues that deregulation might one day – one day – lower bills when such tactics have already led to a revolt in his caucus and also with his cabinet colleagues?

MR. SMITH: Well, I think that defining a revolution might be an interesting piece, Mr. Speaker, but what we do know from this caucus and what we do know from these cabinet colleagues is that they ask clear, concise questions about government policy. They in fact have candid, direct meetings with the utility companies that are involved. In fact, UtiliCorp/EPCOR, an area where there have been the highest deferral accounts placed – there was an active 90-minute meeting today.

So in fact I would say to the hon. member that this government is on the case every day, on the case with every cabinet colleague, on the case with every private member, and is far, far ahead of the opposition in looking at issues that are important to Albertans and important to this government.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Education Review Commission

MR. MARZ: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Earlier this year it was announced that the Minister of Learning was to put in an arbitration process to resolve the salary issues amongst teachers as well as establish a commission to investigate and make recommendations on teaching and learning conditions. Many of my constituents are getting quite anxious for this process to start. My question today is to the Minister of Learning. Could the minister tell me when this commission will be established finally so that they can begin their work and start on this review?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. At the end of April we signed an agreement with the Alberta Teachers' Association and the Alberta School Boards Association that essentially led to a decrease in the labour issues around the province. Part of that deal was the ability for the Alberta Teachers' Association and the Alberta School Boards Association to have input into the composition of their committee. That input came into my office yesterday. We plan on having the committee up and rolling I'm hoping by the 1st of June, but as I say, we were waiting for the input, and we hope to get it up and going as quickly as we can now.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MARZ: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Could the same minister comment or explain what type of public input opportunities the commission will be providing?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

DR. OBERG: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. One of the things that I will be doing is sitting down with the chairman of the commission and taking a look at how things will proceed, but we certainly anticipate that at a minimum there will be Internet access into the commission, that there will also be some type of questionnaire that will be sent out, as well as focus groups. I believe that these are probably some of the best ways to get input into this commission, and certainly we value the opinions of all Albertans and will ensure that each and every Albertan has the opportunity to put information into this commission.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MARZ: Thanks again, Mr. Speaker. Could the minister tell me if he's still anticipating that this commission will be able to complete their work by August 30, 2003?

DR. OBERG: Yes. Certainly, Mr. Speaker, I can give the guarantee that they will be done by August 31 of 2003. As a matter of fact, I am hoping that it will be done significantly before then. One of the issues that we have to look at, as was certainly pointed out in the input from the ATA and the ASBA, is that we have to make sure that it is a very credible job, that it is a good job and not a rushed job. I would anticipate that hopefully we're looking at around January, February of 2003, but again by far the most important element is that it's a credible, good job.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry, followed by the hon. Member for Little Bow.

Education Funding

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Learning has told this Assembly that parents should not have to fund-raise to buy basics such as textbooks. A couple of weeks ago he informed us that his department had audited 22 schools, some of which had been fund-raising for textbooks, and determined that the schools had sufficient funds and that fund-raising was unnecessary. My questions today are to the Minister of Learning. Are those 22 audits public?

DR. OBERG: Mr. Speaker, no, they're not, but we certainly intend on making them public.

MR. BONNER: As well to the same minister, Mr. Speaker: will any future audits of schools be made public, or will we have to take the minister at his word when he says that schools don't need to fund-raise?

DR. OBERG: Mr. Speaker, absolutely. As the hon. member is well aware, anything that we do in our department is public knowledge through the freedom of information and privacy.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. BONNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: if parents raise money not for textbooks directly but in order to free up school money to purchase textbooks, does the minister consider this as a sign that schools are underfunded?

DR. OBERG: Well, Mr. Speaker, that's one of the issues that we're currently looking at as this issue has been raised. As I mentioned, in the 22 schools that we looked at, this was not what was going on. However, it has been raised, so we are looking at ways to counteract that. I sincerely hope that is not happening, but we are taking a look at the whole fund-raising issue.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Little Bow, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Fusarium-infected Grain

MR. McFARLAND: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions today are to the Deputy Premier and the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. As you are aware, Alberta is a major producer of barley, but recent shortages of feed have increased the importation of barley from other areas. Particularly, those entering our province are coming with possible fusarium-infected supplies from Manitoba and southeast Saskatchewan. This increased importation increases the possibility of the spread of the disease throughout Alberta. My question is to the minister. Can you tell me what is being done currently to curtail the importation of fusarium to Alberta to protect our industry?

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, undoubtedly fusarium is a very serious fungus that causes fusarium head blight in cereal crops and absolutely can devastate cereal crops. The losses in Manitoba and Saskatchewan are staggering. We have been working on a policy on fusarium. It has become more of an issue because of the shortage of feed and the importation of corn from the U.S. which also is infected with this, and we've looked at a zero tolerance policy. Currently we're discussing this with the stakeholders. This includes the malting industry, it includes the feeding industry, it includes the seed industry, and it includes producers.

One of the concerns we have, Mr. Speaker, of putting in place a policy of zero tolerance is: can we police it? We do not want to give false assurances that we're managing the problem if indeed we can't police the importation of it. We have to also look at the impact on the feeding industry. Cattle have a fairly high tolerance for fusarium. It passes through them, and the fungus indeed is destroyed. However, chickens and hogs have a very low tolerance for this, and it can cause illness and death. So I think it's important that we have that full discussion with the industry and bring forward a policy that will reflect the importance of keeping this fungus out of our province yet recognizing the impact on the industry as a whole.

MR. McFARLAND: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the minister for your concern on the tolerances. As a supplementary, what are you doing to curtail the importation of the fusarium into Alberta?

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, at present there is nothing that precludes grain coming in with fusarium. We are looking at a policy that might have zero tolerance for importation. That would indeed mean that every load of grain that came into that province that has this possibility of infection would have to be certified fusarium free. This is a fairly significant process. You want to make sure, one, that it's necessary and, two, that you can police it.

One of the things that we have done, Mr. Speaker, to assure ourselves that this is not a problem in our province is that we've entered into a research project, if you wish, where we cost-share with producers the cost of testing seed. The other thing we do is we strongly recommend to all producers that are seeding these grains that can be infected that they have their seed tested, that they ensure that it is fusarium free and in that way are not introducing it themselves into the province.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. McFARLAND: Thank you. A final supplemental to the minister: who will actually be responsible for certifying or inspecting the truckloads or railcar loads of the various grains that are coming in with potential fusarium in them?

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, at the initial stages of our response to this, if we went to a zero tolerance, it would be the vendor's responsibility to ensure that there was a certification that accompanied it.

The other thing that I should just remind members is that fusarium is a registered pest under the pests act, so ag field men in our province have the ability and the authority to do random checks and can do that and in fact are doing that. Action that can be taken on any load of grain that is found to have fusarium infection could mean it would be turned back to its source, impounded, and dealt with.

Mr. Speaker, we should have a policy in place I would expect in the next three to four weeks, after we conclude our industry consultation.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Commercial Fisheries

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On April 25 the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development said that Alberta's commercial fishing industry was too large for the amount of fish we have in our lakes and was not economically viable and, further, that it was difficult to manage. My questions are to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. Who is to blame for Alberta's fisheries no longer being economically viable? Did the government issue too many commercial licences, or are the operators overfishing?

MR. CARDINAL: Mr. Speaker, that's a very good question, because I don't believe there's been mismanagement of our lake fisheries at all. It's a very sensitive area. The commercial fisheries have been around for, you know, a long time. At one time it was very productive because the scale of commercial fisheries was very small and localized, and a lot of people made a good living at it. Since then the industry has grown. At one time there were over 2,200 commercial fishermen.

DR. TAYLOR: How many?

MR. CARDINAL: Over 2,200. Now that has dropped to 800, and they have about 34,000 100-yard nets right now. We want to reduce that of course down to about 200 licences and reduce the yardage by half so that it's better managed and makes the people who are in that business more economically viable, with the opportunity for them to plan also. At the same time, a number of them who might want to get out of the industry because it may not be viable for them will have the opportunity to sell their yardage to the government, with some compensation per 100-yard net and also some compensation per zone.

That is only one part of the overall plan of having sustainable fisheries, both recreation and sport fisheries, in Alberta. That is one part of the plan. The other part of course is ensuring that the sportfishing industry also is managed well. Again, that is a very sensitive area, because we only have about a thousand lakes in Alberta in total, while Saskatchewan and Manitoba, places like that, have close to 100,000 lakes. Of course, in addition to the commercial fishermen, we also have 300,000 sportfishermen out there going for the same source as the commercial fisheries.

MS BLAKEMAN: Okay. Well, it's either the fishing operators or the sportfishermen.

Given that the government is offering a buyout package, there must be additional reasons for the collapse. How did we get to the position where we had too many operators? How did the government allow that?

MR. CARDINAL: Well, Mr. Speaker, there are a lot of pressures of course. On one hand, we have a very positive economic atmosphere in Alberta, and the population has grown. The economy is booming in Alberta. There are a lot of people attracted from other jurisdictions. Besides what we have here in Alberta, there are people coming in from Saskatchewan, there are people coming in from B.C., and there are people coming in from other jurisdictions, moving to Alberta for jobs and business opportunities. That is the good news. The negative side of it is that it provides more challenges to manage our natural resources such as the fisheries. It's a challenge, but you can be assured that the plan we're moving forward with will work.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, the government licenses a wide range of businesses and offers no compensation when market conditions change and businesses close. So why are the fisheries different? Why do they get a buyout package? Why are they so special?

MR. CARDINAL: Mr. Speaker, I don't think we're treating the commercial fisheries as any more special than anyone else. It's something, in fact, that the Commercial Fishermen's Association of Alberta has been looking for since – I know I've been involved since 1991. The original plan was a recommendation to provide some compensation for them to get out of that business. When you look at the comparison between the commercial fisheries revenue for Alberta and the people that are in it, it's about $5 million a year. On the other hand, with 300,000 people that do sportfishing, it's a $350 million industry. So when you compare those two, it's only wise to take some of the dollars raised on the sportfishing side, move those dollars, and reduce the commercial fisheries to a manageable level. You can manage those fisheries a lot better than we can now, and we will continue monitoring the situation.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

2:20 First Nations Skills Development Programs

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Earlier today I sent the Minister of Human Resources and Employment copies of two memoranda from senior officials in his ministry. These memos indicate that effective September 1 this year aboriginal people living on First Nations reserves will no longer be eligible for training allowances under the skills development program. Up to 1,000 aboriginal people involved in skills upgrading programs will be cut off by this shortsighted policy change. My questions are to the Minister of Human Resources and Employment. How can the minister justify the blatant double standard of providing living allowances under the skills development program to all eligible Albertans with the sole exception of aboriginal people living in First Nations communities?

MR. DUNFORD: Mr. Speaker, we're currently involved in one of these little jurisdictional matters that arise between the federal government and a provincial government periodically. I think most of the preamble to the question was substantially correct, but the hon. member was not pointing out to the Assembly this afternoon that under a skills development program normally we provide for tuition, books, and living allowances. Of course, we still do that for all Albertans that are involved in our upgrading programs, but when it comes to First Nations people that are still living on the reserve, what we have indicated to the chiefs through letters – the minister of aboriginal affairs and myself have been meeting with various groups – is to provide the understanding that the living allowance portion for a First Nations person on reserve is the responsibility of the federal government and that we in the provincial area will continue to fund tuition and books. So there really should be no apparent difficulty, no apparent change to the amount of support that any Albertan would receive no matter where in Alberta they live.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the high rate of unemployment in most of these locations, isn't paying living allowances for skills upgrading an excellent investment to ensure that these citizens do get a hand up rather than a handout?

MR. DUNFORD: I absolutely agree with the tenor of the question. We want to be providing hand ups and not handouts, and this is a way for the federal government and the provincial government to work together in seeing that that happens. Now, as a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, we've actually gone even further than that, because in previous years when we discovered that we were paying those living allowances, there was a certain part of our budget that was being utilized that way. With the agreement of the federal government, we no longer have to move budget dollars in that particular area, but we're going to keep those dollars within the aboriginal framework of training programs that we have. Currently, as we speak, we're actually out there looking for partnerships with industry, with First Nations people, with the federal government, with the provincial government, and of course also with the support of my colleague in aboriginal affairs, to keep that money involved in the training of First Nations people.

DR. PANNU: Should the federal government fail to step up to the plate, will the minister guarantee that every person who lives in a First Nations community will be treated equally with all other Albertans and that the province will continue to cover living expenses beyond September 1, 2002?

MR. DUNFORD: I don't know that I should have to guarantee that, Mr. Speaker. We're finding co-operation with the federal government in this area. I plan to travel to Ottawa later this month to meet with the minister on this very topic. I believe that they'll fulfill their commitments, so a guarantee won't be necessary.

I don't think that any of us should speculate at this particular time, hon. member. I think that the federal government is there where they're needed, the provincial government is there where needed, the First Nations people themselves are there where they're needed, and I see this program moving forward.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Persons with Developmental Disabilities Program

MRS. JABLONSKI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Red Deer-North is the home of Michener Centre, a community designed for the needs of persons with developmental disabilities. Just as society has evolved over the past 50 years, so has Michener Centre. The mandate of the persons with developmental disabilities program supports community inclusion. I understand that PDD has some very successful programs for persons with developmental disabilities that enable them to live, work, and participate in their own communities. My question is for the Minister of Community Development. If community inclusion is a choice, is there still a role for centres like Michener Services in Red Deer?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think the key point in the question is the word "choice." As most members in the House might recall, when I authored the Building Better Bridges report, a significant review that was done provincially, I had specifically indicated that Michener Services, or Michener Centre as we colloquially refer to it, would be an important facility for PDD residents there under the issue of choice. So the PDD residents and/or the future residents or the families who are helping make those difficult decisions would have a centre such as Michener open for that purpose.

There are a number of centres that are referred to as government-sponsored centres, such as Michener, which provide an outstanding service, Mr. Speaker. We have the Eric Cormack here in the city. We certainly have Youngstown Home in east-central Alberta. We have Bow Park Court and Scenic Bow, which have some facilities in Calgary.

I should point out, Mr. Speaker, that the centre that we're talking about in Red Deer, specifically Michener Services, has been the recipient of at least four Premier's awards over the last three or four years alone for the excellent service provided there by their staff and by the medical and other personnel on-site. So the short answer to your question, hon. member, is that yes, there will continue to be a role for a service such as Michener Services in Red Deer.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MRS. JABLONSKI: Thank you. My supplemental question is again for the Minister of Community Development. In what way does the government support community inclusion for persons with developmental disabilities?

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Well, Mr. Speaker, that's at the heart of the PDD system in our province. Community inclusion is provided for by basically the community-based agencies. However, they are helped significantly by the province and by the government of Alberta, primarily through funding, but there are other types of supports. Then it is up to the community agencies through our community governance model to provide, deliver, design, and support those programs that are customized for PDD recipients throughout the province. So there are a number of things that these community agencies will do with this funding that impact and directly affect the daily living, the residential supports in some cases, outreach programs, employment support programs, and so on with respect to our PDD recipients who are living in the community and enjoying and experiencing life as the rest of us are.

MRS. JABLONSKI: To the same minister: in what way does the government of Alberta support the programs and needs of PDD residents at Michener Centre?

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Well, briefly, Mr. Speaker, Michener Centre, or Michener Services, has the whole package there. They provide not only residential programs, support programs, day programs, but there's a full breadth of medical programs, nursing, physical therapy, dental, and pharmaceutical. There's access to spiritual programming and a wide, wide variety of recreational sports activities with very high visibility for those individuals in the community. So there's quite a bit that this government is doing in respect to Michener Services.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

CT Scans

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions will be to the Minister of Government Services. In recent weeks the opposition has raised concerns about a business in Calgary now offering full-body CT scans at a charge of $1,200 not to diagnose symptoms but merely to screen healthy people. This is now being aggressively advertised in Calgary, and I'll table a copy of the ad in a moment. Full-body CT scans are actively discouraged for screening purposes by a wide range of medical authorities because they expose people to worrisome levels of radiation. Under question the minister of health advised that this was for the College of Physicians and Surgeons to regulate. However, it appears that it may be difficult for the college to act because of limits on its jurisdiction. To the Minister of Government Services: given that the minister of health has taken a hands-off approach and that the power of the College of Physicians and Surgeons may be very limited in this matter, does the Minister of Government Services have any jurisdiction to ensure public safety on this issue?

MR. COUTTS: Well, Mr. Speaker, this definitely sounds to me like it is something that should be under consideration by the department of health and the College of Physicians and Surgeons. In terms of Government Services getting involved in a consumer complaint here, I haven't received anything in my office that is even geared towards that at this point in time, but if the hon. member wants to give me the details, Government Services, like we do with all complaints that come into our shop, will definitely take a look at whose jurisdiction this should be under and get back to the hon. member.

DR. TAFT: I appreciate the response.

Given that the very nature of this service exposes healthy people to amounts of radiation considered undesirable by many medical authorities, is it possible under legislation that this sort of service could be closed down?

MR. COUTTS: Well, again, Mr. Speaker, it would seem to me that there would need to be some kind of research on that kind of an implication on an individual's health, and that is better served by the department of health and the College of Physicians and Surgeons to do that research. If our department is part of that research, by all means we'll certainly get back to the hon. member.

DR. TAFT: It feels now like pinball.

Anyways, does the Alberta government have any capacity, experience, or expertise in regulating public services that involve radiation exposure to the public?

MR. COUTTS: Well, Mr. Speaker, there's absolutely no ping-pong here whatsoever. We in government make sure that we go through the proper procedures. In this case it is with the department of health and certainly with the help of the people that do the regulation as well as consumer affairs. We work together on these types of things, so there's absolutely no ping-pong involved with this department.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, before recognizing several hon. members for participation today in Members' Statements, might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests
(reversion)

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

MR. RATHGEBER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed a pleasure to rise here this afternoon and introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly 21 of Edmonton-Calder's finest senior citizens who are members of the Inglewood seniors group who meet at the Inglewood Christian Reformed Church. I had the pleasure of meeting these 21 individuals prior to question period. I understand they're very active and they do many outings, and I'm glad that they came to the Alberta Legislature to watch the proceedings here this afternoon. They're in the members' gallery, and I'd ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

MR. DUCHARME: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Mr. Harry Supernault, the chairman of the Metis Settlements Appeal Tribunal. He is also attended by Ms Sarah Daniels, who is the tribunal secretary and executive director of the Metis Settlements Appeal Tribunal. I'd ask that they rise and please receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

head: Members' Statements

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, we're now into Members' Statements. I certainly do not intend to edit the hon. member's statement, but I'm going to call on the hon. Member for Red Deer-North, and I cannot fathom in my head how the hon. member could speak for two minutes about the glories of the Red Deer Rebels when they lost last night.

Jack and Joan Donald

MRS. JABLONSKI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Only I have chosen a far more suitable subject for today.

People everywhere search for the secret of success. Red Deer's 2001 citizen of the year, Mr. Jack Donald, has discovered this formula. Take one smart, ambitious, hardworking gas jockey; add one determined, tenacious, hardworking partner; mix in a great location like Red Deer; throw in a pinch of risk; include generous portions of volunteer work, public service, and family; add the Alberta advantage; bake for 38 years; and presto, you have success. Jack Donald was chosen by the members of Red Deer's three Rotary clubs to be Red Deer's citizen of the year not only because of his remarkable business success but more importantly because of his great contribution to his community.

Jack and his wife, Joan, who is the wind beneath Jack's wings, arrived in Red Deer in 1964, opening a bulk station on Gaetz Avenue. They now supply through Parkland Industries, purchased by Jack and Joan in 1976, about 450 retail and wholesale stations under the Fas Gas and Racetrack banners. They both have devoted numerous hours of organization and hard work to fund-raising for Red Deer College, the Red Deer regional hospital, STARS ambulance, the Westerner Exposition, and many other community projects. Jack and Joan have helped make their community of Red Deer and central Alberta one of the very best places in the world to live, work, and play. Jack also served as a Red Deer city councillor for two years, was chair of the province's Tax Reform Commission in '95, the co-chairman of the '98 Tax Review Committee and the 2000 Business Tax Committee as well. When his province needed him, Jack was there.

Mr. Speaker, two minutes is not long enough to tell you about all the work, public service, and volunteer hours that Jack and Joan have given to this great province. In the middle of all this extraordinary effort they also managed to raise and stay close to a beautiful family, who are walking in their footsteps.

Congratulations to Jack Donald for being the very worthy recipient of the Red Deer citizen of the year award and to his wife, Joan, who walked beside him every step of the way. You have both inspired your family and friends and all those around you. Alberta salutes you.

THE SPEAKER: Well, the hon. member is aware that should she have requested unanimous consent to continue, the Assembly might have provided it.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Lifelong Learning

MR. CAO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The economy of Alberta depends on innovative, well-educated, skilled, and adaptable people who are able to respond to an ever changing . . . [A member passed between the chair and the member speaking]

THE SPEAKER: Sorry, hon. member. That is totally inappropriate decorum. Totally inappropriate.

I'm going to start again with the introduction of the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort. Please start again.

MR. CAO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The economy of Alberta depends on innovative, well-educated, skilled, and adaptable people who are able to respond to an ever changing world. To take advantage of the opportunities of this knowledge-based economy and society, Albertans recognize the value of identifying and pursuing lifelong learning opportunities. Lifelong learning is about acquiring and applying knowledge and skills throughout our lives. Lifelong learning is to help reach employment goals, to enjoy a high quality of life, and to be contributing and responsible citizens.

During the public consultations held at many places across the province, over 450 Albertans from many walks of life shared their ideas for improving opportunities to continue learning. It was recognized that Alberta already has a strong learning system that is accessible, affordable, flexible, and responsive to the learning opportunities. However, consultation participants noted that more effort is needed in some areas to encourage more adults to re-embark on learning.

The lifelong learning committee reaffirms the government's commitment to building a globally recognized lifelong learning culture and community in Alberta. Learners, parents, instructors, volunteers, learning service providers, business, industry, government, community and professional organizations all share in the important task of building this lifelong learning culture in Alberta.

As the chair of the lifelong learning committee I would like to thank our committee members the hon. MLAs from Dunvegan, Wainwright, Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, and the many community adult learning councils, educational institutions, professional societies, learners, and the capable staff of the Ministry of Learning. I'm looking forward to the implementation of the lifelong learning culture in Alberta.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Project S.O.S. Helicopter

MR. LUKASZUK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It was just a simple question from 630 CHED's Bob Layton in a November 2000 editorial, and it said: why doesn't Edmonton have a police helicopter of its own? While Ed Bean of Crystal Glass challenged Bob's audience to match a hundred thousand dollar donation, Edmonton's businesses and citizens stepped forward, and the rest is history.

Mr. Speaker, working with the Edmonton Police Foundation, Project S.O.S. Helicopter has raised funds to lease Air-1 for one year. The foundation has now gone another step further to raise funds to buy the police helicopter. To raise these funds, they are selling lottery tickets at $100 per ticket, and they have over 1,854 prizes to be drawn on July 25, 2002.

So far, Mr. Speaker, in eight months alone the Air-1 helicopter has responded to over 1,200 emergency calls, safely handled 22 pursuits with no injuries – all offenders were apprehended – and one major incident on January 2 with four consecutive pursuits had 11 individuals being arrested. As you can see, Project S.O.S. Helicopter is a very good cause, and anyone who can help with their fund-raising, just pass on the word and we will be able to assist the Edmonton Police Foundation in their quest for safety in our city.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Future of Health Care

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This morning the New Democrat opposition presented its recommendations to the Commission on the Future of Health Care in Canada. We note that health reform is not a question of whether change is needed. It is. The question should be: how should Canada's health care system be changed?

New Democrats pioneered medicare and are committed to ensuring that it effectively serves the future needs of Canadians. We believe that reforms that advocate turning health care into a market commodity should be rejected. Health care is a public good, not a market commodity, and as such is best delivered by public institutions, nonprofit organizations, and health care professionals whose primary motivation is patient care, not shareholder profit.

The Alberta government by adopting the Mazankowski report is beginning from the premise that medicare is broken and cannot be financially sustained. Their disastrous agenda of privatization will mean that the sick, the injured, and those with chronic illness will pay more for the care they need. New Democrats want to strengthen and sustain medicare, not demolish it. The best way to contain health care costs is to expand medicare coverage, not shrink it. Reducing public funding of health care will not eliminate health care costs; it will only shift the cost to private insurers and out-of-pocket payments. There is no evidence that variable health care premiums, implementing medical savings accounts, or any other such cost-shifting plans either save money or improve efficiency. There is evidence, however, that when the opposite happens, costs in total do rise.

Some of our recommendations to the commission are that the federal funding share must be restored to a 50-50 funding partnership with the provinces, phased-in pharmacare, home care programs, and more 24-hour primary care centres with physicians, nurses, and other health care professionals working together as a team.

Medicare works. We need to take public health care to the next stage and make it a truly comprehensive service, one that guarantees equitable and timely access, high quality of care while remaining cost-effective and affordable.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Introduction of Bills

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Bill 31Security Management Statutes Amendment Act, 2002

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I beg leave today to introduce Bill 31, the Security Management Statutes Amendment Act, 2002.

Following September 11, Mr. Speaker, our Premier asked the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations to head up a security committee to re-evaluate and update security measures to ensure that Albertans were ready and the Alberta government was ready to deal with and to help prevent any threat of terrorist activity in our province. The task force conducted a thorough review and asked Justice to review all the statutes in the province with respect to emergency measures and security measures to make sure that Alberta was ready. The review, I'm pleased to advise, revealed that Alberta's disaster legislation and other legislation is strong and effective to keep our province safe.

We did find, however, Mr. Speaker, that there were some areas where the laws could be updated and improved and specifically to allow for dealing with issues of prevention rather than waiting for something to happen, and the bill that I'm introducing this afternoon proposes a number of amendments to provincial laws to enhance the protection that we provide to Albertans and the province's infrastructure, industry, natural resources, and environment. The law does this while respecting the rights and freedoms of all Alberta. It's a proactive step which will help to ensure that Alberta has the legal and strategic mechanisms in place to address any threat, public health emergency, or crisis.

As I've previously advised the House, Mr. Speaker, it's our intention to let the bill sit on the Order Paper until the fall session so that Albertans have a chance to look at the bill to see how the measures provided for impact on their daily lives.

I would ask leave to introduce the bill for first reading.

[Motion carried; Bill 31 read a first time]

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

THE CLERK: Pursuant to Standing Order 37.1(2) I wish to advise the House that the following document was deposited today with the office of the Clerk by the hon. Minister of Gaming: responses to questions raised on May 2, 2002, Department of Gaming, 2002-2003 Committee of Supply debate.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Finance.

MRS. NELSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I have four tablings. My first one is the written answers to questions raised by the opposition during Committee of Supply for my department on May 1 of this year.

The second tabling is the details of the grants, supplies and services, capital assets, and other from the general revenue fund for the year ended March 31, 2001.

My third tabling is the Members of the Legislative Assembly pension plan annual report for the year ended March 31, 2000.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, my fourth tabling is the Report of Selected Payments to Members and Former Members of the Legislative Assembly and Persons Directly Associated with Members of the Legislative Assembly for the year ended March 31, 2001. Additionally, the Clerk's office has copies for each of the members, and I have also taken the liberty of sending each member of the Assembly a copy to their legislative office. Due to the physical size of this tabling I will provide one copy of each of the tablings, and my office delivered four copies of each tabling to the Clerk's office earlier today.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Energy.

MR. SMITH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish to table today with the House questions and answers from April 17, 2002, Committee of Supply and questions that the Premier took under advisement for me May 6, May 7, and May 8.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

MR. DUNFORD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to table with the Assembly today a publication by our Department of Human Resources and Employment entitled Seekers and Storytellers: Aboriginal Role Models Share Their Career Journeys.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development.

MS CALAHASEN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'm pleased to table with the Assembly five copies of the annual report of the Metis Settlements Appeal Tribunal for the year 2001, and I'm very pleased to see that the chairman is seated in the gallery as well as Sarah Daniels. In fact, the tribunal has been very busy in the last while doing all sorts of things, and one of the exciting innovations actually has been the creation of case management panels. These panels hear preliminary issues, from the merit of appeals to whether to grant time waivers or interim decisions. I see that they're doing a really great job, so I'll file these today.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Solicitor General.

MRS. FORSYTH: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings. It's my pleasure to table five copies of the victims programs status report for the year 2000-2001. The report details the $1.3 million provided by my ministry to Alberta's 73 programs and 108 victims' services units, all run by volunteers that last year helped more than 38,000 victims of crime.

Mr. Speaker, I would also like to table five copies of the Law Enforcement Review Board annual report for 2001-2002.

Mr. Speaker, I'd also like to table the required number of copies of the response to Written Question 4 and Motion for a Return 1.

2:50

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

MR. BOUTILIER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish to table today in a timely fashion five copies of the responses to the questions raised in Committee of Supply for the Ministry of Municipal Affairs.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Economic Development.

MR. NORRIS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today with the appropriate number of copies of the activity report of Alberta Economic Development Authority. As you know, this is a volunteer body made up of businesspeople, men and women from throughout the province who from time to time advise the government on economic development and policy. I have the appropriate number of copies today.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

REV. ABBOTT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table five copies of a resolution of nonsupport for the Kyoto protocol by the village of Breton. It's signed by the mayor, Alan Barker. I know that our Minister of Energy and Minister of Environment are working on a made-in-Alberta plan, and that's exactly what these people are looking for.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish to table the appropriate number of copies of two letters that I received from constituents, both with respect to the community lottery boards. One is from Susan Riege, who is the chair of the play space enhancement project committee at Leo Nickerson elementary school, and the other one is from Mrs. Elizabeth Atkinson. Both of them have expressed their desire for the implementation of the moneys to be put to use in St. Albert.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

MRS. ADY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table copies of letters from my constituents regarding the deferral of the south Calgary high school project. I'm tabling 157 letters and e-mails from my constituents asking us to restore funding for the south Calgary high school project.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have the appropriate number of copies today of a large advertisement running in Calgary newspapers for full-body CT scans essentially for the purpose of screening. Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With your permission I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of an article which appeared in the Calgary Sun this morning, and in the article it outlines how an injured worker from Calgary has filed a $3.5 million lawsuit against the WCB for the treatment he received there. Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's with sadness that I rise to table today the appropriate number of copies of four amendments to Bill 26, the Workers' Compensation Amendment Act, 2002. Unfortunately, because of the use of closure, these amendments did not even have the opportunity to be discussed in this Assembly. The Legislative Assembly is the place to deal with amendments . . .

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table two documents. Both are in the number of required copies, five copies of each. The first one is a set of two memos from the Ministry of Human Resources and Employment, written by senior office holders. One memo is from December 4, 2001, and the second one is from April 25, 2002.

The second set, Mr. Speaker, is five copies of the New Democrat opposition's submission to the Romanow Commission on the Future of Health Care in Canada. Its title is Strengthening and Sustaining Medicare for Albertans, May 2002.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Orders of the Day

head: Royal Assent

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor will now attend upon the Assembly.

[The Deputy Premier and the Sergeant-At-Arms left the Chamber to attend the Lieutenant Governor]

[The Mace was draped]

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, in a matter of seconds the hon. Deputy Premier will return with Her Honour, and I want to thank the hon. Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan today for acknowledging the retirement of the head page. [applause] The head page is also an articulate young man, so I will read to you a letter that he has sent to all of you through me.

Mr. Speaker,

Sadly my time as a page has passed. It has been my pleasure serving the [Legislative Assembly of Alberta] for the past 3 years. I am very fortunate as a page. I am the only page to have the "hat trick" in a long time. First serving as a page, then second as Mr. Speaker's page, . . . and lastly serving as the Head Page. This has been the most rewarding experience of my life. Thank you!

Yours truly,

Brent Shewchuk

P.S. We should go and golf this summer!

The hon. members may also like to know that in the year 2001 in both the spring and the fall sessions – that is, in the calendar year 2001 – this Assembly spent 36 days at work with an accomplishment of 12,403 minutes. Thus far in the year 2002, this Assembly has sat for 37 days, and as that clock hits 3 o'clock, it will have arrived at 12,312 minutes.

[The Sergeant-at-Arms knocked on the main doors of the Chamber three times. The Assistant Sergeant-at-Arms opened the doors, and the Sergeant-at-Arms entered]

THE SERGEANT-AT-ARMS: All rise, please. Mr. Speaker, Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor awaits.

THE SPEAKER: Sergeant-at-Arms, admit Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor.

[Preceded by the Sergeant-at-Arms, Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor of Alberta, Lois E. Hole, CM, and the Deputy Premier entered the Chamber. Her Honour took her place upon the throne]

HER HONOUR: Please be seated.

THE SPEAKER: May it please Your Honour, the Legislative Assembly has at its present sitting passed certain bills to which and in the name of the Legislative Assembly I respectfully request Your Honour's assent.

THE CLERK: Your Honour, the following are the titles of the bills to which Your Honour's assent is prayed.

- 2 Child and Family Services Authorities Amendment Act, 2002
- 4 Public Health Amendment Act, 2002
- 5 Interjurisdictional Support Orders Act
- 6 Student Financial Assistance Act
- 7 Agriculture Financial Services Amendment Act, 2002
- 9 Child Welfare Amendment Act, 2002

- 10 Public Works Amendment Act, 2002
 11 Energy Information Statutes Amendment Act, 2002
 3:00
 13 Administrative Penalties and Related Matters Statutes Amendment Act, 2002
 14 Gaming and Liquor Amendment Act, 2002
 15 Dairy Industry Omnibus Act, 2002
 16 Racing Corporation Amendment Act, 2002
 18 Social Care Facilities Review Committee Amendment Act, 2002
 19 Veterinary Profession Amendment Act, 2002
 20 Justice Statutes Amendment Act, 2002
 21 Alberta Personal Income Tax Amendment Act, 2002
 22 Tobacco Tax Amendment Act, 2002
 23 Municipal Government Amendment Act, 2002
 24 Child Welfare Amendment Act, 2002 (No. 2)
 27 Appropriation Act, 2002
 28 Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act, 2002
 29 Intestate Succession Amendment Act, 2002
 202 Environmental Protection and Enhancement (Clean-up Instructions) Amendment Act, 2002
 205 School Trustee Statutes Amendment Act, 2002
 206 Fisheries (Alberta) Amendment Act, 2002
 Pr. 1 Synod of the Diocese of Edmonton Amendment Act, 2002

[The Lieutenant Governor indicated her assent]

THE CLERK: In Her Majesty's name Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor doth assent to these bills.

THE SERGEANT-AT-ARMS: All rise, please.

HER HONOUR: I wish you all a good, well-deserved holiday. [applause] I really would like to give you all a hug, but I can't.

THE SPEAKER: Your Honour, before leaving, please wave to everybody. There.

[Preceded by the Sergeant-at-Arms, the Lieutenant Governor and the Deputy Premier left the Chamber]

[The Mace was uncovered]

THE SPEAKER: Please be seated.

Hon. members, as we await the return of the hon. Deputy Premier, I'll just replay those numbers that I gave you a few minutes ago. In the calendar year 2001 in an accumulation of sitting in both the spring and fall sessions there was a total of 36 days, for 12,403 minutes. In the calendar year 2002 this is the 37th day of the sitting of this Assembly, an accumulation that at 3 o'clock today was 12,312 minutes. So if the hon. Government House Leader keeps you here for another 85 minutes, you will have surpassed the total amount of minutes spent last year.

Third Reading

Bill 26
Workers' Compensation Amendment Act, 2002

[Adjourned debate May 13: Mr. Stevens]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to be able to join in the debate on Bill 26 in third reading. I'd like to make just a few comments about the anticipated effect of this bill.

In essence what we have here is really a private institution that is regulated as a consumer protection function I think by the government. When we look at the buildup of concerns that had happened over a number of years of operation of the WCB, the top three on the hit parade of concerns were the long-standing, contentious claims, the way the appeals process worked, and the conflicting medical opinions and how those were handled. Of course, the conflicting medical opinions and the appeals panel are fairly closely linked. So those were the three areas where people most looked for change.

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

I think that when we look at the bill and what we anticipate the effect to be, we have, I would say, uneven results. A great deal of work was put into the long-standing, contentious claims section. This has been considered over a long period of time by two review committees, Justice Friedman's committee and the MLA review committee. This is a question of: is the glass half full or is the glass half empty? Without the agreement or the buy-in of who would be funding any rewards or payouts of a contentious claim appeal, it has the effect of being neutered in the legislation that's been put forward, and although the minister has appointed yet another MLA committee to meet with employers' representatives to try and encourage a buy-in both philosophically and monetarily, we will not know whether that's successful before we're expected to pass this bill in the next hour and 15 minutes. So it's inconclusive as to whether this bill is successful in addressing that concern.

There's again a good deal of work that is done in the bill around the appeals process and setting up the appeals process as being separate from the WCB board of directors. In fact, there is a very clear move to have the Appeals Commission report directly to the minister, which separates it from the influence and direction of the WCB, so the WCB cannot direct the Appeals Commission on how to behave or what to consider or what not to consider. That is a success. That is addressing one of the top three concerns on our hit parade here.

The final concern was the conflicting medical opinions. Now, this is the question that I was asking about during Committee of the Whole debate yesterday. I had referred to a backgrounder that came out with the media release from the department announcing the first reading of the bill, and I was pointing out that some of the information that I was hoping to find written into the act in fact only appeared in this backgrounder. My concern is that people are more likely to be able to find the act now and read it than they are to be able to find a media release backgrounder that was an attachment some years in the future.

In particular I'm looking for how that conflicting medical opinion medical panel is intended to operate, and I'm not getting a clear outline of that from what is in the legislation. The backgrounder is suggesting that where there are conflicting medical opinions, it is intended that a medical panel can be initiated by the WCB, by the Appeals Commission, or by the physician of an injured worker to get an independent, expert, consensus-based medical opinion.

That's what's missing for me: independent, expert, consensus-based medical opinion.

Now, when I went further back than that, I looked at what is commonly referred to as the Friedman report. In fact, the proper name for that is The WCB Appeal Systems: Are They Working

Well? Final Report, Review Committee of the Workers' Compensation Board Appeal Systems, sessional paper 130/2000. Again, I was reading the section on the medical resolution committee, it's called in this report, dealing with the issues of "conflicting medical opinions, WCB Medical Adviser documentary reviews, and the cost of obtaining another medical opinion."

Now, this is where the issue arises for most of my constituents. They end up in a situation where their doctor says one thing, the paper review, file review in other words, done by the WCB review panel differs from the worker's physician, and that's where it all seems to come off the rails. So it was anticipated by the Friedman report that – and I'm quoting from page 17:

Some people believe that the Medical Adviser should be compelled to discuss the matter with the treating physician and interview the worker, especially when a Medical Adviser's advice differs from the diagnosis of the treating physician.

In other words, trying to get everybody together in the same room to talk about this rather than having someone review someone's file documents, and that in my experience has been a point of great frustration for the workers.

Then it goes on to talk about having to pay for medical opinions, and they didn't believe that that should be the case. Now, that one I'm not as familiar with.

I also looked at some of the documents that have been prepared or e-mails that I've received from injured workers' associations and what they were feeling, and certainly they agree that what's in the legislation on the medical panels does fall short of what the Friedman committee's intent was in looking for a transparent process for reviewing these medical issues.

There are no quality-control safeguards to the independence of the medical panels, and it is leaving the formulation of the panels again up to the WCB. I don't know that that's as much of a concern as some people would think it is. The appeal panels are no longer under the direct influence of the WCB, so I don't know that the medical panels are such an issue.

The other issue that's come up around this – and this one gets confusing, and I hope that there's going to be an answer. I have tried to review Hansard to see if this question has been raised previously and whether the minister had answered it, and I don't see it, but frankly I could have missed it. That is the question of the indication that the findings of the medical panels will be binding on everybody. Well, if that's the case, then what's the point of an appeal? If what the medical panel has said is binding, then how do you appeal that? You're taking the same information forward again, and it can't be changed or altered. So what changes in the appeal?

This is different from where you have a very narrow focus on something like with the Ombudsman. The area that the Ombudsman has to investigate is really about whether an employee has provided the service that they were supposed to provide, and that's a fairly narrow focus. We're not even talking about that narrow a focus here. We're just saying that this set of information can't be altered or changed in any way. Then are your appeal panels even going to have any effect on this? Again, I'm not a lawyer. I don't have a legal opinion on this, but it strikes me that there could be a hitch in the git-along of the legislation here.

I'm assuming that the minister would have examined this and dealt with his lawyers in the legislative review committee, so perhaps there's an explanation for it. Otherwise, I think we could get into – what's that term that you get when you're doing finances on the computer? – circular logic, which is the little error message that you get, where we just keep going around in a circle here. We've already determined in one part of the act that the medical panel information is binding, and then we go on to talk about what's possible in the appeals act, but the two things now seem to be not in conflict with one another but not working together either. So those are the questions I have on the ultimate effect of that area.

There are a couple of other areas that I still think there is concern about, and they're linked. One is the special investigations unit, and the second is the increase in fines. One of the things that I find is a common error – lots of people make it, so I'm not faulting the government specifically – is that in trying to catch a few wrongdoers, they subject everyone to punitive measures or to an ordeal that is unnecessary. I call it the gate-crashers school of management, where in trying to stop a few people from gate-crashing a party, they subject everyone else to sort of long lineups to get tickets and show the tickets and get through the proper gate and everything else. None of that really addresses stopping the gate-crashers. Besides, were the gate-crashers that bad? Not that I'm saying that any kind of fraud being committed on workers' compensation should be allowable, but I have serious questions about the level of security and investigation that is encouraged through this act.

I think most people aren't aware of this. I suppose: why would they be? Unless you're covered by WCB or an employer that is paying into WCB, why would you know that there is this sort of special investigations unit set up? I think that based on the response of people and their reaction to having the video cameras mounted and videotaping public spaces in places across Canada, the reaction has been pretty consistent from Canadians saying: butt out of my life; I have an expectation and a reasonable expectation that I can go about my life without being videotaped and essentially checked or spied on.

There's a very fine line here that I have concerns about. I wonder if with this section or what's being allowed here with the special investigation unit and the fines that go along with it, we haven't set ourselves up for a Charter challenge on this one. I'm actually kind of surprised that we haven't had a Charter challenge already based on what seems to be a fairly frequent and freewheeling use of electronic means of recording people's activities, one presumes, in the hopes of finding them doing something that they're not supposed to do and therefore proving that there has been a fraudulent attempt to obtain WCB benefits. I suspect that that happens because the workers don't have enough money to mount a Charter challenge, but that day is coming. So I'm concerned about the effect of the sections that are enabling that and are encouraging it.

Also, around the fines – I tried to find out who had recommended that the fines be increased to such a substantial amount. It does strike me as being a bit punitive – no, very punitive; let's be frank there – and I don't know that that again is going to really scare anyone off from committing that fraud. It's just going to . . . [Ms Blakeman's speaking time expired]

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Any questions or comments for the hon. member?

The Minister of Innovation and Science.

MR. DOERKSEN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wanted to address the Assembly this afternoon because in fact I chaired the MLA WCB service review report, and I just wanted to talk about some of the things we had in the report and some of the things that the bill is addressing and to further encourage the board to be vigilant in the exercise of their duties, particularly with respect to injured workers. I do want to go back in time a little bit just to refresh again the memory of the members and indeed of all Albertans as to the process we went through in establishing some of the recommendations that came out of the report that I chaired.

One of the things that we intended to do right from the start was to talk to injured workers. We did not want to try to replicate a satisfaction survey that the Workers' Compensation Board put out on a regular basis. We actually wanted to talk to the people who were not satisfied and to find out what recommendations we could bring forward that would help to improve the system.

At the same time, Mr. Speaker, I knew from the outset that even with the filing of our report, the implementation of the recommendations, there were still going to be workers or employers that would not be completely satisfied. So we really entered into this whole examination, the whole study, to try to make the system better for a lot more people, and at the end of the day, when the legislation is complete and some of the recommendations that we have made which are more on the policy side or service delivery side are implemented, if in fact we have made things better for injured workers or at least a certain number of them, then I will be content that in fact we have achieved the outcome that I particularly desired.

A number of the recommendations within the report are not contained in the legislation because some of them have to be dealt with on a service review basis, from a case manager point of view, interacting with injured workers and assessing the case. So there were quite a number of our recommendations that in fact have to be dealt with in another place other than just through legislation.

One of those of course had to do around the whole area of communication with injured workers. There seemed to be certainly a disconnect or an element of distrust between the case worker and an injured worker. They both had their reasons and their rationale for the decisions that were being made, but we said: whatever you can do to improve the communication at that level will make things better. There needs to be clarity as to why decisions were reached when they were reached and to make sure that there was a full and proper examination of all the circumstances in making a decision. So, clearly, while that's not contained within the legislation, Mr. Speaker, communication was we thought a critical element, and I'm not going to spend a whole lot more time on that particular area.

I've talked briefly already about case management. In the feedback that we got from injured workers, the relationship with the case manager came up continually, and that was a very critical area that from a service point of view the Workers' Compensation Board had to look at and needs to look at on a continuous basis. To just implement certain strategies or procedures one day and think that that's going to answer the question forever just isn't good enough. This has to be an ongoing evaluation of what we are doing well, what we can do better, and what needs to be changed. So, Mr. Speaker, I would encourage the board to pay particular attention to case management, to the service levels, and to continue what I referred to in another question in this House as a relentless pursuit of excellence.

That is a critical element when it comes to dealing with injured workers. When you're injured, Mr. Speaker, the last thing you want to have is a confrontation with a case manager from the Workers' Compensation Board, because that's the time when you're the most vulnerable, when you're looking for help, and that's the time when the case manager has to be most empathetic and try to find how that help can be delivered within the parameters under which they are dealing. So our recommendations talked a lot about case management, and again a lot of those have to happen from a management point of view, from a service delivery point of view.

Mr. Speaker, we also talked a lot about accountability. This is where the legislation begins to have a significant impact with respect to the recommendations that we put forward in our report. The first one which we recommended was actually outside the mandate of the committee, but we heard about it so often that we thought that we could not leave this recommendation alone. That was to do with the independence of the Appeals Commission. There was an overriding sense from the injured workers that when they went to the Appeals Commission, they needed to know that this was an independent body, that it could not be influenced by the board and could not be influenced by outside parties, that they actually would get a fair and impartial hearing in determining a decision that was reached on their file. So even though it was outside of the mandate of our committee, we felt that we had to make that particular recommendation in our report, and in fact the legislation, Bill 26, provides for that independence. That's a significant step forward, and I am pleased to see that the minister has brought that forward and has in fact acted on that recommendation.

I would note also that for the most part during the deliberations of the two committees that were going on at the time, the one that I chaired and the one that Judge Friedman chaired, we did not talk to each other, although we had a common committee member. When we reached the end, I in fact sat down with Judge Friedman, and we just talked a little about what we had heard. There was a surprising consensus between the two of us that independently we had come up with many of the same overarching recommendations. I thought that that just gave more credibility to the recommendations we in fact put forward in our report.

[The Speaker in the chair]

One of the other significant recommendations had to do with an independent audit body. What we were striving at there is that it's one thing to do a financial audit whereby you just confirm the numbers or the cheques that were sent out, you confirm money that was received, and you make sure that the money got to the person intended. It's just making sure that the columns add up. That's what I consider a financial audit. Now, that's very important, but it needed to go beyond that. We were looking for an audit process that in fact looked behind those numbers and said: in view of the evidence before the case manager and the policies that they were under, did in fact the right decision get made? That's why we recommended this independent audit body that would go beyond the financial audit and actually look back and say: was the evidence there? Were the decisions, once they were reached by case managers or the Appeals Commission or whatever, then acted upon and followed through? In that respect under section 23 of Bill 26 it amends or puts in a new section where it in fact says that "the Auditor General is the auditor of the Board and the Accident Fund." So we've brought greater scrutiny, I believe, to the financial audit part of that. Then further it goes on to require the board to report "any other performance information that the Minister requires." It's on this point that I am encouraging the minister to make sure that that additional audit procedure in fact takes place under the authority that is given in the act. Clearly the authority is there to look behind the numbers to make sure that on a random basis you could check individual files to make sure that decisions are in fact acted upon and put into place.

Related to the accountability aspect that we emphasized in our report also came a recommendation from our committee. I do want to talk about this because this is a very important one. Our recommendation said that "the case manager must honour a decision made by the Claims Service Review Committee, Appeals Commission, or whichever new body might be established." What we found was that there were some cases where an Appeals Commission would in fact make a decision in favour of an injured worker and then the board would not implement that decision. There was no requirement for the board to implement that decision, and we said that clearly the board needs to be bound by a decision of the Appeals Commission. I am pleased to see in this act that that in fact has been entered into the bill. That's under section 13.1 where it does state that the board is bound by a decision of the Appeals Commission and by any decision rendered on an appeal or review of a decision of the Appeals Commission. So once you've had the hearing before the impartial Appeals Commission, the board is now bound by the decision that is reached by the Appeals Commission. That is an important element, because the board should not be allowed to overturn or change any decision that the appeal body has made because that in fact would render the whole appeals process immaterial and irrelevant.

There are two other elements that I want to bring up. One has to do with conflicting medical opinion. I noticed that the previous speaker questioned the medical finding of the panel to be binding on the board. I recognize the concern that was raised, but I might look at it from another point of view which is similar to my last point. That is that one of the issues we faced with injured workers was that when they came with their medical situation and were then required to go to a practitioner that was assigned by the Workers' Compensation Board, the previous medical opinion that was given by their local practitioner or a specialist was seemingly sometimes overturned and sometimes without even having an examination. Those are some of the comments that we got back from talking to injured workers and also from some of the written responses that we received from them.

So what we are saying here is that once a medical decision has been reached through this medical panel, again that is binding upon the board. In fact, they now have to accept the fact that this medical decision has been reached, and they now have to follow through with whatever compensation. [Mr. Doerksen's speaking time expired] Mr. Speaker, could I have unanimous consent to continue for another two minutes?

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, the hon. Minister of Innovation and Science requests unanimous consent to continue. Is any member opposed?

AN HON. MEMBER: No.

THE SPEAKER: I believe the next member is the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. OBERG: Can we have questions?

THE SPEAKER: Yes. Sorry.

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would really like to know what else the hon. minister had to say.

MR. DOERKSEN: In response to that question, I really wanted to talk about the long-standing claims, because that has been an important issue at our constituency offices and as we debated the legislation. All I wanted to point out is that through the recommendations of our report we remain committed to that. The process is taking longer than any of us would have hoped, but we're committed and have put in the legislation the fact that we will act upon those matters in conjunction with further consultation. So while the process has been delayed, we are committed to following through.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

REV. ABBOTT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was just very interested in what the hon. minister was saying and wondering if he could continue, please.

MR. DOERKSEN: Well, Mr. Speaker, actually I did manage to cover the point that I wanted to cover. I appreciate the opportunity to answer those questions. Thank you for that opportunity.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and speak for a few minutes on Bill 26, Workers' Compensation Amendment Act, 2002, in its third reading. When I look at this bill and what it accomplishes and what it contains and what it leaves out, it reminds me of the way in general the session that's just about to end has been characterized by flip-flops and broken promises. Flip-flops and broken promises, including money disappearing, reappearing in the Transportation budget. Before the election the government promised that there would be no increase in taxes, yet in this session we saw an increase in health taxes of 30 percent. Another flip-flop: the Learning minister told us that he would cap grade 10 credits, then reversed himself, and then reversed himself again.

Unfortunately this bill, Bill 26, also represents 18 months of promises, followed by six months of backtracking due to I guess pressure from some quarters, essentially the employers, over the review. There are some good amendments in this bill however, and I will touch on those later.

The most important recommendation coming out of the MLA review committee, the creation of a onetime review body to examine long-standing, contentious claims, has been watered down in this legislation. That is a disappointment, Mr. Speaker, because I, like many of my colleagues in this House, have had to deal with complaints coming from constituents whose lives have been ruined first by injury and then by denial of claims, with continuing problems in recovering from the very serious injuries they have had. They lost their income. They lost their jobs. Some of them lost their families and certainly lost their health. They have these claims that they need addressed effectively and quickly, and the watering down of that provision in this bill is therefore a great disappointment to them and to me, one who was privy to their concerns and has made representations on their behalf to various places and bodies.

More than this watering down, the very realization of this review body has been jeopardized by pressures from employers, I'm told. The review body I think was a very, very important step to take. I would like to make a few comments about why this review body is so important. I'm not simply rehearsing some clichés or platitudes here, because I'm well aware of the devastating impact that injury can have on workers. I'm sure many of my colleagues in this House are aware of the devastating effect that injuries and fatalities have either on workers or on their families or both.

Through my constituency office, Mr. Speaker, I've been involved in several extremely contentious claims, some of which are over a decade old, and that's a long time for anyone to wait. Meanwhile, many of these people have nothing to fall back on. They're simply pushed into poverty and despair and continued physical suffering. What we have found with such workers is that when the WCB system fails, its failures, its errors, its mistakes, its omissions become compounded and certainly impact negatively the lives of workers who are injured and who duly expect that they will have the protection that the Workers' Compensation Act is supposed to provide to them. What is worse is that workers whose claims have been denied by the WCB often find themselves with no other recourse. Because of the very nature of the WCB legislation they have surrendered their right to go to another place to seek redress to their complaints through the courts.

I've seen examples where injuries have led to failed WCB claims which were then compounded by inadequate access to our health care system. I've spoken with workers who have been denied benefits by the WCB yet were unable to work because their injuries impaired their capacity to work. The WCB says that they should go back to work, yet their own physical condition is such that they're unable to go back to work. And if they try, because of their injuries or impairments they simply are not hired or there's a very low likelihood that they'd be hired by an employer because they look sick, they are sick, they limp, and they groan. They simply lose any opportunity to find a job, and they are denied benefits, so they are between a rock and a hard place. It's very difficult, and they find their lives complicated and made miserable because of this WCB framework failure. These people are forced to turn to supports for independence as a result and in the worst cases have been denied benefits there as well. It was sort of a place of last resort to go to, a last resort step, yet they're faced with refusals and negative decisions there as well.

Such injured workers, Mr. Speaker, should be focusing their attention and their energies on healing their bodies and preparing for their return to work, rather than having to be mired in a life of despair, loss of hope, and continuing physical pain and suffering. Instead, they are forced to jump through hoops and fight their way through the WCB bureaucracy and its unfathomable maze. So it's clear to anyone who is willing to see that there's a real need for justice for these workers, and it's my hope that a review body will be able to deliver such justice.

My colleague from Edmonton-Highlands introduced an amendment during the committee stage of this bill which we believe would have fostered a fair compromise between employer concerns regarding costs, the government's responsibility to ensure that the WCB is held accountable, and the real needs of injured workers for a fair review of their claims. Basically, this amendment would have introduced a small surcharge that would have been added to employer premiums. This surcharge would have been used to fund any onetime awards that came out of the review of long-standing claims. If the actual costs were bigger than projected, then the surcharge could be extended. If, on the other hand, the actual costs were less than projected, then the surcharge could be eliminated sooner than anticipated. Essentially the surcharge would have ensured that employers took responsibility for compensating workers that were injured on the job. There is nothing radical or revolutionary about it. This is always a fundamental component of the Meredith principle. Employers would be able to meet their obligations without having to find the financial resources all at one time.

Although the amendment was defeated, the Minister of Human Resources and Employment expressed considerable interest in the amendment and support for the ideas embodied in the amendment and promised to pursue the idea. I commend him for keeping an open mind on this. We the New Democrat opposition look forward to seeing this problem resolved and hope that a fair and trustworthy review process can be established in a timely manner, even though in this bill that is likely to become a legislation there is no statutory provision to pursue that exclusively.

I want to conclude, Mr. Speaker, by saying that I'd like to acknowledge at least a couple of positive steps that this legislation takes. I am pleased to see the increase in various penalties and fines, and one hopes that these increases in penalties will help promote safer working environments and safer workplaces. We are also happy to see that the Auditor General will now be the auditor of the WCB and that the scope of the audit is also broader than it's normally assumed to be; that is, it will go beyond a financial audit, which is good. Hopefully this will help to increase the transparency and accountability of the board.

Ultimately, because of the fact that this bill fails to address up front the matter of dealing with those long-standing claims and is not willing to put the statutory weight behind that process, we'll be unable to support Bill 26, and that's regrettable. There are lots of good things in the bill, but it does fail in one crucial respect.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Finance.

MRS. NELSON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm not going to speak long on this bill, and I normally wouldn't be up talking at all. However, as the MLA for Calgary-Foothills I had the opportunity to go through a process with workers' compensation and with the board. I don't often have an awful lot of cases in my constituency, but this particular one I wanted to talk to and why I support this bill. I have to say in all honesty that I normally wouldn't be too much in favour of this type of legislation; however, after the experience that we have gone through in our constituency, I believe that this is the right direction and this is a solution that is absolutely necessary to deal with some very, very difficult circumstances that do arise.

I want to start off, Mr. Speaker, by complimenting the authors of the report of the Workers' Compensation Board Service Review Input Committee that filed their final report in October of the year 2000. I also want to thank one of our colleagues, the Member for Calgary-Montrose, who certainly has an awful lot more cases dealing with WCB than I do and was very helpful when I had to deal with a particularly difficult case. I am going to refer to the actual case without naming the constituent, of course, and the process we went through, and maybe people will understand why I support this piece of legislation.

About three and a half years ago I met a constituent who phoned me who was having some severe difficulties with the existing WC process. His name was James and he was 44 years old. In 1979 he had been a painter, an outside painter, and had fallen off a roof and broken his back. He was hospitalized for a year while they did corrective work on him and actually implanted a steel bar in his spine with clamps to hold the spine in place. There was an awful lot of rehabilitation that had to take place, and he worked very hard to literally get back on his feet. He went back to work, and this time he worked as an inside painter to take away the risk of the outside.

Well, that worked fine until he went to move a fridge when he was painting an apartment building and the back snapped again. What happened was that the back had not, I guess, healed and knitted together properly. Again he was back in hospital and off work, went through rehabilitation and went back to work again as a painter. This is what he was trained to do. He was back inside painting apartments, and in 1983, while he was trying to work albeit not as full-time as he might have because he was still injured, a heater fell over and caught his trousers on fire and burnt his leg. He was rushed to hospital and had to have extensive surgery to deal with the burn. So now we've had the back broken twice and a burnt leg. They had to do some skin grafting and try and heal up this extensive third-degree burn on his leg.

He tried to go back to work, but he wasn't recovering well. He would get part-time jobs here and there and in the meantime was going through a process with WCB for the time that he had been off work to try and get some coverage for that time frame. All of his savings and moneys that he and his wife had had were gone because he'd been out of work through the recovery process.

There were three clear cases of where he'd been injured on the job. When he contacted my office and myself, I thought: "This can't be that difficult. The case is quite clear. Someone has been injured. There's a process in place, and this should be followed and a resolution reached rather quickly." It seemed like a fairly clear-cut case to me. Well, of course, then we got into the process, and while we had reports that showed the caseworkers had checked – he had filed medical evidence from various doctors, some being from specialists in skin surgery that had been involved and the people who had monitored him at the hospital in Calgary, that showed he had definite damage. In fact, when I actually physically met him, he was in a body cast from his neck to just below his thighs. The report from his caseworker said that he only had a 35 percent disability, yet he couldn't stand, he couldn't sit, and he couldn't walk. He could barely lay down. He was in a body cast. They said: oh, he doesn't have a disability. I thought: there must be an error; these files can't fit the person that I'm sitting here with. There was medical evidence from the hospitals, from his attending doctor, from his own doctor that said that he would never be able to work again. In reviewing it, though, the medical examiner from the other side said that there was nothing wrong with him and he would have limited disability and should be able to return to work. There was total contradiction. So I got involved in this particular case extensively, almost on a weekly basis, and I had not done that before.

Then we got into where he was injured in 1997, and he'd been reinjured again, not as extensively as before but basically it disabled him totally. I went through the process of phoning the WCB offices, acting on behalf of my constituent, which I thought I should do as the MLA for Calgary-Foothills. This was my job, to help my constituents. I basically got shuffled three to the left and four to the right. I wasn't very happy, to the point where I was actually going to camp out on the front steps with the people that I had seen doing that. I was not a very happy camper.

Things progressed, and then I got further in the file. There was a thing, Mr. Speaker, that came in 1999 from the Calgary regional health authority. It had sent him a letter saying: we regret to inform you that when you were in having your surgery for the burn on your leg in 1983, you were likely given a bad blood transfusion, and would you please proceed immediately to the lab for testing for hepatitis C. So my constituent then went over to the regional lab, and sure enough he tested positive for hepatitis C. So here's this poor gentleman in a body cast, broken back twice, burnt leg, and now hepatitis C.

I then further took it upon myself to phone the Ernst & Young people down in Montreal who were dealing with the tainted blood issue to see if I could get some help for this constituent from that angle. They said: well, we only deal from 1986 forward; everyone before 1986 has passed away. I said: well, not my constituent, and he's been identified as having hepatitis C. They basically told me to get lost, that this would be dealt with through his estate and that there was nothing that could be done.

Then I got mad. My Welsh blood came out, I have to admit, and I went and served as his representative at his appeal process, the first I went through, and I had oodles of paper and thought: we're ready for this appeal. I was advised that MLAs shouldn't really do that, that it should be a legal person. I'm not a lawyer, but I thought: no; I'm intimately into this case; I am going with my constituent. So I did, and we lost. I was shocked. I couldn't believe that with such a clear-cut case, all the evidence there medically and professionally, we lost. So I said: we're not going to stop.

They even played a game on me. In the middle of the last election, during the writ time, they called and said, "We're going to have a follow-up final appeal," of course naturally thinking that anybody running for election would not take the time out of the campaign to go. Wrong-o. I dropped the campaign, and I went to the appeal with my constituent, James, in his body cast, in a wheelchair. I took him in, and again they said: you're not a lawyer. I said: I can represent this constituent as well as anybody can because he is right and he has been wronged. We went through that appeal process, and we had the facts. We laid them out. It was the final type of appeal. We won the case, Mr. Speaker. We won the case finally and got a settlement for James retroactive to 1997. We got recognition that in fact he was disabled.

The point I'm trying to make is that the process was so difficult. The process was so cumbersome that here was my constituent in a body cast who'd spent years and years without help, with total frustration, in financial difficulty, and he had to rely upon his MLA to come and help him out when the system should have been there to respond. I remember when I was an employer in the oil patch, which paid high premiums, and we used to complain. We paid those premiums willingly so that if someone had the misfortune of being injured on the job, they would be cared for. No one wanted to see anybody go without or be injured and their families go without. That was what the purpose was.

Well, if the hon. minister had told me about this process a few years ago, I would have thought: I don't think there's an alternative. I've been through the process with my constituent, now more than one. I don't recommend it for anyone. It's very difficult. It's very heartrending. But this provides the alternative, because what we have right now is not working. It's just not working, so we need to move forward with this. We have to give assurances to our industries that we're not looking for skeletons. We're looking for fairness. We're looking at providing our injured workers with hope that there is an end to the dispute and that there's a resolution coming forward. This isn't about going and grabbing money. This is about dealing with this issue up front and providing dignity and hope back to our injured workers.

I would say to all hon. members that while it may not be perfect, it may not be exactly what we all want, sometimes life isn't like that. Sometimes we have to take a hard stand. I know James and his wife, Dana, have had almost 20 years of living hell, and I don't mean to say – that's not a nasty word in this form, Mr. Speaker. I've watched them deteriorate, and I can tell you that about a week after the last election, when we finally got the final word that James' case had been awarded, there wasn't a family that was happier, because they were able to actually pay their rent, buy their groceries, and have a little bit extra to pay for some of the things that they hadn't had. Now, it's many years late, but at least it's there.

So I would applaud the minister for bringing this forward. Again I applaud the committee that went out and looked at this square on, looked at the process and with some difficulty brought it forward. I don't think there can be an MLA in this Legislature that doesn't have tough cases come through their constituency door. I think that it's incumbent on us to move forward.

I thank the Assembly for this opportunity to talk about James, because in my view this bill is for James. Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: Questions or comments, hon. members?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure to rise this afternoon and speak to Bill 26, the Workers' Compensation Amendment Act, 2002. I think that in speaking to it at third reading, there are some very critical things that have to be brought out on the floor when we address the final form of this particular bill.

The Minister of Finance talked about contradictions, and certainly any MLA that's ever dealt with WCB knows that there are contradictions, whether it be from the employer's side, whether it would be from the injured worker's side. I've said this before and I say it again. After five years in this Assembly we are on the floor and we are discussing Bill 26, and it only came about because we had a minister who was committed to making the system better, because we had people like Judge Friedman and the all-MLA committee chaired by the hon. Member for Red Deer-South. They did a marvelous job at what they'd set out to do. I think, Mr. Speaker, I can say in all honesty that they did too good a job, because what people had called for and what we ended up with here are different. They are different. It certainly is a great starting place.

I think that there's still a lot of work to be done on this bill. We have to realize that this bill was brought forward not for the 85 percent of people who have a strong approval of WCB, the people who get the injuries that heal in a relatively short period of time or whatever. This was brought up for those 15 percent of injured workers who have contentious claims. These are long-standing claims, and in many of these cases these people will never be allowed because of their physical condition to return to the type of employment they had.

The other thing we have to realize here too, Mr. Speaker, is that when this bill came forward, so many of these types of people that are injured in this way – these are people that are in very labour-intensive jobs. For them to look at retraining, to look at some other line of work, they certainly have a great deal of difficulty.

Anyway, there are so many things when we look at this bill that I think are improvements, and there are a number of things that I wish I would have seen in the bill. You know, we're dealing with contradictions. We have the Member for Red Deer-South, who did such a marvelous job chairing the committee, finishing his time speaking to the bill and asking for unanimous consent to continue speaking when closure was brought in to limit the amount of speaking time by members. I certainly think that the Minister of Learning was very sharp on his feet there and made the request of the hon. Member for Red Deer-South to get in those final points because I think they're critical to this whole process. But we still have the contradiction that here we're bringing in closure, yet we have a minister of the Crown asking for additional time. Something is not working there.

Now, then, what is one of the things that we wanted to bring into this bill which was lacking? It was certainly accountability. One of the major principles of Bill 26 was to bring accountability to a system and to a board which would represent not only the injured worker but the interests of the employer as well. There always is pull and push, and this system will always exist in this fashion. It will occur in this fashion, Mr. Speaker, because we do have an employer who is paying for the system, because we do have an injured worker who certainly wants benefits, benefits which will allow him to live with respect and dignity, benefits when he can't return to work or she can't return to work to at least have some quality in their life.

Unfortunately, this whole idea of fairness in the system has not been there, and we have seen in these particularly small numbers of contentious claims where this has not happened. Because it hasn't happened, we've had any number of breakups of families that have been destroyed, of lives that have been destroyed. How many of these people that have these long-term, contentious claims would say, "They injured my body first, and then they injured my mind."? The chances for them to ever return are very, very small.

Now, then, in looking at the bill, as I've mentioned, there are a number of issues and principles that were addressed here. Certainly one is fairness, and we want fairness for the injured worker. I think that particularly from Judge Friedman's report there have been over time situations that have arisen in WCB that certainly do contribute to this culture of denial. We see a system that has evolved, and what I think Bill 26 was attempting to fix was this whole situation where we had injured workers who probably throughout their employment years had been in labour-intensive jobs, people that certainly did not have the resources, did not have the knowledge to combat the system to get fair and equal treatment.

I think that what we've seen here are some attempts in this bill to move this forward, and as I look at this bill I certainly like the greater importance of medical panels. However, I'm not in favour of the way the board has so much input into the medical panels. So the rules governing the makeup of those medical panels again does not indicate a totally level playing field for the injured worker.

As well, when we talk about accountability, Mr. Speaker, I certainly support the idea of the Auditor General now being involved in the workings of the WCB, and I think that in the report he or she would certainly bring to the attention of Albertans and particularly employers, who are paying for this system, situations like occurred in 1999, when we had $1.3 million in termination benefits.

AN HON. MEMBER: How much?

MR. BONNER: One point 3 million. People got paid those types of benefits while the WCB was in the process of losing $130 million.

MR. MacDONALD: That's performance.

MR. BONNER: Yes.

I think what also would happen is that the Auditor General would look at something called the rate and benefit stabilization reserve, which had $211 million in it. Now, this is for the type of claims that we're talking about here, and this money could definitely have been used to help settle some of these long-standing, contentious claims.

I see that in 1999, $55 million was removed from this fund. It certainly didn't go for the purposes for which it was designated. That left us with $156 million, and I see in the annual report of 2000 that the other $156 million was removed from the rate and benefit stabilization reserve. I think this is certainly something that the Auditor General would have commented on and been quite critical of, this board doing this particular thing in light of the fact that at that point these investigations and these review committees were in place.

As well, I think what the Auditor General would look at when we're talking about accountability in the system is the average actual compared to the average required premium rate for operating the WCB. He would certainly look at WCB figures, and referring to page 35 of the annual general report, the 2000 report, we have a summary where in 1997, for example, it cost the WCB $1.50 per hundred to operate and employers paid $1.50 per hundred. As we move forward to 1999, it took $1.64 to operate the system, yet employers were only charged $1.06. So 58 cents per hundred was not collected from the employers, so they did not fund their own system. Now, then, in the year 2000 the average cost of operating the system was $1.74, yet employers were only charged $1.12. Again, when we're talking about a system that is accountable, when we talk about a system that is fair, how can people not be paying what it costs to run the system? Yet we have injured workers who are not getting fair benefits, and that after all is why the minister did put forward Bill 26.

Now, then, as well, when we look at Bill 26, I think that there certainly is more openness in the way the board is doing business. I see in section 7.1(1): "The Board shall hold an annual general meeting, which must be open to the public." I've had calls from injured workers all over this province who are looking forward to attending that first board meeting. I think this is a positive. I think when we are talking about accountability and we have a board that had revenues in our latest statements here of $825 million and managing assets in the neighbourhood of $4.28 billion, the board of directors should be meeting quite often and certainly more than every two months.

The other thing that I want to get in before my time is up, Mr. Speaker, is this idea of this whole special investigation unit. This unit has been used extensively, particularly on the type of claims that the bill is trying to identify or take care of, and those are the long-term, contentious claims. The violation of people's privacy in order to get some type of footage for a very, very small portion of people who are getting benefits that they shouldn't get is totally inconceivable. I can't think of anything that is a greater violation of injured workers' rights than the special investigation unit. Not only are they photographed, but family members have been as well. They're quite concerned that the tapes they get are edited tapes. Certainly what I would have liked to have seen in Bill 26 were some checks and balances on these types of things.

Mr. Speaker, in conclusion, I wish I had more time to speak to Bill 26, but that is it. Thank you for this opportunity.

THE SPEAKER: Question and answer period. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

MR. McCLELLAND: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wonder if I could ask the hon. member opposite why there seems to be this fixation with the number of meetings per year of the board of directors when the board of directors is able to meet as often as is deemed necessary. What is behind this notion that because the board is not mandated to meet every month or every two weeks, somehow this equals the Workers' Compensation Board being dysfunctional? The legislation does not prohibit meetings.

MR. BONNER: That's an excellent question, Mr. Speaker, and certainly one that I know employers and injured workers have a great concern with. We are looking at a board of directors that's handling over $4 billion of employers' money here in the province of Alberta and they are not scheduled to meet on a regular basis. I think that is certainly not accountability.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

MR. McCLELLAND: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. If the board of directors of, for instance, the Royal Bank meets once every six months – and they deal with a lot more money. Is the criteria for the number of meetings that are held the amount of money that is handled or the need to meet as a board of directors?

4:20

MR. BONNER: Again, this has to deal, Mr. Speaker, with this whole idea of accountability. The board of directors for the Royal Bank is responsible to shareholders. The WCB in my estimation is responsible to those people who are paying the freight, and that's the employers in this province, and it should be at their direction when they meet, not the board's.

Thank you.

MR. SNELGROVE: The opposition seems to think that if they feed the horse enough oats, the birds will get fed too. I was just curious: how many employees have any of the opposition members had in their business careers?

MR. BONNER: Well, I really can't say how many people have been in business. When we talk amongst the people here, I know that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar has been involved in the business community. I have, and I know that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods has also been self-employed at some point. So, yes, a number of people I think have had that type of experience. I know that the Leader of the Official Opposition was certainly a farmer and very successful at it.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

MR. McCLELLAND: Thank you again, Mr. Speaker. Is it possible that the Member for Edmonton-Glengarry is confusing the role of management with the role of the board of directors?

MR. BONNER: No, Mr. Speaker. Obviously the hon. member has missed the point here. We are talking about accountability, and this hon. member is certainly missing the point that the board of directors has a very vital role to play in the operations at the WCB and that as well they are very, very responsible for their . . .

THE SPEAKER: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry, but pursuant to Government Motion 28, agreed to on May 13, 2002, I must now put the question before the Assembly.

[Motion carried; Bill 26 read a third time]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to move that the Assembly adjourn pursuant to Government Motion 26 agreed to by the Assembly on Monday, May 13, 2002.

[Motion carried; pursuant to Government Motion 26 the Assembly adjourned at 4:24 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Tuesday, November 19, 2002 1:30 p.m.
 Date: 02/11/19
 [The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

THE SPEAKER: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. As Canadians and as Albertans we give thanks for the precious gifts of freedom and peace which we enjoy. As Members of this Legislative Assembly we rededicate ourselves to the valued traditions of parliamentary democracy as a means of serving our province and our country. Amen.

Hon. members, would you please remain standing for the singing of our national anthem as we're led by Mr. Paul Lorieau.

HON. MEMBERS:

O Canada, our home and native land!
 True patriot love in all thy sons command.
 With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
 The True North strong and free!
 From far and wide, O Canada,
 We stand on guard for thee.
 God keep our land glorious and free!
 O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
 O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

THE SPEAKER: Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Guests

THE SPEAKER: The hon. the Premier.

MR. KLEIN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to welcome back to the Legislature Mr. Roy Hale, who devoted 31 years as this building's carpenter. He retired in April of 1985. Those of you who remember when Roy was here will attest that no task was impossible, and he always came and left with a smile. There are lasting examples of his work in the building. Indeed, the gavel in the cabinet room, which hasn't broken yet, was made by him and passed from Premier to Premier. Roy is here today with his granddaughter Sherilyn Hale, who is studying anthropology at the University of Alberta. Roy and Sherilyn are seated in the members' gallery. I would ask that they both rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, we have quite a list today, so please be a bit patient.

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly Mr. Mark McCullough. Mr. McCullough is executive director of the Alberta Building Trades Council and a member of the Alberta government's Kyoto External Advisory Committee. Mr. McCullough's professional experience places him in an excellent position to provide our government with labour's perspective on the Kyoto protocol. His long career, beginning as a journeyman ironworker, includes representing labour organizations on projects such as the construction of the NOVA Chemicals expansion in Joffre and the Shell Scotford upgrader in Fort Saskatchewan. He joins us today to witness the tabling of the government's Climate Change and Emissions Management Act. Joining Mr. McCullough is Adrien Graci, public relations manager for the Alberta Building Trades Council. I would ask that they both stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly. They are seated in the members' gallery.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly Mr. John Lynch. Many members of the Assembly will recognize Mr. Lynch, who resides in my constituency of Edmonton-Whitemud. He's here today to observe the proceedings of the House. John is presently the executive director of the Social Justice Commission with the Archdiocese of Edmonton, but he's previously served as a member of the Metis Settlements Transition Commission and an executive director with the Human Rights Commission. John is seated in the members' gallery, and I'd ask that he rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

MR. BOUTILIER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce a young Albertan who really reflects the energy that we have in this province, and that's both natural resource energy and also youthful energy. He is a member of Mount Royal College in Calgary. He comes from Fort McMurray, and he also is the president of PC Youth here in Alberta. I'd like to ask Blake Robert to rise and recognize the warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

REV. ABBOTT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It also gives me great pleasure to rise today and to introduce Mr. Darren Aldous. Darren is the vice-president of villages for the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association and also a village councillor in the wonderful town of Breton, where I lived for 11 and a half years. Darren is accompanied today by his two beautiful daughters, Bobbi and Bailee, and I'll ask them all to stand and receive the warm welcome of the House.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

MRS. JABLONSKI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour and a pleasure for me to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly two good friends, who serve this government and the people of Alberta very well. Serving as a volunteer in a central Alberta community and now as executive director of the PC Party is Marilyn Haley. With Marilyn is another good friend, my constituent and a distinguished member of the PC Party. Born in Red Deer and raised on a farm in Delburne, he operated a small cow/calf herd that paid for his education. Admitted to the bar in 1980 and a founding partner in the 10-member Red Deer law firm of Sisson Warren Sinclair, he serves farmers and small businessmen. He's married to Sandy and has a handsome young son, Mitchell, and a beautiful little daughter, Natalie. Dedicated to serving his community and his province, we are honoured to have Mr. Chris Warren, president of the provincial Progressive Conservative Party, with us here today. They are all seated in the members' gallery, and I would ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

MR. MASKELL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure indeed to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Legislature 16 special guests today from Meadowlark elementary school. They're spending the week here at the Legislature taking part in the special programs that we run for students. The 16 include Ms Armelle Moreau, their teacher, and parent Mrs. April Kiely. Meadowlark elementary school, would you please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Legislature.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan.

MR. LOUGHEED: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly a couple of classes from Fultonvale elementary school accompanied by Mrs. Karin Bittner, Mrs. Karen Shevy, student teacher Miss Crystal Myroniuk, and several parents.

Also, from Wye school are three classes accompanied by their teachers Janet Manson, Carol O'Connell, and Allison Baker.

In addition, Mr. Speaker, to these teachers and these classes and the parents that are accompanying them, I'd also like to introduce from the Alberta Disability Forum Ms Bev Matthiessen accompanied by Kim Cassidy. I'd ask them all to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Medicine Hat.

MR. RENNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a constituent of mine who has joined us here in the Legislature for his first time. Mr. Mario Rossetto from Medicine Hat is a newly elected first-term member of the Medicine Hat Catholic school board and is in Edmonton attending the deliberations of the school trustees, and I'm very pleased that he took some time off to come down and join us here at the Legislature and see how business is conducted at this level of government. Mr. Speaker, would you please join me in asking members of the Assembly to give Mr. Mario Rossetto, who is, I believe, seated in the members' gallery, a warm round of applause.

1:40

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

MR. HUTTON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Before my father passed away, he said to me: son, please don't forget the Sally Ann; they were there for us during the Second World War providing us with hot tea, warm blankets, and kind words. Over the past 20 years I've tried to do my small part to assist the Salvation Army and have met a wonderful group in that organization, and today in the public gallery is one of those extraordinary, selfless individuals, Captain Mark Hall. Captain Hall spent several weeks at ground zero in New York assisting the rescuers and the victims' families after the horrendous acts. He also assisted our province in honouring those victims in this very Assembly on September 11. Mark Hall is a minister, and I believe he enjoys playing the clarinet. I would ask Captain Mark Hall to please rise and accept the warm welcome and thank you from this Assembly.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

MR. LUKASZUK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed a pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly four groups of individuals, who are seated in both galleries, and they are members and executives of the Alberta College of Social Workers, Alberta Teachers' Association, the Edmonton Social Planning Council, and last but not least, the Family and Community Support Services of Alberta. I would ask them all to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, I know that your groups are not here yet, but chances are that it'll be 3 o'clock before we finish.

MS BLAKEMAN: That's fine. Thanks.

DR. PANNU: Mr. Speaker, my guests are also late arriving, so I'll seek your permission later on.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you a person who is here to talk to her representatives about SFI and AISH rates and who I hope is in the gallery, Helga Mathison, and her attendant, Andy Nicolai. Would they please indicate and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Environment.

DR. TAYLOR: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and to the members of this Assembly four individuals. We have Mr. Ed Greenberg, the director of public affairs and government relations for the Alberta Forest Products Association; Mr. Mike Heck, president and CEO of the Federation of Alberta Gas Co-ops and chair of the Alberta Rural Utilities Association; Mr. Kim Royal, president of the Alberta Motor Transport Association; and Mr. Brian McCready, vice-president of the Alberta branch of Canadian manufacturers and exporters. They are here today in support of the introduction of our bill Alberta's Climate Change and Emissions Management Act, and I'd ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of the House.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

MR. MAGNUS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the gallery today I just noticed that there are two very good friends of mine as well as of many Members of this Legislative Assembly. To you and through you to members of this House I'd like to introduce them and ask them to stand when I name them. Bart West from ATCO is with us today as well as Alan Hallman from Calgary, and I'd ask them to stand and receive the warm welcome of this Legislature.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Government Services.

MR. COUTTS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly four gentlemen who are sitting in your gallery who have something to do with every single solitary member of this Assembly and every single solitary ministry of this Assembly. It gives me great pleasure to introduce the watchdogs of this Assembly and their offices. Today we have with us Mr. Fred Dunn, the Auditor General of the province of Alberta; Mr. Bob Clark, the Ethics Commissioner for the province of Alberta; Mr. Frank Work, the Information and Privacy Commissioner for the province of Alberta; and the Chief Electoral Officer for the province of Alberta, Mr. Brian Fjeldheim. They are sitting in your gallery. I ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It gives me a great deal of pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Ruth Cardenas, who's with Chrysalis; Phyllis Javorsky, who's with the Muscular Dystrophy Association; and Tanya Starr, who is a social work student with Grant MacEwan Community College. They are seated in the members' gallery, and with your permission I would now ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the House.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise again to introduce to you and through you to the Assembly three representatives of the United Nurses of Alberta who are here to observe today's proceedings: Jane Sustrik, Bev Dick, and Karen Craik. I would ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Ministerial Statements

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

Sharla Marie Collier

MS EVANS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is with an enormously sad heart that I rise today to speak about a tragic loss that has befallen us. On Saturday a young youth and child worker, Sharla Collier, was killed in Lethbridge, and a 14-year-old boy has been charged with her first-degree murder.

This is a tragedy that is unfathomable. It was unforeseen, and the resulting shock and disbelief makes it all the more difficult to understand. We're all tormented that this terrible act has occurred. It is so senseless. We share the enormous grief over the death of a young woman who wanted only to help, a woman who was committed to children and youth. It is a tragedy we all bear with heavy hearts. Still, the depth of our grief is so much less than of those who loved her and knew her personally. My heart goes out to all who are hurting: her family, her fiance, friends, and coworkers.

On behalf of the government of Alberta and of the Ministry of Children's Services I want to express profound sadness and sympathies to the families, friends, and loved ones of Sharla Collier. This is such a trying time, and there are many questions that we hope and pray will provide answers and eventually some comfort and peace to the family.

Sharla had graduated this year from college and was making a difference in the lives of young people in our province. We should all be proud of her accomplishments and give thanks to all those who work to make a difference and to benefit children and youth. This work is of critical importance to families and to our society, and I'm deeply concerned that ministry and agency staff have safe work environments and that we do all that we can to ensure that a tragedy like this will never happen again.

I've called a special investigative review, to be led by an independent third party, to look into the circumstances surrounding this case. This review will examine all aspects of what happened, including supports and services that were provided to the youth involved and, most paramount, the issue of staff safety. We cannot prejudge or speculate about what may have occurred but must let due process lead us to the answers and lead us to better practices that can do more to ensure the safety of all of our workers. Sun Country child and family services authority has already begun a review and debriefing, and we can expect their findings soon. It will be something we can all learn from.

This tragedy is heartbreaking. It has shaken our world. I pledge that this ministry shall ensure that every possible lesson that can be realized from these reviews will be shared openly with staff from all regions to prevent any similar tragic occurrence.

Thank you and amen.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Korvette Crier, Aaron Grey, Angel Kerrigan-Kinahan, Shaniece Kerrigan-Kinahan, Shayleen Lightning, Lonnie Thom, Kristen Johnson, Helen Rose Rain, Aaron Bull, Jarius Cabry: just some of the children who have died while in care of this government since 1999. Now we have Sharla Marie Collier, not a child but a child/youth care worker. Again the minister has promised an inquiry. Death after death is matched with inquiry after inquiry followed by promise after promise by the minister to seek out and eliminate the root causes of these tragedies. We can no longer tolerate hand-wringing, platitudes, and procrastination.

In the words of the agreement this country signed at the United Nations special session on children earlier this year, the time has come to put promises into action. Children, not million-dollar ad campaigns, must have the first call on public resources. We must commit now to putting children's needs first, eradicating poverty and investing in children, leaving no child behind, providing care for every child and listening to children and ensuring their participation.

Social workers are on the front line trying to turn those commitments, our commitments to the UN, into action. They sometimes work in danger, but we must minimize their risks. What more lasting tribute could there be to Sharla Collier than to finally have action that results in the protection of social workers and the children in their care?

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Oral Question Period

Kyoto Climate Change Agreement

DR. NICOL: An international panel of world-renowned scientists overwhelmingly agrees that in order to halt devastating effects of global warming, immediate action must be taken to reduce greenhouse gas emissions below 1990 levels. To the Premier: will your made-in-Alberta plan reduce Alberta's total greenhouse gas emissions below 1990 levels by the year 2012? By the year 2020? Maybe by the year 2050?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, what we plan to introduce – and I'll have the hon. Minister of Environment speak to this issue – is a piece of legislation that was developed in consultation and will be further developed in consultation with industry – because it's very unlikely it'll be passed this session, and there'll be lots of time for further discussion – that not only serves to reduce greenhouse gases and address the issue of climate change but will ensure that the economy is sustained. I think this is most important.

You know, jobs mean a lot to a lot of people. Mr. Speaker, a healthy lifestyle where people can grow up in a family secure in the knowledge that the breadwinner of that family will have secure employment is just as important as the issue of climate change. What we have to achieve is sustainability, and that's exactly what the legislation speaks to. I'll have the hon. minister respond.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. minister, the purpose of question period is not to debate a bill that the hon. members have still not seen, so let's restrict our questions and answers accordingly.

DR. NICOL: To the Premier: given that total emissions will actually increase under Alberta's plan, is the Premier saying that scientists are wrong about the need to decrease total emissions below 1990 levels?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I'm not going to get into a debate relative to the size or the economics of the Kyoto protocol. As a matter of fact, that's what is fundamentally wrong with the protocol: that there is such a wide variety of opinions on this particular matter. You have scientists arguing relative to the actual amount of greenhouse gases that have to be reduced to address effectively the situation. You have vast differences relative to the economic impact of the Kyoto accord on the Canadian economy. You have the Suzuki Foundation and other environmental groups saying: oh, my gosh, it'll be a $200 million net positive benefit. Then you have the Canadian Manufacturers & Exporters association saying that the annual negative effect of the Kyoto protocol will be some $27 billion. Well, that's a huge, huge difference, and it tells me that this member across should be talking to his Liberal cousins in Ottawa, saying: let's get our act together on this particular issue.

DR. NICOL: To the Premier: why doesn't the Premier promote the creation of a domestic emissions exchange where every region and every sector contributes equally to per unit costs of emission reduction instead of some unattainable program?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I would invite the hon. leader of the Liberal Party to look at the communique that was agreed to by all the ministers of environment and all the ministers of energy which outlines 12 principles that must be adhered to if, in fact, we are to have a Canadian-made solution to this particular problem. Those 12 principles are reasonable; they are, to say the least, intelligent; and they represent a political consensus that to me is representative of the Canadian population. That is a made-in-Canada solution, not a federal government, made-in-Ottawa-behind-closed-doors solution.

THE SPEAKER: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

DR. NICOL: This government, through its expensive propaganda campaign, is trying to convince Albertans that its anti-Kyoto plan will reduce emission levels when we all know that's not true. But that's not the only way the government has tried to influence Albertans. This government has also led Albertans to believe that the Kyoto campaign would only cost $1.5 million. To the Premier: is it not true that this government spent substantially more than the $1.5 million on anti-Kyoto television ads, print ads, radio ads, glossy brochures, and public opinion polls?

MR. KLEIN: I don't know exactly how much has been spent, but I can tell you that the amount is minuscule compared to what the feds in Ottawa are spending to brainwash the Canadian public.

DR. NICOL: Can the Premier explain why he chose to spend in excess of $2.5 million on the anti-Kyoto campaign when SFI rates have not increased in 10 years in this province?

THE SPEAKER: There's a complete disconnect in that question. The hon. member.

DR. NICOL: Can the Premier explain why he chose to spend in excess of $2.5 million on the anti-Kyoto campaign when SFI rates have not increased in 10 years?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I can speak to one component of the question. As I said, I'm not quite sure how much is being spent on the campaign – I'll get those exact figures – but whatever we're spending is worth it because we're talking about billions and billions of dollars of potential negative impact to the Alberta economy. There hasn't been an issue this serious facing the people of Alberta and indeed the people of Canada since the dreaded national energy program of the 1980s.

2:00

What the Alberta government is doing is a small part relative to what is happening across this country and the amount of time and effort and, indeed, money that is being spent by other organizations that support our position for a made-in-Canada solution, starting with the Canadian Steel Producers Association, the Canadian Trucking Alliance, the Independent Contractors, Motor Coach Canada, the Alberta Chambers of Commerce, the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, the Canadian Chemical Producers' Association, the Canadian Council of Chief Executives, the Alberta Chamber of Resources, Automotive Parts Manufacturers' Association, Used Car Dealers Association of Ontario, Canadian Electricity Association, Canadian Fertilizer Association, Canadian Manufacturers & Exporters Association, Canadian Plastics Industry Association, Business Centre on the Environment, Business Council of British Columbia, Canadian Association of Geophysical Contractors, Alberta Building Trades Council, Alberta Economic Development Authority, Alberta Forest Products Association, Professional Engineers, Geologists, and Geophysicists of Alberta, Canadian Association of Oilwell Drilling Contractors, Canadian Federation of Independent Business, Canadian Steel Producers Association . . .

I'm not quite finished.

THE SPEAKER: Well, in the spirit of fair play we'll recognize the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition for his third supplemental.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Since the Premier is responsible for the Public Affairs Bureau, why don't you know how much they're spending on the anti-Kyoto campaign?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I will find out momentarily, immediately after question period, and provide the information, but as I say, the campaign is reasonable, it's intelligent, it's factual, and, believe me, it represents the views of the people of this province that there are serious and legitimate concerns relative to the Kyoto protocol. If there's one thing for sure, the people know where the Alberta government stands on this particular issue, but they have no idea where the Liberals stand on this issue.

Mr. Speaker, Hansard, April 18, 2002. This is attributed to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, who says: "I don't necessarily agree that the Kyoto accord should be ratified by Canada. I don't think that it takes us where we need to go." Then in the Edmonton Journal – and it must be true – the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East says: this Kyoto is a direct opportunity for Alberta to stand up and challenge the federal government; we cannot allow the federal government to take advantage of a province. Then in a Liberal news release dated September 3 the hon. leader of the Liberal Party says: "There's no easy way for the federal government to implement Kyoto . . . Albertans need to be ready for a fight if it goes against our best interests." Then in the hon. leader's report from the Legislature the hon. leader says, "Kyoto may have a negative impact on our economic growth," but the newsletter goes on to say: "Kyoto [is] a catalyst for a better society . . . For every job lost to Kyoto, a new one could be created." But he doesn't say how or when or the implementation plan. Then he says in the Edmonton Sun – again it must be true – I'm not endorsing the federal plan until I've seen it.

Well, you know what? None of us has really seen a plan. If it's going to hurt Alberta, I'll be on the steps of the Legislature saying that it's no good. You should be there, believe me.

THE SPEAKER: It'd be helpful, too, for hon. members to receive the tabling of such quotations.

Third Official Opposition main question. The Legislative Assembly's latest bride, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Loud voices backed by big money don't make this government's anti-Kyoto campaign right and certainly don't help consumers. This government has done absolutely nothing to help Albertans become energy efficient. This is alarming considering that research proves that educating consumers about emission reductions is not enough to change their behaviour. All my questions go to the Minister of Environment. How much money has this government invested in energy efficiency programs for Alberta consumers?

DR. TAYLOR: Well, Mr. Speaker, let me start by saying that this government has surpassed the 1990 target of 6 percent. We have won awards. We're the only government in Canada to win three awards for our reduction of greenhouse gases.

AN HON. MEMBER: How many?

DR. TAYLOR: Three.

Further, Mr. Speaker, at the present time we are 22 percent below 1990 levels. [interjection] Yes, 22 percent.

AN HON. MEMBER: Absolute baloney.

DR. TAYLOR: No, it's not baloney. It is the truth, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: Whoa. Please. Hon. minister, how about if we participate through the chair. The hon. member later may have a chance, but right now we're going to recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Answer? No money.

Will the minister confirm that while Climate Change Central has a goal of zero emissions, they can do absolutely nothing because this government gives them absolutely nothing for project funding? Nothing.

DR. TAYLOR: Well, Mr. Speaker, once again the member is totally wrong. I mean, it shouldn't be surprising. This government has committed through the Department of Environment to fund the energy efficiency office at Climate Change Central. We have already committed – now, I'm going by recollection here. I believe we have already written a cheque for $200,000. That's from memory. We've committed up to $2 million. So as we go forward, we also fund Climate Change Central. I believe our commitment is $2 million this year alone to the Climate Change Central office, and Climate Change Central is a very effective mechanism to work with the public, to work with industry. In fact, last year for every dollar we gave Climate Change Central, they got $4 to $10 from other sources, a match of $4 to $10 for every dollar. These people opposite, who obviously have changed their mind and are now taking their orders from Ottawa in an attempt to get their finances straight, have to recognize that when you can get $4 to $10 for every $1 committed by government, that's an effective utilization of taxpayer money.

MS CARLSON: Mr. Speaker, as always, long on promises, short on deliverables.

How come Manitoba, the territories, and British Columbia have all committed millions of dollars to energy efficiency programs while Alberta, the richest province in the country, continues to do nothing at the consumer level to address the number one issue in this country at this time?

DR. TAYLOR: Mr. Speaker, we have quite clearly said that we are prepared to commit dollars. We have said that. We have said that we will match federal dollars. We're still waiting to hear what the federal dollars are going to be. We have yet to hear a commitment from Ottawa in terms of what the Ottawa government is prepared to do. As we go forward with the budget that comes down, I'm sure you will see actual dollars. Hopefully, we'll have heard from the federal Liberal government by then.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party.

There's a high level of interest here today.

2:10

Electricity Rates

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the long seven months since the last sitting of this House we have continued to see no action from this government on high power bills. Since deregulation was introduced, the bottom line of every power bill of every family in this province has increased. Whether you live in Edmonton, Calgary, Fort McMurray, or Lethbridge, you pay a lot more now than you did before the last election. My question is to the Minister of Energy. When can Albertans ever expect to see lower bills from deregulation? When will Albertans arrive at the promised land of low bills resulting from deregulation?

MR. SMITH: January 1, 2003. January 1, 2004.

DR. PANNU: The minister is trying to save us come carbon dioxide, Mr. Speaker.

Is the government going to leave Albertans on the hook for the next two years and then throw money at them just before the next election? That's my question to the minister.

MR. SMITH: Well, Mr. Speaker, the only thing stupider than saying an incomplete sentence in public is to have a paper report on that incomplete sentence, but then the only thing stupider than having the paper report on an incomplete sentence is having an elected member comment on a stupid report from the paper.

DR. PANNU: Mr. Speaker, my last question to the minister, the brilliant minister in this cabinet: can the minister point to a single residential power bill that has actually gone down since his government's deregulation, any single bill?

MR. SMITH: Well, Mr. Speaker, I accept the compliment with grace and humility.

Mr. Speaker, the hon. member can, in his own research, in his own group, go through power bills that are across Alberta, and he will see that there are different regulated rate options across Alberta. He will see the lowest, being an ATCO account at some 4.76 cents to 4.9 cents, and the highest one, being EPCOR at 6.7 cents. He will also see Albertans paying deferral accounts for the power that they used in 2000, when regulation was still a part of the Alberta metric, and deferral accounts for 2001.

So with deregulation, as the Globe and Mail has said appropriately and as the professors from the University of Alberta have said, Alberta is on the right track. We have a competitive marketplace. There are 2,000 new megawatts, and we are seeing a route down to lower prices, Mr. Speaker. We're seeing fair prices; we're seeing honest prices. But, most importantly, what we don't do, like NDP governments when they were previously in power in other provinces – and I pray that the day never happens in Alberta – is we do not hide behind Crown corporations with taxpayer debt that has to be supported by future generations, preventing economic growth and wealth generation.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Kyoto Accord Ratification Process

MR. McCLELLAND: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My question is to the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations. In 1997 the United States Senate by a vote of 95 to 0 declined to ratify the Kyoto protocol because it did not require any commitment of developing countries and to ratify a protocol of this type without an implementation plan was considered to be ill advised. Therefore, the treaty was never taken to the president, then President Clinton. In fact, it was killed by the Senate in a unanimous vote because it was deemed by the Senate to be against the national interest. My question: what role does the Canadian Senate have in the Kyoto accord ratification process?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member indicates, the Canadian Senate has no particular guaranteed role in the ratification of international agreements. In Canada the Prime Minister has indicated that Parliament will be asked and expected to approve the Kyoto protocol, but in actuality and constitutionally all that is required is an order in council of the federal cabinet in order to ratify an international agreement of this type.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. McCLELLAND: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Will Alberta use its constitutional authority to ensure that the question of an elected Senate representing the national interests through the interests and representation of the provinces is brought to the next first ministers' conference?

MR. JONSON: Well, Mr. Speaker, in terms of constitutional authority, certainly, that will be part of a wide series of actions that we'll take in this particular case, but I would just like to indicate that we are working on the whole matter of Senate reform. The hon. Premier has written a letter to the Prime Minister asking that he respect the democratically expressed wishes of Albertans by appointing, a very small step but a very important one, one of the province's Senate nominees to replace retired Senator Nick Taylor. We already have in place the Senatorial Selection Act. In 1998 Albertans elected two Senate nominees, but neither has been appointed to the Senate to date. Overall, the provincial government wants to take this opportunity of there being a vacancy in the federal Senate to revisit the whole issue of Senate reform and its importance to Alberta and to western Canada and, we think, all of Canada, and this is going to be a major initiative of government.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Children's Services Authorities Funding

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Sharla Collier's fiance claims that her death was preventable. It appears that understaffing and lack of resources to adhere to good practices in the Sun Country children's authority resulted in tragedy. My questions are to the Minister of Children's Services. How can the minister claim this tragedy was unforeseeable given that social workers escorting children have previously been attacked?

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, today I spoke with a very saddened fiance named Chris. We talked about his comments about how the death could have been preventable, and he made a very strong and powerful statement to me. He said that he would not have approved of his fiancee going one-on-one with the youth but that she had such remarkable discretion, loyalty to profession, and the capacity to work with youth without divulging the contents of her job in an unprofessional fashion that she never even shared with him that on more than one occasion she may have been alone with the youth that might have – and I stress the words "might have" – compromised her future.

Mr. Speaker, today we don't have answers. Today we have questions, much as the member opposite has cited. How do these things happen? What took place? What was the history? Was this preventable? Could there have been procedures in place? In Children's Services we have a binder of accountability for agencies in the staffing, in the requirements for safety for the workers, but that doesn't tell us the story in the case of Sharla Collier's death. So today with the investigative review process, with the participation of the advocate, who has asked to be a member serving on this panel, we will work with the people both from outside of our department and with the staff in question in the agency to discover whether or not the processes were correct between the Sun Country child and family services authority agencies in their jurisdiction and whether or not we are being prudent in following up on the protocols of safety of the workers.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, and again to the same minister: why, when Sun Country has been underfunded, was an additional million dollars cut from their budget this year?

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, from time to time we make adjustments in Sun Country budgets, like we do in every other budget. I would not want this House to be under any misapprehension that adjustments made in budgets in Sun Country reflected in any part on the funding for the agency in question and that in any way should we jump to the conclusion that there were adjustments in budgets that affected the case surrounding Sharla Collier.

We have made other adjustments, Mr. Speaker, as a result of delegation of authority to one of the First Nations in the region. We are working constantly to get those funding allocations correct. But I'll be pleased to provide the hon. member opposite the full details of how Sun Country has been funded in this past year, any recent adjustments, and anything that he would wish relative to those budgets.

2:20

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: why, when children's services authorities are already seriously understaffed, did the minister cut 186 positions from the budget?

MS EVANS: Well, Mr. Speaker, we haven't cut 186 positions from the budget. In fact, we are working for the reduction of staff through natural attrition and finding ways to be more cost-effective, but not once have we made a reduction of staff on the front lines affecting child service workers. There were not the reductions that have been inferred by the member opposite. I know that there have been some reductions of staff in the Ma'Mowe service region, but those have not been staffing adjustments that have compromised the health and safety of children.

First Nations Gaming and Entertainment Complex

MR. MASKELL: Mr. Speaker, my constituency borders the Stony Plain Indian reserve no. 135. Constituents in the neighbourhood of Lewis Estates and constituents of the Edmonton-McClung community of The Grange are deeply opposed to the negotiations taking place between the Enoch Indian band and the city on providing service for a proposed casino and entertainment complex. Of the 16 casinos operating in Alberta, not one is built directly across from residential communities. My question is to the Minister of Gaming. Can the Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission refuse a licence to a First Nations applicant for a casino on a reserve, and will the residents of Lewis Estates and The Grange have an opportunity to have their concerns heard?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. STEVENS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As a result of a two-year consultation process that ended last year and which was affirmed and approved this year, an eight-stage process with respect to applications for new casinos, including casinos on First Nations reserves, was established. That eight-stage process must be completed in full by the applicant or applicants and reviewed by the AGLC and the AGLC board before any application will be successful.

One of the steps in that is step 5, which talks in terms of the AGLC receiving detailed proposals from applicants, which will go out and ultimately become the subject of some public knowledge and which will allow for the public to provide input to the AGLC. The AGLC will have to deal with various inquiries and comments that are received from members of the public. The proposals, however, must receive a complete evaluation by a selection committee, using stringent criteria which are in writing, which are part of policy, and which, I can advise, can be found at the AGLC web site. I would encourage those who are interested in this matter to take a look there to see all the things that any successful applicant must do.

So, in short, any applicant to the AGLC with respect to a casino, whether it's traditional or First Nations, is not assured success. They must comply with all the requirements, and those requirements are set out in great detail.

MR. MASKELL: My first supplementary question is to the same minister. How would the minister respond to those people who feel that First Nations are getting special treatment when it comes to owning and operating a casino?

MR. STEVENS: The First Nations gaming policy, once again, Mr. Speaker, was part of the licensing policy review in January of 2001. This policy was announced by the government and accepted at that time as a result of extensive negotiations between First Nations people and this government under my predecessor's leadership. The goal of the policy was to provide an opportunity for a direct economic and social benefit for First Nations people.

Having said that, the criteria with respect to the First Nations casinos are virtually identical to those of traditional casinos with a couple of notable exceptions. The AGLC is responsible for the policy with respect to this. They will make the decisions with respect to all such applications. First of all, the First Nations charity will be able to hire volunteers. That is a difference. The casino must be on a reserve that is established as of January 2001; that is different from traditional casinos. Lastly, the allocation of certain of the proceeds that go through the Alberta lottery fund – namely, 40 percent of those proceeds – will go back to First Nations communities for the improvement of economic, social, and cultural matters on the reserves.

MR. MASKELL: My second supplemental is also to the same minister. If the AGLC chooses to issue a licence to Enoch, will the province step in and ensure that Edmonton taxpayers aren't footing the bill for servicing this casino?

MR. STEVENS: Well, Mr. Speaker, the question calls for speculation, and of course we don't do that.

The fact of the matter is that the Enoch First Nation and the city of Edmonton, like good neighbours, are discussing matters of common interest with respect to this proposal, and I'm sure that as good neighbours they will continue to do what is right and come to a reasonable resolution of the matter.

Kyoto Climate Change Agreement

DR. TAFT: Mr. Speaker, in 1990 the Alberta Department of Energy released a detailed analysis showing that Alberta could reduce greenhouse gas emissions to 7 percent below 1988 levels without new technology and achieve huge economic benefits. This is or at least should be the real climate change plan. My questions are to the Premier. Why is the Alberta government now relying on a vague plan drafted by spin doctors in the Public Affairs Bureau when for more than a decade it has had a credible and detailed study showing how to beat Kyoto targets while achieving a return on investments?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I take exception to the statement that this is a vague plan. This is much more than a plan; this is legislation. This is legislation committing us to an action of greenhouse gas reductions to make a significant, meaningful, and intelligent contribution to the issue of global warming.

All I can say is that Alberta is firmly committed to working with Albertans – industry, business, environmental groups – to reduce greenhouse gas emissions, and I will say that the Kyoto protocol, as it is now written and devised by, ostensibly, European theorists, is not the Canadian way. Indeed, our largest trading partner, the United States, figured that out a long time ago and said: we can develop our own plan to address this problem. That's exactly what they are doing. Mr. Speaker, I would remind the hon. member that Canada is the only country in the western hemisphere that has agreed to targets, targets of minus 6 percent of 1990 levels by the year 2012, which industry says is unrealistic.

Our Climate Change and Emissions Management Act reaffirms Alberta's ownership and responsibility for the management and development of its natural resources. That is very important, unless the hon. member is suggesting, as his federal cousins have suggested, that we really don't have any constitutional authority over our natural resources. Well, it happens to be in the Constitution. It provides a legal framework to put Alberta climate change plans into effect in an intelligent, reasonable, and responsible way, and it shows that Alberta is serious about reducing greenhouse gases.

Mr. Speaker, this is more than a plan. This is a legislative framework for action. It will allow us to put the details to the plan as regulations much more than this big document that the feds have put out. This will actually be in regulation. It will meet the targets that the federal government would expect Alberta to meet under the Kyoto protocol but under a longer time line, absolutely under a longer time line. This is to ensure that our economic sustainability is viable over a long period of time, and it's a time line that certainly won't harm the economy and at the same time will address in an intelligent way the issue of global warming.

DR. TAFT: Mr. Speaker, will the Premier admit that the Alberta government in its own study had already demonstrated that greenhouse gas emissions in Alberta could beat Kyoto targets without new technologies by 2005?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I will have the hon. Minister of Environment respond, but I can tell you that numerous steps have been taken since 1990, starting, as a matter of fact, even before that time, when I was Minister of Environment and established the Roundtable on the Environment and Economy. Since then, we had the Clean Air Strategic Alliance formed. We have the voluntary challenge, where, indeed, if you talk to certain industrial sectors, they have already achieved those targets. There are some, however, that have not. We're not talking about all industries, and I'm sure the hon. member isn't talking about all industries. We have Climate Change Central, and I would remind the hon. member that relative to the voluntary challenge 163 Alberta companies have signed up. So this represents to me an honest and sincere effort, certainly since 1990, to address the issue of climate change.

I'll have the hon. minister . . .

THE SPEAKER: Well, we've already gone six minutes on this, and we've only had two questions.

The hon. member.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Now, we have the Minister of Environment saying that the Alberta government has already achieved and beaten Kyoto targets, and the Premier is saying that industry cannot. Is the Premier saying that government is so much better than the private sector?

MR. KLEIN: No. The only government saying that government is so much better than the private sector is the federal government. They have no faith in the ingenuity, the intelligence of the private sector to address this. They bring in this goofy, concocted scheme to tell industry what they must do, Mr. Speaker, with no regard whatsoever to the economic impact that that kind of a protocol will have on the economy of this province and, indeed, the economy of the government. That is being irresponsible. Industry is acting in a totally responsible and intelligent manner on this particular issue.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-West, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Calgary Philharmonic Orchestra

MS KRYCZKA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Calgary Philharmonic Orchestra is widely known as one of Canada's best orchestras. However, they have experienced some financial difficulties and, in fact, went into receivership a number of weeks ago. Calgarians, including my Calgary colleagues and myself, have a great deal of love and pride for this orchestra and sincerely want to help it succeed. My first question is to the Minister of Community Development. Could he tell us what he has done or is able to do to help the Calgary Philharmonic Orchestra through this difficult period?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, I certainly agree that the Calgary Philharmonic Orchestra is among the best in Canada, and I would even say that it's probably one of the best in North America. That's one reason why, through the Alberta Foundation for the Arts, this government provides among the largest of financial grants possible to that organization.

In terms of what I personally have done, I should let the member know that I have spoken on the telephone with some of their representatives. I've corresponded with them. I was even in Calgary last week to meet with several of them, and after a few hours of discussion we certainly got apprised of the current difficulties that they face.

I think it should also be noted that the Calgary Philharmonic Orchestra, as is in keeping with all major performing organizations in this province, has a signed agreement between themselves and the Alberta Foundation for the Arts with certain deliverables, if you will, built into that agreement. One of the things that we as a government and I as a minister in this area pledge to do is to help them through this difficult time, but that will be dependent upon a very sound, viable business plan, which I know they are working very aggressively to complete as we speak, and I have every confidence that with their own resources, with their own outreach, their own support network of corporate and private funders in the Calgary area, along with us as a partner, we will be able to see this situation resolved for the betterment of the orchestra in the long term.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MS KRYCZKA: Thank you. My first supplemental, again to the Minister of Community Development: can the minister tell us if there is provincial money available for the Calgary Philharmonic Orchestra?

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Well, certainly there is money available to the Calgary Philharmonic Orchestra. In fact, I think this past year and for the past couple of years it's been in the order of $700,000-plus per year, which is extremely helpful to them, but it's important to note that the government of Alberta through the Alberta Foundation for the Arts cannot be the only funder. I am aware that they are talking with the federal level program people in this regard, and I am aware that they are also speaking with their own corporate community. They're actively engaged in meetings with the employees, with the musicians, with their own board members, and they've had some successful fund-raisers in the last little while, and I think that spirit needs to continue, obviously. We for our part are simply waiting for their plan, which I understand will be given to us very shortly, that one way or the other proves the viability of the Philharmonic Orchestra well into the future. We're all expectant of that, and I have every reason to believe they're going to deliver on it and so will we.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Supports for Independence Review

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you. On November 8 an important message to Progressive Conservative constituency presidents was delivered by a former Progressive Conservative MLA that urged, quote: let's not allow our MLAs to plunder the heritage trust fund to cover for their recent incompetent handling of our affairs. End of quote. Another example of that incompetent handling of affairs is the half million dollars this government has spent on a low-income review when they already knew that what the low-income citizens of this province needed was an increase in their benefits. We cannot forget, Mr. Speaker, the hungry, the poor, the unemployed in this province, and unfortunately this government has. My first question is to the Minister of Human Resources and Employment. When will Albertans on income support programs like AISH and SFI get extra income to cover the rising costs of electricity bills, which have skyrocketed because of this government's Enron-like electricity deregulation scheme?

Thank you.

MR. DUNFORD: Well, there was a lot in the preamble, and of course as far as the question is concerned, we do have a couple of reports out there now, Mr. Speaker, a low-income review, What We Heard and What We Recommend. The MLA committee that was responsible for all of that good work has certainly, I think, endeared themselves to most Albertans and, hopefully, to the very people that they are trying to help. We are looking at the recommendations as we speak. We are attempting to make changes that we can within the budget this year, and of course as all of the members in the House would be aware, it is the season for business planning.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. SMITH: Mr. Speaker, if I may just supplement on his last, as usual, erroneous comment. In the year 2001 there were two cheques of $150 per individual sent out by this government. In 2001 there were four times $150 cheques sent out by this government, and in the entire year of 2001 more than $2 billion were paid back from auctions to everybody who had a meter at the rate of $40 a month.

MR. MacDONALD: Mr. Speaker, to the Premier this time: given that this government in 2002 has left the poor behind the Alberta advantage, given the fact that there has been half a million dollars spent on studying the issue, when will this government quit pleading poverty and give the SFI and the AISH people of this province a wage increase?

Thank you.

2:40

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, that issue is under review, and I would remind the hon. member that relative to AISH I believe we're one of the only jurisdictions in Canada with a program of that particular nature. The philosophy of this government – and I believe it's the philosophy of the people of this province – is to provide help, meaningful help, for those who truly need help in society, to give a hand up rather than a handout. It's always been the policy of this government to find ways and means to get people off the welfare rolls and back to work and to provide them with meaningful employment so they can have a sense of self-esteem and a sense of pride, but we firmly believe that those who truly need help in society – truly need help in society – should get that help, and we're fully committed to that philosophy.

MR. MacDONALD: Again, Mr. Speaker, to the Premier: can the hon. Premier live on $402 per month in this province whenever rents are over $500 a month for decent, affordable housing?

MR. KLEIN: No, Mr. Speaker, and neither could the hon. member. I'm sure that the hon. minister would look at a situation relative to the situation as it affects a particular family and make that determination. As I've said before, for those who truly need help in society – those who truly need help in society, who cannot fend for themselves – it is the policy and the philosophy of this government that we will look after them, but it's also the policy and the philosophy of this government that we will use all means at our disposal to help people get off the welfare rolls and back into meaningful employment.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, the time for question period has now left us for today but the hon. Premier to supplement an answer given earlier.

Kyoto Climate Change Agreement

MR. KLEIN: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I thank you for allowing me to supplement an answer to a question posed by the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition. He asked: how much is being spent by the Public Affairs Bureau to communicate the government's position on the Kyoto protocol? The Alberta government announced a major advertising campaign to advise Albertans where they can get information on Alberta's position on Kyoto. The cost of that advertising campaign is $1.5 million. Additional costs for production, printing, distribution, and research bring the total for the campaign to $2 million as of the end of October of this year. I can add that staff were seconded from some ministries to put together public information materials such as a web site and two tabloid publications. Additional materials were provided by Alberta Environment.

Now, this is important. As of November 8 the government's Kyoto web site received more than 83,000 hits, and approximately 48,000 copies of documents were downloaded. There have also been more than 5,000 calls to the toll-free Alberta Connects phone line, which is all part of this campaign. Polling, again part of the campaign, indicates that Albertans support a made-in-Canada solution to climate change. A recent survey showed that 72 percent of Albertans want the Canadian government to withdraw from the Kyoto protocol and develop a sensible, intelligent, responsible, made-in-Canada plan.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, since 1986 we've followed the practice of when an answer is supplemented with a delayed response, the individual who raised the original question can have a brief supplementary question followed by a brief supplementary answer.

DR. NICOL: Thank you. Mr. Premier, you talked about the financial obligations and the financial commitment. What about staff? Is there a value you could put on the staff that were seconded into that program as well?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I'm providing the information that was provided to me, and that was that staff were seconded from some ministries to put together public information materials such as web sites and two tabloid publications. Additional materials were provided by Alberta Environment. This is all done in-house to represent not only a government position on this particular matter, this very important matter, but to communicate properly and effectively the consensus of the majority of Albertans.

head: Members' Statements

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Say Hay Campaign

MR. MARZ: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to recognize the efforts of all those who have offered their support to Alberta's producers during 2002. Due to the widespread drought this year has been extremely difficult for Alberta's crop and livestock producers. The tenacity, resiliency, and commitment of our producers is always admirable but particularly so in a year like this one.

A positive that stands out in light of the challenging year is the outpouring of support from people across the country. Eastern Canadians sent hay to the west to help feed our livestock through the Hay West campaign. As part of that effort the government of Alberta contributed $200,000 to harvest and bale eastern Canadian hay. Thousands of Albertans attended the Say Hay benefit concerts held in Edmonton and Calgary, raising over $1.5 million. The support from rural and urban communities alike was encouraging and heartfelt. On behalf of all Albertans I would like to thank the organizers, performers, and volunteers who donated their time and talents, as well as all those who supported this Say Hay campaign.

This government has also worked very hard to ensure we wouldn't let our producers down. We responded with a $324 million farm income assistance program, an acreage payment that would get money to producers as quickly as possible with as little administration cost as possible.

All told, Alberta producers have access to more than $1.4 billion of assistance to help respond to the drought, including the emergency water pumping program, the Alberta farm income disaster loan program, grasshopper control program, and the Canadian farm income program as well as the crop insurance program.

We're also planning for the long term. The implementation of the Alberta drought risk management plan will mean more timely and accurate monitoring and assessment of drought impacts on the farm economy and more targeted, timely, and cost-effective drought response measures, if needed. We're also working on improving and enhancing other long-term funding programs, and we're discussing changes to crop insurance to make it more responsive to weather variances and extremes.

The ag industry this year will be recovering from the effects of this drought over the next several years. We hope, however, that we have seen the worst of this drought and join producers across the prairies in looking towards a better year next year. I sincerely thank all those Albertans who have recognized the value of agriculture to our province and have shown their support to Alberta's agricultural producers in this difficult year. Hats off to them all.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Bicycle Safety Helmets

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Sikh Federation of Edmonton has asked me to bring forward an issue important to them. The federation believes the implementation of the new Highway Traffic (Bicycle Safety Helmet) Amendment Act on May 1, 2002, has highlighted an administrative oversight concerning the application of the legislation to practising Canadian Sikh youth. The community states that they are fully supportive and appreciative of the government's efforts to enhance public safety through legislative and other means. The power of the law and the penal measures contained therein do provide good reason for people to keep safety in mind. However, they believe that education and good training can be considered to be equally effective in achieving the desired public safety results.

As is evident from the statistical picture presented to the minister in May 2002, the marginal additional potential risk of entrusting the parents with the safety considerations in respect of their practising Sikh youth is, in their belief, reasonably manageable and acceptable. Resolutions in other jurisdictions include allowing practising Sikhs to ride bicycles in British Columbia without having to compromise on their religious requirements.

In view of the foregoing the Sikh community of Alberta is seeking the Minister of Transportation's intervention to suitably modify the implementation of protocol to allow the practising Sikh youth to enjoy bicycling without having to compromise on their religious requirements by wearing bicycle helmets.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

National Addictions Awareness Week

MR. JOHNSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As chair of the Alberta Alcohol and Drug Abuse Commission I'm pleased to inform the hon. members that this week, November 17 to 23, is National Addictions Awareness Week. During this week AADAC and its community partners support a variety of activities to increase awareness of substance abuse and gambling problems and solutions. Two examples of this year's activities include a kick-off breakfast in Grande Prairie and a wellness walk in Calgary. The events planned for this week offer hope and encouragement to individuals suffering from substance and gambling problems by encouraging and celebrating healthy lifestyles. I'd like to remind the hon. members that AADAC and its funded agencies offer information, prevention, and treatment services through a network of offices and facilities in over 40 communities throughout the province.

Earlier this year AADAC was given the lead role in implementing the Alberta tobacco reduction strategy. As the hon. members are aware, tobacco is addictive and is the leading cause of avoidable illness and premature death in Alberta. Initiatives are now under way to treat and prevent tobacco use, particularly amongst youth. Again related to youth, AADAC was recently credited for having, and I quote, the best campaign for increasing youth resiliency that I have found, end quote, which is high praise from an international authority with the U.S.-based Resiliency in Action organization. AADAC's resiliency campaign empowers youth to take positive action to rise above difficult life circumstances.

AADAC's involvement in National Addictions Awareness Week, the resiliency campaign, the Alberta tobacco reduction strategy, and other initiatives help to create healthier communities and demonstrate the government's commitment to the health of Albertans. AADAC's theme, Making a Difference Together, conveys the message that it is the responsibility of all Albertans to work together and make a difference in preventing addictions problems.

In closing, I would like to thank the hon. members for their support of AADAC. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmor.

Corporal John Archer Sergeant David Scribner

REV. ABBOTT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is with great pride that I rise to recognize two members of the Drayton Valley Legion who are recipients of this year's Nobel peace diploma. Sergeant David Scribner and Corporal John Archer are recipients of this honour due to their courageous work in keeping the peace on the Mediterranean island of Cyprus. For his efforts Sergeant Scribner has also received the Canadian peacekeeping service medal.

Mr. Speaker, not only do these awards help us once again recognize Canada's exemplary record in the area of international peacekeeping, but they also serve as a reminder that the ability to make the world a better place is in each and every one of us. That two soldiers from Drayton Valley-Calmar could help to secure the peace for people halfway around the world is truly humbling. That they would risk their own lives for the betterment of those in Cyprus is nothing short of inspirational.

Mr. Speaker, I had the honour of presenting scrolls of congratulations from the Legislative Assembly of Alberta on this past November 11, Remembrance Day. These two men are great Albertans and great representatives of the wonderful people that I am honoured to work for every day as the MLA for Drayton Valley-Calmar. I invite all members of the Assembly to join me in recognizing their achievements.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, before we go to the next order in our Routine, might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests

(reversion)

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two groups to introduce today. In no particular order, I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly some of the members of the Edmonton Quality of Life commission. They are seated in the public gallery, and I would ask them to please rise as I say their names: Rev. Don Mayne, Rev. Dr. Bruce Miller, Betty Farrell, and Patricia McGoey. I would ask you to please join me in welcoming them to the Assembly today.

The second group that I'd like to introduce are people associated with the Alberta Committee of Citizens with Disabilities. Again, they are in the public gallery, or they were, and I'd ask them to rise as I call out their names. We have the president of ACCD, Karan Smith, with staff members Brian Laird, Manuela Coelho, Sylvia McKeeman, and Jacinthe Lessard. I believe that observer Gordon Forbes is also here. Again, I would ask you to please welcome them to the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce through you to members of the Assembly six people from the Alberta Disabilities Forum. I would ask them to rise as I introduce them to you, if they are here: Mary Bell, Bruno Fantini, Sheena McLean, Marlene Williams, Lorne Lentz, and Marcella Cloran. Please give them a warm welcome.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two introductions this afternoon. For the first one, I'm very, very pleased to introduce to the House and to you two prominent leaders of university students in this province: Mike Hudema, who is the president of the students' union of the University of Alberta and represents over 30,000 students, and Anand Sharma, who is the chair of the Council of Alberta University Students. Both of them together represent close to a hundred thousand young Albertans who attend our universities. They are playing a leading role in the campaign by our students to have their tuition fees frozen first and then reduced. I welcome them to the Legislature and ask them now to please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, my second set of guests is here to express their deep concern on behalf of Albertans who live on low incomes, whether they are on SFI or recipients of AISH. These guests are Sharon Sutherland, Schizophrenia Society; Justin Harper, HIV Edmonton; and Elizabeth Kubelka, Heather Robertson, and Robin Krajacic, social work students from Grant MacEwan College. If they're still in the public gallery, I ask them to please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

MR. JACOBS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to the members of the House six members of the county of Cardston council visiting in Edmonton today and this week for the AAMDC municipal convention. I'm very pleased to introduce to you Councillor Floyd Smith, Councillor Neil Miller, Councillor Randy Janisko, Councillor Harlen Cahoon, Councillor Ida Lowe, and administrator Bryan Phillips. I would ask that you please give them the warm welcome of the House.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

MR. DANYLUK: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Also, I would like to introduce to you and through you to the rest of the Assembly a municipal councillor that is attending the same fall conference today. His name is Don Mudryk, and Don Mudryk hails from the St. Paul area. He's also an elk and bison rancher as well as a businessman. So if I could ask the Assembly to give him the traditional warm applause.

head: Presenting Petitions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

MR. VANDERBURG: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm submitting this petition on behalf of St. Joseph's church on restructuring health delivery programs in Alberta.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

REV. ABBOTT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the hon. Member for Barrhead-Westlock I am pleased to present a petition signed by almost 200 of your constituents. This petition urges the government of Alberta "to remove abortion from the list of insured services that will be paid for through Alberta Health."

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

MRS. ADY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to present a petition signed by 147 parents of Cardinal Newman school petitioning the provincial government to address the need for adequate and flexible provincial funding of education in Alberta.

3:00

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

MR. MARZ: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a petition to present today urging the government to "remove abortion from the list of insured services that will be paid for through Alberta Health," and it's signed by 1,071 Albertans from central and southern Alberta.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise and present a petition to the Assembly signed by 57 Albertans, but expressing the concerns of tens of thousands of Albertans, urging this government to “not delist services, raise health care premiums, introduce user fees or further privatize health care” in this province.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There’ll be more on the way – there are – on an everyday basis.

head: Notices of Motions

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to give notice of the following motion.

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly of Alberta affirm its support for an amendment to the Constitution of Canada to provide for an elected Senate which would represent the interests of all provinces through equal representation and through effective powers and, further, that the Legislative Assembly of Alberta urge the government of Alberta to undertake consultations with all provincial governments on this amendment and, further, that pending such an amendment the Legislative Assembly of Alberta calls upon the Prime Minister to summon to the Senate to fill vacancies related to Alberta only those who are Senate nominees pursuant to the Senatorial Selection Act of Alberta and, further, that the Assembly confirm the recommendations of the report of the Select Special Committee on Upper House Reform, which were unanimously endorsed by this Assembly on May 27, 1985, and again on March 10, 1987.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Pursuant to Standing Order 30 and after having provided your office with the appropriate notice, I wish to inform you that upon the completion of the daily Routine today I will move to adjourn the ordinary business of the Assembly to hold an emergency debate on a matter of urgent public importance; namely, the government’s failure to address the looming crisis being faced this coming winter by low-income and disabled Albertans.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Yes, Mr. Speaker. In accordance with Standing Orders, and in particular Standing Order 15, I hereby give notice to all members of this Assembly that I intend to raise a question of privilege in this House later this afternoon at your direction.

Thank you.

head: Introduction of Bills

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General and the hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Following consultation between ourselves and the House leaders for the opposition I would request leave of the House at this time to withdraw Bill 30, which stands in second reading on the Order Paper, in order to allow later the introduction of Bill 30-2 on the same subject matter but including extensive amendments which were promised to this House after reviewing all the acts of government and making Bill 30 applicable to those acts.

THE SPEAKER: The request being made by the hon. Government House Leader is for a unanimous request in favour of granting such consent to withdraw Bill 30, the Adult Interdependent Relationships Act, from the Order Paper. Would any hon. member opposed to granting such leave please say no. Well, that being the case – if nobody said no, then presumably everybody said yes – it’s carried.

The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Bill 30-2

Adult Interdependent Relationships Act

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In appreciation for that consent of the House, I would now beg leave to introduce Bill 30-2, the Adult Interdependent Relationships Act.

As I indicated this spring in introducing Bill 30 itself, one of the most difficult challenges of government is to achieve two fundamental values of Albertans which are sometimes seen to be in competition. In Alberta marriage is an institution that has traditional, religious, social, and cultural meaning for many Albertans, and it’s recognized by Albertans as a fundamental principle that marriage is a union between a man and a woman to the exclusion of all others. The terms “marriage” and “spouse” have particular meaning for Albertans, and government policy has been and continues to be that we will protect those terms in our legislation.

But there is also another fundamental value, and that’s the fundamental value of fairness and equal access to the law. Bill 30-2 introduces again the definitions and the terms that were set out in Bill 30 this spring but, as I indicated just previously, after holding the bill over for debate over the summer and for the public to consult and also allowing us, having achieved at least some measure of support for the definitions, to look at all statutes of government and make sure that our definitions of “marriage” and “spouse” were consistent and that we had a terminology to use in respect to all other types of personal relationships which needed access to the law. So Bill 30-2 in my humble submission, Mr. Speaker, does that job, and I look forward to debating it in second reading and beg the support of the House.

[Motion carried; Bill 30-2 read a first time]

Speaker’s Ruling Numbering of Bills

THE SPEAKER: Before I call on the hon. Minister of Environment to proceed with his introduction, just let me make the following statement. In the light of the research that we’ve undertaken with respect to the procedure we’ve just undergone, this marks the first time that we’ve ever had a dash-2 bill in the Legislative Assembly of the province. As all hon. members will know, bills are usually numbered sequentially. The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General has proposed that the bill be numbered 30-2 to assist people in knowing that this is the second version of Bill 30 this session. For future followers of the proceedings of the Legislative Assembly and all those historians in the years to come who may find some confusion with what has happened, the chair wants to indicate that the unique numbering of this bill will not become the practice of this Assembly and that it should not set a precedent to be followed in the future. What the Assembly has just done is dealt with Bill 30-2.

Now, listen attentively to the hon. Minister of Environment.

Bill 32

Climate Change and Emissions Management Act

DR. TAYLOR: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 32, not 30-2, the Climate Change and Emissions Management Act. This bill being a money bill, Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor, having been informed of the bill, recommends the same to the Assembly.

When this Assembly passes this Legislation, it will enshrine in law the commitment of this government to take action on climate change, Mr. Speaker. It is a very important issue, and this will provide, as I say, a legal framework for reducing greenhouse gases in this province. We need realistic solutions to climate change that recognize the value of the environment but also recognize the value of the economy, and it is a difficult balance. We also need solutions that provide certainty to all sectors of our economy. This bill will provide these solutions and is an important step to addressing this important climate change issue.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 32 read a first time]

Bill 34
Seniors Advisory Council for Alberta
Amendment Act, 2002

MR. WOLOSHYN: Mr. Speaker, I request leave to introduce a bill being the Seniors Advisory Council for Alberta Amendment Act, 2002.

[Motion carried; Bill 34 read a first time]

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

THE CLERK: Pursuant to Standing Order 37.1(2) I wish to advise the House that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk by the hon. minister of health: pursuant to the Public Health Act, section 7(2), the Public Health Appeal Board annual report 2001; pursuant to the Dental Disciplines Act, section 8(4), the Alberta Dental Hygienists' Association 2001 annual report; pursuant to the Health Professions Act, section 4(2), the College of Dietitians of Alberta annual report 2001-2002; pursuant to the Nursing Profession Act, section 11(2), the Alberta Association of Registered Nurses 2000-2001 annual report; and responses to written questions 5, 6, and 9 asked for by Dr. Pannu on May 13, 2002.

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, unquestionably Alberta sports teams continue to thrill and excite the fans in this province, and this was certainly the case last Sunday when the Edmonton Eskimos won the right to represent western Canada in the Grey Cup game, which will be held in the city of Edmonton next Sunday. I am pleased to table on behalf of the Premier a copy of a letter sent to Mr. Tom Higgins, coach and general manager of the western division champion, the Edmonton Eskimos. If I might, in the letter the Premier expresses his congratulations on behalf of the government to the Eskimos on their exciting victory in the western final and extends very best wishes to the Eskimos as they represent the west in this coming weekend's Grey Cup game. Members might note if they read the letter, the Premier is predicting an Eskimos win. The Premier closes by saying how proud all Albertans are of the Edmonton Eskimos and wishes them well in the upcoming game.

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Premier I would like to table five copies of a letter from the Premier to Prime Minister Chretien dated November 19. This letter expresses Alberta's desire to see the appointment of one of Alberta's elected Senate nominees to the vacancy in the upper House left by the retirement of Senator Nick Taylor.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Economic Development.

MR. NORRIS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table the appropriate number of copies of a letter that our Premier received from the Motor Dealers' Association of Alberta. As you know, the Motor Dealers' Association represents a number of car dealers who are involved in retail sales and service of cars. Their letter offers unqualified support of the Alberta government's position on Kyoto, and I would like to read a short quote: "We are firmly against Prime Minister Chretien's position of signing the Kyoto Protocol at any costs and without knowing specific implementation details." This is more evidence that a growing number of businesses in the Alberta economy understand the devastating effects of Kyoto, and I table the appropriate numbers now.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Finance.

MRS. NELSON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I wish to table various documents relating to the government's financial affairs and those of the Ministry of Finance. Some of these documents have been public since we last sat in this House. Pursuant to section 10 of the Government Accountability Act I'm tabling five copies of the annual report of the Government of Alberta that highlights a $772 million surplus despite a year of very extreme revenue volatility. This report is for the fiscal year 2001-2002 and includes consolidated financial statements.

Mr. Speaker, I'm also pleased to table the annual reports on behalf of the following ministries and their agencies, as required in section 14 of the Government Accountability Act and section 45 of the Legislative Assembly Act. That would be for Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development; Agriculture, Food and Rural Development; Children's Services; Community Development; Economic Development; Energy; Environment; Executive Council; Finance; Gaming; Government Services; Health and Wellness; Human Resources and Employment; Infrastructure; Innovation and Science; International and Intergovernmental Relations; Justice; Learning; Municipal Affairs; Revenue; Seniors; Solicitor General; Sustainable Resource Development; and Transportation. These reports have been delivered to the Clerk's office as they are too numerous to bring into the Assembly.

Also, Mr. Speaker, pursuant to section 9 of the Government Accountability Act I'm tabling five copies of the first-quarter fiscal update for the year 2002-2003, which shows increased spending on disaster assistance.

I'm also tabling five copies of the first-quarter activity report for the year 2002-2003, which describes the major achievements of our government in support of our core businesses.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, further to the establishment of the Financial Management Commission in March of this year I am tabling five copies of the commission's report entitled Moving From Good to Great, dated July 8, 2002, and five copies of our government's response to this report, dated September 26, 2002.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

MR. JOHNSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Alberta Alcohol and Drug Abuse Commission as an agency of the government of Alberta reporting to the Minister of Health and Wellness contributes to the health and well-being of individuals, families, and communities in Alberta. Today it's my pleasure to table AADAC's 2001-2002 annual report. This report summarizes the activities and achievements of the commission in providing alcohol, other drug, and gambling prevention, treatment, and information services to the people of Alberta.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

MR. VANDERBURG: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table 350 signatures from citizens living in the Whitecourt-Ste. Anne constituency. These residents urge the Alberta government to reduce the price of electricity to sustainable levels by whatever means necessary until true competition develops to keep prices down.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

MRS. ADY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table the appropriate number of copies of eight letters that I received in my constituency regarding the protection of the Bighorn wildland recreation area.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This afternoon I have three tablings. The first one is a pamphlet entitled Educating Against Racism. It's put out by the Canadian Race Relations Foundation, and I would urge all hon. members of this Assembly to have a look at it, please.

The second tabling is a copy of a letter I received from the hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment on October 17, 2002, and this was in regard to the use of binding arbitration to resolve the matter between the United Food & Commercial Workers' Union and Economic Development Edmonton.

The third tabling this afternoon, Mr. Speaker, is an ad from the Edmonton Journal dated July 31, 2002, and this is in regard to Albertans who have an interest in the Labour Relations Code review.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table five copies of a workbook and five copies of a brochure launched last month at West Edmonton Seniors. These are both entitled Money Matters for Seniors. This project was headed up by the Kerby Centre in Calgary along with a coalition of public- and private-sector agencies to get information out to seniors on how to protect their financial resources.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

MR. CAO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I rise to table my open letter that I'm asking my assistants, Marie Martin and Sandy Wilson, to send to federal and provincial legislators across Canada on the subject of the Kyoto accord ratification. The thought of this letter was formed after I attended with the hon. Member for West Yellowhead the Kyoto public forum at the U of A, where the federal Minister of the Environment presented his position.

Just bear with me . . .

THE SPEAKER: No, no, no. It's okay, hon. member. Perhaps the hon. member might want to utilize Members' Statements opportunity, but we'll accept the tabling today.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table the appropriate number of copies of a report prepared by Alberta Energy in 1990 called A Discussion Paper on the Potential for Reducing CO₂ Emissions in Alberta. I should note two things. It does illustrate that there was work going on on this issue in Alberta more than 10 years ago and that, in fact, this work was derailed by the government's cuts in 1994.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two documents here on my list for tabling, but one has been already tabled by my hon. colleague from Edmonton-Riverview, so I won't bother to do that, except to say that it would have saved Alberta $2.2 billion a year, and it would have cut the emissions by 7.3 percent by 2005 had that report been implemented.

My tabling, therefore, the only one that should be tabled, is one which is signed by 112 low-income Calgarians, addressed to the Premier, requesting "a substantial increase in the rates of the low-income programs" so that they may purchase their own Thanksgiving dinner come next year, Mr. Speaker.

Thank you.

3:20

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, pursuant to section 46(1) of the Conflicts of Interest Act, chapter C-23 of the Revised Statutes of Alberta 2000, I'm pleased to table with the Assembly the annual report of the Ethics Commissioner. The report covers the period April 1, 2001, to March 31, 2002. A copy was distributed to members on October 9 of this year.

I'm also tabling with the Assembly the report by the Ethics Commissioner into allegations involving the hon. Member for Athabasca-Wabasca, Minister of Sustainable Resource Development, dated August 19, 2002. This report was distributed to members on that day.

As well, pursuant to section 4(2) of the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act I'm pleased to table with the Assembly the annual report of the Chief Electoral Officer for the calendar year 2001. A copy of this report was distributed to members on October 29 of this year.

I'm also pleased to table with the Assembly the interim report of the Alberta Electoral Boundaries Commission, entitled Proposed Electoral Division Areas, Boundaries and Names for Alberta. A copy of this report was distributed to members on September 17 of this year as well.

head: Request for Emergency Debate

THE SPEAKER: Now, before going to Orders of the Day, we'll call on the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona with a Standing Order 30 submission.

Low-income Albertans

DR. PANNU: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, for this opportunity to put this motion before the House. The motion deals with a matter of urgent and pressing necessity, that being the incoming crisis being faced by low-income Albertans as a result of the government's failure to take action.

Speaking to the urgency of this motion, disabled and lower income Albertans have been forced to wait far too long for this government to address what can only be described as a serious looming crisis. I urge you, therefore, to allow this debate to proceed this afternoon. It's been 18 months since the government launched its review of low-income programs. It's been six months since the government, after numerous delays, finally made public the recommendations of the low-income review. The low-income report contained many useful recommendations, yet here it is six months later and the government has failed to act on any of the major recommendations in the report.

The cold weather is fast approaching. For some Albertans this coming winter the lack of safe and affordable shelter could be a death sentence. This week, Friday, the Edmonton Coalition on Homelessness will release its annual report and count our homeless Edmontonians. Given the extremely low vacancy rate and skyrocketing rents it's widely expected that the number of homeless Edmontonians will once again rise to intolerable levels.

It's urgent that we debate in this Assembly this afternoon the question of why the government is leaving $67 million in federal housing money lying on the table by refusing to increase its contribution to build new or renovated affordable housing units. The government's failure to address the need for more affordable housing is creating a genuine emergency, Mr. Speaker, an emergency requiring the immediate attention of members of this Assembly. It's imperative that we debate in this Assembly this afternoon the question of why disabled Albertans have received only one increase of 5 percent in their AISH benefits in the past 10 years, while we as MLAs receive an increase in our pay every single year. It's urgent that we debate in this Assembly this afternoon why the government has failed to maintain at least minimally adequate levels of social assistance rates.

I also remind you, Mr. Speaker, that as of November 1 the province of Alberta now has the lowest minimum wage of any Canadian province. Alberta's minimum wage is lower than New Brunswick's; it's lower than Newfoundland's. Even many of the government's friends in the small business community are embarrassed about Alberta's unwillingness to ensure that those who work can earn a living wage.

Mr. Speaker, speaking to the urgency. During this fall sitting we will be soon beginning debate on the supplementary supply estimates. We will be voting additional dollars for fighting forest fires and drought and extra dollars for deferred capital projects like roads and bridges, yet there are no additional dollars being voted to build affordable housing. There are no additional dollars for AISH or social assistance recipients. We need to debate why this is so when the needs of low-income and disabled Albertans are every bit as urgent.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I urge you to rule in favour of this Standing Order 30 motion and ask the House whether debate on this most urgent matter should proceed. Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, I will recognize two additional speakers, but please remember: we're now talking about the urgency of the subject. We're not debating the question; it's the urgency under Standing Order 30. The hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

MR. DUNFORD: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, for recognizing me. I want to just take a moment, though, to indicate to you that in the House today, of course, are members of the MLA low-income review committee, who did some fine work and have submitted reports. Also, throughout the introduction of guests and visitors we've had various people that have been recognized, all of whom, of course, are working in the particular area of concern that is behind this particular motion. I want to add my voice, then, to that concern in trying to look at what are the right things to do in this particular area.

I'm simply standing here talking, then, about the urgency of the matter, and I do not believe that there is the need for an emergency debate. There's no question that the government is helping people, helping low-income Albertans. Again, it was indicated earlier in question period about our AISH program, the fact that it is without comparison within Canada. The MLA committee and two committee members, Thomas Lukaszuk . . .

THE SPEAKER: Hon. minister, this subject before us now is urgency of the motion, not the question. We haven't made a decision on it yet.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar on the urgency of the Standing Order provision.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This issue, this motion as presented by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, the looming crisis being faced by low-income Albertans as a result of this government's failure to take action, is an urgent matter. We all know what time of the year it is, how very cold and extreme conditions can be not only in this city but throughout the province. There has to be an emergency debate in this Assembly, in this Legislature, regarding how Albertans on low income are going to be able to survive the winter, because we know that there's been half a million dollars spent, and the government has not made a commitment to those citizens and their needs.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, given that the government of Canada and the provinces and territories have reached a broad consensus that their first priority should be children in poverty and persons with disabilities, I urge all Members of the Legislative Assembly to support the call for an emergency debate on the looming crisis faced by all low-income Albertans.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. Government House Leader, you wanted to participate? Urgency, please.

MR. HANCOCK: The question, as you've pointed out on more than one occasion, is urgency, whether we ought to suspend the normal debate of the House to debate this particular question because of its emergent nature. I would suggest to the House that we have opportunities and we have had opportunities to debate this issue. It's not a question of whether it's an important issue, not a question of whether it is important to the people involved, but it's a question of urgency. I would suggest to you that we've given notice of motion with respect to supplementary supply coming up, so there are opportunities to debate.

The member in bringing forward his motion indicated primarily the issue of dollars. We had a budget debate last spring with respect to the budget for this whole year. There was an opportunity to discuss this exact issue during that budget debate, and there are opportunities again as we discuss how government money is budgeted and spent through the supplementary requisition that's coming forward this very Thursday and again in discussion on the appropriation bill. So I would submit to you that it's not urgent to suspend the normal workings of the House today in order to deal with the issue, even though it may be and is a very important issue.

MS CARLSON: Mr. Speaker, speaking with regard to the urgency of this issue, we need to correct a few things that the Government House Leader has stated here. I do not see anything forthcoming in supplementary supply which gives us the opportunity to actually debate this specific issue. Yes, in fact, we had an opportunity to debate the original budget last spring, but in fact many things have changed in this province since that time and this time, not the least of which are rising electricity costs. The expectation was that this government would have taken some action on reviewing and actually implementing increased dollars to SFI and AISH payments to individuals in this province. None of that has been forthcoming.

3:30

With the coming of the cold season, with the expectation that electricity prices are once again going to be skyrocketing beyond belief, and when we take a look at the other kinds of rising costs also included in that – rising education costs for anybody who's trying to retrain or support their families – in fact, we have a very urgent matter before us. This is, in fact, the very first and the only opportunity we will have to fully debate those kinds of issues in this Assembly this fall.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, thank you to those members who did participate in the debate in this application under Standing Order 30(2). The Speaker must now rule on whether or not the request for leave to adjourn the business of the House is in order, and it's on that subject that, unfortunately, the Speaker must make a ruling.

First of all, let me indicate to all hon. members that notice of the application was received in the Speaker's office at 2:50 p.m. on Thursday, November 14, so the requirement of providing at least two hours' notice to the Speaker has been met.

To be in order, Standing Order 30(7) requires that "the matter proposed for discussion must relate to a genuine emergency, calling for immediate and urgent consideration." The chair does not believe that this matter constitutes a genuine emergency so as to require the House to set aside its ordinary business to give this proposal its immediate consideration. The chair does not want to detract from the seriousness of the issue that the hon. member raises but wants to note that the request itself is not too convincing on the issue of immediacy as it refers to a "looming crisis" rather than one that is immediate.

The chair also notes that on the Order Paper supplementary estimates will be before the Assembly, and that might provide an opportunity for members to speak about the government's spending priorities, which is what this application appears to be about. For future reference members may wish to consult Beauchesne, paragraphs 387 to 390, and pages 587 to 589 of House of Commons Procedure and Practice. To be clear, the chair finds that this request is not in order.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar on a Standing Order 15 application.

Privilege Contempt of the Assembly

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise on a question of privilege this afternoon. My point of privilege is in relation to an advertisement placed in the Edmonton Journal on Wednesday, July 31, 2002. The advertisement is a call for public submissions relating to the Alberta Labour Relations Code to an MLA committee or an MLA review committee.

I am raising this point of privilege in hope that you, Mr. Speaker, will find that there is a prima facie case of privilege. I believe that the executive branch of government has committed a contempt of parliament by confusing itself with the Legislative Assembly, the legislative branch of government. I further believe that only this Legislative Assembly can appoint MLA committees and not the executive branch, the government of Alberta. I earlier tabled copies of the advertisement in question to assist you and the table in deciding on this matter.

Mr. Speaker, the legislative branch over many centuries has fought hard to win certain principles and privileges that the executive branch may not overstep or overtake. The reason why we have parliamentary privileges, both in particular to individual members and corporately to the entire Legislative Assembly, is to protect the legislative branch's rights and privileges from being overtaken by an executive branch that is constantly seeking to expand its powers at the expense of the other two branches. The question on which my point of privilege turns is this: is it proper for the executive branch to masquerade as the legislative branch? I believe that the proper answer to this question is no.

The advertisement that I have just tabled features Alberta's coat of arms at the top, and it makes one reference to an MLA committee and one reference to an MLA review committee. The executive branch in Alberta has traditionally used the standard blue Alberta logo in its news releases, letterhead, reports, brochures, newspaper advertisements, and other documents and literature, while the legislative branch has traditionally used either the symbol of the Mace or the coat of arms, such as the one depicted in the advertisement in question. I would note with interest, Mr. Speaker, that the office of the Speaker, which is the head of the legislative branch, uses letterhead featuring a gold-coloured coat of arms, similar to the one in the advertisement.

It would appear that the general public and certainly constituents in the riding of Edmonton-Gold Bar, that I'm proud to represent, believe that the MLA committee or MLA review committee referred to in the advertisement is a committee of this Legislative Assembly, when, in fact, this is not the case. Proper committees of this Legislative Assembly, such as the Special Standing Committee on Members' Services or the Standing Committee on the Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund, usually have members from both sides of the House and enjoy the rights and privileges of the entire House, such as shielding witnesses from civil molestation through parliamentary privilege.

The MLA committee or the MLA review committee referred to in the advertisement is actually a committee of the Progressive Conservative caucus, and its operating expenses are paid out of the budget that this House annually allocates to the executive branch. Such a caucus or executive branch committee does not enjoy the rights and privileges of an actual Legislative Assembly committee. It does not enjoy terms of reference in the form of a resolution from this House, and any findings or reports that it issues certainly do not reflect the opinions of members from this side of the House, for whom one in every three Albertans voted in the last election.

Mr. Speaker, what I'm getting at is that this advertisement of an MLA committee or MLA review committee purposely masquerades as a committee of the Legislative Assembly; thus, the executive branch is confusing itself with the legislative branch. I believe that this advertisement amounts to a contempt of parliament, which, as you know, is any action which, though not a breach of a specific privilege, tends to obstruct or impede the House in the performance of its functions, obstructs or impedes any member or officer of the House in the discharge of their duties, or is an offence against the authority or dignity of the House, such as disobedience of its legitimate commands or libels upon itself, its members, or its officers.

Furthermore, Erskine May defines contempt as being an act or omission which obstructs or impedes either House of Parliament in the performance of its functions, or which obstructs or impedes any Member or officer of such House in the discharge of [his or her duties], or which has a tendency, directly or indirectly to produce such results.

In this case, Mr. Speaker, I believe that the executive branch through its advertisement intended to confuse itself with this Legislative Assembly by calling itself an MLA committee or MLA review committee. Therefore, the advertisement is an offence against the authority, dignity, and performance of the functions of this House and its members.

It is important that the individual members of this House and the general public understand the difference between the legislative and executive branches of government. The legislative branch deliberates on and legislates laws. The legislative branch is also the keeper of the public purse and gives the executive branch a sum of money each year to carry out the enforcement of those laws and programs that the legislative branch sees fit. The executive branch exists merely to establish and maintain an infrastructure that carries out those laws and programs that it has been provided a sum of money for.

The advertisement in question is a deliberate attempt to confuse the members of this House and the general public. The executive branch cannot be allowed to usurp the identity of the legislative branch of government, especially since the MLA committee or MLA review committee that the advertisement refers to has not been sanctioned by the Legislative Assembly via a resolution and does not have among its members elected officials from this side of the House.

Mr. Speaker, at this, the earliest opportunity afforded to me, I have briefly set out the facts as well as the relevant quotes from parliamentary authorities that show that there is a prima facie case with respect to the executive branch's usurpation of the legislative branch's identity. On page 227 of Maingot it states that the Speaker asks simply: "has the Member an arguable point?" If the Speaker feels any doubt on the question, he should leave it to the House by finding that there is indeed such a case.

I urge you, Mr. Speaker, and all members of this House to carefully consider this matter. I am seeking your declaration that this advertisement represents a contempt of parliament because it is an offence against the authority and dignity of this House and its members. Should you find that I have a question of privilege, I am prepared to move the necessary motion. In the case that you find that there's not a question of privilege, I would still ask that you direct the government to be careful in its publications in future and refrain from calling committees of individuals of the government party, who happen to be Members of the Legislative Assembly, MLA committees or MLA review committees.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. Government House Leader, if you're prepared to make comment today. If not, we can hold it over until tomorrow.

MR. HANCOCK: Well, Mr. Speaker, if you thought that there was any merit to the discussion and wanted to have in-depth submission on it, I'd be prepared to leave it over. I would only make preliminary comment to say that this is hardly the stuff of contempt. Contempt is a most grievous charge, which should be reserved for the most grievous actions. The advertisement could only be described – taking it at its worst would be that members of the public might possibly have been confused, but one cannot infer from the advertisement itself the deliberate intention that the member referenced.

There's no indication that it's a committee of the Legislative Assembly. It's not held out as a committee of the Legislative Assembly. It clearly is a committee of MLAs – that's clear from the advertisement itself – but hardly a question of parliamentary privilege which impedes the rights of the individual members of the House or indeed impedes the ability of the House to do its job, which are the true questions of privilege.

I'd be more than pleased to make detailed submissions on the point if you thought it was necessary or appropriate. I think this might be more appropriately dealt with, however, by the Speaker simply indicating that committees of MLAs when they're not committees of the Legislature ought to take a little more care, perhaps, in outlining in their advertisements so that there's no inadvertent misleading of the public as to whether it's a committee of the House or simply a committee of MLAs.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, I think that one should digest the words in the submission made by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, who obviously spent some time preparing his argument. I would point out as well that certainly notice arrived in my office at 10:59 this morning, so there wasn't even a great opportunity for myself to peruse other than having heard him orally. We'll come back to this matter tomorrow afternoon and invite hon. members to continue to participate in this as we work our way through this particular matter.

Second Reading

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Might I at this time request the unanimous consent of the House for the introduction to second reading of Bill 30-2? It's unusual to ask for second reading on the same day as you have third reading, but in this peculiar circumstance, that you've alluded to earlier in your comments, I believe it's appropriate.

[Unanimous consent granted]

Bill 30-2
Adult Interdependent Relationships Act

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased today to speak to Bill 30-2. You've alluded earlier to the unique numbering of this bill. We believed it was prudent and had discussions with the House leaders and the critics opposite with respect to the appropriate format to bring this bill back to the House for discussion so that all members and indeed all members of the public might have a better ability to truly understand the nature of the amendments which were proposed to be brought forward this fall. We could have in fact brought amendments to committee at the appropriate time. However, by incorporating them directly into the bill, we believe that it makes a better opportunity for people to understand the true nature of the bill. I am thankful to all members of the House for allowing us the use of this unique procedure.

As members know, a slightly different version of the bill was introduced in the spring session. It remained on the Order Paper until now so that Albertans could have a chance to look at it and to provide their comments to members. As noted in the spring, this time of reflection was important because the bill has the potential to affect many people, and Albertans needed the opportunity to study and understand the provisions of the bill before it was passed and before it comes into effect.

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

Mr. Speaker, I would indicate again, as I did in introducing the bill, that marriage has a traditional, religious meaning. It's a sacrament to many of us, a sacrament of our religion, and it's a relationship that is fundamentally between a man and a woman. Alberta law will continue to recognize this distinction, and the preamble of Bill 30-2 identifies the following principles: "marriage is a union between a man and a woman," "a spouse is a person who is married," and the term "spouse" is used throughout the bill and throughout all Alberta legislation to refer exclusively to a married partner. At the same time, this bill recognizes that there are Albertans in interdependent relationships outside of marriage.

Mr. Speaker, it's important that Alberta's legislation addresses the different ways in which people associate and create interdependency. Over the years courts and lawmakers have recognized the need for laws that allow people in committed personal relationships outside of marriage to deal with the financial and property issues that they face. Rulings at all levels of court, including the Supreme Court of Canada, have said that people involved in similar types of relationships must have similar access to the law and that provincial legislation may be found unconstitutional if it does not provide equal treatment to those relationships.

We believe that Alberta laws should not only extend to those in committed conjugal relationships but should also extend to those people who are involved in committed platonic relationships where there is no less a financial and emotional interdependency. Committed relationships of all kinds can create financial interdependencies. Government does not create these relationships; people do. But it is our duty to ensure that our laws help Albertans address the emotional and financial responsibilities which are created through those relationships and which then have to be taken care of when those relationships break down. This bill, therefore, covers a range of personal relationships that fall outside the traditional institution of marriage, including committed platonic relationships where two people share emotional and economic responsibilities. Currently there are many Albertans in personal relationships of interdependence outside of marriage who are emotionally and financially committed to one another on a long-term basis and who do not have access to the law when these relationships come to an end. This bill is designed to address that need.

Looking at it, one will see the term "adult interdependent partner" used throughout the bill. To become an adult interdependent partner, two people must be in a relationship of interdependence for at least three years, or less if there's a child of the relationship. Alternatively, two people who are living together or who intend to live together may enter into a written adult interdependent partner agreement. The signing of such an agreement signifies that the individuals agree to take on the obligations of that type of relationship and the obligations which are set out in Alberta law.

Some concerns have been expressed that this legislation would broadly capture all existing platonic relationships within the definition of the adult interdependent relationship regardless of the intention of the individuals in question. Concerns have also been expressed that people will unknowingly and unintentionally find themselves with rights and obligations that they should not reasonably have expected to take on. It is not the intention of this legislation that any two people living together as roommates for more than three years would qualify as adult interdependent partners. It is not the intent of this proposed legislation that every parent and child or brother and sister living together would qualify as adult interdependent partners. However, there are special platonic relationships that could meet the definition of a relationship of interdependence.

These would be platonic relationships where the partners have an intense personal commitment to each other and where they clearly consider themselves to be a couple, although the relationship is platonic.

So let's be perfectly clear. The bill does not extend obligations to and ought not to be interpreted to extend obligations to those people who are in a casual platonic relationship or to a normal family relationship where family members routinely assist each other, where an adult child moves in with a parent or where a parent moves in with a child, where two family members or two unrelated people choose for whatever reason to share a living space. This act applies only to and ought to be applied only to those people, whether in a conjugal or platonic relationship, who have that close and intense personal relationship that creates that special bond between the parties and the economic, financial, and emotional interdependence that would normally be associated with a marriage or common-law relationship as we now know them. For those related to each other, such as a parent and adult child, the relationship would require something more than you would normally expect in a normal parent/child family relationship. So the intent of this proposed legislation is only to include those platonic couples that have a relationship that is analogous to other recognized relationships or common-law relationships.

The bill also, Mr. Speaker, outlines how an adult interdependent relationship is ended either by the passage of time during which the adult interdependent partners live separate and apart, by having the partners enter into a written separation agreement, or by marriage or the entering into of a new adult interdependent partner agreement with a third party.

Over the summer and fall months we've received some feedback, and we've had an opportunity to fine-tune the bill to make sure that it is as clear as it can be, and as also promised in the spring, we've added amendments to a large number of acts so that the term "spouse" when it's used throughout Alberta legislation is used in a singular way so that the definition is the same in all of our legislation and so that adult interpersonal partnership replaces in many acts the concept of a common-law relationship, expands the number of people who might be involved in that type of a relationship, and makes a clear definition where there was once a varied number of definitions of the length of time and when a person is considered to be in that type of a relationship.

Just as an example, Mr. Speaker, in some 60 acts across our legislation in Alberta we previously defined in some of those acts the term "spouse" to include a common-law relationship or a relationship outside of marriage. That will no longer be the definition of a spouse in Alberta law. Spouse will be restricted to a relationship where people are married, a man and a woman in that relationship. The adult interpersonal relationship will take what in some parts of our legislation had a common-law relationship of one year living together. Other acts had common-law relationships of five years of people living together. Some had three years living together. It makes one definition which applies to anybody who lives in that type of a relationship outside of marriage.

So, Mr. Speaker, you'll see the consequential amendments included in this bill and the amendments that ensure that the status of adult interdependent partners is the same throughout Alberta legislation. There are a large number of these consequential amendments to over 50 bills. I won't go through each and every one of them, but just as an example the Powers of Attorney Act will be amended to ensure that a person giving a power of attorney cannot be subjected to duress or coercion by that person's adult interdepend-dent partner. Another is the Protection against Family Violence Act, where amendments will allow a person to apply for a protection order if an adult interdependent partner has subjected them to violence or the threat of violence. The Income Support Recovery Act is also amended so that adult interdependent partners as well as spouses of benefit recipients are competent and compellable witnesses in proceedings under the act to recover benefit overpayments. Provisions of the Civil Enforcement Act that govern seizure of the property a debtor shares with the spouse have been expanded to apply that to property that a debtor shares with an adult interdependent partner.

Finally, there are a number of laws dealing with conflict provisions that are proposed to be amended. For example, the Municipal Government Act has a provision to deal with the consequences of a councillor or the councillor's spouse having a pecuniary interest in a matter. The amendments would make the pecuniary interest of a councillor's adult interdependent partner subject to the same sort of scrutiny.

Now, I should be clear to the House, Mr. Speaker, that it would be our intention not to proclaim the sections of this act which deal with conflict of interest provisions until the next election for the body affected. So for municipal governments or school boards or Metis settlements or, indeed, our own House the provisions with respect to conflict of interest of an adult interdependent partner would not come into effect until a person chose to run again in the election, and then they would know that they are running with those rules in place.

There are a couple of amendments that are a little different from the standard definition, and that, Mr. Speaker, applies to the tax and pension statutes, where we must align our definitions with the federal tax definitions to ensure that the tax statutes and pension statutes are enforceable in accordance with the agreements that we have with the federal government and make sure that they are not delisted in the case of pension plans. So the more limited definition of pension partner has been used in those circumstances.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 30, now Bill 30-2, has been the subject of a considerable amount of discussion certainly through our caucus process. It's been tabled in the House and left for Albertans to address. It is a bill which I believe will say to Albertans that now find themselves the subject of obligations when court decisions are made – instead of waiting and hearing that, they will now know that when you enter into a relationship of an intense personal nature of the type of a common-law relationship or a married relationship, one ought to be cognizant of the obligations that one is taking on. One ought to enter into that type of a relationship knowingly, and this bill will make it clear to whom the law applies and what kinds of laws apply to them and what happens if you don't take care of your own affairs.

It should be clear as well that family law and the laws of personal property are what I would call default laws. They only apply to people who don't take care of their own affairs. So if you write your own will, you need not be worried about the Intestate Succession Act. If you take care of your property affairs, if you take care of the obligations that you incur, then you ought not be concerned about Alberta law telling you what to do. It is a default provision. But if you do engage in responsibilities, if you create dependencies by way of your relationship with someone else or if you submerge your assets with someone else's assets so that you become dependent on them, then this law presumes and Alberta law currently presumes that one ought to be responsible for the dependencies that they create. That is the gist and the substance of Bill 30-2. It's a bill which allows Albertans to continue with the independence that they have to set their own path, to plan for their own futures, and to take care of their own affairs, but it sets in place default provisions which give Albertans access to the law when they need it, when relationships break down and when through either inadvertence or otherwise they have not taken care of the dependencies that they have created. I would ask the House to support it.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. This bill has been a long time coming. It feels to me like I've worked half my life to see this legislation or something like it in front of us and see it pass, although at the same time I'm quite astonished at how fast we have progressed through the courts and the better understanding of the need for equality when we look at relationships, and that's happened inside of my tenure in this House, starting from the 1998 court decision on the Delwin Vriend case.

I'd like to put on record and thank some of the people and agencies who I think helped get us this far and who certainly gave me advice and guidance, and I'm appreciative for it. That would include Julie Lloyd; Equal=Alberta; Egale; GALA, especially Murray Billet and Fred Dicker; Charles Bidwell and Alberta Diversity; Kristy Harcourt and GLCCE; and all of the others that I know have been advocating for inclusion for some time.

As I mentioned in my comments for Bill 29, I'd like to thank the minister as well, although I suppose it can be argued and it has been argued that thanks may not be necessary when, in fact, we've arrived here because the courts have told us to arrive here. Nonetheless, I appreciate the personal effort that the minister has put in in trying to guide this legislation, and he has certainly been very open to meeting with me and having his staff made available for any questions, and I appreciate that. That is not what we usually see coming from the ministers, and it's a much more pleasant way to work.

So we're in second reading today, and that, of course, is on the principle of the bill. As I talk about the principle of the bill, we have to understand that we came to be here mostly as a result of the follow-through from the Supreme Court decision on M and H, in which the courts essentially said that given any number of different kinds of couples, we really cannot treat one kind of couple differently because of their sexual orientation if all other components of their relationship are the same. We can't consistently deny remedies and benefits, obligations and responsibilities to a couple based on that particular criteria.

As the minister mentioned, the law does in fact provide various remedies and benefits to couples, and with that comes responsibilities and obligations. The minister is correct in saying that if people just took care of their own business, if they'd just write their own wills or look after their own personal property, we wouldn't need to have provincial laws that covered things like intestate succession. But as I will mention a couple of times, people are human and they don't follow through on that. They don't take the good advice of what we're trying to get them to do here.

Was there a problem? Yes, there was. Certainly, the courts were very clear that we were creating a position of inequality that was not acceptable. Following that is the question: well, will legislation alleviate that or solve that problem? Yes, it had to be a legislative result. It was legislation that the courts were looking at when they were trying to make these decisions, and in fact the courts came back to the legislative arm and said: "You must fix this problem. It's on you to do it." So, in fact, we did have to have legislation of some kind to address this condition.

The final question is: is this the piece of legislation to fix the issue that we have before us? I think the answer to that is yes and no.

Why do I say no? I think there are two parts to that. One is the inclusion of platonic relationships, and the second is the preamble.

Now, that preamble. I've heard from a number of people about it. Many people do see it as hurtful. One person even called it hateful. The preamble sets it out so that it's ranking the adult interdependent relationship as second. There are three different clauses in the preamble that uphold as better or in first place in some way, shape, or form the institution of marriage. I have to say that I wonder why such effort is put into saying that heterosexual marriage is best. Why is there such a need to go into such a strong defence? Is that institution so fragile that it needs the constant repetition to convince people somehow? I have a greater belief in this institution than, obviously, the government does.

Certainly, people who are working with gay youth have told me that every time sexual orientation is listed as less than equal, it has very strong and immediate and dramatic repercussions. They see youth who are treated worse at home and in many cases even thrown out onto the streets. So to have a preamble that makes that distinction so clearly, that does that ranking so clearly, that underlines that inequality so clearly, you can see why people say to me that it's hurtful or even hateful.

So this legislation that I've worked so many years for – I would be much happier with this bill if we weren't having to face those words in the preamble. I will come back to this preamble in Committee of the Whole and in third reading, because I think we don't need to be doing that when we are trying to bring everyone to an equal footing. I think the preamble is redundant and it's regressive. Let's face it; even in Ontario, where they came to the same point and had to create the same kind of legislation, they just fessed up and said: "The courts made us do it. We didn't want to do it. The courts are making us do it. Done." I would even be happier with that in a preamble in Alberta than somehow underlining and restating constantly this inequity.

Now, the second reason that the bill is not perfect is the inclusion of nonconjugal or platonic relationships. This is interesting because it has in fact created two opposing arguments around the inclusion of nonconjugal or platonic relationships. Some people argue that it goes too far, that there's a net being thrown out that captures a number of people who don't want to be captured, and it's inappropriate that they would be captured by such legislation. Some people argue that this is just a political reality to get this bill passed in Alberta today. Well, that's quite possible. I have certainly heard from lawyers from the wills and estates division and the family law section of the Canadian Bar Association arguing that it will create huge numbers of people clogging up the courts as they try and get in on free goods.

I think that as with any instance where you create new legislation – and we are in fact doing that here. We're not amending an existing bill; we are creating new legislation. I think that any time we do that, there is going to be a certain amount of testing it in court. Do I think the courts will be clogged up? No, I don't. There are nine different criteria that are laid out at the beginning of the bill. I think that what's important here – and I hope I can draw the minister out and get his comments enshrined in Hansard for people in the future to look back on. What we need to know is: is it expected or understood that there is a ranking of that criteria? Is one of them weighted more heavily than another? Is there an alphabetical or a numeric order that should be followed, or is it a matter of, well, you know, best seven out of nine? Or do you have to have all of the criteria? Or whatever. That's not clear, and when we're using that criteria to uphold the definition, I think it does need to be more clear. So I'm hoping I can draw the minister out and get his remarks on record on that one.

The inclusion of the platonic relationships. Alberta is the only one in Canada, out of all of the various provinces, territories, and the federal government, who are all dealing with the issue of including same-sex relationships in their legislation, that has gone farther and has included these nonconjugal, platonic relationships. I noticed that the minister is always careful to say that he's talking about committed platonic relationships and not casual platonic relationships. Interesting choice of words.

As I say, many people are not happy about this and think that it's going to cause a lot of problems and put a bad light on the bill, clog up the courts and confuse a lot of people and capture people who don't want to be captured underneath this legislation, create division in families, et cetera. It's maintained that all the things that we're trying to alleviate would in fact be created by this.

I would have agreed with them up to a couple of weeks ago, but I discovered – and I probably should have known about this earlier – a document that's been prepared by the Law Commission of Canada called Beyond Conjuality: Recognizing and Supporting Close Personal Adult Relationships. I'll just quote briefly from that if I may.

The law has not always respected these choices, however, or accorded them full legal recognition. While the law has recently been expanding its recognition beyond marriage to include other marriage-like relationships, it continues to focus its attention on conjugality. The Law Commission believes that governments need to pursue a more comprehensive and principled approach to the legal recognition and support of the full range of close personal relationships among adults. This requires a fundamental rethinking of the way in which governments regulate relationships.

Indeed, it does. It's possible that Alberta is either leading the way, is so far ahead of the pack that many would not believe it, comprehensive and leading the pack, or we've gone off on a tangent here from which it would be hard to find us and drag us back.

I just want to lay that argument out that in fact there is a body or a group of people who are looking at the whole concept of dependency and of relationships in our society. We know that governments, legislatures are in favour of stability. A stable country, stable communities help create a stable economy and prosperity and health for the whole community and the whole country, so it's in our best interests that we support relationships that will create that kind of stability. What we're talking about here is understanding that there is more than one kind of relationship that creates that stability. To go beyond the obvious that we've talked about over the last 10, 20, or 50 years, which would be the common-law relationships and then same-sex relationships, to go to committed platonic relationships – well, I guess time will tell. We'll see whether we do need to be incorporating that or not.

Now, I want to raise this next point just as a caution because I think it's a possibility. I hope that that's not the intention of government, that the government is not setting out to deliberately create a situation where no one in Alberta can ever apply for assistance because it could be argued that at some point in their lives they were in some sort of adult interdependent relationship in some way, shape, or form and therefore the individual is told: "Sorry. You can't collect social assistance from us. You lived with someone five years ago. Go back to them for support payments and get your support from them or sue them through the courts for that." I hope that that is not underlying all of this, but it is a possibility. This legislation will make that possible.

The missing piece in that is how much retroactivity the courts will allow, and we have seen that particularly in B.C. Now, B.C. has got wacky politics, as far as I'm concerned, and often wacky law, but here we go. We have two examples recently coming out of B.C. One was a couple of years ago, actually, in which one of a married couple who had long been divorced developed a debilitating disease and went to court and sued the other member – the husband or wife, I don't remember; I think it was the husband – for support, and the courts granted it. They had been divorced for a long time. Like, we're talking 10 years. So to have the ability to reach back through time like that and create that obligation surprised me.

We have another case before the courts right now, again in B.C., I think, yes, in a matrimonial property settlement in which the wife has gone back to court to open that up again. The support that was granted from the husband was for the support of the children, who are now grown and leaving the house, and the wife is going back for further support because she wasn't able to get on with a new career; she was raising the kids. So, again, that's reaching back through history and dinging that person in court for that kind of support. Well, I just want to raise that and set it out.

What we have with this legislation is: is the glass half full or half empty? After years of working on it, is it enough? I lean very strongly towards saying the glass is half full, and yes, it's enough for now. Let me talk about what I see as very positive.

When we first looked at a definition, I was advocating for a definition that would not require an overt act. In other words, it didn't require a couple to go to a registry or to make some kind of overt act, because people don't do that. If they were going to do that, they would have gotten married, but they don't. They decide they're going to move in together, and the biggest overt act they have is when they order the pizza and the cheap bottle of champagne and sit amongst the packing boxes in their new apartment. So they don't make an overt act that puts a legal framework around their relationship. They don't. That's when it falls to us to make sure that there are laws in place to catch them when it falls apart and to make sure that they do follow through on their obligations to each other.

The minister has already talked about how – well, let's go over the three parts of it: essentially any two people who live together for more than three years, or less than three years if there's a child involved, which, again, is recognizing something important to society, that we have children in secure relationships, or the third way into the relationship is through a written agreement. Now, that's not going down to a, you know, KVP or whatever is the local private registry and signing up for something. That can be a contract that two people write and sign with each other and keep in their own possession. Maybe nobody else ever has to see it until they need to pull it out.

I know that the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford had campaigned on the federal level for a registry in which people would go in and actually sign up for something somewhere, but I found that that was a limiting factor. I very much wanted to see a more open definition, and I'm very pleased with the definition that I see in this legislation, and I note the care that's been put into the nine criteria. I wanted this legislation to be able to cover and to capture those people who should be captured by it.

I've already talked about how people are human and don't do what they're supposed to do, which is why we need to write the legislation for wills and estates, a change of name, guardianship, fatal accidents, intestate succession, all those other laws that are covered under this, and there are some 60 of them in this bill. But really what that's about is creating that framework, those laws which endow those responsibilities and obligations onto couples and which make those remedies and benefits available.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

MR. McCLELLAND: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's really a pleasure and something of a surprise here for me to have the opportunity to speak to this bill today. I really didn't think that we were going to have the opportunity to speak to it quite so quickly, but I want to preface my remarks by first offering my most sincere congratulations to the Minister of Justice and Attorney General for bringing this bill forward. It's been my experience over the years that in dealing with rights that accrue to people, sometimes there's a lot more heat than there is light in the arguments presented both for and against the subject matter.

Now, this bill, the Adult Interdependent Relationships Act, does a number of things. It provides certainty around relationships of a conjugal nature between a man and a woman. It provides the opportunity for people who live together not in a conjugal relationship to have structure around that relationship and, in particular, structure around the dissolution of that relationship. Importantly, what it also will do is provide structure and responsibilities and rights to those in a relationship of the same sex which is of a conjugal nature.

Now, this kind of legislation didn't start yesterday. It started with the introduction of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, and it started when our society became more of an individual rights based society and less of a collective rights based society. It doesn't really matter whether we agree with it or we don't agree with it. The reality is that the Charter of Rights and Freedoms includes with it an equality provision, and the equality provision is that all citizens shall be treated equally and have equal rights. It doesn't say: all citizens with whom we happen to agree in certain aspects of our lives. It says: all citizens.

This created all kinds of difficulty because same-sex conjugal relationships, either male or female, lesbian or homosexual, have a certain amount of incendiary reaction in other aspects of society. It happens for good and proper reasons as determined by those who hold those views, and they have the perfect right to hold them. But the reality is that rights accrue to us as human beings because we are human beings. They do not accrue to us because of the sexual nature of our human being, the sexual nature that we have, provided, of course, that that sexual nature is within the law.

Now, we were faced, then, in our country with a situation where we had to, because of the court but also because it was the right thing to do, evolve to give respect to relationships, some of which we didn't agree with. So how are we going to go about doing this? Well, there are in this debate, in my experience, 5 percent on either side. . .

MS BLAKEMAN: Point of order.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre on a point of order.

Point of Order
Decorum

MS BLAKEMAN: According to the House Leader's Standing Orders, we are in second reading, and I notice that the Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar has in fact changed seats. Wouldn't it be appropriate that he resumed his proper place?

THE ACTING SPEAKER: There is no citation; however, the point is valid, and all members need to be in their appropriate seats.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford to continue.

Debate Continued

MR. McCLELLAND: Well, thank you very much for giving me the opportunity to proceed. It's interesting that on a bill of such importance such a matter of little importance is important enough to change the flow. But it did give me an opportunity to get some of the background information that I have acquired over the years to try to get onto the record, and I may not find it.

I wanted to speak about the genesis of the notion that came from the ecumenical council in Toronto when they were charged with: how do you go about squaring the circle? How do you go about doing the right thing without at the same time injuring the sensibilities of the people who feel offended by it? And it seemed to me that the incendiary nature of it was centered around the term marriage. As I was saying, there are, in my experience, 5 percent on either side of this debate who are really charged with it and are really passionate. The 90 percent of the people in the middle just want to do the right thing and live and let live. So the notion then came as a registered domestic partnership, which is essentially what this is without the registration. That idea was that in forming this legislation, you respect the term marriage, that has deep societal and religious significance and must and should be respected. It should be respected because people feel strongly and it has tradition behind it, and that in itself is reason enough.

On the other side of the equation there are those in committed same-sex relationships that are worthy of respect by society regardless of whether we as society, individually or collectively, agree with the sexual nature. The relationship that these two people share is of value to them and by extension to society. So the notion, then, was that there are many relationships in society which have value, which may or may not have a sexual relationship. The essence of it is: the sexual nature of a relationship is none of our business. Period. Whether a relationship is sexual or whether it is not sexual has nothing to do with the value of that relationship between the two persons in that relationship. They may choose to have a sexual relationship; they may choose not to. It's none of our business.

[The Speaker in the chair]

So, then, how can we say that we want to as a society give strength to interpersonal relationships that are dependent? The way, perhaps, to do it and the way that is envisioned in this legislation is to say: if you take sex out of the relationship – because it's none of our business anyway – then what does it matter if it's a platonic relationship or a relationship of a conjugal nature? You put the relationship ahead of the sexuality involved in the relationship, and you provide for that. You provide the structure for that. The question comes up: if we do that, it's going to cost us a fortune. Well, it isn't. The reality is that with the rights come also the obligations.

According to the Law Commission of Canada and according to the Department of Finance, there's virtually no effect one way or the other on the public purse because of this kind of relationship. Keep in mind that we're asking people to accept the obligations that come with the relationship. For instance, I had in my previous life received numerous calls and letters from people receiving old age pension that felt that it wasn't right that two people living together that weren't married would receive an old age pension as a single person, yet two people living together married for many years received an old age pension as a married couple, which was about 25 percent less than it was individually. People who lived together for a long period of time wouldn't get married if there was a reason they couldn't. Under this regime in the same circumstance people would be receiving the old age pension exactly the same as a married couple would. With the rights come the obligations. It's not a one-way street. Now, this is not federal legislation, so I need to make the point that it wouldn't affect the old age pension because this is provincial in nature.

Now, I would like very much for people who may be reading this – and in future, if and when this ever does go to the Supreme Court, the justices will take into account the preamble of the bill. The preamble very clearly identifies that marriage is a relationship between a man and a woman, heterosexual. That will be the foundation upon which the justices will make any determination that has anything to do with the bill. They must take that into account.

They must also take into account the debate that takes place on this bill in this Legislature before it's passed, because they are obligated to sense the mood of the Legislature. They do not have the unfettered right to make law in their own place. They must take into consideration the notion, the ideas behind the law, as expressed in the Legislature. One of the things that they're going to be looking at will be: does this legislation provide equality for citizens regardless of their sexual orientation? Make no mistake; that's where this is eventually going.

Because we have clearly identified in the preamble to the bill the definition of marriage and because the Alberta Legislature has already passed a law with regard to the definition of marriage and because all of the rights that accrue to anyone regardless of the conjugal nature or the lack of a conjugal nature in this co-dependent relationship are exactly the same, it's my opinion that should this ever come to the Supreme Court, the Supreme Court will rule that there is equality provided for all citizens. But it must be understood that this law clearly, without doubt, recognizes that there will be same-sex conjugal relationships encompassed in it. It very clearly says that same-sex conjugal relationships are covered in this law and, therefore, that all of the rights, all of the privileges, and all of the responsibilities that are premised upon marriage, without the term marriage, are premised upon a same-sex conjugal relationship, and there should be absolutely no mistake in that.

Now, with that understanding, it's hopeful that as this goes forward, citizens of Alberta and, I think and I hope, citizens of Canada will take the lead from this legislation. As my colleague opposite mentioned, you can look at this legislation in one of two ways: the cup is half full, or the cup is half empty. Well, I think that the cup is full and just about as full as it's going to get, and I think it's to the right degree. I think that we have very carefully considered all of the forces at play here and have tried to fashion a compromise that will satisfy legitimately the concerns of 90 percent of Albertans and by extension 90 percent of Canadians.

There will be people who will not be happy with this legislation. There will be people on either end of the debate. But let us not allow this incredibly important social issue of conscience to be driven by the 10 percent, the 5 percent on either side. Let's let the 90 percent of people who want to live and let live and do the right thing drive this debate.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, I might point out that Standing Order 29(2)(a) now kicks in for five minutes. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to ask the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford this question: if he believes that the Supreme Court and the Constitution of Canada have required that equality be provided to all individuals, irrespective of their sexual orientation, then how does denying marriage to same-sex couples meet that particular principle?

MR. McCLELLAND: I thank the Member for Edmonton-Highlands for his question because that is the question that will be on the lips of the 5 percent who want marriage. There are people who feel that if marriage is not there, the bar has been lowered and they'll never get it. In my experience, politics and life is an honourable compromise, and the compromise that is asked in this bill is asked of the 5 percent on one side who will have everything premised upon marriage save the term "marriage." The compromise is asked of them to accept that so that the 5 percent on the other end, to whom this is the most offensive of legislation, will accept it.

This, in my experience, is a generational thing. In my experience, two generations from now people will look back on this and say: well, what's the big deal? But politics is about having consideration and concern for other persons, and at this stage, at this time there are people who feel very offended by this legislation. Their rights and their feelings are every bit as important as the people on the other extreme, and that's why this is an honourable and a just compromise.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, still within Standing Order 29.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Again to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford. I take it from the hon. member's statement that he has not argued that it does in fact meet the principle of equality; he is simply saying that it is a compromise. So the principle is not met but instead compromised.

MR. McCLELLAND: No, not at all. The Member for Edmonton-Highlands has made the point that unless the term "marriage" is given to same-sex conjugal relationships, it isn't the same as heterosexual marriage because of the conjugal nature. That's what is behind the question. But the point is that marriage is a term used historically with deep religious and historical significance to define and describe a heterosexual relationship. So as not to offend that sensitivity and that sensibility, the term "marriage" is reserved. It's a word. All of the rights and all of the privileges and all of the obligations premised upon marriage flow to persons of same sex in a conjugal relationship or not or strictly a platonic relationship. So the equality rights provision is met.

What is not in this bill purposely and I think appropriately is marriage because of the reason I've stated several times: because of the fact that this debate should not be driven by either extreme. It should be driven by the 90 percent of Canadians in the middle who want to live and let live and do the right thing.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Again to the hon. member: has the hon. member considered the solution which has been found in many countries and, I think, in particular in European countries, where they draw a distinction between a civil marriage and a religious one?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member has eight seconds.

MR. McCLELLAND: Well, marriage is religious, and there are many churches today who will provide for marriage of same-sex couples. It's up to them.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Innovation and Science.

MR. DOERKSEN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to spend a few minutes on this bill today referring primarily to the preamble and the ongoing discussion with respect to the importance of marriage. Those of you who were in this House in the year 2000 will remember that a private member's bill under my name amended the Alberta Marriage Act, and in fact, at that time, for the first time in this Legislature's history we inserted the definition of marriage as being between a man and a woman into Alberta law. I recall quite clearly the debate that we had at that time on this bill, and in fact I think there was close to unanimity. There may have been one or two people opposed to that definition, but all members of the Legislature were supportive.

Where the disagreement came at that time was that that bill actually also included or invoked the constitutional override to protect the definition of marriage, and the comments at that time in the House were: "Well, why would you want to use that constitutional override at a time like this when the definition of marriage will never be challenged? This is an issue that is sacred to Canadians for all kinds of reasons and won't happen."

In fact, subsequent to that, in the House of Commons they had a vote around the definition and overwhelmingly again supported marriage, as we have stated in our preamble here, as a union between a man and a woman to the exclusion of all others. It was less than two years after people saying that there would be no challenge that, in fact, there were applications made in other provinces for marriage licences, which, of course, we tried to establish as the provincial constitutional responsibility and one where we had some say in the matter.

What I'm trying to highlight to this Legislature is the fact that this is not going to stop. I think we're going to continue to see challenges to the definition of marriage in our society, which is why it is important in this bill to establish what the policy and position of the Alberta government are at this time so that when those challenges come, we will be quite clear with Albertans as to what we have said is important. In that respect, Mr. Speaker, in this bill we have said that in this case a marriage is between a man and a woman to the exclusion of all others, and in fact we have said in our press releases and policy statements around this bill and around this issue that we would in fact protect that definition through the use of the constitutional override.

We have added one other thing which I think is significant because actually it goes further than the bill that I had proposed in 2000. We now include a definition of spouse to refer to a person that is married. This bill will now provide common definitions for spouse in all of our pieces of legislation, and I think this is a very important element. In fact, it has changed several acts that were previously amended to reinforce the notion that when we say "spouse," we do in fact mean spouse as a person who is married. Further, Mr. Speaker, we have also said in our press releases and in our policy statements that we would also, in the event that that definition were challenged in front of a court, use our provisions under the constitutional override of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms to insist that in Alberta at least the definition of spouse will remain as it reads in this application.

Mr. Speaker, it was important for me to make that case because I think that people are going to refer back to the debate not only on Bill 202, the Marriage Amendment Act in the year 2000, but this bill also. They're going to read Hansard and see what the members were saying at that time. For me it was important to make sure that the public understood, in fact, what our intention was with respect to the definition of marriage and the definition of spouse.

The remainder of the bill deals with issues to do with economically dependent relationships where individuals have made the choice to enter into relationships other than marriage. Through various court decisions we have decided that, in fact, there are some economic dependencies that arise because of relationships, and this, again, provides a definition of an interdependent adult relationship so that those rules can then apply to all individuals who have a relationship outside of marriage.

Mr. Speaker, I just wanted to put those comments on the record, and clearly, from my own point of view, the lock around the definition of marriage and spouse was the reason that I was and will be able to support this bill.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, Standing Order 29 kicks in.

SOME HON. MEMBERS: Question.

[Motion carried; Bill 30-2 read a second time]

Bill 31

Security Management Statutes Amendment Act, 2002

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased today to rise now to also move second reading of Bill 31, Security Management Statutes Amendment Act, 2002.

As you know, this bill was introduced on the last day of the spring session and remained on the Order Paper until now to provide Albertans again with an opportunity to look at the bill to see how it might impact their daily lives. The Security Management Statutes Amendment Act clearly was set out as a bill which resulted from the complete review of all our statutes to respond to public security threats that we might have information on. But, clearly, anytime you do that, one has to also look at the rights of individual Albertans to make sure that they're not being abridged in an unnecessary way or that we potentially have the opportunity in statute to take away rights of movement or rights of speech or other fundamental rights without there being an absolutely essential need to do so.

So it was necessary to put the bill out, to leave it available for the public to look at, to develop a degree of comfort with it, to understand its purpose and its necessity, and to provide us any feedback. I can report to the House that I have received almost no feedback at all from the public, which would lead me to believe that the main reason for that is that the changes being proposed to Alberta statutes are reasonable and are respectful of the rights of Albertans. I believe that Albertans recognize that the bill contains modest provisions that will help to ensure that our province will be prepared to meet various types of threats or emergencies as they might arise.

Mr. Speaker, the September 11 terrorist attacks in the United States last year shocked and horrified the world. They made us realize that terrorism is real and there's a significant threat for North Americans. Since that time, there have been a number of incidents worldwide which, while by order of magnitude have not paralleled September 11, have certainly kept alive the concept that as a government we must be mindful of the security of the people in the province and we must take real steps to ensure to the extent possible that our security is looked at, is protected.

So in Alberta we took decisive action following the attacks on Washington and New York. Our Premier immediately established a ministerial task force to examine the implications of the attack, to see what implications it may have for Alberta. The ministerial task force, led by the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations, did a significant amount of work in the weeks and months following the attacks: reviewed current emergency plans, tightened security where necessary, worked with our Solicitor General with respect to public security issues that fell into her purview, expanded our contacts with other governments and organizations, and provided the information to Albertans. The task force also worked in coordination with energy and utility companies to review and strengthen security measures at key infrastructure sites.

A comprehensive crisis management plan has been developed to clearly outline the roles and responsibilities of governments and organizations in the event of a terrorist attack. Other measures to date include the addition of staff assigned to handle crisis management planning, the introduction of mandatory criminal record checks for Alberta government officials working in sensitive areas, and ensuring that departments continue their work in developing business resumption plans so that crucial government services would continue in the event of any kind of emergency.

By that litany of issues one can see that this is, in fact, not a Justice initiative, and it should be clear to all members that by moving this bill for second reading, I'm merely acting as always, of course, on behalf of all members of government, who worked very hard in reviewing all of their acts to get to this point. In fact, the lead role in this process has indeed been with the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations and with the hon. Solicitor General. Mr. Speaker, I'd like, then, to thank the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations, the Solicitor General, and all the other members of the task force on security for the significant efforts that have been made over the past year for all Albertans.

Albertans pride themselves on having safe and secure communities to work and raise our families in. An important part of ensuring this important objective is to have a sound and effective legal framework. Bill 31 is the result, as I've mentioned, of a governmentwide review that the ministerial task force asked every government department to undertake within their areas of responsibility and with respect to the legislation which falls under their purview. Where applicable, departments highlighted specific legislative changes that would enhance our ability to prevent terrorist activities and would improve our emergency preparedness in the province. The amendments cover a range of areas and are designed to protect the province's infrastructure, industry, environment, natural resources, and, indeed, the people of Alberta.

These changes do not represent a major overhaul of the province's legislative framework. As we reviewed our disaster legislation and other applicable legislation, we found that, actually, in most cases it provided a very appropriate level of coverage. What it did not in some cases do, however, was provide the opportunity to use that framework in anticipation of a terrorist threat or other threat to the security or safety of individual Albertans. Rather, it required a response to those threats. So these changes simply fine-tune existing laws by enhancing the tools that we have in place to avoid a crisis or to react to a crisis in a swift and decisive manner.

As I've said before, we enjoy numerous rights and freedoms in Canada, and the government of Alberta takes those rights and freedoms very, very seriously. Albertans respect rights and freedoms of each other, as we've just debated in this House with respect to a previous bill. That's why amendments in this bill and the security legislation that already exists in Alberta strike an important balance between protecting rights and freedoms and ensuring the safety of Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 31 amends 17 Alberta acts. These amendments will strengthen Alberta's laws to make it more difficult for those seeking to obtain false identification through provincially issued documents such as drivers' licences; provide a mechanism to prevent charitable organizations from raising funds for groups associated with terrorist activities; enhance the province's ability to control access to public lands and highways during times of heightened security, crisis, or emergency; enhance the ability of public bodies to withhold sensitive information from public disclosure when it is determined that it may compromise security; enhance the authority and responsibilities under the Public Health Act to address public health emergencies; and provide regulation-making authority in respect of security planning requirements for critical infrastructure in the energy sector.

I'm confident, Mr. Speaker, that Bill 31 will help to ensure that Alberta has the legal and strategic mechanisms in place to address any threat that may be made against our province and its people. I believe that the measures being proposed in Bill 31 are prudent and modest, and I would urge all members of this Assembly to support Bill 31.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. You know, I think we see once in every generation an event that is so momentous that it changes the course of that generation; it imbeds itself in the psyche. An example of that, for instance, would be the assassination of John Kennedy. They say that it took away the innocence of the United States at that time, and I think that I'm going to argue that September 11 had the same effect upon this generation. It took our innocence away; it gave us fear. As a result of that, we started to look around at our society differently. I think it actually changed the way our society behaves. That's what a terrorist act can do. It makes us aware of our own fragility. It became very clear that a group of very determined people could wreak havoc upon us and cause us to change the way we go about our lives and the way we go about our businesses.

So flowing from that, there's no question in my mind that it's prudent of government to take steps to make sure that we're able to protect ourselves as much as possible, that we have disaster planning in place, and that we have resumption of business in place. I think that's a prudent act of government. But I also think that there needs to be a balance to that, and it's incumbent on this Legislature to make sure that balanced against these disaster plans and the ability of government to take action where necessary is the protection of the freedoms of Albertans.

The minister was just talking about how Albertans respect the rights and freedoms of others. I agree. I think Albertans do respect the rights and freedoms of others. I'm not so sure that the government always does. So I think part of our job here as we debate this bill is to press the government to make sure that what's being put in place with this act does in fact protect all Albertans from unnecessary restriction of their freedoms and their rights.

One of the things that most concerns me about this legislation is the vagueness of it. There's a paucity of detail here, and I think it's important that we do press the government to put that reasoning either into the act or put it into Hansard so that people can review Hansard and understand what was intended here. So I hope others will join me in pressing for that.

A couple of things are expanding the powers of government. On the one side we've got an expanded definition of "emergency" that comes through in this legislation. We've got an expanded definition of "public health emergency." We're also expanding the ability of government to withhold sensitive information or withhold information from scrutiny through the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act, the FOIP Act. When government starts giving itself extraordinary powers, we've got to be very, very careful. I'm not saying that we don't need this piece of legislation. As I started out, I think we do need it, but I think we have to be very careful to make sure that the government doesn't grant itself powers that it can then use at some time in the future as a means to limit Albertans' freedom of movement and access to information about what government is doing.

The devil really is in the details here, so I am looking to the minister or to the other ministers that are associated with the acts in this bill. I mean, let's be clear. We're talking about fairly wide ranging. This bill covers changes in the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board Act, the Change of Name Act, the Charitable Fund-raising Act, Dangerous Goods Transportation and Handling Act, Disaster Services Act, Electric Utilities Act, FOIP, Government Organization Act, Judicature Act, Motor Vehicle Administration Act, public parks, Public Health Act, Public Highways Development Act, Railway (Alberta) Act, Traffic Safety Act, Vital Statistics Act, and Wilderness Areas, Ecological Reserves and Natural Areas Act. That's covering a fair range of possibilities for the government to expand its powers and restrict the freedoms of Albertans, so it's very important to strike that balance and to get as much information out there as possible on this one.

I'm always concerned when the government wants to restrict access to information. We have a good FOIP Act here in Alberta, and I think credit should go to my colleague Gary Dickson, who was the previous Member for Calgary-Buffalo, for working so hard on that. He could be a pain sometimes, but I think he knew what he was doing on that one.

AN HON. MEMBER: Agreed.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thanks for the agreement on that one.

I know that if Gary were standing here – I can see the ghost of him sitting in that seat over there, saying: there's too much that's being left up to regulation and subordinate legislation, way too much. Of course, that regulation is always developed behind closed doors by the government. We may or may not ever hear what it is that they've decided to do, and I think that it's important that we lift that veil of secrecy and get some of that detail out here in this House. I think that privacy is a concern that is in a number of these sections, so the question is: well, what's the oversight for the preparation of these regulations? How can we be sure that the steps that the government follows are appropriate and not unnecessarily intrusive into the lives of Albertans? I don't see that protection in this legislation as it sits right now.

Interestingly, the minister mentioned that he had not heard from any or very few Albertans with regard to this act, and I have to agree with him. I am baffled because I would have thought that people would have immense interest in this act, but I have sent it out all summer and did not receive substantial feedback on it. So I think there's a reason that we need to be very careful here, and of course I'm just going to hold the government and the minister in particular to account on this. I am searching for that balance between government convenience and the public and personal freedoms. You know, it's a natural tendency for a group of people to try and set things up in a way that's very convenient for the way they want to operate, but my response to that is: too bad. We're a Legislature. We're responsible to be as transparent as possible in the decision-making to the people of Alberta, and I think that's something that needs to be upheld here.

One of the issues aside from those expanding powers in those areas I mentioned earlier – and how the powers are being expanded is not very clear, or what the limitations on the expansion of those powers are is not clear. But the other thing is: how is it determined that a terrorist threat is present? In a number of these bills and in what's being changed overall by this legislation is this terrorist threat. Well, who determines it? Who determines that any given act is some sort of terrorist threat? Does CSIS do it and phone up the Alberta government and say: "Okay. Pay attention. We've determined this is a terrorist act"? Or does the Alberta government, you know, decide that it's a gray day outside and therefore they've decided that X, Y, or Z is a terrorist act? That's not clear enough in this legislation.

I think that it could be argued that some acts are so obvious that there's no question. I don't think any of us are going to argue that flying a jumbo jet into an office building full of workers at the peak of their workday is anything but a terrorist threat. I think that's agreed upon. My concern is that government is giving themselves extra powers here, and I want it to be very clearly laid out for Albertans to be able to see under what circumstances they can decide to act upon those. When does that gate open? When do we click over onto that definition?

I know that we've got a number of ministers whose acts are involved in this legislation, and I'm hoping that we can get some different points of view from them on the record on this, because I think that's a crucial point. If we can decide that a group of individuals who are protesting on the steps of the Legislature – who determines whether or not they, perhaps, could be a threat to the security of Alberta? I think it can be argued that just about any definition could be put in place. So what are the limitations that are placed on that? That particular, you know, "who's determining" turns up in quite a few of these acts.

Now, I think that a lot of the rest of my comments are more particular to definitive sections in this legislation, so it may be that I won't go into the sort of line-by-line, word-by-word, clause-by-clause breakdown of the act. I'll leave that to Committee of the Whole. But I do want to underline what my concerns are for this act now, and that is that we get a much clearer idea of where government is going to go as they give themselves expanded powers, what the limitations are on those powers, who's determining under what circumstances we've got something deemed a terrorist activity. For example, there are changes that are being made to the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board. Well, does the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board get to decide when something is a terrorist activity, or do they wait to be told that by the Minister of Energy or the Premier or who? Who decides this, and what's the criteria for deciding it? So I'd like to see some of that put onto the record here and made more obvious for people.

I also want to make sure that Albertans aren't subject to unusual scrutiny here. This government does have a tendency to do that, again, I think, because it's convenient. If we look back at what was recommended in the MLA review for the Police Act, there was a suggestion there that there be unstaffed aerial drones that would operate surveillance in rural areas in Alberta, and I'm deeply suspicious about activities like that. You know, who's collecting this information? Who's reviewing the information? For how long is it kept? Who gets access to it? All of those questions need to be answered when we look at collecting any kind of information on people.

It was supposed to be a great idea that when the registries, which were a government service, were privatized, Albertans didn't need to worry about any kind of outside interference in personal information about them. But that's exactly where all the problems have come, because when you have government in charge of that kind of information, there is a dedication to the policies of the government first. When you have that in the private hands, you have a dedication to a paycheque first, and that's where it starts to break down.

So I'm looking for a clearer definition and clearer idea from government about what the limitations are, what the details are, and how we make sure that we're not infringing upon Albertans' personal freedoms and rights without a darn good reason under very specific and well laid out circumstances.

Thanks for the opportunity to speak to Bill 31 in second reading. I do support the principle of this bill, but I certainly, obviously, have a number of concerns that I'd like to see addressed.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise on second reading and speak to Bill 31, the Security Management Statutes Amendment Act, 2002.

I want to say at the outset that it was clear after the events of September 11 that a review of security, including a review of security legislation, was in order, and I think that it was appropriate that the government ought to have done that and that they did it. I think that it's clear that almost all Albertans would agree that in some areas the tightening of security in order to provide for the protection of Albertans was also in order. I think that there are certain aspects of this bill, Mr. Speaker, that do that, so in an overall sense I am not opposed to many of the aspects of this bill. I think it was timely and necessary.

There are a couple of areas that give me a considerable degree of concern, Mr. Speaker, and we did hear from some groups about this. One of the groups that we did talk to was the Edmonton Mennonite Centre for Newcomers. That's an organization dealing with immigrants and helping them become adjusted to Canada, to Canadian society, to help them make the transition socially and economically to life in Canada. I think that one of the concerns that organizations like that have is that many of the security provisions – and I'm thinking particularly now of the United States – are applied differentially according to the profile of the individual that is concerned. I know that the Canadian government has been very, very critical of the policies of the American government in respect to this.

Racial profiling is clearly a fact of life. So the question really becomes: how do we fit in with that? Well, there's a section in the act, Mr. Speaker, which clearly gives the minister, any minister using their own discretion, the right to share information but not with Canadian security agencies or with Canadian governments, the federal government in particular. I'll just for reference indicate that it's an amendment to the Government Organization Act, sub (2) after section 9, and it says:

A Minister may share with

(a) the government of a foreign jurisdiction . . .

It doesn't say what foreign jurisdiction.

. . . the Government of Canada or the government of any province or territory, or a department, agency, board or commission of such a government,

(b) another department of the Government of Alberta, or an agency, board or commission of the Government of Alberta, or

(c) a police service in or outside of Canada information that is relevant for the purpose of combating terrorist activity.

It gives very, very broad latitude to any minister of the Crown acting on their own without reference to cabinet, to the judiciary, to the Legislature to share information.

You know, if I can get back for a minute to the situation in terms of immigration to the United States, not just immigration but border security with the United States. There was a piece on the national news a couple of nights ago which indicated that there's concern that there's going to be employment discrimination within Canada in the sense that companies who have employees who are from a Muslim background or from Arab countries originally will not send them to the United States because of the treatment that they receive there and particularly when they attempt to enter the United States. There have been Canadian citizens who have been whisked away and deported from the United States or held without trial, and their relatives have been unable to find out what has happened to them, and this is all well documented. So we're actually seeing the impact in Canada where Canadian companies are now taking a look at which employees they are able to send on a business trip to the United States, which is, of course, far and away the largest single trading partner we have.

So the question for me, Mr. Speaker, then, is: what restrictions are there? What safeguards are there in order to protect people who are Canadians or perhaps not Canadians but landed immigrants from having information at the unfettered discretion of any minister of this government transmitted to any security agency or foreign power? There's no restriction on what those powers might be or what agencies they might be. I would view it with a lot more comfort if there were some more restrictions on that authority, and I would prefer that ministers of this provincial government not be dealing with foreign intelligence agencies at all, that they should be dealing through Canadian agencies and let them make those sorts of decisions. That's an area that I think is of very great concern and probably, perhaps, not well known among many communities here in Canada, but I think if it were better known, the reaction on that point might have been considerably greater.

A related topic, Mr. Speaker, is the ability of the government to withhold information that they would otherwise have to disclose under our freedom of information laws. Again, without proper scrutiny by anyone this can be a decision that can be made internally, secretly, without oversight by the Legislative Assembly or the public. If the government determines in its, again, unfettered discretion that something is related to security matters that may involve the potential for a terrorist threat, they can withhold that information from the public, from the Legislative Assembly, from the opposition. That is a serious erosion of the ability of this Assembly to have oversight on the government's activities. Again, there may be cases where this is, in fact, valid and desirable. But where is the scrutiny? Where is the test that we could apply in order to make sure that the government is not misusing that for its own purposes? I know that the members opposite would never dream of doing that, but another government might come along and trample on the rights of Albertans in a way that is not dreamed of by the drafters of this legislation. So, Mr. Speaker, those are two very serious reservations which I have to this act.

I guess the third one is the question of the definition of terrorism. Now, we would all agree that the acts of September 11 and the persons and organizations that perpetrated them are, in fact, very, very severe, reprehensible acts of terrorism, but if you look at the definition of terrorism in history internationally, you'll find that it is not nearly as clear and cut and dried as looking at September 11 would maybe have us believe. For example, Nelson Mandela spent nearly 30 years in prison in South Africa, and the charge that he was convicted on was terrorism against the South African government. He later went on to be the President of South Africa and perhaps one of the most admired statesmen in the world today. Similarly, to use an example that I don't think stands on a par with Nelson Mandela, the Prime Minister of Israel at one point was Menachem Began. He was considered by the British authorities to be a terrorist, yet he became the Prime Minister of Israel. Another example: Yasser Arafat was considered by many, including the Israeli government, to be a terrorist. He later went on to become the President of the Palestinian authority and a recognized international figure that spoke at the United Nations, and he's since been redescribed now as a terrorist by the government of Israel.

So all this is just to make the point that the definition of terrorism can move back and forth with the historical and the political circumstances. Again, I think that there is a considerable degree of latitude, and while we would all agree that the definition of terrorism clearly applies to the events of September 11 and many other events in the world, there are events that could take place or that have taken place in the world where there would be some dispute.

So that, again, Mr. Speaker, leads me to conclude that the bill is too broad, lacks sufficient safeguards, and opens the door, potentially, to abuse and to continued discrimination against people based on their national origin or their race, depending on the policies of any foreign government with which a minister on their own decides to deal. That is something that I would hope the government would look at and be prepared to introduce amendments to during the committee period.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I will take my seat. Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2) now is available.

SOME HON. MEMBERS: Question.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General to conclude the debate?

MS CARLSON: No, no. There are more speakers.

THE SPEAKER: Fine. Fair game.

Okay. We've now gone beyond Standing Order 29(2). We'll recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

5:20

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll make, perhaps, just a few comments and then reserve the rest of my debate for later on this evening. I'm happy to have an opportunity to speak at second reading of Bill 31, Security Management Statutes Amendment Act, 2002, and do concur with most of the comments that I heard from my colleagues Edmonton-Centre, in particular, and Edmonton-Highlands.

I think that after September 11 this country in addition to other countries was perhaps overly cautious and aggressive in terms of where they went on security issues, and I would have to state at this point in time that I would hope this government would proceed with caution. The Member for Edmonton-Highlands indicated a number of instances where I share concern, particularly as representative of a first-generation immigrant population in my constituency. There is now a very real perception of what terrorists look like, and they look like a lot of people who are very law-abiding citizens and members of my community. So that concerns me.

It also concerns me here this afternoon, the first opportunity we've had to debate this bill, that we've only heard from one minister, being the Government House Leader, who has responsibility for this bill. In fact, it directly impacts at least 15 other ministers in this Assembly, and I believe that we need to hear from those folks in terms of why they feel it's necessary to proceed in the manner in which we are proceeding with this particular bill. So I am hoping that before we come to the end of the discussion on this bill, we'll hear from those ministers and get their perspective on why it's necessary to make all of these changes.

I also have a lot of concerns about FOIP and how it's going to be affected. I think that I'll reserve the section-by-section comments, though, until we go into committee and look for a little more participation on the side of the government.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I would like at this point in time to adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Yes. Mr. Speaker, I move that we adjourn until 8 this evening.

THE SPEAKER: Would the hon. Government House Leader like to clarify: what would we come back to at 8 in the evening?

MR. HANCOCK: Well, Mr. Speaker, in light of the fact that debate was adjourned and I'm anticipating we'll be finished debate on this bill before we go into committee, I assume that we'll come back in the House.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:23 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Tuesday, November 19, 2002

8:00 p.m.

Date: 02/11/19

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Please be seated.

Before I ask you to continue on second reading, I wonder if we might have unanimous consent to revert briefly to Introduction of Guests.

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader, followed by Edmonton-Strathcona.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure this evening to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly 11 scouts and their scout leaders, John Burnham and Dustin Burbank, along with assistants Mike Shaw and Daniel Bateman. They're with the 176 LDS Scout Troop from my constituency of Edmonton-Whitemud. They're here this evening to observe the proceedings of the House and are sitting in the members' gallery, and I'd ask that they please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the House.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the ND opposition party.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise with pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the House 15 of my constituents. I shall name them very quickly: Candice, Cassie, and Eric Behr; Brett Kapsos and Paula Kapsos; Todd Keeler; Krystal McLain; Cam, Cossette, Michelle, and Sky Mussetter; Jared Pitcher; Jen Poulin; Corey Rowe; and Becky Smith. These guests include among them one of the daughters of our colleague from Cardston-Taber-Warner, and I'm sure that he is delighted to see his daughter among the visiting guests up there.

These young men and women are members of youth groups of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints. They range from age 12 to 18 and meet every Tuesday to learn various skills which include cooking, knitting, singing, et cetera. These young men and women are here to witness democracy in action and prepare themselves to become active citizens. These guests are seated in the members' gallery, and I would now ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

MR. JACOBS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to rise and introduce another one of my daughters, who is here tonight from Cardston. To you and through you I would like to introduce Mrs. Jolene Jacobs-Strang, who is visiting with us from Cardston. She, I think, came to watch her sister Paula get introduced. I would ask that she stand and receive the warm welcome of the House.

Second Reading

Bill 31

Security Management Statutes Amendment Act, 2002

[Adjourned debate November 19: Ms Carlson]

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Are there any further speakers, or are you ready for the question? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I welcome this opportunity to rise and speak to Bill 31. I got caught a little unprepared. My apologies for that.

Bill 31 is the Security Management Statutes Amendment Act, 2002. It's a very important bill. It's wide ranging in terms of the powers that it seeks to assign to ministers and others in order for them to be able to undertake certain investigations, release information, or seek information and share it with others, including, I must say, Mr. Speaker, some foreign governments. This bill is inspired by, I think, genuine concern for our security. There's no doubt about it. All of us do want to make sure that there are appropriate security measures available so that all of us could feel safe and secure, including the institutions from which we benefit so much, but I think there has to be a balance between concerns for security and concerns for those rights and freedoms that define an open and democratic society.

The enemies of open society, people who dislike open societies and democratic societies, would be delighted to see us make compromises that lead us astray from our fundamental commitments to the very values, the rights, civil liberties, and human rights that define our civil society and that then define our state and its capacities and its powers. The powers of the state to investigate matters that we generally agree should remain within the confines of privacy for all of us, powers that tend to reach into the very sacred values which define our society and its aspirations to become even more civil, more democratic, and more open, should always be received with critical scrutiny. This bill, while it is intended to enhance the ability of our government, the ability of our police forces, and the ability of the people responsible for our security, including ministers, I think is excessive in the kind of powers that it seeks to bestow on those who have those responsibilities for ensuring that we get the security that we need.

I had a quick look at this bill, and it does, of course, extend the rights of cabinet and other authorities to make regulations regarding oil and gas facilities, electrical facilities, park and wilderness areas, highways and railways in respect of terrorist activity or threat of terrorist activity. It also allows authorities to ask for more information from people seeking to change names, to transport dangerous goods, to enter courtrooms, or to get identification. It allows the minister responsible to refuse to register a charitable organization if the organization is named in a certificate under the federal Charities Registration (Security Information) Act. There are several other provisions, including allowing the minister to share information with other jurisdictions when relevant for the purpose of combating terrorist activity and extending the Disaster Services Act and the Public Health Act to allow greater response to perceived or real threats.

So it's really quite wide ranging. It will affect many of the existing statutes of the province, and in my view, from a first quick reading of it, it seems overboard in giving the powers to ministers and other authorities that I think will infringe seriously or certainly would potentially threaten the civil rights, human rights, and the rights to liberty and freedom that we have and also could fundamentally damage the project of keeping and enhancing the open and democratic nature of our societies. We must never give in to any threats, internal or external, to terrorists or others, to our fundamental commitments to openness, liberty, freedom, and democracy.

So I have serious concerns, Mr. Speaker, with respect to these provisions. It seems to me that the federal securities act – I apologize for not being able to recall its exact name; I think it was called Bill 36 – has received a great deal of national attention, debate. Outstanding legal experts, constitutional experts, civil liberties advocates have all expressed grave concerns about the way in which that bill is likely to damage our ability to guarantee to our citizens those very basic rights which define our society as an open and democratic society. So it's with some degree of concern that I rise and speak on this bill. While I understand the motivations behind it, I don't think the measures proposed in it are needed in the fullness in which they are being demanded here.

I just want to read to you a few of the concerns that have been expressed to us in writing. We obviously sought some advice from concerned Albertans and citizens. I just want to read a few excerpts from two of the letters that I brought with me. These are e-mails, and here is what the writer says.

I doubt I need to reinforce the general viewpoint that [Bill 31] is excessive – that there are huge powers given to a few people by this bill that seem hard to justify to me. If the police and other security personnel are doing their jobs then these sort of broad powers would not be all that necessary. It feels to me like the international preoccupation with this that arrived at the national level last year is now arriving at the provincial level. The absurdity of this is that I think none of these measures are liable to actually be very effective with terrorism should it really happen. But what they do do is make all of us paranoid, cause us to live in more fear that we are surrounded by potential terrorism that can surprise us any day and that makes for a more suspicious society where the chances of anyone different being distrusted is greater.

So that's just a part of what the writer of this e-mail states.

The second e-mail, very briefly, just a short one, is even more forceful in expressing concerns by the writer. The writer says:

This bill, in the name of preventing terrorism, is designed to curtail Albertans' basic human rights. What business does the provincial government have to be fiddling around in the area of national security which belongs under federal jurisdiction. This piece of Draconian legislation needs to be fought tooth and nail and you will have my support in your efforts to do so.

The point is that these are very serious concerns, expressed sometimes in very strong language, by ordinary citizens in whose name we stand up and speak here and enact laws and legislation.

At this point I will not go into the details of the bill. I need to give it a little closer scrutiny and examination, and I'm sure that at the committee stage I will have my chances to speak to various clauses of the bill and seek to amend it if I so decide.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General to close debate.

MR. HANCOCK: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to add just a few words in closing debate on this bill. Some of the comments opposite have indicated that security is a national issue and that we ought not in this Legislature concern ourselves with the security of our public, with the citizens of Alberta. I think that nothing could be further from reality in terms of what our obligation is to the public of Alberta. When we have an industrial complex in this province which provides energy for much of North America, when we have security issues which could be of interest around those complexes, but more than that, dangerous substances which are being handled both within our major communities and within the countryside, we have an obligation to be prepared for any eventuality, and we've seen through the dramatic events over the last year and a half what those eventualities might be. It's not our job to scare the citizens of Alberta or to become paranoid about the challenges which we might face but to take prudent response and to be prudently prepared for those eventualities. So I just add those comments in suggesting that the House might consider passing this in second reading and deal with the details in committee.

[Motion carried; Bill 31 read a second time]

head: Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Tannas in the chair]

THE CHAIR: I call Committee of the Whole to order. For the benefit of those people in the galleries this is the informal part of the Legislature. The members are free to wander around, hopefully not to engage in lively discussion except in their own place when they're recognized for speaking in debate. It allows us to ask a number of questions and that kind of thing or to go back and forth in a freer fashion and a less formal fashion than in the Assembly.

Bill 25

Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment Act, 2002

THE CHAIR: Are there any questions, comments, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Yes, I'd like to make a few comments, Mr. Chairman, at this stage of the debate on Bill 25, the Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment Act, 2002. The object of this particular bill is that the amendments enact the second phase in the reduction of the corporate income tax rates in Alberta as announced in Budget 2002. It will also parallel a number of changes that have been made recently in the federal Income Tax Act.

We have to realize that small business in this province is what drives our economy, but at the same time I also have to question how we can continually give tax cuts and rebates to people in this province when the most disadvantaged members of this province have not seen an increase, and I'm talking of those people who are on AISH, those people who are on social services, those people who are on supports for independence, and these people have not seen any significant increases for years. We hear time and time again how this province is so unique to have a program like AISH, yet those people certainly don't benefit the way that so many others in this society do. It seems, as one of these people had said to me, that if you're not a productive member of this particular society here in Alberta, whether you're a senior or on AISH or supports for independence, you certainly don't see any benefits and you certainly don't see any part of the Alberta advantage.

So I think that what we require here, Mr. Chairman, more than anything else is a balance. If we are going to be giving tax cuts in this province to small business, we should certainly make certain that we have put into place those supports required by people on a fixed income or on some type of social assistance.

Now, then, as well, Mr. Chairman, we also have to look from the point of view that two years ago we had the second largest revenues in this province that we've ever had, yet this particular government saw fit to cut back so many vital programs in this province. So we do have a major problem that we have to look at here when we are looking at the Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment Act, 2002, in that it is addressing certainly small business and less tax for small business, but at the same time at whose expense does this come? We certainly don't see any indicator of that here.

Now, then, last year the government reduced business taxes by $286 million. They cut the general income tax rate to 13.5 percent, cut the small business rate to 5 percent, and raised the small business threshold to $300,000. They also eliminated the capital tax and reduced the capital gains inclusion rate to 50 percent. At that time, Mr. Chairman, they announced a schedule for further reductions that would have raised the small business threshold to $400,000 this year and cut the small business rate to 3 percent by 2003 and the general rate to 8 percent by 2004. The government also announced that this plan would proceed subject to affordability, but who is this affordable for? Certainly not all Albertans.

Under the current fiscal circumstances the government has decided to modify the original business tax reduction schedule, so now under Bill 25 as of April 1, 2002, the general rate falls to 13 percent, the small business rate drops to 4.5 percent, and the small business threshold increases to $350,000. These cuts will save Alberta businesses somewhere in the neighbourhood of $81 million. The government still plans to cut the general rate to 8 percent and the small business rate to 3 percent and increase the small business threshold to $400,000, as affordable, but they are certainly slowing down the pace of the planned reductions.

The other changes contained in Bill 25 are primarily technical in nature to increase the readability and the functionality of the act as well as to parallel changes in the federal Income Tax Act.

When we look at the sectional analysis of this particular bill, the major change is in section 15(1), which amends section 21. Under this section the general rate is reduced from 13.5 percent to 13 percent. These reductions are effective as of March 31, 2002, so they will be retroactive to that point. Section 16(1) amends section 22 of the original act. The changes here involve raising the small business threshold to $350,000.

The remaining sections involve primarily technical changes intended to parallel amendments to the federal Income Tax Act. For example, Mr. Chairman, section 17 of Bill 25 amends section 23 of the original act, which deals with foreign investment income. The federal government has done a lot of work in this area, and the changes in this section are intended to parallel the work done by the federal government. The additions made in 17(4) clarify the rules surrounding a corporation's foreign investment income through the Canadian banking system as well as access to tax credits. Section 21(1) amends section 30 of the original act to adjust for federal changes in order to ensure that mutual fund companies in line for a reduction do not get more back than they pay in tax.

Other changes are made to improve the readability of certain sections as well as the functionality of the act. For example, section 2(c) repeals 1(6) of the original act since it was causing problems with tax calculations. Section 1(6) dealt with a corporation that had a tax year greater than 365 days and yet was treated as if it were 365 days. Another example would be section 7(1), which amends section 14.2(1) by removing the requirement for a copy of the federal election form in order to participate in the provisions of this section, which is the transfer of property to a corporation. The section was intended to apply to all corporations. The need to submit a form negated the effect of the section.

Other changes, Mr. Chairman, that improve the functionality of the act include section 14(1), which broadens what is considered as royalty income to cover all areas pertaining to hydrocarbons, metals, and minerals. Sections 18 and 20 repeal sections 25 and 26.5 respectively, dealing with the Alberta rental investment tax credit, since this program is no longer in effect other than the carryover from the previous years. No application for this program could have been made after 1990. This simply takes it off the books other than the carryover subsection to handle any firms that still have not claimed their full amount.

As I said, I do have some concerns when we do have a bill such as Bill 25, the Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment Act, in front of us here when other sectors of this province, particularly the seniors, the people on AISH, the people on supports for independence, are not seeing any raises and yet we are cutting taxes.

So with those comments, Mr. Chairman, I will sit down and listen to further debate on Bill 25. Thank you very much.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

8:30

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to make some general observations on Bill 25, the Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment Act, 2002, as we begin the debate at the committee stage of our deliberations on this bill. To provide sort of a backdrop to my comments on this bill, I just want to note that earlier this afternoon I rose and under Standing Order 30 called on the Speaker to accept my request for an emergency debate on the peril in which we have potentially put our low-income citizens, citizens who are on SFI, supports for independence, programs and citizens who are severely handicapped adults and need our assistance. I also in those comments drew attention to the unfortunate decision of this government to keep the minimum wage in this province at $5.90, which is the lowest rate for minimum wage in this country. New Brunswick, Newfoundland, and all other provinces have a higher minimum wage rate. That's the background against which I think we have to assess the needs of one sector of the community.

MR. BONNER: Are we not the lowest in Canada?

DR. PANNU: We're the lowest in the country, in Canada, yes.

When I look at this bill and what it proposes to do, it certainly is an attempt to further reduce already very favourable rates of corporate tax, particularly for large corporations.

The second feature of this bill is that it, in a sense, ties the two sets of reductions together. It puts them in the same bill. If I want to support one section, I must support the other. Let me talk to these two sections. One part of the bill proposes a reduction of the corporate tax rate for large corporations from 13.5 percent to 13 percent. The other part of the bill does what I think is quite justifiable: a proposed reduction, if you wish, in the small business tax rate from 5 percent to 4 percent and also raise the small business threshold from $350,000 to $400,000.

Now, I am enthusiastically supportive of giving some tax relief to small businesses. Small businesses are where most of our young people work. Small businesses are where most of the people who work for minimum wages work. Small businesses also create more jobs. Small businesses serve our communities more than large corporations. So there's every reason to think that a tax relief provided, as proposed in this bill, to small businesses will do a great deal of good both through local economies in our communities and to people who work in the enterprises and the businesses we call small businesses. It's also quite appropriate, given the inflationary trends and other things, to raise the threshold from $350,000 to $400,000, to make a distinction between what should be deemed as small business as distinct from what should be deemed as large corporation. So that part of the bill presents no problem. I can support it. I want to support it. I'm enthusiastically supportive of it.

It's the other part of the bill which offers a tax cut to some of the largest, wealthiest, and most profitable corporations in the province. That reduction from 13.5 to 13 percent has to be judged in terms of both the need for it, the justification in terms of fairness, and the impact of it on our provincial revenues. We have seen all kinds of taxes go up, including the health care tax by 30 percent. We have seen medical services for seniors and others being rolled back or stripped, and there are other taxes on the way, from the cost of registries to what have you, court costs. Tuition fees are going up by 6, 7 percent. Why are we doing that? So that we can pay for these tax handouts or tax breaks to large corporations? Taking from the young students, from seniors, from the poor so that we can give to the richest of the corporations not only in this province, not only in this country but in the world makes absolutely no sense. Whether you use the touchstone of fairness, justice, or need, I cannot justify to this House my support for that part of the bill, which is section 15, which offers yet another tax cut to the large corporations.

So if we are not willing to look after the most needy, the most vulnerable citizens of this province, if we are not willing to spare our seniors, who have worked hard all their lives building the society in which we live and the fruits of which we enjoy, if we're not willing to invest in our young people in the province, those who attend our colleges and universities in the hundreds of thousands, if we are willing to increase the burden of going to school onto their shoulders, why is it, then, that we are, at the same time, ready, as this bill proposes, to make further tax concessions to corporations, who don't need it? There's no guarantee that any money that they save because of these tax cuts will necessarily be invested in this province. That's the old idea of the so-called free enterprise, the market-driven decisions that corporations make. They're not obliged because we give them some taxes back to invest those taxes in this province.

For all of these reasons, Mr. Chairman, I regret to say that I will have to oppose this bill unless I can get at least one section of it amended, and I'll need your direction as to when I can propose that amendment.

I'll sit down with those comments.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Minister of Revenue.

MR. MELCHIN: Thank you. I'd just like to respond a little bit to some of the questions that were raised. Appropriately identified in this bill, the bulk of it has to do with, as was said, paralleling federal amendments. That contains really the bulk of what's in here. Our taxable income, the income which we use as a basis for calculating the provincial tax, is used on the basis of an act to which both provincial and federal governments comply in the calculation of taxable income. So most of these, as mentioned, are to accomplish just that purpose, to parallel federal amendments.

That said, the provincial changes, as was talked about, to change the general corporate tax rate from 13 and a half to 13 percent and to reduce the small business rate to 4 and a half and to increase the small business threshold from $350,000, as everybody has stated here, is correct. I would point out that the personal and corporate income tax reductions that we have put in place already over the past few years have not led to a decrease in the absolute dollars that we've collected. In fact, we have continued to collect even more dollars in personal and corporate income taxes. Part of the real benefit, if we are supposedly concerned about those that are in need, is to see how we create more wealth, how you and I have more money to care for all the personal needs and everything else. So it is critical when it comes to things like the right tax structures for it.

You mentioned that reducing the thresholds does a great deal of benefit to small businesses. It does; we concur with that. But reducing the thresholds and the rates for all companies also has a great deal of benefit for jobs, employment, investment, and opportunity in Alberta.

Just to give you an illustration, this is why Canadians in greater frequency are investing more and more of their money in the United States, in the stock markets in the United States, in U.S. corporations versus Canadian corporations. They get about 15 percent higher returns in the stock markets in the United States than we do in the Canadian equities. So those reflect the profits that our companies make. It's purely a price question. If our companies are not able to get a sufficient return, and taxes are a part of that cost, then the investors, you and I, are choosing not to keep our money right here in Canada to support our own companies. It is important that we be competitive not just with the other provinces in Canada but throughout the world, and our tax rates in Canada continue to be yet still higher than those of our major trading partner, the United States.

It's for those reasons that we will continue to implement, as we said, the reductions in the corporate tax, which will continue to see that the Alberta advantage thrives, that we have opportunities for jobs, greater employment, greater investment opportunities, and more chances for our corporations to thrive and to succeed in the decades and generations ahead.

I'll conclude my remarks there.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Mr. Chairman, I would like to propose an amendment if this is the right time for this.

THE CHAIR: Have you got copies?

DR. PANNU: Yes, I've got copies here.

THE CHAIR: Okay. Good.

DR. PANNU: I'm ready for the distribution of the copies, Mr. Chairman.

THE CHAIR: Hopefully, hon. member, the original is going to come here.

DR. PANNU: Certainly, Mr. Chairman. It's on its way.

THE CHAIR: Move it, and then we'll wait until everybody gets a copy. Okay?

DR. PANNU: Okay. Mr. Chairman, let me read the amendment, then, for the record. The amendment, in the name of my colleague the Member for Edmonton-Highlands, reads that Bill 25, Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment Act, 2002, be amended as follows: "Section 15 is struck out." It's a very simple amendment, Mr. Chairman.

I would be happy to very briefly speak to the amendment. I understand that all hon. members have a copy of the amendment before them. The amendment simply proposes that section 15 is struck out. If we look at what section 15 does, it lowers the tax rate for corporations from 13.5 percent to 13 percent. I submit to you respectfully that we cannot support this sort of tax reduction given that there are so many pressing needs such as money for health care, education, low-income programs – and the list goes on – and given that the government is crying poverty as an excuse for not acting on these priorities of Albertans. I heard the Minister of Revenue talk about that we already have enough money, that we are in fact generating more income tax dollars and more corporate tax dollars. If that is the case, I wonder: why doesn't he stand up and call on his government and the minister of education to take action forthwith to reduce the class sizes that need to be reduced in this province?

I would like the Minister of Revenue to stand up and call for an immediate increase in the rates that we pay for supports for independence programs and for recipients of AISH. It appears that we have room there to be generous towards corporations. I just would appeal to him to do the same or ask for the same kind of treatment when it comes to our postsecondary students, when it comes to funding our K to 12 classrooms, reduction of class sizes – and I can go on – and health care. We could certainly afford to reduce the health care premiums, which he voted for increasing by 30 percent.

I'm curious that the Minister of Revenue would draw attention to the fact that revenues are going up in this province, yet he agrees with his own cabinet members, his own colleagues on the government side in saying that there's a need to increase taxes for health care, the need to increase tuition fees for postsecondary students, and there's no urgency for us to act and provide resources to school boards so they can reduce the class size for our young children, at least from kindergarten to grade 3, the years when the foundations for a more solid performance in later years in school are laid down.

If he were to do all these things at the same time as he is calling for a tax decrease for corporations, I might find his argument convincing. In the absence of such commitments and in the presence of his total silence on this, I find it very difficult to accept his argument and be persuaded to vote for yet another tax cut for corporations as proposed in this bill, Mr. Chairman. I certainly would like to hear from other members to see what justification they have. Just to increase wealth while at the same time claiming poverty – we want to decrease taxes because it will lead to more investment and more jobs and more wealth – doesn't make sense to me.

He asks us to follow the American model. Well, in America we have the Enrons of the world, and those Canadians who invested there got cleaned out completely. Worldcom: another story. I think he should be far more circumspect in making recommendations from the floor of this House encouraging Canadians to invest in a market which guarantees 15 percent returns. Does it? I just ask him that question. He should be more specific about what he says in the House because as a minister of the Crown what he says here is taken very seriously by Albertans, and I think he has to give some evidence for his recommendations, for making suggestions that somehow the nirvana, the paradise, is out there south of the 49th parallel.

Huge scandals. Absolutely enormously shattering scandals. The life savings of tens of thousands of hard-working Canadians, Albertans, and, of course, I'm sure, millions of Americans have been simply sacrificed at the altar of those great big corporate giants who have been found to be indulging and engaging in practices which are not only corrupt but which are scandalous to the point that CEOs are now being dragged through the civil courts and the criminal courts.

In view of that, I think we need to have a balanced assessment presented to Albertans about what it is that we want to do by reduction of tax to the corporations while at the same time wanting to increase the tax burdens of direct or indirect taxes from students to seniors to the sick in this province to everyone else.

Given that, Mr. Chairman, I hope that members of this House will support the amendment that I've just proposed so that it cleans up this bill and all can vote for it then. Let's vote for this amendment, which will make it possible for me to vote with the Minister of Revenue to pass this bill through the House.

Thank you.

THE CHAIR: Hon. members, this is amendment A1.

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Chairman, I would just like to make a few comments on the amendment, and I certainly would say at the outset that I do not support the amendment. We're fortunate to live in a province that has a very dynamic economy. Unfortunately, we don't have time in this House to go through the whole course on economics 101 and through the rest, but I think that there are a number of people in this House that have a business background, that do have some understanding of the private sector, so we won't go into those details.

However, I heard the Minister of Revenue state very clearly that the policy of this government, which is to reduce taxes on a corporate side, a small business side, and a personal side, has led to an increased and robust economy in this province. So by the very virtue of that, Mr. Chairman, I would suggest that it would be very ill advised for anyone to support the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, we've heard lots of rhetoric about our health system, our education system, the supports that we give to seniors and those who are less fortunate. Well, I would suggest to you that the facts speak quite contrary to what we've heard. Health: the Capital regional health authority, which we are in, has for two years in a row been noted as the best health care delivery system in Canada. I don't think they do that on less than adequate funding. Seniors' programs: we have a huge in-migration of seniors into our province, have for a number of years, because indeed we support our seniors in a manner, I think, that gives them dignity and also respects the contribution that they've made to the growth of this province.

Education. Mr. Chairman, I'm one of nine children and not, certainly, from a wealthy family, especially in the years I was growing up. You know, my parents did not expect somebody else to educate their children. Every one of those children had an opportunity for an education. Certainly there was sacrifice on behalf of the parents, but they also felt it was a duty and a responsibility. I think we had better put some duty and responsibility back into our thinking, and we had better change our thinking on education. It is not a burden to students to go to university and college; in fact, it is an investment in their future.

Instead of talking about the possibility of their spending 30 percent of the cost of tuition, maybe we should talk about the 70 percent that the public in this province proudly contributes to their education. Why do we do that? Mr. Chairman, we do that because it is a known fact that in Alberta we have the most highly educated workforce in Canada. We can look at national results, national examinations and find that our students perform at the top in almost every subject. That tells me that we have a good education system, and, yes, the Minister of Learning continually strives to make that better.

We have one of the most generous student loan programs of any province in Canada, and if the members in this House would like to see less burden, perhaps we could talk to the federal government and ask them to contribute to the remission policy that this government has, that ensures that no student leaves our system with an unfair burden that they can't manage in the workforce. We do have a system of remission. We do have a system that says that you will leave school and be able to repay your student loan. Why would you do that? You would do that so that more students have the opportunity to go to school. When the student loan policy was put in in this province, it was put in to ensure that no student would go without the opportunity for a postsecondary education, not that all of us simply didn't help with our children's education. We have a responsibility as parents to prepare for that eventuality, and goodness knows there are all types of instruments out there today that allow you to do that with a very small amount of money put aside each month.

But I have to come back to the narrowness of this amendment. What do we really want for this province? Do we want our economy to grow? Do we want more businesses to invest so that we can enjoy the strong social programs that we have in this province? I would suggest that the government members in this Legislature want to see the economy grow. We want to see more people invest in our province. We want to have more taxpayers, and we want to have more tax dollars not by increasing taxes, not by putting an unfair burden on people but by ensuring that people want to invest here. I think the in-migration in this province, the fact that we enjoy the highest number of head offices of any city in Canada today, speaks to a very sound fiscal policy and tax structure that this government has put in place.

Mr. Chairman, this amendment will do nothing to ensure that those who can't help themselves will have more. It will do nothing to ensure that class sizes will change in schools. It will do nothing to ensure that our health system sustains. It will do nothing to ensure that our students have an education at a cost that they can afford. If we defeat this amendment, if we continue with a tax policy that says "we will not overburden our citizens," we will continue to have investment from all over Canada come to this province, and we will enjoy the best social programs of any province in Canada.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I must speak to this amendment after hearing the comments of the hon. minister in telling us what a great opportunity students have in this province for an education.

I had the opportunity earlier this year, Mr. Chairman, in September, to travel with a group of other MLAs from this Assembly. We toured a number of parliaments and countries in the British Isles, and it was amazing when we started talking to the people in southern Ireland. Now, southern Ireland has had people moving out of there. They've had a brain drain for years similar to what Alberta is experiencing right now.

In meetings with them we talked, and of course we all know that back in the 1960s – I believe it was 1962 – the Republic of Ireland decided to provide free education for division 1, division 2, and division 3, which of course is grades 1 to 6, 7 to 12, and postsecondary education for everybody. They did that back in the 1960s. Now, then, today southern Ireland enjoys many of the economic benefits that Alberta is experiencing, and in fact they might even be ahead of Alberta.

DR. TAFT: And they don't have oil or gas.

MR. BONNER: Yes, and they don't have oil or gas revenues.

In discussions with their parliamentarians the question I posed to them was: is there any correlation between your free education policies that you established back in the '60s and your economic success of today? They all said: yes; there is a direct correlation between free education and the economic success that they are getting today.

Now, then, the minister said that students have absolutely no trouble getting loans. Well, I have a constituent that contacted me that's attending DeVry institute in Calgary. They got loans for the first year. They got loans for the second year, but in their third year, when they required money, they could not get a loan. Now, this is a 21-year-old student living away from home, and because his parents got a raise, this young man does not qualify for a loan in this province. No. This young man has to stop his training at DeVry because his parents cannot afford to send him there and he can't get a loan. This is the Alberta advantage for this young man, and it certainly isn't coming off the same song sheet that the minister was just speaking about.

So, yes, I think we do have to look at this amendment and look at it seriously. We certainly want a competitive atmosphere here for our businesses, but as well I think that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona has a point, that perhaps there are some people in this province that aren't paying their fair share.

With these comments, Mr. Chairman, I will take my seat, and I thank you very much for this opportunity to speak to the amendment.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I just would like to clarify something that has just been said with respect to southern Ireland, first of all, and I'd also like to speak with respect to the educational opportunities that are there.

While we are discussing an amendment to a bill --and that amendment proposes to remove a whole section, which the previous speaker, the Member for Edmonton-Glengarry, just referenced – I'd like to clarify the fact that it was because of tax breaks most recently allowed by the government of Ireland that the students, therefore, not in the '60s, not in the '70s, not in the '80s, but in the '90s were given these subsidies for postsecondary education, which is what has allowed them to have a workforce now that is highly competitive and an economy that is humming. They're not looking at a brain drain, but they're looking at a return. It is because the government in its wisdom gave tax considerations to companies and to corporations in order for them to have an economy that would provide for their peoples who cannot assist themselves, social programs that are of great assistance to the quality of life for those who need those social programs that are financed by those companies that are indeed looking to invest and wanting to continue to invest and grow in Alberta in our particular case.

The other thing that I would like to remind everyone of as we are looking at this amendment is to consider how we all – and I would say most of us here – enjoy the arts, we enjoy the opportunities that we have for festivals, and they are large corporations who very frequently are the sponsors for these community social events that are very often available to those who are in great need.

So when we are looking at this amendment here, I suggest we defeat it because these are the organizations and these are the companies and the corporations that I do believe are the ones that contribute to a society that looks after those who cannot help themselves.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's great to have some active debate this evening. I've listened carefully to all the comments on this proposed amendment, and I think I could challenge various things; for example, the comments from the Member for St. Albert pointing out the value of major corporations to the arts and then reflecting on comments earlier that the Calgary Philharmonic is bankrupt functioning in the centre of the biggest business community in western Canada. But I won't go there too far. I think there is, in fact, an issue here of perception and a sense of fairness, and we all know that fairness and justice not only need to be done, but they need to be seen to be done. What I'm sensing here very clearly – and I share this concern – is that while we are proposing to give through Bill 25 a tax break to the largest and wealthiest corporations in this province – and it's one in a long series of tax breaks – we haven't shared that equivalent wealth or anything like it with some of the most needy members of our society.

We're all aware that the support for income rates hasn't gone up in close to 10 years now. We know how desperate the situation is for AISH recipients. We know that school fees are going up. The municipalities are desperate for infrastructure funding. Tuition fees at universities are rising far faster in Alberta than anywhere else in the country, far beyond the rate of inflation. We know that regional health authorities outside of Edmonton and Calgary are desperately trying to hang on. We know that the Lakeland regional health authority is on the brink of collapse because of inadequate funding.

So we have across this province a disparity, and I think that's what we're addressing here. I don't think we in this caucus, at least speaking for myself, are in principle opposed to a tax cut, but what I would like to see is a fairness in the distribution of the wealth. Our concern is that the track record of this government tilts very heavily in favour of the wealthy and the powerful and tilts very sharply away from the impoverished and the helpless. So that's the fundamental issue that's led to sparks this evening.

I would be much happier with Bill 25 if there were an adjoining bill or series of bills that did things like raised AISH rates or raised SFI rates or limited growth in tuition fees, and the fact that we aren't seeing that I think is an important symbol of where the loyalties and the interests of this government lie. They lie first and foremost with the corporate masters of this province.

With those comments I'm going to speak clearly in favour of this motion and congratulate the third party for bringing it forward. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

[Motion on amendment A1 lost]

9:20

THE CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I just had one quick question. When the government looks at reducing the amount of money that it would be collecting – and it's anticipating reducing this income tax rate from 13.5 to 13 percent, so they're forgoing an additional .5 percent revenue – what are the performance measurements? What are the expectations of the Minister of Revenue, some measurement or target that he's looking to achieve with this additional half percent? What does he expect the outcome to be? What are the attainable targets that he's shooting for with this? If I can get that on the record, please.

MR. MELCHIN: It's been stated throughout, both in the throne speech, in the budget when it's come forward as an address, that this isn't the only tax cut. This has been the start of a sequence of reductions in corporate tax rates as affordable. This is a half percentage drop, or reduction, in the rate this year, and it still is the plan that we'll continue to reduce the rates, as affordable, over the next number of years. The combined package was an $81 million tax cut to businesses, but we expect, as it has been previously also, that the economic activity in the province will increase, creating more investment opportunities here in the province, which leads to more jobs, which leads to more people having the opportunity to accomplish all the things that they would personally like to do in their lives.

It is part of the business plan performance measures of the Department of Revenue that we have the lowest tax loads, both personal and corporate, which we do have, and we want to continue to maintain and have that Alberta advantage. It is a very significant component to why the economy is strong in Alberta, so we'll continue in that direction.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thanks. Didn't answer my question. If you're not going to be collecting $81 million, then what exactly are you expecting to achieve? In not collecting the $81 million, it's the same as giving the $81 million to someone else. It is forgone revenue. What is your specific performance measurement for that $81 million? You say that it's part of a larger issue and trickle down and yada, yada, yada, but how are you to know that this was a worthwhile effort unless you have some achievable performance measurements and targets in place? What specifically were you anticipating gaining for the people of Alberta from this half a percent or, if you wish to look at it another way, from this $81 million? Get specific. What are you looking to gain? A year from now if I stand up and say, "What did you gain from this; what did you get for the $81 million; what were you expecting specifically to achieve?" how can you measure how well you're doing if you don't set yourself performance measurements that you can measure against, some targets that you can achieve?

AN HON. MEMBER: We have business plans, good heavens.

MS BLAKEMAN: Well, fine. Good. What is it for the $81 million then?

MR. MELCHIN: Our objective is to continue to position the province to be the best place to work, to invest, and to create jobs.

We all have an opportunity. By setting a climate where you have competitive tax rates, it will accomplish that. That's what has been the history already. As we've mentioned, already in our personal and corporate tax reductions as we've had thus far, we have not seen a drop in absolute dollars. I can't say specifically what will happen in this upcoming year, but I can say that that is the general trend. When you allow people to retain their money, to invest in the priorities of their own business, in their own personal expenditures, it does create more opportunity for everybody to attain their dreams.

So we want to be competitive, and that is part of the thresholds we will have: to be the lowest tax load for both corporate and personal. Those are our thresholds, and we want to look not just within Canada, but we are going to look throughout the world that we are a place that is attractive throughout the world for people to come and invest.

[The clauses of Bill 25 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

THE CHAIR: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE CHAIR: Opposed? Carried.

The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would move that the committee rise and report Bill 25.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

MR. LORD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration and reports Bill 25. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Does the Assembly concur in this report?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Opposed? So ordered.

MR. HANCOCK: Well, Mr. Speaker, this being the first day of the fall session and work having proceeded at such a great pace, I would move that we now adjourn until 1:30 p.m. tomorrow.

[Motion carried; at 9:28 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Wednesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Wednesday, November 20, 2002 1:30 p.m.
 Date: 02/11/20
 [The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

THE SPEAKER: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. Our divine Father, as we continue our work this day, we renew our thanks and ask that we may continue under Your guidance. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Guests

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Economic Development.

MR. NORRIS: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. [some applause] Thank you for that thunderous applause.

Mr. Speaker, it's an absolute delight for me to rise today. As you know, the constituency of Edmonton-McClung produces some very interesting and wonderful things, not the least of which are the kids from Ormsby elementary school. They're here today with their teachers Mrs. Linda Vanjoff, Mr. Thomas Lock, Ms Tina Yonge, and they're all in the members' gallery. I'd ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly. Edmonton-McClung is great.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Redwater.

MR. BRODA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's certainly my pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly six great individuals from my constituency and probably known to quite a number of you. They are also on county council in Thorhild, and I'd like to introduce them. First, we have Henry Zolkewski, the reeve of the county; the deputy reeve, Lyle Kuzik; Nick Lazowski, councillor; Kevin Grumetza, councillor; William Kowal, councillor; and the county manager, Robyn Singleton. They're here for the AAMD and C convention and are here to observe us, so please welcome them.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Peace River.

MR. FRIEDEL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and to the members a constituent from High Level, Dianne Hunter. In fact, she's the CAO of the town of High Level. She's here today as part of the AAMD and C conference and a little later this afternoon a meeting with our Solicitor General. She's standing in the members' gallery, and I would like our members to give her the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

MR. McCLELLAND: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my great pleasure to introduce to the House through you 27 students representing St. Augustine school. They're accompanied by their teachers Miss Elana Siminton and Christine Wong and by parent helper Dina McMahon. We would ask them to please rise and accept the warm and gracious welcome of the House.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have the honour of introducing to you and to all members of the House today Ms Shirley Barg. She's vice-president of Athabasca University Students' Union and a member of the Council of Alberta University Students, an organization called CAUS. She along with all the members of the CAUS, close to a hundred thousand students, is trying to convince the government to reduce tuition fees. She's also among those students who are wondering why the government, on the one hand, is letting tuition fees go up while the government is actively engaged in cutting the corporate taxes in this province. I think Ms Barg is there, and I'll ask everyone to welcome her.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Oral Question Period

Provincial Fiscal Policies

DR. NICOL: This government's priorities are really mixed up. Over the past three years millions of dollars in capital improvements on schools have been put on hold, and 135 schools are rated by this government as in poor condition. Meanwhile, this government continues to give handsome bonuses to its managers, with some bonuses as high as $29,000, more than many Albertans earn in a single year. My question to the Premier: how can you justify nearly $3 million in staff bonuses to employees of Alberta Infrastructure over the past three years while thousands of students are sitting in run-down schools?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out that across Canada I believe that our senior public service employees, sad to say, are amongst the lowest paid. What we try to do, within a reasonable degree, is bring them into scope so as not to lose them to other jurisdictions and, indeed, the private sector. I would point out that many of our deputy ministers, certainly many, many of our assistant deputy ministers, earn far less than school superintendents.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister to supplement.

MR. LUND: Mr. Speaker, I think it's important to recognize that under the new century school program, which was started two years ago, there was some $1.1 billion – $1.1 billion – spent on schools.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you. Given that $3 million could have provided 1,700 poor children with hot lunches every school day for three years, but instead it went to feed the bureaucracy, can the Premier tell us what his priority is: hungry children or bonuses for well-paid employees?

MR. KLEIN: Naturally we're concerned about hungry children, and we address the issues of poverty and certainly have programs in place to accommodate those who are truly in need in society, Mr. Speaker, and we'll continue to do that.

Relative to the salary issue, Mr. Speaker, I would remind the hon. leader of the Liberal Party that our senior public service employees had their salaries frozen for five years in a row, then took a 5 percent rollback. Right now they're in a catch-up phase, but, as I said previously, they are nowhere near what other senior public service employees get paid across this country, certainly absolutely nowhere near what they get paid in the private sector.

DR. NICOL: Given that $3 million in bonuses were handed over to well-paid employees in just one government department over the past three years, including one bonus of $29,000, can the Premier explain why he can't toss a few crumbs to low-income Albertans who haven't seen a raise in 10 years?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, low-income Albertans are receiving a lot more than a few crumbs. I point to AISH in particular, one of the programs that is unique in Canada. It's the policy of this government, as I stated yesterday, to provide a hand up rather than a handout and to accommodate those who truly need our help and to help those who are on welfare and are able to work to get off the welfare rolls and to find employment and to earn a living in a dignified manner.

DR. NICOL: Over the past five years this government has gotten fatter and fatter. It's abandoned any pretense of fiscal responsibility and restraint. The government's own numbers show that it is spending $358 million more on salaries, wages, and benefits than it did five years ago, coincidentally the same amount needed by the Calgary board of education for deferred maintenance projects. Mr. Speaker, not only does this government have its priorities all mixed up, I'm afraid it's been seriously infected with a bad case of chronic wasting disease. My first question to the Premier: how can you justify spending nearly one-third more on government salaries and wages while Albertans are paying more user fees and receiving fewer services? Was the $184 million increase in health premiums this year alone to pay for this bloated payroll?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I find it quite ironic and quite contradictory that the hon. member would be asking this particular question since it's the Liberal Party that consistently and constantly demands of this government to spend more for teachers, more for nurses, more for doctors, more for social workers, more, more, more, and when we provide reasonable salary increases, they complain. I don't know really where they're coming from. Do they want more for teachers, doctors, nurses, nurses aides, and other public service employees? They're constantly crying for more and more money. When we pay them more money, then they complain. I can't figure it.

DR. NICOL: Mr. Speaker, it has to do with good management. We would do it better.

How can the Premier justify a 26 percent increase in Executive Council salaries over the past three years and a 117 percent increase in deputy minister salaries, benefits, allowances since 1997 when schools are crumbling and SFI and AISH recipients have not received any increases?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, as you know, relative to SFI and AISH that matter is under review, the result of the low-income review, and that situation will be addressed. We've heard from representatives of various groups representing people who are deemed to be in poverty, and we'll deal with that particular situation.

Relative to Executive Council salaries and the salaries of other public service employees, Mr. Speaker, what we try to do is make sure that, as best we possibly can, our salaries are in line with other jurisdictions. Unfortunately, we haven't been able to meet the salary allotments that are given in many other jurisdictions, but we try our hardest to do that. In other words, we try to treat people fairly, and that's what it's all about.

DR. NICOL: I ask you, Mr. Premier: when are you going to keep your promise to reduce the size of government and return to a smaller cabinet, reduce it from the 24 that you have?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, 24 is not bad on a percentage basis considering the huge majority we have and the very measly minority they have.

THE SPEAKER: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Heritage Savings Trust Fund

MR. BONNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today the Minister of Revenue announced that the heritage fund has suffered losses of $1.3 billion in the first six months of this year. Another blow in a long line of attempts by this government to deplete the heritage fund is the most recent survey, with one trick question and three others that show that all this government wants is to spend, spend, spend the fund. My questions are to the Minister of Revenue. Why doesn't the survey on the future of the heritage fund provide Albertans with a meaningful opportunity to indicate that they want this fund saved for the future?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. MELCHIN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I don't think we should ever apologize for consulting with Albertans. You know, there are four questions in that survey, and I'm glad that he's reminded. It's an opportunity to invite all Albertans to complete that by this Friday, which is the close date, November 22. Of the four questions, two come from the original mandate of the fund: that of a long-term endowment, which a portion of it has always been dedicated to and a portion quite likely will forever be dedicated to.

The other question: what to do with capital? Over $3.5 billion has been invested in various projects like the Walter C. Mackenzie centre, the Tom Baker cancer centre, Kananaskis park, a variety of projects that benefit now and future Albertans.

The other two questions are a direct result of the Future Summit recommendations: that of sustainability – should that form part of it? – and should the debt be paid down? We're following up as a promise to Albertans through a public consultation to put their ideas forward so that Albertans can have the choice.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. BONNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Why does this minister spend $365,000 on a manipulative and meaningless survey instead of holding a referendum and getting meaningful direction from Albertans?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. MELCHIN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On a fund that has such great value to Albertans, it is important that we do take time to not just survey but that we also give time to educate and inform and allow them to participate in the democratic process. This is very much part of it, and we're pleased to have it.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. BONNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the larger this government becomes, the more the heritage fund shrinks, how many ministries will it take to spend the heritage fund?

MR. MELCHIN: You know, the heritage fund, I must say at the outset, is here to stay. It's here to benefit not just current generations but future generations of Albertans, and that's what the survey is about.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party.

Rural Health Services

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Tory MLAs are in open revolt against this government's plans to close rural hospitals. The Lakeland health region, chaired by a former Tory cabinet minister, is refusing to do the government's dirty work by closing or downgrading rural hospitals in northeastern Alberta. Three cheers for him. Rural Albertans are furious with this government, and rightly so, especially when they know that this government is generous with tax cuts to big corporations that don't need a penny of their social welfare. My question now to the minister of health: why is the minister content to have as his legacy the closure or downgrading of public hospitals in rural communities?

MR. MAR: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, I think that the chairman of the regional health authority out in Lakeland would be most astonished to have the support of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Let me say that we have a commitment to maintaining a level of services in rural Alberta that is sustainable. That sustainability must be not only for people that live in Calgary and Edmonton, but it must also exist for people that live in Hairy Hill, Two Hills, Pincher Creek, Red Earth Creek. Whether it's in Fort McMurray or Fort Macleod, Mr. Speaker, we have a commitment to maintaining our facilities in rural Alberta where they are required. There are and have been examples where facilities for any one of a number of reasons may have been converted to long-term care centres.

We, of course, have different ways of delivering health care throughout the province. We have teleradiology. We have telehealth. We have telepsychiatry. We have many ways of making sure that our administrative systems are as effective and as efficient as possible. But to make it clear, Mr. Speaker, our goal is to try and decentralize the delivery of services in health care. We are making better use of facilities that exist outside of Calgary and Edmonton, and there are outstanding facilities throughout rural Alberta, but the crux of the matter is that we are maintaining and in some cases able to improve delivery of health care in rural Alberta.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I don't think the minister got Mr. Isley's message clear and loud.

How can the government insist that rural RHAs can operate on funding increases of 2 percent this year when their costs have increased closer to 6 percent?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, there have been increases to regional health authorities. While it is true that some regional health authorities get a 2 percent increase, other regional health authorities have had up to a 7.8 percent increase, and the reason is that we fund on the basis of population. The more population you have, the greater your growth in population, the more funding attracts it. Also, our population funding formula recognizes that there are increases as a result of dealing with an older population, of dealing with a lower income population, of dealing with the aboriginal population, and our funding reflects that.

Now, it is correct, Mr. Speaker, that there are some regional health authorities that because their populations have either been stagnant or in some cases have been decreasing, in those cases the funding increase that they get is less than in areas where the regional health authorities have experienced growth or an aging population. So one of the solutions that has been proposed and will be decided upon through the process of going through our standing policy committee, our caucus, and our cabinet is to determine how we will deal with these issues with smaller regional health authorities that may not be sustainable two, three, four, five years out.

1:50

DR. PANNU: Mr. Speaker, the minister is going to have a hard time selling his solution to rural Albertans.

My last question to him: does the minister agree with the Premier when the Premier insulted rural Albertans by describing their hospitals and health facilities as nothing more than local employment centres?

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Point of order.

MR. MAR: Two things, Mr. Speaker. First of all, what the hon. member said is patently untrue. Secondly, in answering his question about who has the interests of rural Albertans best in mind: the caucus that is represented in the government of Alberta. I can't name one NDP member from rural Alberta.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Automobile Insurance

MR. JOHNSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Over the past months there has been a flurry of media coverage on automobile insurance in Alberta. These reports indicate that auto insurance premiums are on the rise and will continue to rise if something isn't done about it. Recently it was also announced that a large insurance company and two smaller auto insurers operating in Alberta would stop writing new auto insurance policies in the province. My questions are all to the Minister of Finance. My constituents would like to know what they can do if they are unable to find an insurer to cover their automobile.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MRS. NELSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is unfortunate that there have been three corporations that have decided to not take on any new customers. That's a corporate decision they have made, but there are another 60-odd insurance companies that do underwrite auto insurance actively in the province of Alberta today. It is the law that you must carry automobile insurance in this province, and if any constituent is having difficulty, they should be aware that there is a facility corporation that is available if it's the last resort for them. So there is availability of auto insurance. If they're having difficulty finding it, they need to just phone the Insurance Bureau, and they will direct them to the appropriate facility.

MR. JOHNSON: In regard to rising premiums, my constituents would like to know what your ministry and the government are doing about this issue.

MRS. NELSON: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think all insurance companies are facing the difficult task of rationalizing the costs of claims that have gone through. Some of the payouts have been very, very large for catastrophic accidents, so as a result the premiums have gone up.

We've sort of tracked this a bit, and it looks like it's almost a 10-year cycle that insurance seems to go through. It peaks out and then levels off and goes for roughly eight to 10 years and then ramps up again. I think we're probably in that ramp-up cycle right now, which is making it difficult for all of us who do have to buy insurance because we are all seeing our own policies going up. It's part of the cycle. There's not really anything we can do. It's the cost of business, unfortunately.

MR. JOHNSON: Mr. Speaker, can the minister also take this opportunity to tell this House what effect the September 11 terrorist attacks in the United States has had on the insurance industry? Does the insurance industry cover acts of terrorism?

MRS. NELSON: Well, interestingly enough, I guess that if you look at your homeowner plan, there's a new statement on the plan this year that says that it does not cover acts of terrorism, which I don't think we had before, and it is now showing up. Acts of war and acts of terrorism are being identified as being exempt from the coverage of your personal policy. So that has been eliminated. I think that as a result of the devastation that did occur last year, a lot of insurance companies felt that they had to remove that coverage or the assumption of the coverage from their policies, so they're not included on most homeowner plans.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Manhattan Resources Ltd.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Hundreds of concerned citizens residing in the county of Strathcona have recently attended a series of public meetings regarding Manhattan Resources' proposal to drill six sour gas wells. It is my understanding from attending a meeting along with the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry that companies must go through an intensive process of notification and consultation prior to obtaining a licence, and if this process is disregarded, then the consequences are severe. My first question is to the Minister of Energy. Why was public consultation in this matter not done in accordance with the standards of the EUB?

MR. SMITH: Well, Mr. Speaker, without taking the time of this House to correct the misinformation that the member, as usual, puts forth in his preamble, I will say to you that the matter is in front of the board. The Alberta Energy and Utilities Board is a quasi-judicial board in this province.

MR. MacDONALD: Again to the same minister, Mr. Speaker: how did Manhattan Resources receive approval for a sour gas battery prior to conducting the required public consultation?

MR. SMITH: Mr. Speaker, this member is trying to tear down the reputation of the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board, that is known to be one of the best if not the best regulating boards in the world today. Their information is clear, their information is transparent, and their regulations are available for everyone to follow.

MR. MacDONALD: Again, Mr. Speaker, to the same minister. Given that nearby residents were told that there would only be a potential for .01 percent, or 100 parts per million, H₂S and apparently landowners in the vicinity where the wells would be drilled were given documents that illustrate the true potential of H₂S at .66 percent, or 66 hundred parts per million, how can the minister explain this inconsistency when he is the person that's in charge of the EUB?

MR. SMITH: Well, Mr. Speaker, the parts per million of intelligence required to ask that question is zero.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Green Power Production

MR. LORD: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Apparently more good news on the alternative energy and energy conservation front in Alberta. Two days ago the Alberta government, through Infrastructure, issued an RFP, a request for proposals, calling for a supplier or suppliers to provide the government with at least 25 percent of its electrical needs from alternative energy sources. Along with this announcement was a reference to an energy retrofit program which is apparently modifying Alberta government buildings. My first question is to the Minister of Infrastructure. Could the minister explain what the goals of the Alberta energy retrofit program are, specifically in terms of quantifying any taxpayer impacts on electrical bills as well as greenhouse gas emission impacts?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. LUND: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, back in the mid-90s and in the early '90s this government had been talking about what we could do and what people could do to reduce consumption and therefore reduce the emissions. But, as usual, we in government want to back up our talk with action, so we developed a plan and a program whereby we looked at structures and determined what we needed to do to have a three-year payback period. Then we stepped forward after that program and looked at a five-year payback period.

2:00

We've found that by doing a lot of retrofitting in our buildings, whether that be putting in the more efficient furnaces, heat exchangers, changing to different types of lights, insulating buildings, putting in efficient windows, all of those kinds of things, that would reduce our need for and consumption of fossil fuels, and also we moved, then, into the vehicle area and looked at how we could reduce our consumption of fuels and, of course, the use of automobiles. It was quite interesting, because currently, today, we have completed the five years. As a matter of fact, in this very building we were working on this retrofit this summer, but we have now pretty well completed the five-year cycle. We have now reduced our emissions to 22 percent below the 1990 levels, and by the year 2005 we'll be down to 26 percent below, and we'll see a savings of about $5 million annually on our utility bills simply through this retrofit program. So if you take that over a 20-year period, you suddenly see that there's about a hundred million dollar value in this program that simply reduced consumption.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. LORD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Minister of Infrastructure. Now, since green power is not subject to depleting reserves or fluctuating world prices of oil and gas, does the minister anticipate that having the government acquire a green energy supplier might in fact help stabilize government budgets going forward, or does green energy supply come with large risks attached as well?

MR. LUND: Mr. Speaker, there are, of course, a number of projects and ways that green power can be produced, ranging from biomass cogeneration, some hydro and, of course, wind energy. The fact is that when the hon. member talks about stabilization of budget, we are in the RFP asking for a longer term contract, so that would help stabilize the budget.

However, I must point out that there are some other benefits that we will be very interested in, and those relate to: how can you help the environment with the purchase of green power? So we'll be looking for what the purchase of this green power does to reduce emissions that are pollutants, not just the CO₂ and things like methane but other things that could be considered pollutants; for example, a particulate or SO₂ or nitrogen oxide, those kinds of things that could be health hazards.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. LORD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My last question is to the Minister of Energy. I'm wondering whether the Minister of Energy could confirm whether or not electricity deregulation in Alberta, which has been criticized in some quarters, has had any effect on the development and business viability of green power production in our province, especially as compared to other provinces which have not deregulated.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. SMITH: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The answers to those questions are yes, yes, and yes. The benefit of deregulation allows many optional forms of power to come onstream, and we've seen that with coal-fired natural gas generators. We've seen that with biomass projects. We've seen that with windmills. In fact, with the recent announcement of Fort Macleod and the McBride area – once that's finished, we will be the number one wind province in Canada. We'll have surpassed Quebec. We will have done all this, of course, without any taxpayer investment put towards this type of product. The market is making the decision about the benefits of wind power to local industry in southern Alberta and, of course, the benefits to the electricity grid in the province.

HIV/AIDS Risk in Prison System

MS BLAKEMAN: Mr. Speaker, a recent study by the Canadian HIV/AIDS Legal Network has Alberta ranked second to last in a harm reduction rating for preventing the spread of HIV and hep C in our prisons. Prisoners do not have access to the most basic HIV prevention methods that are available outside prison. In Alberta people are not just receiving a jail sentence but potentially a death sentence. My questions are to the Solicitor General. Why has the department chosen not to protect inmates from HIV and hep C?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MRS. FORSYTH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member is referring to a report that has just crossed my desk. I can tell you that Alberta is very conscientious about the HIV and AIDS in our prisons. We are protecting our correction officers; we are protecting our prisoners, but I can tell you that in this province the one thing we are not going to be doing in our young offender centres is handing out condoms to our young offenders.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you. Has the department done a cost-benefit analysis which leads them to believe that it's cheaper to pay for years of hospitalization and drug therapy than to buy a bottle of bleach and some needles?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MRS. FORSYTH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Alberta government is very conscientious about what's going on in our prisons. I can tell you the one thing that this government will be doing. We will not be handing out needles and bleach in our prisons. I have to be concerned about my correction officers and the damages that can be done to them by bad needles. I don't believe that we should be promoting drug abuse in our prisons. I will tell you what we will do though. We will promote drug and alcohol education, and we will also provide them a methadone program if the medical officer on duty deems it fit.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you. Has the minister considered the government's liability when prisoners under their care get HIV or hep C in prison and are then released into the general public? You are not protecting the spread of this.

MRS. FORSYTH: Mr. Speaker, it's a known fact, believe it or not, that sex does occur in our prisons whether we agree with it or not, but I can tell you that we in Alberta are not going to be promoting sex in our jails.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-East, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Seniors' Benefits

MR. AMERY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The average total income for an Alberta senior in constant dollars for the year 1994 was $24,398. In the year 2000 that average dropped to $23,146 using the same constant dollars. We have many seniors on fixed incomes who have lost health benefits over the years. Their food, their shelter, their utilities, their property taxes have all gone up considerably. They are suffering financially. To the Minister of Seniors: what is the Minister of Seniors doing to help those seniors meet at least their basic needs?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. WOLOSHYN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The mandate of the Ministry of Seniors is to ensure that seniors in this province are well looked after. We focused our resources on the seniors most in need. As a result of that, we have two financial support programs, one being the Alberta seniors' benefits program, which supplements income. We currently have a large number of people on that. The other is a special-needs assistance program which provides a lump sum payment of a maximum of $5,000 for seniors who run into extraordinary financial circumstances. These people who qualify for special needs have to already be on the seniors' benefit, because they are at the bottom end of it. In addition, the special needs this year has expanded its coverage to the people on the seniors' benefits program with respect to some dental and optical needs because the extended health program had been terminated in Health this past March.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. AMERY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I thank the minister for his answer. Seniors are aware of these benefits and these programs.

Since seniors have expressed concerns about the future of these and other financial benefits available to them, what is your ministry doing to compensate them for the loss of their buying power and to ensure that their current benefits are maintained and benefits for future seniors will be there when they need them?

2:10

MR. WOLOSHTYN: That question is one that the ministry has been reviewing and reviewing and reviewing. What we would like to do would be to introduce some sort of a cost-of-living increase, but due to current financial circumstances within government as a whole, we can't cover the current budget, if you will, let alone increase it, but that would be one of our hopes. The other is we're conducting an internal review of the threshold to see if it is appropriate, but I would like to say, though, that about half the seniors in this province do not pay health care premiums. They only pay a portion or are totally excluded from them.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. AMERY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that there are huge concerns among seniors about the future of the Blue Cross prescription coverage for seniors, could the minister advise the House and the Alberta seniors if there are any changes on the horizon for the Alberta Blue Cross coverage?

MR. WOLOSHTYN: Mr. Speaker, as Minister of Seniors I do not support further reductions in any seniors' programs. I have also been a recipient of correspondence with this concern, which refers specifically to the Blue Cross program. At this point in time I have not been made aware of any effort to reduce that.

The ministry responsible is Health and Wellness, and if the minister so chooses, he may supplement my answer.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Funding for Postsecondary Education

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Tuition in Alberta has increased 208 percent. While some countries are committed to fully accessible postsecondary education by not charging students any tuition, we now have proposals on the table for even more expensive differential fees. My first question is to the Minister of Learning. What is the government doing to combat the sticker price shock that scares students from low-income families away from postsecondary schools?

DR. OBERG: Well, thank you very much for that question. I will address one of the points that was given in the preamble, and that was the whole idea about the countries who do not charge any tuition. Mr. Speaker, in countries such as Australia they attempted to have a no-tuition policy, and very quickly what they found is that the demographics of the population attending university did not change in the least, so what they have subsequently done is gone back to charging tuition.

Mr. Speaker, the other issue that he brought up was the whole idea of what we are doing about the sticker shock, and I will say that that is an excellent question, because that is one of the issues that is out there for the students. They see the price; they don't necessarily see the benefit. I think that for anyone who has ever set up a small business, in order to come out of university after four years with an average of around $17,000 in debt and be essentially – essentially – guaranteed a job, that's a great investment.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second question is to the minister of municipalities. Given that student residences are charged property taxes, will the Municipal Government Act be changed to eliminate that tax, thereby helping reduce rents for low-income students?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

MR. BOUTILIER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Obviously, I want to say that the housing for students today, the work that is being done – we're looking at reviewing the Municipal Government Act, but as you know, the Municipal Government Act of Alberta is one of the leading pieces of government legislation in all of Canada and is certainly recognized that way. What we are contemplating when we open up amendments are all of our options.

DR. MASSEY: Thanks for nothing.

My third question is to the Minister of Learning. How can the government's underfunding of universities do anything but force a two-tier system, one for the rich and one for everyone else?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

DR. OBERG: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I guess there are about two or three different ways that I can answer that. First of all, what I will mention are the student finance programs that we have. Presently in Alberta we have excellent student finance programs, where if a student cannot afford to go to school, they can take out student loans up to the tune of around 10 and a half thousand dollars per year and pay back about $5,000 per year. So, basically, they've received $5,500 free for doing that from the government of Alberta, from the people of Alberta.

The second point that I wanted to make on tuition fees: the supposed gospel according to Maclean's, which came out last week, showed that the University of Alberta was, actually, number 29 when it came to tuition and fees; the University of Calgary was number 31; and the University of Lethbridge was number 38. Keeping that in mind, Mr. Speaker, what you also saw in the same appraisal of what was happening on the university scene in Canada is that the University of Calgary was number 4 for funding, for operating budget, and number 5 was the University of Alberta. So what you see is high operating budgets and lower than average tuition in Alberta. That's a pretty good deal for students of Alberta.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, followed by the hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Carbon Dioxide Emissions

MR. MASON: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the government claimed that CO₂ emissions are a natural resource and, therefore, constitutionally, belong to Alberta. Now, if this position is upheld, then the New Democrats will certainly want to nationalize the Minister of Energy. What's more likely, however, is that Alberta's ridiculous position will be laughed out of court. To the Minister of Environment: will the minister table in this Assembly any legal opinions the government has obtained that support the proposition that CO₂ emitted by coal-fired power plants, SUVs, and, yes, even people breathing is a natural resource under the Constitution of Canada?

DR. TAYLOR: Well, let me clearly give you an example of how CO₂ is a natural resource. We are presently working with the government of Saskatchewan. We're working with EnCana Energy and pumping CO₂ out of North Dakota into southern Saskatchewan to help in the recovery of oil. It goes down into the ground and helps the recovery of oil, so CO₂ is very clearly a natural resource that has an economic benefit to it.

MR. MASON: Well, Mr. Speaker, if CO₂ is indeed a natural resource, will the government commit to capturing most or all of the CO₂ emitted in Alberta and then obtain the best possible price for it on international markets?

DR. TAYLOR: Well, I'd like to thank that member for such a fine question. If he's read our plan and understands what we're trying to do in our greenhouse gas reduction plan, one of the issues we have in Alberta is that we have two sources, Mr. Speaker, that are producing over 50 percent of our greenhouse gases, 50 to 55 percent. Those two sources are the oil industry and coal-fired power plants. Now, as we spend money through the Minister of Innovation and Science's budget on research to separate the streams so we can separate the NO_x, the SO_x, and the particulate matter from CO₂ and get a clear and pure stream of CO₂ – we can collect it at these major sources – yes, as we go forward, we would like to see a pipeline in Alberta that is specifically for CO₂, that can be utilized in economic recovery and stored underground.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The minister has anticipated my third question, which I'll ask anyway. Can the minister please tell Albertans what plan the government has for value-added manufacturing for this wonderful new resource industry? Or are they just going to build a pipeline and ship it all to the U.S.?

DR. TAYLOR: Since I've already answered his question, you know, there's no reason for me to answer it again, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Ticketing by Special Constables

MR. OUELLETTE: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Through discussions with local municipalities it's been brought to my attention that the overall policy of police patrols along primary highways has been altered. Specifically, the town of Penhold has been advised that the town can no longer ticket traffic violations through the town of Penhold along highway 2A, even though Penhold school is adjacent to highway 2A and the majority of students must cross 2A multiple times each day. My questions today are to the Solicitor General. Is it true that the Department of the Solicitor General has stated that special constables can no longer ticket on primary highways, including those highways that run through municipalities?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MRS. FORSYTH: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to say that, first of all, special constables have never had the authority to ticket on primary highways – never. They have the authority to ticket on secondary highways, but when secondary highways were changed to primary highways from Alberta Transportation, we agreed to allow that to happen till after the policing review.

Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the hon. member's frustration, but my number one priority in my department is to ensure that the highways are safely manned by fully trained and qualified officers and that the residents in that area receive effective and adequate policing. Special constables do not have the same training and qualifications as police officers. Special constables are also not paid at the same level as fully qualified police officers. While this makes it a little more affordable for jurisdictions, they are not qualified to perform all of the duties of a police officer, including enforcement of the Highway Traffic Act on primary highways.

MR. OUELLETTE: I don't know. Maybe I'm wrong here, but I thought that 2A always was a primary highway.

What is the hon. minister doing to address concerns of local residents that the RCMP feel that the local detachment will not be able to provide the level of service on this highway that the community has been accustomed to?

MRS. FORSYTH: The member is correct: highway 2A is a primary highway, and the responsibility is that of the RCMP. I understand his frustration. We have called the assistant commissioner of the RCMP. We have said to him: your responsibility is to man that particular highway. My understanding is that the assistant commissioner of K Division is meeting with the town of Penhold's staff sergeant this week.

MR. OUELLETTE: So can you tell me, then, hon. minister: are you going to refund all the money that's been ticketed by these constables in the past?

MRS. FORSYTH: It's been brought to our attention by the hon. member, and he can bring it back to our attention at any time.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Impact of Climate Change on Health

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's come to public attention in the last few days that there's been a surge in deaths in Ontario from the West Nile virus, which is carried by mosquitoes which are spreading into Canada from the south as a result of climate change. As well, we have a medical officer of health, Dr. David Swann, fired from his job for expressing professional concern over the health impact of climate change. My questions are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Does the minister have plans to amend regulations to protect the job security of medical officers of health?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, regional health authorities throughout the province have looked at the issue involving Dr. Swann. In fact, the relevant health authority, in this case Palliser, had also looked at its practice with respect to how it had dealt with Dr. Swann. It made every effort to bring Dr. Swann back. There were a number of comments that he made on the conditions upon which he would return to being the medical officer for Palliser. I understand that the board made that offer. Dr. Swann has now decided to go to Iraq instead and practise his profession in Iraq. Each regional health authority has looked at this particular issue, and I think that they are dealing with it appropriately.

DR. TAFT: I'd say that in short, then, there are no plans to protect the job security of medical officers of health.

My second question is to the same minister. Has any attempt been made by the government to measure the health impact of climate change on Albertans?

MR. MAR: I think that the Minister of Environment is well on this particular file, Mr. Speaker. We do co-ordinate with work that is being done out of his department. Our focus has really been on things that are much more closely associated with issues related to health care. We are more concerned about ensuring, for example, that people get the highest level of cardiac care in this province. We made an outstanding announcement today about our continued support for a cardiac centre here in the city of Edmonton. That is more meritorious of our consideration than the issue raised by the hon. member.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that earlier this year the Minister of Energy said that if climate change affected the health of one child, he would recommend against resisting Kyoto, will the Minister of Health and Wellness or the Minister of Environment ensure that the health effects of climate change are made a priority in this government's climate change plans?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, again, I think this is a different way of asking the same question. I have complete confidence in the ability of the Minister of Environment to deal with these issues and that we will co-ordinate. The Minister of Environment has the issue well in hand. If he were to come to me and suggest that there is credible evidence that it is a health issue, then, yes, I would bring it forward.

THE SPEAKER: The minister to supplement.

DR. TAYLOR: I'd just like to clarify this kind of misinformation that the Liberals and the federal Liberals continue to put out. They assume that the brown smog, which is causing health conditions, is an issue covered under Kyoto. [interjection] The only brown smog we have in here is from you, Dr. Taft.

As we go forward, Mr. Speaker, it's quite clear that Kyoto is about greenhouse gases, 98 and a half percent of which is carbon dioxide. Carbon dioxide is not a pollutant.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, before we proceed to Recognitions, might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests

(reversion)

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour today to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly 14 students from St. Albert Catholic high school who are here in the public gallery today. They are accompanied by their teacher Mrs. Tamie Bentz and by the student teacher who is with them this week, Ms Sophy Norng. I would ask them all to please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development.

MS CALAHASEN: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Today I have the great pleasure of introducing on behalf of my colleague from Sherwood Park 51 important people who are from the Woodbridge Farms elementary school. They are here with their teachers and group leaders Mrs. Busch, Ms Ackerman, Mrs. Setchell, and parent helpers Mrs. Robinson, Mrs. Joly, Mrs. Bourque, Mrs. Field, and Mrs. Schaffler. They are seated in the members' gallery, and I'd ask that they stand and receive the warm welcome of the Legislature.

head: Recognitions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Lud Prudek
Stan Price
James Helm

MR. MARZ: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This year's inductees into the Agriculture Hall of Fame were recognized for pioneering work in crop and livestock industry research and development. In addition to these achievements, each inductee has been a key individual in the creation of industry associations and actively involved in communication and development in their area.

Lud Prudek from Bow Island is recognized for his leadership role in initiating and developing dry bean pulse crops into a hundred million dollar Canadian industry. He also made significant contributions to other specialty crops and pioneered gated pipe irrigation.

Stan Price from Acme led the development of vertically integrated food production from farmer to consumer and is the founder of the Sunterra markets retail chain. Stan pioneered the development of modern hog market production practices, promoted the need for national grading standards and development of value-added processing.

Dr. James Helm's work in the area of feed grain development led to the creation of 23 new varieties of barley and triticale, establishing Alberta's Field Crop Development Centre in Lacombe as a worldwide leader in scientific excellence, productivity, and innovation in cereal breeding programs. He's also recognized for his significant contribution to the development of the Canada/Alberta barley agreement.

I know that all members of this Assembly will join me in recognizing these outstanding Albertans and their outstanding achievements and congratulate them on their induction to the Alberta Agriculture Hall of Fame.

THE SPEAKER: As the hon. member violated the one-minute rule, I will not be calling on him for a second recognition.

The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

Tom Maccagno

MR. DANYLUK: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am honoured to recognize Mr. Tom Maccagno from the Lac La Biche-St. Paul constituency, who was recently presented with the very prestigious Canada's recreation fisheries award. Tom Maccagno has been actively dedicated to fishery resources in Alberta for over the past 30 years. He has played an instrumental role in the education of people across the country on the importance of a balanced fish habitat and the preservation of their populations. Tom was involved in the establishment of the provincial walleye and pike task forces and has been a frequent spokesman on behalf of fisheries and fish habitat. He can also be credited with the act of support and involvement in the development of the Alexander Hamilton park, which is a fish enhancement project in Lac La Biche.

Each year the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans Canada honours five deserving individuals or organizations for their contribution to the conservation, restoration, and enhancement of Canada's recreational fisheries and their habitat. Mr. Maccagno was one of these fine recipients, and I would like you to join me in congratulating this dedicated Albertan for his accomplishments.

Thank you.

National Child Day

DR. MASSEY: Today is National Child Day. The theme this year is: A World Fit for Children. This theme grows out of the commitments made at the 2002 United Nations Special Session on Children. Making the world fit for children requires a comprehensive, affordable, and accessible education system.

In Alberta we've made little progress. At the postsecondary level our efforts are a national embarrassment. Many European countries like Denmark, France, Germany, Norway, and Sweden ensure an accessible system by not charging tuition fees. Our record is dismal. Declining government support has resulted in tuition covering more and more of postsecondary schools' operating costs. The withdrawal of government funding has seriously limited accessibility for lower- and middle-income families. High-income families were two and a half times more likely as those from low-income families to have attended university in 1998. One can only surmise that the increases have made the problem worse.

On this National Child Day we should be assuring youth from low-income families that qualifying students will find our institutions accessible and affordable.

Count of Homeless Persons

MS BLAKEMAN: On October 23 I participated in the fifth Count of Homeless Persons in Edmonton organized by the Edmonton Joint Planning Committee on Housing. Teams of volunteers surveyed people at drop-in centres, libraries, bottle depots, and in certain areas on the street and in the river valley. Organizers commented on how many people had expressed an interest in the homeless situation and had come out to help. As a result, the count was able to take in areas of Whyte Avenue, downtown, Stony Plain Road, Boyle/McCauley, and near the Skyreach Centre. The results of the count will be announced this Friday, November 22, as part of National Housing Day and are expected to help identify the magnitude of the problem and what changes, if any, have occurred since the last count.

I'm looking to this government to react to this count with concrete plans and targets to reduce homelessness and increase the stock of affordable accommodations. With matching money available from the feds, this province is able to do more. Buying more flop mats is not a long-term solution.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

McHappy Day

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today marks the 13th McHappy Day in McDonald's Canada history. Since 1977 more than $16 million for Ronald McDonald children's charities across Canada has been raised with one simple objective: to help children in need. This year McHappy Day is being held in Canada in support of World Children's Day, representing an unprecedented worldwide effort to benefit children in need everywhere.

This morning I was invited by Dola Ritter to join the team at St. Albert's downtown McDonald's restaurant in helping to raise funds for three specific projects in our communities. First of all, the Ronald McDonald House is raising funds for an expansion to the house. As Edmonton has become a major pediatric treatment centre, the house has become very busy and waiting lists are commonplace. The Stollery Children's Health Foundation is raising funds for the Cochrane Collaboration. The focus is to build an on-line resource library available worldwide. The Juvenile Diabetes Foundation is also benefiting.

National Child Day

MRS. JABLONSKI: Mr. Speaker, today 350 children and youth gathered at the Winspear Centre in Edmonton to celebrate National Child Day. We celebrated the United Nations Rights of the Child, that demands nourishment and protection for all children everywhere. Eleven-year-old Camille Holland sang the national anthem with the voice of an angel, accompanied by students of the Suzuki charter school. The Kokopelli Youth Choir sang with rhythm that energized the atmosphere. The City Centre Education Project Band played Song of the Serengeti, and I heard the wind rustling through the trees and the animals grazing in the grass. A presentation on freedom of expression by a group known as Youth One proved to me that our children and youth, of which we have 840,000, making us the youngest population of all the provinces, are growing strong and healthy in this province.

But, Mr. Speaker, there are some children who are not growing strong and healthy in this province, and it is time that we as a society change our weak words and meaningless platitudes into actions that truly protect our children. Demand from the good people of Canada that we raise the age of consent from 14 to 16. Demand that child pornography not be accepted as art, and demand that child poverty be eliminated. Then and only then can we truly celebrate National Child Day.

head: Presenting Petitions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

MR. HORNER: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise today to present a petition signed by 77 Albertans in my constituency petitioning the Legislative Assembly to urge the government to deinsure abortion.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to present a petition signed by 83 Albertans urging the government to "not delist services, raise health care premiums, introduce user fees or further privatize health care."

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

MR. JOHNSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a petition here today approved for presentation by Parliamentary Counsel signed by 40 Albertans regarding the deinsuring of abortion.

head: Notices of Motions

THE SPEAKER: On a Standing Order 30 application, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to give notice that later on this afternoon I plan to make a motion under Standing Order 30, and I await your further direction.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. member, did you have a second one? Standing Order 40?

MR. MacDONALD: Yes, I certainly do, Mr. Speaker. I would like again, and following your direction, to propose a motion, this time in regard to the democratic deficit that exists in this province, at the time instructed from the Speaker's chair.

Thank you.

head: Introduction of Bills

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Environment.

Bill 33

North Red Deer Water Authorization Act

DR. TAYLOR: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Once again I am pleased to introduce some groundbreaking legislation. It's called Bill 33, the North Red Deer Water Authorization Act.

Mr. Speaker, ensuring a healthy and adequate and sustainable drinking water supply for all Albertans is important for this government; in fact, a top priority. And that's what this act does. When passed by this Assembly, this legislation will ensure safe drinking water to Lacombe, Ponoka, Blackfalds, Red Deer, and the First Nations community at Hobbema. This is a community-led solution, community-led direction, and I think it's going to be excellent legislation, so I'm pleased to introduce it.

[Motion carried; Bill 33 read a first time]

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

MR. BOUTILIER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As was mentioned in this House, the Association of Municipal Districts and Counties is meeting this weekend. I'd like to table today the requisite number of copies of a resolution that was endorsed by the entire association that was initiated by the central Association of Municipal Districts and Counties, where it briefly says that: the AAMD and C relative to the Kyoto resolution support the province's position on Kyoto, urging the government of Canada to delay any vote on the ratification until a workable implementation plan is in place consulting all provinces.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

MR. CENAIKO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table the appropriate number of copies of a letter from Edmonton's mayor and city council supporting Bill 212, the Traffic Safety (Seizure of Vehicles in Prostitution Related Offences) Amendment Act, 2002, which will be introduced as Bill 206 in the spring 2003 session. This legislation would allow police officers to seize vehicles or provide an alternative measures program for offenders involved in prostitution-related offences in an effort to reduce the negative effects of street prostitution in Alberta's communities.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

2:40

MR. MARZ: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I have two tablings. The first is 36 letters from constituents asking that the abortion procedure that is currently paid for by Alberta Health be deinsured.

The second is a letter encouraging the government to officially confirm square dancing as the official folk dance of Alberta, and that is followed by 131 signatories.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table five copies of a letter from a constituent in support of ratifying the Kyoto accord. They make note that "the actions of the Alberta government on the Kyoto Protocol constitute a violation of Alberta's membership in this international community."

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish to table the appropriate number of copies of a letter sent to me by Mr. Chad Axling of St. Albert requesting the designation of the Bighorn wildland recreation area as a wildland park, using the original 1986 boundaries.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. My first tabling is a letter from the municipal district of Northern Lights No. 22 addressed to the Minister of Health and Wellness expressing their deep concern over the Peace health region board's decision to cut active care beds in Grimshaw and to reduce preventative health services in their municipality.

Mr. Speaker, the second tabling is a document from the Lakeland regional health authority pointing out the Minister of Health and Wellness's high-handed approach to health care. It also accuses the provincial government of downloading the ambulance operational costs to municipalities.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise at this time to table five copies of a document. It's a program called: A Celebration and Reflection of 100 years of Quality Craftsmanship. It's the program to celebrate the 100th anniversary of the United Brotherhood of Carpenters & Joiners in Alberta. They have existed in this province since 1902 and helped, as a matter of fact, in the construction of this very Assembly. There are notices of congratulations in here from the Governor General, the Prime Minister and, certainly, the Premier of Alberta. It is noteworthy that this organization has celebrated its 100th anniversary and looks forward to contributing to the prosperity of this province for another 100 years.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, before proceeding, then, to Orders of the Day, we have some parliamentary business to attend to. If I understand this correctly, we have a point of order that was raised by the hon. Deputy Government House Leader, a point of order raised by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, we have a point of privilege to deal with that stems from yesterday, and we have a Standing Order 30 application and a Standing Order 40 application from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar. So let's proceed in this way: first of all, the point of order presented by the Hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

Point of Order Allegations against a Member

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, I rise pursuant to Standing Orders 23(h), (i), and (j). Under 23(h), as we will all know, it is improper for a member in this House to make allegations against another member. Under 23(i) it's improper, also, to impute a false or unavowed motive to another member, and under 23(j) it's improper to use the kind of language that might create disorder.

Now, having said that, it's my recollection, Mr. Speaker, that during the heat, the cut and thrust, as they say, of debate, as part of his preamble to a question to the hon. minister of health the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, that being the leader of the ND opposition, indicated words that he avowed, which are not true, toward the Premier. I don't have the Blues. I've requested them, but they haven't been prepared yet. But I believe the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona gave an indication that he'd somewhere thought he heard, saw, or read that our Premier had indicated something to the effect that rural hospitals are nothing more than local employment centres or words to that effect. I know that's not true, and I think that everyone else here knows that's not true, so I would simply ask in the spirit of the understanding of this House that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona kindly do the honourable thing and simply withdraw the remark since it's clearly not true. It's clearly false, and it obviously has been used in some very purported and totally out-of-context way, even though, I stress, I know it's not true. So I will give the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona the opportunity to please withdraw that comment.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, you're participating in this?

MR. MASON: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To respond to the assistant Government House Leader's point of order, I have here the words attributed to the hon. leader of the third party, the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, that are in fact correct, and I would beg to indicate the two articles from the Edmonton Journal in which the Premier was quoted. Here on the 17th of November the Premier was quoted as saying that "hospitals do employ people, but they do not survive, they do not exist, to accommodate employment." The next day, on the 18th of November, the Premier's comment was:

Our government and our party have to keep in mind that the health system does not exist primarily as an employment agency or a local economic tool, said Klein. That's the message I'm trying to get out there today. It's going to affect us all and it's going to take some courage.

So, Mr. Speaker, while the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona may have exaggerated slightly the meaning of the Premier, it is clear that the Premier has made similar comments, and I have not seen any attempt on the part of the Premier to correct this reporting through letters to the editor or otherwise.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, is this on a similar point of order? You also indicated that you wanted to raise a point of order. Are we talking about the same subject matter? I'd like to bring them all together if I can. If not, I'll deal with these two points of order separately.

DR. PANNU: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I heard the Premier utter a word or two while I was raising the question. He called: it's a lie. Then I heard the Minister of Finance say something to the effect: you're a liar. It's a serious matter.

My point of order is intended to draw attention to the use of these words, which I hope you will consider as unparliamentary. Beauchesne 485 under Unparliamentary Language does require the members of the Assembly to be careful in the use of words and certainly not use the words "you're a liar" in addressing other members or what other members say.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader on this point of order. Now, I've put the two of them together. We'll deal with them both.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: I wanted to deal with the first one first. If you'll allow it, I'll do that, and then we'll talk about the second one.

THE SPEAKER: Yes.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Okay. Thanks. I appreciate the Member for Edmonton-Highlands raising the point that he just raised, and I am aware of what was in the particular paper as referenced, even though I know that we don't like to get into those things. I think that if the member reads the entire quote and puts it into context, the intention there was simply to say that hospitals, of course, do employ people and they certainly do not exist only for that purpose, because it goes on to say that they exist for "people who are sick and injured," to accommodate those people. So if you read it all in context, I think that clears that matter up.

With respect to things that may have been said across the bow that probably aren't in Hansard, I believe the hon. Minister of Finance has a statement to make.

MRS. NELSON: Mr. Speaker, I did use the words: the hon. member told a lie. I should not have done that. I should have said: made an untrue statement. So I would like to retract "lie" but put in "untrue statement."

THE SPEAKER: Anybody else want to participate in these two very important points of order?

Well, thank you very much for that. Here is what was said. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona:

Mr. Speaker, the minister is going to have a hard time selling his solution to rural Albertans.

My last question to him: does the minister agree with the Premier when the Premier insulted rural Albertans by describing their hospitals and health facilities as nothing more than local employment centres?

Then the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness:

Well, first of all, two things, Mr. Speaker. What the hon. member said is patently untrue. And secondly, in answering his question about who has the interests of rural Albertans best in mind: the caucus that is represented in the government of Alberta. I can't name one NDP member from rural Alberta.

Well, let's just deal with some of these things. First of all, thank you very much, hon. Minister of Finance. Her remarks were not picked up in Hansard, at least definable to her, so she has come clean by admitting in the House that she was responsible for them.

That's the honourable thing to do. That is the honourable thing to do.

Secondly, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona violated the rule of this House about preambles by including a preamble on the last question, which was, of course, a no-no, which, of course, then gets other people excited. The question itself, you know, is rather arguable in terms of:

My last question to him: does the minister agree with the Premier when the Premier insulted rural Albertans by describing their hospitals and health facilities as nothing more than local employment centres?

Okay. It could be argued that it might be out of order because it doesn't really deal with government policy. What it does is attempt to get personal views and opinions. Then the response from the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness: "What the hon. member said is patently untrue." It didn't call him a liar, but there's an oblique way of basically saying the same thing.

I guess the whole point of this is that we arrive in this place and we do get excited and we do get moved, and strict adherence to all of the rules would have ruled out the question and probably ruled out the answer and would have forced another intervention from the Speaker, which meant that, really, question period would not become very interesting to too many people other than the Speaker, who would say that this is really boring. Hon. members like the flow and the back and forth, but I think that if we temper it with decent language and if we temper it with overall understanding and the whole thing, we'll serve everybody a lot better.

If quotes are attributed to statements in newspapers and the like, we've always followed the tradition that we're not going to ascertain the truth of anything found in newspapers, but I guess it is used by hon. members from time to time to make the point, as the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona did today, and it elicited responses. I think the key thing to all of this is let's just try and avoid the hostility, and if we do it with some degree of humour, then I suppose that some people will say, "Well, that's witty," and that's the highest form of debate that we can aspire to and attain. So, all in all, let's say that we've dealt with those two points of order.

Privilege Contempt of the Assembly

THE SPEAKER: Now we will hear further with respect to the point of privilege that was raised yesterday by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar. When we left it yesterday, the Government House Leader basically was given an opportunity to return today for comments with respect to this matter, but before we get to that, I would invite the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar if he has anything more to say with respect to this point of privilege. Or shall I just proceed to recognize?

MR. MacDONALD: No, Mr. Speaker. Please proceed to recognize.

THE SPEAKER: Okay. Then the hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. STEVENS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to start by repeating the comments of the House leader yesterday; namely, that we still believe that it is not, with all due respect to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, the stuff of privilege. Nonetheless, the government agrees that the word "government" should have been in front of "MLA committee" in the advertisement.

Its absence was an oversight. There was no intention to breach the rights of this building and its members. Let's be serious here for one second. Can anyone in this Chamber today say that their rights or the rights of this building were trampled upon by an oversight about a word in front of "MLA committee"? Everyone on that committee is an MLA, thus it can technically be called an MLA committee. To be properly titled, it should have said: government MLA committee. But in fairness to this side, it was not called a legislative committee; it was not called a Legislative Assembly committee; it was not called an all-party committee. It was called what it was because that is what it was.

In hindsight, in light of this issue being brought to our attention, the government apologizes. It will be called the government MLA committee in the future. But, surely, this is not the stuff of privilege. Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In listening to the hon. member, the Deputy Government House Leader, I certainly hope that this will not happen again. I have certainly a different opinion, but the authority, the dignity, and the performance of the functions of this House and its members go across the province.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would like to remind all hon. members of this Assembly that committees such as this, in my view, have no basis in law, and they cannot offer witnesses that are called to testify before them the parliamentary privilege of being immune to civil action for defamation or slander arising from any of the comments that they may make before that committee. So I think it's very, very important, and one cannot forget that there should be all-party committees formed.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, on this point I believe that this matter appears to have been resolved. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar was completely within his rights, and he followed all the procedures that we have by notifying my office correctly and by applying under Standing Order 15(2).

I think, as well, that the highest possible resolution of this issue was afforded to the House yesterday in the best traditions of parliamentary democracy by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, when he did offer alternatives. I'm pleased to say today that the Deputy Government House Leader has taken up the alternative, and I think we've concluded this matter with a better understanding of the distinctions between the legislative branches and the executive branches and the importance of keeping them apart from one another. So thank you very much for that.

Now, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar on a Standing Order 30 application.

head: Request for Emergency Debate

Electoral Boundaries

MR. MacDONALD: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I certainly will be brief, and I hope that there will be a sense of urgency with this Standing Order 30. When I look up in the public gallery and I see that 33 percent of the people are already asleep, I'd better be very brief with this.

For the record:

Be it resolved that this Assembly adjourn the ordinary business of the Assembly to discuss a matter of urgent public importance – namely, the issue of urban and rural split – particularly in the context of electoral district distribution, which is listed as a priority in the interim report of the Electoral Boundaries Commission, where it is proposed that the city of Edmonton lose one district, specifically, and unfortunately in my view, the district of Edmonton-

Norwood, which has had a significant history of over 50 years in this Assembly, and it has been represented by Progressive Conservative members, New Democrat members, and Liberal members.

However, when I rise today, Mr. Speaker, I certainly urge debate in this Assembly on the interim report. The interim report, which was tabled in this Assembly yesterday afternoon, on page 24 states, "The Legislative Assembly needs to give priority to seriously considering how the urban/rural split issue will be addressed in the future." On the next page it states in bold type as well, "The Legislative Assembly should consider the resources allocated for constituency offices." In order for the commission to carry on from the interim report to the final report, it is my view that we urgently need to discuss the interim report and, if possible, give some further direction to the committee.

This is a very important matter. The issue which is defined as a priority in the interim report, which we discussed, has caused friction in the past in our province. There's no doubt about that, especially when it comes to the matters of electoral distribution. Mr. Speaker, this is an urgent matter, again, because there has been an increasing sense of alienation between the rural and urban populations not only in the province but, unfortunately, across the country. This issue needs to be debated before any further actions, in my view, are taken by the commission.

The interim report of the Electoral Boundaries Commission has made several points which, if implemented, will increase the friction again between rural and urban Albertans. Rural Alberta stands to lose two seats under the proposed boundary redistribution. The city of Edmonton stands to lose one. In my view, not only should we keep the 19 in the city; we should be getting another one as well. Each side of the debate . . . [interjection] Yes. Okay. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We need to discuss this now, and we cannot allow any more confusing statements to be made on the urban/rural issue. We need to speak about the province as a whole, the economic growth that's occurring, the dramatic growth that's occurring not only in Calgary but, certainly, in Edmonton.

In conclusion, I would urge all members to support this motion because it is very, very important not only for the city of Edmonton but for the entire province. I look forward, Mr. Speaker, to the comments of other hon. members of the Assembly in regard to Standing Order 30. Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: If hon. members wish to participate, I would invite a brief participation on the urgency of the Standing Order 30 application. However, hon. members should know that I am prepared to rule.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. STEVENS: Just a few comments, Mr. Speaker, on the issue of urgency. The wording of the motion is interesting in that it's not completely clear what the discussion is to be. If we're talking about an urban/rural split, which seems to be the focus – clearly that is the case today; I'm sure it will be the case tomorrow – and if it is a question that Edmonton is losing a seat due to an unjust formula for splitting the province into urban and rural seats, then I would make these points.

The Assembly does have before it an interim report from the Electoral Boundaries Commission, and no final report has been tabled. Concerns about the proposed map should not be debated here as an emergent matter but brought up during the next round of Electoral Boundaries Commission's consults scheduled for December. The commission, which is looking at redrawing boundaries, is comprised of five members: two proposed by the opposition, two proposed by government, as well as a respected Albertan as the chair. To declare that we need an emergency debate on what they are doing before they are finished doing it shows a lack of faith in the commission and its all-party appointees.

There's a suggestion in this application that the drawing of electoral boundaries should not pay any attention to the split between urban and rural ridings, but the act which governs the work of the commission specifically states that those, other than the chair, who are appointed to the commission must be a resident in a city and the other a resident outside a city at the time of their appointment, which is a fairly clear indication that the law expects the urban/rural dichotomy of this province to be fairly taken into account when the commission does its work. For all of those reasons, Mr. Speaker, I submit that there is no need for an emergency debate under Standing Order 30.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: Well, hon. members, we're only debating urgency here, nothing else. The only word I want to hear from members is "urgency," why this Assembly should abandon the work scheduled for today to focus on this motion. I don't want to hear any arguments other than urgency. Just urgency.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood.

MR. MASYK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You've made it quite clear. The only thing is that I have only about two seconds to try and change gears here to follow your instruction. However, it is my constituency that is at hand, so I felt somewhat obligated to bring sort of a defence forward. But on the note that you brought forward regarding urgency, the hon. Member for Calgary-Glenmore made it quite clear on urgency too, and I would probably lean in favour of him. Nevertheless, I do bring mine forward. It is my constituency, and that's why I felt compelled to bring a defence forward.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie. Urgency.

MS CARLSON: Mr. Speaker, on the point of urgency, in fact, the Deputy Government House Leader made the point. There is only one opportunity for us to discuss this prior to the final submissions being made to the commission. They have made the interim submission, they are taking a few more submissions, and then there will be a final report. That report is binding subject only to a court challenge, and therefore it is of absolute importance that this is the very last chance we have to debate this particular issue which is hugely important to many, many Albertans. So I would urge you to rule in favour of the urgency of this particular point as made by the Deputy Government House Leader.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Rocky View.

MS HALEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just very briefly, there is no urgency, and this is not the only opportunity that anybody could debate it. As a matter of fact, when the final report is submitted and as it goes through the parliamentary process, it will in fact be in this Assembly, where the legislation is impacted. That is the place where you can debate it. That's what this place is for.

THE SPEAKER: Okay. On this point, hon. members, first of all, under Standing Order 30 the onus is on the hon. member to bring it to the attention of the House at the earliest possible opportunity.

That earliest opportunity would have been yesterday, not today. That could have been ruled out only on that one technical point as it is.

Secondly, what's the process? The process is simply that this Assembly has created by way of a motion a decision of this Assembly that there be an independent Electoral Boundaries Commission. This Electoral Boundaries Commission was given its mandate from this Assembly. It's absolutely correct, then, that five individuals were appointed to this commission on the basis of appointments by the Speaker upon the recommendation of two from the Premier, two from the Leader of the Official Opposition. There is some protection with respect to that for hon. members.

The commission then went forth, did its thing, submitted an interim report, which was provided to all members a few days ago but tabled in the House yesterday. The commission has already advertised that it will be hearing additional comments from individuals by a certain date. I believe it was sometime in November that they were hearing submissions, and they will be holding some public hearings or meetings sometime in December.

By the law of this Assembly it has to provide its final report back to this Assembly, as I recall, by March 24 of the year 2003, at which point in time that report will come to this Assembly for full, thorough debate, and it is the members of this Assembly who will make the final decision on what will be implemented, not the commission. This Assembly must pass appropriate legislation with respect to that matter. There will be ample opportunity, as there has been in the past.

Hon. members should know that I've been through this now on at least three or four occasions with respect to electoral boundaries and redistribution, and the final say with respect to it will be made by the men and women of the Legislative Assembly of the province of Alberta. So this particular application today basically says that it wants to interfere with the process, and until we get a final report, I don't know how this could be viewed as urgent. This is not applicable under Standing Order 30.

head: Motions under Standing Order 40

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, Standing Order 40 requires unanimous consent of the Assembly. Make your argument.

Election of Committee Chairs

Mr. MacDonald:

Be it resolved that this Assembly move immediately to amend the Standing Orders to allow committee chairs to be elected by secret ballot by all Members of the Legislative Assembly so that democracy, transparent government, and parliamentary reform may be brought to Alberta as well.

MR. MacDONALD: Now, Mr. Speaker – and it's on the Order Paper today under Government Motion 32 – we see the motion as presented by the hon. Member for Ponoka-Rimbey yesterday. We look at some of the legislative committee chairs, that include the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora, the hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane, the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed, the hon. Member for Leduc; as well as the chairs of the standing policy committees, which include, for the record, Justice and Government Services, Learning and Employment, Energy and Sustainable Development, Agriculture and Municipal Affairs, Health and Community Development, Economic Development and Finance. I see no reason in light of this motion – I shall call it Motion 32, that's currently on the Order Paper – why, if we're going to talk about electing Senators and we're going to have a better democracy as a result, we could not elect in this Assembly these committee chairs as well. Certainly we elect the Speaker, the Chair of Committees, the deputies. Why not elect the standing policy committees?

Now, Mr. Speaker, on the statement of urgency and the absolute necessity of this motion, I will be brief. This motion is of urgent necessity for several other reasons. The first is that we have a discussion which will be coming our way in the near future to recommend democratic reforms for government in this country. While this is a positive step, it is urgent and pressing that this government also show our intention for democracy and parliamentary reform in our province before we start prescribing it to others. Secondly, this motion is urgent because the good people of this province who have long been in favour of democratic reform want it at all levels of government.

Now, this motion will show to Albertans and, indeed, to all of Canada this Assembly's true feeling that democracy is a precious and valuable resource. The urgency and true necessity of protecting democracy at the first opportunity must be a priority of all elected officials. The federal House of Commons had all-party support to pass a similar motion, and if we do not have the same, it shows that Alberta itself is suffering from a democratic deficit.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, if we do not act quickly on ensuring democracy in Alberta, how can we ask others to do the same? Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, it's a Standing Order 40 application the hon. members will determine. It requires the unanimous consent to proceed.

[Unanimous consent denied]

Transmittal of Estimates

MRS. NELSON: Mr. Speaker, I have received a certain message from Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, which I now transmit to you.

THE SERGEANT-AT-ARMS: Order!

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, the Lieutenant Governor transmits supplementary estimates of certain sums required for the service of the province for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2003, and recommends the same to the Legislative Assembly.

Please be seated.

MRS. NELSON: Mr. Speaker, prior to moving a number of motions relevant to the supplementary supply estimates, I wish to advise that this morning I provided the government's 2002-2003 quarterly budget report for the second quarter to all MLAs.

We have also made this report public as required by section 9 of the Government Accountability Act. I am now tabling this quarterly budget report as the amended consolidated financial plan. This revised plan is required by section 8 of the same act whenever a second set of estimates is tabled during the fiscal year.

I am also tabling, Mr. Speaker, the second quarterly activity report for 2002-2003. This document describes the major achievements of our government during the recent period.

I now wish to table the 2002-2003 supplementary estimates. These supplementary estimates will provide additional spending authority to eight departments of the government. When passed, these estimates will authorize an $822,853,000 increase in voted operating expense and capital investment.

head: Government Motions

29. Mrs. Nelson moved:

Be it resolved that the message of Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, the 2002-03 supplementary supply estimates for the general revenue fund, and all matters connected therewith be referred to Committee of Supply.

[Government Motion 29 carried]

30. Mrs. Nelson moved:

Be it resolved that pursuant to Standing Order 58(9) the number of days that Committee of Supply will be called to consider the 2002-03 supplementary estimates for the general revenue fund shall be one day.

[Government Motion 30 carried]

Select Special Ethics Commissioner and Ombudsman Search Committee

31. Mr. Stevens moved on behalf of Mr. Hancock:

Be it resolved that

- (1) A Select Special Ethics Commissioner and Ombudsman Search Committee of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta be appointed consisting of the following members – namely, Mrs. Tarchuk, chair; Mr. Ducharme, deputy chair; Ms Blakeman; Mr. Friedel; Ms Graham; Mrs. O'Neill; Dr. Pannu; Dr. Taft; and Mr. Tannas – for the purpose of inviting applications for the positions of Ethics Commissioner and Ombudsman and to recommend to the Assembly the applicants it considers most suitable for appointment to those positions.
- (2) The chair and members of the committee shall be paid in accordance with the schedule of category A committees provided in the most current Members' Services Committee allowance order.
- (3) Reasonable disbursements by the committee for advertising, staff assistance, equipment and supplies, rent, travel, and other expenditures necessary for the effective conduct of its responsibilities shall be paid subject to the approval of the chair.
- (4) In carrying out its responsibilities, the committee may with the concurrence of the head of the department utilize the services of members of the public service employed in that department or the staff employed by the Assembly.
- (5) The committee may without leave of the Assembly sit during a period when the Assembly is adjourned.
- (6) When its work has been completed, the committee shall report to the Assembly if it is then sitting. During a period when the Assembly is adjourned, the committee may release its report by depositing a copy with the Clerk and forwarding a copy to each member of the Assembly.

[Government Motion 31 carried]

Senate Appointments

32. Mr. Jonson moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly of Alberta affirm its support for an amendment to the Constitution of Canada to provide for an elected Senate which would represent the interests of all provinces through equal representation and through effective powers and, further, that the Legislative Assembly of Alberta urge the government of Alberta to undertake consultations with all provincial governments on this amendment and, further, that pending such an amendment the Legislative Assembly of Alberta call upon the Prime Minister to summon to the Senate to fill vacancies relating to Alberta only those who are Senate nominees pursuant to the Senatorial Selection Act of Alberta and, further, that the Assembly confirm the recommendations of the report of the Select Special Committee on Upper House Reform, which were unanimously endorsed by this Assembly on May 27, 1985, and again on March 10, 1987.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations.

MR. JONSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The resolution before the Assembly does two things. First, it is a strong statement in favour of an elected, equal, and effective Canadian Senate; in other words, a triple E Senate. It affirms Alberta's desire for a Senate that represents provincial interests within our federal system, and it reconfirms this Assembly's endorsement of the recommendations of the Select Special Committee on Upper House Reform, previously endorsed in May 1985 and March 1987.

Second, Mr. Speaker, the resolution calls for the Prime Minister to appoint one of Alberta's Senate nominees to the Senate. In 1998 Albertans elected two individuals to represent our province in the Senate, and the Prime Minister has so far refused to appoint them. In my view, this a rejection of the democratic value shared by all Canadians. This month Senator Nick Taylor retired from the Senate, which means that the Prime Minister will soon be appointing an Albertan to the Senate. It is the perfect opportunity for him to show support for democracy by appointing one of Alberta's Senate nominees. This resolution clearly and firmly calls for him to do just that.

Mr. Speaker, in considering this resolution, it is helpful to review some of the recent history of Senate reform discussions and especially Alberta's role in them. Reforming Canada's Senate is not, by any means, a new idea. In fact, discussions of reforming or changing the upper House are as old as the country itself. It is not a new issue, but it's certainly an issue that has gained prominence in the last 20 years. During that time Alberta has been a leader in calling for Senate reform.

In 1982, on the heels of much heated anger and resentment in the province over the national energy program, the Alberta government issued a discussion paper called a Provincially-Appointed Senate. The paper was designed to stimulate discussion within Alberta and across western Canada about gaining greater provincial representation in Ottawa through a reformed Senate. The paper proposed that Senators be nominated by the provinces and that the Senate be more focused on representing provincial interests. These ideas led to much interest and discussion among Albertans and western Canadians, and the Alberta government responded by creating a legislative Committee on Senate Reform in 1983.

The committee was given the mandate to examine the appropriate role, functions, and structure of the Senate within Canada's federal system and to make recommendations for change. Headed by then MLA Dennis Anderson, the committee studied the issue thoroughly, held a series of public meetings, and received submissions from many Albertans. In March 1985 the committee tabled its report entitled Strengthening Canada, Reform of Canada's Senate. The report called for Senators to be elected, for an equal number of Senators from each province, and for the Senate to be given effective powers. Essentially, it was the birth of the idea of a triple E Senate. In May 1985 the Legislative Assembly voted unanimously to accept in principle the recommendations of the report, and I was honoured to be able to participate in that debate.

Mr. Speaker, the momentum in favour of Senate reform continued through the annual Premiers' conferences in 1986 and 1987, and reform of the upper House was included as part of the Meech Lake accord in 1987. The accord set the stage for future constitutional negotiations on Senate reform. Support for an elected Senate expanded to other parts of Canada in 1987 and 1988 and was endorsed by a special joint committee of the Senate and House of Commons and by a National Conference on Senate Reform held at the University of Alberta.

In 1988 Alberta elected its first Senator, Mr. Stan Waters, and he was appointed to the Senate by Prime Minister Mulroney in 1990. Mr. Waters represented Albertans very well until his death in 1991. He stands as the first and only elected Senator in Canadian history, and I certainly hope he is not the last.

Mr. Speaker, with the failure of the Meech Lake accord in 1990, constitutional negotiations began once again, and this time a triple E Senate was included in the negotiations, thanks, I think we can say, to Alberta's leadership. In 1992 a final agreement was reached, the Charlottetown accord, and it included a reformed Senate that would be elected and, for the first time, have equal representation from the provinces. There was much debate as to whether or not it would be effective in representing provincial interests. In the end, the majority of Canadians voted against the accord, and constitutional negotiations moved to the back burner. However, Albertans never gave up on the idea of Senate reform, and neither did the Alberta government.

In 1998 Alberta conducted another election to choose two Senator nominees. More than 890,000 valid ballots were cast, and two individuals were elected: Mr. Bert Brown and Mr. Ted Morton. To date the Prime Minister has refused to appoint either of them to the Senate, even though he has had two opportunities.

Mr. Speaker, in 1999 Alberta amended the Senatorial Selection Act to allow Senate elections to be held prior to Alberta vacancies opening in the Senate. This was in response to the Prime Minister's refusal to acknowledge the hon. Premier's repeated requests that he hold off on filling vacancies until Albertans have had an opportunity to select their choice in an election.

Looking back over the last 20 years, it is clear that Alberta has been a leader in calling for Senate reform. Our province has done more than talk about it. We have taken action by putting forward solid proposals and giving Albertans the opportunity to have a say in who will represent them in the Senate. This resolution is another step in that process.

Mr. Speaker, I believe this resolution is coming at the appropriate time for two reasons. First, it has become very clear that we need improved provincial representation at the federal level. In recent years we have seen the federal government ignore provincial interests on a host of issues. Currently, we are concerned about the Kyoto protocol. The matter of gun control is still very much an issue. The Wheat Board is another topic that would benefit from discussion by such a body as an elected Senate. A whole host of municipal issues are on the list. Those are only a few of the topics that I think would benefit.

Alberta has had to lead the way in opposing many of these issues through costly court challenges, public awareness campaigns, and other approaches. Mr. Speaker, if we'd had a triple E Senate in Ottawa, these efforts may not have been necessary, but as it stands now, the Senate fails to represent provincial interests in any tangible way. Its powers are, at least to some degree, only theoretical. It does not have equal representation from the provinces, and it is made up of appointed individuals only.

Mr. Speaker, the second reason that the time is appropriate for this resolution is that democratic reform has once again come to the forefront of federal politics. The discussions so far have centered on procedural reforms within the House of Commons and giving backbench Members of Parliament increased influence in federal decision-making, but there's no reason that Senate reform cannot be part of these discussions. It would be interesting to know what the Liberals in Ottawa who are leading the discussions on democratic reform think about Senate reform. This resolution, I hope, will lead to that question being asked. Alberta has an opportunity to once again take the initiative and push Senate reform back onto the national agenda.

Mr. Speaker, I conclude my remarks by calling on the Members of the Legislative Assembly to take a stand on this issue and to support this motion.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Point of Order Dividing a Motion

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Before I begin debate on this motion, I would like to get some procedural advice from the chair, if possible. I rise in regard to Beauchesne 557(1) and page 478 of Marleau and Montpetit. Beauchesne 557(1) says:

A motion which contains two or more distinct propositions may be divided so that the sense of the House may be taken on each separately. The Speaker has a discretionary power to decide whether a motion should be divided.

Mr. Speaker, we're asking for this particular motion to be divided because in fact it has several distinct propositions. There's a precedent for this in the past. On February 27, 1995, when a former Provincial Treasurer divided an opposition motion moved by the former Member for Calgary-Buffalo into two parts, it was divided in midsentence because it contained two distinct propositions. The final decision on this lies with you, and I am certain that you will find that Motion 32 before us contains several distinct propositions.

3:30

Mr. Speaker, we'd like to recommend a process for dividing this motion up. There are some natural divisions within this motion which should be looked at separately, and I would ask you to consider dividing out the third paragraph, which says, and, further, that pending such an amendment the Legislative Assembly of Alberta call upon the Prime Minister to summon to the Senate to fill vacancies relating to Alberta only those who are Senate nominees pursuant to the Senatorial Selection Act of Alberta, from the other three as it deals with slightly different material than the other three clauses. We would ask that the other clauses be dealt with as one.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: Well, then, pending a response from the chair with respect to this request, the chair is prepared to hear comments from other members with respect to its merit.

MR. JONSON: Well, Mr. Speaker, I thank the member across the way for his interest in this resolution, but the motion that is before the Assembly is one which deals with, in my view, one concept. It is a concept that has to have the three elements in it; that is, we have to be talking about an elected, equal, and effective Canadian Senate to have what our goal is, and that is a more effective Senate in Canada to represent the interests of Canadians and particularly the interests of the areas or regions of Canada and specifically the provinces.

Mr. Speaker, I think we're talking about one overall concept here, and I do not think that it is appropriate to try and take apart what is a well-understood concept and debate it in two or three or four pieces.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona on this division proposal?

DR. PANNU: No, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: Well, from a procedural point of view, anyone want to make an argument? A procedural argument? The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

DR. NICOL: On the division of the motion?

THE SPEAKER: Yes.

DR. NICOL: Mr. Speaker, in the context of looking at this, the idea of support for the concept of the triple E Senate is unique. It stands fully in the context of a specific initiative that we can take. The next step, then, if that initiative becomes a reality, is: how do we go about the elections? In effect, if we tie the two parts, the support for the concept of the triple E Senate with an election which occurred in the past, we're basically tying the two of them to the idea that an election that has occurred in the past was relevant within the support for the triple E concept as approved and as requested today, and I think it would be appropriate to divide the two of them out.

Let's talk about the triple E Senate and then, secondly, let's talk about: was the previous election in the spirit of the support for that triple E concept? If it was, then, yes, the people who were elected in that can become the candidates for appointment or be sent to the Prime Minister asking that they be the people appointed. But, secondly, if we don't, what we can deal with then is a secondary debate about what is an appropriate way to carry on an election for that Senate. By tying the two of them together in one motion, I think it complicates the process of: do we support the concept of triple E and tie to it the previous process of elections, or should we be dealing with elections as a separate issue once we get the triple E concept approved?

That's, Mr. Speaker, why I think it would be very appropriate for us to handle them as separate debates and separate votes in this Legislature. Thank you for considering that.

THE SPEAKER: On the procedural point of the division, the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar. A citation would be helpful.

REV. ABBOTT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Pardon me?

THE SPEAKER: A citation from parliamentary tradition would be helpful.

REV. ABBOTT: Well, just following up on the reasoning that was given by the member opposite, if you look at the motion, Mr. Speaker, it says here very clearly that it is a resolution to amend the Constitution of Canada. It's one issue, and all that the second, third, and fourth parts of the motion do is just explain how that amendment is going to take place. It seems very clear that this is just one issue, and I think that dividing it would actually cause it to be several issues. So I think that it would be best to leave it as it was presented by our hon. minister.

THE SPEAKER: Well, hon. members, Beauchesne very, very clearly has a citation with respect to this dividing motion, section 557.

A motion which contains two or more distinct propositions may be divided so that the sense of the House may be taken on each separately. The Speaker has a discretionary power to decide whether a motion should be divided.

Section 557(2) states:

It is only in exceptional circumstances, and when there is little doubt, that the Speaker may intervene and, of his or her own initiative, amend the motion proposed by a Member.

Well, there's absolutely no intent from the chair to amend the motion.

The question of division is an interesting one. This is not the first time that this has occurred in this House. In fact, it occurred as recently as one year ago almost to the day, on November 21, 2001, when we had the debate on Standing Orders, if all hon. members will recall, that such a motion and such a suggestion was made to the Assembly. The conclusion at that time was that there would only be one debate with respect to the Standing Orders but that there would be a number of votes rather than one vote, and that seemed to work intelligently and quite capably with this.

In looking at the motion, it strikes at least the chair that it is not that complicated a motion. It may be a bit longer than most motions but, in terms of the overall intent, would not seem to require an intervention from the chair with respect to this matter. It would probably serve the debate well that, in fact, the four items are separate in sum, but others will argue that they're all together, and I don't think I can be motivated to intervene for a division with respect to this matter today.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry does have the floor if he wishes to continue his participation.

Debate Continued

MR. BONNER: Yes. Thank you very much and thank you for that interpretation and ruling, Mr. Speaker. It is appreciated.

The debate over a triple E Senate has occurred on more than one occasion in this House, and the hon. minister has given us a bit of a history. When we look, we can see that when we follow a chronology of progress on the triple E Senate, in August of 1982 the government of Alberta released a discussion paper on Senate reform, and this was followed in March of 1985 by the Alberta Select Special Legislative Committee on Senate Reform recommending a triple E Senate. In May the report was unanimously approved by the Legislative Assembly of Alberta. On March 10, 1987, the triple E Senate was once again unanimously approved by the Alberta Legislature, and I think that I would like to draw the point to all members' attention that it was unanimously approved by the Alberta Legislature.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

On July 2 and 3, 1987, the first ministers agreed to the Meech Lake accord, bringing Quebec into the Constitution and guaranteeing constitutional conferences on Senate reform. This was followed on September 9, 1987, by the special joint committee of the Senate and the House of Commons recommending that first ministers pursue Senate reform on a priority basis. On May 18 to 21, 1988, the western Premiers unanimously endorsed the triple E Senate model. On August 17 to 19, 1988, all Premiers agreed that Alberta would lead discussions to promote triple E Senate reform.

From September 1988 to February 1989, led by the federal and intergovernmental affairs minister, Alberta's Senate Reform Task Force discussed Senate reform with the federal and all provincial governments. Also in February of 1989 the government of Alberta introduced the Senatorial Selection Act. With this act Alberta would become the first province in Canadian history to select its Senators democratically.

Now, as well, without a doubt, one of the reasons we are discussing this particular motion today is the recent retirement of Senator Nick Taylor, who served this province very well not only as a Senator but as an MLA and as leader of the Liberal Party here in the Assembly. He moved in the Assembly on March 10, 1987:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly support an amendment to the Constitution of Canada to provide for an elected Senate, which would provide protection for the interests of the lesser populated regions through equal representation and through effective powers.

Again, we continue as the Official Opposition to support the motion that was moved by the then MLA back on March 10, 1987.

Now, then, this current Official Opposition supports Senate reform. We feel that there is a great need for Senate reform, and certainly if you were to poll Albertans, the majority would support some form of Senate reform, and those reforms vary as well, Mr. Speaker. Some Albertans feel that we shouldn't have any Senate, and certainly a number of others feel that Senators could be elected. Of course, in all of this there is due process. We continually come back to debating the merits of Senate reform here in the Legislature, yet we are not, it seems, moving forward to the point where we can get the other provinces onside to enough degree to get the feds to open up these discussions.

Now, then, as well, with an elected Senate we also have to consider that there are going to be some very worthy Senators who would not have on their own merits the resources to be elected to a triple E Senate. One Senator that I had this discussion with was Senator Thelma Chalifoux, certainly an outstanding Senator, a Senator who represents all Albertans but, as well, a minority group here in Alberta and has done a marvelous job. I think of the political climate when Senator Doug Roche was appointed, certainly a man whose credentials are unquestionable in this province and a man who represents Albertans as a Senator and does a marvelous job and a person that I am proud to say is one of our Senators.

We do have to look at the possibility that in an elected Senate we're not going to get everything we want, but two of the key things that I support in Senate reform is that with an elected Senate we would have representation that would reflect the views of Albertans and accommodate the needs of all Canadians. I think, Mr. Speaker, that would certainly be one of the areas that we would look at as being a better system than the current appointed system that is happening.

If we do have a triple E Senate, an elected Senate with equal representation from each particular province, then the principle of equality of all provinces in a federal state will take place, so it certainly will balance off the differences in population that we do have across this country. As well, if we do have Senate reform and a triple E Senate and we do send Senators from this province that are duly elected, then what we must also ensure in this reform is that there are effective powers in the Senate.

So, Mr. Speaker, I want to reiterate that it's been the Official Opposition's position for many years here in the Assembly that we support a triple E Senate with elected Senators, and I would urge all members of this Assembly to support this motion.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Rocky View, followed by Edmonton-Highlands, followed by Edmonton-Rutherford.

MS HALEY: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am absolutely thrilled to be able to talk about the triple E Senate and why we need one. This is something that has been a big part of my life for a very long time. Back in the early 1980s – and I was a little bit younger then than I am today – the federal government came along with a program called the national energy program, and it decimated a lot of this province. It devastated the town that I was living in, which was a very small city called Airdrie, at that point around 6,000 people, and within months we had over 500 empty homes as people packed up and moved out of our city and out of our province and went home because so much of our industry was being shut down.

While it's true that there was, in fact, a global recession that was starting, it was a thousand times worse here than it ever needed to be because of government intervention in the economy, and the government was, in fact, the federal government. I couldn't understand then and I don't understand today why a federal government would in fact hurt any of the parts of a country. It didn't make any sense. At the same time, there was an election going on up in Olds-Didsbury, where a separatist won, and our options at that time, as I saw them, 20 years ago, were whether or not it matters being part of this country, and if it does, in fact, what do you do about it? One of the things that mattered to me, I thought: well, nobody wants to give up on a country, so let's talk about a triple E Senate.

I met Mr. Bert Brown, who's now one of the Senators-elect, and have since also had the opportunity to meet Mr. Ted Morton, both really interesting men who believe that if you're going to be part of this country, you've got to be treated equally, and the only way you can do that is, in fact, if you have an elected, an equal, and an effective Senate.

As I watched going through the '80s and as I watch today as we're talking about things like Kyoto, I see the similarities, and they're absolutely staggering. Twenty years have gone by since the first attempts at trying to bring a triple E Senate to this country, and in that 20 years we've suffered inside this province. We've had all kinds of issues with the federal government, and the federal government chooses not to listen, and our one salvation, from my perspective, is a Senate that is, in fact, equal, elected, and effective for all of this country, not just for Alberta but not just for Ontario and not just for Quebec.

Well, why does it matter? It matters because this year alone, for example, Alberta will pay over $9 billion more into Confederation than it gets back out, and we have at the same time an inequity in tax bases for corporations in this country, where it's okay to say to the energy industry: you can pay 28 percent. Every other industry can pay 21 percent, but the energy industry is based largely in Alberta, so that's okay. It's not okay. It wouldn't be okay if it were in Nova Scotia. It wouldn't be okay if it were in Newfoundland, and it's not okay just because it's here. It's not okay that we have a Canadian Wheat Board that the east doesn't have to deal with but we have had imposed on us for over 50 years, and you can't even have a conversation about it. It's not okay that you have gun control laws that make no sense at all, where you spend $800 million registering guns. Nobody even knows how many guns are registered or how many aren't. My own mother tried to register a gun, spent three years, has had at least 15 phone calls with people in Ottawa trying to straighten out a gun that hasn't been fired in 60 years, but, hey, she's clearly a risk to this country. We just do things, and there's no logic to it. My logic, my basis is that without a triple E there's really little point in trying to defend an Alberta inside this country.

You know, one of my colleagues has a republic of Alberta hat. I don't have the hat, but I'm looking for one. I'm very, very proud of my province, and I'm very, very proud of my heritage. I'm also incredibly proud of the fact that when the oil patch needed investments in the '40s and the '50s and the '60s and the '70s – most of Canada couldn't be bothered – the money came here from the United States. They believed in our oil patch. They helped us develop it. They turned us into a have province from a have-not province, and we've been punished ever since, and I'm frankly tired of it. My hope is that a triple E Senate at least could give us an opportunity to have an equal, effective, and elected voice in the government of this country.

A few years ago in the Senate in the United States, on a vote of 95 to 0 – five people were away – because they have an elected and an equal and an effective Senate in the United States, 95 people voted against the Kyoto protocol. It never even made it to Congress. It didn't need to. The Senate killed it, and they killed it because it wasn't fair to all regions of their country, a concept apparently alien to our federal government: you don't need to hose down one part of your country so that another part can do what? So we can look good on an international stage? We produce 2 percent of global greenhouse gas emissions. We heat an entire country, a cold country. We sell clean-burning oil and gas to the United States. We have the cleanest coal in the world here, but we have to feel guilty about everything, and I'm tired of feeling guilty. I want some equality, and I want it now.

When I look back at what was happening 20 years ago, a little snapshot of history, newspaper clippings pulled out of the Legislature Library – okay? – in 1981 Jean Chretien told a packed audience of school trustees: the wealth of the country must be shared if there is to be equal opportunity across Canada. Well, the Prime Minister was in Alberta about a year ago and made the same comment. Nothing changes. The script probably got retyped, but it's the same script. At the same time, in 1981, the federal government came up with a $3.25 million advertising campaign to promote the national energy program and tell everybody that it was a good thing and it won't hurt a bit, so just let it go; go for it, guys. Canada's oil policy, a real-life nightmare. Just one more time with feeling. Twenty years later we've now got some of our key tar sands projects being put on hold and being reconsidered while everybody tries to figure out what Kyoto will really do to us. More of the same: the NEP, Jean Chretien. Yes, it is. It's more of the same. It's 20 years later. It's deja vu all over again.

Then because they killed the oil industry, they came up with something they called PIP grants, nice little tax incentives, so that, you know, you could back in to other people's oil wells, but hey, that was okay because it was the Canadian way. Right? They spent $6.5 billion buying Petro-Canada, but that was okay too, because the money was coming out of Alberta because they had a two-price system for our oil. Life was good. What was not to like? People in the east could get our oil and gas at less than world price. That was okay because it was Alberta. Well, it's not okay. It wasn't okay then, and it's not okay now.

Jean Chretien made the comment: as a national government we have preoccupations of a different nature than Alberta; it is a matter of finding an acceptable formula. There was no formula. It was the raping of our province. That was a formula that worked. It sold for them. It worked really good. Thank God that Brian Mulroney and the Progressive Conservatives got elected and managed after six years of destruction in our province to repeal the national energy program and give us a break.

You know, just one example is 13,000 people laid off in one week in Canada. "Energy ad Campaign Defended by Lalonde," because he had to defend it. Alberta's economy was battered, but that was okay.

"Gray Told NEP Caused Steel Layoffs," but they didn't react because that was okay. They were out here too. They were mostly in Saskatchewan, where IPSCO was working at the time.

"Little Hope for Canada's Work-seeking Youth." Yeah. What about our kids? What about their future? You know, where does that fit? Maybe the triple E gives them some hope for a future where they're part of a country and they're an equal partner in that country. I don't think it should be asking too much.

"Oilpatch Frowns on 'Son of NEP,'" because the NEP was so bad, they finally, after several years, decided to design it again, and it was called Son of NEP. No doubt after Son of Sam, a serial killer in the United States.

The Auditor General came out in 1981 or '83 and said that he's right. The minister said that we're at close to collapse. Our country's economy was close to collapse. And now we want to do it again? Why? So our Prime Minister can look good on an international stage? I don't need him to look good out there. I need him to do his job here.

"GNP Falls by 2%." How much will it fall this time as we go through this? Ottawa treats our economy like an enemy target, and here we are all being told again: "Don't be hysterical. There's nothing really bad going to happen here. Just get over it, Alberta, and play ball." I don't want to play, Mr. Speaker.

Mortgages were up to 20 percent at that time. Is that our next little thing that's going to come? We're going to move from the low interest rates to high interest rates as we try and back up our 63-cent dollar again. They were trying to back it up to 81 cents then. Almost destroyed us.

"The Economy in a Nutshell – Liberal Tomfoolery." It's an interesting comment.

We live in a country which has been blessed above all others . . .

We live in a garden that can feed half the world. We have mineral riches beyond measure . . . We are one of the few industrial nations with the capacity for self-sufficiency in petroleum supplies . . . Our people are resilient, hardworking and resourceful. But we have one fatal flaw. We like to elect governments which dream up contradictory, ill-conceived, paradoxical policies.

And we've got another one that's doing the same thing. It's not really another one. It's pretty much the same guys. They're still there. It's 20 years later, and they're still doing it.

"Emergency Debate Sought over Economic Crisis." They finally admitted we were in a crisis, and that was just before their government fell. Thank you, God.

"Shell, Gulf Blaming NEP for Sharp Drop in Earnings." Yeah, I'll bet they were.

"Once a Great Nation of Producers and Entrepreneurs," by Jim Gray. That's one of the most incredible articles I've ever read – and it was done in 1982 – talking about what's wrong with a government that takes away the incentive from hardworking Albertans to want to do what we do best, which is produce riches in this province that feed the rest of our nation.

When we look at our country, it is indeed a wonderful country. I've been in parts of this country. I'd like to keep it together, Mr. Speaker, but we can't do it without a triple E.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Just before recognizing the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, I'd refer hon. members to Standing Order 29(2)(a). It may cause further debate.

The hon. member.

MR. McCLELLAND: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. For many in this Chamber the opportunity to speak to the Senate, particularly the triple E Senate motion, is something that I think is treasured, because it's something that many of us have worked towards for many, many years. As we all know, in order to achieve anything in life, but particularly anything politically, there is one absolutely necessary ingredient, and that is unwavering resolve. If we are ever going to achieve a political end, we will achieve it because we have given it our best and we have given it unwavering resolve. There is one person in our province to whom that description, unwavering resolve, most closely fits as it relates to Senate reform, and that person is Mr. Bert Brown. We welcome Mr. Brown in the Speaker's gallery today.

Now, the triple E Senate has over the years taken on a political majesty that it may or may not be able to deliver on, but the notion of a triple E Senate represents the capacity of our country to deal fairly with its disparate parts. The notion that we had to do something, that we had to treat all of the regions and the provinces in Canada fairly came to a head, as was earlier mentioned by the Member for Airdrie-Rocky View – at least it came to a head in my consciousness – in relation to the national energy program, to the CF-18 maintenance contract, to the many examples of political favouritism that protected the rich resource base of votes of the federal Liberal Party and the federal Conservative Party. Both seemed to some of us to be different sides of the same coin. Both, in order to get elected, had to pander to that part of the country which was rich in votes. You fish where the fish are, and that's what they did.

The resentment here in western Canada was palpable, and there were many expressions of that resentment at that time, some of them in separation and others in more a positive vein: the notion of a triple E Senate. Mr. Brown, I recall, sold those little triple E pins that people would wear, and gradually there was a groundswell of interest and support for the notion of a triple E Senate. It was something that was so far beyond the pale that it was impossible to achieve, but unwavering resolution brought it to the point where a senatorial election was held in Alberta.

Now, it was held in Alberta after the Meech Lake accord, which really had the intent and the purpose to redefine and to put substance around Quebec's place in Canada. The Meech Lake accord was essentially to give comfort to Quebec, to ameliorate some of the separatist tendencies in Quebec. Meech Lake also gave a nod to the reform of the Senate, and it was the first time, to my knowledge, that the federal government actually gave an important nod to the notion that in order to appease Quebec and in order to speak to the security of the people of Quebec within Canada, some thought should also be given to the west.

Meech Lake was not successful. It was a roll of the dice that didn't turn out the way it was expected to. That was to some a tragedy, to others a blessing. It fell apart because of Elijah Harper, a member of the Legislature of Manitoba who had not been brought onside and who in the waning hours of the debate, as members will recall, declined to give his unanimous consent, and the Meech Lake accord did not go further.

Eventually that led to the Charlottetown accord, which did not find support across the country at all towards the end of the debate, and for some people that also was a tragedy. But the Charlottetown accord did give the country the potential of a two and a half E Senate. It did change some of the responsibilities, some of the powers of the Senate. It gave us an elected and effective, to a lesser degree than the current Senate, and not quite an equal Senate.

The Meech Lake accord failed, and the notion of Senate reform was doomed for some time in part because Canadians just didn't want to talk about constitutional things. We had much bigger fish to fry, namely our economy, and that had to be addressed. There was no passion whatsoever.

Then, of course, in 1995 the Quebec referendum came within a hair of being lost by Canada and won by Quebec, and that caused the Prime Minister in reaction to the referendum in Quebec to bring to the House of Commons a resolution that would define Quebec's place as a unique society in Canada. That resolution went through the House of Commons. It was a nod to Quebec. It really, other than the psychological impact, was rather meaningless.

The most meaningful constitutional gathering that took place in that time, though, was the Calgary framework and the declaration of the Premiers in Calgary. How soon we forget. That was only five years or so ago. If I may read the seventh point from the seven in the Calgary declaration:

Canada is a federal system where federal, provincial, and territorial governments work in partnership while respecting each others' jurisdictions. Canadians want their governments to work cooperatively and with flexibility to ensure the efficiency and effectiveness of the federation. Canadians want their governments to work together particularly in the delivery of their social programs. Provinces and territories renew their commitment to work in partnership with the Government of Canada to best serve the needs of Canadians.

Now, does that sound like the federal government's position and the current Prime Minister's position as regards the Kyoto protocol? I don't think so. The arrogance displayed by the Prime Minister, represented by the power vested in the office of the Prime Minister with absolutely no checks and balances, is what has led to the renewal of interest in reform of the Senate and the triple E Senate in Alberta. If we as federalist Canadians are not able to give substance to the sense that people in Alberta and in other regions of the country do not have a place in the country that is on par with the power of the votes of Ontario and Quebec, then there will develop a schism in our country beyond anything that the federal government has ever experienced in regard to Quebec.

What we're talking about in this motion is, in my opinion, exceptionally important in the historical affairs of our country because, as the Member for Airdrie-Rocky View indicated, there are many of us here in our province who are proud Canadians but will not go through another national energy program. So if the federal government is paying any heed whatsoever to the debate that takes place in this Chamber, in this Legislature, they will see behind the motion the reason that exists here in Alberta and is reflected not just here but in other provinces.

Now, we may or we may not end up at the end of the day with a triple E Senate. There exists in Canada today the understanding that Canada is regional in nature – Atlantic Canada, Quebec, Ontario, the prairies, and British Columbia – and that these are natural, geographic, and interest groupings. It may come to pass that we will get "elected" and that we will get, by nature of being elected with the powers existent, "effective," and we may end up with "equitable" rather than "equal." The important thing is that these negotiations take place in the interests of our country and of our province. The important thing is that our Premier show the same unwavering resolution when it comes to the negotiations with the other Premiers and the government of Canada that Mr. Brown has shown over these many years, because it is unwavering resolution that will see this through to the end.

Nothing that I have said should be construed as in any way denigrating the quality of the people that are in the Senate. There are some exceptionally fine people and there are some exceptionally fine people representing Alberta in the Senate today. It's interesting to note, however, that after Alberta had the senatorial election and Alberta had two Senators-in-waiting, the Senators appointed to represent Alberta were of a much higher calibre, in my opinion, than had previously been considered.

Having said that, Alberta's place in Confederation is up for grabs. Make no mistake about it: if we are not able to find our place in Confederation with honour, if we are not able to have representation in the Parliament of Canada that balances the power of the office of the Prime Minister to give voice to the important perspectives of the provinces, including ours, Canada is going to be in for a very difficult constitutional time once again. And none of us want that.

So I would urge this Legislature, other Legislatures, and the Parliament of Canada, first of all, to understand this motion as a warning shot across the brow, to take the Kyoto ratification process off the Order Paper, to consult with the provinces as was promised in the Calgary declaration, and then to work with the Premiers and urge our Premier to show the same unwavering resolution that Mr. Brown has shown over these many years. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, followed by the hon. Member for Wainwright.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It was with interest that I listened to the comments of the members who have just spoken on this matter. It may surprise some hon. members to know that the New Democratic Party in Canada was a pioneer of Senate reform. Long before the triple E Senate reared its head, our party, going back to the early 1960s, was calling for the abolition of the unelected Senate of Canada.

Mr. Speaker, I sometimes agree with some hon. members' sentiments, and one that I've heard often in this Chamber is that we are overgoverned in this country. I certainly believe that an additional layer of politicians at the national level needs to be examined quite closely: the impact of that, what it is supposed to achieve. In this case what it is supposed to achieve is the prevention of things like the national energy plan ever happening again, according to the hon. Member for Airdrie-Rocky View. It may, as the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford says, be – and I'm paraphrasing – a little bit oversold. It may in fact not deliver what is expected of it. Those expectations, based on what the hon. Member for Airdrie-Rocky View had to say, are very, very high indeed.

What we are going to have, I think, is a more complex federal system. It may be more representative. It may give more power to the provinces, but it will in fact present, I think, a number of constitutional challenges and costs, and I think that there are other avenues that could be followed in order to improve the functioning of the government in this country.

I believe, having been here now for a little bit over two years, that there is a major reform of democracy which is required right here and, indeed, in the federal parliament and probably in many, if not most, of the provincial legislatures right across the country. I think we should look at that. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar talked about the democratic deficit this afternoon, and I believe that that is, in fact, a serious problem. So we ought to look at these issues, I think, as a package rather than single out one silver bullet that we believe is going to solve all the problems in the country.

If you look at some of the issues that have been mentioned – for example, the power of the Prime Minister's office is mirrored in this place in the power of the Premier's office. The attempts of the Liberal backbenchers to get more power have been faintly mirrored in this place and I think need to be a lot stronger. There are some things that are apparent here where we lag behind even what has happened in the Parliament of Canada. We had the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs talk about the wonderful step that had been taken in Ottawa by the backbenchers in extending their power to elect chairs of committees, yet overwhelmingly the government members voted down the attempt to bring the same thing here.

We don't have all-party standing committees in Alberta, and they do in the Parliament of Canada. What we have here is all-government committees that masquerade as parliamentary committees, and we saw evidence of that in the point of order that was made today. The government likes to pretend, when it's convenient, that these single-party committees, these government committees, are actually somehow part of this Legislature's processes, and they're not. They may be part of the government's processes, but they are absolutely not a part of the process of this Assembly. I think it's time that the members came clean with Albertans on that whole question because we have a system here where the role of the government and the role of the Assembly have become blurred, the role of the Progressive Conservative Party and the role of the government have become even more blurred, and the role of business and the role of government has also become blurred. The democratic deficit is probably highest right here in Alberta.

I want to talk a little bit about some of the other aspects of democracy, if we are really interested in improving democracy federally, that we could talk about here in Alberta. The most serious one is the first-past-the-post system, where individual constituencies elect by plurality the representatives of this Assembly, and it distorts the will of the people. It distorts the will of the people in Ottawa, and it distorts the will of the people in this Assembly. There is no way that the percentage of Conservative MLAs in this Assembly matches the number of people who voted for the Conservatives in the last election. They would have won the election – and I'm quite prepared to admit it – but I'll tell you, not in the numbers that are represented here. So the will of the people of Alberta has been distorted.

REV. ABBOTT: Point of order.

4:20

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Point of Order. A citation, please.

Point of Order Relevance

REV. ABBOTT: Beauchesne 459, relevance and repetition difficult to assess and enforce. Mr. Speaker, we are dealing with a government motion to amend the Constitution of Canada, and the member opposite there is talking about some provincial election history that has nothing to do with the motion.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: All on the matter of relevance, hon. member.

MR. MASON: Well, Mr. Speaker, I view the point of order as simply a tactic of harassment. I'm clearly speaking against the amendment, and I'm giving my reasons. The main reason is that there are real democratic priorities that we ought to be addressing right here in Alberta. I trust my clock will be stopped during this time.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Any further discussion on this?

The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar has risen on a point of order citing 459, Relevance and Repetition. As the hon. member has indicated, relevance is not easy to define. In borderline cases the member should be given the benefit of the doubt, although the Speaker has frequently admonished members who have strayed in debate.

One would think that there is some relevance if we are talking about making parliamentary institutions more democratic, that you might make, albeit some people may think erroneous, other references to what they deem as undemocratic or a democratic deficit. As I say, the hon. member may not agree with the relationship, but it's perfectly within the hon. member's right to suggest that that is relevant.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Debate Continued

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, for that. I want to indicate that I think that the first-past-the-post system has distorted the will of the people of Canada as represented in the parliament of Canada and that if it was replaced with a proportional representation system, there would be much broader views expressed and you would not have the one-party dominance in Ontario that gives the Liberal government an almost unlimited lease on power. So there are other ways to deal with it, and that's my point on this matter.

I want to say something about the Senate election that took place, that the other parties, aside from the Reform and Conservative parties, did not contest the election, in fact challenged the legitimacy of it. Municipalities challenged the government's high-handedness in forcing them to take this on at their cost. There was a high proportion of spoiled ballots, and the results, frankly, Mr. Speaker, are far too stale for us to urge the federal government to appoint these people. This is a stunt, and it is not a legitimate constitutional action in any way.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to introduce an amendment, if I may, to this, and I will wait for this to be distributed. Do I need to read it now, Mr. Speaker?

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: You may read it, and then we'll wait till everyone has a copy.

MR. MASON: Before reading it?

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: No. You may read it unless it's 20 pages long. If it's short, read it. Then people will have the sense of it, and then it's going to be delivered to the table and hopefully the original is going to be given to the table. The original copy of the amendment must be presented to the table as well as four other copies.

MR. MASON: Yes. The original copy is on the front. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will move that Government Motion 32 be amended as follows: in the first paragraph by striking out "to provide for an elected Senate which would represent the interests of all provinces through equal representation and through effective powers" and substituting therefore "to abolish the Senate," and by striking out everything after "consultations with all provincial governments on this amendment." This has been approved by the Parliamentary Counsel.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands on amendment A1.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. How much time am I allowed on this amendment?

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Well, you're allowed in the whole motion, including your amendment, 15 minutes, following which there can be five minutes of questions. Then we go on to the next speaker, but it would have to be on the amendment.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The amendment would change the government motion so that we were in support of the abolition of the Senate.

Now, you've got to go back to the history of the Senate in Canada. It did not have the same history as the United States. People would like to institute or impose American political institutions into Canada, but they don't necessarily fit. If you examine the early history of Canada and the development of its institutions, the Senate was intended to represent the House of Lords in the British system. There was a very high, for the time, property requirement, and they deliberately made it of a nature that only wealthy people could be members, attempting, without the history of the autocracy in Canada that existed in England – the lords and nobles and dukes and all of those kinds of people – to create that here in Canada. So it was not elected on purpose.

It has always been, in our view, a bastion of anti-democratic views. It has never been publicly accountable, and it is appointed by the Prime Minister. All provincial assemblies that had a bicameral system have abolished their upper Chamber. The last to do so was the province of Quebec, and I think it was in 1967 or 1968 that they abolished the last upper Chamber, appointed in a similar fashion by the Premier of Quebec as the Senate of Canada is. It's obvious to me that the Senate of Canada has never been consistent with a democratically elected system.

Now, people want to take the step of making it elected and making it democratic, and that's fine. As I've said earlier, Mr. Speaker, I don't think that that is the solution to Canada's constitutional problems. I think there are many other things that we could do to reinvigorate our democracy in Canada and in Alberta.

The Senate has seen any number of scandals of people not attending. As we know, they had to actually go down and virtually drag a guy out of Mexico in order to get him to attend to even the slightest amount of his duties. The Senate does not contribute in a meaningful way, in my view, in the view of my party, to the political life of this country. It is a place of patronage writ large, the perfect place for various bagmen and party workers and people to whom the government owes favours to be appointed. One or two occasionally are actually appointed on their merits, and in some of those cases we actually have some of the very finest people involved in government across the country, and I would like to say that some of the recent appointments of Senators in Alberta have fallen into that category. Some members may not agree.

So, Mr. Speaker, just to conclude, my amendment would serve the function of putting this Assembly on the record as calling for the abolition of the upper House in Canada so that we would have a system of government that was democratically elected, and we could start on the step of extending democracy in Ottawa and in Edmonton, and I think that that's where we should go.

Thank you.

4:30

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford has already spoken on this. I presume that by standing you're going to ask a question or a comment.

MR. McCLELLAND: It's not on the amendment but on questions and comments.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Yes, and the table has reminded me that you may also speak again on the amendment at a later time.

MR. McCLELLAND: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is in the nature of Standing Order 29, questions and comments. I'd like to ask the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands: given the federal nature of our country and the constitutional nature of the provinces and of our constitutional relationship with the federal government, in the absence of a second Chamber, the Senate, how would the regions and the provinces offset the weight of the representation-by-population of vote-rich Toronto and Montreal, and how could there be any potential effective balance in the relationship between the provinces represented by the Senate and the power of the office of the Prime Minister?

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member has touched on some important things. First of all, the weight of the members of Ontario would be reduced by a proportional representation system, so there would be more diversity amongst the Members of Parliament from across Canada and from central Canada. I think that the Constitution clearly provides strong protections for the provinces, and I don't think that we need a Senate to represent the provinces. This province is perfectly capable of representing itself. I think there are some other developments and evolutions that could take place in terms of provincial and federal conferences, as we used to see when Mr. Trudeau was the Prime Minister. So basically I'm of the view that we simply do not need a triple E Senate to protect our rights.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, if there are no other members.

MR. McCLELLAND: Well, thank you very much. Proportional representation requires a list. The list is put together by the leader of the political party. If the Prime Minister puts together the list and those on the list are there at the pleasure of being put on the list by the Prime Minister, would that not further concentrate power in the hands of the Prime Minister and further complicate and further denigrate the very democracy that the Member for Edmonton-Highlands wants to achieve?

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you for that, Mr. Speaker. I certainly can't speak for the Liberal Party of Canada, nor would I try, but certainly I know that within our party, and I'm sure if we had a system within yours federally, there would be a democratic decision that would be made with respect to the list. It's not just the leader that assigns the list in places where we have this kind of system. There are only about three democracies left that have the system that we have. I think Australia, Britain, the United States, and Canada are pretty much it in terms of these ridings rather than proportional representation.

MRS. NELSON: Mr. Speaker, I wasn't going to speak to this amendment, but I feel rather compelled to, if I might speak against it.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Okay. I think, unless the clock has run out, that we're on comments and questions on the last speaker.

MRS. NELSON: Oh, then may I make a clarification through a question?

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Okay. Yes.

MRS. NELSON: Back in the original discussion the hon. member made the comment that we didn't have standing committees out here in this province like they have in other parliaments, and actually he sits on two select standing committees of this very Legislature. I was wondering: was he referring to reducing those standing committees in our Legislature and giving up his membership on them?

The second thing I was wondering. I appreciate his frustration level that there must be with not having the Senate effectively representing the province of Alberta, but I fail to understand as to why he would like to move away from a system that would have, clearly, representation from all sectors of this country in Ottawa so we could be dealt with fairly through an equal representation, as opposed to being gobbled up again by central Canada, which is the proposal he's putting forward.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The second question is rhetorical. The first one . . . [Mr. Mason's speaking time expired]

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The tyranny of the clock. The time for comments and questions and answers to either the comments or questions is up for this particular speech. We're on the amendment. I have two people who have indicated that they wish to speak to it.

Hon. Member for Wainwright, were you wishing to speak on the main motion itself or on the amendment?

MR. GRIFFITHS: The main motion.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The main motion.

The hon. minister expressed an interest in speaking on the amendment. The hon. Minister of Finance.

MRS. NELSON: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have to speak against this amendment, and I have to assume that this was put forward out of total frustration. I'm going to go back a little bit in time. Back in 1981, when the patriation of the Constitution was taking place – Mr. Bert Brown, who's in your gallery, will remember this – I was one of the fortunate people that belonged to a group called the Canadian citizens' Constitution committee. We were concerned about the representation across Canada and the different acts of the provinces that joined Confederation and what the changes would be in the Canadian Constitution, particularly with the introduction of things such as the Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

We traveled across Canada and talked to over a million people, in fact collected signatures to stop the move by our federal government. We went through the British parliamentary system and actually met up with 60 Lords from the House of Lords in England to plead the case to stop the patriation because of the unfairness that there would be with the democratic principles that we had in Confederation originally, that they were not going to be represented within the Constitution that was being put forward because, clearly, there was a difference and a determination to have a dominance in central Canada of the whole country.

Well, we presented a million signatures to the House of Commons in Canada. Of course, they were totally ignored, and so we went to England. We met with the Prime Minister and with the House of Lords, and they were supportive. Sixty Lords in the House of Lords were onside with what we were trying to put forward so that there would be fairness within Canada. Because of the vast size of this country we don't have the population base in western Canada to effectively be represented in Ottawa. The bicameral system seemed to be the only alternative that we could have, similar to what they had in the United States. They experienced the same vastness of their country, but they had a difference between population bases throughout the land.

Having an equal representation in the Senate, having the Senate elected, and having the Senate actually have effective powers became critically important. We lost the case in our presentation, obviously, because we ended up with not only not having sort of an effective situation within the Constitution but also having the Charter of Rights and Freedoms tacked on, which really becomes a contradiction to democracy because it protects people against the willful destruction of the majority, which is a democratic process, and we were in contradiction.

[The Speaker in the chair]

So I hope that when we look at trying to have a say in what happens within a family and through the Senate, it is not going to be rejected by the hon. member, because I think it's a mistake. Clearly, we recognize that we don't have the population base in western Canada to have equal representation in the House of Commons, but the Senate is supposed to be the sober second thought. It's supposed to be made up of the minds that would look clearly at a certain level of the bill, at third reading of the bill, and make a determination if this is in the best interests of the country. That can only be accomplished if you have equal representation. That can only be accomplished if there's an effective process for it to be followed, and, clearly, as we have enunciated here in Alberta, the people should be chosen by the people.

So to throw that all out, to me, would be the last straw. I don't feel that we should give up on triple E. I think it's the only salvation that we have in parts of Canada outside of Ontario and Quebec because we're not going to have the population base, but clearly we want to be part of the program. Clearly, we want to be part of Canada. We've said that time and time again, but it's getting very difficult when we don't feel that we have any representation in Ottawa.

We went through a process in Alberta a few years back where we actually elected Senate candidates, and we said: we want these people to represent us in the Senate. The people of Alberta voted. They selected their candidates. The arrogance of the federal Liberal Party to ignore that process has been outrageous. It's unconscionable. We're used to it out here, but we need to fight to have fairness. We need to fight to have representation. We need to be treated equally. In all other aspects we're asked to contribute, to be a partner, and Alberta contributes immensely to Confederation, and we're prepared and we want to do that. We want to be part of the family, but that can't be a one-way street. We have to have the opportunity to be there.

So I would hope that you won't give up on having that say, because I think that would be a big mistake. I think the effective use of a bicameral system in the United States has been very successful for smaller states, for smaller jurisdictions. Their congress, of course, is rep-by-pop, but the bicameral system in the House has two Senators from each state. It's been very effective. It's a process I don't know why we're fearful of in Canada. We'd still have the House of Commons. I don't know why we're so frightened of it, unless it's like my colleague from Airdrie-Rocky View mentioned earlier: we might actually be heard. We might actually be heard in Ottawa. It would be a novel concept to ever have it happen.

So when we look at this, Mr. Speaker, I hope that all members who clearly vote against this motion to abolish the Senate – I don't think that that's in the best interests of Albertans, and it's certainly not in the best interests of Canadians. We need to have a vehicle to be heard, but we need it to be fair. We need it to be a triple E: elected, effective, and equal. All we're asking for is to go back to that so that every part of this country can truly have a voice and be heard in Ottawa. What can be so tough about that? Surely nothing.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: First of all, hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, I do believe Standing Order 20 would preclude you from participating again.

MR. MASON: I have questions.

THE SPEAKER: You want to go to questions or comments? Okay. That's perfectly fine.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. To the hon. minister: I appreciate your speech and relatively moderate tone and the appeal. I appreciate it, but I want to ask a question. The Senate elections that took place in Alberta I believe are nearly four years old. Had those Senators been appointed immediately thereafter, their terms would now be coming to an end. How long is that election going to be valid, in your view? How long do you believe that election that took place nearly four years ago will entitle the individuals who, quote, won it to be Alberta Senators-in-waiting, and when will the government hold a new election so we can ascertain the will of the people at this point?

MRS. NELSON: Mr. Speaker, the premise was that if Albertans selected their candidates, they would be appointed to the Senate. The difficulty is that that was totally ignored by the federal government, and I believe, quite frankly, that Albertans are still waiting for the Senate candidates who have been elected as candidates to be recognized by the federal government. Again, this is not hard. Albertans duly elected these people at the polls, and I think they should be recognized by the federal government. That's the bare minimum, and we'll perpetuate the fight until they are appointed in the Senate. I think that's a process that Albertans would want us to stick to, so I would hope that they would agree to continue on.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar on the question-and-answer section, please.

MR. MacDONALD: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have a question for the hon. minister in regard to her remarks pertaining to the amendment as proposed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands. The hon. minister spoke about the arrogance of the federal government in their refusal to accept the choice that was made by Albertans in regard to the two individuals who were selected to be on the waiting list for Senators. If that's fair enough and there's an arrogant pattern by the federal government, what happened to communities in Alberta that voted to get rid of VLTs? What did this provincial government do in relation to that, if the federal government is arrogant in their refusal to deal with the Senate elections?

MRS. NELSON: Well, I don't know where the hon. member has been. I would normally say "hello?" at this point. But if you've forgotten, there have been court cases that have been ongoing on that very issue. So, you know, there's a process through the judiciary that is taking place as we speak on those cases. We would be negligent if we jumped in and interfered in that and dialogued on that in this House. We would not do that because they're before the courts now.

We're talking about a Senate election.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, still in the question-and-answer section.

MR. MacDONALD: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the hon. minister: does the hon. minister consider it fair to force Alberta communities that make a democratic choice to go through the courts?

MRS. NELSON: Mr. Speaker, I always understood – and I'm not a lawyer – that the courts were available to all and that if people chose to challenge things, they had the right to go to court. But I would probably ask the Minister of Gaming to comment on that.

MR. STEVENS: Thank you. I may comment under Standing Order 29. The facts behind this situation simply are that this Legislature passed legislation to put into effect the plebiscite results in those communities. That was challenged, and as a result the matter is before the courts. My understanding is that this Legislature has fulfilled its role, and the courts are fulfilling their role pursuant to the right of individual Canadians to make challenges with respect to legislation and to raise constitutional issues.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands. There are 16 seconds left in this section.

MR. MASON: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: On a point of order?

MR. MASON: Yes.

THE SPEAKER: Well, we'll just wait 10 seconds and see if there's an additional question in the comment section.

Okay. We'll now recognize the point of order.

Point of Order Relevance

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm just looking for the citation here. I believe it's 29(2), that says:

A period not exceeding 5 minutes shall be made available, if required, to allow members to ask questions and comment briefly on matters relevant to the speech and to allow responses.

I believe that this applies to questions and answers of the person who just spoke, and I guess I would ask for a ruling on whether or not it can be referred to someone else.

THE SPEAKER: Well, the chair has been listening very attentively to this debate this afternoon, even in his office because of the technology we have. It seems to me that not too many minutes ago there was a question of relevance raised in the House when the Deputy Speaker was in the chair, and the Deputy Speaker responded that to the greatest degree the widest range would be applied this afternoon with respect to this debate.

It is absolutely correct, hon. member, that the chair might have intervened when the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar raised his question. The chair thought for a moment that there was a major disconnect here between the two subjects that were being raised but, in terms of bending over backwards to accommodate the wishes of all hon. members to have the widest range of opportunity by way of example, allowed it to proceed. Of course, presumably, then, those who would respond to the question should have a similar kind of thing now.

So the question specifically was: would it have been appropriate for the hon. Minister of Finance to actually ask and for her response to have been supplemented in this case by the hon. Minister of Gaming? It seemed to me that in listening attentively to the question, with the need for complete accuracy in the response, the minister who might most appropriately provide the most important information in this case would have been the Minister of Gaming. So it's only in terms of the pursuit of knowledge for all members that the chair allowed that to proceed.

I take it that this point of order has now been concluded and we are simply on the amendment to the motion and there are additional members who would like to participate on the amendment.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona on the amendment.

Debate Continued

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The amendment is an attempt to fix what we see as a fatal flaw in the motion before this House. Therefore, it's very difficult to speak to the amendment without speaking to the flawed nature of the motion itself. So with your permission I would like to proceed to make a few comments.

This motion, which is being amended by way of the amendment that my hon. colleague from Edmonton-Highlands has put before the House, really has a certain context and background. The question was raised earlier: for how long does this election of Senators remain valid? It took place in conjunction with the municipal elections in 1998. Those municipal elections have since happened again. Albertans have the right to ask the question of whether or not the Senate election should follow the same cycle, and those who want to represent Alberta through election should have run again at the last municipal election, with a question as to the validity of the election that took place in '98. In November of 2002 we are over four years since that election took place, so there are serious questions about whether or not what we're talking about really should be valid.

This raises the question: shouldn't there be a statute of limitation on Senators-in-waiting? This motion before us, which will be amended, hopefully, by this House in the remaining 20 minutes or so of the time that's available to the House, is silent on it. I think it needs to address that issue. If we're serious about democracy and we don't want to make a mockery of it, then these serious issues should be addressed. Albertans have a right; they are entitled to ask if there is a limitation on the Senators-in-waiting. Otherwise, we are simply ignoring an issue which lies at the very heart of the whole process of democratization and the argument made to make a triple E Senate, which is presumably a step towards a more democratic federal government arrangement. So the issue of whether or not there should be a statute of limitation is something that should be addressed in the motion. Since it's not, I think the amendment made by my colleague is something that should be seriously considered and that will allow some discussion on this.

Another issue, Mr. Speaker: Senators get to serve until age 75. As such is the case, since there's no statute of limitation on this particular situation in Alberta, does this mean that one gets to be a Senator-in-waiting until one turns 75? Another vital question that bears both on the motion and the amendment to it.

Moreover, there are serious questions as to the meaningfulness of this so-called Senate election. Let me make some arguments there. First of all, there was only one political party, the former Reform Party, that fielded candidates. The provincial Conservatives, those great champions of the elected Senate, failed to field a candidate of their own. There is a certain mentality here that one party is all you need to run a government. That used to be the case in some other places. I hope it doesn't come to be the case here.

AN HON. MEMBER: Name some of those places, Raj.

DR. PANNU: I would like to name names here, Mr. Speaker, but it's the case that one-party states run one candidate per constituency. There are no contests. I mean, here we don't walk into a situation, which becomes a matter of routine, where if there is only one party running candidates for election, we should celebrate that fact and stick to the results of that kind of phony election. [interjections]

Mr. Speaker, may I proceed?

THE SPEAKER: Well, hon. member, I was going to interject at this point to in fact remind hon. members that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona does have the floor.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second argument, speaking to the amendment, by the way. I have to refer to the motion as I speak to the amendment. Almost 72,000 Albertans chose to spoil or reject their ballots. That's a huge proportion. That's a huge number. [interjection] For the Minister of Finance 75,000 Albertans don't matter, but that's a large number, this despite the fact that some electronic voting systems used by some Alberta municipalities are not designed to count spoiled ballots. Had they been so designed, the number of spoiled ballots counted and recognized would have been much larger, I submit.

Everyone agrees; we agree that the current unelected Senate is not desirable. We need to take firm steps towards renewing democracy – Canadian democracy, Alberta democracy – despite the fact that the Prime Minister recently made some excellent appointments from Alberta. I name Mr. Roche, a distinguished Albertan who has served his country and his province with distinction over his lifetime, and Mr. Tommy Banks, a well-known musician in this province. They were good appointments. Too often, however, the appointments have been made of political insiders of the government of the day. [interjections]

THE SPEAKER: Perhaps hon. members might just make contact with me. I gather we're not going to have enough time in the five-minute question-and-answer exchange here, so I'll start keeping a list now of all people who want to raise questions to the hon. member when he concludes.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for providing some peace and quiet here so that I could make my point.

So it is true that the pattern in which appointments to the Senate have been made looks very much like the way the appointments are made here in this province by the Premier of this province to all kinds of important commissions, committees, boards. I have never been consulted by the Premier of the province over the last six years that I've been in this Assembly before he appoints people to the regional health authorities or when he appoints a financial management commission or the education commission. I've been completely left out of this. So I think the government side should feel quite comfortable with the way the Prime Minister of this country, whether it's Chretien or Mulroney before that, made those appointments.

We do need to change that system in the Senate here in Alberta and elsewhere. So the motion falls short of addressing these key issues that must be addressed, and that's why the amendment that

I'm supporting here is something that leads not only a serious discussion and examination in this Assembly, but I hope it receives massive support so that we can move on to taking important steps that need to be taken to make our governments here and in Ottawa more accountable, more democratic, more transparent for all Canadians, for all Albertans.

There are two possible solutions to this reform of the Senate: reform the Senate to make it elected and accountable or abolish it. We say, Mr. Speaker, that we'll be making a good start if we abolish the Senate altogether and then find ways of democratizing the House of Commons and this Assembly. The best way to do it – and this is what dozens and dozens of other established democracies in the world have already done – is to move to proportional representation so that this House and the House of Commons represent in a true form regional diversity, political diversity, cities and rural areas and municipalities, and other forms and sublevels of government.

We need to take seriously the question of broadening democracy, renewing democracy, revitalizing democracy, and if that is a goal on which we all agree, then the motion before us, obviously, is something that needs to be repaired. I think the amendment that the Member for Edmonton-Highlands is making is an attempt to address that serious flaw in that motion, and that's why I support the amendment, Mr. Speaker.

Thank you very much.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Learning.

DR. OBERG: Thank you. On a question, Mr. Speaker?

THE SPEAKER: Yes, indeed.

DR. OBERG: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has just expounded on the virtues of one Mr. Tommy Banks, who was just appointed to the Senate a couple of years ago. Mr. Banks certainly is a wonderful person. He's a musician, but he really does not have any political expertise, nor has he ever been elected before, to my recollection. Given the fact that Mr. Banks is a well-known musician, given the fact that he has little political experience, I was wondering if the hon. member would back as the next Senator from Alberta Mr. Chad Kroeger from Hanna, who is the lead singer of Nickelback. Obviously, Mr. Kroeger has sold a lot more records. He has a lot bigger popularity than Mr. Tommy Banks has around Canada and around the world. So I guess my question is: using a similar type of criteria – and I would add that Mr. Kroeger has one other criteria, which is that he comes from a long line of politicians, as his grandfather was a former member of this Assembly – would the hon. member back Mr. Chad Kroeger from Nickelback as the next Senator from Alberta?

DR. PANNU: Mr. Speaker, thank you for the opportunity to address this vital question that has been posed here. If political experience were to be the precondition for getting elected or appointed to political positions, more than half the members of the Assembly would not be here. At least the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona wouldn't be here. I had no political experience before this. That's an argument that makes no sense. If the constituents of Edmonton-Strathcona in their wisdom made the decision to elect this member knowing that this member before he was elected had no political experience, then who am I to say that the conditions should be different? That's why I disagree with the premise of the question that to be elected or appointed to a political position, you have to be a political bagman or you have to be a member of a party. No. I think these are matters that we should leave to the best judgment of the people who are making these judgments, who are the sovereign citizens of our province and of this country.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: Additional questions? No additional questions? Then on the amendment.

Sorry. Hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, you are on the question-and-answer section?

MR. MASON: No. I am asking if I am allowed to close.

THE SPEAKER: No, sir, you're not, under Standing Order 20.

[Motion on amendment A1 lost]

THE SPEAKER: Now, I have been notified that the hon. Member for Wainwright wishes to participate. Is this correct?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to have the opportunity to speak to this motion today. When I was a youth – the operative word there being “was” – I became very involved in federal politics and the relative issues that many Albertans concern themselves with at the federal level. Some of the issues surrounded taxation, debt, and deficit levels. I'm proud to say that this province and this provincial government led the way on reforms regarding those issues. We now see that most of North America and, yes, even our federal government have adopted at least some of the financial practices of this great province. Financial reform was achieved primarily through a shift in the priorities and values of this province and later this nation. That shift in priorities translated into a shift of the will of the government of this province and, again, much later on, this nation. I was pleased to see that.

Financial reform, however, was only one step in the process of change needed at the federal level. Even more important than financial reform was, and remains to this day, the need for democratic reform at the federal level. You see, Mr. Speaker, if democratic reform was achieved, then true government accountability could be possible at the federal level, and with such accountability having a government that acts on the will of the people would be natural, inevitable, and a pleasure to see.

So I worked hard to bring the need for democratic reform to the attention of the media and the federal government for many years. I advocated on behalf of the candidates who ran in the senatorial election that was held in this province. Those candidates knew the issues of this province as well as those of the country. Those candidates had the commitment to represent the concerns of the people of this province. Those candidates had the commitment to attend Senate debates and meetings and to speak on behalf of their province and their constituents, and the two Senators-in-waiting, as they have been dubbed, still have a keen awareness of the issues. They still have a commitment to represent the concerns of the people of this province, and they still have the intention of one day attending Senate debates and meetings to work and speak on behalf of the citizens of this province, by whom they were duly elected.

Mr. Speaker, those are much different circumstances than exist today. Today we have a situation where attendance at senatorial hearings, meetings, debates, and, most importantly, votes is extremely low. There is no current requirement for Senators, Senators who are currently determined and appointed solely at the pleasure of the Prime Minister and at times the displeasure of the provinces, to show up for any of those important functions. Senators cannot be fired. They are never elected and, therefore, never face re-election. In other words, they are never held to account by the people they are supposed to represent. Currently they are accountable to no one but the one individual who gave them their wonderfully rich position paid for by the taxpayers and, I'd like to add, the taxpayers that they have no accountability to.

Mr. Speaker, appointing Senators may have been acceptable when it was commonly thought that only wealthy landowners were intelligent enough and aware enough of the issues to vote. Since that time, however, our nation has matured and so has its citizens. Since its inception this nation has grown to achieve acceptance as an independent nation. Since that time we and the world as general citizens have developed a deeper understanding of the basic democratic principles, principles of economics, and an understanding of the delicate relationship between society and its needs and the government that attempts to meet those needs.

The notion of a Chamber full of wealthy and wise men whose sole purpose it was to be the sober second thought to the potentially dangerous decisions made by the elected and presumed ignorant masses is an Archaean idea that must make way for the 21st century. It is time that this nation adopted a triple E Senate. Most everyone in this province knows what a triple E Senate is and what the three Es stand for. This is just another indication that this province and its people are aware of the potential to improve democracy in this nation, to improve the quality of representation within the federal House and the benefits that it can have on the quality of decisions that will be made. The triple E Senate that so many Albertans have called for all these years is one that is elected, effective, and equal.

Much debate has been made about how equal the Senate should be if it were reformed into the 21st century. I believe there's only one option. The number of Senate seats should not be developed and divided according to regions. The only true equal Senate must be formed on the same basis that this nation was formed upon; that is, Mr. Speaker, it must be recognized that this federation is bound by the principle that no one province is more equal than another. No one province's concerns outweigh another's. Just as our Charter and our courts uphold the position that no one person is more equal than another, that we live in a partnership, a collective where all citizens have an equal voice and equal rights, so, too, must our parliamentary system uphold that principle. A bicameral system where one Chamber holds true to the principle of one person, one vote and another Chamber that holds true to the principle of equal votes for equal provinces must be made.

The second E, effective, is something that is necessary if the Senate is going to carry out its function as a Chamber of sober second thought, and, Mr. Speaker, they already possess much of the powers that are necessary to make the Senate effective already, today, right now, but what the Senate lacks is a mandate and real legitimacy so that it can fully utilize the power it possesses, so we come to the first E, the most important E; namely, a move to an elected Senate.

As democracies go, Mr. Speaker, it is accepted in principle and practice in democracies around the world that the representatives of the people, those who would make our laws and lead us by design, must be elected through democratic process by the people they represent, and as we stand here today, half of the federal government, one House of our bicameral system, is not democratic, not elected, and not responsible to the people. For a nation as progressive as ours that calls to the rest of the world to follow its lead on social, political, and economic issues into the 21st century, it is difficult to imagine that our federal government would refuse to put into practice those same principles of democratic and responsible government that it so freely advocates on the world stage.

It is obviously time for this nation and the federal government to move into the 21st century by adopting a triple E Senate, but for those who have doubts about such a move, I would like to point out a few benefits to adopting such a change. First, Canadian unity has long been a hot topic. For a long time provinces and Canadians have debated the success of Confederation. It seems apparent to me, however, that the frustration they sometimes exhibit comes less from the type of cost-benefit analysis and more from a feeling that they and their province's issues have not been heard at the national level. A triple E Senate that is elected by the people and provinces that elected them based on equality of provinces with effective powers to debate, investigate, and vote on issues would allow all Canadians and all provinces the opportunity to participate at the federal level, and, Mr. Speaker, the only effective democracy is a participatory democracy, and the only way we'll get participation is with a full triple E Senate.

Current issues of provincial and national scope such as Bill C-68, Kyoto, the Canadian Wheat Board, taxation levels, and the like would find an avenue for debate and reflection. Indeed, past problems surrounding things like the national energy program and the Charlottetown accord could have been debated more intelligently and perhaps been solved before they came to conflict. Provinces and regions would have a process by which they can bring their concerns to the national table, and by bringing these concerns to the table, we will begin to truly understand each other, which can only bring us closer and enhance national unity. Mr. Speaker, wouldn't it be great if we debated the issues, made the decisions, and got on with prosperity instead of sacrificing that prosperity to discord and disunity as we have for the last 20 years? I believe it would.

As I conclude, Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that I am proud, proud of this government. Just as this government put fiscal responsibility and accountability on the agenda of every government and every politician on this continent, so, too, will this government bring the agenda of full and meaningful democratic and responsible government to the national agenda. Now is the time for us to lead the rest of Canada in achieving this vision of a Senate that reflects the true nature of Canada, a Senate that is based on legitimacy of elections, a Senate that speaks to the equal partnership among provinces in shaping the nation's future, and a Senate that effectively participates in the national political debate. I support this motion, and I call today on the federal government of Canada to recognize this request, recognize the province of Alberta's duly elected Senators, and show their commitment to beginning the process of change toward a triple E Senate.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

MR. McCLELLAND: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like first to most sincerely congratulate the hon. Member for Wainwright on, I believe, his maiden speech in the Chamber and one of which he will rightfully be very proud.

My question to the hon. Member for Wainwright has to do with the first E of the triple E Senate, equal. My question is: in the hon. member's opinion how many Senators are necessary in the upper Chamber to effect a critical mass so that the Senate could do its work?

MR. GRIFFITHS: Twelve times four is 48.

THE SPEAKER: Other questions? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford to the mike, please, since you were cut off.

MR. McCLELLAND: The reason for asking that question is that therein lies the problem. In the United States, because of the number of states, it's relatively easy to arrive at an equal Senate that gives a critical mass of a hundred. In our situation we're faced with the fact that the Atlantic provinces, sparsely settled in terms of population, have – and we agree on the notion of the equality. But if we were to, say, arrive at a hundred seats across the country, which is essentially the same as we have now and reflects the American experience, that would mean that there would be probably nine Senators representing each province. That would then mean that there would be an awful lot of people moving to Prince Edward Island, because the odds would be better than winning a lottery, and that's why the notion of an equitable Senate rather than equal, effective, elected by region – would we end up with an equitable relationship? I wonder if I can have your comments surrounding that notion.

MR. GRIFFITHS: It's a very complex issue. I'm not diametrically opposed to an equitable Senate, but I believe the evaluation has to come back to whether you consider this Confederation a balance of 12 equal provinces or three or perhaps four equal regions. I am committed firmly to the belief that it's 12 equal provinces. Every single one was formed by an act, and I believe that's a principle that we have to adhere to. I do believe that if we based it on equitable representation and divided the country into regions, we would again find controversy in a Senate where we would pit region against region and still wind up with much the same problem that we have in the House of Commons right now.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Mr. Speaker, thank you. Perhaps the hon. member has in mind dividing Ontario into three so that we might have 12 provinces.

My question to him is around the validity of an election that took place four years ago. If the federal government does not accede to the request of this Assembly and appoints individuals other than the ones being proposed, how long do we have to go before we decide that that election was invalid? I think the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona has already indicated that another municipal election has come and gone with no vote being held by the provincial government to update the selection. So how many years will go by before it's time to have a new senatorial election in Alberta?

MR. GRIFFITHS: That's a very good question. I'm surprised I'm saying that, but it is a very good question. Typically, I think, using the U.S. example, from all across the world, different levels of government have their elections staggered over different periods of time. So with municipal elections being every three years, provincial being every four to five years, we could fix a time somewhere between five and seven years, and I would be favourable to that.

On the question of how long before the current Senate elections become invalid, that one is difficult to answer, because I know the hon. Senators-in-waiting personally and know how committed they are to the job, and I do believe they could still do the job. But to be honest, to answer your question, I don't believe that we need to even consider that fact. The only option if we're going to bring this country together and be effective is to get this done now, and we'll worry about the next elections when they're in.

THE SPEAKER: On the main motion, hon. Minister of Gaming.

MR. STEVENS: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Given the time, I move that we call it 5:30 and that we adjourn until 8 o'clock this evening.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:22 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Wednesday, November 20, 2002 8:00 p.m.
 Date: 02/11/20
 [Mr. Shariff in the chair]

head: Government Motions

Senate Appointments

32. Mr. Jonson moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly of Alberta affirm its support for an amendment to the Constitution of Canada to provide for an elected Senate which would represent the interests of all provinces through equal representation and through effective powers and, further, that the Legislative Assembly of Alberta urge the government of Alberta to undertake consultations with all provincial governments on this amendment and, further, that pending such an amendment the Legislative Assembly of Alberta call upon the Prime Minister to summon to the Senate to fill vacancies relating to Alberta only those who are Senate nominees pursuant to the Senatorial Selection Act of Alberta and, further, that the Assembly confirm the recommendations of the report of the Select Special Committee on Upper House Reform, which were unanimously endorsed by this Assembly on May 27, 1985, and again on March 10, 1987.

[Adjourned debate November 20: Mr. Stevens]

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Please be seated.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity this evening to join the debate on the triple E Senate, the resolution, and I thought I would spend the allotted time doing three things: one, taking a brief look at the history of Senate reform in the country; second, trying to respond to the question "exactly what is it we want?"; third, how have we been going about trying to achieve that goal? I think those three questions are really very important as we consider this issue.

It's not a new issue. I think as the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford indicated this afternoon, it was shortly after the BNA Act was passed in 1867 that we started second-guessing the Senate and the role of the Senate. It was seven years after the BNA Act was passed. The discussions at that time were around the province, trying to come up with a scheme that would have the provinces given a role in the selection of Senators, and those deliberations came to naught. There were also some concerns at the same time with term limits, trying to make the service of Senators limited in terms of time. There was also talk again, even at that early date, of abolition, that we should do away with the Senate because it didn't have a legitimate role in a democratic government.

The next time that the debate really surfaced was in 1909, and again this was a debate within the Senate itself, proposing term certain appointments for Senators. The term at that time that they were suggesting was that it be seven years. As early as then, 1909, almost a hundred years ago, there was a proposal put to the Senate that two-thirds of the Senators be elected. Of course, those initiatives came again to naught.

In the 1960s – it was some years later – the whole notion of institutional reform became not a topic just in terms of the Senate but in terms of our national institutions, and again Senate reform came back on the country's agenda. It seems to have been a result of a central government that at the time was interested in institutional reform. There was a lot of discussion and a lot of study, and a lot of different propositions were put forward. The proposals that came out of that era are the ones that are still with us today. They really can be grouped into three groups. One was the notion that the Senate somehow or other could be rehabilitated and that rehabilitation would be best done with the involvement of the provinces.

So there were a number of proposals, and you can group those proposals in terms of the involvement of the province and the balance of that involvement that would be exercised between them and federal government. One of the proposals was that the provinces would nominate and determine half of the Senators and that the federal government would nominate and determine the other half. A second group of proposals was put forward, and they were proposals that were aimed chiefly at having the provinces determine the makeup of the Senate. Again there were a variety of proposals put forward. The third group of proposals that was being quoted at the time really centred around the Senate being a proxy for the provincial governments.

So we've had a history – and it really blossomed in the '60s – of seeking Senate reform. Of course, nothing came of those proposals and, again, it was in the 1980s that really the big move to the election of Senators came forward.

MR. MASON: That's what the NDP have.

DR. MASSEY: I'll get to the NDP in a minute.

The move to elect Senators became very important to reformers and to those who looked to improve our democratic institutions. In the west it was the Canada West Foundation in 1981 that really laid the foundations for the kind of proposals that we see before us in the Assembly today. Those proposals, as we've oft said, have been based on three propositions: that the Senate be elected, that there be equal representation, and that that representation be effective.

It's interesting because we get so caught up in talking about the triple Es and beating up on each other and other levels of government because we don't feel that things are equal or effective. When you look at the deliberations of the Alberta select committee in 1985, they went further than that and started to really look at the substance and the form of that elected Senate. I think in the deliberations thus far we haven't heard much attention paid to the proposals that sit behind the triple E proposition. There were, I think, six of them that are fairly important. One would be that the Senate would have the power to initiate any legislation except a money bill, and they could initiate bills with respect to their own budget. They would have a 180-day suspensive veto over ordinary legislation or constitutional amendments, so there would be that six-month delay. They could suspend legislation for six months, and that would be fulfilling their obligation of providing a sober second thought for legislation.

A third proposition that came from the Alberta select committee in 1985 was that there would be a 90-day suspensive veto over money or taxation bills, so a three-month delay made possible over money bills. The Senate would have power to amend any bill. A fifth proposition is that they would have the power to veto any bill except the supply bill, and that was with good reason, so that the business of the country could continue. It wasn't seen appropriate in that proposal from the committee that the Senate could veto supply bills. The last one that was part of the proposal was that they would have the power to ratify nonmilitary treaties. So rather clearly defined powers for the Senate coming out of the Alberta select committee.

Now, that's sort of a short, brief history of where we've been with the triple E proposal. I asked myself as I listened this afternoon: what do we really want? Is this really what we want? If this is really what we want – we want a triple E Senate – then how do we go about it? As I listened, I heard how benevolent American oil companies had come to Alberta's rescue. I heard that the national energy program was imposed on Alberta, yet I distinctly remember photographs in the local newspaper of the Premier of the day quaffing champagne with the Prime Minister on the signing of the national energy program. I heard a great deal of federal bashing and derogatory things said about the federal government, and it caused me to ask: do we really want the triple E Senate? If that's really what we want, is that the way you go about it? If you really want an agreement with someone, do you start out by beating them up? If you're really serious about achieving an end, do you make sure you get them madder than blazes before you sit down at the table? I would argue that you don't, Mr. Speaker.

I still think that the leadership, that statesperson that's going to lead and be successful in negotiating a triple E Senate, has yet to be identified, because we haven't heard it – at least, I haven't heard it – in the discussions on triple E in this Assembly, and I haven't heard it in Alberta from outside this Assembly. So I think we're still looking for that leadership. I think that the kind of sober, deliberate strategy that needs to be in place for us to achieve the goal that we want has yet to be designed, and I think it's rather unfortunate given that it's been since 1985 that we've been on record as supporting the triple E Senate.

I think the debate has been healthy. I don't think that it's furthered our goals as a province to this point, and I look forward to what's yet to be said, Mr. Speaker, in the hopes that that might be the case.

Thank you.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose.

MR. PHAM: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to join the debate at this time because I think that it is a very easy motion to support, and I am quite amazed at the opposition that I have heard from the other side. I think that the Member for Wainwright and the Minister of Finance have made a good case today as to why we need a triple E Senate and why we need to support this motion at this time. I am not going to waste the time of the Legislature by repeating what has already been said, but I would like to focus on the argument from the opposition as to why they don't support this motion.

The first reason that they opposed it was because of the statute of limitations. They put the question – and it's a very good question – that if a person is elected as a Senator and doesn't get appointed by the Prime Minister, how long does that person remain a Senator-elect, and at what time will the statute of limitations kick in? It is a good question, but it's also a very sad question because that is not the right question to be asked. The right question that should be asked is how and why the Prime Minister of Canada refuses to go with the will of the people of Alberta when we have elected the Senators. The question is: why does he have to wait so long to appoint that person? That should be the question, because every Albertan should feel insulted by having the democratic process and our democratic will completely ignored by the Prime Minister. I feel very strongly that as elected officials we should promote and do everything in our power to pressure the Prime Minister into respecting the will of the people.

The second issue that was raised by the opposition in opposing this motion is they complained that last time only the Reform Party of Canada ran candidates for the Senator position. I hope that we do not ignore the will of the people just because the NDP and the Liberals failed to field any candidate to run for those positions. In 1997 in my own riding the NDP did not bother to have a candidate run against me, and the Liberals were that close to not having a candidate running against me, too. I could have won by acclamation that year. Last time the NDP really struggled to come up with a candidate at the last minute, and I'm hoping that your lack of success at the ballot and the lack of action of the Liberal Party and the NDP do not stop people from the Alliance or the PCs from running for these positions. After all, we can only set up the democratic process. People can run, and people can vote. Whoever participates is up to them.

I keep hearing: what can we do as a group to somehow bring this issue forward and ask the federal government to work with us to bring in a triple E Senate? I, personally, hope that having this kind of debate, having people from all parties look at this issue and speak with one common voice to pass this kind of motion unanimously in the Legislature will speak volumes about our desire to bring our concerns and bring our voice to Ottawa. I hope that the opposition members will join us to pass this motion unanimously, because it is very, very important to speak with one unified voice for our province. We do not gain anything by playing politics with this kind of motion.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The chair just wants to seek clarification. I note that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands has already spoken. Is that correct?

MR. MASON: Yes. This is under the section which allows questions of the previous speaker.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Okay. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose: why do you believe that there's something wrong with opposing something which is contrary to the constitutional arrangements of our country? By that I mean that whether we like the present Senate or not or whether we like it in the form that it's in or not, the Constitution of the country now provides for Senators to be appointed by the Prime Minister of Canada. This particular motion and the actions of the government up until this point around the Senate have been extraparliamentary. They're not by any means illegal, but they don't follow the Constitution of the country. They are, instead, a tactic to try and advance a particular agenda and a particular vision of the Senate of Canada. So what is wrong with opposing a political action which is, I guess you could say, extraconstitutional? It's not within the Constitution of Canada.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose.

MR. PHAM: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This kind of question is the exact reason why the public today do not think much of politicians. The Constitution is written by the people and for the people. It is not a piece of paper that stays forever unchanged. As we come along, the people's will will dictate what kind of Constitution that we as a country will have.

The people of Alberta have spoken very loudly many, many times in the past that they would like to see a triple E Senate, and we, every one of us, can easily see the reason why they want such a thing. How many times have we felt that, you know, our voice and our concerns are being ignored by the federal government? How many times have we heard our constituents tell us that they do not feel Albertans and the west are being taken seriously by Ottawa? All of those concerns, all of those reasons are the reasons why we have to work together and ask the federal government to bring this thing in. Remember: the Constitution was written by the people for the people. It is not a piece of paper that cannot be changed forever.

MR. MASON: Mr. Speaker, just a quick comment. I take issue with the member's view that the Constitution was written by the people for the people. It was written by the Prime Minister of Canada and a number of the Premiers of Canada for them.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose, do you want to respond to this?

MR. PHAM: Again this hon. member doesn't realize one thing. Without the people of Canada there is no Prime Minister of Canada. Without the people of this province there is no Premier of this province. The Premier and the Prime Minister are only the servants of the people. They are there because of the will of the people, and they represent the people.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, did you want to ask a question?

MR. MacDONALD: No, Mr. Speaker. I would prefer to join in the debate at the appropriate time, which you will declare. Thank you.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Any other member wishing to ask a question?

The chair recognizes the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise this evening and participate in the debate on Motion 32. Again we're going through the public debate on Senate reform not only for this province but, I believe, for all of the country. Certainly, Senate reform, in my view, is overdue, but I'm very suspicious of the nature of this motion at this time. You know, considering that it's coming up to Grey Cup weekend, this is a classic example of a political pump and fake, because this government wants to divert public attention from the real issues.

Now, when we look at this, this is simply nothing new, Mr. Speaker. We have seen the debate before over the triple E Senate, and this is an example. All I have to do is look at the important message to constituency presidents that was given out the past weekend by a former Conservative MLA of this Assembly. With what that individual had to say about the current government, well, I can see, certainly, why they would decide to put forward a motion to debate Senate reform.

Now, I have no problem with having elected Senators, no problem at all with this notion, but we have been well served by Senators that have been selected regardless of whether it's by the current Prime Minister or past Prime Ministers of this country. We have been very lucky in this country with some of the representatives who have gone to Ottawa to serve this province in the Senate when you consider the work that Senator Douglas Roche does, when you consider the work of a former member of this Assembly, a former cabinet minister in this government, Senator Ron Gitter, and when you consider the work of Senator Nick Taylor. One only has to go to a literacy conference and see the work that the hon. Senator from Lethbridge, Mrs. Fairbairn, does. [interjections] Perhaps if some of the hon. members of this Assembly would go to one of these conferences and see the good work that that member of the Senate does to improve the literacy rate in this country, particularly with adults, they would be a lot less frivolous with this debate and perhaps take it seriously.

Now, when we consider the remarks of other hon. members of this Assembly – and I did notice and listened with a great deal of interest to the initial remarks from the hon. Member for Wainwright. I must say that I agree with that hon. member's notion. He was going on about the elite capacity that could be generated with just Senate nominations from the Prime Minister's office. At one time a person had to be a landowner, and you had to meet certain requirements. I believe it was even male at one time. You had to be male and be a landowner. I could be corrected and I will stand corrected if another hon. member can give me the historical data on this.

MS CARLSON: I think that it wasn't until the '30s that women could be Senators.

MR. MacDONALD: It wasn't until the '30s that women could be Senators, I'm told.

MS CARLSON: Aboriginals even later.

MR. MacDONALD: Aboriginal citizens of this country – that is an example, and the hon. member is absolutely right that one has to be very careful about the restrictions. They were discussed earlier this afternoon. However, when we look at this Senatorial Selection Act, that was introduced by this government, it's in direct contradiction to what he had to say.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I would encourage all members of this Assembly to read section 9 of the Senatorial Selection Act. One has to have 1,500 or more electors nominate a person. I don't think that you should have to have 1,500 people nominate you for any public office. I'm sure that the Member for Edmonton-Highlands, when he had that bill in the by-election on the defence of public health care, certainly didn't have to go around and get 1,500 people to sign his nomination papers. I'm sure that didn't happen.

MR. MASON: No. But I could have.

MR. MacDONALD: He probably could have, but he did not need to.

In a mature democracy you should not need this. So I can't understand why this government would have in the Senatorial Selection Act that you have to have 1,500 citizens and "the signatures of the electors nominating a candidate shall be witnessed by another elector." What's so democratic about that? I don't understand this.

Then, Mr. Speaker – and this adds more to the argument by the hon. Member for Wainwright and his concern that the senatorial elections will be just for the rich and the famous. You have to have this list of signatures, but you also have to have $4,000. It doesn't say in here whether it's Canadian dollars or American dollars. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods was making some suggestions earlier, and I would have to question that. A deposit of $4,000 is undemocratic – undemocratic.

MS CARLSON: How do they get it back?

MR. MacDONALD: How do you get this money back? I do not know. Certainly, you have to have, I'm told, 10 percent – is it 10 percent or 20 percent of the vote?

However, I consider the $4,000 deposit completely undemocratic, and I would be very anxious to hear the comments of the hon. Member for Wainwright regarding this, because he certainly, I thought, hit the nail on the head. In this act, passed by this government, that's undemocratic. It's completely undemocratic.

Now, we can call for a triple E Senate and the election of this person, but it's hypocritical for this government to promote an elected Senate and then turn around and vote against a motion that I presented to this Assembly this afternoon. We're always complaining about the federal government: the federal government is this; the federal government is that. Yet we could have genuine democratic reform in this House, and we could have the election of standing policy committee chairs. We could have an election the same as we elect the Speaker, by secret ballot. When you think that instead of having – I don't know who this mysterious group is. I don't know whether they're in the Premier's office or in the Progressive Conservative Party. I have no idea because I'm a member of the opposition. Who comes up with this list of names and the reasons for selecting various members of the Progressive Conservative caucus to these SPCs? Why can't that be a vote by all members of this Assembly? We should have a vote on this. I think it would be an excellent idea to have a vote. Elected committee chairs.

If we're so concerned about democratic reform and the democratic deficit across the country, let's elect all the chairs in this Assembly. Let's change the rules and do it now. Let's have more free votes to allow backbenchers to disagree with the government. Let's have more free votes. Let's have more open discussions on the closure of rural hospitals. Let's have more discussions on electricity deregulation so that the backbenchers from rural Alberta don't read about it in the Edmonton Journal. That's where they hear about it first. Let's talk about having our own House in order.

Now, certainly, as chairperson of Public Accounts I'm willing to run for election of that chair, and if I'm defeated, well, then, I'll sit as a member and get to ask questions of various cabinet ministers. I think that would be a delightful way to spend the morning, particularly with the trouble that this government is having in managing their affairs, Mr. Speaker.

Fixed election dates, election dates set in legislation so that we don't have the government calling an election when it suits their convenience. This has been tried in British Columbia. Perhaps we should have a debate on that in this Assembly. A parliamentary calendar is another notion for democratic reform that we could certainly use in this Assembly. And we could have perhaps a few more sitting days in this Assembly, Mr. Speaker.

MR. LUKASZUK: And listen to you?

MR. MacDONALD: Now, there's an hon. member from the government bench who said, "And listen to you?" Well, I happen to represent the one-third of Albertans who did not vote for this government, and in a democracy every voice counts, and you should have respect for that.

Another issue that perhaps we should be dealing with other than through this slogan bill to elect a Senator is to have a lobbyist registration. The hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose talked about the mistrust that the public has for politicians. Well, perhaps if we had a registration of lobbyists the citizens would be much more comfortable and much more trusting of politicians. They would know who they're talking to. You know, one only has to go out of this Assembly at 5:30 in the evening and see the Co-op vans, the big white ones, parked out front. Who are they picking up and where are they going? I wonder if the Edmonton Journal readers would be interested to know that.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I urge all Canadians to take an active interest in Senate reform and this Senatorial Selection Act, which selected by the citizens' choice two citizens to go on a list. As deficient as this act is, the citizens, at least some of the citizens, made a choice, and I understand now that one of those citizens is Mr. Bert Brown.

Perhaps I can get the assistance of other members of this Assembly. I don't know if any of the current members of the Senate from Alberta are farmers. In light of the drought and the issues of wheat marketing perhaps it's time we have a Senator from Alberta representing farmers. I think hon. Lieutenant Governor Olson was the last person from an agricultural background – and I could be wrong – that served in a formal capacity in Ottawa.

It is noteworthy that this is an individual who, I believe, a number of years ago on his wheat field carved into the field the three E's. As a farm kid who learned to drive a combine, that's a feat in itself. It was visible from the air, it was visible from the Calgary airport, and it was recorded and noted across the country. I know that individual would serve very well in the Senate, and that was a choice. That name came to the top of the list through a process in Alberta. I'm not going to call it democratic because of these high fees and this idea that only certain people could run. But I think that may be a start to ending the western alienation that has occurred in this end of the country because of this propaganda campaign from the government, which in my view has been anti-Canadian and propollution.

Now, we have to start somewhere, and to alleviate the western alienation, Mr. Speaker, I would think that perhaps this is a suitable first step: to recognize the choice that was made through a flawed election – granted; it was – by Albertans and send Mr. Brown to the Senate. As much as I disagree with the government using this motion as a diversionary tactic to take away from the issues of public health care and public education and electricity deregulation and what that has cost citizens, I support Mr. Brown and his trip to Ottawa.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Under Standing Order 29 we have five minutes for questions. The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmor.

REV. ABBOTT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. If the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar is serious about democratic reform beginning in this Assembly, my question is: would he be willing to step down as the Public Accounts chairman and put that position to a secret ballot vote of the committee? Walk your talk.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Not only to the members of that committee but also to the entire Assembly. And not only that; I would at this time like to remind the hon. member of one of the rules under which the Public Accounts chairperson has to be selected. It's the only chair that is selected from the ranks of the opposition. So if the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands wants to run, go for it. I'll be delighted to run.

Thank you.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Mr. Speaker, I'm very confused by the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar's questions and comments. It seems, just for clarification, that he was upset at the 1,500 signatures and the $4,000 fee outlined in the bill, and I'm assuming for my question that it's because his party can't find 1,500 signatures and $4,000 to run a candidate. Given that any bill can be amended and the changes could be made, and given the fact that this bill was written by this government and it really doesn't matter since the federal counterparts to his party won't follow it anyway, I'm wondering if he thinks those two minor changes, the signatures and the funding, will allow his federal counterparts to approve our Senators.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In regard to the democratic deficit that's in this province, if this Assembly would meet for perhaps more than 11 days in the fall – when you consider that the Senate of Canada meets for 84 days a year and the Alberta Legislature sat for 36 days, perhaps if we had a longer session time, we could amend this flawed bill and get rid of the notion, the elitist idea, that you need 1,500 signatures or $4,000.

Thank you.

8:40

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

MR. MARZ: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar. He was quite critical of the select committee recommendations on upper House reform. Does he prefer the status quo, which is the Prime Minister of Canada having absolute authority in appointing these Senators, to those recommendations?

MR. MacDONALD: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member had been able to listen to my remarks and if there hadn't been the interference and the chatter from the Tory backbenchers, he would have realized that I support the idea of democratic choice for a Senate.

Thank you.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, are you rising to ask a question or to speak?

MS CARLSON: No. To enter into debate.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to enter into debate on what I see as a rather frivolous motion having come forward from the government. Definitely what it looks like to me is that when we have had this particular position, which is to support a triple E Senate, almost unanimously by all parties for more than 15 years, what would be the point in bringing forward a motion like this at this particular time?

The point, of course, is that it happens to coincide with a number of things: one, Senator Nick Taylor's retirement this past weekend; two, the upcoming football game and the lack of available media attention for anything this government wishes to do; three, the lack of substantiveness in the fall agenda as we look forward to limited debate in very few areas, including your own Kyoto bill, which to my understanding is going to have a very, very limited opportunity for people to participate in in debate and may or may not be passed this fall session – most likely not.

So what we have is a make-work project and a frivolous kind of motion that has a number of issues involved in it that are interesting for us to take a look at, Mr. Speaker, and a few things that we need to talk about. This is absolutely nothing new. This debate has been had and re-had and had again in this Legislature over the years. It's unfortunate that it comes at this time as a stand-alone package and doesn't roll into the package a number of other parliamentary reforms that we have asked for many times over the years and should have been . . .

MR. LUKASZUK: I guess Mr. Martin will deliver on those gifts.

MS CARLSON: Well, you know what? That's an interesting comment that I hear chirping from the backbenches.

SOME HON. MEMBERS: Middle benches.

MS CARLSON: The backbenches of the government members. They say that Mr. Martin will bring in some sort of reform. First and foremost, this government should clean up its own backyard, Mr. Speaker, and they should bring in parliamentary reform. There's a very, very long list of situations that they could act on, that the federal government has already acted on, and not the least of those are something that we've been asking for for a long time, and that is all-party committees to hear the presentations and do the pre-bill legislative work that comes into the House and from which opposition members are particularly excluded.

MR. MacDONALD: Do you think they would be in that mess with electricity deregulation that they are? I'll ask that later.

MS CARLSON: They absolutely would not be in the mess they have now with deregulation, amongst many, many other issues, because, Mr. Speaker, for at least six years we've said to this government on deregulation that you have to – and this is rocket science for you guys, I know, but you finally got it when dealing with the feds on Kyoto – bring in the plan before you bring in the law. Go figure. When did they get it? Not when deregulation has been passed. They fritter around for six good years, not letting anybody know what the rules are. Deregulation comes in. Capitalization has not happened in the companies. There are all kinds of problems with meshing new companies and the delivery of service. We're into brownouts; we're into price peaks. Why? Because this government didn't bring out the rules. Interestingly enough, they get it just like that when it comes to talking about Kyoto. When it's somebody else's problem to solve, they know what the answer is, but when it's their own problem to solve, they simply can't get there in spite of the long-term debate that we had on this issue.

So had we had parliamentary reform in this particular province – and that would have included all-party committees – they would have heard this at an earlier stage. Then what happens at that stage? I know I hear the argument all the time from the government side that what happens if we have all-party committees is that they have to listen to us complain in the committee and then they have to have it all rehashed again in the Assembly. Well, Mr. Speaker, anyone who has worked with me in an all-party committee in the past 10 years knows that that isn't, in fact, true.

For those very few legislative all-party committees we have, they know very well that the issues that are outstanding are discussed in the committee almost to exclusion with the exception of the FOIP committee, where I had a real problem with the conduct of the chairman. There would have been all kinds of instances where we had wrinkles happen in the committees or issues come up that were dealt with within the committee structure. In fact, when the recommendations or the information came to the Assembly, I supported it. In fact, in many cases, for instance with PNWER, I have stood up in this House and soundly supported the government action in that kind of a committee, and that is what happens when you have all-party committees.

Mr. Speaker, people don't have to believe me on this issue.

AN HON. MEMBER: And they won't.

MS CARLSON: Well, the backbenchers won't believe me. That's true. But anyone who looks at the federal system will see, in fact, that it is quite effective. Draft legislation that comes forward goes to the individual committees, that are all-party committees and in the same proportions as the elected membership in the House, which is what we suggest here.

I don't mind being the only person in opposition on a committee, but I think that what you get by putting someone who is in opposition on a committee like that is way better legislation. In this government they all seem to think the same on the committees and follow each other sometimes like lemmings. What happens then is that you get mediocre legislation, and they don't see the holes in the legislation. When you add just one other voice to the committee structure, what you get is an opening up of the vistas, Mr. Speaker, and people who can see beyond just exactly whatever the mandate of the government in power happens to be for that day. If it's the federal Liberals or if it's the provincial Conservatives, it doesn't matter. Too many people with the same ideas draft mediocre legislation. We have seen that time and time again in this Assembly when we've had to bring in amendments, when the government has amended their own bills, or when they've pulled their bills because of that kind of a situation.

When you have all-party committees, what happens then is that many of those issues are resolved in the committee structure, so when it gets to the Legislature, the passage of the bill is really quite quick and you very, very seldom have a rehashing of the old issues. So, in fact, another mandate of this government would be met by having all-party committees, and that would be that we would spend less time under the dome in the Legislature. That certainly would meet one of their criteria, which is to be here as seldom as possible and have public debate on issues as seldom as possible.

It's true that on the truly controversial, really, really poor pieces of legislation we would still have debate, and sometimes it would be protracted, but for the most part legislation would come into the Assembly and follow through in a very fast fashion. We have had some examples of that, Mr. Speaker. We've had a few ministers who have worked very co-operatively with their critics and brought them in and discussed the legislation, and in fact we have one before the House right now, which is Bill 30-2.

In fact, how much debate did the government get from the Official Opposition in second reading on that bill? The critic, and that was it. Why? Because most of the outstanding issues, when we talked about it in terms of the overall perspective of the bill, had been dealt with outside of the Legislature. So we had very speedy passage of that. I suggest to this government that that would happen on any number of issues. I've had a good working relationship with a number of ministers over the years, and we have had very speedy passage of some good legislation. Why? Because we had open communication prior to it hitting the floor of the Legislature.

AN HON. MEMBER: Relevance.

MS CARLSON: It's very relevant, and that's the whole problem. The backbenchers just don't get it, and someone needs to clue them in. This discussion is very relevant to the topic of the night, and I actually thank the government for bringing forward this very frivolous motion, because otherwise we wouldn't be able to talk about any kind of reform in this Legislature in a constructive manner at this time. That's just the start of the list, Mr. Speaker, that we have talked about for a long time.

Free votes, true free votes, not the kinds of free votes that we see here in this Legislature, would be well followed by all parties in the Assembly on all issues. There would be nothing wrong with the occasional backbencher standing up and supporting their constituents' majority view rather than some compromise position that they've worked out at their caucus table, and Albertans would like to see that more often. In fact, a system like they have in other jurisdictions, where they have eliminated parties and have people run as whomever they are but not on a party system and then have cabinet and the Premier elected from within those who are initially elected by the people, is a much fairer system and results in a great number of free votes and would be a model that I would certainly support seeing come forward in this Legislature.

You know, one of the things that we'd like to see for sure is accepting of opposition bills and motion ideas at the time when they actually hit the floor of the Legislature. I've said lately that we should be copyrighting our ideas for good bills, because this government has a habit of stealing them, Mr. Speaker. If we would copyright them and sell them, then we'd be able to pay off our debt faster, and that would be good for everybody. Then people would be able to acknowledge where the idea first came from.

That stealing of good ideas has happened forever. The very first bill that hit the floor of this Legislature when I was elected was the freedom of information bill, which happened to be our former leader Laurence Decore's idea two years before. So the Conservatives are a little slow on the uptake, because it generally takes them two years before they take a really good idea and run with it, things like the stability fund, which they are now talking about. We could have good legislation in here if they took our bills up front rather than later.

As my colleague talked about, elected committee chairs would be very good and something that the federal government has certainly started to talk about, and we need to have that. The fixed election dates so that you can't gerrymander the date of the election would be something we're looking forward to. Parliamentary calendars so that we actually knew when we were coming in and when we weren't going to be here. Lobbyist registrations: what a great idea.

AN HON. MEMBER: You have it. It's called NDP.

MS CARLSON: No. Nice try, but once again the backbenchers don't get it, Mr. Speaker.

Having said that, there is one other issue that I really wanted to address here this evening, Mr. Speaker. When I was reviewing what happened here in the Assembly this afternoon, I saw that the Member for Edmonton-Highlands had actually two amendments that he wanted to bring forward and only had an opportunity to bring forward one. So in the spirit of co-operation, looking forward to free votes and standing policy committee all-party representation and elected committee chairs and a better perspective of a working environment here in this Assembly, I propose to move on behalf of the Member for Edmonton-Highlands the following motion. Do you want to have this distributed first?

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Hon. member, it would be fair to have at least those amendments given to the pages so they can be distributed.

MS CARLSON: Yes, Mr. Speaker. We'll have to have this photocopied, so I will read it out and then give it to the page for photocopying and talk about it in my remaining time.

REV. ABBOTT: That's out of order.

MS CARLSON: It isn't out of order to do it this way.

It would be that Government Motion 32 be amended by striking out and, further, that pending such an amendment the Legislative Assembly of Alberta call upon the Prime Minister to summon to the Senate to fill vacancies relating to Alberta only those who are Senate nominees pursuant to the Senatorial Selection Act of Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, why I think this is a good motion to support is that given the time lines that Senators retire . . .

REV. ABBOTT: Point of order.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar, are you rising on a point of order?

REV. ABBOTT: Yes.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Okay. You've been recognized.

Point of Order Amendments

REV. ABBOTT: Standing Order 23(1) talks about breaking the tradition of the House, and the tradition of the House is that if you're going to have an amendment, then it has to be photocopied and ready to be handed out immediately. I believe that the member opposite is wasting the valuable time of the House.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: On the point of order, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Well, Mr. Speaker, this particular member is a newbie to the Legislative Assembly and hasn't seen some of the practices in here before. Certainly, when an amendment to a motion is brought forward on behalf of another member, there is not always full communication with the table officers in terms of whether or not the requisite photocopies have been made. Generally speaking, what the Speaker would do at that time is take a short break. However, because I don't want to waste the time of the Assembly, I'm quite prepared to state my comments at this time while we are waiting for that particular amendment to be distributed.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar, the chair did not hear correctly the citation, so I'm just wondering whether the citation was 23 or 42.

REV. ABBOTT: It was both, actually: 23(1) and also Standing Order 42.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Does any other member wish to speak on the point of order?

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, you may continue.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Finishing on that particular point of order, I would refer you to Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules & Forms, sixth edition. If you will look at Amendments to a Bill, page 206, Notice of Amendments, at 695(2) it states:

The practice has been that Members proposing to introduce amendments have given them to the Chairman and to the clerk of the committee who ensures that they are translated, compiled and circulated for the information of the members of the committee.

That is, in fact, what I've done. It's gone to the page, and it is now going out for photocopying, to be brought back in here to be debated.

MR. MASON: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to raise the question now. The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar clearly only referenced Standing Order 23(1), which says, "Introduces any matter in debate which offends the practices and precedents of the Assembly." Now, how introducing a motion without having 90 photocopies completed is introducing a matter in debate is certainly a question that I would need elaborate explanation to make head or tail of. With respect to offending the practices and precedents of the Assembly, I think it's very clear that this is not offending the practices and precedents of the Assembly.

In connection with number 42, which was raised by the chair but not by the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar, it says, "A substantive motion or any amendment shall be in writing before being debated or put from the Chair and shall contain no preamble." I think that clearly, Mr. Speaker, the motion was in writing, because I saw the hon. member produce it in writing. It has been approved by Parliamentary Counsel. So very clearly number 42 does not deal with a number of copies at a particular point in time. I see now that, in fact, the amendment is being distributed to members, so perhaps when your ruling is complete, we can get on with the debate.

Thank you.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar rose on a point on order citing Standing Orders 23 and 42. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands had initially given this amendment to Parliamentary Counsel. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie moved the motion on behalf of the Member for Edmonton-Highlands. Now, it is correct that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie did not have the number of copies required to circulate; however, as I indicated, the motion was given to Parliamentary Counsel. It has now been photocopied, and all members do have a copy of it, so we shall proceed with debate.

9:00

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would ask for a reading of how much time I have left in debate. A minute and a half? Thank you very much.

One of the reasons why I supported this particular motion brought forward by the Member for Edmonton-Highlands is the timing of when Senators retire. While we know that they have to retire at the age of 75, there are also a number of other circumstances that occur that cause them to retire early, so they don't have set retirement dates per se. In fact, most of the time due to illness . . .

AN HON. MEMBER: Chronic wasting disease.

MS CARLSON: No. Chronic wasting disease is this government's problem, not the Senators' problem, and I'm hoping that some of these backbenchers will do more than just chatter and will enter into debate on either this particular amendment or the general motion.

So the problem is that it could be some time before, in fact, one of these nominees could be available to take their seat, and I think, Mr. Speaker, that when there is a vacancy, then we should have a general election so that people in the province have the opportunity to take a good look at the candidates and decide to choose to send someone to Ottawa who will best represent their interests.

AN HON. MEMBER: We did that.

MS CARLSON: But the problem is that you didn't do that in accordance with the rules and that person has been waiting for some time.

Now, is that person still the best possible candidate? None of us gets elected and waits for six months or a year or six years before we can take our seat. It's in a timely fashion. You take your seat, generally speaking, within a month after having been elected.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, are you rising for the five-minute question or on the amendment?

MR. MASON: I'm rising on the amendment, Mr. Speaker.

MR. MacDONALD: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, please.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar is being recognized for a question.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much. Now, I was listening with a great deal of interest to your remarks. Could you clarify for me, please: when the federal cousins of this current Progressive Conservative group were in power in Ottawa and when they introduced the GST, was there an extra Senator forced – and there's no other way to describe this but forced – upon the citizens of this province by the Progressive Conservative government in Ottawa?

MS CARLSON: Mr. Speaker, as everyone in this Assembly well knows, the answer to that is yes, and in answer to the other question that came from the backbenchers, who for some reason don't have the ability to rise to their feet in the proper manner this evening, Paul Martin has not promised anybody an appointment. That includes me, and you see me today speaking in support of the triple E Senate, an elected Senate.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: There being nobody else rising to ask a question, the chair recognizes the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands on the amendment.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise to this most excellent amendment that's been put forward by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie. I couldn't have hardly done better myself.

AN HON. MEMBER: That is true. You couldn't have done better.

MR. MASON: No, no. Absolutely not.

I just have some comments. I have three main points I wish to make, Mr. Speaker. The first point that I would like to make is that the reason that this amendment ought to be passed – it has the effect of taking out the section that says that the people who are the so-called Senators-in-waiting ought not to be appointed to the Senate. It leaves intact those portions of the bill calling for a triple E Senate, but it singles out and removes the section that says which particular individuals through which particular process ought to be appointed.

The first reason why I support that is that the election was a sham in the first place. It was a sham in the first place. It was forced on the municipalities. They were required to hold this across the province during municipal elections because the province was too cheap to pay for the election. It was using different forms of balloting in different municipalities. The municipalities protested against this. The other parties, apart from Reform, boycotted the process. There was a high percentage of spoiled ballots, and the whole thing was a publicity stunt on the part of the Progressive Conservative government in an attempt to appease the Reform element that was then so strong in the province. It was not something that had any constitutional validity whatsoever. So I say that that election in the first place was nothing but a sham.

The second thing that I think we need to take into account in voting on this amendment is that too much time has now passed since that sham election, including another municipal election, for these to be valid. If you were to give a fixed term of four years to an elected Senate position, which I'm sure everyone would agree with if they support a triple E Senate, it doesn't mean you win one election and you're good till you're 75. It means that there would be a fixed term or some sort of normal term, which is usually around four years. Their terms would be coming to an end anyway, so it would be time to refresh their mandate and to see if, in fact, the people of Alberta still supported those individuals.

This little bit of democratic nicety seems to be totally lost on the authors of this resolution, Mr. Speaker. It's four years since this election took place. If it were four years since our election took place, we would all be getting ready for a general election. The province, furthermore, had an opportunity to renew the mandate of these individuals or to allow the people of Alberta to put forward other nominations if they had used the last municipal election again to force the municipalities to pay the cost of this government's publicity stunts, but they didn't do that. This is an afterthought. They'd completely forgotten about Senate reform at the time of the last municipal election, just a little more than a year ago. Why are they dredging it up now? Why?

That brings me to my third point. What is the intent of this motion? The government – and we've heard it. We've heard it from the backbenchers, we've heard it from the middle benchers, and we've heard it from the front benchers. [interjection] Mr. Speaker, I might add that that is probably the middle benches, and this is the deep backbench over here.

I just want to indicate that it's clear to me that the government is lining up any number of issues with which they can find fault with the federal government, and unfortunately there's no shortage. There's no shortage, and I will acknowledge that. But they're lining them up. You can just see it now. Oh, there's the Wheat Board. There's the gun control, which most Albertans have always supported but not this government. Even when the government took its own polls, it learned – well, what do you know? A large and significant majority of Albertans support gun control in Alberta, but that doesn't dissuade this government from attempting to speak on behalf of the people of Alberta on this issue, in a federal area of jurisdiction I might add. So they're lining up the Wheat Board, they're lining up gun control, they're lining up Kyoto, and they're attempting to create the fiction that it's a new national energy program. They're ignoring that people in Alberta have also supported that particular treaty. All of these things are being lined up, all these big problems with the federal government.

Then they bring forward this resolution on Senate reform. You might think that the government is looking for an external boogeyman on which to focus the anger of Albertans so that Albertans forget about a bungled electricity deregulation program or a teachers' strike that was unnecessary, declining schools that are falling apart all over the province . . .

MR. MacDONALD: How do you spell declining?

MR. MASON: With a K.

. . . privatizing of health care, underfunding of health care, the taking away of workers' rights, all sorts of problems, a booming economy yet 20 percent poverty, all of these issues, the anger of rural Albertans about hospital closures or issues relating to water or to factory farms, all of these things, the growing discontent particularly in rural Alberta against this government. So they are lining up the federal government. Mr. Speaker, I ask you: what would this government do if it didn't have the federal government and EPCOR to take the blame for all of their mistakes?

AN HON. MEMBER: Blame you.

MR. MASON: Well, I'm sure they would try, Mr. Speaker. They would certainly try, and I've seen it every time I ask a question about power deregulation. The fact that I was on the Edmonton city council means that I'm suddenly personally responsible, if you believe the Premier, for the electricity deregulation mess in this province, and the gall of it is just breathtaking.

They will not – they will not – take responsibility for what's going on in this province. They want external enemies, they want internal enemies, and they don't want the people of Alberta to stop for one minute and think about who's really messing up the situation in this province, which is otherwise so bountifully blessed with natural resources and beauty.

Mr. Speaker, that's what I think of this motion. Quite apart from the question of where we stand on whether there should be a triple E Senate or no Senate or a Senate that's appointed by Prime Ministers, the question is: what role is this motion playing in the whole political scheme of things of this province? The role that it's playing is to set up a straw dog for this government to shoot at because they don't want to take responsibility for their own actions.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I will take my seat. Thank you very much.

[Motion on amendment lost]

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I don't want to take too much time away from the enthusiasm that members of the House have to vote on this very important resolution and motion, but I did want to speak. While some of the members opposite supported the concept of an equal, effective, and elected Senate – and I think I heard them all support, except the Member for Edmonton-Highlands, and I certainly heard a good litany from the Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods as to the efforts that have been taking place, primarily sponsored, I might say, and promoted by Alberta and Albertans to get effective governance at the national level – I was disconcerted and quite disappointed by the attempt to use the debate on what is a very important, fundamental question for Canada and for Canadians, effective governance at the national level and having a national Parliament which is there for all regions, all provinces of this country. The basic concept of the balance of the Senate, which it's supposed to provide to the House of Commons, is not there because it is not effective, it is not equal, it is not elected, and it does not have accountability to the people.

Members of the opposition have taken the opportunity of this debate to call the motion frivolous. Mr. Speaker, that is aggravating in the extreme because this is not a frivolous motion. It is a very timely motion. There is a vacancy in the Senate of Canada, a vacancy because a member of the Senate appointed from Alberta has retired due to reaching the age limit of 75. It is very timely to talk about how Alberta might be represented in the Senate of Canada and how we might promote what Alberta has always been a strong promoter of, and that is the triple E Senate, or the equal, effective, and elected Senate. There is no more important time to talk about that kind of a motion than when there's a vacancy from Alberta. So it's not a frivolous motion, and to even suggest for a moment that somehow the Grey Cup has something to do with a topic that has been close to the hearts of Albertans for decades with no movement on the national stage by their national cousins gets my blood boiling.

Mr. Speaker, we do have to revisit this again and again and again because the national Liberal Party has no interest in true governance in this country and no interest in effective governance in this country. They want a monopoly that they get from the population of Ontario and Quebec. They don't want effective governance. So the time has come again for Alberta to raise this important issue on the national stage, and the way to raise this issue on the national stage is to pass a resolution in this House empowering our minister of intergovernmental affairs and our Premier to take this discussion across the country, to talk to other provinces, and to start again the discussion on how we can truly have an effective national government that represents all regions, that represents all provinces, and does it effectively and has a mandate from the people.

The opposition quibbles, Mr. Speaker, because we have in this province as a method of promoting the concept of Senate reform adopted the Senatorial Selection Act, and it's an important act.

DR. MASSEY: Reform starts at home. Why not here?

MR. HANCOCK: We'll get to reform at home in a moment.

The act is a methodology for us to say that it's important for people to be elected, and the act itself has been very effective. The two members that were elected in this last Senatorial selection have not been appointed to the Senate, but I would hazard to say that if you can look at the appointments to the Senate from Alberta and compare them to appointments made in any other province across this country, we have had more effective Senators appointed because the federal government has paid more attention to who they're appointing from Alberta. Senator Doug Roche is a good Senator. He's not elected, but he's a good Senator. Senator Tommy Banks, from my own constituency, is a very good Senator, not elected but a very good Senator. Senator Chalifoux is a very good Senator, not elected but a good Senator.

Why have we had these good Senators appointed from this province? It's because the Prime Minister has had to pay much more attention to who he appoints in this province than who he does elsewhere. If you look at the appointments from elsewhere, they tend to be old Liberal Party hacks or cabinet ministers or others that he wants to move out to create a vacancy so someone else can be elected to the House of Commons. That hasn't happened in Alberta, and I doubt that it will.

The opposition uses this resolution to talk about reform, and it's always good to talk about parliamentary reform and how we can do governance better. There is no more important topic. But the opposition doesn't raise those issues in appropriate and timely manners. They raise it, instead, in the context of a very important discussion on Senate selection to detract from what is the true issue here. I'm happy to debate with them and talk with them at any time about parliamentary reform, about how we can do governance better, about how we involve citizens of Alberta in discussions on bills and on legislation and on how they're truly governed. We can have that discussion at any time, but today we're talking about the Senate. We're talking about something that's close to the hearts of Albertans, a triple E Senate.

The time is now. It's time for us to start the discussion yet again. It's not repetitious; it's not frivolous. It's quite important, and I think we should endorse this unanimously out of this House. I would urge the Member for Edmonton-Highlands to accept the fact that we're not going to promote the abolition of the Senate, so he should come onboard, make this a unanimous vote calling for a triple E Senate. If we're going to have a Senate anyway, join us, make it unanimous from this House, and start the march across this country to a triple E Senate.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Under Standing Order 29 we have five minutes for questions. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have a question for the hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud, the Minister of Justice. Now, in the event that in the next number of years the Prime Minister of this country at the time nominates that hon. member as a Senator, will he accept the nomination without an election?

9:20

MR. HANCOCK: Total speculation. It would never happen that the federal government would approach me to go to the Senate, but I would always say that I will serve the people of Alberta in the best way I can and at every opportunity that I can. If I had that opportunity, I would make use of that opportunity to change the Senate from within.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Obviously, the temptation for the minister is far too great to go sit in a place like the Senate.

My question is to the minister. He has challenged us on this side to debate legislative reform of this Assembly in the appropriate time and not during a debate on the triple E Senate. Will the minister bring in a package of parliamentary reform to this Assembly so that we can talk about it and debate it?

MR. HANCOCK: Mr. Speaker, every year after session closes I invite as Government House Leader the Opposition House Leaders of both parties to bring forward reforms that they think might be appropriate to the rules of this House and our practices of this House. In fact, in the last year we did one of the more substantive reforms of the House rules that we've done in a long time. That package was brought to this House and debated on the floor of this House, and I didn't hear in that debate, that I recall, any calls from the members opposite of the nature of the things that they talked about tonight. However, I will again say that at the end of this session we will ask Opposition House Leaders, as we always do, how we can improve the practice and the process of this House, and we'll have opportunities to debate them again.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Oh, thank you, Mr. Speaker. First of all, a comment and then a question. The comment is that the most honest thing I've heard from the Government House Leader here tonight is that he is quite prepared to 'snorfle' at the trough after this particular career is over.

My question to him is this: can he state categorically that we have never talked about all-party committees in any of those discussions? Also, would he comment on what happens to the good ideas that we bring forward in those House leader meetings? Most of them end up on the floor.

MR. HANCOCK: Mr. Speaker, I've never, ever indicated that I would be prepared to 'snorfle' at any trough or whatever the terminology was. The question that was asked was whether or not a person would serve in the Senate if called to do so, and I think being called to serve the public is one of the highest callings you can have, whether it's being elected or not. The Member for Edmonton-Highlands indicated that he ought not to be criticized, because the Senate in its current form was the constitutional form of the country. That is not a dishonest thing to do or a dishonourable thing to do, to say that one would try and serve at the best level possible.

Now, with respect to the discussions that House Leaders have, I did not refer to the discussions that House Leaders have in those meetings, because, as the hon. member knows, those meetings are always held on the basis that we don't discuss what happens in those meetings. But what I did say is that the result was a package which was brought to the floor of the House, and that hon. member and every member of this House has the opportunity to debate the House rules when a resolution to that effect is brought to the floor of this House.

MR. MASON: Mr. Speaker, will the hon. minister be straight with the House and tell them that all we talk about is amendments to the Standing Orders and that even when we don't agree, we get a whole package forced down our throats by this minister and his fellow behind him? What about things like fixed terms? What about things like multiparty committees? What about things like proportional representation? What about a package of meaningful change that goes far beyond the Standing Orders of this place?

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Hon. Minister of Justice, do you want to respond?

MR. HANCOCK: Well, the hon. member opposite's seatmate, as I understand it, as a bill before the House . . .

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The five minutes that's allocated under Standing Order 29 has now elapsed.

[Government Motion 32 carried]

head: Government Bills and Orders
Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: We'll call the committee to order.

Bill 31
Security Management Statutes Amendment Act, 2002

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Now back to some of the more serious business of the Legislature.

AN HON. MEMBER: The Senate is not serious?

MS CARLSON: The way that this government brought forward that last motion was frivolous in nature, not serious, and I stand by that. That is not a motion that we have to rehash every couple of years when there is agreement by more than a large majority of people in the Assembly.

Bill 31 deals with quite a different set of proposed changes, though, Mr. Chairman, and I think changes that we need to be cautious about before moving forward. I know that we've heard from the minister and from the critic that few people have actually contacted them on this bill, even though it's been held over for the summer. I'm not sure what the reason for that is, but I think that there is some reason for us to believe that the absence of comment means a large majority of support for this particular bill. I think a lot of people don't understand the ramifications of this particular bill down the road, and I'm not saying that frivolously. I'm concerned that perhaps even government members don't understand the kinds of . . .

MR. HANCOCK: You speak for yourself; they can speak for themselves.

MS CARLSON: Well, the problem is, Mr. Minister, that they don't speak for themselves, so in the absence of them speaking for themselves, somebody needs to make some comments that may be provocative enough that they rise to the challenge and finally say something on the record in this Assembly rather than chitter-chattering in the background from the far, far backbenches that they sit on.

AN HON. MEMBER: Are we distracting you?

MS CARLSON: No. I have to tell you that backbenchers making comments that are mostly not relevant does not bother me at all. In fact, it only extends the amount of time that I can find to talk about things. So keep up the good work, boys.

On Bill 31 there are a number of changes that are going to happen to a variety of acts which affect a variety of ministries. In fact, I count that at least 15 ministers are affected by the kinds of changes that we're seeing here. The problem with that is that we haven't heard from those ministers in terms of whether they support this particular bill or the kinds of ramifications that they expect to fall out of this particular legislation. So we need to proceed with a very cautious hand.

As I go through this, I think my overriding concern is that we must really be cognizant that there is a balance between government convenience from the perspective of being able to just step in and take over security measures as compared to the public and personal freedoms. Now, we've seen some very good examples in the past year in the States about how personal freedoms have been taken away from people and perhaps not with full justification. The chairman represents a constituency very much like my own. There is these days the perception of what a potential terrorist looks like, and that person looks like a lot of the people who live in my constituency and the chairman's own constituency. In fact, we have to be very careful that the kinds of choices, the powers that we give government cannot unduly harm people who are good, upstanding, law-abiding citizens or, if not citizens of the country, full participants through landed immigration status, refugee status, or whatever the status may be, that just because they look a certain fashion, they aren't prejudged when they go to border crossings and try to get on airplanes and so on. It looks to me like this bill might end up being a massive kind of power grab that can be of some concern to us.

When we talk about the sections of the bill, it allows for the exemption of material from FOIP, and having just coming from the all-party FOIP committee, Mr. Chairman, this also concerns me. I think that this is probably the most contentious part of this bill and really hasn't been given a thorough review or full scrutiny at this particular point in time. As we all know here in the Assembly, FOIP already allows the denial of access to information on account of what they call "prejudice [to] the defence of Canada or of any foreign state allied to or associated with Canada" and also to "the detection, prevention or suppression of espionage, sabotage or terrorism."

Then, Mr. Chairman, the question truly becomes: what's wrong with this clause for the context of this bill? That's something that hasn't been debated here and I think needs to be explained before we come out of committee. It wasn't explained from the principle perspective in second reading, and I haven't heard anything so far that talks about it at this stage.

What also is lacking in this bill, Mr. Chairman, as we see it, is that in many places there is the question of how to determine that a terrorist threat is present, and that's something that we haven't heard any discussion on. It was something that I would have expected to have heard from the Solicitor General because we all know that after September 11 she put in a number of security measures on the grounds of the Legislature, that to me seemed quite frivolous and a waste of time and not very effective. People can come into the parkade still. People can come into the building still. People can park by the building still. We don't see any kind of serious scrutiny happening there. We see a revolt from some of the backbenchers in terms of having to carry their name tags and all kinds of associated problems.

So what we've done is increased costs of government. To what effect, I would ask. That's some of the same kind of concern we have here. You can put up a brave front and a frontal attack whenever you think there may be a problem, but how, in fact, do we determine that a real threat is present? If the security around this building is any gauge – now, I'm not talking about in this building itself; I'm talking about primarily the Annex and the grounds surrounding it. I don't think it's very effective. If we had a true terrorist threat, I am not convinced that the people in this building would be safe.

That begs the question: even with this act coming in place, how do we know that it's going to be effective in other regions of the province? We have some pretty big primary targets in this province, and I think that should be something that concerns all of us. On the one hand they're talking about bringing in new rules that potentially can take away more powers from Albertans, but on the other hand we find that what they have put in place so far isn't very effective. So now we're going to have people without power or rights or freedoms and an ineffective kind of security system. That is absolutely the worst of both worlds, and I haven't been convinced to date that that will change with this particular legislation. So I think that there are some details of that that need to be talked about.

What are the processes? We should know at least in a general sense what the co-ordination is between CSIS here in Canada and other kinds of jurisdictions, particularly with the States, who is our neighbour country. Those things haven't been talked about yet, and I think that they need to be, and that's just really a problem.

If we talk about some of the sections, we have some concerns, and one is in section 1, Mr. Chairman, where they talk about giving the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board the power to shut down a facility or a pipeline or whatever they have and make regulations to protect such facilities from terrorist threat or attack. So the section allows the board to make the regulations which can potentially restrict access to information from such facilities. FOIP can be overridden if these facilities are under such a threat. So these broad, sweeping powers are in the original act already. Do we need this here? Up until now the EUB has only had the power to make regulations dealing with the operations of a facility, not to interfere with its operations.

You know, we constantly hear in this Assembly challenges on how the EUB makes its decisions and operates. Do we want to give them these kinds of additional sweeping powers? I'm not convinced that they're running a tight ship now or, in fact, a fair ship in some cases, so if that's the case, why would we give them more powers where they can shut down facilities? I'm not sure that's the proper avenue, and we should be taking a look here. And how are they going to deal with false alarms? I think that's also an issue that hasn't been talked about.

We have concerns about whether or not favourites can be played when it comes to approving developments or interfering in pipelines or facilities. If something could be without proper justification dubbed as a terrorist threat, if it's not FOIPable, then how are we ever going to know their justification? After the threat is over, there is no reason why that information shouldn't be made public. Operations can be delayed. So those are the kinds of issues that we need to talk about.

When we talk about section 2, which amends the Change of Name Act, we've a question, and that's if the director would see it as unnecessary for such a check if the person were changing their name for their own protection because they were the victim of a criminal act, like witness protection or, as is sometimes the case, people who have been harassed by former spouses. That happens quite often. In fact, I know of a young woman who attends the same high school as my daughter who had her name changed for that very reason. How would this affect that kind of thing? This wasn't answered, and we have some concerns about that.

I think of primary importance is personal security, and if people have a reason for changing their name, such as witness protection or personal safety, moving away from an abusive family member or a stalker or something of that nature, is this still going to apply to that person? We need some details. We haven't heard those. We need the parameters, and we need some justification for why we need to do this and what the boundaries would be. We haven't seen any criteria, and that is a bit of a problem for me.

Section 3, that amends the Charitable Fund-raising Act, also brings up some concerns. When we take a look at what happened with the 2001-2002 Auditor General's report, it was recommended from the previous year that the ministry beef up compliance with the Charitable Fund-raising Act, and it also indicated in that report that the ministry created a risk assessment model to focus on future inspections of accounts. Under the act currently the minister can deny registration to any organization whose directors or managers are convicted of a criminal act in Alberta or elsewhere where the minister feels the person convicted should not be dealing with contributions or solicitations, and that seems to be pretty strong and seems to me to be adequate.

So why are we needing the change that we're seeing come forward in section 3? It exempts the minister or agents of the minister from being sued by acting in good faith and allows the minister to suspend or cancel the registration of a charitable organization or the licence of a fund-raising business if it is certified under C-16, a federal bill, which is the one, I believe, trying to stop charitable fund-raising of dollars being sent to fund terrorist activities in other countries.

As we heard in earlier debate on this bill from the Member for Edmonton-Highlands, many of those people who were deemed terrorists in the past are now heads of government. Some of them are re-deemed as terrorists. In fact, that seems to be the nature of history on this globe: today a terrorist; tomorrow a head of government. That's a question that we have to ask in terms of how these kinds of rules are . . . [interjection] Well, I was looking at you when I said that, for no good reason; I'm sure.

So I think that's a problem, and we haven't had it explained. [interjection] Yes, of course. Senator Dave. I forgot. You'll just end up as a Senator. I don't think terrorists are allowed to 'snorfle,' but I don't know. Maybe so.

At any rate, it's something to be talked about in a serious nature in this bill.

Section 4 is one that deals with the Dangerous Goods Transportation and Handling Act. We see new regulations forcing companies and people to make a security plan against terrorist threats. So a good idea; right? But where's the beef on this one? We need to see something a little more substantive. This is one of those feel-good statements that doesn't really have any consequences or actions to it. We want to see some action, more than just saying: please do this. There's nothing here. This is one where we could have used some more detail and some substance, and it isn't there.

Section 5 is an issue, the Disaster Services Act. They talk about the definition of emergency being changed by taking out the words "imminent event" and replacing it with "an event." Now, this one is very scary, Mr. Chairman, because what does that mean? Why are we taking out a proactive element and replacing it with a reactive element? This is particularly alarming. The chance, the opportunity for the government to take more powers than they may need to without justification is very real here. We have seen that happen time and time again in other countries and requiring significant actions by other countries to try and correct. When you think that Canada's major role in international events has been a peacekeeping role, now we're actually switching places with some of these countries whose behaviour we have abhorred by potentially taking this kind of aggressive action.

Disaster Services has a few questions that we would like to ask: the possibility for government to make regulations and ministerial orders for persons who are utilizing property or operating in a manner that is hazardous to others or others' property, independently or as a result of some event, and makes contingency for that person to work with local authorities to alleviate the hazard and have a plan to deal with the situation which may result from the hazard. So things like a farmer with chemicals which might be used to blow up the town square: that's an issue. What we need is to have some questions answered. What are the time lines? What is the definitive amount of time that we may interfere in what would be the normal business life of the people involved? We should only be restricting people for a set time before the ruling or the order or the regulation is received. Now, those are the kinds of questions that we need to ask there.

This section also voids the FOIP Act in terms of gaining access to information which can be used for preparing or administering a response to a crisis. So why are we taking the Disaster Services Act materials completely outside of the scope of FOIP? That's a real problem. Under this kind of amendment the Information and Privacy Commissioner cannot even look at the crisis management plan documents. Now, I understand the need for security around these kinds of documents, but all this cloak and dagger stuff can also be counterproductive when we try to find a balance between protecting people's privacies and their freedoms.

The question really becomes then: doesn't the government trust the FOIP Act? As we know from just having sat through a review by that committee, there are very good controls in place and very well thought out and tested and true procedures by which information can be protected. So why do they want to circumvent this process? That's a serious question, particularly when we see that in this province the Auditor General raised several questions in the last annual report with regard to the state of emergency plans for this government. So how are we to know that the government is prepared for an emergency if we're denied access to look at the plans? A very real concern and something that needs to be addressed.

Sections 6 to 14 still need to be reviewed. We have questions about all these sections. I think that we would like to see these questions answered before this bill gets passed. We have many of the appropriate ministers here with us this evening, who could start to address these particular concerns.

Let's do this bill properly, Mr. Chairman. That means that we get the questions answered before we actually vote on the bill. If we don't have the questions answered in debate, you can be sure that we will be following up in writing because this is a serious bill. Changes to security in this province have untold ramifications for the people in this province for many, many years to come. We need these answers. We need them in a timely fashion. Perhaps we'll be satisfied with all the answers. But how are we to know in order to vote on this bill at this time?

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. This is quite an interesting bill, the Security Management Statutes Amendment Act, 2002, as proposed by the Minister of Justice. Certainly, when we look at events since September 11, 2001, to the present time and the instability in the world and when you consider this province's vital strategic interest not only to the rest of this country but also to our ally to the south because of our natural resources and the fact that we export so much fuel to the lower 48 states and to central Canada, security has to be certainly taken seriously. I take the matter of security quite seriously. When one considers that it was just a day or two ago in the media that a security expert stated that this country could be a possible location of a terrorist attack, one cannot be too careful.

At this time, Mr. Chairman, I have two concerns about the broad, wide-sweeping powers that this bill is going to give this government, and I don't know if they have the management maturity to deal with these wide-sweeping powers. I have my concerns. One of the concerns that I have as I go through this bill is: when will these wide-sweeping measures be reviewed? Is there a process? It certainly has escaped this member if there's a review process for the wide-sweeping powers that are promoted and promised in here. When will they be reviewed?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie certainly talked about the review that was done earlier this summer and into the fall, as a matter of fact, with the freedom of information and protection of privacy legislation. There's a review process there. There are many statutes besides that where every three years in this Assembly there is to be a review process. Certainly, times change, and I think there should be a formal process of review in Bill 31.

I would be much more comfortable with this legislation if there were a sunset clause. Perhaps it's in here and other hon. members can participate in the debate and point me in the right direction in regard to the sunset clause, because I would be very anxious to see that some of the legislative changes that are discussed and proposed in this legislation have limits.

Certainly, I look at the changes to the Provincial Parks Act, the amendment as proposed. Whenever we're talking about prohibiting or restricting access, whether it's travel or whether it's a short visit to a recreation area or a park, I have some concerns that this may get out of hand. For instance, let's say that a group of citizens take a notion that they want further enhancement of that park. Could the government under some dark, clandestine policy such as this restrict, I'm almost saying, the freedom of expression of a group of individuals who may have a different view of the use of the provincial park than the government?

Now, the Wilderness Areas, Ecological Reserves and Natural Areas Act: the same would apply to this. Why do we need to do this? What is the justification for this? Is this simply to stop citizens from protesting against, say, a logging operation on the edge of the park? Is this to do with international terrorism, or is it to do with stopping peaceful protests, which I consider legitimate, legal in this province? Citizens have every right to speak out. When you get a government that has sort of lost its way after 32 years in power, anything could happen.

AN HON. MEMBER: How many years?

MR. MacDONALD: Thirty two years.

To use this bill under the guise of international terrorism to perhaps restrict or limit the citizens, I would have to urge caution with this.

I can go through this. I look at the Government Organization Act. I look at the Electric Utilities Act. I look at the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act. Speaking directly to the Electric Utilities Act, Mr. Chairman, I don't know if it's necessary. When I deal with the Electric Utilities Act now and I put in a freedom of information request, sometimes I think the Department of Energy considers a FOIP request from the Official Opposition a terrorist act, because I'm given no choice on getting the information. I must go through every manner possible to try to get information from that department regarding the activities of that department. That's my duty; it's my responsibility.

When I consider this legislation and the security measures, well, I'm not so sure. You'll have to excuse me for my suspicions, but with my own experience with FOIP, Mr. Chairman, I have every right to be suspicious. A democracy is only as transparent and accountable as the accessibility of information by citizens from their duly elected government.

Now, in conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I would again like to caution the government and the sponsor of this bill. Perhaps in due course of the debate they will explain what sort of review process they have in mind for this legislation because of its broad-sweeping powers. Is there a sunset clause for some of the measures that are proposed under various provincial statutes?

At this time, Mr. Chairman, I would like to adjourn debate. Thank you.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd move that the committee rise and report.

[Motion carried]

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

MR. MARZ: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration and reports progress on Bill 31.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Opposed? So ordered.

The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd move that we adjourn until 1:30 p.m. tomorrow.

[Motion carried; at 9:57 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Thursday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Thursday, November 21, 2002 1:30 p.m.
 Date: 02/11/21
 [The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

THE SPEAKER: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. O Lord, grant us a daily awareness of the precious gift of life which You have given us. As Members of this Legislative Assembly we dedicate our lives anew to the service of our province and our country. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Visitors

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased today to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly the consul general of Korea, Mr. Park. He is accompanied today by his wife, Mrs. Park, and the Korean consul in charge of economic affairs, Mr. Han.

Korea is Alberta's fourth largest trading partner, with two-way trade totaling nearly $1 billion last year. Korea is also home to Alberta's longest standing sister province relationship, dating back to 1974. Our friendship with the province of Kangwon has certainly been fruitful over the years. The consul general's visit is a good opportunity to discuss ways to develop and expand Alberta's relationship with Korea. We very much appreciate the consul general coming to Alberta so soon after his appointment, and we anticipate a productive and mutually beneficial relationship with him over the coming months and years.

I would ask our honoured guests to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

head: Introduction of Guests

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

MR. LORD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In politics we talk about parties a lot, but today we have some very special guests here who really know what the word "party" is all about. It's my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly nine of the over 60 legendary volunteers of the Calgary Grey Cup Committee who are here in Edmonton this weekend to help kick off the Grey Cup festivities in an appropriate manner for the 54th year in a row. I would ask that they rise and remain standing as I call out their names. They're seated behind me in the public gallery. Then after that, I would also like to introduce to you and to all members of this Assembly the world-famous Stampede queen and princesses, who are also here today and who, I might add, are much easier to look at than some of our Grey Cup boys are. I would ask Chairman John Falck along with my former colleague Alderman Ray Jones with the city of Calgary, Aengus Watson, William J. Lundrigan, Arlene Porter, Mac Hasnany, Marv Jones, David Collins, and his lovely wife, Denise Collins, to all rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of the Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, I would now ask if this year's Calgary Stampede queen, Miss Karen Collins, could also rise along with Stampede princesses June Marie Innes and Natalie Havens and receive the warm traditional welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Highwood.

MR. TANNAS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased today to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly a class of law students from the University of Alberta who are here today as part of their course in legislative process and legislative drafting. Their instructors are Parliamentary Counsel Mr. Rob Reynolds and Legislative Counsel Mr. Peter Pagano. I believe the students are seated in the members' gallery this afternoon. I would ask them now to rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan.

MR. LOUGHEED: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce today two classes from James Mowat school in Fort Saskatchewan. They're accompanied by their principal and teacher, Mr. George Sebest, and also Ted Fellows. Some parents are accompanying them as well. I'd ask them to rise – they're in both the members' and public galleries – and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

MR. HORNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to introduce three classes from Muriel Martin school in St. Albert. They are accompanied today by their teachers Mrs. Katie Boyd, Miss Christine Griffiths, Mrs. Brenda Kane as well as parent and teacher helpers Mrs. Alana Kirkhammer, Mrs. Gisela McKerracher, Mrs. Brenda Prychitcko, Mrs. Velvet Baker, Mrs. Wanda Kondruk, Mrs. Debra Fiddler, Mrs. Lynn Carolei, and Mrs. Susan Ormandy. They are seated in both the public and members' galleries, and I'd ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Legislature.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

MR. CAO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly Ken and Yvette Vanberg. Ken and Yvette were part of the Albertan business group that I had the honour to lead to tour the province of Shandong in China in August. They are here to visit the Assembly and also to do something very, very interesting; that is, to recruit in his business a person who is blind, named Lorne, and persons who are both deaf and can't speak, Lori and Ryan. So this is a very, very interesting opportunity for people with disabilities. May I ask Ken and Yvette, who are in the public gallery, to stand up and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Little Bow.

MR. McFARLAND: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's with a great deal of pleasure today that I rise and introduce to you and to members of the Assembly a family from the Nobleford area of Little Bow who have come up as a family to observe the proceedings of the Legislative Assembly. It's with pleasure that I introduce Bert and Caroline Vande Bruinhorst, their children Jonathan, Sarah, and Rhode. Jonathan attends Calvin Christian school, and the other two children are home schooled in the Vande Bruinhorst household. I would ask that they please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

head: Ministerial Statements

THE SPEAKER: The hon. the Premier.

Federal Kyoto Implementation Plan

MR. KLEIN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to discuss Alberta's response to the reportedly final Kyoto implementation plan from the federal government, which was released today. Let me begin by saying that our government will study the federal plan in detail – and that process has started already – and we will consult with our provincial counterparts to assess its viability. As a matter of fact, I had a preliminary discussion today with Premier Hamm of Nova Scotia.

At first glance the revised federal plan is a little better dressed than its predecessors, but it is still woefully inadequate, and there are deeper concerns. I want to stress Alberta's strong disappointment that the federal government continues to impose a unilateral plan on the provinces and the territories time and time again. Premiers have urged Ottawa, again, time and time again, to sit down with them and work in partnership to develop a truly national, truly Canadian solution to climate change. But time and time again Ottawa has said no. Time and time again Ottawa has said: we'll tell you the way it's going to be.

Some federal ministers have said that there's no point trying to work with the provinces because the provinces are never able to agree on anything. Well, Mr. Speaker, that defeatist attitude says much more about federal arrogance than it does about the provinces, because working together, the provinces and the territories have reached a significant consensus on the climate change issue. They have developed a set of 12 principles, which they all believe should form the foundation of a national plan on climate change. They have all said that until Ottawa commits to those principles and commits to developing a national plan with them, then the Kyoto protocol should not be ratified.

Today the federal government has released a plan that does not incorporate all 12 principles articulated by the provinces. The plan, while it incorporates a few of our ideas, does not reflect the provinces' priorities. Even more worrisome is the fact that the federal plan gives no indication of what the true costs of the Kyoto pipe dream will be to Canadians.

A national news story out today reports that Industry Canada, an agency of the government, believes that its own political masters are deliberately underestimating the costs to Canada of Kyoto and underestimating them substantially. Now, of course, the feds are backing away from this paper's findings as fast as they can, but I think there's more truth to it than they care to admit. According to the news story, Industry Canada calculates that Kyoto will result in a 33 percent decline in the energy industry with a loss of 14 of every 100 jobs in that sector. That is very significant, Mr. Speaker. The government of Alberta will not let that happen, and other provinces will not let that happen. Despite being aided and abetted every step of the way by the two opposition parties represented in this Legislature, the federal government will not be allowed to hurt this province or any province in order to meet some rigid, illogical goal.

Do provinces want to address climate change? Well, the answer, of course, is yes, without a doubt. The federal government would have Canadians believe that it alone – it alone – holds the monopoly on environmental concern, but the record indicates otherwise. The record indicates that Canada's provinces have been the true leaders in environmental stewardship, and they intend to be just as effective in dealing with climate change.

Here in Alberta the government, of course, has introduced legislation that when implemented will result in significant reductions in greenhouse gas emissions, and I'm talking about real reductions. The federal government, on the other hand, is talking about sending possibly billions of dollars, hard earned dollars in Canada, out of this country to buy emission credits abroad. The result will be the completely unnecessary transfer of Canadian wealth to other countries with no reduction in emissions that contribute to global warming. That, Mr. Speaker, is not environmental stewardship. That is politics, crass, self-serving, duplicitous, obscenely expensive politics, and Alberta will not be a part of it.

Mr. Speaker, I have spoken with almost every Premier in Canada about the climate change issue, and while we differ on some points regarding climate change, we agree on the important items in the debate. Above all, we agree that climate change is not something to be addressed by a federal organization or a monopoly. As the Premiers of British Columbia and Newfoundland jointly wrote in today's National Post:

We can and must meet the challenge of climate change, in a way that works for the benefit of all Canadians . . . We have the opportunity now to harness that innovation and expertise and work together as federal, provincial and territorial partners to develop a "Made in Canada" strategy.

So I join with Premiers Campbell and Grimes, both Liberal Premiers I would remind the hon. leader of the Liberal opposition, and all Canadian Premiers in urging the federal government to sit down with us – sit down with us – and work on a national solution that incorporates the provinces' 12 principles rather than asking us to accept this plan as the only possible solution.

Why is there this incomprehensible rush to ratify the Kyoto protocol? Why? I don't know. Why can't Ottawa take the time to meet with us as equals so that we have a common understanding, rooted in reality, of what it will take to address climate change and how much it will cost? Why must Canadians accept artificial, rushed deadlines imposed by the Prime Minister when the magnitude of the issue demands thought, collaboration, and common understanding? These are questions that go unanswered, and until they are answered, this government will not rest in opposing the Kyoto protocol. It will not rest. It will not rest in protecting the jobs of Albertans and all Canadians, and it will not rest in its work to protect the future economic prosperity of Alberta and the strong communities and array of opportunities that arise from that prosperity. Albertans expect no less, Mr. Speaker, and they will receive no less from each and every government member of this Assembly.

DR. NICOL: Mr. Speaker, the Alberta Liberals support ratification of Kyoto. We believe in the science of climate change and in the decade of work completed by countries and scientists on establishing a first step to reduce CO₂ emissions. We recognize that ratification of the protocol poses a significant challenge for Alberta. We believe the targets set out in the Kyoto protocol are good and achievable. We are, however, disappointed with the first phase of the federal government's implementation plan rolled out today.

Now more than ever we expect positive leadership from our provincial government. We believe the government of Alberta must constructively engage the federal government in its plan to implement Kyoto rather than its current policy of antagonizing and escalating already tense relations. Constitutional challenges, boycotted meetings, and other actions of hostility will not serve the best interests of all Albertans. This government should promote the Alberta advantage, not disadvantage. Failure to do so will negatively impact Alberta and become a self-fulfilling prophecy. This is about what we can do, not about what we can't.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: I'm sorry, hon. member. Please sit down. There is no provision in our practice for a member other than the spokesman for the Official Opposition to respond to a Ministerial Statement other than with the unanimous consent of the members of the Assembly. Would the member like me to ask if the hon. members would?

MR. MASON: Mr. Speaker, we were called by the government and asked if we would prepare a statement, and we did.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. member, the government does not control the practice of the Legislative Assembly of the province of Alberta. If the hon. member would like the chairman to ask the question, "Is there unanimous consent in the Assembly to allow the hon. member to participate in the ministerial statement process?" the chairman will ask that question. Just nod yes or no.

Is any member of the Legislative Assembly in the province of Alberta opposed to hearing from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands?

[Unanimous consent granted]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

1:50

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker and members of the Assembly. The Alberta Conservative government has never missed an opportunity to miss an opportunity when it comes to taking meaningful action to address climate change. Instead of working cooperatively with the federal government and other provinces to address the important issue of climate change, this government has chosen to be obstructionist.

I remind you that until its resignation in May of this year, the Alberta government actually co-chaired a federal/provincial committee that was studying the economic impacts of the Kyoto protocol. The decision to resign from this federal/provincial process was made well before Prime Minister Chretien decided in September to move forward with Kyoto ratification before the end of this year. The Alberta government has a responsibility to stand up for Alberta's interests. However, the government's destructive approach will leave Albertans isolated and without influence on this most critical issue for the future of the province.

The Alberta government also missed an opportunity to take meaningful action by ignoring a detailed report produced by the energy efficiency office of the Alberta Energy department in 1990. This paper set out detailed policy measures that would have enabled Alberta to reduce greenhouse gases 7 percent below 1988 levels by the year 2005. Instead, this government axed the energy efficiency office, and greenhouse gas emissions have instead risen by 20 percent.

The Alberta New Democrats have consistently urged the government to stand up for Alberta's interests by negotiating an implementation protocol which protects our economy and sets reduction targets based on energy consumption rather than on production. The government has not only failed to take action on climate change issues; they have left Alberta vulnerable to decisions made by others.

head: Oral Question Period

Government Contracts

DR. NICOL: Handing out lucrative contracts without going through an open and transparent tendering process is not just bad business. It's downright abuse of power. For a government that's so big on the benefits of competition, it's ironic that its own policies don't require competitive bids for all government contracts. My question is to the Premier. Since the Ministry of Infrastructure regularly hands out consulting and project management contracts without going to tender, how can Albertans be assured that plum, lucrative contracts aren't being handed out to government friends and supporters at taxpayer expense?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I'm not so sure that that statement is true, but I will have the hon. Minister of Infrastructure respond as to the procedures and the requirements that need to be followed before contracts are let.

MR. LUND: Mr. Speaker, of course, depending on the size of the project and what kind of details we need, we sometimes go through a very long process of, first of all, requesting for interest, and we have a request for qualifications. Then we have a request for proposal, and then of course we deal with the results of all of those processes. On a lesser project we may just simply ask for a call for proposal. In other, even lesser cost types of projects we may outline the project and then ask for bids. So those are the types of procedures that we follow. If the hon. member has an example where this hasn't been followed, which he seems to indicate, I would sure like to know about it.

DR. NICOL: Mr. Speaker, to the Premier: what is stopping this government from giving a company or an individual preferential treatment while excluding other contractors who are just as experienced and maybe even less expensive?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I'll defer to the hon. minister.

MR. LUND: Mr. Speaker, as I said in answer to the first question, if the hon. member knows of a situation where the procedure hasn't been followed, I want to know about it.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you. To the Premier: can you respond to the Auditor General's report, pages 158 and 159, which clearly outlines that in the Department of Infrastructure there are potential serious breaches of contract competition and renewal? Can you explain that?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, we take very seriously the recommendations of the Auditor General, and we have given an undertaking to the public that we will respond in detail to the Auditor General's recommendations. I'll ask the hon. minister as to where we are relative to the progress on those recommendations.

MR. LUND: Mr. Speaker, as the hon. Premier has clearly indicated, we do take any allegations very seriously. We're in the process of investigating exactly what the Auditor General was talking about, and we're going to make sure that if there was a mistake, in fact, it doesn't happen again.

Use of Government Credit Cards

DR. NICOL: Unauthorized credit card transactions, no documentation to back up expenses, no control over the way government credit cards are used: that's the way this government operates, and millions of dollars are at risk because of negligence by this government. The freewheeling use of government credit cards is out of control, and an investigation by the Auditor General is now under way. To the Premier: are some cabinet ministers forcing staff to misuse their credit cards in order to cover over or expand ministry expenses?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, no. And if I ever find out about any minister forcing misuse of credit cards by anyone, they won't be a minister. I'll tell you that for sure.

DR. NICOL: To the Premier: then how do you respond to the Auditor General's concerns that imply that those kinds of things are happening?

MR. KLEIN: I'm not so sure he implies those things are happening, Mr. Speaker. There was a case, as the hon. leader of the Liberal opposition knows, of a senior public service employee being charged. That matter is now before the courts, and I believe that there's an ongoing investigation or a review as to how this kind of thing could happen. I can tell you that there is no direction from any minister of the Crown to direct any employee of the government to inappropriately or wrongly use a credit card.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In reference to the cases that the Premier just talked about, are out-of-court settlements being considered?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I really can't discuss that. As I understand, this is a criminal matter, and it doesn't involve any out-of-court settlement. You know, maybe the Attorney General can shed some light on this matter, but I would be very, very surprised if anything like that was anticipated.

THE SPEAKER: I also want to caution care that this doesn't fall under the sub judice rule, but the hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General might comment.

MR. HANCOCK: Mr. Speaker, I think your comments are entirely appropriate. There is a civil case as well as the criminal case, and both of them are before the courts.

THE SPEAKER: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Health Care Spending

DR. TAFT: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, $67,800 a day 365 days a year: that would hire over 350 registered nurses, provide long-term care for 500 sick elderly Albertans, or eliminate the deficits of almost every rural RHA in Alberta. Sixty-seven thousand, eight hundred dollars a day is $25 million a year, which is what this government is spending to study the implementation of the Mazankowski report. Of this, over $5 million is spent on nothing more than the salaries, travel costs, luncheons, and paper shuffling of committees. My questions are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Given the staggering amount being spent on these committees, including a committee getting $550,000 to co-ordinate the work of other committees, why has this minister hired a special adviser in his office at a further cost of over a hundred thousand dollars per year? How much advice does this minister need?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, that pales in comparison with what we spend on health care in this province, which now ranges in the magnitude of $6.8 billion. That is in the magnitude of $19 million a day. We spend $1.4 billion on physicians. We spend roughly $1 billion on nurses. We spend roughly $3.8 billion on our regional health authorities. We spend in the magnitude of some $360 million on drugs alone. Ensuring that we have the appropriate system put in place to make sure that we deliver an effective, efficient, publicly paid for, publicly administered, high-quality service in this province is what this is all about. I should point out that the $25 million is for the implementation of all of this. It is not for committee work, as has been suggested by the hon. member. He should do his homework.

DR. TAFT: If the numbers are so small, why doesn't he pick up the rural RHA deficits?

Given that one of these implementation teams has a budget of 6 and a half million dollars and another has a budget of $10.2 million, will the minister provide full details to the House on the tendering and accountability processes for ensuring this money is well spent?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member wishes to see how the government is spending its money and pursuant to what authority, he can certainly look at our business plans. They are the most transparent, open, accountable business plans in this country.

DR. TAFT: Given that these committees are behind schedule and the senior management of the Department of Health and Wellness is in obvious confusion and disarray, why doesn't the minister just admit that his government's attempt to pre-empt the Romanow report is a costly lame duck?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, what a load of poppycock. Look at what the cost of the Romanow commission report is; right? Let's look at the cost of the Romanow report, something in the range of $15 million to $20 million, frankly with a set of recommendations that any one of us probably could have drafted on the back of a cocktail napkin.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, followed by the hon. Member for Airdrie-Rocky View.

Air Ambulance Services

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The minister of health recently appointed the MLA for Peace River to the selection committee tasked with the responsibility of awarding an air ambulance contract for the Peace River area. Prior to his appointment this MLA had written a letter in support of Advanced Paramedic, one of the applicants. To no one's real surprise Advanced Paramedic was awarded the contract. To the minister: did the minister know that the MLA for Peace River was backing one candidate for this contract over the others before appointing him to the selection committee, and if not, why not?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, the RFP in 2002 was put out for air ambulance services, and the purpose of this was to meet the increased numbers of patients that need to be transported by this particular service. Peace regional did submit two options, one of which met the criterion under the RFP and the other one did not.

The selection committee consists not only of the hon. Member for Peace River but also the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, who, of course, is well known for his knowledge in the area of ambulance, and also the hon. Member for Little Bow. There was also a physician from Saskatchewan air services, an expert in the area of air medical transport. There was also an aircraft industry consultant that was brought in as part of the RFP process.

There were 12 tenders in total. Ten were renewed in other parts of the province. One that was not renewed was for the Peace regional, that had been submitted. It would appear that the reason why it was not accepted was because it came in at a higher cost than the successful bidder, and the reason it appears so, Mr. Speaker, is it appears that they were using revenues from the air ambulance service to subsidize their ground ambulance service. I should point out that there was a unanimous decision made by the selection committee in the RFP process for the successful bidder. It was a fair and reasonable and completely transparent set of circumstances.

MR. MASON: Mr. Speaker, does the minister not consider that the fact that a member of the selection committee had written a letter of reference for one of the applicants actually creates a tainted process, and how can he guarantee the people of Peace River that, in fact, this was a fair selection process?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, I resist the temptation of the hon. member to unfairly besmirch another member of this Assembly for activities that they may have done. If he has an issue with respect to how this hon. member, the hon. Member for Peace River, has conducted himself, if he wishes to submit a complaint to the Ethics Commissioner, then he may do so.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions are to the minister. Why did the minister appoint someone to the committee, whether it be an MLA or not, who was obviously an advocate for one of the applicants before the selection process even got under way, and will the minister fix the process and throw out this tainted bid?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member, again, wishes to make his allegations outside of this House or if he wishes to bring it before the Ethics Commissioner, he certainly may.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Rocky View, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Federal Kyoto Implementation Plan

MS HALEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions are all to the Premier. In light of the federal government's release today of their final plan on Kyoto could you please, Mr. Premier, tell this House if you or anyone in this government was provided with the ability to have any input into this report or if you, in fact, received an advance copy before it was released today?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, the answer is no, and this is really quite consistent with the actions of the federal government to date. No, there were no consultations. I understand that the report was released to the media before it was sent to the provinces. This is the government's idea of consultation, and it's a bad one.

MS HALEY: Mr. Premier, in light of your answer has the Prime Minister responded to a request for the first ministers' meeting, and if not, why not?

MR. KLEIN: No, he hasn't. He has indicated, however – and I'm getting this secondhand from Premier Hamm, who is chair of the Premiers' conference – that if the Premiers want to discuss Kyoto at the January first ministers' meeting, when it will be convened to discuss health care, they're welcome to do so, but whether the Prime Minister will listen is another matter.

MS HALEY: My final question, then, is: in light of the comments made in here today by the member from the New Democratic Party, his comments that the government is somehow isolated, Mr. Premier, do you know how the other provinces or Premiers are responding in Canada today?

MR. KLEIN: I do, and it appears that all of the provinces are outside with the 12 principles that were drafted by the ministers of environment and the ministers of energy. Clearly, the plan refuses to recognize and discards completely three of those principles, and they are key principles to Alberta and the rest of Canada.

We are not isolated. Mr. Speaker, the Premier of British Columbia, their minister of environment, and their minister of energy are clearly concerned and have expressed publicly their concern. The Premier of Ontario stood up with me in Toronto to express his concern. Premier Grimes of Newfoundland is gravely concerned and so is Premier Hamm of Nova Scotia because they're just in the process now, in the infancy, of oil and gas development in those two provinces, and of course the province of British Columbia is hoping to embark on offshore development.

Mr. Speaker, just today the NDs, the New Democrats, in Saskatchewan issued a press release which is very consistent with the ministerial statement that I issued earlier, and I'm going to read the press release. It's dated today, Regina.

Saskatchewan's industry and resources minister is fuming over Ottawa's latest plan for implementing the Kyoto climate change treaty.

An NDP government.

Eldon Lautermilch says the plan presented today is a unilateral federal action that is being "rammed down the throats" of the provinces and territories.

The provinces and territories have provided the Chretien government with 12 principles they wanted included in an implementation plan.

Lautermilch says the federal government has rejected three of those outright and changed seven.

He says Saskatchewan cannot, and will not, accept Ottawa's latest plan.

So, Mr. Speaker, for the hon. Member of the ND Party to say that Alberta is isolated is an absolute falsehood. An absolute falsehood. He should stand up and apologize to this Assembly, especially in light of his own party, now governing Saskatchewan, being firmly on the side of Alberta on this issue.

2:10

Labour Negotiations

MS CARLSON: Mr. Speaker, first the government intervenes in teacher negotiations. Then the government intervenes with nurses and docs. Now they want to set a standard for intervening in all collective bargaining processes. To the Premier: does this government understand what collective bargaining and arbitration mean?

MR. KLEIN: Yes, we do.

MS CARLSON: To the Premier: then how does the government answer the charge that this new policy they are floating is a socialist policy, not free market based? Mr. Premier, you look like Pierre Elliott Trudeau on wage and price controls.

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, again the Liberals are conducting their research in the Edmonton Journal and the Calgary Herald. Clearly, public-sector salaries account for about $10.8 billion of the government's budget, and each increase in public-sector salaries costs the province about $108 million, and since government funds the public sector, we have to ensure that salary settlements are sustainable over the long term. We need to do that so we can budget and budget properly. So we do have a group of government members looking at strategies to deal with the impact of public-sector salary increases on the provincial budget, but I can tell the hon. member that no concrete proposals have been brought forward to cabinet or caucus or Treasury Board.

MS CARLSON: Mr. Speaker, my final question is to the Minister of Economic Development. From an economic development perspective do you support an end to free market based negotiation in this province, as led by your boss?

MR. NORRIS: At the outset, Mr. Speaker, I generally tend to support everything my boss says. It's usually the way that the Alberta people feel, and it's the way I feel, certainly.

Once again I think the hon. member opposite is drawing conclusions based on illogical premises, so I don't think I can respond other than to say that we support anything that moves the free market ahead, and the conclusion that you've reached is, while very interesting, totally disagreeable.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Security of Registry Offices

MR. McCLELLAND: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question is to the Minister of Government Services. On Tuesday night someone broke into an Edmonton registry office and made off with a computer and printer used to create Alberta drivers' licences. Can the minister tell us if these loathsome miscreants now have the ability to create licences and bogus ID cards?

MR. COUTTS: Mr. Speaker, law enforcement agencies will tell you that break-ins are an area of opportunity for criminals and very often they don't know what they're going after. We don't know what the thieves plan to do with this particular equipment that was stolen on Tuesday night, but we shouldn't just assume that they could plan to produce a fake driver's licence.

That being said, the equipment that was stolen on Tuesday night isn't enough just in itself to produce a fake driver's licence. In Alberta today we use a special paper stock, and that paper stock is kept in a locked compartment separate from the equipment. That particular paper stock was not stolen in this case. Encryption or any other security measures also make it very, very difficult for an unauthorized person to obtain any information on the database. Therefore, an individual who steals the equipment would have to be familiar with our processes and our unique applications and how it works.

Detective Joe Pendleton is an utmost authority on national security measures and identity fraud, and he is with the Edmonton economic crime squad. He has said to us that no fake IDs have ever been found in Edmonton that had been produced by equipment stolen from registry agents' offices, so that would tell me that criminals do not have the necessary knowledge to handle that equipment. So it appears to me that the bad guys just don't get it.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. McCLELLAND: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That would indicate, then, that this was believed to be a random act and that this is not part of a concerted effort by a group to target registry offices.

To the same minister: can the minister tell the House, without breaching security, what measures have been taken to ensure that other registry offices are protected?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. COUTTS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There have been a handful of incidents like this in one or more of our 120 registry agents' offices across this province, and that handful of incidents amounts to about 1 percent. Nevertheless, we are concerned about the possibility of criminal misuse when it comes to our technology that we're presently using. My department recently issued a request for proposals for a new centralized high-security processing facility for a new driver's licence, and that new facility will make it less vulnerable to these sorts of incidents.

Government-issued drivers' licences are one of the only official identification documents that contain a photograph of the cardholder, and that makes it a very acceptable form of identification for law enforcement agencies, for retailers, for financial institutions, and for employers. Given the current desire for increased security, Alberta's current system must be replaced to stay ahead of the technology. So new technology and a new security card facility will ensure that our licences are trustworthy, that they're credible, and that the documentation used will only be used by Albertans whom they serve.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. McCLELLAND: Thank you. To the same minister: with the centralization of all these records, what special steps are being taken to protect the privacy of Albertans?

MR. COUTTS: That is a very good question. The request for proposal is going to require that the vendor perform a privacy impact assessment and a consultation with our Privacy Commissioner to make sure that those rights under the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act are upheld. We have consulted with various security and law-enforcement agencies as well as with other jurisdictions, and we have decided on using a polycarbonate card so that the personal information can be imbedded on both sides of the paper stock, and a laser engraver will be used for that personal information so that it will be highly secure. Once the information is permanently put onto those cards, it will be extremely tamper resistant. The information can't be mechanically nor chemically taken off the card without making the card a useless piece of identification.

So, Mr. Speaker, it's important to note that the security features will not involve DNA, will not involve fingerprints but may include a facial recognition so that registry agents can see that that person in front of them is also the person that we have on file.

Heritage Savings Trust Fund

MS BLAKEMAN: Mr. Speaker, against the wishes of Albertans this government has continued to use the heritage fund as a pawn in its game to politicize the budgeting process and continues to plan to turn the heritage fund into a stability fund. My first question is to the Minister of Revenue. Why does this government continue to employ a high-risk investment strategy when Albertans have said to protect the fund?

MR. MELCHIN: Mr. Speaker, if they might remember, there was a significant review of the heritage fund done in 1995, and the legislation was changed in 1997, which led as a legislative parameter to maximize the long-term returns of the fund. It was from that major review and legislative parameter that we do invest in equities. We know that Albertans say that they value the fund, that it's there for the future. It will be there for the future. It's that opportunity for growth in a diversified portfolio that will ensure it will maximize the benefit and the value not only today but for all Albertans in the future.

MS BLAKEMAN: This question is also to the Minister of Revenue. Why does this government think that the volatile heritage fund, which lost $1.3 billion in just six months, can serve as a stability fund?

MR. MELCHIN: We're mixing two different issues. I'd first like to say that this is the only fund of its kind in any province in Canada. It's a great fund. This fund has earned over $25 billion of income over its life. It continues to benefit us. You don't invest with the aspect of taking zero risk. There are ups and downs in the marketplace, but the equities do outperform fixed income in any one year.

With the other aspect of a stabilization fund, there is a survey out right now with all Albertans to let them have both an understanding of the fund and its options for the future and whether or not a sustainability option should be regarded with the heritage fund. We're following up on recommendations of consultation with Albertans. It was the Future Summit delegates' suggestion from all of that input gathered around the province that that form part of it. We allow Albertans to provide us that input, and it's a promise to them that we will supply back and provide them the opportunity to choose.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you. My final question is also to the Minister of Revenue. Given that Albertans have already told this government I think five times in the last eight years not to turn the heritage fund into a stability fund, why is this government asking them again? What is it about the word "no" that this government doesn't understand?

MR. MELCHIN: First off, I said yesterday – and we won't even today – that we'll never apologize for consulting with Albertans. This is the only survey that has ever asked the question why we should save. In 1995 it asked: should we make a long-term decision now or wait until the government pays down its debt and balances the budget? That was the question in 1995. We have accomplished much since then. We have reduced the debt from $23 billion down to $5 billion. It's in response to that, that our financial house is in order, that we can follow up on a long-term decision about why we're saving.

It is about that purpose, and there are multiple reasons. The heritage fund was created in 1976 with multiple reasons to save. It was never just a one, sole, single purpose oriented fund, and it's for that reason that we're asking Albertans about its long-term mandate.

MRS. NELSON: Mr. Speaker, for clarification, the Financial Management Commission put forward a recommendation that we provide for a sustainability fund for this province. We have responded to the recommendations of the Financial Management Commission and accepted their recommendation but amended that, in fact, a sustainability fund should be established but not using the heritage trust fund. So we are proceeding with a sustainability fund development. We're putting the implementation plans together now.

In the meantime, there is a process of dialogue that is going on with Albertans with regard to the future of the heritage trust fund, but for the time being and in the future, we are going forward with our sustainability fund without the heritage trust fund. So we are not coupling the two together, unless the people of this province tell us to do otherwise.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Education Delegation to Asia

MR. CAO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the Alberta government puts education and training of citizens as top priorities, with an increasing annual funding now reaching close to $5 billion, and also given that the minister just recently led an education delegation to several Asian countries, my question to the hon. Minister of Learning is: what is the purpose of such a delegation tour?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

DR. OBERG: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. There are a lot of reasons why we go to foreign countries. For example, the Korean consul general, who was just here, is a good illustration of that. I'll just outline two today. First of all, probably the most significant thing we can do in an education system is to allow for the globalization of our students. To give students the ability to go to school shoulder to shoulder with someone from China, Japan, or Vietnam is an invaluable resource.

The second reason that we led this delegation is quite simple, and it's called economics. Our postsecondary institutions are active in an average of 22 different countries around the world. By having a minister with them – in fact, they asked me to go – we were able to get into doors, to open doors that they could never get into before. For example, we were allowed into the ministry of education in China. If you think about it, the ministry of education of China looks after a billion and a half students. The immensity of it is just amazing. Overall it was an extremely successful trip.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. CAO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: could the minister tell us what was achieved or learned for Alberta from those countries in terms of governance, class sizes, or the education results?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much. Well, Mr. Speaker, on our trip we had scheduled and, indeed, attended 71 meetings in four countries over a period of about 16 days. We talked to a lot of people. There were roughly 15 to 20 MOUs signed by our institutions and, indeed, one signed by myself on the apprenticeship and industry training in China. So we will be helping China do the apprenticeship and industry training.

In direct response to the hon. member's question about what we learned, I will say that there were probably only two or three things that we learned, specifically, that we can benefit from over here. The rest of the reason for this trip was to sell our expertise to these countries, and those countries are hungry for it. As a matter of fact, there was a proposal put forward by the ministry of education in China to work with them to open up two schools in China, utilizing our teachers, our curriculum, and our diploma. So we are presently doing the due diligence on that and making sure that it is a feasible project.

Again, overall, a lot of things done, a lot of people met, and a huge amount of business. It could quite easily be estimated that we did in the $25 million to $30 million range in those two weeks.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. CAO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: how does the minister see Alberta's education system and institutions in the world education business?

DR. OBERG: Mr. Speaker, I talked about our postsecondary institutions being active in an average of 22 countries, but I will say that we are, really, very much a fledgling on the world scene. Australia, for example, right now does around $10 billion worth of business overseas when it comes to education. Canada, in general, does between $4 billion and $5 billion in foreign countries, with the lead being taken by British Columbia, Ontario, Quebec, and indeed New Brunswick. Interestingly enough, in talking to the people in China, Newfoundland had just been over there about three or four months ago.

So, Mr. Speaker, it is a good way to promote Alberta. It is a good way to allow our students to have the advantage of being close to their counterparts in other countries. It's a good way to proceed with economics for a postsecondary system, but most important, just a good way to learn about other people.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Postsecondary Tuition Fees

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Contrary to what the Minister of Learning told the House yesterday, high tuition fees are a barrier for students. In a survey by the Learning department 70 percent of respondents cited the overall cost of postsecondary education as a barrier, and 66 percent specifically marked increased tuition as a barrier. My questions are to the Minister of Learning. Why are Alberta tuition fees higher than in any other western Canadian province?

DR. OBERG: Mr. Speaker, I don't have the actual numbers with me right now, but I believe that the University of Saskatchewan is significantly higher than our universities.

DR. MASSEY: To the same minister, Mr. Speaker: with Alberta participation rates of 18 to 24 year olds in postsecondary education almost the lowest in the country why does the government continue to support a high tuition policy?

DR. OBERG: First of all, Mr. Speaker, we do not support a high tuition policy. As I mentioned yesterday, our universities are number 21, number 31, and number 38 in the last Maclean's poll on tuition and fees charged.

The reason our participation rate is not as large is a couplefold. First of all, we have a very highly developed technological school industry in the province of Alberta, where a lot of kids go to technology school. Second of all, our Apprenticeship and Industry Training Board is second to none. We currently have 42,000 students that are involved in apprenticeship. Mr. Speaker, the third reason and probably the most effective reason right now is because we have jobs. There are a lot of jobs out there. Many students are opting to get into the workforce first, before they go to university to finish their education.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you. Again to the same minister: how can the minister, a beneficiary of low tuition rates, now deny young Albertans the same opportunity?

DR. OBERG: Well, Mr. Speaker, when you actually sit down and do the math, what I paid in tuition when I went to school – and again, that was back in the late 1970s. I don't want to age myself, but I really do believe that I paid anywhere between $1,500 and $2,000 tuition. I stand to be corrected on that.

DR. MASSEY: Nine hundred and fifty-three dollars.

DR. OBERG: No. Actually it wasn't, not for medical school. Consequently, when you extrapolate that forward, what you see is that it is very comparable to what it is today. It has risen but, Mr. Speaker, in all fairness, everything has risen. The important thing to remember about tuition is that people sitting in this Assembly, people driving the taxi cabs in Alberta, people driving the dump trucks pay 75 percent of a student's cost for education.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Electricity Pricing

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In an attempt to hide the colossal failure of deregulation to deliver lower power prices, the provincial government has done everything in its power to pin the blame on EPCOR. Yet power bills have increased in every part of the province, including those that are not served by EPCOR. I've recently begun holding public meetings around Alberta, and I've found that even in the rural heartland of the Conservative government people are not buying the government line. My question to the Minister of Energy is this: how does he explain the higher prices, between 40 and 60 percent, paid by consumers in areas outside EPCOR's service area since deregulation?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. SMITH: Well, Mr. Speaker, thank you for the question from the member. The morning was spent with the Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties. While I did have an opportunity to talk personally with some individuals who had specific issues regarding their bill or wrong meter reads or poor estimates, there were, in fact, no questions raised by that group at the meeting. I know that there are continuing concerns, but there are other issues in rural Alberta, which I think is an important piece.

Now, in the EPCOR/Aquila network there have been numerous, overwhelming, many – you would know yourself from being in that services area, Mr. Speaker – amounts of complaints that are rife with incorrect meter readings and have meter deficiencies. We asked nicely. We asked with vigour. We asked with force. Then we asked with the regulation in place for EPCOR and Aquila to correct these meter readings, and they are in fact taking action. The EUB has set up a call centre that will respond to these calls as the meters come in as of December 2.

The simple answer to the member's question is that if he goes back over his bills – if any rural Albertan would give him one, particularly after their position on the Kyoto accord, which is going to cost rural Albertans many jobs. I don't know if I'd want to be an ND out there in that part of the world talking in Conservative ridings. But if he were to read those, he would see that there are deferral accounts. Deferral accounts are the cost of power bought in 2000, when, as a matter of fact, this government still entertained a regulated model for power, and in 2001 when the power was deregulated. So there's been a combination of factors which has created these deferral accounts to be placed in these accounts that shall end at the end of 2003.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Since the minister has no answer to the question of higher electricity prices for Albertans, why, then, is the government singling out publicly owned EPCOR for regulatory punishment while letting U.S.-owned Aquila, which is actually making the mistakes reading the meters in the EPCOR service area, off the hook?

MR. SMITH: Mr. Speaker, that member has no idea about high electricity prices until he sees the full effects of the Kyoto protocol, which he supports, his party supports being implemented in this province, that's going to cost 14 out of every 100 oil patch workers their jobs. And you support that?

On the issue of electrical deregulation what the member forgets conveniently is that Aquila is operating under a regulated part of the electrical business and is subject to the full regulatory rigours of the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board. If he cared to spend some time, Mr. Speaker, going through that piece, he would see that there are financial penalties in there and there are management penalties in there. So not only is he trying to rip Albertans off on the Kyoto side, which he's trying to support; he's also misinformed about deregulation.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. member, I don't know if you had an opportunity to hear the complete answer. There seemed to be a lot of exchanges going on at the same time. I will not invite the Minister of Energy to repeat his response.

MR. MASON: Well, Mr. Speaker, that would render the Kyoto accord completely useless if he did that.

I'd like to ask the minister, Mr. Speaker, why he is singling out EPCOR and the 650,000 Edmontonians who own it for unfair and discriminatory treatment by his ministry.

MR. SMITH: Mr. Speaker, firstly, he said that if I repeated my former answer, I would render the Kyoto protocol useless. If, in fact, that was all it took in Alberta, I would do that tomorrow. I would do it today. I'd take a bullet to get rid of the Kyoto protocol because that protocol is going to take jobs, prosperity, and development away. EPCOR won't have to worry about profits because the $9 billion worth of transfer payments and the power that EPCOR generates themselves in a free marketplace will be decimated under the Kyoto protocol.

Mr. Speaker, to the Member for Edmonton-Highlands. We are asking for commercial solutions in a commercial marketplace. All EPCOR had to do in the 20 months since the start of deregulation in combination with Aquila Networks was fix the meter-reading deficiencies and billing irregularities in their billing area. We have seen in this deregulated electricity market a company such as ATCO, that pays full taxes, that supports over 110,000 customers in northern Alberta, bring in lower prices than they did under regulation. "How can the private sector do this?" you wonder.

Mr. Speaker, at Enmax in Calgary, also owned by the city, we have seen a lower rate – a lower rate – than what EPCOR offers in their Aquila network and in the Edmonton area. So I would ask the member with his prior experience: how do the 650,000 customers sitting in Edmonton, the 650,000 shareholders that do not have any choice about getting rid of their risk, their exposure after a particular damning report on the exposure of EPCOR, escape the liability?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Mandatory Second Language Instruction

MR. SHARIFF: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Learning indicated at the annual Alberta School Boards Association conference this week that he is looking to implement mandatory second language studies in schools. My question is to the Minister of Learning. Is this a new policy direction for Alberta Learning?

DR. OBERG: Well, Mr. Speaker, it is a new direction, but it is actually a direction on the direction of this Legislative Assembly. As the hon. member remembers, I'm sure, in May of 2001 there was a motion passed by the hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose urging Alberta Learning to institute mandatory second languages by the year 2006-2007, and indeed we are following through on that. We take what happens in this Legislative Assembly very seriously, and we are following through. Despite that fact, I will also say that it is something that I support and it is something that is the right direction and the right thing to do for the students of Alberta.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. SHARIFF: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental is to the same minister. Can you explain why this policy is being implemented, and what language it will be? Will it be French, Ukrainian, Spanish, Vietnamese, Polish, or what language?

DR. OBERG: First of all, Mr. Speaker, what we see when we look around the world is that our students, our population is increasingly mobile. The days where we could put up the drawbridge around Alberta and say that you're never going to go to another country, you're never going to hear another language spoken, are gone. Quite simply, it's our obligation as Legislatures. It's my obligation as the Minister of Learning to prepare our students to go out into the world, and one of the best ways that I can prepare our students to go out in the world is to ensure that they have a second language.

Mr. Speaker, the other important question and something that I really want to make clear: there is a great deal of evidence that shows that when you learn a second language, the third, fourth, fifth, and sixth languages come that much easier. So in direct answer to your question, from my point of view, I really don't care which second language it is that they learn. It could be French; it could be Spanish; it could be Mandarin. But the propensity for a student to learn more than two languages when they know fluently two languages is so great that any second language will do.

MR. SHARIFF: Mr. Speaker, my final supplementary is also to the same minister. Does mandatory second language instruction mean that every school across the province will need teachers trained in second languages, and will the money come from the existing budget or will the government provide additional resources?

DR. OBERG: Well, Mr. Speaker, that is, in all fairness, the million dollar question. One of the issues we're looking at is how we can bring the second languages out to the Gem, Alberta, to the Standard, Alberta. How can we do it? One of the very impressive things that is on the horizon is the Supernet. We really feel that through videoconferencing we can have teachers that are expert in languages deliver it over videoconferencing to students in small rural areas. I think it's impractical to assume that we will have that many second language teachers by the year 2006-2007; therefore, we have to look for alternative ways that we can allow these students to learn, and Supernet, in all fairness, is probably looking like the best way.

Again, that's why we said 2006-2007, because these are some of the hurdles that we have to overcome. Another very large hurdle, of course, is curriculum, and we're in the process of developing curriculum in all these different languages so that we can institute it. Just because it's hard doesn't mean we shouldn't do it. It's extremely important.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests
(reversion)

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Learning.

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I seem to be speaking a lot today. It is a great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the Members of the Legislative Assembly a gentleman who has served on the Irrigation Council and who is now presently a councillor for the county of Newell. I would ask Chris Vermeeren to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Legislative Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I hope that my guests have been able to stay. I'd like to introduce Anand Sharma, who's the chair of the Council of Alberta University Students, who is concerned with the high cost of tuition, and Scott Winder, the coordinator of that organization, who is also concerned with the high cost of tuition. I would ask them to both rise if they're still here and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, a couple more: Gail Hogarth and Kris Andreychuk, who are first year social work students at Grant MacEwan College. They're working in the constituency offices of Edmonton-Highlands and Edmonton-Strathcona respectively as part of their practicum requirement. I'd ask them if they're still here to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

head: Members' Statements

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Support for Low-income Albertans

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Government of Canada as well as the provinces and territories agreed during the social union initiative that their first priority should be children in poverty and persons with disabilities. The prices of utility bills, food, shelter, and other necessities are jumping higher and higher, but the money paid to recipients of supports for independence and assured income for the severely handicapped stays the same. More and more of these people have to decide between heating their homes and buying food for their kids. Take a moment to consider which you'd let your child do without: heat or food.

Forcing a single person to live on $402 a month is appalling, considering that a very modest apartment costs that much to rent. When asked if he could live on $402 a month, on Tuesday the Premier admitted that he could not. Why, then, should any other Albertan? The time to help low-income people is now.

Alberta Health estimates that 1 in 8 Alberta children live in poverty. That fact means that innocent children are not getting the same opportunities to develop and grow as other children in this province just because they are poor. Alberta's Human Resources and Employment minister recently announced that parents on SFI could retain their health benefits after finding work and leaving the program. I commend the minister for this. Now, what about the other families trying to put food on the table with the pittance left over after they pay rent? Those people have a right to adequate health care too.

An MLA low-income review committee cost the government more than half a million dollars earlier this year and proved the obvious: Albertans living on SFI and AISH need more money to live. The meagre sum they now receive barely allows them to exist. This government is always talking about giving people a hand up instead of a handout. A good example of this would be to increase the exemptions for people living on SFI and AISH so they are encouraged to work and gain valuable experience by keeping a larger portion of the money they earn. AISH and SFI recipients need a raise, and they need it now.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Canadian Unity

MR. LORD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It appears to me that the latest intergovernmental dispute that we are having over Kyoto is being used by western separatists to promote their agenda, which is unfortunate because, clearly, Kyoto is not just an Alberta argument; it is a Canada-wide argument. In fact, far from being a reason to separate from Canada, Kyoto may actually be uniting the country, just not uniting it in a manner that our esteemed Prime Minister had originally anticipated.

On the subject of separation I've always wondered why so many citizens across this country have always wanted to jump from the frying pan into the fire, so to speak, so much so that I wonder if Confederation has ever really been given any sort of fair chance. I ask that question, Mr. Speaker, because you don't have to read a lot of western Canadian media headlines from the past century to quickly reach the conclusion that we have always been shortchanged out here. But, then, that's really just one side of the media's story; isn't it? As I always say: every coin not only has two sides; in fact, it actually has at least three.

Not surprisingly, it turns out, with a little research, that eastern Canadian media coverage over the past century has a distinctly different version of events. For example, eastern media coverage would have you believe that the NEP didn't actually cause the real estate collapse out here at all. They claim that high interest rates did it and that it didn't suck tens of billions of dollars out either, and whatever impact it had, that was money that was going to go south of the border anyway since the industry was 85 percent American-owned at the time. In fact, some easterners still talk about the first national energy policy, the Diefenbaker plot, in which they apparently had to massively subsidize us. Of course, there was that Avro Arrow project.

So I guess we should ask, Mr. Speaker: if the eastern headlines with such a different version of the facts cannot be believed, why should western headlines be any different? Personally, I think Canadians from coast to coast seem to get along pretty well with each other, at least whenever we aren't discussing the latest newspaper headlines. So let's not be manipulated into breaking up this incredible country.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Presenting Petitions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Rocky View.

MS HALEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to present a petition signed by approximately 389 people from mostly my constituency. The main part of the petition is:

We, the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government to remove abortion from the list of insured services that will be paid for through Alberta Health.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood.

MR. MASYK: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to present a petition on behalf of the Member for Lesser Slave Lake. It's signed by 48 Albertans requesting that the government "remove abortions from the list of insured services."

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Little Bow.

MR. McFARLAND: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table petitions bearing 136 names mostly from the communities of Coaldale, Coalhurst, Diamond City, Enchant, Hays, Iron Springs, Monarch, Nobleford, Picture Butte, Turin, and Vauxhall, areas in our constituency. The petitioners are urging the Legislative Assembly of Alberta to deinsure abortions.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to present a petition signed by another 166 people from throughout Alberta asking that the government take action to recognize and protect Bighorn country. This brings the total so far of petitions signed to 4,521 people from Alberta who wish to have this protection established.

head: Notices of Motions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Community Development.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Normally at this time, as the House would know, I would be rising to move a motion that written questions and motions for returns stand and retain their places, but since there are none on the Order Paper, I thought I would just bring it to the House's attention that that is the case.

head: Introduction of Bills

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Learning.

Bill 35

Teachers' Pension Plans Amendment Act, 2002

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 35, the Teachers' Pension Plans Amendment Act, 2002.

Mr. Speaker, this allows for $60 million to be paid to the teachers of Alberta, or a little over $1,800 per teacher, as was concluded in the good faith agreement that was signed in the spring of this year.

[Motion carried; Bill 35 read a first time]

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

THE CLERK: Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 37.1(2) I wish to advise the House that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk by the hon. Minister of Finance: pursuant to the Alberta Municipal Financing Corporation Act, section 30, the Alberta Municipal Financing Corporation 2001 annual report and the Credit Union Deposit Guarantee Corporation 2001 annual report.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Economic Development.

MR. NORRIS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table the appropriate number of copies of a report from the Canadian Plastics Industry Association which calls for a made-in-Canada solution to the Kyoto climate change.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Community Development.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table the appropriate number of copies of a letter of congratulations to CKUA Radio, who today are celebrating their 75th anniversary. This is an important cultural icon in our province, a unique model. Today I was very pleased to be there with the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, and I think the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora may have dropped by or will be later. I know this House supports what they do because it's launched the careers of many a broadcaster, many an artist, and the volunteer network is incredible. So I'll table this on their behalf and congratulate them now.

Thank you.

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, I wish to table today the annual report of Livestock Identification Services Ltd., which incorporates the Brand Act, the Livestock Identification and Brand Inspection Act, the Livestock and Livestock Products Act, and the Stray Animals Act, and their associated audited financial statements for the year ended March 31, 2002.

Additionally, Mr. Speaker, I would like to file a copy of the news release issued today announcing that the Alberta farm water program deadline for the completion of projects to help secure long-term water supplies has been extended to March 31, 2003, from November 30, 2002.

Also being filed, Mr. Speaker, is the Farmers' Advocate of Alberta annual report for 2001.

Mr. Speaker, copies of these reports are available through my office if members wish.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling the requisite number of copies of a letter which I've received from Michael Chandler. Michael is a resident of the Protegra group home, and he is very concerned with funding cuts by the Edmonton PDD community board which will impact the frontline staff who assist him with his daily living chores.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table five copies of a letter from a constituent, Brian Blair, who is reacting to a discussion some time ago about the possibilities of denying health coverage to those who were not wearing seat belts or engaging in other high-risk behaviors.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Government Services.

MR. COUTTS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to table today the appropriate number of copies of the 2000 vital statistics annual review. This review summarizes all births, marriages, deaths, and stillbirths which occurred in Alberta during the year 2000.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Highwood.

MR. TANNAS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to table five copies on behalf of my colleague the hon. Member for Livingstone-Macleod. These are copies of letters signed by 407 constituents who requested that the Headwaters health authority boundaries remain as they are at the current time.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, before I call on the Opposition House Leader to raise a question, might we revert in the Routine to the section known as Presenting Reports by Standing and Special Committees?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Presenting Reports by Standing and Special Committees

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

MR. HUTTON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As chair of the Standing Committee on the Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund I would firstly like to thank Karen Sawchuk, the committee clerk, for the fine work she does on behalf of our committee.

Today I am tabling the report of the Standing Committee on the Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund for the 2001-2002 fiscal year.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Projected Government Business

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Opposition House Leader.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would now ask if the government could share with us the projected business for next week.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes, indeed, we'd be happy to share that. On Monday afternoon under Introduction of Bills we'll be introducing Bill 37, the Occupational Health and Safety Amendment Act, 2002, and then we'll be proceeding with Private Members' Business, Written Questions, and the usual Routine. At 8 that same evening we'll deal with Motions Other than Government Motions, and under Government Bills and Orders we'll do second reading, we hope, of Bill 36, the Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2002 (No. 2); Bill 35, the Teachers' Pension Plans Amendment Act, 2002; Bill 33, the North Red Deer Water Authorization Act; and Bill 34, the Seniors Advisory Council for Alberta Amendment Act, 2002.

On Tuesday the afternoon Routine will include second reading of Bill 32, the Climate Change and Emissions Management Act. The evening session will include Bill 32, Climate Change and Emissions Management Act. After second reading of that, we'll go to Committee of the Whole, which will include Bill 36, Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2002 (No. 2), and Bill 31, Security Management Statutes Amendment Act, 2002.

On Wednesday the Routine for the afternoon will include second reading of Bill 32, Climate Change and Emissions Management Act and, we hope, third reading of Bill 36, Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2002 (No. 2). Anything remaining at second and third readings will be taken upon further consultation with the opposition members. On Wednesday evening we will continue with second reading of the Climate Change and Emissions Management Act, then going on to Committee of the Whole, Bill 30-2, Adult Interdependent Relationships Act; Bill 31, Security Management Statutes Amendment Act; Bill 35, Teachers' Pension Plans Amendment Act, 2002; Bill 33, North Red Deer Water Authorization Act; and Bill 34, Seniors Advisory Council for Alberta Amendment Act; and, as per the consultation with the opposition, perhaps others.

On Thursday, Mr. Speaker, we will have second reading of Bill 37, Occupational Health and Safety Amendment Act, 2002, and anything remaining at second and third readings will be subject to consultation with the opposition, as per normal.

head: Orders of the Day

head: Committee of Supply

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: We'll call the committee to order.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you. Mr. Chairman, after communication on this important aspect of today's business with the Official Opposition and the third party representatives I seek the unanimous consent of the Assembly to waive Standing Order 58(4) to allow this afternoon's consideration of the supplementary estimates to go beyond two hours, with the vote on these estimates to take place no later than 5:15 this afternoon, as per Standing Order 58(5), or sooner if there are no additional speakers.

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Supplementary Estimates 2002-03
General Revenue Fund

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Chairman, this afternoon we're going to deal with a number of supplementary estimates, and in the interests of moving that forward, I will be of course doing the overview on Agriculture, Food and Rural Development, as well as the Department of Learning for my colleague. Ministers who wish will make comments, obviously, before each one of their estimates, and it would be considered that we might do them as ordered in the book unless the opposition members have a particular order they'd like us to change around.

Agriculture, Food and Rural Development

MRS. McCLELLAN: This supplementary estimate in Agriculture, Mr. Chairman, is fairly straightforward. When we look at agriculture in the year 2002, there are a number of words that come to mind: challenging, a disastrous year, record dry conditions not seen for more than 130 years. More alarming, most recent soil moisture reports tell us that 90 percent of our agricultural area still has insufficient moisture for cropping next spring, so obviously we certainly need above normal spring and winter precipitation to reduce this risk for next year.

In view of this, Mr. Chairman, this government moved fairly quickly to try and answer some of those challenges that our agricultural community was facing. We declared a disaster in the agricultural community on August 20, 2002. The supplementary estimate in total that we're requesting, $405,118,000, was approved by Treasury Board on July 16 and 24 based on the ministry's first-quarter forecast updates. For the members, $349.3 million is for the farm income assistance program; $324 million of that was in acreage payments; $15 million was to deliver the Alberta farm water program, the deadline of which was to be November 30, which today we extended to March 31 due to pressures and need. The application deadline is extended to May 31, 2003.

It's a bit confusing if you are not familiar with this program to understand why your project completion would be March 31 and your application deadline would be May 31. However, in the interests of responding to a critical need for farm water projects, understanding that the people who would use this program are quite capable of looking at program guidelines and understanding whether their project would qualify or not, rather than having producers go through a cumbersome application process and approvals and hence delaying their project getting off and running, we've done it in a bit of a different way. I must say that it was very, very gratefully received by the agricultural community, and I want to express our department's thanks to the other departments who have co-operated in making sure we could try and respond.

There was $10.3 million there to deliver to the grasshopper control assistance program.

The additional dollars: $55,818,000 to make grant payments to Ag Financial Services for crop insurance and the farm income disaster program, $25,917,000 for the provincial share of crop insurance premiums and $29,901,000 – you can tell I'm a farmer; it's hard for me to even say thousand – for additional provincial costs for FIDP, based on the first-quarter estimated indemnities of $121,000,000 compared to the budget of $90 million.

Mr. Chairman, these are fairly straightforward. I don't think anybody will question the need for those dollars. There may always be some debate over whether they've all been expended in the way that one might think is right; however, I can tell you that the majority of the money is in the farmers' hands, and certainly that was our government's first concern.

In having visited with a great number of producers over the last months and recently with 1,000 representatives of Alberta Municipal Districts and Counties who were in town this week, just concluding their meetings today, I felt very good about the response from the producers. I might say that Alberta Municipal Districts and Counties were greatly involved in the development of the programs and have made a commitment to continue to work with us on our drought management plan so that in the future we'll be better prepared to respond if indeed we have to face a year like this again. I think we all pray most fervently that we don't.

I look forward to questions, if I can, for clarification indeed, or if members just have comments, we can cover those at this time. Thank you.

Sorry, Mr. Chairman. I think I am to move that estimate. I would move that the Assembly approve this spending of $405,118,000 as the supplementary estimate for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2003.

3:10

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Official Opposition.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Just a couple of comments on the programs. You know, I think the real issue is clarification, because a lot of the questions that came through my office, both as the agriculture critic and also as an MLA in a rural area – a lot of people in Lethbridge farm outside town even though they live in my constituency – had to deal with the proper transfer of definitions. There were some concerns about: if this were truly a drought disaster program, why is it that, you know, the program was being paid out in the way it was, not related to any kind of a definition of drought? For this, I'm speaking mostly here about the farm income assistance program, or the acreage payment program, as a lot of farmers refer to it. It went beyond acres. It also paid out on the basis of hives for honey producers. It paid out on the basis of square footage for greenhouse operators. That payout is the one that I'd like to ask a question about.

A lot of individuals came to my office and said: well, if it's a drought payment, what's that got to do with greenhouses? This is a very controlled environment. How do we justify to them if it's drought in a controlled environment situation how come we're making payments? So I put that to the minister so that I can judge her response now to the response that I gave when people would ask about it.

The other question that comes up in the context of the whole way we made the payouts. There was a lot of concern about the acreage payment program. There was a lot of discussion about why it was provided on a blanket basis across the whole province. I attended a number of meetings over the summer where farmers were asking questions about this, you know, trying to get clarification on what it was. How was it designed? I guess the issue that comes up is: when we're responding to questions from farmers, are we giving them clear answers?

I was disappointed, I guess is a way to put it, in a response that was given by one of the departmental officials when asked in a meeting just outside Edmonton here, south and east of here, about the acreage payment program and why it wasn't earmarked and why it was paid equally to all acres. The individual got up and made a comment. Well, they showed north, central, and southern Alberta and said that the average carrying capacity and the average productivity in those areas were basically the same. Mr. Chairman, that may be true if you do it on a north, central, and south basis, but if you actually look at it on an east, central, and west basis, that's where you see the productivity differentials in this province because that's where soil classifications run. They run north and south so that, in effect, it's that way that the product differentials show up if you deal with land base in this province.

You know, it was kind of interesting. Everybody in this House knows that I farm in southern Alberta, and my farm happens to be irrigated. Now, I'll start by saying that because I haven't applied before for public support programs, I didn't get the little form in the mail that would allow me to check the box and send it back, but in the context of eligibility, I could have for the land on my farm.

It's quite interesting because this is an irrigated farm which has a whole bunch of public money already in that infrastructure that provides, in effect, drought-proofing for me. The way it worked – and I know there are some other irrigated farms where a higher yield was not experienced this year because of cooler temperatures and crop varieties, but on my particular farm I had my best yields in five years. I also had probably the best prices in 20 years. Not only that; I didn't have to irrigate as much this year because in our particular area we did get rain this year. So instead of irrigating my normal three times for the crop mix that I had, I only irrigated once. From all of that combination what you saw was public subsidy for the infrastructure, high yields, high prices, lower costs, and I still could have – and I emphasize “could have” – received the acreage payment. You know, this is what's wrong when we put together programs that, in effect, are blanket programs.

Now, I truly respect the minister's wish to get these dollars out quickly, and, yes, this is one of the ways that it can be done, although in the end there were a number of farmers still calling late in the summer saying, “Where are the dollars?” And you would say, “Well, did you send in your form?” So there was a timing issue there as well. In effect, the acreage payment based on last year's acreage registrations was a good approach if you wanted to pay it to everybody and everybody was going to be given the same response. We used the acreage payment, Mr. Chairman, last year on the basis of some drought, but an awful lot of the issue last year was the high cost of inputs caused by energy price increases, the very high cost of fertilizers because of natural gas prices spiking during the winter and spring of last year. So you could get to the idea that, yes, a blanket acreage payment issue probably was the easiest way to do it a year ago, but if the payment was made this year solely on the basis of drought, that being the disaster, then we had to deal with it in a different way this year.

[Mr. Tannas in the chair]

We look at it also in the sense that, yes, there were other factors besides the drought. We had an unbelievable year for grasshoppers this year, but we also had the grasshopper program, which, in effect, provided support to farmers who were in that area and offset some of the costs – and I emphasize “some of the costs” – associated with having to undertake more intensive pesticide application to deal with those grasshoppers. But it wasn't broad-based enough to justify an acreage payment to everybody. It should be targeted.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to submit to the House here that the more effective way for us to have handled that program this summer would have been to allow for an early application for a farm income disaster payment. That's the program that's been in place. It has been there for farmers, and it would have targeted the dollars to individual farmers who actually were experiencing income reductions.

If we look at it from the point of view of the crisis that was there from the drought, the way to overcome that and to in effect make this program more useful than what the previous FIDP would have been was to have said: “Okay. Normally we pay out on a FIDP based on a positive margin. If you get down to a zero margin, you don't get a payment.” Well, in a crisis/disaster situation like we were facing this year, it would have been very reasonable to say that a negative payment, say, 25 percent or 30 percent of our negative margin, would have been eligible. That way we would have extended the public support beyond the level that was provided through the normal FIDP program, but we would also have targeted the public money to the individuals who truly needed it. That would have in effect helped us.

In order to deal with this on a rapid basis – I've talked to a number of people, and almost everybody that I've been able to chat with on how they deal with this has their farm business plans on record with some financial institution. Even the financial institution that I deal with says that it would have been very reasonable for them to sit down and review the financial plan of their customers and make an estimate of where they stood financially for this year. We could have then paid out on a proportionate basis for the potential loss they would have had under a FIDP program. We wouldn't have had to go to the acreage payment that gave it to everybody instead of to the people who actually experienced a farm income loss. If we would have done that, you know, the banks could have then, in effect, almost by turning around and turning on their computer, issued a credit to the farmer's bank account, subsequently issued a debit to the government's bank account, and just have been a pass through for that money.

Now, to make sure that it was accurate – you know, if a farmer went in with false records and the bank manager or the bank loans officer was making a decision on the basis of the records provided, we could do two things: pay as a percentage of what was owed, just like we did under the early FIDP program that was available and just like we did for the acreage payment. We paid a percentage until it was verified. That way, what we could do is pay the percentage of the claim through the bank, and if there was an error made or on final application in the spring, after tax time, we could have then said: okay; if we overpaid you, you have to pay it back on the basis of a refund, but if we owed more . . .

MRS. McCLELLAN: If you've ever written that letter, boy, it doesn't come easy.

DR. NICOL: The minister says that it doesn't come easy to do that, but I think most farmers out there would recognize the fact that it would be responsible for them to do it. That way, if we only pay out a percentage – and I emphasize this. If we only pay out a percentage, we would not have very many farmers asking for dollars back. We have an obligation for the program to be put in place in a way that we are being responsible for those public taxpayer dollars. The minister is over there laughing at this idea, but really it's a commitment to the public that we are spending their dollars wisely rather than what we're doing, which is just giving away money to people who truly don't need it in a crisis situation. So I point that out, Mr. Chairman, as a way that this could have been done that would have been much more effective and much more efficient in the context of making sure that we were wise managers of the public dollar.

The other areas that we paid out in terms of the ministry of agriculture under the programs for crop insurance – this is just basically a reflection again of, you know, the exceptional disaster year that we had this year, and I think we have to be expecting that. I guess I would ask the minister how the reinsurance component of it actually fits together with that, whether or not it was covering some of that, how much we saved by doing a reinsurance.

The other one that you look at there is, in effect, how we deal with explaining again the payments, as I said earlier, to the greenhouse, but that's the area that we have to look at in terms of what the true purpose of these payments was. If we're going to make the payments more broad based than the publicly perceived disaster – and last year, from the perspective of the public, they saw drought as the disaster, not the issue of high costs or other aspects. So if it was in response to high costs, we need to make sure that that is part of the news release, the explanation, the public information package that's put out there, because it came back to my office on a number of occasions about why it was that a number of these groups were getting the dollars.

With that, Mr. Chairman, I think I'll stop on this particular ministry, and we'll deal with it from the perspective of where we're at. I think we can be much more proactive in the future if we properly design our support programs so that they do reflect the true aspect. I have proposed on a number of occasions that we should be looking at an insurance program rather than a public handout program, one that's participatory. I've explained this on a number of occasions, including to a couple of the minister's staff, and we need to make sure that we look at this as an alternative, look at it as an option for really sharing risk management with both the public and the producers. If we do that, then we're making sure that the risk management component is truly part of the decision-making of producers rather than just kind of waiting, if disaster strikes, then expecting a public handout. If we do this as a partnership, do it in a way that producers get access to this kind of signal that they have to be active in participating in their risk management, I think our programs will be much better.

Just for this House's information I spoke with an individual who had to go outside Canada, actually, but has managed to put together an insurance program very much like the one that I've talked about and has at this point seemed very satisfied with the way it's worked for them in terms of guaranteeing their costs of production through an insurance program which is totally funded by that producer as opposed to even any kind of public support, public sharing of the premiums that had to be paid, like we used to do under crop insurance.

In conclusion, that would be the only other comment that I would raise for the minister. A number of people asked why we stopped this year the premium-sharing for crop insurance, and I was just basically giving back to them the explanation that the minister gave at budget time last spring of why that was not going to be carried forward. I think that, you know, in that context, public decisions, political decisions, budget decisions get made and people accept that, but in effect to me that's a much more effective way to make sure that we involve producers in risk management by expanding the insurance programs and cutting back significantly on the direct handout programs.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

MRS. McCLELLAN: I just want to try and deal with a few questions. We've been down this road before, so I'm not going to take a whole bunch of the House's time. It's always easy to design a program in theory but much more difficult to respond when you've got 75 percent of your agricultural acreage in the province, including grass and forage – and your cattle are going out to the markets, 25 to 50 percent of the herds could be demolished, losing your breeding stock. You know, you can do it. You could do a production-based model, and we would be like the federal government, who have studied how they're going to put their $600 million of assistance out to producers and ensure that the people who needed it the most got it. Well, the feds studied it for four or five months, and what did they do? They put it through NISA. Well, if you're in northeastern Alberta and you haven't had a crop for four out of five years, I can say, "Boy, have you ever got a good net cash sales record." If you've been in southern Alberta in nonirrigated areas and you've had four out of five years of devastation, boy, have you got a good record in NISA and are you ever going to get a dandy bit of help from that program when the cheques start to come. Now, the first moneys are deposited into NISA accounts, and I'm grateful for that. Isn't that wonderful? But it's very questionable as to whether the producers can even trigger it, because the triggering mechanism in that program hasn't worked for the life of the program and still doesn't.

3:30

That's why Alberta went out of this program in 1996, and it's why we will not go back in it until the federal government listens and improves that program to respond to Alberta farmers: beginning farmers, developing farmers. I mean, I am all for putting money away. You know, I think farmers deserve to have some type of retirement to look forward to. NISA was intended as a net income stabilization program. It is not, and that money should not have been delivered that way, and that is why Alberta did not take their cost sharing and put it into that program.

What we did do was deliver some help to producers, and the first cheques did go out within 10 days, and the administration of costs of that program is under 1 percent. The last federal program that they designed, where they went through all of the rigmarole, cost them 20 percent to administer, they tell me. Well, would I prefer the money to be in producers' hands or in an administrative nightmare? I prefer this way.

I've talked to some farmers that didn't approve of the program and the way it was done. I've talked to a few that said that there are a few that got some money that shouldn't have. Well, maybe they didn't have crop for the two, three years before that. When it's 75 percent plus of the acreage and the fact is that a lot of those so-called wonderful crops are still not off, I think Mother Nature had a great way of leveling it.

We addressed the issue of productivity on pasture. You know, I had a lot of help from some of my colleagues in this room that talked about native forage or pasture being different than tame. We looked at all of the records. The records are that it has about a 2 and a half percentage production increase on stocking rates, and that's exactly what we paid out: $10 on seeded or tame and $4 on native. That's two and a half times, so I think that leveled out, and the producers that I talked to agreed with that.

Why did we include greenhouses? Well, I had calls from a lot of greenhouse operators that said: "Thank you very much. Very few people recognize that because we're in a controlled environment, we had additional costs with the heat and the drought. We have to have water, of course, for our plants. But not only that, we had the problem of cooling." So their costs were up a great deal because of the weather this year. With market gardens, the same. And hives: I don't have to explain that one.

You know, the ultimate answer is this: you improve your safety net programs. Had we been able to have safety net program improvements in place for this year, we would not have been dealing with this drought, acreage, or whatever. However, the federal government had launched a review of safety nets. They had just simply put their foot down and said: until we conclude that review, until we sign off on the ag policy framework which moves us forward on these new things, we're not going to participate in changes to crop insurance.

So we did it that way, and over the past several months I probably have talked to more farmers than most in this area. There are a number of my colleagues here, though, that I know have talked to about as many. Unquestionably, whether they agreed with every aspect of it, they said: "Thank you. Thank you for responding. Thank you for showing that you care and for trying to get it out as quickly as you can." I believe we made a difference. We did not lose the breeding stock that we had feared we would. So we did it. If you could've done it through a FIDP program – well, first of all, it's a Canada/Alberta program, so there you are. You've got to go and negotiate with the feds. This deals with an income tax year, and that's not till next year, and I don't think producers could've waited. So it's really never easy to do these things.

The best thing is to put the best safety net program in. Well, we do have those plans. We have taken them through our system here. We've worked extensively with producers. We're negotiating with the federal government, and it's sure our hope that we're going to sell those contracts next spring. But I have no doubt that when we come to debate that, there will be, "You should've done it this way," and "You should've done it that way," and I'll listen. I'll be polite, and I'll say: okay; that's good. But the majority of the producers in this province – from north, central, south, east, and west – have agreed with what we're going to propose in that program. It is the right way to go: have good safety nets.

I can also tell producers and every member in this Assembly that when we introduce the changes to these programs, when we have an insurance program that we believe will provide the risk management tools that producers need, they are going to have an opportunity to buy in or manage their risk on their own, and this minister will not be dealing with ad hoc payments in the future on these issues. Hon. Leader of the Opposition, there is absolutely no question that we will recapture all of our insurance money this year. That's an absolute. There is no question.

So, as I say, yes, there are a few farms that probably got $7.35 an acre. Peanuts. I would suggest to you that if we had tried to do the production modeling and had attempted to pay this out, draw lines, I would still be getting phone calls, letters that the lines were in the wrong place, that I used the wrong model, that the moisture wasn't there, that the production wasn't there, and we would not have over 80 percent of the farmers with their cheques. I get the same calls and letters you do – probably more of them – that say: you told us this money would be out, and I haven't got mine." As soon as I checked, I found out that there was an error on the application. In fact, the odd time he hadn't applied or even sent it back. But even better than that, some farmers are very aggressive, and they applied more than once. They had a chance to e-mail it back, so they did. They weren't sure if that worked, so they faxed it, and in case that fax didn't go through, they thought they'd send it through the mail. Just in case Canada Post didn't mail it, maybe we should check again and make sure it did. I think the record is seven applications on the same, but I don't blame them. They're aggressive, they need the money, and they wanted to make sure their applications were getting in.

Generally, it's gone very, very well. Very few errors on land, but we can't pay for the same land twice, so when there is an error, we do have to deal with it. Quite often these are where there's more than one person involved in the farm. The land is in individuals' names and they farm together, and it makes it a little bit more difficult to sort it out.

So it's gone very well, but let's just remember the bottom line. Let's work hard together to get out of it, because it doesn't matter how many ways you dance around on this one: you are not going to get the perfect solution in an ad hoc payment. Somebody will always be on the wrong side of the line. Somebody will always get something, or at least the perception will be that somebody got something they didn't need or couldn't use.

Generally, I have attended Farmfair, Agri-Trade, AAMD and C, and as I toured the barns in Agrifair, where you'd have thought we'd get more criticism in the north because of this, it was consistent: "Thank you. Thank you for responding quickly. Thank you for making it simple." Farmers don't like complicated forms, which FIDP is. "Thank you for recognizing that there's a problem out there, and most of all, thank you for continuing to try to put safety net programs in place so we don't have to deal with this again." Most of all, for all of us, let's just pray for better conditions for next year.

THE CHAIR: We have several people who have indicated, hon. minister, that they would like to speak. Edmonton-Mill Woods had earlier indicated he might wish to speak. The Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition and the Minister of Municipal Affairs would like to speak.

DR. NICOL: For a short time, Mr. Chairman. I just wanted to reiterate to the minister on her concerns about the NISA program and the federal application of the support through the NISA program: a terrible way to do it. I agree with everything she said, that that is not the way to do it. It's not getting the dollars in the hands of individuals when they need it, how they need it, and in response to the needs, so I'm fully in support of what the minister is saying. The federal government application through NISA should never have been supported. I've never said that it was a good way to do it, and I wanted that on the record, because it was implied that just because it was the federal government doing it, I supported it. I've never supported that idea. I do support the idea that the minister is talking about in terms of making sure that in the future we have those programs in place and that we make sure that in the future they are farm participatory. That is absolutely essential, and I'll do what I can to help the minister make that work.

THE CHAIR: Okay. I do have a list for speaking next if we're not on agriculture. [interjection] You can come back to agriculture later. Anyway, I've got several people who wish to speak on agriculture still.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. My questions are for the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. Thinking both of the supplementary estimates and the very substantial amount that's required for the farming income assistance program, my concern is that next year these kinds of things may come up routinely in supplementary estimates. Is she looking ahead at all to a long-term trend in expenditures of this nature and folding those into the budget so that we don't need to return to supplementary estimates with such dramatic numbers year after year? Is there a long-term trend in which we may be concerned about increasing disastrous agricultural conditions, and if so, are those being built into the budget so we don't need the supplementary estimates year after year?

MRS. McCLELLAN: I quite understand if the hon. member doesn't understand all of the jargon in this business. Farm programs are quite complex – there's no question – and unless you take it upon yourself to really study them, some of the jargon does kind of fall away.

When I talked about risk management, when I talked about the insurance programs that we are negotiating now with the federal government, you heard me say that had we been able to conclude those negotiations last year and implement changes to our insurance program this year, we would not have been looking at the $324 million program in acreage. We definitely still would have been dealing with water; we would've been dealing probably with grasshoppers, because those issues would be there.

Under our crop insurance program we insure about 40 different crops. So it's very inclusive, but until we can fix the inadequacies in that program so that it is a genuine insurance program, we will be faced with this. It is not our intention to deal with ad hoc programs next year. It is our intention to successfully conclude negotiations with the federal government to improve our safety net programs so that the risk management tools that producers have will be there.

They can buy in, or they can say: I can do it on my own. The exception would be for disasters that occur in noninsurable areas. Of course, we have that through my hon. colleague the Minister of Municipal Affairs where he deals with matters that are uninsurable.

There is also a contemplation by the federal government and under discussion with the producers that the new NISA program – they call it super NISA – would have a disaster component to it. Discussions aren't far enough along in that area to know, but the short answer is: I do not anticipate having to do this in future years, pending the success of negotiations of having a safety net program that truly responds to producers.

If you consider that it's insurance, one of the best ways to describe it to a person who is not familiar with using the program is that if you insure your house for $150,000 and it burns down, you have replacement insurance at a certain level, and you expect to get that. With that same house – you built it, and it's a $150,000 house – you insure it for $150,000 and, unfortunately, it burns down again the next year, you would expect to get your insurance if all things were proper: it was something that happened; it wasn't set or anything. And you could go to the third year in the same context. However, in agriculture and crop insurance the difficulty we've had is in the indexing. So if your production goes down and, as happened to us in the past two or three or four years, the price of the commodity also goes down, in fact, you are not insuring the cost of your production or the value of your product, truly. So we have to deal with those things. When we deal with that in these negotiations, we can say to producers everywhere in this province: "Here's your insurance program. This is your risk management tool. You buy in. You pay your share of the premium, and you're on your own." Remember that the two levels of government pay 60 percent of the premium, and they pay 40 percent. So we will be able to do that.

I apologize if some of our jargon makes it a little bit more complex, but when we talk risk management, that is the safety net programs. If those safety net programs respond to the needs of the producer and provide an insurance that is appropriate for what they do and what they produce, we will not have to go to these types of programs in the future.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview?

DR. TAFT: No. That's fine. Thank you. I appreciate that.

Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development

THE CHAIR: Okay. The hon. Minister of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development.

MS CALAHASEN: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'm here today to request a supplementary estimate of $32,150,000 to provide funding to the Peigan, otherwise known as the Piikani First Nation, pursuant to an agreement among the Piikani First Nation, the government of Canada, and the government of Alberta.

Since 1986 Alberta had been in litigation with the Peigan Nation, otherwise known as the Piikani, regarding the ownership of the beds, shores, and water of the Oldman River and the legality of the construction of the Oldman River dam. The First Nation had filed nine specific claims against Canada regarding related matters, several of which had an impact on Alberta as a third party. This settlement arose out of negotiations that followed a protocol agreement signed by the Premier, the former minister of intergovernmental and aboriginal affairs, and the Peigan chief and council in October of 1998. Mr. Chairman, the Piikani Nation has voted to accept the settlement agreement regarding the Lethbridge northern headworks system, the Oldman River dam, and related issues. The voting occurred, and 522 said no and 722 said yes, so I'm asking the Assembly to accept $32,150,000 for the fiscal year 2002-03.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I had a couple of questions for the minister. I'm sorry; I didn't hear all of the minister's remarks as well as I should have. How many more settlements are in the works now, or are there other settlements that the department is involved with? Are there some projections of the future costs of settlements, and is there any way that the settlement costs can be handled in the business plans of the department? I guess the last question I'd have is: what is the federal government's role in these settlements? Are they contributors? What arrangements are in place?

MS CALAHASEN: Mr. Chairman, first of all, his first question: how many more settlements in the works? There are a few that are still in the works. However, there are different settlements that we have. We have land claim settlements, and then we have legal settlements. So many of them are in the works. We've got land claim settlements that are still outstanding. Just as an example, the Bigstone Cree, the Fort McMurray, and the Fort MacKay, as well as the Lubicon and a number of other land claims are still unsettled.

DR. MASSEY: How many?

MS CALAHASEN: I don't have that number, but I certainly can get it for you, and I can pass it on to you.

Offhand, as I was just indicating, there have been the five that I outlined, and there are a number of others that are still coming through the system. Those are settlements that we get called on only after the federal government says that these are settlements that should go ahead from a land claim perspective. So we don't control that. The feds basically identify it as a land claim, and then we get called on as a third party.

In terms of any projection of future costs of settlements: no. These are negotiated; we try to make sure that we negotiate instead of litigate. So what we're trying to make sure is that we do these settlements as they come. We don't know what the future costs of these settlements could be.

In terms of whether or not it could be handled within the department business plan – because these are negotiations that take place, you don't let anybody know that you may want to settle at $32 million or otherwise. What we do is try to make sure that we go through the negotiation process. We determine from the negotiation what we come to and where we land.

THE CHAIR: Okay. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. The minister whistled through her notes with such enthusiasm that I missed a few of the points. I know there was a reference to the Oldman River dam. Could you go through that slowly for me and help me along on that, please? Thank you, Madam Minister.

MS CALAHASEN: Okay. Thank you. I forgot to answer a question. There was a question asked about the federal department involvement. The federal department has to be involved in these three parties of settlements. The government of Canada is also part of this whole negotiation, anything to do with that as well as land claims. So they are part and parcel of any negotiation that would take place within this whole category.

In terms of what you were saying, actually it was a settlement agreement, and that was to deal with the Lethbridge northern headworks system and the Oldman River dam and other related issues surrounding the Oldman River dam.

DR. TAFT: This is a very large piece of money relative to your total department. Could you elaborate a little bit? Were there liabilities? Was this to compensate for the loss of land? What's this for?

MS CALAHASEN: Mr. Chairman, as I indicated, we have been in litigation with the Peigan Nation regarding the ownership of the bed, the shores, and the water of the Oldman River and the legality of the construction of the Oldman River dam.

THE CHAIR: Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thank you. Just so I understand correctly, this is to compensate the Peigan band for the loss of their ownership of the bed and the shoreline of the Oldman River that resulted from the construction of the Oldman River dam. Is that correct?

MS CALAHASEN: Yes, it is, most of it in terms of looking at the ownership.

DR. TAFT: How much did the federal government pay in this same settlement?

MS CALAHASEN: They pay the same amount as we do, equal amounts.

THE CHAIR: Hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs, you've been jumping up and down. Do you wish to speak?

MR. BOUTILIER: I'm just casually rising at this moment. I would like to speak on any issue, if I could.

THE CHAIR: You're on.

Municipal Affairs

MR. BOUTILIER: Thank you. My purpose today as minister of Municipal Affairs is to ask for, actually, $17,685,000 to cover the unbudgeted costs of dealing with three provincial disasters this year. The disasters were the flooding in the Lethbridge area, where I know the Leader of the Official Opposition was impacted as well as many other MLAs, also the flooding in the Edson area, and the forest fires in north-central Alberta.

Now, the purpose of this province's well-regarded disaster recovery program is to assist Albertans with uninsured – and it's important to recognize and note “uninsured” – damages resulting from extraordinary events. We are not here to replace the role of an insurance company but to deal with those industries, those institutions and organizations, and citizens who cannot get insurance and, ultimately, to reimburse municipalities for the emergency operation costs that they incurred in responding to these events.

Now, since 1995 the provincial government has paid over $115 million in disaster recovery assistance. It's important to note that it is not possible to budget for events triggered by Mother Nature. Municipalities rely on us to finance the immediate response they mount when disaster strikes. I want to also say that if we do anything less, we really are not living up to our promise and helping Albertans, especially when they do need some help during these unfortunate events.

I want to also say that Treasury Board has agreed in principle with the funding for the disasters. I thank the Minister of Finance for her understanding and sensitivity toward this issue. Albertans and municipalities expect and need us to be there to help and address the costs of recovering from disasters.

If I could take a moment, though, I'd like to give you just a brief bit of detail of the municipalities and regions that were impacted, starting first with the 2002 southern Alberta disaster recovery program. The flood: in fact, costs amounted to over $15.6 million, which has been approved pursuant to section 4 of the disaster recovery regulation. The program will compensate residents, municipalities, farmers, small businesses, and others for losses resulting from flooding that occurred in southern Alberta this past June. Municipalities are also compensated for the emergency operation costs associated with the flooding and infrastructure damage. We will, of course, recover about $8.7 million from a cost-sharing agreement with our federal counterparts in the areas that have been affected.

I would like to recognize and appreciate the help of MLAs as their particular regions were impacted, especially also the municipalities and other government public bodies and organizations. The occurrence of floods in certain areas located within the geographic boundaries of the county of Lethbridge, Cardston county, the county of Forty Mile No. 8, the county of Warner No. 5, Cypress county, the municipal district of Pincher Creek No. 9, the municipal district of Taber, the municipal district of Willow Creek No. 26, and the municipality of Crowsnest Pass during the spring of 2002 caused extraordinary losses and damages to residences, farmers, businesses, and others that I've mentioned in those areas. I want to say that I sincerely thank the MLAs in those regions, who have been very supportive of the program we have been advocating and helping Albertans who, of course, face these disastrous events.

The second disaster was in north-central Alberta and is regarding the north-central Alberta disaster recovery program for fires. That was over a million dollars approved pursuant to the disaster recovery regulation. I will say that the fires that took place in areas including the regional municipality of Wood Buffalo, the municipal district of Opportunity No. 17, Lakeland county, Smoky Lake county, Sturgeon county, the Elizabeth Metis settlement, and Fishing Lake Metis settlement during the spring and summer of 2000 resulted in emergency response costs for municipalities of over a million dollars.

The third and final disaster in this past year was that of the flood that took place in the Edson area, over a million dollars for the west-central Alberta disaster recovery program. On August 29 the municipality and others experienced significant loss, and of course this program is intended to compensate, again, uninsurable losses, where Albertans couldn't get insurance. The government is not intended to be a substitute for insurance companies, but we're there with a hand up for residents and others during a time when they could not receive the insurance necessary. That is the intent of the program. We're executing it, I think, very well.

I want to say that I appreciate the MLAs' support in the respective areas that I've listed here today for the affected areas that experienced some real disaster, and of course what I'm proposing today is really direct action on behalf of my ministry and government to react to the needs of Albertans.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm concerned about the amount of money that taxpayers are on the hook for for disasters resulting from extreme weather events. I know that the topic of Kyoto is a very hot and sensitive one in here, and we'll just set the Kyoto accord aside for the moment but address the issue of climate change.

I think there are at least some members of the government who acknowledge that regardless of Kyoto climate change is occurring, and one of the warnings that comes with climate change is an increase in the number of extreme weather events. Most people studying the field will acknowledge that.

In fact, one of the biggest commentators on raising concerns over our climate change and an increase in extreme weather events is the reinsurance industry, the industry that insures the insurers, Lloyd's of London and so on. They, in fact, were one of the first industries to begin raising alarms over climate change, and they are one of the most outspoken, as I'm sure the minister knows. The concern for me here is that as the reinsurance industry pulls out of insuring private property for extreme weather events, our liabilities as taxpayers potentially increase because suddenly we're looking at uninsurable damages.

So when I look at millions of dollars here for fires and floods and then hundreds of millions of dollars in the agriculture business for drought, I have to ask this government, in particular the Minister of Municipal Affairs: what planning is your government undertaking to address the reinsurance industry's concerns over the increase in extreme weather events as a result of climate change?

THE CHAIR: The hon. minister.

MR. BOUTILIER: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I want to first of all say that I am quite convinced, contrary to comments made by federal ministers relative to the issue of the connection between drought and Kyoto, and I believe quite clearly that there is no connection. What I am speaking about today is something that we have experienced over the past, literally, hundreds of years, and as we've become organized in our society in dealing with those who need a hand up, that's exactly what we're doing. I also want to say that this government has been recognized across Canada in terms of our sensitivity in responding to Alberta's needs in dealing with these programs.

We do not intend ever to be a substitute for insurance. In fact, if I could for a moment, there have been some situations where fires have occurred and, actually, citizens have chosen to be underinsured. You know, it can really tug on your heart when an Albertan is coming forth saying: well, you know, I need the government's help. But the answer to that particular individual, a resident, after they've lost their home is that they chose in a free-market economy to underinsure their property, and that is something that has no role for the government. I want to assure the hon. member that the government will not be a substitute for what is the responsibility of citizens.

In this particular example this is uninsurable. It's a decision being made by industry on what they will insure.

I might also add that I'm quite convinced that tornadoes are not in any way connected to the issue of Kyoto, yet there are many insurance companies that will not cover tornadoes because of the fact of the high risk of it. What happens is that insurance companies go forward and do an analysis in terms of what is happening and the frequency. Like it or not, insurance companies are businesses too. They are looking for a return on what it is that they are doing, and they, obviously, don't apologize for wanting to make money, so they're saying no to certain areas quite simply because they think it's not in their business interest.

Now, that is their decision under a free market economy, but at the same time for those that are pulling back on the uninsurable examples that the hon. member has raised, I think that in the long term every government is going to have to look at it, but I do not in any way, shape, or form see that in any way connected to Kyoto.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I was trying to set the Kyoto accord aside. Let's just forget the Kyoto accord for now. The climate change can be separated from Kyoto. I just need the minister, if he can look to the chair, to be on record that he's saying that he sees no connection between climate change and extreme weather events. Did I understand that correctly?

MR. BOUTILIER: Let me be very clear, Mr. Chairman. What I said: there are federal cabinet ministers – and the hon. member across the way is suggesting that potentially there could be a connection. First of all, I will ask that question back through the chair. You are suggesting that there could be a connection between the weather phenomena we're experiencing today and the issue of Kyoto, if I understand the assertion of what you're saying. Through the chair to the hon. member: are you, in fact, saying that?

DR. TAFT: I'm trying to set the Kyoto accord aside as a treaty. Just forget the Kyoto accord. Climate change separately from any international treaty, just as an event in itself. Well, maybe he doesn't even accept climate change; fine. I'm just wanting to be on the record because it does affect this debate. I suppose, then, that there are two questions. Does the minister believe there is any climate change, and if he does, does he see any connection between climate change and an increase in extreme weather events?

I never mentioned federal cabinet ministers. I did mention the reinsurance industry.

MR. BOUTILIER: Thank you. First of all, relative to your comment on climate change – do I accept climate change? – I think it is quite clear historically, over the many thousands of years, that they have scientific proof that indicates that there have been changes in the weather phenomenon. I am not a scientist; I know that the hon. member is not a scientist. So relative to scientific fact we only can give our opinion, and my opinion is quite simply this: over time the issue of climate changing, the issue of global warming, which is another term that is used when dealing with Kyoto, federal ministers have taken the time to suggest that that's the reason why we have a drought in Alberta. It's because of Kyoto. I believe that that is simply not true. In fact, scientists have suggested that as well.

DR. TAFT: Okay. That's fine. We're struggling to communicate here, with moments of success.

So if we now address the reinsurance industry. I don't know where these federal cabinet ministers came from, but I'm sure we'd all happily forget them. The reinsurance industry, which is the industry that underwrites the insurers, consistently for years has raised concerns about increasing numbers of extreme weather events causing more and more massive damage and more and more cost to the industry, and as a result they are pulling out of some areas and some kinds of insurance, which increases the number of things that are uninsurable. So my question to the minister is: so we don't have supplementary estimates so often and so large to cover disasters, is there any long-term planning occurring in his department to address an increase in the number of extreme weather events and an increase in taxpayer liabilities to cover uninsurable expenses?

MR. BOUTILIER: Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the hon. member's comment relative to uninsurable, because there are some who would suggest that the government should in fact be covering the citizens who have the option of insuring but choose not to, and we will not cover that.

Regarding your original comment, that we are struggling with communication, I don't believe that is the case, and let me be very articulate in this way. You've mentioned federal cabinet ministers this afternoon as well, and when we talk about federal cabinet ministers, it's important to recognize that they have linked Kyoto and climate change and the drought that we are having in Alberta with the fact that – there's a connection. When we talk about struggling with communication, I totally agree with the hon. member relative to what some of the federal cabinet ministers have been saying, but what I will say is this: insurance companies today, since September 11, as you know, have not only just pulled back on exposure relative to the issue of weather phenomena; they've pulled back on the issue of terrorist threat. Their exposure is greater and higher today, so they have to readjust their industry. So it is more than just, as the hon. member mentions, that of weather phenomena. It deals with the whole aspect of the exposure that insurance companies have today.

Now, your question has been this: is the government looking at long-term planning? This government is certainly always looking at long-term planning, but let me be very specific. I believe that the supplemental estimate process that we've been employing for many, many years, recognized by your counterparts in other provinces across Canada who say that we have one of the best disaster recovery programs in this entire country – so, ultimately, I think we're doing it right the way we are doing it as we speak.

DR. TAFT: I surrender.

Thank you.

THE CHAIR: Okay. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thanks. I'm hoping that we could move next to Infrastructure. Is that possible?

THE CHAIR: Yes, it's entirely possible. You'd like to speak on Infrastructure?

MS BLAKEMAN: Oh, the minister has to go. All right. So Learning, followed by Infrastructure.

Thank you.

MRS. McCLELLAN: I would like to raise the supplementary estimates on Learning, and we have agreement to proceed.

Learning

MRS. McCLELLAN: The supplementary estimates for Learning are related to the teachers' pension funding. This increases Learning's authorized spending in the 2002-03 fiscal year by $35 million, and this increase is needed, I think all members are aware, to implement part of the April 2002 agreement between the government, the ATA, and the Alberta School Boards Association. The agreement states that the government will, for a one-year period only, pay the teachers' share of the unfunded liability costs of the teachers' pension plan. This $35 million increase relates to the September 2002 to March 2003 period. Teachers had their payroll deductions for the unfunded liability suspended effective September 1, 2002, to August 31, 2003. So this supplementary estimate is to cover this commitment. I don't think it's news to anybody in this Legislature that this agreement was made.

So on behalf of the Minister of Learning I would be happy to entertain any questions. However, I think this is about as straightforward as you can get it. If there are comments on the agreement or the reasoning for it, I'd be delighted to keep track of those for the minister.

Thanks.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Chairman, and I thank the government for the handling of the issue. They've been good enough to accommodate us in bringing this ahead as a separate bill and not as part of the miscellaneous statutes amendments, as was previously considered. So we very much appreciate that it's brought forward in estimates and then again today, when Bill 35 was introduced. It handles it.

I think it's a good move, Mr. Chairman. I think the wisdom that prevailed and allowed the agreement to be reached between the ASBA, the ATA, and the government to bring an end to the kind of conflict that had characterized education in the province in the last couple of years was a good move. I think it was unfortunate that it got to the point that it did before it was recognized, particularly by the minister, that there was only one way to go forward, and that was for everyone to sit down and try to agree on some collective action to make things better.

I think that there have been a number of lessons learned from what happened. I think we all agree that the strikes were unnecessary, unfortunate and that the path to strike was one that many of us saw and tried to warn against. However, that's past history, Mr. Chairman. The arbitration awards have been made. I think that there's a feeling in the province that this is a time for a new beginning, and the parties are determined to make sure that that actually happens. I'm delighted that this is here. I think it's good. I guess it raises questions about what happens when this agreement is finished. Then where do they go in terms of the unfunded liability and the teachers' pension plan? That'll be a topic, I suspect, for the budget this coming spring.

With those comments, Mr. Chairman, I'll conclude.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thanks very much, Mr. Chair. Learning and education are such important issues and, in fact, components of the household I grew up in, and they continue to be important to me personally and important to my constituents, so I just wanted to speak very briefly about the symbolic importance of what we see before us today. I do see this as a gesture of goodwill that came forward from the government as part of a very unhappy process that we went through in the spring, and I'm glad to see that it was offered. I know that it's appreciated by the teachers, and I'm glad that the government was able to find a way to make some kind of peace offering, as it were, to those teachers during this negotiation.

You know, I spoke often during the strike, during Bill 12, before and after it, about appreciation for teachers and for education and what an important component it is if we want to be a smart Alberta, if we want skilled workers, if we want to lead, especially in the information technology world that's coming upon us. We have to have education to move us forward there. I was really unhappy that the government did what I felt was interfering in the collective bargaining process by putting that figure out in a separate line item in the budget to begin with, which I still see as the beginning of all of this. I guess I see what's coming forward in this supplementary estimate as the end to that particular chapter, and I hope we never have to go there again. There was certainly antagonism and hostility from both sides, and I hope we all learned a lesson from that.

I appreciate that the government was wise enough to come forward with this offer. I am not, as you know, in favour of supplementary estimates, or supplementary supply, with some exceptions, and I'm certainly willing to support this exception. I think we needed to see it, and I think it's important that the government followed through on its promise. Here it is in front of us, and I do support it. Thanks for the opportunity to speak to that.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

Infrastructure

MR. LUND: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Today we're coming forward and asking for a supplementary estimate of some $15 million. You can see that by reallocating $20 million from health facilities into school facilities, we're able to then remove the 10 schools that were deferred back in the fall of 2001, in order to get them moving. Also, we were able to then put toward the capital accommodation projects of $1.6 million and toward the centennial projects of $5.4 million.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate the opportunity to ask some questions about the Infrastructure budget. In particular, I would like to ask, if I could, about the innovative funding projects that the department is involved in and the effect on Infrastructure and the building programs given the current market conditions in terms of construction costs.

I had a call from a local school that had gained $2.2 million in innovative funding for the construction of a Telus learning centre, and when the project went out for bids, the prices came in and they were $500,000 higher than what had been allocated for the project. As a result, now the project is at a stall, and nothing is happening. The concern is that as the days go by, the costs are going to get even more out of reach. In terms of not just that particular innovative project but all the building projects at the current time, is that the experience? Are things coming in over top of estimates, and how does the department handle it when that happens?

MR. LUND: Mr. Chairman, I'll make a few comments on those questions. They're good, timely questions. What happens in some of these cases – and the one that you cited is a good example. When a project comes in over the estimated approved budget, we then go back and start to look, and in some cases we work directly with the lowest bidder to see how you can pare down those costs. Sometimes it requires some redesign of a project in order to get it down to the number. Now, I can get you more information about where this one is at specifically. I don't have it right before me. But that's generally what we do.

Now, your concern about the costs going up. As a matter of fact, we've got two schools right now where the boards simply rejected the tender bid that came in and will be retendering in January because we believe that the costs are going to go down again. It varies around the province. There are some places where the market is hot. Where there are a lot of housing starts, for example, and a lot of commercial buildings, then the tradespeople are in short supply, so your costs go up. It's interesting as we look at some of the components of a bid and how some of them – I saw some the other day where some of the work was a hundred percent above what we estimated it would be. Well, that's simply a function of supply of workers. So we're constantly monitoring it. Because of our small budget, we are trying to make sure that projects come in very close to budget, but we do recognize that in some locations where the market is hot, we are going to have to find more money for a project. We recognize that.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you. I appreciate that explanation.

Following up on that. To the minister: is there a fund set aside to cover those kinds of problems when they arise? Or are they dealt with on sort of a case-by-case basis?

MR. LUND: We don't have a fund set aside specifically for this. That's why we're trying to move them back to the original numbers, because those are the budgeted numbers. Actually, when we started out the fiscal year, we put in about 1 percent. That's what we had. So in some locations, like I said, we simply have to find more money or else the project can't go. I have really appreciated the co-operation of regional health authorities. We didn't ask these two school boards to completely stop and re-tender, but they made that decision themselves because it's so difficult for us to find extra funds. But we did have that small portion to start the year with that was unallocated, and it wouldn't take very long and that would disappear if we allowed every project that comes in to go even though it was over budget.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Just to follow that. I guess one of the difficulties with the J. Percy Page project – and that's the Telus project – is that they have another partner. They have private industry involved in helping fund it, so it makes it even more complicated for them to try to work out some resolution.

I had one other question. In the write-up it says that $20 million is being allocated from other areas, and I wondered what those other areas were.

MR. LUND: The $20 million all came out of the health area into the schools, and we were able to do that because last year we had done the very opposite. So what worked one way last year we brought back this year.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you. I'm wondering if the minister has with him and can either read into the record or could provide perhaps as a tabling a list of those projects that are now back on. This is a fairly loose list that just says that you're putting a bunch back in, but we don't know which ones you're talking about. So if he could either read into the record which projects are now back on or perhaps provide a tabling Monday or respond in some way to give us a list of what, in fact, is being covered.

The other thing I'm interested in is: does the minister have any sense of whether these projects will now be completed? We had money at the beginning of the year; money was pulled; money is being put back in again. We've still got four months to the end of the fiscal year. The way this government goes, the money could be pulled out again. So what kinds of assurances does the minister have that now that this money is reinvested or available to him again, the projects, in fact, will be completed? Or maybe the Treasurer wants to supplement that.

So that's my second question. The first is the list; the second is the guaranteed completion. I'll let you answer those questions, and then I'll make a further comment.

Thank you.

MR. LUND: The 10 schools that we had put on the deferral list last fall that we allowed to move with this money that we got were the two high schools in Calgary, the new Devon K to 9 catholic school, in Fort McMurray the Dr. Karl A. Clark elementary school, Leduc composite high school, the new west Lethbridge middle school, in Ponoka the St. Augustine school, in Red Deer the Lindsay Thurber comprehensive high school, in Sherwood Park the K to 9 multi-campus learning facility, and then in Spirit River the Central Peace high school. So those schools had been put on deferral last fall, and we allowed them to go.

Now, one of the things you ask about: are these solid? Like, $35 million certainly doesn't build those schools, but we made sure that we have the money in the next three years to complete those projects. I just won't accept that we start a project and stop it. So once these have started, they're going to be completed, and we have the assurance of the Treasurer that there won't be money pulled back this year.

Now, the other projects, those projects were like in the centennial. We have the archives. In order to complete that project, we needed some more money. To complete the Lougheed house in Calgary, we needed some more money. The Tyrrell museum needed a bit more. So that's where those dollars will complete those projects.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thanks. Nice to get that clarified and get that reassurance that this whole process wouldn't be yo-yoed again, and I appreciate hearing from the minister.

I think one of the things that I noticed the most and I find the most frustrating with capital project budgeting from this government is that yo-yo effect. The money is there; the money is not there. And I appreciate the minister saying: once we've decided we're actually going to go ahead with it, we've guaranteed the moneys in place to complete those projects. But there were other projects, you have to agree, that were originally on the list and got halted and have not been restarted. I hope that the minister is considering the concept that was put forward by the Leader of the Official Opposition on an infrastructure enhancement fund which would allow funding to be set aside in a sort of steady, consistent pace, which allows a more consistent, thorough fund to pull from in order to proceed with building capital projects out of the Infrastructure ministry.

I can't begin to imagine how difficult it is as an individual out there, whether you're with a school board or a hospital or a regional hospital or a children's authority, trying to plan for capital budgeting when who knows what's going to happen. You could get it approved, and then it could be stopped three months later. I mean, it's immensely frustrating to try and figure out: how do you mix in your partners? How do you encourage your commercial partners to get onboard for a specific period of time? At this rate you could have a capital project that's stretched out over years and years, and eventually you start to lose those commercial partners, those corporate partners that came in with you.

So I strongly encourage the government to look at something like an infrastructure enhancement fund where money could be put in over a period of time to build it up, and then draw from that so that once there is a need established and it's been approved, it's going to happen rather than this back and forth, up and down sort of thing.

Those are my comments on this particular area, and if there are no others, maybe we could go to Community Development. Thank you.

MR. LUND: Well, I must comment on the hon. member's last comment. We are doing that, trying to have a fund, but we're going beyond that. We're looking at other innovative ways to fund infrastructure buildings, like P3 projects. We're working closely with some developers to move down that road because that's a win/win for everybody when we can get there. It was very difficult for us when we lost the funding, but the fact was: who knew that there was going to be a September 11? Who knew that there was going to be such a huge crash in the market and that we were going to lose $1.7 billion? Those kinds of things are very, very hard to foresee. So, yes, we did run into a difficulty where we thought that we had a solid budget for 2001-2002, but with those events, of course, we simply didn't have it. We are working toward a different, more solid way of funding these capital projects.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thanks. I just got sort of inspired to react to something there, and I'm just going to contest a bit the minister's proposal that these P3 projects, private/public partnerships, are a great idea. I don't know that they are all the time, and I'm going to give you one example to think about. The government is responsible at this point for a new courthouse space in Calgary, and part of what's being looked at is: would that be in an existing building? Would there be a new building? Well, it's downtown Calgary or probably has to be, so it's probably going to be an office tower.

When you take a step back and go, "Wait a second; we're talking about a courthouse here," what are the buildings when you drive into a town that are the ones that catch your attention and say, you know, these buildings give a town or a city stature? They're going to be your town hall followed immediately by your courthouse and then whatever other kinds of civic buildings or arenas you would have there that make you proud. In this instance when you're talking about a P3 partnership, for example, with the courthouse, what edifice, what symbol of justice are we going to have in a high-rise building in downtown Calgary?

So I'm just arguing with you that I think there may be a place for P3 partnerships. I don't know where that would be yet, but I certainly don't see it as the panacea, and I don't see it as the solution to everything. I think that government is responsible for building certain things and maintaining certain kinds of buildings, and I guess I'm arguing with you right now that things like courthouses are one of those sets of buildings that should be stand-alone. They should have a particular place. There's a much larger argument about, you know, schools, because we're talking about combining schools with shopping centres and things like that. I think we have to be really careful when we move into that area where the government is the only decision-maker about a building and about who's funding it and about how long it takes and how much it costs. Every partner you bring on is another partner that you compromise with.

I just wanted make those comments in response to the minister.

MR. LUND: Well, I can't let those go by either without comment, because I'm not interested in symbols. If we can get a true P3 in the courthouse in Calgary and save $300 million, I'm going to take it. That builds a pile of schools. That builds a pile of health facilities. That builds a whole bunch of things that we can do over at the universities to get more research in. It does a whole host of things. So as far as symbols are concerned, forget it.

THE CHAIR: On that note, the Minister of Community Development.

Community Development

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I am pleased to be here today to speak about the supplementary supply requisition, if you will, for the Department of Community Development, specifically as it relates to the Western Heritage Centre. I should say that the town of Cochrane and the Department of Alberta Community Development have been working very diligently and very thoroughly toward finalizing an agreement that would see the transfer of the former Western Heritage Centre and the Cochrane Ranche site – in other words, the land and the buildings associated with the same – over to the town of Cochrane for what is called a nominal sum.

It's always been the intention of my objectives – and I believe it was also my predecessor's intentions as well – to try and give the community a first opportunity to come up with what I have often referred to as a community-based solution to the possible continuation of that Western Heritage Centre to the degree that it could resemble in the future what it was set up to do in the past, and that first opportunity was given to them quite some time ago following the financial collapse of the Western Heritage Centre Society, who basically ceased operating in January of 2001. Around about December 31 of 2000 basically they handed over the keys to Community Development and said that they as a community-based organization society in that area could no longer keep the doors open and the lights lit and so on and turned over the keys. In recognition, however, of the fact that this centre has the contributions of many different individuals and businesses and organizations – quite a number of them have been involved in it – we wanted them to have the first opportunity to see what they could come up with that would see the centre continued somehow into the future.

In the end, the town of Cochrane came up with a plan and said that they would like to take it over, so we reviewed that plan. It fits the requirements of a community-based solution and so on; however, there has been some opposition to that by a few members of the community. I don't know to what extent exactly, and in fact they have requested the town to hold a plebiscite, so that will be done in the next week or so. We're simply in a waiting pattern. But what this particular supplementary estimate does is it makes good on what we said we would do as stewards of that property and building, and that is simply to say that we would get an evaluation done, which is in accordance with policy and procedures here, and we've done that. It's come out to $3.7 million, and that's the amount being requested.

I should note in concluding, Mr. Chairman, that this would be recorded, if you like, as a grant in kind which represents fair market value for the land and buildings. When we talk about nominal sum, we're probably talking about something in the two-figure range or perhaps single-figure range. Nominal sums typically are very, very low amounts. In any event, it will be a surplus neutral transaction and will not have any direct effect on the net operating results of the government.

The approval of this supplementary estimate will allow the ministry to complete the final transfer of the land and buildings, and it is in keeping with Alberta Community Development's intention of seeking the community-based proposal, which is a best-use proposal that I referenced earlier. The town's proposal does include redeveloping the building into a combined municipal office, an arts centre, a seniors centre, a museum complex, and so on and will maintain, I hope, virtually all of the artifacts, in so far as possible at least, that they've accumulated, artwork, whatever else they might have there that reflects the rich and important heritage of that part of our beautiful province.

So that's basically it in a nutshell. I'd like to answer any questions should members opposite have any. Thank you.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thanks very much. Well, I think we could call this the Frank Bruseker memorial supplementary estimate because I'm aware that my previous colleague had an awful lot to say about this project, I think beginning and ending with the words "white elephant."

The government must be very pleased to be moving this particular property and entity off of its books. I mean, I remember visiting this site about 10 years ago, before the facility itself was built, and it was a great museum. It was not big; it was quite small. It was in a little log cabin perched up on top of a hill, and I really enjoyed it. I learned a lot. It was great. I learned all about ranching in southern Alberta in the early years and the pioneers and all that good stuff, and there was a bit of land and a trail you could sort of wander around on but no big thing, and maybe for reasons we'll never know now, much grander plans were seen and a lot of money was sought and was secured to put towards a much larger facility far beyond a simple little museum and a couple of trails. That project grew and it grew. That little elephant just kept getting bigger and bigger until it ate the whole thing.

Certainly, while I've been elected, I've gone back and forth with various members of the society and people from the town, folks on all sides of this debate, about whether the government should continue to prop it up and put more money in by way of grants or pay off debts, and as the minister said, finally in December of 2000 or January of 2001 the government received back the keys from the society, who had thrown their hands up and gone: we just cannot operate this.

In fact, if you look back, it doesn't take long to find out that their projections of expected visitors and concurrent revenue that was expected to come into that facility were never realized, and the projections were wildly off to begin with. They were essentially setting themselves up as though they were Head-Smashed-In Buffalo Jump, and that's a UNESCO world site. I mean, this museum was just not going to draw the same kind of people, and it didn't, but it was a very grand scheme.

Now we had the problem of a huge facility, a lot of commitments to people, including the collection of western art, sculpture that is housed in the building, plus an extensive collection of western pioneer memorabilia and artifacts, none of which we want to lose, and some of them are in this facility because it is climate controlled and all of that, things that require that kind of technology and humidity and climate control. It would be a shame for Albertans to lose those artifacts and pieces of art, to have them taken out of the building, and I'm pleased to hear that the town is willing to continue to run the facility and to house the various things that were there before.

So we had a situation where I think the government got conned into or was willing to look the other way. It was willing to help their friends build a memorial, lots of different stories I hear about it, to create this facility in the first place, and it just didn't work. There was not enough of a draw to it; nonetheless, the building had been built. The artifacts, the artwork, the memorabilia were now in it. It was an obligation to continue to run it, and it wasn't possible.

I'm aware that the minister tried hard to have a consultation with the community, that there was a fairly long time line to allow proposals to come forward and that in fact there were extensions on that time line to allow a couple of the proposals, I think, to solidify what they wanted to do. I think that this is probably the best outcome that we could have expected: to have the town take it over, be willing to subcontract out the management of the convention facilities, because it does house a fair number of people for large groups. I think it's like 500 – isn't it? – for a sit-down meal. Yeah. It's a big facility. So the town is going to subcontract out the management of that and I believe put some of their own offices into the building plus the seniors' centre and the museum and art gallery, et cetera.

I will put on record that I far prefer that idea to one I had seen floating about, which included having a casino built, which I just felt was going backwards very fast. If we couldn't attract people to that area because it was a very good museum with all kinds of interesting things in it, we were certainly not going to attract people to that area for a casino with some sort of sideshow of this western ranchers museum. I was actually quite offended by that. So I'm pleased to see that the town did come forward with its idea and was able to get its ducks in a row, so to speak, and be able to make this proposal through to the government and that it seems to have been accepted.

As I understand it, then, the money as it's appearing in this supplementary estimate is, in fact, a disposing of assets off the books. It is showing the disposal of this asset, taking it off the books from Community Development. That's the value of the property at $3.7 million. If I can just get a bit more information about how that valuation was handled. Was it tendered? Was there a sufficient number of people that applied for the ability to get the tender to do the valuation on it? I just want to make sure that this one is tied up with a bow, because it's been struggling along, dangling its shoe laces for an awfully long time in this province. So I just want to make sure that it's all going to be done and off the books and never coming back on again.

The other question that I have: is there an outstanding debt associated with this facility? If there is, is there any possibility that that debt will have to be assumed by the province, or has it ever assumed debts since December of 2000? I know that at one point there was a construction debt that was associated with it, and there may well have been an operating debt in operating it. I want to make sure that the government is not on the hook now or in the future for any kind of deficit or debt that's left over from this facility. So I'd like to get the minister on record with that, and I will give him an opportunity to respond to that, and then I can make my closing remarks.

Thank you.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Minister of Community Development.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I just wanted to let the hon. member know that I, too, have visited it, and I certainly concur with her assessment of the beauty of the building and the value of the artifacts and the importance of it to our western heritage. In fact, I've been there a number of times with our colleague from Banff-Cochrane. I just wanted to support her description of the site from that point of view.

It's a very important building, as we all know, not only for the wonderful artifacts it houses but also for the fact that the community uses it a great deal for graduation ceremonies and for wedding ceremonies and convention/conference type stuff. I believe it can accommodate somewhere in the order of 300 to 350 people at a sitting. It depends on how you evaluate the outdoor patio space, you know, but you're not far off with the 500 mark either, hon. member.

I'll just emphasize again, Mr. Chairman, that we're in a waiting and seeing mode right now for the town to give us their final decision on whether we're going to enter into this final agreement, but we're fully prepared to do that, and I want to give the member security in knowing that information.

With respect to the extensions that she commented on, I simply wanted to say that we did specifically meet with them on that issue. I was down many times, and the extensions were granted simply to allow them to do their feasibility study. The town put about a hundred grand into that feasibility study. In my view, they did a very, very good job, and they've come forward with a very sensible proposal that, from my point of view at least, makes a lot of sense.

Now, the question about the evaluation. This was, as is required, an independent evaluation. I'll have to find out for you exactly what the administrative procedures were behind that, but it was done totally by an outside source. I don't even know what their name is right now, but someone who's able to do those evaluations and assessments did a very thorough job. In particular, they evaluated the centre itself, in other words the building, for its value. They appraised the land on which the building sits, obviously, and the surrounding area; for example, there is a parking lot and there's that beautiful piece that banks up against the mountain. They went farther west and evaluated the Cochrane Ranche historic site as well. Then there were some on-site improvements, as I recall, that were also part of that. So it's very thorough and very independently done from government.

Your other question about outstanding debt. I believe that the previous minister, my predecessor, did address that, and I think that was all cleared off the books from whatever point of view, at least, we could. I also know that they did have some meetings with their banker, and I guess there are sort of two parts to this question. One is any debt with respect to the construction or the improvements to the facility itself. The second part would have been any operating debts of the society itself.

I can't comment, quite frankly, member, with respect to the society. It happened just before I took over, but all I know is that they became insolvent and had financial difficulties, and I think they have and/or did conclude some arrangement with the bank. I think, also, that the town in which this whole community, obviously, is involved is aware of any kind of lingering debt, if you will, that might exist, and if that's the case, I'm sure that they will be addressing it with whomever the creditors might be, but I don't think it's a huge amount compared to the evaluation adjustment that we're looking for here.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thanks. Yeah, I just wanted to make sure that the government wasn't on the hook now or in the future for any kind of debt associated with this centre even when it's off their books.

Lastly, I'm wondering now: is the minister expecting that some component of the centre would be coming back to his department looking for operating grants? For example, would the museum section be eligible to apply through Museums Alberta acting as the PASO for a grant to operate the museum: (a) is it possible and (b) is it anticipated? If I can just get a comment on that, and then I guess we want to move on to another area.

Thank you.

THE CHAIR: The hon. minister.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. In response to the first question – will the government of Alberta be on the hook or have any continuing obligations? – the answer is no. It will be transferred lock, stock, and barrel to – well, I guess it'll be to the town, assuming that all is in accordance with their wishes. We have every reason to believe it is.

Secondly, is there a component in it that might see it coming back to us? There is no component built into the arrangement at this time at all. Is that what you're asking? Oh, will any component be coming back? I'm sorry. I misunderstood, perhaps.

MS BLAKEMAN: There still is a museum section to it. Can that museum section apply for a grant through the PASO?

MR. ZWOZDESKY: I'm sorry. I had that as a third question. I thought you had something about: would they be coming back? But maybe that was part of the first question.

Anyway, let me just go to the museums issue. As you are well aware, we do give a grant to the Alberta Museums Association, and they in turn receive applications from their member bodies, and then they pass out the grants. So if there is a legitimately organized museum within there as a stand-alone society or however they choose to do it, then I'm sure that they would be considered just like everyone else is for possible financial assistance, but that would be under the normal rules of eligibility, criteria being met, and so on. So I don't see any reason why that wouldn't be possible.

THE CHAIR: Okay. Are we ready for the next department? We next are going to sustainable development.

Edmonton-Riverview, do you wish to speak?

DR. TAFT: I'm just requesting that it be the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. Thank you.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development.

Sustainable Resource Development

MR. CARDINAL: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. As Minister of Sustainable Resource Development I'm here to discuss the supplementary estimates to my ministry's budget. The 2002 fire season was one of the most severe on record and is still continuing at this time. In order to deal with the increased costs of fire fighting this year, we request a supplementary estimate of $229.2 million.

The fire program is essential to save communities, and protecting our forests is more important and more challenging than ever. Communities have expanded in forested areas, and industrial and recreational activities have also increased considerably, especially over the last few years.

There are more than 320 communities in the forest protection area, and many are at risk from wildfires. This year about 2,000 Albertans were evacuated or put on evacuation alert because of the risk of fires in about seven communities in northern Alberta. The House River fire alone was the largest wildfire since 1981, burning more than 247,000 hectares of forested area. Although the drought conditions had a huge impact on this year's fire season, we are able to limit the impact of fire on Albertans themselves.

The supplementary estimate is a result of a very dry and challenging fire season. That is why I make a motion that the supplementary estimates of $229.2 million be approved by the Assembly.

Thank you.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's going to be very important for us to discuss this particular supplemental estimate because of its scale. Two hundred and twenty-nine million dollars is an enormous amount of money, and it seems to me that last year we also had a very large supplementary estimate from this department.

I'm not disputing that we need to fight forest fires. My concern is that in the future we're going to have to fight more and more of them and that year after year we're going to be coming back with bigger and bigger and bigger supplementary estimates. Indeed, as I've gone through the debate today, I see between this department and the department of agriculture and the Department of Municipal Affairs over $650 million in supplementary estimates related directly to drought and the consequences of drought, including fires.

I know that recently our caucus met with the Alberta Forest Products Association. They are deeply, deeply concerned about drought and fire in Alberta's forests, and as you mentioned, Mr. Minister, there are a large number of communities in northern Alberta potentially at risk, some of whom have had very dramatic experience with forest fires.

So my first line of questioning is: given the evidence or the concern and the arguments from many in the scientific community that climate change actually is occurring and that climate change is leading to chronic risks and much higher risks for forest fires and drought, what long-term planning is this department undertaking, if any, to ensure that next year and the year after we do not have massive supplementary estimates like this?

MR. CARDINAL: That's a very good question. In fact, the Auditor General previous to this year, the past five years previously, had identified that our average expenditure was about $158 million per year and suggested that we consider increasing our base budget from what we have now to that targeted area. We are working with Agenda and Priorities, Treasury, and also our colleagues to look at an increased budget as we move forward to accommodate the needs for the base budget. So definitely, yes, we are planning, when dollars become available, to try and increase the base budget closer to what the five-year average had recommended. So that's an area we're definitely looking at.

The other thing we're doing, of course, is – there are approximately 16 to 18 municipalities that are adjacent to the protected area of Alberta, and we do have fire agreements between the municipalities and our department, but we feel that they don't work as well as they could. Lots of times a fire may start in a municipality, and because the municipality is really not as equipped as we are in relation to forest fire fighting and because there may be a cost related to the fire, the municipality will not call us until it's too late and so much money has been spent. By the time we go in there, the fire is out of control. What this new agreement will do – and I'm going to be the lead minister to take it through our approval process: the standing policy committee, cabinet, and caucus – is try and put in a program that will be very proactive in relation to the working agreements, the billing process between the municipalities and our department and also Municipal Affairs. So we're definitely working on that.

The other thing we're doing with the communities that are within that protected area, the 300 or so communities, is looking at various ways of making the communities fire smart. For an example, Wabasca, one of the communities in my constituency – and we are looking at a number of others – wants to expand their hamlet boundaries. One of the conditions I put in in transferring public land to them is to develop an area where there will be a fire guard put in, and I've agreed to deduct the cost of that fire guard as part of the transfer of the public land to them. So we are being very proactive.

The other one we have is, of course, the FireSmart program we have in place, where we are working with the fire departments and also municipal councils to ensure that the communities and facilities in the communities are protected as much as possible.

DR. TAFT: This planning is enormously important. It's important from a budgetary aspect. It's important from a human safety aspect, from an environmental aspect, from an economic aspect. Are there climate scientists involved in this planning process?

MR. CARDINAL: Of course, Mr. Chairman, we will have to work along with people who specialize in this area and people with scientific knowledge, no doubt, in order to develop a long-range plan. If the weather decides to stay the way it is, we will have to develop long-range plans to deal with an issue like that.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thank you. Now, given the many communities that the minister mentioned that are at risk in these heavily forested areas, is the minister concerned that these communities may end up becoming uninsurable properties by the private insurance industry?

MR. CARDINAL: I don't believe, Mr. Chairman, that there is a problem in relation to fire insurance at this time. Now, I can't predict what the future will be like, but in the past history has shown that we've had dry trends in northern Alberta in the protected area and we've had wildfires burning. But, at the same time, then we've had years with lots of rain and cold temperatures. So at this time it's really something we have to monitor very closely and determine if there is a need for further action.

Definitely our first priority in the department is to protect the lives of Albertans, and then of course the second priority, while we're doing that, is the residences of Albertans in those areas. At this time there's really no indication to say that the communities are in danger on a long-term basis. We've had a number of dry years now, but that could change next year.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Just to be clear and so that the minister is on the record for all time, he is arguing that the climate change projections of climate scientists which argue that Alberta is drying out and that northern forest are in increasing long-term risk are not valid. Is that correct?

MR. CARDINAL: No, I'm not saying that they're not valid. I'm just saying that we will continue monitoring the situation and determine as we move forward. Like I said earlier, one of the plans we're doing is to look at increasing the base budget to around the five-year average of $160 million per year, again depending on the dollars that are available.

The other way to handle it, I guess, is what we are doing today, which is to have a base budget at what we have it now, and then each time there is a fire, we come back for a supplementary budget. That's been done for a long period of time, but I believe, you know, that the way to handle this at this time – it's not, like, out of control. We have a good handle on the issue of forest fires within the protected area. Although the fire was quite large in northeast Alberta, approximately 60 percent of the fire was in muskeg areas, which in a lot of ways is something that's needed to happen, so it's not all negative. The merchantable timber that burned in that area is part of a quota and part of a FMA of another company. What they do is they alter, then, their logging operation plans for this winter and harvest that wood in that particular area rather than the original plans as they were laid out.

So I think we have a good handle on the issue. The forest industry is a very, very important industry to Alberta. Over 50 communities depend on it as the major source of revenue, major source of job creation, and also the tax base. There are over 54,000 people working in that industry. So it is good, and even with a bit of the negative side on the softwood tariffs and negotiations, our industry is still in a reasonably solid state.

THE CHAIR: Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thank you. Given that the taxpayer is on the hook for some $230 million more than we budgeted for forest fire fighting, is industry contributing any more to forest fire fighting than was expected from them?

MR. CARDINAL: Yeah. We have an ongoing review, of course, of our, you know, stumpage rates and other fees that we charge to FMA holders and quota holders. Although there was quite an expenditure this year in Alberta, it's a major industry as far as revenue for the province. It's about an $8 billion to $9 billion industry; it's not small.

Although our stumpage rates are market driven, we have an ongoing process to monitor the stumpage rates we have in place. Not to say that we're going to increase them or decrease them, but we continue to monitor them very closely to ensure that, number one, we don't create hardship for the industry and, number two, to make sure that when we have salvage wood from fires, it is economically viable for the industry to be able to harvest that wood rather than the wood falling and rotting. So we try and monitor it and keep a balance in the whole process.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Hi. I'm hoping we can move on to Transportation, I think is the one that's left.

THE CHAIR: In the one minute remaining, sure.

MS BLAKEMAN: In the one minute remaining? Well, then I'll make a point that one day is not enough time to do supplementary supply, but I'd like to hear what I can. Are we really less than a minute? Well, we're not going to be able to get through all of them then. Thank you.

THE CHAIR: Okay. Does someone want to speak. The hon. acting minister.

Transportation

MR. LUND: Yes. As Acting Minister of Transportation I'm bringing forward a supplementary estimate for $85 million. This would partially reinstate the projects that we deferred in 2001-2002 for highway rehabilitation, highway construction, and water management infrastructure and other road infrastructure.

Vote on Supplementary Estimates General Revenue Fund

THE CHAIR: I hesitate to interrupt whoever might wish to speak again, but pursuant to Standing Order 59(2) and Government Motion 30, agreed to November 20, 2002, I must now put the following question. Those members in favour of each of the resolutions not yet voted upon relating to the 2002-2003 supplementary supply estimates, please say aye.

HON. MEMBERS: Aye.

THE CHAIR: Those opposed, please say no. Carried.
Shall the vote be reported?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE CHAIR: Opposed? Carried.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: I would move, then, that the committee rise and report.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

MR. LOUGHEED: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of Supply has had under consideration certain resolutions and reports as follows.

All resolutions relating to the 2002-2003 supplementary supply estimates have been approved.

Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development: operating expense, $32,150,000.

Agriculture, Food and Rural Development: operating expense and capital investment, $405,118,000.

Community Development: operating expense and capital investment, $3,700,000.

Infrastructure: operating expense and capital investment, $15,000,000.

Learning: operating expense and capital investment, $35,000,000.

Municipal Affairs: operating expense and capital investment, $17,685,000.

Sustainable Resource Development: operating expense and capital investment, $229,200,000.

Transportation: operating expense and capital investment, $85,000,000.

Amount of operating expense and capital investment to be voted under section 1: $822,853,000.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to table a list of those resolutions voted upon by the Committee of Supply pursuant to Standing Orders.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Does the Assembly concur in this report?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Opposed? So ordered.
The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would seek unanimous consent of the Assembly to revert briefly to Introduction of Bills, and I'd also take this opportunity to remind everyone to clear off their desks so that the Alberta Debate and Speech Association, who is holding their mock parliament tomorrow, can have free and clear access to their chairs.

Thank you.

[Unanimous consent granted]

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Bill 36

Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2002 (No. 2)

MRS. NELSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 36, the Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2002 (No. 2). This being a money bill, Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, having been informed of the contents of this bill, recommends the same to the Assembly.

[Motion carried; Bill 36 read a first time]

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, it's a pleasure to be back in the Assembly with all of our colleagues. We've had a very good week, so I would move that we now call it 5:30 and adjourn until 1:30 p.m. on Monday.

[Motion carried; at 5:22 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Monday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Monday, November 25, 2002

1:30 p.m.

Date: 02/11/25

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Let us pray. At the beginning of this week we ask You, Father, to renew and strengthen in us the awareness of our duty and privilege as members of this Legislature. We ask You also in Your divine providence to bless and protect those assembled here today and their loved ones and bless the province we are elected to serve. Amen.

Hon. members, please remain standing for the national anthem.

HON. MEMBERS:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
The True North strong and free!
From far and wide, O Canada,
We stand on guard for thee.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Visitors

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Community Development.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed a great pleasure for me to rise today on behalf of the government of Alberta and all colleagues in the Legislature today to introduce some very special guests that we have with us. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you these members who are visiting here today.

AN HON. MEMBER: In Ukrainian?

MR. ZWOZDESKY: I could do it in Ukrainian, yes, but I'll start with English.

I would like to introduce the leaders of the delegation. Mr. Serhiy Shevchuk is a Member of Parliament and member of the European Integration Committee and a member of the Committee for Protection of Health, Motherhood, and Childhood in Ukraine. He is joined by His Excellency Yuri Scherbak, ambassador of Ukraine to Canada, who has been in our province several times, and he's joining this delegation on this very special visit. Included with this, I should say that Ambassador Scherbak is a very welcomed guest not only here but also in our Premier's office, and I know that they've had many good discussions on things pertaining to Alberta and Ukraine over the past couple of years, and we're grateful for his attention to this matter.

Mr. Speaker, this particular delegation from Ukraine is here to study our public health system as part of the ongoing Canada/Ukraine Legislative and Intergovernmental Project, also known as CULIP. CULIP, a program funded by the Canadian International Development Agency, or CIDA as we refer to it, is administered by the Canadian Institute of Ukrainian Studies at the U of A, and it focuses on sharing efficient and effective public-sector expertise. Alberta's participation in CULIP really goes back to the project's inception in 1996. This particular health and wellness module marks the fifth of six modules under CULIP, and Alberta Health and Wellness and International and Intergovernmental Relations will be working together to assist Ukraine and the delegation here today in completing this module.

Let me close, Mr. Speaker, simply by saying that Albertans of Ukrainian ancestry have played a major role in helping to build our province and supporting the independent drive and the drive for economic freedoms in Ukraine. As such, I was delighted to accompany our own Premier on the first historic mission ever by an Alberta Premier to Ukraine earlier this year with our colleague from Redwater, and it's in that regard that we wish CULIP and all of our delegates who are here today all the very, very best in their visit to our province and to our capital city. May I ask that Mr. Shevchuk, His Excellency Scherbak, and all the guests who are with them please rise and receive the welcome. [remarks in Ukrainian]

head: Introduction of Guests

MR. SHARIFF: Mr. Speaker, on behalf of yourself, the Member for Highwood, I would like to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly a group of 17 home schooled young Albertans from Okotoks, from St. Paul's Academy, and the Argyll home based education centre. They are accompanied by Mrs. Gisele L'Abbee, Mrs. Colette Stasiewich, Mrs. Marilyn Schulz, Mrs. Cheryl Schulz, and Mrs. Colleen Korzan. They're all seated in the public gallery, and I would request that they all rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

MR. DUNFORD: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Later today Bill 37, the Occupational Health and Safety Amendment Act, 2002, will be introduced, and I want to introduce to you and through you to the Legislative Assembly many men and women that were instrumental in this Workplace Safety 2.0 initiative, that we're currently embarking on. I would ask, as I read their names, that they stand and remain standing so that the members of the Legislature can see who each individual is.

I begin with Brad Anderson, the executive director of the Construction Owners Association of Alberta; Joe Melnychuk from Ledcor Industrial; Bill Bacon from Imperial Oil Resources; Brian Bickley from Syncrude Canada; John Brogly from Dow Chemical; Ron Czura from Shell Canada; Andy Felczak from Bird Construction; Gary Gylander from ATCO Electric; Sam Kemble from the Construction Labour Relations association; Hal Middlemiss from PCL Industrial Constructors; Mike Morton from Halliburton KBR; Kevin Nabholz from Suncor Energy; Stirling Rideout from Colt Companies; Doug Rowan from Shell Canada Limited; Harry Tostowaryk of the Ironworkers Local 720; Jackson Wong from Sherritt International; Peter Dunfield from Syncrude Canada; then Patty Whiting, who is the chair of the Occupational Health and Safety Council; and Julie Hamilton, the mother of a fatally injured worker that we had here in the province of Alberta. With that, I would ask for a warm welcome from all of the members of the Legislature.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

MR. HORNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the House 58 visitors from St. Albert. These students attend Bertha Kennedy Catholic community school and are two of the grade 6 classes. The students and staff there live up well to the heritage and standards of the school's namesake. They are accompanied by teachers Mrs. Kaplar, Miss McManus, Mrs. Clarke, and parent helpers Mr. Culvier, Mrs. Drinkwater, Mrs. Funtasz, Mrs. Neuls. They are seated in the public gallery, and I would ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this House.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all hon. members of this Assembly a delegation from Suzuki charter school in the constituency of Edmonton-Gold Bar. The delegation is led by Mr. Ian Gray and accompanied by parent volunteer Mrs. Sandra Scolah, and there are also 15 bright, able, and polite students in the delegation. I believe they're in the members' gallery, and if they could now rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly, I would be very grateful.

1:40

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

MR. HUTTON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly a very hardworking constituent of mine who is committed to the Alberta advantage. Betty Unger, who is with the Occupational Health and Safety Council, is seated in the members' gallery, and I would ask Betty to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two introductions this afternoon. The first is to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly a group visiting us from NorQuest College. There are 29 of them, and they're here accompanied by their instructor, Ms Elaine Nichols. These are students in both the social studies and the legal studies courses. I think they're in both galleries. I would ask them to please rise and accept the warm welcome of the House. Thank you very much.

My second introduction is a group of students with the Community Cultures Institute. This is an adult English as a Second Language program. We have 20 students who are joining us in the public gallery today, and they're accompanied by their instructor, Karen McFarlane. I would ask that group to please rise and accept the warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two introductions today. First, I'm very pleased to welcome to this House and to introduce to you and to all members of this Assembly Mrs. Kathie Derman of Stony Plain. Mrs. Derman is here to witness democracy in action and how her best interests and interests of her fellow Albertans, especially in the area of health care, are being represented. Mrs. Derman is seated in the members' gallery, and now I would ask her to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, my second introduction is Chantelle Hughes. Chantelle is visiting from the city of Calgary, where she works as the southern organizer for the Alberta New Democrats. Ms Hughes is a tireless volunteer in our community and recently raised more than $5,000 for the Arthritis Society and the Joints in Motion campaign by running the Dublin marathon in the Republic of Ireland. I would ask Chantelle to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly. I think she's seated in the members' gallery as well.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

MR. VANDERMEER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have the honour today of introducing to you and through you to the members of this Assembly Stephanie Thero, who lives in the constituency of Edmonton-Manning. Stephanie is a third-year student at the University of Alberta. She is taking history and political science. Her main ambition is to get involved in federal politics. I'd ask Stephanie to rise and receive the traditional welcome of this Assembly.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: I think it's in order right now to bring birthday greetings to the Minister of Innovation and Science, the hon. Member for Red Deer-South. There's no year given on this, but it is the date November 25.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

MR. HLADY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have three individuals to introduce to you today who've added to the value-added of Alberta. The first one is Ferg Devins, the vice-president of corporate affairs for Ontario and western Canada for Molson Canada. The second is, I believe, Mr. Hal Danchilla, who is a political adviser with no peer. The third is the president and CEO of Arcis Corporation, Peter Boyd. If they'd all rise and please receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

head: Ministerial Statements

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Economic Development.

90th Grey Cup Celebrations

MR. NORRIS: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This past weekend, along with the Deputy Premier of Alberta, I had the honour of being part of Edmonton's Grey Cup parade and also going to what turned out to be a very exciting and hard-fought football game, the CFL's 90th Grey Cup. As a big sports fan I can tell you that Albertans and Edmontonians have everything to be proud of in the Edmonton Eskimos. They showed determination and grit in battling their eastern opponents from the beginning right to the very bitter end.

In every way Albertans were winners even though we did not see the cup return to Edmonton. The local organizing committee clearly demonstrated to Canada they know how to organize and throw one heck of a world-class party. Events like the Grey Cup are great for the local economy, and as the minister responsible for tourism I'm a very proud Edmontonian to say that the Grey Cup estimated bringing 25,000 visitors to Edmonton and the capital region, and it was worth over $25 million to our local economy. In fact, nearly all of Edmonton's 11,000 hotel rooms were booked solid, and as many of us know, so were the bars.

Of course, none of this would have been possible without the efforts of thousands of volunteers who continue to make these types of events so successful. I would like to take a moment to recognize and thank all of these people for their efforts. I'm pleased to note that Alberta has a per capita volunteer rate of over 40 percent, second only to our wonderful neighbours to the east in Saskatchewan.

Certainly, the greatest thanks, obviously, have to go to the Edmonton Eskimos, a team that never fails to show that it is deserving of the title of champions. To them I say: wait till next season; everybody in this House is with you. Today, Mr. Speaker, as an Edmontonian and Albertan I think we're all very proud of what happened this weekend.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Edmonton was jumping with activity this past week as residents, guests, and football players alike attended Grey Cup event after Grey Cup event, and we experienced an excellent boost to our economy. From the kick-off event to the igloo to the Grey Cup parade to, finally, the game itself thousands of individuals worked tirelessly behind the scenes to ensure that the 90th Grey Cup was one to remember. Each and every one of those individuals must be congratulated.

Thank you to the thousands of volunteers who made certain that each event went along flawlessly. Thanks to the Grey Cup Organizing Committee for co-ordinating and planning all of the details. The football players from both teams must be recognized for their efforts, and we certainly expect to see those Eskimos back there again next year. Football fans couldn't have asked for a more exciting game to watch. The 62,531 fans, who sat on the edges of their seats until the closing minutes of the fourth quarter, must also be recognized for their support. Finally, thanks to the city of Edmonton for providing the support they did.

The 90th Grey Cup is one that all Albertans can be proud of and will be remembered for years to come. Thank you.

head: Oral Question Period

Size of Cabinet

DR. NICOL: Mr. Premier, did you do your homework and calculate the total cost before creating the six new ministries you established after the last election?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I don't think that there were really any additional costs relative to the creation of new ministries because all of those activities that are now the responsibility of ministries were under one department or another and were either led by a senior public service employee or were a division or had a secretariat or were under a commission or an authority, so it was simply transferring the amount that was assigned to those authorities, commissions, agencies, public service employees to a ministerial office.

DR. NICOL: The cost of creating these new ministries is $214 million a year. Will the Premier reverse this decision and put that money where it belongs, into priority programs for Alberta?

MR. KLEIN: I think that that is an absolutely false figure. I don't know where he got the figure, Mr. Speaker, but if he wants to take the time and go through the books with the hon. Minister of Finance, I'm certain the hon. leader of the Liberal opposition is welcome to do so. But that kind of a figure is way, way, way out of whack.

DR. NICOL: Mr. Premier, why did you flip-flop on your 1992 promise to reduce the size of cabinet and government, or was that just a short-term promise?

MR. KLEIN: Well, Mr. Speaker, indeed we did reduce the size of cabinet. With a substantial increase in the size of the Conservative majority we created ministries not only commensurate with the size of the majority but also to recognize and pay special political attention to areas that needed political concern and attention.

Travel by Cabinet Ministers

DR. NICOL: Mr. Premier, while your cabinet ministers jet set around the world collecting air miles, children in this province are going to bed hungry because AISH rates haven't increased in 10 years. The cost of government travel and communication is up almost 40 percent, almost 37 and a half million dollars since 1998. When are you going to rein in the spending of your jet-setting cabinet ministers?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I really take exception to the statement that our ministers are jet-setting ministers. We pay very special attention to travel by ministers. I can tell you that wherever possible, at least in North America, including Mexico and Central America, we jet set in the government King Air at about $400 an hour, and there are no air mile points for that travel. You can't even stand up, and I'll tell you something: you don't even want to use the can on that airplane.

DR. NICOL: Mr. Premier, how can you justify nearly $40 million in increased travel and communication costs when here at home children from low-income families are still going hungry?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I would be very, very happy to share with the hon. leader of the Liberal opposition the latest report of a national antipoverty organization entitled Campaign 2000. This organization issued its annual report on how well Ottawa has lived up to its commitment to end child poverty by the end of 2000. Minimum wage and low welfare benefits are noted as key factors in child poverty. You know, for the first time I'm happy to quote a national antipoverty organization because it says – and it's absolutely no surprise to me – that Ontario, Alberta, and Prince Edward Island have the healthiest economies and the healthiest situation as it relates to child poverty. It's no surprise to me that the three provinces whose child poverty rates were ranked the lowest are Conservative governments.

DR. NICOL: Mr. Premier, when can Albertans expect to see a reduction in the ballooning budget for your out-of-country travel by cabinet members?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, as I've pointed out previously, we keep very careful tabs on ministerial travel, and indeed all the travel that's undertaken by ministers and MLAs is legitimate. When you are the government, you are required to attend various national and international meetings. The hon. Minister of Community Development recently alluded to the mission to Ukraine. Highly beneficial. A historic meeting to establish relationships with Ukraine. I will point out that we have sister-province relationships with Korea, with China, with Japan, to some degree with Mexico. We have just established a trade office in Germany, another trade office in Mexico. We have a trade office in Beijing. We have one in Harbin. We have one in Hong Kong. We have one in Tokyo. We have one in Seoul. So there is an obligation. There is an obligation to maintain international relations as well as represent this province's interests at various national meetings.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Affordable Housing

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Edmonton homeless count released Friday showed that 65 percent more people are living on the streets in this city than two years ago. According to the Edmonton Coalition on Homelessness an additional 6,000 units of affordable and permanent housing are needed right now. The SSHIP and HAPI housing programs have now finished and created only 1,600 new housing units exclusively for seniors. My first question is to the Premier. How does the government of this rich province propose to help those thousands of Albertans needing housing?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I will have the hon. minister responsible for housing respond in detail, but I can tell the hon. member that though this study is not definitive, this government takes homelessness very, very seriously indeed. All one needs to do is to look at the commitments we've made in both Calgary and Edmonton to the situation of homelessness. Through a government community initiative accommodations are being added to house an additional, as I understand it, 415 individuals in shelters and supportive housing in Edmonton. This is very significant, and to me what is happening represents the finest form of partnership. We see the government participating with private-sector people – and I mean well-meaning people – people like Art Smith and John Currie in Calgary in particular, the government participating with church groups and other community organizations to develop programs like In from the Cold, and also the government participating by providing significant dollars to both Calgary and Edmonton to accommodate homelessness and to address a very serious situation.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you. Four hundred spaces created, 15,000 needed. Not very good.

My question is to the Minister of Seniors. Given that just a few days ago the minister's office did not know where its share of the money to match the federal $67 million was going to come from, does the minister know today?

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. minister responsible for housing.

MR. WOLOSCHYN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the Premier indicated in the previous answer, this province has done an awful lot with addressing homelessness specifically, probably more so than any other province in the country. For example, we are the only province that has a homeless initiative policy that was drafted in 1999 which set out the parameters under which we would address the issue. That has funneled into the system some $9 million through organizations such as the Edmonton Housing Trust Fund, whose sole purpose was to co-ordinate and address and identify the needs of the people – and I'll stick with Edmonton specifically – in order that we can work co-operatively together to meet the needs of the folks out there. This has resulted on a provincial level in a contribution of some 50 million dollars from the federal government in conjunction with something that would not have happened had Alberta not taken the step to have a policy, something, I might add, whereby the federal government has used Calgary as a template for how the issues should be addressed, also is using Grande Prairie as a template for rural Quebec. So to sit there and say that we're not doing anything is just totally erroneous.

In addition to the money that is put on the seed end, Mr. Speaker, for the same period I do believe that human resources and development has put in some 34 million dollars toward shelter funding. If that isn't a sincere, strong effort to address the problem, I don't know what is.

MS BLAKEMAN: Well, he didn't answer my question.

Again to the Premier: is it this government's intention to use the seniors' housing money it has already spent in a shell game to match the federal government's $67 million, essentially using seniors to subsidize everybody else?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, there is no shell game going on here. Every dollar spent is clearly defined, identified in the budget documents and in the business plans.

Relative to how the dollars will be allocated, I'll have the hon. minister respond.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Seniors.

MR. WOLOSCHYN: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This just shows, just indicates the nonsense which comes from that particular member. If she did her homework and had made one phone call, I would have taken the trouble to explain to her that Alberta and Ottawa have agreed to an Alberta solution for affordable housing. The other provinces have their own. We signed off on a commitment in June of this year to cost share this $67 million, which will trigger further money from the private sector and from communities. I have personally met with the seven mayors, who are currently working on plans which will be co-operative together. When the money is put into the system, it will be targeted where it's supposed to be. To have money announced without a plan is just not the way we do business.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Electricity Rates

MR. MASON: Yes, please, Mr. Speaker. Thank you. Last week in question period the Minister of Energy ducked questions relating to the government's deregulation debacle by claiming that the highest price for electricity paid in the province was 6.7 cents per kilowatt-hour, ignoring the rate riders and other new charges which have been brought to people by deregulation. Now, I have a copy of a power bill from a farmer in Mayerthorpe which he received from his local REA. The farmer's bill has an energy charge of 7.95 cents a kilowatt-hour, which is higher than the EPCOR/Aquila service area. To the Minister of Energy: now that we know that some rural customers are paying higher energy charges than their neighbours served by EPCOR, will the minister now come clean and stop pinning the blame on EPCOR when it is obvious that it is deregulation that is to blame?

MR. SMITH: Mr. Speaker, if my memory serves me correctly, the rural electrification associations were along many years prior to the deregulation of power in the Alberta marketplace. In fact, that is a membership co-op, where members join REAs and on their own volition they make decisions whether to buy power, change their distribution system, change their transmission system. It's, in fact, I guess, similar to the very genesis of the NDP, which would probably account for the high prices. They're simply a co-op.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: First supplemental.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, since the minister responded to that question by just putting down REAs, will he now admit that they have to buy the power for their consumers on the market that this government established?

MR. SMITH: Mr. Speaker, let me make it very clear. I was not putting down REAs; I was putting down the NDs.

The REAs purchase power through a company known as Prairie Power. In fact, they do that with the full consensus and agreement of the REAs and have been doing it for some two to three years. To the best of my knowledge, Mr. Speaker, they're okay with the situation, because they have not contacted me to ask me to do something completely different for them. So when ATCO offers a rate of 4.9 cents per kilowatt-hour in the rural areas, where in December of this year they will have a lower rate than what they had in 2000, one can only find reasons of competition, deregulation, and private-sector competence as ensuring the lowest possible and most honest and transparent rates for all Albertans.

MR. MASON: Mr. Speaker, what does the minister have to say to Alberta farmers who in some cases are paying the highest power bills in the province because and only because of skyrocketing prices caused by this government's failed deregulation scheme?

MR. SMITH: Mr. Speaker, before I talk about what I'll say to farmers, let's just look across Canada and have a look at electrical jurisdictions that have been so blessed by an NDP government. British Columbia has some $7 billion worth of public debt. That's public debt that taxpayers of the future – taxpayers are burdened – must pay in order to sustain their hydro. That generates 11,000 megawatts of electricity. In Manitoba, which is right now the king of ND land, the king of the New Democrat land, they have some 7.2 billion dollars in public debt, and they produce only 5,000 megawatts of power. This government will not put your policies of debt on future children of this province for a worse province. No, no, no.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: All hon. members are reminded to direct their questions and their answers through the chair.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

MR. YANKOWSKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last Friday the results of a recent count of homeless persons in Edmonton was announced. I was at the National Day of Housing Action vigil, where I spoke and was presented with many cards addressed to the Minister of Seniors, which I will be presenting in this Chamber. The results showed that the number of counted homeless people in Edmonton had risen by 65 percent since 2000 to a level of 1,915 persons. My question is to the hon. minister responsible for housing. In light of these increases what is the government doing to address the issue of homelessness in our province?

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. minister responsible for housing.

MR. WOLOSHYN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With respect to the count I might add that it was not an exact science, and I understand that they had twice as many volunteers counting this time in a larger area. The way the count is conducted is one, basically, where you meet the folks on the street and talk to them. I will say this much: I will not verify nor deny the numbers presented. What I will accept, however, is that it appears very much that the number of homeless is increasing.

Now, very briefly and in addition to what I said earlier, Mr. Speaker, we are working on the issue and will be looking at some new concepts to work the transitional portion, whereby, as I understand it, quite a few people in the shelters currently need transitional housing in that they're paying a partial amount to a shelter. So if we move some of the people into a more appropriate facility, we'll have more spaces in the homeless shelters.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: First supplemental, hon. member.

MR. YANKOWSKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental question is again to the Minister of Seniors. Mr. Minister, you talked about funding numbers in your previous answer, but what about the results of this funding?

MR. WOLOSHYN: Very briefly, Mr. Speaker, I'm very pleased to say that the results are very good. Those folks in this city who are familiar with Urban Manor can now go to a very clean, very well run, very good shelter, which is a replacement one for a facility that, quite frankly, should not have stayed open for as long as it was. So the Edmonton Housing Trust Fund took the initiative to identify the priorities. That didn't add necessarily very many extra spaces, but what it did do was replace and enhance what was already there. That particular project was $3.17 million and had some 75 units in there.

The other one, and I'll just leave it at this, Mr. Speaker. We also had another project, with the Handicapped Housing Society, which is a complex for 56 low-income disabled persons, which is a new one. As was indicated earlier, some 400 additional spaces were added, and we've got quite a few more coming onstream this year.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Final supplemental, hon. member.

MR. YANKOWSKY: Mr. Speaker, my second supplemental question has already been answered in a previous question from the Member for Edmonton-Centre.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Electricity Deregulation

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As a result of this government's botched deregulation process, high electricity bills, costly billing errors, and frustrated electricity consumers from across the province have become, unfortunately, all too common. Yet the government stands idly by and does absolutely nothing. To make matters worse, this government has continued with its failed deregulation plan with the MAP 2 auction process at a cost to Alberta taxpayers. My first question is to the Premier. How much has the MAP 2 auction process cost Albertans to date? Has it cost a hundred million dollars, $300 million, or perhaps even $400 million?

Thank you.

MR. SMITH: The MAP Balancing Pool assets, formerly held by government.

MR. KLEIN: Right. Why don't you answer the question?

MR. SMITH: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. The MAP 2 is the market achievement plan auction of 2002. This is simply those assets that remain in the purview and control of government because they were built at a time when regulation was around, and they were far more inefficient than what the private sector is building today under regulation. Therefore, because of that, they were not able to be sold in the first auction or the first tranche of auctioning these assets off. So what we have done is communicated with industry our policy with respect to how we manage these assets. We've gone through a tranche of selling these assets in lots that are easily digestible by the private sector. I would be more than pleased to table at some future date the precise value that was received for this auction, that I know has been accepted by the marketplace and accepted by generators in Alberta.

MR. MacDONALD: Mr. Speaker, given that Albertans cannot hold their breath waiting for the Minister of Energy to get control of the electricity prices in this province, again to the Premier: if the Balancing Pool had a $345 million deficit at the time the annual report was tabled, what is the deficit in the Balancing Pool now?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I will have the Minister of Energy respond, and I guess I can respond in a more generic or global sense relative to the situation. Notwithstanding what the opposition claims, deregulation is working. More power is coming onstream. When you move from one system to the other, you can expect there will be some bumps along the road, and indeed we experienced that last year. That's why I take great exception to a statement made by the hon. member that we did absolutely nothing.

You know, I would remind the hon. member that very substantial rebates were given to all of the electricity consumers to see them over a very rough period. Over the long term, as the market develops, we can expect to see increased power generation. We can expect to see better customer service. We can expect to see downward pressure on prices, and certainly under a free market system we can expect to see more options for consumers, and that always serves to bring down the price.

Now, relative to where we are with respect to the actual cost of power, the hon. member well knows that when we introduced deregulation, there were a lot of factors that played into very, very high power rates at that particular time. Gas was at an all-time high. A number of generators, unfortunately, shut down, went down at the same time. The economy was at an all-time high. It was a super-heated economy. Yes, the average price in January of 2001 was 13.1 cents a kilowatt-hour, but I can tell you that the average rolling price for the year 2002 has been 4 cents a kilowatt-hour. Four cents a kilowatt-hour, Mr. Speaker. That is a very competitive price, certainly within the range of all consumers to pay, and to me that shows that deregulation is working.

Having said that, another thing that they forget to mention, purposely, deliberately forget to mention, is that those who want to stay in a regulated environment can do so, I believe, at least for another three years. They can do so. [interjection]

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: We'll save it, hon. Minister of Energy. His final supplemental may hit you directly.

The hon. member.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier. Another bump up in Albertans' power bills will be whenever the deferral account from the Balancing Pool is forced onto them. Will you wait until after the next election before Alberta consumers see that deferral account added to their bill and another bump up in their electricity prices?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, a 4 cents average right now, the deferral rate coming off – when? – at the end of 2003, electricity bills not being unbearable as we speak, but there are some other problems associated with bills that have nothing to do with deregulation whatsoever. I think that we're going to be in very good shape indeed.

I'll have the hon. minister supplement.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Briefly, hon. Minister of Energy.

MR. SMITH: Mr. Speaker, yes, we'll be in very good shape. As a matter of fact, the member was talking about a sales and market achievement plan. I can tell you that these have been purchased in units of 100 megawatts, 157 megawatts. They're out there. Any deferral account to the Balancing Pool – it is my understanding that there is nothing to be put forward in 2003. For the member to realize very carefully: those are decisions held by the Power Pool. They're not decisions made by the government. They're decisions made by a regulatory body in the area where the marketplace is regulated, and where the marketplace is free to flow, that's where we're seeing lower prices, prices of 4.1 cents. We're seeing deferral accounts drop off. We're seeing a fair and honest marketplace at work for Albertans.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Anthony Henday Drive

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Every day thousands of Albertans who reside immediately north and west of Edmonton make their way into Edmonton to work. They come down from the garrison on 97th Street, they come from east Sturgeon county on 127th Street, they come down St. Albert Trail, they come down 156th Street, they come down 170th Street, and they come down 182nd Street. The question here is to the Minister of Transportation, because the answer to the traffic jam that all of those thousands of people entering the city come to is the Anthony Henday highway. Last week we heard that the federal minister will allocate some funding to assist the city of Edmonton with this transportation corridor. My question to the Minister of Transportation is: when will we see the completion of the northwest quadrant of the Anthony Henday highway in order for us to make progress?

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

MR. STELMACH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As you know, the two ring roads around Edmonton and Calgary, of course, are our priority. The one around Edmonton: the design and construction phase has been agreed on by some 23 or 26 municipalities that surround the city of Edmonton. Given that support from the mayors and municipal leaders, we had sent the Minister of Industry, Allan Rock, a letter asking for support, part of the Canada strategic infrastructure fund, the $2 billion fund. To complete at least part of the segments around the two cities would require about $410 million. We had asked for roughly half of that and also supported that by saying that if we have, let's say, 10 percent of the population of Canada, then reasonably it's fair to ask for about 10 percent of the money.

Although there were some musings in the media and leaks to the media, I suppose, last week with respect to the amount of money that we were to receive, I just recently – in fact, this letter was sent to me just as I came into the House, confirming that the government of Canada will commit to contributing up to $150 million toward the cost of completing the ring roads in Edmonton and Calgary, specifically – and this is coming from the federal government – the northwest Calgary and southeast Edmonton sections. I can promise the Member for St. Albert and also all our colleagues that we will diligently work not only to obtain more funds to complete the two ring roads but to also expedite the section of the ring road that the hon. colleague is asking for.

I will of course table not only the letter to the Minister of Industry but also the copy of the letter that I received just momentarily confirming the money.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Hon. member, any supplemental?

MRS. O'NEILL: No. Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: No supplementals? Fair enough.
Then we go to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Class Sizes

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. One major urban school board is already running a deficit, and the arbitration awards arising out of the teachers' strikes are costing some boards up to 14 percent. Reducing the number of teachers and increasing class sizes are the only ways boards can capture the sizable amounts of money needed to meet the agreements. My questions are to the Minister of Learning. Given that class size was a major issue in the teachers' strike, what action is the minister taking to avoid a new budget-driven crisis?

DR. OBERG: Mr. Speaker, the ATA in their submission to the arbitration tribunal said that the awards could be funded by increasing class size and by decreasing the hours of instruction.

DR. MASSEY: To the same minister: does the minister support increasing class sizes?

DR. OBERG: Mr. Speaker, the mountain of evidence that is accumulating about class size basically shows that flexibility is by far the most important element when it comes to class size, where a class is not a class is not a class. Some classes, for example, at 12 might be too big; some classes of 35 might be fine. It's flexibility that is important, and that's my stand on class size.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you. Again to the same minister. The question was: does the minister support increasing class sizes?

DR. OBERG: I believe I just answered that, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Cross-country Ski Trails in Peter Lougheed Park

MS KRYCZKA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have been overwhelmed by the number of very concerned constituents in Calgary-West who have contacted me due to the rumour that the cross-country ski trails in Peter Lougheed park in Kananaskis Country will not be groomed and trails not set this winter due to operational budget cuts, that would create pressure to reduce services. Thousands of Albertans – seniors belonging to outdoor clubs, the handicapped at William Watson Lodge, families, students in school groups – and Canada-wide elder hostel tours all come to this prime recreational area to cross-country ski, which we all know is an excellent, affordable, healthy sport. My question is to the Minister of Community Development. Are you aware of the huge public concern, and is this, hopefully, only a rumour?

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Well, in short, Mr. Speaker, yes, I am aware of the concerns with regard to the need for continued trail grooming and track setting and trail maintenance throughout Kananaskis and elsewhere. However, whereas we did have a pool of labour that helped us out in that regard, that source is just not available to the department at the moment, so we do have to look at other options. But I want to tell you that the importance of this issue has not escaped us, and we are working to minimize any trail closures and to maximize the trail grooming and track setting that's necessary. In that respect, I want to assure the member and others who have this concern that we hope to have this situation rectified very soon.

Thank you.

MS KRYCZKA: Mr. Speaker, my first supplemental is to the same minister. Have you seriously considered a user fee approach for Kananaskis Country and other park users where all revenues would be directed towards park maintenance and capital requirements? This was a suggestion of people who wrote to my office.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Well, as a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, yes, we have been taking a look at other options, as I alluded to in the first answer. I think the suggestion that had come through to my office, at least, and one that our staff is looking at is whether or not it's possible to dedicate a user fee or a pay-as-you-go fee or some kind of pass system for that area in order for cross-country skiing to be continued. We do have the ability to do that. I think the department has had the ability since about 1996 or 1998 to receive direct revenues from camping fees or direct firewood sales where we operate the campground or other issues relative to Watson Lodge, which was referenced. So it is an option that we are taking a look at, and I should say, hon. member, that based on the letters that I've received, there is considerable warmth to that idea from and amongst members of the public. So, in short, yes, we will be looking at that as one of several options.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Hon. member, your third question, final supplemental.

MS KRYCZKA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second supplemental is also to the same minister. Many users have made another good suggestion: developing a system of volunteers to assist with trail maintenance. Have you considered that?

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Yes. In fact, that, too, has been given some consideration because it's an example that we already employ elsewhere. It's a good thing that we have these kinds of unique partnerships with the volunteer sector. We have well over 2,000 volunteers in this province who contribute well over 100,000 volunteer hours in the parks and protected areas division alone. That's not to mention all the other important areas where volunteers are involved. So we do value them, and we do see them as an important outreach component with whom we partner.

One quick example, Mr. Speaker, where we do exactly what the hon. member is asking about is the world-renowned Canadian Birkebeiner Ski Festival, which takes place here in the south Cooking Lake area. The staff there, who work with about 25 volunteers, ensure that this particular Birkebeiner Ski Festival takes place to the highest level possible. It all uses volunteers, and a lot of our staff, particularly from the Ukrainian Cultural Heritage Village, are involved there not only as staff but also as volunteers on weekends and in the evenings. So we will continue to maintain that partnership, because we do value volunteers here.

Contract Tendering Policy

MR. BONNER: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Infrastructure said that if we had an example of how contracts have been mismanaged at the taxpayers' expense, we should bring it to his attention. Well, the Auditor General has already done that. One example is that a consultant was hired without the use of an RFP to co-ordinate the work of other consultants doing evaluations of postsecondary institutions. As the work progressed, the minister revised the consultant's fees from $100,000 to $450,000. My questions are to the Minister of Infrastructure. Can the minister explain how his policy of not using RFPs for projects costing hundreds of thousands of dollars is a sound business practice?

MR. LUND: Mr. Speaker, the one that the hon. member mentions I would have to check. I don't have that one at my fingertips. Certainly, they never brought it to my attention, and that's what I asked them to do if they had an example where procedure was not followed.

MR. BONNER: Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: since the Auditor General also found that the Ministry of Infrastructure hands out contracts for engineering, architecture, and cost consulting services without going to competitive bids and without documenting the justification for how it chooses these consultants, how can Albertans be assured that projects are awarded fairly and transparently?

MR. LUND: Mr. Speaker, as it pertains to some of the trades that you would find within a contract, like engineering, like architecture, if it's not a very large project, there are times that we would go directly to a contractor or a consultant to oversee the project. There are cases where it may be in a remote area where it makes no sense that you would expect somebody from a great distance to travel to that location and oversee a project, but as a general rule we do call for an RFP. We take what the Auditor General says very seriously, and we are putting in place procedures to make sure that we have the right balance, because if it makes no sense and you know that there's only one person qualified within that general area, why would you go through the exercise? So we have to find that balance, and we're currently, as I speak, putting those procedures in place.

MR. BONNER: Mr. Speaker, I don't think the Auditor General was referring to those selected situations.

To the same minister: will the minister table in the House the amount of money that has been spent on untendered contracts and the names of the individuals and companies who received those contracts over the past 18 months?

MR. LUND: Well, Mr. Speaker, we have in the House a procedure of written questions, and it sure sounds to me like that might be one that the hon. member would want to pursue.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Tory government's deregulation scheme has proven to be a lose/lose proposition. It's a monumental failure. Customers are paying sky-high power bills, and companies like TransAlta Utilities are losing money. Not only is TransAlta taking a financial loss in its fourth quarter, but it is canceling a $205 million order for four natural gas turbines to add new electricity generation. To the Minister of Energy: why does the minister keep asserting that deregulation is successful when companies like TransAlta are losing money at the same time that customers are paying sky-high power bills?

MR. SMITH: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, the simple answer to why I would say that deregulation is successful is that, one, it's the truth; two, because it is working. It's too bad the leader of the third official party wasn't listening when his partner, Gaston, was talking, because you'd find that those assertions by them are simply not true. We have said all along that power prices today are higher than what they were in previous years, and we're also saying that we have not had a blackout in Alberta. We have not put taxpayers' investments at risk. Today, as a matter of fact, as of 1:35 some 4,300 megawatts of coal generation were working, some 2,500 megawatts of gas, some 249 megawatts of hydro, and some 107 megawatts of wind and other were being employed.

Mr. Speaker, if we would go back to 1998-1999 and look at the alternatives that this government, this economy, this Alberta was faced with, the only clear path to efficient market regulation of new generation of electricity was to be through a marketplace called deregulation. That has occurred. Of course, during the difficult times there were rebates of some four times $150 as well as auction proceeds of $40 a month delivered back to them. So if Alphonse and Gaston over there would just simply take . . .

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Hon. members, I think referring to each other by other names or our first names or our last names is not in keeping with the traditions or the Standing Orders of the House.

The hon. leader of the third party.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wonder if the minister would like to comment on this: what is TransAlta's willingness to pay a $42 million penalty for canceling the purchase of four natural gas turbines if not a vote of no confidence in this deregulation scheme?

MR. SMITH: Mr. Speaker, firstly, let me apologize to Alphonse and Gaston.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: An apology that carries with it the same that the apology is supposed to be for is not in order. If you wish to make an apology, please do so, but don't couch it in those unfortunate terms you've just used.

MR. SMITH: Well, Mr. Speaker, I was referring to the two individuals, as I had said earlier, to whom I apologized, and of course if a subsequent and second apology is necessary to the two members, I would consider that as well.

Mr. Speaker, to the question. TransAlta is simply making business decisions in a business marketplace. If we go back into a regulated model, you would see, as you have seen across Canada, where taxpayer supported debt approaches some $100 billion. A regulated model may have forced TransAlta to build new coal plants, may have forced them to build new types of expensive energy sources that would have been not necessary in today's market because of the many changes. So, in fact, TransAlta is doing an appropriate thing in reacting to marketplace circumstances, and as they do that, as I've listed from the power grid, much more power has come onstream, and it's been alternative power such as wind and co-fired gas generation power. There are ample amounts of power in this marketplace at honest and fair prices.

DR. PANNU: Mr. Speaker, given that the Ontario Tories have seen the error of their ways on deregulation of power and reversed direction, when will this government do the same over here in this province and provide relief and protection to Alberta customers?

MR. SMITH: Mr. Speaker, I would of course refer the member to numerous newspaper articles by experts throughout Canada that refer to the appropriateness of the Ontario move. Ontario is a much different marketplace than Alberta. Ontario has some $30 billion to $33 billion worth of taxpayer debt that they must divest themselves of over the next 10 years. Alberta was very fortunate in that no electricity generation in this province was ever owned by the province of Alberta. So, in fact, deregulation here is a way of getting open, transparent pricing to the consumer as quickly as possible in as market friendly a fashion as possible, and it has worked, because as the Premier said today: we're looking at 4-cent power.

head: Recognitions

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Hon. members, we have a number of people who are going to make recognitions today. Calgary-West, Cardston-Taber-Warner, Calgary-Fort, Edmonton-Castle Downs, Edmonton-Centre, and Edmonton-Glengarry. We'll start off with Calgary-West, followed by Edmonton-Centre.

2:40 Calgary Public Library

MS KRYCZKA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I am very pleased to praise in this Assembly the outstanding work of the Calgary public library. The library has received many awards in 2002 from Calgary, Alberta, Canadian, and American associations in recognition of their efforts on behalf of Calgarians, efforts that helped bring enrichment, inspiration, and information into their everyday lives.

Specifically, the Calgary public library received the inaugural W. Kaye Lamb award for service to seniors from the Canadian Library Association and the Ex Libris Association. This national award recognizes innovative services, programs, procedures, or facilities that benefit seniors. The award acknowledges the work that has resulted in a 75 percent increase in public library membership by seniors over the past five years and is a tribute to the dedication of volunteers and staff throughout the system.

Mr. Speaker, there's not enough time available to name all of the awards that this library has so deservedly received. However, let me conclude by saying what an honour it is to recognize the great work that is being done by the Calgary public library.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Well done. Exactly one minute.
The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

National AIDS Awareness Week

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today marks the beginning of National AIDS Awareness Week, and given Alberta's second to last rating in preventing the spread of HIV and hep C in prisons, I invite the Solicitor General to reconsider her position on harm reduction strategies. Preventing the spread of AIDS is a morality issue, and it is a mortality issue. Maybe we've forgotten that. You have HIV; your immune system breaks down. Then you have AIDS; then surely you die.

Inmates in our provincial jails are sentenced to a specific period of time. We do not have the constitutional jurisdiction or the moral authority to make that a death sentence. To say that issuing condoms or needles to prisoners is encouraging bad behaviour assumes that all sex in prison is consensual, which is shockingly naive, and it totally disregards volumes of research on the nature of addiction. Junkies stick needles in their arms. Even for those who choose unsafe sex or who start taking drugs in jail – yes, those are stupid and illegal choices, but we have a process for dealing with that, and it should not be a death sentence. Albertans can do better this National AIDS Awareness Week.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, followed by Edmonton-Glengarry.

Alberta Remington Carriage Museum

MR. JACOBS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased today to rise and give recognition to an award recently received by the Alberta Remington Carriage Museum wherein it was recognized as one of the best. Alberta's Remington Carriage Museum won a 2002 Attractions Canada award in the small indoor facilities category, recognizing it as one of Canada's best cultural and educational sites.

The Remington Carriage Museum houses one of the largest collections of horse-drawn vehicles in North America, with over 250 carriages, wagons, and sleighs. It also houses a working restoration shop, cafeteria, gift shop, and an active horse program in summer months. It is located in Cardston, approximately 250 kilometres south of Calgary.

Attractions Canada is a national information program sponsored by the federal government, the media, and private-sector firms. It is designed to encourage interest in Canada's many attractions that have cultural/educational value. The 2002 Attractions Canada awards cover 14 categories of attractions, and the awards were announced on Thursday, May 30, 2002.

I'm pleased to offer congratulations today to the staff and manager of the museum.

Thank you.

National Day of Housing Action

MR. BONNER: Mr. Speaker, Friday, November 22, was selected as the National Day of Housing Action. A number of cities across Canada held rallies to focus on the plight of the homeless. The Edmonton Coalition on Housing and Homelessness hosted an excellent conference on this subject. The keynote speaker for the conference was Senator Douglas Roche. His opening remarks included statistics on homelessness and poverty and were followed by this statement: the persistence of poverty in Alberta, where the deficit is down, taxes are low, employment is high, and oil and gas prices are generating more revenues for this province, is outrageous.

Group discussions were then held on topics related to the homeless. This was followed by a rally where results from this year's homeless count were announced, up significantly from last year.

Mr. Speaker, let us recognize the Edmonton Coalition on Housing and Homelessness, who continue to advocate and to assist the homeless, and their resolve to continue this mission so that all members of our society may participate equally in the Alberta advantage.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

CKUA Radio

MR. CAO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For 75 years the CKUA radio station has been a much treasured Alberta institution. CKUA represents a truly unique radio station. It has set the bar for community-based public broadcasting in Canada. There is no question about the success of CKUA. Listeners and supporters of the station are growing daily. CKUA is all about music and quality programming. For many it is the only place to hear nonmainstream music like blues, jazz, and new experimental bands.

CKUA has become integral to the music scene in Alberta. The station promotes shows and encourages a diverse and popular live music scene. With CKUA local artists have an avenue to get their music heard alongside established artists.

CKUA is strongly committed to remaining accessible in order to best reach their audience. CKUA has learned to do things a bit differently. The station is now available live around the clock on the air and around the world on the Internet.

I am sure that all of the hon. members here can join me in this opportunity to recognize and thank the partners of CKUA, listeners, donors, program sponsors, corporate community, and many volunteers and dedicated staff to ensure CKUA is part of Alberta long into the future.

Thank you.

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Canadian Finals Rodeo Farmfair International Grey Cup Celebrations

MR. LUKASZUK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This month Edmonton hosted three premier events that brought thousands of rural and urban visitors to Edmonton: the Canadian Finals Rodeo, Farmfair International, and, of course, the Grey Cup. I rise today to recognize and congratulate the organizers and competitors in each of these events.

Every year Edmonton Northlands does a spectacular job of hosting the CFR and Farmfair. This year was no different. Close to 90,000 people took in the show. I also want to thank the major events' organizers.

Commonwealth Stadium, as well, was packed with more than 62,000 people last night, Mr. Speaker, and all of them were CFL fans, and I would say that a large majority were Eskimo fans. I daresay that the majority of them supported the Eskimos, and it really showed. However, I want to congratulate the champions of this year's Grey Cup, the Montreal Alouettes. Also, I want to thank the organizers of this event, Mr. Bill Gardiner and Mr. Rick LeLacheur, for putting on a world-class event in Edmonton.

Thank you.

head: Presenting Petitions

MR. GOUDREAU: Mr. Speaker, I rise today to present a petition signed by 21 Albertans from my constituency petitioning the Legislative Assembly to urge the government to deinsure abortion.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Little Bow.

MR. MCFARLAND: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table petitions bearing 136 names mostly from the communities of Coaldale, Coalhurst, Diamond City, Enchant, Hays, Iron Springs, Monarch, Nobleford, Picture Butte, Turin, and Vauxhall, all in the Little Bow constituency, urging that the Legislative Assembly of Alberta deinsure abortions.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

REV. ABBOTT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the hon. Member for Barrhead-Westlock I am pleased to present a petition signed by over 150 concerned Albertans. This petition urges the government of Alberta to "remove abortion from the list of insured services that will be paid for through Alberta Health."

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the ND Party has a petition. The hon. leader of the NDP opposition.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to present yet another set of pages signed by more Albertans urging this government to "not delist services, raise health care premiums, introduce user fees or further privatize" our health care system.

Thank you.

2:50

head: Introduction of Bills

Bill 37

Occupational Health and Safety Amendment Act, 2002

REV. ABBOTT: Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to introduce Bill 37, the Occupational Health and Safety Amendment Act, 2002.

This act proposes amendments to the Occupational Health and Safety Act which are part of government's Workplace Safety 2.0 strategy, that was developed in partnership with industry, labour, and safety associations. These amendments will help achieve a 40 percent reduction in the lost time claim rate by 2004 and will result in 15,000 fewer injured workers each year.

[Motion carried; Bill 37 read a first time]

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would move that Bill 37, Occupational Health and Safety Amendment Act, 2002, as just presented, be moved onto the Order Paper under Government Bills and Orders.

[Motion carried]

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

THE CLERK: Pursuant to Standing Order 37.1(2) I wish to advise the House that the following document was deposited with the Office of the Clerk: Alberta Alcohol and Drug Abuse Commission statement of operations for the year ended March 31, 2002, the hon. Mr. Mar.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Energy.

MR. SMITH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's with great pleasure that I rise today to table the required number of copies of the Ministry of Energy's 2001-2002 annual report. It includes a summary for the fiscal year for both the Department of Energy and the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board. Details are included of the second highest amount of resource revenue collected in Alberta's history. Energy collected some $6.23 billion in resource revenue, some 30 percent of the government of Alberta's total revenue.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

MS EVANS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would wish to table responses to Committee of Supply dated April 10, 2002, and lest the impression be that they had not been submitted before, they were, but it was suggested that because they didn't come on May 12 in time to be received in the House, they be tabled. So today I have the required number of copies, responses to questions not answered at the meeting.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

MR. STELMACH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish to table this afternoon copies of the letters I referred to earlier in question period. Thank you.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

MRS. TARCHUK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As chair of the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices I would like to table five copies of the 2001-2002 annual report of the Auditor General of Alberta. Copies were distributed to all members on October 17, 2002.

Thank you.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Environment.

DR. TAYLOR: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to table 10 copies of the environmental protection security fund annual report. The purpose of this fund is to hold security deposits to ensure satisfactory land reclamation.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a number of tablings this afternoon. The first is five copies of letters from Mr. Kim Brown and Ms Wanda Lord of Stony Plain and Mr. Dave Parsons of Morinville. These Albertans are concerned about the Bighorn being closed off to highway vehicle users.

My second tabling for today is from Mervyn Pidherney. He is very concerned about predicted cutbacks in the highway funding for Alberta.

The third tabling is from Steven Brodie, and he has significant concerns about teacher funding in this province.

Thank you.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The leader of the ND opposition.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've got two tablings for today. The first tabling is a letter from Gerald M. Ross, vice-president, Cochrane Environmental Action Committee. This letter is dated November 19, the first day of this exceptionally short fall session, and it's addressed to the Premier. Mr. Ross is urging the government of Alberta to stop wasting public money on funding "a campaign of senseless misinformation concerning carbon dioxide, climate change, provincial economy, and the Kyoto Protocol."

The second tabling, Mr. Speaker, is also a letter, from Miss Rhonda Moffat of the Winnifred Stewart Association, addressed to me. Miss Moffat is concerned with the most recently proposed PDD initiatives that could seriously jeopardize health, welfare, and wellness of individuals with developmental disabilities.

Mr. Speaker, to conclude, I must just draw your attention to the fact that my colleague the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands also has a tabling to make.

Thank you.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings this afternoon. The first one is a letter that I received on November 20 of this year from the Canadian Federation of University Women, Edmonton. This letter is urging the government of Alberta "to cooperate in the ratification of the Kyoto Protocol."

The second tabling I have is a survey from the World Bank Institute, a survey of chairs of public accounts committees throughout the British Commonwealth and also my response as chairman of Public Accounts to that survey and my ideas on how we can certainly improve the Public Accounts Committee in Alberta and make it a committee with a little bit more bite and a little bit more bark.

Also, I have a tabling this afternoon, Mr. Speaker. It is a letter addressed to myself from Shauna-Lee Williamson, and Shauna-Lee Williamson is expressing concern about the direction of persons with developmental disabilities, the department and the funds and the standards for agencies that are used to support individuals who can unfortunately not care sometimes for themselves.

Thank you.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling five copies of a power bill from a farmer in Mayerthorpe showing that his bill includes energy charges of 7.95 cents per kilowatt-hour, amongst the highest in Alberta, which is due to the government's failed power deregulation scheme. All personal information on the bill has been removed.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings today. The first is five copies of a letter from constituent Harvey Hook, who notes that he's getting a rental increase every six months. He's now had his rent raised by $200 over the last 18 months. He's asking the government to please implement some sort of rental increase law so that he doesn't have to have an unknown future every six months. There's no maximum to the rental increase.

I also wanted to table five copies of the postcard campaign that's being launched by Our Voice, The Spare Change Magazine that was referred to earlier.

Finally, five copies of the Count of Homeless Persons in Edmonton prepared by the Edmonton Homelessness Count Committee, October 2002.

Thank you.

Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: We shall call the committee to order.

3:00 Bill 207
Alberta Wheat and Barley Test Market Act

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Peace River.

MR. FRIEDEL: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. Back last May 13 I was pleased to give up my place on the floor of this Assembly so we could proceed with the adjournment of the spring session, and I have to say that I did so very reluctantly because I really wanted to continue as we were having so much fun about that time of the year. I know that all the members have been waiting with great anticipation to hear the rest of what I had to say on Bill 207, which is the Alberta Wheat and Barley Test Market Act. I thought this was the place where I was supposed to pause for some thunderous applause. [some applause] Thank you very much. Although most of the members are going to well remember what I had to say in the first couple of minutes of my presentation, I'm going to recap a couple of points just so that those who might not have been here that day can quickly get up to speed.

First of all, at the core of Bill 207 is the idea of choice. We know that free markets have always been important to other industries, and this bill would give our farmers a similar choice, and that would be whether to participate in the Canadian Wheat Board or to market their product independently. This freedom is enjoyed in eastern provinces such as Ontario and Quebec. The Wheat Board's monopoly control over prairie grain farmers is not only unfair, but it's an insult. The bill asks for the same choices that other provinces already enjoy.

Personally, I see that the Wheat Board monopoly is nothing more than a central government effort to retain control. You know, 80 percent of Canada's agricultural land is located in the western provinces, yet this archaic central institution manages it. It was set up 67 years ago to deal with wartime conditions, but our federal governments have either never figured out that those conditions have since changed or they assumed that our farmers are not intelligent enough to make market decisions on their own. This control has to end. Our farmers deserve the same market choices that eastern farmers and other Canadian industries have. The Wheat Board simply justifies its monopoly by claiming that farmers' best interest is in their mind. It's the old we know what's best for you mentality. Why is it that only prairie farmers are told what's best for them? I believe these farmers are as capable as anyone else of choosing for themselves.

I started, when I was speaking last spring, using a comparison of going to a stockbroker to manage your investments. Wouldn't you, if you were in this position, want a stockbroker that you are comfortable with? Wouldn't you want one who represents your interests? Don't you think that the ability to make that choice yourself is rather essential? How would you feel if you were simply assigned a broker and your business was going to be lumped together with everyone else's? Now, on top of that, you become aware that this broker has some serious problems, but you're still stuck with him. You still cannot change brokers. Yet that's exactly what we're looking at with the Canadian Wheat Board.

Last February the Auditor General of Canada released a special audit of the Canadian Wheat Board. In it many troubling facts came to light. These give you an idea of how well Alberta farmers are being represented – not. The Auditor General found, and I quote: significant deficiencies in governance, strategic planning processes, performance measurement and reporting, and information technology; that is, significant deficiencies in four of the nine responsibilities of the Wheat Board.

First, the Auditor General found that the board of directors had not dedicated enough attention to its mandate of oversight and strategic direction. Mr. Chairman, that sounds like a good definition of mismanagement.

Secondly, she found that the Canadian Wheat Board lacks clear and measurable targets to assess its ongoing performance. How can farmers be assured that their interests are looked after when the Wheat Board cannot even establish its own goals?

Thirdly, in regard to performance measuring and reporting the Auditor General stated that the Wheat Board has failed to be completely accountable to farmers and stakeholders. In this area of strategic planning the Wheat Board lacks, and I quote: clear and measurable targets, both financial and operational, to assess its performance. Mr. Chairman, not only is the board's reporting inadequate; they could not even release their own financial report on time.

Finally, the audit discovered a number of deficiencies in the management of information technology. Based on current practices of similar organizations of similar size and complexity, there was found to be a lack of stable and effective leadership. There was also found to be a lack of corporate strategy, and there was no long-term plan to determine how information systems will support the board's business direction and operations. To me it's very disconcerting that information technology is so fundamentally flawed in this large and influential organization.

In addition to these deficiencies, the report stated that the Wheat Board's marketing function needs improvement and that its long-term marketing plan was inadequate. The report also suggests finding a more equitable way to share interest earnings among the farmers and, further, that farmers were not adequately informed of the price pooling policy and its effects.

Finally, "the communications and corporate policy functions lack operational plans with clear goals and strategies to guide activities and measure and monitor performance."

The Auditor General's report exposes some very serious problems in the Canadian Wheat Board. This is pretty scary stuff. While it might be desirable, Bill 207 isn't attempting to change the Wheat Board's practices. The province doesn't have that authority anyway. We're simply asking for a 10-year test market, during which time the Alberta farmers can make a choice. They can elect to sell their wheat and barley to the Canadian Wheat Board or to do so themselves. Allowing the board and private business to coexist would have many benefits, Mr. Chairman. There's no doubt that giving farmers more control over their product would stimulate activity in value-added processing. This would mean more jobs in Alberta. Presently, there is very little processing of wheat and barley in this province or anywhere else on the prairies compared to other commodities.

Also, allowing competition will encourage all farming activities, including production, marketing, and transportation, to become more efficient. Global support for free markets is continually increasing. Bill 207 will help our farmers in the area of ever growing competition from their American counterparts. Maybe we can't compete with their subsidies, but at least we can remove some of the hurdles that our farmers face.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, I would like to address some of the skepticism that has been raised about this bill. Some have said that the agriculture industry is not suited to free market competition, but no one has really said why that should be so. But that could be one reason to set it up as a 10-year test market. Let the experience speak for itself. I'm confident that Alberta farmers will be successful if we give them the opportunity to prove it. I'm also convinced that we can create an environment where both the Wheat Board and independent farmers can work side by side. We don't have to nor do we want to abolish the board. Given some competition to make it more aggressive, it could build on its status as the single largest exporter of wheat and barley in the world. The security it offers may well be preferred by some farmers, but just let those farmers decide which they prefer. It's clear, though, that we need another option.

I strongly support Bill 207, Mr. Chairman, and I urge all the members to do so as well. Thank you.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

MR. MARZ: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm very pleased, as well, today to have the opportunity to rise and speak in favour of Bill 207, the Alberta Wheat and Barley Test Market Act, in Committee of the Whole. I'd also like to thank the Member for Calgary-Mountain View for all his hard work in bringing this bill forward.

Bill 207 is about creating choices where currently none exist. This bill is also about doing away with unfairness that has been at work for almost six decades, and it's also about giving Alberta farmers the right to make their own choices. In a nutshell, Mr. Chairman, that's what Bill 207 is about. This bill does not call for the abolition of the Canadian Wheat Board. Quite the contrary. The Canadian Wheat Board will most certainly remain in place. All that Bill 207 calls for is that an open market for the purchase and sale of wheat and barley produced here in Alberta be established. It doesn't say, "End the Wheat Board's monopoly," although some may think that that's a good idea. It doesn't call for Alberta to unilaterally take action against the Canadian Wheat Board, nor does it encourage single individuals to do so. The only thing that Bill 207 seeks to do is to establish free and fair trade of wheat and barley that is grown in our province through the implementation of an open market.

Mr. Chairman, the Canadian Wheat Board controls the price, the marketing, and the transportation of all wheat and barley produced for human consumption or export. How can this be considered acceptable in today's economy? In most every sector the prevailing attitude is to decentralize operations, to open up markets, and to promote free and freer trade. No pun intended, but why are we letting the Canadian Wheat Board go against the grain of current practices?

Mr. Chairman, wheat is grown in every Canadian province but Newfoundland, whereas barley is grown in every Canadian province, yet it is only wheat and barley crops of Alberta, Saskatchewan, and Manitoba along with a small portion of British Columbia, up in the northeast corner of the Peace region, that are subject to the Canadian Wheat Board's control. Right now Alberta's wheat and barley farmers are prohibited from selling their crops directly to producers. All grain deliveries must be made to Canadian Wheat Board agents, where they are pooled together. The same holds true for the wheat and barley farmers in Saskatchewan and Manitoba. Deliveries to anyone other than the Canadian Wheat Board are unlawful.

To make matters worse, Mr. Chairman, wheat producers in the designated area consisting of Alberta, Saskatchewan, Manitoba, plus the northeast corner of British Columbia are prohibited from delivering their wheat to a Canadian Wheat Board agent at will. Put differently, a wheat farmer must wait to make his or her delivery until such time as the Canadian Wheat Board calls for wheat through delivery contracts, the sole exception being when the delivery is made to off-board markets and then only as feed wheat.

It doesn't stop there, Mr. Chairman. For western farmers the Canadian Wheat Board has four pool accounts: one for wheat, one for durum, one for barley, and one for designated barley, also known as malt barley. Premiums and discounts between wheat classes and grades are established within the pool account based on administrative adjustments. On the other hand, Ontario wheat producers are free to sell their crops to any Ontario wheat board agent at any time, and they can do so directly to processors, thereby avoiding the fees they would otherwise incur by having their crop handled by an intermediary of some sort, such as country elevators.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, the Ontario wheat board has seen it appropriate to give Ontario farmers a variety of marketing options. Let's briefly touch upon three of these options. The first option is for the farmer to sign a one-year contract with the Ontario wheat board, for a year at a time, guaranteeing a locked-in price.

The second option available to Ontario farmers is to apply for an exemption from the Ontario wheat board. Such an exemption allows them to export to whomever they want whenever they want, whether it's to somewhere else in Canada, somewhere in the United States, or even beyond the shores of North America.

The third and final option is basically any or all of the above. As an example, then, an Ontario farm could go with the Ontario wheat board for intraprovincial marketing and then go with the Canadian Wheat Board for interprovincial marketing and get an exemption and export some of the crop to New York, for example, and some of it to Italy.

As we've seen, Mr. Chairman, wheat and barley farmers in Ontario have choices, as do their counterparts in Quebec and the Maritimes, but out here in the prairies, on the Great Plains, where our level of prosperity and economic growth is the envy of the rest of the country, the Canadian segment of the world's breadbasket is being reined in by a federal agency whose origin dates back to the end of World War I. They had it right back in 1920, when the first incarnation of the Canadian Wheat Board was abolished because the federal government could not justify a central marketing system during peacetime conditions. To use a more direct way of laying out the matter, there was no justification for a monopoly. That hasn't changed since there's still no justification for a monopoly, although one should perhaps be careful about using the term "monopoly." The Canadian Wheat Board prefers to use the term "single-desk selling."

This position is rationalized as follows on the Canadian Wheat Board's own web site: instead of competing against one another, Canada's 110,000 wheat and barley farmers sell as one and therefore command a higher price for their product. But, Mr. Chairman, is that really so? In the end, are western Canadian farmers really better off under the Canadian Wheat Board? I don't think so; however, what I do think is that the Canadian Wheat Board, this enormous agency that exerts so much control directly and indirectly over life in our province, is better off thanks to the Canadian farmer.

Mr. Chairman, the Canadian Wheat Board is a giant of untold proportions. It's a Goliath that's found its David in the western Canadian wheat and barley farmer. Obviously, there's disagreement about the role, function, and benefit of the Canadian Wheat Board not just among farmers but also amongst many and perhaps in this House. Some of us like the Canadian Wheat Board or at least have no quarrel with it as an institution nor with its mandate. I don't share that benevolent view, but I do respect the right of others to take that position.

However, Mr. Chairman, if we listen to those most affected by the Canadian Wheat Board, the farmers, it's clear that alternatives to the Wheat Board are being sought. In December 1995 a plebiscite was held, and two-thirds of the Alberta wheat and barley producers voted in favour of an alternative to the Canadian Wheat Board. As if that weren't enough, in a recent Alberta Barley Commission poll over 10,000 farmers, or 75 percent, indicated that they wanted the ability to sell their product to whomever they wanted. That did not exclude the Wheat Board; farmers simply wanted to have alternatives. In our own province more than four-fifths of the wheat and barley producers want such alternatives.

Mr. Chairman, this province's oil and gas resources are the envy of the rest of the country. We don't have a monopoly on them, but we have a variety of companies that drill, refine, and market these resources. Some of the companies are Canadian; others are not. When it comes to oil and gas, we all agree that competition is healthy. As consumers we like it when we can fill our tanks at less than 50 cents a litre and cry foul when it exceeds 70 cents. As producers we smile when the price of gas rises and worry when it decreases. That, however, is how the free market works. In the long run, we've benefited greatly from living in a free-market economy.

Can you imagine a giant like the Canadian petroleum board taking the stage and dictating prices, delivering schemes and export permits? No, you can't; neither can I. But surely you can remember the national energy program. The everyday reality of the western Canadian farmer is very much in the hands of such a giant. Mr. Chairman, this is not right. If it weren't enshrined in law, it would be illegal. Ethically I believe it's wrong. Let's allow our province's wheat and barley producers to enjoy the benefits of the free market.

I'll be voting in favour of Bill 207, and I urge everyone in this Assembly to do the same. Regardless of party affiliation or whatever area you represent, an urban or a rural riding, please support this bill. Thank you.

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Chairman, it's a pleasure to rise and join the debate on Bill 207. I think, as members of the House are aware, I've been a strong advocate of the principles in this bill for many years, and I certainly commend the Member for Calgary-Mountain View, an urban colleague, for bringing this very important agricultural marketing issue to this forum. I wanted to just cover a little bit of the history of the Canadian Wheat Board to try and put this into perspective and then to finish with my views on choice and freedom and the things that we believe in so strongly in this province.

When you look at the Canadian Wheat Board, you know, it was really established in response to financial instability during World War I, and at that time it was a one-year experiment under the authority of the War Measures Act in 1919. Once that year was completed, the board was disbanded and traditional trading resumed.

In 1935 it was recreated because of the Dirty Thirties, the drought and the economic conditions. It was felt by those who believed they knew best that the open market couldn't operate, so it was again created as a temporary body. Then, as I understand it, it operated as a temporary or voluntary pool until 1943, and then World War II came in. Interestingly enough, at that time it was made compulsory to control inflation, in fact to keep wheat prices down. Hence, the creation of this monopoly in – well, we go back – 1943. Here we are in 2002, and we're virtually still operating in the same way.

The reason I mention this is that the Wheat Board has had a history, and it has had change, and it has had a number of reasons for operating. None of the reasons when it was put in place, that I could see, really ever suggested that it was the best means of trading wheat and barley. It became a monopoly not because it was the best alternative between marketing systems; rather, it was created or adopted as a temporary wartime measure to deal with extraordinary issues.

Well, Mr. Chairman, I suggest that things have changed. There are a couple of things I want to make very clear. One, the government of Alberta's position has never been to abolish the Canadian Wheat Board. We have simply advocated choice for our producers, freedom to market a product that they grow. I have said a number of times, including when I spoke at the standing committee on agriculture in Ottawa, that it was absolutely ludicrous to me that producers could invest hundreds of thousands of dollars, even millions, into a farming operation, that they could plant a crop, that they could shepherd it through the growing seasons making all of the right decisions, harvest it with some of the most expensive equipment there is known to mankind – and that may be a farm wife's opinion – and then all of a sudden when it comes to marketing, something happens, and these same people are not capable or intelligent enough or something to actually sell this crop.

Now, it's interesting that that's only in two crops: wheat and barley. Farmers can market mustard. They can market canola. They can market mints. They can market beans. They can market peas. They can market all kinds of legumes, and an interesting one that one of my colleagues just tweaked to my memory – oats used to be under the Canadian Wheat Board, and when oats were removed, my goodness, the sky will fall, the oat business will end, and never shall there be marketing of oats in Alberta again, never mind the rest of Canada. Well, interestingly enough, the oat market does very well in an open system, and of course, no different than any other commodity, it has its highs and its lows.

[Mr. Johnson in the chair]

The other thing I want to point out is that it is my understanding that the Canadian Wheat Board actually markets somewhere between 17 and 22 percent of the barley yet controls the marketing of it all. Surely it does make sense to not have barley under a board when that is the amount that they would market. It's interesting: farmers can command good prices for any other commodity but wheat and barley. Hmm. It's sad when producers have spent years trying to change this monopoly, a monopoly that I only know exists in two other countries in the world: North Korea and Cuba. Somehow I did not ever expect that Canada would be in the same marketing system as either of those two countries.

It's interesting that when producers spend hours and hours, months, years, to try and change a system through negotiation, through discussions, through consultations, and are unsuccessful, go to some rather extreme lengths to prove their point, they end up in jail. As I heard a Member of Parliament speak on Friday night, they pointed out that four persons who were convicted of child pornography were given community service as a penalty and 13 Alberta farmers spent time in jail for marketing a product. Then the ultimate, I think, insult: the federal minister considers they're grandstanding.

Mr. Chairman, I know a number of these farmers, almost all of them. I assure this House that they are fine, honourable persons who are simply trying to promote freedom and choice for a business that they enjoy. I've known farmers all my life, and there are no more independent people than people in that industry. Let me assure Mr. Goodale, if he would deign to read the Hansard from this debate, that these farmers are not grandstanding. Maybe, Mr. Goodale, it is just time for a fair examination of Canadian Wheat Board practices, and maybe it's just time, Mr. Goodale, for the federal government to act on the recommendations of its own Commons Standing Committee on Agriculture and Agri-Food, that in its recommendation stated very clearly that the market as it is today did not seem to be working and that a test market should be established. Yet it appears that this report, as many others, has been shelved and ignored.

This debate is not hard to understand. Maybe the marketing of grain seems complex to some, but this debate is not hard to understand. This debate comes down to two things: freedom and choice. It's all about fairness, Mr. Chairman. It's all about equality for Alberta producers. Why can producers of wheat in other parts of Canada, east of Manitoba, market their product themselves? Yet if you are somehow on the west side of that magic line, on the prairies, who, incidentally – and I may be biased in this, but I don't think so; I think records will prove me out – produce the best quality wheat and barley that is grown anywhere . . . Western Canadian farmers cannot market their own product, but if you happen to be in Ontario or eastern Canada you can. Nobody has ever explained that to me, except they say that we produce too much. Well, we thought that was rather a good thing, that our farmers are productive and they produce and have continued to improve their production and have continued to improve quality and have continued to make it a product that is in demand.
