As well, I would like to first of all look here at the vision as you have stated it for the department, and it is an Alberta where self-reliant Aboriginal people and Northern Albertans are recognized as leading contributors to and participants in the Alberta Advantage which includes understanding of and respect for Aboriginal cultures.

I think that's a statement that is so very, very correct. I think it was well chosen, and it is certainly a vision that all Albertans wish you every success in.

In looking at this, I want to first of all look at goal 6, which is on page 54 of the business plan. Goal 6, I see, first of all – and the Member for Edmonton-Riverview did touch on this – is to “increase students' financial capacity to access post-secondary education through provision of bursaries or other assistance.” I would like to make some comments on this. First of all, I've had discussions with the dean of education at the University of Saskatchewan, and they have a tremendous aboriginal program. I think that here in Alberta we are trying to certainly bring our departments up to that speed. I would like to ask the minister what has been done as far as her department or her ministry. Has she become involved in discussions with the University of Alberta and looked at the model that we currently have at the University of Saskatchewan for the aboriginal education program?

Now, as well I have a certain percentage of aboriginals in my constituency, and I had a call from one of them, a young single mother, who had made every effort after a failed marriage to go back to school. Very difficult with a young child, but she got back to school. She had perfect attendance. She got into what I guess we would call a relatively lower level of program, got very excited about learning, and did extremely well, so she decided that she would like to continue with a harder program. The funding that was available to her was for the third and fourth years of this program, yet to get her started and get her involved in the new program, there was very little funding. What I would like to suggest is that the minister look at certainly not only the funding for students who are in their final years of a program but also look at funding for those students who have proven that they are committed to learning, that have indicated they have attained some success and that they certainly would be good candidates to support.

I look at core business 4, to “promote and facilitate the economic and social development of aboriginal and northern communities.” Goal 1 there is “to increase skill levels of aboriginal and northern Albertans.” The strategy here, 1.1, is to “increase students' financial capacity to access post-secondary education through provision of bursaries or other assistance.” Now, when I look at the key performance measure, which is to “provide bursaries to students in Northern health practicum placements,” and I see that we have 50 bursaries, my question here is: are 50 bursaries enough? Do these fulfill the number of requests or applications, and if they don't, what would we have to do to get more bursaries available? Certainly that would be a question there.

I think we all realize that when students from any small community have to leave to attend a postsecondary institute or whatever, again this is very, very difficult, and I'd like to know what supports the ministry has in place for these students who do leave their small communities and have to travel to some urban centre to continue their education. It would seem to me that this would be critical, to offer that support for students who certainly could be overwhelmed, as many students are that come from small towns or small communities when they do enter larger urban areas.

Now, one other area I would like to talk about is on the health of our aboriginals. Certainly one of the areas that's come to light in discussions with people that are involved with diabetes research here in the province as well as people who are involved in the nephrology unit, the kidney dialysis unit, over at the University hospital is that there seems to be a higher incidence of diabetes amongst our aboriginal population. Of course, one of the complications of diabetes is kidney failure, and approximately 50 percent of the population that are on kidney dialysis are diabetics. So if in fact these numbers do bear out, what is the ministry doing first of all to educate the aboriginal people about diabetes, whether it be through a cross-ministry strategy or whatever? What are we doing to reduce the incidence of diabetes, and do you have any targets there?

So those are a few questions I had, and I thank you very much for the opportunity to ask those this evening.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to ask a few questions of the minister with respect to certain program expenditures. One that really caught my eye is in the volume on business plans, and it's page 56. The ministry program expenditures indicate first of all that of the 30 million or so dollars in the department's budget, a good three-fifths, or 60 percent, goes towards programs related to the Metis settlements, and of the remaining 40 percent about, I guess, 35 percent goes for the First Nations aboriginal affairs. My question is specific to the Metis settlements legislation. Of the $18 million plus that is allocated to the Metis services portion of the programs, why is more than half, $10 million, allocated to legislation? What's that legislation about? Why is it so expensive to spend money on it? This is the only department where I find money allocated to legislation, so I'm curious.

This raises the question of: how many Metis settlements are there in the province? Could the minister give me an idea of the number of Metis settlements we have in the province for which these programs and expenditures are presented here and the Metis population and the First Nations population? In terms of the relative allocation of resources under your ministry to these two main groups or subpopulations, the First Nations and the Metis, the expenditures I guess need to be judged also relative to the numbers within each category that are served by the ministry.

So these are very simple, straightforward questions: the number of Metis settlements and the number of people in the Metis subgroup or population and the First Nations. The last one: what's the $10 million on legislation about?

THE CHAIR: The hon. minister.

MS CALAHASEN: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. There were a few questions I got after that you were asking initially, so I'll start with those, and then I'll answer the subsequent questions you've asked, if that's okay. My colleague the chair of NADC will also answer some questions that were directed to him on northern issues.

There were some questions on the ombudsman which I didn't get, and I want to talk about those. I indicated that we haven't had anybody yet, but we're going to advertise shortly. We also anticipate that a selection will be made by the end of June, and we're trying to push it as quickly as we can. A review panel of government and settlement representatives will interview candidates and make a recommendation to myself, so we'll go through that process and make sure that it's done. The ombudsman will hear complaints from settlement residents regarding the decisions and conduct of settlement councils under administrators, as I indicated earlier. The ombudsman will not be responsible for taking corrective action. That will be the responsibility of the Metis Settlements Appeal Tribunal for settlement councils or myself. So we've got those answered. I know those were questions that you had asked.

You had also asked why my department's budget did not increase this year. It's a new department. We actually have been trying to work with other departments. We're a facilitating group. What we want to do is make sure that we deal with the various departments to work on that, and as a facilitating group we'll be able to pull it all together. As I indicated earlier as well, we'll try to make sure that we continue to assess what it is we're going to need in the future, and we'll continue to work on the implementation of the aboriginal policy framework and see how we can do that. So that will be in future budgets you will see coming forward.

There were a number of questions also from the Member for Edmonton-Riverview. With respect to the performance measure under goal 2, you had asked that question. I agree that the satisfaction measure is set at a beginning level. We call it a beginning level. There are many factors that make up satisfaction with government programs, as you probably will recognize. There's also confusion as to whether government is responsible for different programs, whether it's federal or provincial. So our government's efforts are occasionally confused with federal programs. Perhaps this explains the beginning level of satisfaction that we're trying to get at, but we certainly will take any recommendations that you have to see what can be done in that respect.

My colleague will deal with the northern issues. I'll go forward on Edmonton-Riverview.

You talked about economic viability for the Metis settlements. It's being decided by the settlements. Actually, in the year 2000 the Metis settlements undertook a survey to determine just what those issues were near and dear to them. They had a conference, and I attended that conference. The settlement members know what they want at this stage, and they've indicated it in that economic viability strategy. As a matter of fact, strip malls aren't really on the list, but they certainly have a number of other things. They've talked about bison farms, looking at agriculture, looking at oil and gas. Some of them do have oil and gas possibilities. Some have forestry. So they're looking at a whole variety of ways that they can begin to get money in and to be able to look at how they can be economically viable. That's a task that they've been taking on themselves, trying to figure out how they can do that, and we've been waiting for that to see how it could all come together. We have to continue to work in that respect and continue to see what can be done.

You asked about how we are doing regarding economic development. Well, we've been working with aboriginal communities and industries to look at ways to increase aboriginal jobs, aboriginal businesses, and aboriginal partnerships with industry. As a matter of fact, I carry around my list, and it's Current and Recently Completed Aboriginal, Private Sector, and/or Government Partnerships. I just want to read them to you, because this is really important. Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development and the Athabasca Tribal Council/industry working group I talked about earlier in my speech. That's one that we've been working on. Another one that we've been working on, that I said in my speech, is the Little Red River Cree/Tallcree First Nations pilot project. The Dene Tha' First Nations consultation pilot project along with Alberta Energy and the Canadian Association of Petroleum Producers are doing the traditional use study. Of course, there's the Calling Lake economic development interagency project, which we've been working on.

The other ones are really good success stories as well. Alberta

Human Resources and Employment has been a major player. Blackstar Learning Centre, Oteenow Treaty 6 and Treaty 8, the Metis Nation of Alberta Association, Alberta Learning, and Alberta Human Resources and Employment are part of a skills for work contract designed to provide participants with the prequalifications for apprenticeship programs. That's just one example. Lethbridge aboriginal employment centre's partnerships contract has been developed with HRDC, MNA, Treaty 7, and Alberta Human Resources and Employment. Another one is the Edmonton urban aboriginal initiative committee, and I want to talk about that because there were some specific questions relative to that, and I'll go back to that, the same with the Calgary urban aboriginal initiative committee. We've got two of those that are sort of specific to the aboriginal component. We also have human resources and petroleum land administrator training – the Stoney tribal administration and Suncor, Olympia Energy, and Utilicorp. The Alberta Human Resources and Employment, Treaty 7, and MNA zone 3 labour market development units project involving SAIT and Bow Valley College. The First Nations resource training project, the Precision Drilling project, which involved four First Nations – Kehewin, Heart Lake, Frog Lake, and Cold Lake – industry; the federal government, INAC; AHRE; and the Petroleum Industry Training Service, otherwise known as PITS. Actually, AHRE developed a joint oil/gas training and employment demonstration project at Gift Lake with PITS and Edge Petroleum.

We've got quite a lot of them, and I don't want to go through them, but I can certainly provide that information to you if you would like to see that. I think it's very important to note that in working with the aboriginal community and with industry, we can come out with partnerships that are really conducive to making sure the economic initiatives can occur in that respect.

The other one I just want to talk about, questions that the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie was bringing up, the overrepresentation in the justice system. We see that, and we've been trying to work with Justice to see how we can bring those numbers down. We've also been doing a number of things on an earlier basis, so it's through the capacity-building strategy to develop the healthy communities, which is something that I hear you talk about on a continual basis, how we can do that. Any suggestions that you have I'm willing to take and see how we can implement that.

The focus on learning skills/training with aboriginal youth that will be trained and employable. That's where, when you're talking about our youth, we have the fastest growing population but we've also the largest population under the age of 19. So we have that whole issue of making sure that we continue to get the kids educated and get them trained somehow along the way to be able to make sure they take advantage of what's happening in the province of Alberta.

Justice also co-chairs the aboriginal policy initiative, and we're trying to look at many different things for crime prevention. We've got a number of initiatives that are occurring, but we can certainly take on as much as we can, as long as you are willing to give us more information as to how we can do that as well. We're always looking for suggestions and always looking for answers. As you know, that's a tough one, and we've been doing everything we can in that respect.

The Benoit backlash that you were talking about: unfortunately, because it is a matter before the courts and it's active litigation, we can't discuss that. However, I think it would be important that if you have questions like that, you refer them to the Minister of Justice or to myself. We can give you the kind of answer that will be helpful to you if you have to answer some of those questions. Also, I would advise that this case is legal; it is not, as I would say some have described it, racial. So that's an important one.

I want to talk about urban aboriginal issues. As you know, just to give you a perspective on aboriginal populations, even though we're only 6 percent of Alberta's population – and that's part of me – 63 percent reside on reserve, 33 percent off reserve, and 3.3 percent on Crown land. Just as an example, we have 33,235 who live in Edmonton. All the people who are in Edmonton probably have a smattering of that. In Calgary we've got 22,390 that are identified. Some of them are not identified, so we know that it'll probably be a little bit more in terms of that. So when we're talking about the aboriginal population and urban aboriginal initiatives, we have to be able to look at some of the possibilities of what we want to do with them.

We've been working on a number of areas in the urban aboriginal initiative that I think are so important. I had some information here on the urban aboriginal initiative. It's very, very key. I don't know if you know that the Edmonton urban aboriginal initiative committee exists, but it exists here in Edmonton, a very good group, and they support the aboriginal liaison and career counseling project at Amiskwaciy Academy. As you know, there's that first aboriginal high school that just opened the other day, and it was just awesome to go to. I was there the other night. They're working in conjunction with the Oteenow Training and Employment Society. So that's a really good committee that's been working together.

In Calgary HR and E is collaborating with the MNA and Treaty 7 in the development and implementation of a skills training program leading to an apprenticeable trade. So we've got a number of areas that I think are really important when we're talking about urban aboriginals and trying to figure out what else we can do in capacity building, as I indicated. The same with Alberta Learning.

We have some more questions that I got from the Member for Edmonton-Riverview. FAS is a big issue, as we know. We've been working with Children's Services as well as through the cross-government initiative under children's initiatives, and we've been involved in that and figuring out what we can do. We've been working with the federal government as well. As you know, we need an educational component attached to that as well, because it's preventable. How do we educate people to make sure that they know that this is preventable? So we've been working with the children's services initiative to make sure that we are on that group, to make sure that we continue to address the issue of the aboriginal community in that context.

There was also aboriginal diabetes from the Member for Edmonton-Glengarry. You were talking about aboriginal diabetes. It is becoming an epidemic within the aboriginal community. Even younger people now are getting the disease. We've been working with Alberta Health to try to figure out what we can do to deal with the issue, and in talking with my colleague from Alberta Health, he's got an aboriginal health strategy that can be accessed through dealing with some of these more prominent cases of problems that we're experiencing at the local level.

Diabetes, as you know, probably stems from the change in diet and a number of other things, so we have to be able to educate the people on the dietary situation as well as how we deal with the immediate situation. It's an interesting one in my view, because I see that in my own area. I see people now starting to get sicker and sicker. It's a real issue that I have relative to my people in my own constituency. I know that Alberta Health is trying to make sure they do a number of initiatives to address this. Some of the programs that I think have been innovative are with the Capital health region. They've done a number of things dealing with diet as well as dealing with aboriginal staff. So we've got a number of things that are occurring, but we still have a long way to go.

I think I'll leave some room for my colleague the chair of NADC to respond to some of the concerns on northern Alberta.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Member for Peace River.

MR. FRIEDEL: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's going to be a little bit confusing following the order of the questions. I was picking from the questions those things that might more directly relate to the Northern Alberta Development Council as compared to the responses that the minister has already given you.

I do want to acknowledge several of the members who expressed sentiments that the budget for northern development and, I'm assuming, for the entire ministry was rather meagre. I'd be more than pleased to take those sentiments to our next budget meeting with the minister, to the Minister of Finance and Treasury Board. I'm sure we can use all the help we can get to encourage them to open the purse strings a little bit. The north isn't a greedy bunch, but we continually have to press for more equity, and in a sense that's a good deal of what the Northern Alberta Development Council is all about.

But on the serious side, you know that when we're strapped for cash – a lot of our work is partnerships with industry – this means that we have to lean on them a little heavier for more involvement in things like skills development training, our bursary funding – there are partnerships there – roads development, and the like. So we're fairly innovative in that way as well.

The Member for Edmonton-Riverview made references to the balance between economic development and environmental protection. This is a major issue. I mean, we talk about it a lot, but as a northern resident myself I see this not as an either/or matter. There has to be a balance. There has to be not only respect for the environment, but you also alluded to a respect for traditional values for people that have been there for generations and generations.

The northern two-thirds of the province is significantly underdeveloped. You asked a question about that, and I'll get to that in a moment. There's lots of room for growth, but with that growth we have to put a key pressure on sensitivity for the environment. This has to be high on the priority list. Natural resource extraction by its very nature is viewed as creating environmental problems. You see forests harvested, and depending on where you look, if you follow the area where this has happened immediately the spring after a winter harvest, the media sometimes sensationalizes that into the raping and pillaging of nature. We would like to see some of the people that make those comments, however, come back in a few years when reforestation starts to take place, you know, the stringent requirements to make sure that forestry harvesting, for example, is sustainable.

As strange as it might sound, many of our industry players recognize this problem and do take a proactive position on ecosystem management. Sometimes it's not just because they want to do it, but they know that if they don't act positively, either the provincial government or the federal government or both are going to force them to do it. If you're out front doing the right things, it's probably going to be in your best stead. I think the vast majority of our industry players are quite responsible.

A lot of times I read stories and articles written by people who are considerably removed from our area about the environmental issues, and the only thing I can say is that it's great to criticize from a distance when you've never been there, but I truly would invite some of those folks to come out and see for themselves what actually happens. As I say, we as residents certainly wouldn't put up with it, and I would like to see some of the armchair critics come out and be as concerned as we ourselves are.

Virtually all of our major development plans do include environmental concerns. They have to be built into the development plans, and probably the hoops that the developers have to go through are significantly the environmental ones. Things like financing and everything else they have to go through probably are minor in comparison.

Both the members from Edmonton-Ellerslie and Edmonton-Glenarry asked about job opportunities for our growing aboriginal population. The minister did make reference to a number of specific programs that are available for the aboriginal community itself, but NADC focuses heavily on education and training and skills development. Probably the specific NADC programs are for all our residents, but aboriginal communities by virtue of where they predominantly are located could be major beneficiaries. You know, we encourage and even go so far as to pressure our major employers to make a special effort to train and employ aboriginal people. It's not an overnight process because many of these new jobs have high technical skill requirements, and that leads to certainly some cultural challenges. First of all, a lot of the young people, the people who are looking for employment, likely have to leave their home communities to go where the jobs are. Unfortunately, they're probably not as close to the traditional communities as they would like to be.

Likewise, there's kind of a cultural challenge in having to go to postsecondary education. One of our programs, the Northern Links program, gives young people from small communities the opportunity to go out and see firsthand what the opportunities and the challenges are in postsecondary institutions, whether they're colleges or universities. A lot of these young people have never been beyond a small high school, and to go someplace where there are several hundreds of enrolled students or even several thousands can be a pretty intimidating experience. It's not just like probably most of us in here, even if we're some distance from where the universities are, saying: okay, we're going to send our kids off to university and college. The intimidation they face might be nothing compared to some from very tiny communities. So it's more than just training and education. It's an entire cultural development.

I think that one of the challenges we face is maybe making more traditional kinds of jobs available, you know, the kinds of things that they already have a built-in aptitude and skill for. We shouldn't necessarily be assuming that they should adapt to our kinds of work. Maybe we should be looking at making some of the kinds of work that they would be interested in, and that also means partnering with those communities. They could be partnering with some of the industries, whether it's forestry, you know, many of those things that might even give them an advantage. Those are some things that we have to look at.

The Member for Edmonton-Riverview asked about the reason for NADC. Yes, you're right; it's been around for a long time. Officially in its present state it goes back to 1975 but even almost 10 years before that in a probably significantly different version.

You also commented on: should there be a southern development council? I'm hoping that was a rhetorical question, because I think we know that the southern part of the province is quite well developed, and if you read about some of the things that are going on these days, I mean, there's concern about, say, a shortage of water. There's also concern about highly developed intensive livestock operations. They call them something different now. We look around and say: "Well, you know, we have quite ample supplies of water. We have lots of open spaces. We certainly could have room for more ranching and farming opportunities and things like that. Maybe look a little further north.”

But having said that, the Northern Alberta Development Council covers an area of two-thirds of the entire province if you go about a hundred kilometres north of Edmonton where the boundary starts and from there on, and there are maps that show this. As a matter of fact, we fairly proudly display on a pin that we have the size of this. That same area only has about 10 percent of the population of the province, yet over half of the province’s GDP comes from there, you know, in terms of resource extraction, farming, and whatever else. So I think that if you put the numbers together, it doesn’t really take rocket science to suggest that there is lots of room for development.

You also mentioned about our workforce. I think a couple of the members touched on this. The training component – and I think this probably overlaps into the bursary question as well. Some might say: do you really need a bursary program to get young people from the north to get their training and come back? I suppose there are a number of answers to that, but I’m going to tell you from personal experience, you know, that my own kids, when they went off to – well, they had to come to Edmonton for university. But what happens with all the best intentions: the first year or two they are fully intent on coming back home to work, but after they’ve lived in the city for maybe four years, they become kind of acclimatized or citified, and some of the things that they get used to make it more difficult to get them back. So, yes, it needs some kind of an incentive, especially in the areas of health care professionals and trades, things like that. We need to make sure that those opportunities do exist. We don’t want our workforce to be people who are two or three days a week transients. We want them to be permanent residents of our community, to be as proud of it as we are, and the minister is telling me to shut up and sit down because our time is up.

One last comment on the northern highway strategy. The document is going to be distributed fairly shortly, and there’ll be a lot of information in there.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

MS CARLSON: Mr. Chairman, just before we go to the question, may we revert to Introduction of Guests?

THE CHAIR: May we briefly revert to Introduction of Guests?

head: Introduction of Guests

MS CARLSON: Mr. Chairman, I would like to introduce a good friend of Albertans and certainly to those of us in the Official Opposition. We are joined tonight by Kim Cassady. I would ask that he please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

head: Government Bills and Orders
Second Reading

Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment Act, 2002

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader on behalf.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It’s my pleasure tonight to move Bill 25 for second reading. Bill 25 is the Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment Act, 2002.

Members having had the opportunity to peruse the bill since first reading will note that most of the substance of Bill 25 provides for the alignment of our provincial corporate tax and definitions and operation with federal legislation in the same manner.

There are a few other circumstances in the bill which are available for members to review, but for the most part this is a pretty straightforward although very technical bill. I think that for members having had the opportunity to review it since first reading, I would commend it to their attention, and we can deal with the details of the specific provisions which members might want to address when we get to committee.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The key highlight that the Government House Leader failed to outline was that this bill is a tax reduction for small businesses, which is good news. The bad news is that it’s a slower pace than planned or promised. So I think that’s quite interesting in itself.

We, Mr. Speaker, support affordable tax relief in order to enhance Alberta’s attractiveness to business investment, and in fact it’s been a policy of ours for many years, since I believe 1994, that there be a reduction in the small business tax rate. During the late part of '93 and '94 we did a jobs, jobs, jobs policy paper that we took around the province and got feedback on and put forward proposals, and one of those was to lower the tax rate. But it took this government over six years to act on our recommendation, and now they're further delaying the implementation by one year. The benefits in terms of employment and investment income that could have accrued over that year had the cuts proceeded as planned would have been greater than what we'll see. We haven't seen where the retained tax revenue will be spent since it's being withheld from businesses at this time, so this is interesting in itself.

This is another good example of a good idea by the Liberal opposition that this government has ultimately gotten around to and accepted. So for that, Mr. Speaker, we thank the government, and we will support this bill at second reading.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Revenue to close debate.

MR. MELCHIN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Having heard the overwhelming support, I've learned to quit before you get too far behind. So thank you very much.

[Motion carried; Bill 25 read a second time]

head: Government Bills and Orders
Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Tannas in the chair]

THE CHAIR: I'll call the Committee of the Whole to order, please.

Public Works Amendment Act, 2002

THE CHAIR: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure to rise and make a few brief comments on Bill 10, Public Works Amendment Act, 2002, at committee stage. I think this is certainly a bill that could be described as housekeeping legislation. We in the Official Opposition were very happy to see that there was extensive consultation involved in this bill, not only that there was extensive consultation but there was some compromise involved between the various stakeholders. Certainly there is some work to be done, but what this legislation will do is create harmony between the Builders' Lien Act and the Public Works Act, and it will provide a certain degree of clarity and consistency between the two pieces of legislation.

Well, I would like to point out just a few areas here. I see that section 8 has been amended. The major point is that since 1980 the contract law principles have been developed based on various court decisions so that the lowest bid does not necessarily have to be taken. Other bids can be taken, and the criteria for these include fairness, good faith, past performance of contractors, et cetera. What this amendment will do is harmonize this legislation with other public-sector agencies and place the final responsibility with the minister. So we certainly are in agreement with that particular amendment.

Now, then, another concern that the industry had was certainly the protection under the Public Works Act of all first and subsequent levels of subcontractors. Certainly with the proposed changes it is guaranteed now that this will extend to all layers of contractors involved.

In looking at the amendment of 45 days, this used be 90 days for a contract with the minister of transportation and utilities. What we are seeing here now in the amendments is that this increases the period to 45 days to be consistent with the time that is provided for registering a lien under the Builders' Lien Act, and certainly some of the industry had questions as to whether 45 days was enough time.

Now, then, another amendment that we want to look at is 1(b). Certainly we welcome this particular amendment and particularly with this department, because we have seen where this has been a single ministry and has also been a dual ministry. It's bounced back and forth, so this amendment will certainly add stability in the department. It's something that people would like to see, including the Official Opposition, and it will certainly give everybody an opportunity to track budget changes.

As well, when we look at section 1(c), again just another cleanup clause, it does clarify what is a public work. Of course, this is vital when you look at what is needed when we have an increase in the number of public/private partnerships and also when there are other agencies entering into contracts where public dollars are involved. We look at the departments, for example, of education or of health care.

Now, then, as well, we like the changes to section 2(2). One of the questions we did have here is: how often has a person in authority been challenged when signing a contract? I don't know if the minister will be able to supply that information tonight or not, but if he could provide that down the road.

The amendments to section 5. This is definitely an improvement. Again, when various companies do tender their notice, then certainly they can be notified by written notice to those who have picked up the tender notice instead of the former situation, where we had to have a public notice. This certainly is a much more efficient way of doing business.

As well, we see that section 8 is amended. The act is currently interpreted by reading in the word "valid." What happens here is that we can look at terms such as qualified, noncompliant, contain errors, and whatever. So by adding in this particular statement, this adds strength to the bill.

Section 9 is also amended. This is again a cleanup amendment. It reflects current tendering law, as does section 10.

Other changes to 12(2) and 12(3) are also part of contract law, and these are cleanup clauses.

Now, then, as well, in sections 14(2)(a) and 14(3)(a) one of the strengths here is the consultation that took place with the Alberta Roadbuilders and Heavy Construction Association. This was a negotiated time period, with a reduction from 90 to 45 days.

I think those are the major changes that I wanted to look at in the bill and comment on the amendments, Mr. Chairman. From the Official Opposition's standpoint this bill certainly fills many of the desired changes of the industry and the stakeholders, and we'd urge all members to support it. Thank you.

THE ACTING CHAIR: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE ACTING CHAIR: Opposed? That's carried.

Dairy Industry Omnibus Act, 2002

THE ACTING CHAIR: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

REV. ABBOTT: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to rise and provide additional comments and respond to questions raised during second reading of Bill 15, the Dairy Industry Omnibus Act, 2002. It is a sincere pleasure for me to help the hon. Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development with this bill, and I remind members that the objective of the Dairy Industry Omnibus Act is to shift the governance responsibility for dairy production and marketing away from government and into the hands of dairy producers.

During second reading the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar asked how many of the 18 dairy companies operating in Alberta were actually Alberta-based companies. Mr. Chairman, 14 of the 18 are Alberta companies, operating only in Alberta. The other four – Lucerne Foods Limited, Parmalat Canada, Saputo Foods Limited, and Sunny Rose Cheese, a division of Agropur – have major processing facilities in Alberta, with the parent company outside of Alberta.

There are currently 850 producers in the province, and as the members of this committee know, Canadian citizenship is not a requirement for quota purchases. However, producers must be residents of Alberta and registered with the board. As in all agricultural sectors the trend is moving toward larger operations that can realize efficiencies. However, our Alberta industry is certainly primarily comprised of family operations whose owner or operator lives right on the farm. We aren't talking large foreign-owned corporate operations. A typical dairy farm in Alberta is run by a husband/wife team, with the kids pitching in before and after school. I have many such farms in my own constituency, Mr. Chairman, and I visit them often.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar also asked about the dairy quota system. The existing dairy board sets policy and approves all quota transfers and all quota leases. The new producer board would continue to do this as well. The price of a quota is set by the marketplace and is negotiated between buyers and sellers. The existing board has absolutely no role in setting quotas, quota values, nor will the new producer dairy board. It is the marketplace too, Mr. Chairman, that in large part drives the number of producers. Alberta is part of the national supply management system for milk and dairy products. Our provincial allocation is based in part on market demand. The Alberta Milk Producers' Society in co-operation with the Dairy Farmers of Canada does an excellent job of promoting milk and dairy product consumption. As demand increases, so does production and so does the opportunity for growth.

The new dairy board will be operated by producers, not by the provincial government. We do not want to end up creating another Canadian Wheat Board. Producers will vote to create a board or commission under the Marketing of Agricultural Products Act. Producers choose to operate under a supply-managed system. It is not a system imposed upon them by the government. Also, I should mention that the contract export milk program allows any producer, regardless of whether they have a quota or not, to produce milk for export. We are a Progressive Conservative government, Mr. Chairman. We believe in free trade and market-driven pricing.

The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition centred his comments on public accountability, and I'd like to assure him that the government isn't stepping out. We're just stepping back. The new producer dairy board will still operate under provincial legislation; that is, the Marketing of Agricultural Products Act. This marketing council supervises all boards and commissions, and there is direct accountability back to the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. The price for fluid milk will continue to be set by the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board. The AEUB acts as a public watchdog to ensure that the proper formulas are used for setting the price of fluid milk.

The regulatory powers proposed for the new producer board are located in section 27 of the Marketing of Agricultural Products Act. All six marketing boards in the province use these section 27 powers. The proposed dairy board will have broader powers with respect to processed dairy products, but this is required to maintain the system of payment to producers. Mr. Chairman, this board will operate much in the same manner as the four poultry boards in the province. It will be able to fix and allot quotas, license producers, and set minimum prices. The Alberta dairy board will also have regulatory powers similar to other producer boards in other provinces.

Another question that came up during second reading is: how is the dairy industry motivated to consider consumer concerns about price? Well, as I have just stated, Mr. Chairman, the price of fluid milk will continue to be set by the AEUB, as it has been in the past. The price for processing milk will be set through negotiation between the board and processors. Of course, because processors are competing in a Canadian market, prices in other provinces will still be a factor in the price set right here in Alberta.

We know that processors must remain competitive, and part of that competitive equation is responding to consumer demand. Let's face it: producers gain nothing by pricing Alberta processors out of the market. The hon. leader opposite made reference to the dairy producers being something like a millionaires' club. Yes, it does take a lot of money to get into dairy, but once you're in, you work very, very hard 365 days a year. The profit margin is always slim, as in any farming operation, and you sometimes wonder why you even do it. It reminds me of the farmer who was asked what he would do if he won a million dollars. His reply: well, I guess I'd just keep on farming till it was gone.

As far as public participation in the governance of the dairy industry is concerned, I want to make it clear that the provincial government is simply getting out of the day-to-day management of the dairy industry. As I mentioned previously, this board will still operate under provincial legislation, and it will be supervised by the Agricultural Products Marketing Council, which reports directly to the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development.

In closing, let me say that there are many checks and balances built into the system to ensure that the public's interests are protected. For instance, under this act there is an independent appeal tribunal, which is an avenue where anyone impacted by a board decision can make an appeal. It isn't a new model, Mr. Chairman. It's tried and it's true and it works. Take the Alberta poultry industry as an example. Here's an industry that is thriving. The producer board continues to work co-operatively with poultry processors to meet growing consumer demand, and these poultry boards are the ones leading the implementation of on-farm food safety programs to address consumer concerns with safe, quality food.

So with those comments, Mr. Chairman, I conclude my remarks on Bill 15. I will try to answer any further questions as they may arise. Thank you.

THE ACTING CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

AN HON. MEMBER: Don't ask him any questions.

MS CARLSON: Why? Because he answers them? Well, from our perspective it's nice to have the questions finally answered. I hope all the clapping and desk-thumping that occurred for the Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar was a reflection on the lateness of the hour and not anything else. I personally would like to thank him for the questions that he answered, because we were going to take him to task if he hadn't done so given that there was going to be some pretty speedy passage of this bill in the Legislature.

I would like all members to know that I have a dairy farm in my constituency. Not a very large one, but . . .

AN HON. MEMBER: It's called Safeway.

MS CARLSON: It's not called Safeway. Real cows. I know their names, and I say that they're the best represented cows in this province. [interjections] No. No. Smart guys. Just because I live in the city doesn't mean I don't know a little bit about rural issues.

On this bill, Mr. Chairman, we would like to thank the member for answering the majority of the questions that were brought up in second reading, although it seems to me that there were still a few of them that are a bit open-ended at this particular stage.

Just to go through the Leader of the Opposition's comments previously, he had a few concerns about the self-governing, but I think those were answered. He talked about how they compared to other commodities. He wondered about the motivation for the dairy industry to consider consumer concerns about price, which was answered, but then the rest of the issues were not. So consumer concerns about issues that reflect on competition in the market but also associated agriculture producers who may want to enter into that industry: that was left open-ended. I expect that the member will respond to those at some other time, maybe in third reading, or in writing if that's not possible.

The member also said in his comments on March 7 that there's still a degree of responsiveness to the consumer and a relationship with the dairy industry in a way that we have some semblance of market forces working. He's worried about what might happen with the changes here. That also wasn't specifically addressed. The member supported moving out from under the Marketing of Agricultural Products Act but stated that there still needs to be consumer input into the decision-making process because they are a special industry. So is there some specific vehicle being set up to address that concern?

I think that with those comments, Mr. Chairman, that addresses all of the concerns we had. In general we were supportive of this. There are some outstanding issues, and we'll watch to see how it progresses as it unfolds. Thank you.

THE CHAIR: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE CHAIR: Opposed? Carried.

Administrative Penalties and Related Matters Statutes Amendment Act, 2002

THE CHAIR: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill?

Hon. Minister of Environment, do you wish to make opening comments? Okay. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. We always take a look at bills that are called things like related matters statutes amendment act with a little bit of suspicion in this Assembly, because it seems to be the kind of act where . . .

DR. TAYLOR: You can trust me.

MS CARLSON: Yeah? Well, that's really my concern. I certainly don't trust that particular cabinet minister very far, Mr. Chairman.

So that's what makes me nervous about this bill, in addition to the fact that this is one of those bills that really got the bum's rush through this Assembly in second reading. We're a little concerned about that. The minister says that over 45 stakeholder groups, including the kind of cross section that we like to see represented, being industry and recreation and municipalities – he stated that there was significant support for these proposed changes. So we're going to take his word on this one but be paying very close attention.

MR. NORRIS: That's very wise of you.

MS CARLSON: Well, I don't know if that's wise or not, but we're going to do it in this instance, Minister of Economic Development.

We'll see how this particular one unfolds, because in general we think that it's good to see that this particular bill addresses some of the need for increased and more stringent penalties. That's a good thing.

Of course, as always, we've expressed concern numerous times inside and outside of the Assembly that the problem really is a sufficient number of enforcement officers and the funding to support those officers. You can have all the rules you want, but if there's no one there to see that they're carried out, then what good are they? You know, there are regulations, penalties, but if there's insufficient staff, then the legislation really means nothing. I know that this minister is a minister who likes to see industries self-police, and that works very well for some people, but we know that that isn't always the best way to carry out these kinds of duties.

Our concern is that continued cuts and department reorganizations make it very difficult to design and carry out long-term plans. Self-reporting, with appropriate penalties for failure to report, is an important part of the enforcement process, but it doesn't replace officers and random inspections. We'd like to see random inspections beefed up rather than scaled down. The increasing pace of resource development that we see in this province means that enforcement is increasingly important, particularly as we see development butt up against the settlement of larger communities, so that's a problem.

We see that this bill increases the personal responsibility that directors have for the work done by their companies. That's a good change, and we applaud that particular change.

So I think that's all I'm going to say at this particular time. There are a lot of changes happening here in a lot of different acts, and we'll be paying attention to what happens as it unfolds and staying in touch with the stakeholders to see if they continue to be happy with this.

Mr. Chairman, with those comments we will cross our fingers and hope that everything goes well with this bill. Thank you.

[The clauses of Bill 13 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

THE CHAIR: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE CHAIR: Opposed? Carried.

The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I move that the committee rise and report progress on bills 10, 15, and 13.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

MR. KLAPSTEIN: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following: bills 10, 15, and 13.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Does the Assembly concur in this report?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Opposed? Carried.

The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In light of the hour I'd move that we adjourn until 1:30 p.m. tomorrow.

[Motion carried; at 10:25 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Wednesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Title: Wednesday, April 24, 2002

1:30 p.m.

Date: 02/04/24

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

THE SPEAKER: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. Our Father, keep us mindful of the special and unique opportunity we have to work for our constituents and our province, and in that work give us strength and wisdom. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Visitors

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

MR. MASKELL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my privilege to introduce to you and through to members of this Assembly Mr. Don Hamilton, who is seated in your gallery. Mr. Hamilton is the husband of a well-known and respected Albertan, Judy Wish Hamilton, who succumbed to cancer April 13 after a long and valiant battle with the disease. Mr. Hamilton is an ordained minister. He created and oversaw the Alberta service corps. He was the first executive assistant to a Premier of Alberta. He was executive assistant to Premier Harry Strom. Mr. Hamilton has served as president of the Edmonton Northlands board. As a businessman he was president of Nordic Neon. Mr. Hamilton opened the first pizza restaurant in Alberta. He is currently chairman of the racing tribunal. Accompanying Mr. Hamilton is one of his longtime friends, Mr. Jim Woroniuk, a local businessman, a hardworking volunteer, and well known to many in this Assembly. Gentlemen, would you please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Peace River.

MR. FRIEDEL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to welcome and introduce to you and to members of the Assembly some visitors from further west, from the province of B.C. to be exact. Our visitors are here in Edmonton for a board of directors meeting of the Northwest Corridor Development Corporation, a group that Alberta is a very active partner in, and they're also meeting with a number of our ministers and northern MLAs. Our visitors are Mr. Paul Nettleton, MLA for Prince George-Omineca; Jason Morris, assistant to Mr. Nettleton; Stieg Hoeg with Transport Canada, manager of the Prince George airport; and Graham Kedgley, acting in a secretarial capacity to the corporation. I would ask that our visitors please rise and receive a traditional warm Alberta Assembly welcome.

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I have four visitors to introduce to members of the Assembly this afternoon. They are here today as part of a successful fund-raising event held this past December in support of the Edmonton Christmas Bureau. The Edmonton Sun's Hicks on Six phone-in auction raised $49,000 for the bureau. Those funds were used to help many Edmontonians enjoy the traditions of the Christmas season. One of the items up for auction was lunch with me – and it was a very frugal lunch, I might add – followed by a visit to the Legislature. Mr. Mo Rahall was the successful bidder. His interest in the item resulted in a $900 contribution to the Christmas Bureau. Mo, as many of you know, was the author of Banksters and Prairie Boys, and he was also a candidate in the last provincial election, running against me. Needless to say, I'm here and he's there. Mr. Rahall is joined today by Graham Hicks of the Edmonton Sun. His father, Mahmoud Rahall, and Barry Tucker are seated in the members' gallery, and I'd ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Legislature.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

MR. YANKOWSKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to extend a warm welcome and to present to you and through you 192 students from John D. Bracco school, which is located in the heart of the constituency of Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, which I am honoured to represent. They are accompanied by their teachers Mr. George Nickel, Mrs. Ingrid Robinson, Ms. Kris Hendrickson, Ms. Colleen Moroz, Mr. Fitz Sherman, and Ms. Sheri Tchir. As well, they are accompanied by parents, helpers, and others: Mr. Chris Storozhenko, Mr. Jim Litven, Mr. David Dam, Mr. Matt Sparrow, Mr. Anders Halberg, Mrs. Linda Carson, Mrs. Kilar, and Mrs. Wendy Pylypow. They will be arriving at different times because of the size of the tour, but the ones that are here now are seated in the members' gallery, and I would like to ask them to please rise and receive the very warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Seniors.

MR. WOLOSHYN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I have the pleasure of introducing two constituents. The first one is Brandon Jespersen, who is a grade 9 student at Meridian Heights school in Stony Plain. Brandon helped me with my campaign, and he was a very good helper, obviously by the success. He's wanting to become Canada's next Prime Minister. Accompanying Brandon is Jordie Maxwell, who's a youth minister at the Alliance church in Stony Plain, and he is helping Brandon achieve his political aspirations. I would like Brandon and Jordie to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

MR. MASKELL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my privilege also to introduce Mr. Bob Clark, Alberta's Ethics Commissioner, who has joined Don Hamilton today. Please welcome Mr. Clark.

Thank you.

head: Oral Question Period

THE SPEAKER: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Rural Health Services

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Health Care Protection Act implies that the only difference between a hospital and a nonhospital surgical facility is that a hospital has an emergency room and a surgical facility does not. Now we learn that in rural areas such as Grimshaw the government is looking to close emergency rooms in local hospitals. My questions are to the Premier. Given that the facilities like the one in Grimshaw provide acute care, intensive care, surgery, palliative care, and a number of other procedures, will it still be considered a hospital once its emergency room is closed down?

MR. KLEIN: It's an interesting question, Mr. Speaker, and perhaps I'll have the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness supplement. The issue vis-a-vis Grimshaw and Peace River is not so much the emergency room and the sustainability of that hospital as an active treatment hospital; it relates to its proximity to the town of Peace River. I understand that it's only a few kilometres from Peace River, which not only has a major hospital facility but a brand-new hospital facility. So the issue is one of rationalization as opposed to whether one is a hospital or not.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that all three doctors in Grimshaw have threatened to leave if the emergency room is closed down, how does the Premier expect to keep the hospital going in Grimshaw without its emergency room?

1:40

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, as I explained before, that is a matter that is going to have to be considered by the regional health authority and by the Department of Health and Wellness. As I pointed out earlier, it's a matter of rationalization as opposed to any other issue.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Then given that several rural health authorities have already mused about the possibility of facility or bed closures, how does the Premier expect to attract doctors to rural Alberta?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, there is a program to attract doctors to rural Alberta. They are paid a premium or a bonus, if you will, and the program to my knowledge is working quite successfully. I'll have the hon. minister supplement.

MR. MAR: There are a number of parts to this program, Mr. Speaker. The rural physician action plan also involves ensuring that students who go through medical training at both the University of Calgary and the University of Alberta have an opportunity during the course of their training to visit and get some of their training in rural Alberta. My understanding, in speaking with the deans of medicine at both those medical schools, is that in fact there has been a good deal of interest in rural practice.

THE SPEAKER: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Can the Premier confirm that the reason that the due date for RHA business plans has been pushed back not once but twice is because several rural RHAs are finding it difficult to come in within their budget without making drastic cuts and considering hospital closures?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I can't confirm or deny that, but perhaps the hon. minister can shed some more light on it.

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, we tried our very best to give information to regional health authorities as quickly as we could, but as we were going through the budgeting process, it became clear that we were not able to give information to regional health authorities as quickly as we would have liked. The hon. Leader of the Opposition will know, of course, that one of the issues raised by the Auditor General in his report is that regional health authorities have been filing business plans well into the fiscal year instead of at the beginning of the fiscal year. So in our effort to ensure that regional health authorities have sufficient time to file a business plan before their operational year commences – it's the reason why we've given them time to digest the information that has been given to them by Finance in terms of the amount of money that they'll be getting so that they can do their planning properly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again back to either the Premier or the minister: will extra capacity be added to the hospital in Peace River to handle the 13,000 patients a year who now use the Grimshaw hospital?

MR. KLEIN: Well, Mr. Speaker, I don't know the specifics relative to the usage of the Grimshaw hospital. Perhaps the hon. minister can provide more information.

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, it is perhaps premature to be talking about what will happen with the facility at Grimshaw. We do know that it is in very close physical proximity to the facility at Peace River, which is an outstanding one. Until such time as the regional health authority actually does submit its business plan, where it contemplates the use of various facilities, including the one at Grimshaw, this will be a very difficult question to answer for the Leader of the Opposition.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: Mr. Premier, don't you think there's something backwards here when they are actually getting their budget and then having to prepare a business plan? Shouldn't they be preparing the business plan and then you building the budget around it so that in effect the health care is designed by the regional health authority and then you provide the dollars that are necessary to deliver that kind of health care?

MR. KLEIN: Well, Mr. Speaker, again relative to the process vis-a-vis business planning and budgeting, I'll have the hon. minister respond.

MR. MAR: Well, Mr. Speaker, I need to remind the Leader of the Opposition that the increase for the Department of Health and Wellness was in excess of 7 percent in this recent round of budgeting. That is a significant amount of money. It is the largest increase of any department in government for this government's operations. For regional health authorities, they will get nearly half a billion dollars more this year. Every regional health authority got some increase this year. Admittedly, it is not the increase that they would like to have, but it is an appropriate amount, and it is a significant amount. We cannot continue to provide money on a growing basis with an unlimited budget. That's simply not possible.

THE SPEAKER: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

CT Scans

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This week a for-profit clinic opened in Calgary offering people without any medical symptoms full-body CT scans for $1,200. A second such clinic will be opening in Calgary next month. Meanwhile, four months ago the Food and Drug Administration in the U.S. warned against full-body CT scans for screening healthy people because of high radiation doses and false positive results. In addition, the American College of Radiology says that there is no evidence the procedure is either cost-effective or effective in prolonging life, and the American Cancer Society discourages full-body scanning for the same reasons. To the Minister of Health and Wellness: given that the clinic has said that CT scans are only provided on a doctor's referral indicating they're medically necessary yet people are paying $1,200 out of pocket, what is government policy for covering the cost of this procedure?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, if that's what individuals want, that's what they can pay for, but that's not something that is listed as a required service and not part of the public system.

DR. TAFT: All right. Then given that substantial risks and problems stemming from using CT scans for screening healthy people arise, will the minister take steps to ensure that they are only provided on the basis of a proper doctor's referral?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, the decision as to whether an individual seeks such a treatment or not is a decision that is made in consultation with their physicians, and individuals, after hearing what their physicians may say about the risks or benefits associated with such a procedure, can still make the decision to go ahead and have it.

DR. TAFT: Given that the USFDA says that "the effective dose from a CT procedure can be hundreds of times larger than the effective dose from a conventional radiographic procedure," will the minister take steps to ensure that by law all advertising and promotion for such clinics involves a full disclosure of the risks involved in the procedures?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, I would presume that for physicians who suggest to their patients that they should get such a procedure done, as with all other procedures there is some element of informed consent on the part of the patient, and if after hearing about the risks and the benefits of having such a procedure individuals choose to go ahead, they can do so.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party.

Health Resource Centre

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There is a connection to the Calgary company that has applied for permission to open Alberta's first for-profit inpatient surgical facility. Imagine that: the very first application, and already American investors are lined up waiting to crack open Alberta's health care system to U.S. corporate interests. No wonder the Minister of Health and Wellness has set up a secretive approval process for this application. My questions are to the Minister of Health and Wellness, who hopefully has removed the Krazy Glue that kept him stuck to his seat yesterday. Why does the minister refuse to make the HRC application public if not to hide from Albertans the fact that much of the money backing this Calgary company is from U.S.-based venture capital funds?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, I'm advised that HRC itself has placed its application on the web site. If the hon. member thinks that's secretive, then I'd be surprised. The criteria for eligibility or the approval criteria that will be applied by the government of Alberta in approving this will also be found on the web site. If that's secret, that comes as a surprise to me. When the decision is made, either for or against such an approval, that information of course will also be fully disclosed and completely transparent.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The minister is refusing to deal with my question.

Let me ask him this. If he already knows that there may be a U.S. financial interest in this company, will he tell the House if he will consider that the presence of that interest jeopardizes the future of public health care because of NAFTA considerations?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, the end point for the government of Alberta and the Department of Health and Wellness and this minister is twofold. One, it is to maintain and improve the quality of our public health care system, and two, it is to ensure that it is not only accessible but also affordable and sustainable into the future. The issue as to whether or not the corporate structure of a particular enterprise is American or Canadian is not a relevant consideration.

DR. PANNU: Well, Mr. Speaker, my final question to the minister: if he thinks that these kinds of ventures will help the Canadian health care system, will he encourage American HMOs to move into Alberta to help the health care system in Alberta?

MR. MAR: Well, to reiterate from my second answer, Mr. Speaker, the end point is to ensure that we have a publicly funded, accessible, high-quality system for Albertans. We've demonstrated that we're prepared to do that through our investments in people, in plant, and in equipment. We have an outstanding health care system in this province. Occasionally it's truly excellent. Does that mean that we cannot try and do better? No, it doesn't, and we are trying to improve our publicly funded, affordable, accessible, high-quality health care system.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Confined Feeding Operations

MR. MARZ: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Agricultural Operation Practices Amendment Act has been in operation slightly over three and a half months under the Natural Resources Conservation Board, and already a number of problems have been identified by some Albertans in my constituency. My question is to the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. As the NRCB is receiving applications for new as well as expansion of existing operations, why would the NRCB consider or even accept an application for the expansion of a confined feeding operation from an operation that's in willful noncompliance with their current permit and in willful breach of a current county compliance order?

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, I would direct that question to the minister responsible for the NRCB.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. CARDINAL: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. That's a good question. This act allows any agricultural operation to submit an application to the NRCB to start with. In some cases, of course, operations that existed before January 1 of 2002 were not in compliance with their existing municipal approval. The NRCB, of course, has followed up on all compliance orders however they may be, whether it's through the public, the municipalities, or in some cases individual operators themselves. Compliance with existing permits or approvals is not optional. In all cases the NRCB insists that the operator comply with existing approvals that are in place.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MARZ: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the minister of sustainable development: if the municipal input is so important to the Natural Resources Conservation Board, as they have stated publicly many times, why are they overruling existing county compliance orders and replacing them with a compliance order that appears to be compatible with what the operator is currently doing?

MR. CARDINAL: That's a good question again, Mr. Speaker. The NRCB is not replacing existing municipal compliance orders. The Agricultural Operation Practices Act does not give the NRCB authority to enforce existing municipal compliance orders, so the NRCB must issue their own enforcement orders if the situation warrants such. As you are aware, no doubt, municipalities have the authority to enforce the orders that they have issued prior to January 1 of 2002, when the new act came in and the NRCB oversaw that area. However, if there is an immediate risk to the environment or human health, the NRCB insists that immediate action be taken to remove these risks.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MARZ: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My last supplemental to the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. Given that the regulations only provide for two specific soil tests and exclude all other approved tests, including those that are approved by the United States Department of Agriculture, which effectively gives a monopoly to those labs that provide those two tests, when will the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development change the wording of the regulations to allow for the use of all currently approved tests as well as any new technologies that may be developed in the future?

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, first of all, we do testing so that we can ensure that we have the proper information so that we can enforce standards and, in fact, impose fines if those standards are violated. We can only compare our test results and have a baseline for that if we use the same basic test. The regulations that we have taken the testing, except for phosphorus, from the manual of the Canadian Society of Soil Science, and our expert committee that worked on the standards that recommended this testing recommended that we use the modified Kelowna test because it's the best test for phosphorus under prairie conditions, and that was very important.

However, I must point out to the hon. member – and he might want to pass this information on – that the modified Kelowna test is not a proprietary test. There are several labs in our province that perform this test method, and we've had inquiries from labs about other test methods and have advised them that if they change their testing procedures only slightly, they would be compatible with the modified Kelowna test. So I believe that we've dealt with that issue, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose.

Day Care Policy

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Reports of child abuse at a private day care in St. Albert have many parents worried. They want to be assured that children won't be placed in jeopardy again. My questions are to the Minister of Children's Services. Where in legislation are children in private day cares protected from abuse and neglect?

MS EVANS: Well, Mr. Speaker, I would like to first respond to the issue of that particular day care. This was a completely unauthorized situation, a horrific situation, and I think that we have to make it clear and communicate buyer beware when they go to day cares and make assumptions about who is there. We have, with the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, listened to the parents' concerns, looked at what we can do in future child legislation, and worked hard with the licensing officers to determine how we can manage the situation. To be perfectly clear, this was a situation where most parents believed that there were fewer than six children in a residential home, and there were in fact several more children in that home. By the time that we had followed procedure to follow through and check on what was happening, a number of circumstances had taken place. I would like to thank the hon. Member for St. Albert, who very clearly elucidated all of these issues, who arranged for us to be involved in that situation immediately.

Mr. Speaker, clearly we have a number of rules in place. We have licensing. We are working on accreditation programs for day cares. It's a costly procedure. But people must be aware and must follow through and do their due diligence when they provide their child, their precious children, to somebody who is serving their needs for child care. Although these parents believed that they had done just that, I don't believe there had been a thorough enough check and balance done with the Capital region, the Ma'Mōwe authority, to determine whether or not this child carer had been explored for the services it was providing.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you. That's abandoning those children, Mr. Speaker.

My question is to the same minister. Where in legislation are children in those situations protected?

MS EVANS: Well, Mr. Speaker, we have legislation for the day care. We have also got a number of regulations. I'd be pleased to table in detail in this Assembly everything that we have.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you. Again to the same minister: why did it take the RCMP to finally shut down the St. Albert facility? Why didn't Children's Services take the necessary action?

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, when we got to the site, my understanding is that the number of children on that particular site had been removed and in fact were not there. The proprietor allegedly claimed to the parents that she'd had a medical problem and was unable to look after the children for a period of two months. This was a very difficult situation. The day care licensing officers have drawn our attention to a number of circumstances. I would offer this: I'd be pleased to meet with the hon. member opposite and go into some detail about our discussions. This was a case that was very baffling, in the first instance, because the authority to act had not been given.

I think that for any service that's provided in the public, people have to do their due diligence to find out what is happening in circumstances, because unscrupulous types of people can open services, deliver services, and make claims that are not true. When people use that kind of service, they should actually find out. They should. I would not leave a grandchild in a place that I hadn't thoroughly investigated, and this government can't force people to do that investigation.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Fresh Start Addictions Centre

MR. PHAM: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Residents in the Calgary neighbourhood of Abbeydale were shocked upon learning that the Fresh Start Addictions Centre opened earlier this year within this quiet residential community and just a short walk from an elementary school and a busy playground. This facility is a 21-bed treatment centre reserved for alcohol and drug addicts, among whom many are criminals on parole. Because of the fact that this building was once used as a day care centre, the city of Calgary issued a permit which allowed this facility to start operation without any attention given to the great concerns shown from local residents. On behalf of my constituents my first question is to the Minister of Children's Services. Given that your department licensed drug and alcohol treatment centres in the past, can you please advise my constituents as to when and why you stopped doing this?

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is bringing forward something that has been a very complex situation. Let me be clear. Under the Social Care Facilities Licensing Act we license day cares, we license women's shelters, and we license those facilities where seniors have care provided. But it's care, not treatment. In 1994 the act was clarified so that care was licensed through the Social Care Facilities Review Committee, but treatment was not. Let me be very clear. The definition of "care" was identified as "watchful keeping, food, shelter, protection or attending to," which is care such as is provided in those facilities we do care for. Alcohol and drug rehabilitation or treatment facilities are defined as "something done, or steps taken, to effect treatment of or disease including examination, diagnosis and application of remedies." That's treatment, not care.

At the time that we did license facilities that offered drug treatment, we were dealing with what was inside the walls, not outside the walls. Care inside the walls was all we attended to, not the clientele coming and going to the facility, not any of the other community impacts. That quite clearly was never part of the mandate of the Social Care Facilities Licensing Act nor any type of work that we do currently in siting any of those facilities.

MR. PHAM: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs: given that the city of Calgary did not give Abbeydale residents an opportunity to voice their concerns both before and after the decision was made to provide this facility with a permit, did the city of Calgary abuse the power given to them by your ministry in setting up an undemocratic process which did not seek any input from residents nor offer them any process for appealing this decision?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. BOUTILIER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Under the Municipal Government Act it clearly states an open and an accountable process that we have legislated to the responsibility of municipalities; in this case the city of Calgary. The authority for land use planning solely rests with the local municipality. It's my understanding that they have been informed by citizens that the citizens feel that they haven't been in fact consulted on this issue. I think what's most important at the end of the day is that the city of Calgary's land use bylaw, which they solely construct based on input from citizens, has a very broad range, ranging from a seniors' centre to a day care centre to, as was indicated by the hon. member, a drug rehabilitation centre. I'm advising the city of Calgary that they should consider reviewing the broad range under this land use bylaw, for which they've been granted the authority.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. PHAM: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again my question is to the Minister of Municipal Affairs. What can the minister do to address the concerns of the residents of Abbeydale and to prevent things of this nature from occurring in the future?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. BOUTILIER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again the hon. member raises a very important question for the community. Since learning about this last week, I've sent a letter, which I will table at the appropriate time, to His Worship the mayor of Calgary indicating that concerns raised by city of Calgary residents should be considered in terms of amending the existing land use bylaw, that the city of Calgary does have the responsibility for executing. Also, I've sent an advisory to all municipalities, 366 across Alberta, indicating that in an area where it is such a broad term, perhaps it could be narrowed. Ultimately, it is a local decision by the elected councillors within their affected municipalities.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Workers' Compensation Board

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Constitution Act, the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms of 1982, under Legal Rights states:

Any person charged with an offence has the right . . . to be presumed innocent until proven guilty according to law in a fair and public hearing by an independent and impartial tribunal.

My first question is to the Premier this afternoon. Is it government policy to develop legislation that respects the Constitution of Canada, which is the supreme law of Canada, "and any law that is inconsistent with the provisions of the Constitution is, to the extent of the inconsistency, of no force or effect"?

Thank you.

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is absolutely right: the Constitution is supreme. We would endeavour to respect it in every way, shape, and form. If it is deemed by an individual or a group that the Constitution is being violated, then that would be grounds for a court action, and indeed court actions have been launched relative to alleged violations of the Constitution.

MR. MacDONALD: Again, Mr. Speaker, to the Premier: where in WCB legislation are injured workers guaranteed a public hearing before an independent and impartial tribunal?

Thank you.

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, indeed, a process has been established, a process that is in the midst now of being further enhanced relative to impartiality. I think it will go a long way to making sure that injured workers who feel that they haven't been treated fairly by the WCB will have the opportunity for a fair and impartial appeal.

I'll have the hon. minister respond further.

MR. DUNFORD: Mr. Speaker, practically everything that we are doing in terms of the amendments with Bill 26, that was introduced recently, has to do with trying to provide injured workers with more access to a system of appeal and more access for their physician, if a medical opinion is involved, to have a discussion and a decision made regarding that medical condition. Of course, the motivation entirely on behalf of not only the Premier but the rest of the members of this government in trying to move the Appeals Commission to a more independent status from WCB was to provide, again, for injured workers the opportunity to be involved in an appeal process that they would see as fair and reasonable and something to address their particular issue.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: given that the WCB is both the judge and jury in all future disputes with injured workers, how is the government proposing to deal with a prospective Charter challenge by an injured worker to guarantee a public hearing before an independent and impartial tribunal?

Thank you.

MR. KLEIN: First of all, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the hon. member has asked for a legal opinion, and I'm not about to give that legal opinion, nor do I think that the Justice minister and Attorney General should be in a position in this Legislature to offer a legal opinion.

Secondly, Mr. Speaker, to relate the issue of injured workers to the Constitution as it pertains to criminal activity or a trial is absolutely wrong. It bears no relationship whatsoever. I don't know of an injured worker that has been accused by this government of committing a crime; right? We aren't accusing injured workers of committing a crime, so there is no presumption of innocence or guilt. It doesn't bear any relationship whatsoever to this particular case.

And thirdly, legislation is now in process to create a scenario that will offer injured workers a much more impartial and objective assessment, adjudication, of their case.

Speaker's Ruling

Anticipation

Seeking Legal Opinion

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, before calling on the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs and the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, there's been broad leverage given to all hon. members in the raising of questions, but under Orders of the Day, Bill 26, the Workers' Compensation Amendment Act, may or may not be up for debate later today.

Beauchesne 408, Oral Questions, clearly prohibits questions which would "require an answer involving a legal opinion." Hon. members might also look at Marleau and Montpetit, page 427: the questions are in order at various other parts of the Routine but not during the question period if they seek a legal opinion.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs, followed by the hon. member for Edmonton-Centre.

Services for Autistic Children

MR. LUKASZUK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the usual tradition of hardly constructive comments by the members of the opposition a member yesterday stated, and I quote: Children's Services was abandoning autistic children. A question to the Minister of Children's Services: what services do you provide to autistic children in Alberta?

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, to the hon. member opposite, we provide $50 million worth of services to help parents with autistic children. This serves 650 children in the province for respite services either in their home or out of their home. It's done in consultation with the parents. It may include orthodontic treatment, special dental work. As we know, autism is a neurological disorder of the brain that may affect their social behaviour. It may affect some of their other capacities to learn. It's very individual. Autistic children, like other children, don't come in neat packages with labels. They come with a variety of disabilities sometimes, and it means that we have to look very carefully at each child, assess them differently in some cases, and provide the proper treatments.

I should point out that these things are assessed annually in consultation with both the social worker and the family. They look at the capacity of the child and whether existing treatments are still working. Fifty million dollars for 650 children. We believe that we're making a difference for those children, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. LUKASZUK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My supplemental is to the same minister. Does your previous answer include intensive behavioural intervention, also known as IBI?

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, we actually provide an additional 11 and a half million dollars. These children commonly cost an average of $36,000 per year per child, and for those children that are covered through the intensive behavioural intervention we are looking at that policy, as the hon. Minister of Learning defined, with him and also with the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness, and looking at what's right to do for children in what particular fashion. We have an expert panel with representatives from the families, representatives from the communities that are involved as well as from physicians that have been working with these children, and we're working very clearly to . . . [interjections] Mr. Speaker, it would be delightful if the hon. members opposite would open their ears instead of their mouths.

We met just this noon about these services with a member of this community and the association, and we have made every commitment to review the policies and make sure that they're in place before any proclamation of that particular section of Bill 9 that deals with handicapped children.

Mr. Speaker, there should be no mystery about the fact that we continue to provide these programs for children and are not trying to get out of providing programs for children. We're trying to make them better and seamless in our delivery system.

MR. LUKASZUK: Mr. Speaker, that was an exhaustive answer. I have no supplemental questions.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Electronic Racing Terminals

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission chose to extend the 70 percent compensation structure for operators of electronic racing terminals to the end of 2003 even though the Auditor General estimates that this decision will result in an overpayment of $21 million or more to casino operators by the end of 2003. The AG also noted that a premium was likely paid by the AGLC to get operators to sign these long-term contracts. My questions are to the Minister of Gaming. Given that the contract provided for a quarterly review and adjustment of the compensation rate, why is the minister allowing this scheme to remain in place for another year and a half?

MR. STEVENS: This particular program has a history where the operators in question came to the AGLC back in the mid-90s and said that they would like to bring this particular game into the province. At that point in time permission was given provided that they provided the capital for these games. That was an exceptional circumstance and gave rise to the exceptional arrangement with those particular operators which ultimately was the subject of the Auditor General's comment. The fact is that there has been a very good working relationship with these operators, and when the Auditor General made his comments that the arrangement was inappropriate, the AGLC said that they are prepared to recognize and agree with that. But it is necessary to provide these operators an opportunity to have some time to make a decision with respect to how to deal with it in order to not materially and adversely affect their business plans.

So the arrangement that was made was a fair one. It's one that gives the operators an option, and in any event we'll have the matter determined in full by the end of 2003.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Minister of Gaming: what makes these casino operators so special that they continue to get a windfall of $21 million while the community lottery boards get cut?

MR. STEVENS: We believe that all of the stakeholders within the gaming industry are special, and the casino operators are part of that. I think it's fair to say, Mr. Speaker, that the number that the hon. member mentions is for 11 machines over a number of years. It is not for one year; it is for the term up to the end of December 2003, if I recall correctly. From our perspective that is a reasonable arrangement given the history of this particular product line.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Well, if money had to be cut from the Gaming budget in this particular year, why didn't the minister cut some of these overpayments instead of cutting the community lottery boards? He could have recouped some of his money by cutting these.

MR. STEVENS: Mr. Speaker, the arrangements with the casino operators in question are pursuant to agreement. There are agreements in place, and there is a very firm option that has been put forward which the operators have a choice to accept by December of 2003. It is a matter of the AGLC living up to its contractual obligations, and I would expect that the hon. member opposite would expect this government to live up to its contractual obligations, as would its agencies.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Electricity Pricing

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On Monday we saw yet another effect of this government's rush into electricity deregulation: wild fluctuations in the price of power. Following the recent 40 percent increase for residential power by EPCOR, the average spot price on Monday of this week was spiked 300 percent over what it was the day before. Mr. John Davies, owner of the Lethbridge Iron Works, suggested that market players are able to manipulate prices. To the Minister of Energy: last year and before the election the government blew billions of dollars protecting Albertans from the price of deregulated power, but now that the election is well behind us, what protection will consumers get from unstable electricity prices?

MR. SMITH: Aw, Mr. Speaker, to correct so many errors that are included in the member's preamble will take a period long past the end of question period. So let's just . . .

SOME HON. MEMBERS: Go ahead. Do your best. Go ahead.

MR. SMITH: Well, I'll respond to the challenges as best I can, Mr. Speaker. Firstly, this government did not blow an incredible amount of money back in deregulation. In fact, this government took on the very serious responsibility of returning consumers their money. Just as this government last year delivered over $1.3 billion in tax savings, money back in individuals' pockets, the consumer's portion of the PPA sales, the power purchase agreements, was some $2 billion. That was returned to every consumer in a $40 cheque each month.

Now, if the member could think back, way back to about 18 months ago, he'd also realize that there was a budget surplus that manifested itself in two $150 cheques being returned to Albertans. That, Mr. Speaker, was Albertans' money, money that was raised from their ownership in their resource called oil and gas.

Lastly, Mr. Speaker, there was an early return of royalty money that was expressed in a royalty rebate or a gas price fluctuation.

That's just to correct the ancient, past errors of the member. Let me now move to the present errors of the member.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. minister, please. I know. So much to say; so little time. Let's move on, please, please, please.

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We all know that the government blew $4 billion on energy rebates. Will the minister tell Albertans and tell this Assembly what his government and his department are doing to protect Albertans from fluctuating and high electricity prices? That is the question.

MR. SMITH: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'm going to start by tabling yesterday's Power Pool price that both corrects the misconceptions that the Member for Edmonton-Highlands puts forth and also corrects the continual misperceptions of the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar. In fact, over the last 24 hours the Power Pool price never exceeded 5.7 cents per kilowatt-hour. That's $57 a megawatt-hour.

It's springtime. There are 870 megawatts out in repair. The present price is trading at 5 and a half cents a kilowatt-hour. It does happen to be cold, as he may have noticed, a colder than average April, but that means that the gas prices are up. Now, as gas prices go up, so does the price of electricity, and so does the amount of royalties that accrue to the government account.

So, Mr. Speaker, there's no mystery to it, and I hope that my humble attempts at a clearer explanation cleans up these erroneous misconceptions that both members continue with, I daresay to lead the House in a direction other than it should be going.

MR. MASON: Mr. Speaker, when will the government admit what Albertans already know, that they are paying higher electricity prices now than before deregulation and that electricity prices in Alberta are higher now than in regulated jurisdictions in Canada?

MR. SMITH: I will absolutely admit today, Mr. Speaker, that the price of electricity is higher than it was when we were on the last legs of using our transmission capacity across this great province, which hadn't had a dollar put in it for 20 years and where there hadn't been any generation added and where we were using the last amount of generation. I will admit that this government may have created an environment since 1993 that doubled the gross domestic product of this province. We will admit to that. We'll also admit to the fact that we have spent the last 12 months working very, very hard against the federal government, a Liberal federal government, that is trying to impose issues of Kyoto and greenhouse gas emissions that'll even increase the oil and gas prices in this province.

Mr. Speaker, we know that the key to long-term, low, reliable electricity prices is increased generation. That is arriving in Alberta today.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Labour Relations Code

MR. MASKELL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've been receiving telephone calls regarding the possible opening of the Alberta labour code. Some are wondering why . . . [interjections]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark has the floor.

MR. MASKELL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Some are wondering why the necessity for the opening of the Alberta labour code at this time, others are seeking a full review, and others are interested in certain sections. My question is to the Minister of Human Resources and Employment. With the rapid growth and change in the Alberta economy, are you planning a review of the Labour Relations Code?

MR. DUNFORD: Mr. Speaker, we've been receiving quite a number of inquiries about the Labour Relations Code. We've been receiving some suggestions as to how it's about time to have a look at it. I believe it was 1988 when it was last reviewed. I have to say to the hon. member, though, that when we assess the Labour Relations Code, even given the rather rapid growth that my colleague had talked about earlier in a response to a deregulation question, the current Labour Relations Code has been standing up fairly well. When we look at a couple of benchmarks, which perhaps would be the amount of days lost to strike and the amount of agreements that are unable to be agreed to through mediation, Alberta actually leads the country in those particular areas. So we have a very good system. I think we need to pause, examine, and hesitate before we open it for review.

MR. MASKELL: My first supplemental is to the same minister. What areas might be targeted?

MR. DUNFORD: Well, there have been areas of concern. We've all heard about salting and MERFing. There are some concerns that are around health care and some of the other areas. Again, I think it would be important, before we do anything, that we be able to minimize the amount of review that we'd make to a very good act and one that is functioning very, very well.

MR. MASKELL: Again to the same minister: if there is to be a review, when might it be expected to begin, and how long would you expect the process to take?

MR. DUNFORD: Well, again, I'm not agreeing to open the act at all. What we would contemplate doing would be to have some MLAs go out and talk to stakeholder groups here within our province to see what, if anything, we should do. If we go forward with that, we would do that this summer.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, prior to going on with the next item in the Routine, let me just remind hon. members of a correspondence that I provided to all of them earlier this afternoon. It's an invitation from Brigadier General J.I. Fenton, Commander of the Land Force Western Area, inviting all members of Alberta's Legislative Assembly to join in a memorial ceremony to commemorate the loss of the four soldiers of the 3rd Battalion, Princess Patricia's Canadian Light Infantry Battle Group, who gave their lives in service to Canada on April 18, 2002: Sergeant Marc Leger, Corporal Ainsworth Dyer, Private Richard Green, and Private Nathan Smith. This memorial will be held at the Skyreach Centre this Sunday. Hon. members, if you are free to attend, please do, and will you please make your presence known by the date on which you've been asked to make your presence known as well.

Judy Wish Hamilton

MR. MASKELL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my privilege to speak today about a great Albertan that we lost to cancer on Saturday, April 13, Judy Wish Hamilton. I knew Judy for little more than a year, but in that short time she became a special person in my life. My first encounter was during the 2001 election campaign. I knocked on the door of Judy and Don, and when Judy found out why I was there, nothing would do but I had to come in and receive some wonderful coaching on how to run a successful campaign. Although she wanted to play a major role in my campaign, her illness did not permit it. However, in her own unique way she was a great supporter. Judy was a mover and shaker. She worked in Premier Harry Strom's Calgary office. From that time politics became a big part of her life. She was Premier Lougheed's legislative assistant and deputy press secretary. From there she served seven years as director of the Alberta office in Ottawa. Judy became Petro-Canada's director of public and governmental relations in Calgary for 12 years. Her last employment was with the Canadian Petroleum Products Institute.

Judy was also a tireless volunteer and a great supporter of the arts. A few of her volunteer activities included member of the National Capital Commission, president of Alberta Theater Projects, president of the petroleum commission, member of the Alberta Foundation for the Arts. Judy was a close friend of the hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity. She served as president of his constituency association. This last year she served on my constituency board. Judy was a dynamic, loving person with personality, wit, charm, and great intelligence. We who were all blessed to know her will miss her deeply.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Canadian Institute of Ukrainian Studies

MR. YANKOWSKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to recognize the 25th anniversary of the Canadian Institute of Ukrainian Studies, located at the University of Alberta. CIUS was born in response to a deeply felt need in the Ukrainian community to preserve historical and cultural values. Some prominent Ukrainian Canadians that were instrumental in creating CIUS in partnership with the government of Alberta were Manoly Lupul, Peter Savaryn, the late Ivan Lysiak-Rudnytsky, the late George Luckyj, the late Bohdan Bociurkiw, and the late Laurence Decore. Also, the then president of the University of Alberta, Harry Gunning, endorsed the institute, while Peter Savaryn used his persuasive efforts to lobby the government to obtain $350,000 in annual funding for the institute.

Alberta is home to more than 300,000 individuals of Ukrainian ancestry, who began arriving some 111 years ago to forge a new life. It has been a real success story, and I wish to congratulate the Canadian Institute of Ukrainian Studies for its important role in this regard.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Secretaries' Day

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Each April we observe Professional Secretaries Week and on this Wednesday Secretaries Day. The term "secretary" has a Latin root, secretum, meaning a secret. A secretary, then, became one who kept secrets. Today we still share with them information about our assignments, co-workers, supervisors, and ourselves. Discretion, then, is a hallmark of a secretary. Can you imagine how the course of history might change if that were not true of secretaries in this building? Discretion, however, is not enough. Over the years the tasks taken on by secretaries have changed. Being a secretary requires a set of distinct skills. They must have the computer ability of a Bill Gates, the telephone acumen of a Ma Bell, the writing ability of an Alice Munro, the tact of a Lester Pearson, the calm of a Martha Stewart, the sympathetic ear of an Oprah, and the warmth of a Peter Gzowski.

On this day we have two obligations. First, we must pause and say to secretaries: thank you. Second, we must avoid the day becoming but ritual by showing our appreciation throughout the year, reserving for today those extra tributes that make it special. Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Leith and Lorraine Orr

MR. AMERY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed a pleasure to rise today to recognize and congratulate Mr. Leith Orr, a constituent and friend, on his 80th birthday, which was celebrated on April 1, 2002, in the presence of over 150 friends and well-wishers. Leith and Lorraine Orr and their daughter Debbie have been living in the community of Southview in the greater Forest Lawn area since 1955. Active participants, tireless volunteers, and community oriented, in the late '50s, early '60s they worked so hard to build the Southview community hall, and when that goal was realized, along with friends and volunteers they moved on to build the greater Forest Lawn seniors' drop-in centre, a thriving gathering place for 525 seniors.

Mr. Speaker, Leith and Lorraine Orr are indeed outstanding members of our community. At this time I would like to take this opportunity to wish Leith a happy 80th birthday.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Calgary White Hatters

MS DeLONG: Thank you. Each year outstanding individuals from the tourism and hospitality industries are honoured at the Calgary White Hat awards. These individuals are recognized for their unwavering commitment to first-class customer service. Time and time again they have demonstrated their dedication to excellence by exceeding the expectations of visitors to our province. These individuals ensure that our guests have a positive, memorable visit. This year's awards ceremony, the 40th annual, was held Monday evening. The Minister of Economic Development attended the ceremony to congratulate the numerous award recipients. He also had the honour of presenting the 2001 White Hat of the Year award, the evening's most prestigious award. It's given to an individual or organization that has added to Calgary's recognition, creation of a legacy, and enhancement of community spirit. I'm pleased to announce that the recipients of the 2001 White Hat award are the Calgary Airport Authority's White Hat volunteers. From 6 a.m. to 10 p.m. each day of the year these volunteers enthusiastically welcome visitors arriving at the Calgary airport. To these volunteers and to all award recipients, congratulations and thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

National Soil Conservation Week

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today in recognition of National Soil Conservation Week. Soil conservation is very important in both the agricultural and industrial sectors in Alberta. Much like water, people often assume that the soil will always be there. Anyone who has watched a farm blow away in a summer windstorm during a drought knows that this is not true. When truck after truck of soil has to be taken away from a contaminated site, the importance of safe industrial processes becomes evident. The government has a responsibility to educate Albertans about soil erosion and contamination and the long-term effects of not having appropriate protection strategies in place.

In the case of contamination it is also important that the polluter pay. Companies must post sufficient land reclamation bonds so that they are responsible for the full cost of recovery. This cost should not fall to the taxpayers. Those who make their living off the land know the importance of good stewardship. During National Soil Conservation Week let's hope the message spreads further and that Albertans take the time to consider how their activities are affecting the land.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Fred Brimacombe

MR. SNELGROVE: Mr. Speaker, it's an extreme privilege to rise today and relate to you in the Assembly a brief snapshot of a truly great Albertan. Mr. Fred Brimacombe served in the Canadian military until he chose to pursue a career in teaching. Using his exceptional life skills combined with his love for music and sport, he soon became a huge and positive influence on his many students and to the communities he lived in. Upon his return to Vermilion in 1963 he and his family became an integral and fundamental part of the community. While Mr. Brimacombe was dedicated to his profession, he was completely devoted to his family. His children remain a huge part of his life, and he has every reason to be proud of them.

Mr. Brimacombe opened a real estate, insurance, and travel business, becoming an active member in the Chamber of Commerce, the Rotary Club, as well as a director of the local PC Association, which in fact he is still in today. Mr. Brimacombe continues to serve the community through the church and is extremely active through his involvement with the seniors' organizations. He constantly arranges transportation for those in need or unable to transport themselves yet still finds time to play the piano for the seniors' choir. Although Mr. Brimacombe retired from actively selling real estate several years ago, he still retains a business office in Vermilion that he visits daily. Mr. Brimacombe continues to maintain his professional licence and has just completed his first on-line course in professional responsibility through the Alberta Real Estate Association. He has registered for three additional courses to be completed in June.

Mr. Speaker, the remarkable thing about this story is that Mr. Brimacombe celebrated his 88th birthday yesterday. On behalf of the Vermilion-Lloydminster constituency and this Assembly I would like you to join me in wishing Mr. Brimacombe a happy birthday and continued good health and happiness.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members need not be reminded, but the time frame for recognitions is one minute. The time frame for the other item, on Tuesdays and Thursdays, is two minutes. Hopefully there's no confusion from day to day. Today is Wednesday.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to bring before the House a petition signed by 90 Albertans petitioning the Legislative Assembly to urge the government "to not delist services, raise health care premiums, introduce user fees or further privatize health care."

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm presenting today a petition signed by 39 residents of Edmonton petitioning the Legislative Assembly to urge the government "to consider reinstating funding of the Community Lottery Boards."

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

MS EVANS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I would like to table five copies of Children's Services Supports to Families with Children Diagnosed with Autism.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Energy.

MR. SMITH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Relative to the question earlier today, I am tabling four copies of the power report to continue to clear up the misconceptions offered by the members opposite earlier in the day.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

MR. BOUTILIER: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In question period today the hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose posed some questions. I promised that I would and committed to table a letter to His Worship the mayor of Calgary as well as an advisory that's going out to all municipalities pertaining to land use bylaws and group care facilities.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. One is the appropriate number of copies of an article from the U.S. Food and Drug Administration Consumer magazine of November-December 2001 expressing concerns over full-body CT scans.

The other, with permission, is seven pages of examples of health care fraud cases involving health care businesses in the U.S. totaling over $700 million.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise and present the appropriate number of copies of a letter written just a few days ago by the mayor of this city, Mayor Bill Smith. It's addressed to the Premier and is requesting the provincial government to reinstate the community lottery board grant program.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am tabling today a letter from the Edmonton Multicultural Society addressed to the Premier. head: Orders of the Day

THE SPEAKER: First of all, the hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you. Once again, Mr. Speaker, I seek unanimous consent of the Assembly to waive Standing Order 58(4) to allow this afternoon's consideration of the estimates of the Department of Revenue to go beyond two hours with the vote on these estimates to take place no later than 5:15 this afternoon as per Standing Order 58(5) or sooner if no one wishes to speak.

head: Committee of Supply

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: We shall call the committee to order.

head: Main Estimates 2002-03 Revenue

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: As per our Standing Order the first hour is allocated between the minister and members of the opposition, following which any other hon. member can participate in the debate. I will now invite the hon. Minister of Revenue to present opening remarks.

MR. MELCHIN: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Before I start, I'd like to introduce a few people who are in the members' gallery. Many of them work for the Department of Revenue and the Department of Finance: Christine Oness, the lead responsibility for Revenue's budget analysis and reporting – maybe have them wave so everybody can see – Bob Stothart, manager of corporate budgeting; Colleen Kroening, strategic planning and performance measurement; and Bonnie Lovelace, senior financial officer for Revenue. Also in the members' gallery is Glenn Shepherd, executive assistant.

Given that introduction, I am sure that will be enough discussion about the Department of Revenue. Is that sufficient for the day? [interjections] I guess there's a little more interest.

I'd like to first start by reviewing. It's been a little over one year since the Department of Revenue was created, and at that time Premier Klein suggested that because of the size and complexity of the revenues and investments in the province of Alberta, it was felt important to create a department that was more solely focused on the revenues and investments of the province. In that regard, as we know, the revenues over the last year were 20 billion plus dollars at one stage over a year ago, peaking at $25 billion.

We also manage a total of about $37 billion in assets, some of those being the heritage fund and a variety of pension funds and the like. So we have an investment management division that manages a very significant portfolio of investments.

The department directly collects and administers $8 billion to $9 billion in taxes and investment income each year and has oversight of a revenue framework for all the revenues of the province – I'm a good colleague here with the Minister of Energy – those revenues that come in from the various departments such as Energy and Gaming and all the other departments along with the taxes that are collected directly through the department.

In looking at the estimates for the Department of Revenue, all the expenditures in this department are to sustain the revenues necessary for supporting all the programs of the government. Now, it is incumbent that we ensure that we have sufficient to manage and sustain the levels of programs that we put in our business plan. In that regard, I'd like to highlight three key initiatives that we've had and have been working on over the past year and that are continuing on in this next year in the estimates and in the business plan of the department, the first one being the consideration of “the recommendations from the Future Summit to ensure that the views of Albertans are heard and acted upon.”

As we know, this past year we've had, I'd say, a very exciting and tremendously successful public consultation, engaging Albertans all over the province in imagining what the province could look like in the future, not specifically related to our three-year business planning but related to how we could and what we should do to start preparing now so that the future of the province will continue to be that which Albertans would aspire to have.

In that regard, we will continue to work – the summit process/public consultation phase has been completed with the summit actually in Red Deer on February 4 and 5 of this year. We will be releasing a report in the near future to all Albertans of that Future Summit process. That will just be an interim step and the start of a lot more work to be done on those consultations. Some of it will involve further consultations with Albertans in more specific detail on particular topics, and others we'll start working on in the business plans of the normal departments. Various other stakeholders will also participate in their actions and work on strategic planning for the future.

One of the other key initiatives that we've been working on and will continue to – it's just come a short way in this past year – is “developing and implementing a comprehensive revenue framework for the Province.” In that regard, we are looking at a few fundamental questions. One might be the appropriate size and levels of revenues that the province ought to derive. Certainly we have to ensure that revenues are sufficient to sustain the programs that we deliver. We also have to ensure that we respect all those dollars as being important to leave as much as we can in the hands of individuals so that they can attend to their own responsibilities. There become thresholds beyond which if we move start to become very much deterrents to the prosperity, the objectives and aims and independence and self-reliance of Albertans. So the government as a partnership with individual Albertans has a large role to play, but it's important that when we look at the size of revenues, we don't lose sight that Albertans value their independence, their hard work, the entrepreneurial spirit, the self-reliance aspect in preparing for their own futures.

The other aspect of that revenue framework will get into questions of mix. What types of revenue structures ought we to rely upon in the future? What ought to be the appropriate balance of the various revenue streams?

The last key initiative I'd like to focus on would be “developing and implementing a comprehensive investment framework for the Province.” As I touched on, Revenue has an investment management division that operates and manages a portfolio of $37 billion. The heritage fund, being the largest provincial asset, is a value of about 12 and a half billion dollars at this stage. There are other endowment funds like the Alberta Heritage Foundation for Medical Research and the ingenuity fund or the one we created with respect to science and engineering, those being about a billion and a half dollars in total. There are a variety of other funds of the province that are managed, some of them short-term in nature, plus various public-sector pension funds that are administered by this department on behalf of those pension holders and rights.

We are looking at a couple of questions in that regard. One, we have been reviewing the question of savings. What are the appropriate reasons that the government ought to save and for what purposes? How much? Who are the beneficiaries? Trying to even bring clarity to the Alberta heritage savings trust fund for its mandate going forward, we know that Albertans continually say that they respect and value having that fund. So this isn't an exercise of trying to eliminate the Alberta heritage savings trust fund. It's trying to bring greater clarity as a normal process of reviewing the mandates of the assets that we manage so that we would do a regular review and make sure that we understand in context how large that fund ought to be as we go forward and specifically for what purpose it ought to serve to ensure that Albertans benefit from it not just now but in the future.

The other aspect of the investment framework we're looking at is the governance structure specifically of those funds and of the department itself, not just the oversight of the Alberta heritage savings trust fund but also in regard to the governance of the administration of the funds for the pensions so that we appropriately ensure that we have the best and are constantly modifying, keeping up with the latest and best practices of oversight, of management of the funds.

So those are the key initiatives that I thought I'd mention before I go on and touch a little bit on the core businesses of the government.

In the business plan, pages 318, 319, 320, in that area, it starts talking about four core businesses of the government.

1. Manage tax and revenue programs fairly and efficiently.
2. Manage and invest financial assets prudently.
3. Manage risk associated with the loss of public assets.
4. Regulate Alberta's capital market.

I thought I'd touch somewhat on each of those four core businesses of the department before I turn the time over to other members to participate and ask questions.

The first core business is to "manage tax and revenue programs fairly and efficiently." Our goal 1 under that talks about maintaining and developing "a revenue structure that meets Alberta's needs and is consistent with Albertans' values." That ties very much into our key initiative of developing a revenue framework in the sense that this department also manages $8 billion to $9 billion of tax and investment income but, more broadly speaking, ensures that we have a revenue structure that will meet Albertans' needs well into the future and will be able to sustain the program deliveries that are required of the government.

Goal 2: "Maintain a fair and competitive provincial tax system." It's very important that we continue to maintain – Albertans' overwhelmingly say and continue to see that the government has an important role but that our role in taxation ought not put an undue burden upon the economy such that it would be an inhibitor to the creation of wealth, an inhibitor to the creation of jobs, an inhibitor to the opportunities that Albertans would seek and value. In that regard, we have to look at not just the competitiveness of our provincial structures vis-a-vis the other provinces, but we have to look globally in light of most of our exports going the United States. In that context, we have to ensure that we have a structure where if we're going to attract the capital, if we're going to want people to take the risk to invest in this province – not just Albertans but people from around the world want to come here and invest in the opportunities that are here in Alberta – we will have to have a competitive provincial tax system.

This year alone we are announcing a second stage of reductions in tax rates corporately. These are all subject to affordability. We have a three-, four-year plan to continue to lower the corporate income tax rates. We have lowered the overall rate from 13 and a half to 13 percent. We are lowering the small business limits as well as increasing the small business thresholds. So we will ensure that we will continue to review the competitiveness of the provincial tax system.

Our performance measures speak of that, both in respect to individual and corporate taxes. We are the lowest in Canada overall with respect to our tax burden, tax load on families of four and the tax load on business, and we will continue to look at and expand that towards our competitiveness with respect to our competing countries such as the United States in particular, where much of our trade goes.

Part of that provincial system also deals with a fair system such that everybody shares their appropriate responsibility in paying tax and receiving benefits. We look to a system that would be simpler, more easily understood, and in that respect could help facilitate less degrees of cost of compliance and regulation, one that would be easier for people to understand and make their decisions without having to have the cost within their own organizations or going to experts to have to provide such detailed analysis of an investment just with regard to tax. So we want to look at something that's fair to all Albertans in understandability and that appropriately levels that tax so that everybody bears their fair share.

The third part in this program itself is to "administer tax and revenue programs fairly, effectively and efficiently." The Auditor General says that we should talk about various programs, the benefits of exemptions. We do have a number of exemptions in our tax structures where people forgo paying taxes, and the Auditor General has suggested that we ought to look at the cost of those and to see that the benefits are realized, that we report on the values forgone in collection of revenues. I would think that that's very much a part of what we're looking at when we say "fairly, effectively and efficiently," that we analyze our current structures and ensure that they are those which we'd like to retain going forward.

Core business 2, "Manage and invest financial assets prudently." There are four specific goals that we have under that core business. One was to "develop and implement an investment management framework." I spoke of that previously when I mentioned that one of the key initiatives of the department was that we are analyzing our management framework. We want to analyze and review comparable investment organizations with respect to objectives, philosophy, operations, structure and governance to determine best practices and understand the resources required to be a successful investment organization.

There are a number of things changing in the industry, so our organization is faced with structures such as T plus one; in other words, transactions being completed within one day of trade. Presently the markets are on a T plus three, three days post trading, and they're even considering T plus zero so that it's real time of completion of a transaction when you invest in the various markets throughout the world. That transaction would be completed within the same day. That's going to require and part of our budget does allude to an increase in resources to accommodate the T plus one challenge that we have, making sure that we have the technology, the systems of how we process the transactions, the people, and the IT support as well to ensure that we can respond to the requirements that will be coming in over the next few years. Now, those are long-reaching objectives that require work today. If you're ever going to be ready for it, those systems would have to be tested well in advance, be prepared and foolproof before they become enacted in the marketplace.

Goal 2.2 is to "develop a renewed savings policy for the Province of Alberta." We are asking questions:

- Should the Province add to, maintain, or reduce its existing savings?
- How should any savings be used in the future and what should the investment objectives of the savings be?
- Should the savings be maintained in the Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund or in some other vehicle?

Before we start clarifying even the objective of the Alberta heritage savings trust fund, I think it's important to realize: to what end and what size should that fund be? What would be the investment purposes? Who'd be the beneficiaries of the income? Would it be for an endowment-related function? Presently the income is going to the general revenue fund. Would it be a specific endowment, things like medical research or science and engineering funds? Would it be for building of the fund and retaining the income? If the fund were to be built, for what purposes and what size? So we want to make sure that we're clear on the savings objectives, whether or not we need a different vehicle, whether or not the heritage fund forms part of that. We've done a lot of work, and we'll be continuing that work through this year.

The third goal of the investment management division is to "maximize investment returns subject to client-defined objectives and policies." We have a number of clients. I'd mentioned a number of pension funds that are administered by the investment management division. As such, those investment objectives will be set by the boards of those various pension funds, and we will have to respond to their criteria. What will be their risk tolerances? What types of investments? It will look towards the returns that are required for each of those funds. As well, being that the province is the client of the Alberta heritage savings trust fund, what are our investment objectives?

In 1995, as we know, there was a very significant review of the Alberta heritage savings trust fund. From that review it came back that we would maximize and look towards maximizing the long-term returns of the Alberta heritage savings trust fund. That would give us a change in portfolio mix, which used to be solely focused on fixed income, to more of a balanced portfolio. The benchmark portfolio at this stage is earmarked at being upwards of 65 percent in equities and 35 percent in fixed income. So we would see that we would diversify that in stocks and bonds, both Canadian and foreign content, with the objective of maximizing the return while trying to minimize the risk. So you don't place all the investments in one structure. You will acknowledge that there will be volatility, such as in the past year, but you would manage that through diversification.

I'll conclude my remarks and would be happy to entertain any questions that come through the afternoon.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I want to say hello to the staff as well and welcome them and thank them for the work that they're doing. The minister began by giving an overview of the department. In that context, I want to start by just raising some general functional or jurisdictional questions. You talked about the fact that you're still kind of in the transfer stage of getting things straightened out between what you're doing and how it fits with all of the other ministries. You made references to the relationship you have with Gaming, Energy, Treasury. So, you know, this whole new focus of the Minister of Revenue has to kind of mature as it establishes its position.

One of the things that I found missing as I was looking through both the business plan and the budget, especially the business plan part of it – I don't think this necessarily needs to be in the budget – was a table that reflects some of the numbers you were talking about in the context of, you know, the total asset base that you manage, where it is allocated, whether or not it's the heritage fund, whether it's the pensions, whether it's the short-term investments, whether it's the overnight investments that you do with cash flow management.

I think this would help Albertans understand more, not only the dynamics of the kinds of responsibilities that the ministry undertakes, but it would also give us as the Official Opposition, the people who are mandated to review what you're doing and benchmark what you're doing, a chance to look at your performance measures in relationship to the kind of asset base that you do manage. I say that in the sense that you've talked a little bit about the new strategy, the longer term strategy for the heritage fund, but if you look at performance indicators that are outlined here in the business plan, it kind of lumps all investments together. I think everybody recognizes that the risk in a pension plan, the risk in a quick turnaround or a short-term investment fund is more important than when we look at this broader long-term growth strategy, say, for the heritage fund. So in terms of being able to make judgments about the performance of the ministry in those different areas, having some of those breakdowns might be more appropriate. It might be helpful both to us and to Albertans in understanding the total responsibility of the ministry.

From there I'm going to jump to the revenue side as well. You mentioned the fact that within the province now we're dealing with a revenue base in the neighbourhood of $20 billion, yet when I go through both the business plan and the budget, the only numbers that I see actually being reported in the context of revenues collected are kind of the income tax parts of it. In terms of giving us a sense of how you relate to the other departments, something should be presented in your business plan to give us a sense of where you fit in the context of administration, enforcement, collection, evaluation, all of the different aspects as it relates to these other ministries.

You know, as I was reviewing the business plan and the budget, I kind of had the sense: well, your responsibilities are really in the tax area. The royalty area belongs over in Energy, and the gaming area belongs under the Minister of Gaming, but in your comments just now you mentioned the fact that you are in a sense responsible for setting some kind of a mix analysis. In the context of our province, how much are we getting from tax sources, how much are we getting from royalty sources, and how much are we getting from gaming sources?

You talked about you as a minister and your department as a functional responsibility having this interaction in terms of looking at what is fair, what is equitable relative to the sources of those revenues. For us to deal with it, no question; we can go to the other part of the budget and get it. But in the context of looking at it under your business plan, I think it would be very helpful for a table to be put out there so that we can see what the relative management strategies are, decisions that are being made relative to the positioning of Alberta in the context of our revenue. This would then allow us to say: okay; if you are actually changing that mix of revenues, is it because of a decision to in some way reduce income tax or is it an option to, say, change the relative balance between the percentages that come in the gaming revenue sources? You know, how much goes back to the community, how much goes into the lottery fund. Those become decision strategies that affect this revenue mix or this revenue balance that you talked about. I think that if Albertans are going to track and be able to look to your new ministry to do that kind of analysis and do that kind of public rationalization for them, they need those sets of information to make comparisons so that when you talk about changing those strategies, they can actually see how it would show up while they are dealing with your business plan without having to go and look at a whole different series of budget documents to actually achieve that.

I guess the other thing that I picked out in your conversation – and this gets again into some of the core businesses that you define. Before I go there, I have one more question that came out of your comments.

You talked about an analysis of some of the other revenues that the government has, and that just triggered in my mind a debate that we had it seems about three or four years ago. The government was committed to go through all the fees that are charged by the government and determine whether or not they were true fees or whether or not they were charges in excess of the cost of delivering the service. I guess I'd like to follow up on that and see whether or not anything came out of it in the context of changes in those fees, changes in the ways that costs associated with these get reported. I don't know if that now has moved under your responsibility or not or if that's still Treasury, but it is a Revenue area, so I would assume that it would be there.

I guess the reason I bring it up is because as I look through the list of fees that were changed in conjunction with the new budget, I see what I would assume to be a reasonably similar administrative requirement actually not carrying through into a similar increase in fees. If we look at the different licensing fees that were introduced, say, for different vehicles or for drivers' licences of different levels, in some of those fees there were significant increases in one type of licence and not such large increases in other licences. It doesn't seem to me that the costs associated with administering either one of those licence-handling systems would be very different. So why the difference in the fee increases? Was the difference in the fee increase based more on an ability to pay rather than the cost of administration?

We have to go back to look at, you know, that whole debate that precipitated out of the court ruling that basically said that if you call it a fee, it must be on a cost recovery basis, as opposed to a fee being a surplus revenue overcost of delivering the service calculation. Then it had to be defined as a tax. That follows out, and that issue was raised when we saw, I guess, what appeared to me to be nonjustified differences in increases in different levels of some of the fees associated with licensing or applications to the government. So I would like the minister to explain that. I know that's not something that you can stand up right now and say: one, two, three. So a later date would be quite adequate to review, you know, that kind of cost structure within the program.

You know, that goes back to the suggestion or the request I made at the start, that by having some of these breakouts about the different levels, it would make it easier for us to follow some of the costs associated with administering some of those fees as opposed to just constantly bothering you every budget, saying: will you report it again? If it comes out right up-front, that's great.

One of the other things that came to mind in the context of your business plan was the issue that you raised about the need for fairness in our tax system. I think that it's under 1.2 on page 320, you know, that you talk about maintaining "a fair and competitive provincial tax system." I appreciate your discussion there because that helped me to understand a little better the difference between 1.2 and 1.3. If I'm interpreting what your comments were relative to each of those, 1.2 really deals with how we stand relative to other jurisdictions whereas 1.3 deals with how we stand as individuals or as taxable entities within the province. So it's kind of an in-house internal/external type comparison.

The issue that comes up in that – you made reference to whether or not exemptions in the tax system are really being realized through the benefits that accrue back to the individuals who get those exemptions. This is something that's always fascinated me. If you do get something that is a functional model in that area, where you can measure the benefits accrued from a tax exemption or a tax deferral, I think this would be great in the context of public policy analysis, because it would give a better sense of where policy options can really take force. So, from that perspective, I look forward to the results over the next couple of years as you work on that.

The other thing there that I was wondering about is when you talked about some of the exemptions. One of the other issues that comes up there is either tax or even income leakages, you know, in the sense of: what work are you doing to look at whether or not appropriate levels of income are being reported? Especially now, we have that option by breaking away from the federal income measurement. Even though we do take it directly off their tax form, we do have options to deal with alternative measures of income-reporting compliance; similarly in the context of the reporting of exemptions or the reporting of actual tax deferrals, tax credits.

I guess what I would ask the minister is: are they contemplating looking at any of those kinds of issues as part of their efficiency criteria under 1.3 in the context of core business 1? That seems to me to be one of the areas that comes up on a regular basis when people come into an MLA's office and start talking about: are taxes fair? They always say: well, what about? Everybody's got a neighbour that doesn't pay taxes, and it always seems to be that neighbour who is playing the system, if I can say it. So in terms of looking at it from the perspective – can we make sure that we've got something we can give to the individual who comes to our office and say, you know, "These are the things that are done to follow up on your neighbour"? Because you always end up trying to say: well, the system is there; we have to make sure that it works. What is actually being done? That would be quite helpful.

I guess another part of this core business section as well comes to mind. You mentioned that you are responsible for dealing with this idea of a fair tax across Alberta in conjunction with – and I think you made reference to all of the sources of revenue of the province. Yet I guess I would ask in the context of the debate that we had under the single-rate tax system: how can you justify the increase in the health care fees as being fair and equitable as part of a tax? Mr. Minister, we've had a number of members of government who have actually said: yes, no matter what we call it, it is a tax. You know, a per head tax, a flat tax, a unit tax, all those fancy names that get thrown on as alternatives to a premium in effect are regressive taxes. They have the greatest burden on the individuals at the lower end of the category that pay. I recognize fully, Mr. Minister, the fact that there is a cutoff below which nobody pays, but once you get to the break where individuals begin to pay, that tax in effect has the highest impact on the individuals at that lowest end, and it gradually fades down to almost an insignificant tax rate when we get to upper incomes.

I say that in the context of the debate that went on with the single-rate tax, when I had suggested that what we have to do is look at whether or not we really have a single-rate tax on income, that what we have is a single-rate tax on taxable income, which in effect makes it also a decreasing-rate tax, because as you get higher levels of income, you have access to a significant number of optional ways of delaying income mostly. You eventually pay it, but you pay it later, when you've had use of that in effect tax-free money for a period of time. But in the context of these fees, it doesn't.

Where I was going with that, Mr. Minister, is that one of the members in the House stood up and tried to show that in the context of just reported income or taxable income, the single-rate tax in effect was a progressive tax. You know, we can put a lot of things into words that have a lot of different meanings, and I challenge that interpretation, but it was presented. Even on that basis, in effect, these single-fee taxes, head taxes, unit taxes, premiums, whatever we want to call them, go a long way to negating this whole idea that the individual who responded to my challenge in the Legislature at that time was putting forth. In a sense, if that argument were true, then we really have a tax system now, because of the use of higher fees that aren't justified on the basis of cost, basically being there to offset that declining tax based on our single-rate income tax. So I guess I would ask that as you go through your analysis of what's fair, what's equitable, you look at that in the context of how these new revenue systems promote and encourage that stable tax system that you talked about.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. minister.

MR. MELCHIN: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate your comments. I'll have some opportunity to respond today and will be more than happy to respond in more detail over time as well. A number of the questions, some of which you had, were quite detailed, as you mentioned, and I don't have all that information at my fingertips presently.

I'll just go through a number of comments. You mentioned a table reflecting the total asset base being managed. You know, in a business plan you can't contain everything, so that, I think, is a suggestion I'll certainly take forward in thinking about what we structurally put in a business plan, because the operation of the investment management division is far more than the Alberta heritage savings trust fund. As I mentioned, it's a $37 billion operation, and it probably would help Albertans to appreciate and understand the size and scope and nature of that organization. So somewhere at some stage I know there's information that's publicly available in the business plan or somewhere at this stage, but we'll take a look at how some of that could be incorporated in the future. You also said, I think, that investments are lumped together, and you mentioned pension funds. I think that'll address most of the investment management.

The revenue base. You also mentioned that our department collects, as you said, the taxes and the investment income totaling $8 billion to $9 billion and how that relates to the other ministries; i.e., Energy or Gaming or Health, the health care premiums, or all of the other departments that have various revenue sources. Clearly, the Department of Revenue has primary responsibility for the taxes, first and primary responsibility for personal and corporate taxes, fuel taxes, tobacco taxes, and hotel room taxes. So the tax components are the primary responsibility of the Department of Revenue.

The other responsibility that we talked about in this revenue framework or some work at looking at the overall revenue structures of the government – it would still be the primary lead policy role of Energy to review royalty structures and policies with regard to royalties. Clearly, Gaming will do the same for gaming, and each of the individual departments will have that primary lead policy development/stakeholder consultation in looking at their own structure. So what we have started is the work of correlating amongst all the ministries the collection of that information so that we have a good body of information on all the present structures. We've done much work on that already in the first year, and we have a lot more to do in looking at and extrapolating the present structures to where we'd like to go and the appropriate mix. We are working with all the departments in collecting that information and doing the correlation. So if it came down to a decision in the future that you wanted to change an emphasis of tax to a royalty or a premium or gaming or whichever so that one took a greater emphasis than another, it wouldn't necessarily be the first lead responsibility of the Department of Revenue to cause that, especially if it might relate to Energy, though we would work hand in hand with them in trying to make sure that we've got the right revenue structures for the future. If we identify that in this analysis, we'll take that lead role in taking it back to the various departments.

So it isn't ours to cause change in each department, but it is our responsibility to ensure that there's someone looking at the specific revenue structure of the government overall both as to size and mix, and we will use that in working with those other departments, those cross-government initiatives, that jointly will make some of those decisions. That's how we've tried to view this. It's not so much that we look just at a siloed approach, that any one department is independent of the others, but that we work more co-operatively amongst departments, and we'll take the lead role in gathering information, starting to structurally look at the what-ifs in the scenarios and the pros and the cons and bring back that information as we work on those structures and work specifically with another department if it applies to them.

I'll take a look at some of your suggestions. How do we help the public be more aware of that aspect? Maybe a revenue table, you suggested. How do we better communicate that so people could interpolate it without having to go throughout, as you'd mentioned, all the various estimates together? I'll take a look at that idea as well when we look at our future plans as to how we can continue to improve communication of the business plan to Albertans.

We do mention up front, though, the Department of Revenue developing tax policy, administering tax programs. We get into key initiatives that we're looking at, the Revenue frameworks. We get into the mission and values. All of them speak toward this correlating activity, and we'll look toward how that can be implemented or improved as far as communication. I don't have a recommendation for it yet today.

Analysis of fees and charges. There is still a committee that's ongoing. The Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne chairs the Fees and Charges Review Committee. It was previously chaired by the Member for St. Albert, and they presented a report a year or two ago on that fees and charges committee. Many fees had already been analyzed at the first onset to ensure that they meet the tests; i.e., they can't be more than basically recovering costs with maybe a little bit of markup on it, but it has to relate to the costs. A number of fees have been changed. I don't have the specifics right now with regard to that. With the new ones that came out, we'll get you some more detail and that type of information and why there were some differences.

Part of the costs, though, that were looked at by this committee did identify that many fees were totally out of line with the cost and bore no resemblance to the cost of providing that administration. Therefore, it was the recommendation in some instances that some fees should be substantially increased versus others that maybe held with minor increases or none. So you start taking a look at your fees in all cases or more cases actually trying to resemble the cost. As to a number of them that were reviewed that you might be referring to which you probably came up with through Government Services, through registries and the like, we'll give you back a little more detail on that in due course.

I would just emphasize again that that Fees and Charges Review Committee is ongoing. As fees are analyzed, they do come to the committee, and they report back, do their due diligence with respect to ensuring that all fees in the government meet the appropriate tests of being related to costs and being appropriate in the circumstances.

The fairness questions. I think you appropriately identified the differences between 1.2 and 1.3, one external and one internal. Clearly, there is a fairness approach as to other provinces and other jurisdictions and very much a fairness question as it relates to all Albertans: how is the tax burden allocated?

Exemptions. We're very, very early in that work. It's in the Auditor General's report. I have a lot of warmth, personally, to the fact that it's important for us to get a better handle and understanding of the cost and benefits, not so that we just continually treat exemptions as being entitlements forever but so that we are able to monitor those programs and somehow then address whether they're the right programs or ought to be modified or maybe eliminated and resources reallocated. So we'd welcome suggestions on that too. On the other side, if you've got some great thoughts, we'd welcome what a model might look like. We're early in that work.

Work to ensure that appropriate levels of income are reported, compliance questions, and the efficiency issue. The tax model is a voluntary compliance model. Even though by law you're required to, what they report as income is voluntarily reported even though they sign that it's true and accurate to the best of their knowledge. It's still voluntary what they choose to disclose. Therefore, it really is important. There are a number of things you can do to help voluntary compliance and to ensure that it is fair and that you get the higher compliance rates voluntarily. One way would be to have a simpler system so that an average person can understand it without having to go to another expert to get an interpretation of an interpretation of a court ruling. So the simpler we can make a system the better, and that was part of the design of the single rate.

I think everybody understands that everyone ought to contribute and that as you progressively earn more money, then you progressively pay more. If it's a 10 percent single-rate tax, it's very simple. You don't need any manipulations. As soon as you go into multiple rates, now you get into a lot of tax planning. All of a sudden you get into armies of accountants and lawyers, who get very sophisticated in looking at how you defer, who should hold the income, which spouse should hold it, should it be held corporately or personally. It adds tremendous levels of compliance problems, both in reporting and regulating and in voluntarily complying, as soon as you start adding multiple levels of income rates and deductions and exemptions. So simplicity would help substantially for compliance. It helps everybody in knowing what they earn, what they can pay, and what their expectations are.

Another one that will help is that lower rates have been demonstrated over time to help the compliance rates go up too. One of the challenges, quite frankly, we are going to have with tobacco tax increases is a compliance problem. In that respect, it's of great concern by going the other way. By having reduced corporate taxes and personal income taxes, we should stand to see a higher compliance rate. It's been demonstrated in other jurisdictions that that helps eliminate some of the underground economy and helps broaden the tax base. That would be part of the structure that we'd want to ensure is in place.

Another aspect of voluntary compliance has always got to be some form of audit testing verification. Now, you don't want to get too onerous on this so that everybody views that you've got auditors everywhere complying. But our level of population is increasing, so there are higher numbers of people filing returns. The federal government actually handles the personal income tax returns for us, so they have the responsibility for compliance and reporting to us as to the accuracy of the personal income tax. The same with corporations; there's an increase in the number of business activities.

One of the things that has been added in our budget is an increase in full-time equivalents of about 18 people in the division of tax and revenue administration to deal specifically with things like the compliance problems that we're going to face with tobacco tax. There have been a million and a half dollars added with regard to the increase in tobacco tax rates. We have additional staff and resources in our department and also in the Gaming department to deal with the compliance questions there and also to deal with other corporations and entities so that there is an ability for us to at least have a high enough sampling rate that people are aware that we're there, so that there is compliance, there is an ability to have testing and a follow-up. That will help both to ensure that people will more willingly want to voluntarily comply and not defy the law, and it will also help as an information process to help people clarify and understand the rules of tax. It's not there just to be an exercise and be punitive. It's there to be informative, as well, in understanding the laws of tax.

You now get into the questions of Alberta health care fees versus a single-rate tax reduction, an increase in one versus the shifting of revenue sources from one to another or the expanding of one base. I would say on personal income tax that even though we lowered the rates, our three-year business plan already shows a substantive increase of personal income tax being paid. With the broadening of a base, the economy thrives and improves and becomes a demonstration of the fairness types of questions as to the strength that it's already adding to personal income tax. The lower rate is adding to a higher income being attracted to the province. It's not actually the elimination of a tax base but a preferential way to improve the broadening of the base, an attraction for people to invest and come here and acknowledge that this is where they'd rather be earning their income than in other jurisdictions where they retain far less. So it's helping us improve the tax base and strengthen the personal tax, not actually eliminate it. So we're not forgoing personal income tax in relation to an increase in health care premiums.

A fairness question I would still pose – it's a vague question – is: how do you define fairness? It's at the core sometimes of tax policy, simplicity I mentioned being one and efficiency as being another. Everybody contributing to the cost is another part of fairness. Our health care premiums – you can mention that when Health and Wellness comes up; it's not part of the specific estimates of the Department of Revenue – only represent 13 percent of the cost of providing the service. We look at all kinds of insurance premiums, what you pay for your cars, and it doesn't matter how it relates to income levels. There's a basic cost of living that one ought to contribute to. Part of the challenge we have in health care is: how do people take more responsibility for their health? We talked about wellness, and part of the incentives are financial. We all operate on some financial incentives and appreciate the cost if we participate in the cost. So the premium has been associated very much with: ought not everybody have an opportunity to participate in the great health care system that we do have? It's not to be viewed that everything is given for nothing and that someone else ought to be paying my share of that. Ought not people be willing to contribute to it? It's not structured as a tax in that sense. You'll need to go more to the estimates of health to defend that one, so I won't go down that.

With respect to the term "fairness," there are a lot of criteria that are used in the word "fairness." I think that when you look at taxes, sometimes the fairness question is a variety of structures too; i.e., if you put it all on personal income tax to collect everything, you disproportionately make some groups pay the burden, so you have multiple forms of tax and revenue sources to broaden out the base and fairness questions. There's no one tax that you could really argue is fair for everyone, and that's why you do have different sources. You also want fairness in some respects to average out the risk of revenue sources. They don't all come with the same stability or volatility issues. Health care premiums are far more stable than corporate income tax, for example, which is far more volatile and economically driven. Education property taxes, for example, are very stable as related to energy, commodity price, income-related types of things. So stability and dependability of revenue sources are also parts of fairness, and those are things we will look at.

I'll end my comments there and be happy to respond in more detail to any of the other questions that we've missed. Thanks.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate the opportunity to ask some questions and to make some observations about the estimates for the Department of Revenue this afternoon. I think that unlike our leader's my questions and comments are going to be more those of the person on the street than someone who is knowledgeable and qualified in the area to make the kinds of sophisticated comments that people who pursue accountancy and managerial strategies are able to do. Mine will be more from the perspective, I suspect, of ordinary Albertans, and I don't pretend that they are going to be as sophisticated as they might be.

I wanted to start with goal 1, "Maintain and develop a revenue structure that meets Alberta's needs and is consistent with Albertans' values," and ask some questions. The minister made reference to the Future Summit, and prior to that we had the growth summit. We go back to those gatherings and look at the priorities, and it seems to me that the priorities that Albertans identified, at least at the growth summit, have somehow or other been misconstrued by the government.

We keep coming back with this almost obsession with taxes and tax cutting. I noticed from a recent public opinion survey that Albertans ranked taxes and tax cutting as number 4, far down the list of priorities compared with their concern for education and health care and those social services. I guess I'm a little uneasy at the kinds of sources that the ministry is depending upon to get their information about what Albertans' needs are and what they consider Albertans' values. I wondered what other kinds of sources of information they are going to draw upon and how we can be assured that the conclusions that come from those instruments are actually the ones that reflect Albertans' values at this time. As I say, just from an unsophisticated observer, it doesn't seem to me that that is the case.

It's all a bit problematic too, I think, when you put in place a performance measure like the provincial tax load for a family of four. In spite of the minister's comments about fees, families don't sort out just exactly what they pay for taxes and then what they pay for fees. They have a limited income, and they look at the costs that that income allows them to cover. Sorting out: "Oh, this is to cover health care. It's a fee or it's a premium, and this is a legitimate tax" – I don't think that kind of thing goes on in most families. They look at the head tax on health care as just that: a tax. You can play with the language and do everything you want; it still will be called a tax.

The minister digressed a bit and gave us his philosophy on fees, even though it's not particularly a part of this budget, and he talked about fairness. With respect to those health care premiums, we also have considered it fair that Albertans will look after one another when it comes to health care and that we will do that through the tax system – at least that's been our past understanding – just as we have decided that we as a group will have our children educated in schools that are freely and publicly accessible regardless of and without respect to parents' incomes.

I have a little trouble with the kind of separating out – you must pay a fee for this service; you don't need to pay a fee for this service – and where that actually would end up if you carried it to its logical conclusion. I suspect eventually you could say: well, we really don't collect any taxes because we've got these fees all parceled out, and they'll give us the revenue that we need to run the province. I guess I would be happier if there were some assurance that the information the government is gathering about Albertans' priorities had a more, I guess, credible base than relying on the Future Summit.

A couple of specific questions about the kinds of criteria where the framework is going to be developed, and I guess it goes back to what I've been saying. What are the criteria that are going to be used for the development of the framework or the structure that's going to be in place?

The minister talked about noncompliance. I wondered about the co-ordination of this kind of activity. Is there co-ordination with the federal government? Are there any kinds of cost sharing, cost savings that can be made? What's the magnitude of the problem? How much do the efforts to enforce compliance – what is the kind of payoff in terms of that kind of activity? One would assume, given the way people address taxing, that it might be fairly significant. I wondered if there was any specific information.

Core business 2, "Manage and invest financial assets prudently." A number of years ago the government surveyed Albertans, and I think the conclusion was that Albertans want the heritage trust fund preserved. Yet it seems to me that the government has decided otherwise and through a variety of ways keep running at the heritage trust fund. The question is here: "Should the savings be maintained in the Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund or in some other vehicle?" again going at that fund, which I thought Albertans had fairly clearly said that they wanted maintained. So that's my impression, and I would be interested in the minister's comments on it.

One of the other concerns I have looking at the heritage trust fund is this drive to have the province debt free. As admirable as that is as an objective, I wonder what's being sacrificed and how much the government is willing to sacrifice to see that goal achieved in the next three or four years. Again, I guess it goes back to a matter of priorities, the kinds of priorities that Albertans seem to have and whether the government's actions are consistent with those priorities.

I admit that I'm relatively unsophisticated, but I have a question in terms of what exactly the province's involvement is in the investment management industry. What is meant by involvement in the industry, and exactly what is the government's role? It's unclear as to what that should be.

There's mention here of other vehicles. What other vehicles is the minister considering? What other investment vehicles or savings vehicles does the minister consider? I've asked the question about the heritage fund and why this is continually being asked about. Is there some plan afoot to eliminate the heritage fund so that the debt can be eliminated and then replace it with a different vehicle to sort of pacify Albertans? It's an area that I think is unclear, and if you do any amount of door-knocking, certainly my constituents are less than clear in terms of what the intent is with respect to the heritage trust fund. A lot of that I know is a lack of knowledge, and there has been an effort by the fund to put out brochures and explanations that are useful.

There is a goal of enhancing "the management of risk by implementing new monitoring and analytical tools," and I wonder what some of those tools are and what exactly they're expected to accomplish. Are there any kinds of costs associated with their implementation that could be shared with us at this time?

There seems to be an effort to implement a business continuity plan for critical areas, and I wonder if we could have some further explanation of the plan and the kinds of purposes that it's intended to serve, if we could have some of the specific objectives of that effort.

Under sub 4, "Regulate Alberta's capital market," what kinds of results are expected from that effort, and what are the kinds of costs that might be associated with it? There are standards that are being developed, and they're going to be published at the end of 2002. Can we have an example of some of the standards that are being considered? Who's involved in establishing the standards? What is the mechanism for enforcement of the standards that are being considered?

That was a bit wandering, Mr. Chairman, but I think it covers the kinds of notes I had over questions in the business plan with respect to the first two goals, "Manage tax and revenue programs fairly and efficiently" and "Manage and invest financial assets prudently." So thank you.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. minister.

MR. MELCHIN: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. There are a number of detailed questions you have as well that we'll respond to in due course, but I thought I'd at least comment on a few of them. Under core business 1 you mentioned the growth summit process and words that you said: misconstrued; i.e., obsession with taxes and tax cuts and other sources we have to say that it's not a priority. There have been many public consultations. We've just finished the Future Summit consultation. Two of the key theme areas – there were seven of them. One of them was fiscal responsibility; the other was the economy. Both of those continue to articulate the need to have a competitive tax structure. We do live in a global economy, and they view it as foundational for making sure we are prepared for the future. So in the integration of providing the revenue and the economy and the base to support education and health, it is really important that you look at the drivers of wealth creation. The latest consultation that we have, even now, is just reaffirmation of the importance of a competitive, low, simple tax base. It will help broaden the wealth and broaden the base and help improve the ability to sustain programs, unlike what we've seen in other jurisdictions in Canada, even our neighbour to the west, in B.C., with the struggles they are now having for having not adhered to and lost sight of some of the economic factors and drivers that will help preserve their wealth, the ability to sustain their health care and their education. Very critical that you look not just at how do we spend the money, but how do we ensure that you and I create sufficient wealth to pay for all that we'd want? How do we create a bigger pie? It isn't about just splitting up a pie that's of the size that we know today. How do we make it bigger so that we can have more of all the things that we value, so that we can have more to sustain the self-reliance?

Once again, the Future Summit talked very much about people valuing things such as hard work, industry, self-reliance, that they're responsible. So they want to think that government is not taking all the incentives and initiatives out of their own hands. Clearly, in that, we had not too long ago the It's Your Money survey. That, again, was a provincewide survey. Over 120,000 responded, the highest response rate yet, and placed tax burden and debt reduction as well in that as high priorities. It also talks about a balance. It doesn't say that you don't also sustain your programs of health and education and other areas, but it does mention that balance, that you still continue towards those sources.

The growth summit also adhered to many of these things that you said, so I'm not certain how you would say that all these sources are not credible. I would beg to differ that these have been great public consultations and very credible and not skewed at all. This is what Albertans say. It's maybe your interpretation and your spin to say that things are misconstrued and somehow are an obsession, but these are priorities that Albertans say.

We hear continually about debt reduction, that you say is not a priority, but Albertans overwhelmingly say: get rid of debt. We now save over a billion dollars annually on interest payments because our debt has been repaid. We overwhelmingly heard that back in the last election. You hear it in support of who they elect, and you'll hear them saying: yes, stay the course. We hear that in many ways: public consultations. You hear it through elections. You hear it in all kinds of credible public reaffirmations of the approach of the government to what's happening. So I don't know what credible sources you're looking for. You obviously haven't found them. [interjections] Obviously, letting some emotion into this Revenue discussion will spice it up.

I will talk about you saying that families don't look at and differentiate anything as being different and other than a tax. You know, we consume a lot of things as families. We consume and pay for everything to do with sustaining our life, our priorities of the things that we want for our families. We look for the independence to be able to do that. We look for a variety of services also that ought not to have to be targeted, that everybody pays for everything and therefore you can do nothing until everybody participates. But in life we all have some specialized desires and needs. Some of those come from government services. A fee isn't something which everybody necessarily always has to have or require. Therefore, if you want to differentiate things like premiums and fees and taxes, we can have some great philosophical discussions, but I would say to you that the participation of fairness and a diversity of how you collect those moneys is a part of fairness, that putting the burden upon one system of tax, i.e. personal income tax, to pay for everything can be just as distorted and unfair as any way of looking at how people participate directly and appreciate the costs more directly by the choice of buying services.

Now, in health care clearly there's a substantial cost, and we don't put all the burden on health care. We actually waive the premiums for low income. In tax structure we've even built a $12,900 exemption for every individual so that they don't pay, the highest threshold of tax anywhere. So we do look at the ability and affordability to pay as a fairness concept. Our tax structures and the balance of them have been extremely fair. We don't rely upon health care premiums to pay anything other than 13 percent. Our royalties have been a great source. That isn't something that every individual has to pay, but they pay it indirectly through the cost at the pump. These taxes all come back through what we willingly pay when we go and fill up our cars at the pump. So tax structures get added in corporate tax. That's a cost at the pump. You and I pay for it some way. You look at the royalty structure. It eventually ends up that we pay for it one way or the other.

Co-ordination between federal and provincial in compliance I think is an important area where we have to continue to be vigilant. One of the tobacco tax things that just happened recently, actually, is that the B.C. government, the Saskatchewan government, and now the Manitoba government have all recently raised our tobacco tax rates. That will help us in compliance now that we have similar rates across the western provinces. It would be very difficult and would increase compliance problems, so correlation of that and discussions have been going on through the other provinces, and we would encourage the other ones that have lower rates yet to follow suit. That would help right across the country.

We do work with the federal government. They actually have the responsibility for the compliance with respect to personal income tax. We have quite an ongoing working relationship with the federal government, with Canada Customs and Revenue Agency, with respect to that collection and the monitoring of that tax. In compliance areas, certainly with respect to enforcement and officers – we'll look at your notes. I'm not certain what more I can say there other than that I agree with the concept of that correlation and that how we can improve it is important to our collection of taxes.

Core business 2, investing assets. Why are we always looking at the Alberta heritage savings trust fund? I would like to clarify, I guess, one of the objectives of goal 2.2 in the core business "manage and invest financial assets prudently," where we say, "Should the Province add to." I've come back to one of the questions and said that we know that Albertans say to keep and retain an Alberta heritage savings trust fund, so the question isn't about eliminate or not. The question is: how do we ensure that the value and its purpose and structure are intended precisely to maximize its benefit for Albertans? That's an ongoing thing that Albertans ask and like to have participation in. I don't know that we can predetermine 20 or 50 years hence what all those structures ought to be, so it's incumbent upon us to look at it. One thing I would say with respect to the heritage fund: it was $12 billion in '83; it's $12 billion today. How big of a fund should it be? Answer that question. What is its purpose 20 to 50 years from now? That'll help you determine the size, the scope, what the income ought to be used for. Those are the kinds of questions that we want to bring greater clarity to when we talk about do we add to or not and what is, then, the savings fund's purpose.

When we look at other vehicles – and you asked about other vehicles – we are fortunate that we are about debt free. We have net assets that exceed our debt, so we are in a net asset position. We actually have a positive savings account in the province, unlike any other jurisdiction in Canada. So it is incumbent upon us to look at, as surpluses come in – we know the volatility of oil and gas prices. We've seen how they can go up and they can go down. How do you deal with the year-end types of questions that the Minister of Finance is looking at with the Financial Management Commission? When you get the surplus of money at year-end because you can't calculate it precisely, what do you do with it? Do you save it short term or long term? There are various vehicles that one might consider. Do they apply to the heritage fund? Maybe, but maybe not.

So there are a variety of reasons why you might save, volatility being one of them. Do you use another vehicle for that or not? Those are questions that we're examining, both the Minister of Finance and myself, with regard to year-end and accounting types of questions. We know that the heritage fund's purpose originally did contemplate a variety of purposes. Some were capital works projects. Some were various economic and social benefits. Some were for savings for the future. So we know that the fund has been used for a variety of purposes and intended to be such over those years, and that's the kind of review that we're doing.

As to debt free and priorities and are we prepared to sacrifice everything to get rid of debt, it's never been about sacrificing everything to get rid of debt. It's always been about a balance, and it has been about ensuring that we are deficit and debt free and putting a priority to it. We are fortunate that we've had some strong years where the economy has been very healthy in Alberta, and it has allowed us, rather than escalating our spending to the levels of the highest year of income, to save for the future, and those savings have occurred by paying off debt. It's the best savings program you could ever have: get rid of the risk and get rid of the volatility of having to manage an asset and the income.

You mentioned 2.3 under core 2: what types of new analytical tools are we looking at? I'll have our department respond a little more in detail to you. The investment community is getting more and more sophisticated in its analyzing of stocks, various market-places. The T plus one and the trading of same day are going to require different analytical tools of sorts, but they have very sophisticated software/ hardware types of requirements, various measurement techniques that the industry constantly changes and improves. It looks for the best tools. It's a competitive market. It's a market that needs the best of knowledge. It needs the latest of knowledge. It needs the best tools to forecast based upon historical trends and what's happening in today's market as to where it might be going forward. So they are constantly refining that, and that's part of what the organization will have to be at the leading front of and constantly be monitoring what is happening so that we can ensure that we do maximize returns for Albertans. I'll have them respond so that you've got a flavour for some of the tools that they are specifically working with.

Core business 4. You mentioned standards being developed and what are we doing. On the regulating of the capital markets – this is page 323 of Revenue's business plan – and the "service standards developed and published," we have a date of December 31, 2002. Actually, the Alberta Securities Commission is an independent quasi-judicial body that works with the other regulatory markets, the Ontario Securities Commission, and it also works with B.C. and the other provinces. The provinces have the jurisdiction. There is not a national securities commission. There are various provincial jurisdictions. Many of our companies are listed on not just our exchanges here in Alberta for the junior capital pool markets, but they're listed on the Toronto stock exchanges and they're listed on the international stock exchanges. They require some commonality and uniformity of standards. Aspects of filings in New York will affect, many times, the standards that are being developed for Toronto and thereby affect what we have to do for regulation here in Alberta. Alberta has the second highest concentration of head offices of any jurisdiction in Canada, and we have many of those companies that require access to markets that are broader than just Alberta's. They need the services of: how do they access the capital throughout the country and throughout the world? So our standards are constantly being refined and modified, and there is a uniform standards project that they have going this year. I'd be happy to report on the progress of that as that comes forward.

I will conclude my remarks on that.

DR. MASSEY: I can't let the minister's lecture go unchallenged, Mr. Chairman. Just one specific. He talks about maintaining the heritage fund and how Albertans have said that they want it, yet the specific item in the budget says, "Should the savings be maintained in the Heritage Savings Trust Fund or in some other vehicle?" That says to me – and I don't think that I misread it – that they're considering getting rid of the heritage trust fund, that that at least is a consideration. I don't think that's what Albertans expect of the government at this time. That's just a specific.

I go back to the comments about the values and the priorities. Certainly Albertans value sound fiscal management. That's an earmark of our province. They also have a list of priorities, and I don't see coming at those priorities in goal 1. We have just experienced the first provincewide teachers' strike. Albertans are concerned about that kind of stoppage in service. If you recall, they were promised in the '90s that the budget cuts would yield a benefit that could be used for education and for health care. Lo and behold, after they suffered through the cuts, they find that the education system is in the greatest strife it's ever been in the history of the province. I would be interested in how representative of Albertans the 120,000 responses were and how representative of all Albertans the Future Summit is. When I ask for something that's credible, I would ask for something that does sample all Albertans for their opinion in a way independent of government that can be verified so that we have some assurance that the values that are being chosen really do reflect Albertans. There's so much more that could be said, but I think it's too important an issue just to leave with government-called summits and government-sent questionnaires.

Thanks, Mr. Chairman.

THE ACTING CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I rise to ask a few questions of the minister, who seems to be in a lecture mode this afternoon. Nevertheless, I guess I will still proceed with the questions and then hope that he switches from the lecture mode to a mode of genuinely responding to questions. I'm sure he will. This is one of six new ministries. This government, which talks about fiscal prudence, decided to add a huge new burden on Albertans by creating six new ministries, and this minister heads one of those. I looked at the amount of money it is costing Albertans. It's into tens of millions of dollars, of course, $40 million or more.

I want to start with perhaps a question on the heritage fund. Last Friday, as a matter of fact, I had appointments in my constituency office. I didn't know the people who were coming to see me, and as it turned out, one of the visitors came from another constituency. He wanted to talk to me about his concerns about the future of the heritage fund. In the first question that he raised with me, he talked about a course that he took in economics many years ago, and he said that the value, the number of dollars in the heritage fund, has been frozen over a number of years. Mr. Minister, I would perhaps request that you tell me which year the government decided not to put any more money into the heritage fund. It's at about $12.5 billion or $12 billion, in that range, and it's been at that level for the last seven years at least. Now, inflation over those years has been around. Some years it has been very high; over the last few years it may have been low. Nevertheless, he asked me: "You as an MLA should be able to answer my question. What's the real dollar value of those $12 billion today?" You know, the same $12 billion of, say, 10 years ago meant something, but it clearly won't purchase the same amount now. He said: "Tell me. What's the real value today in terms of, you know, '95 or '94 dollars?"

I said to him: the Revenue minister is going to be very kind to provide us with this information, and I'll throw that question at him. So that's a very specific question. It's two parts. What was the year from which no more money has been put in, and what's the magnitude of the erosion of the real value of that amount over those years up till today?

The second question that he raised had to do with why our heritage fund in Alberta has been frozen. He mentioned Alaska, and he said that they had $50 billion or $55 billion in there. He also talked about Norway. I guess, obviously, he read some of the information that has been appearing in the papers over the last little while. He said: is our royalty rate responsible for this difference, why we don't have the size of a heritage fund comparable to these other two jurisdictions, one of which came on the scene much later? Norway, for example, he said, has been there only for the last 10 years. We've been at it for a long time.

So the real question was about royalty tax rates, royalty tax credits, royalty tax reductions. You earlier in your comments, in fact, referred to royalty tax rates and said that regardless of what we charge, it's going to get translated into the price that we pay at the pump. So if we charge high royalty rates, what we pay at the pump is going to go up in terms of the price, you know, the retail price. That's what you said. But we don't produce just for our own consumption. This is a nonrenewable resource. We export it. We have the obligation, as the trustees of this source of wealth for all Albertans and future generations, to maximize the returns on it; the rent on it, that is. As I heard you, you tried to justify the royalty rates that we have in relation to interest in controlling what we pay in terms of the price per litre at the pump. It doesn't address the question of the enormous significance of this nonrenewable resource not only for us but for the next generations and our obligation to maximize the returns on it for the benefit of Albertans. So I'd like you to return to that comment of yours and perhaps elaborate on it, defend it or change it, if you like, change it to my tastes, if you wish, and you know what that is.

I have another question about the Alberta heritage fund. Does the government use some sort of ethical screen when determining where to invest these funds? An ethical screen: do you use it? Is it one of the routine, standard procedures, a test that we use, where the money is invested, in terms of some of the ethical standards?

I see here in one of your key strategies, goal 2.1, it says:

Analyze and review comparable investment organizations with respect to objectives, philosophy, operations, structure and governance to determine best practices and understand the resources required to be a successful investment organization.

Good enough. Does the ethical screen fall within that notion of philosophical considerations that guide decisions related to the investment of this fund in these different organizations or businesses?

Related to that is a question about Talisman Energy Company. I couldn't figure out from the information that's provided here whether or not the Alberta heritage savings trust fund still has some investments in Talisman Energy. So my questions are: do we have some investment there? What's the amount of that investment, if it is there? How long has it been there? That's a subsidiary question. If we have investments there, is the minister aware of the serious questions that are raised about the complicity of Talisman in co-operation with the Sudanese government and army to engage in serious human rights violations in Sudan? If this is true, what's the minister's position on the continuation of such investment with that company?

I have before me an article. I think it may be from the New York Review or some other place. It says:

Talisman Energy, the Canadian oil company operating in war-torn Sudan, asked the Khartoum government in 1999 to remove villagers from the vicinity of its oil properties, according to what is claimed to be a Sudanese government document cited in a lawsuit filed against the company.

This lawsuit was filed in New York somewhere, by the way. All of these questions may become unnecessary if you answer that we don't have any investment there. So it will be an easy answer, I guess, if that's the case.

You made some general policy statements when addressing some of the questions that were addressed to you by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods. You returned again and again to individuals taking personal responsibility for paying the costs of services that they get. You talked about individual responsibility and individuals being responsible as very important, but I didn't hear you talk about the responsibility of each of us as citizens toward each other, and I think that that's also a value that Albertans hold dear to their heart and, I submit to you, should be reflected in the policy and principles and structures that you built around justifying revenue generation, provincial revenues, in this province.

The issue of a health care tax is an important one. You singled this out and drew our attention to the fact that we are only raising 13 percent of the provincial health care budget from these premiums. The implication obviously is that it needs to be raised. I guess with a 30 percent increase in health care premiums, that percentage I'm sure is going up. You can correct me on that. Tell me what would be the new percentage that the health care tax revenues will constitute of the health care budget. The point is this. Health care isn't like any other consumer goods that you consume and, therefore, take personal responsibility for purchasing services to service those needs. Health care is a human need, a fundamental, absolutely inalienable human need. We can't escape illness, regardless of how rich we are, how poor we are, how athletic we are. We may be able to reduce certain risks through lifestyle changes or through being lucky to be working in the context in which we do, but it's not something that's optional. It something that's there. We are given by nature to get sick. Therefore, it's not something that's a consumer item; it's not a consumption item. It's a basic need that must be addressed in any civilized society, regardless of whether you can pay for it or not.

Now, I have been talking to seniors who live on limited and fixed incomes. The seniors who fall just above the so-called very, very low cutoff line for those who qualify not to pay premiums find it very hard to believe that they should be getting lectures from us in this Assembly with respect to the fact that they need to pay more of the share of the costs for their health care. They say to me in my constituency – last Friday two of the three people who came to see me were seniors, as a matter of fact, and they were outraged to be told that they must pay more for their health care because it's good for individuals to take responsibility for it. They are hurt economically by this excessive increased tax burden, and they don't like it. So I'd like to I guess in a way counter what you are saying and remind you of some of the problems with your logic.

One last question, Mr. Chairman, for the minister. The budget of the province was of course based on certain assumptions of commodity prices, you know, the way they are, the health of the economy, the sluggishness or slowdown of the economy. Now, all of those assumptions, whether it's gas prices, oil prices, or whether it's the health of the economy, all of those conditions have changed, changed very quickly since the reading of the budget in this Legislature. In fact, they started changing before the day the budget was read in this Legislature. How valid is that budget based on projections that are entirely invalid today? How would you as the Minister of Revenue advise the Minister of Finance to deal with the problem of this invalidity of the assumptions which were used in a sense as building blocks for the budget and the logic for it?

So with these questions I will sit down and listen to the lecture from the minister with great intensity. Thank you.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. minister.

MR. MELCHIN: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to first thank the leader of the third party for his lecture on my lecture. We can certainly put on the record that there clearly is a difference of opinion and values and structures. We thank you for all of those opinions and lectures that you've now given to us. Having been a university lecturer, you're obviously very well into it. So thank you so very much.

The Alberta heritage savings trust fund value is at $12 billion. I'll get the specifics for you of the right year. It's back about '82-'83. It's been about $12 billion ever since then. The income of the fund at that stage has been retained in the general revenue fund ever since.

Now, those were changes made by governments at that time because of substantial changes in the economy, the deficits that we know of back in '82-'83, the huge decline in the Alberta economy. [interjection] I missed that. Just as well. Anyway, it's been at the $12 billion value ever since. It's gone up and down a bit based on market conditions of the time, but it's been in that range of $12 billion in assets ever since. The inflation real dollar value today clearly is less than what it would have been if you take it back not just from the early '90s but back to the '80s. It is clearly a different value in real terms today than it was then.

Part of the work that we're doing on the savings is to assess how large the fund ought to be for what purpose. One can make lots of arguments. You compared it to Norway or the Alaska fund, and they are being grown for different purposes. We met with the Norwegian people actually some number of months ago, last year, and talked explicitly about their fund. Their Norwegian fund is anticipated to grow into the hundreds of billions. It's intended for different purposes, though. They don't have a Canada pension plan; i.e., they don't have a pension plan established . . .

AN HON. MEMBER: Neither does Alberta.

MR. MELCHIN: Exactly. They don't have a Norwegian pension plan.

MR. SMITH: They don't give $70 billion away to the feds either.

MR. MELCHIN: Another good point. They don't give billions of dollars away to their federal government.

They have a Norwegian fund that's there to anticipate paying for a pension requirement, a different objective, a different purpose, and they're watching the demographics of their own people having to meet a need. So they know that they need a fund of a certain size to meet a pension obligation of their own citizenry, that's got clear objectives as to how large it ought to be, the income it needs to earn to get to that size.

Those are the objectives that would very much help the Alberta heritage savings trust fund. If we could identify specifically for what purpose it needed to be, then you could help clarify how large that ought to be, over what period of time it ought to grow or not grow to that size, what the income ought to be used for. We've had a priority of the government over the past number of years, though, that that fund is not taken into consideration. You know, almost an average of a billion dollars a year in income has gone towards priority services of the government, repayment of debt. We now find that because of debts being retired, we are saving in a different form. We no longer put out annually interest payments of over a billion dollars. Our interest expense peaked at just under $1.7 billion. Having the priority on allowing the income to go towards repayment of debt rather than just building up the heritage savings trust fund is saving clearly every year.

So maybe you can't say that the real value of the fund is a different higher number, but you can clearly say that we no longer have debts of $23 billion, and we're saving to where they're now only $6 billion and falling. So we have saved substantial moneys over this past decade in a different format. Rather than an instrument of the Alberta heritage savings trust fund you have to look at the balance sheet of the provincial government to look at the value and the net asset position of the government, not just the heritage fund position. So look at the full, complete balance sheet when you discuss that with those constituents or others that you're talking about. We'll get you the information as to what the real value might have been today otherwise.

Obligations to maximize return on royalty rates. You'll be delighted potentially when the Minister of Energy has the opportunity with his estimates to be able to maybe talk more fully about them, and he can explain more completely how we are looking to maximize economic return for Albertans and maximize the potential for the companies as well. So I'll let him comment on his estimates. It applies more directly to the Minister of Energy with regard to that.

You've mentioned ethical investing, specifically referencing our core business goal 2.1, "Develop and implement an investment management framework" and "Analyze and review comparable investment organizations with respect to objectives, philosophy, operations," et cetera. We do own shares in Talisman. We invest in the TSE 300. Talisman is a significant player. They are much higher than the 300. They're in the top 20 some odd companies listed. As such, we don't make a specific investment objective investing in Talisman. We make a specific objective investing in the Canadian marketplace.

So we do invest in the TSE 300. We invest in the Standard and Poor's 500. To insinuate – I guess my concern is that it is ethical. We've got millions of investors every day investing in the marketplace, making prudent, ethical fiscal decisions on every company. Every company is held to a high level of reporting. Talisman or any other company is required to not only handle financial information but to disclose all kinds of its information on its operations to the public markets, and the public markets are able to take that information and assimilate it and pass judgment on the values and practices of that. We do have an ethical investment policy in this sense: we look at the best practices. There's been a drive for all industries and the marketplace to look towards a broad-based, good business practice method.

I hear lots of allegations, and certainly we are aware of the stories and allegations and innuendos. If they have facts, if they have evidence, I would suggest that people bring those to the appropriate regulatory authorities with evidence, not just a story in the press about an innuendo. The stock markets receive this; they analyze it. It's not fair to place the burden on Talisman and a charge in this Chamber that's not substantiated of them being something other than a very good, ethical operating company without a way to substantiate that – we're going to go to some kind of guilty unless proven innocent methodology. Talisman is listed on our Canadian stock exchange and the TSE 300 and deserves our respect. They are prudent, strong, ethical businessmen following practices that merit support.

If you continue to bring up innuendos and accusations – I'd suggest that you go to Talisman, present them with the information, go to the appropriate regulatory authorities, bring the evidence. We don't care to hide evidence. If you have it, if you've got such great evidence, then why are you sitting here and not taking appropriate legal action? Go there. Do it.

Okay. The last policy you got into was just your lecture, so I don't even think I'm going to go down that road. I'll end it there. Thank you.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I want to thank the minister for being here this afternoon and certainly for standing and attempting to defend some of the policies of Revenue. I do enjoy the fact that his staff has taken the opportunity to be here as well. I think that all members in this Assembly would definitely agree that we are blessed to be in the country we are in, to be in the province we are in, a province that is abundant in many resources. It certainly creates a tremendous amount of wealth for us.

I look back to 1982-83. At that point, we had accumulated somewhere in the neighbourhood of $12 billion in our heritage savings trust fund, and all of a sudden it was stopped. Well, why was it stopped? Did all of a sudden members in the Legislature become very poor investors, or was it the fact that the price of oil went down to $10 a barrel?

I also am quite interested here to listen to the minister's comparison of how our neighbours to the west have fallen on tough times. Is it because their natural resources are no longer there? I know that they have an abundance of lumber that they would love to ship out of that province right now to any place in the world. Their mining is certainly not in bad shape either. Their fisheries are doing well. In the northeast portion of their province they have gas reserves. What's happened to their revenues? Why does B.C. find itself in the position that Alberta did in 1982-83, when we quit adding to the heritage savings trust fund?

Mr. Chairman, it is because of international forces, a collapse of the southeast Asian economy. They're not buying B.C. lumber. Their products from mining are not being bought. Their huge resource in the fisheries industry is certainly not in demand in southeast Asia. The very same thing happens here in this province. In fact, prior to September 11 we saw where revenues in this province were falling, and many essential services were cut at that time. Budgets were cut by 1 percent, and this is at a time when we were experiencing the second greatest amount of revenue that we had in this province's history. Now, we can sit here smugly and talk about our neighbours to the west who are having difficult times, yet when it came to our own backyard, we weren't doing such a good job, not even six months ago, despite the fact that we had enormous amounts of revenue.

When we look at how that heritage savings trust fund was built up, it was certainly built up during the period when revenues from oil, a nonrenewable resource, were put aside not only for this generation but for future generations. I hope that in all considerations that take place around the heritage savings trust fund, there's great consideration given to the commitment we have made to future generations and that it isn't up to this generation to decide what happens today, for right now. The overall question has been not what is in the heritage savings trust fund, what its value is today compared to a decade ago or two decades ago, but why is it still remaining at that level? Why during periods of great revenue in this province have we not increased the amount of that fund? Why haven't we done even the slightest bit to inflation-proof that fund? So these are questions that certainly have to be answered and answered to the people of this province. Unfortunately, we haven't heard too many answers.

Now, then, the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona had raised a number of questions on Talisman. For those detailed questions on Talisman that the minister didn't have the information for here – and certainly we don't expect him to – I would hope that he would CC me a copy of those answers as well.

I also see that apart from our investment program, which is of course in the Alberta heritage savings trust fund, the Alberta heritage scholarship fund, and the Alberta Heritage Foundation for Medical Research endowment fund, we also have, Mr. Chairman, in the neighbourhood of $17 billion in trust funds, the bulk of which are public-sector pension funds sponsored by the province. So I would like to know from the minister if these funds also own shares in Talisman.

Now, then, when we are looking at this as well, one of the comments that the minister mentioned, that I thought was very, very good, was that the best way to get rid of the risk is to get rid of the debt, and I agree with that. He also comments that if people have information about Talisman that is not innuendo, they should take it to the proper authorities, but let me remind all members of this Assembly that we just had a by-election in this province not because somebody broke the law but because there were ethical standards which were not maintained. So certainly there are various ways that we can look at this whole issue of ethical investing or socially responsible investing or whatever we want to call it.

Now, as well, to use the minister's own terms, the best way to get rid of risk is to get rid of debt. But, again, if we don't want risk, Mr. Chairman, then we look at this whole idea of ethical investing. Certainly one area we can look at there is a very popular hamburger chain. This hamburger chain was using styrofoam containers for their hamburgers, and it was a group of schoolchildren that started a letter writing campaign that eventually ended that practice of putting hamburgers in styrofoam containers, and they went ahead and used a different method. We also have seen very recently how a particular company that was manufacturing SUVs had problems with their tires and how that drastically reduced the sales of those and how they were forced to change. We have also seen one of the major sporting companies in the world change their policies drastically and suddenly when it was learned that they were using child labour. We have also seen the other end of the spectrum where companies that have been in business for many years have not done this according to environmental standards: expenses of environmental cleanup. So, yes, there are some very great benefits not only to ethical investing but socially responsible investing.

When we have a company – and again we'll use Talisman, whose activities in Sudan are certainly well known throughout the world by many, many top-notch organizations such as Amnesty International, the Red Cross, the World Council of Churches, and they have been tracking their activities. The thing here is that even as Talisman wishes to get out of Sudan, we have to look at what energy analysts feel about this particular company, and it has been reported that energy analysts feel that the company's shares are discounted due to its holdings in Sudan. From a shareholder's perspective is this firm maximizing shareholder value, and does the Alberta government care?

As well, Mr. Chairman, on March 21, 2002, I tabled some documents in here, and those documents that were tabled were copies of a class action complaint between the Presbyterian Church of Sudan and Talisman Energy Inc., and this is in the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York. Now, let's look at what happens. If we look at the worst scenario and they were to lose this case, how does that affect our shares in Talisman? We have a great risk here in this company. Therefore, yes, let's forget about the ethical part, and let's look at it from an investment point. There is risk there, unnecessary risk, yet we continue to invest here. So on two fronts, the ethical investing front as well as problems here with their involvement in Sudan, then certainly this is not a good investment, and this is not an investment that Albertans, if they were given the choice, would want to be in.

Those are comments that I wanted to make to follow up on what the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona had done so well on.

Now, then, when we look at program 3 under investment and we look at 3.0.1, investment management, we see that the operating estimate is $8.492 million, and in the 2001-2002 budget the operating estimate was $7.192 million. This indicates that there is a 20 percent increase over last year's estimate and a 50 percent increase over 2000-2001 estimates. So if the minister could please let us know or inform us: what is the justification for a 50 percent increase in funding over two years for investment management, and would the minister provide more details on the source of the $8.492 million in dedicated revenue for the years 2002-2003?

As well, could the minister inform us how many full-time employees are employed under program 3, investment management, in 2002-2003, and what are the projections for the full-time equivalents in 2003-2004 and 2004-2005? Also, will the minister provide a breakdown of the $8.492 million in operating expenses by object for 2002-2003 for the following: the salaries for permanent positions, the salaries for nonpermanent positions, the salaries for contract positions, travel expenses, advertising, telephone and communications, and hosting expenses?

Will the minister provide further information on the terms of reference and planned activities of the Investment Operations Committee in 2002-2003, which is designed to oversee all investment operations, including the review and approval of investment risk management policies. As well, if the minister could please inform us what criteria is used by the Alberta heritage fund Investment Operations Committee to determine whether various heritage fund investments should be outsourced and managed by external managers. Will the minister agree to release the investment policy manual of the Alberta heritage Investment Operations Committee? Alberta Revenue uses external managers to invest in certain asset classes such as Canadian small cap companies, U.S. equities, and global equities. Also, will the minister provide additional information on the investment management mandate that is to be established through the portions of the heritage fund that are externally managed? Will the minister provide copies of the investment management mandates? Will the minister indicate which external managers of assets of the Alberta heritage savings trust fund endowment portfolio have performance-based fee schedules?

As well, Mr. Chairman, if the minister could provide us with what analyses were conducted by Alberta Revenue, outside consultants, or the Investment Operations Committee in 2001-2002 or our plan in 2002-2003 to determine specific objectives and targets for managing the interest rate risk that exists in the province's liabilities and the heritage fund transition endowment portfolio assets in order to maximize income over the medium term and minimize debt costs while constraining risk to the government's bottom line. As well, could the minister provide copies of those studies for us.

Will the minister consider amending the Fiscal Responsibility Act to ensure that there is a mandatory provision that the fund be inflation-proofed on an annual basis? As well, what are the estimates for the percentage increase in the Canadian gross domestic product price index in 2002-2003, 2003-2004, and 2004-2005? Another question for the minister: what is the frequency of reporting of Alberta Revenue and external managers to the Alberta heritage savings trust fund Investment Operations Committee, and what are the contents of these reports?

Just a couple more questions here. I think I'm getting close to the end of my time, Mr. Chairman. Will the minister provide a breakdown of the investment management fees paid to the following heritage fund external managers in 2002-2003: Guardian Capital, Bissett & Associates, Standard Life, Mawer Investment Management, Van Berkom, Bolton Tremblay, AMI, JP Morgan, Morgan Stanley, Pyrford International, Baring Asset Management, Morgan Grenfell, ABN Amro, UBS/Philips & Drew, Fleming, Bankers Trust, Stein Roe & Farnham, and GE Investments? As well, under section 3.0.1 how much in custodial fees will be paid to State Street Company of Canada in 2002-2003?

If I get another opportunity here, Mr. Chairman, I do have a few more questions for the minister. Thank you.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. minister.

MR. MELCHIN: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. With respect to the Member for Edmonton-Glengarry as you finished off a lot of questions, we'll be happy to provide more of the detail to you rather than responding to you today. There are quite a few questions you had, so we'll go through that and respond to you.

I'd like to at least anecdotally go to a couple of things. You mentioned comparison to B.C. and that it was because of international marketplace forces and so forth that they've got some challenges that may be unique to them versus Alberta. I would only say that, you know, we continue to see many people from B.C. retiring in Alberta. I've worked with a number of companies in past years in government on various committees on things that we've looked at. One of the companies, Al-Pac, I worked with at one stage, and they were telling me that our forest industry here versus in B.C. has a substantially better climate for industry to be able to work with. So there's a lot of regulation, tax policy, and other things that create a climate so that companies still choose Alberta as the place they would prefer to invest. Individuals choose, and it's evident by where they're moving to. There's no compelling of anybody to choose Alberta over another place, but they come here because of opportunity, they come here for many of the benefits, and our policies lead to that kind of a climate. It leads to people wanting and desiring those opportunities, including the tax policies that are in place.

You mentioned that the Alberta heritage savings trust fund has not been increased. That's correct. There have been three years, actually, where it has been inflation-proofed. We'll get the specific details to you. Those happened within the last five years. We'll provide the specific details as to what amounts were retained in the fund from income, but you're correct that the income over those years has primarily gone to the general revenue fund. But that said, you still need to look at the balance sheet of the government. We could as a policy have chosen to build up the heritage fund and left the debt higher. Those are choices you could have made. Clearly, you could have retained a fund that was larger and growing for the sake of a fund, but your debt would have been higher and you'd be paying higher interest costs. We couldn't have had it both ways. So that's why, in looking in the context of the value of the fund, you need to look at the debt that has been saved and that is continuing to be less expense. It may not be contributing from a heritage fund perspective, but on the balance sheet it has improved the position of the government.

Yes, we want to look at the inflation-proofing questions. I think those are good questions. How large ought that fund to be? You know, we could retain all the income in the fund, but before we start going down that road, identify why you need that money, for what purpose and what end. Be clear about those objectives before you just build a fund for the sake of a fund. It's not to say that there won't be a direction that could be pursued there. That might be the direction, but let's make sure we're very clear on those long-term objectives, and that's what the savings review is about.

You mentioned Talisman, and I'd just like to say again that I find no evidence that Talisman has been ruled by any courts or securities commissions as having done something wrong. It's easy for people to make preference and accusation, but there still are no courts of the land, where we treat people as innocent until proven guilty, saying that they are unethical or improper or anything other than a company that deserves to still be listed and treated with respect until proven guilty. You know, I don't find that fair. If we want to go down and really blast the opportunities – and I would say that there are opportunities for us to normalize the relations of Alberta companies with the countries and people of the world.

We could do wonderful things for improving the situation of many companies by normalizing trade, by communication, by our tourism, by going there and visiting, and we ought to encourage more people to be participating in other countries, be it Sudan or anywhere in the world. Our federal government has the responsibility of providing sanctions, and it clearly is their responsibility as a federal government to say if a country should have sanctions on it. Talisman is not the only company operating within Sudan. Therefore, we have an obligation. If the federal government is not viewing that it merits sanctions, if they're not coming down with that evidence and that support, we still ought to be encouraging normalizing relations with the countries and people of the world and supporting the companies who are acting with ethical behaviours. The marketplace judges that every day.

We do invest ethically. We do ensure that we invest in companies with reputations that are listed and are judged every day of their existence by the millions of people that live and invest in those companies and participate in all of them as employees, as opportunities for jobs. They are our friends, our neighbours. They are all Albertans. I would say that the investment management division has an outstanding group of people. They set very prudent investment policies, they invest strategically, and they are working toward maximizing the return of that investment for all Albertans. That was what the review in '95 said: maximize the return; diversify that portfolio; allow it to be invested like you would typically, even as a pension fund.

I'll conclude my remarks there. Thank you.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate the dialogue or the parallel lectures we've had with the minister this afternoon. It's been rather interesting.

I'd like to pick up where my colleague from Edmonton-Glenarry left off, with some specific questions about the minister's office. I wonder if the minister, under 1.0.1, could provide us with a breakdown of the $263,000 in operating expenses by object for 2002-2003 for the following: first of all, the salaries for permanent positions and then the salaries for nonpermanent positions. How much of the work is contract work? Could we have some indication of the traveling expenses and how much is spent on advertising by the minister's office under this object?

I wonder if the minister can explain what quality indicators and performance benchmarks he is considering to have established within his own office to measure outcomes. I note, for example, that the New Zealand Treasury business plans include performance measures; for instance, the correspondence received from the public and the number of members of the public that feel satisfied or dissatisfied with the kinds of dealings they have with the office. I wonder if we could have some indication of the measures that are being contemplated, if any are being contemplated. For instance, are there standards for the number of replies to questions asked in the Assembly? Are there for ministerial correspondence, motions for returns, written questions? Are there performance measures that are being looked at for those activities? I wonder if there is a turnaround time for correspondence that the minister's office has in mind.

I also have some specific questions about the deputy minister's office, 1.0.2. Why was there a drastic increase over the past couple of years? Where is that extra money being spent? Again, could we have some breakdown of how the money is being spent on the positions, permanent and nonpermanent, any contracting, and particularly if we might have information on hosting and advertising expenses that are being incurred?

Under 1.0.3, corporate services, I guess the question is: why is there less money being spent in this area than in last year's estimates? What's the reason for that? Again, can we have some indication of the breakdown of the $3.026 million in operating expenses for the ministry in terms of salaries for permanent positions, salaries for nonpermanent positions, salaries for contract positions, travel expenses, and some of the hosting expenses? I know this is detailed information that we're asking for, Mr. Chairman.

I would have a similar set of questions for the communications, which is item 1.0.4. There's an extra $65,000 being budgeted this year over last year, and we'd like to know where this 30 percent increase is going. What's the reason for it? Again, could we have some breakdown, some detail by object, for the salaries, for the travel expenses, for the advertising, for the telephone communications, for the hosting expenses?

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, but pursuant to the understanding agreed to unanimously by the Assembly earlier this afternoon I must now put the following question. After considering the business plan and proposed estimates for the Department of Revenue, are you ready for the vote?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

[Mr. Tannas in the chair]

THE CHAIR: I'd like to call the Committee of Supply to order.

head: Main Estimates 2002-03

International and Intergovernmental Relations

THE CHAIR: Before asking if there are any comments or questions to be offered with respect to these estimates, we'll call upon the hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations to make some comments if he would like.

MR. JONSON: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Prior to beginning my introductory remarks with respect to the estimates for our department, I'd like to provide introductions of members of our department that are with us this evening. First of all, I would like to introduce our deputy minister, Mr. Gerry Bourdeau. He's accompanied by Wayne Clifford, assistant deputy minister for international relations; by Lori Sajjad, director, finance and administration; by Beryl Cullum, director, communications; by Daryl Hanak, director of trade policy; and by Paul Whittaker, director, intergovernmental affairs. As I will mention later, our department is a fairly modest-sized department, and you've just met 10 percent of our staff.

Mr. Chairman, I'm pleased to discuss the estimates for the Ministry of International and Intergovernmental Relations for the year 2002-2003 as it relates to its business plan. The mandate of our ministry is to provide leadership in the management of Alberta's international and intergovernmental relations. Much of our work is policy related and strategic and does not involve direct program delivery. IIR works co-operatively with frontline ministries to negotiate important agreements as well as is involved in planning conferences and missions for the Premier and other ministries.

IIR is a source of information and advice to departments on managing their relations with the key players in government and in industry and in society in general. We take the lead in trade negotiations, on national unity issues, and discussions at first ministers' meetings and Premiers' conferences. We take the lead as a department in strategizing and supporting those activities. The ministry also leads the development of governmentwide strategies and policies for Alberta's relations with international governments, organizations such as the World Trade Organization, and with federal, provincial, and territorial governments.

The ministry has three major goals this year. The first goal focuses on our relations within Canada: protecting "the interests of, and securing benefits for, Alberta . . . in a revitalized, united Canada." Mr. Chairman, federal/provincial relations have increased in importance as a result of the new security measures following the events of September 11. Also, prominent in our relations with Ottawa is the ongoing exploration of health care reform with the federal government. I would like to also indicate that there's been the ongoing very important matter of disputes resolution, and it would appear that as of today, under the leadership of our Premier, that particular matter has progressed markedly and seems to be resolved.

Mr. Chairman, the ministry's second goal is focused on "promoting the interests of, and securing benefits for, Alberta through strengthened international relations." We will be working with other ministries and the private sector to develop with the United States an understanding that we in Alberta have many attributes as a secure and reliable supplier of energy.

The third goal for this ministry is supporting greater trade and investment that benefits Albertans. For example, Mr. Chairman, we are co-ordinating Alberta's participation in the World Trade Organization's negotiations promoting our market access objectives and advancing Alberta's positions on issues involving provincial jurisdiction such as the environment, labour, agriculture, business, and the overall field of regulations or services.

Mr. Chairman, these three goals support several overarching goals found in the government of Alberta's overall business plan.

The ministry is divided into three sections: Canadian intergovernmental relations, international relations, and trade policy. The Canadian intergovernmental relations section works with other government ministries to co-ordinate relations between the province and the federal government to ensure that Alberta's interests are promoted and protected as an equal partner in Canada. As you know, the Premier in this area takes a very strong leadership role with the Premiers of the other provinces and addresses issues with the facilitation of our department. Along with the disputes resolution issue that I just referred to and which seems to have been resolved favourably, the ministry also led in co-ordinating this matter with respect to the annual Premiers' Conference and was part of the negotiating team during federal/provincial discussions.

This section takes seriously its responsibility for ensuring that federal initiatives respect Alberta's constitutional roles and responsibilities, including federal activities in key areas such as I mentioned, health, and also in the area of social programs. This section will continue to work with other government departments to develop strategies and advice on a wide range of federal/provincial issues. It'll be working with Environment and Energy to refine Alberta's position on climate change and the Kyoto protocol. It will also concentrate efforts to develop a federal/provincial agreement outlining Alberta's participation in Canada's negotiation of a trilateral North American energy agreement. This section will continue to provide support to the Ministerial Task Force on Security, which plans and co-ordinates Alberta's security activities.

This task force has taken a number of actions since its inception. It has worked with the energy and utility industries to review security issues at key sites. It's built strong links between the RCMP, CSIS, and the private sector for responding to security issues. Retired RCMP assistant commissioner Mr. Don McDermid is now advising the province on security issues, and the province's emergency preparedness plan has been revived to ensure that we have the necessary emergency procedures and communication channels established and in place. IIR will continue to work with Municipal Affairs, disaster services, the Solicitor General's office, and other appropriate ministries to maintain and enhance the security of Albertans.

Mr. Chairman, as well, the Canadian intergovernmental relations section will continue providing strategic support to the Premier for his role in First Ministers' meetings, Premiers' conferences, and other federal/provincial meetings.

The international relations section works with other departments in Alberta and the Alberta government to strategically advance Alberta's international interests. The work of the international relations section will continue to focus on facilitating and maintaining relations between Alberta and the United States. This section has taken on added importance since the events of September 11, and we are working closely with the federal government and our American counterparts on matters such as a cross-border security.

This section will be developing strategic approaches for Alberta's international relations to promote the province's interests and priorities to foreign decision-makers. We will be enhancing Alberta's profile in key international markets through the development of mutual relations, including Alberta's nine twinning relationships. Mr. Chairman, one new initiative is a joint project with the University of Alberta, here in Edmonton, to provide six-month training assignments for 30 managers from our Chinese sister province of Heilongjiang. New relations with the state of Alaska, the German state of Saxony, and Ukraine will also be a focus for this year. For example, the section is supporting the work of the Advisory Council on Alberta-Ukrainian Relations to enhance bilateral relations with Ukraine.

Also, I now turn to one of our major, major trading partners, and that is Japan. Mr. Chairman, recently I had the opportunity to visit Hokkaido and Tokyo as part of an invitation from the Japanese government. I was provided with an in-depth view of the Japanese economy and society and saw firsthand the value of Alberta's twinning relationship with Hokkaido. Japan is our largest trading partner outside of North America. The trade between us is $3 billion Canadian a year.

This section also will be contributing to international development projects for emerging democracies such as Russia and South Africa in the area of governance, or how to establish effective management systems in their governments. Earlier this month we had a very successful session with a delegation traveling from South Africa following months of preparation and work by staff from this section.

The trade policy section works with Alberta ministries and other Canadian governments on provincial policies for both Canadian and international trade agreements such as the agreement on internal trade and the World Trade Organization. The section co-ordinates the province's involvement in national or international trade disputes. They work to advance trade opportunities for Albertans by working to remove barriers to trade. As well, they analyze our trade figures and the economic factors that affect trade. Mr. Chairman, in this year's business plan the goals of the trade policy section have been uncoupled from those within the Canadian intergovernmental relations and international relations sections and have been given greater prominence.

Our trade experts will continue working with their provincial and federal government colleagues to find a long-term, durable solution with the United States on the softwood lumber dispute, certainly an issue or a matter that has been one of the major files if not the major file during the last number of months. Mr. Chairman, as you know, the Alberta government is very concerned about the impact of the U.S. trade sanctions on the Alberta industry. In addition to working with our lawyers in the legal proceedings, the province has been participating in Canada/U.S. discussions to determine whether a long-term solution can be reached to end this dispute. Alberta's forest sector has been kept up to date on every decision point in the process and continues to support our approach to this issue.

While more progress has been made in the past six months on this issue than ever before, very, very significant differences still remain. Both sides do have a greater understanding of the areas of contention and what the expectations are for resolving this dispute once and for all, but there has been very little hard evidence so far that the U.S. industry coalition is becoming more flexible on the matter. If the United States wants to have provinces consider changes to forest management policies, then the United States must also be prepared to make commitments on market access. Mr. Chairman, we're not there yet with the U.S. industry coalition. Therefore, we continue Canada's litigation, and our approaches are avenues that are available to us through the WTO and NAFTA review procedures.

While we work in co-operation with the federal government and the other provinces in developing agreements, let me be clear that the province actively represents and promotes our own provincial interests. Staff will also be continuing to work to ensure that Alberta's interests and priorities are truly represented during the newest round of World Trade Organization negotiations, especially as it applies to agriculture. The trade policy section will ensure a free flow of goods, services, capital, and labour within Canada. For example, Alberta will negotiate with the government in British Columbia to remove trade barriers between our provinces. Staff will also concentrate on completing negotiations on the energy chapter within Canada's agreement on internal trade.

Mr. Chairman, I would like now to move on to the topic of the ministry's budget and staffing levels. We are a small ministry in terms of staff and budget. The budget of $6.08 million is virtually unchanged from the last fiscal year. This year Treasury Board asked us to reduce our budget by $41,000. We also received a reallocation of $21,000 to cover the cost increase for governmentwide financial reporting under a system known as Imagis. The net effect on our budget is a reduction of $20,000 from the last fiscal year. This reduction will not affect the ministry's priorities or key initiatives. Any required funding has been taken from existing budgets. In terms of staffing our ministry has a complement of 53 staff. As part of the government reorganization we transferred one FTE to Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development.

Mr. Chairman, finally, a brief outline on how we measure the ministry's performance. Since the ministry's outcomes are often long term or dependent on external factors, our data are difficult to present as quantitative examples. We solicit input from a variety of government ministries and other sources to help us measure how we're doing and how to identify areas in which we can improve. We measure our performance through client surveys, secondary economic and sociodemographic indicators, and through polling results. The ministry takes all of these measures and provides a detailed narrative record of our achievements and activities in documents such as our annual report. From time to time we also do assessments on key initiatives such as after the conclusion of major conferences, trade negotiations, and international missions. These documents help us track our progress in meeting our goals in both an effective and efficient manner.

Mr. Chairman, that concludes my remarks for the estimates for International and Intergovernmental Relations, and I await with anticipation comments and questions regarding the budget estimates.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

AN HON. MEMBER: Question.

MS CARLSON: It will be a long time before you get to ask the question on this one and even longer the more often you ask that early.

Mr. Chairman, happy to participate in the estimates of International and Intergovernmental Relations this evening. I'd like to acknowledge and thank all the staff that are here this evening. Certainly they do a very good job and answer any questions I have in a very timely fashion, and it's nice that I've gotten to know a few of them over the years because of the involvement in PNWER and their involvement in terms of organizing those delegations.

I'm hoping this evening, Mr. Minister, that we can have some casual chats about some issues. I find that more informative than just running through a whole list of questions, although I will say that I don't think we'll be taking the full two hours this evening on this particular issue. [interjection] There's lots to deal with this evening. If you don't like that part, talk to your own House leader.

So on this ministry I've got some general comments and questions, and maybe I'll go to the specific questions first of all. You talked about, Mr. Minister, in your opening comments the various goals that you have within the ministry, one of them being particularly relations in Canada and "effective participation by Alberta in the Canadian federation." So I'm thinking that with regard to that, you're talking in part about the social union framework agreement. I also believe that this should be a joint commitment by the province and the feds with an undertaking to engage citizens in the participation in the roles, which I think is what you're getting at here. My biggest concern about this is: how are you engaging citizens in the governing process and moving toward decision-making, and what are you using for accountability measures, outcome-based measurement, and public reporting? Do you link those two specific programs? Could you answer that for me first?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Chairman, as hon. members know, there was a major issue that had been in the way of proceeding with the social union framework review, but now with the pending resolution – and I think it is resolved – of the disputes resolution mechanism pertaining to health, and also it would apply in the social union framework arena, I think all provinces, or at least all except perhaps one, have indicated by their action that the door is open to proceed with the superreview. That's just the lead-up to get to the answer, and that is that the design has not been completed in terms of how the consultation will proceed. There is a general commitment to contacting stakeholders. There is a general proposal to have that consultation at least be in the three major regions of Canada. But as far as the details and the specifics are concerned, those have not been finalized. However, I'm hopeful, and I think everybody is hopeful and expects that the discussion and the go-ahead for that will soon be taking place.

MS CARLSON: Thank you for that information, and if you could keep us updated on how that progresses, we'd certainly appreciate it.

In your opening comments you just touched on Kyoto for a moment. Could you tell us more specifically the participation your department has in setting policy direction on what Alberta is doing on climate change and Kyoto specifically and any direction or policy initiatives that you're working on in that regard?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Chairman, the further development of our policy as a government relative to the Kyoto accord and everything that's followed since is focused in terms of the subject matter with particularly the ministries of Energy and Environment. They, of course, under the leadership of our Premier will be the primary leaders in this regard in terms of developing our overall policy, which will be a government policy. Our role as a department would be to facilitate in terms of contacts and possibly how strategies might be developed, but we are not the line department with respect to this particular issue.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you. Also, with regard to the G-8 summit, that I'm sure you've had some participation in, could you just expand on that for us?

MR. JONSON: Again, Mr. Chairman, I think the G-8 summit plan for Kananaskis Country is something that has broad importance and implications in terms of preparing for it for government overall. In terms of working out arrangements, I wouldn't perhaps want to put on the title of full negotiations, but in terms of, yes, negotiating arrangements, the Solicitor General's department and ours have been the lead departments working on these arrangements. Once the decision was made that it would be here in Alberta, of course our goal is to be doing everything we can to ensure that this will be a successful conference. We have worked with federal officials because this is a federal event. It is the overall responsibility of the federal government in terms of its preparation and carrying out, but our two departments have been very involved in making sure that the interests of Alberta and the various locations that are involved and all that sort of thing are being put together into a plan which is workable, acceptable, which respects the opportunity to have such a conference but also protects the interests of Albertans.

MS CARLSON: Thank you for those answers. I'd like to focus now a little bit on the business plan and specifically goal 1.1, where you talk about "effective participation by Alberta in the Canadian federation." I have three groups of questions. I'll ask them, and then you can hopefully answer with whatever you have at your fingertips and perhaps provide more information later on.

In terms of International and Intergovernmental Relations travel, to try and understand the trips that are taken and how you organize in your department with the Premier and the Public Affairs Bureau is really what I'm trying to get at in the first question. We see that in some jurisdictions there is no intergovernmental relations minister, and the responsibilities are all handled by the Public Affairs Bureau and then more directly by the Premier. So how often is it the case here in Alberta where the department is working as closely with the Premier as it does with you as a minister? Does your department just handle your travel, or do they work with the Premier on some of the trips that he does, particularly those that would be overseas? That's one question.

One of the strategies for the goal is in part "to enable Alberta to receive a fair share of federal funding." An item of contention that we talk about a lot in here has been the money that is received from the feds for health care. Can you just give us an update on what work has been done on this over the last while? Where are we today as far as the discussions go? That's the second question.

The third one is on infrastructure funding. Particularly, I'm concerned about municipalities. I would believe that this is the major role of Municipal Affairs. Do you have any role within your department to secure funding for the municipalities, especially on the major centres, Edmonton and Calgary, who are facing all kinds of strains on their abilities to move forward with work at this time? Do you do anything in terms of anticipating future needs as these two cities grow? If you could give us any kind of an overview on those three questions.

MR. JONSON: Mr. Chairman, first of all as it applies to the organizing of missions, the organizing of trips, we play a major role, I think it is fair to say, in facilitating, supporting, arranging, and providing our services to all departments in terms of international travel. When it comes to travel arrangements within the province, wherever needed we will co-ordinate. If there are several departments involved, we have our services available in terms of arrangements. As I think you can appreciate, if it is a matter of the Minister of Human Resources and Employment wishing to go to a conference of other ministers, that is something that's arranged through the department, and we do not have any direct involvement with it except if there's some, you know, specific issue that we can support. In the area of international travel, particularly as it applies to missions which involve multiple departments and agencies and people, we do a great deal of that. In fact, that arranging is done through our department.

I think you referred to Kyoto; did you? No. You referred to the overall work that we do in terms of issues and where we've made some progress in terms of advancing our policies. I think one of the key ones that's outstanding right now is the whole area of the health and social transfers but particularly the funding – let's put it straight on the line – for health care. That's a major issue that we have with the federal government. It's a good example of where our department, of course led by the Premier's office and the Minister of Health and Wellness, continues to insist that we should have at least the restoration of what was the historic level of funding for health in this country from the federal government. So that would be an example in that particular area.

THE ACTING CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure to rise this evening and participate briefly in the budget estimates debate for the Department of International and Intergovernmental Relations. I, too, have a series of questions for the hon. minister. It is with keen interest that I recall that the minister stated that we have $3 billion in annual trade with the country of Japan. As the Chinese economy expands at – not an aggressive rate; I think that's the wrong word – certainly an impressive rate, what role is the department planning to play in increasing our trade with the expanding Chinese economy?

In relation to the appointment of Don McDermid, retired from the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, as security adviser for this province, as I understand it, what role does this appointment play in the events that have occurred after the 9-11 bombing of the World Trade Centers in regard to protecting from terrorist attack not only our pipelines provincially but our refineries and petrochemical complexes? I can understand if for security reasons we would have to be discreet. However, the details on this appointment would be appreciated by this hon. member.

The trilateral North American energy agreement that is also being discussed would be to do with the trading of electricity and natural gas and petroleum, crude oil, as I understand it. What negotiations are going on within the department to ensure, as the Premier would say, that whether it's from the Northwest Territories or whether it's from Alaska, which the hon. minister noted, Albertans get their pound of flesh? In this case the flesh would be natural gas liquids from either the Northwest Territories, Yukon territory, or Alaska. What negotiations are going on to ensure that there is a supply of natural gas liquids for our petrochemical industry? I believe there was a quote that there will be a secure and reliable source of energy for America, and we are going to be the source of this security and this reliability. Now, Mr. Chairman, in relation to that, what guarantees are we going to have in this province? This is a very, very serious matter, not only in this term of the Legislature but certainly well into the future.

Now, the softwood lumber dispute is also an issue that I certainly would appreciate an update on. I understand that the hon. minister and his department have been in direct negotiations, have been part of the negotiating team, have been part of the Alberta team. Correct me, please, if I'm wrong, but certainly in question period, as I recall, the hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne directed a question to this minister in regards to the softwood lumber dispute. Certainly it's a key part of the department, managing disputes and defending Alberta's interests, and not only under the North American free trade agreement. The World Trade Organization has dealt with this issue in the past in Canada's favour. So I would like to know how that is going, if we're working co-operatively with other provinces, or are we following the lead of the government of British Columbia?

What sort of co-ordination and facilitation is going on between Alberta and Alaska in regard to resource development?

There are also strategies being developed to discover better ways to serve Alberta's needs and interests within the Canadian federation. If we could have an update on the reduction of overlap and the duplication between governments.

The reform of institutions, in particular the Senate. What sort of reform does the department have in mind? Senate reform has certainly been discussed on this side of the House, and it has been a very interesting discussion. Just exactly what sort of reform does the department have in mind? I would appreciate an update on that as well.

As we know, there has been significant interest, Mr. Chairman, in the Canada/Alberta labour market agreement since its initiation. It's almost five years of progress.

I note here that one strategy is to "promote federal-provincial solutions to redesign federal-provincial financial arrangements including the Canada Health and Social Transfer, Equalization and cost-sharing arrangements." What changes, if any, would the department be contemplating or studying regarding the Canada health and social transfer? I realize that this is not part of the hon. minister's department, the contentious issue of the claw-back regarding child benefits, but what exactly are we studying about the Canada health and social transfer?

[Mr. Tannas in the chair]

Mr. Chairman, certainly I was going to mention the Kananaskis summit that's going to occur in the summer. However, I believe my colleague from Edmonton-Ellerslie has already discussed this with the minister, and I will not go there in my line of questioning.

If the hon. minister could answer those questions, I would be at this time very grateful. Thank you.

MR. JONSON: Mr. Chairman, I would like to just address two or three of the key items raised by the member, and I would certainly undertake to provide detailed answers on others.

I do want to first of all very briefly respond to the comments with respect to Japan versus China, as I understood the comments. In my opening remarks, Mr. Chairman, I used the example of Japan because I'd had recent contact, in fact a visit to Japan. I thought it was kind of relevant that I use that as an example, and the fact is that it is our major Asian trading partner. But I would draw to the attention of the committee that under the leadership of the Premier and other ministers that have been involved in prior months and years and also members of the overall Assembly, there have been many visits and contacts and twinning arrangements and other initiatives with China. It's recognized by the province very fully that this is a tremendous potential market and it has to be given priority. It is being given priority in terms of international relations and international trade.

The second point I wanted to make is that I think there are a number of specifics that could be outlined with respect to the overall financial arrangements pertaining to health care. But the one point that is paramount in the position taken by the Premier and by the Minister of Health and Wellness is that at the bare minimum the federal government should be restoring percentagewise the amount of money that they have traditionally provided to the provinces in Canada, and there is much that can be elaborated on there.

The final point I wanted to make is that with respect to the SUFA, or the social union framework agreement, there is much more to that agreement to be worked on than just the matter of health care, Mr. Chairman. Part of that process, as I've said, is to raise issues that the provinces have but also to listen and become part of a constructive consultation process to come up with findings.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I have one additional question at this time for the hon. minister. I would like to know what role the Department of International and Intergovernmental Relations is playing in the negotiations between the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission and an organization called Regional Transmission Organization West, or RTO West, in relation to the export of electricity from Alberta and the construction of transmission lines that are going to facilitate the exporting of electricity. Is this an effort between the hon. minister's department and the Minister of Energy, or is it taking place in silos, with each department discussing this separately?

Thank you.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to get an opportunity to ask some questions about the International and Intergovernmental Relations estimates this evening. My questions won't be quite as lofty as my colleagues who preceded me but will be more specific to the estimates that appear on page 315.

There are really only a few line items in the department, five on page 315, and they all fall of course under program 1. For one of these the funding is staying the same; that's 1.0.1, minister's office. One is increasing: 1.0.2, corporate services. The rest of the items, 1.0.3, 1.0.4, 1.0.5, are decreasing in funding, and given that the last three are the ones that actually provide the services, it's rather an interesting display.

One question I have is about full-time equivalents. Why is there a discrepancy between the number of full-time equivalents listed on page 311 of the 2001-2002 budget, where they're listed as 54, and this year's budget, which shows a budget amount for that same year for 53. Is it a typo, or have we actually lost a body between budgets, Mr. Minister?

The second question I have is also about the full-time equivalents. In 2000-2001 there were 58 FTEs working in IIR, but four of them were transferred to the Alberta Corporate Service Centre. Then in this year's budget we see that for the fiscal year 2001-2002 the forecast amount spent on item 1.0.2, corporate services, actually increased 2 percent and is now going to increase in this budget by another 8 percent from that forecast amount. In other words, we're seeing an increase of $159,000, or 10 percent, from what was budgeted last year, and at the same time other areas in the department are seeing cuts, and it raises some questions.

One of the other general questions: are there outstanding vacancies in the department for positions in the department right now, and what is the impact upon the department of those vacancies? They're looking forward to a loss of four FTEs for corporate services. Why are we seeing a growing increase in the budget for corporate services? There must be some other activities going on. One of the things that we noticed in looking at program 1 is that there are no performance measures for the ministry as you would see, for instance, I think in the New Zealand business plans, where there are performance measures in terms of turnaround times for correspondence and similar kinds of measures. I wondered if they have been considered by the department.

In 2000-2001, when there was a staff of 100, the support services budget was $2.387 million, and now it's $1.753 million for a full-time equivalent staff of 53. So the budget for support services dropped only 36 percent while the number of staff has dropped 89 percent. Is there an explanation for that difference? One would expect – and I'd appreciate a comment from the minister – that the government's push for concentration of services in the Alberta Corporate Service Centre would eventually result in lower costs, and that doesn't seem to be the case. I wonder if there have been some comparisons made by the minister in terms of the cost for support services for the department now compared to when it had its own internal staff providing the service and before the four FTEs were transferred. The question is: is there a difference in costs?

On page 273 of the business plan it states that "IIR works with the Alberta Corporate Service Centre to achieve efficiencies in the Ministry's administrative services." I guess the question is: have those efficiencies been achieved? If yes is the answer, could we be apprized of what they are?

The budget for corporate services is increasing 10 percent while that of international relations, trade policy, and Canadian intergovernmental relations is dropping 6.8, 3.4, and 2.4 percent respectively. I guess the question is: why is the budget for corporate services increasing at the expense of the others, and could we have some insight into how and why that priority was established?

One of the other differences from some of the other plans that we've had before us in previous years and this year, Mr. Chairman, is that in the line items there is no item for the deputy minister's office. I guess the question is: why?

I think those are some of the detailed questions I had about program 1. I realize that they are detailed questions, and the minister won't likely have those answers at his fingertips tonight, but any kind of general comments he'd have I would appreciate.

MR. JONSON: I'm just rising, Mr. Chairman, to indicate that I agree with the member across the way that this will certainly be more effectively addressed by my undertaking to provide written answers to your detailed questions. I did want to assure him, however, that the one staff member is not lost.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. And thank you, Mr. Minister. We wouldn't like to misplace any of the staff.

My next question on this department, Mr. Minister, is referring to goal 2.2 on page 268, where you talk about "a strategic approach to Alberta's international relations that effectively promote the province's interests and priorities to foreign, governmental, decision makers." Here you talk about co-ordinating provincial missions, but what I'm interested in is that the department also co-ordinates interpretation and translation services for the Alberta government. So a two-part question. One, is there a cost to the department for this, and should it not be a line item in the budget that we can identify? The other part of the question is a question that both the Member for Edmonton-Centre and I are quite interested in: do you provide local translation services? We have a need in our constituencies occasionally for translations and have quite a time trying to get things translated. So we're wondering if there's an internal function within your department as well for that.

MR. JONSON: Mr. Chairman, we do not have within our department a translation unit. We work with protocol and with the resources that are available through the Public Affairs Bureau – I think that is the proper title – to utilize those resources as needed, and we have their support when dignitaries visit who do not speak English or French. We're not the site of the translation centre.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you. My next question is generally with regard to twinning, which is still under goal 2, goal 2.3, where you talk about active bilateral relations, including twinning. Mr. Minister, are there any limits or goals for twinings? I'm particularly interested in whether or not you've established any internal quantitative or qualitative kinds of measures for the effectiveness of the relationships. It's not that we're saying that we want any of them to end. In fact, the theory sounds really good, but shouldn't we be trying to determine what sort of an impact they have on our economy, political relations, and culture? You talked about tremendous potential market opportunities, but I'm looking for something that's a little more outcome based with measurements linked to specific programs and long-term strategies, more in line with what the Auditor General has been asking generally in all of his comments on departments. Twinning is great. If it's just a PR exercise, tell us, but if we've got something measurable and quantifiable, I'd like to know.

MR. JONSON: Mr. Chairman, we will provide a detailed response to the hon. member's question, but I would like to make, I think, a couple of comments by way of answer. First of all, we do very carefully assess our twinning arrangements, our initiatives that we support through other departments and through government generally. Yes, we can provide measures or performance indicators via, for instance, the department of economic development and trade, the hon. Mr. Norris' department. That's where you would see the results or the statistics that are quantifiable. We look towards, for instance, China and Japan as key trading partners with a tremendous amount of potential, and that's one of the outcomes that we plan to achieve there.

The main point that I wanted to get to is that another goal of our missions and our twinning arrangements and so forth is to also help with the very basic matter of developing good democratic institutions and the democratic process on a workable basis, both politically and administratively in some countries. That is why we have worked with the funding of CIDA to have our project going in Mpumalanga. It is why we are planning to put more priority on Ukraine in terms of both the whole area of trade and also the area of being supportive, assisting with the governance change. So those are two examples of the different kinds of goals we might be pursuing. We'll answer the more detailed part of your question.

MS CARLSON: I very much appreciate that answer.

Still on the international markets, under goal 2, I would like to do some more follow-up. We wrote to the minister asking about the role and ministerial responsibility for trade offices back in February, and I don't think I've received an answer. I can't find one anywhere. So we'd like to repeat the question if we can. The question then was if you could advise us why the trade offices fall under Economic Development and not your ministry. I'm just trying to understand the relationships between the ministries. I see you as a more umbrella kind of ministry, providing support to other ministries, so particularly in that regard I think that trade offices, because they cover a number of jurisdictions, might also fall under your department rather than Economic Development. If you could give us some background on how the decision was made to put them under Economic Development and when that happened. To me it seems that their very nature should be the responsibility, then, of your department. You're already responsible for trade policy, and it would seem natural that the trade offices would be a part of that. So there's some piece there that I'm missing.

When we think about the number of trade missions that there were in the past year – and you've talked about your input in terms of organizing them – we see a number of ministers going as well as the Premier but not you. It seems unusual that you wouldn't have gone specifically to Texas and California and then on to Japan and China and Russia and Europe, because while economic and business matters were the main focus, trade policy is one of your key sections. So we would like some information on why you don't go in these cases. You'd think we wouldn't want you to spend the money, but I think there's a real role there for a ministry such as yours to be involved in trade. So if you could talk about that.

THE CHAIR: The hon. minister. No? Okay.

MS CARLSON: Will you provide some information about that sometime in the future, on why you don't go on those ones?

MR. JONSON: Well, certainly. We undertake to answer all questions.

MS CARLSON: Okay. That's good.

MR. JONSON: Mr. Chairman, I think I indicated that we would answer all questions in writing that aren't answered orally.

MS CARLSON: Now I would like to move on to goal 3, then, where you talk about expanded Canadian internal trade liberalization, promoting the free flow of goods and services. You talked a little bit about that in your opening comments, but I'd like to focus on money for a moment if we can. Certainly one of the challenges is the difference between the ability that the province has to raise funds versus the federal government and the costs of services in jurisdictions the province is responsible for versus what the federal government is responsible for. So the same as we would ask a question in question period about where municipalities go to get the money, we see that provinces also seem to be challenged in finding the money to support everything that they're responsible for. What role does your department take in this, and specifically how does the department approach the pressure to trade off jurisdictions for financial assistance from the feds? What about trading off in provincial jurisdictions in the interest of international trade? So could you give some overall comments on that for me?

THE CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to rise to speak to the estimates of the Department of International and Intergovernmental Relations, and I appreciate the minister's presence here to answer questions and respond to points as well as the officials of his department. I'd like to thank them for their role and their work.

I think there is no government that more clearly defines the political differences between the New Democrats and the Conservatives than the one in which this department is involved. I'd just like to set out a number of those points. The ministry's business plan talks about its support of a strong Canada, and we couldn't agree more with that, Mr. Chairman. We think that that's a very essential goal and one that our party very, very strongly supports. On the other hand, what we think is also necessary is a set of policies that support a strong Canada, and that also includes policies that support a strong federal government with a role in setting national policies and national programs and in protecting Canadian independence, particularly protecting Canadian independence from American domination in a number of spheres.

It's very difficult in our view to maintain the independence of Canada in a cultural sense, in education, in health care, in any other way if in fact we become increasingly dependent on the Americans in the economic sector. The growing economic penetration of our country by the United States under the auspices of the North American free trade agreement is ultimately going to undermine, weaken, and eventually destroy true Canadian independence. So we believe that a strong federal government is essential to do that, and we believe that there should be strong national programs. In particular we would point to medicare as a national program that needs to be maintained and needs to be supported by not only the federal government but by provincial governments and all Canadians.

We certainly are in agreement with the objective of trying to force the federal government to restore the levels of funding that it had previously set when it established the medicare program across Canada. The levels of funding that the federal government now provides are simply in our view a minimum required to maintain some sort of federal control or some sort of federal influence in the health care sector. We would support any efforts by this government to get the government of Canada to restore funding for medicare programs and health care generally to the level that it undertook when it got adherence from the provinces for a national health care program.

Now, it's interesting that the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar raised the question of Senate reform. Certainly New Democrats have been one of the earliest proponents of Senate reform in the country, long before Mr. Manning and the Reform Party came along. We had the clearest, most logical, and most radical proposal for the reform of the Canadian Senate, and that is its complete abolition. That continues to be our position. It is the most useless institution that exists in this country. It is nothing but patronage writ large. It is used by this federal government, but also I might point out by the last Conservative federal government as well, as a tool of patronage and political influence that is second to none in the democratic countries of the world.

Now, I know that it's very popular to talk about a triple E Senate, an elected Senate, one that all the provinces have equality in, but I would caution against simply trying to import American democratic ideas and expecting them to work for Canada. I think that the provincial governments in the Canadian federation have sufficient power to represent very well the interests of the provinces. There is no need of a Senate, elected or otherwise, equal or otherwise, to do that. We simply ought to have a system where people are elected, a unicameral system that would represent the people based on population. I might add that our party has taken the position that we ought to have a proportional representation system in this country, and I would urge the minister and the government to consider that point of view, that would allow people to vote for the party of their choice and would apportion seats more democratically and that is based upon the percentage of seats based upon the percentage of people voting for a particular party.

We have very, very strong distortions throughout Canada with the current system, and it's evident also in this Chamber, where it's clear that the Conservative Party in the last election received I think for the first time in some time an actual majority of the votes cast, but they have significantly more representation in this Chamber than the percentage of people who actually voted for that party. Of course, we in our party are significantly underrepresented. We ought to have about three times the number of seats that we have if it was according to the percentage of people that supported our party. I think that the Liberal opposition would have a significant increase in their representation as well. Obviously, the present political system is somewhat less than democratic when it comes to representing the true wishes of the people. So I think that that's something that the government and the minister ought to consider putting forward when he talks to his friends.

AN HON. MEMBER: Maybe you should take away the Mace.

MR. MASON: The hon. member talks about the Mace. As long as you don't attempt to wield it when you lose a vote or lose a point of order, I think that we can keep the Mace. It's the Senate and the current representation by constituency that we ought to be taking a look at.

Now, I'd like to know what positions the department is taking in conversations with the federal government with respect to issues of changes to the Constitution of Canada, particularly any mention of the question of the Senate, any question of the status of the province of Quebec. I would like to know in particular on the question of health care what role the department has played in getting the referee for medicare that the Premier has been working so hard on.

Now, another area where there's a very, very marked difference between the policies of this government and the policies of our party has to do with economic relations with the United States. It's clear that this government is rushing into the embrace of the American economy without stopping to think about the consequences of doing that. While they talk about their concern about the softwood lumber, there seems to be a lack of recognition that the actual economic relationship with the United States is extremely one-sided. When it works to Canada's advantage, as it occasionally does but not nearly enough, the Americans are quick to insist that free trade go by the boards. They're the first ones, when it's to their disadvantage, to throw out all the rules and throw out all the principles that we have apparently agreed upon and punish Canada and punish Canadian businesses for being more efficient and for outcompeting American businesses. So when it comes right down to it, when it's to the advantage of the United States to be internationalist in its trade, it does so. When it's to their disadvantage, they're the first to become protectionist.

I think that the government of Alberta should be speaking up more strongly to try and do something about this. We have leverage in this province and we have leverage in Canada that should be used. It shouldn't just be lip service: oh, we'll go and litigate because the relationship isn't working out, and we still have a long way to go. I appreciate diplomatic language, Mr. Chairman, I really do, but I think that the government, starting with the Premier on down, has to be a lot stronger on the softwood lumber dispute with the United States. We need to be looking at the weapons in our arsenal to retaliate against the Americans for their one-sided and undemocratic attack on Canadian industry. I see the government just taking a backseat as if it was a routine matter. Well, it's not a routine matter, and we think that the government should get off its hind quarters and on its feet and start fighting for the softwood lumber industry in this country, in this province. We ought to be careful about extending and deepening our economic relationship and our economic dependence on the United States until there are mechanisms in place that can provide for greater protection for Canada and ensure that the economic relationship is in fact considerably more equal than it is now.

The other point that I wanted to raise is the whole question of free trade and negotiations on the GATS, GATS being the general agreement on trade in services inside the World Trade Organization. It is a very serious concern. I had conversations with and attended meetings of the Council of Canadians on this and tried to inform myself as much as I could on some of the issues around the negotiation of free trade agreements and particularly the GATS.

One of the very, very strong concerns that we have is that decisions that affect the national sovereignty of countries are made by unelected tribunals of bureaucrats who meet in private, without any public transparency around their decisions. These can have very significant effects on existing trade relationships and indeed many other things besides simply trade. It gets into the whole area of cultural industries. It gets into the kinds of structures you have for your agricultural marketing. It gets into things like your health care system and so on. For example, Canada lost the auto pact with the United States, thinking that it was protected, but it was completely taken away by tribunals, and it formed a key part of the economic relationship Canada had with the United States. The people of Canada were not consulted on that. They had no choice because the government of Canada, supported by provincial governments like this one, have negotiated away our sovereignty. They have negotiated away our sovereignty.

I'll give you an example. There's currently a case – I don't know if it's been resolved in the last couple of months – brought by one of the big American courier companies complaining that our national postal system, Canada Post, is unfair competition to their right to come into this country and do business, give parcels and letters and so on. Now, there are probably lots of people in this Assembly who think that that's just fine. Well, I happen to think that we have a right as a country to establish our national institutions and that they ought not to be torpedoed by unelected bureaucrats sitting somewhere with no public accountability. The effect of these trade deals on Canadian sovereignty is very severe and potentially devastating to our whole structure of national institutions. I'd like to know from the minister if they are having any input from or participation with the federal government with respect to Canada's position on negotiating the GATS, and I would particularly like to know if the government is raising questions like protecting municipal water systems from offshore private competition.

What is being done to ensure that allowing private health care in this province – and particularly private health care has been raised by the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, the leader of our party, on the Calgary organization that's setting up a private authorized surgical overnight facility and whether or not there is any risk to our health care system wherein we would have to allow American health care companies into this province in an unlimited way as a result of the things that the government did or didn't do with respect to foreign ownership of HRC.

I'd like to know about whether or not the government is talking to the federal government about our position on genetically engineered food and whether or not we will be required to allow any genetically engineered food or agriculture products, seeds and so on, into this province and give up the right to have some say over that.

American educational institutions: whether or not there are any steps being taken to protect Alberta from the incursion of private educational institutions from the United States.

Whether or not it's of any concern to the government whether or not we should be permitted to refuse to do business with countries that have a very bad human rights record. That's one of the things that may in fact be on the table in those discussions. I think it's very important that we retain the right to make judgments about countries' human rights records before we do business with them.

Those are my comments and questions, Mr. Chairman. I think it's probably fair to say that the perspective of the New Democratic Party is strongly at variance with the Progressive Conservative Party on many of these questions. Nevertheless, I would be very interested in the minister's response to all or part of my concerns and any of the questions that I've raised which he feels he can answer.

Thank you.

MR. JONSON: Mr. Chairman, I would like to acknowledge the wide-ranging description of New Democratic Party philosophy and policy. While I could elaborate at some length on the differences between that particular political philosophy and that of the Progressive Conservative Party of Alberta, I will not. I think there were, among the various philosophical proposals put forward, two or three things I'd just like to focus on very quickly.

As the IIR department we recognize that we have a constitutional democracy in Canada, which is established under a constitution, and we work on that basis. For instance, if we take the example that was used with respect to health care, if the hon. member wishes to check, he will find that in sections 91 and 92 of the BNA Act there is quite clear reference to the division of powers and to the fact that health care comes under the jurisdiction of the provinces. That is the context within which we work, Mr. Chairman, in terms of our overall policies. I think the success of the government in this province and the fact that we have such a great country of Canada is the fact that as imperfect as it might be in the eyes of many people or specific people or parties, it has and is still working. Not that it can't be improved, but right now we are not in the position, certainly not as a department, where we are promoting constitutional change. We are working within the context of the Alberta and Canadian structures that do exist for the benefit of this province, and we also feel it follows from that that this will be of overall benefit to Canadians.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. We just have a few more questions that we'll put on the record and then look forward to the minister's answers at some time in the future. I'd like to talk about the cross-ministry initiatives for a moment. You talk about four priority policy cross-ministry initiatives, and we would like you to provide some more information on the children and youth initiative and the health sustainability initiative. What we would like specifically to know is the role that IRR plays in them. Are you coordinating policy or also providing input and alternatives and policy options?

Then under the heading of Maintenance Initiatives the department mentions "Alberta's International Strategy." Can you tell us what that is specifically? We'd like its vision and its goal and the plans for its achievement and how you're benchmarking success there.

Also, you're responsible for the Ministerial Task Force on Security. We don't see a line item for the cost of this in the budget. Can you tell us how much has been spent so far since 9-11 and how much more is expected to be spent? How long do you expect it to exist for, and are there some defined goals and an expected time line for achieving them? We've certainly felt the effects of the Solicitor General's efforts in the Assembly, but what is your ministry doing in that regard?

Then in terms of the international governance office we would like to know what deadlines there are for posting reports on trips abroad. We seem to have some problems in getting access to them.

So with those questions, Mr. Chairman, we would conclude our remarks and call for the question.

THE CHAIR: Are you ready for the question on the estimates of International and Intergovernmental Relations?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

Amendment Act, 2002

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

MR. MASKELL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move second reading of Bill Pr. 1, Synod of the Diocese of Edmonton Amendment Act, 2002.

Just before I continue, I want to explain what the Diocese of Edmonton is in terms of geography, because there was some question: is it the city of Edmonton? There are three dioceses in Alberta: the Calgary diocese, southern Alberta; the Edmonton diocese, which is central Alberta; and the Athabasca diocese in the north.

The bill has three parts in it. There will be a name change from the Church of England to the Anglican Church. The changes also will make the act gender-neutral. Finally, the trust funds of the Synod of the Diocese of Edmonton "shall be invested in accordance with sections 3 to 8 of the Trustee Act as amended from time to time."

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill Pr. 1 read a second time]

[Adjourned debate April 17: Mr. Cardinal]

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to speak to Bill 24, the Child Welfare Amendment Act, 2002 (No. 2). It's rather a deceiving piece of legislation. It's rather brief. It amounts to only a few lines in substance, but I think the impact of the bill is very important, and the premises that the bill is built upon I think are very, very questionable.

I think the history of Bill 24 is worth recounting at this stage of the examination of the bill as we try to look at the principles that are important. The Child Welfare Act contains a provision that requires the filing of a case plan by the director of child welfare within 30 days of a guardianship order being granted by the court regarding a child. So the director of child welfare or the department is obligated to put forward a care plan, a plan that says: "We need a temporary guardianship order. This is what we intend to do in terms of returning the youngster to his or her family. This is how we're going to ensure that the youngster is safe and secure. These are the actions that we believe must be taken and that we're going to help expedite in terms of getting that youngster back to his or her home or placement." The plan outlines, as I said, the care of the child and the services that the family will draw upon during the time that the child is in the care of the director in the order.

Now, that provision aside, case plans were frequently not filed. They just were not filed. In November of 1999 the Provincial Court dismissed an application made by the director to review a temporary guardianship order where a case plan had not been filed and replace it with a permanent guardianship order. A later decision stated that rather than review the existing order, the director had to make a direct application for permanent guardianship without relying on the finding that a child was in need of protective services under the temporary guardianship order. So the act allows the director also to proceed with an application to keep children in care, but the onus would be higher: to prove the need for a permanent order where a case plan had not been filed. What the court said was that there are provisions in the act to gain permanent guardianship orders, but if you don't file a case plan with the TGO, the temporary order, then the bar is going to be higher for you when you try to make your case.

The decision to allow the direct applications to proceed was appealed by parents of two families that were in similar situations, and the Court of Queen's Bench determined that the director could proceed with the applications for permanent orders as an alternative process that was permitted by the act. The parents again appealed, and that case was heard by the Court of Appeal on September 7, 2001, and the director argued that the problem had now been fixed and that the case plans were being filed. Again in March 2002 the Court of Appeal's reasons were released. The court dismissed the parents' appeal, noting that the director could proceed with applications for permanent guardianship orders using the alternative procedure that's available to the director. However, the court also stated that the failure to file a case plan within 30 days, as set out by the act, would result in those temporary guardianship orders affected being void.

What happened was that a whole number of cases – the number is approximately 600 – where care plans had not been filed were going to be made void by the courts. The director of child welfare applied on March 22, 2002, to the Court of Appeal to suspend the operation of that judgment. So the director went back to the court and said: this is going to make all of these orders invalid; we're going to have 600 children or youth where the orders have been nullified; will you please delay it? I think the delay they asked for was until the beginning of December of this year.

The application was heard on April 3, 2002, and counsel for the director argued that an additional nine months should be provided to comply with the legislation. In part this was requested because the director had identified approximately 600 existing temporary orders in which case plans had not been filed, as the law required. Counsels for the parents argued that the director had time since the initial decision in 1999 to ensure that they were complying with the law and filing case plans. In addition, the families that were affected by these orders would have no notice that the director had not complied with the law in dealing with their children, and the Court of Appeal reserved its decision.

It gets a little convoluted, Mr. Speaker. On April 15 of this year the government introduced the legislation that we have before us this evening to amend the provisions of the current Child Welfare Act. This act specifically states that failure to file a case plan no longer invalidates the temporary guardianship order in question. What they're attempting to do with this act is to retroactively take care of the 600 case plans that were not filed, as they should have been, in the court. Rather, such orders made before February 21, 2002, are deemed to be valid from the date they are granted regardless of the court's decision on the filing of a plan.

So it doesn't matter what the court says. By this act we're going to say that they have been filed or that it doesn't matter. Further, a director is deemed to have complied with the legislation if a case plan is filed before or within 30 days of the coming into force of the new provisions. This would apply to all orders granted before February 21, 2002. So really what it is is a bill that is to get the government off the hook, the department in particular, for not filing those care plans for the children.

This week, on April 23, the Alberta Court of Appeal rendered its decision on the application for additional time to comply with the legislation, and the application that the government sought was denied on the basis of questions regarding the authority of the court to suspend what was the court's interpretation of existing law. In the judgment the court stated, "There has been no explanation given as to why there has been such extended and extensive non-compliance with the Act." Further, the court noted that many families affected had no notice of the defect in the orders regarding their children and that the director had ample opportunity to correct the repeated failure to file plans as required. In closing, the court stated:

These are not circumstances in which the Court ought to facilitate ongoing non-compliance by the Director with requirements that were imposed on him by the Legislature in order to address specific concerns about the care of Alberta's children.

So the courts were anything but sympathetic to the director and to the Department of Children's Services.

If I can go back further, Mr. Speaker, the history of the child care plans arose out of a judgment – I believe it was in the mid-80s – by Cavanagh. I'm sorry; I don't know the details. It was a recommendation that arose and was adopted by the government. That recommendation was that with every temporary guardianship order there would be a care plan submitted to the court. At that time, it was seen as a remedy to a problem that existed. It's in legislation. It's part of the act. It's part of what the government agreed to. It seems quite incredible that we have reached this particular point and the plans have been treated in such a cavalier fashion by the department. One has to ask why. Why would the plans, which point to the direction and the kinds of remedies and the kinds of services that a child is going to receive while in temporary guardianship, be dismissed as nonessential? Why did it become practice – it must have become practice – not to routinely file them? Why did that happen?

There are other documents that try to give some of the reasons. One of the reasons put forward is that there are inadequate resources in the department, that with the many demands on the department and their personnel this piece of paperwork fell by the wayside, and that may be true. Nevertheless, it is a legal requirement and one that's been ignored. We don't have any assurance. For instance, if you look at the Children's Advocate report, where some of the children there, some of the youth there didn't even know that a plan existed for their cases, you wonder if there really were plans prepared for the children in question.

In sort of trying to bring it all together, Mr. Speaker, it's been a real, real failure by the department to follow the legislation, their own legislation, and then to come to the Legislature with this amendment, which in essence says: "Well, you know, let's just forget about it. We'll say that they all were filed or that it doesn't matter." I think it's too important for that to happen. It talks about how families can look to the government for assurance that the children that they take into their care are going to be dealt with.

For families it has to be very distressing, because of all people they would be interested in being part of or at least knowing the details of what was being planned by the department for their children. I think it's really an unfortunate set of events that brings us to what we have today. I'm not quite sure what the solution is, but I don't think the solution is Bill 24 and the kinds of amendments that are included in Bill 24. It seems almost incredible that it would be here.

It also, I think, is a piece of legislation that is wide open to challenge should it be passed by the Legislature. I would make a plea to the minister and to the department to take a look at the situation and review the legislation we have in front of us and to ascertain if there aren't alternate actions that could be taken that just don't nullify and walk away from the problem the way that Bill 24 does. I'm not sure how much more I could say about it.

There's a great deal of information, Mr. Speaker. There are a couple of court cases. In one case the department went in front of the courts and said: yes, we'll be in compliance, there will be care plans provided for all children, and they'll be filed with the courts. In the next case they come back and present an affidavit saying: well, no, we aren't in compliance, and we don't think we can be. I'm not sure of the wording of it but a reversal of what they had done in the first case. To say that it was mishandled I think is a real understatement. One of the judge's comments was that there's no assurance even from the department that their plans will be filed in the future. They haven't even gone to that extent, that they're going to promise in the future that their plans will be filed. So it's a very unsatisfactory state of affairs.

There's got to be a better solution than Bill 24, and I would strongly, strongly urge the minister to rethink this before we get too much further along in the legislation and consideration of the kinds of things that are included in Bill 24, including retroactive legislation. We know that the government has little stomach for that kind of legislation, has had some experiences in the past, and they haven't all been positive. But more importantly I think the obligation is to put in place care plans that youngsters deserve and that were seen as a remedy for problems that plagued the system in the past.

I think with those comments, Mr. Speaker, I'll conclude. Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In reviewing Bill 24, one would have to certainly be concerned about children that are receiving temporary care. Now, there has been not only during this session but in past sessions as well considerable concern regarding the Child Welfare Act, and all that is noted in Hansard not only for members of this Assembly but for Albertans.

When one considers exactly what has happened here – and I believe the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods stated that there are over 600 files that may be affected by this. In light of what has gone on in the past, whether it's in Grande Prairie or whether it's the unfortunate case that occurred this past winter in Slave Lake and ended in disaster in Thunder Bay, this, for this hon. member, raises a lot of questions regarding the entire child welfare system. Why would the ministry loosen the requirements for directors who are taking guardianship of children, Mr. Speaker? Again, why is the government enabling directors to not simply bother filing a plan for the care of a child? This plan, I'm going to talk about that in a minute. The plan for the care of the child is quite important, and it's recognized as quite important. I just don't understand how these 600-plus files possibly could have been missed.

Now, why again has the ministry made this rule applicable only to the temporary guardianship orders made prior to the 21st of February? Is it because there were a number of temporary guardianship orders made before this date that do not fulfill the requirement? [interjection] Six hundred files. Perhaps there are a lot more. If the hon. Minister of Justice wants to participate in the debate this evening, I certainly would welcome his view on this issue.

Whenever we think that the government is permitting the late filing of plans of care for children – again there's this large number of files, as has been reported. When we look at this plan of care, we should consider the statement of – I believe it is a matter that was discussed in provincial court, and the judge in question would be Judge Franklin. Judge Franklin stated:

Guardians and children have a right to know that after the Temporary Guardianship Order is made, the Director has committed to the provision of services geared to the return of the child to the home. Guardians are entitled to have some input into the services which will be provided. Guardians may approach the subject differently before an application for temporary guardianship, than after one has been granted.

Now, to file a plan of care was determined to be substantive. In what way would there be requirements of the act? With the Child Welfare Act there are many matters that have to be considered. Mr. Speaker, the family is described as the basic unit of society and its well-being should be supported and preserved;

(b) the interests of a child should be recognized and protected;

(c) the family has the right to the least invasion of its privacy and interference with its freedoms that is compatible with its own interest, the interest of the individual family members and [of course] society.

Now, given that and given the fact that the family is responsible for the care and supervision of its children and every child should have an opportunity to be a wanted and valued member of the family and, to that end

(i) if protective services are necessary to assist the family in providing for the care of a child, those services should be supplied to the family insofar as it is reasonably practicable to do so in order to support the family unit and to prevent the need to remove the child from the family.

These are very important.

However, Mr. Speaker, “any decision concerning the removal of a child from the child’s family should take into account”

(i) the benefits to the child of maintaining, wherever possible, the child’s . . . cultural, social, and religious heritage,

(ii) the benefits to the child of stability and continuity of care and relationships,

(iii) the risks to the child if the child remains with the family, is removed from the family or is returned to the family, and

(iv) the merits of allowing the child to remain with the family compared to the merits of removing the child from the family.

Now, if there is to be a TGO, a temporary guardianship order, the director may apply – and this is under section 29 – in the prescribed form for a temporary guardianship order. The criteria here: naturally “the child is in need of protective services” and “the survival, security or development of the child cannot be adequately protected” if the child remains with this guardian, but it cannot be anticipated that within a reasonable time the child may be returned to the custody of his or her guardian.

Now, when is the plan going to the written plan of care? Certainly written plans of care that are designed to assist children, whether this child in this case is temporarily in the system – this Assembly has dealt with this matter before. It is my interpretation that it was certainly in favour of providing plans of care, and it should be noted that even the temporary removal of a child from a family is a severe invasion of rights which should be tempered by a plan showing how the state will care for the child and what the family must do to regain custody.

That cannot be emphasized enough, Mr. Speaker.

Now, it goes on to say:

A statutory caseplan, which is a court document, not merely an administrative document compiled by the child welfare authorities for their internal use only, is intended to ensure that there is an articulated caseplan in place and that everyone affected by it, including the child’s own guardians, and the children if of a sufficient age, is aware of its contents. It is to be filed with the court, which is in effect its publication to the limited audience, the court and the parties to the case, who are entitled to the record.

Here we are, and it has been summed up very well by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods. It is viewed that the requirement for a plan is an important tool in advancing the purpose of the act. Now, why wasn’t this done? Certainly if there was no plan for care – and in this case it has to do with the temporary guardianship orders.

In conclusion, in light of this bill I again would have to express a lot of doubt about the specific management of this department. Mr. Speaker, this bill, Bill 24, is trying to validate temporary guardianship orders made before February 21. Regardless of whether there’s one or whether there are 600 or 640 at February 21 of this year, even those that failed to include a plan for the care of a child, it’s unacceptable. It’s certainly been outlined in court decisions, regardless of the level of court and regardless of the age of the child that’s involved.

To look at this legislation, it is unfortunately a snapshot of our child welfare system in this province at this time, and I am astonished at this. I would encourage the hon. minister and members of this House to work diligently to try to improve that system, not only for the children but for the parents, for entire families, for the grandparents even, who have at many times expressed a great deal of frustration with this entire system. This act certainly does not provide this member with any confidence in that system, unfortunately.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I’m quite happy to be able to speak to Bill 24, the Child Welfare Amendment Act, 2002 (No. 2) this evening. However, I’m not quite so happy at the way this bill was presented to us by the minister and by other people in her department and with the subsequent feedback that we got from other parties when we went to check the bill out. It’s been the habit of this session particularly to move through bills at second reading particularly quickly and often at third reading if it looks like there’s nothing really substantive jumping out at us in the legislation.

At first glance this bill didn’t look like too much. It’s a one-page bill really. Our critic for Children’s Services and child welfare in particular, the Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, was in contact with the minister about this particular bill. She went to some lengths to walk over here in the Assembly and speak to him about it, saying: don’t worry; don’t worry; it’s just a very small kind of bill, just changes the temporary guardianship orders; it’s no big deal; it’s housekeeping; we can just pass it through the Assembly quite quickly. We were quite prepared to do that and had made arrangements to do so. Then, lo and behold, we start to hear from family law lawyers who have been dealing with this issue for any number of years. They found out that the bill was coming up for debate and were quite concerned that it should get speedy passage through this Assembly, Mr. Speaker, for some of the reasons we have already heard from my hon. colleagues this evening. I certainly want to add my voice to their particular concerns.

We’ve seen in this session particularly that child welfare is a huge issue in this province. It would be our position that that department is not well run at this time, that it is quite likely underfunded, undermanaged, and that children are underrepresented, Mr. Speaker. This bill just takes us another step on that path in terms of the underrepresentation of children, particularly those children who need to be in care for whatever reasons.

I find that particularly offensive, that when this government decides to take responsibility for children – I think they do so weighing the considerable costs that are associated with taking a child into care. I’m not talking about financial cost in this regard; I’m talking about the impact on the child of those kinds of changes. It’s unfortunate that when they weigh all those costs and decide to go forward with taking children into care, they aren’t prepared to do the follow-up, and that’s what this bill specifically speaks to.

government to put itself above the law, and we see that specifically outlined in the bill on page 1. So in second reading, when we speak to the principle of the bill, I have to say that I am fundamentally opposed to the principle of this particular bill, which is to put itself above the law. Why do they do that? How do they do that? The government is introducing this bill because it has failed to ensure that its own laws are followed.

My colleague from Edmonton-Mill Woods led us through the historical chronology of what has happened on this bill and the inability for whatever reason – staff shortages, funding shortages, inability to complete the plans for care, inability to have the staff that are trained to put the plans in place, inability to recognize that those plans are necessary – for these children that are being taken into care to be able to maximize their potential down the road. Any or all of those reasons contribute to why we see this bill before us this evening, and I want the minister responsible for this to stand in this Assembly and explain why these duties have been neglected. I don't want to see a fast passage of this bill through this Assembly. I want her to stand here and tell us why these plans for care were not filed. Were not filed on how many cases, Mr. Speaker? Over 600 cases. Over 600 cases of children taken into care in this province where this government completely disregarded the law and refused to or could not or would not put plans for care into place, and that is an abysmal record.

We're talking about children who are fragile, children who have had huge negative impacts on their lives. Who do they turn to? The government. Who lets them down? The government. This is basically these children's last resort to get into a system that will help prepare them for the world and even allow them to grow up in a safe and friendly environment, and the government deliberately fails to follow through on a step that they not only committed to do but that they were ordered to do by the courts.

So, Mr. Speaker, what do we see them doing now? Trying to weasel their way out of that commitment. How does that happen when we see section 31(3) of the Child Welfare Act requiring that a plan for care be filed within 30 days after a child is put under temporary guardianship order? Then this plan sets out what services are to be provided for the child and also very importantly how the child is to be reunited with his or her family.

Now, for all of us who have worked with children who are in care for whatever reason, we know that what the child really wants is to be reunited with their family. What do we want as a society? For those children to be in a safe and loving environment that they can grow in. So how do you take these kids who have been taken away from their families, obviously for serious reasons, and take them through that transition phase and then reunite them with their families if you don't have a plan? That's exactly what the government has failed to provide. Even worse than failing to provide that in all of these cases, Mr. Speaker, what we're talking about is that they're now going to introduce a bill that says that they are above the law and they don't have to go back and file those plans. That is quite shocking, to see that that's happening.

What we saw on March 4 is the Court of Queen's Bench ruling that temporary guardianship orders for three children were rendered null and void due to the failure of the director of child welfare to file case plans. Three kids, no plans, even though they were directly ordered to do so. The director applied to suspend that judgment. Why? Why couldn't they just put the plans in place for these kids? What's the missing component in the department that they couldn't do that or wouldn't do it? That's a question we need to have answered before this bill can pass; that's for sure.

On April 3 the court heard the application. On April 23 the application was overturned, and the original decision to overturn the temporary guardianship orders held. And good for the courts, to have done so.

So what do we see on today's date, Mr. Speaker? We see the introduction of a bill that will say: "Oh, well, that's all in the past and it doesn't matter anymore. We don't have to provide those plans. We get a clean slate, and we can just do what we want." This government knows that this particular ruling is just the tip of the iceberg in this case. That failure to file case plans has invalidated two temporary guardianship orders so far. There are potentially 600 additional children whose situations could cause the government legal embarrassment, and they should be embarrassed. Not only embarrassed; they should be ashamed of their behaviour in this regard, and we expect some accountability on this particular issue.

That's why we saw this bill introduced on April 15, and now today we see it up for debate the first time. Had we not got the heads-up on this issue very early this morning from lawyers in this city, it would have passed very quickly through this Assembly because we would've taken the minister's word for it that this was just a minor bill that didn't have any serious consequences. In fact, for those 600 children and for children in the future it has significant consequences, Mr. Speaker, significant consequences that could affect them for the rest of their lives.

If this is passed, this bill will legalize all temporary guardianship orders made before February 21 even if no case plan was filed. So this has the government trying to put themselves above the law and in fact above the very law that they put it.

If we take a look at what it says here, in section 2 the following is added after section 31:

Temporary guardianship orders valid

31.1(1) Despite any decision of any court, a temporary guardianship order for which a plan for the care of the child has not been filed in accordance with section 31(3) is deemed to be valid from the date the order was made.

This government has the nerve to say "despite any decision by any court." What gives them the right to put themselves above court decisions? I think that's a question that we need answered.

Then they also talk about late filing of plans.

31.2(1) Despite section 31(3), if a director files with the Court a plan for the care of a child before or within 30 days after the coming into force of this section, the director is deemed to have filed the plan in accordance with section 31(3).

In part (2) of that "subsection (1) applies only to plans filed in respect of temporary guardianship orders made before February 21, 2002."

So this is probably the most shameful bill I've seen in this Assembly, Mr. Speaker, and I expect the minister to explain to us why she thinks she can get away with this.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, you've been recognized. Do you wish to speak?

MR. MASON: Well, I was going to ask the hon. member some questions. Are we still doing that?

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Yes, we are, hon. member. We've had the two speakers; haven't we? Yes, Edmonton-Highlands, on the questions.

MR. MASON: I would like to ask the hon. member if she could outline for us in a little bit more detail what the government ought to have done and what kinds of things the government should be doing in order to show that it is clearly accountable for its actions.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am certainly happy to respond to that particular question. Clearly what the government should have done is kept with the letter of the law and filed the plans for the care of these children. What happens to these kids in the time that they have been taken out of the families and then how they get reintroduced and how in many cases, as is required, they are monitored for whatever time is required for them to be fully integrated in a safe manner is significant, Mr. Speaker. So that's what the government should have done for all of these 600 kids.

What they also have to do is ensure that there are plans for all of those kids right now. So all 600 outstanding, the ones that they went to court on to have the plans suspended, they all need to be put in place immediately, whatever resources it takes. This government is going to be facing a billion dollar surplus this year. Spend some money on kids, where they should be spending money.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to follow up and ask the hon. member another question. You know, the hon. member certainly knows how to play slow-pitch when it comes to question period, but I would like to ask the hon. member if she doesn't think that the government has actually broken the law. Shouldn't there be some consequences for the government breaking the law?

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you for that question. Certainly I do believe that the government has broken the law in this particular instance and that there should clearly be consequences, and I'm sure that that's going to be the subject of debate for some time.

It was interesting to see that the Minister of Human Resources and Employment said: let's give her another hammer so she can hit us over the head again. You know, if that's what it takes to get them to listen, then that's what we're going to have to do, Mr. Speaker. I would like him to also stand up and answer a question for us or make a comment now, if he would, because he's also allowed to do that during this question-and-answer period, and tell us if he's got it yet and if he will go to the minister and lobby for the proper resources to be put in place so that these plans can be put in place and so that these children, who are, as the minister would often say, the most fragile children in the province, are given some support from the government, which is where they expect to get that support.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to ask the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie if she feels that there is a connection between the government not preparing or filing the care plans for the children and some of the very, very tragic circumstances that have transpired in this department.

MS CARLSON: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think that's a very interesting question. My gut reaction to that would be . . . [interjections] Well, isn't that what I hear you guys say? Let it be recorded that there's a lot of laughter in the Assembly right now, Mr. Speaker. [interjection] I don't think I need more practice, because I'm quite prepared to answer the questions in an honest and open fashion, so while the minister of health would like to enter into this debate by heckling and not necessarily by legitimately responding to the bill, I am quite legitimately responding to the questions from my colleague.

Definitely, my gut reaction is that there could be some link, and certainly I would hope that inquiries into the recent deaths of children in this province would address that point. I don't know at this particular stage whether or not there were case plans that were supposed to have been filed for those children in care that have recently died, but I'm sure there were. [interjections] It really is appalling that the front bench is so amused at this particular exchange.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: We're out of time on the questions.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands now giving his speech.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate that, and I'm very pleased to stand here and talk about Bill 24, such a short bill. It's so short, yet it is so full of irony and so full of pathos and so full of a lot of things.

Mr. Speaker, I want to concur with some of the hon. members who have spoken about this bill that it is in fact a retroactive attempt to make legal a serious omission on the part of the Department of Children's Services and the minister and the ministers that may have been involved before the current minister took that position. I think that it's a tragedy.

Before I continue on this bill, I want to indicate that I think that given the importance of this issue and many of the things that have happened, the tragic events that have happened around Children's Services in the last period of time – even in the time that this session of the Legislature has been sitting, there have been a number of cases and some real tragedies, and for every tragedy there must be dozens and dozens of cases that don't get that far but involve real long-term harm to the child.

So I'm concerned, as we're dealing with this bill and the opposition members have spoken one after another, that there hasn't been participation on this bill from the government side. I really wouldn't want to draw the wrong conclusion from that, Mr. Speaker, but some might draw the conclusion that the government would just like to expedite the bill in order to really quickly and tidily deal with a fairly serious problem, not just a problem of the government and its accountability but a problem that affects the most vulnerable members of our society.

So I would really hope that we would get some participation from the government side on this bill and that the question of the failure of the government to act in accordance with its own laws could be adequately explained not just to us in the opposition but to all members and to all citizens of Alberta. That's really something that I think is very consistent with the principle of ministerial accountability, which is a very, very important part of our democratic tradition, an essential part of our democratic tradition and one that I think we ignore at our peril.

Now, this act validates the temporary guardianship orders which were made before February 21, 2002, even those that failed to include a plan for the care of the child, and it validates the temporary guardianship orders for which the plan of care was filed too late. So I think that there are a number of things that the government should respond to. For example, why would the government loosen the requirements for directors who are taking the guardianship of children? Why is the government enabling directors to not bother filing a plan for the care of the child? Why has the ministry made this rule applicable only to temporary guardianship orders made prior to February 21, 2002? Is it because there were a number of temporary guardianship orders made before this date that do not fulfill the requirement of having a plan for the care of the child?

Now, in 31.1(2) it says that subsection (1) applies only to plans filed in respect of "temporary guardianship orders made before February 21, 2002." Why is the government permitting the late filing of plans of care for children? Is it simply because a large number of these plans haven't yet been filed? If that's the case, this bill is simply covering up for work that hasn't been done either because child welfare workers are too busy to do it or because the ministry hasn't enforced its own policies.

Mr. Speaker, I think that the government owes the children in its care more than Bill 24. It owes them a fuller explanation of what's gone wrong, what the government plans to do about it, and it owes them the resources to provide adequately for their needs in order to prevent the kinds of tragedies that are becoming far, far too commonplace. One tragedy involving a child in government care is one too many, and I think that the quick and dirty response to this issue by this government through Bill 24, that's now before us, is not adequate. It's not an adequate response, and the people of Alberta deserve a better answer. In fact, the children of Alberta deserve a comprehensive solution to the problems that have plagued the department.

Bill 24 does not offer that, Mr. Speaker, so in all good conscience I cannot stand here in the house and support it, and I hope that other members opposite will have the courage and the conviction to do the same.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Justice.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Before we conclude debate on second reading of this bill, I think it is appropriate to respond to and address some of the issues that have been raised tonight by members opposite. It's not often in this House, I say – and obviously that's an opinion – that a bill is brought forward which affords the opposition an opportunity and a platform to criticize with some degree of value what's happening in government. The Child Welfare Amendment Act, 2002 (No. 2) is clearly an act which is being brought forward to correct a problem. That's clear on the face of it. We make no bones about it; there is a problem.

The problem is that in a recent court case it was determined in a situation where there was a temporary guardianship order under the Child Welfare Act, section 31, where there had been a temporary guardianship order and a plan not filed, as required under subsection (4), that that temporary guardianship order was null and void. As a result of that ruling, there are a number of cases in this province of children who have been apprehended under a temporary guardianship order in which the status of those children and the status of the orders and the renewals of the orders and the ongoing treatment plans and those sorts of situations are unclear at best.

In considering how to best deal with a very unfortunate circumstance where the practice for whatever reason has developed so that in a number of cases those orders were not filed within the 30-day time frame, for whatever reason we arrived at that stage – and I do anticipate that the minister will speak to that at some time during debate in third reading – we now are in a position where we have a number of situations where temporary guardianships have been outstanding, and the problem exists as to what you do about it. You cannot necessarily go back and fix it just by filing a plan. Clearly that's not available to the child welfare authorities and the workers to fix that problem, but the problem does need to be fixed because there are children in need of care.

So in considering how to fix that, then, the next best thing is to go back and say: okay; there was a problem; that problem is going to be corrected. I heard a number of members opposite refer to: why February 21, 2002? Well, obviously, you're not going to say that forever going forward, the provisions of section 31 can be ignored and that those orders don't need to be filed. Obviously, those orders need to be filed. The treatment plans need to be filed. So it's absolutely essential to keep that section in there to make sure that the people who are dealing with this issue and with these children are doing it on an appropriate basis as we go forward, but we also have to deal with the problems that exist and fix those problems.

Many of the comments that have been made may well be valid in terms of a situation as to whether we should be in the position we're in or not, but the reality is that we're in the position. Those children do need to be in care, the orders do need to be valid, the ongoing program does need to be in place, and there do need to be programs filed, and in order to regularize this, we need to pass Bill 24. It's as simple as that. It may not be nice. It's been referred to as a quick fix; I don't think a quick fix is in order. But it's not simply a matter of going back and redoing all the things that were done in a number of cases over the past couple of years and saying that that will work, because it won't. You can't make perfect what hasn't happened in the past simply by doing that. So in considering what is the best way to deal with this existing problem, it's asking for this temporary fix, if you will, of the section to allow those situations to be regularized so that the children in care can continue to be dealt with in an appropriate and legal manner.

Many questions have been raised about the bill. It's a very short bill, but there's no subterfuge about what this bill is about. It's clear. It's in the public domain. There was a court case. The judge ruled that if you didn't meet with the sections of the act which provided for a treatment plan to be filed within 30 days, the temporary order was null and void, and that can't be fixed short of, in our estimation, correcting those at law that are outstanding and making sure that it doesn't happen again.

So Bill 24, while it's not the nicest piece of legislation that's come before the House and the reasons for it coming before the House are difficult, is necessary legislation, and I would ask the House to support it.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands to ask a question.

MR. MASON: Yes, please, Mr. Speaker. The minister in his comments talked about the reason for the bill, and he said that certain things had not happened that ought to have happened, to use his words, "for whatever reason." I think that one of the things we would like to know on this side is: what was the reason?

MR. HANCOCK: Well, that's not within my area of competence to detail for the hon. member. What I was trying to do tonight in debate – there were questions raised as to why the bill was coming forward and what the principles of the bill are – is that essentially I'm explaining that in terms of the principle of the bill it is to rectify a situation that can't in our estimation be rectified in any other manner. The reasons why the situation has to be rectified may well be good questions for the minister, and I'm sure the hon. member will at the appropriate time ask the minister those questions.

We will have debate on this in Committee of the Whole. We'll have debate on this in third reading. But we're in second reading. We're talking about the principle of the bill. I've been responding to issues that have been raised in debate with respect to why the bill is being brought forward, and it's very clear on the face of it. There's no subterfuge. None of the accusations that have been made about what's being hidden in this bill are in fact a reality. There's nothing being hidden in the bill. It's plain on the face of it. There's a problem that needs to be corrected. This is the best way to correct it, and it's a temporary thing with the time limitation of February 21, 2002, so as we go forward, this type of correction hopefully will not be needed.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you. I appreciate the minister's attempts to explain what had happened, but I don't think it suffices. I'd like to know from the minister what other solutions were considered and rejected and why. I think the question "Why did it happen?" is really an important question, and we need that explanation from the department. For my part I'd like to know what those other solutions were, and I still have the feeling that there must be a better way than the bill that we have before us. I realize that the minister can't answer for the Minister of Children's Services, and I'll await the opportunity for her to respond.

MR. HANCOCK: Well, I think the hon. member asks some important questions about what the other options were. I will just say very briefly that the options have been reviewed, and if there were ways that could be followed prudently and reasonably to put back in place the temporary guardianship orders and to deal with these on an ongoing manner short of bringing forward legislation, I can assure you that would have been my recommendation. But having reviewed the legalities of the matter, we could not be certain that any other way of fixing the problem would in fact fix the problem, would not be subject to additional challenge, and that's not in the best interests of the children being served. For whatever reason this problem exists, the resources that are available are best served going directly to the children, not dealing with court actions to try and fix the problems or try and determine whether the fix is an appropriate fix. So having examined the options, it makes sense to recognize that there was a problem, to fix the problem at law, and to move forward and make sure it doesn't happen again.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: I think, hon. members, that's the end of the questions. Oh, that's the end of his. All right, then. I've got two people. Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by Edmonton-Highlands.

MS CARLSON: Mr. Minister, will you postpone the vote at second reading until we get some answers from the minister on the outstanding questions?

MR. HANCOCK: No, Mr. Speaker. There are lots of questions and time for questions and answers in Committee of the Whole and a good opportunity for back-and-forth in Committee of the Whole and going over the detail of the bill. I think that the House will be afforded the time to do that, and those are appropriate questions to be asked.

I might note that many of the answers are already in the comments on second reading in the opening debate, where it was clearly set out that what happened was that over a time the formality of filing the plan in many cases was not followed even though there may have been plans in place. There was a practice built up, rightly or wrongly – and the court has determined that it's wrongly – and it needs to be fixed. We acknowledge that. So this bill will fix the practice from the past that is now determined to be inappropriate and make sure, going forward, that we deal with it appropriately.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development to close debate?

Title: Thursday, April 25, 2002

1:30 p.m.

Date: 02/04/25

[The Speaker in the chair]

THE SPEAKER: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. On this day let each of us pray in our own way for the innocent victims of violence. Life is precious. When it is lost, all of us are impacted. In a moment of silent contemplation may we now allow our thoughts to remember those taken before their time, those who have suffered through tragedies, and reach out to the families, friends, neighbours, and communities most immediately impacted. May God provide them eternal peace. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Visitors

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan.

MR. LOUGHEED: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly a guest sitting in the Speaker's gallery. She's Mrs. Sharon Shewchuk, who is residing in the constituency of Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan near Sherwood Park. Mrs. Shewchuk is the mother of Brent Shewchuk, our own head page here in the Legislature. I'd ask Mrs. Shewchuk to rise and receive the traditional welcome of the Assembly.

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, this afternoon I'm pleased to present two sets of introductions. First of all, I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly seven hardworking staff members from International and Intergovernmental Relations. They are here today taking part in one of the legislative tours for public service staff. They are Laurel Swayze, Kerrie Henson, Candice Thibault, Cynthia Tait, Helen Stiles, Rose Smallman, and Ian McMillan. I'd ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

Secondly, Mr. Speaker, I would like to welcome to the Assembly 28 students from New Norway school, located in my constituency in the fine village of New Norway. They are led by their teacher, Mr. Martinson, and accompanied by Mr. Kruse, Mrs. Mowat, Mrs. Jans, and Mrs. Captain. I would ask that they please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

MR. DUNFORD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly Michael Debolt. Michael is from Lethbridge. He is a University of Lethbridge student and is joining us here in Edmonton for summer employment. I would like you to welcome Michael Debolt. Mike, could you stand. Thank you very much.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

MR. DANYLUK: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure and an honour for me to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly two very important women in my life. Visiting today is my aunt Mary Hendren of Kelowna, B.C., who is accompanied by my daughter Robyn Danyluk. My Aunt Mary is hopeful that her presence in the gallery this afternoon will ensure that I uphold the honour of the family name, and also in this spirit I am proud to announce that this morning Robyn finished her final exam of the year in her second degree for education. If I could ask them to stand, please.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

MR. SNELGROVE: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour today to rise and introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly a group of about 50 young students. Quite differently than most, these are from all over Alberta and are taking their education through the School of Hope, which is located in Vermilion. In fact, three of the members are from the Speaker's riding, and other students are from Red Deer, Calgary, Edmonton, and Turner Valley. This enthusiastic group today is accompanied by their teachers, Ms Carla Hanf and Ms Lucia Fredette, and some helpers: Mrs. Charlotte Burns, Mr. Dele Ajele, and Mrs. Uta Wanke. I apologize completely if I've got those names screwed up. I will ask them to rise now and please accept the warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

MR. STRANG: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a great pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to the Assembly 26 great young students from Gerard Redmond school in Hinton. They are grade 5 students, and today with them they have their teacher and a group leader, Miss Dawson and Mrs. Pysar, and parents and helpers. They've got Mr. Carby, Mr. Bertwistle, Mr. Lougheed, Mrs. Handlon, Mrs. Dallaire, Mrs. Read, Mrs. Mills, and Mrs. McRorie. I'd ask them to please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

MRS. ADY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's with pleasure that I rise today to introduce to you seven members of my constituency. What makes these visitors special today is that they're all members of my Sunday school class. I'd like to introduce Nathan Oehring, Spencer Smith, my son Brent Ady, Jon Crosson, Amy Sefcik, and Stephanie Forbes, and the brave woman who brought them, Vickie Oehring. I'd like them to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today and introduce to you and through you to the House the president of the Injured Workers Coalition Society, Mr. Ralph Teed. Mr. Teed is seated in the public gallery. Mr. Teed and the Injured Workers Coalition are indeed valuable advocates for injured workers. They stand up for and offer assistance and support to injured workers and their families wherever they can. I would ask Mr. Teed to please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my privilege to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly three guests: Erich Schmidt, Peter Doering, and Jeannette Semeniuk. These three hardworking individuals were injured at work. Erich Schmidt was injured in the early 1980s. He suffers from serious physical and mental impact of the accident and ongoing severe pain. Peter Doering also had an accident at work in the early 1980s. It took the Workers' Compensation Board over a year and a half to determine that his employer had no WCB coverage. He's now 74 years old and needs a shoulder replacement as a result of his injury. Jeannette Semeniuk also had an accident in 1998, and her claim has also been denied. These workers are examples of some hundreds of injured workers in Alberta who are still waiting to receive justice, compensation, and support to lead a dignified life. These guests are seated in the members' gallery, and now I would ask them to please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, shortly I'm going to call on the hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment to participate in Ministerial Statements. Under our rules once the representative of Executive Council gives his ministerial statement, there's an opportunity for the representative of the second party in the House to also make a statement. Today I received a request – and I gather it's been discussed on an intercaucus basis – from the leader of the third party to make a brief statement as well. This will require unanimous consent of the House, so I'll ask one question. Is there any member in the Assembly opposed to the request being asked by the leader of the third party to participate? If so, please say no.

National Day of Mourning

MR. DUNFORD: Mr. Speaker, Sunday, the 28th day of April, is our National Day of Mourning for Canadian workers who have been killed or injured on the job. We honour those victims by remembering them and by renewing our commitment to safer workplaces.

Workplace fatalities and injuries in Alberta happen in disproportionate numbers to inexperienced and young workers. Half of our workplace injuries are for workers in their first year on the job, and 60 percent of workers under the age of 25 are hurt in their first six months on the job. On our National Day of Mourning we need to think about protecting the young working Albertans who truly are the future of this province. We need to think about the human cost of workplace fatalities: the mothers, fathers, wives, husbands, and children that are left behind. This will always remind us that all incidents are preventable and all incidents unacceptable.

Last year in Alberta 118 workers died on the job. Ceremonies honouring our fallen workers will be held in communities across the province. I would ask that all members of the Assembly reflect on our losses and remember that one workplace fatality is one too many. We can never be satisfied until we know that we have done everything we can to bring Alberta workers home to their families safely.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On average one Canadian worker out of 13 is injured at work. On average one Alberta worker out of 11 is injured at work. Furthermore, almost every week in Alberta there is a case of work site trauma resulting in a fatality. Those are Albertans, very often young or inexperienced workers, who die as a direct result of their work activity.

The hon. minister has taken steps to address this, and I would like to commend him at this time for those steps. He initiated a $300,000 multimedia campaign to raise awareness of safety issues on Alberta work sites. He has also indicated that his department will more vigorously pursue safety violations in the courts. That sends a powerful signal to Alberta employers to ensure that they keep to the standards established in our province. These are steps that again I would like to congratulate and commend the minister on.

However, as the minister has acknowledged, we cannot rest until we have done everything we can to avoid workplace tragedies. I would encourage the minister to focus even more attention on his 1-800 call centre concept, which explains to Alberta workers our occupational health and safety law and its regulations. This is a good idea, but I believe it suffers from bad marketing. On a visit I made recently to a work site, nobody there had ever heard of the 1-800 call centre. I would ask the minister to initiate a new awareness campaign for this, perhaps a sticker campaign. The information about the call centre should be part of safety training for all workers and a mandatory topic at on-the-job safety meetings.

So many of these workplace tragedies, Mr. Speaker, are preventable. We must all work together to reduce the tragedies and stem the horrifying trend of more and more younger workers being injured or maimed or killed. On the National Day of Mourning I join on behalf of my caucus colleagues all those families who have been affected in remembering those who have been killed or injured on the job.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On Sunday, April 28, citizens of over a hundred countries around the world will stand in solidarity with and pay tribute to those injured or killed doing their jobs. April 28 was chosen as the day of remembrance because it was on this day in 1914 in Ontario that the first comprehensive Workmen's Compensation Act received third reading. As well, in February 1991 an act respecting a day of mourning for persons killed or injured in the workplace, that called upon the Parliament of Canada to officially recognize April 28 as a day of mourning, received royal assent. This bill was put forward by NDP Member of Parliament Rod Murphy.

Workplace safety remains an important issue, Mr. Speaker. According to the International Confederation of Free Trade Unions more than 500 workers are killed at work every day around the world. In Canada two workers are killed every day. These are men and women who leave their homes each day to go to their places of employment expecting to return at the end of the day safe and sound. They give to society their talents, their skills, their sweat, and deserve in return not only an appreciation for their labours but a work site that respects them as workers by providing a danger-free work site. Our focus must remain on prevention and on making certain that our workplaces are healthy and safe, free from risk of injury, disease, and death.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Oral Question Period

THE SPEAKER: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Case Plans for Children in Care

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Case plans are vital to children who are in the government's temporary care. Case plans require that child welfare workers conduct parenting assessments. If the child remains in the home, they require a description of the service to be provided in-home. They require that the family knows how often they can visit their child, and they require that the family know what is expected of them in order for them to regain custody of their child. My questions are to the Minister of Children's Services. Am I interpreting the Child Welfare Act correctly by saying that the government considers it imperative for parents and social workers to have a description of the services to be provided in support of their children in care?

MS EVANS: That's correct.

DR. NICOL: Am I interpreting the Child Welfare Act correctly by saying that the government considers it imperative that families are told what they need to do to regain custody of their children?

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, I want to approach this answer this way. In the very first instance, when we apprehend a child and bring it into care, we do so because the child is at great risk. The child is at risk from its current provider, be they parent or guardian. We bring in those children, and we go to the courts and apply for temporary guardianship. We have in all cases got care plans prepared for the services that are rendered to the child. Sometimes those care plans are amended. In the case that has prompted us coming forward and asking for Bill 24 to be provided and passed by this House, it is imperative, given the very recent decision that rejected the appeal from our department to give us a longer stay on the validation of those orders, that for the child's protection we continue to have an uninterrupted opportunity to provide care for those children.

Today, Mr. Speaker, in light of a number of concerns that have been raised as well as concerns that I have held, the deputy has contacted the directors in every authority where there has been some question of validation and has requested the director to do two things: to look first of all at those cases which have been not consented to by the parent or guardian and look at emergency response for reapprehension and to inform all parents that this legislation is before this House, because we still have a concern for the care and protection of those children.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the minister: does Bill 24 not allow the government to skip its responsibility for providing case plans for those hundreds of children that the court was talking about?

MS EVANS: No, it doesn't, Mr. Speaker. We do have those care plans. We were not able after March 4 to file those retroactively. This piece of legislation and the commitment I provide to this House is to provide us an opportunity to validate those temporary guardianship orders, to submit those care plans, and to make sure that the child's right to be protected and the child's safety are assured and that we follow through on that behalf. Heretofore, current plans and current status of temporary guardianship, all care plans, will be filed, must be filed, and that's very clear to every member of our department.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, the purpose of question period is not to debate legislation where time is otherwise provided for.

Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Is the retroactive provision of Bill 24 to compensate for the lack of staff and resources required to prepare case plans for the hundreds of children for whom the case plans were not potentially filed?

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, in light of your previous comments, do you wish me to engage in this discussion?

Speaker's Ruling Anticipation

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, Bill 24, to my understanding, was on the agenda last evening. It was debated last evening. I understand, as well, that it passed second reading last evening. It's now into Committee of the Whole. It's on the Order Paper or will eventually come there. Opportunity is afforded at another time of the day in the Routine and the agenda for the debate of bills.

Please proceed, hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Mr. Speaker, can the minister please explain why it is important to include the retroactive provision in Bill 24?

THE SPEAKER: Briefly, hon. minister, if you would.

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, it is important because we believe that the children in care must be protected. Where it's necessary for us to issue yet another order to emergency apprehend children so that we can absolutely guarantee their protection, we will do so.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Is it the purpose of Bill 24 to allow the government to justify its failure to comply with the Child Welfare Act for these hundreds of cases?

MS EVANS: You know, Mr. Speaker, may I assure the hon. member opposite that I am as concerned about this bill and about the circumstances as he is. I give you my word: I am following up on it. I promise.

THE SPEAKER: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Day Care Policy

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Parents upset about children allegedly abused and neglected in a St. Albert day home have looked to the Minister of Children's Services for help. The minister has walked away from them, responding yesterday, "We have to make it clear and communicate buyer beware when [parents] go to day cares." My questions are to the Minister of Children's Services. Why has the minister walked away from these parents, treating concerns about their children no more than those of a used car purchase gone bad?

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, I am fascinated by the hon. member's opportunity to extrapolate one sentence from responses I gave in this House yesterday indicating that I am absolutely concerned. The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo has met to look at legislation, to look at ways that we can toughen up legislation. I was concerned when I responded yesterday for several reasons, not only because of the safety of the children but because somehow we have to find ways to assure that parents understand. That was part of the intent of putting subsidies to parents that are taking their children to day care, that we were not any longer going to provide operational subsidies to day cares themselves because we felt that it was imperative for parents to go out and thoroughly explore those issues.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I know that somebody contacted my office yesterday and gave grave concern that I was feeling that they had not done their due diligence. I did not say that. I think many of those parents were successfully hoodwinked by somebody who had obviously broken the law in a very unfortunate manner and in a way that we have had very great difficulty in following up, but we will certainly follow up on that. I did not resolve to abdicate any responsibility. In fact, we're looking not only at the legislative review process for changing and toughening it up, but we've spoken to licensing officers, the child welfare director, about ways and means that we can make sure that we spot-check what parents report in a fashion that does not allow them to skip out, if you will, or to make another arrangement so that it looks like they're doing well.

Right back to the very first, Mr. Speaker, it is always the parent's responsibility. I would never have given up responsibility for my child to do anything.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member. [some applause]

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate that welcome of my question by my colleagues.

My question is to the Minister of Children's Services. Doesn't the government have an obligation to protect all children in the province, even those in day homes?

MS EVANS: Well, Mr. Speaker, the first obligation to protect children, I would suggest, is with the mother and the father. That's the first obligation. Where other protection, where other services are provided, yes, it is this government's duty and responsibility. We undertake that with social workers, with day care providers, and with people as well as we can. We're not perfect, but we're doing our best. But, please, let's remember: it is primarily the parents.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: why are children in day cares protected in legislation while those in day homes are not?

MS EVANS: Well, Mr. Speaker, while we have rules and regulations that apply to day homes, we may well look at enshrining those further in our Child Welfare Act, but I can assure you that the families that are supported in day homes have every bit the due diligence responsibilities afforded first of all to the licensing officers and to the people that go forward and authorize or validate day homes. In this particular situation I think it should not be used or extrapolated to be a generalized attitude about day homes in this province. Many day homes are providing wonderful care for children.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Health Resource Centre

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday in the House the Minister of Health and Wellness continued to dodge questions about the HRC's application to bring American-style health care to Canada. The minister claimed that the application wasn't secret at all, that it was on the web site. My staff checked the HRC web site, the ministry's web site, the government web site, and did full Internet searches, but no such public disclosure exists, and we found nothing. After repeated calls to the minister's office his staff informed us that the minister had indeed misinformed the House. My question to the minister: rather than continuing to dodge questions about letting the American-style health care system creep into Alberta through the back door, will the minister agree to release this application today rather than avoid his responsibility to be accountable to the House?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, I take exception to the characterization that I have not been accountable to this House, and I wish to read back my exact answer, taken in complete context, in response to the hon. member's question from yesterday in the Legislature: "Mr. Speaker, I'm advised that HRC . . . has placed its application on the web site." I was advised of that. That may be erroneous, but there was no intent at all to mislead the House, and I wish him to withdraw such a characterization.

Mr. Speaker, I was advised that it was placed on the web site. It would have made sense since HRC itself had a press conference where they in fact were handing out copies of their application that they had submitted to the Department of Health and Wellness for consideration. I think that the hon. member knows that. I will undertake to contact HRC and suggest to them that they do place such application on the web site. They apparently have no disagreement with doing so, having released it through a press release, so I'm certain that they'll do that. I will advise them that that would be my suggestion to them. Perhaps that might satisfy the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is the minister's responsibility to check the correctness or accuracy of his advice, not mine.

Will the minister at least commit to seeking a legal opinion on whether or not this application will trigger NAFTA challenges, forcing Alberta to open the door to all American health corporations and HMOs? If not, why not, Minister?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, that's not part of our agenda. Our agenda is about a publicly funded health care system that has outstanding services, is affordable, is sustainable, and has great access. That is our agenda. I don't have any such intention to seek such legal opinion. We are moving forward on the agenda that we've put forth, as set out in the response tabled by this government to the recommendations set out by the Premier's Advisory Council on Health. It's an outstanding document, and it has been downloaded tens of thousands of times since its release. I think that Albertans understand what our agenda is, and they will not be persuaded by the hon. member who suggests some other sort of agenda.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What does it say about the future of Alberta's health care system when the minister in charge and his first decision on a private facility leave us open to a NAFTA challenge and an all-out American-style health care system?

MR. MAR: Well, Mr. Speaker, the purpose of question period, as you have stated on a number of occasions, is not to elicit legal opinions. Of course, nobody is asking the hon. member for his legal opinion either.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-McCall, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Temporary Guardianship Orders

MR. SHARIFF: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Under the Child Welfare Act a director makes an application in court for a temporary guardianship order if, in the opinion of the director,

- (a) the child is in need of protective services, and
- (b) the survival, security or development of the child . . .

are endangered by leaving the child in the care of the guardian. Given the recent ruling of the Court of Appeal that invalidates over 600 temporary guardianship orders across Alberta, my question is to the Minister of Children's Services, who is ultimately responsible for those 600 children. What is the minister doing to ensure the safety of these children with the cancellation of the temporary guardianship orders?

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, on April 25, when our stay application was invalidated, as I've explained already in the House this afternoon, we are going forward to each one of those directors, following through with the parents, following through on those that were most contested. We are making sure that those children are looked after, and if we feel that any children are imperiled because of somebody wishing to gain again their right to guardianship of those children, we will be acting immediately with an emergency apprehension order. They are currently still being provided in most cases due care and attention. In some circumstances we may well find that they have already been returned to their parent or guardian, but in all cases we will be assuring both the parents and Albertans of their safety.

MR. SHARIFF: Mr. Speaker, if in the minister's findings the concern is towards adequate resources being provided to child welfare workers to meet their work requirements, will the minister assure us that those resources will be made available to the child welfare workers so that they can follow the Child Welfare Act as it is today?

MS EVANS: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, followed by the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Health Care Facilities

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the Premier thought that the question we asked him, whether a hospital without an emergency ward is still a hospital, was "an interesting question." Well, that's kind of an interesting answer, because government legislation, namely Bill 11, also known as the Health Care Protection Act, indicates that a hospital without an emergency ward is in fact no longer a hospital. So let's give the government a chance to clear this up. My questions are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Given that facilities like the one in Grimshaw provide acute care, intensive care, surgery, palliative care, and a number of other procedures, would it still be considered a hospital when its emergency room is closed?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, it's not clear to me how this particular question is relevant. The real relevant question is: what services are required for a particular community? The Premier commented yesterday in the House that the proximity of Grimshaw to a brand-new facility in Peace River is quite close. So the real issue is not what we call something. The real issue is about: what services does it provide that are required by the community?

Mr. Speaker, regional health authorities, I need not remind the hon. member, are elected to do exactly that. They are elected to determine what services are required by a particular group of people within the area that they service. I'm certain that the people from the regional health authority that have responsibility for the people that live in and around the area of Grimshaw will certainly take into account the real needs of that particular community and will govern themselves accordingly by delivering the kinds of services out of Grimshaw or out of the Peace River regional hospital in a manner that is most appropriate.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Actually, words do matter, and definitions do matter.

Can the minister confirm that according to government policy, closing the emergency room at a large city hospital, say, like the Royal Alex or the Rockyview would also mean that those facilities would no longer be considered hospitals?

MR. MAR: Perhaps the hon. member knows something about the closure of an emergency room at the Royal Alex that I'm not aware of. If he does, he should share it.

MS BLAKEMAN: He's not answering the question.

DR. TAFT: He's not answering the question; is he? Well, let's try again.

Will the minister simply, then, admit that according to common sense, there is no real distinction between a for-profit, private hospital and a nonhospital surgical facility?

AN HON. MEMBER: What do you know about common sense?

MR. MAR: Well, I certainly haven't heard any yet, Mr. Speaker.

You know, what is set out in the Health Care Protection Act, Bill 11, is not about hospitals. It is about private surgical facilities. Any characterization that this member makes that they are hospitals is an incorrect characterization. The College of Physicians and Surgeons has a process by which facilities are accredited. Those facilities are accredited to provide for minor surgical procedures to be done. Major surgeries, as defined not by government but as defined by the College of Physicians and Surgeons, can only be done in public hospitals. So this characterization that the facilities laid out in the Health Care Protection Act are somehow hospitals is incorrect.

Speaker's Ruling

Oral Question Period Rules

THE SPEAKER: The chair would like to advise the hon. member for Edmonton-Riverview that he agrees entirely with the hon. member's supposition that words are important and thence would like to draw to the attention of not only this hon. member but others Beauchesne 409(3).

The question ought to seek information and, therefore, cannot be based upon a hypothesis, cannot seek an opinion, either legal or otherwise, and must not suggest its own answer, be argumentative or make representations.

The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Commercial Fisheries

REV. ABBOTT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's fish are a valuable and very popular natural resource. Recreational fishing contributes approximately $350 million to the provincial economy each year, and commercial fishing adds about $5 million annually. Recently Alberta Sustainable Resource Development announced a strategy regarding commercial fishing. My first question is to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. What led to your ministry's decision to reduce commercial fishing operations in our province?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. CARDINAL: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. That's a very good question. Part of the overall plan to rationalize both the sportfishing industry and also the commercial fishing industry is basically at the request of the Commercial Fishermen's Association of Alberta and also the Alberta Fish and Game Association and other sportfishing organizations. There are over 300,000 sport fishermen out there and also over 800 commercial fishermen competing for the quality of fish and quantity of fish we have out there. We only have over a thousand lakes that are fish-bearing lakes. Therefore, it is necessary for us to look at how we are going to rationalize the industry. You know, there's also a lot of pressure because of the population growth in Alberta. In fact, Alberta actually has the third highest fishing pressure in Canada. Therefore, we needed to move on a plan to rationalize both the sportfishing and the commercial fishing industries.

REV. ABBOTT: Mr. Speaker, my next question is to the same minister. How will reducing the number of commercial fishing operators benefit Alberta's fisheries?

MR. CARDINAL: Well, generally, like I said earlier, what we have out there is over 300,000 sport fishermen with an industry of about $350 million or so, and we also have 800 commercial fishermen, about a $5 million industry annually. What we are targeting, Mr. Speaker, at the request of the commercial fisheries and the sports fisheries, is reducing the 800 active commercial fishermen to about 200 and reducing the yardage from about 37,100 yard nets to about 18,100 yard nets so that the industry will be sustainable. At this time the commercial fishing industry is so large for the amount of fish we have in our lakes that it is not totally economically viable and very hard to manage. What this process will do is reduce it to a management level, at the same time making that commercial fisheries industry more economically viable and manageable, which in turn will have a positive impact on the sportfishing industry.

REV. ABBOTT: Mr. Speaker, my final question is also to the same minister. Given that many of my constituents don't want to give up their licences or feel that the compensation is not adequate, what can those who don't wish to give up their licences do to keep them? Will there be some kind of an appeal process?

MR. CARDINAL: Yes, Mr. Speaker, as part of the overall reduction you will see some changes in the licensing. For an example, there will be some increases in licences and a reduction in fact in a number of the commercial licences. What we are doing is not trying to negatively impact the commercial fishing industry, especially the smaller operators. What we want to do is ensure that we have processes in place to deal with any hardship we may create to the industry. Therefore, we are also establishing a hardship committee or an appeal panel that will review each case by case to ensure that we don't hurt that industry.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Forest Industry

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In October 1999 the government proudly announced two new forestry projects by Ainsworth and ABCOR. What hasn't been so proudly announced is that recently both of these projects were put on hold. It has been almost three years since the original request for proposals, and it could be another two years until we see any further actions. My questions are to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. Given that information from your department confirms that there are not enough trees to keep existing mills working at capacity, why are you still allowing these new projects to proceed?

MR. CARDINAL: Mr. Speaker, there are enough trees to sustain our forest industry in Alberta. The forest industry is a very, very important industry. It employs over 54,000 employees directly and indirectly, and no doubt a lot of the member's constituents also work in that industry. It's an $8 billion industry and very, very active. We have a policy in place that we will not harvest more than we can grow out in the forest. Therefore, to say that the industry is not sustainable, that is not true. The industry is sustainable and very active.

Now, as we move forward in calling for new projects like the hon. member mentioned, what we have to keep in mind, Mr. Speaker, are the markets out there. They have to be economically viable when we move forward, and we have to have some flexibility so that when companies have difficulty, say, in arranging financing or markets, we co-ordinate our adjustments to the approval processes as required, because it is definitely necessary.

MS CARLSON: Well, Mr. Speaker, then is the minister saying that the information from his department that confirms that there are not enough trees to keep existing mills working at capacity is inaccurate?

MR. CARDINAL: No, Mr. Speaker. There are enough. In fact, we just completed an inventory of all the mill capacities in Alberta and what the mills require in order to operate economically. We've also done a complete review of the available stock of our resources, and the stock of resources is considerably higher than what the capacity of our existing mills is. Therefore, we are moving forward with a process to look at how we may best allocate those resources to existing operators, and that's going to take a bit of time.

MS CARLSON: Mr. Speaker, since it's been almost three years since the original review of these projects was done and then only the economics of the proposals were considered, will the minister review the environmental impact of these projects on our province?

MR. CARDINAL: Mr. Speaker, we have the NRCB in place. In fact, with any of the larger projects that do make an application, if there is a requirement for an environmental impact assessment study on any project, then they are done. In some cases the projects don't require that. Projects sometimes are straightforward and smaller and create, you know, less pollution, and they will go without an environmental impact assessment.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Canadian MDF

MR. RATHGEBER: Mr. Speaker, residents in the Edmonton-Calder constituency are quite concerned about a proposal that is being advanced by a company in the constituency. I understand that this company, Canadian MDF, has applied to Alberta Environment for approval to generate electricity, while I understand that they are primarily in the business of manufacturing moldings and not electricity. Accordingly, my question is to the Minister of Environment. What exactly is Canadian MDF applying for?

DR. TAYLOR: Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is correct. Canadian MDF does in fact manufacture architectural moldings, but as a by-product of this there is a lot of sawdust, which they have typically trucked off-site. They have now put in an approval application to the department to produce electricity from this sawdust rather than trucking it off-site, so they're going to recycle the sawdust. They've put in an application for a 1.2 megawatt plant. This plant would produce more than their needs, and then they would be able to sell the rest of it into the grid. That's a direct result of electrical deregulation.

MR. RATHGEBER: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker. Does this mean that Canadian MDF would be classified as a power plant if in fact approval were to be granted?

DR. TAYLOR: Any power project that produces more than one megawatt in our regulations will qualify as a power plant. With Canadian MDF, then, that part of their business, the power plant business, would be called a power plant and would have to correspond to the regulations.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. RATHGEBER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Finally, I was curious if the minister could advise this House as to what is the current status of the application.

DR. TAYLOR: Yes, Mr. Speaker. We have received the application. We have gone back to Canadian MDF for a more complete application. There were some questions that we need answered. Once we get that information from Canadian MDF, we will be processing their application.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

WCB Appeals Commission

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The annual report of the Appeals Commission of the Alberta Workers' Compensation Board for the year 2000 indicates that 998 hearings were conducted and that 45 percent of these hearings were overturned or modified in some way. My first question is to the Minister of Human Resources and Employment, the minister in charge of the Appeals Commission. Why did the budget of the Appeals Commission increase from $3.1 million in 1996 to $4.6 million five years later, in the year 2000, when the actual workload of the Appeals Commission was reduced? Thank you.

MR. DUNFORD: I'm not sure, Mr. Speaker, that the workload actually did decrease. It's difficult to be able to interpret that from the preamble and from the particular question. I don't have the report here at my fingertips, but that's something we can look into and can get back to the hon. member with an answer.

I want to say that one of the concerns that he had pointed out in his preamble was the number of appeal decisions that were overturned by one method or another, and that's why we have contemplated trying to change that. Of course, it is contemplated that legislation will come through this House to be able to deal with that, and I would encourage the hon. member's complete support on that initiative.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the bigger budget for the Appeals Commission, more staff, and now less work, why are the staffing levels, as the annual reports indicate, going up? In 1996 there were 24 staff in the Appeals Commission. In the year 2000 there were 38. Why the increase in staff when the workload and the actual number of cases heard is going down?

Thank you.

MR. DUNFORD: Mr. Speaker, I don't know what more I can add to my answer on the first question. Certainly we will be glad to look into that particular matter, but there's ample evidence, I think, that people are trying to respond to the concerns of injured workers. I think the whole system has become more sensitized to that. Certainly over the last couple of years, as the hon. member knows, we've been trying to find ways to deal with the situation that many injured workers have found themselves in. We're certainly interested in making the appeals system and in fact the Workers' Compensation Board itself more open and accountable.

Transparency is a word that we now use more and more, because we find in the modern economies that the more open and transparent that companies are, it actually leads to improved relationships, of course, with the clients they serve. All of this is what we're trying to achieve in the current time frame. Again, I look forward to the member's enthusiastic support for the initiatives that we're bringing forward.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: is the minister concerned about the number of applications from the Appeals Commission that are overturned by the court?

MR. DUNFORD: The answer to that question is yes, Mr. Speaker. To that extent, we are trying to bring forward under legislation a system that would see the Appeals Commission more independent from the WCB but also to try to find new and better ways to resolve differences of opinion that are in fact leading to the appeals themselves. Certainly a hearing is always there, available for an injured worker or for an employer that simply is not in agreement with the kinds of decisions that are being made. But again we would hope, with the new openness and transparency, that we'll find a higher degree of comfort and a higher degree of compliance with the decisions as they are rendered.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

High School Enrollment Credits

MR. MASON: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. The provincial budget contained a provision that capped the number of credits for grade 10 students. After a huge public outcry the Minister of Learning reversed this provision and eliminated the credit cap. Now it looks like the minister that flip-flopped has done a flop-flip. The ministry has devised a funding formula that amounts to another credit cap for grade 10 students. My question is to the Minister of Learning. Why is the minister, who reversed the decision to cap credits for grade 10 students, once again reversing himself and reinstating what amounts to a cap on student learning?

THE SPEAKER: Okay. The hon. minister, recognizing that his budget is up for debate in just a few minutes from now.

DR. OBERG: Absolutely. If the hon. member is here this afternoon, I'd be more than happy to discuss it with him.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the minister's offer, but I would like to ask him whether or not the chair of Edmonton public schools is correct when he says that his board could lose as much as $3 million in funding next year as a result of this act.

DR. OBERG: No, he is not.

MR. MASON: Why?

DR. OBERG: Quite simply, Mr. Speaker, under the new funding formula we will be funding on a per-student basis. For those students who take 31 credits or more, they will get funded very close to $5,000, which is roughly $600 more than a grade 9 student. For those students that are taking 30 credits or less, they will be funded at half that rate.

The Edmonton public school board has an average of 43, 43 and a half credits for grade 10. I have heard that there have been issues with how these credits have been given out, and I will not air Edmonton public's dirty laundry in public any more than that. But trust me, Mr. Speaker, that these are things that will benefit the majority of systems in this province.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Immigration Policy

MR. CAO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First I would like to ask you to allow me to explain the background of this serious situation. In Calgary there is a young family with capable and hardworking parents who have three very young children aged eight and seven and the youngest was born in Calgary 15 months ago. This family came to my office and asked me for help because they had been asked to leave Canada and return to Mexico. I referred them to our local MP because it is an important and urgent matter impacting the livelihood and welfare of three very young children, one being born Canadian. I asked them to see an immigration lawyer and also Alberta legal aid. With my limited understanding of Canada's immigration administrative process, I wrote a letter to Immigration Canada in Calgary to see if they could help and told the family to talk to the priests in their church to prepare for character witnesses in the community to support their case should an immigration hearing take place. Given that Alberta needs workers and Canada's population demography shows that we need young people and more children, my questions today are to the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations. Could the minister explain to us Alberta's involvement in Immigration Canada?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, under our Constitution immigration is an area of shared responsibility between ourselves as a provincial government and the federal government. With respect to representation that goes forward on individual cases, I would, from the hon. member's question, like to commend him because I think he has certainly been pursuing the proper and correct route in terms of making representation on behalf of individuals that are here. I don't know if they have landed immigrant status, perhaps not, but this is the route that has to be taken with these types of cases. I would like to clarify, as the member indicated, that Alberta is involved in areas such as business immigration and settlement services, but ultimately the approval of individual cases as far as immigration is concerned in this country does rest with the federal government.

The province does have a role, as I've said, in the whole area of matters related to learning and related to job placements and so forth, and it may be that the hon. Minister of Learning would want to supplement.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member, please.

MR. CAO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Based on the request from the family, my letter to Immigration specified that they allow the family to stay until July 15, 2002, so that the children can finish school and the parents can continue to work to earn some expense money for their potential long trip back to Mexico. So my question is to the Minister of Learning. Could the minister help by contacting his counterparts in the federal jurisdiction to inquire about the status of this humanitarian case?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I certainly have no problem in contacting the minister of immigration. I will say, however, that the minister of immigration is under legal obligation not to talk about individual cases with specific people. I can put forward the case on the hon. member's behalf, but again there is absolutely no obligation on behalf of the minister to share any details with me or with the hon. member. I will certainly, though, put the case forward.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. CAO: Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Peace River.

Medical Savings Accounts

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. With regard to the medical savings accounts, the Minister of Health and Wellness said in August of 2000, and I quote: Albertans need to know very clearly that this is not something we would consider. End quote. However, now the government is indeed considering this option. My questions are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Why the flip-flop?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, I think that the hon. member knows that that comment was made prior to the Mazankowski report being put forward and our response, which was tabled before Albertans in January of this year. I remind hon. members that there are 44 recommendations set out in the Mazankowski report. The government in its response has indicated that we are moving forward on all 44.

One of the recommendations, Mr. Speaker, focuses on the financing of the health care system, and that is: how do we pay for the system? The recommendations talk about sources of revenue, where it comes from, who pays for what, and so on and so forth, and one of the recommendations for consideration is variable premium accounts. Another one is medical savings accounts, and there are other iterations of financing of the health care system that the Mazankowski recommendations lay out for us to consider.

We cannot say at this time what the final outcome of that recommendation is going to be. The hon. member knows that our colleague from Grande Prairie-Wapiti is going to be in charge of a committee that will be looking at the financing of the health care system. I'm certain that that hon. member and that committee will take into serious consideration all of the various options. What we're looking for is a made-in-Alberta solution, Mr. Speaker. We know that medical savings accounts are used in other jurisdictions, like Singapore. We know that there are other ways of financing the health care system that are employed in other jurisdictions in Canada, in the United States, and in other parts of the world. We want to look at all of them and ask ourselves what would make the most sense for Albertans.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much. Given that the academic community has expressed serious reservation over the MSAs, can the minister assure us that in fact this academic research will be considered along with what's been proposed by the Mazankowski report?

MR. MAR: Well, yes, I can make that assurance, Mr. Speaker. It does make sense that we would rely upon the best available advice that we have. There is no clear evidence one way or the other as to whether or not medical savings accounts in fact are good or not good. Of course, the hon. member would be familiar with the work of Dr. David Gratzer, a physician from the province of Ontario who has written an award-winning book entitled Code Blue, where he is a very strong advocate in favour of medical savings accounts. Of course, there are scholarly treatises, works that are done that have come to the opposite conclusion, but I'm certain that our committee will look at all of the evidence that is available, weigh it out, and determine what will be best for Albertans.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thanks very much. Could the minister tell us about any locations where he's aware that the MSAs have worked very well and that those kinds of MSAs could be integrated into our current system?

MR. MAR: Well, Mr. Speaker, I would entreat the hon. member to read the work of Dr. Gratzer. It's a very good piece of research. She may agree or disagree with the conclusions that Dr. Gratzer makes in his work, but it is a very strong canvassing of financing systems for health care in other jurisdictions. Other things that he outlines in his book are whether or not user fees work. He weighs out some of the pros and cons of that particular manner of financing the health care system. Dr. Gratzer, I should also note, is having a book release of his most recent book, which will be coming out this afternoon, that I expect hon. members will want to read if they wish to inform themselves more about the health care system.

Mr. Speaker, all of these things we'll take into consideration. Perhaps a strict medical savings account approach does not work in Alberta, but our committee will make that determination. Perhaps variable premium accounts instead will make sense, but again this is all speculative. We will, of course, make a decision after we've weighed all of the evidence.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Peace River, followed by the hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Off-highway Fuel Tax Exemption

MR. FRIEDEL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions are to the Minister of Revenue. Recently I received a few more constituent inquiries about the status of the review of the off-highway fuel tax exemption program. This seems to have become kind of an on-again, off-again issue for some time since the review began. I wonder if the minister could tell us just what is the current status of the review.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. MELCHIN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the year 2000 the Business Tax Review Committee was commissioned to do a review of the business taxes in the province. One of their recommendations was to discontinue the rebate portion of the tax-exempt fuel use program and to examine the tax-exempt fuel program in its entirety. Their conclusions were based on that it only benefits some sectors of the economy and certainly because it was complex and difficult to administer.

Subsequent to that, we have undertaken, among the reviews of many programs, to look at these exemption programs, like the tax-exempt fuel use. In January of this year we had a consultation with many industry stakeholders to get their feedback on the program itself. We find that certainly in reviewing it, it does not follow the principles of a low-rate, broad-based tax in Alberta. The claims audited are found to be significantly overstated and poorly supported. It's a problem that we're trying to address with the industry as to what could we do and what should we do to continue to benefit Albertans and industries in particular in providing the best kinds of programs.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. FRIEDEL: Yes. To the same minister, Mr. Speaker: considering that there have been some quite valid arguments made promoting the economic development impact of the exemptions, could the minister tell us how that point is being addressed?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. MELCHIN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. His points mentioned actually are very valid. This program is $130 million of benefit that allows a forgone tax, that's not having to be paid, and clearly that provides a tremendous benefit to those industries. One of the things we are looking at is how we could simplify the program or how you could even potentially look at options such as lowering the tax rates so that you're not looking for an increase of taxes from the economy in general but lowering the tax rates, broad-based and simpler forms of tax structures versus just this program, which has some complications. The Auditor General actually recommends that we report much more on the benefits and costs of such programs, that we look at forgone revenues as a program and be able to report back. That's part of the review we're doing in trying to examine the economic benefits.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. FRIEDEL: Yes. To the same minister, Mr. Speaker: realizing that this is quite a complex issue, could the minister tell us whether there is a final determination of the outcome of this review in sight?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. MELCHIN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. At this stage we've concluded a preliminary review in discussions with industry, a good cross section of the various stakeholders, and we intend to continue that discussion with them. We don't have a complete deadline as far as an established date of completion at this stage. We will work with industry. There won't be any changes to the program without looking to industry and getting their recommendations on how we can improve this program or could we change it for something that would be simpler and better. I do want to reiterate that it's not in our budget for this year. There are no changes contemplated through this year. It will be the ongoing dialogue with industry throughout this year.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, before I call on the first hon. member to participate in Members' Statements, might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

head: Introduction of Guests

(reversion)

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

MR. STELMACH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This afternoon I'm quite privileged to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly Mr. Phil Rowe, a councillor from the town of Vegreville and also a volunteer fireman and a person who takes care of many other duties in the community of Vegreville and surrounding area.

AN HON. MEMBER: And a flames fan.

MR. STELMACH: A flames fan, yes. Well, a flames fan because he's a fireman. I'd ask Mr. Rowe to please stand in the members' gallery and all of us to give him a traditional warm welcome to the Assembly.

Red Deer Optimist Chiefs Hockey Team

MRS. JABLONSKI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Without question Alberta is truly a province of champions. I stand in the House today to recognize the tenacious and outstanding efforts of the Red Deer Optimist Chiefs midget triple A hockey club. Yesterday in Bathurst, New Brunswick, in their third game of the Air Canada Cup Canadian national championship, the Optimist Chiefs were down 5-nothing after the first period of play. Other teams may have thought that it was all over but not our Alberta boys. With determined efforts they fought back, and by the end of the second period the score was 5 to 4. Battle bruised and weary against Team Atlantic, the Optimist Chiefs were not willing to admit defeat. The final score of the game was 8 to 6. Red Deer had triumphed once again, and Team Pacific, the Red Deer Optimist Chiefs, now stand as the only undefeated team in the tournament. They are now looking forward to the opportunity to play in the nationally televised finals on Sunday at 1 p.m. local time on TSN.

The head coach for this team is Dan MacDonald. Dan is an outstanding coach who has the uncanny and dynamic ability to develop his teams to a highly skilled level of play. His talent and technique in transforming these young men into a winning team is the reason behind the team's determination and persistence. Dan would be the first person to tell you that he didn't do it alone. Along with a dedicated team of assistant coaches – Pat Garritty, Jeremy Jablonski, Darcy Loewen, and Brian Pollock – Dan has coached another championship team to their Air Canada Cup. Congratulations also go out to their trainer, Jack Thompson, and the manager, Graham Parsons.

Our heartiest support and congratulations go to the outstanding team members: Kevin Prowse, Kyle Smith, Mart McKnight, Jason Lloyd, Scott Kolinchuk, Jay Rosehill, Mark Smyth, Brennen Francon, Evan Hardy, Dave Kozlowski, Austin Sutter, Derck Pess, Landis Stankieveh, Bill Vandermeer, Parker Burgess, MacGregor Sharp, Dustin Claffey, Steve Stroshin, and Brandon Heatherington. Alberta is proud of you, and we wish you all the best in the Air Canada Cup tournament.

THE SPEAKER: The chair is beginning to wonder if there is anything in Red Deer that is not number one in the world.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

National Organ and Tissue Donor Awareness Week

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Every day we carry within us the possibility that we could save a life. Every day we carry within us the opportunity to transform dying into living. Every day we carry within us the responsibility to consider deeply what we contribute or can contribute to the lives of others.

Mr. Speaker, this is organ and tissue donation week in Canada. Last year more than 100 Canadians died waiting for an organ transplant that never occurred: children needing liver transplants, young mothers needing kidney transplants, men needing heart transplants. The list goes on far too long. Transplants are not just matters of life and death. They can also be matters of restoring sight to people through cataract transplants or freeing people from relentless dependence on dialysis machines or giving a child the chance to grow into a normal, healthy adult.

Mr. Speaker, I encourage all members of this Assembly and all Albertans to sign the back of their Alberta personal health care card to indicate their willingness to be organ and tissue donors and to make their wishes clear to family members. Through this simple step we can reduce the suffering and death of other Canadians. Such a small thing to make such a big contribution to the lives of others means that signing your donor card is not a responsibility; it is a privilege.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three-Hills.

National Soil Conservation Week

MR. MARZ: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to acknowledge National Soil Conservation Week. Soil is one of our most important resources, especially for a province like Alberta, that has such a vibrant agricultural industry, but in order to sustain our industry, we have to ensure that we maintain the quality of our soil. Good-quality soils can reduce farm risks and increase profitability. We need to stop now and again and consider: what are we doing to protect the soil? April 21 to 27 is National Soil Conservation Week. Organizations from across this country promote the value of soil and preservation of this valuable resource. Soil conservation is particularly important for our province since Alberta contains about 40 percent of the prairie farmland. We are also very diverse, being the only province in Canada with an even distribution of the major soil zones.

Alberta Agriculture, Food and Rural Development has a program to promote and track soil-friendly farming practices through the Alberta environmentally sustainable agriculture program. This program recognizes the long-term sustainability of the agricultural industry and promotes good farming practices such as diverse crop rotations, reduced tillage, and soil conservation.

We've established a network of 43 soil quality benchmarks across the province, the largest active network in Canada. Alberta farmers are consistently improving their farm practices to conserve our important soil resources. We're helping them by developing the science and technologies needed to conserve this valuable resource. By using environmentally sound, sustainable, and soil-friendly farming practices, we are protecting the Alberta advantage in our markets around the world.

I encourage everyone during this week to look down at what lies beneath your feet and ask yourself what you can do to leave a shallow footprint.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Electricity Deregulation

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Anyone who has received a power bill recently knows that electricity deregulation is an expensive failure. Electricity follows the rules of physics; it does not follow market forces in the conventional sense. This government's electricity deregulation has destroyed Alberta's once cheap and dependable electricity supply, replacing it with price spikes, uncertainty over generation and transmission, windfall profits to power purchasers, and no policy on electricity exports.

Public scrutiny and sound, strong regulations are needed now more than ever as power bills increase. The structure of deregulation actually makes this very difficult to achieve. Consumers and their organizations complain of the difficulty faced when comparing and disentangling financial facts and figures related to their bills. Details related to electricity charged vary even from the same company, depending on the market area. City of Edmonton customers of EPCOR, for instance, have eight line items on their bill while EPCOR customers at Wabamun Lake have 13 line items on theirs.

It's time to standardize the format of power bills across the province so consumers, regardless of where they live, are not in the dark about their charges. The public must have better access to detailed financial information. Open and accountable procedures are needed. With all the confusion this government has created, consumers need monthly statements giving clear and more detailed customer/consumer price information. The government needs to monitor all Power Pool rules and regulatory decisions and investigate any anticompetitive behaviour it finds.

The government promised lower prices, wider consumer choice, and technological advances if retail competition were allowed. Instead, we have expensive deferral payments added to our monthly bills. Electricity needs to be recognized as a service, not an expensive commodity.

Thank you.

head: Presenting Petitions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and table a petition signed by 76 Edmontonians, most of whom come from the constituency of Edmonton-Strathcona, and they're petitioning this Assembly to "urge the government to not delist services, raise health care premiums, introduce user fees or further privatize health care."

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Notices of Motions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Community Development.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, I rise pursuant to Standing Order 34(2)(a) to give notice that on Monday I will move that written questions appearing on the Order Paper do stand and retain their places with the exception of Written Question 1 and Written Question 2.

I'm also giving notice that on Monday I will move that motions for returns appearing on that day's Order Paper do stand and retain their places with the exception of motions for returns 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, and 8.

Thank you.

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Premier I'd like to table five copies of a letter sent yesterday from the Premier to the Prime Minister announcing that the governments of all provinces and territories except Quebec have accepted a process to settle disputes under the Canada Health Act proposed by the government of Canada.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table the appropriate copies of a letter that just reached my office this morning at 8:15. It's a letter that comes from concerned parents of the Foothills school division. The letter is addressed to the MLA for Highwood. These parents are seeking a fair settlement for teachers and adequate school funding to deal with textbook shortages and inadequate classroom conditions.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

MR. SHARIFF: Mr. Speaker, I wish to table the appropriate number of copies of a letter I received from Solectron, a high-tech company in my riding that has had to make some important decisions in closing their plant, which will result in 490 full-time positions being eliminated and approximately 370 temporary workers being impacted by that decision.

Thank you.

head: Projected Government Business

THE SPEAKER: The Official Opposition House Leader. Please proceed.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you. May I ask the Government House Leader to share with the Assembly the projected government business for next week?

THE SPEAKER: The Government House Leader, please.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We continue next week in Committee of Supply for the main part, but on Monday, April 29, after 9 p.m. under Government Bills and Orders we anticipate in Committee of the Whole dealing with Bill 16, Bill 18, and Bill 24 and in second reading with Bill 26 and thereafter as per the Order Paper.

On Tuesday, April 30, in the afternoon in Committee of Supply, main estimates for Community Development and as per the Order Paper. Tuesday, April 30, at 8 p.m. under Government Bills and Orders, Committee of Supply, the main estimates for the Solicitor General and thereafter Committee of the Whole, bills 19, 29, 24 and second reading on Bill 26 and as per the Order Paper.

Wednesday, May 1, under Government Bills and Orders in the afternoon, day 21 of Committee of Supply and the Department of Finance and as per the Order Paper. Wednesday, May 1, at 8 p.m. under Government Bills and Orders in Committee of Supply the estimates of Innovation and Science, third reading of Bill Pr. 1, Committee of the Whole on bills 9 and 20, second reading on Bill 26 and as per the Order Paper.

Thursday, May 2, in the afternoon under Government Bills and Orders, day 23 of Committee of Supply, the estimates for Gaming and as per the Order Paper.

It also might be contemplated, Mr. Speaker, that there would be a motion with respect to the Standing Orders relative to the unanimous consent request that I make every day, and if that motion is ready, I would anticipate that we might deal with it on Monday.

head: Orders of the Day

head: Government Bills and Orders

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, before proceeding, just on the last comment the chair would like to make this as a blanket invitation. Earlier today, Government House Leader, I asked Parliamentary Counsel to consult with the opposition parties with respect to the matter that you had copied on this, and hopefully by Monday there will be general agreement among everyone as to what the intent of that proposed change will be so that we will not have to deal with the daily request with respect to this.

Now, on the request made by the hon. Government House Leader, would all hon. members in favour please say aye.

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: We will call the committee to order.

head: Main Estimates 2002-03

Learning

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: As per Standing Orders the first hour is allocated between the minister and members of the opposition, following which any other hon. member can participate. The hon. Minister of Learning.

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It's with great pleasure that I stand here today to give you the estimates for Learning. The estimates for Learning begin on page 341 of the '02-03 government and lottery fund estimates. Learning's business plan starts on page 291 of the government's budget 2002 document, The Right Decisions for Challenging Times. These estimates further the excellence in our learning system. They provide support to all Albertans for the achievement of lifelong learning.

With the exception of Health and Wellness my ministry received the largest funding increase of all departments for the '02-03 fiscal year. In '02-03 Alberta Learning plans to increase base program spending by over $208 million to $4.7 billion, or a 4.7 percent increase. When you include the increase to opted-out school boards and the special payment of $46 million provided to the basic learning system as a result of reinvesting teacher job action savings, the total increase is $261 million. This investment will ensure that we are meeting the needs of students whether they are attending a school or postsecondary institution. Add into the mix $152 million of opted-out revenue, and you have a total of over $4.8 billion in funding for learning in this province.

Over the next few months Alberta Learning will be working with the stakeholders to look at the funding framework for basic learning. The purpose of this work is to find ways to simplify or modify the current funding formula while ensuring an equitable distribution of education dollars.

On page 355 of your estimates book operating support to public and separate schools has increased by $112 million, or 4.0 percent, to over $2.9 billion. However, when the $46 million special payment I spoke of earlier is included, this increase is $158 million, or 5.6 percent.

This budget provides school jurisdictions increased funding to operate their schools and provide a quality education to their students. This increase far exceeds the costs of inflation and enrollment, which are projected at 1.9 percent and 0.25 percent respectively. The basic instruction grant will increase by 3 percent, giving school boards the maximum flexibility to meet their local needs by directing more money to the classroom to improve student learning.

Funding for early childhood services is increasing to $164 million. Private schools will receive $60 million in '02-03, an increase of $2.3 million. This increase relates to increased enrollment and the private school basic instruction grant increase, which is now 60 percent of the public and separate school rate.

This budget also accommodates an expected 10 percent increase in the number of students in grades 1 to 12 with severe disabilities and a 3 percent increase in the severe disabilities grant rate. In keeping with the recommendation from the special education review, the severe emotional/behavioral grant rate will increase by 5.5 percent to provide more equal funding between students with behavioral and nonbehavioral needs. Increased funding for students with mild and moderate disabilities is reflected in the basic instruction grant rate increase of 3 percent.

The upcoming school year will see changes in how we fund grade 10 students. Beginning in September, grade 10 students will be funded on either a full-time or partial program basis. Anyone taking more than 31 credits will be funded at a full-time level, and anyone taking less than that will be funded at a partial program level. These changes will simplify the funding process for grade 10 students. I must emphasize, Mr. Chairman, that this in no way limits the number of credits a grade 10 student can be enrolled in.

Last but not least, under public and separate school support is the student health initiative. The '02-03 fiscal year will see an increase of $800,000, or 3 percent, to assist with increased costs and demands for services. The initiative assists about 75,000 students who have special health needs with services such as speech, language, or occupational therapy.

Page 348 details how the $1.1 billion, an increase of $57 million, or 5.5 percent in '02-03, will be spent on postsecondary institutions, including $12 million targeted to attract and retain faculty. This $12 million is on top of the $28 million provided last year, for a total of $40 million for faculty retention.

Alberta's postsecondary system plays a critical role in the preparation of a highly skilled workforce as well as in the creation and application of new knowledge and technology. The government has committed to ensuring that the system can continue to fulfill the role by creating the environment to attract and retain top-quality faculty, talented researchers, and outstanding graduate students. We have also targeted $100 million, an increase of $9 million, to maintain expansion seats created within the postsecondary system. Since '99-2000 access to the postsecondary system has been increasing by 4,557 new spaces in high-priority areas such as medicine, nursing, health technology, and information and communication technology programs. In addition, access to apprenticeship training spaces will be enhanced to respond to the growing demand for skilled tradespeople. I might add, Mr. Chairman, that as of today we have reached the 40,000 plateau for apprentices in Alberta, which is the first time that we have ever done that.

Base operational grants will increase through grant adjustments by $29.3 million, or 3 percent, for universities, colleges, and technical institutions. This increased investment assists postsecondary institutions in keeping tuition fees affordable. Right now across the province tuition fees account for about 24 percent of the cost of a student's education. In addition to improving and expanding the traditional postsecondary-based adult learning opportunities, $18.9 million will be invested into community-based lifelong learning and family literacy opportunities.

I would like to direct your attention to page 349 entitled Assistance to Learners. The core tenet of student financial assistance remains that the cost of postsecondary education is a shared responsibility between students, their families, and government. Our programs ensure that financial need is not a barrier to further education. In '01-02 the Alberta government provided needs-based student loans and bursaries to more than 46,000 postsecondary learners. The Alberta student loan relief benefit and the loan relief program completion payment will continue to automatically reduce student debt for students in their first and final years of the study program. When a student's combined loan reaches $5,000 per year, or $2,500 per semester, any further Alberta student loan assistance is provided as nonrepayable loan relief benefits. In addition, we have increased loan limits to address cost increases including tuition.

In this budget we have also furthered our support for student scholarships. The Jason Lang scholarship has been expanded to award a thousand dollars to students entering their fourth year of study obtaining an 80 percent average in their third year of undergraduate study. In addition, '02-03 will be the first year in which a number of new scholarships are awarded. These include the Earl and Countess of Wessex Edmonton 2001 World Championships in Athletics scholarships and the new apprentice scholarships created through a partnership with industry and government. Also, in partnership with Community Development and in recognition of the Queen's golden jubilee seven new $5,000 scholarships will be awarded annually starting in 2002-2003. In total, funding for scholarship programs that reward excellence in learning will increase by 10.2 percent to $32 million in '02-03 and support over 19,000 students.

Overall the '02-03 budget and business plan highlights this government's commitment to lifelong learning facilitated by a seamless system that continues to be affordable for all Albertans. Education is a clear priority for this government, and Budget '02 reflects that commitment.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Chairman, and thank you to the minister for his comments. I'd like to start and raise some questions with respect to the item in the budget that calls for the "design [of] a new funding allocation model that complements the Outcomes Review for Basic Education in consultation with stakeholders." I have a question about that outcomes review. How does the outcomes review and how does a new learning model fit in with the work by the blue-ribbon panel that's going to be appointed under Bill 12? It seems to me that those issues, the outcomes and the funding model, would be items that that blue-ribbon panel might consider. So I wonder if the minister can explain the relationship between those three things.

I'd like to then focus again on the funding model. I look at the funding manual for school authorities that's on-line, and I note that the changes that the minister just outlined for grade 10 still haven't been incorporated on the web site. I assume that's going to happen, but if you go through the allocation manual, you'll notice that a number of items have been singled out: the funding for the teacher assistants program, the early literacy program, the funding for students with severe disabilities, English as a Second Language. Then you go back to the basic instructional grant. Is there a breakdown of what that $4,239 is intended to cover? I ask the question, Mr. Chairman, because I think it's relevant in terms of trying to determine whether the funding is adequate.

We can see that schools are supposed to use the $357 allocated per student for mild and moderate children in terms of special needs and for gifted and talented students, so we get a fairly good idea of what that includes. But what does the basic per student grant include? It's a question that again I think would be relevant to the blue-ribbon panel. It's one that I know a number of parents are already addressing by sitting down and looking at their local school and doing an assessment of exactly how much money is needed to operate their school. They're doing that, I know, in at least a couple of cases with a view to trying to look at the school's needs and then to determine if the kinds of resources that are being provided by the local board are adequate. So is there a breakdown? Is there a rationale for that number? How it was determined I guess is really my question.

The minister in his remarks talked about equitable funding. I applaud the government for the work they did in the mid-90s to try and bring about equity across the province. The equities were a problem that had plagued the system for a long time. It was a $30 million problem. The solution, gathering the dollars and then redistributing them, I think was a partial solution. I say "partial" because I'm not sure that it was based on needs but was rather based on the number of dollars that were available at the time, and that was the way the amount was determined.

Also, that equity that they tried to achieve I think has been distorted in a couple of ways. One, it's being distorted by fundraising. Children who live in communities where there is a great deal of wealth attend schools where parents are able to provide a host of programs and materials that aren't available to children who live in communities where there is not a similar amount of wealth. There have been inequities that have crept in with respect to the kinds of services that are provided. Not only has the equity been disturbed, but I think the whole question of adequacy is one that – I know it's a question that the Premier continually asks: how much is enough? In answer to that, school jurisdictions elsewhere on the continent have used a variety of methods. I wonder in terms of this review that's going to be undertaken: will the whole question of adequacy be addressed? Will there be data put forward that indicates that this is what we think is adequate based on these needs? Is the intent in the review to look at what is needed in schools, then to assign to that the kinds of resources that it's felt could meet those needs?

It's not an easy problem, Mr. Chairman. I think it really has been brought to the fore south of the border because of court cases where parents have gone to school districts and to state governments and sued them in the courts on the grounds that the district or the state was not providing adequate resources for the programs that their children needed. I think it's unfortunate that litigation forces problems to be addressed, but I think it's an important problem. I think it's Minnesota that uses an expert panel to try to determine what is adequate. There are some very long and convoluted statistical analyses used by some states, that quite frankly are fairly difficult to follow, to determine what is adequate. I know that there are other states that look at very successful school districts or schools and use those as the measure and say: what kinds of resources would it take to have every school in the state achieve those same kinds of results?

So not one answer to the question of adequacy but certainly a very, very important question and I think one that was raised time and time again in the strikes and the strife that we've had in the schools the last number of months by parents who have really questioned adequacy and failed to understand exactly how their schools are being financed.

I'm pleased that a new funding model is being designed. I am a little worried that the outcomes review – I saw a copy of a couple of pages of some of their work and was really quite surprised at some of the statements that were in the review given that they seem to me to be making decisions that were more appropriately left to Albertans at large about their education system. As I said, I was somewhat surprised by the items that appeared on that list. Again, as you know, we had been arguing for 10 years in the House the notion that there was need for another commission equivalent to the Worth commission, and I guess as close as we're going to come is the blue-ribbon panel.

I have to admit, Mr. Chairman, that I have great hopes for the panel. I think it was a good move by the minister. I think it's long overdue. As I said, I have great hopes for the panel's deliberations. I've been at a couple of public meetings recently where there was some cynicism expressed over whether this was just a way to shuffle problems off to a panel, that it wouldn't have the problems identified and no solutions ever acted upon. I tried to disabuse the members of the groups of that notion. I believe that if you look at the Worth report in the '70s, you can trace directly some of the changes that we enjoy in the school system today to that report. I was looking just the other day at the report. Things like the government is going to be evaluating in this budget, year-round schooling, were first proposed to the province in the early '70s in that report. So, as I said, I'm looking forward to the panel, and I have faith that they can go a long ways to resolving some of the conditions, some of the things that led to the distress in the system in the last year.

If I can move then from that funding item to a couple of more specific questions. There's been some controversy in the news recently about the Alberta home and school association and the funding that they receive from government and concerns from parent councils about the representativeness of the Alberta home and school association and also a concern about the political leanings of that association. Those are legitimate concerns. I guess my question is: what about school councils? They are the legally mandated parent group that the government has put in place, and I wonder if there has

It seems to me that that would be a legitimate focus of the government, some way of getting back in a systematic way from school councils that are established I think in virtually every school in the province, getting back from the councils some feedback about the education system. I think it's a bit of a problem. I know that I was contacted by a couple of the parent councils in Calgary, I believe it was, and they wanted to know how they could contact their sister or brother councils, because they had been told at some schools that they couldn't even direct correspondence to the parent councils. I'm not sure it was Calgary. I'm not certain, Mr. Chairman. It was either Edmonton or Calgary.

So I think there's a whole area in terms of school councils, getting feedback from them in some systematic way, ensuring that maybe there are some funds that would help them further their aims, just as there are funds for the Alberta home and school association. As I said, it's not to detract from the work of the Alberta home and school association in any way but to highlight the work of school councils.

If I can move on again, Mr. Chairman, we passed a motion in the House recently from the Member for Lacombe-Stettler to review achievement tests, and I wonder if we could hear from the minister the department's thinking, the department's response. Again I was informed by a parent, someone who had called the department about the achievement tests and the review that was going to be undertaken, and the information they were given was that the achievement tests are always under review. The caller left with the notion that in spite of the concern of this Legislature, there wasn't going to be that wholesale review that I think most of us who voted for that motion expected there to be. So I wonder if the minister could comment on that. I know it's preliminary. It's very early, that motion just having passed the House recently, but I wondered what thinking there has been about the achievement tests.

Again in the same vein, has there been any consideration to developing and moving towards some diagnostic tests, making some diagnostic tests available to elementary teachers for use in the classroom? I think I've said in each budget or every time we've talked about achievement tests that those tests' greatest value is to the system and to the teacher and to schools. Individual children who write them really don't receive the benefit in terms of any kind of program planning, whereas a diagnostic test would allow a teacher to take and to plan a program based on a youngster's performance on the tests. So I wonder if there's been any thought to diagnostic testing.

I wonder if there's any concern or any work being done in terms of the great distortion that's being made of the achievement test results. They're being used to judge teachers, children, schools, school districts, and even the province. They were never intended for that in the first place. They've moved more and more in that order. There's a local firm that puts out a ranking of the schools on those tests which the firm purports to believe has some relationship to the competency of teachers and a whole host of other things. As someone who was involved in those tests originally, I'm really quite appalled to see the use to which they are being put. I wonder if the concern is one that's shared in the department and if there's been any kind of thinking in terms of what might be done to at least have some of those tests used in an appropriate manner for achievement test results as only being one measure at one point in time of the performance of a particular youngster or a group of youngsters.

I'd like to move then to some of the issues that were raised during the strike. I remember raising the question last year, I believe, or the year before, asking if there could be consideration given to a performance measure in terms of class size. Mr. Chairman, I've been, I guess, a little concerned. I've tried through a number of private member's bills, which never seem to get debated, motions, which again are – I think one was debated and then defeated. I've tried time and time again to draw attention to the importance of class size, and I've been accused of wanting very rigid class sizes, where the school target would be 17. If they had 18 students, they'd have to split it into nine, and that is certainly a distortion of anything that I've proposed to this Assembly, but I think it's important. I think the money that was spent in Edmonton on the study, the $500,000 – it's an important measure. It's an important measure to parents. I think that if you heard nothing during the strike, it's an important measure to parents, and certainly it's an important measure for teachers. I wonder, with all of the measures that we have in the business plan, why we couldn't have a performance measure indicating class sizes. It's information that I think the government gathered at least once, and it would make sense to gather that information on a regular basis to see where class sizes are going.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: Hon. minister, would you like to respond?

DR. OBERG: He doesn't want me to respond yet, so go ahead.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to participate in the debate on the estimates for one of the most important departments of the government of Alberta: the Ministry of Learning. I want to certainly say to the minister that he carries on his shoulders a very heavy responsibility. It's a ministry that handles both the basic education level, K to 12, and then a large postsecondary system, which serves the needs of adult learners in a variety of ways. This population is very diverse, and so is of course the population at the basic education level, diverse not only in terms of age cohorts but diverse in terms of needs, abilities, capacities, whether these are financial or capacities directly related to learning and learning preferences.

It's indeed a very diverse universe of Albertans who participate in and benefit from this ministry, and the size of the provincial budget speaks to both the extensive nature of the ministry's responsibilities and the growing needs of the society, economy, and individuals and families. This is a system that because of rapid changes in society and rapid changes in the economy is experiencing rapid changes within the system. Those changes deal with both expectations and reciprocal relationships between the different actors of the ministry, on the one hand, and institutions and the educators, the people who deliver educational services, on the other, school boards, responsible for general day-to-day administration and management of school systems. The same is true of course at the postsecondary level, although it seems to me that the degree of autonomy that is enjoyed by the governing bodies as well as the institutions in the postsecondary system seems to be higher and more readily respected by the minister than is the case with the K to 12.

When I talk about autonomy, I obviously am aware of the recent difficulties that the ministry and the minister experienced in its and his relationships with our teachers over the last year. It's unfortunate that that has come to be. The point is that it's a challenge that needs to be addressed, addressed honestly, openly, and effectively so that we can return to a more normal situation in these relationships. The minister is attempting to do his part. I wonder if there are special provisions in the budget that'll help him address some of these challenges.

There's clearly a dispute. The minister takes one view of the question of whether our K to 12 system is adequately funded. Parents, teachers, school boards, many of them, take the opposite view, a different view. It's not a matter that should simply be reduced to taking shots politically at each other. It's a real issue. There is a question of perceptions. There are questions of positions, and those positions are different, quite different, and if the distance between those positions isn't reduced by effective action, then the tensions and the problems, I'm afraid, will continue. So I wonder if the minister would address this first general question as to how the way this budget makes provisions for the K to 12 will help him from his side to allay some of the concerns and the problems that have been with us at least for a year.

The 4 and 2 formula that was used last year by the minister to include as a line item the direction to school boards with respect to teachers' salaries was clearly at the root of the teacher dispute with the minister and with the ministry. I'd like to ask him how, with the continuation of that 4 and 2 into the next year, he is going to be able to address and alleviate the tensions and the conflict which certainly broke into the open as symbolized in the existence now in this province of a law which in our judgment is punitive, and the teachers have seen it that way. So that's one general question.

I have another specific question. The issues over which there is some consensus between the ministry, the school boards, and the teachers as to what those issues are deserve a study, merit a study. There are specific questions to the minister with respect to this commission or blue-ribbon panel. I don't know what it's going to be. Exactly when will this commission be named? I urge him to do it as soon as possible. So if he can give us a date by which it will be named and working. Secondly, is there in the budget that's proposed here a provision for funding the activities of this commission, and what is that budget estimate? There's no indication here. The commitment was made, I guess, after the budget was finalized, so the minister will hopefully provide some supplementary information on it.

The question was raised by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods with respect to the Alberta home and school association. I read something in the paper a week ago or last week. I can't remember the exact date. My question is about the dollar funding for the home and school association. What is it, and which item does it come out of in the budget? So how much is it, and is there a performance measure here which tells us whether or not dollars spent on that are well spent?

I had one other question. It has to do again with high school students. It's about a performance measure. This is outcome 3.4: "Learners are well prepared for citizenship." The targets there, achievement measures, performance measures, are spectacularly low for high school students when you compare them with other measures on the same page or on the pages relating to performance. Why is it that we expect from our high school students or from the institutions no more than 48, 49 percent? This is page 299 in the business plan.

I'm curious about this. To me it's setting the bar far too low. To me citizenship outcomes are extremely important at the level of a high school learning experience. These students are approaching voting age. They will be becoming full participants in political decision-making. Two concerns here: one is the low level of expectation here as reflected in these performance measures, and the second has to do with the definition, the conception, or the notion of citizenship in the first place. How narrowly does it get defined so that it can be measured? Are there effective ways of measuring citizenship, and are the measures in fact first premised on a certain notion of citizenship? I'm not sure if we have a clear enough idea here that we are serious about measuring citizenship-related outcomes, and if so, what are the most effective measures, and what are the levels of expectations that are reflected in these measures?

So those are a few of the specific questions. Now I want to turn to the grade 10 student funding formula that the minister has just referred to in his introductory remarks. This morning we learned that there are serious questions being raised by the Edmonton public school board, but my suspicion is that this concern isn't limited to one school board; that is, the Edmonton public school board. It's a policy that will have an impact on school boards across the province, although during question period when the minister did decide to answer one of the three questions posed to him related to this, he kind of seemed to suggest that he has probably been driven to this decision by the problems that he sees or hears about or has learned exist just within one school board, which is the Edmonton public school board. So that certainly was the sort of edge to the answer to the question.

It is a problem that's going to arise that you're going to have to address. I want you to take some time and tell us how it's not a cap. You agreed just a few weeks ago that capping was the wrong way to go. If you tie funding to a certain number of credits which are less than the average presently being the norm, then clearly it has to be seen as an attempt to cap. The credits are the resources available to school boards to meet their obligations, particularly obligations to students who seem to be the best students in the system, the ones who take extra credits or IB students or high academic level students, most of them. Certainly that is an issue again you might want to address in some detail and say why it is that you think the formula that was used will not first lead to loss of revenues or funding to school boards and, secondly, why it will not discourage school boards from continuing the whole wide variety of offerings of these courses. They may simply roll back what they offer in order to deal with this, because after all you need teachers and instructors in order to carry on with the present array of offerings.

Some other questions here quickly. With these now I shift to the postsecondary level, Mr. Chairman, and I want to draw the attention of the minister to some of the targets. I'm now referring to the strategies, Mr. Minister, on page 296 of the business plan: outcome 1.3, outcome 1.4, accessibility and affordability at the postsecondary level. The commitments made here, the outcomes expected are laudable. "Financial need is not a barrier to learners participating in learning opportunities"; no one can disagree with that, a good outcome expectation. "All Albertans can participate in quality learning," and I emphasize "all Albertans."

Now, some of the things that I've been hearing from students – and you have been meeting with them too, I understand, some postsecondary students – draw attention to some serious concerns that postsecondary student organizations – CAUS I guess is one of them – have about both accessibility and affordability related to financial need. The document that I am referring to here is the Council of Alberta University Students, February 2002, Alberta Tuition Policy: Ensuring Affordability, Accountability, Accessibility, Predictability, and Quality. That's the title of it. The document notes – and these are facts; I guess we would all agree with the facts at least – that since 1991-92 tuition has increased by 209 percent. In other words, it's tripled, the third highest tuition fee overall in the country. The University of Alberta stands to have the highest arts and sciences tuition fees. The average student debt in the province is $18,000 and growing.

Students have concerns about the maximum loans that are allowed to them. Now, some of the surveys cited in this study refer to an Ipsos-Reid study done for Alberta Learning which shows that 44 percent of recent Alberta high school students not attending postsecondary institutions cite already high tuition and mandatory fees as a reason for not attending and also cite Stats Canada 2001 report that the aggregate amount of outstanding student loans was 6.2 times higher in '92 than it was in 1984.

One other study here, Mr. Chairman, that I want to draw the minister's attention to – I'm sure he is familiar with these studies and references and numbers – Degrees of Opportunity: Examining Access to Postsecondary Education in Alberta, the University of Alberta Senate study cited in the study that I mentioned above by CAUS. Eighty-eight point six percent of students believe that students from middle- and high-income brackets are more likely to attend university than those from low-income brackets.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: Hon. members, before I recognize the next speaker, may we briefly revert to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests
(reversion)

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

MR. YANKOWSKY: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I am pleased to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly Dr. Ed Silver and his wife, Maxine, who are seated in the Speaker's gallery. Dr. Silver is a professor and holds the Carma chair in the Faculty of Management at the University of Calgary. After a distinguished career in which he has developed a worldwide reputation in the field of operations management, Dr. Silver is looking forward to his retirement later this year. He is visiting today with a former student; that is, our Clerk, Dr. David McNeil. I would like to ask Dr. and Mrs. Silver to please rise and receive the very warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. minister.

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. To start off with, I will reassure the members of the opposition that any question I do not touch on in my comments will be given to you in writing at a later date, if that's all right. My staff will go through Hansard and provide you with the answers.

First of all, if I may start with the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona and then essentially go backwards. With regard to the tuition policy, we are presently in talks with the universities, postsecondary institutions, and the student groups to come up with a new tuition policy. As the hon. member knows, the existing tuition policy is that the tuition rise can occur up until around $250 per student to a maximum of 30 percent of the operating expenses. Mr. Chairman, we are presently at 24 percent. However, in two institutions in the province we are at 30 percent, and it is becoming very evident that we have to have a new tuition policy in place. I anticipate that over the next two to three weeks we may well have a new tuition policy. It will be brought forward pending the agreement of the parties that I talked about – namely CAUS, ACTISEC, and the postsecondary institutions – but I will assure the hon. member that that is under discussion at the moment.

The next point that I want to draw to his attention is the support to postsecondary learners. Indeed, as one of the items that is in the budget, it shows a 12 and a half percent increase to support for postsecondary learners. Mr. Chairman, that's on top of 22 percent last year and 22 percent the year before. So in total we have increased the support to postsecondary learners by 56 percent over the past three years, which is certainly substantial.

The other thing that I want to reassure the hon. member on is that there are a lot of kids, as I mentioned in my opening comments, 46,000, who benefit from student assistance every year and that we do look at all exceptions. There are appeal mechanisms that are available.

The next question I will get into is about the grade 10 formula. The first question and probably the easiest question, if I may, is the why. Quite simply, the Auditor General said that there were abnormalities in the way CEUs were being reported. There were abnormalities in CTS funding in the last Auditor General's report. In keeping with the Auditor General's report, we have looked into it, and we have decided that, not exclusively in Edmonton although there have been some issues in Edmonton, there have been jurisdictions that have, for example, an average number of credits in grade 10 of 47. That varies down to a low of around 32 or 33 in other jurisdictions. Mr. Chairman, that changes directly the amount of funding that these jurisdictions do. I will say from the outset – and I think that this is a very important statement that I'm about to make – that these school jurisdictions are in no way cheating. Quite simply, they are working within our rules. It is our rules that are wrong. This is something that the Auditor General paid close attention to when he gave us his warning.

The reason we did grade 10 first of all is because to the age of 16 kids have to be in school. Where there become issues is when you get part-time students taking, for example, 10 or 15 or 20 credits. How do we fund those students? With our partners in education, with the school superintendents, with the school boards, the ASBA, the ASBOA, the home and school association, the Francophone boards, we will be sitting down in an attempt to come up with a new funding formula that will take into consideration all of the issues that have been raised, including the Auditor General's report. So again, Mr. Chairman, it is very important.

I will also just raise one very interesting point, and the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark raised this point to me shortly before. It was that prior to CEU funding, dollars were distributed to the schools on the basis of 36.5 credits per year. That is how the moneys were distributed in Edmonton public. We are now funding, if it were on a credit basis – and it is not on a credit basis – the equivalent of around a little over 40 credits per year being put out. I will say, though, that I do not want to call it on a credit basis, because we are in no way limiting the number of credits that a student can take. It is roughly $5,000, which is $600 more than the same student would be funded in grade 9. We are also looking at a new way to fund the system, whether it's sparsity and distance or growth and density. We're bringing our partners in. We're sitting down and attempting to come up with a new way to distribute the dollars. Mr. Chairman, I feel that this is an extremely important thing to do.

On the comment about citizenship, on page 299, I entirely agree with the hon. member. I agree that these targets are wrong, and I will change the targets for the next budget year. I think that having a target of 48 percent for high school students does not say very much for our high school system. I entirely agree with the hon. member and will ensure that this is changed for our next business plan. Thank you to him for pointing this out to me.

With regard to the home and school association funding, this year they will receive $300,000. It will rise to $400,000 next year, $500,000 the year after, and then start coming down to $400,000 and $300,000 over the next five years. The reason why we funded the home and school association is that they are a provincial body that encompasses from the southern border to the northern border, from the eastern border to the western border. They have some 550 school councils and are as close to a provincial organization as there is when it comes to home and school councils. This is a very important group. It is a way of getting parents involved, and it's a way of hearing parents' voices. They have had an active seat at all of our discussions, an active seat at the table, and we feel that it is necessary to support them in the same way that we support the Alberta School Boards Association, the Alberta Teachers' Association, and many other associations that are out there. Again, they have given us a pledge that they will be raising their own money, and as they do that, our funds will start decreasing.

The next question was about the commission and when it will be named. It will be named as quickly as we can. One of the key components of the document that was signed on Friday was that there would be input from the Alberta Teachers' Association and the Alberta School Boards Association in terms of reference, committee members, things like that. We have been unable to do it until that was signed. I will say that for the two weeks of negotiations that were taking place, I do apologize to the House and the members, but we were dragging our feet because we knew that this would be a very integral part of that agreement, and for that reason it has not been named up until this date. We will now, however, endeavour to get members on it as quickly as we can. We hope to have a start date of June 1. That is typically what we are aiming for, and I see nothing to dissuade me from keeping on that time line.

The budget numbers. The hon. member is absolutely right: this was something that was conceived after the budget. We did not know the budget numbers exactly. It is from within our existing budget. We will not be back for supplementary estimates or anything like that. It will be from within our existing budget, probably our communications budget, but we will look at that.

The funding framework. The hon. member raised some good questions about the concerns about funding and also, I believe, about the per student funding. One of the endeavours that we do is attempt to distribute the dollars that are available in an equitable fashion, and what that means quite simply is that people in Northland school division, for example, that are far north, that have small school sizes of four and five students or 10, 15 students, obviously have more costs to provide an education to their students than someone in downtown Edmonton or downtown Calgary purely by means of distance. I think that's just common sense. We need to determine though: are our sparsity and distance formulas correct? Is there a better way to provide a proxy, because that's what we're doing, for how to distribute these dollars?

The CEU issue, that the Auditor General raised, I've already raised in here, and it's something that needs to be addressed. There are some very difficult issues there, and we need to talk about it. We need to find out how these dollars are being distributed. Growth and density: all of these are very important issues and will certainly be discussed.

To get to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, again he had some questions about the funding formula and the outcomes review. I will say that those are two distinct reports. With the outcomes review what I anticipate doing is not tying that to funding but instead tying it to the ability of the school boards to decrease their paperwork. Where I'm going with this is that we have to have some reward to school boards for having a positive outcome. There has to be some benefit to school boards for having a positive outcome. The enigma in all of this is that if the school board does well and you give them more money, then potentially they're going to do better because they have more resources. Likewise, a school board that does not do as well can do worse. You can't really take away money for doing well, so what we anticipate doing – this has not been finalized yet, and I will say that I have not seen the outcomes review, as I'm waiting for it to be finalized – is rewarding school boards by saying: "You guys are doing a really good job. We're going to get out of your hair. We're not going to make you fill in all these papers. As long as you continue on the outcome side of things, continue to get good results, continue to get exemplary results, we'll stay out of your hair, and we'll concentrate on those school boards that need the help." The people from my department, that are very, very good at what they do, will then help the school boards that truly need the help and stay out of the reporting, the red tape, the bureaucracy of the school boards that don't. So that is the general direction that we're going in.

The other comment I'll make about outcomes review is that it will be tied in directly to the blue-ribbon panel in that they will see the results of this outcomes review that has been going on for the past two years, and they will get that as a document.

The review of the funding formula. I talked about it a little bit, the breakdown of the per student grant and what it is expected to cover. One of the huge issues that we have with the Alberta school boards is the whole issue of flexibility, Mr. Chairman. The school boards, since they lost their right to tax, have continually requested us not to envelope dollars, because they say – and I believe rightfully so – that if we envelope the dollars, then realistically why do we need the school boards? Subsequently, what is included in the per student grant is the flexibility that we give the school boards to make the local decisions, to make the very important local decisions. It is included in those per student grants. How large the classes are is one of the issues. How many teachers? How many textbooks? Where are all these funds being spent? I don't think that I should tell the school boards how to allocate those dollars. I believe it's the school board's job. It's the school board that has to be accountable for doing that, and we will continue to ensure that accountability.

I believe I've mentioned to a small degree the equity of the funding formula. Again I'll comment that that's something that's extremely important. We need to look at each and every grant and find out if they are being equitable. Over the past three years, since I've been minister, I've probably made seven to 10 exceptions in the sparsity and distance issues, so when I start making that many exceptions, then we know there has to be something done, because the formula obviously isn't meeting the needs of a lot of the areas. So we are going to be dealing with the very difficult questions of how you distribute the dollars, what is the best formula to distribute the dollars. Again, I will give a pledge to the hon. members that it will be done not from my department alone; it will be done with the partners in education to determine how these will be allocated.

I've talked about the home and school association.

Motion 505, the review of the achievement tests. Absolutely, we review the achievement tests all the time. I will reiterate, though, that achievement tests are probably the most significant way we have of checking our curriculum to make sure that our curriculum is doing the right job. I feel strongly about that. I will not apologize for that. I believe it's one of the things that has made Alberta the number one education system in the world. I will not back away from the achievement test. If there is a better way to do it, absolutely we'll look at it. As a matter of fact, I think one of the issues that we have to look at is whether or not we can use these tests as a predictor of a child's ability. Again, I don't know that, but these are some of the things that we're looking at. How can we use these tests for even more information than what we have now? Can we predict by using them – and that's a question: can we? – whether a child will succeed later on in their grades or not? These are some of the very important questions.

Again, I'll just finish up here by agreeing with the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods about the distortion of school testing results. I do not agree with that. I do not condone it. No one in my department condones it, because quite simply what is happening is that these results are being used for someone's own means, their own methods, and are in no way endorsed by my department. The achievement tests are there to improve the system. They're there to get better results from the students, and that's something that this minister and this government believe strongly in. I cannot say what we can do about it other than what I've done already, and each and every time these rankings come out, I speak against them in public. I will continue to do that because I do not agree with it. As the hon. member has alluded to, it is but one point in time that is measured, and you cannot measure a student purely by that one point in time.

I will say one other thing though – and this is something that is very important – about the acceptance and credibility of the achievement tests. First of all, our people who make achievement tests are not people that we just pick up off the street and say: gee, why don't you make a test for grade 3s? These people – and I'm not exaggerating when I say this – eat, sleep, dream, and do everything about tests seven days a week, 365 days a year. Quite literally, they are obsessed with testing, and I thank them.

AN HON. MEMBER: They should be seeing someone.

DR. OBERG: They should get a life. But they do a fabulous job, and our achievement tests are second to none in the world. That's something that we always have to remember when it comes to that.

The other point that I will make is that 90 percent of teachers utilize the grade 9 achievement test as part of their student marks, 80 percent utilize the grade 6 achievement test for part of their student marks, and 70 percent of grade 3s utilize the grade 3 achievement test as part of the final mark. That is purely the teachers' choice. Again, as opposed to diploma exams, it's purely voluntary that these teachers have chosen to do so, and I think it's an excellent point.

I will reiterate that if there are any questions that I've missed, we will search through Hansard and give the results in writing. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose.

MR. PHAM: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It is my pleasure to join the debate of the budget for the Department of Learning today. I will try to keep my comments very brief because I have had a chance to provide input to the budget before. However, I want to focus the attention of the minister on the issue of funding for ESL students. I have been hearing for many years now that we have a severe problem of underfunding for ESL students. I have spent quite some time researching this issue, and it turned out that very clearly we as a government provide enough money for ESL students. However, the way that the money is being spent by the school boards is very questionable.

As all of us know, we provide what is called the basic instructional grant for every student who attends the system. For every ESL student we also provide a top-up grant. In Calgary, for example, I am aware that the school board spends the top-up ESL grant on ESL programs but spends almost nothing from the basic instructional grant on ESL students. An ESL student, for example, takes 70 percent ESL classes and 30 percent regular classes. In that case what he should have been receiving for the ESL program is the ESL top-up grant plus 70 percent of the basic instructional grant to make it fair, but the school board does not use that practice. Because of that, for the past many, many years ESL funding has always been underfunded and has caused significant problems for this population of students.

Many parents of ESL students also have asked me to ask the minister to support funding ESL for kindergarten students as well because many kindergarten students do have ESL problems, and because of that, they require this support. It is consistent with our policy to do early intervention whenever possible to help students achieve their full potential.

Another thing that they would like the ministry to look at doing is setting up a curriculum for ESL programs from K to 9. Presently we have an ESL curriculum for grades 10 to 12, but we have nothing for K to 9 at all, and because of that, there is inconsistency. Also, they question whether the students get the value for the time that they spend in the ESL programs.

Those are the points that I would like to bring to the minister's attention, and I look forward to his response.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. minister.

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much. I commend the hon. member for bringing these issues forward. First of all, ESL is a very important part of the education system. As a matter of fact, one of the first things that we did in our first budget was remove the cap on ESL so that each and every student is funded who is in ESL. The hon. member has an excellent point in that there is a top-up rate, and I believe it's around $750 per student on top of the roughly $4,300 that is in the per-student grant. He's absolutely right in stating that we give those dollars in a bulk amount to the school board, and how the school board distributes those dollars is part of the flexibility that I had talked about previously, Mr. Chairman.

I will certainly endeavour to take the issues that the hon. member has raised to the school boards, because I believe it's probably not just a Calgary school board issue. There are other school boards that have very similar issues, and I will certainly take that forward.

With regards to K to 9 and the ESL curriculum, we are presently working on K to 9 for an ESL curriculum as well. The hon. member has an excellent point in that.

Just to summarize, I believe that what the hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose has brought up are very important issues in his riding, and I will endeavour to do as much as I can as minister to ensure that these are followed through. I have been in that area of Calgary, but not in his specific riding, at some of the ESL schools, and I will commend the teachers and the staff for the challenges that they have. I will also add one other commendation, and that is to the students. I have never seen more attentive students, and when you consider that they have been speaking English for maybe only two or three months, the results that these kids are achieving are absolutely amazing. I would invite any member of the Assembly who wants to visit our ESL programs to take a look at that, because it is truly exceptional what is happening in our classrooms.

Again, Mr. Chairman, I will certainly take the hon. member's issues forward, and I would invite the hon. member to go with me to some of the schools. I'd be more than happy to talk to the parents that have raised these as issues as well.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate the opportunity to discuss with the minister today and through written responses in the future a number of issues. I'm sure that I will be raising some of the same issues that other people have mentioned as well.

I would like to first of all begin by addressing the mission statement here. Actually, I think the mission statement for this department is pretty good. Some of the departments have mission statements that I question or take issue with, but this one I think is probably about as good as mission statements are going to get in this kind of an area. I'm going to read it into the record here.

Alberta Learning's leadership and work with stakeholders build a globally recognized lifelong learning community that enables Albertans to be responsible, caring, creative, self-reliant and contributing members of a knowledge-based and prosperous society.

I think that's a commendable mission. While we're on that sort of a comment, in going through the principles, there's the odd word that I take issue with, but I am reassured that there is a section under goal 3 that specifically addresses the importance of citizenship. I think that that's crucial in a time when people are more and more regarding themselves or being regarded by others as, say, customers or as economic units or producers and so on, all of which of course is important. Ultimately, I'd prefer to think of Albertans as citizens first and as producers or consumers or customers or whatever else second. So I do appreciate and take some comfort in the focus on citizenship here in the goals.

My questions go all over the place. Some of them will reflect the fact that the University of Alberta is in my constituency and is the largest educational institution in the province and in fact one of the largest in the country. It will also reflect the fact that I have a large number of elementary and junior high schools in my constituency. I think I've been to all of them now as an MLA, and I've listened to many of the concerns.

Starting on page 303 of the business plan, I notice the support for adult learning line under expenses at the top of the page. The expenditures forecast for last year were $1,183,880,000, and there's a 6.3 percent increase, as I calculate it, for this year. You know, there are always trade-offs. People always want more, and there's never enough to meet every need. I don't have the figures here to adjust that 6.3 percent for changes in enrollment and inflation, but it's probably a workable sort of number year by year, although there are going to be some issues I raise in a minute questioning that.

My bigger concern is over the four-year interval from the forecast expenditure for last year up to the target for 2004-2005. Over four years, if my calculations are right, that's about a 12 percent increase, which works out over the four years to an average of 3 percent a year. I'm concerned that that is not going to be sufficient to keep the system going on a strong basis once inflation and population growth and so on are adjusted for. [interjection] Okay. The minister can explain the figures to me.

In any case, moving to some more specific issues here. There are questions and concerns – and they've come up at other times; the minister, I'm sure, will have an answer or an explanation from his perspective on them – around faculty development and retention in the universities, and that is a particular concern in my constituency. There's tremendous competition for top-notch researchers and teachers at postsecondary institutions, and the University of Alberta's ranking in terms of its faculty salaries is – I'm not sure of the figure off the top of my head, but it's not at the top of the ranks nationally. That issue gets brought to my attention.

I know that the government has funded a faculty retention program, but if I'm looking at the figures correctly, there is a drop in that budget. [interjection] Okay. My information may be wrong, and again the minister can explain that to me, so we'll get to that. It's certainly a priority concern for the province as a whole and for my constituency to ensure that we have the resources to attract and hold strong faculty for universities. There are, as I say, universities not just across Canada but around the world competing for the leaders in business – we had a business professor as a visitor here earlier this afternoon – in medicine, in fact in every area of postsecondary education. So I'll be interested in getting more information from the minister specifically on that issue.

Tuition fees, again an issue the minister is well aware of. It will crop up all the time as an area of concern, and I have some sympathy with students here, reflecting back on the tuition fees that I paid and what they're expected to pay now. There has been a dramatic increase, and the student organizations put out information that the rise in tuition fees in Alberta over the last decade has been, I believe, the highest among all 10 provinces. So there are ongoing concerns, and I do express these concerns as a way to bring them to the attention of the minister, once again, in terms of his budgeting exercises, the need to ensure that tuition remains affordable and is not a barrier to education.

Postsecondary institutions and schools across this province are turning more and more to business partnerships, and that raises all kinds of concerns. We've all heard debates in this Assembly and read concerns in the media over the grocery store high that may be developed in Edmonton, and I also hear concerns about business partnerships from the universities and the colleges, not just from faculty but indeed from communities surrounding, for example, the University of Alberta and community members who have raised questions about plans that the University of Alberta has for the University farm on the south side and the possibility that that can be developed through a series of business/university partnerships into a very substantial business park.

There are several different issues here. One of course is the chronic worry from faculty and from the public that businesses bringing funding to research projects and university programs will influence the research that's done or the nature of the teaching that's done or the nature of the facilities. I think that's a reasonable concern to have. It returns in some ways to my interest in citizenship, that we are all here as free citizens. The same kind of issue arises with the potential partnerships with schools and what signals, what messages we are sending to our students.

Now, the reason I raised that in a debate on estimates and budgets is that these organizations are turning to business partnerships because they feel constrained by their budgets either on the capital side or on the operating side, and I think that in some ways it's more on the capital side than on the operating side. So I would be interested in what information the minister might be able to provide on policies his department may have on the kinds of partnerships that educational institutions may get into with businesses. Are there any parameters or limitations on those kinds of partnerships?

This also raises a question that's very sensitive in my constituency around a particular section of the Universities Act that allows universities to be free of the zoning controls of municipalities. This has been a controversial practice at the University of Alberta in a handful of cases where the university has actually purchased what are by most of our measures commercial properties – and I'm thinking right now of College Plaza, for example, which is a huge apartment and office complex – and then has leased those back to private operators, and the private operators find themselves suddenly freed of all municipal zoning constraints. I do share the concerns of the people living in those areas that suddenly they're faced with a situation where a private developer can proceed with any kinds of plans free of municipal controls. Again the universities will argue that their financial constraints have driven them to this. I'm not sure that that's an entirely fair explanation, but that's why I raise it here in budget debates. I believe the Universities Act is up for review in the next year or two, and I think this will be an area of real concern. Any reflections the minister may already have on that I would be interested in, and I know that my constituents and the universities would be interested as well.

As well as being the health critic I'm the critic for aboriginal issues, and the minister of aboriginal affairs has exchanged information with me. I do want to reiterate to the minister a point that I also brought to his attention in Public Accounts yesterday. We are facing in the next 10 to 20 years an enormous challenge in meeting the needs of aboriginal students, and the time to be planning for that is now. We need to be adjusting our programs or anticipating that influx and the challenge that that influx will present to our school system now so that we're not caught by surprise. So any comments the minister has on that I would appreciate.

My colleague, my seatmate here, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, will be interested in my next comments given her ongoing concern for the rights and opportunities available to women. I am coming to the conclusion that we may need to pay special attention in our education system to opportunities for boys and men, and looking at the makeup of this Legislature right now, I'll get a lot of sympathy for that, I hope. I am genuinely concerned that with universities, for example, there's a very clear trend over the long term of a decline in the percentage of students who are males. I think 42 percent of students at university are male, and there's no sign of that long-term decline decreasing. There are also concerns that boys in school are not doing as well as girls, and there's a long-term trend there.

In fact, this first came to my attention when I was studying in Britain several years ago, and there was widespread concern in Britain that the emphasis on opening opportunities for girls had in many ways meant that the special needs of boys had been overlooked and that this was part of a culture that had developed in British schools that explained some of the bullying and roughness and hooliganism that you see in British schools. This was actually a subject of serious public debate in Britain. I would like the minister to consider, whether it's in this budget or in future budgets, this issue. It's easy to joke about it, but in fact I think that in the long term we do need to ensure that the opportunities for all students, regardless of their gender, are rich and inviting.

Moving on to another topic here, in our economy in Alberta the demand for apprentices is enormous. At the same time, I have heard concerns that the apprenticeship programs at NAIT are not expanding at the rate that one would expect. I don't have that information with me here, but I may be able to obtain it, or the minister may well be aware of it. There are in NAIT's plans – and I've seen the documents – suggestions that their focus on the traditional apprenticeship programs is flattening out, and it seems to me that this is a time when we should be looking at expanding those.

Along a similar line of specific training I again re-emphasize a theme on health that I've been hammering away on the last several days in question period: the need to ensure an abundant supply of health professionals, including ultrasound technicians, all kinds of technicians, RNs, LPNs. There has been debate on this point in the House. Frankly, looking ahead to the affordability of our health care system, one of the ways to help its affordability is to flood the market with qualified staff so that we can keep the system functioning well.

Moving back to the universities again, I'll just reiterate a couple of concerns that I do hear. One is around capital funding and infrastructure, the infrastructure deficit that especially the University of Alberta as the province's oldest university is feeling. The size of that deficit by their figures now is – I think it's in the hundreds of millions of dollars. They're very concerned about the deterioration of their physical infrastructure. [interjection] Okay; so it's over $200 million. I was aware of that general figure. We run that infrastructure down at our own long-term risk, and I'm sure the minister is aware of that, but I would like that to be considered in the budget planning here.

There are also of course operating funding concerns at the universities. The University of Alberta has implemented an enrollment cap as one way of dealing with that, and they are also looking at deficit financing. I am concerned that the university's plans to go into a short-term deficit for a couple of years and then pull themselves out of that is a risky, risky plan, and I'm concerned that we may be looking at the university getting into chronic deficit financing, which worries me.

I will also mention concerns that parents have brought to me. I think the minister has indicated that he will meet with some of the parents, but it's worth getting on the record that there is profound concern among parents at some schools in my constituency over the pressure they feel to fund-raise. This is an issue the minister gets challenged with repeatedly, but I need to repeat it here. I've met with the parents, and they are just feeling squeezed to the point of throwing up their hands and surrendering on this particular issue, and as I walk through the schools and I notice the condition of the buildings, I can sympathize with the parents. There is one school in my constituency in particular that is in a serious state of disrepair, and despite the building quality rehabilitation program I am seeing students in my constituency who are going to schools that are in poor condition.

Finally – I'm running out of time here – along those lines I'll repeat a concern that the minister hears, but it's a budget concern. Parents and schools feel at a loss at how to handle the demands with the curriculum for computers and technological equipment when they don't feel the budget is there to provide that equipment to them. That relates of course to the issue I mentioned a moment ago of fund-raising. It's not clear to me at this moment what the department and minister's plans are for budgeting for computers and technology in schools, how that is sorted out. Any information he can provide and any reassurance he can provide to parents that that will be sorted out would be much appreciated.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. minister, followed by the hon. Member for Airdrie-Rocky View.

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. The hon. member has raised a lot of questions here, and again I'll attempt to go through as many as I can, but we will provide written answers. I'll start by going backwards, if I may.

Technology in schools. Last year, as the hon. member knows from Public Accounts, we put in $60 million, and it was prorated over the next three years. I will add, though, that one of the important things that we're looking at in the learning system is how to evergreen the computers, how to ensure that we continue to have computers, and whether or not it's contracts, whether or not it's service contracts. These are some of the issues that we are grappling with right now. We do not have a solution to it, but it is very important, and I will assure the hon. member that we are looking at it. When we first started putting computers in schools, back to the 283s, I don't think anyone envisioned the growth of these computers and how it would occur that basically every three years you need a new computer. So we are looking at how we can do that. We're looking at potential opportunities. I will add one other comment. One of the things that I find distressing is that teaching staff is actually being used to service the computers, and I don't think that, first of all, that's a good use of teaching staff, but second of all, it's not their expertise. We need to find a way around this.

The fund-raising. Absolutely, we have to look at this as issues. I continue to hear it. I will send the hon. member a copy – and it's not included in the budget – of the actual amount of fund-raising that occurs in the province of Alberta. As I said in Public Accounts yesterday and as the Auditor General confirmed, we still have a ways to go on accurately reporting the amount of dollars that are fund-raised. Last year it was $64 million, and we have the breakdown of how those dollars were spent and how they were raised. I'll make sure that the hon. member gets a copy of that.

Deficit funding for the universities. Mr. Chairman, no university can run a deficit without my permission. What they will have to do if they choose to run a deficit is they will have to have a very good payback plan. I will not allow the universities to deficit away their future. So I'll give that assurance to the hon. member.

Capital funding. Although it is not in my department – it is now in Infrastructure – I do have part of the approval process, and I just want to say two things on this. First of all, the hon. Minister of Infrastructure is well aware of the capital backlog that is out there on the operation of the buildings, and he is coming up with a plan on how to deal with that. Again, I believe – I believe – that there was an increase in the funding component for the maintenance of the buildings, the postsecondary institutions.

One other thing I will add, though. One of the benefits of coming into this ministry when I did three years ago is that there were no cranes on the postsecondary institutions, and now almost every institution we look at around the province, there are cranes. There are buildings going up, whether it's NAIT, whether it's SAIT, whether it's Mount Royal, whether it's the University of Alberta, the University of Calgary, or the University of Lethbridge. All of these institutions are building new buildings, and I think that that's a real bonus for the students of Alberta.

The next thing was to deal with the health professionals. I will take exception to the hon. member's comments about flooding the market with qualified staff. I don't think that we should use our resources to train these people when there isn't a market for them. I agree with the member that there needs to be the right amount out there, and we do our utmost to determine what that right amount is and attempt to move towards that, but I don't believe that we should flood the market, although with his economics background he's probably correct in what he says.

On the apprenticeship side NAIT has had some issues. We've been dealing with NAIT on the issue of apprenticeship, and we do have that worked out, so I don't see that there will be the problem. Apprentices are very important. I will say for the benefit of the Assembly that the weakest link – and I'm not by any means impugning motives when I say this – is actually not at the education centres. The weakest link is out in the field, where there are not enough placements in the field. Our apprenticeship board does an excellent job. As I mentioned in my opening comments, we presently have reached over 40,000 active apprentices in Alberta. We are increasing by a net of about 140 a week.

So, Mr. Chairman, the apprenticeship industry – and I keep saying that – is truly a jewel in this crown, because they are world recognized, they're world renowned, and we get constant requests to go and apply our expertise around the world. For example, places such as Cuba are now utilizing our apprenticeship model. We will continue to do this.

Again some very interesting comments about the opportunities of men and women. I'm glad that they're sitting together so that they don't get into fisticuffs here now, but the hon. member is absolutely right. We are seeing a very substantial increase in the number of women going to university, which is great, but we are seeing a corresponding decrease in the number of men going to university and into postsecondary education. I believe, Mr. Chairman, that the secret to this does not necessarily lie in the postsecondary education but lies in the K to 12 system. We have to design a system that encourages males more. I know that 10 years ago it would have been heresy to say this, but we're actually seeing that occur now.

I go to graduations at the University of Alberta, the University of Calgary. The engineering faculty, for example, a faculty that traditionally has been all male, I would bet – and there's nothing scientific in the numbers that I'm saying – that 35 or 40 percent that are coming out are actually female now. I agree with the hon. member. I think that is good, but we do have to remember a part of the population that sometimes we forget, which is the males, when it comes to postsecondary and find a way to continue that.

I will add, Mr. Chairman, that in the G-8 conference that I went to two years ago – obviously, as the name implies, there are eight countries from around the world that make up the G-8 – this was an issue that was raised. How do we get males into the postsecondary? I also went to a Commonwealth conference, and in areas such as Africa their number one concern with education is: how do we get males into the education system? Because females were participating. I don't believe that we will ever fall down to the levels that they are in some of those countries, but I think it's something that we do need to be aware of and need to continue to be vigilant on.

The aboriginal students. Again, as in Public Accounts, I agree entirely with the hon. member. It is something that we're seeing, an increase in the number of aboriginal students in our population. We cannot and will not identify exactly the number of aboriginal students there are for a lot of FOIP reasons, things like privacy issues, but I will say to the hon. member that we are taking the proactive approach when it comes to aboriginal education. The two best examples that we have are with Edmonton public at Amiskwaciy Academy and the project – I'm sorry; the name escapes me right now – with Edmonton Catholic. What we're looking at with those two different projects is first of all an aboriginal high school, which is Amiskwaciy Academy. Although not exclusively aboriginal, it does specialize in aboriginal education. Second of all, we're looking at an inclusive approach to aboriginal education, that Edmonton Catholic is looking at. By doing both of these different approaches, we'll be able to look at the success. I truly say that probably both will be successful, and both will be flagships on what can be done with the aboriginal population in order to increase their level of education. They're very important elements of what we're doing.

The Universities Act. I agree again. Gee, this is a very awkward position for me today, Mr. Chairman. I actually agree with the issue about the zoning requirements in the Universities Act. I have talked to the universities extensively about this and urged them, even though it is not in the Municipal Government Act, to follow through on consultations with their public, to talk to their public about what is happening, and certainly they are doing that. I understand that the fireworks that were over there are not as bad as they used to be and it will continue, but the hon. member is absolutely right. We will be looking at the Universities Act within the next year, and I assume that this will be a large part of reviewing the Universities Act as well.

Business partnerships. I'm a firm believer that businesses are excellent partners in the postsecondary system. In saying that, I will also say that no researcher who should even be called a researcher would attempt to have his research influenced by a business or a particular company, because the minute that that occurs, their research becomes null and void. I would hope that no one does that at our universities, and I certainly have not seen anything that would indicate that that is being done.

On the other hand, businesses have some very important questions to be answered. For example, if one specific company has a problem and they need it researched, then I have no problem if our researchers are the ones that do it, as long as they give a fair, responsible, accurate answer, and it will not always be what the businesses want and what they look for. I believe that the businesses that we have working with our institutions are honourable businesses and that they want a true answer, because in the long run the truth will always prevail, especially when it comes to research projects and research activities.

So I believe that the business partnerships are something to increase. I think it gives a lot of opportunities. I think it brings our businesses into the university atmosphere, and even more important, the people that we are putting out of our universities are people that are going to be employed by these businesses, and we need to know what they want. We need to know the quality of our students that they want, and we have to strive to do that. [interjection] No. That was the other comment that I was going to make.

Each university and college is defined under its own piece of legislation. So, for example, the board of governors of the university can act very independently. I trust from the things that I say that they will make the right decisions, and I have no reason to doubt that they will. I trust that the administration will make the right decisions, and until proven otherwise, I will continue to maintain that trust in the institutions.

Tuition fees. I've talked a little bit about that in response to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona. The only other point that I would make is that the hon. member has raised the issue about our increases being more substantial than anyplace else. He's absolutely right. It has been the highest, but we also started from a lower point. Where our universities are in actual tuition with respect to the rest of the country is about in the middle of the pack. I believe we're around 23, 24, 25. When it comes to tuition across Canada, it is not an accurate assessment to take a provincial average on that. For example, the university in Charlottetown is a very small university and has almost no students. On the other hand, in Ontario there are something like 25 or 30 universities. So on the list of 45 universities we're about 23, 24, 25 when it comes to tuition. I'm by no means impugning anything in this, but I will just add that the tuition in the rest of the world is absolutely amazing when it comes to our tuition here. The price that we pay for our education here is still by far the best single investment that any family and any individual can make, and I would encourage all Members of the Legislative Assembly to ensure that their kids go to postsecondary education. That's sort of free-time political advice there.

The next question that was raised was on faculty retention. What is in here is actually an increase in the faculty retention from $28 million to $40 million this year. The $28 million has been added into the base budget, and there's been another $12 million that has been added on, so it is now a total of $40 million that will be continued on a yearly basis. I agree – you know, again I'm in this uncomfortable position of agreeing with the hon. member that our faculty are extremely important. They are being attracted by the numerous universities around the world, and we have to find a way to retain them. For that reason, we put the $40 million and did not say specifically how it must be spent other than it must be spent on staff. Each individual university has the ability to take that money and distribute it to their staff as they see fit. Some universities, for example, are taking it and putting it in a pot to attract the, quote, all-stars of universities, which are obviously very essential to university life. Other people are distributing it equally to all faculties. So it is up to the universities. We do have a faculty retention paper. We had a group of people take a look at this very serious issue, and hopefully that will be coming out in the next three or four weeks to a month.

The last thing that I'll respond to is the funding for postsecondary and what it is. Yes, it went up 6.3 percent this year, 2.6 percent next year, 3.2 percent the year after, for a total of 12.4 percent over three years. So it ends up being a little over 4 percent per year. I will reiterate, though – albeit I said this last year, I believe, in exactly the same location – that I wanted to ensure that I could deliver on these budgets. I hope that at some point the budgets will be improved, because I do believe that it is a good investment in education, but at this particular time this is what we can afford and can guarantee to the universities. If they do get more funding, then realistically it becomes a bonus. But this is something that they can plan on and that they can take to the bank, recognizing, as I say this, that I also said this last year, and following September 11 we were not able to live up to that. Barring another September 11, barring a huge financial crisis in the province of Alberta, this is something that we can live with.

With that, again if I missed any questions, we'll ensure that they're given in writing.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Rocky View.

MS HALEY: Thank you so much, Mr. Chairman. I won't take very much of the time in here, but there were a couple of comments that I wanted to make. First off, Minister, you know, it's been a fairly tough year between government and our schools, our ATA, and our Alberta School Boards Association, and the latest, the $54 million that isn't in this particular budget but will have to come forward at some point. Is that going to have any negative impact on any of your other programs? I guess that's sort of the angle I'm coming at. Will it in fact, do you think, help to heal some of the wounds that have been out there?

This is something that's really important to all of us as MLAs trying to deal with issues inside the schools, to deal with issues of parents' concerns, of students' concerns, of programs that have been canceled. You know, not just as an MLA but as somebody who had two sons that went through the public system, I have a huge appreciation for how hard so many teachers worked to make that education a good experience for my sons: one slightly more academic, and the other slightly more into perhaps the CTS model, where industrial arts was a huge thing in his life. It was an incredibly important thing to him.

I guess one of the things, Mr. Chairman, that I would like to get at is that we spent a lot of time in this province trying to develop an education system that is geared much more I think towards a postsecondary education, where you would move forward into a college or a university, and that's an admirable goal. It's unrealistic to think that all of our kids can achieve that. That is not where all of them are at. Some of them are much more technical and hands-on.

My question on this particular area would be: would we, are we, can we consider at some point looking at streaming some of these kids that are showing us by grade 8 or grade 9 that maybe they're not as academically inclined but much more able to utilize their hands in a physical way to move forward so that by the time they're in grade 12 and they're graduating from grade 12, they've already got some great momentum going on a career? We don't then have to take them from there and put them into something else for three, four, five years when in fact by the time they were 20 they could easily be earning a living, contributing to society, and having the best of all possible worlds. I'd just like to know. I'm sure that there are places around the province where that in fact occurs, but I don't think it's a general trend. It's very difficult in a city like Airdrie with 22,000 people. Inside the Rocky View school division we have 14,000 students. I know that my son couldn't have been the only one that would have benefited from that ability, but there is virtually nothing like that in my area, which is Airdrie-Rocky View. So could we, will we look at something like that?

With regard to the commission that's coming up, Minister, I think it is going to be one of the most fundamentally important things that happens in this province in the next five or 10 years, the impact, the potential that they have. This can't be just about, you know, what our pupil/teacher ratio is or a specific issue in a classroom. It's got to be bigger than that. We've got to look at the whole issue of how education is going to be delivered in the future.

I've got a virtual school in my riding, Mr. Minister, and it's just a phenomenal thing to be able to meet with these kids that have access to this type of an education. Their reasons for wanting to be in a virtual program are so massively various. It's everything from – some of them are figure skaters; some of them are big into showing horses. But they can access this education, do a great job on-line. They love it. I went to their graduation last year, just some of the coolest kids I've ever met and just so pumped about life and about their education and their opportunity. Interestingly enough, Mr. Chairman, some of these children were not necessarily academically inclined when they and their parents made the decision to move into a virtual school. Some of them just truly hated being in a classroom, and they were having trouble. This gave them another route, another opportunity, and I'm so proud that our education system has responded in that way.

I think the fact that parents and children have choices, whether it's a public school system, a Catholic school system, a virtual school, which is run by Rocky View, whether it's charter schools or home schooling or correspondence, the on-line aspect of everything is crucial. So I'd like some assurance that when your commission goes out there, they're not going to just look at the way it is but the way it can be to encourage kids to stay in school.

While it's not evident in here, I still think that our dropout rate is probably 25 to 30-some percent. I don't know, because it's really hard to find that number. You know, I have 800 graduates in Rocky View this year, but how many kids didn't graduate because they left in grade 10, 11, or 12? A lot of them come back, you know, maybe two years later or three years later. There's a great school here in Edmonton called Centre High, that attracts some of the kids that are having problems, who can go there and get their focus back. I've heard that it's extraordinarily successful, with 3,200 kids going through it last year. But we need to keep them in in the first place. We don't need them going out and wasting two or three or four years of their lives because they've not understood the value of this education.

I'm hoping that the minister would be able to maybe address that. This should be a performance measurement not just for government, not just for the Alberta School Boards Association but also for the ATA, everybody here. We are supposed to be a partnership, and I think that we've let a lot of kids down in this province.

We had years ago a term called "functional illiterate." We had kids that were graduating. They were getting their grade 12 diploma and were not maybe able to function properly or appropriately out in the world, and some pretty interesting negative comments rained down from the employers out there that were trying to hire kids that really could not do much of anything inside that workplace.

We need to make sure that when we look at our education system, when we have this wonderful opportunity with this commission, we look at all of it, not just the bits and pieces that perhaps a few special interest groups want us to look at but all of it, so that when we talk about education 10 years from now, we are leading the world in where education needs to be, what we're doing for our children, who will then in turn do it for the rest of us when we start retiring. We need them to have skills and a level of enthusiasm about this province.

I would also like to see their government studies enhanced to the point where maybe some of them really understand what government is. Government is just people representing them. We are not some huge bureaucracy sitting up here passing arbitrary laws on them. Rather, we are members of their communities. We are people, just as they are, who need health care, who need education, who need good roads to drive on, the same as every other human being in this province. And I need those roads, Ed.

I don't want to really spend much more time other than to say that there was a mark of a great civilization going back hundreds and hundreds of years. When a kingdom, you know – it could have been an empire of some kind. If you really wanted to know if it was going to succeed, you knew it by the level of the people that were attracted to it. Those people were educated people. They were people that were great artists. They were people that made their communities better. Ours is better because we have a good education system that at times borders on great. We have a good university and college system. I think of Olds College, which is close to my riding, just one of the most phenomenal places, and it is partnerships that have made it great. They have done a phenomenal job there. I'm extraordinarily proud to even have my name ever associated with Olds College. I think that some of our universities could take a page out of Olds College's book, by the way.

I think that if Alberta is going to continue to do as well as it does, it must continue to strive forward on education. It's not a we/they situation. It has to be an us. It's better for all of us. Thank you for your time, Mr. Chairman.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. minister.

DR. OBERG: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Very, very quickly I just want to address a couple of issues. When it comes to the comments about the functionally illiterate, I want to reassure the hon. member that on the recent exams that were done worldwide, we finished number one in reading. So I think that myself and my previous colleagues who have had this ministry have done a very good job on the reading side of it, and I will especially commend the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness for the early literacy initiatives that he introduced when he was the minister.

I will just reiterate what the hon. member said about choice. We have several different school systems, be it the public system, the separate school system, the Francophone school system, that have a myriad of schools, be they charter schools, virtual schools, storefront schools, hockey schools. You name it. I believe that's one of the biggest advantages of our system.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: There are two additional members who have indicated that they would like to speak. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, and if time permits, I'll recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

MS BLAKEMAN: Oh, my goodness. Okay. I know my own colleague, the critic, is also interested in getting up. A couple of topics I'd like to touch on, then, for the minister. At this point I expect that it'll just go into Hansard, and he can respond in writing to me.

I'd like to talk about translation, women in the curriculum, apprenticeship for women, research, and fetal alcohol syndrome kids, and some lottery funding money. So a couple of questions.

When I look under 2.2.1, operating support for basic education, it looks like the support from the lotteries for basic learning increased by 35 percent. Now, I questioned the minister in Public Accounts the other day; in fact, it was yesterday. If this is a core program, then why is gaming revenue being used to support it? The government is on record as saying that it's not using gaming revenue for core programming. Certainly that's what came out of the gaming summit. So I'm hearing two messages at the same time from the government. If I could get clarification, please.

Under 3.1.3, Learning television, I'm wondering about the major commitments of lottery money that are going to fund operating expenses such as Learning television. I think in fact that one of my colleagues had asked a question the other week in question period about how much each department was putting into supporting Learning television. So if I could get that answered.

The minister spoke in the past about the on-line curriculum repository. I'm wondering what steps the minister has taken to provide the additional computers that will be required by this on-line curriculum repository. This is a real concern for my schools. All of my schools are classed as inner city. I recognize that the minister's going to make fund-raising illegal, but that doesn't matter to us because none of my parents can fund-raise because they're all working. So we're wondering where we're supposed to come up with a computer per kid and one more at home so that they can read their new textbooks on-line. Perhaps there's a strategy being developed there. Perhaps it's a partnership with business, as the minister just talked about. We're just interested in how that might be coming about.

I think that other people have already asked the minister about an update on the native students policy and program, and I will leave that. One of the things that's happening in my schools is we have always had a very high percentage of immigrants and new Canadians in our schools. Where people that have just arrived tend to go is to the very low-cost housing areas, which are in the centre of the cities at this point. Three years ago I think in one school about 60 percent of the kids were of Asian heritage. It brought us up to about 85 or 90 percent of kids from other areas, Africa and the Slavic countries, and a small percentage of off-reserve aboriginal children. That percentage of off-reserve aboriginal children is now increasing quite a bit, and some of them need support.

I'm wondering: given what we know about the increase of FAS and FAE, is the minister looking ahead and how is he looking ahead in future budgets and business plans at a comprehensive program to work with these FAS/FAE children? I am seeing this as an increasing stress or pressure on our system, certainly a concern for all of us, who want all children to do well, yet here we have a specific group of kids who will likely not do well. How does that affect their classmates? Once they're out of school, it affects a whole bunch of other things, but let's start with where we can do something, and that's in the school system. I'm looking for what specifically this ministry is looking to do: what kinds of programs, money that's dedicated to it, evaluation and monitoring. I'd like to see a comprehensive program laid out where everybody is aware of what's going to happen here.

As I was just mentioning, of the kids in my schools there's a very high percentage of immigrant and new Canadian kids. I'm wondering if there's money in the budget for translation or how the minister expects that schools in Edmonton-Centre and schools in other constituencies, I'm sure, are expected to cope with translation. It's something that we have to do. If we're going to send notes home with kids, they have to be translated if we really intend that the parents are going to get the message. I was recently in a school talking about a project that I'm sponsoring in the community and was told flat out that I'd better translate into eight languages and was then told what the languages were. They're not kidding. When they send home important notices to parents, they must translate. Now, in some cases they can get someone that will provide this service for free, but this is not something that's easy to do. This is a difficult task for someone, and they don't remain a free volunteer forever. In some cases you can't get anyone who will donate the translation services, so you're paying up front for those every time. That is a cost to these schools, and they're willing to and must bear it, but I'm wondering where the minister comes in on this one, or is it just something that they have to cope with?

Women's curriculum. I'm encouraging the minister to continue to look at incorporating women's contribution and women's history into the curriculum. We still don't have the Famous Five as part of the curriculum in Alberta schools, and I think that is an onerous oversight. Before I leave office, I would certainly like to see that happen and to know that I was able to encourage the government to include that. I mean, we've got little girls in Alberta that don't know what nation builders we had in this province in the Famous Five. [interjection] That's true. We've got big girls that don't even know that.

Also, I'm looking at the whole area of apprenticeship, which also falls under this. Now, we know we have a shortage of skilled workers. I'm wondering whether the minister has looked for any programs that are particularly targeted to encourage young women to move into apprenticeship programs in the trades. They always tend to get slotted into hairdressing and secretarial, and frankly there are only so many secretaries and hairdressers that you can get in the world. There are only so many positions, and frankly those girls would make a lot more money if they were welders and plumbers. [interjection] Well, honest to goodness, look at it. How much does a secretary make? How much does a welder make? I mean, my brother is an ironworker. That boy is going to retire. I'm going to end up working till I'm 85. He's a freedom 55 guy. You know, he's been careful with his money, but he's worked darn hard, and he has consistently made more money per hour than I have. So good on him. He's worked darn hard for that and in some pretty crappy weather outside. But young women could be making that kind of money too. I'm encouraging the minister to look at that, and I'd like to have some kind of concrete answer back.

I'd just like to pick up on something that the minister said about research, where he felt that no researcher worth their salt would ever taint or slant their research product to please a sponsor. Well, I'm sure that does happen somewhere, but I think what we really have to be concerned about here are two other things. One is: who gets chosen for research? If what you are trying to do isn't attractive to sponsors that are coming in with the big bucks, you're not going to get the research money to do your project in the first place, so that's a form of selection. The other form is self-censorship. Someone goes: well, I could work on these three different projects here that I'm really interested in; I'm going to pick the one that I think is going to attract a sponsor. Right there is a self-selection, a self-censorship. So projects never even get brought forward now because there's such an emphasis not on academic research and pure research but on how do I make the sexiest grant proposal to get money out of whatever: Merck Frosst or Coca-Cola or Nike. That in itself, I think, is tainting our research – tainting is too strong a word – colouring our research. I just wanted to make that point with the minister. That's why we need academic institutions that are reasonably funded, so that they don't have to go looking for that kind of money for every research project that they're going to do.

Those are the points that I most wanted to raise. The other ones I will perhaps direct to the minister in writing, and I'd appreciate getting a written response to the questions that I've raised so far. Thank you.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'll use the remaining few minutes. The minister has kindly agreed not to speak and to respond, I guess, in writing.

I was quite struck by the observations that were made by the hon. Member for Airdrie-Rocky View in terms of questions and advice to the minister. She did speak about the need for having some information on why high school girls and boys drop out, how many drop out, what percentage drops out, what reasons are there for which they drop out. We need to know this. So my question to the minister on this one is: as part of his study that the blue-ribbon panel will do, will he charge this committee with asking some of these questions and getting some research done so that we have the answers? Otherwise, we'll continue to speculate, and if we base our actions on speculation, they won't deliver the results.

Another set of words that the hon. Member for Airdrie-Rocky View used were when she referred to the deep wounds that have been left behind, perhaps, by the teachers' dispute with the government, and she raised questions about: are there provisions in the budget to deal with some of the problems that arise from that? I think it's an important reminder to the minister to pay attention to it. I strongly concur with the member if that's what she said. I don't want to put words in her mouth, but I think that's what she said, and I think I want to reinforce that, that the minister needs to take some concrete action to deal with it and settle these matters before they do serious, permanent damage to our education system, that has taken so long to build.

I was going to ask the minister if as part of his commission's terms of reference the postsecondary education system is going to be at all addressed. If not, I would ask the minister if he has on his agenda to set up a working committee or a commission to address the challenges that we face in the postsecondary system. Many of them have been referred to, including the one on participation patterns of young people not only along gender lines, but I'd remind the minister again that there are income-related disparities there that are emerging in terms of participation.

One of the studies that I referred to earlier, done by the senate of the University of Alberta itself, draws attention to the fact that 88.6 percent of students believe that students from middle- and high-income brackets are more likely to attend university than those from low-income brackets, and I think it's a pattern that needs to be broken if it is there. We need the minister to pay some attention to it, get some research done, and tell us what policies he has to counter these developing disparities in terms of participation, be they related to gender, be they related to income or to rural/urban areas. My suspicion is that some of these disparities may have to do with urban/rural participation rates, and we need to pay attention to it. Otherwise, rural areas will continually suffer from accumulating disadvantage resulting from our inability to address these.

Having made these brief remarks, I want to just return very quickly to a few other points and to the need to review the Universities Act, particularly with reference to the ability of the universities to override zoning requirements that are in place and are used by municipalities to address the concerns of particular communities that may be affected by new developments, traffic flows, population concentrations, and what have you. The Member for Edmonton-Riverview indicated that part of the university falls in his constituency and he hears their concerns. The other part of the university falls rightly in my constituency, the Garneau area. With College Plaza, that he referred to earlier on, this new development certainly caused a great deal of concern among the residents of the Garneau area, a substantial part of my constituency. I had to meet with the community members for several months to address some of their concerns, and they are not satisfied with the resolution that the university presented to the concerns that they had.

Similarly, Garneau area residents were very concerned just a few months ago about a new student housing development north of 87th Avenue in the Garneau area. Again I met with the community representatives. They have a great deal of concern about the growing indifference on the part of the university to respond to the concerns of the surrounding communities. So there is a need, I think, particularly with reference to the ability of the university to override the zoning requirements, for this to be reviewed as part of the Universities Act review.

The minister made some comments on the benignness and the desirability of business partnerships. I don't think the business partnerships are of unmitigated benefit to universities. Universities as academic institutions have a culture which is very distinct and different from that of the business organizations. We don't have to be critical of business organizations to recognize the value of academic culture in itself, but there is something called hidden curriculum. If the business presence on campuses and schools becomes pre-eminent and the overall direction of university functions gets so closely tied to business needs, we will then find a new kind of curriculum emerging there. The values that begin to dominate the scholarly work, the learning, and so on and so forth – universities can get very much influenced by the business ethic rather than by the ethic of doing research, pursuing knowledge, pursuing discovery for itself in its own right.

Think of the government as a society. We need to be careful not to damage, not to limit the ability of knowledge-producing institutions and have them become always concerned about what business will say. Autonomy in their ability to do research and engage in research is very important, and so is it important for the development of future generations of scholars and scientists and policymakers. They also need to be able to think critically, independently, and value the autonomy of university organizations.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, but pursuant to the understanding agreed to unanimously by the Assembly earlier this afternoon, I must now put the following questions.

After considering the business plan and proposed estimates for the Department of Learning, are you ready for the vote?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

Presentation to the Assembly of Mr. Doug Griffiths Member for Wainwright

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, I would now invite the hon. the Premier to proceed to the bar of the Chamber.

Hon. members, I have received from the Chief Electoral Officer of Alberta the report of the returning officer for the constituency of Wainwright containing the results of the by-election conducted on April 8, 2002, which states that a by-election was conducted in the constituency of Wainwright. The said report further shows that Mr. Doug Griffiths was duly elected as the Member for Wainwright.

[Preceded by the Sergeant-at-Arms, Mr. Klein escorted Mr. Griffiths to the Mace]

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I would like to present to you and through you to all Members of the Legislative Assembly the new Member for Wainwright, Mr. Doug Griffiths. [applause]

THE SPEAKER: Let the hon. member take his seat.

head: Introduction of Visitors

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Wainwright.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce some guests that are seated in public gallery. They're dear friends of mine, family and people who helped on my campaign to allow me to be here today. So I would like to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly – as I call your name, if you'd stand up – Coady Hayden, a friend of mine, Brian Heidecker and Donna Bagdon, Darlene Jensen and Ron Jensen, Maurice Chaisson, Marvin and Gayle Lawrason, Tyler Lawrason, Ken and Donna McNeil, Pam and Scott Ferguson, Fred and Marg Dibben, Phyllis Flynn, Gordon and Shirley McClarty, Jim Klassen, Elaine Bruggencate, Ted McKenzie. Please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood.

MR. MASYK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's with great pleasure today that I introduce a wonderful constituent of Edmonton-Norwood, Mr. Ron Tomyn. Ron began a career with the department of highways in 1951. He became a project manager in 1953, and he retired from Alberta transportation and utilities in 1987. Then with 35 years of road-building in his blood he accepted an offer to work on one final project and ended up staying 14 years to retire again just short of completing a 50-year career. Upon completion of the last project they nailed his work boots to railroad tracks in Hines Creek. He was fair and just to owners and contractors alike, and he is still pictured carefully inspecting the workmanship of the roadways he helped build.

Mr. Speaker, it must be somewhat emotional for Mr. Tomyn to visit the House. His late father, Mr. William Tomyn, served in the Legislature as an MLA for three separate constituencies for a total of seven terms. William Tomyn served the constituencies of Whitford and Willingdon from 1935 to '52 and Edmonton-Norwood from 1959 until his retirement in 1971. Mr. Tomyn had a reputation of being one of the Legislature's best orators and most outspoken members. Before becoming one of Alberta's longest serving politicians, Ron's father began a career teaching in 1926 in a one-room schoolhouse with 53 students at Plain Lake.

Mr. Speaker, again it gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and to this Assembly both a wonderful Albertan and a son of another. Mr. Ron Tomyn is here today with his wife, Marianne, and his granddaughter Michelle and son-in-law Norm Taron. Mr. Speaker, they're sitting in your gallery, and would they please rise and accept the warm traditional welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you.

head: Introduction of Guests

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Premier it's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly another group of guests from the Alberta Public Affairs Bureau. This group of public servants is visiting the Legislature today to learn more about the building and how the Legislative Assembly works. I would ask them to rise as I call their name and remain standing, and at the conclusion we would give them the customary warm welcome of the Assembly. Chelle Eisworth, Keltie MacPherson, Karin Neil, Helen Oldham, Tammy Peacock, Otilie Sanderson, Sheldon Staszko, Bill Strickland, Sandi Walker, and Diana Worsley. Welcome.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly 18 students from Sir Alexander Mackenzie school in St. Albert. They are a particularly bright group of students. They are here this week for a week of School at the Legislature. They are seated in the members' gallery, and they are accompanied by their teacher, Catherine Coyne, and her assistant, Wanda Sagmoen. I would ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

MR. RATHGEBER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is with great pleasure that I rise today to introduce 10 very special students from various schools within the Calder constituency. They were a winner and nine finalists in the My Alberta contest, sponsored by the hon. Minister of Children's Services. The My Alberta contest was a chance for students from all over Alberta to celebrate the future of their province in words and pictures. I had the finalists and the one winner as my guests at the Legislature. They've toured the building and we had lunch together. I'd ask Amber Caissie, Nikki Murray, Justin Aquino, Jerris Randall, Lindsay Scott, April Claro, Jun Jun Claro, Krystle Duquette, John Caduhay, and Carol Singh to please rise – they're in the members' gallery – and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

MR. HUTTON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure for me today to stand and recognize a constituent of mine, and I'd like to introduce her to you and through you to the members of the Assembly. Michele Bentley is one of those severely normal Albertans that we hear so much about but so little from. She is one of the silent majority, one of those people that loves to live and work in this province. She has a full-time job as a partner in a business and is raising a fine young man who's 16 years old at Ross Sheppard high school. She is sitting in the members' gallery, and I would ask her to please stand and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a really enthusiastic group of visiting students. These are 67 grade 8 exchange students, and they are visiting us from Quebec. They're on an exchange program with students from Victoria high school. They are accompanied by teachers from both Victoria and, I think, parent leaders from Quebec, and they are Heather Steinke, Anne Bentham, Mitzi LeDuc, Jean-Pierre Fabien, Denyse Verret, and John Jessop. The guide said that this was a very well-behaved group. They were very impressed with them. I would ask that they now please rise and accept the warm welcome of the Assembly.

head: Oral Question Period

THE SPEAKER: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Children in Care

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last Thursday in Red Deer another child in the government's care died. My questions are to the Minister of Children's Services. Can the minister tell us whether implementing the recommendations of the Korvette Crier report could have prevented this death?

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member opposite knows, this is a huge tragedy. It is a death that has been investigated by the RCMP, and thus far we're understanding that it is a tragedy that is accidental and in fact happened in a foster home that provides services through an accredited agency, Kasohkowew. It is one of our delegated authorities. We are saddened, and we are reviewing the circumstances that surrounded this death.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister tell us if there will be a full review of the Kasohkowew society given that this is the same society that supervised the placement of Korvette Crier?

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, there will be and in fact there has been a resumption of the authority of child welfare delivery services by the officials in my department through the services provided through the CEO in Keystone. We have presently got officials and last Friday had officials in fact in Kasohkowew. They have assumed the supervisory role. It is not without angst by the good people that are in Kasohkowew, but we want to ensure that the vision and values of child welfare services are provided as thoroughly as possible.

I should review also, Mr. Speaker, that since 1999 there have been a number of reviews, including management teams that have been in place there, people that have been providing assistance. In February of this year there were staff from the provincial offices of child welfare reviewing the documentation and the files. We are currently continuing with that review but clearly in a more intense fashion given the nature of the tragedy last Thursday.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the minister: as of today which recommendations of the Korvette Crier report have you been implementing?

MS EVANS: Well, Mr. Speaker, I would think that we have done everything conceivably possible to hopefully prevent this tragedy, although there is certainly one more thing that could be done. I would encourage the hon. members opposite to encourage their Liberal cousins in Ottawa to fund for prevention and other circumstances on the reserves in this province. It would make a heck of a difference.

THE SPEAKER: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the minister: how will the minister ensure that services provided to aboriginal children by aboriginal societies are held to the same standards as other service providers?

MS EVANS: Well, Mr. Speaker, first of all, we have recognized that with 18 delegated authorities there are 18 directors on reserve. We work with INAC, and we work with our partners in Indian and northern affairs as well as with child welfare officials in surrounding regional authorities. It's at times very challenging. We do our best to publish the standards, to make sure those standards are available to them, to provide liaison through the native liaison units, six geographically placed units throughout Alberta. We take time to invite them to sessions and offer them training sessions. I think that to the largest extent possible we do our best to ensure that standards are followed, but there is a real frustration not only felt by the chiefs themselves and the band council, which the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo and I met with last Friday, but a growing frustration that there are not always the resources there that are available from the federal government, and where that happens, we do provide our own resources and supplement what is there. But let's not ignore the fact that presently what we know about this situation thus far is that this is a tragedy and a very sad tragedy.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Moments before, the minister referred to the number of reviews that are going on about the processes. When will the minister take responsibility and let Albertans know what changes in process are coming forward to better protect children in this province?

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, we have a number of authority manuals that have been produced. We produce annually a report that talks about not only the business plan but the outcome measurements that have been achieved. We provide for each region a report; they do their reporting regionally. If the hon. member is asking for what particular and specific things we're doing through the native liaison units, I would be pleased to publish that. We do not undertake delegation lightly, and I should be very clear: there's some very good work going on in the reserves and in the Metis settlements of this province. I think that if there are any aspersions there, there ought not to be. There are also some huge challenges, that we're trying to work with them on, in terms of our child welfare delivery. I'll be pleased, if the hon. member is quite specific about regions – I presume that Kasohkowew would be one – to table those in tomorrow's session.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I asked for changes that were going on.

My next question is to the Premier. Mr. Premier, how many more problems have to come in this ministry before the government will step in and make sure that the processes that are in place to protect Alberta's children actually work?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I have the fullest confidence in the hon. Minister of Children's Services. She is tremendously sensitive to issues such as the one to which the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition alludes. She accepts with a great deal of consideration and care every recommendation by every person or group commissioned to do reports. Unfortunately, tragedies do occur in society, and when they do, we undertake, or at least the minister undertakes, to have a full examination, a full investigation of the circumstances, and where improvements can be made, they are made.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to say just one more thing. This minister has tremendous care, tremendous concern for the young people of this province, and I have full confidence in her.

THE SPEAKER: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

1:50 Case Plans for Children in Care

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In a critical rebuke of the actions of the Department of Children's Services, the Court of Appeal denied an application that would delay the filing with the courts of approximately 600 case plans for children. My questions are to the Minister of Children's Services. What is the explanation for noncompliance, given that the department was aware of the problem over two years ago?

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, three times in the last two years different court judgments have been made dealing with the adherence to providing plans. One of the critical factors has been that in the presentation for temporary guardianship, when a judge received the request for a temporary guardianship, they also received verbally an outline of the plan that had been provided to the parents, and at times in the past some chose to suggest that that was sufficient. There have been other court cases that have been filed – and I could go through a critical list or table that – but essentially we recognize that this is a contradiction of the Child Welfare Act, that under every circumstance a plan must be filed. I'm assured that presently there are plans available to be filed for all of those children. Since we have had the most recent decision last week that stayed our opportunity relative to the temporary guardianship order, through the child welfare directors in each jurisdiction we have had them review all of the files and where necessary go out and reapprehend those children to make sure that we are at all times doing the one thing that the temporary guardianship order intends to do, and that is protect the safety of the child.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: what action did the department intend had they been granted a nine-month delay? They didn't tell the courts.

MS EVANS: Well, Mr. Speaker, we fully intend – and today compliance is the order of the day in every circumstance. We intended to do whatever was essential to assure that where a child was still in a temporary guardianship order, the plan was in place, that the monitoring of that temporary guardianship was complete. Many of the ones that are assumed under that 636 number may have already changed their status, and it would require an individual file review and action to be taken by the director pending what the outcome of that review was. It's entirely possible today that some of those children are already back with their families, and in some cases, tragically, I'm told that we can't locate some of those parents, because those are children that have been taken into protection sometimes because parents have not been available to do the job that parents should be doing.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given that the department told the court that "compliance would be costly and that resources are scarce," does the minister stand by statements that budget cuts have not hurt children?

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, $674 million, almost $675 million spent on the children of this province that are at risk: I am not going to accede to the hon. member's view that we are not providing sufficient dollars. There are times when dollars may not be spent in the exact focus they ought to be. There may be times, as in this case, which are regrettable, when plans weren't filed, but we are certainly spending more than any other province is spending for children at risk.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party.

Health Care Disputes Resolution Process

DR. PANNU: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The federal government and nine provincial governments have agreed to set up a process for adjudicating disputes over the Canada Health Act. Under this process, however, only the final report of the disputes resolution panel will be made public. Everything else is kept secret, with the average citizen frozen out of the process. My questions are to the Premier. Does the Premier support giving ordinary citizens a voice in the disputes resolution process, or is he satisfied that this process should be the exclusive preserve of the federal and provincial governments?

MR. KLEIN: It's an interesting question, and I guess I would have to hearken back to the days of Mme Marleau, who was then the federal Minister of Health, who arbitrarily ruled that we were in violation of the Canada Health Act relative to ophthalmology clinics and those clinics charging facility fees, a practice that had gone on, as I understand it, for about 10 years previous to her making her ruling. I don't recall any public consultation. As a matter of fact, there wasn't even consultation with the province.

Mr. Speaker, certainly as we go through the Mazankowski report or the Premier's Advisory Council on Health, there may be some areas that will give rise to a challenge of the interpretation of the Canada Health Act, and certainly there's going to be plenty of opportunity to hear from the public relative to the implementation of the Mazankowski report, but if it comes down to an area of constitutional dispute within the social union framework, then this is a matter for governments to iron out. We think it's only fair that a third-party dispute resolution mechanism be put in place so that the federal government is not the judge, the jury, and the executioner.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Will the Premier commit to making representations to the federal government and his fellow Premiers to open up the dispute resolution process by giving citizens the legal right to trigger complaints?

MR. KLEIN: Well, Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that any citizen has the legal right in a free and democratic society to initiate any kind of action or to urge any body of government to initiate any kind of action. Ultimately, it's up to the governing body to decide whether or not that action should be taken.

DR. PANNU: The Premier is avoiding answering my question, Mr. Speaker.

Let me ask my final question. If the provincial government has the right to trigger the dispute resolution process, why shouldn't citizens of this province have the same right?

MR. KLEIN: Well, Mr. Speaker, I guess they do have that right, but my gosh, if you have a thousand or 2,000 or 3,000 individuals who want to challenge a thousand or 2,000 or 3,000 different components of health care, there would never be any time nor would there be the resources to address all of these issues. We have to have a reasonable and a responsible way of dealing with these disputes. We've gone a long way – it's been a six-year process – to get a dispute resolution process in place, a process, by the way, that hopefully will involve three independent citizens of Canada to decide whether in fact a jurisdiction is in violation or not in violation of the Canada Health Act.

THE SPEAKER: Mr. Clerk, would you stop the clock, please. Hon. members, this is rather unique. The hon. Member for Wainwright would like to introduce some visitors that he has in the Speaker's gallery. He is the next member to be recognized, but we'll stop the clock.

The hon. Member for Wainwright.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the indulgence. In my nervousness, I suppose, I forgot to introduce some of the most important people in my life, my family, who are sitting in the Speaker's gallery. So I would like you to rise, please, when I call your name: my cousin and his wife, Sheldon and Crystal Hudson; my aunt Sheila Smith; my uncle Jim Hudson; and my aunt and my cousin, Pam and Scott Ferguson; and then last but not least, my parents, Keith and Maureen Griffiths. Please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: Mr. Clerk, we can restart.

The hon. Member for Wainwright.

Rural Development Strategies

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. During my campaign to become the member of this Assembly for the Wainwright constituency, I often had discussions with my constituents about the need for rural Albertans and the provincial government to work together to develop a comprehensive plan for rural development. Many of these discussions centred on the need to ensure that assistance is provided to the agriculture community in tough economic times. However, many also expressed a desire to see rural development considerations and initiatives that extend beyond the scope of agriculture. My question is to the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. What types of initiatives is your department undertaking to assist in the progress of rural development within and beyond the agriculture sector?

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, certainly rural development is important to this government and a very important part of our department's mandate. Recognizing this, we've begun to lay the groundwork on what we see as a renewed emphasis on rural development. We've created a rural development initiatives office, that will play a very key role in the evolution of a rural development strategy for our province.

Mr. Speaker, first I believe we must understand what the barriers may be to rural development before we can address some of those issues. We certainly know that there's a great advantage to living and working in rural communities. We know that this framework that we're laying out and working with Alberta Economic Development on would improve the knowledge of many people of the initiatives of rural development. I would just like to add that I have been in contact with the Hon. Andy Mitchell, who is with the rural secretariat with the government of Canada, who also supports rural development initiatives and certainly, on hearing our initiatives, is eager to work with us on a national strategy for rural development.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental is to the same minister. Given that rural development projects and plans must compose a vision for the future and that the future of this great province is our youth, what kind of youth factors is your department considering in your plan for rural development?

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, certainly we would agree that the strength of our future in this province is our youth, and I think that is demonstrated clearly in a number of department initiatives and our overall government mandate. There is no question that 4-H is the prominent program for youth in this province. We have been and will continue to be a very strong supporter of this program. I know that the hon. member is familiar with it because my investigation showed that he is a former 4-H'er, and he would know that it helps to develop leadership skills and decision-making skills and brings us future leaders, which I would suggest we have in this Assembly today as a good example of that program.

As I indicated in this Legislature just I think last week, there was some concern about our support for 4-H. I think we've clarified that, and we will continue to be the province that supports 4-H and youth development leadership skills to the greatest extent of any province in this country.

MR. GRIFFITHS: My final supplemental, Mr. Speaker, is to the Minister of Economic Development. Can the minister tell us what's being done to attract businesses and industries to rural Alberta in order to provide our young people with more opportunities?

MR. NORRIS: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think it should be evident to everybody in the House that with hard-hitting questions like that, this member has a bright, bright future.

I would like to talk seriously for a moment about rural Alberta, Mr. Speaker, as it's vitally important to our department, and we have a number of initiatives that I would like to explain to the member. First and foremost, we work . . . [interjection] If the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie was outside of Edmonton ever, she would know that rural Alberta is very important, very important. [interjection] Come on now. Outside of Edmonton, very important.

We work very closely with the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development, and we're working on a blueprint of such, that should be available within about six months. The idea of that is to simply say: if you have an idea, a business, or want to expand one, how do you access all the services that this government has? Part of the problem quite simply is that sometimes people aren't aware of all the good works that we do as a government, and we want to help with that.

Secondly, Mr. Speaker, we spend approximately $500,000 a year supporting regional alliances. Quite simply put, these are alliances of areas with similar geographic and economic interests. There are now 11 of them in the province, one of which the member is representing, the Battle River alliance. As a matter of fact, we just gave in excess of $5,000 to that region to develop their regional alliance.

Third, Mr. Speaker, we have provincial offices throughout the province which are charged with dealing with rural development issues. I will invite the member to join me after session, and I'll explain a little further about that.

I want to close by saying one thing, Mr. Speaker. As every member in this House now knows, Alberta is slated to lead the nation in growth for the 11th consecutive year in a row. It should become obvious to everyone in this House and with the help of the new member that rural Alberta is a massive part of that, and this department will do everything it can to continue. . .

AN HON. MEMBER: Speech.

MR. NORRIS: Yes, it is a speech. It's a vitally important topic.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. minister. Gee whiz, maybe we can all go out for a soda now.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, followed by the hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In 1983 the board of review that contributed to the current Child Welfare Act released a report on Alberta's child welfare system that painted a very bleak picture. It stated that "some children were apprehended and put in temporary placements where they remained for a long time before anything was done to plan their futures." In other words, children were taken from their families but no plans were put in place for their care. To the Minister of Children's Services: 20 years later, how does the minister justify that children are still being taken from their families without proper plans being made?

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, the issue is not the lack of proper planning. The issue is the lack of doing the due diligence of filing it in court. I can assure the hon. member that plans are in place for the children and that parents have been made aware of those plans. The issue of not filing has been one that we're addressing.

Mr. Speaker, may I also remind this hon. member in this Assembly that last week the hon. Speaker suggested that the time for debate of the bill was during that time designated on our agenda. Perhaps the hon. member could provide that after 9 o'clock tonight when we're in Committee of the Whole.

DR. TAFT: Well, in light of her comments that the plans are there but not filed and given that the Child Welfare Act requires by law that a case plan be filed within 30 days of a child being apprehended, why is the minister refusing to enforce the law?

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, there is no refusal to enforce the law.

DR. TAFT: Well, then, Mr. Speaker, does the minister expect these children themselves to take a buyer beware attitude to Children's Services?

MS EVANS: No.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Travel Clubs

MRS. JABLONSKI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last year two of my senior constituents were invited by phone to attend a marketing presentation for a travel club and receive a gift certificate for a lovely dinner. After being treated to great hospitality, they were convinced to sign a contract for a membership to a travel club that would provide them with discounts on future vacations. These seniors were told that when you buy a time-share, you have seven days to reconsider. They paid approximately $8,000 on their credit cards. The very next morning when they had second thoughts and phoned to cancel their contracts, they were told that this contract was not a time-share but a travel club membership and therefore did not have the seven-day legal opt-out clause to cancel their contracts and that their money would not be refunded. This has happened to many other Albertans. My question is for the Minister of Government Services. What is this government doing to protect Albertans who join travel clubs?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. COUTTS: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The policy of the Department of Government Services and this government is to make sure that we continue to have the strongest consumer protection legislation in Canada as well as the regulations to follow up on that. As the hon. Member for Red Deer-North so astutely put out in her preamble, there is a difference between buying a time-share and there is a difference between travel agencies and a new phenomenon in the marketplace called travel clubs. So it's our policy to stay up with the new phenomena in the marketplace. As such we've received over 400 complaints about travel clubs and the very things that the hon. member mentioned. As a result of those complaints, we went out and did a public consultation. We found out that travel clubs should be regulated, and as a result of that, on May 17 of this year the regulations for travel clubs will include such things as making sure that a travel club has a licence as well as posting security bonds or some kind of security so that it protects the customer in case the travel club cannot fulfill its obligation.

The other thing is that we want to make sure that the travel clubs themselves as well as their employees follow a code of conduct. The other thing that we've done is made sure that in these regulations the length of a contract for a person to be in a travel club can only be up to five years and does not have to be lifelong. I think that perhaps the most important thing to remember is that contracts must be in place so that it prevents the kinds of things that the hon. member's constituents had the misfortune of going through.

MRS. JABLONSKI: Thank you. To the same minister: how does this new regulation protect consumers against unscrupulous individuals?

MR. COUTTS: Well, Mr. Speaker, the new regulation can really assist consumers in several ways. What we've done is taken a look at the contract, making sure that it has a 10-day cooling-off period. So if a person feels that they have been pressured into signing a contract, they'll have a 10-day period in which they can cancel. I think that that's a really important component to protect people against unscrupulous individuals.

As well, should a travel club not perform the services that it said it was going to perform or the business go out of business, an individual has an opportunity to cancel that very same contract. Again, by limiting the contracts to five years, that provides a tremendous amount of protection for her constituents.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MRS. JABLONSKI: Thank you. To the same minister: will this regulation also deal with unscrupulous companies?

MR. COUTTS: Well, absolutely. That is the whole focus behind the regulations, Mr. Speaker. The mere fact that a travel club must be licensed gives us an extra tool for protection in terms of enforcement. Once you know that a travel club is up and running, they must be licensed, and it provides us with an opportunity. If we find that there are complaints against that business, we can go in and investigate, and if we find that they have violated their contracts, we can either suspend or cancel their business licence.

Under the Fair Trading Act of Alberta, which is Canada's strongest consumer protection legislation, Mr. Speaker, there are fines of $10,000 or up to three times the cost of the violation of the offence, whichever is greater, plus two years in jail for an offence. I'm proud to say that now, today, travel clubs are regulated under the Fair Trading Act, which provides the protection that is needed by all Albertans.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Electricity Deregulation

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Premier told this Assembly on April 10 that the costs that were increasing for electricity transmission capacity will be paid for by retailers and generators. My first question is to the Minister of Energy. Will the minister guarantee that those costs won't somehow be downloaded onto consumers, who are already burdened with expensive monthly bills?

MR. SMITH: Mr. Speaker, as the Premier said, with any power that's used for export, the transmission of that power, the generation of that power, and the payment for that power will be held outside of this province, which is the definition of export, and will not be held by Albertans.

MR. MacDONALD: Again to the same minister, Mr. Speaker: since there is little need for outside power if we have enough power generation in our province, will the minister ensure that if additional export lines are built, it will be at the expense of those who will benefit directly, the generators?

MR. SMITH: Mr. Speaker, the member is being consistent in having a totally erroneous preamble to his first supplementary. In fact, there is a continued need for low-priced, reliable electrical generation in this province. In fact, that is why, since the new competitive structure came into this marketplace, we have been adding some 2,000 megawatts of different types of power: wind power, biomass power, power applications from coal, and natural gas cogenerated. That power-generating opportunity will continue to be available to those investors who want to take the risk to invest in this great province.

MR. MacDONALD: Again to the same minister, Mr. Speaker: given that power deregulation has turned out to be expensive for the consumer and unreliable – that is certainly not erroneous – can the minister now, before committing to new export lines, explain to this Assembly how the guidelines that are being developed across the United States will restrict the import of electricity that comes from sources such as coal, which is the majority of our future expansion in this province?

Thank you.

MR. SMITH: A very appropriate question for a motion for a return, Mr. Speaker, but again the preamble is wrong. Therefore the general assertion of the question is wrong, and it would be difficult for me in the remaining important time of question period to correct all the usual tedium of errors that come from the member.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

G-8 Summit

MR. CENAIKO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In two short months Alberta will host the 2002 G-8 summit in Kananaskis. Also in two short months many Albertans will be enjoying their summer vacations in Alberta's Rocky Mountains. My first question is to hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Affairs. How much is the G-8 summit going to cost Alberta taxpayers?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, the federal government is responsible for the G-8 summit and for all costs directly connected with that summit. The federal government has committed to reimbursing the Alberta government and the municipalities for costs directly related to the G-8 summit. We are working to establish clear agreements with the federal government with respect to funding, particularly with respect to security, which is on everyone's mind.

As far as the actual cost of this particular major event, Mr. Speaker, I do not have a specific amount at this particular time. I am sure it's going to be substantial. I understand that it has been reported, not by this government or necessarily directly by the federal government, that there is speculation that it's going to be in the tens and tens and perhaps hundreds of millions of dollars. But that is something to put in context, and we will have to wait to find out the final bill when it is established.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. CENAIKO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental question is to the hon. Solicitor General. What is this government doing to ensure the safety of Albertans and indeed tourists from around the world from the potential impact caused by protesters in and around the Kananaskis area?

2:20

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MRS. FORSYTH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the hon. minister has indicated, this is a federal responsibility, all aspects of the G-8, including security. The Alberta government is assured by Ottawa that all security steps are being taken to keep Albertans and all the delegates safe while they're at the conference. We meet regularly with the federal government and the security planning groups, including police and other security officials. We have made it very clear to the federal government that we want the appropriate security measures to be in place. The frequency of these meetings has increased as the date draws nearer. We believe that protesters have the right to protest and engage in peaceful protest. However, steps must be taken and are being taken to ensure the safety and security of delegates, visitors, and all Albertans.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. CENAIKO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Summer is just around the corner, and many families are planning their vacations right now. My final supplemental question is to the Minister of Community Development. What is the minister doing to ensure that Alberta's tourism industry in Kananaskis Country will not be unduly affected by the demonstrations that have accompanied major international summits in the past?

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Well, Mr. Speaker, we're doing quite a lot by way of working closely with the federal government on this, respecting the fact that it is essentially a federal government initiative, at the request of the Prime Minister. We're well aware that within the next three weeks or so Alberta's campgrounds will again be wide open to the public, and we're expecting people to start taking up the offers to attend. So what we're doing specific to Kananaskis Country and the G-8 issue is that we're working with the summit management office there, working with IIR over here, working with the Solicitor General over there, and doing our best, with the RCMP, to make sure that the security that is in place is both responsible, available, and accessible quickly, and that is going to try and help Kananaskis Country remain as open as possible.

I'll just close, Mr. Speaker, by saying that on March 15 I did announce that 95 percent of the total land base within K Country will remain open to the public for camping and recreational use during the G-8 summit in June, and as soon as the summit is over, we'll try and be open for the Canada Day weekend with everything in place.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Talisman Energy Inc.

MR. BONNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week the Minister of Revenue suggested that Albertans ought to increase their tourism in Sudan for the benefit of that troubled African nation and the Alberta companies that invest in it. This advice was given even though Sudan is a war-torn nation with a horrible record of human rights abuses and the Department of Foreign Affairs advises Canadians not to travel to this country due to safety concerns. The minister's comments were made as he was defending the government's decision to continue holding shares of Talisman Energy, an Alberta company that is facing a lawsuit in New York over its involvement in Sudan. My first question is to the Premier. How can the Premier's minister defend the government owning Talisman shares when his comments suggest that he is not even aware of what is happening in the Sudan?

MR. KLEIN: Well, Mr. Speaker, that begs a question – and one of our hon. members has alluded to it – and that is: does he? Does he? I've met with groups who both are opposed to the existence and the operations of Talisman in Sudan, and I've met with officials of Talisman, who explain their side of the story, and there are two sides to this issue. You know, there are the allegations – and, of course, that is the subject of a court action – of Talisman taking advantage of some of the opportunities that exist in Sudan relative to oil exploration. There is the other argument, that Talisman is contributing quite significantly to the development of the economy in Sudan and is moving to eradicate poverty in that particular country. So there are two sides to this story, as there are to virtually every story. The hon. minister is entitled to make whatever comment he wants. I'm sure that he has the facts that are satisfactory to him, and I would suggest that the hon. member of the Liberal opposition get all of the facts, not just one side but all of the facts. And if he hasn't already met with Talisman, I would suggest, out of courtesy and out of fairness and out of a sense of wanting to get the facts, that he meet with Talisman.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. BONNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Revenue: given that analysts feel that shares of Talisman Energy are undervalued due to its holdings in Sudan and that the company faces a class action lawsuit in the United States, is this company maximizing its value for Alberta shareholders by doing business in the Sudan?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. MELCHIN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to first clarify some comments in the preambles that are taken substantially out of context and continue to be misplaced, in the sense that my comments go back to the assertions that the hon. member brought forward by bringing innuendo and potential slanderous types of comments about a company with no facts or basis of evidence. So when we look at the investments of the Alberta heritage savings trust fund, I do think it's important to acknowledge that we do own shares of Talisman in the Alberta heritage savings trust fund. We invest in the TSE 300. We don't invest with regards to one company in particular, but we invest in the indices. These companies have to meet regulatory requirements. They are required to abide by the laws of the land. I think it's also important to note that these companies have to be good global citizens. In fact, it was Canadian companies that led the creation of a code of ethics for international businesses for Canada. Talisman is one of those and has signed on to that code of ethics. As I said previously, unless there's evidence that has proven them guilty, we always assume innocence in this country.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. BONNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question is for the Premier. Given that Talisman's share price will undoubtedly suffer if it loses the lawsuit, wouldn't it be prudent to get the province out of Talisman before then?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, the question is entirely hypothetical. There are a lot of ifs, and that's the most dangerous question to answer: a question that has in it "if." It calls for an opinion, it calls for speculation, and the question, as I pointed out, is entirely hypothetical. The investment policies of the Alberta heritage savings trust fund as a matter of principle and as a matter of policy are extremely well thought out, and we are not about to risk the money that rightfully belongs to the people of this province. A great deal of due diligence and attention and care is paid to all investments, whether it's Talisman or any other company.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, followed by the hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Kyoto Accord

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Last week during his media availability the Premier was asked a question about whether or not he would support a first ministers' conference on the subject of Kyoto. The Premier replied that he would give the matter some thought, and given that the first ministers' conferences are very serious and important affairs, that was a reasonable position. Ten minutes and several questions later the Premier apparently decided that he had given the matter enough consideration and called for a first ministers' conference on Kyoto. My first question is for the Minister of Environment. Did the Premier consult this minister about the idea of a first ministers' conference on Kyoto during the 10 minutes in which the Premier considered the idea?

THE SPEAKER: Hon. minister, please . . . We're dealing here with government policy, and the minister is not bound to respond on any internal consultations within the Executive Council, but his choice.

MR. MASON: Mr. Speaker, then I guess I have no choice but to direct the question to the Premier, who wanted it all along. Did the Premier consult with either the Minister of Environment or with the minister of intergovernmental and international affairs prior to deciding to make a public call for a first ministers' conference on the Kyoto accord?

MR. KLEIN: Absolutely not, Mr. Speaker. I can make those decisions. You know, I'm very, very happy that the hon. member was paying attention, but actually this was a wonderful suggestion that came from a member of the media, Mr. Waugh, who's sitting up there. I thought it was such a good suggestion. As a matter of fact, my answer to him was that I said: that is a good suggestion; I think we'll do that.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if the Prime Minister agrees to a First Ministers' Conference – and by the way, I'm receiving some word back now from my colleagues across the country. Premier Campbell thinks it's a good idea. I'll be discussing it with Premier Hamm, with Premier Binns from P.E.I. The new Premier of Ontario hasn't had a chance to get his head around this yet, I don't believe, anyway. If the Prime Minister agrees to a first ministers' conference on Kyoto, which is a matter of tremendous importance, there will be full and complete consultation with both the Minister of Environment and the Minister of Energy, who, by the way, are working on an Alberta plan, that hopefully can become a Canadian plan, which I hope to present to that particular meeting, that would in my mind create a much better solution to this problem of global warming and greenhouse gases than the arbitrary, very restrictive, very punitive nature of the Kyoto accord as it now stands.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that there is already an energy and environment ministers' meeting in May, a western Premiers' meeting in June, a first ministers' meeting in August, did the Premier even consult with his own schedule to decide whether or not another national conference was needed?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, no, as a matter of fact, but I'll tell you that if the Prime Minister agrees to a first ministers' conference, I will adjust my schedule.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ethanol-blended Gasoline

MR. JOHNSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question is for the Minister of Energy. The federal Natural Resources minister, Herb Dhaliwal, is said to be seriously considering a law that would force oil companies to mix ethanol with motor vehicle gasoline as a way to cut greenhouse gases under the Kyoto protocol. Could the minister tell us the provincial position on this suggestion?

MR. SMITH: Well, Mr. Speaker, the position is that there are market forces at play with the price of gasoline in this province as well as any other province. Ethanol as an additive would increase the price. Now, if I refer the member to the previous comments of the Premier, this I think is an outstanding topic for a first ministers' conference on the Kyoto protocol.

MR. JOHNSON: To the same minister: could the minister tell us what potential impact the federal minister's suggestion might have on Alberta's energy industry?

MR. SMITH: Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Petroleum Products Institute, which does represent the downstream oil and gas industry or the service station side of it, believes that there is evidence with current technology that ethanol will not bring large and substantial cuts in greenhouse gas emissions, but we do know that decreased demand for gasoline product would negatively impact western Canadian refiners. In fact, this province is ensured of good-quality oil refining over the next 50 to 70 years with the oil sands decision to upgrade the Shell Scotford refinery and the Petro-Canada refinery.

Those well over 311 billion barrels of proven reserves in the oil sands will ensure that we have good-quality refining in this province.

MR. JOHNSON: Mr. Speaker, my final question is for the hon. Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. Could the minister tell us what potential impact the federal minister's suggestion might have on Alberta's agriculture industry?

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, there's certainly no doubt that if the federal government was to mandate the blending of ethanol, it would raise the demand for the product in Canada. In Alberta ethanol is produced from wheat, so increased demand for ethanol would certainly offer another value-added opportunity for our province's grain growers. Interestingly enough, I recently met with a group of seed growers who identified triticale as a very good crop that could be used in ethanol production. We certainly would support the increased ethanol industry in the province. We have the infrastructure. We have the supply of product to do it. We estimate that it could be from $100 million to $130 million per year in increased activity. However, I think we also recognize, as I think the Minister of Energy just pointed out, that the marketplace will be where this is decided. If consumers want ethanol-blended gasoline, then I'm sure the industry will provide it, and we in the agricultural industry will be happy to participate.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Energy to supplement.

MR. SMITH: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I just wanted to add that Alberta has in fact been a pioneer in ethanol production with the Mohawk oil and gas company. That Mohawk company has subsequently been purchased by Husky, and you can drive up to your pump today and get an ethanol-injected full tank of gas.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, before calling on the first of seven hon. members to participate in Recognitions today, might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

head: Introduction of Guests

(reversion)

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

MR. CENAIKO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a constituent of the hon. Minister of Energy who is seated in the members' gallery. Mr. Tyler Shandro, son of well-known and respected physician and specialist in Calgary Dr. Bud Shandro, is here with us this afternoon. Tyler has just completed his first year of law school at the University of Calgary and has signed on to work as my summer student in the Calgary-Buffalo constituency office. I would ask Tyler to stand and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Recognitions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Robinson Koilpillai

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I stand today to recognize

Robinson Koilpillai and his wife, Helen, for whom a national tribute was held on Saturday, April 27, at the Maharaja banquet hall in Edmonton. I join, in fact, every party in this Legislature who was there that evening in echoing the words of the Governor General, who stated that it is a pleasure to congratulate Robinson Koilpillai for his 42 years of outstanding service to his community, his country, and his fellow Canadians.

As an educator, school principal and community volunteer, he speaks of tolerance and teaches without prejudice, rising above the barriers of race, creed and religion. His many accomplishments, most notably as the Minister of Multiculturalism's Man of the Year in 1980, as Member of the Order of Canada and as a member of the Canadian Human Rights Commission, demonstrate a lifetime of commitment to promoting the dignity and respect [of all people].

At a time when he could easily retire, Mr. Koilpillai continues to strive for global peace and justice as the chair of an international symposium celebrating Canada's diversity.

We recognize him for his outstanding contributions to his country.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Medicine Hat.

Parks and Protected Areas Volunteers

MR. RENNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I would like to recognize Alberta parks and protected areas volunteers who were honoured at the annual volunteer roundup held in Cypress Hills interprovincial park this past weekend. Outstanding achievement awards were presented to 13 individuals and four organizations for their exceptional efforts in Alberta parks and protected areas. Each of these award recipients represents the imagination, enthusiasm, and spirit of over 2,000 Albertans who volunteer almost 100,000 hours of their time to Alberta parks and protected areas every year.

Alberta parks volunteers are young and old, rural and urban. They are neighbours and friends, organizations and individuals. What they all have in common is a keen willingness to help others and a passion to make a difference. Our volunteers provide a priceless service to the people of Alberta, assisting in the management of over 530 parks and protected areas in our province, that attract over 8 million visitors every year. I ask all members of this Assembly to join me in congratulating the 2002 Alberta parks and protected areas volunteer award recipients.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood.

Kathy Holland

MR. MASYK: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This afternoon it's a great pleasure for me to recognize an outstanding play school teacher from the Balwin play school in the Edmonton-Norwood constituency. The parents of Balwin play school have nominated Mrs. Kathy Holland as their teacher of the year. The parents cited Mrs. Holland's 13 years of tirelessly running the Balwin play school in an excellent fashion and their desire to recognize her for her efforts. Some of Mrs. Holland's other outstanding qualities as play school teacher include the high-quality level of her crafts, stories, activities, and field trips; her concerted efforts above the call of duty to ensure that each child is safe, happy, entertained, and learning; her special ability to transform a group of occasionally unco-operative three and four year olds to a happy group of singing and participating children; the way that the children listen to her and follow her instructions because she has developed a caring relationship with each one of them.

To conclude, Mr. Speaker, Mrs. Holland is a kind, gentle, and humble lady who treats all of the children that she cares for so equally. Congratulations, Mrs. Holland.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Brock Berger
Ian Draper
Dylan Weir

MR. JOHNSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to recognize three young men in my constituency from the town of Millet: Ian Draper, Dylan Weir, and Brock Berger. When the four Canadian soldiers were tragically killed two weeks ago, these three 13 year olds went door-to-door in Millet asking the townspeople to hang Christmas lights on their houses or hang Canadian flags in their windows in memory of the Canadian soldiers who died or were injured in Afghanistan. The people of Millet responded to the boys en masse, and lights lit up the sky every night until the four soldiers were buried. These three boys have shown an exemplary spirit, and they have demonstrated that the youth of Alberta, especially those in Millet, have a great understanding of the realities of the world. They have shown leadership that will serve them greatly in all their future endeavours. I commend Dylan, Ian, and Brock for their inspiring actions and unwavering Canadian spirit, and I also commend the town of Millet for their show of support for our soldiers in Afghanistan.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Centre for IBM E-business Innovation

MR. HUTTON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise today to recognize the Centre for IBM E-business Innovation, located in downtown Edmonton. In this centre clients will be able to successfully do business on the web with everything they need under one roof. The Edmonton centre will leverage the knowledge, skills, and experience of IBM's worldwide network of e-business innovation centres. Initially the innovation centre will feature industry specialization, health care solutions building on development with Alberta Health and Wellness as part of the Alberta Wellnet partnership. IBM employs 1,800 Albertans. Many of these employees export their skills and talents to IBM clients outside of Alberta. The new innovation centre will bring business strategists, application developers, and other specialists together to help Alberta companies move to the next generation of e-commerce.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Redwater.

Memorial Service for Canadian Forces Casualties in Afghanistan

MR. BRODA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I would like to recognize the many volunteers, organizations, Northlands Park, the city of Edmonton, the surrounding municipalities, and their citizens for their tremendous support of our military families and the Edmonton garrison as Canada honoured its military at Skyreach on Sunday, April 28, 2002. On behalf of the constituency of Redwater I would like to extend my condolences to the families who lost their loved ones, to the wounded a speedy recovery, and our gratitude to the brave soldiers who continue to risk their lives in Afghanistan in the fight against terrorism. We salute you.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Christine Burdett

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to recognize a remarkable Albertan, a defender of our health care system, the Alberta chair of Friends of Medicare, Christine Burdett. Ms Burdett has worked tirelessly for many years in a volunteer capacity to protect our cherished medicare system. She has traveled all around this province, sometimes with a government truth squad following her, delivering a message to the people of Alberta that a public health care system allows them to be safe in the knowledge that all citizens, big and small, strong and weak, rich and poor, will receive equal care and that for-profit health care is an oxymoron, because the moment care is entered for profit, it's emptied of genuine care.

She knows that strengthening and sustaining our health care system and at the same time protecting it from entrepreneurial interests must remain our pledge to Albertans. I salute Christine Burdett for her continuing efforts working with thousands of Albertans to fight this government's agenda of privatization as imbedded in the Mazankowski report.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Presenting Petitions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to present a petition signed by 100 Albertans petitioning the Legislative Assembly to urge the government to "not delist services, raise health care premiums, introduce user fees or further privatize health care."

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

THE CLERK: Pursuant to Standing Order 37.1(2) I wish to advise the House that the following documents were deposited today by the Minister of Gaming with the office of the Clerk: a letter dated April 16, 2002, from His Worship Mayor Bill Smith to hon. Mr. Stevens, Minister of Gaming, regarding an approved community lottery board grant to the city of Edmonton and a letter dated April 24, 2002, from the hon. Mr. Stevens, Minister of Gaming, to His Worship Mayor Bill Smith responding to Mr. Smith's letter of April 16, 2002.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

MR. MARZ: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table five copies of a resolution from the village of Linden which states, "Be it resolved that the Village of Linden does not endorse ratification of the Kyoto Protocol."

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a series of tablings today. The first is from Kath Rutland, who is opposed to what is happening in Kananaskis and the special places.

The second is a series of letters from Albertans who are concerned about how teachers are treated in this province. They include Jason Holowka from Calgary, Leif Andersen from Grande Prairie, and Jane Iaccino, Dr. Robert Walker, Deanna Simmons, and Greg Balanko-Dickson from Edmonton.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With permission I have two tablings this afternoon. The first is a court judgment over the failure of the director of child welfare to file a plan for care under the Child Welfare Act. That was dismissed in the Court of Appeal.

The second is also an April judgment from the Court of Appeal where the government had asked for a delay of nine months of the April decision, and that was denied by the courts.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

REV. ABBOTT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table the requisite number of copies of a letter from Wetaskiwin regional public schools, and it's indicating that they are very supportive of the aims and direction of Bill 205.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. With your permission I would like to table the appropriate number of copies of a press release from New York dated February 25, 2002, and this was put out by human rights attorneys Carey D'Avino and Stephen Whinston. These lawyers were part of the legal team that represented Holocaust victims in a recent lawsuit that led to a $1.25 billion settlement from Swiss banks. In this press release they are filing an amended complaint in the United States district court for the southern district of New York against Talisman Energy Inc. adding the Islamic government of Sudan as co-defendant. The complaint alleges that Talisman and the government are violating the human rights of Christians and other non-Muslim minorities in southern Sudan by conducting a deliberate campaign of ethnic cleansing to clear the land for oil exploration.

Thank you.

2:50

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Medicine Hat.

MR. RENNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of a resolution of nonsupport for the Kyoto protocol from the town of Bow Island, Mayor Alan Hyland.

MR. JOHNSON: Mr. Speaker, I rise to table copies of a letter from the town council of Millet indicating nonsupport for the Kyoto protocol.

MR. SMITH: Well, Mr. Speaker, I would like to join the cavalcade of opposition and table the requisite number of copies of a resolution of nonsupport for the Kyoto protocol from the metropolis of Coronation.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: Do you have another one?

MR. SMITH: Yes, I have another one, Mr. Speaker. I'm sorry that I couldn't get the appropriate number of copies, but I am tabling a letter from Talisman Energy to the Hon. Murray Smith, Minister of Energy.

The statements made by Mr. Bonner regarding the civil war in Sudan are indeed concerning and unfortunately are accurate regarding the terrible toll the long running conflict and famine has had on the people of Sudan. However his comments that the situation in Sudan are getting worse and that Talisman is somehow complicit in human rights abuses or acting unethically in its business activities in Sudan are categorically untrue.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. minister, the tabling will not be accepted unless we have the appropriate copies. So at the appropriate time we'll do that.

The hon. Minister of Community Development.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table five copies of the news release that I issued on April 29 which contains the names of 13 outstanding individuals and five outstanding organizations, all of whom are volunteers that support our parks and protected areas. I might just point out quickly that over 2,000 Albertans volunteer their services to our protected parks and protected areas. It was a fine conclusion on Saturday to National Volunteer Week, when my colleague from Cypress-Medicine Hat was in Elkwater and able to present these awards. So these are there for everybody's names to be recognized.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table two documents. The first one is a public opinion survey sponsored by Friends of Medicare. The results of the survey clearly show that 6 out of every 10 Albertans are opposed to allowing more private, for-profit health care delivery in Alberta. It also shows that 62 percent of Albertans believe that the government is going in the wrong direction when it comes to protecting health care in Alberta. The third result of this very significant survey shows that more than two-thirds of Albertans, or 70 percent, are opposed to the increase in health care premiums by 30 percent.

The second tabling, Mr. Speaker, is the appropriate copies of a letter that I received over the weekend from Mr. Claude Dube of St. Albert, who expresses grave concerns about Bill 205 and urges me and all other MLAs to oppose this bill.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first tabling is a document from a nonprofit organization, the Canada Place Child Care Society in Edmonton. This document bears the signatures of 71 individuals requesting the Premier and his government to "reverse their decision and reinstate the Alberta Community Lottery Funding Grant Program."

The second tabling is a document from the Calgary Coalition for the Income Support Review. This document details the economic and human costs of poverty in Alberta and was presented to the Calgary Conservative MLA caucus on March 15, 2002.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Redwater.

MR. BRODA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish to table the appropriate number of copies of a resolution of nonsupport for the Kyoto protocol from the town of Gibbons, in my constituency. They do not endorse the ratification of the Kyoto protocol.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Orders of the Day

head: Written Questions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Proper notice having been given on Thursday, April 25, it is my pleasure to move that written questions appearing on today's Order Paper do stand and retain their places with the exception of written questions 1 and 2.

[Motion carried]

Stockwell Day/Lorne Goddard Court Case

- Q1. Ms Carlson moved on behalf of Mr. MacDonald that the following question be accepted.
How many hours did the Department of Justice and Attorney General dedicate to the Stockwell Day/Lorne Goddard case?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Solicitor General.

MRS. FORSYTH: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Minister of Justice we are rejecting the written question. All Alberta Justice staff do not keep track of the time they have spent on any particular issue, matter, or file. Alberta Justice does not know and cannot ascertain how many hours its officials or staff dedicated to the Goddard/Day case.

MS CARLSON: Mr. Speaker, it hardly seems reasonable or proper that a legal department, be it government or outside of government, does not keep track of their hours. Certainly there is some kind of accountability, whether they be billable hours that go out to a client or billable hours that go into a department. It seems completely unbelievable that this government wouldn't keep track of that kind of information, particularly a government that prides itself on modeling itself after business practices and seems to talk about cost centres and about efficiency and effectiveness. How can it be that the government does not keep track of hours on files? It's just not possible that that could be happening.

[Written Question 1 lost]

Access Television

- Q2. Ms Carlson moved on behalf of Mr. MacDonald that the following question be accepted.
How many different programs, shows, advertisements, or other initiatives have been provided or sponsored in part or in full by the Department of Human Resources and Employment for use on Access Television, and what was the cost of each for each of the fiscal years 1992-1993 to 2000-2001 and April 1, 2001, to March 13, 2002?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the hon. minister I'm responding and indicating that the government will be rejecting Written Question 2.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie to close the debate.

MS CARLSON: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Once again we see a government that talks about being open and accountable but won't present basic information. Albertans have a right to know how much money this government is spending on these kinds of issues. It's absolutely unbelievable that they would reject this question. We see time after time the ministers skirt the issues in question period by telling us: ask it in a written question or file for a motion for a return. Then when we do that – we've heard that very same thing today – when we do exactly that, what do they do? They reject the request for information.

So, Mr. Speaker, I would ask this minister and this government how they can ever be open and accountable when they won't share the information with Albertans?

head: Motions for Returns

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Proper notice having been given on Thursday, April 25, it's my pleasure to move that motions for returns appearing on today's Order Paper do stand and retain their places with the exception of motions 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, and 8.

[Motion carried]

Peace Country Bison Association

- M2. Ms Carlson moved on behalf of Mr. MacDonald that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of correspondence including but not limited to letters, e-mail, or phone messages between the office of the Premier and the Peace Country Bison Association.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to indicate at the outset that I will be responding on behalf of the Premier and indicating that our government will be rejecting this particular motion for a return. I'd like to just comment briefly about why that is the case.

First of all, as members across the way will do from time to time, they will ask for certain things that perhaps might conjure up certain images about certain individuals or the activities of certain individuals, and that may well be the case here. However, I would simply say that this particular motion for a return and the two that follow it are all of a similar nature. All three are in fact quite unnecessary, so on behalf of the Premier I will be rejecting all three of them.

I think I should make it clear however, Mr. Speaker, to everyone that it's true that our Premier does own some bison and, yes, there is a very good friend, Mr. Marvin Moore, a good friend of the Premier, who does look after these bison on his behalf. In fact, many people will know that Mr. Marvin Moore was the campaign co-chair of the last provincial election, did a wonderful job, and most of us who are here if not all of us will have benefited from his excellent work in that regard. I should also clearly state that the Ethics Commissioner has been made aware of the purchase, and he has responded that he has no concerns.

In sort of concluding the wrap-up here, I just want to say that there might be some people who would not like to see our Premier involved in support for the agriculture industry, but in this case he is involved and this is one way that he's involved, by providing his support to that important industry in our province. Also, I believe that some members opposite may have written to the Ethics Commissioner asking for that particular office to look into the Premier's ownership of the bison in question. Mr. Speaker, once again, the Ethics Commissioner had no concerns with this particular investment.

So just to be very clear, on behalf of the Premier our government will be rejecting this particular motion and the two that follow it, which are all very similar in nature.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie to close the debate.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's interesting that the Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek would find it necessary to speculate on the intent of my colleague from Edmonton-Gold Bar's reasons for asking for this information. The member stated that it was unnecessary to be asking for this information, but he didn't explain why it was unnecessary. He did make reference to questions that arose with the Ethics Commissioner about the purchase of bison. It is a reasonable request to make. I'm sure that all hon. members recently remember the recommendation that the commissioner made with regard to the Premier and racehorses, so it is well within the interest of Albertans to request information through associations that deal with bison to find out what correspondence has been available, and that was the nature of this first request, which was specifically with the Peace Country Bison Association. So we would still like to know if in fact there was any correspondence between that association and the office of the Premier.

[Motion for a Return 2 lost]

Bison Centre of Excellence

M3. Ms Carlson moved on behalf of Mr. MacDonald that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of correspondence including but not limited to letters, e-mail, or phone messages between the office of the Premier and the Bison Centre of Excellence.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Once again on behalf of the Premier I'll be indicating that our government is rejecting Motion 3. Just in response to the member opposite and her comments a little earlier, I find that the three motions in question were unnecessary, because the Ethics Commissioner has already reviewed this and looked into it and indicated that he has no concerns with it. So on that basis we'll be recommending the rejection of Motion for a Return 3.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie to close the debate.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to thank the Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek for his lack of co-operation.

Alberta Bison Association

M4. Ms Carlson moved on behalf of Mr. MacDonald that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing copies of correspondence including but not limited to letters, e-mail, or phone messages between the office of the Premier and the Alberta Bison Association.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As with the previous two motions for returns just dealt with, I am rising on behalf of the Premier to indicate that our government will be recommending the rejection of Motion for a Return 4.

I think I should just point out to all members that this particular motion for a return references the Alberta Bison Association, and as several people here probably already know – and I just would like to remind them in any event – the Premier of our province is in fact a member of the Alberta Bison Association. I'm sure it's a very, very fine association, and I thought you would just like to know that.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie to close the debate.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, am sure that it's a very fine association, but that doesn't take away from the fact that that kind of correspondence should be made public. Once again I would like to thank the Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek for his lack of co-operation.

Health Care Premiums

M5. Dr. Taft moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing a detailed breakdown of costs for the administration and collection of health care premiums for the fiscal years 1992-93 to 2001-02 including but not limited to manpower costs, materials, supplies, equipment and postage, computing services, money paid to external collection agencies including the number of cases referred to external collection agencies, and banking services and income verification.

DR. TAFT: Mr. Speaker, I feel that these are worthwhile and important pieces of information to obtain through a straightforward request rather than having to go through the procedures of FOIP. There is tremendous public interest in the issue of health care premiums, and I certainly get questions, commonly from the public, about how much do these cost to collect. There is a general line item to that effect in the government books, but it would be very helpful to have the specifics. Beyond that, having the specifics would allow us to get some sense of what the cost would be of issuing, say, a quarterly statement of benefits to Albertans across the province, an idea that some people have put forward, and it may well be a good idea, in fact. I'm also interested in the cost of collection agencies. We receive complaints over that from time to time, and I'm interested in what the costs and benefits are for those services.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the hon. member for his eloquent support for this motion. I'm pleased to advise him and all members on behalf of the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness that we'll be recommending that government accept Motion for a Return 5.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview to conclude the debate.

DR. TAFT: Yes. I'm delighted to accept the offer from the government and look forward to the results.

Thank you.

[Motion for a Return 5 carried]

Premier's Advisory Council on Health

M6. Dr. Taft moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing a breakdown of consultant and research fees charged by the Premier's Advisory Council on Health including organizations and/or individuals employed.

DR. TAFT: Mr. Speaker, the reason for requesting this is to fully understand the activities of the Premier's Advisory Council on Health. It is, as we all know, a very influential group, and understanding who's doing the background research and what consultants are hired would be of great assistance to us.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Once again I'm pleased to inform this member and all members of the House on behalf of the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness that our government will be accepting Motion for a Return 6.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, would you like to conclude the debate?

DR. TAFT: That's fine. I cede this floor to you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion for a Return 6 carried]

Entertainment/Hosting by the Premier's Office

M7. Dr. Taft moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing total expenditures for entertainment/hosting by the Premier's office broken down on a yearly basis for the fiscal years 1990-91 to 2000-01.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. deputy . . . Sorry; go ahead.

DR. TAFT: No. Let's go and hear the government's side. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, we've reviewed this particular motion, and I'd like to table an amendment, which perhaps has already been circulated, or I'd ask that it be circulated. I'm getting the nod that it has been circulated. Just for purposes of the record this is Motion for a Return 7, and on behalf of the hon. Premier I am going to read into the record the amendment known as A. We would like to strike out "1990-91" and substitute "1993-94" in its place so that the amended motion for a return would read as follows:

That an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing total expenditures for entertainment/hosting by the Premier's office broken down on a yearly basis for the fiscal years 1993-94 to 2000-01.

I think it's important to note that this amendment has been circulated to all members – they've had a chance to look at it – and also to indicate to everyone in the House that this information has been shared with the opposition colleague prior to 11 a.m. today as per our procedures.

I would just quickly add, Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Premier that with this amendment being put forward, we need to change those dates from 1990-91 and replace them with 1993-94 primarily, I guess, because we're looking at the new mandate of the Premier really beginning in the term of government that is 1993-94. The Premier wishes everyone to have that information as requested, so the curiosity of the members opposite regarding the Premier's office expenses hopefully will be satisfied in that way.

These records will provide some information on how government policy is developed, which is not really what the intention, perhaps, of the motion might be, but if they can find some reason within the amendment that suffices that purpose, so be it. The motion for a return aspect of the Assembly, as everyone knows, generally speaking is more to do with government policy and how it's developed and how it applies and so on, but if the member were to accept the amendment that I'm putting forward on behalf of the Premier, then I know that the Premier's office would agree to the motion for a return as amended.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview on the amendment.

DR. TAFT: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I did receive proper notice for the amendment. I actually read of the information going to the media, although I haven't seen any of the information myself. My concern with the amendment and one of the underlying purposes of the whole motion was that we would like to have a comparison from the regime of the previous government or the previous Premier and be able to compare through time. This government has a track record of arguing for a tight ship, and it seems from the evidence in the media that their funding has declined, but it would be useful for us – and this was essential to our original motion – to compare that to what went beforehand. So I'm reluctant to accept the amendment because it cuts out one of the very purposes of the motion for a return. I would prefer that the amendment be withdrawn and we just proceed with the motion as it was originally moved.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: Are there additional members who want to speak on this amendment?

[Motion on amendment carried]

THE SPEAKER: On the motion now.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: May I speak to the motion as amended?

Thank you. Mr. Speaker, it's unfortunate the member opposite hasn't accepted the amendment. I would ask that he reconsider that position, which obviously is his own free will to do. I will try and ensure that a tabling of this information does occur at the earliest opportunity in this House so that you'll see the comparisons for at least the period during which the Premier was in office as Premier, which officially really begins with the 1993-94 term. I mean, there was a small bit there, I think, right before April 1. However, that would address the majority of the time period that you're looking for.

I think all members will notice once that information arrives, Mr. Speaker, that during the years 1999-2000 as well as 2000-2001 there was a very significant increase in the general dollars that were put forward toward hosting and working session expenses, and the reason for that increase is primarily because the office of the Premier had taken over the responsibility also for the office of protocol, or what we call the protocol office. So that's one thing to sort of keep in mind. Accordingly, there were more dollars spent in the area of hosting because of the number of dignitaries who were traveling through our province, which the very capable protocol office assisted with, and as a result we had not only a lot of visits to what we would like to think is the most popular province but also visits to the most popular Premier. That might explain some of that for the hon. member.

So, Mr. Speaker, if one were to discount protocol's portion of the hosting dollars, it's evident that the expenses of the office have been reduced significantly. In fact, the year 2000-2001 expenses for hosting, for working sessions, and other expenses are less than 50 percent of the dollars that were spent back in 1993-94. The expenses have gone down that much in the Premier's office. So I would hope that maybe the members opposite might reconsider, knowing that information.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview to close the debate.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I understand it, the amendment has gone through, so I will accept it, whether I am delighted or not.

I would like to register one concern. I may be corrected; this may be somewhere in my office. This information clearly linked to this motion for a return was provided to the media. There was a front-page story in the Calgary Herald. There was a story in the Edmonton Sun today. That was all done in advance of any of this discussion. So it seems like certainly a disruption of the normal process, and that does concern me.

I'll look forward to the information when I get it. Thank you.

[Motion for a Return 7 as amended carried]

Collection of Overdue Health Care Premiums

M8. Dr. Taft moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing a copy of any directives or guidelines given by the Department of Health and Wellness or any other Alberta government department to external collection agencies who have undertaken the task of collecting overdue health care premiums for the fiscal years 1992-93 to 2000-01 and April 1, 2001, to March 18, 2002.

DR. TAFT: The desire for this information is to get a better sense of how the business of collecting overdue health premiums proceeds. We received, as I mentioned earlier, complaints from people who feel that they are unjustly harassed or targeted by collection agencies and indeed are intimidated by these agencies through threats of legal action. So this is important information, and we would be interested in seeing it as a reflection of how the collection of health care premiums is done.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to inform the House that on behalf of the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness we will be indicating the government's acceptance of Motion for a Return 8.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview to close the debate?

[Motion for a Return 8 carried]

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: We'll call the committee to order.

Bill 205

School Trustee Statutes Amendment Act, 2002

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for St. Albert.

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I rise today to propose an amendment, which I believe everyone has copies of at their place. However, what I would like to do very briefly would be to indicate and reiterate the intention that was inherent in the passing at second reading of Bill 205. When it was passed at second reading, the intention of the bill was to create the circumstances under which the optimum number of trustees on a school board would be able to discuss and vote on the optimum number of items that come before the board. The second intention was, of course, that the bill would clarify the rules and make them unambiguous to all.

When the bill did pass at second reading, it was passed with the understanding that this greater clarity and participation could be accomplished by amending the Local Authorities Election Act and declaring an employee of a school district or division, charter school, or private school not eligible to seek election as a school trustee in Alberta. Furthermore, it proposed amending the School Act in two ways: by requiring all trustees, once elected, to file a disclosure statement and, secondly, by identifying that the only deemed indirect conflict of interest relationship that would require a trustee to remove herself or himself from the discussion would be that of spouse.

While the bill is being debated here in committee this afternoon, I wish to propose an amendment. It would further amend the Local Authorities Election Act and allow an employee to be on a leave of absence when seeking election as a trustee. It is also understood although not mentioned in the amendment, because it does bring into play another section of the Local Authorities Election Act, that once elected, that trustee would be required to resign from their employment with the school division or district, charter school, or private school.

I would draw your attention to the amendment that I have before you and would like to break it down into two parts. I'm going to deal with what I will refer to here as (b), the second part, striking out clause (b) and substituting the following: in subsection (3) by striking out "Subsection (1)(c) to (f) do not apply" and substituting "Subsection (1)(b) to (f) do not apply." I am introducing this amendment to Bill 205 out of an interest in an abundance of clarity, to make sure that everyone understands that my proposal here is such that the only individuals whom I'm speaking about with respect to election and nomination to a school board are those who are employees of a school division or district, a private school, or a charter school.

The other two amendments, (a) and (c), as I have put them here on the notice of amendment . . .

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: Hon. member, just for clarification purposes. You are talking about this amendment as though it was in two sections. I'm just wondering whether we are going to deal with it as one vote or two separate votes.

MRS. O'NEILL: As one vote.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: As one vote. Okay. So we shall refer to this as amendment A1 and have one vote at the end of the discussion.

MRS. O'NEILL: In its entirety.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: Okay. You may proceed. Thank you.

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman, for the clarification.

I just wanted to focus on the one on section (b), but primarily I'm going to look at amendments (a) and (c) as I have them here. What they do in essence identify and I'm proposing is the fact that, as I have mentioned here, in the proposed section 22(1.1) I am going to add the phrase "unless the person is on a leave of absence granted under this section" after the word "Alberta." So it would allow an individual, an employee, to be on a leave of absence if they wished to seek election as a school trustee.

I would also point out that section (c), as I have identified here on the amendment, with sections (c) and (d) within it also speaks to the fact that the employee who wishes to be nominated as a candidate for election as a trustee of a school board may apply to his or her employer for a leave of absence. They must apply for the leave of absence so that they can seek election. I would make reference to the fact that section 9 of the Local Authorities Election Act indicates that consistent with those who are seeking election to municipal office, upon election the individual must resign. I would draw your attention also to my amendment, which is (d) of section (c) here, indicating that "a school district or division, a charter school or a private school shall grant [the] application" for a leave of absence.

Mr. Chairman, the intention of the amendment is to make very clear first of all whom I am speaking of and referencing here and, secondly, the terms under which an employee can seek election – i.e., by being on a leave of absence – and also the conditions under which they must seek that leave of absence and, if successful, then resign from their employment.

That is my proposal for amendment A1. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Just a couple of comments about the amendments. What the amendment in effect does is make sure that should a teacher seek to run for school board, he or she would have to give up their livelihood, because the honorariums paid to trustees, to most of the boards that I'm familiar with are not sufficient for one to maintain their living on. So that, I think, is the practical implication of this amendment, and it goes back to the original bill, which I believe to be punitive.

One other comment that I did want to make is that there's a difference between municipal councillors and school trustees, particularly in urban areas, because in urban areas those councillors do receive an honorarium or a stipend that does allow them to leave their employment and to work full-time as a councillor.

Thanks, Mr. Chairman.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: On the amendment, the hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

MR. HORNER: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I wanted to rise to speak to this because when I was talking to a number of the boards in my area – and I note that I have five boards in my area – all of them indicated support for Bill 205. A couple of them had some issues with Bill 205, that I mentioned in my previous comments to this. One of the issues that was brought forward to me was the perception that the bill seemed to restrict the rights of a group of employees in the province to actually run for office. So I'm very pleased to see this amendment coming forward, because I believe that it has taken that into consideration and certainly made it very similar to other boards and councils in the province. I think that this will go a long way to allay a lot of those concerns that were expressed, where it isn't that we're saying that because you're in this profession or you're an employee, you cannot run, period. What we're saying is that the rules apply to you as they do to a council or other areas. So I believe that that is going to go a long way to one of those concerns that was issued.

I'm a little bit confused in my rookieism here. Can I speak to the rest of the bill right now, Mr. Chairman?

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: We are currently dealing with the amendment, and thereafter there will be an opportunity to speak to the bill with the amendment passed or with the amendment rejected.

MR. HORNER: Then with that, Mr. Chairman, I'll wait until we've dealt with the amendment. I just wanted to show my support and gratitude for this amendment coming forward. Thank you.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. On the amendment. I appreciate the efforts of the Member for St. Albert, but in the end it seems to me that it doesn't adequately address the concerns that I and many other Albertans have. As the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods pointed out, while it provides for a teacher who runs for election to take a leave of absence, the effect of that is to force the teacher to lose their livelihood, to give up their income. That, I think, probably achieves indirectly what was going to be done directly before, so it just doesn't seem to address the concern as I understand it. So I for one can't support this bill.

Thank you.

[Motion on amendment A1 carried]

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: On the bill as amended, members may speak to it now. The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

MR. CAO: Thank you, Mr. Chairman, for the opportunity to rise today and speak to Bill 205, the School Trustee Statutes Amendment Act, with this amendment. I would like to begin today by commending the hon. Member for St. Albert for bringing this important piece of legislation forward. It is both timely and long overdue. I congratulate her for initiating this debate. I note that the hon. member is a former member of the St. Albert school district and also note that she speaks both as an MLA as well as an experienced school trustee.

I'm very, very pleased that the amendment that we are seeing here in the committee is responding to concerns raised by the hon. member and the public. I will be returning to those amendments in a moment, but I would like to take this time to bring this to a broader perspective. Local governance is an important aspect of democracy here in Alberta, and for years now government has placed more and more emphasis on the roles and responsibilities of our local boards and town councils. The fundamental basis of the concept of municipal government is that local individuals within the community are best suited to administer certain programs and responsibilities. Lawmakers and policy experts for many jurisdictions have embraced this concept and have expanded its principles to other areas once the exclusive domain of larger governing bodies.

Here in Alberta, Mr. Chairman, we saw just last fall for the first time local candidates stepping forward to serve as regional health authorities. Successful candidates from across the province are helping to shape and implement health policy. They allocate and direct millions of dollars in taxpayers' money to address local priorities and issues.

Mr. Chairman, to me one of the most important aspects of our society is the education of our youth, and the most valuable component of our education system is our teaching professionals. To look after this very important aspect of our society, we have created the most important local bodies; that is, the local school boards. School boards play a vital role in the delivery of education to our children in this province. As trustees of these boards members of the community take time out from their busy schedules to attend meetings and to work with local staff to ensure that schools are run efficiently and effectively for the benefit of our children and our teaching professionals.

REV. ABBOTT: And economically.

MR. CAO: And economically, as the hon. member said.

There are many roles that Albertans ask trustees to take on when they achieve success through the ballot. Trustees must take on the role of policymakers. They must provide leadership by setting goals and directions. They must be continually engaged in the local community to ensure that the school system continues to educate its students in a manner that prepares them for the future and meets the needs and priorities of local communities. Many times trustees are called upon to act as communicators, ensuring that the local community is aware of what is going on in our schools and that the local school administration is aware of the concerns and priorities of parents, teachers, and students.

[Mr. Maskell in the chair]

Perhaps, Mr. Chairman, one of the most important jobs of a trustee is that of a financial planner. When individuals put their names forward for election, they take on the responsibility of ensuring that the local school board is run in a fiscally prudent manner. Quite simply, they are asked to help in the allocation of taxpayers' dollars. This is an important responsibility, one that needs to be taken very, very seriously. To do so, trustees must be involved in every aspect of their job. They must help in the budget process by attending meetings and asking questions. They must participate in local contract negotiations with teachers, support staff, and other employees to ensure that the services are properly allocated for the benefit of our schoolchildren and of our educational system in general. Indeed, in the eyes of many stakeholders the adoption of the budget is perhaps the single most important decision a school board makes each year.

To date this system has worked fairly well. Community needs are met by allocating money to programs important to all the stakeholders: students, teachers, and parents. Key issues can be addressed through the local bargaining process. This is an important aspect of our education system, a function that responds extremely well to the key issues of individual communities. However, Mr. Chairman, there are times when problems do occur during this process. Conflicts of interest happen, and we as the legislative body responsible for the School Act must address this issue.

Under Bill 205 and specifically section 1(2)(a) only those candidates capable of fulfilling the key obligations for which they are elected would be able to run for trustee. I believe, Mr. Chairman, that the budget process is certainly one of these key obligations. It is reasonable to expect that the trustees are prepared from the start of the nomination process to fully serve and participate in all aspects of their potential position. Some opponents of Bill 205 will argue that this is an attack on democratic rights of teachers and unions. This is simply not so. The amendments that we are discussing today and specifically those proposed in section 1(2) help to clarify this point. Teachers and other employees of any school board have the basic right to put their name forward to serve. However, it is reasonable to expect that these individuals if successful will resign from their positions so as to prevent any appearance of conflict. This is similar to what happens in British Columbia as well in municipal elections right here in Alberta.

These amendments also clarify the point that a broader interest exists between an education employee and the extended education system. Thus, school support staff who work in Red Deer cannot run for trustee in another jurisdiction. The conflict of interest still exists, and I am pleased that we are addressing this issue.

Mr. Chairman, it is reasonable to expect that trustees will not be active members in any professional organization with which a school board has an ongoing and enduring financial relationship. It would be inappropriate for these members to become school board trustees and have to constantly excuse themselves from the discussions so important to the basic functions of our schools.

It is also reasonable for Alberta's public to expect trustees that are able to fully participate in all matters before the school board, including financial matters, when they empower trustees to do their job at the polls. Today when conflicts are acknowledged, trustees leave the room and abstain from relative discussions and processes. While this may eliminate the conflict of interest, it does not eliminate the broad obligation of the trustee to fully represent and serve their respective constituents. While conflicts of interest will still exist, Bill 205 will go a long way to ensure that trustees are in a position to effectively deal with this challenge of the office.

Thank you.

THE ACTING CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to rise to speak to the amendment put forward to Bill 205.

AN HON. MEMBER: The amendment has passed.

MR. MASON: Oh, the amendment has passed. Well, then, I'd like to speak to the bill as amended, Mr. Chairman. I think the comments will be very much similar.

I believe that with the amendment the bill is somewhat improved. Certainly I appreciate the hon. Member for St. Albert taking into account some of the comments that have been made by other members, including myself, in speaking to this bill in terms of its comparative provisions to the Municipal Government Act, after that was amended, which allows municipal employees to seek office if they are on a leave of absence, and if they are elected to the jurisdiction which employs them, then they must resign their job.

What concerns me with this act is that it still means that a person who is employed by any jurisdiction is ineligible to run and be elected in another jurisdiction. If, for example, you are a resident of St. Albert and you wish to seek election for, shall we say, Edmonton public school board, you are ineligible unless you take the provisions under the amendment. This is at least as far as I can read the bill and the amendment. So you have absolutely no conflict of interest if you live in St. Albert and you are elected to the public school board in Edmonton. It is not your employer, so there is no conflict that would meet any test set out in the Municipal Government Act for conflict of interest. There's no personal conflict. The only conflict that exists I think is a political conflict. That is to say that people who are elected to school boards who are employed or have been employed or family members that are employed in the educational system have a heightened awareness of many of the issues that exist.

Now, why is it that we are not permitting them to seek election and be elected to a school board that doesn't employ them? There can be no argument that I can see that would explain such blatant discrimination against the rights of individuals based upon their employment. This is nothing but discrimination, and it's based on either the employment of the individual or the employment of a member of their family. Until that particular piece of this act is amended, I will continue to oppose it. [interjection] Well, if the hon. member wants to tell me that you would be permitted to run in another jurisdiction . . . [interjection] Yeah. All right. Just the teacher. That's a fair comment then.

Then I believe that based on one's employment, you cannot exclude people and shouldn't be attempting to exclude people from participation in the electoral process based upon the fact that they may be a teacher or a janitor or someone that works for another school board. I don't think that this law as it now is constituted will successfully meet a legal challenge. I believe that the Charter of Rights and Freedoms will override this bill and this act if it passes third reading, and I would urge members to take this into account.

I appreciate that the hon. member has taken some steps to bring this partly in line with the principles set out in the Municipal Government Act, but it's not yet fully in line with the principles of the Municipal Government Act. There needs to be further steps taken before we can say that this bill is really just directed against actual conflicts of interest and not directed against excluding people with certain views of education from participating in our democratic system.

As it now stands, Mr. Chairman, I cannot support the bill until those changes are made. Thank you.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

MR. HORNER: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I am grateful for the opportunity to rise today in Committee of the Whole and speak to Bill 205, the School Trustee Statutes Amendment Act, 2002, as amended. As I mentioned earlier, I did go to all five of the boards that I represent in my area and talk to them about this particular piece of legislation and had good discussions with them, and in fact there has been a lot of correspondence to me in support of this bill. There has also been recently some news media released in our area which also indicated that the greater St. Albert Catholic board was very much in favour of seeing this bill pass.

A couple of issues were brought to my attention. One was the perception that the bill seemed to restrict the right of a group of employees from being even nominated to run for the board, and that's why I'm very happy and pleased that the amendment which was brought forward by my colleague the Member for St. Albert was passed and will be a part of this. I think that goes a long way to saying to everyone, "You are eligible," as the Member for Edmonton-Highlands said, "Under the same rules as a municipality."

The other issue that has been brought to my attention of course is that it would restrict individuals who are employees of one school division from running in another school division. I've struggled with this one a little bit. I've talked to a lot of the boards in my area, and I've talked to a lot of the teachers and a number of other individuals and have come to the conclusion, Mr. Chairman, that we are almost into regional areas of employment. We are almost into regional areas of negotiation. Even though each one is doing their own negotiation, we come up with some very similar terms. In fact, some of them are even basing their negotiations on what happens in another region.

So it's hard for me to say that there isn't going to be some involvement from one region to the other, and certainly the ones that are bordering, one would expect, are going to be watching what happens next door. I guess I have to come down on the side that says that if you are an employee, then you would have to follow the rules, as anyone else would. I guess in the last little while and certainly in the last year, it really has shown that to be the case.

Our government really is continually motivated to improve the public education system in the province, and that encompasses classroom instruction through contract negotiation that is currently under way in some districts. As a government we acknowledge public education as a treasured institution in our province. Every Albertan would agree that our young people need a world-class education. Communities everywhere in the province expect the system to operate with our children's education and future development as a top priority. Every Albertan would agree that decisions ultimately affecting the classroom should be handled with the utmost of respect and under a high degree of scrutiny and along set guidelines.

The amended bill, Mr. Chairman, requires that employees of any school district who seek nomination for the position of school board trustee first obtain a leave of absence from their conflicting position. As I've mentioned earlier, I think that is going to have to be in there certainly with this regionalization that we see occurring. If they get elected, they're going to have to resign. That's part of the deal. The amended bill applies to all employees in kindergarten to grade 12 provincially. These amendments help better reflect the bill's intention of eliminating employment conflict. The bill's intention is not to separate out anybody. The bill's intention is not to discriminate against anybody. The bill's intention is to provide clarity to those people who are already there.

The bill's restrictions are fair and they're necessary, as I've said. The scope is also fair and necessary. It prevents an employee in one district from holding trustee office in another, but it prevents the conflict of interest, Mr. Chairman, not so that it's shifting conflict of interest from one district to another district. Ultimately it ensures that the trustees are never in a position where their credibility is questioned. Any appearance of a vested interest automatically taints the process of fair, impartial board relations. The amended bill works to improve the nomination and election process for school trustees who make decisions affecting our children's education. It only serves to make the system fairer, more clear, and better able to serve its purpose.

Mr. Chairman, there was a lot of discussion earlier about why we are doing this and where the need is. In 2001 the majority of school board trustees in two school boards, Northern Lights public school division and Medicine Hat public school division, had to excuse themselves from deliberations due to possible conflicts of interest. In the Northern Lights division upon commencement of collective bargaining negotiations four of the nine trustees declared that they could be in a conflict of interest or possible conflict of interest and would therefore not be in a position to effect changes to the collective agreement. This is a problem. In the Medicine Hat division again during collective bargaining negotiations four of the five Medicine Hat public school division trustees declared that they could be in a possible conflict of interest and were therefore not able to partake in contract deliberations. In this case, decision-making powers of the board were delegated to the one trustee who did not have a conflict of interest and could participate in negotiations.

Mr. Chairman, one of the other issues that has come to light recently – and it does affect one of the trustees in my area – is the fact that under the rules as they stand today, this trustee board member was able to get on board. Under the rules as they come in on Bill 205, they may not be able to unless they were to resign. Their concern was: well, does that mean that if we pass this bill in this House, I have to resign and will not be able to fulfill my commitment to the citizens of that area? I guess my understanding of the answer to that question through discussions with the hon. Member for St. Albert and others is that the bill would not be proclaimed until we reached the point where we're going to have another school board election. That allows those individuals currently on the boards to be able to fulfill their duties and to fulfill their commitment to those school boards. So I'm pretty happy about that.

The Member for Edmonton-Highlands also mentioned some issues with regard to: well, if my spouse was employed, then I couldn't run. That's simply not true. If your spouse is employed, you can still run as long as you declare that. I see the member nodding his head, and I think he understands where I'm coming from on that one. That also affects a number of trustees in my area where the spouses are employed in other school districts. This bill will not affect those individuals. They'll be able to continue to be a part of the board. They'll continue to be a part of the nomination process. The whole thing doesn't change.

What has changed, though, Mr. Chairman, is the fact that we've narrowed it in. No longer does the board member have to worry about his in-laws up in Grande Prairie who may be employed and he may have a conflict because his in-laws are employed under a contract. So he doesn't have to excuse himself anymore. What we're saying is that it's a spouse; it's not my cousin. So we've actually narrowed it in, and I've heard from a lot of trustees who have said to me that that clarifies it for them. They're not worried about whether or not there's a relationship out there that they haven't checked on.

So I think that all in all, Mr. Chairman, I am pleased with the results of some of the discussions that we've had. I'm pleased with some of the responses, in particular the amendment to the bill brought forward by the Member for St. Albert. I think that brings a lot more clarity to the situation as to who can run and the fact that we are not separating out anybody from the process. I think that we have to go on the basis that we do have some regional bargaining, and we need to be able to be aware of that and the conflict of interest that does arise from one region to another region. I'm glad that we were able to clarify this issue of spouse and those other issues that were brought up by the other member. I think that it's important to realize that the spouse is not the one that's running. The spouse does not have a conflict in the sense that if you run and your spouse is employed, that's okay. You have to declare.

Just to summarize, Mr. Chairman, the other issue that was brought to my mind and has now been in my mind taken care of is current board members who feel that they would have to resign immediately. I don't believe that's true, and my understanding is that we will let this process go to the next board elections. Therefore, those people who have gone the extra mile and made that commitment to be on the board can stay on the boards and fulfill that commitment to the best that they can under the current conflict of interest guidelines, because even today they have to excuse themselves from most decisions.

With that, Mr. Chairman, I will end my remarks and just encourage members to support Bill 205 as amended. Thank you.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to make some comments about the bill. I guess one of the things that I console myself with is that it is a private member's bill; it isn't a government bill. That I think makes some difference.

I think that in the context I couldn't believe that the Member for Calgary-Fort would herald this as a strengthening of local governance in the kind of tradition that this government has followed with respect to school boards. In case the member missed it, under this government school boards have lost their taxing authority. School boards can't even appoint their own superintendent any longer without reference to the minister. If the member was at all alert to what was happening with the kinds of strife and strikes we've had in our schools, he would have found that school boards in many cases were absolutely powerless to deal with the strike. So to claim that this is one more piece of progress in local governance I think is really stretching matters to the extreme and certainly inconsistent with reality.

The bill even with the amendments still excludes teachers from their democratic right to run in the district of their own residence if they're working in another school district, and I, too, suspect that it will not bear a court challenge. There's been enough advice given on this particular topic to boards over the years that I suspect that when it's challenged – and it will be challenged in court should it ever become law – it won't hold up.

I think a couple of things. One is that the timing, as I mentioned before, is really unfortunate. I'm sure that the mover of the bill and other members of the Assembly have heard from teachers who view this as just one more attack on teachers as a group, and I think that that perception is really very, very unfortunate, that a group of citizens should feel that this Legislature is out to make their life more difficult and to exclude them. It is most unfortunate. I guess I'm disappointed because I'd hoped that given the context of the times, the member who sponsored the bill might have withdrawn the bill. No matter what the arguments for or against it are at this time, certainly the timing is not appropriate. I urge members to think carefully about the bill before supporting it.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

REV. ABBOTT: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It is my pleasure to rise today and join the debate on the school trustee conflict of interest amendment act, 2002. I'd like to start by commending my colleague from St. Albert for bringing forward this important and overdue piece of legislation. As a former school trustee myself I think it's time that we took a step to protect the integrity of our school trustees and to help ensure that they can contribute to our school system efficiently. I think that the legislation that this bill proposes will add value to the school system. It will ensure that those who are able to seek nomination for positions on school boards across the province will be able to fulfill the complete requirements of their jobs while reducing the opportunity for conflict of interest arising.

Bill 205 proposes two excellent changes to school trustee statutes that span the Local Authorities Election Act and the School Act. The first reform the bill proposes would prescribe requirements for those seeking nomination that would ensure that they will be able to address all of the issues that they will face in their role as trustee. The second thing Bill 205 does is provide clear and narrowed circumstances for pecuniary conflict of interest scenarios arising due to family relationships in matters that come before the board. As I alluded to briefly, Mr. Chairman, Bill 205 will ensure that school board trustees in Alberta are able to carry out the full requirements of their position. To achieve this, Bill 205 provides a simple requirement: those individuals who could face a pecuniary conflict of interest in their position as trustee would not be able to seek election to the school board.

Earlier today, Mr. Chairman, I tabled five copies of a letter from Wetaskiwin regional school division urging me to support Bill 205, but I've also received one phone call from a constituent urging me not to support it. I believe that the amendments that were proposed by the Member for St. Albert and now carried have softened the approach that Bill 205 had put forward initially. As it stood, Bill 205 would prevent any employee or teacher in Alberta's learning system from seeking nomination for trustee, but with the carried amendments to section 1(2), Bill 205 will permit a teacher or employee in Alberta's learning system to run for nomination, provided they take a leave of absence from their position. According to amendment (c), which adds subsection (5.1), if that person is successfully elected, they would then have to resign. In this way no one who wants to run for trustee would be prohibited from doing so.

As we are all aware, Mr. Chairman, when a trustee has a personal interest either directly or indirectly invested in a matter before the school board, he or she will face certain restrictions. That trustee may have to refrain from participating in the deliberations. They must abstain from voting on the question and sometimes even leave the room during the discussion. I think that we would all agree that the current trustee statutes, as long as declarations of conflict are announced, work well to prevent trustees from positions of conflict of interest, and as a result we can be confident that no trustee in Alberta is making decisions for the children he or she represents based on personal gain.

However, Mr. Chairman, in order to comply with conflict of interest regulations as established by the School Act, trustees must remove themselves from debate and voting on any items when they might be in conflict. By abstaining from important budget decisions to avoid a pecuniary conflict of interest, it is my view that trustees are not fulfilling the requirements of the position. Furthermore, while they are absent, they are not fulfilling their duty to the Albertans that they were elected to represent. Figures from across Canada would indicate that a great many trustees are unable to participate in voting on one matter or another due to pecuniary interest. It is unfortunate that there is no study available with information on the number of Alberta trustees with a history of pecuniary conflict issues, but due to the absence of local data on this issue I feel that a study done in Ontario will, despite its age, help to give the members of this Assembly a better idea of why this legislation is important.

A report of the committee to the Ontario Legislature during the 1990s revealed that up to 50 percent of school board trustees were employees of boards or the spouses of employees. As a result, these trustees had to abstain from participating in voting matters that caused a pecuniary or family conflict, matters of very high importance, including collective bargaining and budgeting. A letter submitted to the Ontario Legislature from Ontario school boards during the same debate indicated that the pecuniary conflict of interest problem was significant and has affected decisions in approximately 80 percent of school boards' budgets across the province. Mr. Chairman, I understand that the information may not apply perfectly to Alberta due to the time and distance that separate Alberta today from Ontario of several years ago. However, I think that it can help the members of this Assembly to think broadly about the issues at hand.

Hypothetically speaking, if the number of abstaining trustees in Alberta was even half as large as the Ontario figure, 40 percent of school board budgets would be discussed and decided by school boards composed of three, two, or even one trustee due to abstention. This hypothetical example could be too high or it could be too low, but if there are any school boards put in tough voting situations due to abstention, then I see a problem, Mr. Chairman.

Are school boards truly effective representatives of the people who voted for them to express their views when half the trustees must abstain from critical budget decisions? Well, the philosophy of school board governance is that government is most effective when it is placed close to the people being governed. However, if a large faction of representatives is unable to represent the views of the people who sent them there for that very duty, then this situation must be addressed, and this bill, Mr. Chairman, is a step in the right direction. The small measure of legislation that Bill 205 provides will lend remedy to what currently hampers school boards across this province. Bill 205 will ensure that school boards will be able to deal with the issues and decisions that they are faced with. If all the trustees are able to provide input and listen to the positions of others, then it can be assured that the best decisions are being made.

If I could use an example of an Alberta school board to highlight the very problem that this bill would alleviate, I think it would be very valuable. During collective agreement negotiations with the Alberta Teachers' Association, four out of five trustees in the Medicine Hat public school division declared that they could have a possible conflict of interest and were, as a result, not able to partake in contract deliberations. In order to continue the business of the school board, the Medicine Hat school board acted in accordance with section 45 of the School Act and delegated the decision-making powers of the board with respect to negotiating collective agreements to the one trustee who was not in a conflict of interest position. One person with the weight of the entire education system on their shoulders: I think we can all see the problem inherent in this situation and the potential for it to be experienced by other school boards in the province.

Legislation currently in place allows the problem of abstention due to pecuniary interest to remain and to persist. It simply provides for trustees to declare conflicts of interest and abstain from proceedings. As well, it accommodates situations where the whole board is unable to participate by appointing a single official to assume the role of the school board. I believe that now is the time for us to put an end to this problem once and for all by adopting Bill 205 as amended.

Moving on to the second facet of this legislation, Mr. Chairman, we can see that it provides for a clear and narrowed understanding of who by relation would and would not put a trustee in a conflict of interest position. The current trustee statutes state that the trustee's spouse, children, parents, and the trustee's spouse's parents could all potentially put the trustee in a position of pecuniary conflict of interest pending their association with the school board. As it stands, these are unreasonable restrictions placed on family members of the trustee. As it stands, any Albertan with a parent or parent-in-law or a child working for that school board would have to abstain from budget decisions. Bill 205 recognizes that this restriction is too broad and too far-ranging to constitute a normal understanding of conflict of interest.

If Bill 205 is passed, the updated restriction will state that only the spouse of the trustee who is an employee of a school board will create a conflict of interest. This narrowed scope of restriction will allow more Albertans interested in contributing to the betterment of our school system to participate in discussions and decisions and will ensure that participants are able to fulfill the requirements of the job.

To conclude, Mr. Chairman, I believe that Bill 205 will increase awareness of school trustees and the great job they do in this province, and that is positive. Recognition of these Albertans, who work hard for the schools in their area, is something that I applaud. The legislation before us is both innovative and necessary. On the one hand, it would not allow individuals to run for school trustee if they have a pecuniary conflict of interest unless they take a leave of absence. The new regulations will ensure that trustees will be able to fully commit to the positions which they are . . .

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: Hon. member, your time has run out.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I rise to partake in this good debate that we're having here. It's raised a number of questions in my mind. I am deeply concerned with the whole issue of conflict of interest and have been fairly outspoken about my concerns in a number of situations. As I mull over this bill, I find myself wondering: what is the conflict? A couple of the members at least have referred to concerns over members of school boards having to remove themselves from decision-making through the course of regional bargaining with teachers because they are teachers or they're closely related to teachers. I see the conflict there. I can understand that, and I think that's fair enough. I'm not convinced that this is the right way to address this, and I'm wondering if there may not be better mechanisms for handling that one particular conflict.

What troubles me with this Bill 205 is that it seems to reflect a sort of selective concern over conflicts of interest. I think back to a private member's bill last spring that was brought forward from the opposition addressing conflicts of interest in regional health authorities. It was a much more direct kind of conflict, in which employees of a regional health authority were not allowed, as it was proposed in the bill, to own shares in companies that contracted with that authority. This government frankly crushed that bill, yet that was a conflict of interest that was much more direct than what we're seeing covered in the bill proposed today. So I ask myself: why the selective concern?

I also reflect on the fact that after the last election there was a member of this Assembly who remained an active school principal and served as an MLA, and I wonder why we accepted and tolerated that. Why did we not require that MLA to resign from his position as a school principal once he became an MLA? After all, that would be consistent, as I understand it, with the principles in here. This government certainly has tremendous influence over the education system. Is it proper that we have an active schoolteacher as a member of this Assembly? I think that's a serious question. Certainly it would suggest a double standard on the part of this government when we allow that to occur without comment, yet we are looking at bringing in a private member's bill that forbids a much less direct conflict.

I recognize that there may be at times, if there's regional negotiating, conflicts that do arise, yet I remain unconvinced that this is the best way to address those conflicts. I do feel that there are many areas of much more direct conflict of interest that this government is, frankly, overlooking. Now, I recognize that this is a private member's bill, but I've heard virtually every government member support it, so I wonder why they weren't supporting bills that are directed to a more immediate conflict of interest.

I'm also concerned that this bill does represent a further and further constraining of boards and, frankly, of democracy. We seem to be eager through a bill like this to limit the rights of people to run for democratically elected boards even when they do not have a direct tie to those boards. I'm concerned that we are seeing a further constraint of school boards and of democracy, and the effect of this will be that fewer and fewer people will be able to serve or indeed seek election to boards.

While I understand the intent here, I feel that it's reaching too far and constraining too many people's rights to run for elected office, and at the same time it is coming from a supporter of a government that has consistently overlooked much more direct conflicts of interest, so I just cannot support Bill 205.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

4:30

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

MRS. JABLONSKI: Thank you, Mr. Chairman, for the opportunity to rise today and speak to Bill 205, the school trustee conflict of interest amendment act. I would like to begin today by commending the hon. Member for St. Albert for bringing this important piece of legislation forward. It's both timely and long overdue, and I congratulate her for initiating this debate. I note that the hon. member is a former member of the St. Albert school district, so I know that she speaks both as an MLA and as an experienced school trustee.

Local governance is an important aspect of democracy here in Alberta. For years now the government has placed more and more emphasis on the roles and responsibilities of our local boards and town councils. The fundamental basis of the concept of municipal government is that local individuals within the community are best suited to administer certain programs and responsibilities. Lawmakers and policy experts for many jurisdictions have embraced this concept and have expanded its principles to other areas once the exclusive domain of broader governing bodies. Here in Alberta we saw just last fall for the first time local candidates stepping forward to serve on regional health authorities. Successful candidates from across the province are helping to shape and implement health policy. They allocate and spend millions of dollars in taxpayer money to address local priorities and issues.

One of the most important local bodies that has been created, of course, is the local school board. School boards play a vital role in the delivery of education to our children in this province. As trustees of these boards members of the community take time out of their very busy schedules to attend meetings and work with local teachers and staff to ensure that schools are run efficiently and effectively.

There are many roles that Albertans ask trustees to take on when they achieve success at the ballot box. Trustees must take on the role of policymakers. They must provide leadership to a system by setting goals and directions. They must be continually engaged in the local community to ensure that the school system continues to educate its students in a manner which prepares them for the future and meets the needs and priorities of local communities. Many times trustees are called upon to act as communicators, ensuring that the local community is aware of what is going on in our schools and that the local school administration is aware of the concerns and priorities of parents, teachers, and students.

Perhaps, Mr. Chairman, one of the most important jobs of a trustee is that of a financial planner. When individuals put their name forward for election, they take on the responsibility of ensuring that the local school board is run in a fiscally prudent manner. Quite simply, they're asked to help in the allocation of taxpayer money. This is an important responsibility and one that needs to be taken very seriously. To do so, trustees must be involved in every aspect of their job as trustees. They must help in the budget process by attending meetings and asking questions. They must participate in local contract negotiations with teachers, support staff, and other employees to ensure that services are properly allocated. Indeed, in the eyes of many stakeholders the adoption of the budget is perhaps the single most important decision a school board makes each year. To date this system has worked fairly effectively. Community needs are met by allocating money to programs important to parents and students. Key issues can be addressed through the local bargaining process. This is an important aspect of our education system and a function that responds extremely well to issues key to individual communities.

However, Mr. Chairman, there are times when problems do occur during this process. Conflicts of interest happen, and we as the legislative body responsible for the School Act must address this issue. Pecuniary interests, conflicts of interest, or ethical matters relating to money occur when school trustees are also members of the Alberta Teachers' Association, active teachers in Alberta, or those who have a permanent contract with their respective school board. Under Bill 205 only those candidates capable of fulfilling the key obligations for which they are elected would be able to run for trustee. I believe that the budget process is certainly one of these key obligations.

It is reasonable to expect, Mr. Chairman, that trustees are prepared from the start of the nomination process to fully serve and participate in all aspects of their potential position. Some opponents of Bill 205 will argue that this is an attack on teachers and their unions. This is simply not so. It is reasonable to expect that trustees will not be members in a professional organization with which a school board has an ongoing and enduring financial relationship. It would be inappropriate for those members to become school board trustees and to have to constantly excuse themselves from discussions so key to the basic functions of the school board. However, it is reasonable for the public to expect trustees that are able to fully participate in all matters of the school board including financial matters. Today when conflicts are acknowledged, trustees leave the room and abstain from the relative discussion and process. While this may eliminate the conflict of interest, it does not eliminate the broader obligation of a trustee to fully represent and serve their respective constituents.

While conflicts of interest will still exist, Bill 205 will go a long way in ensuring that trustees are in a position to deal effectively with the full challenges of their offices. As has been noted in recent court cases, the object of conflict of interest legislation is to prevent anyone being elected to or holding a seat in a municipal council whose personal interest might clash with those of the municipality. It is of the utmost importance that members of a municipal council or in this case school boards should have no interests to bias their judgment in deciding what is for the public good, and they should strive to keep themselves absolutely free from the possibility of any imputation in this respect. I feel that Bill 205 would keep our school trustees free from questions of interest.

Bill 205 would also narrow the scope of individuals who are deemed to share pecuniary interests with a trustee. Presently the School Act identifies the trustee's children, parents, and the parents of a trustee's spouse within this category. I believe that this is far too broad and potential trustees should only be held accountable based on the pecuniary interests of their spouse, and I believe that the amendment addresses this. Bill 205 recognizes that the present system is too restrictive in its application. By narrowing the focus of who may be in a conflict of interest, this bill will allow more trustees to take part in discussion concerning the interests of our students.

Mr. Chairman, conflicts of interest are a matter of concern not only amongst school trustees in Alberta but also for trustees in other jurisdictions across Canada. More and more of these issues are coming before the courts for clarification. It is time this Assembly looks at the issue and provides proper direction to our system. Bill 205 simply ensures that school boards are held to the highest standards of excellence. This sentiment is upheld in the Alberta School Boards Association policy handbook. The trustee code of ethics states that a trustee will, quote, resist every temptation and outside pressure to use their position as a school board member to benefit either themselves or any other individual or agency apart from the total interest of the school jurisdiction. Bill 205 will help school boards fulfill this code.

It is inappropriate, Mr. Chairman, for individuals who have an inherent pecuniary interest to serve as a trustee when they must excuse themselves from many of the meetings that require their attention. This is good legislation, and I would encourage all members of the Assembly to vote for this bill and ensure that our school boards are in a proper position to do their duties. Thank you.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

MR. JOHNSON: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Thank you for the opportunity to comment on Bill 205. First of all, I would like to commend the Member for St. Albert for bringing forth the School Trustee Statutes Amendment Act, addressing the issue of school trustee eligibility as it relates to active teachers serving in a jurisdiction other than where they may be teaching. This is a very important issue, and I think this is certainly worthy of a lot of discussion and debate.

I'm particularly interested in this issue, because I was in that situation. I was teaching in one system, albeit private, and serving on the public school board as chairman at the same time. As a trustee with hands-on knowledge about teaching and administration I feel that I was able to bring a unique contribution to the discussion table, as did all the trustees who came from other and various backgrounds. Ours was a very good board because there were many points of view, and I think that solid decisions were made as a result. I was able to refrain from discussions on voting on any matters of conflict, as did the other members when and if faced with conflict situations.

As I take a look at the current school boards in my constituency, there are very good board members that would be declared ineligible by Bill 205 unless they resigned their positions. In the past some members have stood in when there was no one else to run for the position, and therein lies the concern that I have. The change in future eligibility made by Bill 205 would tend to decrease the number of candidates for trustee positions with personal knowledge and experience with education.

The amendment just passed does alleviate some of my concerns with Bill 205. The amendment will allow teachers to run for a position on a school board. However, if a person is an employee of any school jurisdiction in Alberta, they must take a leave of absence to run for a position on a school board, and if that person wins in the election, they must resign from their job. That is quite unlikely to happen. Giving up one's job is a high price to pay to be a member of a school board. My concern is that Bill 205 will keep qualified people from running for a school board position even with the amendment, and I fear that this will lead to the possibility of more seats being won by acclamation rather than a competitive process, particularly in rural Alberta. If this bill is passed, I believe we must look to new and better ways to encourage more candidates to run for school board positions to alleviate a possible downside to this bill.

The problem of maintaining a quorum in decisions of salary negotiations has been stressed, and I guess that is the main point of this bill. This bill will help to solve that problem, but it may eliminate good board input on a myriad of educational issues of a nonbargaining nature by people particularly close to these issues. In my constituency, where there are boards involving one active teacher, it has not been reported to be a problem to me, and I expect that could be said in many and perhaps most situations. I hope that by addressing one problem through this bill, we aren't enhancing another, which is that there will be more board elections by declaration in rural Alberta especially and that potentially good board members as determined by the electorate will be denied that opportunity. My wish is that there might be a way to limit the number of teachers, active and inactive, on a board to control this conflict of interest issue, but that in our democratic system is up to our electors. Again, the best board is made up of members from a variety of backgrounds, I feel, and that could include educators.

I've been grateful for the opportunity for teachers to contribute to trustee work. That was my opportunity, and I learned and I contributed. I realize that the opportunity for educators to contribute to school board work remains for our many retired or inactive teachers, many of whom are serving effectively on boards at the present time. The amendment passed will give teachers the opportunity to seek school board positions; however, I question how many teachers will actually take up that opportunity if it means resigning from their positions.

Regardless of the outcome of this bill, I want to express my thanks to the many educators who have stepped in to make our school boards strong because of their involvement. The other parts of this bill dealing with disclosure statements and conflicts of interest of other school board members I can fully support.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. Member for Medicine Hat.

MR. RENNER: Thank you very much. It's a pleasure for me to have an opportunity to speak to Bill 205. I am in complete concurrence with the intent behind Bill 205. In fact, Mr. Chairman, I'm sure you've heard reference throughout the debate on this bill to Medicine Hat, and being the Member for Medicine Hat, I think it's appropriate that I should participate in this debate.

I want to talk a little bit about the situation in Medicine Hat. I'm not sure that members are entirely aware, but there was never a problem with a conflict where employees of the Medicine Hat school division were held to be in conflict. The conflicts arose as a result of some, in my opinion, rather broad interpretations of the section of the School Act that talks about pecuniary interest. In fact, the second part of Bill 205 goes a long way toward correcting that problem.

In the existing act it says in essence that pecuniary interests are the interests "of the spouse, children, or parents of a person" or "of the parents of the spouse of a person." So it's a very, very, broad interpretation, and it doesn't really describe what children are. Based upon legal opinion that they had received from the Alberta School Boards Association – we had members of the Medicine Hat board that had children, adult, grown children, that were teaching in school divisions in other parts of the province. We had a number of conflicts that were conflicts merely because the legislation was not particularly well worded and was unclear. So you had interpretations, and people were erring on the side of going too far rather than, in what was a fairly volatile situation, finding themselves to be held in conflict after the fact. What has been said here is right, that at the end of the day four out of five members of the board were excluded from voting on something very substantial, and that's the ATA contract.

So I think it's reasonable, and I applaud the Member for St. Albert for doing something or at least attempting to do something about a situation that really handcuffs a board to do a job. I don't think anyone would agree that having a board of five reduced to one for approving what amounts to 80 percent of the budget of that board is a healthy situation and is a workable situation, so I think it's incumbent upon this House to do something about it.

Now, does Bill 205 accomplish what it sets out to do? Well, with the amendment that we have passed earlier this afternoon, I think we go partway. We talk about who is eligible to serve on a board. However, as I point out, that has not been an issue. Certainly it hasn't been an issue in Medicine Hat. I think that most times employees are not particularly comfortable with being part of the board that's responsible, so to my knowledge we never have had a particular problem with employees running for elected office. It's always been this very broad interpretation about then what constitutes a conflict of interest: if your spouse is a teacher or an employee, or if your children are employees? So, you know, I can go along with what we've got in the first part of this act. I think it makes it clear that if you're interested in seeking office, then you do so, and if elected, not unlike in many other organizations, you would then resign your position to take over the elected position.

When we get into the amendments to the School Act, it's not so clear to me whether or not we have addressed the concerns. For example, I talked about trustees excluding themselves from voting on the ATA contract because grown children living in another city and working for an entirely different school board were interpreted under the act to be children and therefore it would be a conflict of interest. It's always been my opinion that if you're going to talk about a conflict of interest and pecuniary interest, you need to be talking about the family unit, the household income. When you've got grown children living in another city with their own children, I hardly think that it's a conflict of interest when we're dealing with something such as negotiating salaries.

So what we've done is we've made it very clear that the children and parents and grandparents and everything else that's contemplated under the initial legislation is excluded, and we have brought it down to specifically the spouse. Now, to me that's fine, and I think that's clear. What's not particularly clear and hasn't been made clear during the debate is whether that conflict would be a spouse that's employed by the same board or a spouse that's possibly employed by a neighbouring board. An example that's been used here is where you have someone that lives in St. Albert and has a spouse that works in Edmonton. Is there or is there not a conflict? Are we not going to have the same problem that we have now, with people scratching their heads and wondering if in fact there's a conflict? Clearly that does not disallow that individual from seeking office, but then later on when they have to declare conflicts and we have to declare that the pecuniary interest belongs to the spouse, it seems to me that we've entered that zone of being unclear yet again, because it doesn't outline exactly what constitutes a conflict.

The other area that I have some concern with is in the amendments in 81(1) when we talk about the disclosure statement showing "the names and employment of the trustee and the trustee's spouse and children." Again, I don't see what this has to do with grown children living somewhere else. Later on, in (1)(c), we talk about children under the age of 18, but here we don't. So are we talking about under 18, over 18? We've got this terminology that to me is not defined.

So it puts me in a quandary, Mr. Chairman. I agree that we need to do something. I think that to serve my constituents in the constituency of Medicine Hat, as their MLA I need to do something to resolve the problem that we had in Medicine Hat, and I don't see that problem going away. Unfortunately, I'm not convinced that this bill will solve the problem. It will go partway. I'll probably vote for it, but I'm here to tell you that it doesn't fix the problem, and we're going to be back here six months from now doing it again. Unfortunately, I think that's one of the fallacies with this place. When we have private members' bills, we simply don't have adequate time or resources to fully research all of the ramifications of legislation, and we often pass legislation that's patchwork at best. I think that's what this bill is.

Mr. Chairman, I'll be supporting the bill, but I really don't think it solves the problem that we're here today to solve. Thank you very much.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would like to conclude with a few remarks here.

First of all, I wish to acknowledge the fact that the Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert and I in response to a number of the concerns that were raised by our constituents sat down and it was with his assistance that I put together the amendment, because I also, as does the Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert, have no desire to remove the democratic rights of any group of individuals. So in composing the amendment, which I do appreciate was passed this afternoon, I want to acknowledge the fact that the intention of this bill is achieved in the same way that it would have been achieved, I believe, without the amendment, but this recognizes the democratic right of all employees to seek election.

However, I would also point out that this bill does not stand alone in identifying conflicts of interest. Also, the terms under which one can sit as an elected trustee are similar to but not exactly the same as the terms under which individuals can be elected to regional health authorities and similar to but not exactly the same as the terms and conditions under which someone seeks election to a seat on a city council in a municipal election.

I would like also in these concluding remarks to indicate to the Member for Medicine Hat that in the section in which I am amending the School Act, in fact section 81(1), the reference there is as it currently exists in the School Act, the reference to the "names and employment of the trustee and the trustee's spouse and children." Of course, it is understood that those would be dependent children. However, this requirement for the disclosure statement to be filed, in this case with the secretary of the respective school board, is not unlike those disclosure statements that all elected officials are required to do. It is something that is required to be updated, of course, and it is something that I think in the beginning identifies for the individual those areas of pecuniary interest that might be of possible concern somewhere down the line.

I received a number of pieces of correspondence with respect to Bill 205, a number from individuals and a number from school boards. I can tell you that some individuals felt that it did not go far enough, and if I were to act upon their suggestions, I would have been introducing amendments that would have suggested that anyone who sort of even goes near the business of any school district would not be able to seek election. On the other hand and at the other end of the spectrum, I heard from those individuals who felt that everyone should be able to run not only in their district but in any district and to vote on everything.

I believe that when Bill 205 passes – and I exhort everybody to vote in favour of it – what it will do is it will create a very clear understanding of the rules of engagement under which an individual operates as a school trustee. It will in my opinion eliminate a number of people who, unsure of whether they had an indirect or for that matter a direct conflict of interest, excused themselves from the decision-making table. We find, as was mentioned earlier today in this Assembly, a number of school boards over this past year who have found themselves with not only not a full complement of trustees voting on an issue but with not even a majority of members voting on an issue, and I think that is shortchanging the voters. The voters elect a school trustee to be there to make decisions on their behalf for the good of the school district, whether it be for the employees or the children or the buildings or whatever. They do expect the individuals to be able to vote on certainly the majority if not all of the decisions that come before the board, and there is a collective responsibility.

That is my entire intention in this. It is not, I would repeat, to be punitive to any group of individuals. I served on a school board with a number of very competent teachers who were both former teachers and who were currently teaching but in another school district. I can say nothing but good things about their contribution to the board. But, in effect, when it came to making some major budgetary decisions, they were not there with us at the table. They contributed to a circumstance at a school board table wherein we did not have the full participation of the school board, and in fact in some instances we had a very inadequate representation in the decision-making process happening.

So with those words, Mr. Chairman, I would exhort everybody in this Assembly to vote in favour of Bill 205 in committee so that we can go forward and make sure that the voters of this province when choosing trustees are able to know whom they are voting into office and those who are voted into office know the rules very clearly of their participation at the trustee table.

Thank you.

Bill 207

Alberta Wheat and Barley Test Market Act

[Adjourned debate April 22: Mr. Jacobs]

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

MR. JACOBS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a privilege for me to rise and enter the debate on Bill 207. I am very happy to lend my support to this bill, and I want to commend the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View for his hard work in bringing the bill forward.

Mr. Speaker, the first point I would like to make today is that monopolies do not create a healthy business climate. They do not encourage free enterprise and free markets. Under the Canadian Wheat Board monopoly the western farmer has been the loser. There are no incentives to cut inefficiencies, no competition to encourage better returns to farmers.

Mr. Speaker, in his book Canada's Great Grain Robbery Don

Baron, the prairie historian, tells a story of some wild hogs of Horseshoe Bend. I believe this story makes some points that have relevance in this debate. The story is told that years ago there lived a herd of wild hogs in a great horseshoe bend down a river deep in the southern United States. Where those hogs came from no one knew. But they survived floods . . . freezes, droughts and hunters. They were so wild the greatest compliment a man could pay to a dog was to say it had fought the hogs in Horseshoe Bend and returned alive. Occasionally a [hog] was killed either by dogs or a gun – and became a conversation piece for years.

One day, a lean-faced man came by the county store on the river road and asked the whereabouts of these wild hogs. He drove a one-horse wagon, had an axe, some blankets and a lantern, a pile of corn and a single-barreled shotgun. He was a slender, slow-moving man who chewed his tobacco deliberately and spat very seldom.

Several months later he came back to the store and asked for help to bring those wild pigs out of the swamp. He said he had them all in a pen.

Bewildered [citizens] all gathered in the heart of Horseshoe Bend to view the captive hogs.

"It's all very simple," said the patient lean-faced man. "First, I put out some corn for them. For three weeks they wouldn't eat it. Then some of the young ones grabbed a cob and ran off into the bush. Soon, they were all eating corn. Then I commenced building a pen around the corn, just a little higher every day. When I noticed they had stopped grubbing for acorns and roots and were all waiting for me to bring the corn, I built the trap door.

"Naturally they raised quite a ruckus when they seen they was trapped. But I can pen any animal on the face of the earth if I can just get him to depend on me for a handout."

To continue to quote from the same book, Mr. Speaker:

Canada's huge grain industry was in crisis in the late 1960s when President Mac Runciman of a farmers' grain company began telling the story of "The Wild Hogs" . . .

His message was simple – but [important] . . . Prairie grain had been Canada's engine of growth from the beginning. Now . . . it was caught in the grip of politics. The marketplace was often forgotten and the customer . . . little more than an afterthought. In the business of growing and marketing grain, the priceless ingredient of success was not market information [and freedom], it was political power and control.

Mr. Speaker, my riding of Cardston-Taber-Warner is filled with farmers who are capable businessmen. They don't need a bureaucracy and red tape. All they need is the freedom not only to work hard and grow their crop but also to market their crop. Farmers want the freedom to do with wheat and barley what they have done with oats and canola. What Bill 207 will do is put pressure on the Wheat Board to be better. It will also show farmers the benefit of competition, especially when more money flows to them, not the coffers of the Canadian Wheat Board.

Farmers all over Alberta are constantly searching for ways to improve the value of their crops. In southern Alberta we have seen a shift towards niche crops, crops which farmers are free to market themselves without the control of the Wheat Board. Our department of agriculture in Alberta has a goal of achieving $20 billion in value-added industry. However, Mr. Speaker, the present monopoly power of the Canadian Wheat Board hampers those value-added developments. For example, I understand that Canada imports much of the pasta we use. Many pasta plants have been built just south of our border. This is due to the monopoly of the Canadian Wheat Board. The prairies may be one of the richest undeveloped areas on Earth, the one place where entrepreneurs should be investing, but Ottawa's political stronghold prevents them from using their ingenuity to create jobs and wealth. That's one other reason why rural prairie towns are shrinking and kids are leaving.

To elaborate further, Mr. Speaker, the existence of the Canadian Wheat Board hampers the value-added development. For example, you can imagine a situation in which a wheat farmer with crops right next door to a local bread-making plant or a bakery could very easily take his crops over to that plant, sell them at a fair market price, pay minimal transportation costs, creating maximum efficiency on the product. Well, you would have to imagine it, because as the law stands right now, there's no way this could happen. First, the farmer has to, must, sell his crop to the Canadian Wheat Board. Otherwise, he is in contravention of Canadian law and will have to pay a penalty. Farmers have even been thrown in jail for defying the Wheat Board.

Especially in rural Alberta, Mr. Speaker, the last thing that anybody needs is government interfering with healthy free enterprise. We've got a hard enough time as it is attracting business and development. Why would the Wheat Board and the federal government feel the need to intrude, especially since statistics show that despite all of their best intentions they are actually hurting farmers. It doesn't make any sense. At the end of the day this is about control over the most important aspect of the business of wheat and barley farming: the selling of grain.

It would be one thing if farmers had the option of selling to the Canadian Wheat Board. If individual farmers wanted to give that responsibility for selling their grain to the Wheat Board, that would be fine, but it would be their choice. Yet what we have is a situation in which farmers are forced to give up that responsibility. That isn't fair, especially when we are talking about the means by which many Albertans make a living. By passing Bill 207, we can start upon the long road of change that will eventually lead to a day when farmers can choose for themselves where and how to market their crops.

Mr. Speaker, I know that this bill won't abolish the Canadian Wheat Board. It's been said that change takes time, but this bill does have the power to show the federal government that allowing our producers to sell their primary products on the open market, away from the intrusive force of government is a better way for them to achieve full power for their product.

I urge all members to support this bill. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

MR. KNIGHT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased today to rise and speak in favour of Bill 207, the Alberta Wheat and Barley Test Market Act. I'd like to preface my comments with a quote from Kim Hubbard, who said that every "now and then an innocent man is sent to the Legislature."

I believe that this bill is an important step for the future of agriculture in Alberta's economy. As agriculture makes fervent efforts to capture international investment and become an integral player in the global market, we need to be assured that our agricultural sector is able to make key decisions that will affect the growth of their industry.

Mr. Speaker, an important international trend for the past two decades which has been moving forward in leaps and bounds in every sector including grain production and indeed the entire agricultural industry has been the prevalence of the free market. Single-desk exporters used to be relatively common around the world in large grain producing countries. China, South Africa, Australia, New Zealand, and many other countries have all been historically known to have state trading enterprises.

Mr. Speaker, in 1994 large trading nations of the world met to decide on new rules for international trade of all goods and established the World Trade Organization. Decisions were made as to what would be defined as freely traded goods and what sorts of marketing arrangements were acceptable for these goods, including agricultural products and grain. State trading enterprises were met with a lot of suspicion under this agreement. The concern is a lack of transparency, which makes it unclear as to whether these boards win customers with fair competition or whether they cross-subsidize within the board and win customers at subsidized rates. These are legitimate concerns that we must think about when looking at our current system.

Many groups within Canada and abroad have commented on this lack of transparency within the CWB. Enormous pressure has been placed on the state trading enterprises to become more open and competitive. Last year the Australian Wheat Board responded. For the first time in over 60 years Australia opened up a dual market for their barley. Now producers have an option to sell barley in the Australian Barley Board or directly to another grain marketer. It is an important change that has increased the transparency of the Australian Barley Board and has increased the responsiveness of the Australian board to both customers and suppliers. Similar pressure is being brought to the Canadian Wheat Board by the United States government and producers within the U.S. Simply, Canada's production strategy is not considered to follow free market guidelines internationally, and pressure from abroad to change will not relent until this change is put in place.

So, Mr. Speaker, you can see why it's important for legislators to take action on system reform. The current situation bars farmers from an important freedom of choice. It is inconsistent with international trends toward free enterprise. It is limiting competitive growth of the wheat and barley processing industry in Alberta and across the west.

A legitimate question remains, however, Mr. Speaker, as to whether reforms to the CWB can be done. The CWB is a massive institution. Indeed, the CWB is the largest single exporter of wheat and barley in the world. It deals with an annual revenue of between $4 billion and $6 billion a year, far more than the GDP of Prince Edward Island. It pools the grains of over 110,000 producers of wheat and barley in western Canada. There are benefits to the wheat and barley board, because its size does provide certain advantages to Canadian farmers. However, these advantages will continue even if market choice is implemented. I believe that if change happens, it has to be careful and deliberate, but let me clarify the point. It is perfectly possible for changes to be made in our current system without losing the benefits of the CWB.

One of the objections to changing to a free and flexible market is that the CWB relies on the stability provided in knowing the volumes of purchases it will make in a given year. This knowledge sometimes allows the CWB to make agreements with a purchaser quicker than other international competitors. If the rules mandating fixed sales to CWB are in any way relaxed, the theory goes, the viability would be undermined. Mr. Speaker, this belief is seriously flawed. There are ways in which the CWB could coexist with independent grain marketers in a healthy and stable relationship. One way would be to make it such that farmers who choose to go to the CWB would sign to three- or four-year contracts. This way, the CWB can be assured of supply each year and could account for this in their marketing operations around the world.

Another concern has been that the viability of the CWB would be undermined and there would not be enough volume of grain supplied to legitimize the organization. This objection does not correspond with existent research. It's true that in recent plebiscites 75 percent of wheat farmers expressed a desire to be able to sell to other markets besides the Canadian Wheat Board. This does not mean that these producers would no longer sell to the Canadian Wheat Board. Being a single-desk system the Canadian Wheat Board offers a single guaranteed price for wheat and barley that provides an advantage of low risk for farmers. At the end of the season farmers have a good idea of how much they will make by promising to sell to the CWB. Working outside the CWB may mean more risk but the potential of a higher reward. Most farmers would probably behave like most rational investors if they had a choice. Smart investors put part of their money into high-risk, high-return investment, but they also put part of their money into stable funds.

Investment diversification makes sense, and balancing investments between high- and low-risk returns is business. Most likely, given the choice, farmers would view the CWB as a conservative, stable option in which to market their grain. They would view alternative markets as a more risky, high-reward choice. They would choose a mixed portfolio that would include both types of markets, Mr. Speaker, depending on their risk aversion, some choosing not to take the risk at all. Ultimately, you see, farmers would continue to use the CWB. At first there would be substantially less volume flowing through the agency than there currently is. Eventually, however, a stable and significant volume would be brought to the agency that would keep the organization viable but allow Alberta farmers to choose their marketer.

Another concern that has been raised is that the CWB has taken on several responsibilities that are designed to improve the situation for all farmers. If the CWB were to become optional, it would not have an incentive to campaign for all farmers, and those farmers outside the agency may not be spoken for at all. This could be resolved by moving the responsibility of advocacy for the wheat and barley farmers to another agency that speaks for both users and non-users of the CWB. I submit that a great volunteer to assume this role might be the Canadian International Grains Institute. The institute had already begun to assume an advocacy role over the past few years by informing Canadians and delegates around the world about Canada's grains, oilseeds, and special crop industries.

When you look at the facts and weigh the pros and cons for the Canadian Wheat Board, there are going to be factors which supply benefits to farmers in both options. Some of these are based on fact, and some are based on theories. One fact I am sure of is Alberta farmers support the development of market choice. Their choice is built on the acknowledgment that they prefer a flexible and free market system where competition defines economic choice. Bill 207 will lead the Alberta grain sector toward the international trend of open and responsive markets.

I will be supporting Bill 207 because I believe it is the course of the future and its benefits will far outweigh any of the unfounded concerns discussed. I encourage all of my colleagues to do the same. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

MR. HORNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for the opportunity to rise in the House today and contribute to the debate regarding Bill 207, the Alberta Wheat and Barley Test Market Act.

Wheat and barley are two of the most important ingredients in Alberta's agricultural sector. At the present time Alberta wheat and barley products make their way to tables locally and across the world through the Canadian Wheat Board. Bill 207 aims to establish a framework under which Alberta farmers would have an alternate channel for the delivery of their crops to various markets. Since the CWB has monopoly control of marketing of wheat and barley for domestic consumption in Canada and for export, Alberta farmers do not have any input into how or at what prices the fruits of their labour are sold. The Alberta wheat and barley marketing act will establish a test market for Alberta wheat and barley producers which would be scheduled to remain in place for a period of 10 years. This in turn would provide Alberta farmers with the freedom to sell their crops to a private processor, to the CWB, or to a combination of the two. This would allow the government to examine the possible benefits of jurisdictional control over wheat and barley processing as well.

Mr. Speaker, I feel it necessary to note that Bill 207 does not aim to abolish the CWB, which is something that would be out of our control in any case, but merely allows Alberta farmers to freely market their wheat and barley as they see fit during the test period. Further, it will allow the government to study how the relaxation of the restrictions under the CWB affects the Alberta wheat and barley markets as well as the transportation and the processing of these crops.

Bill 207 comes at a time when the farming community in Alberta feels an ever increasing need for relaxation of monopoly controls that the Canadian Wheat Board currently exercises over these producers. In a poll conducted in 2000 and released by the Alberta Barley Commission, almost 11,000 prairie farmers were surveyed and 75 percent, Mr. Speaker, indicated that they wanted the ability to sell their grain to any buyer, including the Canadian Wheat Board, in domestic and export markets. In Alberta 81 percent wanted that choice. The Alberta Barley Commission, the Western Barley Growers Association, the Alberta Grain Commission, and the Western Canadian Wheat Growers Association have all indicated support for choice to the prairie farmer.

I would like to comment on some personal experiences in my past business career in the industry. I can tell you that when my family first decided to construct an oat facility in the province of Alberta, we did a substantial amount of work in our due diligence. At that time, Alberta accounted for close to 40 percent of western Canada's oat production, yet, Mr. Speaker, there was not one human consumption processing plant in Alberta. In fact, there were only two in all of western Canada. The largest oat mill in Canada at the time was located in Ontario. I sadly must say that we determined that unless we could source our raw material on an individual basis and work co-operatively with producers, we would have to look south of our own border to construct our plant.

As the hon. Member for Airdrie-Rocky View pointed out, an important thing happened in the latter part of the '80s: the board released oats from its control. In the first 60 years of the board's existence we had the investment of two oat mills in western Canada. Once the oats were removed in the latter part of the '80s from the board's influence, western Canada enjoyed a boom of development in oat processing. The largest oat processors are now located in western Canada, and we now have over seven plants producing human consumption from product to export markets all over the world. These are value-added products, Mr. Speaker. My own company developed markets for oats in the feed and human consumption markets internationally which have increased the demand in Alberta for the producer's product.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar and the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview both wondered aloud in this House about the possible negative impact on the family farm. Mr. Speaker, the key to the success and viability of the family farm in Alberta is a robust and growing value-added industry within the province, not in a foreign country. To believe that by protecting our industry as a supplier of raw materials to other markets, the value-added industries to those markets could grow and prosper in the face of common sense. We need to do all things possible to encourage these industries to develop and prosper in our own province and our own country.

Investment in value adding of wheat- and barley-based industries in western Canada lags the equivalent industry in the U.S. northern prairies while it has soared in western Canada in oilseed and oat processing, both outside the control of the Canadian Wheat Board. The Canadian Wheat Board's cost of administration, Mr. Speaker, has doubled over the past 10 years while the amount of grain sold remained essentially constant and total grain production fell.

Are western Canadian producers getting value for their money? In a recent report called Taking Control of Your Future, prepared by Lynda Swanson, who states that she wants to remain neutral on the whole issue of the Canadian Wheat Board, she points out that in the financial reports presented by the board, the placement of revenue in operating costs make the operating costs look smaller. In fact, Mr. Speaker, the operating costs per bushel would be 300 percent higher. Not only should our producers have choice to develop our industry, find new markets but also ensure that the producers are able to work with the best possible providers of services.

I've heard that many critics of choice are concerned that this may affect the cash advance program or the interim payments. Well, Mr. Speaker, contrary to some people's beliefs, the cash advance program is a federal government program, not a CWB program, and is available for a variety of commodities through various associations across the country, including the nonboard commodities of peas and canola. I've also heard the argument of the single-desk selling system being better able to get the best price. How do we know? In the absence of a competitive marketplace and no individual operators defining what is the best price for their own situation, farmers cannot be assured that they are getting the best price.

I know that situations have occurred in my own business where inquiries have come in to bid on barley sales to foreign buyers. Do you know what my response was, Mr. Speaker? It was to turn them away, because I did not want or could not want to make the sale through the board or with the board's involvement. How many opportunities have we given up? We've already heard in this House about major new malt plants and expansions of malt facilities. The problem is that none of them were in Alberta or even Canada.

The demands of grain processors and buyers often include specific preferences for certain grain characteristics. In a system where individual farmers may sell to individual processors, quality and specific grain characteristics can be altered to better suit buyers' needs. Under a system like the present CWB regime quality of grain is managed on a very general basis with no room for variation to better suit consumer demands; that is, besides certain grain standards no other grain attributes are given any value. If a test market for wheat and barley was established in Alberta, farmers could customize their production to better suit individual needs of those who wish to purchase their grain. This would allow them to charge higher prices, and the processors would get a product more suited to their specific needs.

It's also important to mention the fact that nobody had a chance to vote on whether the CWB should be established when it first came into being. I don't even know, Mr. Speaker, if Alberta ratified that decision. Although at its inception the Canadian Wheat Board was likely a necessary and effective measure, today it's an outdated, costly, and inefficient institution.

Mr. Speaker, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar gave us an interesting story about R.B. Bennett in 1929. The industry, for the member's information, has changed a little since then. We aren't hauling in horse and buggies anymore. At the present time the only thing the Canadian Wheat Board seems to provide Alberta farmers with is additional costs. The need for a more efficient mechanism to market, transport, and manage Alberta wheat and barley is obvious. It's time to find a new way of getting Alberta grain to domestic and international markets. Clearly, the Canadian Wheat Board can no longer provide Alberta farmers with a cost-efficient and competitive solution to achieve this goal.

Mr. Speaker, the issue of grain marketing is largely about control. It's time we allow Alberta farmers to use their skills and knowledge to market their wheat and barley as they best see fit. Alberta has some of the best and most efficient farmers in the world. They take pride in their work and deliver a good-quality product at a competitive price. It's time we provide them with the freedom necessary to effectively deliver their products to world markets so that their industry can prosper in Alberta. It's also time we allow the Alberta value-added industry to develop and contribute . . .

[The Assembly adjourned at 5:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Monday, April 29, 2002 8:00 p.m.
 Date: 02/04/29
 [The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Please be seated.

head: Motions Other than Government Motions Impact of Aging Workforce

506. Ms Kryczka moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to seriously address the impact of a growing and aging population on the Alberta labour market, taking into consideration the present culture that largely accepts disengagement or early retirement of older workers.

[Debate adjourned April 22: Ms Blakeman speaking]

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

MR. JOHNSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to have the opportunity to join the debate on Motion 506 tonight. To begin with, I would like to express my gratitude to the hon. Member for Calgary-West. I know how committed she is to the issues at hand and how much work she has put into Motion 506 to where it is today. For this reason I would like to commend her on her vision and foresight in sponsoring this motion.

We live in a culture that celebrates youth and youthfulness. The concept of being young and what a desirable state of existence it is surrounds us in most every way. Commercials on television or advertisements in newspapers and magazines routinely exult the virtues of being young, looking young, and acting young. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, it is perhaps not all that surprising that the desirability of youth as a concept has seeped into the culture at large.

Ours is a culture that by and large accepts and expects the disengagement or early retirement of older workers. Put differently, once a certain age is reached, there is cause for concern about job security. No longer are achievements and experience the sole primary indicators for job security. Age may be the key factor that tips the scale against job security.

In the course of the last 15 years or so, Mr. Speaker, the concept of sexual harassment in the workplace has garnered much attention. Gender-based discrimination, it is generally agreed, is a very real problem in our society, adversely affecting the lives of individuals and corporations alike. A less talked about but no less real problem is what we might call ageism, or age-based discrimination, in the workplace. It is perhaps an even more subtle form of disenfranchisement than is sexual harassment in that older workers are being, shall we say, phased out to make way or leave room for a younger generation. Relieving such workers of their duties may be the result only of their age. It has nothing to do with their skills, their knowledge, or their experience. In some instances it may also be financially advantageous to lay off older workers in favour of younger ones. Their contracts and their benefits are less costly.

There is currently no legislation prohibiting age discrimination in our province. Thus far only British Columbia and Ontario have enacted legal provisions that outlaw age discrimination. Now, Mr. Speaker, I am fully aware that the purpose of the motion is not to advocate that such legislation be passed. However, I believe that it is important to at least make mention of the current legal limit, for which Motion 506 has been introduced.

That said, Mr. Speaker, there is another side to not treating older employees like valued members of the team, and this goes far beyond the individual person. "Listen to your elders; it will serve you well," the old adage goes. Why? Because an older person has more experience than a young person does. With experience comes knowledge and sometimes even wisdom. By phasing out persons above a certain age, we not only lose the actual presence of the older workers but also large amounts of knowledge and experience.

For all of its purported desirability and attractiveness, Mr. Speaker, if there's one thing that youth or youthfulness cannot bring to the table, it's years of experience and the knowledge and wisdom that come with a great deal of experience. This is an indisputable fact. The longer a person lives, the greater are the experiences accumulated. There's a reason for the phrase "a lifetime's worth of experience."

Mr. Speaker, by attaching so much significance to youth and by glorifying youthfulness, we often tend to overlook the tremendous resources that reside within the older members of our society. Can we really afford not to make use of the experience and the knowledge of our older citizens for as long as they want to make them available to the rest of society? I think we are selling ourselves short if we do not take advantage of what the older members of our society have to offer. In addition, why would we ever want to place at a disadvantage those who came before us and to whom we owe so much?

Mr. Speaker, there are also long-term considerations to be made with regard to the aging workforce. While Alberta has one of the youngest populations in Canada, we are like the rest of the country in experiencing an aging trend. The number and proportion of seniors has increased steadily since the mid-1980s, and currently about 303,000, or 10 percent, of Albertans are 65 years of age and older. By 2026, however, it is predicted that Alberta seniors will more than double to 750,000, or about 20 percent of all Albertans. Today close to 20 percent of my constituents are seniors, at least in the city where I live, Camrose.

What is to account for this aging workforce? Not surprisingly the baby boom generation is closing in on its retirement, and as more and more of the baby boomers take stock of their options, it is widely expected that there will be an increase in retirement levels. However, Mr. Speaker, when a person retires from the workforce, it isn't simply the workforce that becomes diminished through the absence of that person from its ranks. Retirement means also that the workforce becomes diminished by virtue of the loss of a person's skills, knowledge, and experience. It may be an exaggeration to suggest that our workforce is in jeopardy of becoming impoverished with such a large number of retirees projected for the next 25 or 30 years. However, I think it would be tremendously shortsighted not to give serious consideration to the fact that within the span of a generation upwards of a quarter of Albertans will be retirees. I say this because current projections indicate that, in addition to an increase in the number of retirees, there will also be a shrinking of the workforce.

In a report published last year entitled Aging Populations in the Workforce: Challenges for Employers, the authors state that owing to their declining birthrates, Canada, the United States, and Great Britain will see much slower growth in the pool of potential workers. Indeed, growth is expected to even cease by the year 2030. As a result, Mr. Speaker, the report urges both private- and public-sector employers to adapt and/or develop new training strategies to tap underused resources such as older workers and immigrants and to target younger workers more effectively. Moreover, in September 2001 TD Canada Trust released a report that forecast that Canada's economic growth could be hampered within a decade if the private sector is not prepared for the upcoming massive wave of retiring baby boomers. In the report TD Canada Trust urges companies to come up with more and unique ways of attracting older workers and retaining them in the labour market longer through flexible work arrangements, higher wages, and more training.

The message these two reports are sending is clear. Mr. Speaker, highly skilled older workers are key resources for addressing current and future labour and skill shortages. Even in Alberta today we are experiencing a labour shortage in many areas, and retired people are being asked to give more years to the workforce. It is therefore in everyone's interest that we find ways to allow and even encourage those who wish to work beyond – and I use the term advisedly – the traditional retirement age to do so. It's in society's best interest, it's in the interest of the business community, and it is in the best interest of the individuals themselves.

Mr. Speaker, there is another consideration as well. With people living longer and with an increasing number of people choosing to retire early, the average length of time a retiree draws a pension has increased considerably. In 1996, for instance, Statistics Canada reported that the average retirement age was 58.5 years for women and 61.4 years for men. Meanwhile, life expectancies in Canada rose 7.2 years for women and 7.7 years for men between 1960 and 1997. In Alberta, to be even more specific, the life expectancy for a woman is now 81.5 years and 76.5 years for a man. Thus in 1966 the average man would retire at 65 and then live to collect CPP for about three years. Today the average man will now do so for about 15.2 years, whereas women now live long enough on average to collect CPP for upwards of 23 years.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I see a variety of benefits coming our way if we pass Motion 506. We will first and foremost retain in the workforce skilled workers with much experience and knowledge. Secondly, we will offset the impact on our economy of large numbers of baby boomers retiring by 2026, as current projections . . . [Mr. Johnson's speaking time expired]

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Okay. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It was with interest that I was listening to the remarks from the hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose, and it is refreshing to finally hear a member on the government side discuss the issue of aging in this province and at the same time recognize that we are on average currently the youngest province in the country. While I'm discussing this, it is important to note that this is the first government member to state this and not blame an aging population on the fact that health care costs in this province are totally out of control. It's refreshing to see this.

[Ms Graham in the chair]

Now, we are the youngest province in Canada, Madam Speaker, and by the year 2016 we will see an increase in the population that's over 65 from 10 percent currently to 16 percent. This motion is certainly in my view a step in the right direction because we can start planning now for the large number of citizens who will be retiring.

I believe the hon. member said that in 2026 there would be 20 percent of the population over the age of 65, and one would have to wonder where this bar came from for 65 as a retirement age. I believe that as history recalls it, it would be well over 100 years ago that Otto von Bismarck in Germany used the age of 65 to promise retirement benefits to citizens, knowing full well that very few of the citizens lived to collect that benefit from the state. Nonetheless, being concerned for their welfare, Bismarck did promote this as government policy.

Social policies not only in Europe changed but also in North America. Those social policies that changed were notions that perhaps public health care was a viable policy alternative and would increase citizens' age. We saw a dramatic increase in the average age of the population, and the hon. member stated, I believe, that females live to an average of 83 and males are a little bit behind at 79 years. So certainly there has been a lot of improvement in the life expectancy not only in North America, not only in Canada and Alberta, but certainly in Europe since Bismarck made his policy well over a century ago.

This, Madam Speaker, seems like a very reasonable request of the government, this motion:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to seriously address the impact of a growing and aging population on the Alberta labour market, taking into consideration the present culture that largely accepts disengagement or early retirement of older workers.

Certainly there are reasons to have early retirement. I can only look at the front benches of this cabinet and think: wow; that would be the Premier's best alternative. In fact, there was a younger member who came into the Assembly today, and I'm certain that they could do very well for themselves in this cabinet. Perhaps early retirement is an option. Maybe I'll see the Premier in the hall, and I'll suggest that.

DR. TAYLOR: Quit insulting Ty like that. It has to do with brains, Hughie, not age. That's why you'll never make it.

MR. MacDONALD: Madam Speaker, if the hon. member wants to get involved in debate, certainly he could rise. There would be less pressure on his brain, and then perhaps his comments would make sense.

Now, there seems to be a very reasonable request of the government again, Madam Speaker. The loss of experienced workers is an issue that does and will continually challenge Alberta's workplaces both in the public and the private sector. I think it is worth noting that Alberta and also the province of Quebec have already ended forced retirement at age 65 for their civil servants as has, as I understand it, the federal government. So that's a step in the right direction.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

When we think of the experiences that we've dealt with in the last decade, where there have been incentives for workers or individuals to take early retirement, I see the reverse of this happening, and there will be incentives in the future, because of labour shortages, to keep workers in the workforce, and I see it occurring soon, Mr. Speaker, because there is a labour shortage. The Minister of Human Resources and Employment certainly is aware of some of the labour shortages in this province. The Minister of Economic Development certainly is aware of some of the labour shortages that are developing in this province. The environment for change is there. It certainly is.

Now, what will we do to attract people to stay in the workforce? This motion will be the first step, Mr. Speaker, in that direction by this government. If we look back and we look at the possibility of eliminating mandatory retirement, the increasing challenges that are talked about to the constitutionality of mandatory retirement may become more common and certainly there will be lobbying taking place. There was recently a conference held marking the 20th anniversary of the Charter of Rights.

DR. TAYLOR: The shameful document that it is.

MR. MacDONALD: Now, the Minister of Environment is saying that it's a shameful document, but I would object to that statement.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: I wonder if the Minister of Environment would put his name on the list and speak then, at the conclusion of the other speakers who are on the list. Until then, engage himself in his book or, if he wants, in lively conversation outside the Chamber.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Now, because of our Charter of Rights mandatory retirement will be one of the big constitutional issues in coming years. This motion again gives us an ideal opportunity to reflect on that in this Assembly.

There are individuals – and I believe that Morris Rosenberg would be one of them. He states: “The Supreme Court of Canada . . . have to ‘revisit’ a 1990 ruling that declared mandatory retirement . . . an acceptable form of discrimination against seniors.” Now, Mr. Rosenberg said this in a speech, and I have before me an article from one of the local newspapers regarding this speech. It is an issue that has been dealt with in the courts. The Chief Justice of this country, Beverley McLachlin, said last week that the court is open to taking a second look at rulings made in the early days of the Charter of Rights to see if they reflect today's society.

I would remind all members that the number of Canadians aged 65 or over is expected to nearly triple, from 3.7 million in 1997 to 10.8 million in 2046, so I'm going almost a generation beyond what the hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose has, but we have to look at this, and we have to look at this as perhaps a pool of labour for the looming shortages that are occurring.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, the government may want to look at options that offer incentives to workers to stay on. Now, I don't know what some of those options would be, but certainly it is something that is worth exploring. I think we're going to, as I said before, need incentives, not disincentives, to encourage citizens to remain active participants in the workforce, and the Department of Human Resources and Employment . . . [Mr. MacDonald's speaking time expired] I'm disappointed.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Hon. minister, we have two ministers that apparently are prepared to speak on this topic. The hon. Minister of Environment?

The hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

MR. DUNFORD: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. [some applause] Thank you. Thank you. I rise tonight in support of Motion 506, that has been brought forward by the MLA for Calgary-West. I certainly agree that Alberta needs to address the labour market issues that have been created by a very strong economy and an aging population.

As members here in the House will know, the Human Resources and Employment Department is Alberta's source for career workplace and labour market information. These labour force statistics that we have for our use show us how strong the economy has been and how it's helped people find jobs, including people that are aged 45 or older. With over 1.6 million people employed in 2001, there were more people working than ever before here in the province of Alberta, and in 2001 the average unemployment for older workers dropped to 17 weeks from 24 weeks in the year 2000.

Now, while this is good news, Mr. Speaker, we know that it is higher than the workforce average of 10 weeks, and this indicates to me that there may be some additional employment barriers that need to be addressed. Previous speakers on this very motion have talked about some of those. Words like ageism are now starting to appear in the vernacular, but I think that there would be something to be said about a barrier that in a large way is perhaps the attitude of employers. We find this in work that we try to do with aboriginals, and we find it also in the work that we try to do with disabled people, that to a large extent employers still have this attitude that they need someone young and strong and particularly white, and of course that whole world is changing. There are all kinds of workers that are available and would not fit that traditional mold.

Our department continues to lead initiatives and to work with other ministries to plan for and accommodate this aging labour force that we have. Just a short time ago we released the Prepared for Growth: Building Alberta's Labour Supply. This report, which we created in collaboration with 10 other ministries, clearly recognized the pressure that's created by an aging population and predicts that this trend will continue, of course, as baby boomers age. The report also tells us that 25 of 53 occupational categories are experiencing skill shortages, and we've had mention of that here tonight. While all of this is happening, of course, our unemployment rate is really the lowest in Canada, and that is very good news. I don't want to diminish in any way what employers here in the province are doing in keeping that unemployment rate down, but also then low unemployment rates in creating these shortages clearly show us that we have a smaller pool of available workers to draw from.

We also worked with seven other ministries to develop a new employer handbook, and we called this one Diversity: A Strategy to Meet Your Need for Skilled Workers. Now, this publication will be available soon. The report highlights the benefits of hiring older workers and nontraditional sources of labour, that I mentioned just briefly a few moments ago.

We're also working with other ministries to develop strategies within a seniors' policy initiative to help provide older workers with more choices about work and lifelong learning opportunities. I think many employers will agree that Alberta needs older, more experienced workers to share their wisdom with others and to help train younger workers, and we value the expertise offered by the older workers, especially in the areas, Mr. Speaker, of workplace health and safety. Some of the things that we're finding in terms of the current situation is that 26 percent of our lost time injury claims are happening to workers within the first six months of their employment. Now, this doesn't mean that they're necessarily a young worker, but what it does mean is that it is a worker that has come into the workforce and within that particular skill set that's required within that particular industry, we're finding that of course they don't have all of the skills developed yet in order to work in a very safe manner. If we take that statistic and look at it in the longer time frame, if we look at it in a year's time, then we find that 40 percent of our lost time claims are happening in the first year of that employment.

Again we need to focus on the opportunities that we have with older workers. The older workers know the ropes. While they might also know shortcuts, they do know that there's no shortcut to safety, that there's only one way to work in this province and that's to work safely. In fact, that'll be the more productive way in which to work. As a matter of fact, if you think you're going to save time by shortcutting safe workplace procedures, just think of the time that's going to be lost, the productive time that's going to be lost, if this in fact leads to an injury. Just think what happens, then, if that worker that you've invested the money in is now injured. Hopefully it's not a fatality, although there are too many of those in our province as well. So we need to continue to focus on the productive opportunities that we have in working safely, and I believe that it's older workers generally and experienced workers specifically that can help us in that area.

Now, our department already offers support for people, including the older worker who wants to find a job and wants to keep working. As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, over $250 million will be invested through labour market programs and services this fiscal year. An example of this is career counseling. We have employment training programs. I was meeting earlier today with some folks, talking about additional programming in the self-employment area. We conduct a number of workshops around the province on a continual basis, helping people to develop resume writing, also the techniques of job interviewing, and of course helping with those job searches. As everyone here within this Assembly would know, it's a lot of work in trying to find employment, so we want to be as helpful as we can to workers of any age but specifically older workers and those that are older than 45 in finding this employment.

So Alberta's economy is strong, Mr. Speaker. More Albertans are working than ever before, yet when you look at the want ads and you have want ad indexes, employers will still need more employees. Now, our labour force is ever changing. Current trends like increasing technology and an aging workforce are driving the need for our department to adapt quickly to this change, and our ministry will continue to identify and forecast trends in the labour market and share that information with Albertans. I must say that what would be very, very helpful would be if associations, whether they be industrial associations or service type associations, would spend some time in human resource planning. There's nothing better to assist government, in my view, than good, practical suggestions that come from the very employer groups that actually hire these people. Now, it doesn't have to be by association particularly. There would be other opportunities to perhaps do it on a regional type basis. As the Member for West Yellowhead would be familiar with, we have opportunities to look into this particular area.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to say a few words in support of the present motion, and I appreciate the report the minister of human resources gave in terms of activities that his department is undertaking with respect to older workers. The concern for an aging population is one that's being felt worldwide. If you check the web sites, almost every state in the United States has a part of their web site devoted to the problems of aging. There was recently a worldwide conference in Madrid, Spain, on aging that is attempting to come up with a political and economic document that could be used by governments around the world in determining policies that will ensure that older citizens fully realize their human rights, that they're able to live secure in poverty-free environments, and that they take full part in the economic, political, and social life of the societies in which they are a part. They focus, too, on eliminating violence and discrimination with respect to older persons, and they point out the vital importance of families in helping to address these problems.

So the issue that the member has raised, Motion 506, is an important one as more and more of our citizens and the baby boomers move into that part of their lives where aging becomes more and more of an issue. I think it's important that the motion, even though it is one that urges the government to address seriously the impact – and we've had a bit of a report from the minister of human resources. In looking at other states and their actions in terms of aging, I notice that in New York there were 37 subdepartments in the state government there that were charged with the issue of addressing aging and making plans. I think, if I recall, their plan was called the year 2015. They were looking forward to actions that should be in place in their state by that date to accommodate older workers.

I'm pleased the motion is here before us, Mr. Speaker, and I'm pleased to support it. Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

MS GRAHAM: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Tonight it is my pleasure to rise and speak in favour of Motion 506, which urges the government "to seriously address the impact of a growing and aging population on the Alberta labour market." But before doing so, I would like to commend the Member for Calgary-West for her work on seniors' issues over the years with her participation on the Seniors Advisory Council and for her efforts in bringing this motion forward before the Legislature.

Mr. Speaker, it's come to my attention that an aging population is becoming a major focus of governments around the world, and many different countries are realizing the implications of an aging population potentially on their workforce, with the impact of a massive worker shortage a real possibility. It has also come to my attention that other countries more so than Canada have developed programs which have encouraged seniors to participate in the labour force much beyond the norm.

Japan, in particular, Mr. Speaker, has a higher employment rate among older people than most other industrialized nations in the world, and in fact it has a very high rate for those over the age of 60. This is because Japan has a national policy which strongly promotes what is called active aging. What is involved here is an approach which encourages those who have retired to become re-employed, whether it be in new jobs with new employers in small businesses or to stay in a changed capacity in their old place of employment. Often these new positions are at a lower salary and on a part-time basis, but they still retain the involvement of the older person in the economy.

Another example of a country trying to deal with the aging population is Germany, which has a program called the 55-plus initiative, which emphasizes vocational training and lifelong learning and allows for the reintegration of older unemployed persons in the workforce.

I think, Mr. Speaker, it will be necessary for the province of Alberta and this country as a whole to change our attitudes towards older workers. I'm pleased to say that just last session the Minister of Justice brought forward the Provincial Court Amendment Act, which provided for our provincial court judges to work beyond the old mandatory retirement age of 70. Under the new changes judges can work up to the age of 75 on a year-by-year basis with extensions of their term with the consent of the Chief Judge. So the trend is changing here in Alberta, and it may be that we are leaders in this respect.

I do want to leave an opportunity for the Member for Calgary-West to sum up, but I would just like to encourage all members of the Assembly to support Motion 506, because it not only benefits older workers; it will certainly benefit our economy and Alberta as a whole if we adopt these policies. Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Are there any further speakers?

SOME HON. MEMBERS: Question.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: No, we won't have the question. The rules permit to the end of 60 minutes, which has not yet elapsed. The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort was on my list. No? If there are no further speakers, then we'll call on the hon. Member for Calgary-West for her final five minutes.

MS KRYCZKA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It has indeed been an honour and a pleasure to sponsor Motion 506 in this Assembly. I'm confident this government will embrace the challenge to take a leadership role, this time adapting to Alberta's aging workforce.

As we've heard throughout the debate, there are many effective ways to help older people remain in the workforce as long as we start raising awareness early, and from what I've heard from the hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment, that is happening. Having older workers remain in the workforce on a part-time, flexible basis would definitely help address the increasing void in our skilled workforce, especially in the next 10 to 20 years.

However, for this to happen, there needs to be a shift in attitude in Alberta. It is so important to realize and recognize the value that older workers have on our workforce. I'm sure there are many college graduates in middle management today who would rather the aging workforce just head off to the golf course. However, there is incredible value associated with being a mentor, for example, and leading younger generations with one's wisdom and experience.

Increasingly Albertans are realizing the dramatic aging curve in Alberta's population. Today, for example, there are approximately four working people for every retiree, and by 2030 there'll be just two working people for every retiree. Some of the problems associated with an aging workforce addressed in this Assembly include too few people providing the tax revenue base to support the pensions of an aging population, too many people retiring in their 50s and 60s when they are needed in the workforce. This will ultimately create extreme shortages in occupations, as mentioned earlier in my address to this Assembly. In the next five years, though, for another example, up to 500 sworn members, or 40 percent, of the Calgary Police Service will be eligible for early retirement.

Another very important consideration is that many older people with insufficient income from pensions will be unable to live satisfactorily in retirement. Thanks to the creation of a public pension plan, Albertans have been programmed to retire at age 65, and when one considers the trend toward early retirement packages, I think that the earlier the better is not going to be popular in the near future.

Many people, however, are also realizing that retiring isn't as easy as it sounds. The financial pressures of not working while maintaining an adequate lifestyle can be overwhelming. There are many older workers in Alberta who have expectations that the Canada pension plan and their limited savings will be enough for them to maintain their preferred lifestyle. However, we know that people are living longer than before and the baby boomers are going to be more active than past retirees, with a whole new set of demands. In the near future it is the myths and misconceptions about older workers approaching retirement age that will be the biggest barrier for convincing employers that older people can fill a vital role in the future of Alberta's labour market.

Mr. Speaker, I think that this government can help people realize that retirement from work can be a gradual process. As people reach their 60s, they can reduce their work schedules and the stress associated with their job, but new approaches in workplace flexibility depend on co-operation with employers. We have learned just earlier, a few minutes ago, from the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed that other governments have developed and implemented programs to retain older workers and have redefined early retirement. I would like to thank the Member for Calgary-Lougheed for talking about Germany and Japan and their problems and how they've addressed them, but I really feel we don't have to look at only other continents to find people concerned about this issue.

Just recently I received a copy of the Alberta Chambers of Commerce Human Resources Committee's resolution on the aging workforce, and it includes recommending that the government of Alberta work with the federal government where appropriate to achieve the following outcomes. I would quote only the two broad statements and not the details in the outcomes. First of all, "gathering all information about the aging issue affecting employment, business policy, taxation, pension policy and health." The second broad statement is: "Giving older citizens opportunities to continue in their trade, business or professional career past the 'normal' age of retirement." It makes four suggestions following, which I believe I don't have time to express tonight. I found it very interesting that the Calgary Chamber of Commerce for the past two years has done a fair amount of research in this area and has a resolution paper that they will be formally presenting to government. In the end, Mr. Speaker, I acknowledge that it is up to the individual to choose to remain in the workforce or seek retirement.

Lastly, I would like to thank the hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment for his support tonight and the hon. members for Wetaskiwin-Camrose and Calgary-Lougheed and also those from the Official Opposition who supported Motion 506 in this Assembly.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion Other than Government Motion 506 carried]

Motor Vehicle Exhaust System Standards

507. Mr. Yankowsky moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly of Alberta urge the government to introduce binding and enforceable legislation to make it a provincial offence to operate a motor vehicle with an exhaust system that has been modified such that it no longer meets the standards for noise suppression set out in the Motor Vehicle Safety Act of Canada for that class of vehicle.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

MR. YANKOWSKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As sponsor of Motion 507 it is my pleasure to rise and discuss the importance of working to make our cities, towns, and pristine areas quieter. The shiny cars and trucks that we buy from the local dealer are made to be quiet and environmentally friendly, and that's the way they should be left, but our unenforceable laws make it possible for individuals to alter vehicle muffler systems and then proceed to disturb innocent individuals and families who are trying to get a good night's sleep or enjoy a leisurely time in the backyard on the very few warm days that we have in our summers. Instead of being serenaded by soft music or the sounds of children playing, they are blasted awake or forced to seek shelter because of insensitive persons roaring around in their vehicles equipped with bluebottles, cherry bombs, or no mufflers at all.

Of course, there is no point in calling the police, because they are too busy to deal with it, and even if they do come out, the noisy vehicle is long gone. If on the off chance they do stop the offending vehicle, at best the operator will be issued a $57 ticket. What a joke. Anyone usually has $57 worth of loonies and toonies in their jeans, so it's a nothing fine. It's only a ticket, so they continue to drive and terrorize communities. Small towns are really being disturbed by these people. They can disturb the whole town because of the size of the town.

Mr. Speaker, this is a serious situation and getting worse. I have had complaints from constituents and have heard from our major cities and towns. This motion arises from a concern from municipalities and law enforcement agencies who feel that more enforceable legislation is needed to deal with the noise pollution and implement universal restrictions on acceptable decibel noise levels for vehicles. Motion 507 puts restrictions on any equipment which enhances exhaust system noise beyond the manufacturer's standards, as set out in the Motor Vehicle Safety Act of Canada. It urges the government to make it a provincial offence to operate a vehicle with an altered muffler that no longer meets federal standards.

The recognition of noise as a serious health hazard as opposed to a nuisance is a recent development. The World Health Organization considers the health effects of hazardous noise exposure to be an important public health problem, especially among children. The World Health Organization has linked high levels of ambient noise to social and health problems such as noise-induced hearing impairment, interference with speech communication, disturbance of rest and sleep, as well as psychophysiological, mental health, and performance effects such as increases in blood pressure, higher heart rates, and increased levels of stress hormones. These health effects in turn impact on behaviour and also interfere with attentive work and recreational activities. However, whether regarded as a nuisance or as a genuine health hazard, noise exposure is known to affect work, household productivity, quality of life, and property value.

Mr. Speaker, while we allow extremely noisy vehicles to roar up and down the streets in front of people's bedrooms, driving up our health care costs, industry on the other hand is doing a yeoman's job of lowering noise levels. For example, there was a picture in one of the newspapers showing a picture of a power plant with some geese in the foreground, and the caption was: only the geese are heard. Now, this power plant is located way out there in the boondocks, if I can use that term, yet they are making a great effort to lower the decibel noise level. Companies have spent millions of dollars to make coal hauling trucks whisper quiet. Again, they are operating way out there in the country.

Mr. Speaker, some of the loudest community noises are vehicles with modified muffler systems. In fact, many small towns are having serious problems with vehicles with altered components specifically designed to increase vehicle noise. These muffler alterations may come in the form of bluebottles, cherry bombs, or straight pipes and can often cause the vehicle to be very loud, with the sound penetrating even the best-insulated homes.

The Highway Traffic Act does contain provisions governing exhaust systems that have been modified to create more noise; however, these provisions are very difficult to enforce. For example, section 46 sets out regulations for muffler systems, stating:

A motor vehicle propelled by an internal combustion engine shall be equipped with an exhaust [system] . . . which ensures that the exhaust gases from the engine are cooled and expelled without excessive noise.

As you can imagine, a statement like "excessive noise" is subjective from one area to the next and even officer to officer. What might be excessive to one is not excessive to another. The act also gives municipalities the ability to define what constitutes excessive noise. Enforcing these bylaws requires an officer to catch the offender in the act of making excessive noise. The officer then must prove that the noise actually disturbed a human, which is extremely difficult to prove, and offenders escape without penalty.

Municipalities are asking for more enforceable vehicle noise legislation. One such request came from the city of Calgary. The mayor of Calgary sent me a letter earlier this year expressing his concern with the loud exhaust systems on cars in his city. He explained that city council had enacted bylaws to try to deal with noise violations but that they were having a difficult time enforcing the bylaw as it requires officers of the law to catch the offender in the act. He expressed to me that noise is an important issue for his citizens and that the noise problem in Calgary was having a pronounced effect on the quality of life in Calgary communities. The mayor explained that they have an extensive noise barrier construction program in progress to try to alleviate the noise problem in communities adjacent to major roadways. However, the city of Calgary has found that the public demand for noise barriers far exceeds the available financing for their construction.

This expense is largely unnecessary. All that needs to be done is to pass enforceable vehicle noise laws and remove the root cause of the noise. Calgary city council said that they would support any initiative taken by the province to create better legislation to deal with vehicle noise. They understand that the problem is going to get far worse before it gets any better.

Mr. Speaker, we are obligated to try and help municipalities deal with this problem. Municipalities have asked for better legislation, and Motion 507 does exactly that. It urges the government to enact better and enforceable vehicle noise control legislation. It is my hope that passing Motion 507 will give our police officers a simple, enforceable law that will rid our communities of unnecessary noise. Under Motion 507 officers would be able to simply examine a vehicle, and if the muffler system has been altered with the intent to create more noise, the vehicle owner would be subjected to a penalty. No decibel reading or other complicated task would be necessary. A simple visual check is all that would be needed before ticketing. If it's been altered and it's noisy, then ticket it or, preferably, tow it.

The penalties also need to be increased, Mr. Speaker, if this is going to be effective. What I ultimately hope is that by having this debate and bringing this problem to light, we may be able to come up with a strategy to alleviate vehicle noise pollution in our cities and towns. A quiet cities and towns initiative is long overdue, and we owe it to taxpayers. They pay taxes to have safe, clean, and I would add quiet neighbourhoods, and this will only happen with enforceable vehicle noise laws. No one should have the right to disturb anyone.

This is the least that we can do for our neighbours. I urge all members to vote favourably for Motion 507.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm going to participate with interest in this debate. Allow me to read the motion. Motion 507 reads:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly . . . urge the government to introduce binding and enforceable legislation to make it a provincial offence to operate a motor vehicle with an exhaust system that has been modified such that it no longer meets the standards for noise suppression set out in the Motor Vehicle Safety Act of Canada for that class of vehicle.

I listened to the comments of the sponsoring member, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, with some interest. I live, like that hon. member, in Edmonton and I live near a couple of busy streets that aren't far from a major hospital. I am from time to time aware of traffic noise, especially if it's coming from, say, motorcycles or suped-up cars, modified cars.

DR. TAYLOR: It makes you wish you had one.

DR. TAFT: I myself have an old, beat-up car.

DR. TAYLOR: But does it have a muffler?

DR. TAFT: It does have a muffler.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: It is not necessary for the Minister of Environment to add his thoughts to every speaker. We'll let the speaker speak for himself.

Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm not sure that I've ever owned a car that has violated the noise suppression regulations or standards under the Motor Vehicle Safety Act of Canada, but I know many people do because I can hear them racing around the city or racing through some of the rural parts or smaller centres of the province. I will freely admit that I'm not familiar with the standards for noise suppression in the Motor Vehicle Safety Act, and I would appreciate it if maybe the sponsoring member could share some of those standards with me and perhaps with all the members of the Assembly.

Certainly noise on the road comes from all kinds of sources. Just the other day I was at a stoplight, and a vehicle pulled up beside me. The stereo was playing so loudly that the windows in the vehicle were vibrating, and in fact my car was vibrating from the noise. I wondered about this not only as an issue of intrusion of privacy and peace but also of the health of the poor person inside the vehicle, that will soon be deaf and, as a result of that, probably a burden on our health care system. So there are many issues to consider here.

Times up? Okay. Thank you. I'd like to carry on later, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: We hesitate to interrupt the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, but the time limit for consideration of this item of business on this day has now concluded.

9:00

head: Government Bills and Orders
Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Tannas in the chair]

THE CHAIR: I'd like to call the Committee of the Whole to order. For the benefit of those in the gallery this is the informal part of the Assembly, where people are allowed to move around. We have the rule that only one member may be standing and talking at a time, and they must always speak from their place in the House when they are speaking.

Bill 18
Social Care Facilities Review Committee
Amendment Act, 2002

THE CHAIR: Any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. I think that we've raised a number of questions about Bill 18, the Social Care Facilities Review Committee Amendment Act, 2002, in previous discussions, and I'm not sure that there is much to be added to the concerns that have been raised. I think that maybe for the most part those concerns have been addressed, and other than to revisit them, the comments I'd like to make have been outlined.

Thanks, Mr. Chairman.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Again we revisit this issue of the Social Care Facilities Review Committee. I did speak on this before, but my concerns remain with the general direction of our social care facilities in this province and the system through which we review and inspect those facilities and through which we follow up on complaints, through which we investigate those facilities. I am concerned that the ability of this committee to initiate an act is being narrowed, and that is, I think, if anything a greater concern as we watch some of the directions of this government in terms of its social care facilities.

We have gone through this review. I have profound concerns, and unless some information has come forward that hasn't been shared with me, those concerns remain. I don't see how this particular bill strengthens our society, strengthens our system for developing and managing social care facilities, or strengthens our commitment to children and to Albertans in need of care in these social facilities. I remain very concerned about this bill in particular and this bill as it fits into the larger context of our social care management in this province.

I did want to review some comments that were made on April 10, but I haven't had time at this moment to review those in enough detail to bring them to the attention of the Assembly. I will simply stay on record as expressing my most serious concern over this bill. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. At this point in debate in committee on the Social Care Facilities Review Committee Amendment Act, I have the following comments and perhaps questions for the hon. minister. Now, we are amending section 1(b), and the new definition of facility certainly is going to be "a day care facility as defined in the Social Care Facilities Licensing Act." When one considers that four or more children in a facility would, as I understand it, constitute the old definition, how is this going to be an improvement? We all know that we have various standards of child care provided across the province, and this facility definition I think is very, very important. Certainly in light of the events that were reported in this Assembly last week during question period of the unfortunate circumstances, it was sort of like a day care that was like an ILO almost. It was incredible what was going on in St. Albert, and I can't understand how. The minister perhaps can clarify not only for this hon. member but clarify this for all members of the House: how is this to be an improvement?

Certainly there are other sections to this bill. We're looking at some changes to the Health Professions Act. We're also looking, I believe, at an amendment to the Pharmacy and Drug Act. These are, I think, quite standard, and in reading about this bill, well, to say the least, I believe they're acceptable.

Now, when we look at the definition as it's explained here, I think this causes this hon. member some concern. In conclusion, I would like to remind all hon. members of this Assembly of just the importance a definition can have in a facility. If we look at “a facility that provides care, treatment or shelter and that is funded, wholly or partly, by the Department of Children’s Services,” that’s a very broad brush, Mr. Chairman. There have been some attempts in the past to standardize care across the province, and I think this may be a veiled attempt at that, but I don’t think it goes far enough. When you consider the number of different agencies and organizations that are providing care or treatment or shelter and the number that are funded, whether it’s wholly or partly, by the department, in this case the Department of Children’s Services, well, that definition is very, very important and also the definition for a day care facility.

When we consider a day care facility as defined in the Social Care Facilities Licensing Act, we should also be in this debate discussing the whole idea of who is employed in the day care facility. Certainly we were talking earlier about having a labour shortage. Well, there currently is a labour shortage in the day care facilities in this province. I am a little confused by the current section 1(b) and how it presently reads and what is being attempted here with the definition from the Social Care Facilities Licensing Act. If through the course of debate, Mr. Chairman, this can be clarified, I would be very, very grateful.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I’d like to refer to some comments made on the evening of Wednesday, April 10, of this year in discussion earlier on this particular bill, in which the minister through whom the Social Care Facilities Review Committee reports to the Legislature was responding to some of my concerns. She said, among other things:

We’re making these amendments because we will shift the emphasis for the committee from inspections and investigations to service reviews, and we will do that because the Protection for Persons in Care Act is the piece of legislation that conducts investigations . . .

If these amendments are passed, regulations will be developed to designate facilities under other departments to come under the jurisdiction of the Protection for Persons in Care Act.

Right away I have some concerns – and I would like to raise those – with the minister’s comments.

First of all, it would be nice if the regulations were brought forward in conjunction with the legislation, as has been done historically in this Legislature, so that we knew some of the details about how this was going to be enacted. I still do not see in this a justification for shifting the emphasis from inspections and investigations to service reviews. Indeed, it’s not clear to me from these comments what a service review is. If the committee receives a complaint, they should investigate. If they visit a facility and are concerned, they should investigate or they should cause an investigation to occur. A service review is an extraordinarily vague term. I mean, what does service review mean? Maybe the minister has a specific definition of a service review, but I don’t know what that is, and lacking that information, I’m feeling very concerned about this particular bill.

In fact, the minister goes on here to talk about a review as opposed to investigation. Well, frankly, there are times and there are places in this province where investigations are necessary. I just sense confusion over the purposes of this bill, and I think it’s regrettable that it’s not laid out more clearly. Is this bill, as has been sometimes put to me, about clarifying the jurisdiction of the Health Facilities Review Committee and the Social Care Facilities Review Committee and drawing a clear line between what kind of facilities and programs come under each committee? Well, that would be commendable, but I don’t see that in this bill. What I see in this bill are steps to weaken the power of this committee. This is a committee ultimately that reports to the Legislature. Sure, it comes through the minister, but it reports to this Legislature, and I think it owes all of us the duty of thoroughly fulfilling its mandate, which would include investigating complaints.

There are clearly – clearly – causes for complaints in the social care facilities of this province, and indeed the minister has a very active file on one right now and probably on a number of them and always will, and any minister would. I don’t fault the minister for those complaints. Indeed, a well-functioning system will include a route for feeding back complaints. When we see the ability to investigate removed in some sense from the social care facilities committee, then I feel like we are letting down some of the most vulnerable and dependent people in this province. People do not end up in social care facilities unless they have serious problems, unless they are children or adults with very, very serious problems. They depend on us. They depend on groups like this committee to step in and protect them. I am troubled, as you can tell, by this particular bill and indeed by the larger context of our social care system that this bill is coming from.

Perhaps the minister can respond with more specifics and allay our concerns. We have not received any further information, I don’t believe, since this last was debated on the 10th of April. That’s more than two weeks ago, and as a result my concerns are not in any way allayed.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

MS EVANS: Mr. Chairman, I don’t want to take a significant amount of time, but perhaps I could re-emphasize a couple of points. First of all, one of the hon. members talked about the part of section 1(b) which presently reads – and I jump ahead to (ii):

a building or part of a building, other than a home maintained by a person to whom the children living in that home are related by blood or marriage, in which care, supervision or lodging is provided for 4 or more children under the age of 18.

This does not reference day homes or day cares. They are referenced later. This represents group homes or child care institutions that provide residential care for the purposes of Children’s Services. So in fact we move back to point 2, section 1, where we amend by repealing clause (b) and substitute that facility is “a facility that provides care, treatment or shelter and that is funded,” – this is key – “wholly or partly, by the Department of Children’s Services” and, secondly, “a day care facility as defined in the Social Care Facilities Licensing Act.”

Previously and heretofore some of the difficulty that we had relative to facilities was that there was an assumption that the Social Care Facilities Review Committee would review the context or the homes of people who were receiving care for the purpose of some form of mental illness or disability. They were adults, and they were not funded by Children’s Services, and they were quite a different place.

Children’s Services through the Social Care Facilities Review Committee is served in the following way: reviews are made of facilities; the officers that are trained are laypeople. They are trained in the opportunity to question people that use the facility, their parents, or, in the case of young boys and girls, their facility in a foster home, but they are not investigators. Investigators exist in our department through licensing officers and trained professionals with professional diplomas, postsecondary education, in the key points of investigation.

The Protection for Persons in Care Act is currently administered elsewhere, through the Community Development ministry, and deals with all of those issues where complaints are made, because persons in care may or may not be receiving the appropriate care. I can attest to the fact that when I was here previously in the Ministry of Municipal Affairs, those investigations are very complicated, require significant resources, and do address and fill the void that has been suggested by the hon. members opposite that will be withdrawn if social care facilities are not investigated by the hon. member to my immediate right presently, who does a very commendable job of reviewing those facilities with others that are appointed, other laypeople appointed across Alberta who review for that purpose.

So I'd just like to comment that this is no longer a group that would investigate, because that is inappropriate in the way we both select and compensate these people. These are people that do a very good job of talking to people about what they find in facilities, but they neither investigate them for occupational health or safety nor for necessarily the practice issues by probing the professionals that are in that facility. They simply talk and review with the people that are using the facility to see if they're happy, the parents of the children in day cares, et cetera, et cetera.

Finally, I would hope that some of these responses have assured the hon. members opposite of what the intent of this bill is, that it is intended in fact to make sure that the review is simply that, that alerts are provided as a result of that review to the minister, to the deputy. Subsequently a follow-through is done by the child welfare director in each region or, in the case of shelters, with the shelters and the child welfare director as well as department officials who can determine whether further investigation is warranted because of the reviews that have been done. Then if further investigation is warranted, perhaps the persons in care would be involved.

These reviews are done to be complementary to Children's Services – in other words, work well with and alert us to concerns that might emerge – and are not intended in any way, shape, or form to be investigative in nature and imply a more thorough type of investigation, such as screening by officers that would be related to either the courts in some other fashion or by people who have particular expertise in the professional practice of social workers, day care providers, and others. Those functions are very well filled by other professionals in the system.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate the minister's response. I have one more question at this time, and this is specifically in regard to the definition of a social care facility as defined in the Social Care Facilities Licensing Act. Does that include a private babysitting facility and a day care facility and a facility with six or less children and a building or part of a building, which we have discussed here, but specifically a private babysitting facility and the number of children which legally can be occupying the premises on a daily basis.

Thank you.

MS EVANS: Mr. Chairman, I think that again the part that's being referred to is what exists in the present section, which we are trying to amend to say "a day care facility as defined in the Social Care Facilities Licensing Act." That's a different piece of legislation that does define day care.

If I may, the hon. member has tempted me once too often, so I'm going to get into the situation in St. Albert for just a minute to the delight, I'm sure, of the hon. members opposite. This was an unlicensed facility, Mr. Chairman, that is being referenced. No, we do not in fact in this particular legislation speak to facilities where people of their own volition but in unlicensed ways get involved in that kind of practice. What has been referenced in St. Albert was completely inappropriate and was not condoned or sanctioned by Children's Services.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thank you. I'm seeking clarification. I'm not trying to make mischief here. Is it the case that an unlicensed family day home will be or will not be under the jurisdiction of the Social Care Facilities Review Committee?

MS EVANS: Again, an unlicensed family day home will not be under this Social Care Facilities Review Committee. What the hon. member is referencing would be similar to myself looking after my grandchildren and two neighbour children all under my roof. I would be considered, I suppose, for those purposes on that afternoon that that might occur an unlicensed family day home, and clearly this government does not get in and license all of those. I'm sure and confident that at the time we looked at the family day home for the purposes of licensure, it was determined that we were not going to get into other kitchens or living rooms of the nation and look after those where there may be casual babysitting or things that are done that are considered to be temporary. What they're trying very carefully to do, Mr. Chairman, is to try and make somebody who has appeared to be practising beyond the boundaries of our law, without a licence, without being condoned by the local regional children's services authority, and determine that somehow the government was found wanting for not doing something that was not clearly sanctioned by the government.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to ask the minister a question about the Social Care Facilities Review Committee. I've been looking at its web site. I'm trying to find the membership of the committee, and I don't see that. To make sure I've got the right one, SCFRC is basically the heading of the web site. I'd like to know, I guess, some general information before I make any comments.

Who sits on this committee? Why is there a committee at all? Why do investigations into situations that may take place in government facilities that might be halfway houses, that might be homes for people who have a mental disability, and so on – I guess the main question would be: why do you have a committee of laypeople going in there and doing the investigation instead of professionals from your department? It seems like a very, very strange way to deal with things. If the bill is passed into law, then what role will the committee play if there is someone who's got a problem? If they feel they are being abused for example, what do they do to make sure they're protected if they can no longer automatically trigger an investigation? I'd just like some general information.

Thank you.

MS EVANS: Mr. Chairman, through an order in council an MLA from the government is appointed to chair the Social Care Facilities Review Committee. In this case it's my colleague and our hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw that assumes that chairmanship. There's a possibility of having at least a dozen Albertans from all across Alberta. They are considered laypeople. In other words, they are not social workers, but they are people that represent the social demographics, if you will, of the province, with aboriginal representation from various parts as well as Caucasian and people from other communities across Alberta. We try to get a cross section of people that might use facilities like day cares, might be experienced with day cares, like women's shelter, might be experienced with the needs of women who have experienced violence, or like group residential homes, and they are trained in a very precise way to ask meaningful questions of people who are living in these kinds of facilities. It's really to have a check and balance on the professional practice issues by good and well-referenced people that have a knowledge of Alberta and of these types of facilities but not necessarily in a professional capacity. They don't do investigations such as finding out whether or not procedures were followed to the extent of how somebody was dealing with the psychological complications that may have arisen that placed them in a group facility. But they'll ask, for example, young boys and girls in one of these kinds of facilities: "Do you find yourself well looked after here? Do you enjoy this facility? Do you have any complaints that we should refer to the ministry for follow-up?" They are openly invitational to them to really share some of the concerns.

They meet without their providers being in that facility or in that room at that time simply so that there can be a feeling of an unbiased representation, and there are absolutely no complaints about this process either by those facilities themselves, because they welcome the opportunity to showcase the care that they may be administering, or by the foster children, in the case of some foster children, and it is a way of just providing another check and balance. It is comparable to the Health Facilities Review Committee, that is chaired by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, that goes in and reviews health facilities, takes a look at them, finds out whether or not they are serving the public good.

Mr. Chair, I think it's important not to short-sell the importance of this committee. Because it isn't investigating doesn't mean that these reviews aren't important. We take seriously the comments made by the review team, and that's why the reports have to be well written. There has to be a documentation that enables some follow-up, and we do that as well as we can.

MR. MASON: One thing I'm not clear on, Mr. Chairman, is what exactly . . .

AN HON. MEMBER: Just one?

MR. MASON: Well, I certainly wonder about some other things, hon. member, but the one thing in my previous questions that I'm still not clear on is: what do people do if they don't feel that they are being well cared for, particularly people who may have some disabilities or a mental illness or something that? What is then their recourse if this committee . . .

MS EVANS: The Protection for Persons in Care Act.

THE CHAIR: The hon. minister.

MS EVANS: Yes. The Protection for Persons in Care Act, that's administered in Community Development. Trust me; there are significant complaints by Albertans, but it's mostly either the resident themselves that complains about a family member or some other provider. It does not necessarily imply that it's care provided by somebody contracted by government to provide the care, and as we know, elder abuse and some of the manner in which children treat their parents often, in my previous experience in the ministry involved with housing, was probably one of the major complaints for numerous investigations. A sad tragedy, but clearly parents or children who might provide a complaint to the Social Care Facilities Review Committee can have that complaint followed up on. They can still lodge that complaint, and that committee can recommend where further review has to be done, but most everything today is consolidated in Community Development. Perhaps the hon. minister would wish to supplement, please.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Minister of Community Development.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you. I will just very briefly, for the hon. member's attention and information, clarify that the Protection for Persons in Care Act is indeed administered by the Department of Community Development, which is under my charge, and it may be of interest for the hon. member to note that those organizations or facilities that are under this particular act, as one requirement for us to do a review if an allegation is submitted, have to be receiving public funding. So that's one of the definitions. I think the other thing, very quickly, Mr. Chair, is to just let the hon. member know that the vast, vast majority of the complaints that do come in go unsubstantiated in spite of a very thorough search and review that we as a department do through private investigators and so on that are hired for those purposes.

But the other concluding point here, Mr. Chair, is for all members of the House to recognize that we are in the throes of a review, a legislative review, of the PPIC Act, and there'll be more information on that flowing out very soon. We're also doing an administrative review, which the Ombudsman is involved with, because this is a five-year-old piece of legislation, or it soon will be five years old. It was a brand-new piece of legislation that actually was brought in by our current chair, the hon. Member for Highwood. As is fairly consistent with government practice, within that four- to five-year window of almost every piece of new legislation we do a very thorough review. So there will be more opportunity for this in the months to come, with more information flowing out to all members.

Thank you.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Just some ancient history for everybody involved. The actual predecessor, as you know, of the Social Care Facilities Review Committee is the Health Facilities Review Committee. What you may not know is that the predecessor to the Health Facilities Review Committee was something called the Hospital Visitors Committee. The Hospital Visitors Committee was formed in 1973 under Premier Peter Lougheed, and it borrowed from the British concept of hospital visitors, which were people very much like the minister described a few minutes ago: laypeople who went around to hospitals and visited with the patients and staff and kept an eye on things and acted as a very informal ombudsman.

The Hospital Visitors Committee was turned into the Health Facilities Review Committee probably about 1975 or 1976. Its mandate was shifted, the chairman became an MLA as opposed to a member of the general public, and its powers were somewhat clarified. That committee then led to the formation of this committee about probably 1979 or something. The first chairman was Dr. David Carter, who went on to become Speaker of the Assembly.

Now, many things remain concerns for me. There has been some discussion here by two different ministers of the Protection for Persons in Care Act, and some of the reassurance for us about Bill 18 is that the complaints and issues that may no longer be covered by the Social Care Facilities Review Committee will be handled under the Protection for Persons in Care Act. But that act is being reviewed right now, so I have to wonder: why are we not waiting until that review is complete before we amend the terms of reference for the Social Care Facilities Review Committee? Is there a rush to push Bill 18 through?

MS EVANS: We're not rushing, but we are trying to put in place what in effect has been the practice of this committee for the last two years with the reorganization which gave Children's Services a very precise mandate. It was no longer appropriate for us to be reviewing some of the health care facilities as we had in the past, so sharpening the definition was deemed to be significant and important, especially while health was reviewing its own facility. So this sharpening of the definition is actually the practice since this ministry was put in place, and I don't know what more to say.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. One of the effects of this sharpening of definitions of Bill 18 seems to be that when funding is shifted from going to an institution to going to the parents, who then choose the institution, that institution or facility or home would then no longer be eligible or be under the mandate of this particular committee, because it would not be receiving any public funding directly. I bring that forward as a concern here because it may be that facilities that a few years ago were receiving funding directly and therefore were under the mandate of this committee are now still out there functioning but will not be under the mandate of this committee.

MS EVANS: No, Mr. Chair. I think it's very clear. The "facility" in this new definition is anything "that provides care, treatment or shelter and that is funded, wholly or partly, by the Department of Children's Services." Very clear. Secondly, an entirely separate piece: "a day care facility as defined in the Social Care Facilities Licensing Act." So, in fact, we do inspect day cares as defined under the licensing act. We do not deviate from that in this situation. These facilities wholly or in part – Children's Services. The only other facilities we deal with that have any kind of supports from us, indirectly through the parents, are day care facilities.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I have an additional question. The section that's being repealed, section 12, includes a number of things.

- (iv) an emergency shelter,
- (v) a residential alcohol and drug abuse treatment centre,
- (vi) a day care facility . . .
- (vii) a group home or shelter for physically or mentally handicapped persons, or
- (viii) a vocational rehabilitation and training centre for physically or mentally handicapped persons, other than those "defined as a hospital" are the facilities that the committee now deals with. I have here in the web site as well family homes, group homes, foster homes, hostels, emergency shelters, residential alcohol and drug abuse treatment centres, vocational rehabilitation and training centres, and continuing care facilities. Now, which of these will continue to be under the committee's jurisdiction as a result of their being funded by the Department of Children's Services, and which ones will not?

MS EVANS: Well, Mr. Chair, if I'm clear on what is being suggested, those ones that are currently listed in that section 12 – the Health Professions Act is amended – and then it illustrates that, those that are health. To be clear, facilities that are funded through Children's Services: shelters, which are funded through Children's Services; group and residential homes, which are funded through Children's Services; foster homes, which are funded through Children's Services; day care facilities, which are funded through parents but through the day care facility licensing act; and then those facilities that provide care or respite to families, families such as those that participate in Rosemount for special-needs children. All of those things are funded in whole or in part by Children's Services. I think that facility definition is extremely clear, certainly clear to me, that that's where we're spending our money, and those ones that are health care facilities are dealt with in the health legislation. That's how we've been working for two years. I don't know what more I can say.

DR. TAFT: I can't help myself here, Mr. Chairman. The one last question: would the minister consider recommending to the government that this bill not be brought into force until the review of the Protection for Persons in Care Act is completed so that the two can be properly co-ordinated?

MS EVANS: Mr. Chair, with greatest respect, I believe they are properly co-ordinated.

MR. MASON: I just want to follow up my previous question, Mr. Chairman. I want to understand this clearly, and it may be a lot clearer to the minister, but after all she's the minister of the department and has day-to-day familiarity with it. What we're saying is that anything that is not related to Children's Services; for example, vocational rehabilitation and training centres, group homes for adults – those are no longer going to be subject to review by this committee. Is that correct?

MS EVANS: Unless you're assuming that your group homes for adults could include shelters for women who have been subject to violence. No, it's a different type of group home, I'm assuming. You're talking about relative to the Mental Health Act perhaps. Those are clearly part of the mission of the health care.

THE CHAIR: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE CHAIR: Opposed? Carried.

Bill 24 Child Welfare Amendment Act, 2002 (No. 2)

THE CHAIR: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

MS EVANS: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I thank the hon. member opposite who is the critic for Children's Services, Edmonton-Mill Woods, who has been kind enough to identify last week some of the issues that he was concerned about. Having reviewed Hansard of last Wednesday evening, let me just try to follow up and give some responses.

In the first case, when the issue of the Court of Appeal refused the stay of their decision, it said that the parents should be notified that their children's temporary guardianship orders are invalid. As of April 26, 2002, the directors of child welfare in all but two regions, where there were no temporary guardianship orders during that period of time that would have been impacted – the other directors, where it would have been, including those on native reserves, have been directed and have in fact sent a letter to each parent or guardian of a child who is the subject of an invalid temporary guardianship order to inform them of that fact. The directors have included that legislation has been introduced to the Legislature which will ensure the validity of their child's temporary guardianship order when passed. Notice was not provided to parents earlier because if the stay had been granted, it would have taken effect on the date of the appeal court's decision, meaning that there would have been no invalid TGOs.

Let me talk about the number we're talking about here: 636 in total. Approximately 36 care plans that were filed either a day or sometimes two days late were included in that number. In terms of the number of temporary guardianship orders that had been contested by parents, out of that entire number less than 50 were involved. Directors have been asked, where appropriate, to consider and follow through with a reapprehension of the child.

I'd like to talk about: now, why did it become practice not to routinely file the plans of care? Because in some jurisdictions, admittedly not all and admittedly not in all circumstances, it was not practised. First of all, the practice of the courts has been to review the temporary guardianship orders in front of them along with the care plans at the time of the filing, from time to time, and the judges would simply say that it was not necessary to file the plan. They were actually told that in some of the courts. The director, in presenting that evidence to the court, provides detail on the services provided to the child and the family. The judges of the Provincial Court have previously been satisfied in many instances that sufficient evidence of a proper care plan was being provided and was provided to the family on that occasion, particularly where the families were involved.

The plans are written, and they are absolutely, all of them, available to be filed, but because of that Court of Appeal decision on March 4 we were not able to file them, because they were already considered by that court to be null and void, even though they were prepared to be filed. In some rural areas circuit court clerks have refused to file plans in the past because of the inconvenience to them and the fact that they were concerned about the amount of paper. In some other areas plans are filed by fax, and filed copies are not returned to the child protection workers. Some court clerks have said that they do not have room, as I've said, and Justice officials have taken steps to remedy these problems. I think that that's an important observation, because with the members opposite speaking last Wednesday, one has a feeling that they are casting some incredible doubts not only on the management of the department and the ministry, which I will accept because I'm not comfortable either that the plans were not filed, but on social workers and others who would better spend their resources and their time doing the jobs of protecting children and working with the children.

So the plans have not been filed because the resource issue really relates not to the dollars and cents provided but because wise allocation of resources with social workers would imply that they're working with their clients and working less with some of the filing opportunities, but we have insisted. Although there has been some suggestion by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods that it has been unsettling in the courts not to have assurance that future care plans will be filed and provided, I can assure you that everybody is filing and providing those plans. Parents receive copies of the plans, and in these cases parents have received copies of the plans. The plans used by the social worker to guide services are very much available to the parents, children, families, and of course to those who will be attending them. All of this happens whether the plans have been filed in the court or not.

Allowing the social workers to file plans now for the invalid TGOs is a loosening of practice that is not allowed, and the late filing gets the government off the hook: well, clearly, we don't believe we're off the hook. You know, we are on the hook because we have a duty of diligence to follow through and make sure that these things are rectified in some fashion. I would agree with the hon. Minister of Justice, who has said that this isn't desirable, but it is in fact probably the best way of rectifying a situation which has occurred without taking time to go through every single one of those invalid temporary guardianship orders and reinstating a reapprehension order. The Court of Appeal talked about the importance of having and filing a plan for each child, and I agree. I certainly and clearly agree with that importance.

Why is it that the bill applies to TGOs made by the courts before February 21, 2002? Well, in this instance, Mr. Chairman, the provisions of the bill are backward looking only. It applies only to those invalidated by the Court of Appeal's ruling. There's no need for the bill to apply to the future because all temporary guardianship orders granted will have plans of care filed in the courts, and that has been our follow-through.

Finally, what other solutions were considered besides legislating away the problem? Reapprehension and new court applications were considered, and this was rejected as a solution because of the hardship it may present to the children and their families. An application to court would have been required to reapprehend each child, and parents would then have been served with an application for another TGO. Mr. Chairman, there was not an intent by the court to recognize that the child could go back, because they were being protected for a very definite reason, and that's why those protection orders should still be in place. The court would have been required to hear evidence for another TGO, the same evidence the court had already heard. Parents would have spent emotional energy on the rehearing of their child's TGO, energy they might prefer to spend on working towards getting the child back, and reapprehensions and new court applications would divert child welfare and court resources away from emerging cases.

Mr. Speaker, we do know that concerns have been expressed about Bill 24 by the members of the opposition and the third party, concerns that have been expressed as well, I can assure you, by all who've been involved, concerns about the need to do the due diligence in the future, about the history of this particular situation. We believe that we have learned from that history, and we beg the indulgence of this Assembly to please enable us to go ahead with this legislation so that we can correct something that was clearly deemed to be wrong by the courts and make sure that it doesn't happen again.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Chairman, and thank you to the minister for providing the answers to those questions that I was able to share with her last week. The minister has gone out of her way to attempt to provide answers to our questions, and we appreciate that.

The bill is very, very brief, and I think we should be clear in terms of exactly what it's doing. It amends section 31(3) of the existing act, and that section states:

Not more than 30 days after an order is made under subsection (1), the director shall file with the Court a plan for the care of the child, including a description of the services to be provided.

This amendment says:

Despite any decision of any court, a temporary guardianship order for which a plan for the care of the child has not been filed in accordance with section 31(3) is deemed to be valid from the date the order was made.

So what it in effect does is say that even though there weren't plans filed with the court, they are now valid even without that plan. I listened to the minister and part of the explanations that were given, and I guess one of the concerns as I listened is that first of all it seems that the courts are being given responsibility for some of the plans not being filed. The second impression I get is that it was considered busywork or that it was considered a task that was unimportant given the other tasks that social workers had to perform.

I think those two explanations, Mr. Chairman, are really quite amazing given the history of care plans in the province. They arose out of an unfortunate and tragic suicide, and to prevent that from happening again, there were some recommendations that were made. One of the recommendations – and it was endorsed by the government – was that there be care plans put in place. If you go back to Board of Review: The Child Welfare System, I quote from it.

We learned that some children were apprehended and put in temporary placements where they remained for a long time before anything was done to plan their futures, either with a view to restoring them to their families or making plans for them in care.

We were told that children who became temporary wards were often placed by a social worker and then forgotten.

At the time that that comment was made, the government I think took the comment very seriously and came up with the need for care plans and the need for them to be filed with the court, the need for everyone, parents and those people who were going to be involved in rehabilitation or remedial work with families, to be aware of what the plan was. It's essential in working with these youngsters that there be a care plan, and if you look at exactly what the importance of a care plan is for children, it clearly lays out the steps that are going to be provided for their needs: how they're going to be fulfilled, how they're going to be sheltered, how there's going to be a secure environment for them. It also lists the kind of long-term objective such as a permanent place for them. So in terms of the plans and children, they're very, very important documents.

They're important documents also to parents, Mr. Chairman. They communicate to the parents what they need to do in order to regain the custody of their children, and I can't think of anything that could be more important to parents in these cases where they're seeking return of their children than to know exactly what it is they're going to have to do to get their youngsters back. It really impacts them in a big way. If they're going to retain custody of their children, often they have to make lifestyle changes and behavioral changes, the ways in which they discipline youngsters, the ways in which they look after their education and upbringing. So some important changes in their lives can be detailed in a case plan and often are.

It often also will lay out the schedule for treatments of the parents themselves, and you can think of all kinds of examples. It lays out the kind of therapy that family members must engage in before youngsters can be returned. If there are medication needs for the family, those too can be part of a plan. Without a case plan the goals that parents have to follow, or if they're unaware of a case plan or if the plan isn't filed with the courts where the judgments are going to be made, the well-being of the child may be jeopardized.

I think that the care plans are important to social workers and to judges. They're the way that the system can be held accountable for its work with children, and they're also very useful in helping social workers identify the resources that are required to help children. Ideally the plans give the social workers reassurance that the resources will be in place by the ministry for the elements of a plan, and I think that's important in terms of social workers being able to work with clients in a responsible manner. The care plans indicate to judges what everyone involved in caring for the child is going to do, what their roles and responsibilities are and how they are going to be carried out. That again includes the family. So they're important in terms of the judicial system and to the social workers that are involved.

If you look historically at why they were required, it was the death of Richard Cardinal in care in 1984 that was really the major impetus for the change. He was in a foster home, Mr. Chairman, and he took his own life. It was really that case that highlighted the need for social workers to have a long-term plan for children in care. The importance of the plan has been highlighted by the courts in the decision that was rendered on the 12th day of January. The decision says that the "debates on Bill 35 highlighted the new provisions for written plans of care that were designed to remedy the problem of children being lost in the system." That goes back to Alberta Hansard in April of 1984. It goes on to state:

When the state removes a child from his family with a [temporary guardianship order], the requirement of a plan supports both purposes. Even the temporary removal of a child from a family is a severe invasion of rights which should be tempered by a plan showing how the state will care for the child and what the family must do to regain custody.

It goes on to say in another part of the judgment: "The plan of care is a fundamental part of the Director's obligation when a [temporary guardianship order] is put in place." Then further:

Finally, as the above discussion makes clear, the Legislature viewed the requirement for a plan as an important tool in advancing the purpose of the Act. Thus, the objective of the legislation is better served by giving plans of care an important place in the scheme of the Act.

I think all of this, Mr. Chairman, points to the very high priority that the government in the mid-80s and the system and those people who were making recommendations to prevent cases like the Cardinal boy's from recurring gave to care plans. That's why I guess I find the comments about what happened, why the system failed, why care plans have fallen into the situation where they're not filed with the courts I guess to be an unsatisfactory state of affairs and the remedy that we have before us to be distasteful.

I'll conclude with just a few more comments, Mr. Chairman. There's a lot of concern about retroactive legislation. I suspect that for opposition parties there are few things that we would argue longer and stronger against than retroactive legislation, and that's in most instances. There are instances of course where retroactive legislation is needed and has been useful. There are areas where it has been very useful. But if you look at comments about retroactive legislation, they're viewed as a challenge to the stability and the certainty of the justice system, and I think that for that reason alone any kind of retroactive legislation has been carefully examined. "The adoption of retroactivity is altogether inadmissible [and] it is unjust": comments from another source talking about retroactive legislation. Another comment about concerns with retroactive legislation: smacks of arbitrary and unpredictable lawmaking.

So there are two issues in the bill. The one issue, the most important one, is the care plans and making sure that the importance and the use that is to be made of those plans is clear and that the act as it was intended is followed. I guess the second one is dealing with the problem of using retroactive legislation, which, as I said, is most unsatisfactory.

I think that with those comments I'll conclude for now. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

10:10

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Can you remind me how much time I have to speak on this? [interjection] Twenty? Okay. Thank you.

AN HON. MEMBER: Or less.

DR. TAFT: Or less. You wish.

I rise with two profound concerns with Bill 24. I think that in fact all legislators should be concerned or at least share one of my concerns, which is the clause that begins the most active part of this bill, which reads: "Despite any decision of any court". Now, I want all MLAs in this Assembly to contemplate the implications of passing a law that says: "despite any decision of any court." Are we prepared to pass a law like that and on what grounds? What does that tell us about the nature of our legislation and the nature of our Assembly? Do we think we can place ourselves above the court system? Do we think that we can somehow remove the laws from the normal checks and balances that keep a parliamentary democracy functioning smoothly and properly? What right do we think we have to pass a bill that puts itself beyond any reproach from the legal system?

I don't think we have any right, and I think that we will find, although I'm not a lawyer, that this bill is wide open to challenges on the basis of a Charter case because of that very clause. A clause that is intended to put the actions of this government, actions that are openly and freely in violation of its own laws, beyond recall or comment from the courts is simply unacceptable. I suspect that legally this bill has a huge, huge hole in it. There are certainly lawyers on the government side of the Assembly who perhaps should be considering this. And maybe I'll stand corrected. I'm not a lawyer. But I have profound problems with that particular clause.

If we look back through the whole development of the rule of law in a parliamentary democracy, it's a tradition that goes back almost a millennium, and step by step by step, starting from the late Middle Ages till today, there has been a body of judicial rulings developed that make it clear that the rule of law is absolutely vital to the functioning of any democratic society. The rule of law is essential to the protection of citizens against the arbitrary use of state authority. That's exactly what the rule of law is about.

This bill I believe violates that rule of law. If we allow this to stand, then what's to happen the next time that there is an error, that there is a change of heart? What's to protect the citizens in our society from the arbitrary use of state authority, a state that passes a law and then years later, having broken that law repeatedly, passes another law that at least attempts to put it all outside of the courts? This I think is a fundamental problem here. Courts are a crucial guardian against arbitrary government, and I'm afraid that what we're seeing here is arbitrary government.

A fundamental premise of the rule of law is predictable legal systems. What we are seeing here is anything but predictable. We are seeing a law passed, a law broken by the government, and then another law brought in to remove this all from legal recall. How is the government to be accountable when it changes its laws this way or, worse, attempts to put them beyond the reach of the courts? I predict that if there is a litigious parent out there with a good lawyer who is unhappy with their child being taken away from their family by this government, they could well take this to the Supreme Court and have this whole bill tossed out. So that's the basis of my first concern, and frankly I would suggest that all MLAs here think hard and long before they vote in favour of a bill that begins: "Despite any decision of any court." A fundamental, fundamental worry in the development of the Legislature of Alberta.

The other major set of concerns that I have has to do with social work practice, child welfare protection, and frankly the state of affairs of the Department of Children's Services. How did we get in this situation where there are over 600 child welfare cases in which case plans were not filed with the courts in accordance with the Child Welfare Act? Now, believe it or not, I'm not an entirely unreasonable person. There undoubtedly are situations in which these can be reasonably explained away: courts may have adjourned and made it impossible for a social worker to meet the deadline; it may have been impossible to find the parents in time to meet the deadline. There could be other reasonable explanations for a certain number of these cases, but we're talking over 600 cases.

If I understood the minister correctly – and she's welcome to stand and tell me that I didn't and explain why I'm wrong – of the 636 cases I believe she said that 36 involved cases that were a day or two late. Fair enough. Even though that's a violation of the law, it's reasonable I guess. Maybe another 50 or so are being contested by parents who disagree with the nature of the temporary guardianship order. That still leaves about 550 cases in which a case plan was not filed in accordance with the law. What's the explanation for that? That's 550 children, 550 families. That is a very, very serious problem that we have got ourselves into through this department.

I think it's worth reflecting, Mr. Chairman, on why this particular requirement was put into law. There has been some reference in discussion in this Assembly of the story of Richard Cardinal, a case that I still remember from the media coverage, and I'm sure other people here do as well. A Metis boy born in 1967, apprehended from his home at the age of four, and over the next 13 years placed in something like I think it was 28 different foster homes and group homes and other facilities, and finally at the age of 18 he went into the backyard of the foster home in which he was living, slung a rope over a tree, and hung himself. That case led to a review of the Child Welfare Act done by no less than the dean of the social work department at the University of Calgary, Dr. Ray Tomlison, and that in turn led to this provision being placed in the Child Welfare Act. It's profoundly serious. This is literally a matter of life and death.

So how did we get into this situation where such a tragic and serious case was ultimately being ignored by ignoring the law that was created in response to the case? I think that there are some serious problems to be raised about the functioning of the Department of Children's Services as a result. Certainly the information that I am getting from a wide variety of sources is that we are seeing a children's services system in a kind of chronic state of breakdown. The system is breaking down. I don't lay this entirely at the feet of the minister. It's something that has been building for some years.

I think we need to ask ourselves about the whole aspect of regionalization. There are 17 regional child welfare authorities and one provincewide one for Metis children. Before those 18 children's services authorities were created, the previous system, which had tons of problems of its own, nonetheless had a much simpler administrative structure. There were seven regions provincewide, seven regional directors, and those regional directors didn't just look after child welfare. They also looked after income security, handicapped children's services, resources for the dependent handicapped, and a number of other programs. Certainly there is a strong case to be made that there is a close correlation between the problems of child welfare and issues of income security, and by creating regions strictly limited to child welfare, we have pulled apart the opportunity to have a co-ordinated response through both income supports and child welfare.

I'm also concerned that we have 18 different CEOs of children's services, 18 different administrative structures, 18 different boards, when prior we had seven. Indeed, we had seven that worked under the same department without any board; they had a single line of authority. So I think that what we are seeing here is a situation in which the department itself and the whole process of regionalization needs to be reviewed. It is indeed breaking down.

One of the symptoms of this is not just the cases that we've seen brought forward in recent months and years but in fact a perception on the part of many intimate observers that the system does not any longer support good social work practice. Filing a case plan for a child whose life you are taking into your hands is fundamental to good social work practice, a plan that not only lays out what you're going to do with this child – after all, you are its guardian; you are this child's parent – but also what you're going to do to restore that child to his proper place in his family if that is safe and possible to do. These plans it seems are not being properly developed, and as a result we risk returning to the very situation that Richard Cardinal faced, which is children being brought into care, being left on the bottom of a file, and being passed from social worker to social worker. I know that this happens today, and those children are ultimately being left to drift without a plan.

Part of the problem of this I think is the deprofessionalization of social work staff. We are seeing I believe a smaller and smaller percentage of highly trained social workers working with these children, fewer and fewer people with, say, masters of social work, and fewer and fewer highly specialized experts in the system. I'm not aware, for example, that the various children's authorities have teams of specialized workers with advanced training in things like sexual abuse or physical abuse or other conditions that will assist and support social workers in developing plans for their wards.

We've also seen a real loss of senior staff, the people who through decades of hard work and training have paid the dues to become the senior managers of children's lives. Those people have in large number left the department. They've either left, they've retired, they've burned out, or they simply throw their hands up after a career of service in a sense of exasperation with what's happening with this system.

So those kinds of problems led to a situation in which we are forced to bring forward a bill that says:

Despite any decision of any court, a temporary guardianship order for which a plan for the care of the child has not been filed in accordance with section 31(3) is deemed to be valid from the date the order was made.

In other words, as some people have described this legislation to me, legislation to cover the government's butt.

I am unhappy with this legislation. If it is necessary, if there are no choices, it is an evil that is necessary, and I hope we never, ever have to rise in this Legislature to debate anything like this bill again.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

MS EVANS: Well, Mr. Chairman, I'd like to address the points made by the hon. colleagues opposite and just really be brief. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods talked about the purpose of plans, parental rights to know about the services, and that the plans are to help social workers provide the services. I have already answered this in citing that the plans are made, are discussed with the parents, the parents sign off on these plans, and they reserve a copy. All this is happening, even if the plan isn't filed.

Bill 24 allows the late filing so social workers can ensure that a plan is filed for each child and allows the policy underpinning the filing of plans to be fulfilled. I think that that is an important element.

The other comments that were made by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview relate to two concerns. He cites: "Despite any decision of any court." Can we place ourselves above the court system? Well, the answer really lies in this, Mr. Chairman. The Legislature's ability to override a court's decision is part of the checks and balances. The government introduced Bill 24 to keep the children safe, to keep the children safe and protected.

In all of the rhetoric that I have heard this evening or read on other occasions, I have really never heard any other viable way to manage what is an untenable situation if we don't get on with Bill 24. I have acknowledged that this is not our first preference, but it clearly is the most expedient way to ensure that we look after children and that we make sure that we do this as soon as possible to deal with our temporary guardianship orders, which have just recently been acknowledged to be null and void if we don't have some kind of retroactive legislation or other action.

On the comments by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview on the possibility of a court challenge I'm going to cite the following, and this is why the lawyers that are in support of this legislation in government believe that there likely won't be a Charter challenge. First, this is an attempt to keep children protected and safe. The TGOs that would be validated by the bill originated from a judicial process in the courts, a determination that the child did in fact need protection. The court's original determination should have more weight regardless of the lack of timing in terms of the filing of the plan. So again the child is paramount over the process of filing the plan, acknowledging, though, that the plan is needed.

Secondly, the act provides a right of review at any point during the temporary guardianship order. So parents already have a right of review, whether or not the TGO has been invalidated.

Thirdly, the goal of the act is to protect children and to work toward their safe return to their families. The bill promotes this possibility without the need for additional processes. The TGOs that would be validated by the bill will have case plans filed as required under the act and for the future courts to review, so then the courts will accept those plans that have already been reviewed by the parents.

Finally, parents have other remedies, such as administrative review and judicial review, that they could follow up.

Mr. Chairman, I would for this evening adjourn debate on Bill 24.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

MR. ZWOZDESKY: I was just going to move that the committee now rise and report Bill 18 and report progress on Bill 24.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Second Reading

Bill 26
Workers' Compensation Amendment Act, 2002

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment to move.

MR. DUNFORD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise this evening to move second reading of Bill 26, the Workers' Compensation Amendment Act, 2002.

Bill 26 is the result of two years of consultation on the workers' compensation system in Alberta. The process began in late 1999, early 2000 when the MLA/WCB service review input committee and the Review Committee of the Workers' Compensation Board Appeal Systems were struck. The two committees made 59 recommendations for improving the workers' compensation system; 49 of these recommendations were accepted and taken through extensive consultation. This included a symposium on the workers' compensation system, roundtable discussions on accountability, and a tribunal task force on the screening criteria and review process for long-standing, contentious WCB claims. The legislation before the House today is a culmination of all of this work and has two components, one arising from the government review and another requested by the WCB which I'll speak to later.

The legislated change in the future operations of the workers' compensation system will have a cost estimated by WCB and my department to increase employer WCB premiums by less than 1 cent per $100 of insured earnings.

I'll address the government initiatives first. There are four different aspects to these: improving the WCB decision-making process; secondly, independence of the Appeals Commission; third, improving the accountability of the WCB and Appeals Commission; and, fourth, reviewing long-standing, contentious WCB claims.

The WCB decision-making process will be improved in a number of ways. The WCB has developed a new quality review process to test new methods of meeting client needs over the next few months. Part of the process involves replacing the Claims Services Review Committee and the Assessment Review Committee with an open and collaborative process to resolve entitlement issues. The final WCB decision will be made following consultation with the parties and exploring resolution options. The legislation enables the WCB to take the best methods of operating developed in the quality review process and adopt these methods as WCB policy.

An issue repeatedly cited by injured workers was the lack of consultation by the WCB with their personal physicians, particularly when they disputed WCB medical findings. A medical panel will address differences in medical opinions, and its decisions will be binding on both the WCB and the Appeals Commission. The WCB is developing a pilot, and its performance measures will be submitted for the minister's approval in May.

The purpose of the medical panel is to get an independent, expert, consensus-based medical opinion. It is intended that a medical panel can be initiated where there are conflicting medical opinions by the WCB, by the Appeals Commission, or more importantly, Mr. Speaker, by the physician of an injured worker. Panels will be established from a list of physicians prepared and approved by the College of Physicians and Surgeons of Alberta. These changes will also enable a caseworker to consult earlier with the injured worker's physician and bring forward that physician's opinion.

The next area is ensuring the independence of the Appeals Commission. This will be done by making the Appeals Commission a government reporting entity effective September 1, 2002. Appeals Commission staff will no longer be WCB employees. The governance model of the Appeals Commission will be changed to address stakeholder responses and the Renner report on accountability of agencies, boards, and commissions to a model comparable with the Alberta Labour Relations Board. The WCB will no longer be able to direct the Appeals Commission to reconsider its policy interpretations. Instead, the WCB will be allowed to make representations on interpretations of its policy at Appeals Commission hearings. All parties will have a right of appeal to the Court of Queen's Bench on matters of law and jurisdiction. On applications of the WCB or the interested party, the commission may state a case before the Court of Queen's Bench on questions of law or jurisdiction. Bill 26 will also require the WCB to implement Appeals Commission decisions within 30 days or in such time as the commission directs. All these changes will make the workings of the appeals process more open and transparent.

The next area is improving the accountability of the WCB and the Appeals Commission. Bill 26 will enable the Minister of Human Resources and Employment to specify the performance measures on the service outcomes both for WCB and for the Appeals Commission. My ministry, the WCB, and the Appeals Commission are currently establishing these performance measures based on the results of the accountability roundtable held in November of 2001. These stakeholders agreed that the performance measures should focus on the service outcomes of fairness, timeliness, returning the injured worker to the workforce, financial stability, prevention of injuries, and communication between all parties in the system. By June 2002 I will sign two memoranda of understanding which will include performance measures with the WCB and with the Appeals Commission. These will be consistent with the Renner report.

The act also provides for an expanded role for the Auditor General to audit the WCB. The Appeals Commission will be audited by the Auditor General as is usual for a government reporting entity. The performance measures that we develop will form part of the Auditor General's audit of the WCB and of the Appeals Commission. The WCB will hold advertised public annual general meetings, which will include a report on its performance using these measures. The Appeals Commission will also hold annual general meetings, with a similar report.

Now, I want to talk to you about the review body for long-standing, contentious WCB claims, as recommended by both the Friedman and Doerksen committees. The Tribunal Task Force was charged with making recommendations on the criteria for assessing the body, the process the body would use, and the costs. The task force submitted a report to me in October of 2001. I released the report to stakeholders and the public and received over 200 responses. Although Bill 26 will give the Lieutenant Governor in Council the authority to create a body to review long-standing, contentious WCB claims, the government will not move ahead on this provision until there is a consensus among stakeholders on the process to be used and on the cost. The review body must achieve two objectives: it will have to recognize any previous unfairness to injured workers, and it must be fair to the employers who have to pay for the system today. Therefore, the MLA for Calgary-Egmont, the MLA for Bonnyville-Cold Lake, and the MLA for Calgary-Cross will take the latest proposal for the review of long-standing, contentious claims to employers, who pay for the system. They will report back to me in June, and I will announce their course of action on July 31, 2002.

Bill 26 also contains amendments put forward by the WCB. The WCB conducted stakeholder consultations of its own and has put forward these changes having heard their stakeholders' recommendations. The main areas are, first, protecting workers from having WCB employer premiums deducted from their wages; second, greater protection of the accident fund from fraud; third, greater internal WCB administrative efficiency; and, fourth, clarifying legal terms so that they may be understood by all parties. These changes include the increasing of fines for failure to report incidents. The increase will follow an education process that will also re-emphasize the importance of safety for Alberta workers.

It should be made quite clear that due process under the law will be followed for the award of any fine, as it always has been. Under section 152(1) of the act, "a person who contravenes this Act or a regulation or order made under it is guilty of an offence," which means that the person must be prosecuted and found guilty in court. Further, the amendments will allow the WCB to impose administrative penalties against employers who obstruct a WCB claim or investigation or who fail to report injuries. Under these amendments the administrative penalties are considered to be WCB assessments. This means that the employer can then dispute the assessment with the WCB as part of their internal appeal process, take the penalty to the Appeals Commission, and ultimately take the assessments before the Court of Queen's Bench on matters of law or jurisdiction. In all cases no fine can be imposed unless an offence under the act can be shown to have taken place. Also, in all cases there will be a means of appeal.

Another item would allow WCB benefits to be exempted from the Insurance Act, which would allow the WCB to provide coverage to sole proprietors.

I am confident that these amendments will create fairness and confidence for the future. In short, it will make an already good system even better. Mr. Speaker, I encourage all of my colleagues to join me in support of Bill 26 and look forward to hearing their comments during the debate.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's with a great deal of interest that I rise to speak after all the consultations that have been conducted regarding the Workers' Compensation Board in this province. I believe 1995 was the last time the WCB act was amended. Like a lot of other Albertans I'm reading this bill and reading it quite cautiously because of some of the increases in discretionary powers that we are proceeding to give the WCB.

The Workers' Compensation Act in Alberta is guided by the following principles articulated more than 80 years ago by then Chief Justice of Ontario, Sir William Meredith. In his report on workers' compensation the four principles that he outlined have to be consistent in this Bill 26 whenever it is finished in this Assembly. Now, certainly negligence and fault for the cause of injury are not considerations. Workers receive compensation benefits for work-related injuries at no cost. Employers bear the cost of compensation and in return receive protection, protection from lawsuits arising from injuries. Lastly, the system is administered by an impartial agency having exclusive jurisdiction over all matters arising out of the enabling legislation. This is what should occur, and unfortunately in the time that I've had to examine this bill, I can't say that this bill will protect what was outlined over 80 years ago and what has guided the principles of the WCB ever since.

Now, you consider some of the conclusions that have been made after the two years of consultation, the two high-profile reports certainly, and the lobbying by MLAs. The government has finally introduced the changes in this bill, yet we have to look at the reports not only by hon. members from this Assembly but particularly by retired Justice Samuel Friedman, QC, the report which I'm sure all members of this Assembly are familiar with. It concluded:

The greatest and most immediate need is to bring accountability into the appeals process. If government wishes to maintain an arm's length relationship with the WCB, the only effective recourse to guarantee accountability is to strengthen the Appeals Commission and improve access to court review.

Now, if in this legislation, Bill 26, that was the only change and the Appeals Commission was going to be as the hon. minister has stated, then perhaps I could accept it.

The final report regarding the appeals system by Justice Friedman notes in recommendation 4 "that the Office of the Appeals Adviser report to the Ministry of Justice." Now, I have no problem with the Minister of Human Resources and Employment perhaps appointing these individuals to this Appeals Commission. I could live with that, Mr. Speaker, but to allow a little bit of distance, shall I say, political distance from the minister, perhaps it's prudent that we follow the recommendation of the Friedman report and have this Appeals Commission report to the Ministry of Justice.

Now, we all know that we have to guarantee independence and restore public confidence not only in the Appeals Commission but in the entire WCB system and the process, and I believe, as I said before, that the Ministry of Justice is the natural home for the Appeals Commission. Perhaps it is suitable that the appointments be made but have it independent and at arm's length, as we have all been told so many times in this Assembly. That is where the Appeals Commission, in my view, belongs. No disrespect to the Human Resources and Employment department but the current proposal in Bill 26 is again not at arm's length.

Also, Mr. Speaker, Bill 26 is unfortunately allowing the WCB to be even more adversarial, in my view, towards injured workers. We are also allowing the WCB to proceed with these wide, sweeping powers that we're giving it, from a culture of denial to further denial of not only employee rights but also employer rights.

In the time that I have allotted, there has been a lot of comment made in this House and outside this House regarding the long-standing contentious claims by the injured workers, and there has been case after case, file after file. Many of them have been documented publicly. I cannot understand for the life of me why any organization that was managed prudently would start a rate and benefit stabilization reserve fund specifically for times like these, to deal with the long-standing and contentious claims – now, there have been many price ranges to settle these claims. It's gone from $50 million to as high as $220 million, and there were millions and millions and millions of dollars set aside in that rate and benefit stabilization fund, and what did we do? We liquidated the fund, and it has simply disappeared. I don't consider that to be good management, Mr. Speaker, and now the money could be used. There would be no question of where we're going to get the money from.

Another matter with the rate and benefit stabilization fund: what would happen if there was a catastrophic accident in this province? Where would we get the money to deal with it? This was in the past.

The board showed a great deal of wisdom, but then we liquidated the fund, and now we can tell the injured workers that we have no money. We can plead poverty. Of course, premiums have gone up by double digits last year, 27.4 percent to be precise, and now they're going up, I'm told, by double-digit amounts as well this year. In order to meet the amount of money, premiums have to be, as I understand it, about $1.81 per hundred dollars of payroll.

Mr. Speaker, in regard to the long-standing contentious claims, I just can't believe that we have to put it off and we have to study it further. Everyone knows what needs to be done. It's just a matter of, in my view, having the political will to deal with it.

Now, there's also the issue of the medical panels, and perhaps in the debate that's going to occur – hopefully we'll have a chance to debate this bill at length in this Assembly. The idea of the medical panels – certainly every report that came across to the minister discussed the importance of having independent medical panels and that the medical panels should be set up not in WCB policy, in my view, but they should be set up in statute.

We are allowing again here far too much discretionary power for the board.

- (4) The Board may make rules governing
 - (a) the appointment of the members of the medical panel,
 - (b) the determination of what constitutes a difference of medical opinion for the purposes of subsection (2), and
 - (c) the practice and procedure applicable to proceedings before a medical panel.

Where in all of this is the role of the family physician or the attending physician in the accident? The hon. Minister of Innovation and Science in his report earlier discussed this specifically, about the role of the GP. Recommendation 7 from the Friedman report:

It is recommended that a Medical Resolution Committee be established under the auspices of the Appeals Commission to review all cases where there is a difference of medical opinion between the medical adviser and the treating physician. A physician of the claimant's choice must be given reasonable opportunity to firstly, participate as a Medical Resolution Committee member (with his or her attendance paid for by the WCB) or, secondly, be contacted by the Committee Chairman to discuss the differing medical opinion of the diagnosis.

Now, this is from recommendation 7 of the Friedman report.

How can general practitioners have a say in the medical panels? Now, someone is going to tell me that, oh, it's going to be in policy. But it should not be in policy because these medical panels are where all the differences of opinion start. The minister himself will admit that it is far too high, it tells us that there's something wrong, whenever close to half, precisely 45 percent, of files that go to the Appeals Commission – and this is in the last year that there was an annual report – are overturned fully or perhaps partially, Mr. Speaker. So we do have problems, and to say that we're going to have a new review body: it's cosmetic. It's cosmetic. Instead of these reports we should have gotten the Avon lady to have a look at the WCB legislation and then just given us a cosmetic overview. That's exactly what has gone on here. This is just cosmetic. We're looking at this pilot project that's going on, and what difference is this between what we have now, the Claims Services Review Committee or the ARC? I need to be assured that there's going to be a difference in this. A resolution specialist just doesn't cut it. Again, I'm sorry; I view this as cosmetic.

Now, the medical panels are also going to unfortunately usurp the authority of the Appeals Commission. I don't think that is going to solve a lot of problems, and the authority of the Appeals Commission, I think, is compromised in section 13, because of course the medical findings of a medical panel are binding on the board, the Appeals Commission, and all other persons with a direct interest in a claim. The Appeals Commission is going to have their hands tied by the board. Again, more and more discretionary powers.

Now, Mr. Speaker, in light of all this, we have again this special police force. The hon. minister stated: due process will be followed. This is in regards to the extended powers in my view of the special investigations unit, or the SIU.

These administrative penalties. I have to remind all hon. members now of the Constitution Act, 1982, schedule B, Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, under legal rights, proceedings in criminal and penal matters: "To be presumed innocent until proven guilty according to law in a fair and public hearing by an independent and impartial tribunal." How can this occur under the new section 152(1)(4.1): "A person who pays an administrative penalty under section 152.1 in respect of a contravention may not be charged under this Act with an offence in respect of that contravention"?

Now, in my view the WCB does not want this to go to court and risk full public disclosure. They want everything going on behind closed doors. If the minister thinks we have frustrated, injured workers now, I think this is going to make the matter worse. I don't understand how there can be both a fine in the courts and by the board. How is due process being followed here? I just can't understand this. It is common knowledge, Mr. Speaker, that the WCB's special investigations unit spies on injured workers and tries to build a case that will give them an excuse to reduce compensation to the worker. These injured workers are followed around by the WCB secret police. It is known that their activities are videotaped by the secret police without their knowledge, without their consent. The proposed legislation will give this SIU, the secret police force, even more power than they already have. Not only will they have policing power, but they will also have the power to be judge and jury, and I don't think that is right.

The minister talked about the fines. Injured workers deemed guilty by the WCB special investigations unit will be slapped with hefty fines, up to $25,000 – and that's a 5,000 percent increase in fines – and then forced to prove their innocence to the WCB. This is completely unjust and violates workers' rights to a fair and just process. It also does nothing to address the issues raised in the Friedman report, and the WCB has a culture that treats many long-term disability claimants with suspicion.

I just can't support this legislation. It is my view that workers' rights will continue to be violated, and we are giving the WCB secret police far too much power. When one considers this, hopefully in debate we will compare the fines or the changes in fines and how they relate to injured workers or employees and also how they relate to employers, because certainly employers are going to have to be careful of this secret police. Section 19 is going to be involved in this; notice by employer, section 33; section 105, employer commencing business; section 106, employer ceasing to be an employer; employers' records; persons who might be employers; separate statements for each industry, section 110; board order ceasing to employ workers, section 138; unauthorized deductions, section 139; and it goes on. This also applies to employers. This expansion of powers is quite unusual, and why it is quite unusual is because there has been no history of fraud in the WCB. We are told that one-tenth of 1 percent of claims are fraudulent, so why do we need these wide, sweeping powers with large fines? It's beyond me.

Another issue that is not addressed in this bill is the issue of governance. I have with me the 1997 report, where termination benefits of $580,294, to be exact, were paid to the retiring president and CEO. This was in accordance with the contract of employment.

There are other executives that are very well paid, and it would be my view that in this legislation – we’re currently looking for a new CEO, and if they don’t like the terms, they don’t have to apply for the job. The complete compensation package for that individual should be public knowledge. Anyone in the province can look up the hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment’s compensation package and his termination benefits. If it’s good enough for him, then it’s good enough for the new CEO of the WCB. This is just inexcusable. Who knows what the retiring CEO is going to receive in benefits? It’s inexcusable.

Now, unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, I believe that my time has expired. I look forward to debate of Bill 26 in the Assembly.

At this time I now move that we adjourn debate on Bill 26. Thank you.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It’s been a very enlightening evening, a great day of progress in the House, and I would now move that the Assembly stand adjourned until 1:30 p.m. tomorrow.

[Motion carried; at 11:01 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Tuesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Tuesday, April 30, 2002

1:30 p.m.

Date: 02/04/30

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

THE SPEAKER: Good afternoon and welcome.

Let us pray. O Lord, we give thanks for the bounty of our province: our land, our resources, and our people. We pledge ourselves to act as good stewards on behalf of all Albertans. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Guests

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development.

MS CALAHASEN: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Today I have the pleasure of introducing two wonderful men. In fact, one of the men, whom I've known for quite a while, is the most charming man I've ever met. [interjections] He is. He is. Just wait. He's been a longtime resident of Edmonton, and he's no stranger to this House. He's been here a number of times. In fact, he's been here quite a few times, and he should, because he's the very proud father of our Premier. In fact, Phil Klein is sitting in the members' gallery along with one of my constituents, Robert Vanderwell, who has been a resident of my constituency of Lesser Slave Lake for 48 years. He is a businessman in the forest products industry. He has a family business. In fact, they've celebrated 60 years this year as a family business. He is the president/owner of Vanderwell Contractors Ltd., one of Alberta's largest family-run forestry companies. I would ask that they stand and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Community Development.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed a great pleasure for me to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the House 49 of Alberta's very brightest and best students. They of course come from the school of Blessed Kateri in my constituency, and they are accompanied by teachers Brigitte Berube, Mhairi Miskew, and parent helpers Bonnie Davis and Vivian Liberona. May I ask all of our special guests from Blessed Kateri to please rise and receive the thunderous ovation of the House.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

MR. JOHNSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of my colleague from Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills I'd like to introduce to you and through you 31 students and staff from the Kneehill Christian school in Linden. They are visiting the Legislature today, and I believe they are sitting in the public gallery, and I'd like to ask them to stand and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you two gentlemen who are seated in the gallery today. One is my constituency assistant, who for the last couple of years has ably handled the many duties and details of my very busy constituency office in Edmonton-Highlands, Mr. Craig Stumpf-Allen. The second is Mike Buurman, who will be working in our office this summer. He is a political science student just finishing his second year at Grant MacEwan and entering the U of A this fall. Mike also has considerable background as a volunteer with Edmonton's Food Bank and the Glenrose hospital. I'm happy to have him as my STEP student for this year. I'd ask both gentlemen to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

head: Ministerial Statements

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Municipal Government Day

MR. BOUTILIER: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Today I rise in recognition of this being Municipal Government Day, April 30. In fact, Municipal Government Day was established by the Federation of Canadian Municipalities to honour municipal leaders across Canada who take part in a very special activity in terms of promoting the unique role that municipal governments play in our country.

As Minister of Municipal Affairs I would like to take this opportunity to acknowledge the vital role that municipalities play in all of our lives. Throughout the history of our country and our province municipal governments have played a key role in sustaining and improving the quality of life of our communities. In fact, over one-third of the MLAs presently elected to this Assembly have served at the local municipal level either as a reeve, as a councillor, as an alderman, as a school trustee, as a hospital trustee, or as a mayor, and this really speaks well of the deep roots that municipal government has right here in this Legislative Assembly.

I know that all members of this Assembly join me in recognizing the 360 municipal governments that proudly serve all Albertans working in partnership with their province. In honour of this day I invite all members to join in recognizing the importance of municipalities in the province of Alberta.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise on behalf of the Official Opposition to recognize Municipal Government Day. Alberta's municipal leaders have the responsibility of building and supporting the great communities that we are proud to call home. Whether home is a village of 100 people or a city of almost 1 million, Albertans share similar expectations. We want safe streets, clean water, good roads, viable businesses, accessible schools and hospitals, and affordable recreation facilities and housing. It is not an easy to-do list for our local councils, but they do provide this and more. In the face of downloading, rising costs, shifting taxes, and increased pressures on volunteers, they achieve excellence. In honour of this day I invite all members of the Assembly to consider how the legislation and policies we debate affect municipal councils and their vision for our communities.

Thank you.

head: Oral Question Period

THE SPEAKER: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Child Welfare System

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In describing the child welfare system in Alberta it has been said, and I quote: when disaster strikes Alberta's child welfare system, reports follow the scandals like life insurance investigators covering a fire. It goes on:

their recommendations have been so repeated that now when a new study is released, it's hardly necessary to crack the cover to find out what's inside. My questions are to the Minister of Children's Services. Madam Minister, that was written in 1993. Why is it that we're still seeing reports every few months repeating the same recommendations, and none of the recommendations get implemented to improve service to children?

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, I'm so very, very grateful for that question today. It gives me an opportunity to brag about the things that we are doing right that have been unacknowledged while we've been going through this very, very painful period. We have the Alberta response model, which is out there, staff that are out there working to make sure that children that are in low-risk situations are maintained in their family with supports to the family, and we only will endeavour to protect those children that really need it most in high-risk situations and take them into care. This is the thrust that is important, that social workers are embracing, because it looks at the community for community-based support, something that was visioned by my predecessors. In the last two years we've made huge strides toward it. Another very unacclaimed situation is that when communities all over Alberta, the very ones the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs spoke about, asked us for full funding of family and community support services, this year an additional $15 million has gone into that fund, which will help us with a lot of those early intervention projects. We're making some good moves. They're not hitting the headlines, but I'm confident they're making a difference.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the minister. Specific recommendations, Madam Minister. How many recommendations of the 1984 Richard Cardinal fatality inquiry were not followed and have to be rerecommended on subsequent inquiries?

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, I'm not familiar with what the number is, but I would certainly be pleased to table that in the House on a subsequent day.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Bob Rechner, the former Children's Advocate, has recommended an independent external review process to hear children's maltreatment claims. Will the minister be implementing that recommendation?

MS EVANS: Well, Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member opposite knows, there has been an adjournment of a court case that was filed by a solicitor in Calgary with other participants who've identified themselves as friends of children who have been in child protection cases. We have selected with Justice's assistance a solicitor to act on behalf of the government, and we will be responding in kind. The issues of compensation I have already declared would be part of our overall review of the Child Welfare Act that's being conducted by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo. More than that I don't think is appropriate for me to comment on at this time.

THE SPEAKER: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Foster Care Delivery

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Still following up with the Minister of Children's Services: has the minister implemented the recommendations of the Korvette Crier report that foster agency staff make unscheduled visits to foster homes?

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, as we speak, there are significant discussions between the principals of Keystone. It would be: frankly, I'm not sure yet. We have been looking at these issues with the CEO from Keystone, who is on site at Kasohkewew. We have been talking with those folks that are delivering the child welfare service. I don't know exactly what has been implemented, but substantive improvements have occurred since August 1999, and just exactly where we go from here will be determined by the extent that we can review those cases and assure ourselves of the bottom line: that children are safe and protected.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the minister: can the minister tell us whether, as of today, all nongovernment agencies operating foster homes are registered with the government?

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, as of today not all are registered with the government. I don't know exactly how many are not registered with the government, but of course if you are providing child care services, we are asking for those to be registered, to be accredited. In fact, in the accreditation process there is some opportunity for various agencies to work towards their accreditation. It's a fairly complex process. In the situation of the most recent tragic death the agency that was managing the foster placement was an accredited agency.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question again to the minister: when will the results of the minister's overall review of foster care delivery be made public?

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, we'll be pleased to make it public when it's complete. [interjection] We have been working on that foster care review for the last few months, and rather than being subjected to some taunting, I'll just simply say: when the work in progress is complete and done properly.

THE SPEAKER: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Case Plans for Children in Care

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the Minister of Children's Services referred to some of the 600 children whose case plans were not filed with the courts. She said: "It's entirely possible today that some of those children are already back with their families, and in some cases, tragically . . ." My questions are to the Minister of Children's Services. Does the minister know of cases where children were actually put back in families where tragedy befell them?

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, as we speak, our staff on that front are looking into what has happened with the children that have been under temporary guardianship orders filed before March 4th's Court of Appeal. We know in fact, as I stated last evening, that some of the appeal notices had been filed too late. Last evening I was endeavouring to explain that we really don't know in the last two months exactly the status of each one of those at the provincial level.

At the local level we've asked for them, through the child welfare director on site, to determine what's happened with each one of those cases, to provide us exactly what the status is. We noted yesterday – and I believe I spoke to this yesterday – that less than 50 were contested in court, and we may be reapprehending those. Again, the status of that I know not. I will provide that report to this Assembly as soon as it's available.

DR. MASSEY: Again to the same minister, Mr. Speaker: does the minister know of children who were put back in homes where tragedy befell them?

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, I have to thank my colleague so that in the rest of this Assembly you're not misled by excerpts from my statement. To quote from Hansard, page 973, I stated:

It's entirely possible . . . that some of those children are already back with their families, and in some cases, tragically, I'm told that we can't locate some of those parents, because those are children that have been taken into protection sometimes because parents have not been available to do the job that parents should be doing.

Now, Mr. Speaker, what is wrong with that?

DR. MASSEY: Mr. Speaker, if there's one child that's been put into a tragic situation, that's what's wrong with that.

My question is to the minister. Given that there are alternative actions the department can legally take, why would any child be put back in a risky situation?

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, no child will be put back in a risky situation. While the hon. member opposite may be trying to fault this government for the tragic results of things that happened to children who have been at risk, what is really tragic is that sometimes those parents disappear. They leave the children with child welfare and wash their hands of those circumstances. That's a real tragedy, because parents should be responsible. If in fact today there are those children in care that need protection, we will under an emergency order be reapprehending those children so that in fact they are never at risk. Those 636 children are not at risk, because we will make sure that they are not at risk, because our procedures allow us in an emergency, which could occur if a parent who doesn't deserve the child comes back, to reapprehend that child and make sure those children are protected.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, followed by the hon. Member for St. Albert.

Workers' Compensation Board Health Care Costs

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In 1999 the Workers' Compensation Board adopted a policy under which they pay private surgical facilities up to four and a half times more than they pay the public system for the same procedure. Small wonder that the WCB's health care costs have tripled in the past five years, and no wonder that HRC investors are excited, because if approved, they expect 90 percent of their patients to be injured workers paid for by the WCB. To the Minister of Human Resources and Employment: given the recent rapid escalation in employer premium rates, is the minister at all concerned that WCB's plan to pay top rates to HRC to do total joint replacements and major back surgery will drive employer premium rates even higher?

MR. DUNFORD: Mr. Speaker, the operation of the Workers' Compensation Board is through appointments of the board members, and it is a long tradition that we appoint members not only from the employer sector but also from the employee and the public sectors. It's the responsibility of the chair and those nine appointees to operate the Workers' Compensation Board system. So the particular issue that the hon. member is on I think is a valid one, and I think it's something that quite appropriately can be taken up beyond just here in question period. As he's a serious member, as we all know, he can certainly take it up with the individual board members.

The thing that must be mentioned, I think, by me at this point in time is that it is of the utmost urgency that injured workers receive first of all proper diagnosis but then proper treatment, because it is very, very important, as the hon. member knows, that we get injured workers back into the workplace. There is a direct correlation between the severance of a worker from a workplace and that worker's ability to ever get back to meaningful employment, so I think that WCB has to do what it has to do to get workers back as quickly as possible.

MR. MASON: Mr. Speaker, the minister cannot escape his ministerial responsibility that easily. These members are appointed by the government. Will the minister at least agree to look into whether the escalating health care costs of the WCB might be related to an overreliance on private, for-profit surgical facilities before allowing them to enter into an agreement with the Health Resource Centre, or HRC, to do joint replacements or major back surgery?

MR. DUNFORD: In 1995 the members that were here within this Assembly – and as I stand here, I just don't recall whether or not the Member for Edmonton-Highlands was part of it. Perhaps he wasn't. In any event, we had a debate on a bill at that particular time. What that bill managed to do and what it continues to do quite successfully is to move the Workers' Compensation Board system, entirely paid for by employers' money – there is not one dollar of taxpayers' money in that WCB system. The idea at the time, then, was to move the WCB to an arm's-length relationship with the government. We succeeded in doing that with the passage of that bill in 1995, and that bill stands in good stead today.

MR. MASON: Mr. Speaker, would the minister tell the House why and how he can stall on resolving the long-standing issues of injured workers because the employers don't want to pay higher premiums, yet he allows WCB to pay three times the price for certain procedures because it's a private health care facility?

MR. DUNFORD: Well, the member is being provocative. It's not me that's allowing the contract relationship between the WCB and physicians around the province.

As far as the question itself in the sense of long-term contentious claims, I believe that it is important that we have all stakeholders onside on this issue, especially those that will have to foot the bill. What we're talking about here in terms of long-term contentious claims is the fact that there was an appeal system that was recognized by law, and the actual mechanics and the logistics of that appeal system were in fact administered for claims in the past. So at that particular point in time basically, then, the issues that came out of those appeals have been dealt with. We had two reports. There was a recommendation made that a further appeal system be looked into. We have accepted that recommendation. Now we're trying to find a way to make it work.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. Deputy Government House Leader, you advised of a point of order.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for St. Albert, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Electricity Billing

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Recently I have received a number of calls from constituents about their electricity bills, and I daresay that even some of those might have been calls from the parents of the students who are seated in the public gallery today from Sir Alexander Mackenzie school. They are concerned about the number of consumer charges that are on their bill: the actual power consumed, the transmission and distribution charges, and the various deferral account rate riders. My question is to the Minister of Energy. What is the role of the EUB in all of this issue determining what is regulated, if anything, and what are regulated and what are unregulated items on their bill?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. SMITH: Well, thanks, Mr. Speaker. I'm sure the Member for St. Albert, when talking to the members of the Sir Alexander Mackenzie school, probably also told them of the energy rebate that they got last year and why the bills that the Minister of Infrastructure put forward were indeed less than what they could have been.

The member brings up an excellent question, Mr. Speaker. EPCOR bills are the bills that the member gets in her service area. Those serviced by Utilicorp in southern Alberta will also receive an EPCOR bill, and those in the northern part of Alberta will receive an ATCO bill. In this portion the regulator, the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board, that holds hearings in an open fashion, fully transcribed and fully available to everybody in Alberta, receives an application on these numerous charges. They then go through a rigorous process and deliver a public decision.

With respect to the specific bill to which the Member for St. Albert refers, the delivery charge, the energy charge, the service charge, and the rate riders are brought through the EUB. The energy charge is a regulated rate option. Now, I know that the opposition members may not want this specific information, because they're concerned more about the ideology as opposed to the good questions of the member, who asks for actual fact. That is the key part of the new electrical restructuring market, Mr. Speaker. We asked for the umbrella, the camouflage of regulation to be lifted and for the honesty of transparency and the EUB regulation to show these important charges to the consumer so that the consumer knows exactly what they're paying for.

MRS. O'NEILL: Mr. Speaker, my first supplemental is to the same minister, and that is with respect to some of those charges: will they change, and if so, when will they change?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. SMITH: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, I was very pleased for the supplementary because I forgot to add that there is also, of course, a federal tax, a federal GST tax, on the bills.

AN HON. MEMBER: The Liberals.

MR. SMITH: Yes. I know that's the Liberals. I even remember a Liberal campaign promise to eliminate the GST. Good work, guys. Good work. You didn't get anywhere; did you?

Mr. Speaker, the member asks a very good question. The regulated rate option has two phases. One is the charge for electricity that was encountered in the year 2000, when we had a regulated rate model, and the difference between what they paid for in electricity. Secondly, there is a deferral rate for 2001. This is the price in excess of the regulated rate that the utility paid for the purpose of providing electrical services to the constituents of St. Albert.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie on a point of order as well.

Go ahead, hon. member.

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you. My second supplemental to the same minister has to do with: how are the service charges determined?

MR. SMITH: Mr. Speaker, I apologize for what seems to be a long time, but it's an extremely important topic. The 2001 regulated rate option shortfall has been approved on an interim or temporary basis, and the EUB, the Energy and Utilities Board, received the last of the material on April 2. Consistently, the Energy and Utilities Board will render a decision by June 2002. The intent is for the deferral rates, which are clear and transparent, to be paid off and eliminated in 2004 and to show generators that there is opportunity for more generation and for more capability in Alberta.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, I'll recognize you, too, later on a point of order.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Electricity Balancing Pool

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last summer the Minister of Energy welcomed Enron's entry into Alberta's electricity industry as vindication that the anticipated deregulation scheme is working more or less as promised and said at the time, quote: Enron's announcement is a signal that this power market is here to stay. End of quote. We saw the success of Enron, so I guess we can only wait for the success of this government's electricity deregulation scheme. Now, when I asked the minister two weeks ago about the proceeds of the electricity auctions in 2000, he said that the money was "all returned in the $40 bill. That was consumers' money. They got it all back. It's gone." My first question is to the Minister of Energy. If that money is all gone, then how does the Balancing Pool still operate certain power plants from the proceeds of these electricity auctions?

2:00

MR. SMITH: The first thing is that when the Enron situation was mentioned, as quoted by the member, that was at a time when I believe we were 63 members of government and there were some 15, 20-plus members of the opposition. So, in fact, from the time that I made that quote to today, the only thing that's gone, Mr. Speaker, is eight members from the opposition. What remains are more government members than ever before and a government that actively, totally put the new competitive restructuring on the line for the election of 2001, said and committed to consumers that they would return the auction proceeds. They did. We have operated totally above board, we've operated with integrity, and most importantly we've operated with transparency to this marketplace and to this taxpayer.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: if some of the auction proceeds have been allocated to the Balancing Pool, how then are the minister's comments from the estimates debate only two weeks ago correct when he said that consumers got it all back when we know that they have not? It's in the Balancing Pool. Don't you know your own policy?

MR. SMITH: I assume that when he says, don't I even know my own policy?, it's his third supplementary, so my answer to that, Mr. Speaker, would be: yes, I do know the policy.

Of course, the member does know, I would hope that the member knows, that proceeds from the payment in lieu of taxation – there is a notional tax put on the utilities, and that is passed into the Balancing Pool, that the Balancing Pool makes revenues from the operation of Clover Bar, a peaking plant in Alberta, and that the Balancing Pool has a clear, open, and transparent balance sheet that is accessible to any and all Albertans.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: if all of the accounting has not been Enronized, will the minister provide us with a breakdown of where the proceeds from the electricity auctions went and where all this money is going into the Balancing Pool and exactly how it is being spent?

Thank you.

MR. SMITH: Well, I will answer the hon. member's fourth and fifth questions, Mr. Speaker. The ability for the member, one, through a process that I believe has been in this House for a good length of time called motion for a return – that's one that I'm sure he would be able to pursue. Secondly, if the member would follow the Enron story, he would find that during the time that Enron was in possession of a PPA, during the time that Enron was active in the trading market, and during the subsequent times, there has not been one light go dark in this province, there has not been one shipment of gas that was missed. In fact, the deregulation process, the competitive market structuring of electricity, stands in far greater stead and far better stead than Securities and Exchange Commission reporting requirements on how a company does business and congressional inquiries. So I think that this Alberta system is a good one.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Grizzly Bears

MS DeLONG: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Some Albertans have expressed concerns about how grizzly bear management might be affected by a push to have the animal declared a threatened species. My first question is to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. What steps is your department taking in response to the recent recommendation by the Endangered Species Conservation Committee to have grizzly bears designated as threatened?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. CARDINAL: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. That's a very good question. The Endangered Species Conservation Committee – and I see that the chairman is here today – did an excellent job of compiling information assessing the status of grizzly bears in Alberta. My department actually is looking at a number of things as a result of the recommendations made by that committee. Considering whether the species should be given special status is one aspect of grizzly bear management, of course.

We will immediately provincially be initiating a recovery team and recovery plans, as the committee advises. We will also of course specifically assess the recommendations related to the issue of hunting as early as we can in order to assess that situation and put our process in place. We will make decisions on the designation of the species pending our thorough assessment, and I am looking forward to this assessment, Mr. Speaker. At that time, we will share our recommendations with the public.

MS DeLONG: Mr. Speaker, my next question is also to the same minister. Considering the recommendation by the Endangered Species Conservation Committee, where does this leave the annual grizzly bear hunt, which is already limited to a very small number of animals?

MR. CARDINAL: Yes, it is a fact that only a small number of grizzly bears are taken out each year. Although over a hundred licences are provided, we are taking out about 14 grizzly bears.

DR. TAYLOR: How many?

MR. CARDINAL: Fourteen, on the average, mostly male animals out of a population of a thousand and out of an adjacent population of 5,000 to 13,000 in B.C., which is just west of us.

So as I mentioned, I will thoroughly assess the committee's recommendations related to hunting because it is a very important issue. As well, we will do it early in developing our recovery plans, Mr. Speaker. It is important to note that the status evaluation provided by the Scientific Subcommittee states that the recent legal harvest of grizzly bears is not the primary cause for concern. So we are on the positive side. We have time to look at this issue thoroughly.

We must look at a number of other issues. For example, the quality of habitat may be a concern, the survival rates of the young may be a concern, and the number of young produced each year. We need a balanced approach in dealing with this valuable resource.

MS DeLONG: Mr. Speaker, my final question is also to the same minister. What's the process that the Endangered Species Conservation Committee follows to make recommendations to you on various species?

MR. CARDINAL: That's a very good question, Mr. Speaker. Overall, the Endangered Species Conservation Committee advises my department on the identification and recovery of species at risk in Alberta. The committee is chaired by the Member for West Yellowhead, who is here today of course to support the minister. It includes individuals also from 19 stakeholders including resource users, land managers, conservation groups, university scientists, et cetera. It is also supported by an independent scientific committee.

Mr. Speaker, as a point of interest, Alberta leads the country with programs to identify and restore species at risk. We've had such programs for over 25 years here in Alberta, so we are ahead of most jurisdictions in North America in fact with our recovery plans and our management and our assessment processes.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Community Lottery Boards

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On April 8 of this year the Premier said that the Minister of Gaming would look for ways to fund groups that were falling through the cracks because of the government's decision to eliminate community lottery boards. Well, these groups are falling through the cracks, and they would like some answers. My questions today are to the Minister of Gaming. Edmonton Meals on Wheels spent valuable volunteer hours compiling a community lottery board grant application for much-needed computer equipment. What program is the minister putting in place to meet their needs?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. STEVENS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is correct that the Premier has asked me to review the existing foundations, and I am in the process of doing that with my department. I can tell you, generally speaking, that about 50 percent of the applications that went before the community lottery boards throughout the province and were in fact funded both in terms of number and amount would qualify, for example, under the community facility enhancement program. There were other numbers which would qualify with respect to different foundations, such as Wild Rose and the sports and recreation foundation.

At this point in time, Mr. Speaker, what I am doing is taking a very close look at the good work that the community lottery boards did to see where there are gaps in the existing foundations, and I am working toward bringing forward a proposal that will put options for my colleagues to address those groups which, as the hon. member opposite indicated, are falling between the cracks.

2:10

MS BLAKEMAN: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, where does the minister suggest the Sturgeon Foundation of Redwater access funding for programs like the wheelchair-accessible garden now that the community lottery boards have been cut? Which program should they go to?

MR. STEVENS: Mr. Speaker, what I have said to groups and to those that have been writing generally is that if they have examples of their situation that they wish to share with me, that is a good thing because I then will have a better understanding of the perception of groups that have fallen between the cracks. I've also indicated to anyone who wishes to put forward a concrete proposal as to how we might review this matter to send it to me, because I'm very appreciative of any good ideas that people could come forward with.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MS BLAKEMAN: Well, thank you very much. Perhaps the minister could consider the Alberta Easter Seals March of Dimes, who is scrambling to access funding for mobility aids for 25 of their clients. Which program will the minister be helpful in finding them funding from?

MR. STEVENS: Mr. Speaker, I think it's important to recognize that the community lottery boards did a great deal of good throughout the province, but they also were, like most other foundations, in receipt of far more applications than they could accommodate. If you take a look at the numbers, something in the order of 50 percent of applications in fact would be honoured. So while I am not familiar with the particular group in this last question and in the two previous questions, the fact of the matter is that because there is a group that has a worthy cause, it does not necessarily mean that they would have qualified under the community lottery board. In any event, we are, as I indicated to the hon. member, looking at reviewing the existing programs to see how we may accommodate those who fall between the cracks.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Sustainability of Municipalities

MR. McCLELLAND: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On April 22 the Toronto-Dominion Bank issued the report A Choice Between Investing in Canada's Cities or Disinvesting in Canada's Future, which was perhaps not the most objective title that they could have found. The premise of the report was that cities account for the bulk of Canada's gross domestic product but do not have the financial tools necessary to sustain the infrastructure necessary over the long term. Provincially, Edmonton and Calgary account for a significant portion of Alberta's gross provincial product. My question to the Minister of Municipal Affairs: does the minister agree with the premise of the Toronto-Dominion Bank report?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. BOUTILIER: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have the report, which actually I have been reviewing. One thing is for sure. The report is talking about the sustainability of municipalities. I am optimistic that the report will add to the growing debate in terms of the important role that municipalities play, something that this province is viewed as a leader of across Canada. The report does talk about increasing revenue opportunities to ensure that, if I understand this correctly, there's no net increase to taxpayers. Of course, this is a very complex issue, because we have to review all of the priorities that municipal and provincial and federal governments face, but one thing for sure is that this province is not afraid of thinking outside the box, which we're doing.

I'd like to point out that the report is of a national perspective. Just to give you an example, we're reviewing how the orders of government can best work together to keep the Alberta advantage strong. It's kind of interesting and I'm pleased to see that they're advocating in the report private/public partnerships, and of course many of my colleagues here, the ministers of Transportation and of Infrastructure, are using that private/public partnership in terms of advancing what keeps the Alberta advantage strong.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. McCLELLAND: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Edmonton and Calgary are Alberta's two primary urban regions, yet we need to work . . . [interjections] No. Primary, I said, primary urban regions. Now, what initiatives is the government taking to ensure that the two major cities work together to complement each other in a North American competitive market and rather than competing with each other to their mutual disadvantage, to work together to our common advantage as a province?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. BOUTILIER: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member raises an important point. Of course, in this province we have the first minister's council of its kind across Canada in terms of roles, responsibilities, and resources. I might add that I'm pleased to say that the Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne constituency is co-chairing that committee with me, as well as the Member for Calgary-Mountain View, as well as actually the former Deputy Speaker of the House of Commons, who happens to come from – I'm sorry, but the constituency escapes me; he also participates. But what I think is also important is the fact that a cautionary note has been extended by an economist from Alberta who has said that one thing we do not want to do is create a tax jungle, because at the end of the day there's only one taxpayer. I think all Albertans agree that we don't want another tax jungle relative to any proposals by someone in Toronto.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. McCLELLAND: My final question, Mr. Speaker, is to the same minister. How does the government envision arriving at equity between the large urban municipalities, including others not necessarily Edmonton and Calgary, and the smaller rural municipalities?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. BOUTILIER: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is why on this minister's council we have the president of the Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties as well as the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association, which represents the 360 municipalities, but as well the mayors of Edmonton and Calgary, which make up our total of 3 million people that live in Alberta. So I think it's really important that we work together and that we're taking that initiative. I'm pleased to say that I'm going to be speaking at the Federation of Canadian Municipalities on this initiative, but I also would like to indicate this: this report and these comments were made from the perspective of an economist in a Toronto-based bank, but I did observe that any mention of rural Canada or rural Alberta was noticeably absent. That's interesting in terms of how three factors – natural resources, agriculture, and forestry – play such a key role in the competitive markets of not only this province and this country but throughout the world.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed the by hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Angling Regulations

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Sustainable Resource Development is initiating efforts to switch Alberta to barbless-only angling regulations. Many Albertans believe that resource management decisions should be based on a sound foundation of science, and science indicates that there are no clear benefits for implementing these kinds of regulations. It makes more sense to allow this issue to be a personal choice among anglers rather than have government implement a regulation that science indicates will have no clear benefits to the fishing resource. Can the minister tell us what plans or studies he is basing this proposal on?

MR. CARDINAL: Well, Mr. Speaker, scientific information of course is very important, and we definitely consider that as we move forward with changes of this nature. But the commonsense approach, which is what I'm using, is also very, very important in developing policy, because we do gather information from Albertans. It seems that about 50 percent or more support what we are proposing, and the other 50 percent are not opposed to it but do not come out publicly supporting it. That is what we're using.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MS CARLSON: Does the same minister base this information on any kind of a scientific basis, and how does he plan to enforce this kind of a regulation?

MR. CARDINAL: Mr. Speaker, I think part of the overall strategy we are challenged with in Alberta is in relation to fisheries' restoration for both the sportfishing industry, which is about a $350 million industry – over 300,000 anglers participate in that process – and for the 800 commercial fishermen we have, who use up to 34,000 hundred-yard nets for fisheries. At the same time, our economic growth, which is a very positive growth in Alberta, provides additional challenges. We have more people with more dollars interested in these activities. We have more population growth in Alberta, for an example, because we only have 1,000 lakes in Alberta that are fish-bearing lakes, so the resource is limited; the demand is greater. So we have to be very innovative in how we move forward in making changes, taking into consideration the scientific information that's out there and also using a commonsense approach, which a lot of times you get from the people of Alberta, and that is exactly what we're doing.

MS CARLSON: Mr. Speaker, does the minister see this proposed regulation as part of cleaning up government policy that has led to the collapse of fisheries in this province?

MR. CARDINAL: No, Mr. Speaker. You know, it's a challenging area. I know the Liberals would take the easy way out, and that's to throw up their hands and give up. Well, on this side of the House we don't do that. What we do is we carefully assess the situation, the challenges we have, and we work positively to resolve those issues. That's what this sports fisheries and commercial fisheries rationalization is doing.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, followed by the hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Edmonton South Indoor Soccer Centre

MR. MASON: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, a day without a question to the Premier is like a day without sunshine, so I'd like to ask him a question today. Indoor soccer is the fastest growing participation sport for children and adults alike. More kids are now playing indoor soccer than are playing minor hockey. Edmonton's two existing indoor soccer centres are bursting at the seams, and the city desperately needs another indoor soccer centre on the fast-growing south side, but as a result of provincial budget cuts Edmonton Minor Soccer's plan to have the southeast centre ready for the next indoor season has had to be put on hold indefinitely. My question is to the Premier. Why did the government pull the rug out from under the Edmonton Minor Soccer Association and the kids of southeast Edmonton by axing a previously committed $3 million provincial contribution to construct a badly needed soccer centre in southeast Edmonton?

MR. KLEIN: Well, Mr. Speaker, I understand that that's not entirely true, but before I have the hon. Minister of Community Development respond and explain the situation, I will say that budgeting is not an easy task. We do have to assess priorities, and certainly the priority areas of this government are the areas of health, education, solid infrastructure, and safe communities. I know that this all relates to it, but we do have to make some tough decisions from time to time. Relative to this particular project I understand that what the hon. member says is not entirely true, and I'll have the hon. minister shed some light on it.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member opposite is referring to a soccer centre which basically is planned for the far east end of 51st Avenue, what is true is that that particular group did come to see me. I don't recall the exact date, but as I recall, it was beyond the March 1, 2001, deadline. That is what we refer to as phase 2; those were the ones that were deferred. So the particular application from that particular group, if it's for that particular location, would be considered in phase 3, if we ever get phase 3. At the moment we're still trying to get out of the deferral mode on phase 2. So I think we should just let that member be aware of that.

Now, I'm assuming that he's referring to that one. If it's a different one, then we'll wait to hear it, Mr. Speaker, because I should also say that there is one other soccer centre planned further south. It's just beyond the city limits on 50th street, closer to Beaumont, and that's an entirely different situation.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, I think the hon. minister is mistaken. This is one of the city of Edmonton's that has been postponed or canceled as a result of the cancellation of provincial funding.

I'm pleased that the Premier has spoken about priorities, and given that, I would like to ask him to justify to the tens of thousands of children who are counting on a new soccer centre being available by next winter his government's decision to instead provide a $33 million subsidy to the horse racing industry.

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, again it was alluded to that the city of Calgary, as I understand it, has one soccer centre. I don't know the details relative to the soccer centre, and the hon. member alluded to this being a city project. I don't know to what extent the city of Edmonton is contributing to this project. I don't know to what extent they have applied for community facility enhancement program funds. I don't know to what extent there have been private funds raised.

I do know, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. Minister of Community Development received about 170 applications for various projects, centennial projects, and there simply isn't enough money. It would have added up to the billions of dollars for all of these projects. He had to prioritize them and make some tough decisions. There's one thing certain about government: you can't please all the people all the time. You know, God forbid the NDs ever get into government, but they'll find that out. I know they found that out in Ontario. Certainly they found it out in a big way in British Columbia.

Mr. Speaker, I forgot what the question was.

THE SPEAKER: Let's move on, then. The hon. member.

MR. MASON: Mr. Speaker, you know, I agree that it's hard to please all the people all the time, but . . .

THE SPEAKER: Hon. member, you have to help me. There's another member waiting to raise questions. The Minister of Community Development's estimates are up this afternoon. If this has to do with his estimates, I'm ruling it out and we're moving on.

MR. MASON: No, it's not, Mr. Speaker.

I just want to ask the Premier why $33 million in annual subsidies to horse racing takes precedence over a onetime $3 million grant to construct the Edmonton south soccer centre?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, this is not a subsidy. This is a program that was developed relative to horse racing, where the number of slot machines that are assigned exclusively to racetracks has been enhanced to allow the horse racing industry to garner some more money to support an industry which in turn supports thousands of jobs in this province and is a vital component of our agricultural sector. I would remind the hon. member that not one penny of taxpayers' dollars is going into this program, and all the money is being generated by the racetracks – by the racetracks.

Leaders of Tomorrow Awards Volunteer Citizen of the Year Award

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to acknowledge the wonderful volunteer work and contribution to our community of St. Albert of 10 individuals and one group. I wish to acknowledge the Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert, who joins me in this congratulatory message.

On Friday evening, April 26, St. Albert's Community Information and Volunteer Centre personnel hosted a banquet and awards ceremony recognizing leaders of tomorrow, who are young people in our community who have shown excellent volunteer and community involvement. They are Ryan Desilets, Jordan Mann, Damien Crockett, Matt Chapelsky, and Arwen Fleming. They join the St. Albert Youth Council in being acknowledged as our leaders of tomorrow winners.

I'd also like to acknowledge the five nominees for the volunteer citizen of the year 2001. Doug Campbell, Lauretta Easson, Dean Krawec, Greta Sterling, and Bill Webber were nominees, and Doug Campbell and Bill Webber were selected as the volunteer citizens of the year for 2001. These are extraordinary individuals who contribute selfless hours of their time and talent in order for us as a community to enjoy a very high quality of life in which neighbour helps neighbour.

So, as I said, on behalf of the Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert and myself I wish to acknowledge their wonderful presence in our community.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Education Week

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The theme for Education Week this April is: encouraging learners to reach new heights. Just what are those new heights has become a matter of public debate in our province. Without calling it specifically that, we have engaged ourselves in an intense debate about the ends of schooling. At the K to 12 level the question has centred on the basics and what we have called the extras. Many believe the basics to be common subjects taught in school such as English, mathematics, and science. However, the withdrawal of teachers' support for extra school activities shook that belief. A large number of citizens are not satisfied with such a narrow definition. They believe that field trips, bands, and sports teams are a basic part of school programming. Parents revealed a similar unwillingness to confine themselves to a narrow definition of schooling in their fund-raising activities, suggesting that gym equipment, computers, computer software all provide support for basic programs.

At the postsecondary level there is alarm over the narrowing of education to programs that result in vocational preparation. The focus on the utilitarian as opposed to the reflective is seen in the large research funds created for medicine and the sciences while the humanities go begging. The debate extends to research, where there is fear that research agendas predicated on support from private enterprise will narrow the definition of research at the expense of the public research agenda.

Education Week provides an opportunity for us to further define what the ends of schooling should be, what those new heights will be. The debate is timely. Definitive answers will emerge as the blue-ribbon panel arising out of Bill 12 completes its work.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Glendale Elementary School Earth Day Garden

MS KRYCZKA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On Monday, April 22, I was very honoured to attend a special assembly recognizing International Earth Day 2002 at Glendale elementary school in Calgary-West. This assembly was truly a celebration event for Glendale school and the community as they formally launched their garden project. It was indeed a very wonderful occasion for me to join 275 enthusiastic students, many parents, the school principal and teachers when only one year ago the community faced a CBE decision to close Glendale Meadows, one of their two underutilized elementary schools. Glendale elementary is now fully utilized and integrated, judging by this event. A dedicated parent committee is to be commended – co-ordinator Liz Courage, Tina Donkers, and Lisa Lamb – who worked with principal Lori Pamplin and two student representatives from each classroom.

The project evolved from the decision to make Glendale school as exciting on the outside as the inside. Following research on Canadian and Calgary schools, the committee received input on design and details from literally all of the students, so the Glendale's school garden represents a truly collaborative, unique outdoor classroom. Donations of services and supplies from local businesses, especially Paul McCormick from Green Escape and funds from the Calgary Foundation's neighbourhood grant program, contributed greatly to the project's outcome.

As the garden project developed, many native Alberta plants and shrubs were chosen for their valuable qualities such as the ability to grow naturally in Calgary. Olds College also assisted, and many city kids learned about wheat, barley, canola, and oats, just what their country neighbours are growing. Mr. Speaker, as the program unfolded, I was truly impressed by the participation of the students, from the greeters at the door to the student emcee, to the brief individual student presentations, and to the enthusiastic singing by all of Saskatoon Blues with Tom Wilson, Calgary singer and songwriter.

Glendale school has very good reason to be extremely proud of this impressive accomplishment, and I plan to invite our Lieutenant Governor for a special visit in the near future. Thank you.

head: Presenting Petitions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to present a petition. It's signed by 2,239 Albertans asking that the government take action to recognize and protect Bighorn Country. These names, when taken together with the previous 2,116 that have been tabled here, bring the total number of Albertans who have signed the petition to 4,355. They are specifically requesting:

We, the undersigned residents of Alberta, petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government of Alberta to support the establishment of Bighorn Country as a legislated protected area.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm presenting today a petition signed by 100 Albertans petitioning the Legislative Assembly to urge the government "to not delist services, raise health care premiums, introduce user fees or further privatize health care."

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

THE CLERK: Pursuant to Standing Order 37.1(2) I wish to advise the House that the following document was deposited today with the office of the Clerk: return to order of the Assembly MR 7, asked for by Dr. Taft on April 29, 2002, the hon. Mr. Klein.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Finance.

MRS. NELSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the requisite number of copies of the Credit Union Deposit Guarantee Corporation's 2001 annual report.

Mr. Speaker, I'd also like to make another tabling. On March 19 I tabled the government and lottery fund estimates for 2002-2003. I am now having to table a replacement page for page 218. This page shows the statement of operations by entity for the Ministry of Gaming. Unfortunately, due to a problem in our compilation process, page 218 of the estimates was a partial repeat of the previous page, page 217, which showed the statement of operations by program. This tabling does not affect our appropriations being considered by the House.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have a couple of tablings today. The first is a letter from Connie Lambrecht to her MLA, the Member for Calgary-Buffalo, asking if it wouldn't be better for the government to reinstate the community lottery board structure so that if future funds become available, the funds can go into an existing structure.

My next tabling, from Maureen Decore, the president of the Citadel Theatre's board of directors, is directed to the Minister of Gaming and points out that on October 4 they were granted an amount of money for improvements to their building. In November they were asked to hold that due to the provincial cutbacks. They were told that the cheque would be issued in April of 2002, and now the community lottery boards are gone. They're wondering where their money is.

My next tabling is from Jodi Zabludowski, the director of operations for Alberta Easter Seals March of Dimes, explaining how the loss of the community lottery boards is affecting their clients.

A letter signed by Michelle Hill, program co-ordinator with the Diamond Spring Lodge and Golden Villa Apartments in Redwater, asking for community lottery boards to be reinstated so that they can improve their quality of life with benches, planters, furniture, and wheelchair-accessible gardens.

A letter from Christine Rechico, a board member with Edmonton Meals on Wheels. The group spent time preparing a detailed grant application for lottery board money and now cannot get access to those funds.

Finally, a submission from Alberta Easter Seals that I mentioned to the Minister of Gaming, the listing of 25 of their clients and the specialized equipment that they need and the cost of that, which they can now no longer get from the community lottery boards.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first is from Connie Fogal, who states that "when the G8 meets in Kananaskis, Alberta, Canada in May 2002, it is crucial that as many seniors as possible stand together with the younger generations" in protest.

The second tabling is from Glen and Brenda Niskaaro, who support midwives in this province. Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My first tabling is a letter from Manny Langman, the vice-chair of the St. Albert public library, addressed to the Premier. Mr. Langman is disappointed with the government's decision to eliminate the community lottery board program and is strongly urging the Premier to restore the community lottery boards.

The second tabling is a city of Edmonton document regarding the financing of a new indoor soccer facility in southeast Edmonton. The city is placing this project on hold because of the cancellation of the centennial legacy fund grant program.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

head: Introduction of Guests
(reversion)

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

MR. HUTTON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I stand up today to introduce two important people in my life as an MLA. Sitting in the public gallery today is Betty Saurette, owner of Cut-6 hair salon. She was a very important individual working with me on my campaign and was a strong supporter. Accompanying Betty today is my constituency manager, Judi Kendall, who takes care of all the details in my constituency office. I would ask them both to please rise and accept the warm welcome.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader on a purported point of order.

Point of Order
Use of Quotations in Oral Questions

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise pursuant to our Standing Order 23(h), which clearly states:

A member will be called to order by the Speaker if, in the Speaker's opinion, that member . . .

(h) makes allegations against another member.

Also, I'd like to quote section (i), which goes on to read: or if that member "imputes false or unavowed motives to another member." I believe we saw a bit of that today when the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods rose in question period to question the hon. Minister of Children's Services.

The issue at heart here, Mr. Speaker, was a quote which I believe he used. I don't have the benefit of the Blues, but I recall the use of the word "tragically," and I quickly scanned through here. I think he was referring to page 973 of yesterday's Hansard, wherein the Minister of Children's Services said:

It's entirely possible today that some of those children are already back with their families, and in some cases, tragically, I'm told that we can't locate some of those parents, because those are children than have been taken into protection sometimes because parents have not been available to do the job that parents should be doing.

That is the full quote. Unfortunately, by the way that that member phrased his question, he stopped after a particular comma in the sentence and only read this part of the quote: "It's entirely possible today that some of those children are already back with their families, and in some cases, tragically." Now, if I stop there, it would seem to me that the inference and the usage of "tragically" refers to the fact that some of those children are already back with their families. That's not a tragedy, Mr. Speaker. "Tragically" refers to what follows, and that is the tone in which our hon. Minister of Children's Services used that phrase.

I find it highly, highly disrespectful and a total disregard for this House. In nine years of this hon. member sitting in this House, a member, I might add, for whom I have had the greatest of respect—he is, after all, a former professor of education, a former author of books for children, a former curriculum developer. His credentials in that regard . . .

MS CARLSON: Careful. Careful.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Please, hon. member. I'll give you a chance. This is a highly, highly serious matter. I don't interrupt you, and I don't expect you to interrupt me, Edmonton-Ellerslie, so hear it out.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if I might continue. I don't often get steamed up, as you well know, but on this one I think something has to be done. This particular member does have a lot of respect on both sides of the House, but this particular usage of a misread, almost a misquote, feeds directly into a form of misrepresentation that does impute a false motive onto another member of this House. It's almost an issue of privilege. I won't go there, but I will call for the member, hopefully, to be brought to order.

I want to also cite pages 426 and 427 of House of Commons Procedure and Practice, wherein it states, in this case referring to how question period should run: "Furthermore, a question should not . . . create disorder." This member has, in my view, created some disorder.

One other point of reference, Mr. Speaker. On page 525 of the same book, which is House of Commons Procedure and Practice, it states:

Generally, Members should not quote from their former speeches or from the speeches of their colleagues made during the current session; the rule does not apply to speeches on different stages of a bill. Direct reference is permitted, however, when a Member wishes to complain of something said or to clear up a misrepresentation or make a personal explanation.

That's not how this particular quote was used. In fact, instead of clearing up a misrepresentation, which did not happen, this member has, in my view, created a misrepresentation.

Mr. Speaker, we sit in this House, some of us for many years, yourself being a great example and a fine legacy to your constituents, where you work hard to try and be as accurate in your delivery of your speeches, as carefully researched in your facts as you possibly can be, and we all strive for that. But when a member takes and misquotes or misreads or deliberately stops a quote at a certain point from the Hansard of this House, which is our Holy Grail—we're not talking about some magazine or some newspaper article that may have been misheard or stopped short because of some other reason. We're talking about our own Hansard. The people in Hansard go to great lengths, as we all know, to provide us almost within 24 hours whenever possible with a record of what has been said. Now, the hon. member surely must have checked that quote, and I can't come to any other conclusion than a deliberate stoppage after a particular comma in the middle of a sentence. As a former professor I wonder what he would have done to one of his students if one of his students had dared to pull that kind of trick on him.

I'm sorry to get a bit personal on this, hon. member, but I'm really riled by this, and I would hope, bearing in mind the integrity with which I wish to continue holding this member, he might reconsider, perhaps withdraw, maybe even issue an apology such as it might be to the hon. Minister of Children's Services. No one in this House is working harder to protect those children than this minister, and I know that for a fact.

Mr. Speaker, in the interests of time I will stop there and look forward to your honourable ruling in due regard.

Thank you.

MS CARLSON: Mr. Speaker, as dramatic as that speech was, we do not find that it was a point of order, and in fact it's unfortunate that we can't do points of orders on points of orders, because there was certainly a personal attack flowing through that tirade against the Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mr. Speaker, if we take a look at the exchange and the question that this point of order has been raised on, we will see that on page 973, as the member correctly quoted, there was an exchange yesterday in question period that the Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods took part of his question from today. If you take a look at that exchange, it could be read the way the Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek stated that it was, but in fact there are many different interpretations on a particular sentence stated by this minister yesterday. The sentence being 56 words long, it's very easy for a member, particularly one who has a strong background in English and grammatically correct sentence structure, to take a look at that and read the sentence: "It's entirely possible today that some of those children are already back with their families, and in some cases, tragically . . ." and I respond that the initial response from the minister to this question would indicate that that is exactly how she took the question. She accepted the question as presented and began to answer it in terms of how some are tragic.

AN HON. MEMBER: Shame on you.

MS CARLSON: There is nothing to be ashamed of in answering a question or responding to a question, Mr. Speaker, that talks about the care of children, about plans that aren't filed, and about the subsequent tragic results for these children. There is no point of order here. The minister responded. It was after her colleague sitting beside her handed her Hansard that she decided to change the way she was answering the question. So there is no point of order on this particular question.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader on this point.

MR. HANCOCK: Just on that final point, Mr. Speaker. It's so obnoxious that it must be responded to. That exactly proves the rule. The hon. member misquoted in order to get a response from the hon. member, who may or may not have recollected exactly the words she said yesterday, and it was only upon the Deputy Government House Leader checking Hansard to see the full text of the quote that we were able to prompt the minister to know exactly what was said yesterday. That is exactly the stuff and substance of the point of order. The hon. member totally misled the minister in his question, expecting her not to recollect exactly her words of yesterday, exactly the point of order made by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie on our behalf.

THE SPEAKER: Well. I thought we were actually doing quite well today.

The quotation is the following, and I think it is important to have all hon. members see the question that came from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the Minister of Children's Services referred to some of the 600 children whose case plans were not filed with the courts. She said . . .

And then the hon. member goes on to quote.

"It's entirely possible today that some of those children are already back with their families, and in some cases, tragically." My questions are to the Minister of Children's Services. Does the minister know of cases where children were actually put back in families where tragedy befell them?

2:50

Then the next question from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Again, to the same minister, Mr. Speaker. Does the minister know of children who were put back in homes where tragedy befell them?

Then the hon. minister said:

Mr. Speaker, I have to thank my colleagues so that in the rest of this Assembly you're not misled by excerpts from my statement.

The hon. minister went on to quote from Hansard at page 973.

Then the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods said:

Mr. Speaker, if there's one child that's put into a tragic situation, that's what's wrong with that. My question is to the minister: given that there are alternative actions the department can legally take, why would any child be put back in a risky situation?

There was an intervention with respect to that.

Now, our Standing Order 23 says:

A member will be called to order by the Speaker if, in the Speaker's opinion, that member . . .

(d) refers at length to debates of the current session or reads unnecessarily from Hansard or from any other document, but a member may quote relevant passages for the purposes of a complaint about something said or of a reply to an alleged misrepresentation.

I suppose it's quite subjective, then, to determine whether or not the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods quoted necessarily or unnecessarily with respect to that. It was a brevity of a larger quote, and one hon. member who then rose on the point of order basically said that that gave a different direction to it.

Well, when the chair listened to all of this, the chair had great difficulty trying to determine how anybody could raise a point of order with respect to this. Having heard the impassioned presentation made by the hon. Deputy Government House Leader, one can see that there's obviously a dispute between members. No doubt at all about that.

Now, the chair has not heard from either the person who raised the question or the hon. minister. Others have spoken on their behalf, which is quite okay, but it might have helped with respect to this. I heard the word "personal" as well come in here once or twice during this exchange, and it would seem to me that it's very difficult to find how this is a point of order, regardless of the emotion that one wants to address to it.

In reading the text, it looks rather black and white and dull with respect to anything. There are differences of views, no doubt at all, with respect to this. The chair would have intervened if somebody would have read a four-page quote out of Hansard with respect to this but, in looking at the questions that were raised and the context in which it was put, has great difficulty finding that this is a point of order.

The hon. Opposition House Leader on a purported point of order.

Point of Order
Allegations against Members
Brevity in Question Period

MS CARLSON: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I rise on a point of order against the Minister of Energy in question period, an exchange between him and the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar. I don't have the Blues in front of me, but the intent of the comments made by the Minister of Energy were to attribute decisions made by the federal Liberals to those of us here in the Official Opposition. So I rise under 23(h), where it says, "makes allegations against another member." In fact, he made an allegation against all of the members of the Official Opposition.

This has become a habit of this particular minister, Mr. Speaker. It is uncalled for, I believe, in this Legislature to make those kinds of allegations. He knows clearly that he is talking about the federal Liberals, with which we have little or no association and certainly no responsibility for any decisions made by them. So we would like him called to account for that, including another part of what he stated in terms of the length of his answers to the questions. I refer you to Beauchesne's 417, where it says, "Answers to questions should be as brief as possible, deal with the matter raised and should not provoke debate."

Clearly, when he gives very, very lengthy answers to questions, as he did today, and he accuses us of being responsible for decisions made by federal Liberals and insinuates that those decisions are our responsibility, he is no doubt provoking debate.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: Anyone on this point of order? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands on this point of order.

MR. MASON: Mr. Speaker, given that this is very similar to the point of order I wished to raise, perhaps it would be better if I just respond to . . .

THE SPEAKER: You want to put them both together?

MR. MASON: Yeah.

THE SPEAKER: Good. Go ahead.

MR. MASON: Thank you. I was going to rise on 417 in Beauchesne's as well, Mr. Speaker, because it seems to me that while we're all guilty from time to time of being partisan and we're all guilty from time to time of liking to hear ourselves talk – and I certainly do not think that I am exempt from that by any means; I'm not trying to say that – the minister's answers are extensively lengthy. He seems to go out of his way even when responding to a question from a member of his own caucus to attack the opposition parties, and that, I think, is not in keeping with 417.

Thank you.

MR. SMITH: Mr. Speaker, if I'm being too hard in my comments to the opposition parties, who are elected to serve here, and if they find the rough-and-tumble of parliamentary debate, which I've heard you personally encourage on so many occasions as to the efficacy of each of the members in this House, if it's too much for them, certainly I can try hard to tone down my comments with respect to the opposition parties. The fact that the Liberal opposition party has been in opposition here in Alberta since 1915 and on some occasions there weren't any of them at all – although there are clear and direct links outside of this House, if it's just too much for them, certainly I'll be a little lighter.

With respect, Mr. Speaker, to Beauchesne 417, an important ruling that was written far, far before the period of electrical deregulation, electrical competitive restructuring. It's a complicated market. I feel an obligation, a responsibility to bring these important issues to the House, to each and every member, whether they're rural members, which I think are very, very valuable and the backbone part of this great House, whether they come from the cities and they are served by publicly owned utilities. I just feel that it's literally a moral obligation as well as a ministerial responsibility.

MR. HANCOCK: Just as quickly, Mr. Speaker, on the question of rule 417 and the matter of brevity, brevity is obviously a judgment call which has to be made with respect to the complexity and the completeness of the issue. It's been the common ground in this House that the discussion of electrical deregulation is one of the most complex issues that has been dealt with in the House, and it stands to reason that in answers to questions with respect to electrical deregulation and other issues with respect to electricity, a full and complete answer is appropriate. The question of brevity surely has to be taken in the context of the topic and the answer necessary to complete the question.

THE SPEAKER: Well, hon. members, we'll take these two points of order together. Hon. Minister of Energy, you really didn't help and contribute much to this particular point of order.

I might point out that 23(h) and (i) suggest allegations and imputation of false motives. In the previous ruling with the previous point of order with respect to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods to the hon. minister the suggestion was that there was an imputation of false motives, and then the hon. Minister of Energy getting up and suggesting that the chair would encourage debate during the question period is absolutely erroneous. There is no debate during question period. The purpose of question period is to solicit information about government policy. If the hon. minister would have said that the hon. Speaker certainly would encourage debate amongst members outside of the question period, then the member would have been correct.

So it's very similar to the first ruling that we made today. Hon. minister, you are invited to participate in all of these points at any time you want to; however, it would help . . .

Okay. Brevity seemed to be the thing. The other one was, I guess, political baiting. Perhaps that would be the vernacular that one might use. Well, I guess all hon. members arrived here by the way of a certain colour that they wear with respect to their shirt and/or anything else, and it is absolutely correct that documents all say that we should not have statements that encourage provocative statements and what have you. But, hon. members, if that is the case with respect to that directed to the hon. Minister of Energy, then it can also be said with respect to other hon. members who do it from time to time. So I'm sure that the hon. Minister of Energy would probably even concede himself that perhaps sometimes it is not the best usage of words that he actually comes up with, but he would probably want to reflect on that, and I think I've heard him say that he would reflect on that in the future as well.

Now, on the question of brevity it's really kind of interesting, because here is what the time factor was for the exchange of all the questions in the Assembly today. To the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands it just may seem like it's an eternity when the hon. Minister of Energy is involved in responding to another member with respect to a question, but the reality is that in terms of the lengths of what the questions were to the particular member of Executive Council today, the two questions addressed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands and the responses contained therein both arrived at just around six minutes plus a few seconds. Those were the two longest exchanges. In the situation with respect to the Minister of Energy and the exchange between the Member for St. Albert it was less than five minutes and a half, and then in the exchange for the questions between the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar and the hon. Minister of Energy it was approximately five minutes.

Now, what may appear to be such isn't necessarily such in fact and actuality. However, having said that, if it appears to hon. members in this House – and it seems to be shared by more than just one or two – that the exchange given by the hon. Minister of Energy does seem to lead to almost what seems to be an eternity, the chair would just simply like to quote from Hansard on page 799 on April 18, 2002, and the chair provided this as encouragement to members before:

At the same time that that advice is being provided to the members who direct questions, to those who reply to questions, the intent is to be brief, to as much as possible deal with the matter raised, and certainly not to have controversial or contentious comments in the responses that might lead to disorder.

This is given to all hon. members, not only to the Minister of Energy.

So we will deal with these two latter points of order the same way we dealt with the first one, and we will move on.

head: Orders of the Day

head: Government Bills and Orders

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. After continuing communication on the issues surrounding supply considerations – I should say that those communications have been with the Official Opposition and the third party – I do now seek the unanimous consent of the Assembly to waive Standing Order 58(4) to allow this afternoon's considerations of the estimates of the Department of Community Development to go beyond two hours with the vote on these estimates to take place no later than 5:15 this afternoon as per Standing Order 58(5) or sooner if no one wishes to speak.

Thank you.

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Committee of Supply

[Mr. Tannas in the chair]

THE CHAIR: I'd like to call the Committee of Supply to order.

head: Main Estimates 2002-03

Community Development

THE CHAIR: I'd ask if there are any questions or comments to be offered with respect to these estimates and call on the hon. Minister of Community Development to begin.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Chair. It's indeed a great pleasure for me to rise before you and other members in the Assembly today to present the three-year business plan and the budget estimates for 2002-2003 for the Ministry of Community Development, which I'm very proud to represent. The mandate of this ministry is very diverse, as most members here will know. It covers vital areas of importance to all Albertans, and it also impacts the quality of life of every citizen. Specifically, this ministry is responsible for addressing and helping persons with developmental and other disabilities and protecting those in care from potential abuse; sports and recreation; arts and culture; film classification and artistic development within the film industry; public libraries; volunteer development; human rights, citizenship, and the status of women; historic sites, museums, and cultural facilities; provincial parks and protected areas; planning for our upcoming centennial; liaison avec notre Secretariat Francophone; and the Queen's jubilee, and so on. As well, the ministry includes a number of reporting agencies and foundations. I am proud of the quality of programs and activities undertaken by this ministry, and I'm proud of the individuals who work collaboratively with communities across Alberta to help realize our vision of creating a vibrant province where Albertans experience fair opportunity for the quality of life to which they aspire.

I would like to acknowledge some of these individuals – there are many – and formally thank them and all the volunteers with whom they serve on their respective boards for their sincere efforts. My colleague from the constituency of Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan, who chairs the Premier's Council on the Status of Persons with Disabilities; my colleague from the constituency of Calgary-Montrose, who chairs the Advisory Committee on the Human Rights, Citizenship and Multiculturalism Education Fund; my colleague from the constituency of Bonnyville-Cold Lake, chair of the Francophone Secretariat, notre president; Ms Betty Thompson, chair of the Persons with Developmental Disabilities Provincial Board. As well, Mr. Chair, I'd like to acknowledge the very significant contribution that was made by the previous chair, Mr. Alan Anderton, who unfortunately left us and passed away recently. Mr. Charlach Mackintosh, chief commissioner of the Alberta Human Rights and Citizenship Commission; Dr. Jeffrey Anderson, chair of the Alberta Foundation for the Arts, and Mr. Jock Osler, the previous chair; Mr. Orest Korbitt, chair of the Alberta Sport, Recreation, Parks and Wildlife Foundation; Mr. Brian Calliou, chair of the Alberta Historical Resources Foundation; Mr. Krishan Joshee, chair of the Wild Rose Foundation; and Mrs. Linda Mackenzie, chair of the Government House Foundation. As you can see, we cover a very broad gamut of interests and activities.

Our ministry has been in existence in its current form for one year, and due to these individuals just noted, their dedication and efforts on behalf of all Albertans, we have been able to solidify our programs and work very effectively as a team. I would particularly like to express my appreciation to all of these individuals and in particular to my deputy minister, Dr. Bill Byrne, who is in the gallery today with some of our staff. [some applause] Thank you very much, ladies and gentlemen. I'd ask that they convey my thanks to their staff members who are not here.

I'd like to present a brief overview with respect to the business plan for '02-03 specifically, and I'll follow that up, Mr. Chair, with some budget highlights. Given our diverse mandate, the ministry's mission continues to focus on enhancing and preserving the quality of life for Albertans. Our core businesses are derived from our mandate, and the ministry provides the leadership in advancing a high quality of life for Albertans through these following five core businesses. They are:

1. promoting community development;
2. protecting human rights and promoting fairness and access;
3. supporting the inclusion and participation of Albertans with disabilities and protecting persons in care;
4. preserving, protecting and presenting Alberta's history and culture; and
5. preserving, protecting and presenting Alberta's parks and protected areas.

In support of these core businesses the ministry's five major goals are:

1. To design and deliver programs and services that nurture and support, in collaboration with geographic communities and communities of interest, a high quality of life in Alberta.
2. To design and deliver programs and services that increase understanding and awareness of diversity, foster equality and reduce discrimination so all Albertans have the opportunity to participate in the social, economic and cultural life of the province.
3. To design and deliver individual-based programs that ensure that Albertans who live with a disability have opportunity to participate in the social, economic and cultural life of the province and ensure that adult Albertans in care are protected from abuse.
4. To design and deliver programs and services that preserve, protect, research, present and promote appreciation for Alberta's historical resources and culture, and that provide significant educational, scientific and economic benefits.
5. To manage and maintain Alberta's provincial parks and protected areas to preserve the province's natural heritage and provide opportunities for heritage appreciation, outdoor recreation and heritage tourism.

Mr. Chair, the business plan for 2002-2005 continues in the direction set out last year, and its implementation is guided by the values of commitment, innovation, integrity, respect, a focus on teamwork, and a positive attitude.

Some of the key strategies for the upcoming year include:

- Support the Aboriginal Policy Initiative through the repatriation of ceremonial and sacred objects, through assistance in development of government policy for unregistered burials, and through creating partnerships with Aboriginal people to preserve, protect and present Aboriginal culture.
- Consult with persons with disabilities to identify and eliminate barriers to their participation in the social, economic and cultural life of the province.
- Deliver high-quality compliance and regulatory services in resolving and adjudicating complaints of alleged discrimination.
- Develop new provincial parks and protected areas legislation to consolidate and streamline existing legislation and to provide a sound basis for the management and protection of Alberta's expanded network of provincial parks and protected areas.
- Design and deliver programs to improve the ability of persons with developmental disabilities to participate more fully in all aspects of life in Alberta.
- Collaborate with ministries across government to further achievement of the goals of the government's priority policy initiatives related to health, economic development, children and youth, and aboriginals; support the realization of the government's key administrative initiatives in the areas of information management, human resources, Corporate Service Centre, and the Alberta one-window initiative, and finally

- Coordinate Alberta's 2005 Centennial Initiative, which will provide opportunities for all Albertans to participate in the celebrations and leave a legacy for future generations, in partnership with other ministries, foundations, communities, non-profit organizations, municipalities and the federal government. This will include, in partnership with Alberta Infrastructure, site renovations to the new home of the Provincial Archives of Alberta and the establishment of the new educational wing at the Royal Tyrrell Museum in Drumheller.

On the issue of performance measures I would like to say that this ministry assesses its performance in achieving the goals of each core business through a solid range of performance measures. These measures are grouped under the overall categories of participation, satisfaction, quality of life, and economic impact to assist us in determining whether our mission, "to enhance and preserve the quality of life for Albertans," is being achieved. Given the transfer of responsibility for preserving, protecting, and presenting Alberta's provincial parks and protected areas to Community Development last year, a new measure to gauge visitors' satisfaction with their experiences at provincial parks and recreation areas was developed for the 2002-2003 fiscal year. Another new measure introduced this cycle focuses on the PDD program, persons with developmental disabilities, and it addresses the satisfaction of families or guardians of individuals receiving benefits. As well, "historical resources" was added to the measure addressing Albertans' perception of Community Development programs that contribute to the overall quality of life.

We will strive to meet or exceed our targets for the upcoming cycle. We will further strive to achieve excellence in the delivery of our programs, whether they are delivered directly through the ministry or in collaboration with our partners and stakeholders across the province.

With respect to ministry budget highlights, Mr. Chair, I want to briefly say that having provided a brief overview of some of the key components of the business plan, I will turn the latter part of my attention here specifically to the ministry budget for '02-03. The ministry's budget for the incoming year, which started a month ago, demonstrates a managed approach to budgeting at a time of global economic uncertainty while addressing ministry pressure points. The operating budget for '02-03 is approximately $583 million, a net increase of approximately $22 million from the fiscal year budget for 2001-2002.

I will now address some of the specific budgetary highlights. To begin with, the operating budget of the persons with developmental disabilities program, PDD, will increase by approximately $30 million in Budget '02, up to an all-time high of $407 million. In a time of fiscal restraint this increase demonstrates our government's commitment to sustain this very important program, which serves some of Alberta's most vulnerable citizens. The increased funding will enable the implementation of these selected strategic directions from the Building Better Bridges final report on programs and services in support of persons with developmental disabilities, which, I'm proud to tell you, I authored. Also, Mr. Chair, support specifically through this increase will be used primarily to provide for growth in the number of PDD recipients and to address wage increases to approximately 10,000 employees in and amongst our contracted community agencies. It's very good news during this very difficult budget time. This wage increase of course will enable community agencies to recruit and retain quality staff. This program serves approximately 8,000 adult Albertans and their families or guardians. It provides support for community living, employment, community access, and specialized supports aimed at enabling inclusion of persons with developmental disabilities into the community.

Approximately $2.5 million in funding will be provided to the Alberta brain injury initiative. That's an increase of $1 million from the amount budgeted last year. This will enable the continued development and implementation of this important and, should I say, long-awaited initiative. A provincial network of support and outreach services to assist individuals with acquired brain injury will continue to be developed and include contracted regional co-ordinators to work with local communities to develop a province-wide system of community-based resources.

With respect to library boards, operating grants to Alberta's 234 library boards and seven regional systems will increase by $537,000 to a total of $17.2 million. In actual fact, the total increase will more than likely be closer to about $700,000 when we administer the new population counts. This funding increase to libraries is to keep pace with our growing population. Our public libraries play an essential role in providing a variety of information services to all Albertans, and the ministry will continue to be a key partner in supporting the delivery of public library services across the province.

Albertans are very proud of their diverse recreational, educational, social, cultural, and heritage programs and activities and recognize their contribution to the outstanding quality of life we are fortunate to enjoy. Approximately $53 million will be spent in support of provincial, regional, and community-based organizations and individuals through Community Development's five lottery-funded agencies. The breakdown, Mr. Chair, for all members, who are interested I'm sure, will be as follows.

First, the Alberta Foundation for the Arts will have an operating budget of approximately $21.4 million to assist individual artists and arts organizations in the visual, performing, and literary arts and cultural industries. As part of this allocation Community Development is continuing its commitment to the Alberta film development program by providing $5 million in base funding for the '02-03 fiscal year. This program has sparked outstanding growth in Alberta's film industry, supporting over 100 productions ranging from the new CBC drama series Tom Stone to the Genie award-winning motion picture The War Bride. I want to thank my hon. colleague from Airdrie-Rocky View for her assistance in this regard.

The Alberta Sport, Recreation, Parks and Wildlife Foundation will have an operating budget of approximately $16.87 million to support the development of recreation, sport, and parks and wildlife activities by providing assistance to almost 100 provincial recreation and sports organizations. These funds are also used to help sponsor major games and to support the development of active lifestyles.

The Wild Rose Foundation will have an operating budget of approximately $7.3 million to support nonprofit community service organizations that promote the use of volunteers and foster charitable, philanthropic, or humanitarian acts.

The Alberta Historical Resources Foundation will have an operating budget of approximately $6.1 million to support individuals, community-based organizations, and provincewide heritage agencies involved in a broad range of heritage preservation activities ranging from building restoration to the publication of local histories.

The human rights, citizenship, and multiculturalism education fund will have an operating budget of approximately $1.2 million to provide financial assistance to Alberta community organizations undertaking human rights and diversity initiatives that lead to change as well as supporting the educational work of the Alberta Human Rights and Citizenship Commission.

La communaute Francophone de l'Alberta enrichit notre tissu culturel, et je me rejouis de la conclusion en mars d'une nouvelle entente federale/provinciale de trois ans permettant au ministere de s'engager d'avantage dans le soutien des activites du developpement communautaire de ces groupes. Ce programme se compose d'une contribution du gouvernement federal de beaucoup d'argent mis a la disposition des associations communautaires Francophones selon un ensemble de priorites etablies localement afin de promouvoir la culture Francophone dans notre province. And we're very proud of that.

The translation, more or less, Mr. Chairman, would be that the Francophone community in Alberta enriches our cultural fabric, and I'm pleased that a new three-year federal/provincial agreement was concluded in March, a month ago, to enable this ministry to further support our groups' community development activities. It's a program that consists of a federal contribution of approximately a quarter million dollars made available to Francophone community groups in accordance with a set of priorities established locally to further Francophone culture in the province. There you have it.

These foundations all carry out work that enhances Albertans' quality of life and deserve our support. If provincial revenue targets are met this year, plans are to increase funding for these worthy programs in 2003-2004.

The centennial legacies grant program I will comment on briefly. As you know, it's been deferred, and there may be . . .

THE CHAIR: Hon. minister, we apparently have a point of order. Hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, your point of order.

Point of Order

Translation of Remarks in French

MS CARLSON: Mr. Chairman, I'm rising on a point of order. In Standing Orders it's been the tradition of this Assembly, when we receive information in a language other than English, to have a written translation in front of us so that we can follow it. Now, I know that the minister loosely translated off the page, but it did not sound exact to me, and I would like to have the documentation in front of me to review.

THE CHAIR: The hon. minister on the point of order.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Chairman, and thank you, hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie. I do have the document here. I asked for it earlier, and I just received it now, so I'll get it photocopied and ensure that all members receive it. If I could get some assistance from a page, please. Could we please have this page photocopied and presented to all members as a translation of what was said. Thank you.

Debate Continued

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Mr. Chairman, I thought you were signaling me that time was over. I didn't realize it was a point of order. So in the three minutes that I have left, I would just say that the centennial legacies grant program, which provided funding for the construction or renovation of major publicly accessible facilities by municipalities and nonprofit groups, was unfortunately deferred on October 18, 2001. The program will continue to be on hold, unfortunately, until the province's financial situation improves and new provincial moneys are allocated. Nonetheless, in collaboration with Alberta Infrastructure two key capital projects will continue in 2002-2003. The renovation of the new home of the Provincial Archives in Edmonton is one, and the other will be the educational wing project which is being constructed at the Royal Tyrrell Museum in Drumheller.

With respect to FTEs and staff reductions, may I just say that in our efforts to balance our budget and ensure the continuation of priority programs, it was necessary to undertake a net reduction of 83 FTEs, or full-time equivalents, in the '02-03 budget. Of these reductions, the majority are expected to be achieved through attrition and administrative streamlining.

In conclusion and in summary, I want to assure you that we will strive for excellence as we implement our business plan over the coming year and that we will continue to be responsive to our clients' and stakeholders' needs as we jointly focus on enhancing and preserving the quality of life for Albertans.

Mr. Chair, this will conclude my formal remarks, and I would be pleased to entertain questions. May I just say to those people who will be asking questions or presenting their comments or observations that if the comments are of a generic or a broad nature, then we'll try and address them as best we can here right now. If they're of a more detailed, more specific nature, then I will undertake to provide answers in writing. It would be very helpful, to make sure we understand the questions very specifically, if when questions are being asked, the questioners could cite the page in the estimates and the line item if it's so applicable.

With that, Mr. Chair, I see that my time is up. I will relinquish the floor to other speakers. Thank you.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'm glad to be able to get a chance to start off the debate and questioning on the estimates, the budget, for the Department of Community Development today. We have an agreement with the minister. I will do part 1. I'm followed by the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie briefly, and then I'll return to do part 2. Then the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie will speak on parks, followed by the Member for Edmonton-Glengarry speaking on PDD.

We all know that this is probably the most multifaceted department that exists in government today. I think there are 30 some odd different components to this one ministry. It is my favourite ministry because this is the one I know the best. It's the one I once worked for as a STEP student, a university student, many years ago, in 1976 I think, in what was then Alberta Culture. The one thing I have to say that I don't miss is writing grant proposals, a truly awful job and one that everybody that is now working in the arts or sports or volunteerism, anybody in the NGO sector, is going to have to get really good at. I don't miss it at all, because it's a very difficult job.

I'd like to start by first looking at page 106, which is the breakdown for the Alberta Foundation for the Arts statement of operations. I'd like to raise just a couple of issues under this. No surprise to the minister that I'll be raising the point yet again that there has been no increase in funding for the arts in Alberta under this budget. The minister very carefully walked through the total amounts of money being designated to each foundation, and as I went along and checked with him, in most cases there's been no change. There hasn't been a change in many of those areas for many, many, many years. Indeed, there is no change in the funding for the arts. It's remained at $16.4 million since before 1990. We have had the addition of $5 million for the film fund, that's been added into that within the last couple of years, which brings it up to $21.4 million.

We continue to have demand upon the Alberta Foundation for the Arts that's more than it can meet. There is, in fact, still a funding formula in place, but the maximum amounts that are supposedly achievable under the granting formula are never reached by organizations. I spoke to the artistic director at Latitude 53, which is an alternative visual art company here in Edmonton, and he was able to give me some very specific examples which I'll bring into the debate to enlighten everyone today. For example, Latitude 53 qualifies for a grant in the amount of $61,896 according to the AFA formula, but they only received $40,549 in the most recent round of funding. It should qualify for funding equal to 30 percent of its total community support, but it is in fact only receiving somewhere between 14 and 22 percent of what it is eligible for.

At a certain point I think the formulas become redundant because there is no attachment to reality there and there hasn't been for some time. I know that the AFA has tried a number of different funding formulas and allocations. They went about and did a blueprint a couple of years ago, that they're trying to implement. Again, if there's not going to be the money there to achieve any of this, at times I wonder why we're making anybody jump through all the hoops. The money's not there and hasn't been, and there's no commitment from this government to increase it that I can see coming. I had hopes that when we had this particular individual installed as the minister, there might be an improvement there, but we're now into his second budget, and I don't see it. So there's disappointment there.

The second issue around the arts that's been raised with me is the one grant per organization rule. Now, some people are very quick to jump up and say: oh, that's about double-dipping; it's about double-dipping. No, it isn't. I've just talked about how we can't even come anywhere near to granting the amount of money that these organizations are eligible for. The department itself came up with project grant funding and said: "Here's another way that you can get money. If you have a onetime only or special project, you can apply to us for money. Look, there's another grant over here that's called CFEP. If you need help with a facility, to renovate or to build something new, then you can get money from CFEP." It's the government itself that came up with all these different ideas about how to augment what these arts groups were in fact getting, so don't turn around and tell me: double-dipping. This was all to augment what these groups were trying to do.

The truth is that now they can't even do that. If they want to get a project grant, then that's all they can get. They can't get operational funding. So what's the result been? No special projects, nothing moving forward, nothing enhancing what's going on because it would jeopardize their operational funding to do that. The granting and funds have been impacted not only by zero increases but also by a larger pool of applicants. That of course is resulting in less and less money available for each applicant. Smaller pieces of the same pie.

One of the issues being raised in discussions with Latitude 53 is the artist in residence program. There's a suggestion that perhaps the resources to pay for this program should be coming out of Learning instead of coming out of Community Development because it is about teaching and it's about working with students and exposing students to artistic and creative endeavours. I spoke at length with the Minister of Human Resources and Employment about an employment training program that they're looking at, working in the cultural sector. Maybe there's something else that could be considered there. I'm interested in that minister's reaction to this. So a question as well to the Minister of Learning: are they contemplating doing anything to alleviate the financial strain that's experienced in the art field by picking up some of the funding obligations here?

I know that some people feel quite strongly that the AFA has twisted itself in knots and is administratively nonfunctional at this point. I can't comment on that. I don't know enough about it, but certainly that's what I hear from members of the community.

One of the issues around peer adjudication – and it's something I've always been really proud about in Alberta – is that we did have peer juries and peer adjudication to decide on grants so that we had people with some idea of whether a given artistic company had merit, whether they had experience, whether there's somebody that should be considered, and indeed whether their proposals should be considered. I'm very concerned when I hear back from some artists that they've been told with a wink and a nudge that the applications are being held up by bureaucrats somewhere in the line. I guess what I should do is speak outside of the Assembly to the minister on where that seems to be raised for me, but I'll put it on the record here.

Now, the film fund is still sitting at $5 million. I know that the minister was recently at the AMPIA awards. I'm unable to track back and confirm a quote, but there was something about a 20 percent increase there but that that would have to be negotiated. I'm not sure what that was about, so I might as well ask the minister if there's any more money coming into that fund or any expectation or even any desire to have more money go into that fund.

I'd like to know where we are with the PASOs. They've now been in place for more than five years. What's the review on those? That's the provincial arts service organization, and there are about five of them. I'd like to know: has that been reviewed? Is there any monitoring there, any evaluation of whether they're successful or not? Are they serving the arts community, or do they just serve the government?

Moving on, what exactly is arts development? On page 106 under expenses under programs it says: artist development, $1.331 million. What exactly is that? I know that there's a new program that's been showing up, and I thought it said arts development. This one looks like it says artist development. I'm wondering if the minister could comment on that, please.

I'm going to move on generally to talk about federal initiatives because it's somewhat connected to this. The federal government has been putting a good deal of money into the cultural sector, including cultural facilities. They have announced a big push into the arts sector for historical preservation and cultural facilities. I'm wondering: what has the province been able to do to work with the federal government on these programs? I think there's about $80 million to be had through the cultural facilities programs, matching funds from Alberta. Nowhere in this budget do I see any matching funds. So is Alberta now going to lose out on a potential $80 million coming from the feds because we can't step up to the plate with our matching dollars? That's a lot of money to kiss goodbye to in this province, particularly when it would help us with some of our aging cultural facilities or with some of the facilities that we don't in fact have. We're not very good on the new spaces that have more of a multipurpose use. I can also think of some new theatre spaces that we were looking at. Catalyst Theatre in Edmonton has been agitating for some time. As well, the Pleiades Theatre in Calgary is working to move into the Calgary Tower and do major renovations to a space there. All of these could be eligible for this money from the feds, but the province has to step up to the plate here.

As well, there has been some suggestion that the CFEP program having a cap on it of $125,000 is limiting us, again with specific reference to the federal program as well as other programs, when that's all that can be leveraged out of that. Has the minister considered either taking the cap off per grant or looking at exceptional circumstances if necessary? That's something I'd like to suggest.

I have approached the minister about the arts' Habitat project. In fact, I think they were referred to the CFEP program, who then came back and said: nope, sorry; you don't qualify. You know, once again, Mr. Minister, here is a project that could really carry us forward. It's an excellent project. It benefits the arts. It benefits the cultural workers in the arts. They've worked a long time to put all the pieces together, and with the loss of the community lottery boards where they had an agreement – they were going to move forward with funding there. They've lost that. This is the last day, the 30th of April. CFEP is what was suggested by the Premier was going to solve everybody's problems. CFEP said: no, can't help you; you're not eligible. They're not willing to change the eligibility to include them. So are we just going to dump this program, then? This is also a housing program. So I'm looking for leadership from the minister on that.

Going to pages 105 and 107, we are looking at the historical resources fund and the Alberta Historical Resources Foundation. The Rossdale power plant: do we have any updates there? Any suggestions, any studies that have been done, feasibility studies looking at renovations into an art gallery, a museum, a cultural facility? Is anything being contemplated? We know we have – and I tabled in the House at the time a series of web sites that were showing renovated power plants that were in the centre of cities that had been turned into other things. The biggest example of that is in London. Is it the Tate? I think it was the Tate. They turned the power plant into the new version of the Tate. I hope I've got the right name there. I'm wondering whether anything has been anticipated or any studies done on that here?

I'm also wondering: what is the status of the Cochrane Ranche? Every now and then I hear about this one. The Western Heritage Centre raises its big head. There's now a discussion I hear about it becoming a casino, so I'm wondering if the government is going to get involved in that or what their particular ownership is or their responsibility to this. Can they turn it over to become a casino? Would the government be involved in then taking revenue off the casino in the same way that they do from the slots and VLTs or gaming machines in other casino locations? Just what's the deal there?

The Jubilee auditoria. Both of them I think are going to be closed for significant renovations. That is seriously affecting some companies for whom that is the only performance space, and I'm talking particularly about the Alberta Ballet and the Opera. There is no other space they can go to. The Winspear in Edmonton, for example, does not accommodate what they need. I don't know where these folks are supposed to go, and we're looking at an entire season. So do we just tell Alberta Ballet and the Edmonton Opera, "Sorry; you're not producing a season while the Jubilee auditorium is shut down"? What are they supposed to do for their finances there? I mean, they exist partly because that building was available. Now the space is taken away from them. What accommodation has been made for these groups to move somewhere else? Has the department offered them anything? What's being contemplated here? Or are these guys just told to go and find someplace else? If they can't, then what? You know, how are we going to deal with the finances of the Edmonton Opera, who can't produce a season, or Alberta Ballet, who can only do half a season, nothing in Edmonton? Those are severe restrictions for them.

I'm moving to libraries, page 91, sections 2.1.5 and 2.2.2. There has finally been an increase. Yay. I am very happy that I was able to support the libraries and the Alberta Library Trustees Association in their efforts to lobby and advocate for increased funds and particularly to have the funds updated to be attached to a per capita that has meaning in this day and age.

Now, there are still some additional issues that I have. In fact, the issue around the Supernet that I used to bring up all the time that the government could never answer for me – I had a visit from the people that are putting the Supernet together, and they were able to answer the question for me. In fact, the wires do come through the wall. They go to a router in the basement. But that still does raise the question for libraries in particular I think of additional money to upgrade their computers and to upgrade their software to be able to handle the capacity and what's possible with the fibre optics in the Supernet. Again, it doesn't help them very much if they now have the wires hooked into the router in the basement but they are still trying to run the Apple IIs upstairs, that can't even connect to the Internet. So what's contemplated there by way of assistance for them?

If there's going to be no help coming, then let's hear that, and then they can either figure out to say, "No, thanks; don't even bring it through the wall" or "Gee, I guess we're going to have to not open part of this building so we can afford to do it." You know, give them some realistic answers so that they know how to plan for the future. I think that's what would be most helpful here.

The minister, in responding to a question that I asked in question period on April 23 in reference to library funding, said that he was providing information on "long-range and future plans" for libraries. I'm wondering if he can expand on that. I mean, I've heard and I can see here that there is a minor increase in money, not a lot. This year's budget is $17,204,000, but the comparable in the budget last year was $16,667,000, and the actuals were $16,493,000. So, you know, we're not talking about a lot of money here. They're getting about a million dollars more. I don't know how that's going to divide up between all the possible libraries in the whole province. What are they going to end up with? About a hundred and fifty bucks each? I don't know how that's really going to allow them to get up to speed and get up to date on everything. Yeah, when I really look at this, this isn't so great. What's the ticker tape parade for? What are the long-range and future plans that are being considered here? Because that's not a substantial increase in money. We're talking what? A million bucks? Less than a million bucks. Like, big deal.

The other thing that came up is that the libraries were applying to their local community lottery boards for a number of ancillary costs. Because they were being underfunded by the government, they looked other places for additional funding to pay for shelving and their Internet costs and some other things like that. Now the community lottery boards are gone. They didn't get that much more money here. So how are they supposed to be moving onward? I guess that's part of these long-range and future plans the minister will tell me about. Yeah, I'm wondering if the increase is even more than what they've potentially lost through community lottery board grants.

The same thing with CFEP. [Ms Blakeman's speaking time expired] Oh, part 1 just went by in a flash. Thanks very much.

THE CHAIR: Before I recognize the next speaker, I wonder if we could revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests

(reversion)

THE CHAIR: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

MRS. JABLONSKI: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It is my very great pleasure to rise in the House today to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly a very special little angel in my life. She loves Barney, Elmo, and Snuffleupagus. She dances to Baby Beluga and sings along with Sharon, Lois, and Bram. She brings sunshine and joy to our lives and charms everyone with her smile and her hugs. In the members' gallery with her very proud father, Brendan Curson, is my 2-year-old granddaughter Taiya Anne Jablonski. I'd ask that Taiya and Brendan rise to receive the warm welcome of the House.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. You could maybe hold up signs for this afternoon that would save your voice.

AN HON. MEMBER: Tough act to follow.

MS CARLSON: That's right.

Mr. Chairman, I'm happy to be able to start the questions and discussions I have on these particular estimates, the Community Development estimates. We've seen a change here from prior years to where parks and protected areas are now included in this ministry. I have a specific question that I would like the minister to address in writing and in some detail if he could.

To give some background, a few years ago in a reorganization Alberta park rangers were joined up with conservation officers, and all became conservation officers in this province. As it is through most of North America, conservation officers are the policemen for the fish and wildlife resources. Another reorganization just happened, and park rangers have ended up back looking after parks. My concern, Mr. Chairman, is that the Minister of Community Development is looking after these parks people now and has approached the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development that he wants the park rangers to keep the name conservation officers, and the original conservation officers will now become fish and wildlife officers.

Mr. Chairman, this is crazy. Besides it being a tremendous expense to make this change, it just doesn't make any sense to many people and would be extremely confusing to everyone. I have had people call me on this and say that this is the biggest lunacy they've seen in this particular organization and that they don't want it to be done. It does not conform with any of the North American standards. It is just unbelievable that we could be going forward with this particular idea or even the thought of it.

So I would like the minister to respond. I will let him know in advance that I will be forwarding this to many hundreds of people across this province because they are eagerly awaiting the minister's response.

Thank you.

3:50

THE CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you so much. Okay. Where I'd like to go next is human rights. It's page 92. I'm wondering what involvement Community Development has in the new immigrant nominee program that's being spearheaded by Economic Development. I'm sure that the minister has kept involved with this new program, but I'm wondering how we stay on top of the human rights implications there and in particular what support these immigrants could expect to be put in place as they adapt to a new environment and culture. What work is being done to help them understand what the laws are in this country, what the human rights are, and what the expectations and the rights and obligations are in Alberta and Canada? So I'm interested to know what plans the Human Rights Commission is bringing in to knit with the work that is being done by the Minister of Economic Development.

Part of that of course is access to health care, which is a particularly bewildering experience if you've ever been in another country or somewhere where you don't speak the language and either you're not feeling well or a family member is not feeling well. There are few things more terrifying than being unable to explain what's wrong. Someone the other day, a woman whose first language is French, said to me: you know, when I hurt, I hurt in French. It's really frustrating that even here in Alberta when she goes to a hospital, she's hurting in French, and she may well have hospital staff that aren't hearing her, of course, and may not speak the language. It's an awful experience for us traveling. Imagine what – we want to encourage these economic immigrants to come here to do work for us, as the Economic Development minister puts it. What are we doing to make sure that they're able to access health care and understand how the system works and be able to walk through it?

The minister will know of my support for the program for multicultural health brokers. Now, that is a different program but one related to what I am talking about here. I mean, they are specifically going into communities, mostly looking to draw out the women of the families but, to be fair, for everyone in the family, and helping them to work their way through the health system and to know what's available for them and to make sure that they all stay healthy. I'm wondering if the minister has done any work on whether we are reducing the barriers for new Canadians who are trying to access health care here. What kind of work is the Human Rights Commission doing?

I'm also interested in what challenges the Human Rights Commission has, particularly their public education arm. What challenges are they facing since September 11? Has there been an increase in any reporting or inquiries in any way?

I'd now like to go and do a recap on just where we are with facts and figures. I'm interested in the number of cases that were opened I guess in the last fiscal year, but what's expected to be opened, then, in this fiscal year? So I'd like to see the numbers for last year and what's anticipated or forecast by the Human Rights Commission to be the cases for this year, also by type of discrimination. What did we have last year? The number of complaints for gender, race, colour, physical disability, age, ancestry, place of origin, marital status, religious beliefs, mental disability, family status, source of income, sexual orientation. This is always an interesting analysis, to see what the complaints were before and what we're anticipating those complaints to be.

I'd also like to know how many human rights panels we had in the last year and then how many you're expecting you can extrapolate for in this year. How many of those were referred by the director of the human rights secretariat? How many were referred after an appeal to the chief commissioner?

I'm also interested in the kinds of advice and recommendations that have been provided to the department and to the minister. There is an insistence that this Human Rights Commission is an arm's-length commission, and therefore if the advice is provided to the minister and the department, then one presumes it can be provided to all of us. I'm interested in what that advice has been. I'm also interested in what information or advice has been provided by the commission to deal with making Alberta legislation more Charter-proof. Certainly that continues to come up. We continue to get cases in the courts almost weekly that are challenging our legislation. What's anticipated? What kind of equal protection are we offering to all Albertans through suggested changes to legislation?

Now, I looked back in some other notes just to sort of check where we are, and I noticed that the previous critic for human rights had asked about a cultural diversity project that I think was coming out of Calgary. You can't ever find anything in these budgets that are presented. They don't break down far enough to find out whether such projects exist anymore. So I have to ask whether that project is still receiving funding. If so, how much? What are its goals, its objectives, its business plan? What kind of monitoring has been done? What sort of evaluation and review exists for it? Has it been successful in meeting its goals? So if I could get a really clear breakdown on that, please.

What has the minister done to bring forward the Human Rights, Citizenship and Multiculturalism Act, to open up that legislation and write in sexual orientation? We had the courts read it in for us or put it in for us. But if someone moves to this province from somewhere else, I still get them calling me up and going: "Well, I thought this was covered. How come when I read the legislation it's not there?" You know, it's not as though someone puts a sticky note on it as you walk out the door saying "Oh, by the way, you're supposed to read these extra two words into it." It's just not there, and when will the minister be putting it there? I think it's important, when people pick up legislation or when they read it on-line, that they're able to understand what it all means and what it all entails, and that is not the case now. That ruling came down to us – what? – four years ago now, and we still haven't managed to actually bring the legislation up to date. That's a bit of foot-dragging that's really quite unacceptable. So those are the sort of factual issues under the Human Rights Commission.

Now, the community lottery boards. I have spoken a lot in the Assembly about the community lottery boards and the elimination of them. As a matter of fact, I'm struggling now in the estimates book to even find where they were referred to. In going back and forth, I can't even find where they were. What is the long-range plan here? As I said, there were programs that were in place through the lottery foundations, like the Alberta Sport, Recreation, Parks and Wildlife or the Wild Rose or the Historical Resources or the Alberta Foundation for the Arts, that granted operating funds to various groups to provide services for Albertans. As another way of doing this and in direct response to the communities' unwelcome feelings about the video lottery terminals and having them removed from their communities, we had the community lottery boards put in place. Although at the time I disagreed with how helpful those boards were going to be to the arts community because I felt that should come through a peer jury system and should be centralized or rather that the money should just be put in the Alberta Foundation for the Arts, in fact as far as the rural communities in particular have shown, the local decision-making was highly, highly prized. That has now been taken away, and anything that has been offered in this Assembly by the Premier or the Minister of Gaming or indeed even by the Minister of Community Development has not picked up on that element of localized decision-making.

Did it not please the government? Can we ever expect to see a program with local decision-making around disbursement of money again, or has that idea come and the government didn't like it and it's gone? Please let us know that, because many, many, many people are still trying to get these lottery boards reinstated and have every expectation and hope that they will be reinstated. This is a sector where people work hard enough, and they work hard to raise money so that they can spend what little is left of their time to actually do what they wanted to do, whether that's create art or coach softball or help volunteer with the Boys and Girls Clubs. So I really don't want to see these groups wasting time if the government is never going to return to this.

Now, the Treasurer, to be fair, did say that they weren't going to return to it, and I guess my question is: why? This was a program that seemed to work. I'll tell you that taking a step back, it just looks like the program was put in place in response to a crisis around communities wanting VLTs out. The community lottery board program was put in to quell the crisis. The crisis has passed, and now the whole program is gone, and people cannot figure out why.

Nasty rumours start to rise to the surface. You know, is it because the decision was locally based and therefore there was no cheque for our provincial politician to hand out? I'm not making this up. This is what comes to me, and you've all received the letter saying that. People want to know why, and they have not ever heard the answer from this government about why those community lottery boards were taken away.

We've actually heard many answers. We've heard that something had to be cut from the Department of Gaming, and it was a low priority for the government, so that's what got cut. We've heard that if there's ever any money, well, it's not going to go back into those lottery boards again. But we don't really understand why they disappeared. How were they not serving? The community certainly feels that the boards were serving them. What is it about those community lottery boards that the government doesn't feel they were serving the government? You know, I've asked a lot of questions in question period over the last five weeks. I've tabled hundreds of letters now, I'm sure, from various groups making suggestions and asking for the lottery boards to be reinstated, and we're all still waiting for answers. I know there's agitation in the city of Edmonton from a number of groups that are coming together in a coalition to continue to work on this.

Ultimately, the bottom line is – and we're talking money here. There's $50 million that is not going into the communities in Alberta right now. Fifty million bucks got cut, and that's directly related to what we're debating here this afternoon. That's directly related to the groups that get funding through Community Development, because these are sports groups and amateur sports groups and recreation groups, Big Brothers, Big Sisters. Volunteer organizations were getting money through the Wild Rose Foundation, arts and cultural organizations, historical sites. You know, they all got that money cut from them. It was money that was augmenting what was being done under the minister's department. So he really had the $50 million taken out of his ministry more than anything else.

Certainly when I went to the rally at the city of Edmonton, the city hall there, one person was very clear and got up and just said: this is how much money is being taken out of our sector. It was something like $11 million that had gone into that particular area over the three years that we'd had the money dispensed from the community lottery boards. That's a lot of money to come out of a sector with no sign of it ever going back in. So what did these groups do that they deserved that kind of punishment, that kind of kick in the head? How did they displease this government so badly that they would take a $50 million hit? We haven't had any answers, Mr. Minister, and we'd sure like to have them.

I guess we're also looking for confirmation that the minister – you know, what kind of stance did the minister take when this came up in caucus? Was he defending the money that was augmenting the groups under his portfolio? In fact, it was under his portfolio that he lost the money, but the decision seems to have been made by the Minister of Gaming.

I think there's also a question that's now been made clear to a number of volunteer based organizations in Alberta: how much respect and value does the government have for the work that they're doing? I'm starting to hear for the first time, although I've long advocated it, groups saying: "You know what? We're thinking about withdrawing our services, period. Why are we all knocking ourselves out to provide this? This," whatever they're doing, "is a service that used to be provided by the government. They wouldn't do it, so we took it on in the community, and we got the funding to do it but not all the funding to do it. So then we have to go out and raise money to augment a service that used to be offered by the government. Why are we doing this? We're knocking ourselves out here. Maybe we should just stop." I would be interested to see if anybody actually follows through. I doubt it, but they may.

The Alberta NHL teams initiative – that's on page 91, line 2.2.4 – refers to an outgoing expense of $4.834 million for the Alberta NHL teams initiative. Now, I'm interested in what's happening with the accounting in this department, because it used to be that what we saw here was essentially net of any lottery funds. Any expenses for gaming proceeds were netted out before we saw the money in here. So why am I seeing an expense item now for these NHL teams? Has the accounting been changed here? The other place it shows up is in the Gaming budget under the bingos. Once again there's an expense line going out that we just think: where did this come from?

So I'm interested in why there's no corresponding revenue line coming in that corresponds to that. There's just an expense line going out. I know that the government was going to take off its administration fee. Where does that administration fee amount of money turn up, or is it rolled up inside this $4 million? If the minister could let us know how much the department, whether it's his department or Gaming or the general revenue, expects to make from their administration fee on administering this lotto, that would be helpful.

I'm also wondering what kind of accounting will be used overall for this new item. What kind of policy has the government developed to show this? What sort of monitoring and evaluation is in place? How often will it be monitored? When will it be revisited? How is the integrity of it all ensured? [interjection] I'm still talking about the lottery tickets, page 91, 2.2.4, Alberta NHL teams initiative.

I'm wondering actually how this turns up as a program here. It turns up as an expense, but where exactly is this program in terms of a line item in the budget? Is this the whole project unto itself, or is it part of something else? I mean, it's showing up under Community Services, and it's just showing up by itself. So what's the program? Is there anything else that goes with it? Why is this just showing up here? I guess I'm looking for – you know, when you have to go and account to the Auditor General, how are you going to describe this program and describe the monitoring and evaluation of it?

Funding for women appears on page 110. Now, the minister and I have had a couple of conversations about funding for women. I know it sounds facetious, but I'm dead serious about this. In fact, I look at our conversation last year around this, and in a written response I got quite a long explanation of what's being done. Essentially that looks to me like it's coming out in three categories: advising the minister, funding programs through the multiculturalism and human rights fund, and handing out of material. But I don't get a sense as I read through what the minister says is being offered . . . [Ms Blakeman's speaking time expired] I'll come back for part 3.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm happy to be back to respond to the Community Development estimates. Now I will go through some of the issues that we have in more detail.

I'd like to start in program 6, parks and protected areas, 6.0.1. We see some reduction in the program support budget there, Mr. Chairman. It's gone from $315,000 to $215,000. Now, in comparison to many other budgets in this government, those are paltry dollars and paltry changes, but they certainly are very important to the people who see protecting our parks as really an essential service of the government, and particularly in program 6 . . . [interjection] I don't have the page in front of me. You can give me the information later. Program 6.0.1. It's the program support budget.

Program 6.0.2. How will parks policy and planning be affected by the reduction in budget from $3.492 million to $3.442 million, particularly in a year when we see that there are going to be some expenditures that are out of the ordinary, Mr. Chairman, and particularly I refer to proposed legislation and the work that the minister states in his business plan he'll be doing on the G-8 summit. Definitely reductions.

This is an area where dollars are very tight anyway and have been for a long time. This department relies heavily on volunteers to support the park system throughout this province and just recently acknowledged many of those volunteers with recognition during Volunteer Week, which was a good thing. But it's a tight area in terms of money and support, and we're seeing what looks like a fairly significant reduction in the budget. We want to know how planning is going to be affected and how services are going to be affected in that, particularly when we see money that's going to be pulled out in some of the areas.

Program 6.0.3. I'd like to know what capital projects were paid for from the $2.961 million spent under parks operations in 2001-2002. If we could have a detailed list of that and the dollars spent beside that list and the projections that you see in the three- to five-year range on that, that would also be very helpful to us.

How will the 57 percent reduction in the capital projects budget affect park attendance? We've had this discussion here in this Legislature many times, and we've had the minister stand up and say that it really doesn't affect attendance, that attendance is generally going up, but we see that that's not exactly true. There have been some fluctuations. There has been a huge outpouring of concern about quality of parks, particularly as it relates to infrastructure and particularly as it relates to upgrading facilities. So if the minister could comment on that.

Probably the second biggest outcry I've ever had on environmental issues in this province was when this government shut down the little roadside parks that were throughout this province and which provided great support for travelers and destination visits for families. What happened there was a tragedy. We saw some communities take over the operations of those roadside parks after the fact, and they've been for the most part successful, but we still are missing the kind of interconnected link that we had previously. So if the minister would comment on that.

Do they have any intentions of ever reopening any of those parks and once again linking the province in that kind of a manner? Many people would pull over into those parks to take a break from driving large distances in Alberta, large distances to get across this province to other provinces that you may be visiting, and those parks provided often very beautiful and often necessary stops for people.

If the minister could tell us how the department is going to achieve 118 percent increase in dedicated revenue for parks operations. Do we see some big price hikes coming downstream? Is it going to be increased fees or increased attendance that we see here? Lots of complaints from people who started to pay for firewood. People weren't as concerned about paying for the firewood as they were concerned at the prices they had to pay for such a small amount of firewood, Mr. Chairman. So are we going to see more increases on that side? I'm not sure what else they can charge a fee for, and I would like to point out that most of the people I've talked to believe that the increased user fees in parks are just another tax grab, another hand in the pockets of Albertans who like to enjoy the outdoors. So if the minister could respond to that, we would expect it.

If the increases we see coming here are from increased fees, then how has the minister projected that this will affect attendance? We know that there's always a cost-benefit ratio and that in supply and demand chains there is some pressure for pricing, and I would expect that the minister has done those kinds of calculations and has some reasonable expectations. When does he expect to roll out the information to the general public on increases? We haven't seen anything yet. This being April 30 and the May long weekend being early this year, about two weeks away, Mr. Chairman, if we're going to see some increased fees that are going to affect people's plans for that long weekend, then we should know about it fairly quickly. If we're seeing the price expectation in increases from increased attendance, could the minister tell us what marketing or communication plans are going to be used to accomplish this? Is there some magic answer that we haven't heard about yet that the minister has under his hat? If he could share that with us, we would very much appreciate it.

Can he tell us if particular parks are expected to have more growth than others? Which ones and what information base are they using to ascertain that, and are there any decreases expected? That would be good information for us. If he could tell us, too, what expenses were covered by the $300,000 from lottery revenues in 2001 and 2002, that would be very helpful.

Goal 5 for the ministry. For that, I refer the minister to the business plan 2002-05 on page 92. The goal is a great goal, one that I certainly agree with, Mr. Chairman. It's "preserving, protecting and presenting Alberta's parks and protected areas." Now, there's no doubt that this minister has a way different interpretation of what that means than I do and than what most of the environmental groups and individuals who are keenly attached to following environmental issues would say is their goal. Preserving has quite a different connotation. To me preserving and protecting means for the next 100 years. It means establishing baseline data so that we know what we had, what we have now, and what we will have in the future. There is no baseline data in this province on these issues. [interjection] Page 92 of the business plans. That's what I have. Goal 5, "preserving, protecting and presenting Alberta's provincial parks and protected areas." Sorry. I jumped from the budget. Now I'm into the business plan. So if he could give us his own perspective on what achieving that goal means to him and how he presents the information to his caucus and to the decision-makers on the front benches. It would be helpful for us to know exactly what his perspective is.

I was quite surprised to read this year, Mr. Chairman, and have certainly contemplated approaching this in question period – hopefully we'll get some fairly timely answers on it so that we don't have to go there and we can just do this in budget debate. We for sure want to know the time lines for developing new legislation as indicated under the strategies on page 92. That was a big surprise to me. We've seen what the minister would call the successful completion of a parks strategy, less successful from many people's perspective in this province. We saw the allocation under special places of new parks areas, but many of those parks that were legislated are very small. In fact, the footprints covered by those parks are not sustainable from an ecological perspective. We've had this discussion quite a few times here. The grizzly bear park isn't large enough to sustain one grizzly bear. Well, I see the minister doesn't like that very much, so certainly he'll be able to respond to that.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: I have some staff here who are trying to hear.

MS CARLSON: Oh, okay. They can't hear me? Perhaps we need a little more co-operation from other members. At any rate, you can read it in Hansard. It doesn't have to be responded to today. It can be responded to in the future. That's just fine with me. [interjection] They don't turn it up. No, there's no paper. This is as loud as it gets. Sorry.

DR. TAYLOR: I've heard you speak a lot louder than that.

MS CARLSON: Well, I was severely provoked, I have to tell you, Minister of Environment, and you know that if we get enough heckling happening, we could easily go there. I know that this chairman doesn't have much of a voice today, so if you were to heckle and I were to respond, he would have to interrupt, and that wouldn't be very nice to him.

DR. TAYLOR: Well, that's perfect for me then; isn't it?

MS CARLSON: Yes. Well, you just keep that up and we're going to be going there in a much louder voice very quickly, and you, Minister of Environment, had your opportunity to respond during your estimates. It is now this minister's opportunity to respond, and we have what we feel are some very important questions and issues that we would like addressed in this area.

In terms of the new legislation, can you tell us what acts are going to be consolidated? Will it affect some of the outcomes of special places? We're still not satisfied with special places. Some of the allocations we felt were wrong. There weren't enough allocations in some of the areas of the province. Some of them aren't large enough to have ecological integrity. Since the establishment of some of those special places we have seen conditions change in the province, the actual conditions and criteria that were used to decide how big or how small some areas should be. I'm thinking particularly of areas in the north where the committee members used the criteria given to them which encompassed industry stipulations in terms of commitments made to industry on how big places could be. I'm thinking particularly of Chinchaga. Well, subsequent to that, one of the allocations is gone, so there is a case to be made that the committee should reconvene and reallocate Chinchaga based on new information. So I would like the minister to respond to that. Is that a possibility in that area? He knows and I know that there is still a huge lobby from that area. They make a very legitimate case for having that area enlarged, particularly from a sustainable ecosystem perspective. So we'd like to know if that's a possibility.

In terms of the legislation we want to know acts that are going to be consolidated and if that's what's happening and what the consultation process for the consolidation is. People get very nervous when this government tries to change legislation around parks and protected areas. I remember the last bill we had in here two or three years ago now. It was Bill 15, that ended up getting pulled, Mr. Chairman, because people in the province became quite upset at the way the legislation was drafted and the way it was presented. At the end of the day there was a huge outcry against the bill, and it got pulled. So I would caution the minister that before he goes forward with any new legislation or consolidations, he put in place an extensive consultation process that does more than guide people to the answers that he wants, that he do something that encompasses and incorporates all stakeholders in the group, and I include in that consultation process industry for sure, First Nations people, environmental concerns, municipalities. They all have a legitimate claim to being a part of the process and any changes in legislation for parks and protected areas.

We would hope that before he goes forward with that, we see that strategy tabled and discussed, if not in the Legislature then at least available for discussion before it goes forward. This is a goal listed in this year's current budget and doesn't have any time lines on it. My expectation is that the minister would be expecting to be moving forward quite quickly on this, but we haven't heard a single thing about it yet, and the first month of the year is gone. Eleven months may seem like a long time to bring forward new legislation, but, Mr. Chairman, it isn't, particularly in this regard. So if we could get some information on that.

He talks here, too, in the business plan about a new strategy "for managing an expanded parks . . . system with reduced funding." How will that be developed? You know, that's pretty innovative if he can do it. Certainly I like to see out-of-the-box thinking happening here and new strategies, but it hasn't really been this government's track record. It seems to be that they're able to cut quite well, but then the management side seems to suffer, and here we're talking about an expanded parks system. So that'll be a rabbit out of the hat, I think, but maybe I'm wrong, and I stand to be corrected on that one. So we want to know what the time lines are for that, and is this part of what will be presented in the new legislation?

Also in the business plan they talk about "a 're-investment strategy' for recapitalizing and sustaining . . . facilities." How is that going to happen in light of the 57 percent budget cut for some of the programs there? We've had the discussion in question period about some of the infrastructure or lack thereof or how it's falling apart at this time, and we're really seeing an infrastructure deficit in parks and protected areas. I'm happy to see this in the business plan and I hope it happens, but we'd like to see a game plan under which that will be happening. So what areas are you focusing on? Which ones won't you be doing, and what criteria did you put together to establish what the priority areas were? If we could have that information.

Under the plans to do a resource inventory, there's a reference to "priority parks and protected areas." We need to know which of the parks and protected areas are considered priorities. Do you have a list showing the ranking for all of the park facilities? How are the priorities determined? Is it based on the number of visitors or facilities available or the significance of the animal habitat? For us that is a key criterion that should be incorporated into the decision-making and unfortunately seems to be absent in past decisions. So if we could have some information on that, it would be very helpful, Mr. Chairman.

Once again to go back to the strategies, they were interesting to take a look at this year. It says that the facility operations contracting methods will be reviewed "to improve public service and effectiveness." We've seen a wide range of effectiveness and quality of contracting since this was privatized, and I'm happy to see that they're going to be doing a review. Once again we have a list of areas that we're concerned about. Will the minister tell us the specific aspects of the contracting-out process that are of concern? Where is the current system ineffective? How is the department measuring effectiveness of the contracting methods? What contracting methods are used? What's the time frame for the review? How will improvements of public services be measured? How many complaints has his department received on parks that have been contracted out? Do they do a before-and-after scan in terms of how comfortable users are with the system and whether they're pleased with the kind of service that they're getting? If he could talk to us about that and provide any data that they have, I would very much appreciate it.

Can the minister tell us what the time line is for developing a new visitor satisfaction performance measure, and is anything being used at this time? There must be some way that the government judges customer satisfaction, and we'd sure like him to share it with us.

Thank you.

4:30

THE CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. I have a number of questions and concerns that we have on that, particularly in respect to persons with developmental disabilities. In doing so, we are looking at people who have challenges in their life. They certainly have to have some assistance in order to even fit the goals that we've established in this particular department. I'm happy to see that we do have an increase in the budget, and this will definitely help out.

Now, then, the amount of funding the PDD boards have – Edmonton, Calgary, northeast, southwest, et cetera – the amount they receive is set out in the 2002-2003 budget estimates. There's a line item for each board. These numbers, however, do not reflect the true amount of money the PDD boards receive. The minister even said on April 23, 2002, "In fact, we're just working on finalizing right now what those exact amounts will be." So if the minister could please provide us at this time those accurate numbers that he didn't have at the time the budget came out and if the minister could explain how the PDD boards are supposed to be able to provide stable, dependable services to PDD clients when they don't find out a whole month into the current fiscal year what their funding is going to be . . .

MS BLAKEMAN: Yeah. It's tough to budget.

MR. BONNER: Yes. It is very difficult to budget.

As well, the PDD boards are having a lot of difficulty creating their business plans when they don't know the amount of money that they are receiving. So another question I do have for the minister: why were changes made after the budget estimates were made public, and why was the department so unable to provide these numbers in time, when the budget estimates were made public? What steps has the minister taken in looking ahead to improve the budgeting process to ensure that this doesn't occur for these boards next year?

The PDD budget assists approximately 8,000 Albertans, and this number is increasing, Mr. Chair, by approximately 400 per year. So we are getting in the neighbourhood of a 5 percent increase in the number of persons with developmental disabilities per year. When we look at this increase in the number, even with the funding increases, several boards are projecting deficits this year. The Edmonton board is projecting a deficit of $6.8 million, and the Calgary board claims that the 5 percent increase in the budget which they got will mean a $3 million deficit for them. Again it seems that even with the increase in funding in this particular budget, these boards are going to face financial difficulties this year and of course will not be able to provide the services to their members that they would wish.

Could the minister tell us how many of the boards are currently projecting deficits for the current fiscal year? Can the minister tell us how many PDD boards are taking on new clients and the number of net new clients each PDD board is taking on? If these boards are not taking on all of these requests, what happens to these people that just don't find a slot with any of these boards?

Could the minister please tell us whether PDD boards will be allowed to run deficits this current fiscal year? Also if the minister could inform us what direction his department or other PDD boards are going with eliminating their deficits. Will the minister provide copies of any documents in which the department sets out its directions to the PDD boards for eliminating their deficits? As well, will the PDD boards be allowed to borrow to finance their deficits?

Now, then, I know that the PDD boards would certainly want some assurance from the minister that they will continue to receive adequate services when they face such large deficits. What assurances can he give to the boards that they will continue to receive adequate services? The boards are quite concerned as well that, you know, they might have to implement cost-cutting procedures to come in on budget. What I would like to know is how the minister expects to keep the promise he made to the PDD clients on October 22 that, and I quote: no one who qualifies for service under the PDD program will be denied that service.

One final question in this regard: how does the minister respond to the statement from the Edmonton PDD board's document entitled Framework for Sustainability, which states that currently the demand for service is greater than the dollars available?

We did have an opportunity a while back, Mr. Chairman, to meet with the Edmonton Deaf-Blind Society, and they indicated that they have a number of concerns. Certainly some of their greatest concerns were around the issue of interpreters, an adequate number of interpreters. We did have some people from the rural boards as well that attended the meeting, and certainly one of their major concerns was the whole idea of trained interpreters. Especially in the rural communities the opportunity to have a trained interpreter is more difficult than in our major centres of Edmonton and Calgary.

As well, Mr. Chair, they went on to indicate to us that trained interpreters are also very, very expensive. In our three-hour meeting I believe the bill was somewhere in the neighbourhood of $200. They required two interpreters. These people work very hard, particularly when they are in that group setting where they're servicing a number of different individuals. So again cost is a huge factor when we start looking at interpreters. What others have attempted to do, Mr. Chairman, is use interpreters that aren't necessarily trained. So what these people would like to do is to see some type of a code of ethics for interpreters. I'm wondering if the minister has given any thought to developing a code of ethics for all interpreters and what we could do in that particular case.

Now, then, with interpreters there is a national certification process, and evaluation is done at a national level. We do have training here in the city of Edmonton, Mr. Chair, at Grant MacEwan Community College, and what the deaf and blind community would like to see is a longer program of training for people attending the program at Grant MacEwan Community College. So my question for the minister would be: is there any room for a review of that program at Grant MacEwan to see if that program is fully meeting the needs of persons with developmental disabilities?

Other information that they gave to me was that there certainly aren't enough interpreters. In Edmonton we have 64 active members and only 50 in Calgary, and as I mentioned, there certainly is a great need for trained interpreters in our rural areas. The Connect Society is also very critical. It's a referral service. It's been active in Edmonton for two years. What happens is that for deaf people that do go to work, businesses will hire deaf people but they certainly aren't prepared for the costs associated with an interpreter. Certainly this is critical, for example, for people that are going to job interviews. If they have to foot the bill for an interpreter for, say, even an hour job interview, then that certainly puts them at a huge disadvantage when they are out looking for employment.

Other areas where interpreters are critical to deaf workers is in the job training process and certainly being there to help interpret safety procedures and as well any new procedures that come along in the business. This is one of the areas where employers are reluctant to pick up those costs for interpreters, and certainly it is something that the deaf person has a great deal of difficulty with for themselves. So they see a great need here for interpretation.

Now, something else that I wouldn't have thought of that they brought to our attention was the fact that even – and this happened to be getting close to the end of February in RRSP time – having specialized people that can sign to offer advice to these people when they are purchasing their RRSPs is a huge problem for these people.

So there are many, many issues here that they have, issues that I hope I will get a further opportunity to ask the minister about. Thank you very much for these at this time.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thanks. Jeez, this is great. I'm going to be able to get all my questions in. When I last was up speaking I was talking about the programs for women and an exchange as a result of last year's budget debate between the minister and myself on what programs are really offered. I think in fact, based on what I'm seeing, that there really aren't any specific programs that are offered. What I was looking for was advocacy, and that is not offered.

The minister at one point talks about the advice that he is given when he goes to the federal/provincial/territorial meetings of ministers responsible for women's issues, and I'm interested in what the message is that he is carrying forward from Alberta and giving forth to the other provinces, the territories, and the federal government. What is that message that he's taking? Could I see the minutes of the meetings or whatever is occurring there so that we know what he's saying to others about what's happening around programs for women here in Alberta?

I'm also wondering if the minister has done any work in advocating to his colleague the Minister of Health and Wellness on midwifery and having midwifery covered under health care services. I'm looking for an answer on that.

Just before I move on to the next topic, I know that two more questions came up for my colleague from Edmonton-Ellerslie right after she sat down. Would it be all right for us to submit those questions in writing to the minister and have them answered? The minister is nodding in the affirmative to me, so we now have that in the record.

Okay. I'd like to go on to the FTEs. Now, the minister indicated that 83 FTEs are being cut from the department and then sort of seemed to indicate that that was kind of okay because it was attrition, but attrition is many things. That can be someone just leaving the job because they're going on to something else, and that's indicating that the job in fact, you know, once it's vacated, won't be refilled. I don't see that as a particularly good thing. It's not as though that job was really slated to be phased out necessarily. I'd like to know exactly which program areas are losing staff and how many FTEs they're losing.

Now, I'm aware that, as has happened many times with the Department of Community Development, we've had huge programs moved into the department which then become the focus of the department. For example, we had seniors added in four, five, or six years ago, and everything else, all the arts and culture and sports and recreation and other activities, got subsumed underneath the seniors, and that's where all the focus and activity was generated. Now we have the PDD and persons with disabilities moved into the department. They're responsible for the lion's share of the budget in the department and also the staffing. For instance, they have about 1,400 staff working in that area compared to significantly fewer staff working in all the other areas combined. So I would like to know exactly where those 83 FTEs are coming from, down to, you know, the program that is losing an FTE.

Now, I wanted to look at the highlights, and that's appearing on page 98 of the estimates. This is interesting, because as I look through this, a lot of what is being put forward as a highlight is in fact the department's core businesses. So I'm a little concerned that there's a misunderstanding about what's going on here.

continue to provide financial support to human and social service non-profit organizations and build organizational capacity in the voluntary sector so that its members can engage in community development activities and initiatives.

The term "capacity building" is one that we're recognizing nationally now as a result of the Broadbent report on the voluntary sector. That was really capacity building meant to help an organization achieve the resources, the ability to take in information and kind of move into the new millennium. So what exactly is being anticipated when the minister talks about a highlight of "organizational capacity in the voluntary sector"? What exactly is expected under this? What are the implications for this strategy, and how is this knitting into the Broadbent report and what was being recommended there?

Also under the same highlights:

Develop a communication strategy to increase public awareness and understanding of the Alberta Foundation for the Arts, and undertake adjustments to new Alberta Foundation for the Arts programs that were introduced in 2001-02 based on community feedback.

Can the minister expand on what he's intending to do here? It sounds like things aren't going well and that you need a good communications plan to make everybody think they're happy the way it's written here. So I'm sure the minister would like to have the opportunity to put forward what he thinks is going on here. In other words, is this a public relations solution to something, or in fact are there additional things that are going on here?

Another highlight:

Continue to support the Alberta Historical Resources Foundation so that approximately $6.2 million will be spent on promoting and supporting community-based heritage initiatives across the province.

Isn't this what the minister is supposed to do? Isn't this what the ministry does do? So why is that a highlight? What new relations could have been developed with the federal government in context of its very large commitment to arts and culture in the last year that might be included under this highlight? I mean, are there alternative funding sources available to work with the feds? What's being anticipated here? Why is it turning up as a highlight? It just looks like a core service to me. If it's more than that, then let's hear what it is.

"Further the development of a Collections and Exhibits Infrastructure Management System to effectively manage essential elements of the ministry's infrastructure." Okay. What's this for? Is it only the various artifacts and exhibitions that we own, or does this also include the building or the shelving or the glass cases? What's anticipated here? What is the time line for developing this management system? How far along are we going to get in this year? Is this a multiyear project? What exactly is this all about?

"Develop a business resumption plan to address potential interruption or loss of essential services in keeping with the government's commitment to ensure services for Albertans." Now, I'm assuming that this is in response to the September 11 crisis and part of overall government planning. Exactly what services have been identified under the Department of Community Development that would be connected to reintegration of essential services? What services specifically is the minister talking about here?

The last bullet is:

Participate in overall government planning for, and plan, coordinate and implement Parks and Protected Areas Division involvement in support to, the G8 Summit in Kananaskis Country.

I'm wondering how much money is expected to be spent by this department for the G-8 summit. What exactly is the department involved with in overall government planning? What sort of return are we expecting from the G-8 activities? How much time and resources have been spent by the department thus far? What other departments have been consulted with as far as what Community Development is doing with the G-8?

Now, I notice, moving on, in the fiscal plan book on page 60 that we're looking at quite a few fee increases. We're looking at fee increases in every possible area. Adult, senior, youth, family, annual pass, and corporate pass for Community Development museums and historical sites. We're also looking at Cypress Hills provincial park. Water rates per month are now going to range between $10 and $100. That's up from $3. Grazing fees per animal unit month: from 95 cents to $1.20 go up in this fiscal year to $1.39 to $2.79. We've got application fees, again under Cypress Hills provincial park, that used to be $2 to $10 going up to $10 to $50. Bus tour fees, again a number of adult/youth divisions. Adults are going from $4.50 to $6.50 and for youth, $2.25 to $4.25. Also interpretative services: where there was no fee for adults, it's now $6.50; where there was no fee for youth, it's now $4.25. So considerable increases in fees in almost every area.

Why is this happening? Has it been a long time since there was a fee increase? When was the last fee increase, by how much at that point? Are we seeing large increases because there hasn't been a fee increase in 25 years? What's the reasoning behind this other than – you know the accusation that's coming – this is just a money grab, a tax increase from the government? Especially with museums and historical sites I was under the understanding that the friends-of groups were taking the gate. So are they the ones that are asking for this fee increase, or is this what the government has decided is going to happen? Who's getting this money ultimately with the fee increases that are detailed here? Is that coming into Community Development's budget, or is it going into the operational budgets of the friends-of groups that are now operating the various museums and historical sites around the province? So I'm looking forward to an answer to that.

Sorry; I missed a couple. William Watson Lodge cabin fees and serviced campsite fees are also going up but not by very much. A $5 to $10 increase there.

Now, the last thing is, oh, film classification. I'm wondering what's happening in the film classification branch. I know that at one point there were three people that were looking at the film classifications, but I believe that the chairperson had maybe two votes, so they could almost overrule or at least tie what was happening. Then I heard a couple of years ago that it was down to one person or perhaps that the chairperson of the film classification unit had even more votes and could really sway how things were going. So can I get a report back on the status of that, please?

I'd also be interested in whether the number of films that they are in fact classifying has increased. Has there been a volume increase? How are they dealing with that volume increase? Do they work longer hours or get paid overtime? Are there more of them now, or do you have a volunteer board that assists them? How is all of that being managed? It's kind of a little-known subject but one that I'm just trying to get an update on.

Just in finishing, then, another couple of updates based on the correspondence back and forth between the minister and I resulting out of the last go-round here. Last year there was $54,000 under program 3, Human Rights and Citizenship, used to complete the development of a case management system called the consolidated human rights information system. This was to assist the Human Rights Commission to manage inquiries in human rights complaints, increasing the efficiency. I'd like an update on that, please. How is it working? Generally, what's the evaluation of it?

I had also had a couple of go-rounds with the minister about a $246,000 increase under strategic corporate services for the minister's office. Now, the minister responded that it included services for finance, human resources, business planning, performance measurement, et cetera, et cetera. The increase was used for a negotiated salary adjustment and onetime priority projects. So when I questioned this further, I got a response that said that in fact $137,000 of this $246,000 was "related to 68 FTEs supporting the Strategic Corporate Services" and was used for settlements. That is what it was costing them. Then the rest was for these onetime priority projects used to accommodate unexpected cost pressures that may arise throughout the year. Unexpected cost pressures could include variations in Workers' Compensation Board premiums and Long Term Disability Insurance rates, and increases in central services such as Imagis, insurance, and the Alberta Corporate Services Centre.

That response came from the minister, dated July 30. So at that point, we were already three, four months into the year. That's a significant amount of money that was set aside in that budget for things that might happen. So the ministry must have expected they were going to happen, and I'm just wondering how that all worked out and whether that in fact is carrying forward. I get a little nervous when I see "one-time priority projects." That's what flagged it for me. What was the big priority there? I didn't understand the wording and what seemed to be of such importance for that.

I looked to see whether the Auditor General had made any comments or recommendations to the Department of Community Development. Nothing of consequence that needs to be brought up and see if there needs to be improvements for the next year, so that's a good sign.

I know that my colleague just missed a couple of questions on PDD that I'm just going to get on the record here in the last couple of minutes. Going back to page 98 of the estimates, Highlights, the first highlight says that the minister will be allocating $407 million for PDD and implementing "selected Strategic Directions from the Building Better Bridges" report. Which strategies exactly will the ministry be implementing, and what is the cost of each of those from that $407 million?

Also under Highlights: undertake a "review of the Protection for Persons in Care Act." What exactly will the process be? What is the time line for this? Is there anticipation that there would then be an amending act brought in? Obviously not this spring, so are we anticipating an amending act to the Protection for Persons in Care Act for next fall?

I'm also interested in what the consultation plan is. Who will be involved in this? Is it going to be by invitation only? Will it be like the current consultations going on right now for victims of crime, which is by invitation only and behind closed doors? Although the public is paying for all of this, they don't get to know who's invited to talk about it or indeed what the proceeds of it are, which I don't think is a very good sign. I don't think taxpayers should have to pay for stuff that is all developed behind closed doors. So what's the consultation plan there? Who is going to be consulted with, and why?

I appreciate the minister allowing us to get so many questions on the record. I recognize that this now means a lot of work for the staff to go through Hansard and pick out all the questions and the comments and get back to us in writing. I thank them in advance for that work, and again I would – and this is really putting the pressure on – appreciate as speedy a response as possible. I'm expected to vote on this in an appropriation bill in a couple of weeks, and it's hard for me to do that when I don't have the answers to my questions. I didn't pick the scheduling of this particular department. So I'll do the best I can if I can count on the department staff to do the best they can.

Thanks very much. I know the minister will probably want to make some closing remarks here. Thank you.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Minister of Community Development.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I know there are some colleagues on our side of the House who also wanted to rise, so I'm going to cede my place and allow them to get their questions on record as well. There are so many questions that have been raised already. I stopped around question 80, and I know they went on. So we'll just pick them up from Hansard, and I guess we'll have to provide written responses sometime over the next couple of months. I'm sure it will take us all of that, probably, to get the detail that they're asking for. I will try and look at some of the generic issues, members for Edmonton-Centre and Edmonton-Glengarry, so that you can feel a little bit comfortable about your upcoming vote. I'll endeavour to do that. I hope we can provide some of the answers for you.

Mr. Chair, I will respectfully cede my place then. I've got answers to most of the stuff that I took notes on, but it would take far longer than the nine minutes remaining this afternoon to provide those, so I'll cede the floor to some members from our side.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I just wanted to take a moment to address the issue of the Community Development department. While I acknowledge, as others have, that this is a department that attends to a broad range of services and programs that we provide as a government, I would just like to take this opportunity to highlight a couple of things from the perspective of my constituency of St. Albert.

I had the occasion just last week to attend a board meeting of the regional PDD board of our St. Albert Association for People with Disabilities in St. Albert. At that meeting certainly what was identified was the challenge that the board has in dealing with the intake that is projected and that in their awareness will come in the future. I would just again like to echo the concerns that were expressed there, that this is indeed a concern for them, as I know it is a concern for the department. It is a challenge, but I'm willing to find ways, working with the department, to see if we can't respond to those requests.

I would also be remiss if I didn't mention the fact of our historic sites and museums. I'm proud to say that we have a museum in St. Albert, and we have several historic sites. We also have several arts and heritage sites and programs and endeavours and facilities that I believe are indeed those which define not only our history but our present and define our respect for the past and that which created definitely our communities and respect for those who built them.

I do have a concern, as expressed in the plan, for our foundations, which administer a number of grants to individuals and to associations requesting their assistance through the Alberta Foundation for the Arts, the Wild Rose Foundation, and the Alberta Sport, Recreation, Parks and Wildlife Foundation. I just wanted to say that I'd like to take this moment to commend those associations for what they do with what I would acknowledge and I think the minister would also acknowledge is a very limited amount of dollars. They lever matching dollars admirably in our communities, and again I'm very happy to see that in the business plans we are looking at an increase to those foundations eventually so that they may fulfill the requests they receive and be able to do that with the ability with which they have been doing so in the past.

One other point I wanted to make was with respect to the Alberta Sport, Recreation, Parks and Wildlife, which seems to be a very encompassing foundation, very broad and diverse in many ways. However, while we are looking at the initiatives and the recommendations from the Premier's Advisory Council on Health, I'd like to highlight the fact that within the activities of the Alberta Sport, Recreation, Parks and Wildlife division I think they have already put in place initiatives that we should mine as we look at how we will implement healthy lifestyles and an effort certainly to return to the individual their own personal responsibility for an active lifestyle in order to maintain a healthy life ultimately.

So I don't have much further to comment on the estimates here, but what I do want to say is that I think that what the department does is exceedingly admirable, and any way in which their supports could be increased would indeed only multiply and increase the good work that they do. I want to say on behalf of the citizens of St. Albert that indeed I think they reach in many ways into my community in a very productive and enriching fashion.

Thank you.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Minister of Community Development.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I know there are only a couple of minutes left, so I'm just going to take this time to thank my staff, some of whom are up in the gallery there. They came hoping to hear the questions firsthand, but I think they'll have to read them in Hansard because it's almost impossible to hear up there. The speakers of course are primarily facing away from the members' gallery, and from time to time we do have a few other conversations that are occurring. I was able to hear the questions because I ordered an earpiece halfway through, and I took many, many pages of notes.

I also thank the members opposite for their questions and also my colleague from St. Albert. It's unfortunate that time doesn't permit to address all of these questions. I don't think there's any point, quite frankly, in even starting, because it'll look like I'm picking some favourites, and they're all my favourites. So I'm just going to say thank you again to the staff and to the questioners and make a commitment to provide the written responses as quickly as we can. There are so many. I'm not sure where we're going to start, but we will give it our very best go.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman, and thank you to everyone for their continued support of the many good initiatives that Alberta Community Development has undertaken and particularly those new ones into which we're going. Thank you for your support, which was indicated throughout various parts of the different speeches.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Community Development.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I didn't want to take time to do this introduction during the valuable time of debate, but the people I do need to introduce to you are very valuable to the debate, so I'd like to introduce them now. If they would rise as their

Solicitor General

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: As per our Standing Orders the first hour is allocated between the minister and members of the opposition, following which any other hon. member may participate.

The hon. Solicitor General.

MRS. FORSYTH: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to present the Alberta Solicitor General 2002-2005 business plan. Before I begin, I'd like to introduce some of my staff that are seated in the gallery. We have Arnold Galet, who's the ADM for correctional services and Acting Deputy Solicitor General; Gary Hutnan, director of special projects and acting assistant deputy minister for public security; Bronwyn Shoush, who's the director for aboriginal affairs; Rita Lauterbach, who's the executive assistant to the deputy minister; and my executive assistant, Maureen Geres.

The Alberta Solicitor General 2002-2005 business plan follows the government reorganization in March of last year. We maintain a working relationship with Alberta Justice in the business planning process and in other joint initiatives. The financial content of our business plan reflects Treasury Board approvals over the past year, federally funded programs, and funds for continuing core programs and services. The Alberta Solicitor General 2002-2003 budget of $268 million is a $9 million increase over last year's forecast and a $13.4 million increase over last year's budget.

The budget includes an increase in overall spending on policing in Alberta. It also includes salary and classification adjustments for more than 2,000 employees in correctional facilities, probation officers and other staff in community corrections, and court and prison security staff. Because Solicitor General is a people ministry, the collective agreement between the province of Alberta and the Alberta Union of Provincial Employees in 2001 has had a significant effect. The 2002-2003 budget includes over $11 million to cover negotiated salary and pay grade increases for our employees.

Overall spending on policing in Alberta increased by $1.8 million over forecast. Alberta has close to 4,600 police officers, or one officer for every 624 Albertans. Albertans are served by eight municipal police services, five First Nations police services, and 104 provincial RCMP detachments. Our budget puts safe communities first by focusing on policing and corrections.

Because of fiscal constraints we had to make some very difficult decisions in our budget process. As a result, crime prevention and restorative justice grants for community-based programs are eliminated. However, funding for community-based crime prevention programs is still available through the proceeds of the crime fund and the community mobilization fund, coadministered by the federal government and Alberta.

Our business plan takes into account the many issues affecting the administration of justice in Alberta. Alberta's population growth outpaces the national rate, our young and growing population presents challenges, yet Alberta's overall crime rates continue to decline. At the same time, we see growing public concern over perceived increases in crime. Through our many programs and services we strive to improve public confidence in the justice system. There is no doubt that September 11 changed our way of life and our way of thinking. The attacks make us realize that no one is safe from terrorism and that the double-edged sword of new technology presents us with new challenges. We face threats from complex global economically organized and Internet crime, but at the same time we rely on technology to protect Albertans. An example of this would be our commitment to the national sex offender registry to protect children and other vulnerable Albertans.

Through our programs and services the Alberta Solicitor General is committed to building a democratic and prosperous Alberta based on respect of the law, a province where all Albertans are safe in their homes and communities. Our mission is to serve Albertans by promoting safe communities and by communicating with Albertans about the administration of justice.

I'd like to briefly outline the three core businesses that make up my ministry's $268 million budget. We are responsible for an effective and efficient corrections program. In addition to the custody and supervision of offenders we also provide opportunities for offenders to rehabilitate themselves so that they can return to their communities as contributing members of society. This accounts for $131.3 million, or 48.9 percent, of our budget.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: Hon. members, there is an issue with the noise level in the Assembly. I'd advise everyone to please be honourable enough to allow the Solicitor General to continue making her remarks.

The hon. minister.

MRS. FORSYTH: Thank you.

Providing adequate and effective policing and supporting crime prevention accounts for $127 million, or 47.4 percent, of our budget. Alberta Solicitor General also ensures that victims are treated with dignity and respect. This makes up $10 million, or 3.7 percent, of our budget. Alberta Solicitor General is not a program-driven department; it's a people department.

I would like to also mention a few highlights, significant changes from last year, and new strategies to meet our goals and improve our services to Albertans. The first goal in the Solicitor General business plan reflects goal 15 of the government of Alberta's business plan: working to ensure that "Alberta will be a safe place to live and raise families." Achieving this goal is a shared responsibility. We recognize the importance of strong partnerships with other government departments, aboriginal communities, and our stakeholders in policing, community organizations, and local governments.

Our major priority over the next three years is working with the federal government to develop and implement a national sex offender registry, and we have helped develop and implement the government of Alberta's crisis and consequences management plan. We will continue our close partnership with the RCMP through the provincial police service agreement, and we'll continue to support the provincial crime prevention strategy and the provincial impaired driving enforcement strategy. We will develop implementation plans for policing standards from recommendations arising from the MLA policing review committee, which was chaired by the MLA for Lacombe-Stettler, with the aid of the members for Dunvegan and Calgary-Buffalo. I have recently received the report and have requested that my department review the report carefully and provide recommendations.

Our second goal recognizes that victims are an essential part of the justice process. For too long the justice system has been preoccupied with the rights of the accused and spent too little time focused on the victim. The Member for Calgary-Shaw is chairing a consultation to review current legislation from a victim's perspective and will make recommendations for changes as needed. We will develop a 10-year victims' vision statement to provide direction for victims' programs and services in the province, and in partnership with Alberta Justice we are taking the lead in reviewing the process and procedures surrounding victim impact statements and will revise the guidelines when necessary. We will help community groups and organizations establish programs and initiatives that meet the needs of victims of crime. We will develop a provincial training manual for victims' services volunteers, and we will work with community and government organizations to increase awareness and enhance training for victims' services program co-ordinators and criminal justice staff. We will also improve accountability for funding victims' services programs, and we will make changes that empower victims through long-term compensation through the Victims of Crime Act. The Solicitor General will also make changes to the victims' financial benefit program in line with the Victims of Crime Amendment Act, and we will establish a new financial benefit program database to reflect changes to the act.

Our third goal, Mr. Chairman, is the rehabilitation of offenders. Most people who come into contact with our corrections system are back in the community in a short time. Therefore, it is important that we identify and deal with the root causes of crime and encourage offender rehabilitation for successful return to the community. To facilitate offender rehabilitation, the Alberta Solicitor General will continue its emphasis on offender work service. We will partner with Alberta Health and Wellness to provide appropriate treatment for young and adult offenders with mental health problems. We will help develop more alternatives to the criminal justice system for those who are mentally ill.

This year we have added a fourth goal to our business plan: ensuring secure and effective and efficient custody, community supervision, and transportation of offenders. We currently have the most cost-effective correctional system in Canada, and we will continue to ensure the efficiency of our correction services. We will expand the secure inmate telephone system to prevent unauthorized calls, while providing inmates with access to lawyer and advocacy groups. We will work with Alberta Justice to enhance the integration and effectiveness of the Provincial Court security program.

I would also like to focus on aboriginal issues within my department, including options for First Nations policing in Alberta. As well, I'm looking at ways to address the high proportion of aboriginals in the criminal justice system, and I hope to find an alternative means of addressing people in conflict with the law who suffer from FAS, fetal alcohol syndrome.

Mr. Chairman, that concludes my comments on the 2002-2005 Solicitor General business plan. I'd like to introduce two other of my staff: Shawkat Sabur, executive director of finance services, and Dan Mercer, who is the ADM of strategic services division. I would be happy to address any questions you may have regarding the plan and will provide a written answer to any question.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate the opportunity to debate the estimates for Solicitor General for 2002-2003. I appreciate the staff from the ministry being with us tonight to assist the minister. I'm sure the notes will be flying back and forth, and I appreciate their assistance. Of course, for any questions that could not be expected to be top of mind for the minister, I'd appreciate getting responses in writing. I recognize that I'm about to put pressure on the staff. I don't mean to, but I have to. In order to be able to vote for the appropriations bill in a week, I'd appreciate getting answers as quickly as possible. That's not always possible, but I can try.

I'd like to thank the minister for the overview. That was very illuminating, and I will come back to some of the points that she brought up as she went through that.

Starting on page 422, under Core Businesses, core business 1, "Policing, crime prevention and security operations," goal 1: "Promote safe communities in Alberta." Under 1.2, ensuring the safety and security of international events, this question is essentially on the G-8 summit. Can the minister tell us: where is the provincial funding coming from for the security arrangements? Where does it appear in her budget? What is the budget for all of the costs for the ministry? I'll be interested to see whether there's an answer here, because the answer that can come back from her is: oh, I can't tell you because that would give away what we're doing for security reasons. But we are here to approve a budget for this department, and that's part of the planned spending, so I'll be very interested to see what the response is to that. Otherwise, I'm being asked to approve – we're all being asked to approve – a secret budget if we don't know how much it is or what's being spent for what. So I look forward to the minister's response on that.

As well, I'm aware that there are joint agreements between the provincial government and the federal government on who's going to pay for what. Perhaps the minister can talk about whether those arrangements have all been secured. We're five weeks away, six weeks away?

MRS. FORSYTH: Fifty-nine days.

MS BLAKEMAN: Fifty-nine days and counting from this event. Where are we with the arrangements with the federal government? Can we be assured in Alberta that the taxpayers are not going to have to foot the bill for anything unexpected or anything above a certain amount of money or any damage above a certain value? What are we on the hook for here?

MR. MacDONALD: We're going to be in the money.

MS BLAKEMAN: Yeah. Well, it would be wonderful to hear that we're going to be in the money, but I highly doubt it.

So if I can get some answers and explanations about ensuring the safety and security of international events, specifically the G-8 summit, and if there are any other international events that are being contemplated under this goal, then I'd love to hear about it.

Strategy 1.4, "Draft policy and revise programming to adhere to the Youth Criminal Justice Act." I'm wondering what the time line is for this and whether there is extra revenue that's being anticipated. Do we need to revise our programming to adhere to this new act, and how does the response or the work that's done by the policing review hook into what's being anticipated here?

Under 1.5, "Develop a response and implementation plan for approved MLA Policing Review Committee recommendations." Now, this one I'm really interested in because the minister has now admitted that in fact the report has been handed in, and it's in the department working its way through the people with the microscopes that are going to look at this and advise the minister. So I'd like to get, on behalf of Albertans, an idea of when this report's going to be made public. This was a long time in coming. A lot of taxpayer dollars went to support this consultation. People are very interested in what the result is going to be and what the recommendations are, so when will it be made public? I'm also interested in who actually is going to approve the recommendations. I imagine that's probably the minister in consultation with cabinet and caucus, but I'd be interested in what the process is exactly that's going to be followed there.

This is something that I got phoned about the other day: if it's done, why can't we have some better idea of what's in it? I've been told, or it was whispered in my ear, that for some reason this wasn't going to be released until after the G-8 summit, and this didn't make particular sense to me. But I might as well ask the question here and see why I'd be hearing that rumour.

"Listening to Albertans in reviewing the approved recommendations." Describe the feedback in implementation process. What is the feedback in implementation process that's anticipated from this police review? I think this police review could have maybe farther reaching implications than many of the other reviews that have been taken on by this government in the last couple of years. Certainly, I've sort of had a small but steady trickle of letters about this particular issue. So I'm most interested in what the process is, time line, resources, budget, release date, implementation date, and what kind of feedback loop. I mean, once the government has accepted or rejected or the minister has accepted or rejected various components of this, then what? Does it go back out again for "this is what is going to be suggested or is accepted by the government," or is that it? Once the decision is made, bingo, we're going to have our own police force here, the Alberta police force. When does it come into effect? What's the longer range time line of that?

If in fact that's where we're going, then I'd be interested in what models have been looked at, in what areas, for a success. One of my complaints about this government is that they keep going: well, that sounds like a good idea. I ask them at the time: "Well, what makes you think that's a good idea? What report did you read? Where did you go? How did you study this? Where's an example of a world model where it's in operation today?" They go: oh yeah, we've looked; we've looked. Then it gets implemented, things start to fall apart, and they go: well, no, gee, we didn't actually look at anything or read anything or have any report or go anywhere and look at it. So what models are being looked at that make the government think this is a good idea if in fact that's where they're going? I know we'll come back to that, but for now I'll move on.

Section 1.9, "Support the National Crime Prevention Strategy." Okay, how? What exactly is being anticipated here to promote the national crime prevention strategy?

Strategy 1.12, "Support police officer recruit training for First Nation Police." Now, this is under strategies. Is this new or a different approach being tried here or are aboriginal nations trying something here? Why is this turning up under strategies? I take it this is something new or a new approach or direction, so tell us what it is. Why? What's new about it?

Section 1.14, "Focus resources on serious and violent crime." All right. Does the government have a priority list that they sort of run down and go: this is more serious than this, and this is less serious than that? Perhaps they're using somebody else's criteria or rating system. What criteria does the government use to determine that a crime is serious and then more serious than something else? That would be very interesting information to have in the public domain.

Okay, 1.16, "Develop a Provincial Impaired Driving Enforcement Strategy." Now, I'm wondering why the province is involved in developing a provincial impaired driving enforcement strategy. What is this in response to? Have there been increasing numbers of people dying from drunk driving on the roads, more hospital admissions, more fatal accidents? Has there been a demand for this is what I'm asking. If there hasn't been a demand for it, then is this someone's personal crusade? That's fine too. I just want to know where it's coming from, what it's in response to, and exactly what's being anticipated underneath this strategy. Again, time lines, implementation, resources, and staff that's dedicated to it.

Strategy 1.17, "Improve information sharing among enforcement agencies and stakeholders in compliance with the First Nations Gaming Policy." Now, this is interesting. What is the government's policy, or what is the Solicitor General's policy as it relates to enforcement of gaming? How is it anticipated that any additional policing resources will be paid for? Is that to be paid up front from the proceeds of the casino as part of its expenses before net proceeds go off to the various charities or whoever is the recipient of the proceeds here?

In attending a gaming conference put on by the Gaming Research Institute at the beginning of March: very interesting to see what other countries are doing around monitoring enforcement and compliance in gaming, and I had already given this particular example in another context. In some of the big casinos in New Zealand, I think it is, they actually have a police detachment and inspectors on site in the casino. That's where they work. That's where they go every morning, and they work out of there, and that's where all of their job takes place. What's being anticipated here? How big a project is this? How much compliance or noncompliance are we expecting? How much resource is going to get dedicated to this? How many officers are anticipated being dedicated to this? Tell us all about it. We'd be interested to know.

I'm sure that the minister is working hand in glove with the Minister of Gaming on this, so I look forward to hearing what the strategy and approach is so that we can anticipate how the government is approaching these new – new to the province anyway – First Nations gaming endeavours. What kinds of issues or problems or concerns is the Solicitor General's department expecting to arise? What kind of research has this department done that it would need to develop to come into compliance with a First Nations gaming policy? Have they researched in other areas? Have you gone somewhere else and looked at what the problems could be? What are you anticipating here? I'm looking for a very thorough response on that.

Last, under core business 1, strategy 1.18, "Implement the Government of Alberta Crisis and Consequence Management Plan." Well. Is this available? Does it exist? Could we have a copy of it? Can it be made public? How far-reaching is this? Does this just involve the Solicitor General's department, or does the Solicitor General hold the plan for all of government? What's being anticipated here? Are we getting into an area where we would be infringing on or curtailing civil liberties? Are we talking about shutting down or nonpublic access to public buildings? What's anticipated in a crisis? Consequence management plan: good name, good name. It gives me the shivers. Is there a component of this? Does that include a resumption of a business plan with that as well? I'm looking for a very detailed response on that one as well.

Moving to the next section, core business 2, "Victims services." Just a couple of questions here: 2.7, "Enhance accountability of funded victim services programs." I'm wondering what problems have been identified with the funded victim services programs and therefore what's prompting the government to enhance their accountability. I guess that's what I'm digging for here. What's given rise to this particular perceived need? Have there been problems with accountability, or is this part of an overall enhancement of accountability because problems have been noticed elsewhere and we're doing a broad stroke here and enhancing everybody's accountability? Why in particular here?

In 2.12, "Disseminate information on legislation, programs, and services for victims to police, victim service programs and criminal justice staff." I take it here, if this is under strategies – again I'm assuming that under strategies this is a new program, because if it's just what you do as a core business, then is it something special? What's being anticipated here? Has there been an identification that in fact "services for victims to police, victim service programs, and criminal justice staff" don't have enough information? Have they been asking for it? Is it out of date that it has to be redone and sent out to people? Given, you know, the year that we're in and in Alberta and with the encouragement we have for immigration into the province and the number of new Canadians that we're welcoming here, is translation of information being anticipated by the Solicitor General?

I know that I'm working with my municipal and federal counterparts to sponsor a little family fun day in two of my communities, and I asked the local detachment of police if they had any translated brochures on anything that we could have out, because I have a lot of people who don't speak English as their first language. For many of them that are new to the country, they're not quite up to speed on how everything works here, so little brochures that give them kind of basic information about how things work is very helpful. In fact, my local beat cop got back to me and said: no; sorry. The Owls brochure wasn't translated. He thought maybe they might have some translated brochures in Calgary. Maybe the Solicitor General is aware of that and can give me some feedback or information, but I'm wondering if she's anticipated that: if she's going to be looking at disseminating information on legislation and programs, whether she in fact is looking at translating, and if so, what languages is she anticipating translating into? I think where we most want to work is with people coming from countries that have a system that is most different from ours, where they really have to learn a whole different way of doing things.

Now, my last question under victims services is a question to do with something else we're debating tonight, which is around Bill 20. Part of what's being anticipated in Bill 20 in fact is – and I did talk about that when that bill was being debated, but I'll bring it up here as well. I'm wondering how Bill 20 affects the victims' surcharges. Perhaps I'm not reading that legislation correctly – and the minister hasn't had time to answer me, to be fair – but it did strike me in the reading of legislation and consulting with some others that what was written into the original legislation was to have the victims' surcharges taken off, and it seems like Bill 20 is going to interfere with that. So was the minister in consultation at all with her colleague the Minister of Justice to ensure that in fact the integrity of the surcharges remained intact? I'd be interested in hearing about that.

Moving on, then, to core business 3. Oh, sorry. One more thing under victims. There's a victims of crime consultation process that's going on right now being chaired by the Member for Calgary-Shaw. I was hearing this described – it must be in the House sometime today. It struck me as very odd, because this is a by-invitation-only consultation which is taking place behind closed doors, and I'm wondering: why so secret? Why is everything being done under cloak and – well, I don't know about dagger but definitely under cloak here. Why is there a need to have it by invitation only and then have it all take place behind closed doors? Very interesting consultation process when we're trying to – I'm assuming this is being thought of as a public consultation, because it's going on outside the confines of the department, but that's a very interesting way to go about it and not what I would have called public. Again, because the taxpayer dollar is funding this and the travel and – you know, there's a budget for this. I find it very frustrating when taxpayers have to pay for something they don't get to be involved in and don't get to see what the results are. I frankly don't think that it's very fair of the government to make choices like that, where they want somebody to pay but then say: no, no, you can't know what's going on; no, you can't know who got involved; and, no, we're not going to tell you what came out of it either. Well, how do we know you did anything at all?

I'll come back again when I get another chance. Thank you.

8:30

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: Hon. member, your time has run out.

Hon. minister, would you like to respond?

MRS. FORSYTH: Well, Mr. Chairman, I'll try and respond. I've got about four or five pages of notes on some questions, and I indicated that we will endeavour to respond in writing.

Her first question was on the G-8. The provincial funding for security: where is it contained? The G-8 conference that we're dealing with is a federal initiative and a federal responsibility, hon. member, and the federal government will be responsible for all of the security costs related to the G-8 within my department and all the other departments that are involved with the G-8, federal and intergovernmental affairs, et cetera.

You also asked us about the MOUs with the federal government. We have been in continual conversation and consultation with the feds on MOUs and are in the process of signing our MOUs with the federal government on the framework of agreement on security costs and all other related costs. As I explained, it is a federal initiative and a federal responsibility, so they will be responsible for the dollars that are incurred by the province.

You asked me about the Youth Criminal Justice Act and the time lines, et cetera. The Youth Criminal Justice Act was passed on February 4, 2002, and received royal assent on February 19, 2002, and the proclamation will be on April 1, 2003. The hon. Minister of Justice and I have attended federal/provincial/territorial meetings and have continually pushed the Justice minister in regard to the implementation or proclamation so that we can get ready for the process. Justice Canada is providing Alberta with $931,000 to help us with the implementation. We support the provisions in the Youth Criminal Justice Act and have some concerns on some of them, but we are looking forward to working on youth justice.

You asked me about the policing review, and I indicated that, yes, I have received the review. The review that was done by the members for Lacombe-Stettler, Calgary-Buffalo, and Dunvegan was a very well-done report. When I initiated the committee, I asked the committee to look at long-range policing. I asked them to think outside of the box on how they saw policing in the future. The consultation process that they worked with was very in depth. I have indicated to my department that we have a 50-page report with around three dozen recommendations. My department is reviewing it right now, looking at what we can do and what we can't do, the cost implications of the report, and I give you my word that the report will be released.

You mentioned the fact that you've heard through a little bug or something that was placed in your ear about the G-8 summit. The G-8 summit is on June 26, 27, I told you, in 58 days. It has nothing to do with the policing report. The policing report is on policing in Alberta, so it has nothing to do with it whatsoever.

You talked about the national strategy on community safety and crime prevention. Their priorities in consultation with Alberta include children, youth, women, personal safety, aboriginal people, and the fear of crime. Our department coadministrates the community mobilization program with the federal government. The Alberta government has continually been committed to providing safe communities for Albertans, and we continue to partner and coadministrate with the federal government. They provide us with $2 million per year per program to address the root causes of crime in the community, and the national strategy is complemented by the provincial crime prevention strategy. Both look to support innovative crime prevention practices throughout the province.

You talked about 1.12, which is, "Continue to support Police Officer Recruit Training for First Nation Police." The First Nation police officer candidates must successfully complete the Alberta police abilities test and written communication test. Successful candidates attend the RCMP cadet insertion training program in Regina. It's to move ahead First Nation policing, which has been determined as a priority for us, so we continue to keep it as a strategy.

You talked about serious and violent crime. We will "continue to focus resources on serious and violent crime." In 1996 Alberta Justice, the RCMP, and the Alberta Association of Chiefs of Police actually launched this. It's important that we address these issues on serious and violent crimes. The primary goal of the strategy was to develop approaches by which offenders committing less serious crimes could be dealt with by using more effective resources through a diversion program. The steering committee on serious and violent crimes considered developing strategies on defining serious crime, and through that came about 20 recommendations. We're going to continue to work on that.

You talked about the provincial impaired driving enforcement strategy, which is in conjunction obviously with Alberta Justice, Alberta Transportation, and the police services. Through the co-operative work of stakeholders it is anticipated that the enforcement of impaired driving laws in Alberta is going to be enhanced. Enforcement is one component of a multifaceted approach on dealing with impaired driving, and my department is making sure that effective enforcement strategies are in place.

You talked about First Nation gaming. As you are aware, on March 1, 2002, the gaming moratorium was lifted. First Nations are now able to apply for First Nation casinos, and it's anticipated with the First Nation casinos that policing issues will arise, so we thought it was important to put it in our strategies and be aware of the policing issues that could arise from First Nation casinos. We want to work with the police to ensure that people around that area are protected.

You asked me about the crisis and consequences management plan implemented by the government after September 11. Many departments are involved in it. The crisis management plan is a significant factor in the safety and security of Albertans. As such, it will continue to receive priority, and we're dealing with security around the province.

You asked about funded victim services, 2.7, I believe: "Enhance accountability of funded victim services programs." Victim services programs are funded by the victims of crime fund and are accountable for the grant moneys that they receive. Funded programs provide financial statements and statistical data about systems provided. Commencing in 2002, funded victim services programs will be expected to identify outcome-based performance measures so we can evaluate the programs.

You talked about strategy 2.12: "Disseminate information about legislation and programs and services for victims to police, victim service programs and criminal justice staff." The surveys and consultations have determined that victims of crime need information about the status of their case, their roles in their prosecution, court procedures, and the many opportunities to make representation to the courts on the impact of offenders. The Alberta Solicitor General has produced a series of brochures that we feel has been extremely helpful: a victim's handbook, awareness handbook, victim impact statement, restitution guidelines, victim program status report, a child witness court preparation manual.

You also mentioned, which I found very interesting – I believe that was the languages.

MS BLAKEMAN: Translation.

MRS. FORSYTH: Right. I'm sorry; I don't have that information. But it's very interesting, and I'll talk to the department about that.

I think that's about it for now.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much. Just a couple of things. I understand how difficult it is for the minister to listen to what I'm saying and very quickly try and write an answer. In some cases I think she'll find when she checks Hansard that the specificity of the question has been lost a bit. For example, I was talking about the accountability, why we would feel we need to concentrate on accountability of the victims' services groups, and that wasn't quite the way, I think, that the minister answered the question.

Another place where that happened was around gaming and First Nations gaming. What I heard the minister say was that the reason for looking at this was a concern for the safety of people in the vicinity of the casinos. So you're not looking at any of the crime issues that happen in the casino or any of the crime issues that happen as a result of problem gamblers? Am I correct in assuming that the focus of what the Solicitor General is looking at around the First Nations gaming is kind of like making sure that the parking lots are safe? Maybe I'll leave that with the minister in case she wants to have another look at what's actually being anticipated there, because, gee, I sure hope that if there's going to be a First Nations gaming policy with police, it's more than the parking lot, a bit more in depth than that.

One more thing. Just so that we're absolutely, positively clear on the record here, the G-8 will result in absolutely no cost to the Alberta taxpayer. Absolutely not one red cent, not one sweat-soaked loonie is going to be coming out of the provincial coffers to pay for the G-8 or anything to do with it. I just want to get this on the record here so that we're really clear about it, because what I heard the minister say was that this was entirely the responsibility of the federal government, that there was a memorandum of understanding that was being signed that they're responsible for all costs. So I just want to get it on the record. Not a dime is Alberta going to have to pay for this. Let's just get that one straight and get it out there.

In the minister's opening remarks she talked about new challenges and in particular technology being a new challenge to the sector and then talked about as an example of that the national sex offenders registry. I'm not quite tracking here, not understanding what the focus of the concern around new challenges and technology is. Maybe I can get the minister to respond more in detail in writing later, because that didn't make sense to me.

Let's look at page 424. Core business 3: "Custody, supervision and rehabilitative opportunities for offenders." Goal 3: "Facilitate the rehabilitation of offenders. So under 3.3, "Review and expand the Adult and Young Offender Alternative Measures Program where appropriate," I'm wondering what specific actions are anticipated in a review and expansion of these alternative measure programs. Have we come up to a regular due date here? Are we at five years or something that we'd want to be doing a regular review to see where we are with this? Or do you review it every year? Why is this showing up under a strategy or under a highlight? What specific actions are being anticipated under this?

Under 3.5, "Ensure the availability of alternatives to custody for young offenders." Now, what alternatives are currently available, and what alternatives are being anticipated in the future? I'm thinking part of this is around open custody and secure custody for young offenders, and I remember talking once with the minister in response to a query that I'd had about there being no open custody arrangements in Red Deer anymore, I think. They lost their one centre there, and therefore any youth had to be put in a lockup facility. I'm vaguely remembering all of this. Is that what this 3.5 goal is anticipating or discussing? If I could get a bit more detail about what alternatives are currently available and what's being anticipated under this strategy.

Under 3.7, "Develop a provincial diversion framework for mentally ill offenders." Very interesting. Now, how did this come about? How is this being driven? What prompted this coming up as a strategy? Again, are there swelling numbers that are driving this, or is it just time that we needed to look at this? What caused it to come up on the radar screen? I'm interested in what the plan is.

Provincial diversion framework: that's a very interesting choice of words, and maybe I could look for a clearer explanation of what's being anticipated here. What are really identified as the issues under this? I'd be interested in what stakeholders have been consulted or are going to be consulted around this. Again, what kind of time line is being anticipated? What resources are being dedicated to it? Are there some alternative measures that are being anticipated here? There's been a lot of work done in the justice and corrections areas in the last 25 years around alternative measures for things. We know now that it doesn't always work to throw somebody in jail. There are other ways of perhaps finding justice that work better in some situations. So is that what's being anticipated here?

I'm very interested in this because in Edmonton-Centre we have a lot of people with mental health issues. Most of them cope very well, and some of them don't. My phone number is in the phone book, and just about every weekend I get a call from somebody in the Remand Centre who's obviously very ill, mentally ill, and doesn't understand why they're there. You know, the radio waves are causing the voices in their head, and they just want someone to come and take them away from there. So I'm always really interested when we start talking about the police and people with mental health issues. I used to work helping to train police officers by doing live role plays for them so they could kind of develop their skills in working with green tags, which at that time was what the police called people with a mental health problem. One of the things we all learned really quickly is that once someone has had an experience with the police, they're very quick, they're very alive to catch on that they're stumbling into the same situation, and they don't want to get nabbed by the police and put in the forensic unit at the Remand Centre and then be shipped off to Alberta Hospital. So they're very alive to that.

I think we have a situation that doesn't really seem to work for anybody very well right now. In a lot of cases I can't get help for the people I need to get help for, in other cases we have people that are causing disturbances that we can't get taken off the street, and nothing ever quite seems to knit as it should on this one. So I'm really interested in what's being anticipated here and why it has come up. What's the approach that the department is taking? Why is it taking it? Are we looking at new measures? Have we found a program that works somewhere else in the world that's absolutely fabulous and we want to try it too? Where is this coming from, and where's it going to?

I guess the other part of this is that I know that people who are mentally ill can be really frightening to people. The tendency is to pick up the phone, call the police, and say, "Get this person off my front lawn," or out of the hallway or the doorway of the apartment building. "They scare me. Make them go away." We tend to phone the police to do that, and in fact they're ill. They're sick, and having the police come is not going to solve anything. It's not going to make them better. It may not make them take their medication. So I'm very cautious about this. What's being anticipated here? I've even had scenarios where we've had people phone us up, and they want us to phone the police and have someone who is mentally ill taken away, but we won't do that out of my constituency office. I think we've developed a more highly tuned antenna for people with mental illnesses, so I'd like to know what's behind all of that.

Okay. Let's move on then to goal 4: "Ensure secure and efficient custody, community supervision and transportation of offenders." Under 4.5, "Review opportunities for Aboriginal contractors to deliver community based correctional programs," could we get some examples of the community-based correctional programs that the government is considering delegating to aboriginal providers or contractors? Sorry, it looks like these are already being provided. Could we get some examples of what's being provided and what's under review? What direction is the ministry thinking of going? Again, is this just a regular time to review it, or is there something that's caused or prompted this review? What are the possibilities that are being looked at?

Under 4.6, "Develop a crisis management plan to enhance the safety and security of Albertans using the courts." The note I wrote in the margin here is: why is this needed? Is there a concern about security of people using the courts? Have we had a lot of people getting beaten up in the hallways, or what's the problem here? What exactly is the crisis management plan, and why do we need this? I'd be interested in knowing that, and I think other Albertans would be interested in knowing, too, if we had problems. Or is this just a regular part of doing business in the courts?

Under 4.8, "Ensure Provincial Protection officers complete basic and advanced training." I must be missing something here, because this strikes me as a really obvious thing: if we have provincial protection officers, they're trained, and they're trained for both basic and advanced training. So why is this a strategy? What's important here? It strikes me as pretty obvious; therefore, I'm assuming that I must be missing something. I look forward to elucidation there.

I've noticed that this department tends to take on a lot of reviews, and I'm just wondering if we could get a quick rundown of how many reviews have been undertaken by this department in the last couple of years and what the status is of all of them. I'm beginning to think that I've lost track. I've had some issues with the minister over the last year where I feel that choices were made around cost over safety, and I'm challenging the minister a bit here to defend department direction so that ultimately the safety of Albertans is in fact what's going to come first here, not budget cuts and not reduction in what's being done because we think the government can get away with it.

Money for the DARE program: I bring this up every year. I'm sure the minister is aware of how successful the DARE program is in the schools, and I know that we don't have enough money and there are not enough officers who've been trained to deliver this program. There's a huge demand for it. An excellent program, terrific results. We know this works; it's proven. Is there money in this budget to train some additional DARE officers? Is there going to be enough money to train enough officers to meet the demand here? A very successful program, and if there isn't, then I guess I'm challenging the minister again on where the priorities are in the department. It's crime prevention, because it's affecting young people that don't get involved in drugs and have self-esteem and self-respect and choose some goals in their lives and follow through and all of those good things. Why wouldn't we be supporting it? I'm challenging the minister on decision-making that would take away from this.

I'm also wondering if I can just get some sort of background factual information here. How many provincial positions is the province currently paying the RCMP for in this budget? How many of those positions are filled? Can we get any kind of documentation of these positions with the RCMP? What's the current strength? How many members per detachment? The authorized strength versus the actual strength? In other words, I'm looking for the breakdown. Are they including First Nations officers and highway patrol positions in that breakdown? Are we also looking at including recruits that are still partly finishing their training in that breakdown? In other words, if a detachment says that it's got 10 officers but two of them are recruits that are still away finishing their training, two of them are First Nations officers and are off doing something else, and we've got a couple of highway patrols, how many do we really have that are working at that detachment? I've been trying to dig this information out of this department for about eight months now, so I'm continuing to try to get the information.

Also, this is a question that I have to ask: are we aware if any of our RCMP officers that were part of our protocol were seconded away as part of September 11, particularly the sky marshal positions? You'll probably have to go and look that one up. I certainly understand.

That's all the questions I think I have at this time, so I'm going to cede the floor to some of my colleagues that I know have questions as well. Thanks very much.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. I thought the minister might respond, but I guess perhaps after I speak she'll address some of the issues.

I want to go over quite a few things, including some of the minister's opening comments, but I think that first of all I'm going to start with the issue that concerns me the most in this particular ministry. I'm looking at page 347 of the business plan. We heard the minister in her opening comments talk about goal 3 there, which is to "facilitate the rehabilitation of offenders." Specifically what she talked about was more alternatives in the justice system for the mentally ill, but that isn't actually what the goals are that are stated here, that "Alberta will be a safe place to live and raise families," which is motherhood and apple pie. Measure that; that's what I'd like to see some information on.

Then "the well being and self-reliance of Aboriginal people will be comparable to that of other Albertans," also, as it stands here, a bit of a motherhood and apple pie kind of statement. If I reflect back on what the Auditor General has said repeatedly over the years, he has requested that these goals be tied to measurable outcomes, and I don't see any of these things in this particular business plan. Perhaps the minister can provide that information.

Let's just take aboriginal people to begin with. First of all, I would like to know whether or not you break down treaty and Metis. I just recently had a meeting with a bunch of chiefs who were quite concerned about the increased reliance on this government of treating all aboriginal people as the same people, which in fact they are not. Neither treaty Indians or Metis are really happy to be lumped in that same group, but in terms of what this government does, it seems that that's how it's broken out. So if the minister could comment on that.

Just in terms of tying these strategies back to the business plan goal that "the well being and self-reliance of Aboriginal people will be comparable to that of other Albertans," what are your measuring criteria for that? Clearly you must have already established what the well-being and self-reliance are of other Albertans in order to have something to measure against. I would like to see exactly how in your measurements aboriginals fall short. I know they are hugely overrepresented in the justice system, and I'd like to see those statistics. I want to be able to compare the two lines, because clearly if that's your goal, you need to have an end benchmark, something to measure whether or not you've achieved success. What is your success criteria, and what do you qualify as a success? If you get 80 percent of the way to where your success criteria states, then do you call that a success? What about if you only get 10 percent? So far I haven't seen anything in what the minister has had to offer here this evening that would tell me that there is that kind of criteria established. So if we could have that.

Under Strategies, 3.2, you talk about: "Support the youth justice committee program and expand to other eligible communities including Aboriginal communities." So what does that mean: "Support the youth justice committee program"? Could we have some information on that program and what "support" means? It doesn't say here "direct." It doesn't say "determine." It says "support." To me it doesn't seem that your focus on that is taking a lead role. So if I'm mistaken in that, I would certainly like to have the information that expands that definition and tells me what some of the criteria are. "Including Aboriginal communities": does this mean that they're in or they're out now? If you could answer that.

Then specifically to the other strategies that you list that have to do with aboriginals. Strategy 3.10 says, "Continued delivery of Aboriginal cultural and spiritual programming in young offender and adult correctional centres." So you've been doing that for a while. I hear that it goes over quite well. But how do you measure the success there? What are the criteria? I wouldn't actually mind knowing how long you've been doing this, because everything I hear about it is quite good, but let's have some more information on that here.

Strategy 3.11 says, "In cooperation with Aboriginal and Justice stakeholders, develop recommendations on the enhancement of the Alexis court model." Very good, too, but how far has that come? How often do you meet? What's the cost of putting that together? Do you have any sort of progress report on what the recommendations are? Who's involved actually in making those decisions? If we could have that information and particularly the information on how many people from First Nations and Metis organizations are involved in that decision-making process.

Strategy 3.9 says:

Contingent on the capacity of the community, Alberta Solicitor General will consider the transfer of community corrections program management to Aboriginal communities expressing an interest and demonstrating a readiness.

First of all, how many have expressed an interest in aboriginal communities? How many then have demonstrated a readiness, and what is your criteria for having demonstrated a readiness? Then you qualify this by saying, "Contingent on the capacity of the community." So once again you must have a criteria, and we would like to see what that is.

Nice to have all these excellent strategies, but if they aren't actually followed up and there isn't a real game plan with measurable benchmarks and measurable outcomes and criteria for what the success or failure is, then they really don't do any good at all. So what we need actually in those areas is more information.

To go back to some of the stuff that the minister talked about, I too would like her to tell us whether in fact what I thought I heard was true about the G-8 summit, and that is that there's no cost to the province. It seems that even if there aren't any dollar costs, which I'm very surprised at and I think probably we misheard what you said or what you intended to say, there are some transferrable costs. Certainly there's your time and involvement in the meetings, and while you're paid a salary and you're paid regardless of what program you're working on, to put you on the G-8 takes you away from something else, so there is a cost associated with that as well as your senior staff and whoever else is helping to implement that. Have you divided your cost structures down to more than just hard outflows but the internal transfer of resources within the department? If you could answer that question.

You talked in your opening comments about your major priority being the registry of sex offenders, no doubt a laudable goal. It is 1.1 in your strategies under goal 1: "Promote safe communities in Alberta." You then go on to talk about the MLA committee and the report. If I look down those strategies, I see that that pops up at 1.6 in strategies, "Revise the policing standards' implementation plan in view of the recommendations arising from the MLA Policing Review Committee," and 1.5, "implementation plan for the approved recommendations arising from the MLA Policing Review Committee." So here we have down on the list two goals that relate to the review committee, yet it seems to me like you've already set your agenda for the year.

You talked about now having that report inside, and you're going to see what the outcome of recommendations are from your department, but I don't believe that that report has been made public. I think it should be. I think that the feedback and information that they collected is good information for a number of organizations and should be tabled in the Legislature if it hasn't been. Perhaps I missed that. If I have, I withdraw those comments. If not, could you comment on whether or not that'll be available and why it's such a low priority on your goals and whether or not the outcomes of those recommendations could impact your strategy for the year? If you could answer that question, I would be very pleased.

You talked about fiscal restraints and some stuff that got cut, and you talked about the crime prevention program and also restorative grants, I believe is what I heard. So the question is: what was the criteria used to decide which was and which wasn't beneficial? If you could give us some more information on that. What it sounds like, when you just cut a program out like that, is that it was either completely useless before and didn't achieve the goals or according to some criteria that you weight decisions on, it fell far short. Not only is it reduced, but it's gone in both cases.

You talked about one other existing crime prevention program, so I would like to know the differences between the one that is still existing and this one that you cut and whether or not the other one has been expanded, whether the funds have been expanded to it, and what it is we're losing out on by having those two particular areas cut.

It brings to mind to me the increased security that we have seen around this building and the grounds since September 11. It seems to me often that some of the security is excessive and not very effective.

MR. MacDONALD: I saw a skunk last night out by the fountain.

MS CARLSON: There you go. Well, clearly somebody was not doing what they were supposed to be doing.

On a serious note, Madam Minister, we now have all these name tags, and we've got people who work in the booths at certain hours of the day, and we have to swipe our security passes to get into the parking at other times. But, in fact, that really isn't very effective. I can't count the number of times since the spring break when I have particularly been paying attention that I have seen more than one car scoot into the parking lot at a time. You know, that completely eliminates the benefit of swiping a card. More than one car is coming in. There is no control on what happens in that parking lot still. If you could please respond to that. I know that a number of your own colleagues are not very happy about having to wear the identifying name tag, so I would like your response on that too.

I would like to know what weighting you use to give the increased costs that we see assumed around here as compared to something like the crime prevention program. While we may think that we're very important, I'm not sure that Albertans would all share that particular point of view. Perhaps the Premier, yes. Security around him I think is important.

MR. MacDONALD: And the Member for Edmonton-Calder.

MS CARLSON: Well, I don't know about that, I gotta tell you. But, anyway, there has to be some sort of criteria. If the minister could share that with us.

Now I would like to just go to some of the budget line items. I think that first of all I'd like to start with program 2, public security. We see that there was an 8 percent decrease – an increase in security around this building but an 8 percent decrease – for public security support services in obviously other areas, which really means for them more, because you're spending more money on these grounds now. So can you tell us what got cut and what are the long-term effects of this budget cut and how you justified the cuts in the areas that you did?

Crime prevention. Now we see that there was a 40 percent lower forecast for actual spending than budgeted. We talked about cutting that program, so if you could tell us why the money wasn't spent last year. Does it have anything to do with the government's cross-ministry 1 percent cut last year? Specifically where did you make your cuts in this department? The crime prevention budget is so much lower. You say that the program is just gone, but we'd like some more information on that.

Then the correctional services. The victims of crime fund received 30 percent less funding this year than last, yet in your opening comments you talked about this being one of your key priorities for the year. So that's very interesting, and perhaps you could comment on that.

That reminds me of something else you said in your opening comments. When you talked about the provincial employees, it reminded me of the concerns I have from constituents of mine who work at the remand centre. They have an ongoing litany of concerns about work conditions, how people are treated either very well or not very well at all. So I'm wondering what's happened there over the past year and what your expectations are for the next year specifically with regard to the remand centre, because that seems to be where I hear the complaints. Have you done a review of how people are treated and handled there?

Also on the employees' side how many grievances come out of that place in a year? How do you handle them? The big concern always has been that those who place formal grievances end up with formal notices of loss of jobs, so if you could comment on that.

FTEs: can we get a breakdown of where all of them have been employed?

Then I'll go back to the business plans for a bit, back to goal 1. I'm wondering: when you talk about your strategy 1.16, "Develop a Provincial Impaired Driving Enforcement Strategy, in conjunction with Alberta Justice, Alberta Transportation, and police services," will you be consulting with any community organizations such as MADD in order to implement an impaired driving enforcement strategy? This still seems to be a really big problem in this province, and it seems like it's pretty low on your priority list. So if you could tell us why that is. Maybe you have some good reasons for it, but we'd sure like to hear what they are, and I'm sure organizations such as MADD would as well.

Madam Minister, will you consider allocating any more money to the proper training for police who conduct Check Stops into the proper monitoring of roadside Check Stop equipment like breathalyzers? Ongoing problem. I know that it's tough to calibrate that equipment on the road, and I know very well, having been married to a policeman for many years, the kinds of problems that they encounter on Check Stops and roadside Check Stops and actually the risk that they're at from a security perspective, more than the tragic accident that we saw by Banff this year. But the Check Stops themselves are of great concern, so can you tell us what you're doing in that regard? I think that there's a lot at risk here for those people in those jobs, and it's very much your responsibility to ensure their safety to the greatest extent that you can. I have every belief that you do that, but could you share that information with Albertans so that we all have a high level of comfort with that?

Performance measure 4 talks about, "Crime rate: violent crime and property crime." Can you tell us what the explanations are for why the Alberta rate of violent and property crime is above the Canadian rate? A very interesting phenomenon and statistic. While you're at it, perhaps you could comment on the dollars allocated to police forces in general and particularly the downloading. Violent crime gets a fair amount of attention; property crimes do not. We simply do not have enough police people to do the work. I think that is the bottom line. So if you could address that.

Interestingly enough, in the FOIP review committee Monday morning we had a presentation from the Alberta Association of Private Investigators. They also commented on a problem facing police forces these days in that they simply do not have the budgets nor the time to investigate white-collar crime. More and more it is falling to companies to do essentially the full investigations and all the paperwork and present that to police forces. Now, perhaps this is your idea of a good way to pass on the costs and to download responsibility. I don't know, because we haven't heard from you on that particular issue. So if you could give us some information on that. It seems to me that white-collar crime is as serious as any other crime, and in fact it's very, very costly to consumers. If it isn't being investigated to any degree, then I think that's of interest and should be discussed and debated in this Legislature. So if you could address that for us, it would be very beneficial.

Then in goal 2 you talk about: "Provide services to victims and work with Alberta Justice to ensure victims have a more meaningful role in the criminal justice system." What exactly does that mean? You talked about that in your opening comments. It's here in goal 2. You must have a list of things that you think need to be done. So could you do that? Could you also give us a breakdown of the number of awards that the Crimes Compensation Board has awarded to victims of crime annually for the past three years?

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. Member for Little Bow.

MR. McFARLAND: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'll make this very quick. If I could ask the indulgence of the Solicitor General, would your department be able to let this Legislature know that one of your colleagues has actually turned 58 today, or would that kind of information be contrary to what you're able to tell us? I believe he had some police duty in the past, so you may be able to check it out. I believe his riding is Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills. I think he's around 58 today. Could you check it out, please?

MRS. FORSYTH: Mr. Chairman, because of security reasons I can't divulge that information. I'm sorry.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I've been listening with interest to the estimates debate this evening on the Solicitor General's department. There certainly has been an interesting range of questions by both the opposition and one government member.

There has been great emphasis placed on the G-8 conference that's coming up at the end of June, and there's in excess of $400 million being spent on this. Can the minister please answer: what infrastructure will be left behind in Calgary and in the Canmore area after the summit for the use of Albertans, whether it'll be municipal officials in the city of Calgary, perhaps the Calgary city police force, or the RCMP in Canmore? There's a lot of money being spent. Are there going to be any helicopter pads, for instance, that could be used to fight forest fires in the future? Is anything of this nature going to be left behind out of this money that we're spending? The hon. minister mentioned several different police forces. Will any of these police forces in Alberta receive any of the surplus equipment left over or the infrastructure from the summit?

Certainly there are police officials coming from all over the country and, I would imagine, from all over the globe to this summit. They certainly have to be housed somewhere. Is there going to be any of that infrastructure that's going to be constructed left for this province and its citizens after?

Now, the 400 million plus dollars is a significant sum of money in the view of this member. If this is going to be a sincere, genuine discussion on the conditions that many of the African nations are facing and if it's going to be more than just an elaborate $400 million photo op – I think that in the future these G-8 summits should be held in a much more secure location. I can think of the Second World War and Allied leaders meeting offshore on naval ships, and in this case I think it would be much cheaper and much safer if summits were to be held somewhere on a naval ship with significant air support to protect the leaders. Instead of spending $400 million, we could perhaps spend $40 million. Everyone could be secure. All the world's leaders could be secure, and that money could perhaps go directly to, let's say – we could pick any number of countries in Africa that could certainly use the money. I think that in the future, in light of the security changes that have to occur as a result of the September 11 disaster or attack on the World Trade Center in New York City, this is an option for all governments to pursue and save this money and put it into programs that are directly going to help the citizens of, in this case, Africa.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie talked about the security arrangements here. I think one of the most shameful acts I've seen occur in this Assembly – and I think it was done inadvertently – was the closing of the disabled entrance at the east door of the Assembly at ground level. Now, there were injured workers in this Assembly last night in the public gallery from various coalitions across the province. There were injured workers in this Assembly the afternoon the hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment introduced Bill 26, and they literally had to hobble up the front steps to the Legislative Assembly. I think that is inappropriate, I think it is wrong, and I think it is disrespectful. That east door, with the disabled ramp, has to be reopened. I would ask the hon. minister at this time to please refer to architectural guidelines again and if necessary measure this ramp down by the media availability room that is considered as sufficient. You'd have to have air brakes on a wheelchair to negotiate that 90-degree turn. That is unacceptable, and again it is disrespectful. I would urge the minister: with part of this budget in this province we can afford to have access for disabled citizens and for seniors to their Legislative Assembly.

I think that in the next couple of days, if the hon. minister will just keep her eyes open, in the gallery she's going to see lots of injured workers coming to visit the Assembly and hear the debate on Bill 26. If she would escort some of them to the front door and see how difficult it is for them to get down that long series of steps, I would be very, very grateful. Thank you.

I, too, Mr. Chairman, have some specific questions that in light of the hour I would like to direct to the hon. minister and her staff, please. The first question is: how effective is it to measure the number of victims' services initiatives? Now, the target is for the Solicitor General to support 190 such services from the year 2002 through to 2005, but isn't this kind of measurement backwards in that it measures administrative inputs rather than actual outcomes? Doesn't this kind of performance measure encourage bureaucratic inertia; for instance, creating yet more committees, subdividing existing committees merely to create the impression of action? How many of these initiatives will be undertaken by NGOs? Will these NGOs have funding in part or in whole for all of the work? Is the government taking credit for work conducted and funded by other people?

Now, there's another goal here, goal 3, "Facilitate the rehabilitation of offenders." My next question to the hon. minister: is the Solicitor General taking any steps to deal with domestic abuse that is perpetrated by police officers? What concrete steps will be taken to improve police investigation of domestic abuse cases?

Further on here, in light of the time, Mr. Chairman. Why is the target for successful completion of young offender probations lower than the actual completion rate of the past three years? An additional question, please, at this time is: why is the target for the percentage of offenders involved in work, education, treatment, or life management programs actually lower than the participation rate of the last two years?

Further along here, goal 4, "Ensure secure and efficient custody, community supervision and transportation of offenders." Why is the target for successful completion of temporary absence supervision lower than the successful completion rate of the past three years?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie certainly touched on the issues that concern MADD, Mothers Against Drinking Drivers.

In conclusion, I too would like to mention the excellent presentation that I had the other morning in the FOIP Act Review Committee, chaired ably by the Member for Edmonton-Calder. The presentation concerned the drop in the number of police officers that are on active duty, not only in Alberta but across the country. What measures are going to be taken by the Solicitor General and the department to ensure that there is not a shortage of police officers, police personnel, in this province in the future?

With those comments, certainly for any questions that I raised that the hon. minister would like to reply to in writing, I will be looking forward to the replies. If we could get a general overview now, I would be grateful.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I again would like to urge the hon. minister to certainly have another look at this ramp situation for the disabled in this Legislative Assembly. It's a poor reflection on all of us, and if someone in that department would kindly contact the architects' association, I'm sure that they will find that those guidelines have not been met with that ramp at the media availability room.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman, and I look forward to the response from the hon. minister.

9:30

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. minister.

MRS. FORSYTH: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. I've been trying to take notes as quickly as I can. Obviously, the members across the way have asked a fair amount of questions, so I'll endeavour to sort of go by what I've caught.

One of the questions that has been asked over and over again is in regard to the G-8. Again I want to repeat that the G-8 is a federal responsibility. It's a federal initiative. It's a federal party, but it's in our province. We have endeavoured for the last I don't know how many months and days and weeks to negotiate with your federal counterparts and your federal cousins. I would encourage you, if you have so many concerns about G-8, to call your Liberal cousins in Ottawa. It's very important. We as a province have been negotiating with them in regard to the memorandum of understanding and agreement and trying to get all the costs that we perceive for the G-8. Can I guarantee that it has no cost to the province? No. You can't guarantee anything in life. We can only negotiate to the best of our abilities, but again I have been arguing back and forth with them on the cost of prosecutions within this province for the prosecution of protestors. They have steadily refused. I encourage you as members of the opposition who are with the Liberal Party to please call your Liberal counterparts and ask them if they would please participate in it.

One of the questions that was brought to my attention was the technology and the national sex offender registry. Well, I think people in the Assembly have to understand that CPIC is very old and it's outdated, and to add the sex offender registry to CPIC is virtually impossible. Technology changes. It's a very useful tool that the police have used, but they have continually said that it's outdated, that the technology isn't useful. We have lobbied the federal government, and I must admit that they made some movement at the last federal/provincial/territorial about establishing a national sex offender registry and making it mandatory to register so we have the ability to track the sex offenders who tend to move from province to province. So that was my comment.

The other thing about the technology is cybercrime. That changes, and that is continually on the move. That is a technological challenge. So we will continue to push the feds on that.

One of the questions asked was about strategy 3.3, the adult and young offender alternative measures program. Will it be reviewed and expanded when appropriate? As we're well aware, the alternative measures program is a program that the Crown uses as a diversion for less serious crimes to keep the accused person out of sort of the formal justice system. The individuals that are referred to the alternative measures program agree to conditions, community service work. If it's a young offender, a poster, writing a speech, restitution to the victim. So we're going to continue to work on that, and we've got a review that has been under way for some time to examine what's happening in other alternative measures programs across other Canadian jurisdictions. Identifying problem areas that we see in the program and the impact on the new Youth Criminal Justice Act, identifying some areas where it can be expanded, identifying areas where the program can serve aboriginal people better, that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie asked, and other groups, including the mentally ill, instead of putting them into our correction facilities. People with FAS is another big problem that we're dealing with in the correctional facilities, and we're going to continue consulting with the stakeholders. We feel that it's important to consult with the stakeholders, and we'll review it from there.

Someone asked the question about whether the ministry will continue to emphasize ensuring the availability of alternatives to custody for young offenders. I touched on that with the alternative measures.

Alberta's incarceration rate. It's important, I think, for people to understand that it's the third lowest amongst Canadian provinces. The use of custody in correctional facilities has steadily decreased, and of course we're seeing more people in the community, and that's something that we have to address. Again we're struggling with the implementation of the new Youth Criminal Justice Act.

Another question was about the facilitation of the rehabilitation of offenders in co-operation with the Alberta Mental Health Board and my department. We're developing a framework strategy to provide additional alternatives to the criminal justice system for criminally involved individuals who are mentally ill, and that was a question that was asked by Edmonton-Centre. We are working together with Alberta Mental Health and a number of other departments, stakeholders, and agencies to minimize the reliance on the criminal justice system for individuals who are mentally ill, and it's related to their offending behaviour. Individuals with mental illness are at risk and are being placed in the correctional system regardless of the appropriateness in relation to their offence. The correction system is used as a complement to mental health treatment, and the justice system is not intended or designed or funded to provide the intensive level of services for individuals with mental health, so we're developing a framework.

I was asked about the "ensure secure and efficient custody, community supervision and transportation of offenders." The department continually holds contracts with four First Nations societies to deliver community corrections and court work service in the community. It's been very successful. Ongoing discussions continue with the four First Nations at Hobbema for the delivery of these services in the Samson, Ermineskin, Montana, and Louis Bull First Nations. The Metis Association zone 5 and the Kainai Community Corrections Society, who currently operate aboriginal corrections programs, have expressed an interest in expanding.

We were asked again about ensuring "secure and efficient custody, community supervision and transportation of offenders." We are fulfilling that mandate. The type of people that we're dealing with as far as large gang trials, weapons, and the tendency of gangs to use threats and intimidation has created some problems that we have had to deal with.

We were asked about the provincial protection officers completing "basic . . . training to enable them to carry out their security, custody and escort functions." CAPS officers, who are very good officers in this province and do a wonderful job, are exceptionally well trained and professional, and we want to continue that training program so they can continue to do the good job that they've always done.

I was again asked about the policing review, and I made comments on that when I spoke before.

I was asked about how many reviews I have going on right now. We've just finished the policing review, that I mentioned, and we've got the victims' review that is being carried out by the Member for Calgary-Shaw, two very important committees that I think have to be addressed and looked at.

I was asked about supporting the youth justice committees and expanding to the eligible communities, including aboriginals. A highly, highly successful program. We've currently got 92 youth justice committees up and running. I'm launching another one I believe next week. I met with the Strathcona Youth Justice Committee a week ago and talked to them about how they see the service delivery, and they shared some concerns, as some of the youth justice committees are, with the new act that's going to be implemented in 2003. We feel it's a very, very successful program, key to diversions of youth. We've got small grants and administrative support to support these committees. I have dedicated volunteers, and I've got dedicated staff that are continually working with the youth justice committees. One of the goals is to work more into the aboriginal community and do more work with them.

We were asked about the continued delivery of the aboriginal culture and spiritual programming in the young offender and adult correction centres. It was mentioned by either Edmonton-Centre or Edmonton-Ellerslie, the success of those. Highly successful. We're going to continue doing that. We've got two adult aboriginal minimum security camps and one community correction camp. It's important that the native elders and the aboriginal community members regularly provide culture programs to the offenders as far as sweat lodges and pipes and sweet grass ceremonies.

I was asked about the Alexis court model. The endorsement of the court process at Alexis by all key holders – and that's the court, the Crown prosecutors, the contractor, the community – indicates that all reasonable measures should be taken to ensure its continued success, including adequate resourcing. The department is working with Justice, the Yellowhead Tribal Community Corrections Society, and other stakeholders to undertake an evaluation of the process used at Alexis, its results and its effectiveness, and the result of this will be to develop recommendations on additional support and an expansion of the model to other communities.

The Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie talked about our priorities and the way we had prioritized, and it's really unfortunate that you can't prioritize everything at one. If we could do that and we lived in Utopia, we would have prioritized everything at one. It's difficult to prioritize from one to 20 or one to 15 on your prioritization because everything is a priority, and I wish I could, but everything in our department is a priority, all of the things we work with, whether it's a sex offender registry, police standards, the policing review, the aboriginal initiatives, any of them.

We talked about security around the guards, and I guess my only comment to the members is: why don't you call? If you have a concern and you have a problem with security, there is nothing wrong with picking up the phone and calling me and trying to address the issue instead of using the Legislature as a front. I have not heard yet about the scooting in and out of the parkade.

I will give the member credit. He brought up his concerns about the disabled. I've spoken to the member beside me on the Premier's council on persons with disabilities, and we have not had a complaint. We checked originally into your question when you questioned me in question period, and they do have access to the east loading. I was assured by security. So if it's a problem again, please give me a call. If you have a problem with the security in the Legislature, call. That's what I ask you to do.

We talked about G-8 again and the excess of $400 million. I haven't seen those figures. I don't know what the numbers are for the G-8. You talked about the infrastructure left behind and the use for Albertans. I'd again encourage the Liberals over there to call. The police force, I understand, can buy the surplus equipment at a cost factor.

I think that's all for now.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Yes, Mr. Chairman. At this time I have one additional question. Of course, every member of this Assembly is concerned about the increase of identity fraud that's occurring in this province, particularly with the deficiencies there are whenever we privatized the registries. You know, there seems to be one case after another of ID cards and drivers' licences. The market value in Calgary has been determined, I believe, at $200 for a driver's licence. In light of the fact that that driver's licence can be used to gain access to America through the Montana border crossings, what initiatives is the Solicitor General's department taking with the police forces from across this province to curb this unsavory practice of identity fraud because we have a lax registry system? Certainly the hon. minister must be very, very concerned about this in light of the unsavory practices that have been exposed. Precisely what is the department doing to ensure that identity fraud is stopped completely in this province because of, again, the deficiencies in the registry system?

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: Okay. After considering the . . .

SOME HON. MEMBERS: Question.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, are you rising to speak?

MS CARLSON: No, I was expecting the minister to respond.

MRS. FORSYTH: I'm sorry, Mr. Chairman; it seems like the Assembly would like the question.

The hon. member brought up the ID cards, and I can assure him that the Minister of Government Services and I have been working on this. We're in discussion about how to deal with it. We're very fortunate in this province that we have a very, very good and effective police force, and I will also be bringing up that to the Alberta Association of Chiefs of Police when I meet with them next week in Calgary. I can assure the member that the Minister of Government Services and I are both working on it.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. At this time I would also like to direct a further question to the minister, and it's in regard to the police force. What studies is the department currently doing regarding the start-up of an Alberta police force, the APP? Has the department conducted any studies on the cost efficiencies of initiating an APP?

MRS. FORSYTH: I think what the member is referring to is similar to what we saw in the Ontario Provincial Police model. I think what he's alluding to is he's trying to find out if that is incorporated or one of the recommendations of the police review. You can tell by his smile. I'm not asleep yet, though it's been a very, very long day. As I explained, I have received the report, have indicated and have my department responding to the report on the recommendations and the cost implications of putting forward some of the recommendations that were brought in the report.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: After considering the business plan and proposed estimates for the Department of Solicitor General, are you ready for the vote?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

Agreed to:
Operating Expense and Capital Investment $258,367,000

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: Shall the vote be reported? Are you agreed?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: Opposed? Carried.
The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would move that the committee rise and report the estimates of the Department of the Solicitor General and beg leave to sit again.

[Motion carried]

9:50

MR. LOUGHEED: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of Supply has had under consideration certain resolutions, reports as follows, and requests leave to sit again.

Resolved that a sum not exceeding the following be granted to Her Majesty for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2003, for the following department.

Solicitor General: operating expense and capital investment, $258,367,000.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Opposed? So ordered.

head: Government Bills and Orders
Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: I'll call the committee to order.

Bill 19
Veterinary Profession Amendment Act, 2002

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

MR. DANYLUK: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to rise today to present Bill 19, the Veterinary Profession Amendment Act, 2002, to Committee of the Whole.

The proposals contained in Bill 19 were developed by Human Resources and Employment in conjunction with the Alberta Veterinary Medical Association to improve the quality of veterinary service in the province by improving the regulation of professional veterinarians. These amendments bring the Veterinary Profession Act's investigative, disciplinary, and appeal provisions into line with the Health Professions Act, which is the current model for Alberta professional legislation.

The amendments also respond to the AVMA's request for greater transparency, accountability, and fairness in its governing legislation by increasing public representation to the AVMA's disciplinary and appeal bodies, also by replacing the current disciplinary processes relating to the professional misconduct with those contained in the HPA, also by providing for an alternative dispute resolution and allowing the provincial Ombudsman to investigate complaints about the AVMA.

There is also one amendment that addresses the veterinarian's traditional ability to prescribe, dispense, compound, and sell drugs. This amendment reflects other Alberta legislation that deals with drugs, namely the Pharmaceutical Profession Act and the Livestock Diseases Act, by including this activity in the definition of the veterinary medical services.

The Alberta College of Pharmacists has expressed concern that this proposed amendment will restrict the scope of practice granted to the Alberta pharmacists under the Pharmaceutical Profession Act. I am introducing for your consideration a House amendment to Bill 19 to address the college's concern. The House amendment is to section 2(2) of the Veterinary Profession Act, which specifies those persons who are exempt from the act's scope of practice provisions. The House amendment adds a new subsection.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: Hon. member, can you just hold for one second, please? The amendment that you are moving – has that been circulated?

MR. DANYLUK: No, it hasn't, and I was going to ask you to after about one more sentence.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: Okay.

MR. DANYLUK: But if you would like to do it now . . .

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: Maybe you can just pass it to the pages so that it can be distributed to every member. They've got it now? Great. You may proceed.

MR. DANYLUK: So would you like me to wait till everybody gets one?

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: You may proceed.

MR. DANYLUK: Okay. The House amendment adds a new section under section 2: 2.1, which states that a person whose professional or occupational practice is carried out under the authority of any other Alberta legislation is exempt from the Veterinary Profession Act's scope of practice. Mr. Chairman, I would like to clarify that this amendment is amendment A1, and there are two changes under one amendment. The one that I have just mentioned, if I can read it, please, is that section 2(2) is amended by adding the following after clause (h): "(i) the carrying out of the practice of a profession or occupation under the authority of any other enactment." Also, under section 16 we have a small misprint, and it is amended from the proposed section 34.1(3) by striking out "under subsection (2)" and substituting "under subsection (1)."

Mr. Chairman, if I could just briefly clarify, first, as I stated before, the Alberta College of Pharmacists together with a number of individuals and businesses have expressed concern about the proposed amendments contained under Bill 19, the Veterinary Profession Amendment Act, and the belief that this amendment will restrict the scope of practice for pharmacists and agriculture distributors. The House amendment that I have moved that specifies those persons who are exempt from the act's scope of practice will clarify this matter.

I think that's all, Mr. Chairman.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: We shall refer to the amendment that is before us as amendment A1. On the amendment, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Mr. Chairman, I just have a question for the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul. We had a fairly aggressive lobby from the pharmacists' association about this particular bill and their inability to dispense veterinary medicines with the changes proposed in here. Can the member assure the House that that particular problem is fully and adequately addressed through the proposed amendment?

MR. DANYLUK: To the hon. member opposite, yes, we have made contact with the pharmaceutical association. We have given them a copy of what the amendment is going to be. We have also contacted individuals, and I don't want to say all individuals because, yes, you are very right; there were a lot of individuals that did have concern, pharmacists that had called us. But the pharmaceutical association along with the agricultural dispensers as well as the veterinary association have given us, I guess if you want to call it, the okay and believe that our direction is right.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

MR. DUNFORD: Yes. Thanks, Mr. Chairman. I would like to give the same assurance that the amendment that is being proposed by the hon. member clears the way, then, for the pharmacists, for any of the other particular dealers to carry on with the normal business because the floor amendment exempts them from the veterinary act.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I would like to make the following comments for the record regarding amendment A1 to Bill 19, the Veterinary Profession Amendment Act, 2002. Certainly I, too, have had contact with not only the Alberta College of Pharmacists but certainly concerned consumers who for one reason or another across the dispensary counter became aware of what was considered a deficiency in this legislation. It is also my view that research has been done, and certainly the work that the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul has done on this bill is going to adequately address the concerns.

Now, there was no doubt that pharmacists did at one time have some concerns. We all recognize in this Assembly that pharmacists are trained to compound, dispense, and sell drugs for veterinary use. They are certainly knowledgeable about veterinarian medications. This includes drugs sold pursuant to a prescription and others that do not require a prescription.

In a letter that was copied to me from the pharmacists, the pharmacists themselves add that they currently provide compounding services to veterinarians and dispense medications prescribed by veterinarians. They state that this amendment would have certainly a substantive effect on the practice of pharmacy, the interrelationship between pharmacists and the veterinarians and the animal owners for whom pharmacists provide services. However, this is slightly different, but I think this will stand the test. The pharmacists thought that at section 2(2), "Subsection (1) . . . the practice of any profession or occupation by any person practicing under the authority of any other enactment," would be sufficient to deal with their concerns. There's an omission here of the phrase "by any person," but I don't see how that will affect the amendment, because they would be covered under the professional standards in this case of the Alberta College of Pharmacists.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, one has to understand that this bill is centred around Alberta's veterinarians, which have traditionally dispensed and sold medicines and drugs as part of their scope of practice. Certainly it is recognized in that, but somehow the role of the pharmacist was overlooked, and I believe this amendment will go a long way towards correcting that oversight.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

MR. DANYLUK: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I guess my response would be that it is very much to clarify that the Pharmaceutical Association and the dispensers, if you want to call it that, under agriculture have their own act that entitles them to dispense drugs for veterinary use only. In Bill 19 it says that veterinarians are able to dispense drugs for veterinary use. What ends up happening is that it didn't clarify that this did not give them exclusivity. So I think that the amendment very much addresses that it is not exclusivity, that there are other enactments that allow other bodies to dispense drugs. I don't know if that answers it.

MR. MASON: Mr. Chairman, I understand the intent that the hon. member has sent out, but I would just appreciate a little bit of guidance in terms of where to find the change and where the change goes and how it will actually work.

I see that A of the amendment says that "the following is added after section 2," which I am assuming is after section 2 of Bill 19, which is right at the beginning of the act. Correct? On the first page. Can you tell me . . . [interjection] Just this once, hon. member.

MR. DANYLUK: If you would look at the bill itself – right? – on page 3 after (g) we would add the section that would pertain to section 2(2)(i), which would be a new part to the amendment. This is basically the amendment act, Bill 19. If you look under the Veterinary Profession Act, on page 5 where you have (h) and then you have a (1), it would take place right before the (3) under (i).

MR. MASON: That's on the actual act?

MR. DANYLUK: On the actual act.

The amendment to Bill 19 would basically put that amendment into the bill, which is the Veterinary Profession Act, and it would put it in, as I said, on page 5, (i) right after (h).

MR. MASON: I want to make sure I understand this. Pardon my slowness. You know, sometimes you can vote for things and you don't understand them. That's not always the best way to do it.

The member indicated that on page 3 of the bill, the amendment here comes after (g), and it adds a letter (i). Is that correct? [interjection]

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands has the floor.

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Except that the amendment says that this is amending . . . Yes. Thank you. It's clicked for me now. Thank you.

[The clauses of Bill 19 as amended agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: Opposed? Carried.

Bill 16

Racing Corporation Amendment Act, 2002

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill?

The hon. Minister of Gaming.

MR. STEVENS: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I wish to make a few brief comments in committee. This bill has much to commend it. First, it's short; it's seven pages long. Secondly, it is the work of the horse racing industry that gave rise to this. They were unanimous in recommending to government these changes to this legislation, which provides governance with respect to the horse racing industry.

Briefly, I wish to just highlight some of the sections. There is a name change reflected in sections 1, 2, and 3; namely, the act and the corporation being changed from Alberta Racing Corporation to Horse Racing Alberta. This change was requested by the industry to recognize the formation of one industrywide organization that can represent the interests of all Alberta horse racing industry stakeholders and their associations.

In section 4 of the bill there is an amendment expanding the board from seven to 12 members, and there is also a provision that amends the current board membership, which remains the same, to add representatives of A tracks, for example Northlands and Stampede; B tracks, for example Lethbridge and Grande Prairie; and other racing breed associations, for example, quarter horse, Appaloosa, and Arabian. Section 4 also deals with appointing the chair and public board members and term of office, eligibility for board membership, subsequent name change, appointments by minister, and quorum.

Section 5 deals with the designation of "chair."

The reporting requirements in section 6 of the bill are important in that the current requirement for an annual audited end-of-year report to the government and the tabling of this information in the Legislature are maintained, but it is expanded in the sense that the reporting requirements will include a multiyear business plan and performance measures, which will improve the accountability of the industry to government and Albertans.

Section 8 sets out transitional provisions.

That would basically cover the pith and substance of this bill.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. I'm happy to have the opportunity to speak in Committee of the Whole to Bill 16, the Racing Corporation Amendment Act, 2002. Having looked at this bill and considered it now for a couple of weeks since it was introduced and since second reading, I'm less and less inclined to support the bill.

A couple of reasons. I heard the minister just say that the horse racing industry in fact requested it, and this follows what they're interested in seeing or changes that they approve of. I'm also aware that a number of the changes were requested or recommended by the Auditor General according to some deficiencies that were pointed out by the Auditor General around the Alberta Racing Corporation. Well, the Auditor General went in depth quite a bit in the '99-2000 report with concerns around the racing industry renewal initiatives, the division of the purse:

1. Slot machine revenues paid to date to the Alberta Racing Corporation and the racetrack operators have not complied with governing legislation.
2. The accountability for slot machine revenues paid to date to the Alberta Racing Corporation and the racetrack operators has not been adequate.
3. The accountability of the Ministry for the performance of the Alberta Racing Corporation is not adequate.

There was legislative noncompliance by

Alberta Racing Corporation and Northlands Park with respect to proceeds from slot machines at the racetrack in Edmonton. Similar arrangements exist between the Commission, the Corporation, and the racetrack operator in Lethbridge, and between the Commission and the racetrack operator in Calgary.

All of those agreements were looked at, and there were a number of issues of noncompliance. In particular, "certain expenditures made by the commission are not in compliance with the applicable governing legislation." The commission paid to retailers for operating the electronic gaming activities were 15 percent of gaming revenues, wagers less prizes, but as disclosed in note 11 of the financial statements agreements between the Commission, the Alberta Racing Corporation, and racetrack operators . . . provide for payment of 33 1/3% of gaming revenues at these facilities to the Alberta Racing Corporation and 33 1/3% to the Operator.

Essentially, in the opinion of the Auditor General, and all of this is coming out of the '99-2000 report, the payments to the Alberta Racing Corporation, and the payments to the Operators and the Stampede in excess of the normal retailer commission of 15%, appear to be payments intended to support the Racing Industry Renewal Initiative and are not retailer commissions.

As a result, payments to the Alberta Racing Commission totaling . . .

And he goes through and details it: $5,891,000 and $4.4 million in '99, and $4.7 million in the previous year.

. . . do not comply with s.26 of the Gaming and Liquor Act because this lottery revenue was not transferred to the Lottery Fund.

Now, there were actions taken by the commission following the Auditor General's concerns, but part of the action that was taken was in fact this legislation. I observe that this government has an uncanny ability to come in to prop up a sector exactly when it's too late, and that's my impression about this.

Certainly the people that I talked to all indicated that in 10 years' time there seems to be no question but that all horse racing would likely be simulcast of the large races and that for a small market like Alberta we would definitely still have what we call the B tracks but that we likely wouldn't have any of the A tracks left because no one is interested in attending and betting on the races. If we're looking at 10 years down the road to that, why are we looking at injecting significant amounts of money into this sector now? Total parimutuel betting has declined by 48 percent since 1991. The number of live race days has dropped from 381 days in 1999 to 221 days in 2001, so that's 42 percent fewer race days. This is a sector that is diminishing and seems to be on a gradual decline, and now's the time the government decides to come in.

Now, what we've heard the Premier say in press conferences and things is: well, allowing the slot machines to go into the racing centres diminished and harmed the racing industry, and therefore we're now going to allow them to have more slot machines, which is somehow going to help them dig themselves out of this, which just strikes me as a circular argument and circular logic as well. If we accept that having the slot machines in the racetracks in the first place detracted from the betting on the horse races and affected the betting on the horse races, I don't know that the solution to it is now putting more slot machines in there so that there could be more money going into the slot machines, which is then taken from that in a split with the racetracks, and the horse owners and breeders get a larger percentage to help give larger purses. This is not making a lot of sense to me here. I mean, the government may feel bad for having hastened the decline of this, but I don't know that that's a good reason for taxpayers to have to forgo revenue.

I've also heard the excuse coming from the other side: well, don't worry; this is not taxpayer money that's going to these people. Well, excuse me; it's forgone revenue that would be benefiting taxpayers were it not now redirected into the purses and being won by the horsemen. If that split was not the percentage that's being contemplated, then there would be more money that would be going into the lottery fund and that would be disbursed out through the charities and nonprofits and to the other core businesses that the government pays for out of the lottery fund dollars. In fact, we are talking about forgone revenue here very clearly. So it does affect the taxpayers because there's less money there to give them programs and services.

So we have a situation where we have a sector that is diminishing or declining for a number of reasons. Now the government comes in and says: "No. We want to change the deal so that hopefully the sector would thrive again." But nothing is giving indicators that in fact that would happen. The needle is pointing in the other direction.

We are not changing that much when I look at the act. We're increasing the board members from seven to 12 and we're changing the name of the thing, but frankly there's a section in here that says that for anybody that was appointed to the old organization, the ARC, we won't count the number of years they'd served on that board. They can start over again from zero and be appointed to this new one. So we could have people that would have served a total of 12 years. Well, how much of a difference is this making in a renewal and a new direction if you end up basically taking everybody from the old board and having them on the new board and they get to serve twice as long?

Part of the increase was to allow for more seats for the other voices that need to be brought into this discussion. It was felt that there was an overwhelming preponderance of votes and voice from the horse owners' sector. So, well, yes. All right. This allows for racetracks to be represented on the A level.

(g) 2 persons agreed on and appointed by the operators of race tracks licensed under the rules as "A" level race tracks;

(h) one person agreed on and appointed by the operators of racetracks licensed under the rules as "B" level racetracks.

But then that's countered with three members of the general public, who traditionally have been horse owners or horse breeders. So we're two steps forward and two steps back on this one. I don't see how this is going to solve any of the problems that have been identified.

Now, there have also been some things incorporated that were addressing the issues that were raised by the Auditor General, in particular that there be reporting and that there be compliance with the rules that were set out for the rest of the government to operate by. That was a complaint of the Auditor General in the past, that the ARC didn't listen to what the ministry was telling it to do, didn't report, and wouldn't respond: that sort of thing. So that's now put into the legislation, but is that the reason to go ahead and support the legislation? I don't know that it is. It does strike me that there's a lot of effort and a lot of money being put into a sector that seems to be going backwards, not forwards. I don't know that that's a good enough reason to be taking money out of the lottery fund that could well be going to enhance more Albertans' lives. I don't know whether the money going here is going to have as much effect or touch as many Albertans positively than if in fact that money was directed through the lottery fund into other things.

I guess part of it is that essentially we are talking about an entertainment here. I tried to think about any other commercial entertainment that's provided for the public that gets that kind of subsidy and assistance from the government. For anybody else it's paid for by their providers. I mean Hollywood movies are paid for by the providers. Golf courses are paid for by the providers. The monster truck rally, ski resorts: I mean, they're paid for by the people that are going to be making the profit out of it.

So we have an instance there where there's support being put into a sector that's diminishing. I don't see that Horse Racing Alberta is significantly different than the Alberta Racing Corporation. It's the same people. Their term starts over again. The number of seats that were meant to balance between the horse racers and the tracks ends up coming out in the wash because, yeah, there were two more seats there but there are three more possibilities out of the public members.

I don't think we're that much further forward. I haven't heard convincing arguments from the minister on the bill, and I don't see a good reason to be supporting this. I don't think it's that much to the advantage of Albertans. So having put in my nonwagered two bits on this, I'll take my seat and listen to others and what they have to say.

Thank you.

MR. STEVENS: There are two or three comments, Mr. Chairman, from Edmonton-Centre that bear some response. A comment was made with respect to the Auditor General's report regarding the horse racing industry a couple of years ago. That particular matter was dealt with in the year 2000 through new agreements and through payments from the Alberta lottery fund that go through the annual appropriation process. So this particular legislation does not deal with that particular issue, as suggested by the member.

I note with some interest the degree of certainty that Edmonton-Centre has about the demise of this industry in about 10 years' time. I certainly would appreciate any information that the hon. member has in that regard, because of course as government we will be working with this industry to ensure that their business plan does in fact the opposite, and that is, grows the industry. Since the hon. member is concerned about accountability and the appropriate use of government funds and wishes, I am sure, the best for this industry, I would ask that she share with me, as an hon. member who cares about those things, the information that she has showing that this particular industry is doomed to demise within the next 10 years. So I'll be waiting with some interest for receipt of that in the next few days.

With respect to the appointment of the board and the transition period which allows existing members to continue on without taking into account previous time, once again that is something that this particular industry asked for. We do not do the appointment of the board, and this particular group has asked for it. They feel that that is the best way to deal with the matter, and candidly, I can see no reason not to accommodate them if that in fact is what they think is best for the industry.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I will not be supporting this bill. It's interesting, the kind of precedent that this government is willing to set in terms of their interest in and willingness to prop up or subsidize businesses at a huge cost to those programs that government should rightly be in such as properly taking care of children who have no one to take care of them. We see the government now involved in studies from two various departments, in spite of what the Premier has said, for pet shoots, where they extend the ability of those elk farms to continue to operate regardless of the kinds of costs associated with them such as disease and contamination. We see them now propping up commercial fishermen. Why? Because the fisherpeople asked for this, as did the pet-shoot people. What they want is government to bail them out and to provide subsidies or supports for them so that they can . . .

MR. MacDONALD: Did you say "pet shoots"?

MS CARLSON: Pet shoots. Yes. Elk ranchers, who have been harvesting elk for more than 20 years, mostly for the velvet on the antlers, now have an overabundance of supply. The elk antler velvet market has dropped. It's virtually collapsed.

AN HON. MEMBER: Who could've predicted it?

MS CARLSON: No kidding.

DR. NICOL: The little blue pill took over.

MS CARLSON: Yes, that could be exactly what happened. [interjection] I wouldn't know. I mean, that's more your venue than it is mine.

AN HON. MEMBER: It's worse than the Peruvian anchovy collapse.

MS CARLSON: That's right. Who could've anticipated that market collapsing?

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: Hon. members, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie has the floor.

MS CARLSON: What else has this government looked at propping up or subsidizing or expanding at the request of industry? Of course, we have the Swan Hills waste treatment centre, which the government has various ways of deciding how they will prop up and defend here in this Assembly. So that's right off the top of my head. Pet shoots have asked for help. Commercial fishermen have asked for help. Swan Hills waste treatment plant. How about the Ridley Grain terminal? Once again, more dollars propping up that. If we go back just a little way, we see some huge fiascoes: NovAtel, MagCan. The list is endless on how once this government gets involved in propping up a business industry, it collapses or it completely distorts the marketplace. It just doesn't work, and it costs this government and therefore Alberta taxpayers lots of money. So when the minister asked the Member for Edmonton-Centre how it is that she thinks that this industry is going to collapse within the next years, well, I tell you: how does he say that it isn't? Why else would it be coming to government for a bailout, and why else would government be supplying it?

I can't support that when we see day after day in this Assembly children left at risk, a government who refuses to take responsibility for them. All they can talk about is that the sole responsibility for raising these children is with the parents. Well, I tell you that the sole responsibility for raising children is with the communities, and when the parents aren't able to or don't want to for whatever reason, then it is our responsibility as good citizens of this country to provide that support, a responsibility that this government refuses to accept even though they were duly elected to do so.

So for those reasons I cannot support this bill.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I, too, would like to get on the record regarding Bill 16, the Racing Corporation Amendment Act, 2002. Certainly the Alberta horse racing industry has been a proud part of Alberta's history, and I would like to see it continue.

Now, we look at the horse racing industry in this province, and there certainly have been problems. There have been problems with standardbreds. That part of the horse racing industry seemed quite resentful that the thoroughbreds were getting a lot more racing days than they were. The total number of live racing days at A racetracks in Alberta dropped from 382 in 1991 to 221 days in 2001, and that's quite a decline. Certainly in that same period of time we saw an increase in other gambling activity. Mr. Chairman, there has been an influx of VLTs and various forms of gambling at casinos, whether it be card games or dice. I don't go to casinos that often, so I can't tell you what exactly goes on there, but certainly there is a huge increase in the number of casinos and ways for one to part from their hard-earned dollars at such facilities. As that activity rose in this province, certainly horse racing declined.

Many of the horse owners, particularly the standardbred owners, were so frustrated that they contemplated leaving the province with their stock. In fact, this led to a realization of the high quality of standardbred horses in this province, because with the frustrations that were expressed here, people actually trotted to other provinces, other jurisdictions, and their horses did very well at those levels. That's an indication of exactly the quality of horse breeding and certainly horse training in this province. Not only has the number of live race days at A tracks declined in the last decade, but as I understand it, horse breeding in Alberta has declined to levels too low to support race meets in the future. If the hon. Minister of Gaming has a figure that is more up to date than what I have, then I would be very grateful if he would share that not only with this member but with all members of the Assembly.

Now, certainly I didn't realize the consequences and the significance it had on the government of the race last December between the hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne and the Premier conducted at Northlands. The hon. member will have to excuse me. It's the Premier's horse that I remember as being Dukes Cigar, and I can't recall the name of the hon. member's horse, but it was a distant second. The Premier's horse, Dukes Cigar, was much faster on that cold night.

MS BLAKEMAN: If you were a backbencher, would you beat the Premier?

MR. MacDONALD: You bet.

Mr. Chairman, the significant event of that night was the fact that there were going to be extra efforts made to support the horse racing industry. In recognizing that the number of live race days has certainly declined and that as a result of that horse breeding activities and training in this province have also declined, I don't think the changes that are proposed here are necessarily the best changes.

The hon. minister was talking earlier about the industry and the position the industry would be in in 10 years, and I just don't know if this is going to solve the problems. It is possible that this is only a gesture to the horse racing industry. The proposed increase in slot allocations to the tracks and expansion of gaming entertainment centres may well, as the hon. members have discussed, doom the live racing industry to a continued downward trend. We're talking about business plans and that in 10 years it's going to be a centre of considerable excellence for the province, but what about the estimates of the revenues needed from slot machines over the next four years? It's going to increase, I believe, from $3.7 million in this current year to close to $40 million in four years. That's over a tenfold increase in four years. That's a significant amount of money. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie was talking about children and priorities, and a pool of cash like that could go a long way to solving a lot of problems with children's issues in this province. It certainly could.

Also, how many machines in total are taxpayers looking at purchasing, and what is the cost of these machines? As I understand it, the individuals who do the maintenance on these machines are considered an essential service, and it is noted with a great deal of interest by this member that the individuals, the electronic technicians who calibrate and service these machines, are considered an essential service. So who's addicted to what here? That would have to be the question.

Before I conclude, Mr. Chairman, I would like to know what percentage of the projected revenue from these operations will be allocated to addiction treatment. Will that be in the budget of AADAC, in the corporate business plan of AADAC? Certainly there is money set aside in there for problem gaming, but is there going to be a little bit of money set aside from this revenue source to provide AADAC with perhaps an increase in their budget? Now, there are three expenses here: treatment, prevention, and information. Certainly AADAC is following through with information for Albertans to inform them about addictions and AADAC's services. What amount of money, again, what percentage of revenue if any would be used for this purpose?

Now, certainly we're all aware of the recommendations from the horse racing review and the indications that the board of the new corporation is responsible for appropriate positioning to control its destiny with respect to the potential legalization of Internet wagering on horse racing. Again, I would have to ask the hon. minister: what concern for both these A tracks and B tracks does the government have regarding the competition from Internet wagering on horse racing? Also, how does the province propose to legalize this Internet wagering?

Mr. Chairman, there's certainly been much mentioned throughout this province in policy debates after this budget, after this unfortunate budget, and it seems to have struck a chord with the citizens of this province that there were so many cutbacks, yet horses are certainly not cut at all.

MR. MASON: Not even cutting horses?

MR. MacDONALD: No, not even cutting horses. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands is concerned about cutting horses, but cutting horses are not going to be cut by this government, regardless of what sort of fiscal dilemmas they face.

Now, I won't get on my high horse about the increase in gaming revenue from $17 million to over $30 million for the horse racing industry, but it is symbolic of a government that seems to have lost direction. I would have to say that whenever you look at the past and you look at the proud history of horse racing and horse raising in this province, one would have to conclude that it's certainly a part of our heritage, a rich part of our heritage. But I would have to side with the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie that at this point in the province's history children come first.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I would like at this time to introduce an amendment to Bill 16. Would you like me just to pause for a moment while the pages distribute the amendment?

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The pages have just begun distributing the amendment, so, hon. member, you may proceed.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I would, then, move that Bill 16, the Racing Corporation Amendment Act, 2002, be amended in section 6 in the proposed section 10 by adding the following after subsection (1):

(1.1) For the fiscal year 2002-2003, a multi-year business plan referred to in subsection (1) must outline the measures necessary for the Corporation to become self-sufficient by the fiscal year 2005-2006 at which time the Corporation would not be eligible for funding from the Lottery Fund or any other provincial agency or program.

Mr. Chairman, I just would like to make a few comments on this. I put my own position on the record at second reading with respect to this bill as providing the prerequisite from the government's point of view of continuing subsidization of this industry on an ongoing basis. I quoted from some sources in the industry indicating that that in fact was a part of the government's desire. We of course expressed concern that this one industry in particular had been singled out as an exception to the government's otherwise sound policy of not providing public subsidies for private industries, and that of course had been something that the government had made quite a political point of over the years, yet we have a situation here which is a glaring exception to that principle. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie has elucidated several other examples, all seem to be involving the raising of some kind of animal, whether it would be a thoroughbred or a fish or an elk.

MS BLAKEMAN: PCBs.

MR. MASON: Well, I suppose PCBs or three-headed chickens in Swan Hills. I don't know.

Nevertheless, Mr. Chairman, I think that there is nothing wrong with this bill except for one thing. It sets out, as it now stands, the requirement that there must be a multiyear business plan, and that has to include "measures . . . used in assessing the performance of the Corporation," but nowhere is there a plan or a clear direction coming in this bill or apparently from the government in general to wean this industry off the public tax roll, and I think that that's what is missing.

So the amendment would require the business plans, which are a good thing by themselves as long as they say something, as long as they do something meaningful, to include a plan to get off the public dole for the horse racing industry and provide a three-year time frame to do that. So we're not saying, you know, that just right now you have to go out and earn your own living. We are saying that we'll give you some support. I think this is a concession. It's certainly a concession from my point of view, because I honestly think, Mr. Chairman, that the horse racing industry shouldn't get a nickel of public money.

Now, the Premier in response to questions put to him by myself and other members in the Assembly has talked about this not being a subsidy. He's repeated this line. This is the message box of the government with respect to this: it's not taxpayers' dollars; it's money that comes from gambling. [some applause] Of course, some people who are not going to think about this in too critical a way would be tending to applaud that, Mr. Chairman, but in fact it's not the case.

What has happened is that the government has gotten into gambling in a bigger and bigger way as a means of supporting public programs. They are of course getting out of taxing corporations and wealthy individuals in a bigger and bigger way, so the proportion of revenue that is necessary to maintain some of these programs from gambling sources has risen accordingly. We're now over a billion dollars of budgeted revenue from gambling, most of which supports ordinary government operations that provide valuable programs to the citizens of this province. It may not technically be tax revenue, but it is revenue that the government uses in place of tax revenue to fund programs. Of course, if you take that money away from public programs and you apply it to a subsidy of a declining industry in this province, you are in effect taking taxpayers' money or money that would otherwise benefit taxpayers and giving it to a private industry.

So, Mr. Chairman, the Premier is quite, quite wrong in his characterization of this as not a subsidy and not taxpayers' money. It may come from a VLT, but it belongs to the taxpayers, and it ought to support their programs and not the programs of a private industry.

What the amendment does is require the business plans to have a three-year program in a planned and systematic way to become self-sufficient, and this government should be committing to that. If they insist that today this horse racing industry requires public subsidy, then they need to say when that's going to stop and how much it's going to be in two years and how much it's going to be in three years, and if it's going to continue after three years, the government needs to have a plan and not just keep pumping money into this industry with no accountability and with no intention on the part of the industry to ever give up the money.

Do you think, Mr. Chairman, that this industry will of its own accord say to the government: "Listen, we feel kind of bad about taking your money. We'd like over a period of three years or five years to stop taking your money, and we're going to work really hard to get off the public dole, because we don't want that $33 million anymore. We don't feel right about taking it." Well, of course they won't. So it means that the government has to say that to them. It's the government that needs to take the responsibility to say: "Listen, you're big boys now. You're grown up. It's time you got a job."

I think that the government has given us no indication that they're prepared to take their responsibility seriously in this regard, and that's why this amendment is before the House. We think that the act by itself is fine, except what's behind it is a reorganization of the industry to continue subsidization, and this would put a stop to the subsidization. We are not quite frankly expecting the minister to agree to the amendment, I regret to say, but I hope that some members will. I think nothing is more consistent with the avowed aims of this government with respect to subsidization of private business than this amendment. So I really would hope that some members on the opposite side will stand up and vote for this amendment. I think it's a reasonable thing. I think it's a good balance, and I think that it ought to be considered the fiscal responsibility act for the horse racing industry and for the Minister of Gaming. If the Minister of Gaming can't support this, I would hope that he would bring forward his own plan to show on a sustained basis how the government is going to get the horse racing industry to stand on its own two feet.

MR. MacDONALD: Four feet.

MR. MASON: Its own four feet. Thank you, hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, for that nice little addition to my speech.

Mr. Chairman, just in conclusion, I believe that this is a prudent, fiscally responsible amendment to the act. I think that it's consistent with the government's philosophy in most areas of business. It addresses a serious concern, and that is the concern of priorities for the government. This gambling revenue, not the best source of funding for government programs, is nevertheless something the government has become very dependent upon to finance ordinary programs for ordinary Albertans throughout the province in education, health care, social services, a wide range of programs, and if the government is going to finance programs that way, then it ought to apply the same priorities to that money as it does to income tax money or oil and gas money and not exempt it from that. I think that this will be helpful both to the horse racing industry and to the government to help it find its true principles. Certainly, from our point of view, being a fiscally responsible party in this Legislature, it's something that we strongly advocate that all parties ought to support.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. In regard to the amendment as proposed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, it certainly is noteworthy. Now, a multiyear business plan as was outlined would have saved a lot of grief with the community lottery boards. They were pulled out from under the feet of many different community organizations across the province without warning, and this amendment from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands certainly provides ample warning to the horse racing industry of notice that they have to be back on all four feet, or four hooves here, by 2005-2006 or that's it and that there has to come a time. I don't know if that's too little time or too much time, but certainly it is noteworthy.

Now, all other government departments follow three-year business plans. Other jurisdictions, other governments have 10-year business plans, and that's also noteworthy.

I will keep my remarks brief regarding this amendment, but when hon. members vote on this amendment, please consider what was done to the community lottery boards. They were just cut unannounced. There was no planning. For instance, there was an arena in the constituency of Edmonton-Gold Bar, Kenilworth arena. The city of Edmonton was planning a major overhaul of that arena after many years and was planning on using $300,000 of the community lottery board money. Unfortunately, they're going to have to do without, because the rug was pulled out from underneath them. The Citadel Theatre is the same. If we were to pass this amendment as proposed by the hon. member, that certainly wouldn't happen to the horse racing industry. The horse racing industry wouldn't be faced with the dilemma that the city is going to have over the Kenilworth arena or the Citadel Theatre. That's just yet one example.

With those remarks I would urge all hon. members of this Assembly to please support the amendment as proposed by the hon.

Member for Edmonton-Highlands. A business plan is a business plan.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. minister.

MR. STEVENS: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to start by thanking the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands for his interest in this bill and for taking the time and effort to put forward an amendment and giving forward a very cogent, well-reasoned speech in favour of his amendment and also the hon. member opposite of the Liberal Party for his comments.

It seems to me, however, that in this particular case I'm going to have to urge my colleagues not to support this. I think that when it comes to accountability, the legislation provides for accountability in a couple of ways. First of all, there is going to be a business plan as part of the process that the horse racing industry is going to have to put together on an annual basis. It is going to be part of an audited process, and it's going to be part of a report that is presented to the minister and which is going to be tabled here on an annual basis. I can encourage the member to continue to show up during Gaming estimates for the years ahead so that we can continue to see how the horse racing industry is in fact doing in accordance with the business plans which will be part of that particular report.

Now, I would also like to thank the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands for listening to answers of the government, questions that you have posed to the Premier, questions that you have posed to me in Public Accounts. Clearly, you understand what our position is on this. I would say this: the money that is involved in the racing industry renewal initiative does come exclusively from racing entertainment centres, which were set up exclusively as part of this particular program. It is not a matter of taking casinos and diverting something from there. Rather, it is establishing specific locations which are proximate to racing centres and taking revenue that is generated from those centres and using part of it for support of this particular industry. I think it is reasonable to say that such revenue is derived solely as a result of this particular initiative and that but for the initiative those locations would not exist, that revenue would not exist. It's further reasonable to say that that type of revenue is not tax dollars.

So with those comments, once again, I am unable to support the amendment as proposed.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Just to close very briefly, Mr. Chairman. Well, I think that it is unfortunate that the minister is advising his colleagues to vote against the amendment. I had hoped that some of them in their hearts would think that this was perhaps a good way to go.

I do want to just clarify one point I think that the minister made, and that is that the revenue comes out of the so-called racing centres. What these really are, Mr. Chairman, are VLT centres established at racetracks at which the operators of the racetracks are allowed to keep a very much higher percentage of the VLT revenue for their purposes than is the normal take from a VLT anywhere else. So they've been set up specifically for the purpose of providing a VLT financial opportunity for the owners of racetracks in order to provide subsidies to them. In other uses of VLTs the money is used in a different fashion, and the revenues derived therefrom are used to support a wide range of government programs. So it's a very, very fine distinction that the government is making.

In actual fact what it is is a gambling subsidy to racetracks because they cannot generate enough money from betting on horses to sustain the industry, and it is propping up an industry that's been made obsolete and been made obsolete largely because of the government's decision to get into electronic gambling in a large way. So I think the government may feel some guilt about it, and perhaps this guilt has been used to extract this policy. It's not other competing private businesses that have put the horse racing industry in trouble; it's the government getting into the gambling industry, seeing it as a golden goose to finance government operations and to finance tax cuts.

So with those comments, Mr. Chairman, I will take my seat and await with bated breath the vote on my amendment. Thank you.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: Hon. members, the amendment before us will be referred to as amendment A1.

[Motion on amendment A1 lost]

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: On the bill as we have before us.

DR. NICOL: Just very briefly, Mr. Chairman, what we've got here is a bill that basically looks at what is in effect putting in place the organizational changes as requested by the industry. What we're dealing with subsequently is the whole bunch of issues that come up under the context of budget debate, lottery fund allocation, regulations associated with lotteries in terms of the issues that come out about the appropriate level of sharing of revenues from lottery, and of course the issue of how we deal with forgone revenue in the context of these different changes and the issues of letting an industry have a preferential rate of retention of revenues from the gambling licences that they hold in conjunction with these racing centres.

In the context of this bill it does provide the structure that is set up for the industry as they would like to see it, to get more people involved in the decision-making on the industry and to provide them with the broader scope that they can deal with. I guess, Mr. Chairman, when you look at it from the perspective of how to do it, what we end up with is a very significant, different structure here than what we have in a lot of the other agriculture enterprises. This is a very legislated, very rigid form of participation on the board. It's much less industry-driven than what we see in a lot of the other sectors, but I guess that ties into the fact that here we do have that interrelationship between the agriculture community, the horse racing community, and the gambling/wagering sector.

But if we look at it, you know, from the other perspectives of the rest of the ag community, they end up not having those kinds of same restraints because they're dealing with a commodity that doesn't have the social implications that are reflected here. So when we look at it from that perspective, I think that, you know, there are a lot of things that are wrong with the way the government is dealing with the allocation of dollars out of the lottery fund, setting the rates and that, but in the context of the structural change that's allowed by this bill, it does do what the industry wants, so we have to look at it from that perspective.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

[The clauses of Bill 16 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: Opposed? Carried.

Bill 20

Justice Statutes Amendment Act, 2002

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. minister.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to offer just a few comments in response to comments that have been made earlier in debate both at second reading and committee just to clarify some items that have come up. It's been pointed out that under Bill 20 we're dealing with a number of different statutes, and in particular first I'd like to address the question of the Limitations Act and the Public Trustee Act amendments.

The amendments to the Limitations Act are in the nature of dealing with an issue that has come up, a potential challenge to the Limitations Act relative to the running of limitations periods against children. The Member for Edmonton-Centre, in addressing that in her debate, I think perhaps inadvertently confused what was being done here, and that's understandable because this is a fairly complex piece. The situation as it stands now is that there's a distinction between children who have guardians and children who don't have guardians: children who have guardians limitation periods run against, and children who don't have guardians limitation periods don't run against. The potential challenge that could be taken to that would be that we're discriminating against children by class. We don't of course wish to discriminate against anybody, so we want to make it so that the Limitations Act operates consistently with respect to children, regardless of whether they have a guardian or don't have a guardian in place. So that's the clear intention of the amendment here: to make sure that all children are treated the same with respect to limitation periods.

Having said that, then the question is: should a limitation period ever run against a child? So the next step is to put in place the mechanism by which in appropriate circumstances or at appropriate times somebody who ought to be sued by a child can move that process forward.

Then we come to the question of: how do you protect the child's interests? How do you make sure the child's interests are protected in that process? Thus the provisions relative to the Public Trustee Act, which says that if you wish to start a limitation period running where a child is involved, you have to give notice to the child's guardian, if there is one, and you have to also give notice to the public trustee. The public trustee is then put in a position where they must investigate to make sure that somebody is appropriately taking care of the situation and if necessary can apply to the courts for instruction.

If an adult, a parent is in place and is taking care of the child's interest, then the public trustee need have no further involvement. If the public trustee is concerned about whether the child's interest is being protected, then the public trustee can go to court, ask for instructions, ask for the opportunity to appoint a next friend or act on the child's behalf themselves or in some way ensure that the child's interest is protected and in appropriate circumstances can ask the court actually to ensure that the limitation period doesn't run against the child so that the limitation period wouldn't run until the child turned 18.

Those are the mechanisms that are in place. It's really a question of making sure that the law is constitutionally sound and can be defended, runs against all children regardless of distinction about whether they have a guardian or don't have a guardian, and puts in place a mechanism whereby the public trustee can ensure that a child's interests are protected. When I read the debate and listened to the debate from the hon. member with respect to that, I thought that there was some confusion with respect to those items. I hope that that clarifies what the clear intent of those provisions are.

There were also comments made with respect to the Provincial Offences Procedure Act and in particular – and I heard these comments again with respect to the Solicitor General's estimates – the surcharge with respect to the victims of crime fund. What is implicit in the act and implicit in the budget but probably not expressly stated someplace is that the victims of crime fund actually benefits from the changes, not from the changes in POPA. The Provincial Offences Procedure Act allows us to keep 20 percent of the funds coming in from ticket revenue for the operations of the process. In order to do that, however, under the budget the actual fines were raised by 20 percent. The fined amount is 20 percent higher than it was before so that municipalities still get just about the same revenue. It doesn't quite work, but it's close to the same revenue as they got before.

However, the corollary of that is that the 7 percent surcharge goes on top of the fine revenue, so the 7 percent surcharge to the victims of crime fund has also gone up by 20 percent. The victims of crime fund actually benefits, although I don't think that that's been explicitly stated anywhere. So I thought I'd take the opportunity to clear up that particular issue.

I won't dwell on the issue of the Fatal Accidents Act and the Survival of Actions Act, because I think that's been presented ably by Edmonton-Calder earlier in discussion. I appreciate the support that has been given by Edmonton-Centre with respect to what's happening there. It's not an easy issue for many people, but it's important that we do the right thing with respect to the issue. Now, that's what we have attempted to try and accomplish: to ensure that families of victims of wrongful death have an opportunity to be fairly compensated but that the problem that was created with respect to the Survival of Actions Act is corrected so that we're consistent with other jurisdictions. As I say, I won't dwell further on that, but I did want to take the opportunity to clear up those two other items.

MS CARLSON: Point of order.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, on a point of order.

Point of Order
Approval of Amendments

MS CARLSON: Mr. Chairman, under Standing Order 74, do government amendments not have to be stamped by Parliamentary Counsel for approval? Mine's not. Amendment to Bill 20, government amendment, amends section, A, 2(2)(b).

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: Hon. member, I have been advised that . . .

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I see it now. It's very tiny, up in the corner.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: Okay. Thank you.

Hon. members, the amendment that has been referred to hasn't been moved. Okay. So the hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General has not moved an amendment as yet to which a clarification was sought.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre on the bill.

Debate Continued

MS BLAKEMAN: Okay. This is part 3 of responding to everything that's been brought forward in this omnibus bill, Bill 20, the Justice Statutes Amendment Act, 2002. With the changes in the Standing Orders we no longer are allowed the half hour in second reading to speak to omnibus bills changing more than three statutes, so I've had to come at this in three different parts, one in second reading and two in Committee of the Whole. This is my third go at it, and the only part that I haven't spoken to now is the civil enforcement section.

Just before I go into that, I will thank the minister for the clarification on the Public Trustee Act and the Limitations Act, sections that I had spoken to earlier. My concern there is obviously that we not be inadvertently creating a situation where minors can be pressured or squeezed to get involved in an action when they don't want to and that they should be fully supported in allowing the clock to not start running until they reach the age of majority. So I'm glad that I did bring that up. I may well have misunderstood, but I'm glad I did it so that we get the clarification on the record.

The second issue the minister brought up has totally slipped my mind. Oh, the fines. Actually that's very good news, and once again I'm glad I brought it up because now I have the minister on the record with it. If that's in fact going to give us a slight nominal increase in the fines that are going to the victim's surcharge, that's fine by me. It probably should have been more clearly set out in either the minister's remarks or in the legislation itself, but nice to have that clarified.

The last part but by far probably taking up the most room in Bill 20 is the changes that are being proposed to the Civil Enforcement Act. I understand that these changes have been recommended as the result of a review process that is coming forward from people working in the area who are saying that these are deficiencies or these need to be updated or changed so that the process works more smoothly. I appreciate that, but at the same time I'm reluctant to let this go without any commentary at all, because in fact in many ways the changes to the Civil Enforcement Act are more likely to touch Albertans' lives than some of the other changes that are being contemplated here.

For example, the Public Trustee Act with regard to minors and the Limitations Act aren't going to come up that often in people's lives, but the chances that you're involved one way or another in the Civil Enforcement Act are much higher. A full third of the bill deals with changes to the Civil Enforcement Act. So when we say, "Well, who will be affected by this?" really it's all creditors who will be subject to the act, and that's virtually every business in Alberta, since most of them at one time or another are trying to recover funds that are owed to them. Then the rest of us as consumers are also affected by this, because I think we have an interest in ensuring that whatever process is in place to recover funds is fair and provides an adequate opportunity for debtors to discharge a debt before things get out of control and property is seized or other steps are taken that can be difficult to recover from.

So the Civil Enforcement Act does deal with a mechanism to recover money or in some cases objects to which an individual is legally entitled. This would usually happen in one of two ways. One, you get a money judgment from the court, you register that judgment, and you attempt to collect on that judgment. The second way would be that certain kinds of contracts carry with them the ability inside the contract to allow the creditor to seize under what's known as a power of distress. The difference there is that you wouldn't have to first sue to get the court judgment; you rely on the contract.

The sections that are being amended deal with these processes for sorting out priorities and who gets first claim and second claim, competing complainants in other words. It's also, I'm sure, the experience of many that when there's somebody in trouble, a business or a person in trouble, there's going to likely be more than one person looking to collect a debt from them, so there has to be a way of determining who's first in line, who's second, et cetera, just kind of working out all the ground rules for everybody to follow. So I'm not going to go through each and every section that's being talked about here, but I want to touch on some of the ones that I think need to be highlighted just so people are aware of what's being contemplated here.

When we look at the existing section 9, it enables certain civil enforcement agencies to contract to the sheriff's office, acting on behalf of the Crown, to carry out certain things done traditionally by the public office. Now, this is an area that the Liberal opposition has expressed concerns about in the past. The concern is that if there isn't pretty strong oversight by the Crown, it can lead to activities like we sometimes see with our neighbours to the south. I remember that when I was younger, there was a very popular movie called Repo Man, and that's the kind of activity that you can get involved with, where private civil enforcement agencies may not be as fair to debtors as we would like to see them be or they decide to cut corners in order to accommodate large commercial creditors that are indeed paying them. So we need to be on guard about that one, and I'm going to put our concern on the record again.

The specific section that's being amended, section 9(6), deals with those assets described as serial number goods. That's the larger, more expensive movable items that have a serial number on them, and this amendment would allow a larger number of firms to seize assets that tend to be the more valuable of the movable assets. So under section 9(6) anyone could effect seizure, but the seized goods could not be removed from the debtor's shop, home, or other place except by a duly authorized civil enforcement agency. That would mean that someone can attach a notice of seizure to a car, but they would have no power to physically remove it, to tow it away, without the intervention of a civil enforcement agency. To delete this section makes it appear that only the civil enforcement agency has the power to seize. In other words, the extraordinary power to seize is going to be retained by a small number of agencies that can presumably be more closely monitored and held accountable.

Section 13(2) deals with the entry of a bailiff into a residence or a business to seize property. Now, we have to note here that section 8 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms guarantees every Albertan the right to be secure against unreasonable search or seizure, and this affirms the traditional sanctity of a citizen's own dwelling. The amendment deals with two situations: where the premises being entered belong to a debtor and where the premises being entered belong to a third party. Essentially, if the premises are residential premises or if they belong to a third party, the bailiff can enter only if an adult is present, the person that has the ability to say: yes, you can come in. They have to consent to that. There's also provision for obtaining a specific court order to enter the residence of either the debtor or the premises of a third party, and under this amendment the bailiff may use reasonable force to gain access; in other words, forcing a lock or something like that. Without consent, then the court order is required to do this. The major difference is the requirement that an adult be present before entry into residential premises can be forced. I think this is a positive move, and it's very clear in here.

There is a minor change in section 15. It sets out a number of offences, but it's also amended by the addition of a limitation period, so the prosecution under section 15 will have to commence within 12 months after the alleged offence has been committed. I think that given the extraordinary powers that civil enforcement agencies are given, it has to be argued that the period should be extended perhaps to even longer than that, because otherwise the people that may be complaining are financially strapped and are unlikely to get legal advice right away or at all. These may not be sophisticated people, and an early limitation would prejudice them.

The next section I want to have a look at is section 88, and that is dealing with exemptions. It usually would be particularly important because it's as a result of the 1930s, when there was too little protection available for families and a lot of folks lost all of their assets to the banks. The amendments recognize that in law "property" means a bundle of different rights that accrue to an owner. In recognition that a debtor may have an interest in something – it may fall short of outright ownership – the amendment addresses the interests of the enforcement debtor.

Under 88(f) the exemption is of particular importance to Alberta farm families because the former exemption required that the debtor be a bona fide farmer whose principal occupation is farming. That places a very strict, too narrow definition on what's happening today, where you may have people working off the farm or making more money working off the farm but in fact they still are a farmer and should be considered that, and we don't want those people to lose definitions here. So the bona fide farmer qualification has been deleted, replacing "principal occupation" with "primary occupation." It may be of questionable value, but nothing else has been changed there.

Section 88(g) is dealing with exemptions for a residence and provides an exemption of $40,000. That seems pretty low given today's house prices, and this value of $40,000 hasn't changed.

Finally, section 99(3) is amended by deleting the provision giving a priority to harvesting or marketing costs incurred in a case where this is funds from the sale of a crop. I guess it's interesting to me why this priority would be disappearing. Do we not have farmers that have debt and creditor problems that would be using the value of their crops? Can crops no longer be seized or cultivated and sold to pay debts? I don't think that's the case, so that's of some concern and I wanted that highlighted.

I understand the impetus behind these amendments to the Civil Enforcement Act, but I didn't want to let them go by without comment. I think it's important to have it discussed in the Hansard and available for others to read to understand exactly what's being proposed here. Other than the objections that I've raised, I don't have any particular problems with it.

Once again we have a bill that is amending a number of statutes: Civil Enforcement Act, Fatal Accidents Act, Interpretation Act, Limitations Act, Motor Vehicle Accident Claims Act, Provincial Offences Procedure Act, Public Trustee Act, and Survival of Actions Act.

Just as a recap I think that in the Fatal Accidents Act the changes are substantive but positive. Interpretation Act: they're positive and relatively minor. Limitations Act: I still have some concerns. Motor Vehicle Accident Claims: I think they're positive and probably remedial. The Provincial Offences Procedure Act: my concerns there have been answered because in fact it does uphold the commitment that was made to victims in 1996 with the Victims of Crime Act. My concerns around the Public Trustee Act have also been answered, but I'm glad we got a chance to air that as well. The Survival of Actions Act: I think the right choices have been made there, and I'm willing to support it.

So I understand that there's an amendment coming from the government. I'll make way for the debate on that, and then I'll return with an amendment of my own. So given the hour, I will make way for the beginning of the amendments.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

MR. RATHGEBER: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I am pleased that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre supports the vast majority of the substantive changes and substantive contents as contained in Bill 20, Justice Statutes Amendment Act, 2002.

It is my intent to pose an amendment to Bill 20. I've caused an amendment to be circulated to the members of this House, Mr. Chairman, and specifically I move that Bill 20 be amended as follows. Section 2(2)(b) is amended by striking out the proposed clause (b)(ii) and substituting the following: "(ii) was not a minor but was unmarried and was not living with a cohabitant." Section 2(2)(c) is amended by striking out the proposed clause (c)(ii) and substituting the following: "(ii) is not a minor but is unmarried and is not living with a cohabitant."

Mr. Chairman, essentially the purpose of this proposed amendment is to remove the residency requirement for an individual to claim grief compensation under the Fatal Accidents Act. We've previously discussed the provisions of Bill 20 that propose to amend the Survival of Actions Act and the Fatal Accidents Act. Presently through the Survival of Actions Act the estate of a person fatally injured by another's negligent or intentional act can sue the wrongdoer for damages including future loss of earnings. This interpretation of this act was confirmed by our Alberta Court of Appeal in the often-cited case of Duncan estate as against Baddeley. However, as the Law Reform Institute has correctly pointed out, this created an artificial situation whereby the estate of a child killed by a reckless motorist could recover compensation approaching a half-million dollars from that motorist's insurer, said proceeds to go to the child's parents. Our law reform commission was of the view that the Survival of Actions Act compensation in such a circumstance would be somewhat of a windfall for the parents, who would not have reasonably expected an inheritance from their child but for that child's untimely death. Accordingly, the Law Reform Institute recommended that future loss of earning claims be abolished under the Survival of Actions Act.

It should be pointed out, however, that the Law Reform Institute recognized in their report that it might be gravely unjust to simply abolish future earnings loss claims under the Survival of Actions Act without expanding the scope and compensation available under the Fatal Accidents Act. Under the Fatal Accidents Act spouses or cohabitants are entitled to a $43,000 bereavement award should their spouse or significant other be wrongfully and fatally injured. As well, minors and unmarried 18- to 26-year-olds not living with a cohabitant currently receive $27,000 in grief compensation if their parent dies. Similarly, under the current law and before Bill 20 parents receive $43,000 in grief compensation should one of their minor children or, for that matter, an unmarried 18- to 26-year-old child not living with a cohabitant die, such death being caused by the wrongful act of another.

Mr. Chairman, under Bill 20 the age limit is removed. This was a move that was precipitated by the courts finding age discrimination under the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. However, Bill 20 as introduced has a residency restriction which was imposed so that parents would only be compensated for the deaths of their minor children or unmarried adult children living with them and not with a cohabitant and, likewise, so that only minor children or unmarried adult children living with their parents and not with a cohabitant would be compensated for the wrongful death of that parent. The awards, as we have seen, have been increased to $75,000 and $45,000 respectively. Mr. Chairman, the amendment that I am proposing removes the residency requirement to bring Bill 20 more in line with the existing scope of the Fatal Accidents Act.

Now, I appreciate that the insurance industry is not in favour of this amendment and has undertaken a considerable lobby effort in that regard, but I say that every life has intrinsic value and that every person, regardless of their age, who is wrongfully and fatally injured has someone who will grieve for him or her. By way of illustration, if I could cite an example of a set of twins who live in rural Alberta and are 19 years of age. The twins move to Edmonton, and one of them enrolls in the University of Alberta and moves into university residence. The other one decides to enter the workforce and gets a job and an apartment.

AN HON. MEMBER: I've heard this story before.

MR. RATHGEBER: But it's a good story.

Now, under Bill 20 as it's currently stated, if these twins are returning home for the weekend and are fatally injured in a head-on collision caused by someone else's negligence, their parents would have a grief claim for the child who is living in university residence because she is still considered to be a resident of home but not for her twin sister, who has entered the workforce and is living in a private apartment. Mr. Chairman, I submit to you that that is inconsistent, that it is inequitable, and that it is simply wrong. By removing the residency requirement, Bill 20 becomes a fairer bill and represents that all lives have intrinsic value and that everybody has somebody who will grieve for them if they are fatally injured by someone else's negligence.

With that, I encourage all members to support this bill and the amendment to Bill 20 as proposed. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: Hon. members, we shall refer to this amendment as amendment A1. Are you ready for the question on the amendment?

HON. MEMBERS: Question.

[Motion on amendment A1 carried]

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: Are you ready for the question on the bill?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. I would also like to propose an amendment. I will get it distributed. There's a copy of the amendment at the table already. Would you like me to pause and wait while it's distributed?

SOME HON. MEMBERS: No.

MS BLAKEMAN: My goodness, Mr. Chairman. There's such enthusiasm for this.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: Hon. members, we shall refer to this amendment, that is being circulated, as amendment A2.

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, you may proceed.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thanks. For those of you that are following along, this is on page 15 of your bill. This amendment is proposing that section 2(3) of the bill, which is amending section 9(1), be amended by striking out the date "September 1, 1994" and substituting "June 1, 2002". This section is intended to deal with an automatic review of the level of damages that are set out elsewhere, that the review should happen every five years. The way the changes have resulted in the amending act brought forward by the government is that this would happen upon proclamation, which doesn't give us a set date to go from, and it's much harder for people to find out what that proclamation date was exactly. So just for ease of when the review would come up, I'm suggesting in fact that we put a specific date in place, and that date would be June 1, 2002. That would tell us, then, that the next review would be due five years down the road, June 1, 2007. So it's just for clarity and ease of people in understanding when they could be expecting the next review of these damage amounts to take place.

I did supply this amendment some two weeks ago to the Minister of Justice, and I'm assuming that there's been an opportunity, then, for the government caucus to have a look at this amendment. So I'm expecting to either hear from someone or have overwhelming support for it. I think the amendment is pretty simple and straightforward and clear and easy to understand. However, if there are any questions, I'd be happy to answer them.

I do now move this amendment. Thank you very much.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. minister.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to just briefly indicate that the hon. member provided me with a copy of this amendment some time ago, and I had the opportunity to look at it. I certainly concur that it makes it clearer on the face of the statute as amended when the review period runs, and for that reason it doesn't change the import of the section but really just makes it clearer for somebody looking at it. So I would encourage members to support the amendment.

[Motion on amendment A2 carried]

[The clauses of Bill 20 as amended agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Wednesday, May 1, 2002

1:30 p.m.

Date: 02/05/01

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

THE SPEAKER: Good afternoon and welcome.

Let us pray. O Lord, guide us all in our deliberations and debate that we may determine courses of action which will be to the enduring benefit of our province of Alberta. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Visitors

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, in the Speaker's gallery today is a gentleman who has made quite a remarkable series of accomplishments in the province of Alberta. Fifty years ago, in 1952, our guest today, Mr. Art Dixon, was elected into this constituent Assembly representing the constituency of Calgary. He was re-elected in 1955 representing the constituency of Calgary. In 1959 he was elected to represent the constituency of Calgary-Southeast. In 1963 he was re-elected in the constituency of Calgary-South, and he was re-elected in 1967 also in the constituency of Calgary-South. In 1971 he was successfully re-elected in the constituency of Calgary-Millican, and he was an unsuccessful candidate in the election of 1975. Mr. Dixon served in this Assembly as a Speaker of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta from 1963 to 1972. He's a member of the Order of Canada and has attained quite a reputation in the province of Alberta in the community of Calgary for a great deal of good works over this last half century. Mr. Dixon, would you please rise and receive the warm welcome of this House.

head: Introduction of Guests

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a very special constituent. Mrs. Mary Semko is a resident of Rosedale Manor in the constituency of Edmonton-Centre. She grew up in Hilliard, Alberta, and came to Edmonton as a young woman in 1930 to attend St. Mary's high school and later the Alberta College. She's been very active in the community, particularly the Ukrainian Catholic church. She was on the executive board of the Ukrainian Catholic Women's League for many years, serving four times as president. Mrs. Semko has also been on the board of directors for St. Jostaphat's seniors' residence in Edmonton for 13 years. I would ask her to now please rise and accept the warm and traditional welcome of the Assembly.

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Premier it's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly another group of guests from the Public Affairs Bureau. This is the third group, and as the others they are here to find out more about the business of the Legislature. I would ask the following guests to rise as I call their names: Trent Bancarz, Gail Hansen, Susan Huberdeau, Sherene Khaw, Michael Martell, Heather McLachlan, Robin Pavelich, Wilson Smith, Josepha Vanderstoop, and Jocelyn Young. Would all members accord them the usual warm welcome.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

MR. MARZ: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's not often I get guests up from my constituency, but today I'm honoured with two. I would like to introduce to you and through you first a friend of mine who is also the president of the constituency association, and he keeps you running on the straight and narrow in a number of ways. He's also a chiropractor, and his practice is in Three Hills. So I would ask Mark Dyrholm to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

I also have a group of very enthusiastic grade 10 students from the Trochu Valley high school in Trochu, Alberta. They are accompanied today by teachers Bill Cunningham and Brian Vokins, and I would ask them to stand as well and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Stettler.

MRS. GORDON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you a number of visitors from my constituency. I have 46 bright and enthusiastic students from Lacombe Christian school, and along with them are 19 parent helpers and teachers Charlene Van de Kraats and Tim VanDoesburg. Also in the members' gallery is a former MLA from the Lacombe constituency, Jack Cookson, who served this Assembly and his constituency well from 1971 to '82, and from 1979 to 1982 he was the Minister of Environment. His granddaughter is here today with the school. So I would ask them all to rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

MR. LUKASZUK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you a resident of Castle Downs. Ms Vicki Lindsay is a tireless supporter of many very important groups and societies in Castle Downs, one of them being the Castle Downs PC Association. Also, the Minister of Health and Wellness will be glad to know that Ms Vicki Lindsay is a retired nurse who has practised in Ontario, California, and Alberta and tells me that our health care system is next to none. I would like Ms Lindsay to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glegarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you and to all Members of the Legislative Assembly Mr. Robert Johnson. Robert is a young entrepreneur involved in home construction, and he's down to view our proceedings in the Legislature this afternoon. With your permission I would ask that he now rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of the Assembly.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Learning.

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to introduce 23 visitors from Rosemary school. They're accompanied by four parents – Tracy Henderson, Charlene Walde, Elma Plett, and Tammy Cage – along with principal, David Blumell. I would ask that they rise and receive the very warm welcome of the Legislative Assembly for their long journey.

head: Ministerial Statements

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Economic Development.

International Business Roundtable

MR. NORRIS: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Today I rise to talk about the opportunity I had recently to co-chair, along with the MLA for Calgary-Fort, an international business roundtable in Calgary. The roundtable took place on the afternoon of Friday, April 26, following government-sponsored briefings. Consular corps representatives were invited to bring along with them guests from within Alberta's business community who do business in the respective country the consular represents. I'm pleased to report that over a hundred guests took part in this opportunity.

It was an opportunity to brief the consuls and their guests about what Economic Development does, the roles of the Alberta international offices, and to outline the province's international marketing strategy. We discussed activities such as Alberta's international strategy, which sets out to expand our province's economy by taking advantage of our global opportunities that are presented to us, but more importantly it was an invaluable way for us to hear firsthand thoughts on how the Alberta government can utilize the natural links that exist within our business community to all points throughout the globe.

International trade ties are vital to this province, Mr. Speaker. More than 2,000 Alberta businesses export goods and services to over 150 countries, creating over half a million jobs and $61 billion in economic activity. Our total exports grew by 2 and a half percent and are expected to grow by 4 percent this year. The growth goes to show you how strong and prosperous this province is.

Alberta is founded on a rich heritage of people from diverse cultures and countries. The same diversity is reflected in our business community, and many of our businesspeople have strong ties to international markets. It was an opportunity for us to listen and to sustain the Alberta advantage that the government and the business community have worked so hard to attain.

This forum was truly valuable, because we were able to talk firsthand on how to extend trade activities with all our neighbours around the world. I look forward to participating in more events like this in the future, and I wish to offer a very special thanks to the Member for Calgary-Fort, who through his hard work facilitated a phenomenal meeting.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise on behalf of the Official Opposition and respond to the Minister of Economic Development. Alberta's economic success has long been the envy of other provinces and indeed other countries. While this success can be measured in terms of imports and exports, it is important to understand what supports those numbers.

Adequate funding for public education is essential. Picking up the pieces after a rocky start is not a sound investment strategy. Accessible college, university, and technical training opportunities are necessary to ensure that our workforce has the skills for today and the future. Economic growth will be hindered without a public health care system that focuses on prevention and treatment regardless of a person's ability to pay. Environmental standards must be considered in the long-term cumulative impacts on the ecosystem and not just corporate profits.

Alberta's economic strength and prosperity are built on a foundation of community support. It is encouraging to hear that the minister is open to a broad range of ideas and perspectives.

Discussions about real economic development must extend beyond the business community and recognize the importance of social investment in education, health, and the environment.

head: Oral Question Period

THE SPEAKER: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Foster Care Delivery

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In 1983 the Board of Review looked into the child welfare system and wrote: "Foster parents should be interviewed, studied and investigated so that their capabilities may be known." The fatality inquiry into Korvette Crier's death, released last month, stated: "The Minister should set strict criteria for the screening of prospective foster parents." My questions are to the Minister of Children's Services. Why is it that under the minister's watch recommendations made almost 20 years ago have not yet been followed and had to be repeated in a recent report?

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, many of those recommendations have been followed, and in parts of this province the foster care delivery system is working extremely well. Where we have been looking in the recent past at a pilot project on monitoring what actual case practice is in terms of either home assessments, foster care training, and so on, we've been working with the foster care association, and we've been working with the authorities, and we are discovering some need to continually shore up the supports for foster care.

It's not a static thing, Mr. Speaker. At different times socially there are fewer foster parents available from one region to the next, but it's a matter of making continuous improvement. In the very unfortunate death recently some additional information about one particular authority has focused on foster care, and we're looking into that. I'd like to be very definitive after that review and come and at least provide the House with the courtesy of a well-documented information schedule of what is working well and where we need to make improvements. It is work that's continuous.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the minister: are foster parents who are screened and rejected by children's authorities still eligible to take care of children who are placed by private foster care agencies?

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, the provincial standard is that children – all children – should be in foster care where the agencies are accredited and where the foster families therein have been duly licensed and, furthermore, trained to look after the children with the magnitude of needs that they possess when they come in. Anything less is inappropriate and is faulted in terms of the standard.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the minister: but aren't foster parents who are rejected by the children's authority still eligible, still able to go to an agency and become a foster parent caregiver?

MS EVANS: Well, clearly, Mr. Speaker, they should not be. In my view, they are not eligible if they have been found wanting. They should not be eligible, and if they are delivering service through another agency, it should be appropriately discovered and followed through with. Let me explain to the House one of the things that's been problematic for me in this review, and that is that through the accreditation process for foster agencies sometimes foster agencies are not fully accredited. They are accredited for many of the services, perhaps not for all of the services. In the Korvette Crier case this was clearly a place where the worker assignment to an unaccredited foster placement was in error and done without full communication and knowledge.

In this most recent situation that we find ourselves in, my understanding is that there was a movement of the foster parent from one agency which was not accredited to yet another agency that was accredited. There may have been children placed in that home before the accreditation was actually sanctioned, but thus far, Mr. Speaker, why that was done, under what circumstances, and whether or not it was deemed that the foster parents were able to take care of that situation isn't clear.

Mr. Speaker, it was only last Friday that we took over the delegation of authority and on Monday went in with our professional staff to do a thorough review of all of the cases therein and the management thereof, and when I have that available, I'll be very pleased to share it with the hon. member.

THE SPEAKER: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Kasohkowew Child Wellness Society

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The minister has kind of led into where I was going on the next question. Seven children have died while under the care of the Kasohkowew society. To the minister: will you be looking into the special case reviews that have been conducted and determine whether or not the results of those deaths were properly determined and whether or not the results have been made public?

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, there are three things that happen when a child dies while in care. First of all, there's a critical investigation done by the authority itself. There's a special case review process, and there's also a fatality inquiry. Some of the results of those fatality inquiries have already been made public as well as some of the results from the special case reviews. We are looking at that, not only at the reviews of those particular tragedies and how they have related to the standards of care, but we're looking further at how the documentation, the supervision, the management of the administration, and the files have been managed. We're looking at whether or not there are conformities to standards of practice for safety, whether or not appropriate foster training is in place.

Mr. Speaker, at your pleasure, I would be very pleased to go through the list of standards that we have, but I gather that perhaps at this time I'll conclude.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Why did the minister take away Kasohkowew's responsibilities instead of giving the society the resources it needed to properly manage its responsibilities?

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, that is a good question, and it relates directly to the fact that in the last three years we have provided as many as four and five additional staff members. We have been working very hard with our native liaison unit, with the authority itself. In February we initiated and followed through with a documentation review. We're currently reviewing the standards of practice for foster care throughout the province, both on aboriginal/First Nations properties and Metis settlements and in terms of all of the other populations throughout Alberta. I determined that there were significant enough indicators, at least on the face of it, that we should explore thoroughly so that the bottom line of keeping every child safe and assuring that the delivery practices were being supported and were as safe as possible, all of those things, took place.

Mr. Speaker, there's one more reason. For me, I think it's important for the people of Alberta that they know that children taken into care are safe and that the province is doing its due diligence. I want to be sure as well that we're doing our due diligence, and I will be speaking to the chief about that this evening.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Why did the minister blame the federal government yesterday for not funding intervention services on the reserve when the same minister has cut dozens of intervention programs without public consultation?

1:50

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, last fall in our cost containments the authorities, through their directors, looked at those programs that could be adjusted to help us save money on critical issues. We have had for several years now early intervention funding to the tune of $1.7 million supporting all of the early intervention projects for children age zero to six on reserves. That has been funded by the province because the federal government has refused to provide even one dollar up until recently. So there is a huge need, as we move to the Alberta response model and try and identify community-based supports, for us to have early intervention programs in place, and this is something that we have been talking to the federal government about. I'm pleased that they're beginning to make moves in that direction, but for the last few years and certainly for the last several months we've been struggling to make sure that we continue to provide those early intervention programs on reserves. Where we can now help ease some of those program applicants to the federal funding formulas and supports, we are doing that one by one on the First Nations reserves.

THE SPEAKER: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Aboriginal groups are upset with the action of the Minister of Children's Services in revoking the delegated authority of the Kasohkowew society. My questions are to the Minister of Children's Services. Isn't the practice of using nonnative solutions for reserve problems the real root of the Kasohkowew troubles?

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, we do not target the use of nonnative supports. We first of all go to the supports that are available on the reserves and try and make sure that we manage in that capacity. Where they have not been available or where they need support, then off-reserve placements are made, often by the delegated authorities, of which we have at least 17 plus one, which is a delegated authority through the transference of a letter. So really through 18 groups we try and do our very best to make sure we support those on native reserve resources. In all cases that is by provincial standard and policy our first choice, but where not available, then obviously we have to go to other supports available.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you. To the same minister: has the minister reviewed the work of the Red Deer agency used by the Kasohkewew authority?

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, there are a couple of agencies that that particular authority has used: Heritage, for example, and more recently Parkland. There has been extensive review done both during the special case review of the practices and delivery of service by Heritage, and I would suggest that by the time we come through with our report, we'll have a fairly thorough understanding, at least at the provincial level, of what all of the agencies are doing in that particular region in support of children's services.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you. To the same minister, Mr. Speaker: given that the minister blamed insufficient resources as part of the Kasohkewew problem, what has the minister done to secure appropriate funding?

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, we continue to speak with our counterparts at the federal government level. That is an ongoing dialogue not only from Alberta but from other provinces who are in discussion with federal authorities. We continue to try and work within Alberta through the neighbouring child and family services authorities to provide additional support, sometimes through the communities and sometimes through work that's done through our native liaison units. Where we identify a gap in service, we try to provide additional supports.

Mr. Speaker, I have clearly indicated that our responsibility now is to fix the problem and not to attach blame, and I cite only the fact that these supports for prevention have been mentioned to me by chiefs – for example, that legal services for children age 12 have not been funded by the federal government – as some of the support circumstances that haven't been available federally. If they are provided either through the suggestion of the advocate's office or through our own delivery system, we do so, but it certainly clearly is in the mandate many times of the federal government.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Safety of Children in Care

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For the last several days in this House members have witnessed a sad and pathetic display of finger-pointing by the Minister of Children's Services regarding the deaths of foster children in Alberta. Feeling bad and blaming others after the fact does little to prevent repeat tragedies from occurring. Today we learned that Children's Services officials admit that they just assume that child welfare agencies are doing their job. My first question is to the Minister of Children's Services. Given that we are talking about repeated deaths of children, shouldn't our government be properly monitoring agencies so that tragedies are prevented, and why does the minister act only after a tragedy has occurred?

MS EVANS: You know, Mr. Speaker, the death of a child in care is something that every Albertan grieves for, and the implication of that question is that we have been slipping out from under our mantle of accountability and trying to deny any responsibility. Quite frankly, I would not have asked for and by letter indicated a desire to take over that delegation if I hadn't been determined to be fully accountable to the people of Alberta for the delivery of services.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the admission by her own officials, will the minister commit to introducing better oversight, better training, and better resources and thus prevent child deaths rather than simply act after the fact?

MS EVANS: I think that first of all, particularly in the sad surroundings of the situation in Kasohkewew, we have to know what happened and what is happening in all circumstances. Clearly, when I review the some 41 deaths that have occurred in the province over the last three years – actually almost four years but in the time of this ministry – the greater majority of deaths have occurred from acute chronic illness or from some other absolute medical situation. In fact, in terms of the number of deaths on First Nations reserves, six have occurred – six, Mr. Speaker – and I think a real tragedy. Where these have occurred in Kasohkewew, we're going to explore and find out what it is. I should say that six have occurred which have been under the concerns of the director and of this department for the way that children are being managed, six under those kinds of situations where we go in and do special case reviews. Of this recent death obviously we will be doing a special case review.

Mr. Speaker, let me put this also in context. In the last few years the deaths of children in care averaged 12. In 1998-99 there were 11; in '99-2000, 12; in 2000-2001, 13; and in 2001-2002, 10. When you consider that during that same period of time we've moved from about 12,000 children in care to 15,000 children in care, we are not increasing the circumstances of tragic deaths that happen within the department. Let me not belittle any death that occurs. We are feeling very responsible and accountable and supportive where families have had that type of suffering. But let's not try and blame this government for the deaths of children in care – we're doing our level best – and I hear that coming from across the other side.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My next question is to the hon. Premier. Doesn't the Premier agree that children in government care deserve safe homes, a secure emotional environment, proper supervision, and a minister who can actually deliver on these things?

2:00

MR. KLEIN: First of all, Mr. Speaker, we have a minister who can deliver on these things and indeed is delivering in spades.

Secondly, we do have programs in place that address the needs of children, especially children in care. There are sufficient programs. Sometimes these programs don't work out exactly the way that the minister would like them to, and unfortunately in society tragedies occur. When they do occur, the minister is quick off the mark to launch an investigation to determine why there was a tragedy, to take corrective measures, to do what she can do, whatever is possible, whatever is in her power to do to correct the situation so that it doesn't happen again.

I think it was very important for the minister to point out that over the years, while the number of children in care has increased and increased significantly, the number of tragic cases has not increased at all. That demonstrates to me that the department is indeed doing a good job. Mr. Speaker, it is not and never will be an absolutely perfect society unfortunately, and when things go wrong, we do our level best to try and find the cause and to correct the situation to hopefully prevent tragedies in the future.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-West, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Seniors' Benefits

MS KRYCZKA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Most older Albertans today have planned for their retirement years and have made the necessary adjustments in their lifestyle and spending to cope with less income, and the majority do live comfortably. However, lately I've heard from some seniors upset mostly about the cumulative effect of recent changes to essential government programs: the increase in long-term care rates, the increase in Alberta health care premiums, the cancellation of the extended health benefit and the resulting increase in paying for dentures and glasses. Also, with the cancellation of the community lottery board funding, many seniors' centres have lost an important source of funding for programs. My main question is to the Minister of Seniors: what is this government doing to assist the low-income seniors to cope with these changes?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. WOLOSZYN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I believe it's important to provide a bit of background. Prior to 1994 the provincial government offered universal programs for seniors including a rebate of up to a thousand dollars on property taxes to cover the educational tax portion, and seniors were not required to pay health care premiums. In 1994 the government at the time determined that seniors who could afford to pay should pay for services. As a result, most programs, with the exception of limited Blue Cross coverage and the extended health benefits, were eliminated, and the Alberta seniors' benefits program was established.

The Alberta seniors' benefits program is an income-based program that provides cash benefits and a full health insurance premium subsidy to low-income seniors and full or partial premium subsidies to moderate-income seniors. The cash support is intended to assist seniors with their living expenses. With the recent elimination of the extended health benefits program, seniors who are on the Alberta seniors' benefits are eligible to apply for special-needs assistance with optical and dental expenses.

The Alberta seniors' benefits program along with the special-needs program ensures that Alberta's programs for low-income seniors remain the best in the country.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MS KRYCZKA: Thank you. My first supplemental is to the same minister. What can we tell those seniors who are just above the threshold for government assistance, as they will be paying for the cost of the changes?

MR. WOLOSZYN: Mr. Speaker, fiscal reality has forced the government along with the Department of Seniors to make some very difficult choices. Our income thresholds, however, I think are very reasonable. I think it's only fair to point out that single seniors with an income of $18,440 or less receive cash benefits and they receive full insurance premium exemptions. A single senior earning below $26,700 will receive a full or partial subsidy for health care premiums. With respect to senior couples with a combined income of $27,925 or less, they receive a cash benefit and full premium subsidy. Senior couples with combined incomes of $44,400 or less receive a full or partial premium subsidy. It's important to note that limited assistance through Alberta Blue Cross is still the universal program for all seniors.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MS KRYCZKA: Thank you. My second supplemental is to the same minister. What is the government doing today to better prepare future seniors, when there are proportionately so many more, to cope with increasing costs of programs that are basic to their quality of life?

MR. WOLOSZYN: Mr. Speaker, we have had various studies to ensure that we are planning for the future. That's certainly under way. There is something that we have to pay special attention to, and that's the income for seniors and the source of the income. All indications are that seniors' income is increasing. As a matter of fact, in actual dollars the increase between 1994 or '95 and current is about 11 or 12 percent. The important thing to note with this is that the proportion of government support is decreasing in the total income package. That leads us to believe that the newer seniors are becoming more and more self-sufficient. We would hope that this trend continues to the point where there'll be fewer low-income seniors.

However, having said that, we still have to keep a constant watch on our thresholds because our income thresholds are the key to support. As long as we can set those thresholds at the proper level, then seniors will have the ability to pay their way. We'll certainly be doing that, and seniors who need assistance will continue to get the assistance from this government.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Engineered Teleposts

MR. BONNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Recently the Minister of Municipal Affairs was made aware of concerns that teleposts being used in the Alberta housing market may not be providing sufficient support to meet safety code standards. Teleposts are the metal poles in the basements of houses, and their function is to keep the house structurally sound. Clearly, if these are not installed correctly, there could be some very serious consequences. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs: given that an investigation by APEGGA has found that some manufacturers of engineered teleposts may be supplying insufficient information about the load capacity of their products, what is the minister doing to protect Albertans?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. BOUTILIER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What this government is doing – one, we're not afraid to think outside of the box. More importantly, on the point that the hon. member has brought to our attention, the concern and safety of Albertans are uppermost. Our Safety Codes Council, which in fact I'm meeting with again next week, is working in partnership with APEGGA as well, the professional engineering group, to address this exact issue that the hon. member has brought to the Legislature.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. BONNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: what steps has the minister taken to make this investigation public so that Albertans can ensure that their homes are properly designed to the National Building Code standards?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. BOUTILIER: Again, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member raises an important point, because we want the public to know in terms of the safety and concern of all Albertans. What we are dealing with, though, right now with our professional engineering group are the facts relative to what's working and what's not working. When I meet with the Safety Codes Council next week, I'll certainly relate to them as well the important points that the hon. member has brought up, that certainly we are addressing at this time. I thank him for the comment.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. BONNER: Yes. To the same minister, Mr. Speaker: will the minister issue an immediate advisory so that Albertans are fully aware of this serious safety flaw?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. BOUTILIER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That's one of the options we're considering. We haven't issued that at this point because of the fact that we're reviewing the situation that the hon. member has brought to the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Aboriginal Services

MR. McCLELLAND: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's cities are under increasing pressure to deliver support programs to urban aboriginals. Most of the required services on reserves are the responsibility of the federal government. However, when aboriginal Canadians leave the reserve to pursue economic or other activities elsewhere, the necessary support programs then available are no longer available, generally when the support is most needed. My question is to the Minister of Children's Services. What is the government doing to cause the federal government to live up to its constitutional and moral obligations in this area?

MS EVANS: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Frankly, I should first acknowledge the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, who took the opportunity this weekend to speak to some of the federal MPs, specifically the secretary of state responsible for funding for natives, and spoke very strongly and positively about improving the funding, and I want to thank him. He's not expecting this, but he did that on our behalf, so I'm very grateful.

We do point out one anomaly to the federal government on almost every occasion, and let me put it this way. If we apprehend and protect a child on reserve, then the federal government pays the support costs. If the child moves off the reserve, those support costs are picked up by the province in their entirety immediately, but if we apprehend a child in the city of Edmonton, for example, and the child moves to a reserve, then we in Edmonton still pick up those support costs. That's a real anomaly and one that we draw to their attention at every given opportunity.

We have this year, in order to not wait for the federal government to respond to our questions about some of these anomalies, instituted more funding through family and community support services so that cities and communities can cope with the populations in urban centres and do a better job perhaps with the early intervention and prevention programs. I have spoken to the hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations. He is going to provide assistance to myself in terms of making an impact. Hopefully, for the first ministers' conference later this year we'll have a presentation available for our Premier to present at his pleasure in terms of some of our concerns about funding formulas.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. McCLELLAND: Thank you. My supplemental question is directed to the Minister of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development. Are aboriginal Albertans overrepresented as a percentage of Albertans living in poverty, incarcerated, or otherwise disadvantaged, and if so, what is the government's plan to remedy the situation?

MS CALAHASEN: Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is correct. We are overrepresented in all those areas. This, to me, shows a need for all levels of government to focus on addressing the challenges that aboriginal people face. I mean, we have to look at unemployment; we've got to get it down. Some communities are as high as 80 percent. We have to be able to look at ways for us to be able to deal with that. We must look at creating education programs that tap the resources, especially for the fastest growing population that we have. So when we're looking at those kinds of things, Alberta Learning has started aboriginal apprenticeship projects. Alberta Learning in fact has also put in over $5 million for native education programs. We've got programs such as the Gift Lake apprenticeship program, the training program that's happening there.

We're dealing with it from an educational perspective, but we also have to look at it from an economic perspective, which means that we have to be able to deal with it in that manner. In fact, there have been a number of areas that have been working on economic development initiatives, and I just want to name a few. Weyerhaeuser Canada has three contracts for approximately $50,000 annually with mechanized harvesting contractors with Bigstone Forestry Inc., with Slave Lake, and a number of other communities to see how they can address the economic side. Those are areas that we have to look at in order for us to be able to start looking at those issues and dealing with them.

On the social side we see the Minister of Children's Services . . .

THE SPEAKER: You will have a supplementary.

The hon. member.

MR. McCLELLAND: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: given that fetal alcohol syndrome and effect are the reasons that so many Albertans and particularly aboriginal Albertans face such a very difficult life, why has the government not made its number one priority the elimination of fetal alcohol syndrome and fetal alcohol effect?

MS CALAHASEN: Mr. Speaker, I happen to disagree with the fact that it's been said that it's not a number one priority. It has been a number one priority for a number of years. First of all, the previous minister of social services made sure that he did a number of things that were required to see it become identified as a number one priority. As associate minister I certainly saw it as one of our programs with the children's initiative. In fact, the present Minister of Children's Services along with my department has been working on educational programs. As we know, education is the key if we are going to address the issue of FAS and FAE, because we can address the concerns in that respect. It is those kinds of things that we have to be able to work on in making sure that we educate people to successfully combat in my view this social problem that affects so many of our children before birth.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Electricity Billing

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On three previous occasions the Premier said that electricity deferral accounts were hypothetical and speculative. Time has proven him wrong, and now Albertans are paying more on their monthly bills for the deferred costs of expensive electricity that were not allowed to be charged to the customers during the election year. It seems that just as Enron, a vocal promoter of deferral accounts and deregulation, was a spectacular corporate failure, so too was this government's electricity deregulation scheme. My questions are to the Premier, who brought us all this expensive right-wing experiment. Since the Balancing Pool's current annual report states that there is another deferral account of $345 million that must be paid by Albertans, how long will it be before Albertans see this deferral account added to their already expensive monthly electricity bills?

MR. KLEIN: First of all, Mr. Speaker, I don't abide by the notion that it's overly expensive in this province, comparatively speaking. I don't know what the price of power is today, but I know that last week when the hon. minister got up to speak, it was a little over 5 cents a kilowatt-hour. There was a spike at the beginning of the previous week due to a number of factors, one of which was that a number of plants were shut down for maintenance and there was a higher than usual demand on electricity and a lower than usual capacity of generation to deliver that electricity.

The simple fact is that relative to electricity deregulation we see a number of things now happening that didn't happen under a regulated environment. We see a number of cogeneration plants coming on stream. We see applications now for small in-river waterpower projects. We see applications for wind power. We see very significant applications for coal generation using state-of-the-art clean coal technology, Mr. Speaker. It stands to reason – and even the Liberals should be able to understand, at least those who have an ounce of entrepreneurial spirit – that the more you have to sell, the more the prices come down. It's a matter of supply and demand. A deregulated market has created the opportunity to increase the supply, and with an increase in supply of course the demand is less, and the prices should start to come down.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, I'm going to recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, but let's try and listen to the answers, too, if we're going to listen to the question.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Alberta Liberals, like Alberta consumers, understand that electricity deregulation has increased their monthly power bills. Now, can the Premier please tell us: how much more will Albertans' bills go up each month in order to pay off this $345 million account?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, that was pre-deregulation, as I understand it, and it was all part of the program to deregulate, which has been in place, by the way, or in the works since 1995.

Mr. Speaker, let's get down to some of the philosophical questions surrounding deregulation and the difference between their party and our party, aside from the fact that we have 74 members and they have seven. I think that we reflect much better the attitudes and the desires on the part of Albertans, who want to see an entrepreneurial spirit. They want to see government get out of the business of being in business. The Liberal philosophy would be to have a monopolistic, totally controlled environment so that if electricity rates went up, they would simply pick the taxpayers' pockets and subsidize it throughout, adding to the deficit, creating more debt. And their attitude would be: well, we're not going to be around that much longer anyway; we'll let someone else worry about it.

2:20

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Liberal policy is for cheap, reliable electricity for Albertans. Now, can the Premier tell us how many additional charges there are now on Albertans' bills since deregulation and how many additional charges are lurking, waiting for them in the future?

MR. KLEIN: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'll answer the question with a question. Are the Liberals proposing to bring about this so-called cheap and reliable electricity by a totally socialized, monopolistic kind of system where the only way you can possibly ensure that electricity rates stay at the same rate at all times for all people for all reasons is to subsidize it through taxpayers' dollars? Is that what they're saying? Because I haven't figured out any other way.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

St. Mary's Catholic School

MR. CENAICO: Mr. Speaker, St. Mary's Catholic school is the first and hence oldest Catholic school in the city of Calgary and exists in the fine constituency of Calgary-Buffalo. It has a long and proud tradition in this city and is well remembered by many of the people who attended classes there and their descendants. Its fate has been the subject of much public discussion recently because the Calgary Catholic school board has indicated that it wishes to demolish the facility in order to provide a new facility for urgently needed education programs for special-needs students. My question is to the Minister of Community Development. Can the minister tell us what the status is of this historically significant school building?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I understand it, the old St. Mary's school in Calgary was recently the subject of discussion at Calgary city council, and they voted a couple of days ago, I believe, to issue a notice of intention to the Calgary Catholic school board to designate that site as potentially being a municipal heritage site. Since the Calgary Catholic school board essentially owns that property, they are certainly well within their right to consider that particular determination. I understand that the Calgary council is working with them and that a decision may be reached as early as May 27 with regard to the fate of that school. We don't own it. The Calgary Catholic board does, so they're working it out.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. CENAICO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental question to the same minister: can the minister clarify the government of Alberta's involvement in this process?

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Well, Mr. Speaker, St. Mary's school has been the subject of considerable discussion and review by Alberta Community Development for the past three or four years because there is some historical significance attached to this school. So we've been through the process. We served intention of notice to designate. However, the bottom line was that without the approval and agreement of the Calgary Catholic board, we were not inclined after our review to designate that particular site as a provincial historic resource, because of course there were motions on the books of the Calgary Catholic board to not do so, to in fact replace it with a replica. So our involvement in the process has been one of support where we could. I've met with the Catholic board and I've also met with representatives of the community, so we've been involved in that fashion through the process.

I think I'll just conclude this part, Mr. Speaker, by saying that section 26 of the Alberta Historical Resources Act specifically does enable a municipality to consider sites within its jurisdiction for possible designation, and that's what I believe is occurring now.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. CENAIKO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second supplemental question to the same minister: is the province prepared to provide any financial assistance toward the preservation of St. Mary's school as a result of this recent municipal decision?

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think the finances of such an undertaking will likely reside between and among members of the Catholic board and the city of Calgary council. But should the situation occur that the St. Mary's school gets designated as a municipal historic resource, then some limited funding for the ongoing preservation would be available through our Alberta Historical Resources Foundation, and I believe it's in the order of $5,000 over consecutive 5-year periods.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Community Lottery Boards

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the Minister of Gaming said that about half the applications to the community lottery boards received funding. The minister now sees these applications being shifted to programs like the community facility enhancement program, or CFEP, and the Wild Rose Foundation. My questions are to the Minister of Gaming. If the minister is now trying to accommodate these groups through CFEP or Wild Rose, where will this extra money come from? Where is it in the budget?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. STEVENS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. If you take a look at the budget for the year 2002-2003, there in fact is scheduled an increase in funding both in the Ministry of Gaming for the community facility enhancement program and in the Community Development ministry budget for the various foundations that are funded there, including the Wild Rose program. So if you go out one year, there is additional funding that is anticipated at this time.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Given that the total amount of money in the lottery fund was $50 million and the extra being added into CFEP is $2.5 million – and I don't hear any additional money being put into the existing grant programs – how is the minister going to decide which groups currently getting grants will get cut to make way for the dispossessed lottery board applicants?

MR. STEVENS: Mr. Speaker, the community facility enhancement program has been one of the very successful programs of this government. It has been in place since the late '80s and in fact over that 12-, 13-, or 14-year period has expended something in the order of $250 million or more. I have never heard anyone complain about the community facility enhancement program. Indeed, I've had many people write letters to me thanking me for the good work that is being done there. I anticipate that this program, which has very clear rules and which is very fairly administered, will continue to do good work as it goes forward.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much. Given that the Hillhurst-Sunnyside Community Centre applied for community lottery board money for a healthy eating program, therefore it wouldn't be eligible under either CFEP or Wild Rose, where will the minister now direct them to apply for funding for this program?

MR. STEVENS: There are a couple of things that I think are important to recognize. The first thing is that in Alberta we have a charitable model of gaming, which puts into the not-for-profit sector annually some $300 million; $300 million is a great deal of money. I would suggest that there's no other province in this country that puts that type of money into the not-for-profit sector.

The second thing that I think is important for this hon. member to understand is that, as I indicated the other day, I've been asked to review the existing programs to take a look at how we may be able to accommodate through modification or some other means those applications which have previously been funded by the community lottery program and that otherwise will fall between the cracks. I have undertaken to do that. I will be doing that. It will be something that I will be bringing forward to my colleagues in the not-too-distant future.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, followed by the hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Municipal Taxation

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the Premier was musing again, this time about allowing municipalities to levy new taxes. However, the Premier overlooked a straightforward solution, which has been advocated for years by Alberta municipalities themselves; namely, the full responsibility for property taxes in Alberta. For years Alberta municipalities have had to share property tax revenue with the provincial government and as a result have had to beg a variety of grants, taxes, and program funding to bridge the resulting revenue gap. My question is to the Premier. Instead of adding to the undergrowth of the tax jungle by adding various new kinds of taxes, why doesn't the government develop a plan to withdraw over time from the property tax and leave that field as the exclusive preserve of Alberta's municipalities?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, the province is involved in property tax only as it relates to education. The musings that the hon. member alludes to are musings that go back to 1980, you know, long before this member was a municipal councillor or was involved in any way, shape, or form in municipal policymaking. Perhaps he was driving a bus at that particular time. I don't know.

MR. MASON: You bet I was.

MR. KLEIN: And that's a good profession. It's a great profession.

I was working for the city. I was the mayor. I was working for the city also, for another city, mind you. I mused at that particular time, as a matter of fact made representation to a provincial task force on municipal financing, that perhaps municipalities should be given the authority to explore ways to raise additional revenues. Well, I was shot down at that particular time, but now that I'm here and have the opportunity and now that the issue is resurfacing, I'm saying that it's time to have a good look at it. I don't see anything fundamentally wrong with it. I'm sure that had the hon. member still been a member of Edmonton city council, he would have jumped at the opportunity to have the legislation amended, either the Municipal Government Act or the municipal taxation act, to allow, to enable – that's not to force but to enable – municipalities to raise additional revenues if they so wanted and if they wanted to take the political risk.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Given that in the 2000-2001 provincial budget a first step in this direction was taken when the government cut its portion of the property tax by 10 percent, why has this direction been reversed in the latest budget, which includes an increase in the provincial portion of the property tax?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, the only taxation relative to school board taxation has been to accommodate growth. I believe it's the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs. I'll have him respond and add to my answer.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. BOUTILIER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's important to note that in actual fact in this budget year the mill rate is going down, because we're able, then, to capture the growth that actually is taking place in Alberta. As you know, last year municipalities received about $135 million in tax room, which I know is welcome. This year we're attempting to capture the growth because of people moving to Alberta, where there are lots of jobs.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Is the Premier just musing, or will he commit to a new deal for municipalities which is comprehensive, sustainable, beyond the reach of nervous finance ministers, and which solves once and for all the financial needs of Alberta's cities, towns, and rural municipalities?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, this whole situation is under review right now by I think it's the roles and responsibilities resource committee. If municipalities want to make representation relative to my musings, that's entirely up to them. We aren't forcing municipalities to do anything, but if they want it, if they want the enabling legislation – you have to understand, and I'm sure that the hon. member understands, having been a former member of council, that municipalities are indeed creatures of the province. They operate under various pieces of government legislation; i.e., the Municipal Government Act, the municipal taxation act, and so on. All this government does is simply enable municipalities to do certain things. If those things that we enable them to do prove to be unpopular with the voters of a particular municipality, guess what happens? The municipal legislators get fired. That's what democracy is all about.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, before calling on the first of seven members to participate in Recognitions today, might we revert briefly to Introduction of Visitors?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Visitors
(reversion)

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

MR. DUCHARME: Thank you. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Mr. Ernie Isley. Mr. Isley is a former MLA for the constituency of Bonnyville, that he represented from 1979 to 1993. He is presently the chair of the Lakeland regional health authority. Mr. Isley is seated in your gallery, Mr. Speaker, and I'd ask him to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

head: Recognitions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood.

Mabel Julia Wade

MR. MASYK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today it gives me great pleasure to rise and recognize an upcoming birthday of an Edmonton-Norwood constituent. Mabel Julia Wade was born in South Dakota in the year 1902, and shortly after her birth Mabel's family moved to Canada and settled near Camrose. One of five siblings, she attended school in Parkdale district near Bawlf, Alberta, and she received her teaching degree at Camrose normal school before going on to teach at various country schools. Mabel was married in 1929 and with her new husband resided in the Mellowdale area and farmed in the Elk Point area during very difficult times. The Wade family moved to Round Hill, and then they made their final stop in Edmonton in 1950. Two years after arriving in Edmonton, in 1952, the Wades purchased a home in the Norwood area. Fifty years later Mabel Julia Wade, now 99 years old, still resides in the same Norwood home.

Please join me in congratulating Mabel Julia Wade, who will turn a hundred years old on Thursday, May 16. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Public Library Awards

MRS. TARCHUK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to recognize this year's recipients of the annual public library awards, which were presented at the annual library conference in Jasper last weekend. The Banff public library was presented with the creative public library service award for offering free service to local residents. This project has been very successful in achieving its goal from the moment the free service was introduced. Enrollment has increased by 40 percent, with circulation materials increasing by 17 percent over its 1999 level.

In addition, the collaborative innovation in library service award was awarded to the Marigold, Northern Lights, and Yellowhead library systems in recognition of their partnership and innovation. They combined their entire databases, that now offer over 1.7 million items to library users. The new system creates a library without walls, based on 21st century technology, while offering a faster and wider service to its customers.

Please join me in congratulating these outstanding library organizations.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

George Chatschaturian

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I stand to recognize George Chatschaturian of Edmonton, Alberta, who unexpectedly passed away on April 18 at the age of 55 years. He was born in Miltenberg, Germany. George is survived by his wife of 35 years, Wilma, three daughters – Toby, Tara, and Debbie – and their spouses, and eight grandchildren, who brought so much joy to his life. Mr. Chatschaturian was a proud member of the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers local 424 for the past 33 years. He served the local with distinction for the past 22 years as a dispatcher and assistant business manager. He always in the discharge of his duties put the interests of the workers first. He also found time to ably represent the interests of workers on the board of directors of the Workers' Compensation Board.

The standing-room-only crowd at his memorial service were people from all walks of life joined to express their respect for the man and all that he accomplished. His contributions to his community and to our province and country do not go unnoticed. His family's loss is shared by all of us.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Canadian National Junior Boxing Championship

MS KRYCZKA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to speak today on behalf of the hon. Minister of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development regarding 12 boxers from Alberta who recently competed at the 2002 Canadian national championships in St. John's, Newfoundland, and who I was pleased to meet Monday on their return Toronto to Edmonton flight. These young athletes achieved incredible results for Team Alberta, winning five gold and six bronze medals. Skylar Sloan, a member of the Slave Lake Boxing Club, is from Kinuso, in the Lesser Slave Lake region, and remains the only undefeated boxer on the Canadian national junior team, with 14 wins and no losses.

2:40

Lee Tanghe, also from Slave Lake, was the team's coach in St. John's and has coached boxing since 1990, achieving incredible results over the years. Lee has been selected to represent Alberta as head coach at the 2002 North American Indigenous Games in Winnipeg this summer and has been preselected as Alberta's coach for the 2003 Canada Games in New Brunswick.

Congratulations, coach and team, on your dedication to sport excellence and your achievements at the Canadian championships.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

Portage College Sports and Education Dinners

MR. DANYLUK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is an honour for me to recognize the Portage College sports and education dinners, which were held in St. Paul and Lac La Biche on April 26 and 27. The college's mandate is to stretch out into the community and meet the educational and training needs within the region. They accomplish this with their main campus in Lac La Biche and 12 community campuses, reaching 1,400 students. President Bill Persley, board chairman Tom Lett, governors, and staff are to be commended for their roles in ensuring the success of this event.

The purpose of the dinners was to raise awareness of the educational opportunities for students and to enhance support for scholarships for students enrolled at Portage College who demonstrate a financial need. Mr. Speaker, both evenings raised approximately $65,000, and I would like to congratulate all those involved in the second annual event. The successful efforts and the commitment shown by these constituents of Lac La Biche-St. Paul who attended will be appreciated by many future students. A great effort, a great cause, and a great job.

Thank you.

Excellence in Teaching Awards

MR. MASKELL: Mr. Speaker, thanks to the creation of the excellence in teaching awards by this government in 1989, students, parents, teacher colleagues, and community members have been given the opportunity to recognize outstanding teachers. Anyone who has ever been nominated for an award knows how appreciated and valued one feels. Last evening I attended the Edmonton public schools celebration for the district finalists, excellence in teaching awards 2002, along with the hon. members for Edmonton-Rutherford and Edmonton-Norwood. I'm proud to advise members that 26 teachers – and I say again: 26 teachers – from Edmonton public schools are provincial finalists. This is an impressive number when one considers that the total is 131 provincewide.

I would like to congratulate finalists Lynda Antoniuk, Tracey Arbuthnott, Trina Blake Sharun, Jennifer Brayer, Russell Campbell, Sandy Cross, Rhonda Day, Tana Donald, Jacinthe Farand, Shelley Filan, Nina Fotty, Stacy Fysh, Donna Irwin, Joann Limoges, Karen Linden, Kim Marcinek, Joan Martz-Krewusik, Wesley Myck, Donald Myers, Marsha Nelson, Hazel Quigg, Patricia Radcliffe, Jen Riske, Ray Cimolini, Lynne Jones, and Powell Jones.

Congratulations to Edmonton public schools on these outstanding teachers. By the way, four of these finalists are teachers at schools in Edmonton-Meadowlark.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

National Summer Safety Week

MR. BONNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to recognize the Canadian Safety Council National Summer Safety Week. After a long winter and a spring that is in no hurry to arrive, it is important for Albertans to remind themselves about the dangers they may encounter while enjoying the warm weather. In the rush to get to the lake, we must take time to make sure that our vehicles are in good working condition and that watercraft are safe for another season. Rules about wearing life jackets, using sunscreen, and always swimming with a buddy are taught to children, but adults are well served to heed their own advice. Cycling and in-line skating are great exercise and wonderful ways to enjoy the outdoors, but excessive speed, a disregard for others, and a lack of safety equipment are quick ways to go from having summer fun to watching from the sidelines. The rules of the road are there to protect everyone: pedestrians, cyclists, and drivers. While speed limits and right-of-way rules may seem like a bother to some people, they'll take much less time out of a person's day than a trip to the hospital.

The mission of the Canadian Safety Council is to lead in the national effort to reduce preventable deaths, injuries, and economic loss in public and private places throughout Canada. I encourage all Albertans to take a moment, assess the risks, and make every summer activity a safe one.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, as a result of recognitions and members' statements oftentimes my office receives calls from members of the public who say: how is it that one week or one day or one month is recognized but another is not? So to bring to all members' attention, May is Cystic Fibrosis Month, Multiple Sclerosis Awareness Month, MedicAlert Month, Better Speech and Hearing Month, Motorcycle and Bicycle Safety Awareness Month, Asian Pacific Heritage Month, Red Shield Appeal Month, Child Find's Green Ribbon of Hope campaign, Light the Way Home campaign. February 21 to May 18 is the Easter Seal mail campaign. April 26 to May 4 is Education Week. May 3 is World Press Freedom Day. May 3 to May 12 is Information Technology Week. May 5 to May 11 is North American Occupational Safety and Health Week. May 6 to May 12 is Emergency Preparedness Week. May 8 to June 21 is SummerActive. May 12 to May 18 is National Police Week. May 15 is International Day of Families. May 17 is World Telecommunication Day. May 18 to May 24 is Safe Boating Week. Of course, May 20 is Victoria Day. May 21 to May 24 is Aboriginal Awareness Week. May 22 is International Day for Biological Diversity. May 25 is National Missing Children's Day.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Mr. Speaker, I just wanted to point out that May 1 is International Workers' Day.

THE SPEAKER: Well, yes, of course. Absolutely. Thank you.

head: Presenting Petitions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

MR. MARZ: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to present a petition concerning the independence of the Children's Advocate of Alberta.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, did you have a petition to present?

MR. MASON: Yes, I did, Mr. Speaker. I'm presenting a petition signed by 71 Albertans petitioning the Legislative Assembly to urge the government "to not delist services, raise health care premiums, introduce user fees or further privatize health care.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

DR. NICOL: Mr. Speaker, it's a privilege today to present a petition from 200 individuals from southern Alberta concerning equal support for public and separate education and the rights that that implies for all students in the province.

Thank you.

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I am pleased to table with the Assembly the 2001 report of the Law Society of Alberta. Lest members not take the time to read the full report, I would direct their attention to page 10, where it points out the strong relationship between the Department of Justice and the Law Society of Alberta that has been occasioned over the past few years.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I stand today to table copies of what was intended to have been a petition but didn't turn out to be. It's more like a letter signed by a number of individuals in southern Alberta asking that the Alberta motor vehicle operators' list be made available for those who support and administer the War Amps program.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, have a petition, from Mary Brown on 86th Avenue in the constituency of Edmonton-Gold Bar, urging the hon. Premier of Alberta to provide access to the Alberta motor vehicle operators' list for the War Amps program. The Drivesafe program is only one valuable service that's provided by that organization.

My second tabling today is the official program – and this is quite appropriate on May 1, which is recognized around the world as a day of recognition for workers' rights – for the candlelight ceremony from Sunday, April 28, 2002, to recognize the number of workers killed around the world on job sites. This program was sponsored this year by the Alberta Federation of Labour, the Alberta and Northwest Territories Building Trades Council, and the Edmonton and District Labour Council.

Thank you very much.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

2:50

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table appropriate copies of two different letters that I received over the last few days. The first one is a letter that's dated April 29 from the president of the Alberta Rowing Association. First she outlines how important lottery board grants have been and how they've been utilized by this association in financially supporting "emerging athletes, five of which were members of Canada's Olympic Rowing Team in Sydney, Australia." Then, of course, the president urges the provincial government to "reconsider this most inappropriate decision and to reinstate the funding for Community Lottery Board grants. In eliminating Community Lottery Board funding a major disservice has been done," and she asks that we act promptly in reversing the provincial government's decision.

The second letter, Mr. Speaker, is from the Canadian Mental Health Association, Alberta southeast region, with its office in Medicine Hat, urging the government to give higher priority to mental health in its health care programs.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I have one tabling today. It is a letter to the hon. Premier from Alex Grimaldi, who on behalf of the 30,000 members of the Edmonton and District Labour Council voices great displeasure in the government's decision to eliminate the community lottery boards.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. With your permission I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of a letter sent from Alberta Municipal Affairs to TEC Engineered Support Services, Wesure Weld Support Systems, Stemco Inc., and Ironman & Company. This letter is dated January 8, 2002, and in here Alberta Municipal Affairs has worked in conjunction with APEGGA to determine if there was any action needed to deal with the concerns identified with the engineered teleposts. An investigation by APEGGA has found that the tables and other information currently available from some manufacturers may not be sufficient to provide adequate guidance in the selection of the proper components to make up the telepost.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. A couple of tablings today. The first is a letter from the Hillhurst-Sunnyside Community Centre to their MLA, the Member for Calgary-Mountain View, asking that the government reinstate the community lottery boards and including a bill for $600 for their time to prepare the grant applications for the now nonexistent boards.

The second tabling is from Janice McTighe, executive director for Renfrew Educational Services. The letter is to me, noting that the Calgary community lottery board funded very worthwhile projects and worrying that some of these organizations may have to close their doors, asking the government to reconsider their decision.

The next is a letter signed by the board of the Alberta Craft Council. The letter is directed to Premier Klein, noting that since the days of Premier Lougheed, there has been an agreement amongst large numbers of Albertans that, if there is going to be government organized gambling, government has a responsibility to put [gaming] profits back into communities and community-based services.

Another letter, from Candice Noakes directed toward her member, the MLA for Calgary-Currie, expressing her outrage about the decision to cancel the community lottery boards, noting that it will devastate hundreds of non-profit organizations and asking her member to represent the citizens of the province and show support for the lottery boards.

Finally, a letter from Richard Reid, bingo chairperson of Victoria Co-ed Cheerleaders Parents' Committee, noting that they're writing to express their approval for the paid floor staff at the bingo association and feeling that each bingo association must make their own decisions, but they are certainly in favour of this view brought forward by Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Orders of the Day

head: Government Bills and Orders

MR. HANCOCK: Mr. Speaker, I'd ask for the usual unanimous consent under section 58 of our Standing Orders to allow us to proceed till 5:15 before a vote.

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Committee of Supply

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: I'll call the committee to order.

Finance

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: As per our Standing Orders the first hour will be allocated between the hon. minister and members of the opposition, following which any other hon. member may participate.

The hon. Minister of Finance.

MRS. NELSON: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure to be here today to present the Ministry of Finance's estimates for 2002-2003. I'm also going to spend a little bit of time giving an overview of what Finance does and the key points of our business plan.

Before I begin, Mr. Chairman, I'd like to introduce some of the staff who have been involved in putting together our business plan and our budget. With us today in the members' gallery are Bonnie Lovelace, our senior financial officer; Peter Kruselnicki, our Deputy Minister of Finance; Richard Shelast, our senior manager of budgets, who puts Finance's budget together; Colleen Kroening, who is our manager of strategic planning; and my executive assistant, Tim Wade. Welcome.

Mr. Chairman, as Minister of Finance I am proud to say that Albertans enjoy the lowest tax regime anywhere in Canada. This includes no sales tax, no payroll tax, no capital tax, a single-rate personal income tax of 10 percent, and the highest basic personal exemption compared to all other provinces. We have a competitive tax regime. It's critical to Alberta's economic advantage, and our goal is to provide lower and more competitive taxes that are sustainable over the long term.

Families are also benefiting from these lower taxes. The typical one-income family with two children in Alberta pays the lowest provincial tax and health care insurance premiums in Canada. For an income of $30,000 those taxes in Alberta are 81 percent lower than the average in any other province. For a two-income family with income of $60,000 the Alberta advantage is still 30 percent lower than the average in other provinces.

I am also proud, Mr. Chairman, to report that we have reduced debt servicing costs from $749 million to $506 million in the past year. That is a big step forward, reducing the burden on future generations of Albertans and freeing up money for programs and services in the future.

Now, before I get into the other highlights from our budget and estimates, I want to tell you about the key roles of the ministry. All of you here know that one of Finance's core businesses is establishing the fiscal framework and facilitating sound planning and decision-making. This is our overarching responsibility for coordinating tax, fiscal, and economic policy for Albertans. It includes looking at the overall revenues and expenditures. In our mandated supporting role to Treasury Board we seek to strike the right balance, working with other ministries to find the right levels of revenue that government should raise for government operations and what mix of revenue is right along with the balance between debt payment, low taxes, and priority spending.

All the results of that work ends in the budget and carries on throughout the year in our quarterly reviews of the budget. It's usually what people think of when they think of Finance, and while at times the budget is a time-consuming task, it is just one of the vital responsibilities we undertake in this ministry, but there are many others also. We lead in business planning, performance measurement, financial and reporting standards, accounting, investment and debt accounting, liability management, banking and cash forecasting, pensions, insurance, Alberta Treasury Branches, and Credit Union Deposit Guarantee Corporation, just to name a few. We represent Alberta in the federal/provincial discussions on economics, taxation, and fiscal issues. We prepare consolidated financial statements for the government, provide analysis of investment and debt returns, safeguard pension entitlements, regulate insurance companies, and so on.

So as everyone here can appreciate, Alberta Finance does much more than just the budget itself. The bottom line is that Alberta Finance is responsible for the financial plans, policies, and regulations that ensure that the government runs smoothly and that this province continues to be in a strong fiscal position. The focus of all this work is found in our vision, mission, and six goals that are outlined in the business plan.

Vision, Mission, and Goals. Alberta Finance's vision is "working together to provide renowned and innovative financial leadership." Our mission reflects our core businesses and encompasses the following:

- Establish the fiscal framework and facilitate sound fiscal planning and decision-making.
- Foster an effective accountability framework.
- Manage financial assets and liabilities prudently.
- Foster access to comprehensive and competitive financial . . . services and pension plans.
- Administer the regulatory framework to reduce the risk of financial loss to pension plan members, depositors and policyholders.

Alberta Finance has six goals to accomplish the mission for 2002-2005. They are: goal 1, "A strong sustainable financial position." As you know, some of the key performance measures for this goal are to meet our legislated pay-down plan on the accumulated debt and for Alberta to have the best credit rating among the provinces. You also know that we're years ahead of schedule on the debt pay-down, and indeed we do have the best ratings. In fact, last summer we received the triple crown when the Dominion Bond Rating Service joined Moody's and Standard and Poor's in giving Alberta a triple A credit rating for domestic debt. I might add, Mr. Chairman, that we are the only jurisdiction and the only government in all of Canada who has attained the triple crown from the rating agencies. Goal 2, to be "financially open and accountable government." I think, Mr. Chairman, that every day we demonstrate that openness and accountability within this House. Goal 3 is to have "a fair and competitive provincial tax system." Goal 4, "Effective management of the province's financial assets and liabilities." Goal 5, "Foster confidence in, and encourage the availability of comprehensive, reliable, and competitive financial products and services." Goal 6, "Foster confidence in Alberta-registered pension plans."

Each goal has several strategies that are outlined in the business plan. I'll mention just a few of the key ones. We'll be looking at the public-sector pension governance. As Finance minister I am the trustee of six public-sector pension plans. My responsibilities include benefit changes as well as the administration of contributions and benefit payments and the investments of assets. Today we use the investment group that is housed under Alberta Revenue. The existing government's framework for these plans has been in place for a number of years. Accordingly, I have started a review and intend to consult with all stakeholders to look at governance. I plan to have a formal report and recommendations delivered to me in the fall.

Another initiative to note involves looking at the effective management of the province's financial assets and liabilities. Alberta Finance is developing an enterprise risk management strategy. The aim will be to raise awareness of risks on a governmentwide basis to things like weather, capital markets, and energy prices. When this is done on a cross-ministry and governmentwide level, it will ensure that risks are effectively evaluated and managed.

Another strategy is to monitor debt portfolio and future financing requirements to anticipate and manage risks. We need to look at risks not just program by program or ministry by ministry but on an overall basis. A negative risk in one area might be offset by a plus in another. I won't go into detail on any more of our strategies, but I am pleased to answer any questions you might have about them.

A key announcement in the budget was the establishment of the Financial Management Commission to review the province's fiscal framework, and the commission will be seeking input from Albertans in the near future. I look forward to receiving their recommendations.

That's a quick look at what we do and where we're headed in 2002-2003, and now I want to give you a few highlights from our budget and our estimates. Even though we're here for the purpose of approving my estimates – and I'll give some specifics on those – I'm going to provide a few details on other aspects of the ministry's budget as well.

Net income. You'll see in our budget documents that Alberta Finance is projecting a surplus of nearly $71 million in 2002-2003. This represents an improvement of $366 million from 2001-2002 forecasts and $467 million from 2001-2002 budget. Most of the change in the ministry's bottom line is attributed to shrinking the debt load, a transfer from the lottery fund for the economic cushion, and a onetime transfer of restricted equity from the Alberta Municipal Financing Corporation.

The ministry revenue is projected at $1.1 billion, an increase of $92 million, or 9.3 percent, over the third-quarter forecast for 2001-2002. We don't have the final numbers on that as yet, but we'll have them soon. As I alluded to earlier, this increase results from a $99 million increase in transfers from the lottery fund and a $100 million transfer from the restricted equity on the AMFC. These increases are partially offset by a $42 million decrease in the department investment income because of lower surpluses in the GRF earmarked for debt retirement as a result of lower average balances and interest rates projected for 2002-2003, a $27 million reduction in AMFC investment income, and a $39 million decline in the net income of Alberta Treasury Branches due mainly to the lower interest spreads, a return to a normalized loan, loss provision, and increased expenses.

On the program expense side, in terms of program spending, we're budgeting about $442 million, or a 2.1 percent or $9.2 million increase over 2001-2002 for the ministry. This includes a $4.1 million increase for Alberta Pensions Administration, $2.4 million for the department itself, and $400,000 for the Alberta Insurance Council. The remaining $2.3 million is a net increase in valuation adjustments for the Credit Union Deposit Guarantee Corporation, which I'll mention again in a second, and this is offset by a decrease in interest expense from the Alberta Municipal Financing Corporation. The increase in Alberta Pensions Administration spending is entirely offset by revenue from service charge-backs to the pension fund by their administration. The $29.3 million change in valuation adjustment spending stems from the renegotiation of the credit union deficit financing agreement. Last year that saved the province $29 million.

I'll highlight a few areas from our estimates that I think are of interest, Mr. Chairman. The department's voted program expense has increased by $2.1 million over 2001-2002's forecast. The increases are largely due to reduced vacancy rates, salary adjustments, reallocation of governmentwide financial and human resource systems costs to reflect a new cost distribution formula adopted across the government, and fee increases for banking services and investment management services.

There is always interest in the minister's office and what we're spending. This budget is increasing by $10,000 from our forecast and a bit more than that over last year's budget. This is mainly to cover salary adjustments within the office. The deputy's office usually comes under scrutiny as well. It's increasing about $6,000 from forecast, again mostly salary adjustments for the staff within the office.

You won't find these next few numbers in your estimates, but questions come up on them. In the department we'll spend about $13 million on manpower costs, including permanent wage and contract staff and all their benefits. We'll also spend about $7.6 million on total supplies and services – that is, everything that isn't manpower costs – including $340,000 for travel and $43,000 for freight and postage. That was asked last year. That's for the department itself.

Capital investments. The ministry capital investment has decreased by $940,000, or 22.5 percent, down from $4.1 million from our forecast for last year. This is largely due to the completion last year of a new pension information system in the department and the completion this year of the new pension administration system in the Alberta Pensions Administration Corporation.

Also, something we're interested in, overall the ministry has increased its staffing by 20 full-time equivalents to 351, around 6 percent. The increases are only in the Alberta Pensions Administration Corporation and the Alberta Insurance Council. The department's staffing level will be 172 full-time equivalents, no overall change from last year.

In the Alberta pension administration group there are 19 additional full-time equivalents, including 15 to handle the growing volume of retirees, the training of new employees, and changes in the public service pension plan and the local authorities pension administration systems. A further four full-time equivalents are required to support the new pension administration system. The costs for these people are borne by the pension plans. The Alberta Insurance Council has also added two full-time equivalents for auditing mandatory requirements under the new Insurance Act.

So, in conclusion, Mr. Chairman, this is really a quick overview of Alberta Finance's business plan and budget estimates for 2002-2003. I look forward to hearing the comments from the members opposite, and I'm committed again to answering all questions that come my way. If I don't have all the answers at my fingertips, I will undertake to have written responses sent back to all questions presented by all members in the Assembly.

Thank you very much. I welcome your comments and your questions.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Official Opposition and MLA for Lethbridge-East.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I want to thank the minister for her overview, and I want to join the minister in thanking the staff that have come out today to help in the responses today and also in the preparation of the business plan and the budget. It's a real challenge, and it really takes a lot of personal effort from them, so thank you very much. I guess the questions that I want to start with link more to kind of the relationship between the budget and the policy issues that come up, so I'll be focusing at the start a lot on some questions that come out of the business plan and then will be dealing more with some of the line items probably in my second 20-minute period.

In the initial part I wanted to just thank the minister for the overview that she gave in terms of some of the goals and objectives, and they sound like the kind of things, you know, that Albertans would agree to and would say are appropriate for our province. When we start looking at some of the detail that's there and some of the issues of managing those goals, some of the issues of trying to deal with operationalizing and making I guess the management of the province's budget fit with them, we end up kind of needing some clarification or having some questions raised. If we go through the business plan and start with your goals, I guess the measure of what constitutes an outcome of being well managed leaves a lot of questions when you look over at your performance measures and basically see there good credit ratings as the major component of all the performance indicators. It's page 159, Madam Minister.

The main issue there that I think comes up is that credit ratings are kind of expressions of expectations in the long run as opposed to the day-to-day expectation. I would ask if there are any efforts right now, other than what you're talking about through your Financial Management Commission, to look at some of these performance indicators that may reflect the shorter vision than just the credit rating type of approach that comes from, you know, bond market raters, because they, as I said, are very long-run type ratings.

There I'm thinking a little about some of the issues that come with trying to get a performance indicator in terms of stability or predictability. You know, how much do you follow the business plans from one year to the next? This in effect allows especially the contract agencies that we're using now like regional health authorities, like school boards, like children's authorities, all of these kind of arm's-length groups, who have to do their business plans – and they're doing their business plans in advance in many ways because they have to plan long run as well. So one of the measures that we should be looking at in terms of trying to measure our financial position and our financial management is the ability to carry through on those three-year business plans that we put out in conjunction with the budget each year, because that gives them a little bit of certainty.

I would suggest, Madam Minister, you know, that we would want to see a closer delivery of a business plan next year as opposed to the third year, because each year that you get farther away, more and more issues come up where you would want to make changes that would affect those business plans. But on a year-to-year basis there should be a degree of certainty. So I guess what I'm saying is: are you looking at those kinds of shorter term financial management indicators, or would this be something that the Financial Management Commission would be looking at much more than having it come through your process of policy development and policy strategy?

Farther down under the outcomes on that first goal you talk about: "The government fiscal plan is integrated with the business plans." How would that be measured in the context of where we would look at the actual delivery of those business plans and the financial plan? We're getting into an issue here where a lot of the business plans deal with issues that are social indicators, whereas your ministry as kind of the bank of the government is responsible for the bottom line more than the social well-being. This has always been something that's been very difficult to deal with. When we start dealing with that, are we going to be looking at the idea of a social debt, infrastructure debt, or deficits? You know, last fall we had the Minister of Infrastructure mention that on the business plan basis we were somewhere in the neighbourhood of $700 million to $800 million in deficit in upgrading and maintaining our infrastructure. Yet when we look at the financial position of the province, that, quote, deficit doesn't show in any of our balance sheet type presentations because – this is what I'm saying, you know. Your responsibility is the dollar value bottom line, whereas as a government we also have the responsibility through our business plans to look at this societal, social, infrastructure bottom line. I would be very interested in any thoughts you have about how you would link those business plans to your financial bottom line, because this is great stuff if we can ever work that out. This could start a whole new concept of social accounting for measuring and valuing how societies progress. So I wish you luck. It's something we really do need to pursue.

The next issue, "Develop Alberta's position on federal-provincial fiscal arrangements." That's again on page 159, Madam Minister. You're talking there about the Canada health and social transfer and how this is still our base funding arrangement with the feds, but in reading what you present here in your business plan, I get the sense that you'd like to see some changes in the way that program works with the freedom that we as a province have to allocate those dollars, to deal with the dollars. I would like to have some idea of what you're thinking about there, because this is one of these issues of revenue versus responsibility for delivery of a service. This in effect could set some good precedents or some good examples for how some of your ministries would deal with envelope or block funding for some of these arm's-length agencies so that they in effect could be looking at the same level of flexibility that we're trying to seek as we deal with the feds under that health and social transfer program.

The next issue you address in the business plan is the Canada pension plan, that you wish to make sure there is a sustainability component with it. I guess the question that comes up would be: do you have information that is not consistent with what the federal government is talking about in terms of their perception of the sustainability of that pension plan? I know there have been a couple of independent studies that have questioned whether or not the information coming from the federal government is appropriate. You obviously must have been thinking about something to make a statement like that in your business plan, that we have to be working with the federal government to guarantee the sustainability.

I notice nowhere in here that there are references made anymore to the idea of this Alberta pension plan alternative. Is that still being considered? Is it still being looked at? Or are we now saying: let's make that federal plan as operational and as representative of what Albertans need as we can? These are both good strategies. We have to look at them, but it's one of the things that we have to make a commitment to, one road or the other, and put our efforts to rather than trying to be looking at both all the time.

The next section I think deals with the public sector pensions. What is the direction that the department is taking in the context of: do you see the future being more in the defined contribution plan giving an outcome at the end versus the contribution with a defined benefit at the end? You know, the defined benefit plans lead to the possibility of deficit pension liabilities, whereas the contribution plans basically lead to an uncertain, unpredictable, retirement fund because it's a matter of the earnings that come from that defined contribution over the life of the contribution giving you your pension. You know, as a person who likes to see the markets work, the contribution concept is much more equitable, even though the risk at the end is much greater. I would like to know if the department has a statement of preference in terms of one way or the other. As they go about reviewing these pension plans, are there steps being taken to focus more onto one or the other in the context of how they work?

The next goal that you talk about is financial openness and accountability. That was a fairly straightforward section. You talk about the government's tax policy, and you have an outcome of "a tax system that promotes economic growth and the well-being of Albertans." Yet when you look at the performance measures, there's some issue there that you're measuring these solely in terms of their absolute relative position in the context of where we are in Canada. There's no real measure there in the context of internal, in-province tax fairness in the context of benefits received versus tax paid or the idea of any relationship between, you know, the idea that we're getting a tax on our full income as opposed to our reported income, because we're using that federal government measure of taxable income when we apply our single-rate tax. Is that number at the federal level the appropriate number that we should be using to apply our single-rate tax?

I guess I ask that in the context of what constitutes a fair tax system also implies a fair contribution to the public revenue. If individuals have a certain aspect of how they can account for their income that alters their tax, is that being properly accounted for in the context of a fair tax system? It's easy to say that everybody is paying a single-rate tax based on their, quote, reported income. But is reported income a fair concept?

In the next section you talk about "a tax system that encourages Albertans to work and that supports families." Then you use as a performance measure the employment rate. What I would suggest there is that a more appropriate performance measure might be something to look at in the context of what you talk about a little bit in one of the other sections, and you made reference to it in your introductory remarks. To me a tax system that would encourage employment would be one that, you know, has a high level of personal exemption, that has an ease of reporting and a perceived ease of compliance, because these are the kinds of things that make people say: okay, the taxes are not a burden; let's get out there. We've got to make sure that in effect that incentive to work is there, that there's not a disincentive, I guess is a better way of putting it, in our tax system.

Also, I like the part that you talk about that here is a family-supportive concept to that tax structure. In the performance measures again I don't see any reference to the relative exemptions that, say, would come for children. You know, we have the personal exemption. But then what about spousal and children tax credits or tax exemptions? How do they compare to other provinces? That's in effect what would give us a sense of people's willingness and ability to work here in Alberta.

Again on the corporate measures, again on page 161, you're using a performance measure that looks at the "percent annual growth in business registrations." So this is new business that's coming into the province. Yes, this is great, yet what you're trying to do is use that as a performance measure to look at "a competitive corporate tax regime." I would suggest that if we're trying to deal with competitive tax regimes, we should be looking at that growth in business registrations relative to other provinces, not just did ours go up 10 percent. Well, we're not really doing very well if the other provinces all went up 12 percent. So a relative registration in Alberta versus a registration in the other provinces would be more reflective of that concept of competitive. If you're dealing with an absolute, then the measure that you have there would be really quite good. I encourage you to deal with the new tax collection agreement that you talk about as well. That would be great.

Some of the other things that we're dealing with in goal 4 on page 162. You're talking there about that they "prudently manage the investments of the General Revenue Fund set aside to retire debt." When you talk about performance measures, you're talking about the "return on the investment is greater than the cost of the debt on the day the investment is made." This is something where you're basically saying that you can invest your money with a return that is higher than what we have to pay to borrow money. Is that an appropriate interpretation of that statement? In effect, if it is, then we should be borrowing money and letting you invest it so that we can finance the province from that perspective. So really what I'm looking for is clarification on what that statement means, because if it really works, we've got something going here. If that's the way it would work, it really leaves – I need some clarification on it I guess is what I'm trying to say, Madam Minister.

The focus there, I think, is that we should make sure that in effect our dollars are being competitively invested given the short-term nature of them, because they are dollars set aside to be used as our bonds mature so that we can pay off our debt. Some of them can be short, monthly or multimonth, but very few of them would be multiyear, long-term investments where you should be able to get the highest rate of return. [Dr. Nicol's speaking time expired] I will return as well.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: Hon. minister, would you wish to respond?

MRS. NELSON: Did you want to take another person in this hour?

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: Okay. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It's again a pleasure to participate in the debates on the estimates for the Ministry of Finance this afternoon. I recognize that subsequent to the 2001 election Treasury was divided into two separate ministries, the Ministry of Finance and the Ministry of Revenue. Sometimes when I listen to the government on the financial crisis that we're in, I think that perhaps the cabinet should again be shrunk, perhaps down to 16 ministries, because I'm quite sure that the current minister could ably handle both Revenue and Finance. Perhaps if we are sincere in our argument about prudent use of tax dollars, we could shrink the size of government. Certainly we have been talking about eliminating – well, it's not talk; it's reality. We have eliminated community lottery boards. We have certainly closed agricultural offices.

I know firsthand how people in Coronation – I heard on the main street of Coronation – felt about that. Certainly there is concern and there have been questions raised by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview and the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East about rural hospital closures, bed closures. There are any number of issues relating to this budget that cause concern for Albertans, but in all this public debate there has been no mention of perhaps saving a few dollars by shrinking the number of cabinet positions. You know, there is a certain elasticity, I should say, to this budget. It has been expanded and contracted and expanded again, and I don't know if we could say that it has snapped, but certainly there has been a turn of direction. Earlier in my time in the Assembly there have been hon. members bring forward motions to have an Alberta song, and then we had another motion to have an Alberta dance. I think, after I look at this budget, there should be an Alberta shoe, and it would be the flip-flop, because there have been a lot of flip-flops with this budget.

Now, there are many issues that I have in the short time that we're going to have, Mr. Chairman, but certainly the Minister of Finance has essentially taken over all areas dealing with financial management and planning from the former Ministry of Treasury. While the Ministry of Revenue is responsible for investing financial assets, administering the tax and revenue programs, managing risk associated with the loss of public assets, and regulating Alberta's capital market, we must recognize that the Department of Finance sets out its core businesses as to manage financial assets and liabilities prudently, facilitate sound fiscal planning and decision-making, foster an effective accountability framework, foster access to comprehensive and competitive financial products and services and pension plans, and administer the regulatory framework to reduce the risk of financial loss to pension plan members, depositors, and policyholders.

In the course of the entire budget debate, I've noticed this spring a certain contempt for regulation by certain ministers of the Crown. I would only have to caution them with one word, and that would be Enron. There is a place for regulations, and I would encourage the hon. minister to certainly continue to administer the regulatory framework that is at the disposal of the department to reduce the risk of any financial loss.

Certainly we need a strong, sustainable financial position. Everyone recognizes that. At the same time, we need open and accountable government and a fair and competitive provincial tax system. The jury is still out on this notion of the flat tax. I received feedback at the Safeway store from constituents regarding this flat tax after they did their taxes this year, and they're not happy. They didn't see these substantial savings.

Now, certainly another goal is to minimize borrowing and financing costs subject to acceptable risk, Mr. Chairman; to foster confidence in and encourage the availability of comprehensive, reliable, and competitive financial products and services; and certainly to foster confidence in Alberta-registered pension plans.

In a note I would like to at this time recognize some of the individuals who I believe are doing a very, very good job of administering Alberta's registered pension plans. It is within the last calendar year, if my memory is serving me correctly, that individuals within that specific office of the government worked hard to try to resolve a serious issue in regard to an Alberta-registered pension plan, and their efforts certainly do not go unnoticed by this member, Mr. Chairman.

Now, I have a lot of questions, and if they cannot be answered today, then if I could expect perhaps before the first day of summer to have correspondence from the minister's office with answers to my questions, that would be in my view quite acceptable.

Can the minister explain why capital investment last year was 72 percent, or $809,000, below budget? Certainly if we look at the full-time – I don't like using "equivalents." I like to use "full-time employees" in these estimates of FTEs. There are 363, as I see this, in the department. Am I to understand that there are no transfers to the Alberta Corporate Service Centre this year? I am pleased to see that there has been an increase – and I think this is very important – in the Alberta Pensions Administration Corporation. There are now 140 employees in there guarding the pensions of Albertans to ensure that they're there whenever they're needed. Oh, that's an important job, yes.

The Insurance Council. I see a slight increase in the number of full-time equivalents there from 17 to 18, and I'm sure that the Member for Edmonton-Riverview, in light of the extraordinary effort by this government to privatize health care, is going to be anxious to see if at any time in the future the Insurance Council will have to increase their budget and subsequently the number of people who are working there.

Mr. Chairman, in order to emphasize the government's commitment to three-year fiscal planning, I believe it would be advisable to present comparative three-year projections to the Ministry of Finance in the main estimates book and the three-year ministry income statement found under the business plan. Now, the only information on expense projections for 2002-03 and 2003-04 is presented in the ministry consolidated income statement. However, there is no comparability beyond 2001-02 between the program and subprogram votes as found on pages 175 through 178 of the Finance estimates with the ministry's statement of operations on page 161 of the Finance business plan.

I had the pleasure, the real pleasure, of phoning government officials in Alaska. I don't know whether the government of Alaska has banned voice mail or if it's just a policy of the government that people pick up the phone, but to my delight and surprise a senior government official picked up the phone and was explaining to me how they have 10-year projections. Ten years, not one-year, not two-year, not three-year projections. I was quite impressed with their analysis, and I would like to see, certainly with revenue projections for the price of natural gas and conventional crude oil, this done in this province as well. I was amazed to see the 10-year projections, as described earlier.

There are no projections for the change in the number of full-time employees within the ministry for 2002-03 and 2003-04, and one would have to recall that these issues had been raised with the Provincial Treasurer in the three previous years with Alberta Treasury estimates. Will the minister please explain why the Finance business plan still does not provide a three-year expense profile by program and subprogram as last appeared in the 1995-96 through 1997-98 Alberta Treasury business plan?

Will the minister please assist readers of the business plans and estimates books to compare gross operating expenses by program and subprogram vote within the ministry over a three-year time frame, 2001-02 through 2003-04, by providing a three-year spending profile, operating expenses, and capital investment of the department by program areas for the years 2002-03 and 2003-04?

Also, Mr. Chairman, will the minister please provide information on the plans for the full-time employees in the Ministry of Finance, the Alberta Pensions Administration Corporation, and the Alberta Insurance Council, again for the years 2002-03, 2003-04?

Will the minister provide a breakdown of departmental expenses by object for 2001-02, 2002-03, and 2003-04 for the following: salaries in the permanent positions, salaries nonpermanent positions, contract positions, the salaries there, travel expenses, advertising, communications, and hosting expenses?

Also, if the minister could provide a breakdown of premiums, fees, and licences. For 2001-02 there was a little bit over $18 million here. In 2002-03 there was over $21.3 million, and for 2003-04 there is anticipated $24.2 million. If this could be done by type of premium fee and licence, I would be very grateful for the minister's information. This is on page 161 of the Finance business plan.

Also on page 161 of the Finance business plan, will the minister provide a breakdown of other revenue for 2001-02? Here again there's $23.4 million. For the year 2002-03 there is $23.6 million, and for the year 2003-04 the figure mentioned is $23.4 million. Again, will the minister please explain why internal government transfers are increasing by 720 percent – this is again on page 161 – from $44 million in 2001-02 to $361 million in 2002-03.

Again on page 161, will the minister explain why financing to local authorities is decreasing by 14.8 percent, from $358 million in 2001-02 to $305 million in 2003-04? It is worth noting, Mr. Chairman, that this is a 30 percent decrease, from $437 million in 1999-2000 to $305 million in 2003-04.

[Mr. Griffiths in the chair]

Now, Mr. Chairman, will the minister please explain why financial assistance to farmers and small businesses is decreasing by 50 percent, from $1.6 million in 2001-02 to $800,000 in 2003-04. This is about an 80 percent decrease, from $3.9 million in 1999-2000 again to $800,000 in fiscal year 2003-04. Now, this is also on page 161 of the Finance business plan.

At that time it was entirely up to the minister, but I will cede the floor to my hon. colleague from Lethbridge-East. Thank you.

3:50

THE ACTING CHAIR: The hon. Minister of Finance.

MRS. NELSON: Thank you. You look mighty fine in that chair, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chairman, I wanted to give some initial response back to the Leader of the Opposition and will get into more detail in our written response. He talked about where we tend to focus on bond rating agencies' review of our plans, and those are very, very important reviews that do occur, because they establish the credibility of the province not only within Alberta but worldwide and make Alberta a very attractive place to come and invest dollars and to develop industry and to raise a family. It's a global phenomena when a province the size of 3 million people receives the triple crown or the triple A ratings from three major bond rating services that are recognized worldwide. So it's a phenomenal achievement for this province, and Albertans should be very, very proud of what they have done in very short order and be very proud that they are the only jurisdiction in all of Canada to have received those accolades and that support and that strength of conviction from the bond rating agencies.

I wanted to give the hon. Leader of the Opposition some additional material that he can use also to help promote Alberta when he's out and about. I think that again Albertans can be very, very proud of what other worldwide recognized organizations have said about Alberta and the situation, in particular to Budget 2002.

I'm looking at, as an example, the Investment Dealers Association of Canada. They came out and said:

It is encouraging in this context to see that the government, referring to Alberta, has incorporated prudent projections for economic growth next year and is contemplating further discretionary spending reductions to avoid a deficit and to continue on track with debt reduction. These commitments . . .

And this is very important.

. . . provide assurance of continued wealth creation, employment and sustainable economic growth in the province.

This is from the Investment Dealers Association of Canada in response to Budget 2002. I think it's very important for Albertans to realize that someone who is being supportive of directing capital investment or individual investments to jurisdictions worldwide would say that about a province of 3 million, that it has the assurance of wealth creation and development within our province.

I was very pleased with what their CEO and president, Joe Oliver, had to say. He said:

We are encouraged by Alberta's commitment to sound fiscal management in spite of the difficult economic conditions of last year. The prudent planning assumptions of this Budget, combined with an enviable record of tax reduction and spending control, are setting the stage for continued strong economic performance in Alberta.

Again Albertans can be very proud of the accolades that are coming from these world-recognized organizations, recommending Alberta as a place to be and a place to put investment.

I think also what was very interesting is the Toronto-Dominion Economics review of the budget. They said: "The amount of restraint in store for Albertans over the near term is far from draconian and most likely a one-off development – a testament to the rock solid fiscal position of this Wild Rose Province.” I think it’s a tremendous testament to Albertans and their commitment to strong fiscal responsibility. They also said, “Today’s plan,” referring to Budget 2002, “will do little,” will do little, “to erode the Alberta Advantage – the provincial government’s catch-phrase for its strong fiscal and economic position.”

The Scotiabank Fiscal Pulse commented on our budget as well. They said, “Alberta is perceived as the leader in fiscal repair among the provinces.”

So, Mr. Chairman, while we may focus inwardly on what this all means and what these business plans mean, I think what it does quite frankly is it sends out a signal of stability and responsibility and accountability from a government to not only the people of this province but beyond the province. It sends out a signal that we are open for business, we are accountable, and we are responsible. I think that with the position that our Premier put in place with the three-year business planning process and the quarterly review, it becomes abundantly obvious that we are the only government in Canada that gets up and gives a fiscal update every quarter to their stakeholder groups or the taxpayers of their jurisdiction, like we do in Alberta. That to me is dealing with reality.

Things change, as we saw last year, a dramatic shift in what the forecasts and the projections were with the economy. When we started off last year, there were the usual criticisms: you’re too high; you’re too low on your revenue; you’re in between; you’re all over the map. Nobody anticipated the impact of the global economic downturn. Nobody could forecast that. When it hit, where was Alberta? We were in the best shape of any jurisdiction in Canada and, I daresay, likely North America to be able to deal with the tough calls, the reality check that came in place. That didn’t come because we were lucky. That came out of the reasoning of having the economic cushion, the fiscal planning, and the solid plan to be able to pull back if necessary. A lot of jurisdictions were not able to do that.

While we may be able to find improvement – and I think we can – I think you don’t just sit on one set of rules for a long time and don’t continually review them. In this government we have a process called standing policy committees, and they do a thorough review, and they criticize where criticism is necessary. They come forward with constructive criticism as to what comes forward in plans. Some plans come back more than once, sometimes more than twice for review by the standing policy committees. They go over these plans before they come forward to form what’s called the government business plan. So while we may have a number of ministries, they all feed into the overall government business plan, and that’s what goes out to represent Albertans in the world, but it also goes back to Albertans so that they can see how the government is managing their money, their affairs, giving forward the responsibilities of course of the core programs of the government.

Now, I wanted to just make a comment, Mr. Chairman. Last week I was in Corner Brook, Newfoundland, attending the finance ministers’ meetings with the federal government, the territories, and the provinces. A number of topics were discussed at the sessions. One of them was the fiscal imbalance within the country. Naturally, the Kyoto accord was there plus the CHST funding framework and naturally the tax collection agreement, which we’re in the process of negotiating right now.

What I found interesting after some of the criticism we may have received from our own jurisdiction was that while we may have had to tighten our belts somewhat this last year, we have been able to proceed on with a competitive system that no other jurisdiction in Canada can have, and we’ve done that because of the framework we’ve put in place. The whole structure is conducive to attracting investment, to attracting people, and to attracting migration to this province at unprecedented rates. We do that by having the tax structure that we have that is not only competitive across Canada at all levels but our other marketplace that we have to compete with is south of the border. We have to compete with a jurisdiction south. We can’t afford to have our young people moving south. We can’t afford to have the investment going south. We need to have a model – and we do – in Alberta that attracts people to this jurisdiction. As you know, we are continually reviewing our processes, our regulations, our rules because we know that cost of compliance is a huge issue for decision-making models. We know that taxation models are a huge issue. We know that availability of transportation structures is a huge issue. We know that we have to have the best that we can offer in education. We have to have a health system that delivers programs. Those are issues that are all part of the full package that comes forward.

Sitting at that meeting in Corner Brook, Newfoundland, with colleagues from coast to coast, I listened to a federal Finance minister say: there’s no fiscal imbalance in this country. I thought: how could someone possibly say that? In the community I was sitting in, the minister from Newfoundland had just been talking about the economic update of Newfoundland and Labrador when she informed us that they had a negative birthrate in their province. They have no industry. We traveled with young people returning home for the weekend who had had to leave the province and go elsewhere because there was nothing for them to do. I felt really very sad as a Canadian that we would have that kind of differentiation and have a federal Finance minister say that there’s no fiscal imbalance within this country, that all provinces have the ability through taxation models to raise dollars. I thought: how can you say that? If you don’t have people who are working and you don’t have industries, where are you going to in fact be able to raise those dollars? That led us to the transfer programs and equalization.

If you have a province like Newfoundland and Labrador, you still have to provide roads and hospitals. They have to be funded somehow. I looked at us in Alberta and thought: aren’t we fortunate? Well, we’ve had to tighten our belt somewhat. We were able to turn to our young people and say: “The sky is the limit. You can be anything you want. There isn’t any goal you can’t reach if you’re prepared to work hard, stay with the program, and learn. There isn’t any goal you can’t reach.” In other parts of this country that’s not the case, and it got down to me that here we are in Alberta with all of the benefits, all of the benefits anybody could ever want, and we want more. I go to other jurisdictions. The sad part is that they don’t even seem to have any hope that it’s going to get better. Nothing is going there. It’s very, very sad. I was really upset to think that here we complain about this or that or the other thing in this province when I sat in a province that didn’t have really anything to look forward to. I thought: what a sad state in a country as wonderful as this.

In trying to explain that to the federal Finance minister, I said: how can you do that? We’ve had an issue with CHST. We’ve all heard about the commitment for health funding. Every province raised the issue. Health care is going to be the number one issue for funding in this country. We’re very fortunate in Alberta that we’re dealing with this today. We have a commitment from our Premier, from our health minister, from our caucus to move forward. Other jurisdictions don’t have that ability, but down the road it has to be there. Some of the provinces reported to us that they were in fact spending over 50 percent of their budget on health and sinking fast.

We put forward a proposal through our premiers' conferences to take the ceiling off the CHST. That has been debated now for I don't know how many years – my colleagues who've been to those meetings more than I have would probably know – but you can't expect to have all of the programs offered if there isn't support from the federal government, and I didn't find that coming. I found that very discouraging, and I don't know how other provinces who aren't in the situation we're in are dealing with it. We will manage, and we will have the best programs but not without some belt-tightening. We have a program that we're going to move forward with, and I think it's important that we do that.

The other thing that I thought was interesting that you asked me about was: where are we on the Canada pension plan? Well, from the latest reports we have, the plan is far more secure than it was when the issue was first raised. We had a report that came out last year on it that said that the plan was stable, so we haven't done any further work on looking at an Alberta pension plan alternative at this point.

You asked also a question on: what constitutes a fair tax system? Well, I suppose that if you're sitting at home listing what constitutes a fair tax system, no tax system would seem to be fair if you've just filed tax returns. I just finished completing a number of tax returns for family and friends this last couple of weeks, and every one of them probably at the end thought that this wasn't fair at all. But what do your taxes provide? Well, they provide for a number of issues that we expect and want, issues that we share: our roads, our schools, our hospitals, our universities or colleges. All of these are provided for through our tax system. So as long as we provide effective, good programs that deliver and meet the needs of Albertans, without getting into an intrusionary area, and deal with the core responsibilities of government, then I don't think a government has a problem collecting a tax from people to in fact deliver those programs. It's when they get beyond – beyond – the responsibility of the government or overspend or don't have checks and balances in place that show that they are collecting too much in comparison to the cost of a good program. That's when the system becomes unfair, I think.

We also have a system in Alberta, quite frankly, that I think, in doing this last go-round of tax returns, clearly – and I did tax returns for very young and for seniors and for people in between.

MRS. McCLELLAN: I thought Very Young was somebody's name.

MRS. NELSON: Very Young has somebody's name, but I'm not going to tell you what that very young name is.

They all had complexities attached to the various returns, but in each case the process on the new Alberta return was quite straightforward. In fact, it was probably less cumbersome than before. Clearly, you could see where the exemption on the flat rate was beneficial – some larger than others, granted – and clearly you could see that it was an easier return to complete. I've done tax returns for, well, I guess probably 30 years now, and these were not difficult to fill out, so I don't think there was any difficulty.

The tax collection agreement. We got into a debate on that, and we're still there. One of the things that's outstanding on that issue is the disputes resolution process between the federal government and ourselves, and that became obvious when we had the difficulty with the overpayment of the mutual trust revenues being transferred from the federal government to four provinces. All of a sudden 10 years later you get a phone call, after this problem had existed for 10 years: "Surprise, surprise. You owe us a bunch of money, and we're going to claw it back right now." You go: what kind of a partnership is that? You know, how can you have a partnership that says that we'll go merrily along for 10 years and then you get a phone call one afternoon saying: "We have a surprise for you. You owe us $4.4 million, and we're just going to plan on taking it back from you today?" Well, for the province of Ontario that was well over $3 billion. For the province of Manitoba that was I believe about 10 percent of their personal income tax revenues for one year. So this starts putting provinces into a bankruptcy situation on a plan that had errors in it for 10 years.

So there has to be a resolution process and a process of fairness put in place to resolve these issues. It can't be that just all of a sudden you get the afternoon phone call at 4 o'clock and tah-dah, tah-dah, tah-dah, too bad for you, and here's the arrangement of the partnership. Those were issues that were raised at this finance ministers' meeting, I can tell you that right now, because there are provinces – Alberta will be able to manage – out there that are going to be in serious financial difficulty unless there is some sort of a fair process to resolve this issue, and that has to do with the total, overarching tax collection agreement.

THE ACTING CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

MR. McCLELLAND: Thank you very much, Chairman. I have just a couple of comments that have to do with the budget and budget process. I'm wondering if the Finance minister would comment on the notion of anticipating funding that is available from other orders of government as a line item in the budget, funding that's available and does become available from other orders of government, primarily the federal government, for matching grants that would have to do with research. It's far more difficult to define because we don't know. We can only anticipate what may become available. But we have to have it if we're going to get it from the other orders of government. So I'm wondering if the Minister of Finance could comment on that sometime during this debate.

MRS. NELSON: Well, Mr. Chairman, if I might, on the budget process. You can't build a budget around an anticipated, maybe, program from another government. You just can't do that, because you've got to build it on the best information and the most reliable information that you have that day. It's like having three weeks of price swings in oil or gas. You don't build a 365-day budget on a two- or three-week price swing. You have to build it on the best forecast you have at the time. That's the benefit of the quarterly update.

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

With regard to matching programs, that quite often happen – and I don't know whether the question was asked of the minister of Transportation or Infrastructure, which are usually the two programs where the matching comes in – there are usually strings attached. It's not just: "Here's your pro rata share of dollars that can go to Alberta. Do with it as you see are the priorities within your jurisdiction." There's usually, "Match it this way or that way," and there are angles. So there is not always a pure matching concept where you're able to deal with the priorities that exist within this province but more at the federal level. You can't really build that into your budget. We always say that the devil is in the detail, and you have to see what's involved in the package before we can jump in there. Sometimes it ends up that we're not in a position to be able to go along with the program because of the strings that get attached to it. They don't meet any of the criteria or needs within the province of Alberta, and we'd have to take away from other core programs to accomplish something that really isn't in a core program area for this province. So there are some difficulties with that. We don't necessarily build that in as a result of that.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I rise to continue on some of the issues on the Ministry of Finance. Madam Minister, I enjoyed your conversation about the differences that we have in our provinces, and you went on to talk about how people in Alberta can set their sight on any goal and they can go out and get it. I think the part that you should add on the end of your sentence is, "and do it in Alberta," because in a lot of the other provinces they can still do it, but to do it, they have to leave home.

Just a couple of final comments on the business plan, goal 5 there. You talked a little bit about the availability of capital, I guess, and the growth factors that are important for our province in terms of financing. I was interested in your comments on how you see our venture capital markets developing. Are they working the way they should? The reason I ask this is that a few years ago we were basically a province without our own venture capital initiatives, and I know that's improving now. I just was interested in what you see as our current status, whether or not we're reaching the level of some of the other provinces where venture capital is readily available for our upstart businesses, you know, the new businesses that are getting started, because a few years ago that was a real issue. A lot of them had to go outside, and there's a lot of work that shows that the venture capital groups don't really give money beyond their spectre of close control. Venture capital isn't given halfway around the world like corporate investment capital might be because the venture capitalists like to be able to have a hands-on relationship with the people they're giving that money to. So it's important that we do have a process in place to really encourage a growth in that venture capital industry here in our province.

I guess the other thing – and I'm just looking down here. You talk a little bit again about the Alberta Treasury Branches under goal 5 on page 164. It's interesting, as I read through both the outcomes and the performance measures there, that the implication is that this gets credited to the government. Yet we keep talking about under the new structure that the ATB is arm's length, that it's not part of the government anymore. Why are we still including it, then, in our business plans as though it was something that we could influence? Technically now – at least we're telling Albertans – this is arm's length. There are no decisions made in this House that deal with the day-to-day operation of the Treasury Branches. The long-term philosophy or legal role of the Treasury Branches, yes, is legislated by this House, but supposedly we're out of the day-to-day operation of it. So why should we be dealing with performance measures on confidence and acceptance and buy-in in terms of their programs as part of our business plan here? That should be their annual report, their responsibility to basically their depositors and their loan holders.

That basically, in terms of the goal discussions, covers what I wanted to raise, but on page 167 you're talking specifically about your performance indicators. It was really quite interesting, the perception that's presented by the graph on the accumulated debt, in the sense that you have the legislated schedule as a line out to 2025, but you have the actual debt and the forecast – the implication there is that our debt will be paid off in 2005, because after 2005 there are no bars on the graph. So does this mean that there's something that Albertans should know about in our centennial? You know the implication on that graph is that we are debt free in 2005. So I would just ask that that be continued out until we monitor off at probably around 2010 or 2012, something like that, because that would give us a better piece of information that we can present to Albertans as to where we are relative to where we started in – what was it? – 1997, Madam Minister, when we passed the debt elimination act and had the 2025 time line. So, you know, that would give us a much better piece of information.

I guess I'll have to admit that I can't read my writing on that note, so I'll have to go on to some of the other ones, some of the specific questions on the rest of the budget, Madam Minister, just a couple that I can put on the record. You can handle them now or later, as you want.

The total voted spending is down – these are the questions that we're presenting to you – owing to the decline in the debt servicing costs. The total voted program budget is rising by more than 10 percent in the ministry support services and Treasury management. What are those increases for? Secondly, what is the investment income revenue line in the ministry's statement of operations? Thirdly, does this investment income include the government investment account then?

The next question on some of these line items. There's an increase of about $580,000 on a base of $1.3 million in the liability management area of program 4. What's that for? What are you going to be doing with that additional money? Is it additional risk management, or what? The banking and cash forecasting area is also rising about $200,000 on a base of $1.2 million. What's that for? Is this a dedicated revenue?

Question 5. The voted debt servicing costs show an amount of grants for school construction interest payment. Are they down? What is that?

These are some of the issues that come up when we look at the specific issues of the budget. I guess as we go through the line items, you know, there's a lot of interest there in terms of why some of the line items come up. The question that I would ask in terms of looking at the whole budget debate – and this is kind of what your overview responsibilities encompass – was implied by one of the questions before when they were talking about the subcategories and the line items. The new Financial Administration Act basically gives the minister the freedom to move items in those subcategory areas without authorization by the Legislature. Has that program worked? Has it given us good accountability in terms of the budget debate and program delivery? But also tie that accountability back to the flexibility that it gives to a minister to respond on a quarterly basis, when we have to do the updates that are mandated by that law. So I would like, you know, your opinion or your reflections on whether or not that works. Or have you even looked at whether or not it's working? Have you asked ministers: has it created a benefit, or has it created some hardships?

One of the reasons I ask this is that when we had the ministerial reorganization, when we had the new ministers created after the last election and some responsibilities of programs were transferred from one minister to the other, the programs were transferred, as I understand it, with the dollars based on the budget, not based on the operational expenditure pattern. So if there was a cross-subsidy going on within the ministry, then when the program was shifted to a new ministry, the line item dollars went, not the actual expenditure dollars. So, you know, in effect it was creating a hardship on the, quote, receiving ministry. So I would like to know if the ministry has done anything to look at: has that created any kind of operational difficulty when we're dealing with programs moving through ministries? Are you looking at ways to fix that?

Mr. Chairman, that's kind of run through the list of the questions that I had on the budget. Maybe if things come up as we go through the rest of it, I'll jump up again. But on this basis right now, that's kind of where I'm at. So I'll give the minister a chance to respond again.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. Minister of Finance.

MRS. NELSON: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I want to just finish a couple of comments. The Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar said that he had difficulty with voice mail. I do too. I don't like it at all. I find it quite rude, actually. I feel very strongly that if you take the time to phone, someone should pick up the phone. In fact, this morning I ended up in my office when people were off doing other things, and three phone calls came in. I picked up the phone and said: good morning, Pat Nelson speaking. There was dead silence at the other end. Then someone said: you answered the phone. Well, I've been doing it since I was three, you know. I've been answering the phone since I was three years old, so I'm qualified to do that. They didn't get a voice mail. They didn't get an answering machine because I don't like them.

The other interesting part was on new technology. There was a report somewhere today that Newfoundland was going to ban cell phones. I can tell you that with my old, old cell phone – I don't have the new modern one – when we got down to Corner Brook, mine was the only cell phone from all the ministries all over Canada that actually worked. Everybody else's new digital, whatever – nothing worked except my little old analog cell phone, that's as old as the hills. It picked up, and I actually was able to phone directly back to Calgary from there. So people were saying: your cell phone works when nobody else's does.

I think that when you phone, you should have someone pick up the phone. I fully agree with that. In fact, in some ministries I had before, not this one, I have actually put out: if I phone over and somebody has a message machine on through business hours, you're not there the next day. If people take the time to phone, then you should pick up the phone or call forward it to someone else who will pick it up. Of course, mind you, when I was moved from the ministry, 30 seconds later the old voice mail went right back on again. So I'm not under any illusion there. I don't care for them. I find them not helpful.

The comments you made about FTEs, I did deal with that. We have put additional staff, Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, into the pension administration. We believe that with the new system it's important to make sure that we have people that can operate those systems. They're very important, and as the trustee of the public pension plans for the province I'm taking that role very seriously to make sure that it is in fact serviced properly. You're quite right. There are some very, very qualified and good people in that operation.

You also mentioned that our capital investment was below budget. Well, that's because we've completed the new system, so that's come down now in cost. The system is a result as to why some of the new full-time equivalents were necessary to run that system. Again, on the insurance side of things we needed to have additional people go into that area to deal with the new requirements of the new Insurance Act to make sure that we could fulfill the obligations.

I was quite pleased with the hon. Leader of the Opposition looking at the chart on accumulated debt. I never picked up on what you were talking about, but I guess we looked at the graph that was on page 167, the same as you did, and it shows the accumulated debt legislated to retire in 2025. Then we have the chart with the best-known information as to where our debt will go down. From what we have today, it would be highly unlikely – highly unlikely – that our debt would be retired by 2005 or even shortly thereafter, unless there was some unforeseen banner year that came in that no one could forecast, like we had when we had $9 and $10 an mcf gas, et cetera. I don't believe that to be possible. I would think that we're probably looking, as the hon. leader said, more likely at 2011 or '12 or even up to '16, depending on where revenues go and where the framework looks. So I don't see that as being possible. I'm disappointed to have to say that, but those are some of the realities in the balancing that you have to do when you're delivering core programs. We do recognize that very clearly.

There was one comment from the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar that I wanted particularly to make a comment on. He talked about a flip-flop in this budget. There has been no change in this budget whatsoever, zero change in this budget that we presented here in March. What you saw on additional dollars going before March 31 to Transportation and Infrastructure was a commitment from last fall, last October, when we had to pull back $1.26 billion, $783 million from Infrastructure and Transportation. We said at the time that if in the fourth quarter the dollars became available, we would replace those things that had been deferred. We had to do that by March 31 because of the year-end. It had no bearing on this fiscal year whatsoever. There has been no change in this budget that has been presented. Zero change, not one cent. So let's be abundantly clear on that. We followed through on that commitment that we made last fall, recognizing that some of the projects had to go forward.

I think the hon. Leader of the Opposition alluded to building infrastructure deficits. If you have a province that is growing at the pace that this province is, there are difficulties with growth. Growth has to be accommodated, or you have a deterrent for people to come here, and we can't afford to do that. We need to have this province moving forward, and that means building and enhancing roadways and schools and hospitals, et cetera. Those things have to come. Those are realities of life, hard fact realities. So we must keep apace with that and abreast of that, and if that means putting dollars into those programs like we did, then that's the commitment this government has. So we followed through on that.

I just wanted to make that abundantly clear, Mr. Chairman. There has been zero change in this year's budget. Zero change.

With that, I'll take my place and see if others want to comment.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I rise to make some general observations first on the estimates for the Department of Finance and then ask some questions of the minister. I understand that I have 20 minutes. I don't know how much time I'll use, but it's good to know that I have some time to speak to this budget.

First, some general observations. This is the Minister of Finance's second budget. I think it reflects the general sort of thinking that the minister has brought to her portfolio, but it's a budget which also in many ways very faithfully reflects the priorities of this government with respect to the distribution of tax loads, both with respect to personal income taxes and taxes that the government collects from the business sector.

So I think my first general observation is that the strategy of shifting the relative personal income tax load onto the shoulders of the middle-income earners is continued in this budget. That's reflected in the unswerving sort of commitment of the minister to stick to the flat tax model. The result of that has been of course shifting the relative burden of personal income tax onto the middle-income earners of this province.

Secondly, it's clear in this budget – it was a little less clear but nevertheless clear in the previous budget that the minister presented – that the indirect taxes, user-fee type of taxes, are preferred rather than a more progressive way of raising needed revenues to provide for important social programs and services that Albertans expect their governments to provide. The examples of the continuing shift in the sort of framework of raising taxes to the individual user of services, to wage and salary income earners is clear. The major increase, one significant increase, is in the health care premiums, a 30 percent increase, and the government has of course argued that this is justified not only by the need for more revenues to be collected from taxes in the province but also – and in particular the Premier has stated it again and again, and the minister has also given the same message – that the individual responsibility principle requires that Albertans pay a larger share of what it costs for them to receive health care services.

This principle of taking responsibility for the services received is very quickly forgotten when it comes to the business world, particularly the corporate world. Certainly if the freeloader principle is to be in a sense discouraged at the level of individual income earners, I don't know why it's the very one that's espoused by this government when it comes to big corporations expecting lower taxes year after year and the government obliging them while telling families and individual Albertans that that's simply not the right way to go.

So this very glaring sort of oversight on the part of this government is quite interesting, that it is not only tolerant but in fact happily espouses a regime of declining taxes for businesses, particularly large corporations, yet when it comes to individual Albertans, it sends the message that they must pay more taxes, albeit in the form of specific taxes such as health care taxes or licence fees or premium fees or others. Over 70 or so different licence fees and other fees have been increased, and as a result we see quite a large increase in the revenues that will be drawn from premiums, fees, and licences. About a 21 percent increase is forecast in this budget from last year.

There's something else here that I may – I think it's more of a question that I'll ask the minister to address. She may have addressed it, and if she has addressed it, then I'll be happy to read it in Hansard. Under Revenue in the budget estimates on page 191, other revenue has increased quite dramatically, forecast to increase fivefold more or less, a 480 percent increase. This is the very last item under Revenue on page 191 of the estimates. According to my calculations the increased revenue from that source, other revenues, is 480.83 percent to be precise.

Some other general observations, Chairman, for the minister to perhaps comment on. Reading through the fiscal plan, I came across a statement here that for me to fully understand I will need the minister's help. This is on page 9 of the fiscal plan. At the top of the page there's a line there that says, "We have learned the hard way that caution, not optimism, is needed in planning a budget." Good. Fine. I have no disagreement with that. "Temporary setbacks can last longer than expected." Yeah. Sure. But then the next line: "Ignoring realities can lead to greater pain in the future." Now, I presume you mean all realities. The budget should be based on a clear and sound grasp of realities, positive as well as negative.

Now, two realities that I find the minister having not paid attention to have to do with – first, we know that natural resources revenue is volatile because the market is volatile in that, you know, gas and oil. Ignoring this reality, the government has decided to continue with its corporate tax cut policy – this ignores the reality of volatility – and the personal income tax cuts, particularly for the top 5 percent of the income earners, which are the highest income earners in the province. So in the face of a clear recognition that the natural resource revenues, which form a substantial part of government revenues, are volatile – the government is ignoring that when continuing to insist that it must implement the corporate tax cuts, albeit at a slower rate, and to continue with the flat income tax policy, which, as I said, transfers the relative burden of personal income tax quite dramatically onto the shoulders of middle-income Albertans.

The second reality that is ignored by the minister in the budget is the record of the last nine years, from '93-94 to 2000-2001. The government has consistently, without exception, lowballed the revenues by quite a magnitude every year so that over the number of these years from '93-94 to 2000-2001, the government has created a new reality, and that is that its forecast estimated revenues have every year been less by anywhere from a billion dollars to $6.5 billion in the year 2000-2001. As a result of these lowballed estimates, in reality the total difference over these years between the estimates and the actual adds up to more than $21 billion.

In reality it's a consistent pattern without exception over all these years. It's not just a matter of being cautious. It seems that there is a systematic bias to radically underestimate those revenues. Again the minister in my view has not grasped the fact that this is a reality and that it's something that she should take into consideration when developing the next year's estimate, as is the case in the budget that we are considering, the last year's.

So these are two sort of general observations. Now, some other questions. Clearly, the minister is very concerned about containing expenditures according to her estimates. In her fiscal plan there are three assumptions that are stated very clearly. Two of them have to do with oil and gas revenues and the market rate. The third one had to do with the dramatic economic slowdown that was feared in the wake of September 11. Now, it's eight months since the September 11 tragedy and the feared impact that it was likely to have on the markets. At least from what I've been reading in the Globe and Mail and through listening to the radio and television news, that fear of a dramatic slowdown in the economy and damage to the economy were clearly exaggerated quite dramatically across North America. The American economy is booming. The Canadian economic forecasts all seem to be indicating that the economy will be strong, the growth rates will be strong, and the economy will be robust. Given that, is the minister willing or able to revisit these assumptions? These assumptions are critical to taking the rest of the budget seriously, and if those assumptions themselves are such that we can't rely on those as a dependable basis for revenue forecasts and revenue growth, then the rest of the budget raises questions and is thrown into question.

I know that this government and the minister have been quite busy since the last provincial election in sort of cooling down or dampening the expectations of Albertans. The government's new Assembly, the one we are in now, was less than a few weeks old when the minister read her new budget and already was beginning to dampen expectations, although the whole matter of economic slowdown and the precipitous fall in energy prices for gas and oil were not quite big news yet.

It's clear that there is a political decision to take a certain direction, to increase the cost to Albertans for getting their health care, their driving licences, and such other things as court costs. The government has said no to people on AISH, has downloaded costs onto seniors, the middle-income ones, those who are just above the very low income levels at which they would either partially or fully qualify for a remission of fees. It has taken away some benefits with respect to eye care, podiatry, and other costs that were previously picked up by the province for seniors. So there is a whole lot of transferring of costs back to ordinary Albertans, many of them on fixed incomes, many of them seniors who have paid their dues throughout their lives, and they're not seeing the benefits of their hard work and sacrifices they made over the years.

I want to express my support for the small business tax reduction, and the minister I hope is listening. I'm pleased that the small business threshold will rise from where it is now to $350,000 and that the government will maintain that commitment. But I simply can't see why, while the rest of us are paying increased taxes in various forms, the large corporate income tax reduction has continued. These large businesses will enjoy a half percent decrease, while health care premiums will increase by 30 percent.

So these are some of the comments that the minister might want to respond to, and I know that she'll be quite forthright and perhaps quite aggressive in her answers to my questions. Thank you.

MRS. NELSON: Well, Mr. Chairman, I think the hon. leader of the third party made some valid comments on budget processing. One of the difficulties always is doing the forecasting on revenue. I know how difficult it is and appreciate the difficulty the Department of Energy goes through. I was Energy minister for almost five years, and you do struggle with the forecasts before you present your numbers. There is really no forecaster we've ever found that actually ever hit it right.

That's the beauty of the quarterly update, that we in Alberta are able to look at the reality that sets into the fiscal year recognizing that core programs such as health and education and social programs are dependent upon revenues flowing through to them. I would argue that being overzealous on the forecast or being quite bullish at the time of budget would, if you weren't sure, be imprudent, would not be prudent forecasting, and could in fact put in jeopardy some of those very core programs that we have a responsibility to deliver. I can't think of anything worse than being very bullish on a revenue forecast and then having to partway through the year say: I'm sorry; we're not able to fulfill our obligation in those very key areas. I would much rather we deal with the reality of being somewhat cautious but also looking at taking advantage of the ability to go back to Albertans and say that the trend looks like it's shifting, like we did last year.

I can remember the first quarter update last summer. I went out and said that I had to give a very, very strong statement of caution, and I was accused of being a naysayer, but the economy was taking a downward trend far more than we had anticipated in the budget on all fronts. Now, there was no magic. You could just see the U.S. trend moving forward quicker in the summertime than they had forecasted or the Conference Board or all the experts had forecasted. As we got closer to September, you could see that trend accelerating, and then everybody got hit with September 11. A lot of people blamed all of the economic woes on September 11, but clearly they had begun to become obvious prior to that. We were fortunate that we were able to not only start recognizing them early but make the adjustment.

Now, when that occurred, the world was in an economic turmoil globally. All the markets had crashed down. Chaos was beginning. The commodity prices were just diving all over the place. The projection at that point was that this was long term. Well, fortunately it hasn't turned out to be that way. The recovery has been quicker than anticipated, particularly Stateside, which has had a positive effect on Canada. If the trend moves forward – six months ago I said to you in the statement I brought forward that I would expect it would be 18 to 24 months for recovery to occur. Now I would say to you that probably today my best guess is that we would be looking at 12 to 18 months. But keep in mind that the revenue we have today in our budget is simply returning us to more normal levels of forecasts for our two major commodities of oil and gas.

Beyond that, I don't know where you would go. The beauty again of what we have in this province is quarterly updates. Now, some would say: oh, you shouldn't use that. Well, then you're not dealing with reality, and I'd say that you're not dealing with a full deck. Reality tells you that you should do that. In any corporation you look at where you're going and you do updates. Why would governments be any different when you're dealing with the same economic factors that have impacted delivery of programs that you have to have on your table? You wouldn't be any different from a corporate entity, so why would you pretend that you should set a budget in February for the next 15 months? That's not dealing with reality.

So I think that the process we have of quarterly updates, possibly erring on the caution side, has boded well for Alberta, far better than to get to the other end and say, "We've got a major problem," and pull some difficulty on core programs that are critical – critical – in this province. That to me would be tragic, and I would have some grave difficulty doing that.

I think our process has proven to be successful. It's been applauded worldwide. It's still the best performance that you'll find in all this country, and I think we as legislators need to be supportive of this process so it continues on. Can it get better? Absolutely. Can we do a better job of forecasting as new things become apparent? Yes. Are we looking for recommendations? Yes. That's why we have the Financial Management Commission, to say: are there new ideas we could incorporate in this process to help us move forward? It doesn't hurt to ask people who are doing this daily if there are things we're missing or things we can shift with. At least we're doing that. We're not dug into the rut of never moving beyond. You heard our Minister of Municipal Affairs today say that we are thinking outside of the box. You have to in this day and age. You have to move, because the market moves very quickly today and you can't be left behind. That's the plan we have.

So, Mr. Chairman, with those words I'll take my place.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I welcome this opportunity again to participate in the debate this afternoon. Now, in the hon. minister's response I heard the explanation given that the budget was reviewed through the standing policy committees before it was tabled in the Assembly, and my first question would be in regard to the budget. Was the decision to terminate the community lottery boards reviewed by the standing policy committees before this budget was tabled in the Assembly? We're talking about tax cuts here, and I would like an update on the tradespersons' tool tax cut that was passed and is now awaiting authorization. I would like to know when that's going to happen.

At this time I have four questions regarding the Credit Union Deposit Guarantee Corporation on page 193 of the government estimates. Again, I can certainly wait and receive written response. The four questions. What were the results of the last rate review undertaken by the Credit Union Deposit Guarantee Corporation examining the equity level of the deposit guarantee fund and the estimated growth in total credit union assets? Two, why are the total assessments in interest collected by the Credit Union Deposit Guarantee Corporation increasing by over $1 million, or 7 percent, over the last year's preliminary actual in 2001-02? Three, what goal and plans are being developed by the Credit Union Deposit Guarantee Corporation relating to the requirements for all credit unions to meet legislated capital adequacy requirements? And, four, will the minister indicate whether any reviews have been undertaken by the Ministry of Finance, recognizing that this was formerly Alberta Treasury, in the past year to increase the equity and capital base of the credit unions?

On the previous page of government estimates, page 192, of course there are questions that I have in regard to the ATB, or Alberta Treasury Branches. Now, I have a number of questions here, Mr. Chairman, and again a response in writing before the first day of summer I would be very grateful for. Can the minister explain, please, why the provision for credit losses for the ATB is 26 percent, or $6.5 million, higher than last year's preliminary actual of $24 million? Again, will the minister provide a breakdown of the $30.8 million in provision for credit losses for the ATB in 2001-02? And can the minister explain why administrative expenses are 9.2 percent, or $22.9 million, higher than last year's preliminary actual of $250 million?

Now, has the minister considered having the president and CEO of the Treasury Branches appear with her and her staff before the Standing Committee on Public Accounts to account for the ATB operations on an annual basis in order to improve accountability? That would give all members of the Public Accounts Committee a chance to discuss the ATB operations. I would encourage that. It would certainly improve the accountability and the transparency of this government. Certainly the hon. Minister of Energy seems concerned about the accountability and transparency of the government, so this would be a good initiative, to have the ATB officials appear before the Public Accounts Committee.

DR. TAFT: And I'd be there to question them.

MR. MacDONALD: Yes, and the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview would certainly be diligent in his questioning of those said officials.

Now, what steps have been taken by the ATB to respond to the following recommendations of the Auditor General: firstly, consider the net present value of future cash flows when selecting the optimum method for recovery of delinquent loans; two, improve its procedures for identifying loans that should be accounted for as nonaccrual; three, improve its profitability measurement systems by allocating all noninterest expenses and fees to products?

Again on the Treasury branches. What steps has the Treasury Branch taken to ensure that borrowers provide comprehensive and reliable information about their business operations and plans and the security they provide before funds are advanced? What improvements has the ATB made with respect to the process of due diligence on the information provided by borrowers? You know, there's been quite a significant beaten path to the courts, particularly in respect to the matter related to existing condos in the north end that have had values placed on them that were high above market values. Well, as a result of some of these activities, we've had a by-election in Wainwright.

Another question I would have in regard to the government estimates here is: what steps has ATB taken to automate the generation and recording of loan fee revenue? What steps, again, has the Treasury Branch taken to automate and make more reliable and comprehensive the reporting of information on connected accounts, classified advances, letters of guarantee, and letters of credit? Will the minister please explain what guidelines the Treasury Branch has now adopted with respect to granting letters of credit and guarantee? What steps has the ATB taken to address concerns about deficiencies in the process of credit analysis and secured evaluation undertaken by ATB lending officers in evaluating credit applications? What steps have been taken by the ATB to ensure that it complies with the policy of reviewing loans within six months of a corporate borrower's year-end and that the loans experiencing difficulties be monitored through more frequent reporting and reviewing requirements? Will the minister explain the type of information that is provided in the ATB president and CEO's quarterly reports to the minister? Will the hon. minister please make these quarterly reports public given that Albertans are the shareholders of the ATB? That, too, would increase the accountability and the transparency of the Alberta Treasury Branches to the public.

Now, in relation to the hon. minister's office, I have a number of questions here, Mr. Chairman.

DR. TAFT: Have you ever been invited to her office?

MR. MacDONALD: I have never been in the hon. minister's office, and I'd doubt if I ever will.

Can the minister explain why the minister's office budget is increasing by 66 percent this year over last year's budget estimates? Will the minister explain, please, what quality indicators and performance benchmarks have been established within the office to measure outcomes? For example, the New Zealand treasury business plans include performance measures of correspondence received from the public, the numbers satisfied and unsatisfied. I know how the hon. minister feels about voice mail, but what's the turnaround time on correspondence received from the public? What benchmarks have been established for the number of replies to Legislative Assembly questions, ministerial correspondence, motions for returns, written questions, reports to cabinet and Treasury Board? What time frame or due date benchmarks have been established for ministerial, MLA, and public correspondence? It should be noted that the New Zealand treasury provides this information in their business plans. It would be something that I think would be suitable here, and I would encourage the minister to certainly do that. You know, the revolution that was supposedly started in 1994 initiated with some public policy in New Zealand.

Now, going down the hall here to the deputy minister's office or walking across, I would think, a rather nice, soft, comfortable, plush carpet, can the minister explain why the deputy minister's office was over budget by close to 17 percent last year? Again can the minister please explain why this year's budget is 88 percent higher than last year's preliminary actual? What are the outputs and outcomes used to evaluate performance within the deputy minister's department?

Now, I have a few questions here on the corporate services. Will the minister please describe the activities planned by corporate services to justify the 6.5 percent increase over last year's preliminary actual? What outcomes, outputs, efficiency measures, and quality indicators have been established for corporate services in 2001-02? Will the minister provide further information, please, on the reasons for the $125,000 increase in capital investment planned under corporate services?

Communications. Now, this is always interesting. Regardless of which department you're discussing in estimates, communications is always noteworthy. Always noteworthy. Again in communications from line 1.0.4: what justification does the minister give for the increase of close to 16 percent over last year's budget estimates? This is especially considering that last year's preliminary actual is 20 percent less than this year's budget estimates. I can't understand why this wouldn't be under the Public Affairs Bureau.

DR. TAFT: It's remarkable.

MR. MacDONALD: Yes, it is quite remarkable.

Now, will the minister provide, please, a breakdown of the $237,000 in operating costs for 2001-02 for the following: salaries, permanent positions, nonpermanent positions and salaries, contract positions – maybe that's where the Public Affairs Bureau comes in; as I understand it, many of the employees there are just contract employees, and at some point I'm curious as to who pays their WCB, but that's another issue and that's another department – travel expenses, and health care premiums? The rise in health care premiums is going to, I'm sure, tip the balance, because those premiums are certainly significant. No new taxes. What new taxes? Health care premiums. Oh, I better not go there. What outputs, outcomes, efficiency measures, quality indicators, and benchmarks have been established within the area of communications to measure performance? What are the projected expenses again that will be incurred in 2001-02 with respect to advertising this provincial budget?

Now, will the minister indicate how much of the communications budget is devoted to public relations, consulting services, and graphic design and print production? I thought all that was handled over in the Public Affairs Bureau, but I could be wrong, and I'll certainly stand corrected.

The hon. minister was discussing earlier the standing policy committee on economic development and finance in giving an overview of the budget. What explanation does the minister have for keeping the budget the same as last year's budget estimate even though the preliminary actual from last year was 10 percent less than last year's budget estimate? If we didn't need it last year, why do we need it this year?

What role does the standing policy committee on economic development and finance play in reviewing and approving three-year plans? What role does the standing policy committee on economic development and finance play in the evaluation of the quarterly budget updates? What performance indicators, outputs and outcomes, and benchmarks have been established to measure the success of the standing policy committee in fulfilling its goals and objectives of consulting with Albertans on public policy?

Certainly there was no consultation with Albertans that I know of in regards to canceling the community lottery boards. His Worship the mayor of St. Albert, Mr. Plain, from what I can understand, certainly was not consulted. The mayor of Edmonton was certainly not consulted. The mayor of Calgary certainly was not consulted. I don't believe they were consulted on the transportation and infrastructure issues either, but I could stand corrected on that.

Now, I have a few more questions for the minister in the time that I have left, Mr. Chairman. What standards and guidelines have been established to allow the office of the Controller and the office of budget and management to ensure that individual departments follow consistent internal audit, financial, and reporting procedures? What benchmarks have been established by the office of budget and management for the following performance indicators: accuracy of recording departments' financial information, timeliness of reporting departmental financial information, adherence to legislative compliance, and departmental budgets not exceeded?

Will the minister please explain whether any consulting projects have been undertaken by the budget and management team and in what areas? What review criteria and guidelines have been established by the Ministry of Finance in consultation with the Auditor General which will permit a formal audit of ministry performance measures in annual reports, and what are the time lines for implementation?

Again to the minister: what steps is budget and management taking to comply with the Auditor General's recommendation to provide financial results for each of the four quarters of the fiscal year within the consolidated budget in order to allow for comparison of actual financial performance against the benchmarks of the quarterly reports? What is the time frame for including planned quarterly reports in the annual budget?

Will the minister provide again further information on the plans being prepared by budget and management to ensure that outputs are being fully costed and allocated? What is the time frame for fully complying with the Auditor General's recommendations for costing outputs and related results to cost based on outputs? Will the minister provide a copy of the 2001-02 business plans and budget finalization instructions which guided ministries in the preparation of the three-year business plans for 2001-02 through to 2003-04?

Will the minister please provide an update on recommendations made by the Senior Financial Officer Council, co-chaired by the Controller, with respect to improvements to financial and performance measure reporting? What steps are being taken by the Minister of Finance to comply with the recommendations made by the SFO Council? Will the minister indicate what issues still remain to be resolved which have prevented Alberta from . . .

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member, but the time allocated has now run out. I have to call the vote.

After considering the business plan and proposed estimates for the Department of Finance, are you ready for the vote?

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Wednesday, May 1, 2002

8:00 p.m.

Date: 02/05/01

head: Committee of Supply

[Mr. Tannas in the chair]

THE CHAIR: Good evening. I'd like to call the Committee of Supply to order.

head: Main Estimates 2002-03

Innovation and Science

THE CHAIR: I would ask if there are any comments or questions to be offered with respect to this estimate and call on the hon. minister to begin this evening's deliberations.

MR. DOERKSEN: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman. It is a delight to be here on May 1 on probably the first nice day in spring. I just have to acknowledge the huge number of employees of Innovation and Science who have joined us tonight, and I want you to know that they are not here due to any coercion on my part or anybody else's. They actually wanted to come and visit the Legislature. [interjections] When you get to work with such a fine gentleman like myself, wouldn't you come too? Anyway, I am pleased that they're here to join us, and I hope they find some value in what happens here tonight. If you get up and walk out, I won't feel offended, because I know it's a lovely evening and you might want to enjoy that. [interjections]

Mr. Chairman, if you would bring order to this Assembly, I could continue with my remarks.

I do also want to encourage all members of the Assembly – most of you or some of you have your laptops with you – to log on to www.innovation.gov.ab.ca and for your information log on to a site there on the left-hand side called Sci-Tech Week. That will open up a window that's called Science & Technology Week.

THE CHAIR: Hon. minister, your laptop is wonderful. The only thing is, it blocks out another level of technology, and that's the sound. Proceed, hon. minister.

MR. DOERKSEN: I was convinced I was speaking loudly enough, Mr. Chairman.

After you open that window, there's a section called CoolFlashStuff. If you go and log on to that little thing, you can choose from some interactives: of a butterfly's wings, of a shark, of the moon, of space, a lunar footprint. The one that I would suggest you look at is the one on our solar system, which actually will show you all the revolutions of all the planets. It will count the years off, and you can see the different speeds as a planet rotates around the sun and see how our solar system actually works. [interjections] Okay. This is important.

Now, that's the cool stuff, but what you can also find on that web site is information on the Alberta Supernet. You can read about the Alberta Science and Research Authority. You can read about closing the digital divide between urban and rural Albertans. You can see about Venture Channel connecting Alberta to the Silicon Valley. You can get some information on our nanotechnology institute that's opening up at the University of Alberta and the Alberta Energy Research Institute. Information is there on the Alberta Agriculture Research Institute, the Alberta Forestry Research Institute. There is a wealth of information on this web site, so while you're listening to the debate, I would encourage you to inspect the web site. Actually, you'll probably have answers to your questions that you hadn't previously realized were there. [interjection]

Mr. Chairman, I apologize. I'll now close up my computer.

THE CHAIR: No. No. There's nothing wrong with your computer. It's just that when you put it up, then you block the mike.

MR. DOERKSEN: Okay. Moving on to the 2002-2003 fiscal plan, Mr. Chairman, Innovation and Science has two core businesses. One of them is research and development, and the other one is corporate information and communications technology. Under the first core business research and development is aimed at enhancing "the contribution of science, research, development and commercialization to the sustainable prosperity and quality of life of all Albertans." You will see throughout our business plan that we focus on people, infrastructure, strategic alliances, and fostering innovation. The cycle of research and development continues to grow and build momentum, attracting private-sector investment. That in turn leads to the creation of new business, greater economic diversification, and improved opportunities for all Albertans. It also ensures that Alberta stays out front, creating its own path to the future instead of following behind.

Mr. Chairman, I alluded to the National Institute for Nanotechnology, which you can find information on at the web site, and that is a strategic partnership between the University of Alberta, the province of Alberta, and the National Research Council. Beginning this year, Alberta and the University of Alberta will jointly invest $60 million over five years in this national research institute, making Alberta one of the top centres in the world for nanotechnology research. This funding will be matched, of course, through the National Research Council and the federal government. The impact of nanotechnology is expected to be as revolutionary as the development of computer technology or the industrial revolution, affecting our lives in a multitude of ways from energy production to medicine, from bandwidth to construction. With the National Institute for Nanotechnology Alberta will lead the way.

Mr. Chairman, I've been told many times that I look better if I smile. So if I smile occasionally during my speech, I'm trying to bear that in mind.

The National Institute for Nanotechnology stems from the strength of research programs in this province, and in order to continue to simulate this kind of excellence in this fiscal year, we will also work to match Canada Foundation for Innovation funding for research at our educational institutes. Mr. Chairman, in the most recent awards that were given by the Canada Foundation for Innovation, Alberta universities and institutions had a greater or a disproportionate share of the awards from the competition that they offered. We did exceptionally well.

We are undertaking a strategic focus on three priorities: life sciences, energy, and information and communications technology. Through a collaborative effort with other ministries in industry, we have developed strategies for energy and life sciences research. They are aimed at leveraging our strength in these areas in order to enhance quality of life and economic opportunities for all Albertans. Toward this end fiscal estimates for research and development in 2002-2003 are $96.6 million, including the $91.6 million allocation to ASRA.

At this point I want to just talk a little bit about the relationship that I have with the Alberta Science and Research Authority, because that is the independent body established with people that have a wide background of knowledge in research and science. They provide strategic advice through the minister to our government about the areas that we should be investing in, the areas that would be important to continue to build on for the Alberta advantage. So they are a very important element, or body, within the ministry that I work in.

Our second core business relates to information and communications technology. We look at this from an economic development perspective as well as from the perspective of garnering increased effectiveness and efficiency in the way this government does business. One example I would use with respect to efficiency and effectiveness in terms of delivering e-government is actually prompted by the report of the Premier's Advisory Council on Health. Innovation and Science will work with Health and Wellness to develop a framework and standards for databases and e-health as well as other opportunities that Supernet will create to improve the delivery of health services for Albertans.

Estimates for 2002-2003 are $121.8 million for Supernet. This will allow in this year the completion of 27 segments of the network and the start of an additional 24 segments as well as community involvement and conversion projects. Again, for the benefit of the members of the Assembly, you can find the entire bill schedule, along with maps, on the web site that I referred to: www.innovation.gov.ab.ca.

I want to emphasize something about Supernet, because Supernet will provide much more than high-speed Internet access. I'm just going to diverge here a little bit. Going back to the example I used of the solar system that you can pick up off the web site in that fun zone, with those images where you see how the solar system works, if you're using a dial-up modem in some remote part of Alberta, you can't look at that picture because your bandwidth is not capable to deliver that to your computer sufficiently for you to see that. So individuals sitting in this Assembly have a much greater benefit than the vast majority of rural Albertans in particular, which is one of the primary reasons that we have embarked on the Supernet project.

But it is much more than just the Internet, and I have to emphasize that point. This is a scalable broadband data optical network that will allow for real-time services such as e-learning, e-health, e-commerce, and e-government well into the future. If you can imagine a digital image – a CAT scan, MRI, ultrasound – and you're trying to deliver all that information via digital down a pipe to a remote area to look at it, you have to have a very high resolution screen at the end to receive that. In fact, the technology is there, but if you don't have the bandwidth – just go back 50 or 60 years when movies were just starting to come out; you saw the pictures move very jerkily across the screen. You need the bandwidth to eliminate some of those issues, and that's the importance of building a scalable network that can deliver a large volume of digital images to permit that to happen.

I'm going to give you some specifics with respect to the services that will be offered via Supernet, particularly some of the rates that will be charged for government, learning, hospitals, and libraries. There would be a variety of services offered to each of the government of Alberta sites, and they will range from a charge of approximately $242 per month right up to $850 per month. My contention is that what we are going to experience is probably a greater demand for that bandwidth than we could ever have imagined. So even though we're building in different levels of service, I think it'll be a very short period of time before the demand for the highest level of service is actually permitted. We're continuing to work with what the commercial rates will be, and we are convinced that the opportunities provided for commercial opportunities within municipalities and cities and towns will be accepted with a high sign-up rate.

We'll continue to work with other ministries to develop a multitude of ways that government can improve services to Albertans with this network in place. Distance learning, Wellnet, and the Pharmaceutical Information Network are just some of the examples of services that will be enhanced and made more affordable with Supernet.

Supernet is only one prong of the corporate ICT strategy. It is part of the infrastructure that we need to put in place to be able to deliver on some of the other objectives that we want to achieve.

Innovation and Science is working with other ministries to leverage and make the best use of the $300 million that is spent across government each year for information technology. We will work with ministries to find common standards and solutions for ICT to ensure that the people of Alberta get the best value for the money spent.

The value of this co-ordination is greater efficiency and effectiveness and means that all government can benefit from the expertise housed in individual ministries as well as better communication across government and with the people of Alberta.

One of these kinds of services that you might see in the future and is already being tested is that when you have to renew your registration on your vehicle, you can now log on to the Internet, on to that web-site, and actually order or make your renewal and pay for it through the Internet. The reason I know that, Mr. Chairman, is that I did that. As Minister of Innovation and Science I have to make sure that this is working. That lets anybody from their home, from their office, from another office be able to look after their business from right where they are without having to go down to a registry to complete this.

So, Mr. Chairman, I'm going to actually take my seat and listen intently to the other members of this Assembly as they give me probing questions and comments, and I will do my best to answer the ones I can. The ones that I'm not able to provide the necessary detail on we will commit to providing in writing at a future date, or else if you give us your e-mail address, we might even electronically send you the information. I think that would be in character with what we're trying to do.

THE CHAIR: Before I recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, I wonder if we might have permission to briefly revert to Introduction of Guests.

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests

THE CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. It's a pleasure tonight to introduce to you and through you and to all members of the Assembly a number of guests we have in the public gallery. They are here primarily to hear the debate on Bill 26. These are people that have long been involved with injured workers in this province. They have provided assistance to many, many injured workers, so it gives me a great deal of pleasure to introduce to you tonight Joyce Waselenchuk, Rick Bremault – now, Len Borowski was up in the members' gallery; he stepped out for a few minutes – and joining them tonight we have Chris Leeuw and Lauren Syrnuk. With your permission, Mr. Chair, I would ask that they now rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's always a pleasure to have some questions of the Minister of Innovation and Science. His enthusiasm is contagious. It might have been helpful if he'd talked about the estimates, so maybe with some questions we can steer him in that direction.

One of the promises that the business plan from last year made was that this year, it said

Innovation and Science plans to develop better performance measures and establish benchmarks for the Ministry. Results for these indicators will be reported on in upcoming annual reports for Innovation and Science.

So we were warned last year that this year's business plan – we could look for some changes in its presentation, and I would appreciate maybe if the minister can do some cross-referencing for us so that we could follow some of the measures. I think last year there were six goals, and this year there are eight. There are some commonalities; for instance, the commercialization goal. Although the wording is different, commercialization of research in the area remains an important goal, the application of research in the area also is a goal, and the government as a model user and leader in the use of information technology is a goal.

Past that I start to lose a little bit when I try to compare it, and the only reason that it interests me, Mr. Chairman, is that it makes it so much easier if we can move from one year's business plan to the next year's and make those comparisons. So I'd be interested, too, from the minister's perspective in terms of whether he thinks that the present scheme they have in this year's Innovation and Science business plan is one now that will remain stable over the next couple of years, or are there going to be some more changes? In particular I think it's important that the measures and the key performance measures and the indicators remain somewhat stable so that we can actually track what's happening from year to year.

One of the indicators that interests me is on page 252, the "Alberta university publications as a percentage of Canadian and global publications." I wondered how that information is gathered. Is it available in a source, and what was the rationale behind that particular indicator? I think it's an intriguing one, it's an interesting one, and I would be interested in some of the reasoning that went on in terms of having it here.

I'm also supportive of the next one, and that is "Alberta's Gross Expenditures on Research and Development" as a percentage of Provincial GDP, and then they compare it with other provinces. I think that's one that I've seen used elsewhere in some American states in terms of making some judgments about the fiscal effort of departments. I've seen it used, for instance, in education departments to try to indicate the kind of fiscal effort the government is making in terms of education, so it's interesting to find it here in Innovation and Science. I think it's a useful one because it does speak to the government's priorities in terms of the area, so it's an interesting one.

One of the new goals or one that seems to – there was a previous goal, number 3 last year, that talked about research application and stewardship of our resources in the environment; I'm paraphrasing what it was. This one is specifically now "to increase energy research intensity that contributes to Alberta's continued prosperity." It is highly, highly specific. I wondered about the technologies, the key performance measure at the top of page 254, the "number of new technologies in Alberta at the demonstration stage for clean burning coal and other feedstocks." The baseline is 2001-2002, and it's zero. I thought that there was some technology that was being proposed by a plant in north Edmonton that proposed using a new technology to burn coal cleanly. They were using that for an argument for expansion of the plant, and there was considerable discussion in the community about the plant's proposal. So I would like some further information, if the minister has it, on just exactly where that technology is and is it in fact in use at the present time?

On the same page we again have university-based publications as a percentage of global publications in energy research and development, and I really am interested in the source. It just seems like such a colossal task to gather that kind of information. Is there a readily available index that somebody's already done out there, or is this something that's being done here, and how reliable is it, I guess would be my question. It's an intriguing measure or indicator that the ministry has chosen.

There are some indicators under goal 3, the "number of researchers and graduate students at TRILabs" and then the "number of graduate students studying Computer Science and Electrical and Computer Engineering at the University of Alberta and the University of Calgary," and I think those measures are mentioned elsewhere in the business plan. What effect will the capping of enrollment that's been proposed, say, at the University of Alberta have on these measures? Are they going to be fair measures if that capping goes ahead? What are the implications of capping for measures such as this one that attempts to look at graduate and undergraduate participation?

Another new goal or one that's been teased out and is a stand-alone goal now seems to be goal 4, the one "to foster excellence in life sciences research that contributes to Alberta's continued prosperity." It's been picked out, and I guess this is really what I was referencing: "Number of graduates from life sciences-related programs at Alberta universities and selected colleges." My previous comments really apply to this, because the capping of enrollment would certainly, it'd seem to me, have some influence on this particular indicator. I think they're good indicators.

I like this one and the one that follows, "number of faculty researchers and students supported by the Alberta Heritage Foundation for Medical Research." It starts to get a little bit, with some real hard data, to the problem of brain drain and the kinds of, maybe, myths that exist. Is there really a brain drain? I think that if we start having information like this, we have a better handle on that whole business.

Goal 5, the commercialization, is again one that we had previously. It was goal 2 in the previous business plan, and that's the whole area of "commercialization of research in information and communications technology . . . life sciences and other areas of strategic importance." It's really quite an ambitious goal, and again you look at the indicators, the one in terms of the "research investments attracted to Alberta research institutions." We've had this discussion in the budget estimates for the Department of Learning in terms of the impact of commercialization on research agendas at the major research institutions in the province. Is there any concern that the focus on commercialization is going to lead to what I think is being called gizmo research, research with an immediate payoff, which in the long run might be shortsighted? If you go back and look at the research that went into extracting oil from the tar sands, if my history is correct, that was fairly serendipitous. It was important information, but it wasn't information that was gathered initially because of the need to come up with a commercial solution to a problem.

Maybe this is not the correct department given its mandate. Maybe it's more a concern that should be addressed in the budgets of the Learning department, but I do worry about the province's research agenda. As important and as critical as being able to commercialize and to attract business investment into research and the kinds of opportunities that that opens up and the contribution to our economic well-being, there is, I think, a broader public research agenda that has to be protected. I've been assured in the past by University of Alberta officials at least that we have a long ways to go before it becomes a real problem, but I still worry about it and wonder if it's something the ministry has addressed.

Goal 6: "To attract, grow, establish and retain information and communications technology . . . and life sciences businesses in Alberta." In sort of my cursory look at the comparison of the two business plans, I couldn't find where that was before in the budget, but that doesn't mean it wasn't there. I would be interested in some background to goal 6, and again I think it's an interesting goal. It must have some overlap with the Economic Development people in government, and I wonder how that is sorted out between departments.

I look at goal 7. This is the one that includes the Supernet indicators and key performance measures. I notice in last year's budget that it said that there were 422 communities now connected, and it's the same in this budget, if I'm correct that that number hasn't changed. Does that mean that all the communities that are going to be connected are now connected? I assume that that's what's happened. There's some great enthusiasm around Supernet, and we had the privilege of meeting with some of the officials involved. I still hear from schools that indicate that it gets to their building, but they still don't have the money they need for computers within the building to make it available to youngsters. I was in one rural high school who sort of indicated that it really was a nonissue for them because they didn't have the money to actually use it effectively.

Again, is there collaboration with the Department of Learning with respect to the Supernet, and what is the nature of that collaboration? It seems to me extremely important to make sure that having gone to that huge expense and effort to get the network throughout the province, the other piece of it is even more important: to make sure that users, particularly students, are able to benefit from the promise of such a technological innovation. So some comments about Supernet. I know that it's near and dear to the minister's heart, so I look forward to hearing from him.

The last one is one that appeared in the previous business plan with a little bit of a different spin on it in terms of government plans, where the government is to be a model user of information and communications technology. This one says not only a model user but one that leads to the cost-effective delivery of effective government administration. It's really, I think, a variation on a theme that we had before.

Those, I think, are some of the specific questions there. If I have another opportunity, there are others I'd like to go back to, Mr. Chairman, to some of the indicators and to ask some questions about them. In terms of the overview I think it would have been helpful – maybe you can't include it in the business plan. I guess, why not? It would have been helpful to have a bit of a chart, an overlay, if you would, which would have sort of directed us from last year's budget to this. I know that's been a constant concern of the Auditor General in terms of departments not sticking with a plan. I think that with this department it has been, and it's been open about the search for appropriate performance measures and indicators. We all expected that there would be some changes, but it would have been nice to have a bit of a summary in terms of the goals and how they've changed and been expanded. That would have helped the reader in going through the information.

I think that's it for the business plan, Mr. Chairman. Thank you.

MR. DOERKSEN: Mr. Chairman, I'm going to respond to a few of the remarks by the hon. member and hopefully enlighten him on some of the questions that he has. It's a fair comment about the change between last year's business plan and this year's, and I've noted those comments. Without a doubt, as a new minister with a new deputy minister we did put our own stamp of direction on the business plan, but I acknowledge those comments that it can be difficult to follow from one year to the other. The way we've structured the goals in the business plan really relates to the core businesses. Your first six goals relate to the research and development side of the equation, and the last two goals relate to the ICT component of the ministry.

You referred to "Alberta's gross expenditures on research and development . . . as a percentage of provincial gross domestic product" as one of our measures, and that's a valuable measure to use. Part of the problem we have with that particular measure is, as you can see there, we're going back to 1999. I'm convinced that if we actually had those numbers for last year, you would see a big improvement in terms of Alberta's position vis-a-vis the other provinces. There seems to be a two-year lag to get those particular numbers. What we're trying to do there with that goal and the second goal is to measure our research intensity, because we think that in terms of developing our province and developing our future, research is the beginning of a long-term investment. The payoffs aren't often until 10, 15, 20 years down the road, and our department is about the future.

What we have really tried to highlight in the way we structured our goals, particularly in this area, is to say that in research and development intellectual capital is the critical element. If the people leave, so do the ideas. What we're trying to focus on here is retaining good people in Alberta, attracting good people to Alberta and keeping that talent within our province. So within our goals you'll see a consistent approach in terms of people, infrastructure, and innovation.

You made a reference to energy research intensity. Again, I want to point you to – it's not obvious from the business plan – the web site that I referred to, innovation.gov.ab.ca. If you go under Energy Research, you can actually find the Alberta Energy Research Institute business plan, which outlines the goals that they have with respect to energy. Of course, that's co-chaired by the very capable Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Just quickly in terms of the goals that the Alberta Energy Research Institute has, it's in the area of clean coal technology, clean energy. It's in the area of upgrading technologies. It's in the area of carbon dioxide, or CO₂, management and energy production – I'm actually reading right off their business plan here on my computer – improved oil and gas production and also fuel cells and hydrogen. Fuel cells are largely a distributed power technology, because you have to find a way to store the power in a fuel cell. You still have to create the power, but you want to store it in a fuel cell, and it becomes a form of distributed power.

The strategy that they have outlined in their business plan is critical as we negotiate and talk about the whole Kyoto situation. If you get beyond all of the rhetoric that's going on, we have got to invest money into research and technology to improve our production. It can take us to the next level. It can solve a lot of the issues that we face with the things surrounding the Kyoto accord. We're very keen on working with the federal government, with industry to try to achieve some objectives in that area. I would encourage you, when you have some leisure time, which I know is not that often, to check out the web site. You can get all the information about what they're trying to do on the energy side.

We talk about energy, we talk about ICT, and we talk about life sciences. Goals 5 and 6 talk about the issues of commercialization and growing businesses within Alberta. We're told over and over again that we have excellent basic research in the province of Alberta, but where we can do better is to take that research, take that technology and develop it within our borders. While we're a small population base in terms of the whole global economy, we want to have a disproportionate share of the market of the innovation in developing those companies. Those issues relate to issues of access to capital, issues in terms of management ability that moves past research to actually take and now commercialize the technology that we find. So those two goals in my view are the two important ones that we really have to concentrate on over the next year or two.

Again, I want to make sure that everybody has an opportunity to ask me questions, so I'm not going to answer all the questions.

I did want to go back to Supernet and your question there. If you refer to page 260 with respect to the number of communities, at the bottom of the page you'll see how we want to go for this budget year. We want to connect 133 communities. By 2003-04 we will have 356 connected, and by 2004, which is the end of the build schedule, we'll have all 422 communities, 4,700 locations, all connected to Supernet. The baseline is '01-02; that's actually last year's baseline. Now, there are a lot of connections in the base network already, but most of the significant build with respect to the extended network happens in the smaller communities. This is how we're measuring whether we're achieving our goals. Again, if you refer to the build schedule on the web site, you'll see exactly which communities we're going to, when it's supposed to start, and when it's supposed to be finally connected. So the information in terms of the schedule is all documented quite clearly there for everybody to see.

I've noted your comments with respect to the cost to schools, and I want to assure the member that the Department of Learning is vitally interested in the Supernet project and has been in support of this all the way along. Yes, in fact, we are working collaboratively with them. My job is to build the network, build the infrastructure. Learning, Health: they'll be the content deliverers, which is the information and stuff that will pass over the network, over the infrastructure. So it is important that we work together in terms of achieving our objectives in the infrastructure build.

So those are some comments I'll make. I suspect you'll have some more, and we'll try to get to those if not verbally at least in writing. So I'll take my seat.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Well, your voice sounds a little better than it did last night. It isn't a great deal better, so I hope you make it through what looks like it's going to turn out to be another long evening.

It's a pleasure to be here this evening to talk about the Innovation and Science budget for the upcoming year. Thanks to all the staff who are here. It's always nice to see staff here supporting the minister, often sending down timely answers to questions that have been asked so we don't have to wait for such a long time to get the responses in writing. Although some ministers are very good about it and try to get it out quickly, it still takes some degree of time. [interjection] Well, yes, certainly you do a pretty good job about getting responses back to us. It's always nice if we can have the written responses back by the time we vote on the budget for the year, Mr. Chairman. That doesn't very often happen, but there are a few ministers who do try to see that that happens.

This is a very eager minister that we have in this particular department, and that's probably good. Probably the place for him is Innovation and Science because I think that it is where we need eagerness and thinkers and decision-makers who are quite willing to sometimes challenge the status quo. We know that this minister has that reputation, and we have seen him in that kind of a role over the years that he has been in this Legislature. So happy to see him there. [interjection] Well, I can see that there's another minister who's not too happy. You had your bouquets when it was your turn. I have to say something nice before I say all the mean and nasty things that we're well known for saying. [interjections] Right now we've got lots of groans. So good to see everybody's awake.

Really in this department there are mostly good things to say, and the one thing that I particularly want to recognize right off the bat is finally, Mr. Chairman, a ministry where I see that the key performance measures and indicators actually tie into the outcomes and strategies. So here's a department that got it right, which is nice to see. The problem with doing this properly is that then you're measurable from year to year, and you can be certain that we'll be keeping track of what's happening here.

There still isn't quite the level of detail in the ministry that we would like to see, of course. Even if you can't fit it all in the business plan, it would be great to have access to additional back-up, because really what we get here is a very global sense of what's happening in the department, and it's hard to get to some of the meat of the issues. Sometimes we then are dealing with information that isn't complete so therefore can lead us to conclusions that may or may not be accurate. That has happened in this department in fact with the Supernet. I have to say that as well as it's laid out here in this information and the statements that the minister has made about Supernet both on and off the record over the last year or so, it really hasn't done that program justice I think. So more detail on things like that would be very helpful.

I was with my colleague from Edmonton-Mill Woods and a few of my other colleagues when we had an opportunity to meet with the people who are working on Supernet in the province, and it was an eye-opener. It was actually quite different from what had been explained to us in this Legislature. So that was very good. It seems like there's perhaps, without being too critical, a lack of depth of understanding or an inability to fully discuss and debate what's happening there. So that's an issue where a briefer perhaps for all members of the Assembly would be beneficial, because the concept is an excellent concept, and the technology looks like it's going to work.

I share the reservations that my colleague for Edmonton-Mill Woods has, though, in terms of the ability for some organizations to be able to put the infrastructure within their buildings, to be able to adequately access the technology. Now, I know that from a hospital perspective that won't be an issue. There will be, if not a great cost savings, at least great access returns in terms of accessing support services and specialists and so on and so forth. So from that perspective, there will be a push for them to ensure that they've got all the necessary hardware.

Libraries we know have been chronically underfunded for the past 10 years in this province. I know that the Minister of Community Development will go on ad nauseam about how much more money they're getting this year, but in fact they've been chronically underfunded. So there are some serious problems there. I know that in my own local library, which is heavily used in Mill Woods and particularly heavily used by low-income families, there wouldn't be a computer in the place if it hadn't been for the Bill Gates program, that puts computers in. Most of those are for access by the kids, which is excellent, who then will be great beneficiaries of the Supernet program. But when I take a look at what they've got behind the desk in terms of equipment for their own administrative purposes, it's substandard, to say the least. So I do worry about access on their side.

Of course, as my colleague has outlined, we still continue to have concerns about the schools. Now, I remember that some time ago I had talked to someone who worked with Supernet, and I expressed my concerns at that time about it to him. He said, "We bring it to the door; they'll find a way to bring it inside." I said, "Corporate sponsorship?" He said: "Whatever. They'll find a way to bring it inside." It's nice to say, "Build it, and they will come," but we know that capital is a real problem. So I share the concerns of the school administrators and my colleague on that. Some schools will be far more creative and will have first choice immediately. Others may not have the abilities to access it, so we end up having tiered standards. I know that's probably not something that is supported by the minister.

I was interested in the minister's comments about the Supernet when he talked about there not being any communities up and going at this time. I'm sure that's what I heard him say. Yet the Supernet people tell us that they've got a pilot project that if not under way is on the verge of being operational in the Red Deer corridor, which coincidentally happens to be the minister's own riding. It's probably just a coincidence. It's great. They've got to do it somewhere, and I'm happy to see that they're doing it in the middle of the province. Well, not really the middle of the province but populationwise the middle of the province. I see that his colleague there in the neighbouring constituency is also very happy about that. So perhaps if the minister could talk a little about that, that would be beneficial.

In the response to the Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods the minister talked about this being a department that focuses on long-term payoffs, and that's a good thing, I think, for Innovation and Science and is certainly where we want your vision and your focus to be. In fact, we could use a little more of that kind of vision and focus from the government in general and in a variety of departments, no doubt. The problem with having a long-term focus is that you have to make sure that you're hitting the marks along the way, that the analysis you do of whether projects continue to go ahead or not or whether they need to shift their focus is a very critical analysis, that the groups hit the marks as they progress through and, if not, get cut loose. So if the minister could talk about the kind of criteria he uses to establish that, it would be helpful.

I am sure that if we'd had that kind of criteria established for past huge problems that looked like they were innovation-based at the time, like NovAtel, those programs would have been canned a lot sooner than they were. So we don't want this ministry to get into any of those same kinds of problems as they tie their goals into the broader government of Alberta business plan goals, particularly those related to "development of value-added industries and exports." It's a fine line between picking winners and losers and interfering in the marketplace and providing the kind of support that makes Alberta a global leader in particular industries.

Perhaps the minister could tell me what he and the department use as the criteria to establish what the difference is, because there's no doubt that pursuing these kinds of goals takes money, and when you add government support into any kind of industry, there is some skewing that takes place. So what's the fine line between interference and general support, and how do you decide really what industries to go into?

He talked about nanotechnology. I think it's a great thing. It's an area where Alberta really does need to focus because we do have a skilled workforce and have the potential to have an even greater skilled workforce. It is an attractive place for people to come and live. You've talked about some of those things in your statements, and I think that that's a great place to be going. But exactly how do you establish the criteria, and when do you decide that you've played in the marketplace enough?

One of the goals you talk about on page 251, where you state: "Ministry efforts under this core business will, in turn, impact the achievement of the broader Government of Alberta . . . business plan goals, particularly goals related to . . ." and you go down to the second one, and that's "building a skilled workforce." Could you elaborate a little on that for us, Mr. Minister? I am struck by the discussions we had in this Assembly during budget debate last night and this afternoon in question period when there were discussions about aboriginals, specifically treaty and Metis groups, being underrepresented as skilled workers. It seems like this ministry focuses particularly on the higher-end achievers, those people who get through high school and have some sort of technological training.

But that's not the real crisis in this province at this time. The crisis is in ensuring that all Albertans have a level playing field and have access not just to a very basic education but to an advanced education and that all Albertans have access to the kinds of jobs that you talked about in terms of retaining and attracting people to this province. As that is a cross-ministry goal in several departments, I would like the minister to comment on that. Are you doing any work in that area? Do we see any specific focus or programs that take a look at that particularly disadvantaged group in our province, who really could be a huge benefit? All the talk we have about more immigration and about attracting skilled labourers from outside of the country is all nice and fine, but there are many cost attached to that. It's not just bringing them here. There's the retraining side of it. There's the acclimatization and socialization process. We have a group of people right here who are First Nations in this country and who deserve to have equal access to the good jobs. I'm wondering if in your ministry you considered that, and if so, how? So if you could talk about that for us.

Mr. Minister, you talked a little bit about Kyoto and how Innovation and Science is looking at solving problems through new technology. If you could expand on that a little bit for me, I would appreciate it. I would like to know specifically what you see happening on energy alternatives. We know that ultimately a dollar spent in Alberta on refining technologies and finding solutions is not really as valuable as a dollar spent in a Third World country like China, where for a dollar you can make huge advances: technological advances, CO₂ emission kinds of reductions, and things like that. So how do you see your department really focusing in on that?

Do you see the value-added benefit of existing industries, or do you see your department looking at focusing a greater emphasis on new technologies or technologies that have been around but aren't really well accepted or adapted at that stage? We know about wind: quite viable and starting to become affordable. Fuel cells seem to be popular sometimes, not so popular at other times. So what are you doing to support those two, and what else is happening on new alternatives? What do you see coming down the pike in the next five to 10 years that may look like replacing or supplementing existing energy sources? If you could comment on that, I would certainly appreciate it.

I think that's the majority of my opening comments. I do have some more things that I would like to say if we have time as we go forward, but I think that that is the majority of what I wanted to say to do with the business plan. I'll come back to the budget numbers specifically a little later on if there's time. Perhaps you could respond to some of my questions.

Thank you.

MR. DOERKSEN: Mr. Chairman, I'm going to have the vice-chairman of the Alberta Energy Research Institute at the end of my remarks make some comments with respect to energy alternatives. If that's okay with you, I'll have him discuss some of those.

But I want to give you a little illustration. It's never wise to use anecdotal evidence as a way of making policy, but I think in this case the example can be instructional. It relates actually to two comments you made, one with respect to libraries and the other with respect to disadvantaged people. A person I know very well works in Red Deer with a recent immigrant or refugee who has come to our community in terms of developing her English language skills. The interesting part is that this same lady goes to our public library and uses the computer and the Internet and the e-mail facilities there to keep in contact with the family she left behind. Now, e-mail technology: you don't need big broadband width to do that. It's an illustration of the importance of libraries having this kind of technology available for them, because it then becomes in effect a community portal which any person in that community can access and learn. So I am very strong on the fact that in the build-out of the Supernet in particular connecting the libraries is among the most important elements.

I did not want to imply that there was no building going on right now, because segment 7, just to set the record straight, actually goes from Rocky Mountain House through the communities of Sylvan Lake, Leslieville, Eckville, Condor, and Benalto. So that is the build. It connects at Red Deer because Red Deer is part of the base network. So just to make sure I clarified that because that segment does not directly benefit Red Deer. It benefits those communities along that segment, but it connects into the base network at the city of Red Deer. And you're right: that one is currently being tested and examined, and we expect it to be up and running in a short period of time. Again, I'm just reading this information right off the Alberta Supernet community roll-out schedule found on the website that, as you were speaking, I pulled up here on my computer just to show you that I actually know how to operate this thing.

Strategic investments. In my opening comments I alluded to the importance of the Alberta Science and Research Authority. Because I don't have the ability or the knowledge to make strategic investment decisions about where we should fund strategic research, I really have to rely on the members of that board, who have better knowledge in those areas than I do, and they also rely, then, on a peer review process. I can't tell you all the details, but we use the services of internationally known researchers to help us look at proposals and projects when we come to making decisions about which research or which strategies should get supported. There's more good stuff out there than we could possibly match.

I didn't mention at all in any of my comments – and I need to mention it here – the Alberta Research Council. It's a big component of our budget. About $27 million is the money that we allocate to the Alberta Research Council, which is owned by the Alberta Science and Research Authority. It's a wholly owned subsidiary of the Alberta Science and Research Authority, and that of course is chaired by the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed. Again, there is a group of people who make decisions on a day-to-day basis about research and what's important, but they also have to present their business plan to the Alberta Science and Research Authority to make sure that what they're doing aligns with the goals that they've set out. So at some point I'm not sure if the hon. member wants to comment on that or whether you want to have more time, but I'm sure that she might want to give you some information if she has that.

Commercialization. You touched on that again. What's important here is that when we're looking at what we should do for commercialization, we're looking for the policy levers that will allow the development to take place. We're not talking about investing in specific companies. That is not a policy of our government. It is one that we have left behind. We have to go out and find what the barriers in front of companies are with respect to setting up business in Alberta and to accessing capital. What are things that we can do from a broad policy perspective to enable those kinds of things to happen on a more successful basis?

One of them that we have not adopted in our government which many provinces use is the research and development tax credit. That one's been mentioned to me many times, but that's just an example of a lever that may or may not be beneficial. We've also talked about labour-sponsored venture capital pools, as other provinces have used that mechanism to attract capital.

In Alberta one of the things that we have put in place that is outstanding is our two endowment funds. One is of course the Alberta Heritage Foundation for Medical Research, which started with a $300 million endowment fund and has grown that and managed that portfolio successfully to where it's now around the billion dollar mark. It has invested in medical research over the years and has a tremendous international reputation. The Alberta ingenuity fund, which is another $500 million endowment fund, is another example of how we've been able to put money aside that will be strategically focused on areas that are important to us. That is something that Alberta has been able to do that no other province or jurisdiction has had the ability to do, so we are fortunate. Each of us uses different policy levers, different things to try to accomplish our goals, but we will continue to examine those kinds of things.

I'm going to let the vice-chair of the Alberta Energy Research Institute maybe wax eloquent about some of the things that he knows with respect to energy research.

MR. DUCHARME: Thank you, Mr. Minister. The Alberta Energy Research Institute was established going back a little over two years ago. It replaced the former AOSTRA, which had the mandate of enhancing the oil sands recovery rates as far as the oil. When AERI was formed, it was given a little bit different mandate, and that mandate was to expand in all forms of energy, whether it be coal, whether it be hydrogen, whether it be wind power, solar, et cetera. So our mandate has certainly been increased tremendously in the past few years.

We have been very fortunate that we've been able to partner most of our research projects with funding of about 3 to 1. We'll partner with industry partners. We'll also partner with the federal government. We also have some other partnerships taking place with other provinces and the American states.

We are presently working on different major projects such as carbon dioxide sequestration, where we will be capturing the CO₂ and injecting that into formerly poorly producing oil fields of conventional oil. By injecting the CO₂, we're able to enhance the oil recovery and therefore have a place in terms of being able to store that CO₂, which generally goes up into pollution in our atmosphere. We're also very involved in terms of coal bed methane extraction again using CO₂. We will be starting off with some pilot projects in that area. We're also involved in hydrogen. We have made a commitment with other provinces and the federal government that if there is other technology already being developed in other parts of the country, we would probably partner with them in a smaller role, but in areas where we are the leaders, they would join forces with us. We're presently working in those areas.

So we feel that there are certainly a lot of challenges ahead. Certainly the Kyoto protocol brought on a lot of extra challenges in terms of making us move forward a little faster in terms of our planning, but we believe that we have a strong plan that's in place in terms of being able to address those types of concerns. So the future certainly does look bright for the Alberta Energy Research Institute.

Thank you.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I just have a few comments and a few questions here for the minister. I want to thank him for answering our questions here tonight on Innovation and Science. It's certainly a very, very challenging department and also probably one of the more interesting departments.

I think there are probably quite a few members in here that envy him because he has that position. I know, for instance, that a couple of years ago when the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie and I were down at a PNWER conference in Post Falls, Idaho, they had a strategy then in Post Falls where they wanted to increase business in the area, they wanted to increase the size of their town, and they wanted the high-tech industries in there. So one of the strategies they had was to have a campus built that could support, that could train, that could attract the types of minds that we need for science and innovation. They had had quite a bit of success.

You know, we've heard of other places that have as well, such as the Silicon Valley, and we have the research triangle in North and South Carolina. These are all success stories of where we've been able to attract and keep some of the brightest minds. I think in the province of Alberta we are blessed in that we have not only a number of universities that are in that position right now, but we also have a number of technical schools that rate with any, which certainly can assist us in this regard.

Now, then, in looking at this particular department – and I'm referring to Budget 2002: The Right Decisions for Challenging Times, Fiscal Plan. I'm looking on page 49 at the 2002-2003 expense by function, and I see that the budget is broken down in the following ways. For the education function we have $19 million that is being spent there. If the minister could please give us a rough breakdown of where these dollars go. In agriculture and economic development we see that $122 million of the budget is being spent on that particular function. In general government we have $68 million, and consolidated ministry expense has a total of $209 million. If he could provide us with some answers there, please.

As well, in the same book I'm looking now under Alberta Advantage. I'm looking on page 98 at research and development employment. This is the 1997-2001 annual average, and this is the percent of the employed labour force in Alberta who are involved in research and development. What we see here is that Alberta currently is in fourth place when it comes to the percent of the labour force employed here. Surprisingly to me the province in Canada which has the highest percent of labour force employed in research and development was Newfoundland, followed by Quebec and Ontario. Our present average in research and development activities is 11.7 percent of the workforce, and I was wondering if the minister could provide us with projections as to where he would like to see this percentage go. Is it to be maintained at 11.7 percent? Are we projecting a bigger percentage of people to be involved in research and development, or just where do they expect to go in this regard?

As well, in the same book, Mr. Chair, I'm looking on page 134. These are observations by the Auditor General. In point 26, management of information technology, the Auditor General's observations were:

We again recommend that the ministry of Innovation and Science, with the cooperation of other Ministries, develop systems to assist in the management of government-wide information technology (IT) services and infrastructure.

I notice that the minister did accept this recommendation, and if the minister could please outline the several steps over the past year that he has instituted to assist in the management of governmentwide information technology services and infrastructure.

As well, on page 135 under Systems Development the Auditor General indicates:

We recommend the Ministry of Innovation and Science establish a systems development methodology that can be used as a source of reference when any systems development projects are initiated throughout government, for both outsourced and in-house systems development.

Again, I see that the minister did accept this observation, and he has indicated that "an action plan developed through the Chief Information Officer Council will be completed in 2001-02 to address this recommendation." If the minister could please inform us as to whether this has been completed. If it has been completed, could he detail some of the highlights of this action plan?

Now, then, I also see in the lottery estimates on page 299 goal 2: "To increase energy research intensity that contributes to Alberta's continued prosperity." I look at Goal 2.2: "Support the development of cleaner energy research programs that will make Alberta's coal reserves generally more acceptable for electricity generation." Of course, we certainly know, Mr. Chair, that when it comes to the burning of coal, we have to take the good with the bad, and there are both here. As well, I think that there is a balance here between what the economists wish to see in regard to the development of our vast reserves of coal and what the environmentalists, who probably wouldn't want very much coal burnt, wish to see.

So when we are looking at developing these strategies and this technology for the cleaner burning of coal, what sorts of projections are we looking at here for the amount of coal that we're going to burn? Have we set any targets as to how much coal we wish to burn per year, particularly when we look at the requirements as a province that we have for electricity? As well, to what extent do we want to develop our electricity exports to the United States? So if the minister could perhaps provide us with some insights into those questions.

As well, I was quite interested to see that we are looking at energy management programs for carbon dioxide. This is one of those gases that certainly does contribute to the greenhouse effect. I was reading a book, The Limits to Growth, and in reading this book I was quite amazed that the one gas that contributes more to the greenhouse effect and global warming is water vapour in the air. We know that whenever we're burning any fossil fuels, one of the by-products is water vapour. So even though we do have a very clean gas in the atmosphere, it does have an effect. When we look at the projections, those are things that if he has any insights on or if they have any plans, he could pass that on to me.

Back in the late '80s, early '90s I was teaching a science class in St. Albert. At that time I was teaching some of the Myers kids, and of course Tony worked for Fred Stewart, who was quite involved with the development, I believe, of the research park. One of the highlights of that particular year was a field trip that he'd arranged for us to take these students on to the research park and also a couple of other facilities. As the minister had alluded to earlier, when we are looking at research and development, this is in the future. We are not going to see the payoffs until the future. At that particular time at TRILabs they were dealing primarily with fibre optics, and fibre optics were quite new at that time. It was amazing to me that one little thread could carry somewhere in the neighbourhood of 30,000 phone calls. At TRILabs what they'd done was taken that and through their research had been able to put through 90,000 on that same little wire. Of course, when we see what is happening today with Supernet and whatever, it is certainly amazing, and it is places like TRILabs that have influenced and attracted research to this province in regards to fibre optics.

Some of the other facilities I can recall that we toured were the labs. At Biomira they were doing research at that time on a vaccine to fight breast cancer, and certainly they were doing a tremendous amount of work. So I would hope that the minister would be able to down the road impress upon his colleagues the great need that we do have for research and the great need that we do have to spend money now to gather the benefits later.

[Ms Graham in the chair]

As well, I am extremely interested in the Supernet. It has just fabulous potential, but I also noticed in your plans from last year that you were looking at wireless technology as perhaps one of the methods that could be used at the extremities. If the minister could please update us as to where they're at when it comes to using wireless technology at the extremities and if in fact this is still the plan. It certainly is an alternative but again an expensive alternative.

So with those questions perhaps I might get another opportunity, Madam Chair, to get back up and ask the minister a few other questions. Thank you.

MR. DOERKSEN: Madam Chair, that was a fairly wide-ranging list of questions, and I have to admit that I was struggling in trying to follow you through your pages. But I have picked up a couple that I will answer, and the rest we'll have to try and figure out later.

I'm going to take off on a small tangent here just for a minute, because I'm not sure that I communicated clearly enough at the beginning of my comments the importance of the people who work in the Ministry of Innovation and Science. This past year as we negotiated the Supernet contract and as we started to implement to build the Supernet and as we went out and suddenly had the opportunity for the Nanotechnology Research Institute, they worked awfully hard to bring some of these together. Our business plan focuses on people and intellectual capital, and that's what we have in Innovation and Science, and they have been just absolutely tremendous. So before they leave – the hon. Deputy Premier here couldn't believe that these people are still sitting in the audience listening to the debate. In fact, they are pretty good.

This is an exciting ministry, and I have to tell you about some of the benefits that come with actually having this portfolio. I had the opportunity to go to the University of Alberta and attend a couple of their awards ceremonies to recognize people that had done very well at the University of Alberta. I got the chance to listen to Dr. Rajotte as he explained the Edmonton protocol, and of course the Edmonton protocol is all about the diabetes research and how that all works, and that's just a tremendous achievement. He presented it in a way so that even a layperson like myself could actually follow what they're doing with that particular research. I also got to listen to another fellow who presented – and I can't even spell this let alone pronounce it, but it was a guy that was recognized for phenomenological pedagogy. Now, maybe the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods would know what that's all about, but I got to listen to that as well. It's not exactly related to what we're doing, but it is an interesting portfolio, and I thought the Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods might actually recognize that term.

A couple of points. What was I going to say? Oh, yes. This is what I was going to say. The Member for Edmonton-Glengarry referred to a couple of the recommendations that were referred to by the Auditor General in the budget 2002, and I did finally find what you were talking about there. I think the best answer to that would be, in terms of what have we done to address some of those, to look at goal 8 in the business plan, where it talks about our key performance measures and indicators, and it talks about "adoption of corporate standards by individual departments." The targets that we're trying to do to create some common standards within government ministries begin to address some of those issues, so we do have some targets lined up. The next indicator you can see under Indicators, "Number of cross government ICT applications developed and implemented." You can see the progress we're making in terms of the year some of these initiatives were commissioned and the percent of implementation. I think that answers part of the action we're taking to address the Auditor General's comments. Now, that's probably not a complete answer, and we'll look at those and provide that in more detail later on.

[Mr. Tannas in the chair]

The other thing you asked about was wireless research, and TRILabs is a strategic investment, again through the advice of the Alberta Science and Research Authority, in terms of our investment into TRILabs. They're a very good research body that works in the wireless field. In fact, they're working in terms of setting up what I call a wireless test bed so that companies can actually come in and test their 2.5G or 3G products on this test bed to see if in fact this can actually work in the marketplace. That is a very important research activity. It is the way of the future. It's just a matter of time, a matter of finding the technology, and then taking it to the market. All you have to do is look back about 10 years and see how far technology has taken us with respect to the Internet, computers, even in the Assembly. When I came here in '93, it was unheard of to have a computer sitting on your desk, wired, hooked up, logged on to the Internet, looking at the web site of innovation.gov.ab.ca. Remarkable.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate the opportunity to ask some further questions of the minister. I'm heartened that he's listening to lectures on phenomenological pedagogy. I don't have to worry any longer about him being so wrapped up in the science end of things that he's ignoring other important areas of research. It's encouraging that he's over listening to those lectures. I could almost predict who gave the lecture and got the award.

I have some specific questions about the estimates just for some information. Under program 1 the line item is corporate services, and I wonder if we could be reminded again of some of the items that are included in that. I have to admit that I listened to the presentation on Supernet and I was left with the impression that the structure was in place, that these 422 communities were in striking distance. I don't know why I was left with that impression, but that's what I came away with, and obviously that's incorrect. I wondered about the kind of forecasting that's been done for Supernet for the next few years. They're heavy costs initially, but where will we be going with that?

The co-operation with the school and health authorities has been raised a couple of times. I guess the school authorities are of concern to me because of the other ministry that I shadow and the growing concern about the adequacy of funding for schools and the need for an adequacy formula. There's a $42 a student allocation made now for technology. I think most schools would indicate that unless there are some outside sources – in a lot of cases that's been parent fund-raising – they don't have the resources to meet their technology needs. I guess I would ask the question: is there a specific plan that's being developed? The minister is indicating that they're co-operating with Health and Learning, but is there a specific plan in place with some measures, some goals in terms of the kind of technology that schools may expect to have supported?

I wonder if we could find a little information in terms of the process in which the contracts are put out to tender for government systems technology. Just how is that done? Under program 3 there's a line item on operations and policy implementation. I wonder if we could have some more detail on what's intended there.

There's a concern that I have in terms of funding government departments out of the lottery funds, and it's a concern I have in terms of the use of lottery money for Learning, but there's a large contribution to Innovation and Science from the lottery fund. Does that in any way worry the minister? Right now I know that seems to be a fairly reliable source of income, but I've seen some predictions about lottery funds and the future of them, and again I have some feelings about it: it makes a difference where the money comes from. I guess I would feel better if there wasn't such a large dependence on the lottery fund for basic departments such as this.

Have we any information in terms of the funding from Innovation and Science for research infrastructure? Has it matched the actual costs incurred by the universities? This has always been a problem at universities with research groups in terms of making sure that the research funding is really adequate for the actual costs incurred. I know that that's probably more the obligation of the universities than it is the department, but the department does have, I think, a responsibility to make sure that the costs actually are covered.

Under the same program there is "work with Alberta Learning to co-ordinate research-related policies and programs." Is Innovation and Science involved in any of the AISI projects that are conducted by Alberta Learning? Is there a crossover of funding for those projects?

There's been a performance measure that looks at the ability of Alberta universities to attract research funding, and the target is for an increase in federal government research dollars. Now, that target is 104 percent higher for 2004-2005 than in 1998-99, but the projected increase in provincial funding is 69 percent. I wonder if we could have an explanation for that difference.

We've already talked about using a percent of the GDP as a measure, and I agree with the minister that that's an important indicator.

Has the department considered a target for the usage of nonconventional energy consumption as a percentage of overall energy consumption? It seemed to me that might be an indicator that would be useful in terms of monitoring progress in that area. I wonder if we could have some information on the incentives that are there to extract from nonconventional sources.

Those are, I think, some of the specific questions I have, Mr. Chairman. I'll conclude with that. Thank you.

MR. DOERKSEN: Again, Mr. Chairman, just a couple of comments. I want to point out with respect to the comment about the Supernet being within striking distance that in my view for the extent of the build that we have engaged in in Alberta, which is probably unique around the world, two and a half to three years I consider to be in striking distance. That's a remarkable project over a short period of time. I think that it's been extremely well handled, and it will be a remarkable achievement.

The other point I want to make is that many schools already have access to some form of service and have already invested substantial amounts of dollars in technology that is already sitting there and waiting. The biggest impact for Supernet, of course, is going to be in the extended network, where they do not have the same level of service that we can access in the major centres. I made this point in question period, but when you have a dial-up service over a copper wire and you want to download a picture of your grandson or your granddaughter, you can start to download, go away, get a cup of coffee, have a doughnut, come back, and it might be there. Okay? When you upgrade to DSL over copper wire, well, you haven't got time to go get the coffee and a doughnut, so you've got to have the coffee there ready for you, because the picture will be downloaded automatically. But when you jump another 10 to 20 times faster in terms of one of the services that you'll get over Supernet, then you get into the streaming video, the videoconferencing. An enormous wealth of more opportunities becomes available.

So these are the kinds of exciting things that are going to happen in schools, and all I can say is: we'll continue to work with Learning to accomplish some of these objectives. This is new, and there will be challenges there. There's no doubt about that.

With respect to lottery funds, there's been a lot of discussion in this Assembly about making sure that communities benefit from lottery funds. I have to make the point that in this case, with 422 communities, 4,700 locations, that is money that is going back into the community for all of them to benefit. So it is money being returned from lotteries to specific communities.

You also raised the issue of research infrastructure. I have to tell you that we have two major challenges in front of us. They relate to the health research innovation centres, which are proposed at both the University of Calgary and the University of Alberta. With the recent Canada Foundation for Innovation awards some of these projects are contingent upon that infrastructure being built. If you look back, of course, to the budget reallocation we had to do in the last fiscal year, we had to defer some projects on the infrastructure side. This is an issue that we have to face, and through the Financial Review Commission – I'm sure that's the right title – I think they're looking at these entire infrastructure issues and how we might address them. In terms of creating that infrastructure to allow some of that research to happen, it is important, and it's a significant issue that we're trying to help address even through our ministry.

Your comments about incentives I found interesting, because when you're looking for policy levers, you are looking for incentives to encourage the right behaviour. So I appreciated your comments on that.

I meant to mention this earlier, but with respect again to looking at innovation.gov.ab.ca, you can find all the information about the contract that we have on Supernet and how many kilometres of fibre we're going to lay and what the responsibility of Bell is and what the responsibility of Axia is. It's a wealth of information just sitting at your fingertips to use.

Thank you.

Synod of the Diocese of Edmonton Amendment Act, 2002

MR. MASKELL: Mr. Speaker, I move third reading of Bill Pr. 1, Synod of the Diocese of Edmonton Amendment Act, 2002.

[Motion carried; Bill Pr. 1 read a third time]

Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Tannas in the chair]

THE CHAIR: Now I'd like to call the Committee of the Whole to order. Again we'll remind hon. members that we only have one member standing and talking at a time.

Bill 9

Child Welfare Amendment Act, 2002

THE CHAIR: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Bill 9 has been before us now on a number of occasions. There's been consultation with a variety of groups. I think the most contentious section of the bill is the section dealing with the amendment under section 120. The amendment is by adding the following after subsection (6): "(7) In the hearing of appeals under this section, an Appeal Panel is bound by policy established by the Minister concerning agreements under section 106." That particular section has alarmed parents of children who are handicapped or disabled. They are fearful that the minister in defining policy will narrow the grounds under which an appeal may be granted, and the basis of their fear is that this is in fact what one of the commentators has called a social sterilization. They're worried that children with disabilities can be denied services simply on the basis that the needed services don't fit into that particular government policy. They point out that if there had been constraints on the appeal panel in the past, therapies could have been excluded that have proven today to be beneficial. So their worry is the scope of what the panels are going to be able to deal with and that that scope may be narrowed to the detriment of their youngsters. They're also worried about the implications for this section in terms of the establishment of means testing, that this can open the door to means testing, which they have great difficulty with.

The bill doesn't admit to an impact on families, and that again is seen as a shortcoming, but the fears have been raised, Mr. Chairman. The minister has met with at least one of the groups involved, that I'm aware of, the Alberta Association for Community Living. The minister may want to comment on it, but in correspondence with the minister, I believe there has been an agreement made that the bill will not be proclaimed before the policies that are going to govern the appeal panel are made public and they are given an opportunity to respond to them. I think that that commitment, along with a desire on behalf of parents with handicapped children for a family act, that could be readied for the spring of 2003, is really what they see as the most satisfactory solution. I would encourage the minister to follow up on that.

One further thing. As the policies are developed, I think that it would be wise if the ministry were to involve parents with handicapped children rather than coming forward with a full-blown set of policies that, once they are written, may become more difficult to modify. So I would encourage the involvement of those parents or representatives of those parents as the policies are formulated. Also, in terms of any kind of a new act, families with children with disabilities must be involved in those discussions. Again, I would hope that the minister might make some comment about the agreement not to proclaim until the policies have been formulated.

I think with that, I'll conclude. Thanks, Mr. Chairman.

SOME HON. MEMBERS: Question.

10:00

THE CHAIR: The question is being called, but I think I've got several people who have indicated that they wish to speak.

The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

MS EVANS: I would make this statement about Bill 9. There has been significant discussion about the services and the policies for handicapped children, or as we call them now, resources for children with disabilities, Mr. Chairman. I have agreed and will go on the record as saying that there will be no proclamation of those clauses that deal with those particular resources or the Child Welfare Appeal Panel until such time as the policies are in place. On that point I certainly agree with the opposition that the need for policy is very clear. It should be there before the Child Welfare Appeal Panel is affected in any way. At the same time I'm committing to this Assembly that I am reviewing the workings of the Child Welfare Appeal Panel even more quickly than that proclamation can take place so that we will never have those situations where people have to be refused something and then go to the appeal panel to get it. That is not the right way to be administering a Children's Services system, and I recognize that. That's why we're going to work very hard on that.

With that commitment, at this time I would just await the pleasure of the chair.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I do have an amendment that I'm just awaiting the copies being brought in, so I'll be pleased to speak a little bit in general about the bill.

One of the things that we have a concern about is the lack of co-operation between Health and Wellness, Learning, and Children's Services. Specifically, we're concerned that changes to the appeal panel might mean that some services might be discontinued.

Mr. Chairman, I have my amendment now. Does the table have it? Yes? Then I will move that Bill 9, the Child Welfare Amendment Act, 2002, be amended in section 8, in the proposed section 120(7), by striking out "bound" and substituting "guided."

Just to speak to that, Mr. Chairman . . .

THE CHAIR: Hon. member, just give us a moment to get the copies passed out. For those who have a copy and those who will soon get one, this is amendment A1.

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, you may go.

MR. MASON: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. In this particular case, you know, we have a concern that the appeal panel is really rendered rather pointless if in fact they need to be "bound" by the policy. We think that it should be instead "guided" by the policy.

Currently the contracts involve services from Learning and Health and Wellness as well as Children's Services. Only Children's Services has an appeal process. Therefore, when an HCS contract is found to be lacking an educational component, the appeal panel has ruled that the component should be included and that Children's Services should pay. The new rules will prevent the panel from giving this financial obligation to Children's Services, but it doesn't indicate how such services will be funded and provided. So I want to just indicate that we feel that the policy of binding the appeals committee is not desirable and that "guided" is a better way to deal with it. So I'll just await the comments, then, of the minister on that, Mr. Chairman.

MS EVANS: You know, Mr. Chairman, there's been significant guiding, I think, in the past, but the real crux of the matter is – and I would just pose this to the House. A policy, if it's a legislative policy that's responsible, is going to have flexibility. I would think that it would have to have flexibility by the very nature of the fact that we're dealing with human beings and not machines, and when you deal with human beings, you have to have some latitude in that policy. The fact remains that we don't have a policy. We don't have regulations. We only have one statement about handicapped children's services currently in the bill, and I think it's just prudent for us to put in place something that the Child Welfare Appeal Panel feels is more than something that's a little loosey-goosey.

I appreciate the initiative of the hon. member opposite, but I would really beg his indulgence. In fact, I would invite him to review with me what I consider the policies prior to the proclamation – any members of the Assembly, if they chose. I think that getting those policies right will be important guideposts and should be bound by them.

So at this time I would just indicate that I would really prefer the wording that is originally stated. I'll abide by the wishes of this House.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods on the amendment.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Certainly the amendment is designed to try to alleviate the concern that's been expressed by parents about the very definitiveness of section 120(7) and their concern that it might be narrow. I do however think that the minister's commitment to make sure, before the bill is proclaimed or this section is proclaimed, that the policies will be available. I think that that's really, for those parents that I've talked to, the heart of the problem. They really want to see what those policies are because it will really be very important to them. As I said in my previous comments, I would assume that the ministry will be in touch with those parents as those policies are developed and will be reflective of their interest and their wishes. I think it's an amendment that would be welcomed by the parents.

Thank you.

Second Reading

Bill 26
Workers' Compensation Amendment Act, 2002

[Adjourned debate April 29: Mr. MacDonald]

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to join in the debate on Bill 26, the Workers' Compensation Amendment Act, at second reading, which is the time that we speak to the principle of the bill. This is a bill that we waited a long time for, Mr. Speaker, one that we were hopefully anticipating was going to solve some of the outstanding issues with injured workers in this province, and it was a great disappointment to see this bill come forward as it has. There are just a couple of things in the bill that are steps forward, but there are many, many, many steps backward. We know the history of this government. Once they have reviewed legislation, it's a long time before it comes up for review again, so this is going to be a real problem for people in this province for some time to come. I will be speaking this evening against this bill certainly in principle.

An interesting thing happened with this bill, Mr. Speaker, that doesn't very often happen with regard to me in this position, and that is when an Albertan in the province asks to have their voice heard and writes a speech that they wish to be shared with the Legislature for the history of the province so that we can hear what people have to say. Most of the time we table letters that come like that, and that's what people request, but this particular Albertan has been involved in trying to solve the outstanding issues of the WCB for some time and has written a very heartfelt letter, that I will be referring to in my debate.

It opens by stating:

Well, it's a long time coming for this Alberta Legislature to see a comprehensive Worker's Compensation bill that addresses the infamous WCB tactics that have been widely reported on and have devastated workers' lives who were injured on the job and of course consequences and the fallout that affected their families and society as a whole.

We hear that often, certainly in my office. I represent a first-generation immigrant, blue-collar constituency, and we have a great many injured workers in that constituency because of the nature of the kinds of jobs they hold over the course of their employment. It goes on to say:

So on that note I thank the Hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment for having the courage to bring forward major legislated changes to rein in the out of control quasi-government agency that was allowed to manifest into a self-serving enterprise that was governed by a Board of Directors that were accountable and answerable to no one!

That is not exactly as the legislation reads, but we certainly hear that exact concern expressed by many people throughout the year.

It states:

This Board of Directors were supposed to protect and balance the stakeholders' fundamental rights under the WCB legislation that allowed them to operate a monopoly in a quasi-privatized business with only one requirement which was to balance its books, and in return the WCB would be left to do as they wish, where the Government relinquished all control over the operations of the WCB Alberta. (See bill 16, passed in 1996, by then minister Day)

We had a lot of discussion in this Legislature on that particular bill when it was passed, Mr. Speaker, and there are still outstanding concerns about that.

It goes on to say:

Well, hello. Was anybody paying attention when the WCB found the back way into shifting its costs back to the taxpayer by off-loading injured workers' claims onto social services, AISH, CPP, UIC, Alberta Health Care and many other community sponsored programs.

Yet here we are today 2 1/2 years later still waiting for the government investigations on audits that were done to see how rampant the off-loading by the WCB really was! Mr. Minister where are the results of the internal audits of the government agency?

That's a very good question, Mr. Speaker, and one that we hope gets answered in this Legislature before we have to vote on this particular bill. We have had many injured workers in my office who have definitely been off-loaded who I can legitimately say are injured and unable to work, who have to look for some other recourse when they thought that this program would be there to take care of them and their families in the course of something having happened.

It goes on to say:

We haven't even touched on the human suffering and family costs involved, not to mention the impact on society as a whole.

When we get to committee in this bill, Mr. Speaker, I will be sharing the experience of a person who has become a very good friend of mine who is an injured worker. I will be particularly outlining the experiences of human suffering and the costs involved for him and his family because of an accident that was no fault of his own, that was on the job, and for which he has had zero co-operation from WCB.

It goes on to say:

I can't help but to vividly remember thinking about the [sheer] desperation the injured workers must have been in when they went on a hunger strike and numerous protests that took place across this prosperous province.

Many people, when we heard it in this Legislature, thought those people had nothing better to do and that it was just some jaunt for them, but it was serious. There were certainly costs for those people that were involved in this.

To these victims of workplace accidents and their families my heart goes out to you and as a Legislator my sincerest apologies for allowing the past abuses and tragedies by a fatally flawed experiment that was allowed to manifest into such a scandalous corporation called WCB Alberta.

Well, certainly it is. I am happy to apologize to those workers who haven't been able to get help and whom I haven't been able to successfully help in many cases, not necessarily because of the way the legislation is written but the way it is interpreted and followed.

It goes on to say:

It is a sad day for all Albertans when we as a Government allow the WCB to pit the employer against the worker. Both the employers and workers of this province have been in a lose-lose situation, where it is abundantly clear there is only one winner being rewarded here and that is the WCB Alberta and its employees. One only has to touch the surface of salaries especially of the hierarchy who are making $355,000 + bonuses and $200,000 for middle management.

This has often been a discussion in this Assembly during question period and debate, Mr. Speaker, and I am sure that that discussion isn't over.

It goes on to say:

It's time to put this out of control semi-privatized Corporation back in its place with strong legislation that enshrines the fundamental rights of workers and employers. It is clear that this no-fault insurance scheme has become very adversarial and abusive, where more time, energy and money is but into a blanket denial system where the old 20-80% rule takes precedence over all else.

One must understand that the WCB had realized that about 20% of their claims were of serious nature and were costing 80% of their payouts, therefore the focus and attention was on the 80% of claims that are less severe (1 year or less) were their priority and conversely those 20% of serious injury claims that faced blanket denials will further result in another 80% of those severe injury claims disappearing (off-loaded) from the radar screen.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, this is exactly what happened to the person whom I will talk about later. He fell into that particular group of injured workers that the WCB wanted to disappear off their radar screen.

It goes on to say:

For what [it's] worth the WCB had the numbers game mastered to a fine art, where even the creative surveys year in and year out, were spitting out numbers that the satisfaction rate of about 85% of stakeholders were happy (short time claims), and a mere 15% dissatisfied. Numbers any corporation or business would die for.

All was fine, according to the Government; everybody was proud of their achievements and business success; the hand picked Board of Directors were reporting to the Minister irresponsible for WCB that their operations were the envy of every other province's WCB in Canada.

Well through those rose-colored glasses, (Enron creative accounting) . . .

which we have talked about in this Assembly.

. . . the WCB premiums were going down from a high of $2.29 per $100.00 of insurable earnings in 1994 to an . . . "average actual rate" of $1.06 per $100 of insurable earnings. The lowest in Canada at the time and unbelievably the lowest premium rate in Alberta since the 1950s!!!

Questionable in itself when you consider all of the outside rising costs that we have experienced over that time frame.

It goes on to say:

How remarkable this Board of Directors and the WCB hierarchy had become, where their number one priority and mandate was the bottom line at the peril or the cost to everything else in its purported mandate. Of course the Minister and the Government at the time were tickled pink with the bottom line and the infamous satisfaction surveys that were fed to them.

To further impress this Government about the WCB's sound fiscal management scheme (see 5 year strategic plan) the B of D decided to artificially reduce and subsidize employer premiums by 62 cents per hundred [dollars] of insurable earnings. To do this they under funded the liabilities and raided the stabilization fund of 156 million that was built up over several years to cover up and hide the under funding of the WCB operations.

Something else, though, that we have scratched the surface on in question period and in debate, Mr. Speaker. Serious allegations, and I would caution the author not to say them outside of this Legislative Assembly, but certainly something that needs to be discussed.

It goes on to say:

On that note, it is my understanding that under Bill 16, WCB amendments, that essentially if the WCB didn't cover its cost of the operation, that the WCB would revert back to the government control. We did have a similar experiment where government privatized a business only to be taken over by the government again. The Minister of Finance has recently spoken up about these provisions in these acts and has acted on it. It's called the Swan Hills environment plant. (Bovar)

As per the WCB's 2000 annual report there is another $52.4 million under funding and $130.2 million under funding in 1999, which has reflected now where we all heard of the WCB premium increases for employers going up over 50 percent over two years. Yes, that sounds like a large pill to swallow and an unmanageable amount, but the percentage doesn't tell the true story of how that affected different employer premiums, because 50 percent of what and who's really paying what?

Good questions. Once again, unanswered to this date, Mr. Speaker.

Yet as we speak we are still rated the lowest in Canada for WCB premiums even with a 50 percent increase. So the question begs to be asked, what is really going on within the quasi-government agency?

Also that adds validity to how small employers and sub-contractors are being raked over the coals, such as the roofing industry that pays a high of $12.24 per $100 insurable earnings and the engineering industry a low of $0.26 per $100 insurable earnings.

Then there's the situation of the partners in injury reduction, where we've seen $50 million go back to a few big corporations and multinationals. "The entire universal payer and universal coverage is thrown out the window along with the founding Meredith Principle, which is a sad day for employers and employees." I think that it's something. The Meredith principle is something that should have been incorporated into the new legislation as we see it in front of us, Mr. Speaker.

It goes on to state that as he understands it in Alberta we have certain employers which pay nominal moneys to the WCB in return for their injured workers going through their own disability programs, in return the WCB would stay out of their business and also would not appear on the official exempt list for employers who are exempt for paying WCB premiums in Alberta.

. . . it's clear [that there is] a rudderless ship with no mandate or principles to follow. Is it possible the WCB is being allowed or set up to fail purposely?

Once again that is a question that has often been brought before me. Because of the way that it's set up and managed, it seems like it doesn't meet its purposes for the most part. So one has to ask, then: why does that happen and why does the government allow that to happen? He goes on to state:

The systemic problems with WCB are not going to change over night and seems clear that this vaguely worded legislation is only going to exacerbate the cultural problems within WCB by rewarding them for past indiscretions and abuses by giving them more internal powers, and a free rein with no chance of contravening the WC Act, than ever before in history.

It seems to me that the WCB legislation that kept the WCB from totally contradicting and violating the very principle and reasons they exist is now watered down [even] more. If we are allowing the WCB more latitude, then I'm not sure they are serving the true purpose they were created for in the first place.

We will certainly expand that particular issue in debate at committee, Mr. Speaker.

Further under the proposed vague wording legislation that is to protect stakeholders, it allows the WCB to do virtually anything they want, and yet never contravening the act. But yet under the same amendments the Government is giving the WCB extraordinary powers to arbitrarily find people guilty of contravening the WC Act as long as "the Board is of the opinion that a person has contravened section . . ." That is not even close to being "due process" or a conviction in a court. (See 152.1(1)).

This is the essence of the questions. Many of the questions we have seen from the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar over these last few weeks when he talks about the secret police and the ability of the appearance of the act to contravene human rights legislation in this country, which of course we will be pursuing, Mr. Speaker. It is a little scary. You know, we heard some members in this Legislature state there were no secret police, but I know of many cases where this secret police squad within the WCB follows people within the province. [Ms Carlson's speaking time expired] Mr. Speaker, I am not quite finished, but I will come back at committee and certainly share the rest of this story.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: There are two things to come right now. First of all, hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, inasmuch as you quoted quite extensively from the letter, you of course will be tabling it? Secondly, we have comments and questions. Is that what you want to participate in, hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands?

MR. MASON: Yes, please, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Okay. It's yours.

MR. MASON: I would like to ask the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie if she would like to continue along the lines of her comments with respect to the so-called secret police of the WCB?

MS CARLSON: Mr. Speaker, as I had started to say, I've had many instances of people in my constituency being followed without their knowledge and videotaped without their knowledge by this secret police squad. While I understand that there are some people who abuse the system, I also understand that WCB's own records places those people at less than 1 percent of people who file claims, so it seems to me on that small justification . . . [Ms Carlson's speaking time expired]

10:30

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: How small a justification, Mr. Speaker?

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you. On such a small justification of so few people who abuse the system, a great many injured workers have their rights offended, I believe. To have people videotaped – I have a situation, and I have seen the videotape, because if the injured workers ask for it, it can be provided to them. I have seen videotape of a person . . .

MR. HANCOCK: How many are videotaped? Do you suppose more than 1 percent?

MS CARLSON: Oh, yes. I'm sure it's a great deal more than 1 percent. The Minister of Justice wants to get in. Please ask the question in the formal process.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Justice wishes to ask a question?

MR. HANCOCK: Certainly. I'd love to ask a question. I'd like to ask the hon. member if in making the statement that less than 1 percent of people are perhaps abusing the system and then suggesting that a far greater number than that are being followed around and videotaped, she has any hard evidence at all to suggest how many people might be subjected to this type of videotaping. I wonder if she's making it up.

MS CARLSON: I have seen the videotapes myself, and if you were doing your job in your own constituency, you would have seen them too.

MR. HANCOCK: She may well have seen a videotape, but I'm sure she hasn't seen 1 percent of all the claimants to WCB being videotaped. That's the allegation she's making. I'm wondering if she can tell us if she has any hard evidence as to the quantification of the number of people who may be subjected to surveillance because of a suggestion that they may be abusing the process. Does she have any evidence that there's a large number of people who are being followed? She's suggesting secret police. Does she have any hard knowledge of that other than having seen the odd tape or two?

MS CARLSON: They're secret police, Mr. Speaker. Their whole intent is not to be seen by the people they are surveilling.

MR. HANCOCK: Mr. Speaker, she has absolutely no basis for the comments that she's made about vast numbers of people being followed around by secret police, so she's merely speculating and extrapolating that a few cases of investigations are resulting in a large abuse.

MS CARLSON: I hardly stated that there were vast numbers of people who were being followed. I said that I suggested there were more than the 1 percent who are actually offending the process who are being followed, and I challenge the minister to get his minister responsible for this huge mess to provide the information for this Assembly so that we can properly debate it. All of these backbenchers here know what's really going on in this province.

MR. HANCOCK: Mr. Speaker, I'm wondering if the hon. member is suggesting that by speculating about a problem, she can then put the onus on the minister to come forward with all sorts of information that she speculates exists if she's not prepared to provide this House with hard evidence that such an abuse does exist.

MS CARLSON: Mr. Speaker, if the secret police didn't do the secret tape that was then made public to the person who was being followed, then tell me who did that within the WCB? Who did that? There's a whole department of ex-police people whose sole job is to follow people who have made WCB claims, and I challenge the minister to prove that that isn't a fact in this province.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: We have a number of people standing. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry, followed by the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar if there's time.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. One of the great difficulties that occurred when WCB was moved arm's length away was again . . . [The time for questions and comments expired]

Speaker's Ruling Question and Comment Period

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. members know well that Standing Orders permit at the end of the third speaker on a bill at second reading and third reading to ask questions and respond, but the amount of time totally is five minutes. So actually we got quite a few questions and answers. Whether it's to the satisfaction of all is another issue.

We're now ready for the next speaker on this. The hon. Member for Calgary-Montrose.

Debate Continued

MR. PHAM: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to rise to join the debate on Bill 26, the Workers' Compensation Amendment Act, 2002. I have listened very carefully to what has been said by the opposition member. Even though I do not share a lot of the things that she said, I think that she had some valid points when she criticized the WCB in the way that it handled the long-term claims. However, I would like to encourage the member to look at this Bill 26 in its entirety and vote for the principle of it at second reading, because even though this bill may not be perfect – it may not give you everything that you look for, and it may not give the injured workers everything that they look for – I do believe that it is a big step forward.

Furthermore, it deals with the openness of the board. It will now force the board to have annual meetings open to the public. I think that's very important because one of the common criticisms of the WCB we have heard over the years is that it conducts its business behind closed doors and is not accountable to anybody. By opening the process to the public at least when it comes to the annual general meeting, the injured workers and the average Albertan will have a chance to scrutinize the way the WCB conducts its business and hopefully can hold it more accountable than it is today.

Another important point that I think is worth our support is on the Appeals Commission. I believe that the most important thing that we can do for the injured workers is to set up an appeal mechanism that can truly be seen as fair and accountable, that can bring down decisions that are not only responsible to the people who pay for the cost of the system but also are fair to the injured workers. Today many of the long-term injured workers complain – and in many cases they're correct to do so – that the WCB mandate seems to have cut them off the benefits roll to save money for the WCB.

Even though a lot of the injured workers are being handled fairly by the WCB, a small percentage of the long-term injured workers seem to consistently have this problem. The thing that they ask for is an Appeals Commission that is truly independent from the WCB, that is as far away from the WCB as possible and has the power to look at their cases on an unbiased basis and bring down decisions that the WCB has to respect. The amendment that we bring forward in this bill addresses all of that. Furthermore, the Appeals Commission will no longer be paid for by the WCB. It will be paid for by the minister, and then the minister will reclaim that money back from WCB. Even though that's a small change, it goes a long way in keeping the Appeals Commission separate and independent from the WCB itself.

When it comes to the decisions of the Appeals Commission, in the past if the WCB didn't like the decision, they could just challenge it or send the issue back through the appeal process again. They didn't have to carry it out. But under this new bill that we are bringing in, the board at WCB now is bound by the decision. Also, it sets in here the time line that the decision has to be implemented in. This is very important, because at the end of the day we will have to accept that there will be cases where the WCB and injured workers can never agree. The best thing that can happen to them and to us is to come up with a mechanism so that we can feel comfortable that they will be able to do a fair assessment and give out a fair decision.

I agree with the member from the opposition side that because we give WCB a monopoly, we are morally responsible for some of the actions that they are taking.

I would like to thank my government colleagues who have worked extensively over many, many years, who worked on those two committees to bring the information in. I'd also like to thank the Minister of Human Resources and Employment, who is responsible for WCB, for taking these initiatives forward and putting them in a piece of legislation like this.

The one thing that is different between government and opposition is that when you are in opposition, you have the luxury of criticizing the system, attacking it without worrying about the solution, about what you have to do, and without worrying about the cost of it. As you all know, we have several players on this issue. On the one hand, you have the long-term injured workers, and those of you who have followed me over the years know very well that I am a strong supporter of them and that I'm also a strong supporter of their cause and of their fight for what I believe is rightfully theirs. On the other hand, we also have employers, who have to pay the cost of the system, and we have to be fair to them as well. We cannot just open the system and give people a blank cheque. If we do that, then we will make the system become unsustainable, and the employers will not stick around. Because of that, there are going to be severe consequences for the injured workers, the people that we are trying to help.

People have to realize that another issue that we have been working on for many, many years is the medical panel. With 95 percent of long-term injured workers' cases, you always have a set of doctors on one side, usually the treating physician or the specialist who treats the injured workers. They have medical evidence supporting that the injured workers are still sick and that the injuries were a direct result of a work accident. On the other side you have WCB doctors who say that the injured workers are fit and able to return to work. That is a huge problem, because when it comes to that, the case manager most of the time comes down with a decision in favour of the WCB doctors. In the past the Member for Calgary-Egmont has brought a private member's bill forward looking at setting up an independent medical panel that can look at this medical evidence and hand down a fair decision. That was a very good idea.

In the past the WCB convinced the Legislature that they could do this in policy, that they don't need that in legislation, but in this bill the minister has put it down in legislation, and I think that it is another level of protection that the injured workers don't have today. If you read the bill carefully, you can see not only that the WCB can convene this medical panel; the Appeals Commission also has the right to instruct the medical panel as well if they think that there is conflicting medical information there. So that again is a very positive step for the injured workers.

There is a section in here dealing with the long-term consensus claims that are still outstanding, long-standing consensus matters. The minister had indicated that he's not going to proclaim this section into law until we have had a chance to consult with the employers and with the stakeholders. That is a little bit disappointing for some of the long-term injured workers who have been waiting for quite a while to have these problems dealt with. However, given the fear that the employers out there have, I think that is probably the most practical way that we can bring this issue forward.

I believe that there are many numbers floating out there. Some are saying that this will be, you know, costing in the hundreds of millions of dollars if we want to go back and reopen these old files. I personally believe that this is something that we have to do regardless of the cost, because if people say that it is too costly, what does it mean? What it means is that we have so many cases out there that were not handled properly in the first place. If that is truly the case, then I think we have to ask the question: what is wrong with the system? We cannot say that because the cost is too high, we cannot do the right thing. I don't think that is right.

I personally do not believe that we have that many bad cases out there, and I do not believe that the cost is as high as hundreds of millions of dollars. I think that what the minister is doing is the correct way: going out, giving out this information, giving the stakeholders a chance to provide meaningful input into the process. Hopefully at the end of the day everybody will see it in the same way that I see it, that these are the things we cannot avoid, that we have to deal with as a society. We are so lucky to live in a society where the individual right is respected. The government has gone in many areas trying to correct whatever mistakes were made in the past, and in this area I believe that we will do the same thing.

I do appreciate some of the concerns and some of the worries from members of the opposition about this bill. In 1995 I was the first government member to speak up about the problem of WCB. Over the past seven years I have worked extensively with many, many injured workers from across the province trying to change the system from within, trying to address some of the concerns that they raised. Based on my experience, I think this is a very positive bill. It will help many of the long-term injured workers. If you asked me if it's perfect, does it have a hundred percent of what I want or what I look for, I would say no. But at least it is, as somebody put it, two steps forward and one step backward, so we should probably support it, and because of that, I ask all of you to support this bill in principle. When it goes through the committee stage, then we can focus on section by section of the bill, and if you think that there is something that we can do to improve the clauses of the bill, then we will be more than happy to listen at that time.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Any comments or questions? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands to speak on the bill or to ask a question?

MR. MASON: Well, yes, I will ask the hon. member a question. I certainly am aware, at least to a small degree, of the work that he's done on the WCB, and I commend him for that work. The question I have is really whether or not he has been consistent in his speech tonight about who's responsible and to what degree they're responsible. I heard him say at first that we have to have a balance and we can't go too far in burdening the employers and then something else.

MR. PHAM: I think that I have been consistent not only tonight but over the past several years. Furthermore, we are morally responsible for WCB because we give them the monopoly. However, the employers are financially responsible for WCB because they pay for the cost of running WCB. So we have to make sure that we understand that, and we have to strike that balance to make sure that on one hand we ensure that the injured workers get fair treatment and on the other hand do not abuse the system so that it bankrupts all the employers.

MR. MASON: What if that balance does not result in the employers being willing to pay the full costs? Who ultimately is responsible for the injuries that the employees have received, and should they be denied full benefits because we can't reach the balance?

MR. PHAM: That, Mr. Speaker, is a hypothetical question. However, I do believe that we have enough money in the system to cover the costs of the long-term injured workers. WCB today can use the current resources that they have to address these cases. In any case, you know, I don't think it is a question of money but is more or less a question of practice. That's what I believe.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: I had invited the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands to speak and ask questions. Did you now want to speak?

MR. MASON: I will defer to the hon. member.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Okay. Thank you.
The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure to rise this evening to speak to Bill 26, the Workers' Compensation Amendment Act, 2002. I also would like to thank the hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment for getting us to this stage and also those members of the Assembly who did what I thought was an outstanding job on the workers' compensation service review input committee as well as Judge Friedman and his committee, who of course did the review on the appeals system. I think both of these reports were outstanding. They identified the issues that all injured workers felt were of utmost importance.

I think that in debating this bill, one of the things we have to do is to look at the history as to how we got this far. These two reports were initiated by the minister primarily because of the problems and concerns faced by injured workers in this province, again when these injured workers were trying to get fair and equitable solutions to their claims. As well, the issue was brought to the attention of the public by people camping out in front of WCB for over 100 days. We've also had, every one of us in this Assembly, any number of cases where injured workers have not been able to get fair and equitable settlements, timely settlements, just settlements to their claims.

We have had other situations in the past, Mr. Speaker, such as the Sims report. In the Sims report I see that there were 51 recommendations that were made to overhaul the Appeals Commission. Now, out of all those 51 recommendations there was only one – and that had to deal with court challenges – which was not accepted or where the recommendation was accepted and the status was complete or ongoing or whatever. But even after 50 of 51 suggested recommendations were in some form of implementation, the system wasn't working. So, of course, we saw a tremendous amount of frustration in the injured workers, which did culminate in the protest. At that point, the minister got involved, and the minister promised these commissions to look at issues, and we do have the reports in front of us today. Because of these reports, the process continued along and we now have Bill 26.

I thought it quite interesting in the reports and particularly Judge Friedman's – and some of the comments made there are comments that I don't think Bill 26 is satisfying or is going to satisfy. I have huge reservations about Bill 26, and I do think that in some areas, as the hon. member has mentioned, it does move us forward but certainly not forward enough.

I look at a number of comments in this damning report that Judge Friedman had made and one of the issues that he brought up – and his, of course, was on the appeals system. He goes on to say: "... the independence of the Appeals Commission by introducing a system that will make the appeals process more accountable." In some ways that certainly is what has happened here. We do have a tremendous amount more accountability by moving the appeals system away from WCB and into the department, but of course the other part of his recommendation: this not be moved to the Ministry of Human Resources and Employment but under the Minister of Justice. Another recommendation that Judge Friedman had was a "more active role by the Courts," and we do see that in Bill 26. Again, it does give the injured worker one more avenue for fair and just treatment.

I think the greatest reservation that we have is where Judge Friedman goes on to say,

Each Committee member has expressed concern about what seems to be a well-entrenched culture of denial within the WCB and one which treats many long-term disability claimants with suspicion.

Now, we've heard the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie talk about what some of these injured workers have gone through in the way of surveillance. This is an intrusion into the lives of Albertans. This is an intrusion where Albertans do not have the opportunity, first of all, of knowing who is filming them or videotaping them or whatever. They certainly have no recourse when the WCB comes and says: we have evidence on tape that you are capable of working, so therefore your benefits are cut off. They have to appeal that.

I saw one of these videotapes. It was of an injured worker that had carpal tunnel syndrome. I saw him just last week again. He cannot make a fist. His hands are so badly swollen. He was a welder. He will never weld again. Yet they had a videotape of this man carrying a small bag of garbage, one of the little Safeway bags, hooked onto his finger out to his garbage can, and they used that to say: "Well, you're capable of working; therefore, we're going to cut your benefits. We'll give you an earning loss supplement. You're capable of doing this work." The man did not have a chance of doing any work. This is what injured workers in this province have been subject to.

Now, you can imagine the terrible impact it has on these people. It doesn't only ruin these people when they are crippled from injuries they've received from work accidents, Mr. Speaker. Not only are their bodies damaged, but then their minds get damaged. That is another area that we don't get to see the figures the WCB has. There are a number of people who suffer psychological damage because of physical injuries. Also we have to realize, Mr. Speaker, that for so many of these people that are injured, it has a serious impact on their families: on their spouses and on their children. It certainly isn't uncommon for a divorce or separation to occur. I was talking with a fellow here yesterday who at the peak of his earnings was making over $200,000 a year, and it played a terrible role in the breakup of his family when he was cut off benefits, because he cannot work.

It also has a tremendous impact on employers when they see what has happened to their valued employees who can no longer return to the occupations they once had. As well, when these workers get cut off benefits from the WCB that they should have, Mr. Speaker, we load this on other safety nets that we have, whether it be AISH, welfare, or the Canada pension plan, and the organization that should be hauling the freight and paying the price is not doing it.

So we obviously do have a tremendous, tremendous amount of work to do here in order to make this bill a better bill.

Now, then, the issue that is identified in the bill is certainly accountability. Probably the one greatest error we made when we moved the WCB to arm's length from the department was the fact that we did not put in any checks and balances, that they became accountable unto themselves. It was extremely difficult for anybody to even get their case away from the WCB and into the courts, but it has been done.

As well, when we look here, we see that they have identified that there's going to be a review process for long-standing, contentious claims. I think that is a strength of this bill, but the weakness in this bill, Mr. Speaker, is that many of these long-standing, contentious claims are legitimate. These people have been denied the benefits that they should have had for years. These will amount to hundreds of thousands of dollars.

While this was happening, Mr. Speaker, there's another thing that happened. Again, we go back to the accountability of the WCB. From their annual report we see that in 1999 they started with the rate and benefit stabilization reserve. Now, this is a fund that was set up to deal with long-term injuries, long-term, contentious claims, whatever. They started with $211 million. They removed $55 million from the fund balance that particular year. I suppose the reason was that they knew that this whole process was going to be challenged, was going to be changed. That remaining $156 million was removed totally from the rate and benefit stabilization reserve. The moneys that had been set aside – all the moneys: the $211 million we started with, which was absolutely more than adequate to settle every one of these long-term, contentious claims – they removed from that fund.

As well, some of these claims go back prior to 1988, when the Appeals Commission was established. At that time, I think appeals went directly to the board of directors. This government right here, the minister, appointed the board of directors. Does that mean now that this body here is responsible for those long-term, contentious claims that occurred before we set up the appeal process? There are a lot of strong feelings out there that in fact it is our responsibility here, not WCB's. So we do have another issue to look at there: who pays? Now, to turn around and load this back up onto the employers is not correct, particularly when we did remove that from them. As well, we have to remember, Mr. Speaker, that the employers in this province have also had the benefit of some very good investments that the WCB has made with their resources.

Now, when we look at the average actual compared to average required premium rate – in other words, what the employer paid compared to what the cost was to run the WCB – we can start back in, for example, 1996. It cost $1.50 per hundred to run the WCB, and what people paid was $1.49. When we look at 1999, the employers paid 58 cents less per hundred than what they should have paid. In the year 2000 they paid 62 cents less. Therefore, the employers have got their break, and the people that haven't got the break are the injured workers.

Mr. Speaker, I look forward to speaking more to this bill when we do reach Committee of the Whole. Thank you very much.

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, I as well as a number of my colleagues in the House I know have some comments we would like to make on Bill 26. Some very good comments have been made regarding the bill tonight. I know that there will be a continuing debate as to whether the bill goes far enough, whether it corrects all of the concerns that have been raised by a number of my colleagues certainly and members opposite. However, I would concur with my colleague from Calgary-Montrose that it is a good step forward and certainly gives us something to build on and work towards to alleviate some of the concerns of our injured workers who feel that all of their concerns haven't been met.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to comment in some further detail on this bill, but I would move at this point that we adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd move that we adjourn until 1:30 p.m. tomorrow.

[Motion carried; at 11:08 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Thursday at 1:30 p.m.]

MR. HORNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the House a great group of 50 kids, teachers, and parent helpers who are constituents I also share with my friend and colleague from St. Albert. I had a chance to talk with this group in the rotunda, and they asked some great questions, including some about the new helmet law. They are here from the Ronald Harvey elementary school, and they are with teachers Trent Walters and Jody Bialowas, parent helpers Kim MacEachran, Ron Campbell, and Jennifer Foo. They are seated in the members' gallery, and I would ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this House.

head: Oral Question Period

THE SPEAKER: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

G-8 Summit

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. An April 5 government

memo to the Solicitor General states that the government of Alberta will advise Canada that it will consider banning federal officials, including the RCMP and the Department of National Defence, from provincially held land in Kananaskis unless an agreement is reached on who covers the costs for the G-8 summit. The memo notes that withholding the use of this land “could cause some serious logistical problems for the security planning team.” The memo says that the Department of International and Intergovernmental Relations was drafting the letter for the minister’s review. My questions are to the Solicitor General. Why did the government consider taking steps that would compromise the safety and security of Albertans?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MRS. FORSYTH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I’m pleased to answer that. The memo that the hon. member is referring to is dated April 5, and that’s when we were in the process of negotiating with the federal government with some frustration. People have to understand that the G-8 is a federal responsibility. It’s a federal initiative, and it’s their party, but the G-8 is in our province. Our number one priority is the safety and security of Albertans and to make sure that we don’t get taxed with any dollars for their party.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Does the minister consider making threats toward the federal government an appropriate negotiating tactic?

1:40

MRS. FORSYTH: Mr. Speaker, if I may, the member has to understand that that memo was addressed to me from one of my special advisers who has been attending all of the G-8 meetings. What the hon. member is referring to is options in the letter on negotiations that we have with the feds. We had to make it very clear to the federal government that we were serious about the G-8. We were concerned about the safety and security of Albertans, and we did not want to have to pay a dime when they were having their party in our province.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that one of the strategies suggested in the memo was linking the G-8 dispute to Kyoto, health care, and softwood lumber, has the government’s policy on linking disputes of national concern changed?

MRS. FORSYTH: Well, again my number one priority is the safety and security of Albertans. The other thing, Mr. Speaker, if I may, is to make sure that we don’t get stuck with paying for something that the federal government has initiated. We have to look at softwood. We have to look at some of the other things that we’ve gotten hit with, and we were very clear in our negotiations that we were not going to get stuck with paying for anything, if we could.

THE SPEAKER: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The G-8 summit is fast approaching, yet the Solicitor General has been unable to confirm what funding arrangements have been made with the federal government. Albertans deserve to know whether or not they will be on the hook for any costs. Is it true that the Alberta government has been unable to get the federal government to cover the costs of prosecuting any protesters that may end up being put to court?

MRS. FORSYTH: Yes, Mr. Speaker, it is true that we have been negotiating with the federal government on the prosecution costs, and Alberta believes that we should not have to pay for the prosecution costs of protesters that we’re prosecuting. We have been told in discussions with Quebec that they are facing an $860,000 bill for one charge for one protester. I say to the hon. member, if I may, that I encourage him to pick up the phone as a Liberal and call his cousins, the federal government, and talk to them.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Attorney General or possibly the Solicitor General: are there possibilities that protesters could be charged under federal law and the costs transferred that way rather than under provincial laws?

MR. HANCOCK: Well, Mr. Speaker, of course people will be charged with the appropriate crimes if the evidence is there to suggest that they’ve been committed. We’re not going to play games with how charges are laid. Prosecutors will act appropriately in accordance with the evidence which the police collect and put before them.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Back to the Solicitor General: do you have any idea what the costs may be if prosecutions were to come about using maybe the Quebec example?

MRS. FORSYTH: Well, Mr. Speaker, I can only tell the member what Quebec is facing. To prosecute Jaggi Singh, one protester, they are facing an $860,000 prosecution bill. In negotiations with the federal government one of the federal officials said to me: Madam Minister, maybe you shouldn’t prosecute. My response to him was: what kind of an example does that show to future G-8 meetings, and do you really think Albertans would want that?

THE SPEAKER: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton Gold-Bar.

Electricity Billing

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just as Enron, an enthusiastic promoter of electricity deregulation, was a spectacular failure, so, too, is this government’s expensive right-wing electricity deregulation scheme. Understandably, both cabinet ministers and government MLAs are breaking ranks with this expensive right-wing scheme. The Premier talked yesterday about Alberta’s entrepreneurial spirit. Well, part of that spirit is having the smarts to distinguish a good idea from a bad one, something this government apparently lacks. My questions this afternoon are to the Minister of Energy. Since the Premier knows very little about the Balancing Pool’s $345 million deferral account, can the minister tell us how much Alberta’s monthly electricity bill will go up to recover this amount?

Thank you.

MR. SMITH: The Premier knows a great deal about the new competitive restructuring, Mr. Speaker. In fact, the Balancing Pool will make those determinant decisions.

MR. MacDONALD: Again, Mr. Speaker, can the hon. minister please tell us when this $345 million bill will be added to the already 500 million plus dollar bill that we're paying now? When can Albertans expect to see this on their utility bill?

Thank you.

MR. SMITH: It'll be a decision of the Balancing Pool, Mr. Speaker.

MR. MacDONALD: Again, Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: when will this government please come clean, unlike Enron, and provide the true cost to Albertans for this expensive right-wing electricity deregulation scheme that's gone all wrong?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, followed by the hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

Municipally Owned Power Companies

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. An internal document from the Ministry of Municipal Affairs that I will table today proposes to give the minister the power to order municipalities in Alberta to sell off corporations which they own. At worst this is a stealthy preparation to force the sale of EPCOR and Enmax on Edmonton and Calgary, or at best it's just another example of the Big Brother approach that the Tory government takes toward Alberta municipalities. To the minister of Municipal Affairs: why is the government circulating draft regulations which would give unprecedented power to the minister to interfere in the internal affairs of Alberta municipalities?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. BOUTILIER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First of all, I'm pleased that he talked about Big Brother, but it's also important to talk about the Alberta family, which Edmonton and Calgary and EPCOR and Enmax are part of. I'm pleased he has, because at the end of the day we're working together as Albertans. We're protecting all taxpayers. What's important is that we've been dialoguing with both cities. In fact, as I mentioned the other day, we have the only roles and responsibilities committee in the entire nation right here in Alberta. I'd ask the hon. member to maybe look closer in terms of the important partnerships that we have established and have strong with our municipalities across this province.

MR. MASON: Mr. Speaker, why does the minister need the power to force Alberta cities to sell off valuable assets like Enmax and EPCOR?

MR. BOUTILIER: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member, of course, who was an elected city councillor at one point, is aware that under the Municipal Government Act we are in partnership with and work together with municipalities through that legislation. At the end of the day, the buck stops with the Minister of Municipal Affairs when it comes to Municipal Affairs dealing with municipalities, because this Alberta Legislature created them. That's where they were created. So ultimately we're continuing to work with these folks in good partnership, no more and no less.

MR. MASON: Well, Mr. Speaker, I was hoping that the minister would say that he had no such agenda, but he hasn't said that, so I'll ask him why he will not give assurances to the citizens of Edmonton and Calgary that there won't be any forced privatization of their power companies. If he wants to give them that assurance, why doesn't he just withdraw this draft regulation right today?

MR. BOUTILIER: Mr. Speaker, I can assure this House in terms of the agenda that, number one, it's open. In the actual release that was announced today by the New Democrats, they talk about the fact that this is quietly being done. I'm pleased that it's so quietly being done that we're talking about it today in this Alberta Legislature. I think that's important, but even more importantly we're going to continue to work with all of our stakeholders. We've done it in the past; we're doing it in the future. There is simply no hidden agenda here relative to the comments that are being made by the hon. member.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

MR. VANDERBURG: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I rise and I'm a very frustrated MLA for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne who has many frustrated constituents that are equally concerned. My constituents of Whitecourt-Ste. Anne have some serious concerns with escalating power bills. My REA members, in getting their latest round of EPCOR power bills, are concerned that they cannot pay the invoice. My question is to the Minister of Energy. My constituents talk to me about their concerns, I advise them to talk to their utility companies, and it's not working. I need your help, sir. Who do they talk to? Who's their advocate on this issue?

1:50

MR. SMITH: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think it's very clear that there's a very strong advocate in Onoway, Whitecourt, Sangudo, and that advocate for constituents is the member, the MLA, the Conservative MLA for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne. There is frustration from various constituents throughout Alberta. There are different levels because different service areas have different issues. The area of Whitecourt-Ste. Anne as well as Rocky Mountain House, Vulcan: these areas are served by UtiliCorp.

Now, the member has asked: who should they contact? They should contact, one, the utility company. There's no question. Secondly, if they're in a rural electrification association, they should talk to them. Thirdly, they should talk to EPCOR as well. This is the utility that's selling them the power. Again, if the issues are not resolved, the individuals are encouraged to contact the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board, who, as I said on Tuesday, Mr. Speaker, regulate a portion of the bill.

To help the process along – and I will table these at the appropriate time – today I am sending two letters. One is to Don Lowry, president and chief executive officer of EPCOR. I will precis this, Mr. Speaker:

The situation has reached a point where additional communication effort is required. I suggest and urge you to mobilize your staff to hold a number of "open houses" throughout the communities where you are experiencing the most calls . . . I would appreciate [knowing the outcome of that].

Also, Mr. Speaker, I am tabling today a copy of the letter that will be sent to Mr. Lowry and to Mr. Green, the chairman of UtiliCorp, now known as Aquila. In that letter I will ask them to clean up the metering data problems and to then advise us of how they're going to do it, what they're going to do, and how they are going to compete fairly with quality customer service in a competitive marketplace.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. VANDERBURG: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you, Minister. You bring up some issues about responsibility on those invoices that my constituents are getting. Who is responsible for different parts of that bill? What is the government responsible for, what is the EUB responsible for, and what is the utility company responsible for?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. SMITH: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The government is responsible for setting the policies, and if there are questions about the specific policy, the market structure, please contact the Department of Energy at 310-0000 and ask for the public information centre.

Secondly, Mr. Speaker, as discussed – and let me reiterate – the AEUB, Alberta Energy and Utilities Board, is the regulator for much of the province, although not Calgary and not Edmonton, and it enforces the policies, acting in the public interest. There is also a market surveillance administrator attached to the Power Pool. So if it's Edmonton or Calgary, let's talk to EPCOR and Enmax. In this member's particular riding it's EPCOR, it's UtiliCorp, the EUB, and the MLA.

MR. VANDERBURG: Thank you for that response, and I'll be glad to be the advocate. When I need your help, I don't need a form letter. I need some good, solid response. Mr. Minister, will you commit to me to give me that help that I need?

MR. SMITH: Just as much as the hon. member provides detailed, concrete information so that we can quickly get to the bottom of the problem and provide the issues that we're responsible for and continue to ask the utility companies, Mr. Speaker, to operate with a sense of customer service. These customers are terrifically important to these providers of electricity. If they fail them now, as more and more choice becomes available, they will lose these customers.

Access to Long-term Care in Calgary Health Region

DR. TAFT: Mr. Speaker, some RHAs behave as if they are becoming fiefdoms unto themselves. For example, the Calgary health region is now telling Albertans from outside Calgary that they can't get on the region's waiting list for long-term care because they are not Calgarians, but the Calgary region will make an exception if the applicants are prepared to pay $3,000 per month. In that case Albertans from outside Calgary will be placed in long-term care in Calgary immediately. It seems like a rather selective bed shortage. My questions are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. If government policy allows RHAs to intensify residence requirements for services, how is the government going to avoid a patchwork system of health care in which some Albertans have markedly better access than others?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, I think this is a good question. We must work towards ensuring that we have a seamless health care system anywhere in the province of Alberta, where we can say that the standards are satisfactory and that there is co-operation and collaboration among and between regions. Even in the Mazankowski report it indicates the importance of regions working together to ensure a smooth service to Albertans. It talks about: if there is duplication of services where a collaborative effort should be made, then we need to examine that and ask the reason why that is so and take steps to correct it. If we are not satisfied that either the standards or the outcomes of the decisions of a particular regional health authority are satisfactory, then we must examine that and ask ourselves why that is happening and take steps to correct it.

So, Mr. Speaker, it is all about collaboration and innovation among and between regions, because ultimately no one regional health authority can be all things to all people. There must be collaboration among and between those authorities, which is the reason why the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora is heading an MLA task force on collaboration among and between regional health authorities.

DR. TAFT: To the same minister: why do residents of Okotoks, Canmore, and Didsbury have to pay a $3,000 a month charge that residents of Bragg Creek, Cochrane, and Airdrie do not need to pay?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, I'll be happy to look into this particular question for the hon. member, but I can say that we do have a good health care system, that is occasionally excellent. That is not to say that it is perfect in all its operations, nor is it to say that we cannot improve on the collaboration among and between regional health authorities.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The minister has had the issue on his desk since March 11.

As the Minister of Health and Wellness for all Albertans, what is the minister's position on the policy of the Calgary health region to charge $3,000 a month to some Albertans and not to others based on where a person lives?

MR. MAR: I think I've stated my position quite clearly in the first two answers in responding to the first two questions set out by the hon. member. There may be a reason for this, Mr. Speaker – I don't know – but I will entertain looking into it for him, and I'll be happy to reply in due course.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Age of Consent

MRS. JABLONSKI: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, according to the definition of the United Nations convention on the rights of the child, a child is any human being under the age of 18. The legal drinking age is 18. Children under the age of 18 cannot purchase cigarettes. Children must be 16 in order to have a driver's licence. Yet children at the age of 14 are legally permitted to consent to sexual activity. It is our duty as adults and parents to protect our children, for if we cannot protect our own children, then who can we protect? It is not necessary for me to list the numerous reasons why we should raise the age of consent. Constituents in Red Deer have called me to express their outrage. I recently received a phone call from a mother who could not help her 14-year-old daughter who was suffering from physical, psychological, and emotional damage due to early sexual activity. Ninety-five percent of single teenage mothers end up living in poverty for the rest of their lives. Our Alberta Youth Advisory Panel has expressed that teenage pregnancy and sexually transmitted diseases are their number one issues. My question is for the Minister of Justice and Attorney General. On April 10, 2002, you told the members of this Assembly about this demand for stricter regulations. Can the minister advise the House of any progress he has made in getting the federal government to raise the age of consent?

MR. HANCOCK: Well, Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member has mentioned, we did make a ministerial statement in the House and included the reference to raising the age of consent. I've written to the federal minister requesting that that change be made. As all members know, this House passed a resolution some two years ago, a resolution brought forward by the Member for Calgary-North Hill, with respect to that particular issue. We have not had progress as yet, and for that reason I'm trying to arrange a face-to-face meeting with the federal minister in June of this year, and that will be the first item on the agenda.

2:00

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MRS. JABLONSKI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister explain to all members of the Assembly why the government of Alberta has to push for this change to federal legislation?

MR. HANCOCK: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's important to change the federal legislation because it's essentially to the Criminal Code that this age of consent issue is going to have the most import. I believe we've done everything we can in this province with the Protection of Children Involved in Prostitution Act, for example, under the child welfare legislation treating child abusers – because that's what they are, child abusers – and protecting the children. But it's a criminal sanction that's necessary in order to make this law effective. We have had discussions over the years, the three years that I've been involved. We've pushed this at every federal/provincial/territorial ministers' meeting. We've had most provinces agree, but in a couple of situations provinces have disagreed, and the federal government has traditionally been reluctant to proceed with criminal legislation when all provinces don't agree. Therefore, we're also pursuing consultation with other provinces and trying to make sure that they understand the essential need for raising the age of consent to at least 16. My personal preference would be 18.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Teaching Conditions in Calgary Public Schools

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Coupled with underfunding, the fallout from Bill 12 is starting to hurt students. The conditions that led to a teachers' strike in Calgary are worsening. My questions are to the Minister of Learning. What action can the minister take so that class sizes in Calgary public, already two students above the provincial average, will not increase in September?

DR. OBERG: Well, Mr. Speaker, there are a couple of things. First of all, starting roughly around the first week of June, we will have the blue-ribbon panel up to look at all of these different issues. Over the last couple of days in Calgary what has occurred is that the Calgary public school district has brought out their draft budget, and I must emphasize the word "draft." Included in that budget is a 35 percent increase in expenses – 35 percent. I hope that expenses don't rise around this province by 35 percent, but they are looking at all different options. They are looking at which direction they can go. Quite simply, as an example, the Calgary school board spends $5 million on lunchroom supervision programs. These are some of the things that they have to take a very serious look at when it comes to budgeting. I will also say that in the budget for '02-03 the amount of dollars to the Calgary public school board increased by $25 million, despite the fact that their enrolment has held stable. In fact, it has actually dropped a little and indeed has dropped consistently for around the last four or five years.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you. To the same minister: will the minister ensure that there are adequate resources so that Calgary public elementary and junior high school teachers will not lose all their preparation time come September?

DR. OBERG: Mr. Speaker, the Calgary public teachers presently are under a contract of 23 hours. What the Calgary school board has proposed is an increase of about 20 to 24 minutes a day, up to 25 hours a week. The average around the province is around 24 hours with the range being anywhere from 20 to 28 hours per week. So that would put them in the middle. Again I will certainly stress that this is a proposed budget. I think it is extremely difficult for Calgary public to bring forward a budget at this time when they don't know what their teacher costs are. The arbitration tribunal will be dealing with that and will theoretically be done – at least that's what they've told us – by June 21. So we will see what happens then.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you. Again to the same minister: can the minister assure parents in Calgary that no more librarian and counselor positions will be cut in September?

DR. OBERG: Mr. Speaker, I will give no such assurance because it is up to the school boards how they rationalize the usage of their funds. They have received, as I've stated in the prior answer, an extra $25 million this year for a population of students that is declining. It's up to the duly elected school boards to take a look at what is the best way that they can utilize those resources. Quite frankly, I believe in the Calgary public school board, and I believe that they can do it.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Municipal Funding

MR. LUKASZUK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There have been a number of reports, including a front-page story in yesterday's local newspaper, regarding funding strains on municipalities in Alberta. I also hear similar sentiments reflected to me by local city councillors. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs: do municipalities in Alberta require additional funding sources in order to meet the strains placed upon them?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. BOUTILIER: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course, I think we all know that at the end of the day, be it federal, provincial, or municipal, there is only one taxpayer. What I am encouraged by are some of the comments that I've read by His Worship the mayor of Edmonton where he said that he is encouraged by a roles, responsibilities, and resources committee, the first of its kind, because we're looking not just for band-aid solutions but long-term solutions. I might also add that I'm encouraged by the vice-president of the Federation of Canadian Municipalities, where in fact Alderman John Schmal from Calgary indicates that our Premier, through a process that we've developed, is opening the door to further discussion in terms of the respect and the maturity that we're seeing now within municipalities that have grown. Certainly they are important partners to us.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. LUKASZUK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second and last question is for the same minister. Do the committee and the discussions in which you engaged include perhaps allowing municipalities additional sources of taxation?

MR. BOUTILIER: Mr. Speaker, everything is on the table. As was indicated yesterday, in fact, Ernie Patterson, the AUMA vice-president, made a comment that at the end of the day municipalities are mature, and he's pleased with the fact that we know, as the Premier quoted yesterday, and we believe that municipalities will act in the best interests of taxpayers, no different than the province does. So the bottom line is the maturity they're showing, and the partnership we're having is a good thing.

I just would like to end by saying that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, the co-chair of the roles and responsibilities committee, the hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne, as well as the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View participate on this committee with the two mayors as well as the president of the rural association of Alberta, Jack Hayden, and the president of the AUMA, His Worship George Rogers from Leduc.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Regional Health Authority Deficits

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On April 17 the Minister of Health and Wellness was asked, "Will RHAs be allowed to run deficits for the 2002-03 fiscal year?" to which the minister responded, "the letter that I sent out to regional health authorities . . . clearly indicates that they are not to be planning for long-term deficits." Now, however, two RHA boards, which include a member of the Premier's advisory council and a former Tory minister, have openly challenged the minister's directive. My questions are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. In light of this information, will RHA boards be allowed to run deficits for the 2002-2003 fiscal year?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased that the hon. member was able to quote me correctly when I said that the letter that was sent by me to the regional health authorities indicated clearly that there would not be long-term deficits for regional health authorities. That leaves open the possibility that if a regional health authority has some difficulty in the current fiscal year and they can demonstrate that they have a legitimate plan and a detailed plan for how they will deal with that short-term deficit and make sure that it is paid through in the medium term, perhaps in the second or third year, then those business plans may be acceptable. But let's make it very, very clear that this should be an exceptional circumstance.

The regional health authorities have received a significant increase as a whole in this province. The Department of Health and Wellness in the current budget year received a 7 percent increase, larger than any other department of government. What accrues to regional health authorities is an additional almost quarter of a billion dollars, that has been allocated to RHAs throughout the province. We expect them by and large to be able to run their operations on last year's budget plus the increase that they'll be receiving this year.

So, Mr. Speaker, our expectation is that regional health authorities will for the most part be putting forward balanced budgets, but there can be exceptions for short-term deficits if they have a detailed plan for how they will deal with those deficits in the future.

2:10

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, it may be 7 percent overall, but it's less than that for rural RHAs. So given that rural RHAs received an increase of only 4.4 percent, how does the minister expect them to deal with increased labour costs, upcoming labour negotiations, higher electricity prices, and higher health care premiums for their own employees on 4.4 percent?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, every regional health authority, whether it be urban or rural, will have to examine its operations and determine if this is the best way to deliver services. I can say that there have been some good examples of collaboration among and between regional health authorities. However, there is still far too much duplication of services, insufficient attention paid to the opportunities to save money by working together, for regional health authorities to collaborate, to contract with one another. So every regional health authority will have the same challenges in terms of determining what services it will provide to the constituency people that they serve and figuring out the best way to deliver those services.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. If the minister is willing to allow short-term deficits for I think I heard him say three years running, at what point do these deficits become long-term debt? Year four? Year five? How many years are you going to let them run this deficit?

MR. MAR: I did not indicate that a deficit three years in a row would be satisfactory, Mr. Speaker. I think I made it very clear that if there's a short-term deficit – that is, in the current fiscal year – there must be a way of being able to cover that deficit in the subsequent second and third years. Of course, as the Provincial Treasurer is quick to remind me, all of these things must be approved through our Treasury Board process as well. So there is fiscal responsibility that is incumbent upon the Department of Health and Wellness, this government, but also each and every regional health authority.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Legislation Dealing with Same-sex Relationships

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Three years ago this month the Supreme Court handed down a landmark ruling. In that judgment Canada's highest court ruled that discrimination against same-sex couples could not be justified and is in fact unconstitutional. Since then the federal government and eight other provinces have amended their laws to end discrimination, but not Alberta. To the Minister of Justice and Attorney General: why is it taking the Alberta government so much longer to end discrimination against persons in same-sex relationships than it took the federal government and the other provinces who have already addressed the problem?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. HANCOCK: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think the answer to that has been given in this House before. We have taken the opportunity to review all our statutes with respect to adult personal relationships to determine what could be done or should be done with respect to the area. We're not content simply to take the narrowness of the ruling with respect to a particular incident and a particular statute but rather would prefer to look thoroughly at all our statutes and come up with an appropriate answer and response and appropriate legislation dealing with all of our legislation, which is satisfactory to all Albertans.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: why is the minister planning to leave intact the discriminatory provisions of dozens of statutes dealing with pensions, insurance, employment benefits, and family law and only planning to amend laws that the courts have ordered him to do by a certain deadline?

MR. HANCOCK: Well, the question is very presumptuous, Mr. Speaker, because the hon. member has no idea as yet exactly what statutes will be proposed for amendment. Going on notice today will be the Adult Interdependent Relationships Act and the Intestate Succession Amendment Act for the purview of the House next week. In those acts we will be dealing with amendments to certain acts but not necessarily all of them.

We will continue to look at all the acts of this province, and have, to see how this act will be applied to all the other acts of the province. It would be more appropriate for me to deal with those issues when those acts are in fact introduced into the House.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My next question is to the Minister of Finance. Why did the Minister of Finance early in January amend only the management employees' pension plan to end discrimination against same-sex couples while failing to eliminate the discriminatory provisions in other public-sector pension plans?

MR. HANCOCK: Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, although the question was addressed to the Minister of Finance, I could answer that for the hon. member. We took steps in January to deal with pension regulations because pension regulations have to be dealt with in the context of federal definitions and federal regulation and law. So it was very clear with respect to what amendments needed to be made to the pension regulations. The remainder of regulations and laws that did not need to be amended at that time were held until we could complete the thorough review and the recommendation to this House as to what the definition of an adult interpersonal relationship should be and would be and apply that consistency to all Alberta laws.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, followed by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Gasoline Pricing

MR. CENAIKO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question is to the hon. Minister of Energy. In the United States a Senate subcommittee completed a 10-month review of U.S. gasoline prices and found that a frenzy of oil company mergers has led to rising U.S. gasoline costs. It also found that major oil companies took actions to keep supplies tight and inventories low in order to increase prices and maximize profits. Could something like this happen in Canada?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. SMITH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The answer is that we do not believe that something like this can happen in Canada for a number of reasons. One, the market is much more centred around small refiners. There's good regulation around the marketplace. Also, there is a Canadian General Standards Board, that sets standards for how gasoline should be mixed throughout Canada and also for each individual province. It varies with altitude or closeness to sea level or specific areas. We also think that there are some economies of scale and also some distribution networks in Canada to help lower costs and therefore price. Certainly if we were to compare Canadian gasoline prices with other jurisdictions across the world, we'd find that we're amongst the lowest, if not the lowest.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. CENAIKO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second question is to the same minister. What mechanisms are in place, and do you work with the federal government in ensuring that this price-fixing doesn't happen here?

MR. SMITH: Well, we're always pleased to work with the federal government, and the federal Competition Bureau is the access point that seeks to prevent business practices that restrain competition. If a consumer has a concern, Mr. Speaker, the Competition Bureau is case driven, and that consumer just has to contact the Competition Bureau and put their case forward. The bureau then decides if there are grounds for investigation.

As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, in March of 1997 there was a Canada-wide investigation of the gasoline prices, and there was no evidence to support any allegations of price-fixing. There have been no recent investigations specifically for the province of Alberta. Prices I saw on TV this morning varied from 63 cents in Calgary to 69 cents in Calgary. All members or interested citizens have to do is go on the web and check calgarygasprices.com or edmontongasprices.com, and they'll see the range of gas prices across this province.

Chronic Wasting Disease

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta Agriculture's chronic wasting disease program includes the possibility of the provincial government covering the costs for the mandatory testing of all slaughtered or disposed-of animals. My questions are to the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. Is this cost-shared testing program similar to the disease testing cases for other animals in Alberta?

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, as I understand it, the hon. member was asking about a mandatory testing program for chronic wasting disease. We don't have a mandatory program in place at this point. We have a voluntary program, which has had great success, between 70 and 80 percent participation in it. But I would tell the hon. member that we've been meeting with the industry and had another meeting as late as this morning, and we believe that we have an agreement for a mandatory program. I want to review the details of that program with my staff, then have that back to the industry probably tomorrow or Monday, and then with their agreement be prepared to release the details of that program. I can't say at this point whether that would be part of it.

We have a budget in our department for food safety. The hon. member would know, being the critic for that department, that we increased that budget last year and increased it again by another half a million dollars this year. That of course is for the overall industry, but certainly this would fall into that area.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The federal government assists in the compensation for animals eliminated. Have you approached them for cost sharing in this prevention program to help us protect our livestock industry?

MRS. McCLELLAN: The federal government participates with the governments of provinces in a variety of ways, as agriculture is a 50-50 shared jurisdiction under the Constitution. Certainly a lot of those areas are in safety nets, but areas that we also look at are areas of food safety.

We're in the process of developing an agricultural policy framework, which is being developed by the 10 provinces, the territories, and the federal government. In fact, I will be attending meetings next week with my colleagues from across Canada to work on details of that, as we hope to have a final agricultural policy framework by the end of June, middle of July. Some of the answers on those areas of responsibility, as food safety is high on the agenda of the AG policy framework, could be answered then.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Why is it that the public picks up these costs, not the industry, in terms of this monitoring and testing program?

MRS. McCLELLAN: I would not say, Mr. Speaker, that the public picks up the costs of these tests. I think that as a government and as governments we have a responsibility to the citizens of this country and certainly we to the citizens of this province to ensure, as much as is in our power, that the food products that they consume are indeed safe. I think the public expects that of us. We do it through co-operation with the department of health through inspection services that are carried out there. We do it through the Canadian Food Inspection Agency. We do it with Health Canada. There is a question with the mandatory testing as to who will pay. It has not been determined whether there will be a cost. What I can tell the hon. member is that it's estimated that the cost could be about $125 an animal. I would think that the industry might consider that worth participating in, considering the value of the animals and their industry, but those details will be better known next week.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by the hon. Member for Dunvegan.

Clover Bar Generating Station

MR. YANKOWSKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The 32-year-old Clover Bar generating station located on the banks of the North Saskatchewan River in northeast Edmonton stands idle, a victim of deregulation. This 660-megawatt gas-fired plant, now termed as a white elephant, was bypassed by the power auction because it uses old technology. So there it sits, a perfectly good, environmentally friendly gas-fired plant that power purchasers pass by. My questions are all to the Minister of Energy. I understand that the Balancing Pool intends to sell off the rights to market the power represented by the Power Pool arrangements it currently holds. Can the minister explain to us what is happening with this power?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. SMITH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and in fact I can. The Clover Bar plant is held by the Balancing Pool. This 660-megawatt plant was built in the '60s. It's very simply a function of the price of gas and the utilization of this plan. Clover Bar takes 10,000 BTUs of gas to make one kilowatt-hour. That was the '60s technology. Fast-forward to the '90s and the explosion of what Alberta is very good at, gas-fired cogeneration, and you'll find that the new plants will generate a kilowatt-hour of electricity for 6,500 to 7,000 BTUs of gas. Now, 35 percent of our supply of electricity is gas, and in fact when you look at this plant, 50 to 60 percent of the price of this plant is the price of gas. So a more efficient competition under deregulation and also a long life cycle of the plant is contributing to this.

Mr. Speaker, the other side of the issue is that with regulation they amortize the price of a plant over a long period of time, 35 to 40 years, whereas in the deregulated side this is about 15 years. So what happens today is that we still have the debt associated with Clover Bar over that period of 25 to 40 years coupled with the fact that 50 percent of its operation is its price of gas, and you will find that unless electricity power prices move up, it's simply out of the money and uneconomic for people to purchase the lowest possible power price in Alberta.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. YANKOWSKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Can't the hon. minister tell us why these contracts did not sell in either of the two previous power auctions?

MR. SMITH: Mr. Speaker, I can tell you that the marketplace determined that the power purchase agreement associated with the generating facilities was not what they wanted, so the piece that was offered, some 2,300 megawatts, was not being accepted in the first auction and is now being held over for auction two. The Balancing Pool has put together an auction that does not give anybody specific market power and also is a way of getting smaller tranches of these megawatts into the marketplace. We hope to see positive results, although certainly not guaranteed, from the next MAP auction.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Dunvegan.

MR. GOUDREAU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My concerns are further to the questions raised by the hon. Leader of the Opposition but in a slightly different context. It was at the end of March when we first heard that there was one case of chronic wasting disease confirmed in a farm elk in Alberta. It's now May, and we haven't had any news on the traced-out animal herds that were quarantined. I would like to address my questions to the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. Why has it taken so long to find out if any other farm cervids have the disease in this province?

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, first, it's important to identify a couple of areas at the outset. One, what is really important is that we have a strong detection methodology in this province. When this disease unfortunately was detected, because of that monitoring surveillance tracing system we, being the Canadian Food Inspection Agency, were able to, one, quarantine the farm and, two, trace every animal that had moved off of that farm. Indeed, that is what has led to the subsequent testing of 12 animals.

Mr. Speaker, I also want to again make it very clear that it is the responsibility of the Canadian Food Inspection Agency for the testing of these traced-out animals. They are the ones who have collected the samples, and they are the ones who will give us the results. It is my understanding that beyond just brain tissue testing they are taking other samples of tissue and testing that as well. Subsequently, because they've gone beyond the routine surveillance testing, this could take a bit longer. We are hopeful that those results will be with us very soon, because of course the 12 farms where the 12 animals are located are under quarantine as well.

2:30

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. GOUDREAU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second question is to the same minister. How can Albertans be confident that the elk and deer they consume in restaurants and the meat supplied by the cervid industry is safe? Can the minister advise us what processes and what procedures are in place from gate to plate to ensure this?

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, I could do that and think it's important. Alberta does have a very strong veterinary infrastructure in place to ensure the health of our livestock populations. That's number one. Number two, when cervids are to be harvested, the meat is inspected at a facility that's licensed by Alberta Agriculture or designated as a federally registered facility. The provincial facilities must also have a food premises permit from the local regional health authority, hence the involvement of Alberta Health that I indicated when the hon. Leader of the Opposition asked the question.

The other thing is that once the carcass has been broken down, it is put in a cooler before packaging and before it's marketed. This meat is stored while the tissue is being tested. Once the test is clear, the meat is then released. I think that indeed, Mr. Speaker, people that understand the method, the rigour of the testing that we go through can feel very, very comfortable in eating that meat in a restaurant or in their homes.

MR. GOUDREAU: Mr. Speaker, the minister of agriculture was quoted in news stories today about the province being close to implementing mandatory testing of farm cervids. Can the minister advise us how the meetings are going with the cervid industry in this province?

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, I won't take too long with this because I did give some detail on that in an earlier answer. However, it is my understanding – and I'm pleased to hear this – that both parties, that being Alberta Agriculture and the industry themselves, have agreed in principle on mandatory testing. The bottom line, as I understand it, is that we'll have sort of a two-element mandatory surveillance system. This is certainly what we want to talk about with the industry. One would be a practical program that the industry can live with and, two, a higher level program that meets the requirement of CFIA for export purposes to other provinces and countries. That is one of the reasons that it's a bit complex in doing the mandatory program, because we do have to meet export standards if we want to move the meat into other provinces.

I should just say, Mr. Speaker, that last year we completed 2,158 tests. That included farmed and wild mule deer, white-tail deer, and elk, and they did all test negative. So we've done a rigorous testing, working with Sustainable Resource Development, Alberta Agriculture, and the industry, to ensure that we keep all of our population of these animals as disease free as possible.

There are other jurisdictions – Saskatchewan, Colorado, and South Dakota, to name a few – that have a mandatory program, so we have been able to look at their experience and use that in developing ours. As I indicated earlier, Mr. Speaker, this is important to a large number of producers in this province and I think to the citizens as well, and it's our intention to have this in place as quickly as possible, hopefully next week.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, thank you very much for your cooperation today. This is the first time this session that we've been able to work in all of the members who wanted to raise a question today. So that was approximately 40 questions and answers in the time frame allocated.

Hon. Member for Little Bow, you wanted to do an introduction, as did the hon Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills. I do believe that the groups departed in the last few minutes, but if you wanted to read the introductions in, please proceed.

head: Introduction of Guests

(reversion)

MR. McFARLAND: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate your cooperation.

Today we had the pleasure of having 31 students, three teachers, and five parent helpers come up Vauxhall elementary school, Mr. Speaker, for an annual pilgrimage to see the Legislature, take in the historic sites, and do a little bit of learning while they're at it today and tomorrow. As a former educator yourself I know you'll join me in wishing them a very happy and fruitful learning experience up here.

Thank you for letting me introduce them.

head: Members' Statements

Positron Emission Tomography Program

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'd like to rise to acknowledge the incredible work and the exciting research done by Dr. Sandy McEwan and his team of researchers based out of the Cross Cancer clinic. They work with a positron emission tomography program, and I'd like to explain what it is, because I think that everyone here in this Assembly would agree with me that it is an exciting project.

PET is an imaging technology that produces powerful images of the body's biological functions and shows abnormalities that cannot be detected by a CT or an MRI. Compounds like simple sugars are labeled with radioactive, signal-emitting tracers and are injected into the patient, and one hour after injection a series of scans are obtained which show the distribution of the tracer in the body. As well as showing the presence of cancer, PET images can probe the biological characteristics of cancer to help improve treatment.

My purpose in acknowledging the fine work done by Dr. McEwan and his team of researchers is to say that this leading-edge research and delivery of health care diagnoses is being done right here in the capital city of Alberta, in Edmonton, at the Cross Cancer clinic. I would like to commend Dr. McEwan and his team for the fine work and the exciting work that they are doing.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Edson Royal Canadian Legion Joe Wynne Branch 51

MR. STRANG: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to rise to recognize the Edson Royal Canadian Legion Joe Wynne Branch 51 as it celebrates its 75th anniversary.

The Canadian Legion came into being in June of 1926. The Edson Legion followed within the year and received its charter on May 18, 1927. In 1929 the Edson and district veterans held their first meeting in the Canadian Legion memorial hall. From day one community involvement has been very important. The memorial hall was used for community events from talent contests to Christmas concerts to weddings.

Our Legion was very busy during the time of World War II. Many men and women from this community volunteered for service. The Legion was a place of connection, comfort, security, and celebration. The original hall burnt down in 1952. A new home was raised from the ashes by dedicated volunteers.

As the community grew, so did the membership in the Legion. In 1961 the Canadian Legion became the Royal Canadian Legion. Our local branch erected a cenotaph with the eternal flame. This stands in memory of the Edson and area residents who did not return home from the two World Wars and many conflicts which have taken place and continue to take place around the world. In 1989 a new facility was opened and officially named the Royal Canadian Legion Joe Wynne Branch 51. Their current membership stands at over 12,000 members.

I would ask that all members join me in recognizing the members of the Royal Canadian Legion Joe Wynne Branch 51 on the occasion of the 75th anniversary. Thank you very much.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Charter of Rights and Freedoms

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The words of the Minister of Environment in this Assembly on Monday, April 29, regarding the Charter of Rights and Freedoms is an attempt to reduce public confidence in our judicial system and ultimately in our democracy, founded on the rule of law. Over three-quarters of Canadians support the Charter, and to call it a shameful document is not reasonable, nor is it fair minded.

Public confidence in and respect for the Charter is essential. Unfair and uninformed statements do little to sustain and enhance this public confidence. When there are attempts made to undermine the Charter, all members of this Assembly should take note. I would remind the hon. Minister of Environment of the words of the former Alberta Justice Minister Jon Havelock, who said in 1997, quote: should we really be surprised that the courts have utilized and interpreted the Charter when rendering judgments when in fact that was the anticipated result during the Charter debate? What the politicians have done through passage of the Charter is bring the courts into the mainstream of political decision-making. End of quote.

As unfair and uninformed as the minister's comments were regarding the Charter, this does not mean citizens cannot criticize. Supreme Court Justice La Forest, in delivering a 1996 decision between the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation and the New Brunswick Attorney General, said:

The freedom of individuals to discuss information about the institutions of government, their policies and practices, is crucial to any notion of democratic rule. The liberty to criticize and express dissenting views has long been thought to be a safeguard against state tyranny and corruption.

Democracy is always in a delicate balance. Last Monday night it tilted too far to the right.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would like to remind all hon. members of the fundamental freedoms of our Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Legislation Dealing with Same-sex Relationships

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Three years ago, on May 20, 1999, the Supreme Court handed down a landmark ruling in the case of M versus H. In that unanimous judgment Canada's highest court ruled that there is no justification for discrimination in family law against persons involved in same-sex relationships. The Supreme Court was clear. Laws that do not provide for equal rights and responsibilities for same-sex couples are unconstitutional, and they must be changed. Similar court judgments have also instructed governments to end discrimination in areas like employment benefits, pensions, and insurance.

Since M versus H the federal government and governments of every other province except P.E.I. have amended their laws to end discrimination against same-sex couples, but not Alberta. In January this year the Alberta government, facing a court challenge, quietly amended the management employees' pension plan to end discrimination but maintained discrimination in other public-sector pension plans. The government also faces an early June deadline to amend the Intestate Succession Act after twice asking the court for extensions.

This foot-dragging from the province is not only a losing legal strategy; it is also a losing political strategy. The continued discrimination in Alberta laws hurts tens of thousands of our fellow citizens. It hurts Albertans who are employed by this very Legislative Assembly, employees whose partners, for instance, are denied access to needed dental and prescription drug coverage.

These Albertans should not be forced to endure another summer of discrimination. I urge the government to make the necessary legislative amendments to all of our discriminatory laws during this sitting. I pledge the full co-operation of this New Democratic opposition to ensure speedy passage.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Yes. Mr. Speaker, today I have two tablings. The first is a letter tabled with permission addressed to the Hon. Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling a document proposing amendments to the provincial regulations giving the Minister of Municipal Affairs the power to force municipalities to divest municipally owned corporations such as EPCOR and Enmax.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Energy.

MR. SMITH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I wish to table the appropriate number of copies of two letters which have been sent by me to the president of EPCOR and also the president of Aquila, formerly known as Utilicorp Networks, asking them to clean up the metering data backlog issue.

Gaming

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: As per our Standing Orders the first hour is allocated between the hon. minister and members of the opposition, following which all other hon. members may participate.

The hon. Minister of Gaming.

MR. STEVENS: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure to stand this afternoon and make a few comments in review of the estimates of the Ministry of Gaming and the Alberta lottery fund.

Any time I talk about the Ministry of Gaming, I like to start with the employees of that ministry and the AGLC because they are very committed. They have an incredible depth of experience; many have 10, 15, 20, 25, and even 30 years' worth of experience within the areas in which they practise. We're pleased to have a number of those people with us this afternoon. We have Norm Peterson, who is one of the better values in government as Norm holds positions of Deputy Minister of Gaming and chairman and CEO of the Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission. Ann Hammond is here with us, the Assistant Deputy Minister of Gaming. Marilyn Carlyle-Helms, also with Gaming, is the director of communications. Ron Crosby, who is with the AGLC, is the executive director of finance and administration. Our newest addition to the executive team at the AGLC is John LaFlamme. John is the executive director of regulatory and in his just recent previous life was the chief of police in the city of Lethbridge. Jeff Wyton, also with the AGLC, is the acting executive director of gaming products and services. Kari-ann Kuperis is also with Gaming and is the public affairs officer. Then last but not least is my executive assistant, Jeremy Chorney.

Mr. Chairman, before beginning my overview, I'd like to take a moment to provide hon. members with some context. First, the Ministry of Gaming is made up of the Department of Gaming, the Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission, and the Alberta Gaming Research Council. For those of you not familiar with it, the Alberta Gaming Research Council is a broad-based advisory group that assists in directing gaming research activities undertaken through the Alberta Gaming Research Institute. I also have responsibility for the Racing Corporation Act.

Second, Gaming's estimates are presented on pages 205 to 210 of the 2002-2003 Government and Lottery Fund Estimates with supplementary information provided on pages 214 to 223. The 2002 to 2005 business plan is presented on pages 173 to 185 of the business plan volume of Budget 2002.

Third, the Alberta lottery fund estimates are presented on pages 212 to 213. The Alberta lottery fund is administered by the Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission pursuant to the Gaming and Liquor Act and therefore is quite properly included within the Ministry of Gaming budget material. However, all of the Alberta lottery fund revenues are allocated to ministries through the lottery fund appropriation. Therefore, other than those funds allocated to the Department of Gaming, my colleagues are responsible for the actual disbursement of lottery dollars provided to their ministry.

In the estimates Gaming is requesting funding of approximately $216 million for 2002-2003. Almost 55 percent of the requested funding, or some $117.7 million, is operational funding for the Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission. The AGLC licenses, regulates, and monitors all gaming and liquor activities in the province. The AGLC also manages and operates all electronic gaming activities in the province. The operational funding requested will allow the AGLC to generate over $1.7 billion in liquor and gaming revenue in 2002-2003 for the province and will help to ensure that the liquor and gaming industries in Alberta are conducted transparently and with the highest degree of integrity. In addition, thousands of nonprofit and charitable groups are provided with fund-raising opportunities, and the gaming and liquor industries in Alberta support employment and business opportunities throughout the province.

Another 44 percent of the requested funding, or just over $95 million, is for lottery-funded programs and initiatives administered by the Department of Gaming. Of this funding about 98.4 percent, or $93.6 million, flows from the lottery fund through Department of Gaming programs to various charitable, nonprofit, public, and community-based initiatives including the community facility enhancement program. The remaining 1.6 percent, $1.5 million, pays for the administration associated with these programs.

The final 1 percent of the funding requested, or just over $3 million, is split between funding for gaming research, $1.6 million, through the Alberta Gaming Research Institute and the Gaming Research Council and support services for the department, $1.5 million, including the minister's and deputy minister's offices, communications, policy and planning, and other support services acquired from shared-service arrangements.

Overall, Gaming's estimated gross expenses are about $12 million higher than the 2001-2002 forecast and almost the same as Gaming's 2001-2002 budget.

The Department of Gaming remains at 32 full-time equivalents, or FTEs, making it the smallest department in terms of employees.

3:00

Next I'd like to highlight a few items from the Alberta lottery fund estimates. This approach is a little different from previous years since we're also debating the lottery fund estimates. I'll speak briefly to them and rely on the assistance of my colleagues to respond to questions relating to specific use of lottery funds within their ministries.

As hon. members well know, the manner in which lottery revenues are distributed is a direct result of a recommendation from the Lotteries and Gaming Summit '98, in which Albertans let us know that they wanted clear, transparent information on how lottery dollars are spent. This year's Alberta lottery fund estimates quite clearly indicate that we have listened carefully to the priorities of Albertans and have directed lottery revenues towards those priorities. The Alberta lottery fund provides funding for thousands of charitable, nonprofit public and community-based initiatives. Over $80 million will be available to granting programs like the community facility enhancement program and the Wild Rose Foundation. Next year our budget plan calls for more than 20 million additional dollars to strengthen those grant programs and foundations. This increase would bring grant funding totals to over $100 million per year.

Mr. Chair, every Albertan can see for themselves on pages 212 and 213 of the estimates what sorts of other initiatives are being supported through the Alberta lottery fund, and I'd just like to highlight a few. Children's Services has been allocated $25 million, an increase of more than $24 million from last year. Health and Wellness has been allocated $107.5 million, an increase of more than $24 million from last year. Finally, Learning has been allocated $84.1 million, which is an increase of more than $33 million from last year.

I'd like to spend a few more moments giving you a sense of where our 2002-2005 business plan is heading. It is, of course, this plan which will guide how funds provided to the ministry are used. The vision of Alberta Gaming is:

A province that strives to balance choice and responsibility in its gaming and liquor industries, uses revenues derived from these activities for the benefit of Albertans, and provides opportunity for competition and enhanced service in its liquor and gaming industries.

The mission of Alberta Gaming helps to keep this vision clear; namely, "to ensure integrity and accountability in Alberta's gaming and liquor industries, and to achieve the maximum benefit for Albertans from gaming and liquor activities." We've committed to Albertans that gaming and liquor industries in this province will be well managed and that their activities will be conducted with integrity and transparency. The ministry's overall business plan and the AGLC's own business plan indicate how this vision will continue to be a reality in Alberta.

The Ministry of Gaming has identified three core businesses in the 2002-2005 business plan.

1. Develop provincial gaming and liquor legislation and policy and regulate the gaming and liquor industries in accordance with legislation and policy;
2. Manage the Alberta Lottery Fund and administer designated lottery-funded programs to support Alberta communities; and
3. Support leading-edge research on gaming and liquor issues in Alberta.

The first core business relates to the activities of the department and the AGLC. The goals, key strategies, and performance measures associated with this core business are outlined on page 176 of the business plan. One of our biggest challenges is embodied in goal 1.1; that is, Alberta Gaming is committed to developing policies that achieve "a balance between social responsibility and economic benefit to Albertans." Some of the strategies that we'll be using over the next three years to meet this challenge include monitoring the gaming and liquor industries to identify emerging issues and trends to allow for policy development addressing the social and economic implications of these issues or trends, monitoring gaming and liquor policies in other jurisdictions to establish benchmarks and best practices, and also ensuring that Albertans are aware of gaming and liquor policy and are consulted with respect to major policy initiatives.

To ensure that we're on track, we'll continue to ask Albertans if they are satisfied with the conduct of the liquor and gaming industries in the province. We're doing an excellent job in this area, with a recent survey showing that about 80 percent of Albertans are satisfied with the conduct of liquor activities in the province. We're above target, as well, regarding gaming activities, with 69 percent of Albertans satisfied with the conduct of legal gaming in this province.

The second core business relates to the government's commitment to use lottery funds for the benefit of Albertans and direct it to charitable, nonprofit, public and community-based initiatives. The goals, key strategies, and performance measurements associated with this core business are outlined on page 177 of the business plan. Our strategies associated with this core business include providing community facility enhancement program matching grants to improve Alberta's public-use facilities, ensuring accountability for revenues distributed to the horse racing industry, ensuring that Albertans are informed of the initiatives supported by the Alberta lottery fund, and reviewing the disbursement of lottery fund proceeds to ensure that all funds are being allocated and expended according to policy and intended use. We will again look to Albertans to measure our performance in this area of our business plan and monitor their awareness and satisfaction with how gaming revenues are used.

The third core business reflects our priority of being a key partner in leading-edge gaming and liquor research in Alberta. Strategies to support this core business include the following: collaborating with the Alberta Gaming Research Institute to identify priority research needs, supporting research into and informing Albertans of the social and economic aspects of gaming, and working with the Alberta Alcohol and Drug Abuse Commission, or AADAC, and the gaming and liquor industries to ensure that consumers of alcohol and gaming products are aware of prevention and treatment programs for problem gambling and alcohol abuse. Performance measures for this core business include satisfaction of our stakeholders and awareness of prevention and treatment programs.

In addition to the ministry business plan, a separate business plan is prepared for and approved by the board of the AGLC to guide the commission's operations. That business plan is also included as part of this afternoon's review. The AGLC is guided by the ministry's overall vision, mission, and goals but has identified its own core businesses, which include licensing and regulating liquor activities, licensing and regulating charitable gaming activities, and conducting and managing provincial gaming activities, which are video lottery terminals, slot machines, and lottery ticket sales. The AGLC also has linked goals, key strategies, and performance measures with these core businesses, and this information is presented on pages 181 to 185 of the business plan.

Gaming and liquor are substantial industries in our province, and Albertans demand and deserve nothing less than the most effective and responsible management of these products and activities. As you've just heard, our business plans contain a number of key strategies that reflect our commitment to provide effective policies and guidelines that maintain a balance between choice and responsibility in Alberta's gaming and liquor activities. The business plans also reflect our commitment to maintaining the highest levels of integrity, transparency, and responsibility with respect to our managing gaming and liquor activities.

That concludes my opening comments. I look forward to your comments and questions. Thank you very much.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to be able to be debating the last of the five ministries for which I'm critic, and that is the Ministry of Gaming. The minister did outline the core businesses of the department and very handily gave the reference page numbers so that people could follow along in their own books at home. I thank him very much for that.

This government pins a lot of hopes on and has a lot of expectations from the lottery fund now. It's a significant revenue generator for the province and, I think, is a keystone in the government's plan on how to move forward. So this is a very important debate to be having this afternoon.

As I started out, I looked in the booklet called Budget 2002, Fiscal Plan. In it, in fact, we do have a whole section that's dedicated to gaming. One of the first things that comes to my eye is at the bottom of the first paragraph. It says that "new and expanded casinos will increase government gaming revenue." Now, I've maintained for some time that contrary to the government saying that it's out to control gaming, I think it's out to expand gaming, and there in fact it is in black and white. I think that specifically what they're talking about here is First Nations gaming policy.

It's also noted that this casino expansion and redevelopment requires increased spending by the Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission, primarily for the purchase and upgrading of slot machines and other casino equipment. The Commission's operating spending is expected to grow from $87 million [last year] to $189 million, more than double, by the year 2004-2005, which is the third year of the three-year business plan that's being presented here. My first question comes out of that. Is it the expectation of the department, then, that they will be continuing every year to buy increased numbers of gaming equipment, and where do they expect all of this gaming equipment to be going? That is a substantial increase in investment, as I said, more than doubling.

When I look at the detail bar that's given at the bottom of page 26, it lists the three-year plans in a number of different areas: the AGLC expense; the CFEP program; racing industry renewal; community lottery board programs, which of course were cut; and other. I'm wondering what the ministry is including under other. If we could get some pretty specific detail about what's under that. As I just sort of looked at numbers here, we've got a 2 and a half million dollar increase in the CFEP program, but then we totally lost the community lottery boards. Then we've got this extra $40 million at the bottom. It was $27 million the previous year, so that's increased by $13 million. You start to add all of these numbers up and think: okay; I think I'm beginning to understand why the community lottery boards had to go. If you divide up their money and allot it into the other places that are getting the increases, it seems like it was more of an internal transfer just to free up money to do what the department wanted to do. So I'll look for some comment on that.

You see, you've got an increase in here. As I said, you're going from $87 million to $118 million for the AGLC expense. You're adding in 2 and a half million for CFEP, which is much needed. The program is oversubscribed; it could certainly use more money. But there has already been a lot of community complaint about the increase in the racing industry renewal initiative, going from $16 million to $33 million, and then you have this increase of "Other" going from $27 million to $40 million. If you start adding up those increases, you've more than accounted for the cut in the community lottery boards.

Now, when I look at the rest of this plan, the First Nations gaming is a keystone in what the government is looking forward to doing here. Very interesting. Again, this is all on page 26. They're expecting that nearly 60% of government's revenue from slot machines in First Nations casinos will be returned to First Nations through the First Nations Development Fund. The Community Development ministry expects to pay grants to the Fund of $2 million in 2002-03, rising to $24 million in the following two years. 75% of the Fund will be available to support initiatives by First Nations hosting casinos and the other 25% will be available to other First Nations.

So one of the questions that I was asked to bring forward as part of this debate is that I take it from this – and I'm looking for confirmation – that nonnative organizations will be specifically excluded from this fund, that they will not be able to apply for it. Let me just drag an example out of my head. I take it that Big Sisters & Big Brothers, let's say, wouldn't be allowed to apply to this fund. Would they be allowed to apply for the fund if they were running a program for aboriginal/First Nations children? So if I could get some confirmation on that, but I think the answer is no.

The other half of that, the balance of the question, is: if non First Nations organizations are not allowed to have access to any of this money that's listed in this fund, will the First Nations groups and aboriginal groups still be able to have access to other lottery-funded agencies and foundations that these other groups also go to as well? The government seems to be very adamant that there's to be no double-dipping from many other organizations, but I'm just checking to make sure that that rule is being carried forward here and that there is a fairness factor that's in play.

Now, we were talking quite a bit about the racing renewal initiative in the debates on Bill 16, which is setting up the Horse Racing Alberta organization, so I won't be commenting that much on that today.

At the end of this page 26 it says:

In 2003-04, funding for the Community Facility Enhancement Program will increase by $14 million. There will also be a $9 million increase for five Community Development foundations to expand support for the arts, historical resources, sports, recreation, parks, wildlife, and other initiatives.

What exactly is the ministry expecting to be done with this additional money? Is this finally the big payback time? Although it's not a very big payback. Is this the long-awaited increase to these various lottery foundations, most of which essentially for the most part have not had an increase since the end of the late '80s? Even then, when we're talking about a $9 million increase to three foundations, it's not a heck of a lot of money that's going in here. It wouldn't even be keeping up with inflation. So what's being anticipated here? What's the purpose of this? If it was really to catch us all up, then that's not enough money. How is the government going to call this, or what are they going to call it in a press release? Is it inflation or what? What's being anticipated with the increase of the $14 million into the CFEP program?

Now, that program is very successful. It's oversubscribed. I actually asked a question in this Assembly before our spring break based on a number of groups that were told in the fall that that was it. There was no money left in the pot for CFEP. They'd spent it all, and groups would have to wait and see if in fact the program was renewed come this budget cycle. It was renewed, so I'm assuming – and please correct me if I'm wrong – that it's now been renewed for another three-year cycle. Indeed, it is showing up in here as existing three years from now. At that point, if there's an expectation, it would have $39 million to disperse instead of the current $25 million. So if I can get the minister on record with that, please.

Those are just some questions that occurred to me as I looked at this Gaming plan.

Now, as the minister said, the department has had no changes in its FTEs. There were 32 last year and 32 this year. That's interesting given the expansion in spending that is being shown elsewhere. So we've got the AGLC expense rising from $87 million to $118 million plus the additional expenditures in the department, but we're staying at the same number of staff. Aside from what I know is incredibly efficient and dedicated staff, there's a lot more money going through here and no increase proportionally in the staff. Does the minister want to comment on that at all?

The last thing out of this fiscal plan book that comes up is the responses to the Auditor General's observations. Gaming, of course, has been of special attention to the Auditor General in the last couple of years. We are dealing with an extraordinary amount of money here that is funneling through one narrow agency or one narrow channel, and the actuality and the perception that this money is being collected appropriately, monitored, evaluated, and then spent in a transparent way is very important. So comments from the Auditor General are to be taken seriously.

Now, two numbered recommendations were made by the Auditor General. Number 10, "Compensation to gaming operators." The Auditor General recommends that "the Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission determine whether compensation rates paid to VLT and casino facility operators represent an appropriate commercial return for services provided." I'm reading from page 130 of the fiscal plan. The government's response to this was:

Accepted. The [AGLC], working with the casino operators, has begun a review of the compensation rates and the establishment of a process to provide ongoing review of these rates. A similar review will be carried out with the VLT operators. The reviews are expected to be completed in spring 2002.

So if I could please have confirmation of this and some details around the review. Has it been completed? Could we see public documentation of what was decided upon or any changes that are being made from these reviews?

I believe – and the minister can confirm this – that part of the changes that were being brought forward in Bill 14 in this session are answering some of the concerns being brought up here, or rather the ministry is making changes in response to the concerns expressed by the Auditor General. I'll allow the minister time to speak about that or in fact to give the answer in writing, and either is perfectly acceptable.

The second recommendation was on electronic racing terminals. The Auditor General recommended that AGLC "improve its management of electronic racing terminal contracts." I notice in this fiscal plan that it doesn't list the rest of it. The Auditor General was pretty hot under the collar about that one, if I remember. The government's response was:

Accepted in principle. A transition plan, providing operators an opportunity to adapt their business plans to the new requirements, will result in termination of the existing agreements or acquisition of the machines by the Commission by December 31, 2003. Compensation rates will be amended at the time of acquisition of the machines by the Commission to reflect the actual cost of doing business.

Now, I have asked the minister this question several times before, and I have not been satisfied with the answer, so I'll try one more time. Given that the contract that the ministry held with each of these operators has in it very clearly that the contracts are open to review and adjustment quarterly, why has the minister refused to make these adjustments? He's now had three opportunities since this was first brought to light given that the Auditor General's report comes out in September, and it did in September 2001. Thus, the minister knew in September 2001 that this was a problem. He's had three opportunities since then on a quarterly basis to go in and say: "That's enough. I can review this. I can adjust these rates right now on this quarterly date." Three chances the minister has had, and he has refused to do it. More than that, he said: "No, no. I'm going to let the contract run out until December 31 of 2003."

So the Auditor General has already said that these people are getting far more money than they were ever entitled to, yet the minister insists that he's going to keep giving them far more money than they're entitled to for another, at this point, year and a half. I mean: wow, how do I get in on a deal like that? I get the better end of the deal, and gosh, he's going to keep giving me the better end of the deal for another year and a half.

Now, it can be argued: "Oh, these aren't taxpayer dollars. Don't worry about it. Don't sweat it. It's not taxpayer dollars." Well, that may be true. It's lottery or gaming dollars, but the proceeds from these lottery or gaming dollars do flow through into the lottery fund and do flow back out again into two pages' worth of projects that the government pays for out of this fund. To have money not flowing into that lottery fund is money not flowing back out to other projects that the government has deemed important for Albertans. I would deem that forgone revenue. It's not going into the lottery fund, and it's not coming back out, going into projects for Albertans. So I question again: why has the minister refused to stop this process, to adjust the rate instead of continuing to give these operators a bonanza, a windfall, which I think over the period of time of the contract amounts to something like $21 million?

MR. BONNER: That's a pretty good deal.

MS BLAKEMAN: Yeah, it's a great deal. That's what I meant. How do I get in on one of these?

So those are the questions coming out of the Auditor General's observations.

Moving on now to look at program 3, lottery funded programs, in the 2002-2003 Government and Lottery Fund Estimates. That's on page 209. Under this program is listed the lottery-funded programs that would be deemed to be under the Ministry of Gaming for which the Minister of Gaming is responsible. That includes programs like the community facility enhancement program, agricultural grants to Edmonton Northlands and Calgary Exhibition and Stampede, other grants to fairs and exhibitions, the racing renewal industry I spoke of earlier, the Edmonton Oilers ticket lottery and the Calgary Flames ticket lottery, bingo associations, the community lottery boards, which are now defunct, and other initiatives. I'd like to ask a couple of questions on different areas in this.

Now, with the community facility enhancement program there's been an increase of $2.5 million. Much needed, as I said. The program was oversubscribed, yes. But with the community lottery boards being cut, we've had the Premier saying and I believe the minister responding to questions from me in the Assembly that they were going to look to assist some or all of the groups that were receiving community lottery board grants. They would somehow look to fund these same applications through CFEP. I understand that the government is a whiz with numbers, but I am really trying to figure out how the minister anticipates disseminating $50 million worth of grants from 2.5 million additional dollars put into CFEP. The next thing that I hear about is: "Well, not only CFEP but Wild Rose."

Well, my questions are: if the applicants that had been receiving money through the community lottery boards do not hit the criteria under either CFEP, which is facilities – let's face it; if you're not going to renovate something or build something, that program is of very little use to you – or Wild Rose, which specifically excludes your applying for a grant if you can get a grant anywhere else and is specific to assistance with volunteer projects. So for many, many of the groups that were applying to the lottery boards, they were applying to the lottery boards because they didn't hit the criteria for these other foundations.

So how is the government, the minister and his colleagues, anticipating dealing with these organizations that are now falling through the cracks, which is many of them? Is the minister going to change the criteria for the community facility enhancement program? I've already sent an organization through there. They were given a "Hmm, we'll check on that and get back to you," and two days later a nice little pat on the head, "Sorry, you don't fit." Well, they didn't fit before. That's why they didn't apply to them before. They're not going to get assistance through there, so how is this project supposed to get assistance? They're not going to qualify under volunteer assistance. That's not what this particular project is about.

So what is the minister planning on doing? Is he going to change the criteria completely for all of the lottery-based foundations or the lottery-based foundations that are under his control? It's been made clear by the Treasurer that the lottery boards would not be reinstated. [Ms Blakeman's speaking time expired] Is that my time? All right. I will continue after I've heard the minister respond, and if he's not going to respond, then one of my colleagues will speak.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: Hon. minister, do you wish to respond?

MR. STEVENS: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. I'm happy to provide some response. The Member for Edmonton-Centre made some early comments with respect to new and expanded gaming. I would remind the Assembly that there was a moratorium with respect to gaming in the province starting in December of 1999. For a period of two years or so the AGLC conducted work with respect to various gaming issues and produced a report last fall, and government gave a response to that report, all of which can be found on the AGLC web site, which set out the general approach with respect to new gaming in the province. It's pursuant to that general policy together with some specific policy that has been added as a result of additional consultation with stakeholders in the industry since that time that we have a process with respect to the expansion of gaming, and I think it is fair to say that the expansion of gaming is a potential in the area of casinos. There are very clear rules with respect to that. There is the potential for the expansion of traditional gaming in that area of casinos, and there's also the potential for expansion of First Nations casinos, once again all in accordance with the rules that are set out on the web site.

3:30

In any event, whether you're talking about traditional casinos or whether you're talking about First Nation casinos, one of the essential elements with respect to a potential expansion is that there is going to be consideration of community support, whether it be, in the case of a traditional casino, in the municipality where the casino is proposed or, in the case of a First Nation casino, on the reserve where that casino is proposed. Failure to have support from the community will probably be a significant factor that the AGLC board will consider in determining whether or not such an application will be successful in proceeding.

Another consideration of course is also going to be the viability of any such proposal; in other words, whether or not the market in which the proposal comes forward makes any sense from a profitability perspective. There are other considerations, but those are two of the principal ones.

Regardless of how you look at it, the expansion of casinos in this province is going to be driven by the market. There are going to be third parties who put forward proposals, and the proposals will be considered by the AGLC and ultimately the AGLC board. If proposals come forward, there's a possibility of expansion. If good proposals do not come forward, then there will not be. What in fact will happen over time will be dependent on those particular considerations. Having said that, this particular business plan does contemplate that there will be expansion. We do not know with any precision what that expansion will be, but if there is expansion of casinos, there will be a need for additional slot machines. So that has been built into the mix.

There is also the potential of expansion of electronic gaming with respect to bingo, and that is referred to specifically in the material that we are considering this afternoon. Bingos have asked for a greater opportunity to earn revenue, and part of that has been a consideration of the introduction of electronic gaming, specifically handheld bingo and electronic keno. So the AGLC, as we speak, is working in consultation with the bingo industry determining some of the final detail with respect to that. At this point in time we are anticipating that there will be an expansion in that area some time over the course of the next year, but probably there will be no indication of actual expansion until later this year.

With respect to VLTs in 1995 we put a moratorium on expansion there. There was a maximum, or a cap if you will, of 6,000. That cap has remained since that point in time and was reaffirmed in 2001 by this government in responding to the licensing policy review. So there will not be an expansion in that area.

However, with respect to electronic equipment I think it is fair to say that there is always a need to review the electronic equipment to ensure that it is current. Regardless of the state of any particular machine, it is important that the machine be something that provides entertainment. So there is a cost associated with generally upgrading existing machines, whether they be VLTs or whether they be slot machines.

Additionally, machines wear out, and in the case of VLTs we have a very old system both from a software and from a mechanical point of view. So the plan has been for some time and will continue to be going forward to introduce a new software program and new machines. I imagine that slot machines will also be replaced when appropriate simply because they wear out at some point in time. So in answer to the member's question, there is that kind of renewal of the inventory that is built into the overall budget.

There was some question with respect to First Nation gaming and the First Nation development fund and who would be entitled to that. In January of 2001 we announced the First Nation gaming policy, and as part of the First Nation gaming policy we indicated that there would be a fund that would be built based on 40 percent of the revenue from the slots in the First Nation casinos going into this fund. The policy at that time indicated that the purpose of the fund was to provide an opportunity for First Nations to use those funds for economic and social and cultural improvement on the reserves, not to use it for the development and operation of the casino operation. In other words, there was to be a separation of those.

It has been determined that the Community Development ministry is going to be responsible for that particular fund, so the money that comes from First Nation slot machines, at least a portion of it, the 40 percent that is referred to, will ultimately make its way into that fund managed by Community Development. As we speak, the specific terms of the contract relative to that fund are the subject of negotiations between Community Development and the First Nations. The express detail is not available as we speak.

In general, I can tell you that the idea is that First Nations will have access to the fund for the purposes indicated. It is intended that the host First Nation receive three-quarters of that revenue with one-quarter of that revenue being available to nonhost First Nations so that all of the Alberta First Nations will benefit in some measure from that fund.

The Member for Edmonton-Centre asked some questions with respect to additional funding for our foundations, including the community facility enhancement program, a year out, the '03-04 year. It is anticipated that there will be additional funding in the order of I think about $14 million for CFEP. It is intended at this point in time that that would expand the existing program and perhaps add a component relative to larger projects, because, as the hon. member knows, we have a limit of $125,000 with respect to applications under that program. They have to be matching. The nature of our society is such that people have very good projects that could use a larger influx of funds through this program. So while we haven't got the terms of that worked out, we at this point in time are thinking in terms of perhaps developing something that will allow for more than $125,000 to go into a larger project. That is something that is yet to be developed, but that is the theme and part of that additional $14 million would be allocated to that type of project as part of the CFEP type of program.

With respect to the money going to Community Development, I believe that's about $9 million, and I would let the Minister of Community Development comment on what his plans may be for that. I, however, can confirm that as part of this particular year there has been a renewal of the CFEP program for a three-year period, so it is anticipated that it will continue for three years. This year it is $25 million, and it's currently anticipated that next year it will increase as I've indicated.

There was a question with respect to the Auditor General and that department's comments regarding reasonably commercial compensation rates for casino operators and VLT operators with respect to electronic machines on their premises. The statement which the hon. member read from the material is accurate. It remains accurate. It is a work in progress as we speak. The purpose of the exercise from my perspective would include establishing a basis for the compensation that is to be paid to those operators.

My memory is that the Auditor General also thought it would be advisable to take a look at whether the amount paid to the charities was also reasonable, and I can't recall whether that's part and parcel of the review or not. But I have this memory that the Auditor General did in fact say: while you're at it, why don't you take a look at whether or not the 15 percent that charities receive is also reasonable? I do anticipate information from that some time in the weeks ahead, but I don't have anything at this point in time.

With respect to the electronic racing terminals, Edmonton-Centre and I have had this discussion during question period, and I've had the discussion with other members during Public Accounts this year, and there's nothing new on this particular issue. There's a history to it. The history simply is that these particular electronic machines were introduced to the province under a special arrangement because certain casino operators back in the mid-90s said that they wanted to bring them in, and an arrangement was made that they would be brought in where the capital of the operators would be used rather than the capital of the AGLC to acquire the machines. So that arrangement was in place. The Auditor General made comments saying that it was an inappropriate arrangement. We listened to him on that particular point. But it's also fair to recognize that the operators had built this component into their business plans, and it was appropriate to give them some opportunity of advance notice in order to have this matter unwound.

So the option that has been provided to them essentially is that the AGLC is prepared to acquire the machines at fair market value and enter into an arrangement, if they wish to have the machine remain on the premises, based on what is commercially reasonable, which at this point in time would be the 15 percent that we operate on with respect to all of our electronic machines, or at the end of December 2003 have the relationship that currently stands expire. Presumably at that point in time, if the machine is not acquired by the AGLC, then the operator can sell it in some other market.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre asked some questions with respect to what we're doing in reviewing the options arising out of the discontinuance of the community lottery board program. The Premier has indicated what we are doing. I've indicated what we are doing. What we are doing is taking a look at what we might be able to do to assist those applicants who are falling between the cracks; in other words, those applicants who received funding from the community lottery boards over the four years of its life that otherwise do not have access to funds under one of the other programs. We are in the process of identifying what types of applications those would be, what types of amounts those applications would have and things of that nature and taking a look at existing foundations within Gaming, which would be the community facility enhancement program, and also taking a look at those foundations under Community Development. That is where we are at this point in time.

I can tell the hon. member that we know that about 50 percent of the applicants would qualify under CFEP. We know that 50 percent of the amount and 50 percent of the number that were funded by the community lottery boards could qualify under CFEP. The hon. member is quite right that that doesn't address the whole issue, because the issue also includes: well, what are you doing for funding? It's one thing to say to people that they qualify, but if it's the same amount and there are more applicants currently under CFEP than can get funded, you simply add to the list.

But that is also part of the review and a part of what ultimately we will have to take a look at, and that is what we do to address the people who don't have access at this point in time to some foundation for what they otherwise would have been able to apply for under the community lottery board program.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to be able to start on part two of my comments on the Ministry of Gaming. I'd like to pick up on a couple of things from the remarks made by the minister. I guess the first actually is directed to the Minister of Community Development. This would give his staff an opportunity to read these remarks in Hansard and to give me a written response, which I'm very interested in.

I'm going back again to the question on the concept behind the First Nations fund, the question that I had asked earlier and that I'll now redirect to the Minister of Community Development, since he is now going to be responsible for the administration and, one takes it, for the criteria for this fund. Will other groups have access to this First Nations fund or to the 25 percent of it that isn't particularly earmarked for the sponsoring band where the casino is situated? Would groups that are not First Nations groups but are running a project specific to aboriginal purposes have access to this First Nations fund? In the concept behind the setup of this fund that they're currently working on, are those two things included in that concept or excluded from that concept? I'd like to know that specifically, please. Secondly, if other groups are specifically excluded from accessing this First Nations fund, is the same now going to be true for First Nations groups that are trying to access other funds like the Wild Rose or CFEP or any other lottery-based foundation? So if I can get the Minister of Community Development to answer that, I'd appreciate it.

A couple of things here. We have a situation in Edmonton where three organizations were approved for substantial grants under the Edmonton Community Lottery Board. These three groups were approached in the fall and told: the government has informed us that we are being cut back in midstep here, and we're asking you if you'd be willing to wait for your money until next spring. All three groups – that is, the Kenilworth recreational centre, the Citadel Theatre, and the Edmonton Police Service – agreed, as good community citizens, to wait until the spring for their money. They of course had been assured that they had been successful in their grant application, and of course most of them in fact went on with their work. They received a written notice in December that in fact the cheque would be coming in April.

Well, Mr. Minister, I'm speaking to you on the 2nd of May. There have been no cheques received by these groups. There doesn't seem to be any money forthcoming. The Edmonton Community Lottery Board is in the position of having to disband now and have been told to do so by the government. The structure is not allowed to be left in place. Exactly where are these groups supposed to get the money that was promised to them? I do put this as a responsibility on the shoulders of the minister. These community lottery boards were creatures of this department and were established by this department. They were established by this government. They are funded by this government. I don't think that because of the fact that this was an Edmonton one in particular, blame should now be placed on those volunteers and people told: tough luck. There are projects here that have to go ahead. They were worthy projects. They were recognized as that, and they were told that they would be getting funds. Where are they getting those funds from, and when can they expect the cheque? There are three very specific groups there that I am aware of in Edmonton, and there may well be other circumstances that exist. I mentioned the Kenilworth arena, sir. There may well be other circumstances in Calgary; I'm not sure. I think this is serious, and it requires the attention of the minister. I am looking for a very specific answer to how those groups are going to be accommodated.

When we were talking about recommendation 9 from the Auditor General, the minister was indicating that the arrangement with the operators for a reasonable return is in progress. Fine. I accept that, but it does say in the fiscal plan here that something will be available in spring. So my question to the minister is: when is spring? This is the 2nd of May. Would spring be by the 15th of May, by the 1st of June, by the 30th of June? I think I can fairly safely say that by the time we're into August, it would be deemed to be summer. So could I get a better indication from the minister of exactly when spring is and when we therefore can be expecting this information?

Now, the minister has also talked about . . . [interjections] My goodness, we have an awful lot of yakking going on here from the Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs. I'm sure he'll get up and debate it when he gets his chance.

When we're talking about the community lottery boards, the minister has indicated that he and the Premier are working on criteria or working on some way that these groups can be accommodated. Now, when could we be expecting an answer there? These groups, particularly the Calgary ones, had already put their grant applications in on the 15th of March, four days before the community lottery boards were canceled, so those were for projects that they were hoping to have go ahead within the next few months. For some of them they expected to have things happening now. So how long do these groups need to change their plans and wait for when they might have access to some other form of money?

Those are the questions coming specifically out of what the minister just gave to me. Back to what the minister was saying about the additional amount of money under the AGLC expense line. Is the minister telling me or can the minister confirm that all of this extra money is going to be going toward replacement or purchase of new gaming machines, the VLTs or slot machines? This gets significant money. I mean, the increase from last year to this year is $31 million. Then we add another $48 million above and beyond for next year. Finally, in the third year we add on another $23 million, for a total of $102 million extra every year by the time we get to that final year. That's a lot of slot machines. Can the minister tell me how many machines they're expecting to add – he must have a plan – and how much the maintenance cost is for each machine or how much the replacement cost is for each machine? If they're putting specific numbers in the budget, I take it that the minister has a very specific idea of how much these machines are going to cost, and I would like that shared with Albertans, please.

Now I'm back to page 209 of the lottery funded programs in the estimates book. I'm looking at references 3.0.3 and 3.0.4: Edmonton Northlands for $7,100,000 and Calgary Exhibition and Stampede for $7,100,000. Exactly what is it that these groups do for that $7,100,000? This amount of money has been unchanged since I started looking at these budgets. I'm told that this is a grant for agricultural societies, and living in Edmonton, I'd be very curious to know exactly what it is that Edmonton Northlands does so that it is deemed an agricultural society.

If I think back to when I was a child, we could go to the exhibition grounds and usually tucked away in some corner there would be a best cake and best pie and the best preserves and the best pickled carrots and that sort thing. Is that what they're getting $7,100,000 for? I know that there used to be 4-H participation, with the kids bringing forward the pig and the cow that they brought up and all of that. Is that what these two organizations are getting $7,100,000 for? In this day and age, I'd be very interested to see how much activity these two organizations are indeed putting forward for that kind of money. Being that they're both in large metropolitan centres, what are they doing for this money?

A question has arisen as I look at these numbers, and it has generated a little bit of confusion here. I'm sure the minister can settle this quickly. I'm wondering if accounting has been changed a little bit in the way things are shown in the Gaming budget, because it used to be that essentially the costs, the expenses, were netted out of the proceeds of Gaming. It appears now as though they're not. We seem to be getting the outgoing expense line, but we're not exactly getting the incoming line.

I'll give you three examples of that. They are votes 3.0.7, 3.0.8, and one more, 3.0.9, which are listed as a gross expense for the Edmonton Oilers ticket lottery, the Calgary Flames ticket lottery – again, $2,700,000 for each of them – and bingo associations, $3,193,000. Now, I know that the $3,193,000 is to pay for the electronic gaming instruments that will be put into bingo associations that ask for them and that the Ministry of Gaming owns those machines, as they own all of the slots. So isn't this in fact a capital investment? It's not showing up as a capital investment; it's showing up as a program investment. How does the ministry account for that? Generally these had been netted out before, and that doesn't seem to be happening now.

There is confusion as well around the two ticket lotteries. What is that expense exactly? Is that the money that's supposed to be going back to these two agencies, the $2.7 million? So they're each to expect $2.7 million in this fiscal year? It's not clear. Or is this somehow the expense? The other thing I'm not seeing: I believe there was an administration fee that the government was taking off for administering these lotteries, and I don't see that administration fee showing up in revenue lines anywhere. So is there an administration fee that's attached to this? If so, why isn't it showing up, or where is it showing up? Perhaps that could be outlined for me.

In the many exchanges between the minister and I around the community lottery boards, the minister has repeatedly said that charities in Alberta get $300 million. I would like the minister to detail that $300 million, please, because I don't know how he's coming up with this. I'll just say here that I have a suspicion that he may be saying: well, for organizations that take home money from a casino or a bingo in a given year, that amount of money is X. If you add that to the amount of money that's going out in programs directly to nonprofits and charities – I'm not talking about money that's being granted to the Department of Learning or Children's Services or hospitals. Those are government programs. We'll get to that one. I'm talking about programs like Wild Rose, Alberta Foundation for the Arts, Alberta Sport, Recreation, Parks and Wildlife, CFEP, the fairs and festivals line, the legacy line, the hosting for the Winter Games. I'll even throw the research institute and the Gaming Research Council into that. When I add those up, I don't come up with $300 million.

I'm really interested in what the $300 million is, because I would argue that it would not be fair if the minister is doing it to include the take-home money from theingos and casinos, one, because that doesn't benefit all charities and nonprofits in Alberta in a given year. The minister well knows that the waiting list in Edmonton is two years. Plus with paperwork and actually waiting for your given casino in a quarter, you could well be two and a quarter years out before you get another casino. So this is not an annual amount of money that is somehow granted to groups. First of all, they have to be able to qualify for it, and those that are receiving funding through some of the lottery programs in fact may not qualify to be able to hold a casino. I know there have been particular difficulties around amateur sports groups being able to have a casino.

The second thing. At one point the minister said: well, I mean, if they need more money, they can just have more casinos and bingos; they can raise the extra money lost from the community lottery boards that way. Well, really, Minister. I don't think getting in line for a casino two and a quarter years down the road is really a reasonable replacement for money that could have been available to them within a few weeks of their applications, particularly in Calgary, where they applied on March 15 and then the lottery boards were cut four days later.

And with bingos you don't just get more bingos. You're either in a bingo association or you're not in a bingo association. If you're in a bingo association, you are already contracting for your X number of bingos per month, and you don't get more bingos just because the minister decided to cut the community lottery boards. Perhaps the minister didn't understand that that's the way in fact that works, but I felt that at the time it was rather an off-the-cuff and thoughtless remark to make to groups that were in quite a bit of crisis given the bad news that they just had. So maybe he'd like to tell me exactly what that $300 million is that he keeps talking about.

Okay. Now, I'd like to look next on pages 212 and 213, which are the many different payments out of the lottery fund. One of the things that I would like to note here again is the number of projects that are being funded out of this that I think are core government services. Well, here's where we get into some fancy tap dancing. I don't usually consider members opposite as being particularly artistic, but, boy, did I ever watch the Minister of Learning tap dance the other day in response to my question about whether the funding he was receiving for things out of the Learning department was considered core services. Well, what did I think was a core service?

I said: whatever the definition is being used currently by the Minister of Gaming. So I looked it up. Core: central or most important part or to the depths of one's being. The remainder of definitions around "core" all have to do with ore samples, and I didn't think they were as applicable. But central or most important part and to the depths of one's being.

I was at the gaming summit. People were very clear there that they did not feel that core government services should be paid for out of the lottery fund. They were very clear about that. The minister, I admit, did not have the benefit of being at that particular event and to be going room to room and listening to what people were saying in a very impassioned way, but I would argue that this government has agreed to pay for core government services out of this lottery fund, and that is flatly against what people said at the summit. I always find it interesting what the government chooses to listen to out of any given summit, but in this case we're talking about the gaming summit, what they choose to listen to and what they choose to absolutely forget and never look at again. I think what's happening here is wrong, and I'm not the only person that feels that way.

So those are the comments I have. I know my colleagues are going to talk about other areas under these lottery funds.

Now, I'd like to look at and I have some questions under the ministry business plan summaries. I realize I only have two minutes left, so I will try and return later and get in a few more questions on this. But starting under Guiding Principles, the minister has adopted these. First is: "The integrity of gaming will be ensured." I'm just wondering exactly how the minister plans on ensuring that the integrity of gaming will be ensured. If I could get some detail on that.

"Gaming policies will reflect a commitment to social responsibility." Again, how? I haven't seen the kind of detail coming from the minister that would easily explain the answers to those questions.

The third one: "The financial return to eligible groups from charitable gaming is to be maximized," et cetera, et cetera. I'm wondering how the increase to the Racing Commission fits in with this particular goal. If I could get some explanation from the minister on that, please.

Could I see detail of the process around "the collection and use of gaming revenue" being open and accountable? I don't find it to be particularly, but if we could get some details, particularly on the collection of the money.

"Gaming activities will meet standards of quality to protect the integrity of gaming activities, provide gaming entertainment value to consumers and help to keep gaming dollars in Alberta." I'm interested in how far the ministry is willing to go to keep gaming dollars in Alberta. What's their long-range view here? I'm remembering my experiences at the bingo association, where it seemed each week or each month we were looking at some other enticement to bring people into our particular bingo hall as compared to someone else's, and it did reach the point of absurdity pretty quickly and also started to cost us money, and we had to rethink everything. How far is the minister interested in going on that?

That's my time, so I will continue with this at a later date, or I'll submit it in writing to the minister.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: Hon. minister, do you want to respond?

MR. STEVENS: Yes, actually, I would like to make a few comments at this time.

AN HON. MEMBER: Take your time; take your time.

MR. STEVENS: I intend to answer the questions I respond to in a thorough fashion.

The Member for Edmonton-Centre had some comment with respect to the community lottery board program, and she talked in terms of some groups here in Edmonton, and during some comments towards the end she referred to groups being in crisis. I think it's important to understand some of the background with respect to this program. First of all, it was broad in scope in terms of who could apply. It was broad in scope in terms of the nature of the application by way of area: education or social services or a community or a library and so on and so forth. I believe there were 10 such categories. But this funding, like funding to any of our foundations, we are told by the community lottery boards, was always less than the number of people who wanted to apply, so I have assumed that regardless of which of the 88 community lottery boards you're talking about, they would have had more applications than they could have dealt with, which is something important to understand. But we did not receive particulars of what that magnitude would be because it was not required.

The thing, however, is that this particular program was a project-funding program. It was not an ongoing forever program. You could put forward an application for a project, and that project may or may not be funded, and a project could be funded over two years but not more. So people are not in a position to say that community lottery board funding was essential to their well-being. They could say it was essential to a particular program that would be funded for one or two years, but they could not say it was there from year to year to year, because the program was not set up for that. So I think it's important for people who talk about the community lottery program to understand that. It was project funding, and that was essentially the essence of that.

There was an opportunity for operational funding in case of emergency on a onetime basis but not from year to year to year. So anybody who is saying that they lost something as a result of not being able to apply for a community lottery board program would be correct if they said: we lost the opportunity to get funding for a particular project of short duration. But that is something that does not appear clear from the descriptions that the members opposite usually have with respect to this, and I think it's important for people who would want to understand more about this particular issue to realize that that is so and that was very much part of the program from the beginning.

Now, with respect to the community lottery board issue that the member referred to as it relates to Edmonton, there was a letter received both from the mayor of Edmonton and also from the Edmonton Community Lottery Board dealing with this issue. If I recall correctly, the community lottery board letter dealt with the three projects that likely the hon. member is referring to. The letter from the mayor I believe dealt with one of those projects, and it may well be Kenilworth if my memory serves me correctly. The fact is that the community lottery board program was a year-to-year program, and the funding relative to the community lottery board was determined on an annual basis. And the fact is that the community lottery boards entered into a contract with the Ministry of Gaming every year that was for that one year. So this was very much a one-year program. It was not a multiple-year program, and that's an important fact for people to understand.

The particular three projects that the hon. member refers to may well have been approved by the Edmonton Community Lottery Board, but any representations that they might have made to those particular groups were made by that particular board, were not shared with this ministry, were not shared with the AGLC. In other words, we have no knowledge of any representation they may have made as saying, "You will get funded," other than what is now said postfactum.

What was made clear to groups when it was necessary to revisit government's funding and this ministry's funding last fall was that we had to reduce the amount of funding that was going into both CFEP and into the community lottery board programs and that they had options in dealing with it. They had options of either deciding that there would be certain applications that would not be funded or they could prorate it, but that was a decision that they would have to make on their own.

The second thing that was made clear was that pending the budget process, we would look at addressing the issue relative to equity among the various boards last fall, this particular budget year. Because some boards had spent all of their money and others hadn't, it wasn't possible to roll back those that had spent it all. We said we would do that, but it was going to be subject to budget approval.

Well, the fact is that the budget approval process relative to this particular year has led to the discontinuance of the community lottery board program, and therefore there is no money. It's as simple as that. So the answer I gave to the mayor and the answer that has been given to the community lottery boards, so that we're absolutely express and specific on this point, which is something that the hon. member wanted, was that the community lottery board program has been discontinued. This ministry has no money, and there will not be any funding of those particular projects under the community lottery board program.

Now, you also asked the question: how may they receive funding? Well, they may receive funding in those three particular situations through the community facility enhancement program, because as I understand it, they may well be the type of facility that can apply. At this point in time that is the program that I can refer the hon. member to. I believe that in response to the mayor, that may have in fact been pointed out relative to the one project that he referred to in his correspondence to me.

The hon. member wanted me to advise when spring is going to be here. Chronologically I can advise you that spring is here; physiologically I can advise you that it is not. So the short of it is that spring is yet to come in terms of this particular issue, but I expect that we will have something in the weeks ahead, which was what I originally indicated.

AN HON. MEMBER: Spring hopes eternal.

MR. STEVENS: Indeed, that is always true.

There were some questions relative to Edmonton Northlands. The member is correct that Edmonton Northlands is in fact an agricultural society, and it receives funds. The funds support various programs including the major exhibitions, fairs, trade shows, and various other community and regional events. I would have thought that as an Edmonton representative the hon. member would be familiar with what goes on at Edmonton Northlands. I believe that the $7 million is provided to the various programs on an unconditional basis annually, and $100,000 is provided conditionally to support agricultural events held during the year. My understanding is that that has been the way this number has been allocated in the past, and I can advise you that it's the same for the Calgary Exhibition and Stampede. So the answer for Northlands is the same for the Calgary Exhibition and Stampede.

There were some questions with respect to the Edmonton Oilers ticket lottery and the Calgary Flames ticket lottery, at page 209. The member will recall that there was a Breakaway To Win ticket, that started in January of this year. This particular line item contemplates not only that particular ticket but another one later this year, probably starting sometime in the fall, which I assume would be sometime in September or October. So it's two events per year, a number that is reflected in this. What we said at the outset of this was that the profit that would be available, if all went as well as could be expected under each of these two tickets, would be that each team, when everything was paid for, would receive a profit of something in the order of $750,000 per team per ticket. So that would be, for two tickets, $1.5 million per team. The way it works is that the sale of the tickets produces $10 million for two ticket runs. The cash and prizes and commissions that are paid to the some 2,000 retailers throughout the province who sell lottery tickets would in total be about $4.6 million.

Now, that is paid by the ministry. That leaves net proceeds of $5.4 million. If you divide that by two, you get $2.7 million. The deal that was struck with the NHL teams was that they would be responsible for advertising, promotion, printing, things that would be typically the responsibility within the ministry and the AGLC. The fact is that we did not pay those amounts; they did. That would be $2.4 million, more or less, leaving $3 million for two tickets. That, once again, works out to $750,000 per team per event times two.

Some reference was made to the bingo associations also. This $3.139 million figure is not capital. What it contemplates is the revenue from the electronic games in question being flowed through to the bingo associations. The way it is contemplated working is that the bingo associations would earn 15 percent as operator relative to the operation of these particular machines and that the net – and when I say net, there would probably be some adjustment associated with the cost of the machines – essentially that profit that was left over after the 15 percent, would be flowed through the Alberta lottery fund back to the bingo associations. So they would approximate a 100 percent recovery on the machines that are in their facilities subject to, as I said, some recognition of the cost of the machines being put in there. It's very much a flow-through of revenue, a figure that is in this particular line, at 3.0.9.

The hon. member made reference to keeping gaming dollars in Alberta and to what the Gaming ministry and the AGLC are doing in that regard. I think it's fair to say that the ministry and the AGLC look very much to the private sector to take the initiatives in this area, but what has happened over time and what we hope to have happen in the future as a result of the policies that we develop is that there is an ever increasing value to the entertainment of the facilities that fall into this particular category. For those people who have been following it, the facilities have continued to upgrade, and new facilities typically have entertainment areas, lounge areas where people can go and have an adult beverage or a beverage of any kind and watch entertainment free of charge. That is the nature of this business. It seems to me that, anecdotally in any event, I hear of people who decide to stay in Edmonton rather than flying to Vegas if they come from, say, Yellowknife. They come to Edmonton, stay in town. If they happen to like going to the casinos, they do that, but there's a mix of entertainment that they find of sufficient quality that they stay here. Really what it amounts to is working with the industry to try and improve standards, because improved standards are a good thing, so that the folks who in fact either play bingo or go to the casinos feel that there's more value here, and that essentially is the general thrust of it.

I will get the hon. member a breakdown based on the material in this document as to what is meant by the $300 million I refer to. Once again, we have a charitable model in this province which is unique in Canada, and that allows charities and not-for-profit groups to receive benefits of gaming in essentially two ways. One is through access to licences for the operation of casinos, bingos, and raffles. In this past year that will probably be something in the amount of $190 million. We anticipate that that will be something in the order of $190 million this year, perhaps more, but that would be the number that I would use because I think we can use history to support that type of number. On top of that, you have the foundations that we are talking about, and I'll dig those numbers out for you. We also have the agricultural societies that get funding. We have another category, other initiatives, which has another $10 million in it. So when you add all of these things up, it will come in at $300 million or thereabouts. These are not-for-profit groups, charitable groups who are receiving these funds in this province annually. That is a fact, and we will provide the hon. member with detail on that.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to rise to speak generally to the estimates of the department of gambling and also to put a few questions to the minister of gambling.

Mr. Chairman, I think that one of the things that is most evident from the estimates this year is that gambling is increasingly becoming the revenue of choice of this provincial government. They can add VLTs and they can increase their revenue, and they don't get a backlash, which they would get if they raised taxes or, for example, premiums on health care and so on.

I appreciate the minister's comments, but I have some specific concerns that I wanted to raise. One of them is the question of the demographics of the gambler in this province. I know that there has been some research done in the past with respect to this question, and I would like to know if the government does ongoing research on the demographics of the people who are providing so much of the province's revenue. I refer to a report – this is getting a bit dated now, Mr. Chairman; it's from the winter of 1996 – entitled Gambling in Canada: A Report by the National Council of Welfare. It indicates a number of things. One is that governments right across the country are addicted to gambling as a source of revenue. There's an entire section entitled An Alluring Source of Government Revenue. I think it's obvious that the problem is not limited to Alberta. There are a number of characteristics of problem gamblers including multiple addictions. Many are addicted to a number of things besides gambling, including alcohol and drugs and so on.

There's also a question of the percentage of problem gamblers and the overlap that occurs with various psychiatric disorders. There are significant impacts in the workplace, there are impacts on the family, and there is a relationship between crime and problem gambling. So the question really is: who is the problem gambler, and to what degree is a certain limited number of gamblers providing a very high percentage of the revenue from gambling going into government coffers? Does the government really know? Do they do ongoing research in this area? Can the minister tell us how a particular group of problem gamblers is defined, how big that is, and how much revenue they provide to the government?

Another question I have is: what's the balance that exists? One of the goals under core business 1 of this department is that "Alberta gaming and liquor policy achieves a balance between social responsibility and economic benefit to Albertans.” Well, the economic benefit to Albertans is clear, and it’s also clear that there is a certain small percentage of the money that does go into programs to help people, but what is that balance? Does the minister feel that it’s a good balance, a fair balance, an equitable balance? Maybe he could elaborate a little bit on how the department strives to achieve that balance.

Now, I want to talk about a number of specific issues. The question of the VLT machines and the plebiscites that were held throughout the province a number of years ago is still something that comes up every now and again when I discuss this with constituents. Certainly when I was involved with municipal government, it was during this period when all the municipalities were told by the government that if they would hold these plebiscites and if the people voted to take them out, they would be gone the next day, as the Premier said. They obviously didn’t vote to take them out in the larger cities, but in some smaller places they did, and I think, if I’m not mistaken, that Rocky Mountain House was one of them. I guess the question is: what happened to the commitment to remove the machines? [interjection] Was it in Fort McMurray then? Can the minister assure the House that in all places where the citizens voted to take the VLTs out, it was done, and if not, why not? Is the offer still open? If a municipality wanted to hold another plebiscite today, would the government still be willing to respect that commitment?

I’ve talked a number of times in the House about the subsidy for horse racing, and I’m not going to repeat myself very much today other than to say once again that I think the government has made gambling revenue a key public financial resource that it depends upon for all sorts of essential programs, core government programs. That includes part of the debt reduction strategy of the province, and there’s nothing dearer to the hearts of many Tory members than that. To talk about gambling revenues being provided to the horse racing industry as not being a subsidy is just something that I cannot accept, and I don’t think reasonable people will accept that line of argument either.

The withdrawal of community programs funded through gambling revenue is another issue of concern. Now, the minister has stated quite correctly today on the withdrawal of these programs that they have not been long-term programs. They have been short-term programs, and the program itself was in place for a limited period of time. Nevertheless, Mr. Chairman, it begs the point that they were very, very valuable programs that the community found really empowered them to actively participate in building a solid community. They were extremely well-received programs. I think, quite frankly, that the government has shot itself in the foot by eliminating these programs, but that’s I guess really for them to decide. I do know that these were really beneficial and well received by the people of Alberta, and the money was put to very good use. Quite frankly, I think that putting some of this money in the hands of the people of the province through these kinds of programs is certainly better than just putting it in the hands of various big government departments. So I think that’s something that’s really unfortunate.

Mr. Chairman, the minister talked earlier and the Premier as well I believe has talked about organizations that were funded through the lottery program and about some of the projects and programs falling through the cracks and that there would be things put in place to save those projects and programs from falling through the cracks. So I’d like to know: how does the minister define a program or a project that was previously funded as falling through the cracks? What’s the definition of one that falls through the cracks? What specifically has the government put in place in order to protect those things?

Mr. Chairman, I have a few more comments. There have been some changes that caused some concern, and I’ve raised this before.

I wasn’t satisfied with the minister’s comments before about the role that the AGLC plays with respect to problem premises in some of the communities. Now, these are often vulnerable communities, older and poorer communities, and there are some select premises in hotels, older hotels mainly, where there are chronic problems with overserving. There are police being called for fights, for drugs and a number of things, and they have a very deleterious impact on the surrounding community. In fact, you can trace things. For example, one beat cop told me once about one of these hotels and that there was a big rash of break and enters to vehicles – you know, stereos stolen, windows smashed, that sort of thing – in one of the communities. The beat cop told me that basically the problem is that these are being done by kids, 13- and 14-year-old kids who aren’t supervised in their homes because their parents are down at this local bar, so the kids are left home with no direction, no supervision. The result is that you get an indirect result of the problem.

We have tried in the community to deal with the inspectors from the former ALCB, now the AGLC, and found them to not be prepared to take tough action to clean up this kind of stuff. There’s no excuse for these kinds of premises to continue to operate in any of our cities, Mr. Chairman. They simply should be closed down until they clean up their act. That’s easily within the capability of the AGLC, but that’s not how they operate. You can take it from me.

There are reductions in payments from the lottery fund this time, and I’m concerned about that. The First Nations development fund has been reduced from $7.8 million to $2 million, a reduction of $5.8 million. Aboriginal health strategies, under Health and Wellness, is reduced from $3 million to $2.2 million, and Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development does not receive any direct funding at all from lottery funds for its programs.

Under Children’s Services – and this goes back to some of the questions I had about the balance, the correct balance between social responsibility and economic benefit to Albertans. Children’s Services has had $1 million eliminated for the fetal alcohol initiative. Now, I’ve heard members in this House talk about eliminating and reducing fetal alcohol syndrome and taking tough action against parents who may be involved in drinking when they’re pregnant, but it’s belied by the action of eliminating the funding for that program. For the permanency planning for children in care, $200,000 has been cut. There is, however, $25 million in new funding for family and community support services.

So I think we can see as we go through the estimates, Mr. Chairman, an increasing dependence on gambling revenue for core government services, and that is a concern. That is not a sound way socially, fiscally, economically, or any way to build the financial base of a government. It’s not sound. I think common sense can tell you that, regardless of your political persuasion. It’s very tempting, it’s very seductive, but I believe that we need to have the political will to say no.

With those comments I will take my seat and hope the minister can answer the specific ones. I don’t expect him to answer the political comments that I made, but he’s welcome to do that as well. Thank you.

MR. STEVENS: I’ll make a few comments at this time. The Member for Edmonton-Highlands talked about research and what we’re doing there. I think it’s fair to say that in Alberta one of the initiatives that we are proud of and one that we think is going to bear significant fruit over time is the Alberta Gaming Research Institute. They’ve been in existence now for three years essentially, and the reality with respect to this type of research is that you have to find people and then interest people in getting involved in this kind of research. That is slowly happening, and in discussions with the people who are a part of that, I'm happy that while they've been in existence for a relatively short period of time, they are gaining a reputation as being a significant gaming issue research body throughout Canada and North America, and they're going to conferences throughout North America and presenting papers and so on and so forth.

One of the benefits of that particular institute has been a prevalence study, and you asked a question with respect to that, Edmonton-Highlands. It was in the last couple of months that a new prevalence study came out. In fact, there was dissatisfaction shown within the academic area that deals with this type of thing for the previous measure, which was the South Oaks Gambling Screen, or SOGS. That's what had been used in '93 and again in '97 to do prevalence studies here in Alberta. As a result of, among other things, the work of the Alberta Gaming Research Institute, a new index has been established called the Canadian Problem Gambling Index, and a prevalence study has been done here in Alberta and in Saskatchewan. I believe, in talking to the folks that are behind that, that they're essentially planning on within the year having prevalence studies across Canada, so you're going to be able to have a snapshot of not only Alberta but also Canada or almost all areas of Canada as it relates to problem gambling in the year 2001 or 2002. You're going to have some comparative numbers. You're going to have the ability to have a common test applied in a similar fashion because the folks that designed this, as I understand it, have been retained in each of those provinces to do that prevalence study. So we should have a good snapshot, if you will, going forward to where we are today and what we do and what impact the things we do have on the future.

You made reference to the work of AADAC and the funding that they get in this area. AADAC, as you know, is under the Ministry of Health and Wellness, so in some sense I'm hesitant to speak about it. Nonetheless, it's something that is funded as a result of money flowing out of the Alberta lottery fund. They have as their mandate dealing with alcohol and gambling addiction, and we're interested in that.

I'm told that the money that is allocated for gambling addiction issues in this province at this time is what is required given the nature of our society's response to this issue. By that, I mean that if you go back 25 or 30 years with respect to alcohol and alcohol addiction, you might have a similar situation to society's approach to a gambling addiction today. All I'm doing in saying that is I'm repeating what I've been told. I'm told that the money that they received today is essentially sufficient for the needs that they have today in our society.

So we are spending money with respect to the issue of addiction through AADAC, and we are spending money with respect to various gaming issues, many of which are social and psychological in nature, but the list of research that in fact is done is essentially a combination of the work of the council in generating ideas for the institute, who take those and then go out and try and find somebody within Alberta to be interested to actually do the projects. There are limitations in what you can do given people who are interested in gaming research within the province or even within Canada, from what I understand.

You asked a question with respect to the current state of the VLT litigation. Just by way of background, what happened was we had plebiscites in 1998, and the AGLC went out as a result of plebiscites that said, "Please remove those VLTs from our community," and was met with a lawsuit which essentially said that our legislation was defective. We brought in an amendment to our legislation which we felt addressed the defect. The day following the proclamation of that, we were in court. A Court of Queen's Bench judge here in Edmonton granted an interim injunction at that point in time pending a determination of, I'll call it, the constitutionality of our legislation. So that lawsuit has been outstanding. With that lawsuit being outstanding, the interim injunction has also been outstanding.

I'm happy to say that later this month, this spring, we, I understand, have a pretrial conference involving counsel which should see a trial later this year, say in November, of the litigation associated with the Alberta action, but there is also an intervening situation, namely a case in Manitoba, which I'm advised is very similar on many points to the issues that we are dealing with here in the province. That particular matter has been accepted by the Supreme Court of Canada as a case to be heard, so it will in fact be proceeding there. Our lawyers have gained intervenor status, so they will be in Ottawa in October of this year arguing on that point. It's hoped that the Supreme Court will be able to provide a ruling which is favourable to our position but, in any event, a ruling that will cover off many of the issues that are involved in the litigation.

We don't know when the Supreme Court would rule. They could rule from the bench, or they could rule a month or two months or several months later. Nonetheless, the highest court in our country will be providing a ruling that will be extremely helpful in resolving this matter once and for all. On the basis of what I know, we can expect that the end is in sight. There are actually court dates that should see this matter come to an end.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I may spring to my step here this afternoon and direct some questions to the hon. Minister of Gaming. It certainly is an interesting department to look over, and it certainly is growing, as the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands discussed earlier. It is becoming more and more a centre of revenue generation for this government.

My first question this afternoon for the hon. minister certainly revolves around the community facility enhancement program. For the last couple of years we've seen funding for that remain stable at $25 million, and everyone in the Assembly knows . . .

MS BLAKEMAN: Twenty-two and a half. It just went up to $25 million.

MR. MacDONALD: Yes. The comparable for the 2001-02 budget was $25 million, and this year it's $25 million, and then the comparable 2001-02 forecast was $22.5 million. Regardless, we see where the community lottery board grants were eliminated or terminated. My first question to the hon. minister in regard to this would be: was there a discussion at the standing policy committee prior to the release of this budget to eliminate the community lottery board grants? What was the consensus of the standing policy committee in regard to this matter?

Now, I have had calls and certainly expressions of concern regarding the entire cancellation of the community lottery board grants, and certainly the Kenilworth arena is a victim, the city of Edmonton, the neighbourhood is a victim of this unexpected termination of the grants. When the hon. minister encourages the city to look to CFEP as an alternate source of revenue, is the minister at this time considering lifting the cap of $125,000 on CFEP grants so that organizations like the city of Edmonton and their $300,000 deficit in regard to the Kenilworth arena rehabilitation, certainly the Citadel Theatre – the Edmonton police force I believe was going to get some exercise equipment here. There are many organizations, and there has not been an expansion of CFEP to compensate for the number of applications that the minister is encouraging various groups to proceed with to CFEP. So we have a smaller amount of money with more organizations applying for grants. How is this going to work? Will that cap be lifted, specifically the $125,000? Is that the minister's answer? It's fine to send His Worship Mayor Bill Smith a letter telling him that, well, we can go to CFEP and see what happens there, but is the department going to lift that cap of $125,000?

Now, the hon. minister would certainly be too young to remember Uncle Ben's Breweries in Red Deer. This was a small independent brewery that survived for many years in this province. There is a goal here – and I have a question in relation to this goal – goal 1.2 on page 182 of the Gaming business plans: "Ensure the manufacture, importation, distribution, sale and consumption of liquor products are conducted according to legislation and policy." My specific question is in regard to the manufacture.

It's been brought to my attention that this may not be a fair and level playing field that has developed here with the bar that has been set in the number of – I believe, Mr. Chairman, it's hectolitres. It may even be 280,000. I'm not sure about this, but the number of litres of product that one manufactures determines what the price of the product is at the liquor store. This obviously is not going to benefit certainly the larger manufacturers of beer, Labatt's or Molson, but does the minister consider this a subsidy to brewers such as Big Rock breweries or McNally's ales? I would encourage members of this Assembly if they haven't tried one to do so. Certainly I would like the minister's view of this. We all know that a level playing field is very important to all businesses, and if there's going to be some sort of price for one group that another group is not going to be able to enjoy, well, I don't think that's fair. Is this the minister's answer to encouraging microbreweries, or what exactly is the policy behind these changes regarding the beer?

I'm told that the price of Labatt's and Molson's products went up with this budget, and with Big Rock, as a specific example, the price has gone down slightly. Now, this hon. member, Mr. Chairman, could stand corrected on that. I certainly haven't purchased any of those products lately, before or after the budget, but this has been brought to my attention by a constituent who works in the industry and is concerned about the direction that this government is perceived to be going in in that it is unfair and not a level playing field for all the brewers. If I could get answers to those questions. If we run out of time, the last day of spring would be appropriate for this member. Written correspondence would certainly be suitable.

Now, the lottery fund summary of payments on page 212, hosting the Arctic Winter Games. There has been a bit of money spent in the past. There's going to be $500,000 spent this year. Is there going to be a significant amount of money spent above that $500,000 next year? When are we going to host the Arctic Winter Games? It totally escaped this member, and I've asked several others. Certainly I think we can be cold enough here in January to host the event. Where is this going to occur and when? I would be very anxious to know that, and what money are we going to put into this adventure in the future?

Now, I see also that in Community Development we have started some new initiatives, and if the minister could explain these to me. The volunteer services: we're going to spend $3.4 million there. We've canceled the community lottery boards, but why are we spending the money here on this issue of voluntary services? What's that about? Sport and recreation: we're going to spend $1.1 million there, Mr. Chairman. Also, arts development seems to be a new program. Is this going to be the equivalent of the Canada Council grants at the provincial level? Are we going to give this to artists or artists in residence at the Banff school or perhaps at the University of Calgary or the University of Alberta? What precisely is that money going to be used for?

Now, I go to the travels with Peppy section below this, Economic Development. We're going to spend a little bit over $14 million there. This Travel Alberta Secretariat, in-Alberta/regional marketing – international marketing for tourism: we're going to spend $8.4 million. What precisely are we going to do with this money in Economic Development? I certainly hope that this isn't going to turn into some sort of fund where there's going to be fun and no economic development. I certainly hope that does not occur. Tourism destination regions: $1.8 million. Now, I'm not against – don't get me wrong, Mr. Chairman – promoting and developing further the tourism industry in this province. I think that there will be a day come when that will be the number one industry in this province because of our natural geographic beauty. But this is a lot of money to be spending on this when, again, we've canceled the community lottery board. We just completely wiped that out and started this fund. I'll be watching this fund too in the next year or so.

Now, the rural initiatives for physicians: $17.3 million is going to be spent here under the Health and Wellness department. What are the details on these new programs? How many doctors are we planning on recruiting? Where are they going to be located? Are any of them going to be specialists? Is this money just specifically for physicians, or is it going to be used to recruit registered nurses to nursing stations in the north? Particularly in the aboriginal communities I understand that there's a real problem in attracting registered nurses to the nursing stations. Is this specifically for physicians, or could it be used to attract registered nurses to the First Nations communities that are located in remote parts of the province?

The Alberta Energy Research Institute under Innovation and Science is going to get roughly 3 and a half million dollars. This is again a new program. What precisely are we going to spend that amount of money on? Is this going to be to track energy deregulation? Are we finally going to come up with an exact cost here of what this right-wing folly has cost Albertans? Is this what this money is going to be used for? Is it going to be used to determine an export policy for the province, or is it going to be used to determine how we get out of this transmission bottleneck that we're in because of deregulation? Because of the uncertainty over deregulation in the last number of years no one knew whether or when they should build any additional transmission lines. So is this money going to be used to answer any of those outstanding policy questions? Certainly those questions seem to have stumped the government so far.

The Alberta Forestry Research Institute is also a new program, $1.7 million. What precisely is that going to be used for?

Then we're going to get $10 million in Innovation and Science for informatics circle of research excellence. If the hon. minister could explain that program and that sum of money, I would be again very grateful. That is a lot of money again.

Now the unconditional municipal grants under Municipal Affairs, $28 million. Unconditional means no strings attached, and I would have to ask the minister if it's possible for His Worship Mayor Smith to apply for some of this money to finish his arena in Kenilworth. Is that possible? If it's an unconditional municipal grant, what exactly are the criteria for accessing this money? Now, how does this work? Is it unconditional money for an overpass?

AN HON. MEMBER: For Anthony Henday.

MR. MacDONALD: For Anthony Henday. Okay. Well, that's good news, but if there's any money left over, let's finish the Kenilworth arena.

I, too, have a few comments and questions regarding the ticket lotteries for both the Edmonton Oilers and the Calgary Flames. Is there any anticipation that this will grow larger, that this will be successful beyond the wildest dreams of the people who are marketing this ticket lottery? If it will be above $2.7 million, is a portion of this money going to be set aside for minor hockey? I think that minor hockey players all over the province, including those that want to play at Kenilworth arena, should be given a portion of this ticket lottery if there's any above this set amount in here. There were many times that I was told by other members of this Assembly that originally gaming was going to be a $20 million to $40 million revenue source for this government. In a decade, it's gone to well in excess of $1.2 billion, Mr. Chairman. [interjection] Yes, $1.7, but net – where did I see it? Yes, total lottery payments to be voted: $1.2 billion.

Now, Mr. Chairman, there was this astronomical growth there, and I'm wondering: if there's growth with the Oilers ticket lottery and the Flames ticket lottery in excess of the $2.7 million, perhaps 50 percent of it could be shared with the minor hockey associations across this province. I would be very grateful for the minister's comments on that.

I believe that at this time, Mr. Chairman, that takes care of my questions. I had one more regarding the debt repayment with gaming revenues. At the same time that there's going to be a significant acceleration of debt repayment with gaming revenues, we see $33 million in gaming money going to build another form of gaming, and this is the horse racing. I would be of the opinion that it's the government here that has a real gambling problem. [interjection] Yes, but we need to talk, and I would encourage the hon. minister to study the fiscal stability fund, the idea that has been proposed for many years by members from this side of the Assembly.

Certainly there are cuts in other areas, and the community lottery boards in my view were significant. That was a compromise that was made after we had the referendum on the VLTs, and it was money to be shared and distributed locally. Why cut programs and have this race to pay off the debt? Certainly we have very good debt repayment schedules in the future. In fact, I believe the Toronto-Dominion Bank states that 4 percent of the gross domestic product of this province is used for debt relief, which is excellent. It's a number that other governments can only dream about. I'll grant that it was a significant achievement. This debt pay-down that's been going on here lately: what's behind this? Are we going to have a big party in 2005? The Solicitor General earlier this afternoon was talking about the feds having a party in Kananaskis, and the hon. minister didn't seem to want to have any part of that. What's going on here? Are we more concerned about the mortgage-burning party in 2005 than we are about having a good distribution of this revenue? This revenue can be – how do I say this, Mr. Chairman? Community groups – whether they're schools, whether they're hospitals, whether they're sporting groups, whatever community group it is – can count on the government's word. Whenever the government sends out a letter that says that the $300,000 cheque is in the mail, they can count on their word.

Thank you.

head: Introduction of Visitors

MR. MASKELL: Mr. Speaker, it's my great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Legislature Mr. Arthur Hiller, a gentleman that I consider a good friend, and he is one of the world's great movie directors. Arthur was born in Edmonton in 1923. Along with Leslie Nielsen, a classmate, he attended Alex Taylor, McCauley, and then graduated from Victoria school. He served for Canada in the Second World War and returned home to study law and psychology at the U of A, UBC, and the University of Toronto. In 1955 NBC invited Arthur to join the Hollywood directing team for the daily drama Matinee Theater. This led to a great deal of episodic television, including Gunsmoke and Alfred Hitchcock Presents. He's directed over 30 feature films. The Americanization of Emily in 1964, a film about the glorification of war, is the one he prizes the most. In addition to his distinguished directing career, he has served as president of the Academy of Motion Pictures, Arts and Sciences and as president of the Directors Guild of America, and he's still busy in the business.

On March 24 the Academy of Motion Pictures, Arts and Sciences presented Mr. Hiller with the Jean Hersholt humanitarian award during the Oscar ceremonies. He lost his sister Goldie this last year and is in Edmonton for the unveiling of her memorial, which was yesterday. He is being honoured in Toronto on May 28 on the Walk of Fame. While he's here in Edmonton, of course, he's honorary chair of the Victoria School Foundation for the Arts and has presented master classes. Accompanying Arthur is Lindsay Cheney, who was an EA in this Legislature and Alberta film commissioner. Would you both please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Legislature.

THE SPEAKER: I just have to say this. If Mr. Hiller is looking for raw, untested talent, there are 82 beneath him right today.

The hon. Minister of Environment.

DR. TAYLOR: Mr. Speaker, thank you for that word of testimony before I stood up.

Well, I'm very pleased, Mr. Speaker, to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly Mr. Batsukh, the ambassador of Mongolia. He is accompanied by Mr. Badarch, the first secretary and consul of Mongolia. I had the pleasure of meeting the ambassador in Ottawa some time ago at a private function, and I had the pleasure again of having lunch with him today. There are a lot of similarities in the development in their country with what we're doing in Alberta, particularly as it comes to the reclamation of land sites and the development of new industry in Mongolia. We have several companies working in Mongolia's capital city, Ulan Bator, and I actually have friends that live there, so it was with great pleasure that I enjoyed our lunch with them today. I urge them to rise and receive the warm welcome of this House.

Thank you.

head: Introduction of Guests

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure this afternoon to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly employees from Alberta Justice, criminal prosecutions division. These individuals are here on the public service orientation tour, which is being promoted and carried out by the Legislative Assembly Office and your good office. All of these individuals help to protect Albertans on a day-to-day basis and help to make our communities a safer place. I'd like them to rise as I introduce them, and I'd like the House, if they would, to give them the traditional warm welcome and thanks for the good work that they do. With us today are Ms Debora Collins, Mrs. Gina Lothian, Miss Toni Hryciuk, Mrs. Cindy Frewin, Mrs. Nell Lank, Ms Janet Hughes, Mrs. Karen Colwell, Mr. Peter Teasdale, and Mr. Neil Wiberg. I would ask the House to give them our thanks and a warm welcome.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

MR. VANDERBURG: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On your behalf I'd like to introduce to you and through you 23 grade 10 students from the Covenant Canadian Reformed school in Neerlandia, which is located in the Barrhead-Westlock constituency. They are accompanied by their teacher Henry Stel; Grace Van Dasselaar and Suzanne Aikema, the teacher's aides; and parent helpers Rev. Slomp, Miss Otten, and Mrs. Van Grootheest. Danke vell. I'd ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

MR. DUNFORD: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. We also have in the members' gallery today some representatives of the Ministry of Human Resources and Employment. Of course, they're here on the public service orientation tour, but again I want to publicly thank them for all of their efforts as we've moved forward with what has become now the people and workplace department. As I mention each of their names, I would ask them to rise, and then we'll welcome them at the end. We have Elaine Highet, Georgette Thomas, Erma Cardinal, Jolynn Lucas, Linda Olson, Tina DiCesare, Kerri Hill, Susan Rothery, and Susan Robey. Ladies and gentlemen, if you would join me in welcoming our guests to the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

MR. SNELGROVE: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two introductions today. The first one is a group of students from the Marwayne Jubilee school. Marwayne celebrated its 75th anniversary last year, and with this young group of students the next 75 years certainly look good too. They are accompanied today by their teacher Mr. Dave Schmitt and parent helpers Jeannine Kent, Lana Centazzo, Cam Zarowny, Emil Bystrom, Karen Nohnychuk, and Karen Lapointe. They're in the public gallery, and I'd ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, I'd also like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Mr. Colin Briggs. Mr. Briggs is a former Albertan who now lives in Vancouver. He is here today on a short visit not only to renew his roots in his home province but to see firsthand the benefits of prudent fiscal responsibility, which we all hope will soon be experienced in his current home, the province of British Columbia. He is accompanied today by Ms Kristiena Koppe. I would ask both Colin and Kristiena to stand and accept the warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly 21 grade 6 students from Keenoshayo elementary school in St. Albert. They are here for the School at the Legislature, the weeklong program, which is a great testimony to the interests of their teacher and the parent helpers. They are in the members' gallery, and they are accompanied by their teacher Mrs. Barb Hubbard and by assistants Mrs. Wendy Macrae, Mrs. Marina Proserpi-Porta, and Mrs. Allison Hermanns. I would ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two young women who are working in my office. The first, Crystal Willie, started volunteering for me in the fall doing research and has been working for me doing sessional support. She's off to work for Alberta Museums this summer.

The second woman is Kim Lew. Kim has a background in web design and technical writing, and she's joining the office for the constituency of Edmonton-Centre for the summer.

So I would ask them to please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today and introduce to you and through you a group of students from Faith Lutheran school in the constituency of Edmonton-Highlands. They've toured the Legislature Building and are now in the gallery to observe today's proceedings. They are accompanied by their teacher Brad Teske as well as Mrs. Debra Miller, Mr. Gary Gordichuk, Mrs. Cathy Pearson, Mr. Michael Ulmer, and Mr. Tony Oostenbrink. I would ask them to rise now and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development.

MR. CARDINAL: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly Kristen Stevens. Kristen will be working in my office throughout the summer. She is seated in the members' gallery, and I would like her to rise now and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

head: Oral Question Period

THE SPEAKER: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Electricity Deregulation

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Over the last few years Alberta has gone from the 24th lowest priced electricity jurisdiction in the 150-plus jurisdictions in North America to something above the average in that now. It depends on which month or hour we basically calculate our prices on. We've moved from a public utility with prices totally based on costs to a private monopoly with prices based on speculation, uncertainty, and add-on charges. My questions are to the Premier. Mr. Premier, is it not true that we used to have a system where no taxpayer subsidy was provided to the electricity market, where now we're constantly providing subsidies? We're basically dealing with add-ons, location credits, and subsidies through the Power Pool.

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, the hon. leader of the Liberal opposition asked a very interesting question, and the answer is yes. I can recall the days when the south heavily subsidized the north, and the government was heavily involved in making sure that southern consumers, where the hon. leader of the Liberal opposition comes from, were paying and complaining bitterly that they had to pay to subsidize northern development.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. But we weren't dealing with a private versus a public utility.

My question again to the Premier: is it not true that we still are transferring taxpayer dollars to the electricity industry? That previous system was a transfer of dollars inside the region under a public utility.

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, we were indeed dealing with private and public facilities. Edmonton Power, now known as EPCOR, was a city-owned facility, guarded and protected by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands in true socialist fashion. I remember Calgary Power. My gosh, when I was the mayor of the city of Calgary, even to bring up the notion that there should be some competition got the administration so riled up: "Oh, no way. This is our baby. We can get a guaranteed 10 percent rate of return. This is our cash cow." Now there is competition, and yes, we have private-sector companies operating and competing against those state-owned facilities, companies like Calgary Power and Alberta Power.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Premier talks about basically moving away from what was a public utility to what in effect is a private monopoly. Is it not true we're basically turning into a private-sector monopoly in our electricity with the combining of all of these different joint agreements that are undertaken and the deal with EPCOR and Enmax basically being the two marketers?

MR. KLEIN: Well, Mr. Speaker, the only difference I see is that first of all we have EPCOR, no longer a state-controlled, socialist organization. We have Enmax, still owned by the city of Calgary but a great debate going on in that city as to whether Enmax should be sold and made competitive in the overall electricity marketing scheme. Of course, we have Medicine Hat, which is a city-owned corporation but does a wonderful job of providing gas and generating its own electricity. Of course, we have TransAlta Utilities and we have ATCO utilities. So I think that there is a wonderful mix of power companies able to provide competition and to provide choice.

THE SPEAKER: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Can the Premier tell us how he's going to encourage competition when most of the new generating plants that are being talked about now are being joint ventured between existing generators?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I think that if the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition would really put his mind to this issue, you would find that these companies are doing the commonsense thing. They're trying to achieve economy of scale, and at the end, when they can bring on lower cost power, when the capital costs are lower, it stands to reason that the cost of electricity that will be generated by those plants will be lower priced.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Premier again: Mr. Premier, wasn't it this government's intention to effectively encourage competition, not joint ventures where they make joint decisions about how they price, how they provide supply, how they deal with the marketplace? What kind of competition is that?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, if it makes sense in the business world to merge and to joint venture and it is a good business decision, then it will be done. We find this throughout the world relative to competing businesses. We perhaps find it in the movie industry as well. I notice that in the credits before a motion picture comes on the screen, you see numerous companies involved in the production of a motion picture. Joint ventures and partnerships are nothing new. They're done to achieve cost efficiencies, which in turn are passed on to the customer.

DR. NICOL: Not when you deal with marginal cost pricing, Mr. Speaker.

To the Premier: will you commit to a series of public hearings across the province with Albertans who are flicking the power switch to get their input on their acceptance of electricity deregulation?

1:50

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, first of all, we are now in a deregulated environment. We have been since January of 2001.

Mr. Speaker, the hon. leader of the Liberal opposition talks about more public consultation. I'd remind the hon. leader that public consultation took place since 1995 on this whole issue of electricity deregulation, as to whether the policy should be changed. On the basis of that consultation, on the basis of the best advice given to us by financial analysts and others, we decided to go into a deregulated market. The public consultation has been done; it's been done in spades.

THE SPEAKER: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Holy Cross Hospital

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In January 1996 a major independent appraisal of the market value of parcels C, D, and E of the Holy Cross hospital in Calgary placed their potential sale value at up to $20.6 million. A letter from Calgary health region's CEO to Alberta Health in October '96 pegged the value of the land alone at $8.4 million. A report conducted the following year estimated the value of the land, assuming no use for the buildings, at 4 and a half million dollars to $9 million. My questions are to the Premier, who has some of this documentation now. Given that provincial policy on the sale of property owned by health authorities states that fair market value should be obtained and given that purchasers clearly valued the buildings as well as the land, can the Premier explain why the land and buildings sold for only $4.57 million?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, first of all, there was an independent evaluation by a group of citizens who made recommendation that this sale was reasonable and was viable. I can tell you that had that property sold and had it been the intention of the successful purchasers to simply tear it all down and build condominiums, then I would say that the retail value of that property would be in accordance with what the hon. member points out. The simple fact is that it was to retain use as a medical complex. To my knowledge there are, I think, well over a dozen different medical activities now taking place at that particular centre.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. TAFT: Thanks. It sounds like a subsidy to the medical business.

Given that various assessments placed the value at $8.4 million to over $20 million, why was the property listed at only $4.9 million?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I don't have the document in front of me, but I suspect that because the use of the land was restricted probably, and that was the value of the land relative to its restricted use.

Mr. Speaker, an interesting preamble to the question. The hon. member alluded to subsidies to medicine. I would remind the hon. member that this government, the people of this province spend over $6 billion a year on medicine. That is indeed a subsidy.

DR. TAFT: A subsidy to the medical business.

Given that a commercial real estate agent handled the pending sale of the Charles Camsell hospital in Edmonton, can the Premier give us any idea why there is no sign that such an agent was used in the sale of the Holy Cross?

MR. KLEIN: No, I can't, Mr. Speaker, but I'll have the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness respond. Maybe he can shed some light on this.

Again going back to the second preamble or the preamble to the hon. member's third question: a subsidy to the business of medicine or something to that effect, Mr. Speaker. Well, there are about 4,500 doctors operating in this province, and most of them operate on a fee-for-service basis. I don't know what the percentage is. I think it's about 87 percent that is a full subsidy by the people of this province to the operation of those doctors' clinics, which in effect are private businesses.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party.

Kosohkowew Child Wellness Society

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Earlier today the Minister of Children's Services announced that a co-management agreement had been struck to restore authority for child welfare to the Samson Cree First Nation. While I welcome this agreement, it begs the question of why the minister failed to act earlier to address problems with child protection on this First Nations community. The questions are to the minister. Why did the minister fail to prevent the tragic deaths of children from the Samson Cree First Nation by providing appropriate support to their child wellness society and instead engage in a knee-jerk reaction of attempting a takeover of the services after the fact?

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, if I understand the question, it asks why previously we were not engaged in active child welfare delivery. It comes back to the delegation for some First Nations to deliver child welfare on their own First Nation with federal funding. The part that we have been sorting out is the influence of provincial standards and of quality assurance. Now, while we're moving to the Alberta response model, which will see a lot of child welfare delivery at the front end – in other words, building community capacity instead of simply taking children into protection – we look forward to a partnership which this memorandum signed today provides, and that is partnering with Kasohkowew in child welfare delivery to make sure that we review the files, to make sure that we deliver as positive and safe and secure an environment for children as possible. So I see what we've done today and our discussions with Kasohkowew as positive things.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister agree that revoking the contract of the child wellness society of Samson Cree First Nation was not a constructive solution to the problems facing children on this First Nation, and if not, why not?

MS EVANS: Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member and my critic from Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition were both there today, and I tried to start my preamble in a very clear way by stating that there have been two options in delivering care on the reserves: one through the child and family services authorities or, secondly, where First Nations were able to do that and felt confident in their capacity to deliver and we felt confident as well, they were able to take delegated authority. So it didn't leave a lot of options in between.

Today what I think this Assembly can know is that we have defined a new option which we will try and work our best in all the delegated authorities, and that is an agreement that the province can come on-site, do a thorough review of the quality and standards, the files, and make sure that we can assure the Alberta people that we're delivering child welfare in a very positive way.

Further, Mr. Speaker, today I agreed with the Kasohkowew wellness society that we would work hard with them, in partnership with them, to address things which they believe have been serious funding issues, the manner in which they receive federal funds on reserve. In that capacity, I think it's been a win/win today because we're working together in that capacity as well, something that is a federal responsibility but in this case with provincial support, particularly where they require it.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In addition to getting the federal government to pony up more resources, what additional actions is the minister taking to make sure that the children on First Nations are guaranteed full protection so that tragic situations like this one don't occur again?

MS EVANS: Well, I thank the hon. member for his question. While we can never guarantee, one of the things that will happen this afternoon is that with a very respected member of the Hearthstone child and family services authority, as agreed to by Kasohkowew, we will be in there with a team that will start evaluating the administrative review files, the issues surrounding child care protection, the issues surrounding foster care and foster delivery services, and finally, Mr. Speaker, some of the issues that relate to practice issues that may have been a concern. We have had concerns, it's true, but today a team will go in there and be in support as well as evaluating provincial standards. I spoke afterwards with the chief, and the chief is very satisfied that this is a new framework for doing business with Kasohkowew which may yield very positive results.

Provincial Credit Rating

MR. MAGNUS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last Friday Moody's Investors Service changed the rating on Alberta's foreign currency debt. My question to the Minister of Finance: can the minister tell us what impact this will have on Alberta's reputation for fiscal management?

MRS. NELSON: Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is quite right in stating that Moody's has changed Alberta's credit rating. In fact, Moody's last week upgraded Alberta's foreign debt rating from a double A1 to a triple A rating. As many members of this House will know, Moody's is one of the most prestigious bond-rating services in the world. The triple A rating is the highest ranking awarded to borrowers. This did not happen overnight. This happened because of the strong reputation over the last 10 years that this government has built on strong fiscal management within this province.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MAGNUS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental to the same minister: could the minister tell the House why this international agency has chosen to upgrade Alberta's rating now?

MRS. NELSON: Well, Mr. Speaker, when an organization such as Moody's looks at credit ratings of countries and provinces, it looks at very key indicators of long-term stability and economic strength as well as the public-sector finances at the federal and provincial levels. More than a year ago Moody's upgraded Alberta's rating on the domestic debt to a triple A because of our fiscal leadership in Canada, and I might want to remind the members in this House and Albertans that Alberta is the only province – the only province – in all of Canada and the only government in Canada to have the triple crown on bond ratings and the only one to have both triple A ratings from this rating agency.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MAGNUS: Thank you, Mr. speaker. My final supplemental to the same minister: can the minister tell us what impact this rating change will have on Albertans?

MRS. NELSON: Well, Mr. Speaker, this is an extremely positive ranking and rating for Alberta. What this means is it sends a very strong vote of confidence, not only throughout Canada but internationally, as Alberta being the place to invest, the place to come, the place to set up businesses, the place to set up their family homes, because Alberta has the most stable environment that you can find in all of Canada right in our own backyard. So this is a very major plus for this province for not only economic development but for long-term stability. This is a very great plus for this province.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Electricity Billing

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's the government that set the rules for electricity billing practices in this province, not EPCOR and other electricity retailers. In fact, in 1999 the Alberta Department of Energy facilitated the formation of the settlement systems code to calculate electricity bills. This code describes a general accounting process that is applied to all energy entering and consumed in a particular area. Quite early in 2001 it became evident that the settlement systems code was not working as well as expected and that improvements were required. My first question is to the Premier. Why is the government blaming EPCOR and other retailers for the electricity billing problems that are going on in all areas of the province when it is this government that developed the faulty system that is causing so much of this frustration and grief that was expressed last week in question period by members from the Premier's own government?

Thank you.

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, it seems to me – and I don't recall completely the questions that were asked – if my memory serves me correctly, that those questions alluded to service charges attached to electricity bills. I understand that the hon. Minister of Energy has written to both EPCOR and UtiliCorp, I believe, to inquire about this, and indeed the hon. Minister of Government Services has this matter under review. It doesn't deal with electricity rates per se but service charges that are attached to those rates.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: given that in May of last year, a year ago, Alberta Energy facilitated the formation of the business issues group, called BIG, who contracted the consultant Cap Gemini Ernst and Young to develop a plan with recommendations that would include a plan to enable retailers in the Power Pool to bill more accurately, when will this plan be released to the consumers who are dealing with such large increases in their bills? When will this plan be made public?

Thank you.

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, since the hon. minister is not with us today, I'll take that question under advisement.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you. Again to the Premier, Mr. Speaker: given that the system settlement code is silent on the relationship between retailers and their customers – and one thing with electricity deregulation is that the customers have been left out and now they're paying the expensive bills – why is this allowed to happen? Why are customers being treated so unfairly with the system settlement code? Thank you.

MR. KLEIN: Well, Mr. Speaker, again I don't know that statement to be true, but when the hon. minister returns to this Legislature, I'll have him answer that question. In the meantime, I'll take it under advisement.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenarry.

Mazankowski Report

MR. McCLELLAND: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Friends of Medicare, backed by the Alberta Federation of Labour, is spearheading a misinformation campaign aimed at derailing the implementation of the Mazankowski report. My question to the minister of health: what is the government doing to ensure that this important work is not misrepresented by those who pretend to be the friends of medicare?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, we've done much. We've delivered over 10,000 copies of the Premier's Advisory Council on Health report to various stakeholders throughout the province. We've had 10,000 downloads on the Internet for the Alberta: Health First document, and many people would be familiar with the public advertising campaign on that. Over 140,000 copies of the Premier's advisory council's report have been downloaded off the Internet. Mr. Mazankowski himself, of course, is making great efforts to reach many different audiences. He has appeared, to the best of my recollection, before Senator Kirby's Senate committee. I know firsthand that he also made a presentation to Mr. Romanow's committee last Tuesday, as did I. Mr. Mazankowski has also sought a wider audience throughout this province, as has this Minister of Health and Wellness, traveled to many different places, spoken with chambers of commerce, spoken to service organizations. People do want to know what in fact is the truth about health care reform in this province, and when they do hear it, they are very encouraged indeed.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. McCLELLAND: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My supplemental to the same minister: are public-sector unions not in a conflict when they finance advertising campaigns aimed at protecting union jobs by financing third-party advertising? Why don't they buy the advertising directly?

MR. MAR: Well, Mr. Speaker, let me say this from my perspective as Minister of Health and Wellness: if that's how a union chooses to use its membership's moneys, then they're perfectly entitled to do so. However, it may come as a surprise to many members of the membership that their moneys in fact are being used in this campaign. But if this is how unions choose to use their membership money, so be it.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. McCLELLAND: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final supplemental to the same minister is this: are public/private partnerships delivering publicly funded health care in contravention of the Canada Health Act?

MR. MAR: Well, Mr. Speaker, the Canada Health Act has been subjected to many different interpretations, but I've not heard any interpretation that suggests that a private/public partnership for delivery of public services – it is not in contravention of the Canada Health Act under any interpretation that I've heard.

2:10

I should say, Mr. Speaker, that it is in fact a reality within the public health care systems across this country that private/public partnerships are often used as a means of delivering services in an effective, in an efficient way, and this is something that we want to encourage. But it will be within the spirit of the original Canada Health Act; it will be within its letter. We are the only province, that I am aware of, that has in fact enshrined the principles of the Canada Health Act within our own provincial legislation. It is our intention that whatever reforms go forward in accordance with our responses to the Mazankowski report, the 44 recommendations that we are moving forward on, it is our intention to remain within the letter and the principle of the Canada Health Act.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry, followed by the hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Engineered Teleposts

MR. BONNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week the Minister of Municipal Affairs told the Assembly that he would be speaking to the Safety Codes Council regarding concerns with engineered teleposts. However, on April 17 the Safety Codes Council indicated in a letter that they are taking no further action on the concerns that have been raised. My questions are to the Minister of Municipal Affairs. Who has the final say in this issue, the minister or the Safety Codes Council?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. BOUTILIER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In fact, the Safety Codes Council acts at the pleasure of the minister, but what I would like to do is elaborate on the good question the hon. member has brought to this House, and it is this. We've been in association with APEGGA. That's the professional engineering group. They are forwarding to the Safety Codes Council a letter indicating the safety and the safe practices that are in existence and that do not provide any type of jeopardy to homeowners.

MR. BONNER: To the same minister, Mr. Speaker. The minister indicated that he was reviewing the situation, but the Safety Codes Council says that Municipal Affairs has already dealt with the situation. What is the real status of this investigation?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. BOUTILIER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again the hon. member raises a good question from this perspective. I've asked the Safety Codes Council to provide back to me concrete evidence of what the professional engineering group is doing relative to the question that was asked in this House, and I'm very pleased to say that in the next couple of days I will be tabling that letter to the benefit of all members of this Assembly relative to public safety for homeowners and all Albertans.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. BONNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister. On May 1 the minister said that he was considering issuing a public safety advisory. Is this still under consideration, or is the case closed?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. BOUTILIER: Thank you. Again to the hon. member and to the members of the Assembly, I want to assure all Albertans that the safety of a person's home is utmost and foremost for this government and a priority of this government. There is no need for a media advisory relative to that because of the tabling of the letter from the professional engineers, that is going to be publicly tabled in this House.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Red Deer River Water Level

MRS. JABLONSKI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Recently members of the Red Deer Chamber of Commerce met with both Red Deer MLAs to discuss their concerns about water levels in the Red Deer River and its direct effect on the future development of industry in central Alberta. I understand that there is an agreement between the government of Alberta and the government of Saskatchewan that requires that 50 percent of the water in the South Saskatchewan River system be allowed to flow into the province of Saskatchewan. When the water levels are low in the Oldman and Bow rivers, in order to meet the 50 percent quota, the Red Deer River is required to provide 75 percent of its flow to Saskatchewan. This is a disproportionate drain on the Red Deer River system and will eventually weaken future development in the central Alberta area. My question is for the Minister of Environment. The water agreement between Alberta and Saskatchewan requires 50 percent of the water in the South Saskatchewan River system to flow to Saskatchewan. Why do we not ensure that each of the rivers in the system contributes 50 percent equally? Why is the Red Deer River system required to contribute 75 percent of its flow?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

DR. TAYLOR: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think what I want to emphasize first of all is that the 50 percent flow refers to all river basins. The South Saskatchewan River basin is made up of a number of different rivers, the Red Deer being one, and there are about six other rivers that make up that river basin, some of those rivers allocated at close to 100 percent in terms of their allocations. We have a problem in sometimes meeting the 50 percent, which we will meet, so what we do is we move the allocations around from basin to basin or from river to river within the South Saskatchewan River basin to meet the 50 percent allocation. I can tell you that last year the Red Deer River provided 35 percent of the total allocation to Saskatchewan from the South Saskatchewan River basin, and 65 percent was essentially supplied by the Oldman and Bow river basins.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MRS. JABLONSKI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. How will the minister ensure that the Red Deer River will be required to provide only 50 percent of its water?

DR. TAYLOR: Well, as I said, Mr. Speaker, we must maintain stream flows that are ecologically healthy. One of the measures that we use for that is the 50 percent of the natural flow. So we try to prevent any river from going to less than 50 percent of the natural flow, because not only do we have a requirement to provide Saskatchewan with the water, a requirement to provide Albertans with the water, but we also have a requirement to maintain the ecological balance or healthy aquatic environment.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MRS. JABLONSKI: Thank you. Could the minister please state the purpose of the South Saskatchewan River basin study, and when will it be released to the public?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

DR. TAYLOR: Yes, Mr. Speaker. What we're trying to do with river basins is have a group of individuals that are using the river basins – you know, the municipalities, the agricultural producers, the industries, the public – meet and develop a utilization philosophy for the river basin, and we do have that study completed. It's called the South Saskatchewan River basin study, and we're expecting to release that in very short order. I would suggest that we'll release that within the next month, I hope.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The agreement signed today by the Minister of Children's Services and the Kasohkewew children's authority is an admission of government failure, a failure to ensure that adequate systems were in place to protect children. My questions are to the Minister of Children's Services. Are children any safer today than they were 10 days ago?

MS EVANS: Well, Mr. Speaker, I most assuredly hope so. With the provincial support that we will be providing, there will for certain be more staff at Kasohkewew, but let's be quite clear. The funding formula and the desire by First Nations to manage their own child welfare services and their partnership with the federal government mean that this is a three-party partnership. You might say in this situation that the party that's the provincial government just beefed up its supports today considerably while we're going through the process of looking through the practices at Kasohkewew. So to lay it all at the feet of the province when we know full well in this House that the federal government has not funded portions of the child welfare delivery system that are delivered through either family and community support services or other supports elsewhere in our agreements is not a fair claim.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you. To the same minister, Mr. Speaker: why wasn't a plan and an accountability framework developed with Kasohkewew right from the very beginning?

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, the delegation of authority for Kasohkewew was one of the first delegation orders signed, one of the first in the more recent past. I must say that we have others that even predate the child and family services authorities. Siksika signed an authority for delegation many years ago and has been performing admirably and quite independently to a large extent in their delivery of child welfare service on that reserve. In terms of what has been happening here, this delegation, unlike some of the newer documents, did not define an either/or, a middle ground, for us doing some work with Kasohkewew: either they had delegation or we revoked it. In this agreement of understanding we've defined a middle ground for working together, something which is like a commissioning or a complete review of the service provided, and we feel confident that through this process we will not only be able to identify strengths and weaknesses, but we'll be able to cite areas for improvement and work on that.

If I may, Mr. Speaker, in September 2002 there is a new agreement for delegation that will come into play if that is the decision at that date for Kasohkewew. During this next interval, these next few months, we'll be able to evaluate whether or not we're able to make a more effective system and whether we'll be able to work with the chief and council and the delegates to the child welfare society to do the best job possible.

2:20

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you. To the same minister, Mr. Speaker: are there other authorities operating without quality assurance plans?

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, it is a good question. I've asked that very question about whether or not it's clear and implicit in their delegated authorities whether those assurances are given. We are conducting as we speak a review of that. I think many of us would assume that it is implicit, but I think it ought to be carved in a clearer message so that we know at the time when the provincial government goes in and assesses performance measures if they're complete. So, as we speak, that assessment is being done. I thank the hon. member for the question because it's an important one in making sure we're working not with just the 18 child and family service authorities but all 36 directors of child welfare who are delivering child welfare in Alberta.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, followed by the hon. Member for Medicine Hat.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Electricity deregulation in Alberta equals higher prices and a complicated electricity bill that hardly anyone understands including, I suspect, the Premier. The per kilowatt charge for the average Edmonton customer has gone from 7.69 cents in April 2000 to 10.63 cents in April 2002. That's an increase of almost 40 percent. Whereas before deregulation we just paid for the electricity we used, we now pay fixed service charges, 2001 shortfall charges, 2000 deferral charges, and delivery consumption charges. To the Premier: why is the Premier allowing the Minister of Energy to blame the power companies for putting all the extra charges on utility bills when these additional charges are a direct result of the government's own deregulation scheme?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, the question was asked previously by a member from the Liberal opposition, and I replied at that time that I would take the matter under advisement, but there is something relative to the figures quoted by the Member for Edmonton-Highlands. He talked about 7 point whatever it was cents a kilowatt hour in April of 2001, I believe.

AN HON. MEMBER: In 2000.

MR. KLEIN: Oh, in 2000. Because in 2001 of course the rebate program was in effect, and in many cases people weren't paying, well, anything. I'm an example, with my condo in Edmonton. I didn't get a bill until I think it was February of this year that I actually had to pay.

But the figure that concerns me most, Mr. Speaker – and I say this just for the sake of accuracy and in the spirit of fairness. He mentions an April date specifically of 10.6 cents a kilowatt-hour. Now, it may have been a particular hour on that particular date when the price spiked to that amount. The hon. Minister of Energy has stood up in this Legislature day after day citing the average daily rates, and I think last week he cited figures in the area of 5.6, 5.7 cents a kilowatt-hour. In the sense of fairness and in the spirit of fairness, why doesn't the hon. minister use those figures instead of the worst case, most highly inflated figure? That's politics at its absolute worst.

MR. MASON: I'm not a minister, Mr. Speaker, yet.

Mr. Speaker, I have the bills right here, and I would ask the Premier to explain to Albertans, who know, despite his fancy dancing in the House, that they're paying a lot more for their power, why they are paying more if this deregulation scheme was supposed to bring prices down.

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, over time it will, but I would remind the hon. member that there are no guarantees under a regulated system. I can recall many, many years ago utility companies under a totally regulated environment applying to the then Energy Resources Conservation Board for increases in the neighbourhood of 10, 15, 20 percent. Sometimes those increases were adjusted, and sometimes the ERC – no; it was the Public Utilities Board at that particular time – awarded those kinds of increases, and the people, the consumers, the customers had to pay.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Can the Premier please explain how much more electricity prices are going to go up when the $345 million in the deferral account in the Balancing Pool gets added to their power bills?

MR. KLEIN: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'll take that under advisement, but over the long term – and we do think in the longer term – the primary objective of course of deregulation was to provide competition and to get more power onstream. Under a restrictive, regulated environment, that power was not being built, and as you know, we were facing a critical shortage of power. Since deregulation many thousands of megawatts of new power have been announced or in fact are under construction as we speak. We have 3,800 megawatts alone in the Fort McMurray area, I believe, through cogeneration. We have numerous new plants being announced relative to coal and wind generation. None of this new power would have come onstream in a regulated, controlled, and restrictive environment. It will only and has only come onstream since we lifted the restrictions of a socialist attitude toward the distribution of power.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Medicine Hat, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Municipally Owned Power Companies

MR. RENNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions today are to the Minister of Municipal Affairs. Last Thursday in question period the minister indicated, in response to the Member for Edmonton-Highlands, that the consultation currently under way with municipalities with respect to regulations governing municipally owned corporations is just that, consultation. Despite the minister's assurance that any changes would result from dialogue between the province and municipalities, some constituents in Medicine Hat have expressed concern. Given that the city of Medicine Hat owns and operates both gas and electric production and distribution utilities serving the citizens of Medicine Hat, can the minister advise what if any impact these discussions could have on this long-standing practice?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. BOUTILIER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First and foremost, I want to say clearly that in serving its citizens, the council in Medicine Hat does a very good job relative to the service they provide. As the hon. member is aware, the city of Medicine Hat has received numerous approvals over the past couple of years relative to that good service. The proposed regulations are simply that; they are proposals. We're asking for consultation, and in fact we've consulted with 360 municipal governments relative to that. That's why we're making it so public. But understandably so, the intent of the municipal government is that they are there to serve municipal purposes, and clearly these regulation amendments that are going forward or being consulted on are important partners in serving that municipal purpose.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. RENNER: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I take it from that answer, then, that the minister is saying that these proposed regulations would only apply to new acquisitions, not existing corporations.

MR. BOUTILIER: Mr. Speaker, what we're doing is consulting with municipalities like the city of Medicine Hat. It's also important to note that we're consulting with the bigger cities such as Edmonton, such as Calgary, and their respective corporations such as EPCOR and Enmax. What we're doing is reviewing this so that in fact the best interests of municipalities in the guidelines we're offering will be there, so at the end of the day the municipal councils will make the local decisions that best serve their citizens.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. RENNER: Thank you. Well, my final supplementary is simply this: can the minister assure me and my constituents that no matter the outcome from these consultations, any decision respecting the disposition of Medicine Hat's utilities will remain solely the discretion of Medicine Hat city council and not the Minister of Municipal Affairs?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. BOUTILIER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm so pleased the hon. member has asked that question. The decision will lie 100 percent with the elected mayor and council of the respective municipality.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne.

Community Lottery Boards

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The government has never really explained why it dismantled the effective and popular community lottery boards. The possibilities range from concerns about lack of accountability to government chagrin over local decision-making to denied opportunities for photo ops for backbenchers to low priority ratings from the Premier. The list goes on. Now we hear that a new program is coming out in a few weeks but after the end of session. My questions are to the Minister of Gaming. What exactly were the concerns about accountability of community lottery board grants that led to complaints from government members and were possibly the reason for the cancellation of the program?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. STEVENS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The preamble of the hon. member indicates that the reason for the discontinuance of this particular program was not clear. The fact is that the reason for the discontinuance has been clear in that it was a financial decision, a difficult financial decision that was made by the Treasury Board as part of putting together the budget for this year. That was made clear and has been stated a number of times in this House. There is no doubt that this particular program was a very successful program. There were 88-some community lottery boards throughout the province, and there was a great deal of scope and local discretion with respect to that. So it's reasonable that in the application of that discretion there were variances throughout the provinces and as such there would be difference practices. Some of those practices were different than others, and it's fair to say that some were better than others. That particular difference was noted from time to time, and that would be one of the things which I have heard from some of the members in the House.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much. Well, to the same minister, Mr. Speaker: given that there was no money to reinstate the community lottery boards, where's the money coming from for this new program that will be announced next month?

MR. STEVENS: Mr. Speaker, what I have said in answers previously in the Assembly, going back one or two weeks, is that I have been asked to review the possibility of addressing the applicants to the previous community lottery board that were falling between the cracks. What I understand by that is that I am to review existing programs to determine the scope of those programs and match them with the scope of the community lottery boards. I am to examine where in fact the money was going within the community lottery boards. For example, there were some 10 categories that could be used by community lottery boards: community services, social services, library, education, and so on and so forth. It's important to have an understanding of the nature of the applications: where they were located, the amount of the applications, rural versus urban, and so on and so forth. We're in the process of doing that, and we're matching it with existing programs.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My final question is again to the Minister of Gaming. I'm wondering if this new program will assist the Sport Medicine Council's program on bicycle helmet safety. This is Bicycle Helmet Safety Month as well.

MR. STEVENS: I must say, Mr. Speaker, that the analysis to date has not made it down to that specific level, so I'm unable to advise the hon. member as to whether or not that particular group would be able to avail themselves of what might be a program that is modified going forward. Once again, I intend to bring forward to my colleagues some time in the weeks ahead some alternatives that they will consider. I'm sure that they will provide some good advice on that, and I can tell the hon. member that at that point in time I'm sure that we will take into account this particular group to determine whether or not it falls within the scope of what we were talking about.

St. Albert Optimist Club Youth Appreciation Night

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week I attended St. Albert's youth appreciation night, sponsored by president Kyle Kirzinger and members of the Octagon Club of Paul Kane high school and organized under the direction of Mr. Dale Smith, an exceptionally energetic teacher at Paul Kane high school who works with the support of the Optimist Club of St. Albert. At that ceremony Bellerose composite high school recognized Matt Roper, Cailynn Blanck, and Avalon Thorne. Paul Kane high school praised Erin Willis, Marin Thomas, and Matt Chapelsky. St. Albert Catholic high school acknowledged Patti Trovato, Michelle Jennings, and Lisa Hryciw. L'ecole secondaire Sainte Marguerite d'Youville honoured Landon Riemer, Colin Jenkyns, and Cherrisse Crockett. All of these young people are young people with attitude, the attitude of caring, giving, helping, working, and looking to a positive future.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Wainwright.

Wainwright Constituency By-election

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure today to rise to recognize persons in my constituency who were instrumental in achieving our victory in the recent by-election in the Wainwright constituency. It is impossible for me to name all of the individuals who provided assistance. I would like, however, to mention a few individuals from the team and recognize their incredible efforts towards achieving our success. Thank you to my campaign manager, Henry Czarnota, who helped during the nomination race, and my campaign manager for the by-election, Dick Bruggencate. As well, I'd like to thank Ken Checkel, Brian Heidecker, Jim Klasson, Herb Rock, Darlene Jenson, Bob Foley, Ken and Donna McNeil, and Louis Johnson.

I would also like to recognize the other nominees and candidates who ran a fair and clean campaign and are all credible people who have the same ultimate goal as each of us: to ensure the future success of this province and the people therein.

There are so many people who assisted with the campaign, and I wish I could recognize them all, but I can't. So I would simply like to say thank you to the entire team and the people of Wainwright for giving me a chance to work with you for success and prosperity for our constituency.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Bruin's Plumbing & Heating Ltd.

MRS. JABLONSKI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a great Alberta success story when a business starts in the basement of a home and grows to require a facility of almost 18,000 square feet. On Saturday, May 4, 2002, the Bruin family celebrated the grand opening of Bruin's Plumbing & Heating Ltd.'s new location along with their friends and staff of over 100 employees. I was very honoured to share this milestone of growth and success by cutting a pipe in the grand opening ceremony.

Thirty-seven years ago Cor and Arica Bruin started a small plumbing business in the basement of their home. Their son Herman and his wife, Carol, worked hard to develop the family business, and today a third generation with Marty Bruin and Corinna McArthur continue to serve the growing construction needs of the central Alberta region.

Bruin's Plumbing has dedicated and committed employees who have helped them achieve this success. Many have been with them for over 20 years, including Dave Carritt, Ken Poffenroth, Dave Genes, Randy Fitzgerald, Robert Moores, Bruce Hicks, and Jackie Hewson. Bruin's Plumbing works extensively with the Alberta apprenticeship and industry training department under the Ministry of Learning to develop journeymen in plumbing and heating.

I would like to extend the congratulations of the Alberta Legislature to the Bruin family and their staff. We wish them all the best for their continuing success in the future.

National Nursing Week

DR. TAFT: Mr. Speaker, I am proud to rise in Alberta's Legislature today to recognize National Nursing Week. There are over 25,000 registered nurses in Alberta alone and thousands more licensed practical nurses. Nurses are the backbone of Alberta's health care system. Combining intense training and a remarkable range of skills with a genuine compassion for others, nurses work in high-tech ICUs and in street level walk-in clinics, with pregnant girls and frail seniors, in military units, and in administrative offices.

One way to get a feeling for the difference between nursing and doctoring is to think about the difference between nursing a drink and doctoring a drink. To nurse something means to nurture it, to foster it, to look after it. In fact, the word "nurse" shares the same Latin origin as the word "nourish." As nurses care for us as individuals, they nourish us as a society. So it is only appropriate that as individuals and as a society we take the time to recognize National Nursing Week and the invaluable place of nurses in Alberta.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

International Nurses Day

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am married to a nurse, and I am very happy as well to rise in recognition of International Nurses Day and pay tribute to these health care professionals. These are the women and men who care for the sick, educate new mothers, immunize our children, comfort the dying, and improve our quality of life. Amidst the chaos of the day, nurses go the extra mile for their patients. Nurses continue their tradition of providing care and compassion to the sick, but the profession has dramatically changed over the past number of years. Higher educational requirements and increasing responsibility for patient health have transformed nursing into a full and equal partner in the delivery of health care. Nurses are diagnosticians, educators, researchers, and specialists. We honour their incredible commitment to their work, their profession, and their patients. Our lives are made better as a result of their work.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to present a petition signed by 66 Albertans petitioning this Assembly to urge the government not to "delist services, raise health care premiums, introduce user fees or further privatize health care."

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

THE CLERK: Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 37.1(2) I wish to advise the House that the following documents were deposited today with the office of the Clerk by the hon. minister of health, pursuant to the Regional Health Authorities Act: Aspen regional health authority No. 11 annual report 2000-2001; Mistahia health region annual report 2000-2001; health authority No. 5 annual report 2000-2001; Keeweetink Lakes regional health authority No. 15 annual report 2000-2001.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

MR. HORNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings today. This first one is a letter from the mayor of Parkland county, Mrs. Elsie Kinsey; the second one is a letter from the mayor of Spruce Grove, Mr. Ken Scott; and lastly is a letter from Elizabeth George, a constituent from Spruce Grove. All of these letters are regarding their concerns with funding for community lottery boards and their request to move swiftly to either reinstate the community lottery boards or provide an alternative.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today with the appropriate number of copies of one tabling that's five pages of examples of health care fraud cases involving health care businesses in the U.S. totaling over $1.26 billion.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first one is the official program from the King's University College graduation ceremonies, which took place Saturday afternoon at Ellerslie Road Baptist Church here in Edmonton.

My second tabling is a letter from Dr. Sharon Richardson, the president of the Alberta Association of Registered Nurses. It's dated April of this year, and it, too, is in regards to National Nursing Week, May 6 through 12.

Thank you very much.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table two letters. The first one is a letter from Brenda Brochu, director of Peace River Regional Women's Shelter. It's addressed to the Minister of Human Resources and Employment and is dated April 29. Ms Brochu is disappointed with the minister's announcement that there'll be no increases in welfare rates at this time.

The second letter, Mr. Speaker, is a letter addressed to the Minister of Health and Wellness. It's dated May 1 and is from Chris Blake, president, Peace River and District Chamber of Commerce. The chamber is concerned with the regional health authority's budget shortfall, possible closing of beds at the Grimshaw/Berwyn community health centre, and the overall reduction of service to the residents in their region.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first is a letter from David Thiele, a councillor with the city of Edmonton, addressed to the Premier. Mr. Thiele is urging the government of Alberta to lower flags to half-mast on the day of mourning to remember and honour the workers who were killed or injured on the job.

The second tabling, Mr. Speaker, is the requisite number of copies of the two utility bills which I referred to in question period today.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

MR. MAR: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Sir, I beg leave to table the requisite number of copies of the annual reports of the Alberta College of Optometrists and the College of Physical Therapists of Alberta.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to table today on behalf of the Deputy Premier and Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development the responses to questions raised during Committee of Supply for Agriculture, Food and Rural Development on April 17, 2002.

head: Orders of the Day

head: Written Questions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. STEVENS: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Proper notice having been given on Thursday last, it's my pleasure to move that written questions appearing on today's Order Paper do stand and retain their places.

[Motion carried]

head: Motions for Returns

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. STEVENS: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Proper notice having been given on Thursday last, it's my pleasure to move that motions for returns appearing on today's Order Paper do stand and retain their places with the exception of Motion for a Return 9.

[Motion carried]

Natural Gas Venting

M9. Mr. Mason moved that an order of the Assembly do issue for a return showing Alberta Energy and Utilities Board data on natural gas venting for the fiscal years 1996, 1997, and 1998 broken down by company and field centre.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Environment.

DR. TAYLOR: Yes. On behalf of the Minister of Energy let me say that the Minister of Energy would dearly like to release this data. However, once the member hears the reason he cannot, he I'm sure will accept it. The reason is that the information was not collected in the form in which he has asked for it by the Energy and Utilities Board in 1996, 1997, or 1998. However, the Energy and Utilities Board did start collecting the information in the way that he's asked for it in '99 and 2000 and subsequently released this information to the public.

So because the information was not collected in that form, it can't be released. We have to reject the motion, but the point is well taken. It is collecting the information in the appropriate form and now releasing it.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands to close the debate.

MR. MASON: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The minister has not said in what form the data was collected. I would certainly encourage him to explain how this information was collected. Perhaps it may be useful. But to just say that it wasn't collected in the way I'm asking for it leaves me trying to guess how it was collected. So it's not in my view a particularly fair response to the question.

The motion is a very straightforward request for statistical information. There are statistics, as the minister has said, in the years '99 and 2000 which show an almost 50 percent increase in natural gas venting between those two years, and having access in some form to the volumes of gas vented in 1996 to '98 would help to ascertain whether the increase in gas venting was a one-year blip or part of a longer term trend. So I would ask the minister to tell the House at the appropriate time what information is available and in what form it was collected.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion for a Return 9 lost]

Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: We'll call the committee to order.

Bill 206

Fisheries (Alberta) Amendment Act, 2002

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

MR. DANYLUK: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It is with great pleasure that I rise today and begin debate on Bill 206, the Fisheries (Alberta) Amendment Act, 2002, in Committee of the Whole. I would like to begin by thanking the members of this Assembly for their comments and ideas regarding Bill 206 in second reading. More importantly, I would like to thank everyone for their support as we move into the next stage of debate.

Bill 206 will function similarly to the Agricultural Pests Act and provide the same kind of protection to fish farmers as is currently afforded to livestock and grain farmers. Aquaculturists will now have the ability to protect their investment from pest species like the cormorant just as an agriculture farmer can protect his crops from bears and gophers.

[Mr. Lougheed in the chair]

Bill 206 would also help ensure the protection of the natural fish populations to ensure that this precious natural resource is maintained and enhanced. Bill 206 entrusts Alberta Fish and Wildlife to take an educationally informed approach, ecologically and environmentally healthy execution, and the most cost-effective measures to manage threats to our fisheries, our ecosystems, and our water supplies. The bill urges the government to take the necessary steps to sustainably protect and recover fish populations. Bill 206 also addresses a specific problem that faces many Albertans and the majority of my constituents, and that's the recent explosion of predatory birds around the lakes in northern Alberta that have increased the challenge facing Alberta's fish population and really their increase or their existence.

This is by no means an isolated issue, Mr. Chairman. There are other North American jurisdictions that have recognized the cormorant problem and implemented a course of action to deal with their numbers and destructive habits. Both the state of New York and U.S. Fish and Wildlife have studied the ruin and devastation that birds like the cormorant have caused. The respective governments are already working to determine their best course of action to address the increasing populations. I think that it is very important that all members of this Assembly understand that this problem is not only a problem that I see, that it is not only an issue in the constituency of Lac La Biche-St. Paul. It is a problem that has been recognized across our continent and that is already being addressed in other lake regions.

In the weeks since this bill received second reading, it has come to my attention that a small amendment could be made to improve Bill 206. I would like to move that amendment to Bill 206, and I believe that the members have copies that have been passed out. Nothing in this proposed amendment in any way changes the intention or the principle of the bill. It merely ensures that it achieves its full intent.

If I can, I would like to briefly review it, Mr. Chairman. The amendment in section A is a technical change related to the proposed section 33.1(1) by replacing "adopted" with "established." The original subsection refers to "guidelines adopted by regulation." The proposed amendment to section 44 of the Fisheries (Alberta) Act in the bill already allows the minister to make regulations establishing guidelines for the purpose of section 33.1.

The amendments in section B to the section of the bill relating to the Agricultural Pests Act arise because of the interrelation between the fisheries act and the Agricultural Pests Act. It essentially makes an order under one act relating to Crown land operate under another act. These are just minor changes to ensure consistency.

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The amendments in section C are what can be called consequential amendments to the Wildlife Act to ensure that an order under the new section 33.1 of the Fisheries Act is not interpreted as a violation of the Wildlife Act. These amendments will eliminate confusion and ensure that Bill 206 works in the manner that was originally intended.

With that said, Mr. Chairman, I think that I'll end my comments. I would prefer to keep my comments short at this time and would like the members of this Assembly to speak to the amendments. Thank you very much.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

MR. DUCHARME: Mr. Chairman, thank you for the opportunity to rise today and speak to Bill 206, the Fisheries (Alberta) Amendment Act, 2002. I would like to echo the sentiments of the many members who have already spoken to this bill and thank the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul for bringing this bill forward for consideration.

Having reviewed the amendments before us today in committee, I would like to say that they will be receiving my support. They appear to be simple housekeeping amendments designed to ensure that the intent of the bill is carried through into practice, and that intent, Mr. Chairman, is to enable fish farmers to protect their investment from pest species of nongame birds. Bill 206 would create a mechanism and guiding principles by which the Department of Sustainable Resource Development would ensure the viability and protection of fish stocks and the biological diversity of aquatic ecosystems in Alberta's lakes.

Alberta's aquatic ecosystem is very important to this province for a number of reasons. One reason happens to be economic, where local entrepreneurs sell their fish stocks for a variety of reasons including fingerling production, you-fish operations, contract growing, table food market protection, and biological grass control carp, where operators raise sterile carp for weed control in water and for research purposes.

All told, Mr. Chairman, the year 2000 performance measure of the Alberta aquaculture industry has been estimated at $10.8 million. This translates into a contribution of over $1 billion to the Alberta economy when you consider commercial and sportfishing and not including tourism spin-off industries. But this industry faces many challenges that require our assistance. Alberta fish populations are at dangerously low levels. Pike catches are only 15 percent of what they were in 1970. Of the 27 walleye populations for which there is data, 21 have collapsed in recent years.

Concurrent with the fish population collapse over the past 30 years, cormorant populations have increased tenfold. Each attempt to restock Alberta's lakes and streams with fish has corresponded to a marked increase in cormorant populations. I think it is important to note that cormorants have no natural predators in northern Alberta.

Cormorants are not only a problem here in Alberta but have also proven to be threats in other parts of North America. In fact, these predators have become a significant problem in the state of New York. In Lake Champlain destruction of vegetation on nesting islands by cormorants threatens populations of common terns, a threatened species. New York is currently involved in a series of cormorant studies and management activities with counterparts in other states, universities, the federal government, and Canada.

Here in Alberta, Bill 206 helps to protect our crucial fisheries industry from these pests by allowing for the improvement of spawning routes through the constructive removal of beaver dams, monitoring and control of predatory bird colonies, and the reconciliation of commercial fishing licences when and where required for the long-term viability of fishery resources. The protection of spawning routes and fish stocks is vitally important, especially in areas where natural predators undermine the hard work and dedication of aquaculturists.

As an Assembly we need to empower these people to properly deal with pests and predators that threaten their investment. We can do that by passing Bill 206. The bill would clarify the role and the responsibility of Alberta Sustainable Resource Development to protect the fisheries resources of the province. This will be done by amending the Fisheries (Alberta) Act to include provisions allowing the minister to issue depredation orders, remove beaver dams, restrict fishing in specific regions, or declare some nonendangered nongame birds as pests. All of these actions will be taken when in the best judgment of the minister public fisheries or private fish farms are threatened.

Bill 206 would also amend the Agricultural Pests Act to allow the minister to declare a certain species of nongame birds as pests to aquaculture, thereby giving fish farmers the authority to protect their investment from pest species through lethal methods without a depredation order. The actions proposed by Bill 206 are already possible under a combination of the Agricultural Pests Act, the Wildlife Act, and the Water Act, but current legislation does not compel the government to proactively manage fishery resources.

Mr. Chairman, the members of this Assembly should pass Bill 206 because active management of fishery resources to promote long-term sustainability of the industry would increase the economic stability and growth in northern Alberta. The members of this Assembly should pass Bill 206 because it would enable the Ministry of Sustainable Resource Development, responsible for Alberta fish and wildlife, to ensure that fish farmers have an effective recourse in the protection of their property from pests. The members of this Assembly should pass Bill 206 because under this legislation the spawning routes of all fish species would be facilitated. This would increase the population of fish naturally and thereby reduce the necessity of expensive restocking measures.

Again, Mr. Chairman, I would like to voice my support for the well-reasoned amendments proposed this afternoon, and I would urge all members of this Assembly to pass Bill 206 in Committee of the Whole and bring this legislation one step closer to becoming law. Thank you.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

MR. DANYLUK: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to reassure the hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake that this is a housekeeping amendment. I think it's very, very important that we have a balance in the ecosystem. That is why the proposed bill has the regulations under the minister in charge and with the use of the expertise of his biologists to be able to establish and maintain a balance in the ecosystem. I would also suggest with your comments in regard to fish farming that this only allows birds to be considered under the pest legislation, if you want to call it that.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Chair. It's a pleasure to make a few comments regarding the amendment to Bill 206, particularly comments which reflect what different associations in this province have said when it comes to the state of our fish population in the province and as well the double-crested cormorants. I look at a couple of very reputable people and associations that have been mentioned and certainly one of them being the – we will get to that association shortly here.

One of the situations that is most disturbing about this particular bill is that this situation has been occurring for a number of years. We look at the situation where the population of the bird has been doubling in numbers for a number of years, yet we have not taken the steps to identify why this situation is taking place. Where we had very stable numbers of double-crested cormorants over the years, we now have a situation in this province where this bird population is exploding. Certainly, in my opportunities to speak at second reading of the bill, the point I made was that the biggest impact on Alberta's fishery resources continues to be the lack of resources that our provincial fisheries management agency is given to manage our fish resource. There are situations that have arisen here.

Now, when we look particularly at the lakes in Alberta, the majority of lakes – and these are smaller lakes. These are very shallow lakes, and they promote the development of our pike and walleye fish stocks, being warmer water fish, and we know that the level of lakes overall has decreased over the last decade or decade and a half. We also know the popularity of not only sportfishing, but we also have tried to maintain a commercial fishing industry here in this province. As a result of that, we certainly have had a huge decrease in the fish stocks, particularly fish stocks in the areas of pike and walleye. These are fish, Mr. Chairman, that normally would feed on the type of food that the cormorant also feeds on. So with the lack of those fish stocks in the lakes, we have seen an increase in the populations of smaller fish in the lake, and the cormorant is one of the major predators of these fish, and they take every opportunity they can to go after these fish.

Now, then, one of the big problems with the amendment and with the bill is that here in Alberta we are passing a bill where we are going to be killing off wild birds who in their natural process, in their natural environment, are eating wild fish. As the hon. member said, we have to keep a balance in the ecosystem, and I fully agree with what he has said here, but the balance in the ecosystem has been disrupted by the amount of fishing, by taking, by decreasing the stocks of pike and walleye. So when we have altered the balance in the ecosystem in that fashion, then certainly the commonsense approach to restoring that is to restore those fish stocks that have been so badly depleted over the last few years. As well, we have to realize that our lakes are not viable when it comes to supporting a commercial fishing operation such as we have in the past. We certainly have to look at changes in that regard as well.

Now, we also have had changes in our regulations as to the number of fish that can be kept in the sportfishing industry, so we have taken some steps yet haven't taken enough steps, and we certainly haven't taken the steps that will allow Mother Nature to fix this problem herself. She does need a little bit of help here, and it is not because of the cormorant. It is because of what we have allowed to happen in those lakes. Usually what happens, as I said earlier, is that the fish populations of these smaller types of fish are normally kept in check. Their populations and their particular place in the food chain is normally kept in check by the pike and the walleye. As it has taken a number of years for this problem to develop and to get to the point where we would actually consider some type of legislation in this Assembly, then certainly it is going to take that many years to restore those populations of pike and walleye, to watch as Mother Nature herself takes care of the populations of the double-crested cormorant.

As well, I look at one of the major concerns here: what is happening to the commercial fish industry. I notice that the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul mentioned the many different areas that the fishing industry in this province relies on, whether supplying fingerlings or whatever. In the whole system here we have to look at not a quick fix by killing off a number of birds, but we have to realize that in doing so, once again we have altered the ecosystem, which has allowed the double-crested cormorants to increase in number. Killing them off in this fashion is certainly going to be an impact by man on the ecosystem, and this quick fix in the long run can impact our ecosystem. I think we have identified part of the problem here, but we haven't gotten to the root of the problem, and that is: what has happened to the huge amount of stock we had of walleye and pike?

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: Hon. members, just a reminder that we are currently still dealing with the amendment that's before us. Anybody else wishing to speak on the amendment? The hon. Member for Peace River.

MR. FRIEDEL: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It is my pleasure to stand here today and speak to the amendments on Bill 206, the Fisheries (Alberta) Amendment Act, 2002, as introduced by our colleague from Lac La Biche-St. Paul. The amendments add some clarity to the importance of the bill, and I think it's important that we look at the sustainability of Alberta's fish habitat as we would any other sustainability issue in the area of environment, environmental habitat, animals, and so on.

Mr. Chairman, Bill 206 is intended to correct a problem that has existed in our ecosystem for some many years. The livelihood of many Albertans depends on the fish habitat in our lakes and rivers, and this bill with the amendments will allow the Department of Sustainable Resource Development to set up a mechanism to ensure sustainability and viability of fish farming and the fishing industry as a whole. I think it's responsible as a position to provide the means whereby aquafarmers can protect their property from pests. For the last three decades there has been a major collapse in the fish population, and at the same time the cormorant population has flourished. This bird is a very skilled predator of small fish and has the ability to severely deplete fish stocks in the lakes and other bodies of water with an amazing efficiency.

Bill 206 would allow fish farmers to protect their investment and in turn their livelihoods from this and other pest species. Since these birds have expanded their habitats dramatically during the last three decades, they've placed severe pressure on Alberta's fish population. While fish farmers and environmental groups have worked hard to maintain the industry, the cormorant and other pest birds are working even harder to deplete the population of fish to dangerously low levels.

Alberta is a great habitat for the cormorant. As we have heard several times, no natural predators exist to control their population. Snakes and rats are the two major predators to keep the cormorant in check in other jurisdictions, and I know we don't want those here either. We've heard from some members that we have changed the balance in the ecosystem – and maybe we have – by keeping Alberta rat free, but I don't think anyone would suggest that we would want to go back and reverse that just for the sake of ensuring the absolute purity of managing ecosystems. Also, Mr. Chairman, many lakes in Alberta are relatively shallow, and since the cormorant can dive up to 40 feet, the fish have nowhere to hide.

Bill 206 will provide fish farmers and the department with the tools that are necessary to control these problem bird species. It's also important to point out that commercial and sportfishing as well as tourism contribute over a billion dollars to the Alberta economy, and these are certainly impacted by the reduced fish stocks in our lakes and river systems. Bird predation is among the leading causes of fish losses at commercial aquaculture facilities, and by providing reasonable and effective legislation, we can ensure that certain pest species are held to levels that allow for environmental harmony. I emphasize the words "environmental harmony."

Mr. Chairman, the Agricultural Pests Act, which is administered by the Department of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development, allows farmers to proactively manage certain species that threaten their stocks as long as they have been listed as a pest by the minister.

The Fisheries (Alberta) Amendment Act would work in much the same way to protect our fish population from nonthreatened, nongame birds. These pest species have gone unchecked for too long, and legislation is needed to resolve the problems that they're causing.

There are major environmental and economic implications to this issue, and unfortunately the double-crested cormorant is at the centre of most of it. By providing adequate spawning routes, we would facilitate the natural ability of fish stocks to develop, and this can be done by removing beaver dams that pose a problem for fish migration. The bill would also help farmers deal with problem beaver dams when it's appropriate. The facilitation of spawning waters could help increase fish populations naturally, which would also reduce the need for expensive artificial restocking measures. Bill 206 would do more than just control pesky birds. It deals with the development of a healthy fish population and vibrant fish and other aquaculture farming operations. It would require that Alberta fish and wildlife evaluate the aquatic ecosystem and provide effective solutions to problems that are affecting the fishing industry throughout the province.

This bill is not designed to eliminate the cormorant or any other predatory bird in Alberta but rather deal with their out-of-control population. It is designed to provide a tool for fish farmers to deal with pests that threaten their property and their livelihood. It will also address the issue of managing sport and commercial fishing licences to promote sustainable harvesting. This part of the Fisheries (Alberta) Amendment Act is necessary to ensure that we can maintain a healthy fish population in areas affected by overfishing.

Mr. Chairman, Bill 206 and the related amendments provide a broad framework that will serve as a foundation for effective stock recovery strategies. Only a broad and flexible approach will ensure that we do what's best for Alberta's fish population, for the fishing industry, for our tourists, and for aquatic ecosystems as a whole.

Mr. Chairman, I am supporting Bill 206, and I'd like to encourage all my colleagues in the House to do so as well. Thank you.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. As much as I would like to speak in support of the conservation of fish and the preservation of fishing, I'm going to have to speak against this bill because I think that the diagnosis that this is based on, the diagnosis of the decline of fish, is off the mark in my view.

I spoke on Bill 206 at second reading. On third reading I find that the bill doesn't really address the problem of why it is that the fish levels have decreased and fishing is in decline in the province. We have heard in the meantime also from the Alberta Wilderness Association. I've looked at some materials from other places, including a letter from one of our recent graduates from the University of Alberta, and in all of these pieces of literature or communication there is an overwhelming opinion which suggests that if we really want to address – and we should – the problem of the decline in fish stocks and therefore the decline in fisheries, we should be doing things other than going after the cormorants, because they are not part of the problem. They are a symptom of the problem.

Here's a letter from Jade Dodd, BSc. environmental sciences from the University of Alberta. The letter is addressed to me. It's a short letter, so I may as well quickly read it. It says:

I was shocked and angered to see an article in the Edmonton Journal on May the 4th, talking about a private member's bill aimed to reduce the number of Double-crested cormorants near Lac La Biche . . . There is no scientific evidence to support that the reason for declining fish populations has to do with the Cormorants. We have all heard this kind of nonsense before. In fact the American White Pelican and the Double-crested Cormorant were once close to extinction because people thought they were eating too much fish. We have finally gotten back on track with their populations and now some [others are] trying to do it again! Many studies have shown that they don't even eat the sport fish, so my next question is, what is going on in that Legislature that Bills like this have passed second reading, and others, which may have merit can't even get on the floor?

That's the end of the letter from Jade Dodd.

Let me read a few excerpts from a few other communications here, Mr. Chairman. I think that the Legislature and my colleagues actually will benefit from this. There's a news release from the Alberta Wilderness Association. The Minister of Environment might be interested in listening to it too.

A new private members bill, which gives the appearance that the government is doing something to protect our fisheries, only treats the symptoms not the causes. The bill, sponsored by [the hon. Member for] Lac La Biche . . . would allow the Minister to order any regulated measure to deal with any animal or bird that is deemed a threat to fish or fish habitat. Bill 206 indiscriminately covers native and non-native species as well as natural habitat and fish farms. This bill is aimed at controlling increasing populations of double-crested cormorants and their predation on fish farms and lakes.

"Targeting the cormorant is a real red herring" says Dr. Richard Thomas, AWA spokesperson. "Studies done on Lake Winnipeg, and Alberta Fish and Wildlife Division's own data conclusively demonstrate that increased numbers of cormorants are actually a symptom and not the cause. The actual cause is human overexploitation of the province's fisheries."

The ecological process being demonstrated is:

- Over fishing removes large predatory fish such as walleye and pike;
- Baitfish populations, upon which the cormorants primarily feed, are "released" from predation and grow in numbers rapidly and
- Cormorant populations expand in response to the greater availability of [that fish which is their] food.

Then the release goes on to say:

"I wonder if [the MLA for Lac La Biche] has stopped to consider that fishermen and industrial development regularly affect fish and their habitat," stated Jillian Tamblin, AWA Conservation Specialist. AWA recognizes the need to conserve and restore Alberta's fisheries.

So they're not against the goals and the aims and the purposes of the bill, but they do say:

"Better management of fishing pressure, native fish stocks and habitat protection should be the core of any new legislation . . . Fish farms and ponds are not natural systems and need to be looked at separately," she says.

Mr. Chairman, attached to the Alberta Wilderness Association's release is scientific background information with graphs and with fairly convincing, persuasive scientific data, and part of this information deals with the decline in walleye catches. The graphs that are presented here show "the decline in walleye catches at Lac La Biche over the past 60 years, superimposed on pelican and cormorant nest counts from NE Alberta." They learned the cause of the collapse in fishery, but the birds arrived long after the fishery collapsed and therefore cannot be implicated as a cause. Instead, they are a response to the decline of the aquatic predator (walleye) causing an increase and abundance of small fishes (prey items for walleye). The birds are feeding on this abundant prey source as a replacement for the lack of a walleye predator in the lakes. It gets even more complicated. The small fishes (perch and shiners) are major predators on walleye fry. Increased small fish densities have resulted in heavy predation on walleye fry. If anything, bird predation on these small fishes is a benefit to walleye.

So that's one piece.

The other piece, Mr. Chairman, is sort of a control group and experimental group study. Again it says that the graph that is presented here in background information demonstrates that fishing success is very high on the bombing range and very poor immediately adjacent to the range. Basically, this is a control-treatment experiment. Both areas have commercial fishing, cormorants, pelicans, low water, beavers and all other factors that people tend to blame for poor fishing success. The only difference is sport-angling pressure. Angler effort is low on the bombing range and high elsewhere. Success is high on the range and low elsewhere as a result, so it's the angling pressure that accounts for decline rather than the number of cormorants and other predators in the area.

So, Mr. Chairman, let me look at some more information here. This is a letter that was written by the Alberta Wilderness Association to the editor of the Lac La Biche paper. It says:

Here's a riddle from Lac La Biche. Question: What's black and eats fish? Answer: A scapegoat.

To anyone who cares about protecting Alberta's environment, Lac La Biche . . . is reminiscent of one of those old horror movie series. Just when you thought it was safe . . . up pops another eco-illiterate, complete with a "Nature must be conquered" frontier mentality straight from the Dark Ages.

Is my time over?

3:30

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: Yes, hon. member. The 10 minutes allocated has run out.

DR. PANNU: I'll seek another opportunity. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. Member for Dunvegan.

MR. GOUDREAU: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's my pleasure to rise again to speak to Bill 206, the Fisheries (Alberta) Amendment Act, 2002. This bill is needed in Alberta. It is one which will hopefully protect our fish species and the fisheries industry for many years to come. I would like to first address the amendments that have been proposed to this bill. These amendments are very simple. They provide clarity, and they are nothing more than an attempt to tidy up the wording of the bill. The sponsor is clearly very concerned that the bill is as well written and as clear as possible.

Bill 206 provides us with an opportunity to retain what pests have taken away. It is important that we note that it is not just the cormorants that Bill 206 targets but all pests that threaten our fish stocks around Alberta. Mr. Chairman, this weekend there was a report in the newspaper that said that cormorants are not to blame for the depletion of fish stocks in Alberta but that there were other factors more pressing. Well, that might be the case, but these pests are part of a very large problem in some parts of Alberta, and I would like to support a bill that will try to at least solve one part of the problem facing our fisheries. It is all too often that when people think that some sort of animal is becoming a target of control, environmentalists try to pin the blame on humans. Well, this time I disagree, and I place part of the blame for our depleting fish stocks on pests.

I don't think that cormorants are being used as a scapegoat but rather correctly identify a part of a proven problem, a problem that Bill 206 attempts to fix. In fact, I would argue that the pests that threaten our fish stocks are a bigger problem than we think. I realize that some argue that the depletion of fish stocks is due to other things like overfishing or environmental factors. That might be true, but I can tell you that there are many dugouts in Alberta that have fish stocks that are not overfished or have environmental concerns but in fact are decimated by pests, mainly hard-to-control cormorants.

Mr. Chairman, I am pleased that nearly all of Bill 206 has stayed the same and that the proposed amendments are simply housekeeping. Further to this, I am pleased that the support for the bill seems to be very solid. I imagine that there are many members in the House who have seen the damage that pests do to fish stocks. One member gave an example in second reading of how the cormorants cleaned out his dugout of fish before his grandchildren were able to fish them out for themselves. Restocking a dugout is very costly, and farmers do not stock their dugouts to feed the rampant cormorants. They do it for their own enjoyment and food supply and not for the birds' supper.

Mr. Chairman, Bill 206 will hopefully put an end to one of the problems that those in the fishing industry are currently facing. Granted, there may be other things that must be done to save some of the industry, but this is a good step forward. I believe that most of those who live in a rural setting understand the problem that pests pose. They understand that there are many issues that wreak havoc on farms and any rural industry. Pests are something that can damage farmers' yearly livelihood in a matter of hours. Bill 206 gives a fish farmer a chance to defend his property. It gives the owner the hope that he will be able to fend off the wild beasts of the air that swoop down and clean out his fish, fish that would go to feed hundreds of people instead of thousands of mischievous birds.

The fishing industry in Alberta has the potential to be very large and very competitive, and I am sure that with the proper management the industry in Alberta will continue to head in that direction. I should say that it will thrive when the pests that threaten our industry can be properly dealt with.

This bill does not attempt to eliminate the pests entirely. What it does is put better control options on the pests. It is up to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development to ultimately decide on what is a pest, but now the avenue of control will be available. Bill 206 is a solid and a very sensible piece of legislation. It does what many in the fishing industry ask of the government, and that is for better rules to control pests that threaten their livelihood. Many people in Alberta make a living in the fishing industry, and Bill 206 helps them protect their investment.

The amendments that we are debating here today are nothing more than simple housekeeping amendments that will strengthen this bill and make it clear. I would hope that all MLAs who have had a problem in their constituencies with pests threatening the fishing industry will vote for not only the amendments to Bill 206 but also for Bill 206 itself.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'll rise today to speak at this moment to the amendment and do so in the context of the whole bill. We've been debating this bill now for a couple of weeks and given it some thought. I approached the bill with an open mind, which astonished some members of the Legislature, and I have gone back and forth and back and forth, but the more carefully I read the bill and the amendment, the more uncomfortable I am with it. I'm concerned that the amendment does not address some issues that I see lurking in this bill.

In particular, we all speak about the cormorant and the threat that the cormorant poses for our fish stocks in Alberta, but the bill is not limited to cormorants. In fact, the bill doesn't mention cormorants at all. So I am concerned that this bill in fact is too broad and sweeping and that the amendments don't correct that. Now, if there was an amendment that came forward and specifically narrowed things down to the cormorant, I'd be pleased with that, but the bill reads, "when the Minister determines that a species of animal or bird is destroying or harming, or is likely to destroy or harm, fish or fish habitat," and it goes on from there. It's very, very broad, and it says that "the Minister determines that a species of animal or bird" – that is absolutely wide open. It's not limited at all to cormorants. I was uneasy, or unconvinced at least, about killing off cormorants. I'm very, very nervous about leaving the door wide open to any species of animal or bird except, as is wisely limited here, animals or birds that are endangered.

I think, for example, of other birds or other creatures that may be, in the normal course of their activities, damaging or threatening to damage fish or fish habitat. I spend a fair bit of time at lakes around this province, and I'm always delighted when I see osprey going back and forth just off the shoreline, a magnificent sight. I've been around the province long enough to remember when it was rare to see an osprey, and they've made a comeback. I'm sure this is not the intent of the Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul in proposing this legislation, but in fact an osprey is a species of bird that destroys or is likely to destroy fish. That's how they survive.

I think about other creatures, the vast herds of buffalo that used to graze on this great prairie. They were so extensive, their numbers were so vast, that they created their own ecosystem. They in fact prevented the boreal forest from extending down over the prairie because they grazed so extensively. Now, somebody could have argued that they were disrupting the environment. These tens of millions of buffalo were destroying fish habitat and were disrupting streams and so on, and that could have been used to justify the killing of the buffalo.

Now, a more contemporary example, which certainly would fall within the scope of this bill as I read it, would be simply cattle crossing creeks. There is extensive evidence, many, many cases of cattle crossing creeks and really disrupting the fish habitat, in fact totally breaking down the streambeds. They'd fall under this bill potentially.

So those are a handful of examples of my concerns of why I think this bill is too sweeping and why I think the amendment is inadequate to contain the bill. When we leave a bill like this as wide open as we do, while our intentions today may be simply to address the cormorant, down the road we will be or may be enticed to interfere further to correct other issues. As we move in to counterbalance not just the cormorant but whatever comes after the cormorants, I'm concerned that we get drawn further and further and further into the very risky business of trying to actively manage an extensive wilderness ecosystem, and that's exactly what this bill would allow. I can imagine that a few years from now cormorants may be under control if this bill is passed. But some other creature comes along, and then we intervene on that case. Then we find that we have to compensate for intervening with that second creature by going after a third when what we really should have done is held back and let nature take its course, or, as so many others have mentioned here, we should have addressed the fundamental cause of the problem, which I don't believe is the cormorant.

This bill I think potentially opens a Pandora's box of wildlife management issues, and as we open that box wider, more and more problems come out. Another way I thought of it is that it risks the kinds of dynamics that occur when you get a bad haircut – well, you may wonder what I'm referring to there – like the one I might have right now, some people say. For example, your barber or in my case my wife – she cuts my hair – maybe starts cutting on one side and she overcompensates, so then she goes back to try to correct it on the other side and overcompensates again, and pretty soon I don't have any hair left. The same kind of dynamic could actually occur – and I'm getting serious here now — as a result of this bill. We correct the cormorant problem, but it turns out that that leads us to correcting another problem, which means we have to correct yet another problem, and so it goes until we are in really deep.

So I'm getting increasingly uncomfortable with this bill, and the amendment – well, it does do what a couple of other members have said: it clarifies some issues. It makes perhaps a better use of language. It doesn't address what I see as a very substantial concern. So I'm afraid I will be opposing the amendment.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

MR. DANYLUK: If I can, I would just like to address a couple of questions as you referred to the amendment. I'd sure very much be concerned if you were getting in too deep. No. What happened, I would like to suggest, is that fish stocks are very much endangered. I think we all agree. If I can alleviate some of the concerns of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, this is not what I would consider open season on an animal. It has to go through the government minister's direction. This is also going to be brought forward in consultation with their biologists. This very much talks about the balance of the ecosystem.

I would also like to refer you to section 33.1(2), where it suggests that "'animal' and 'bird' do not include an endangered animal as defined in the Wildlife Act." I think that's very important as well so that we are not threatening animals or birds that could be under the endangered species.

I would like to also make a couple of comments to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona. He did make comments also in regards to I believe the amendments and one person's explanation of what is happening. I would also like to suggest that I have talked with that individual and have also seen the documentation that he has written, and that's Dr. Richard Thomas. I do believe that we agree on one aspect or maybe numerous aspects, that cormorants are not the only problem. When we refer to cormorants or pests, there have been a lot of things that have taken place that have depleted fish stocks. Without a doubt, not from the comments that he's making but from my comments in answer to you, drought has been one of them. The declining water levels has definitely been one of them. With the decreasing water supply what happens is that beavers have built dams on the mouths of rivers, not enabling fish to be able to spawn going upstream. The fish that we have in Alberta do not have the ability to jump beaver dams to be able to go spawn. So, I mean, that's definitely another problem.

You talk about commercial fishing and angling. We would be in a great situation ourselves, all of us in this room, if we had hindsight as a vision, but what happens is that we can only do what we can to try to better a situation. That is what we're doing right now with commercial fishing as far as rationalization. We are looking at different avenues to try to promote fish. This bill basically only addresses one aspect of it, and you're right. Okay?

I would just like to stress to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona again that Fish and Wildlife will be the controller of the balance under the direction of the minister, if that gives any ease to your concerns.

Thank you very much.

3:50

DR. MASSEY: I appreciate the opportunity to make a few comments about Bill 206, Mr. Chairman, and appreciate that what Bill 206 proposes is already possible through a variety of other laws that are in place in the province. But I think Bill 206 does really focus on a much broader issue that I don't think we have spent much time looking at in the debate so far.

If you look historically at the relationship between humans and the environment, there seems to have been a notion for hundreds of years now – our attitude towards human nature, I guess since medieval times, has been one of acquiring absolute mastery over nature; that is, we've assumed, with some successes in the Middle Ages, that we could control certain parts of the environment, that we could free ourselves from the scourge of epidemics and drought and various other catastrophes that befell mankind. The successes have grown of course with technology and advances in biology and other sciences, so we have really reached this point where if a pest comes along, like in this case the cormorant, and it threatens an industry, then the natural reaction is: well, if that's what's causing the problem, then let's get rid of it; let's find the best mechanism we can and eradicate the problem.

I think that that kind of attitude is one that is being increasingly re-examined. I think the role of the government in the management of species is being questioned, and it's being questioned for good reason. There's been mention of the endangered species that we have concern with now, and one of the former members said: well, you know, the cormorant isn't an endangered species. Well, neither were the peregrine falcons at one time, nor were the whooping cranes or the trumpeter swans or the burrowing owls. At one time they weren't on anyone's endangered species list, but they are now, and I think that what it points to are the mistakes that can be made if we don't think through carefully our actions before taking on the kind of wildlife management that Bill 206 asks for. I think that it's a question that is continually asked in the province and is going to be asked more and more in the future: how do you balance the management of species and the marketplace? Does the decision always come down on the side of the marketplace?

I remember a member in a previous session in this Legislature making the proposal that the province take on wiping out the gopher population in the province. It was a short-lived bill, as I recall it, Mr. Chairman, but I think again that it was indicative of the kind of thinking: if there's a problem and there's an economic downside to the activities of a certain species, then the solution is to get rid of the species or get them out of the way. Again, I think that that's being questioned more and more if for no other reason than that we have no assurance that today's actions are not going to result in tomorrow's problems. It's not just the action that might be taken with respect to the cormorant and the fish stock in the province. If, you know, the human action alone in terms of trying to alleviate the problem were all that was operating – we know, for instance, with some of the endangered species that we're not alone. We have multiple activities that affect wildlife.

Climate change is an influence on species in the north. Certainly industrial development has had a great impact on species and some species ending up on the endangered list. Herbicides have had a huge, huge impact. The promise was that herbicides were to bring nothing but benefit, and we find that because we didn't have the foresight to predict the long-term impact of introducing herbicides on a large scale, we ended up with problems that at the time when herbicides were first discussed I'm sure no one envisioned. The introduction of different plants and animal species, seemingly innocent at the time, in the long run has had some very negative impacts on other species of plants and animals. In our own province the roads and power lines, the human activities have again had great influence on some species.

Bill 206 may provide an immediate solution to the problem. I'm not sure that even that's the case, but I'm even more worried about the long-term impact of this kind of activity, and I think that for those reasons, Mr. Chairman, I won't be supporting the bill.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

MR. DANYLUK: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would just like to suggest that the concerns that you have brought forward are not short-term solutions. I believe it is not an isolated solution that we are after; I believe it is a balance that we are after.

Some of the discussion that was brought forward by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry when he talked about the ecosystem and the balance of the ecosystem I very much agree with. I guess the concern that I may have is: when did the ecosystem start, and where does it end? We know the end is today, because we have the present knowledge, but where did it start? Did the ecosystem start in the dinosaur era? Did the ecosystem start before there was civilization in North America? When did the ecosystem start, and what impact did we already as citizens of this country have on that ecosystem by commercial fishing, by angling? Right?

I believe that what this bill will do will enable some balance and some management, and I would say that that is one of the reasons that it is very much open. It does have some stipulations, as I spoke of before, of not including endangered species, because I think that that's very important.

Mr. Chairman, I think we have seen and we can all agree that the amendments proposed do not change the intention or the principle of the bill but ensure that the bill can achieve what it set out to in a clear and complete manner. I would encourage you to support the amendments to the bill.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood.

MR. MASYK: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's an honour to join the debate in the Committee of the Whole on Bill 206, the Fisheries (Alberta) Amendment Act, 2002. We've listened to a great deal of debate about the need to control the population of predatory birds in order to effectively preserve fish populations in Alberta lakes.

Several members in this Assembly have described personal experiences relating to the behaviour of the double-crested cormorant and how the birds have decimated lakes and reservoirs in Alberta. The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul knows more about the horrible effects of this bird than anyone else in the House, Mr. Chairman. I would agree with the other members of the Assembly about the need to implement controls to prevent this bird from causing more harm to Alberta's aquaculture and environment. This situation is getting out of hand in some areas of the province, and the role for this Assembly is to find a solution. The challenge for this government is to act in a serious and sensible way while fulfilling our role as protectors of both Alberta's environment and Alberta entrepreneurs.

The remedy proposed in Bill 206 is to allow the minister responsible for the Fisheries (Alberta) Act to use existing legislation to control bird species that are destroying or harming fish habitat. The bill has not suggested drastic measures, nor is it suggesting anything new. Mr. Chairman, the double-crested cormorants are destroying and contaminating lakes and through their ruthlessness and predatory behaviour are undermining efforts to restore lakes damaged from overfishing. Albertans have the expertise and the resources to deal with these birds. The only thing that farmers need is a green light from this government to control the birds' exploding population.

The overall population trend of the double-breasted cormorant is significantly increasing. In 1967 there were only four colonies, totaling less than 200 nests, in Alberta. By 1980 27 colonies with 2,300 nests were documented. The total number of known nesting pairs in 1988 was estimated to be over 15,500 living in over 60 lakes in Alberta. Before the 1970s the population of cormorants was controlled inadvertently with the use of DDT. When decision-makers of the day came to the realization that DDT was terrible and harmful to the ecosystem, there was a ban put on its use, and about that time the government of the day undertook steps to restock fish supplies in the province and inadvertently provided the cormorants with a bountiful food supply. Mr. Chairman, Bill 206 will give the Department of Sustainable Resource Development a mandate to effectively prevent and manage the factors that have created the fish stock problems in this province.

Even though the bird problem described in this Assembly is a very important one, Bill 206 also deals with other issues that currently hinder a healthy development of Alberta's fish farming operations. Providing decent spawning routes will facilitate the natural ability of fish stocks to develop. This can only be maintained by proactively removing beaver dams that pose a problem for certain fish species' migration. Mr. Chairman, Bill 206 will help farmers deal with any problematic beaver dams.

I support Bill 206 and the facilitation of spawning waters that will help increase the fish population naturally, which will reduce the need for restocking measures that often carry substantial additional cost. In light of this drastic situation in Lac La Biche-St. Paul and the growing concern throughout the province, I agree that this legislation is a reasonable approach to an increasingly severe problem. However, I believe that we must also be careful with the implementation and management of this legislation should it pass. We must ensure that further pest control initiatives are as effective as past pest control agencies.

In essence, Bill 206 would amend the Fisheries (Alberta) Act in such a way as to clarify the responsibility of the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development to protect the fisheries resource through the minister's power to issue deforestation orders, remove beaver dams, and restrict fishing in certain areas. Although the minister currently has all these powers, Bill 206 would provide guiding principles to proactive, sustainable management of fisheries resources.

Mr. Chairman, if the department is able to re-establish and secure routes for fish spawning and prevent overfishing, then a large portion of the problem can be solved. However, these steps will not rectify the problems that certain lakes and fishing areas are facing. Taking legislative action to protect our limited fisheries from natural predators is a valuable first step in the strengthening of Alberta's recreational fishing and Alberta fish farms. Bill 206 would effectively complement this government's work of restoring and preserving fish habitats in Alberta. I would encourage all hon. members in this Assembly to support this important legislation.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

MR. KNIGHT: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's my pleasure to rise today and discuss Bill 206, and I believe that this is an important bill for conservation of Alberta's natural habitat and for ecological balance. Bill 206 would allow the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development to protect Alberta's fish stocks and natural lakes from the predation and overpopulation of nongame birds.

The purpose of Bill 206 is to allow Alberta to better manage and balance the aquatic ecosystem between fish stocks and predatory consumption. Here in committee we have heard the sponsor propose an amendment to the bill which will not impact the intent of the important private member's bill. The bill continues to maintain its purpose, and that is to help maintain a balance in the environment which could very easily become out of control.

Presently Alberta is facing the overpopulation of a predatory pest who raids Alberta's fish stocks and destroys the banks and habitat of the shores around the area in which they nest and feed. The double-crested cormorant is a nongame bird, one that is unsuitable for consumption. It has few natural predators and even fewer here in Alberta. Its population has been rapidly increasing since the 1970s, and presently its population has exploded in Alberta.

At one time, Mr. Chairman, the double-crested cormorant was considered a bird in need of conservation and legislative protection in parts of the world. In the early 1970s the cormorant population was discovered to be drastically declining, and this water habitat bird was placed under protective watch and monitored by many governments and conservation groups around the world.

I think it's important to take note of the population patterns which have been developing in regions similar to ours. The double-crested cormorant in the Great Lakes region became threatened in the 1970s mainly because of PCBs being used in industrial practices. These chemicals were heavily used from the '30s to the '70s in industrial products and manufacturing until they were linked to various diseases and muscle disorders. These chemicals were found to be extremely harmful to humans and ecologically damaging in many aspects. They have, Mr. Chairman, been banned.

By the late 1980s and early 1990s many of the cormorant groups which had been monitored had doubled in numbers of nesting pairs. This rapid population increase was for the most part at that time considered good news to conservationists and bird lovers alike. The conservation programs had been a success, and the cormorant population seemed to be thriving once again. This rapid increase in the cormorant population was considered a good thing after the ban of PCBs because their presence proved that the quality and ecological standards of the industrial Great Lakes area was improving. Having the birds around showed that environmentally the region was in better condition.

However, populations continued to increase, and it became apparent in the early '90s that the Great Lakes region was developing a bird problem. Nesting pairs had exploded from 1,500 to 5,000, counted on one island alone. The cormorant population increased so significantly that a variety of problems began to be associated with the increases, including impacts on aquaculture, sport and commercial fisheries, natural habitats, and other bird species.

Mr. Chairman, conservation groups in the Great Lakes region, particularly on the U.S. side, have gone to great lengths to investigate the impact of cormorants on the fish population and effects on the environment around their nesting sites. There seems to be a pattern which follows the double-crested cormorant, which is demonstrated in extensive research done in cormorant control in the Great Lakes region. As environmental conditions improve, so too does their population, but their population improved to a point of overpopulation and explosive numbers in some areas, resulting in extensive degradation to the environment. Then the birds expand their nesting territory, and the pattern continues to move in an outward direction.

Mr. Chairman, this pattern has found its way to the beautiful environment of Alberta. The double-crested cormorant has migrated to Alberta's lakes and has already destroyed large areas of habitat and depleted fish stocks. There is need in this case to learn from others' experiences, and we realize that there is a need to react to the population that is exploding in Alberta before it destroys whole areas like it has destroyed whole islands in the Great Lakes region. As well, our fish reserves are an important part of Alberta's resources, and currently they are being threatened by a large and very capable fishing bird that has no natural predators in Alberta. We didn't see the problems that this bird would bring and the aquacultural imbalance it could create in our province 20 or 30 years ago because its population was kept in check by unnatural effects on its eggs.

Complete obliteration is not what Bill 206 is looking to accomplish. However, it is important to recognize that the minister needs to be given the ability to control this significant threat to Alberta's environment and aquaculture. Overpopulation by this nongame bird is a very real hazard to Alberta, and something must be done to ensure that it is controlled and doesn't become the destructive nuisance it is in the Great Lakes region.

I am in support of Bill 206 because I believe it will allow the minister to investigate ways to strike a balance that would be the natural rate of existence with this and other pests and save the environment, which is so important to all of Alberta. I encourage all of my colleagues to vote in the same interest and support Bill 206. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Bill 205

School Trustee Statutes Amendment Act, 2002

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to make a few concluding remarks and to move third reading of Bill 205, the School Trustee Statutes Amendment Act, 2002.

I would like just at this point to indicate in summary that what the bill does is amend the Local Authorities Election Act in a very specific way by introducing the fact that an employee of a school district or division, a charter school, or a private school is not eligible to seek election on a school board unless that individual, the employee, "is on a leave of absence granted under this section," and that is the section that specifically indicates that an individual, the employee, upon nomination, must have sought a leave of absence.

I also want to indicate that there are two amendments to the School Act in this statutes amendment act. The first indicates that the only relationship deemed a conflict of interest in pecuniary matters is that of spouse. The other one indicates that every trustee upon election would be required to file with the secretary of their respective school district a disclosure statement. Of course, it would be understood that should circumstances change over the course of their tenure as trustee, individuals would, as we do for Assembly members, update it.

I would urge all members to vote in favour of Bill 205 because I believe it will accomplish two things. It will seek clarity and understanding for the rules. It will also create a greater inclusion model for the participation of all trustees when participating at the decision-making table.

Thank you.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just to make a few comments on third reading. I believe that it's an unnecessary bill, I believe that it's punitive, and I believe that it attacks a group of citizens and takes away their rights. I'm disappointed that it's before us at this time and that it hasn't been withdrawn. It is a private member's bill. Should it become a government bill, I think it would have a very negative impact, particularly on rural boards in the province, on the ability of those boards to recruit quality candidates who can contribute to the educational enterprise.

With those comments, Mr. Speaker, I would urge members to vote against this bill.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

MR. DUCHARME: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish to add my comments on Bill 205, the School Trustee Statutes Amendment Act, 2002. I have concerns with this bill as it excludes a class of people, namely teachers, from participating in one level of our democratic process. With last week's amendment to this bill teachers may seek office as a school trustee if they obtain a leave of absence from their employer to run in the election. If successful in the election, they would then have to resign from their employment. This is a very high price to pay for a teacher who feels that they may be able to make a difference in our education system.

I served the Bonnyville-Cold Lake area as a trustee for the Lakeland Roman Catholic school district from 1986 to 1992. I received an honorarium from the board at that time for attendance at various board and committee meetings. I know that honorariums have increased in the past 10 years. However, they have not risen enough to provide one with an adequate income to maintain a pauper's lifestyle.

The amendment allows teachers to seek public office as school trustees. However, it made the opportunity available to only the very wealthy teachers or the very lucky teachers: those who may have won a lottery, quit their teaching profession, and now want to try their hand at politics. Chances of finding this type of individual to seek public office are rather slim to none.

Mr. Speaker, in last year's school board election a teacher and friend of mine sought a position for the Lakeland Catholic school board. This individual had taught for all of his career for the Lakeland board and had retired a year or so prior to last fall's election. Over the years he was very respected and appreciated by parents, students, board members, and the community for his teaching skills. This teacher did make a difference in the education of many students. On election night I had the privilege of attending a victory party at his home as he was successful in his first attempt at public office as a trustee for Lakeland Catholic. He was so successful that he topped the polls, supported by most voters in the west division of the school district, who felt that his past experience teaching for Lakeland Catholic would make a difference in the operations and policies of the Lakeland Catholic school board.

You might be wondering where I'm going with this. He is retired from Lakeland Catholic; therefore he qualifies to run as an elected trustee, according to Bill 205. I do not know the exact reason, however, that this teacher decided to seek other employment as a distance education teacher for home schoolers for another school district 130 kilometres away from Bonnyville. Therefore, if this bill that we are now debating should pass, he would be ineligible to seek re-election next time. How can I as the MLA for Bonnyville-Cold Lake deny this teacher that opportunity and the Lakeland Catholic school supporters the opportunity of re-electing this individual in 2004? The majority of the voters supported this individual in 2001, and it's up to these voters to support or not support him in 2004. Election day is report card day for all incumbents at all political levels by the voters and not by the individual MLA who will now decide this teacher's fate by supporting Bill 205, the School Trustee Statutes Amendment Act, 2002.

Mr. Speaker, I respect and support teacher Bob Kleinman as an individual, teacher, and school board trustee, as did those voters in October 2001. I ask the members of this Assembly to also support Mr. Kleinman by voting against Bill 205. As elected provincial officials we must also consider the wishes of our constituents who in October 2001 exercised their democratic rights to elect a teacher to their school board. They elected someone that they felt would represent them well in the education of their children and grandchildren. Allow these voters to decide if he did or did not represent them well as a member of Lakeland Catholic school board rather than letting this private member's bill make that decision.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I urge all members to vote against Bill 205, the School Trustee Statutes Amendment Act, 2002. Thank you.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

MR. RATHGEBER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed a pleasure to rise today and speak in favour of Bill 205 in third reading. Bill 205 would ensure that individuals who would face a pecuniary conflict of interest in the course of their duties as school trustees are prevented from seeking nomination and therefore election. This bill is not a slight against teachers – far from it – and it is not an attack on teachers. I feel that Alberta teachers do a very good job for our children, and they should be commended for the fine job that they do on a daily basis. What this bill does as amended is ensure that only candidates who are capable of fulfilling all of the obligations for which they are elected would be able to run for a trustee position on any school board in Alberta.

The government of Alberta, Mr. Speaker, delegates much of its authority for the governance of education to locally elected school boards. Decisions made by school boards include adopting an annual budget for the school system, planning and setting priorities for the jurisdiction in light of available resources, making policy to guide the administration of employees toward district goals, and adjudicating in policy disputes while communicating with the community and staff on behalf of that jurisdiction. All of these duties are delegated to local school boards. These responsibilities are extremely important, and when decisions are being made, the board must be able to have a meaningful debate among all of the members who were elected to that school board.

I understand that at some point there will be instances when conflicts of interest will arise and a member will have to excuse himself from that discussion. This is all fine if it happens only occasionally, but as the debate for this bill continues, we have heard many situations where these problems are repeated and multiplied to the point where one trustee is left to make crucial decisions entirely on his or her own. To me, Mr. Speaker, this is not acceptable. If you're elected, you should be available to make tough decisions and to make those decisions consistently. That is why Bill 205 was brought in: to ensure that school boards will have people running for a trustee position and will be available to sit and make those tough decisions.

Bill 205 proposes two excellent reforms to the school trustee act that span the Local Authorities Election Act and the School Act. The first amendment that the bill proposes would be that those elected to a school board will be able to fully participate in debate. The second amendment that Bill 205 proposes would provide clear and narrowed circumstances for pecuniary conflict of interest scenarios arising due to family relationships and financial matters that come before the board.

Bill 205 was brought in so that we could improve the performance of Alberta school boards by disqualifying potential trustee candidates who would likely face conflicts of interest and would have to abstain from important budgetary decisions and voting because of the fact that they are employees of that school district. Conflicts arise because many school board trustees are active teachers and a situation has come up where that employee suddenly becomes the employer. This, Mr. Speaker, is not acceptable.

Imagine, if you will, a board that has five trustees and of those five trustees three are active teachers employed by the province. At some point in the year budgetary decisions must be made. Now, on this board under current legislation three out of the five trustees must not partake in budgetary discussions and deliberations because they are in direct conflict. Therefore, if my math is done correctly – and I think it is – we have two out of the five trustees left to make a tough budgetary decision on the board. We cannot allow this to happen, Mr. Speaker. How can we justify to the voters of this province that we will allow someone to run for a school board position just to have them abstain from the most important decision that they are elected to make?

Bill 205 corrects this problem, and it does so by changing the rules of who can be eligible to sit on school boards. First, I think we need to be clear that anybody in Alberta can run for school board trustee. If you're eligible under the rules, including those in Bill 205, then you can run. However, if you are an employee of the Alberta education system, you must take a leave of absence from your job to be nominated, and if you win the election, you must resign from your previous job. The reason for asking employees of the Alberta education system to resign from their job if elected is so that they will be able to fully participate in the discussions and the debates that come to the school board table. They will be able to make tough decisions, and they will be accountable for those decisions that they make. Bill 205 makes school trustees more responsible and accountable for their duties. Mr. Speaker, we must all remember that this bill enhances our school boards. As has been stated before in this debate, this bill will strengthen our school boards and will no doubt make our system stronger in the future.

Bill 205 also narrows the scope of individuals who are deemed to share a pecuniary conflict of interest with the school trustee to the trustee's spouse. Currently the School Act identifies trustees' children, parents, and the parents of their spouses within that category. Mr. Speaker, I believe that this is too broad and that we need to narrow the scope so that trustees can do the job that they have been elected to do.

Legislation, Mr. Speaker, currently allows the problem of abstention due to pecuniary interests to remain and to persist. It simply provides that trustees declare conflicts of interest and abstain from related proceedings. As well, it accommodates situations where the whole board is unable to participate by appointing a single official to assume the role of the school board. This is not acceptable, and it is time to step forward and correct this inadequacy.

Mr. Speaker, one aspect I'm very happy about in all of this is that I believe that the debate on Bill 205 has increased awareness of school trustees and the great job that they do in this province. Everyone in this Chamber believes that their trustees are the best and most committed people to have in charge of our education system. Bill 205 merely allows them to do the job that they were elected to do.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I believe that the changes Bill 205 brings to our school system are very positive. Trustees will fulfill their duties on a full-time basis, and our system will be strengthened. I urge all hon. members in this Assembly to vote favourably on Bill 205.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have just a few comments here on Bill 205. Again, I must agree with so many of the comments that the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake made earlier. What a great, great contribution so many of these people have made to the educational system here in Alberta over the years, and to think that with this bill they can be denied access without some great financial decision that they have to make in order to represent people – I will continue to argue very strongly against Bill 205.

Now, then, I do certainly agree with some of the amendments that now free up family members of teachers in continuing their role on school boards. I did have the chance to talk with a family member where the dad is a teacher; the mother sat on the school board for roughly 15 to 17 years in Mayerthorpe, a member of the Northern Gateway regional division No. 10. Because of her position on the school board she also had the opportunity to chair the Yellowhead Regional Library Board. I think what a great, great loss she would have been if this legislation hadn't been amended and she could not have sat on those boards. So I certainly do agree with the amendments.

The next thing here is that this is a very punitive bill, and it's punitive in that it does restrict representation of a certain segment of society. As well, it does limit the democratic process, and it limits who people in a community can vote for. Even though somebody is a taxpayer that has all other qualifications, we are going to cut them out of the opportunity of being a school board member. It would seem to me that rather than introducing and debating a bill, a punitive bill which would limit some people's opportunity to serve on school boards without some financial hardship being introduced, there are other mechanisms that we could use in order to take care of situations the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder mentioned, where two out of five people were eligible to debate budgetary systems. So there certainly are other opportunities.

As well, it strikes me as quite odd that in debating a bill of this nature, we never heard from the sponsor of the bill as to how many school boards in the province would have less than, say, 50 percent representation because of people occupying these positions. When we look at roles of trustees, the opportunities for there being a conflict of interest are certainly limited. They perform so many other duties, and certainly their wisdom and experience is of great importance. Particularly when we could constitute other mechanisms to handle situations where there is a conflict of interest, then I certainly cannot support this bill.

I think of my first term in the Legislature here, Mr. Speaker, when we had an hon. member from Calgary whose husband also sat on a health board. She would disqualify herself from those particular discussions that we had on the health board. We don't have any legislation limiting those people from seeking an elected representative position in this House, yet we're going to turn around and institute legislation, if this bill is successful, to do that to another group of people. Again, I certainly can't see how the courts would support a bill of this nature, particularly when we're not consistent with what we do in this Assembly with our members.

I would certainly urge all members not to support this bill, and I would urge that because it does disenfranchise one segment of our population, a segment that does have special abilities, that does have a great interest in education and certainly in the course and the history of education in this province has made a considerable contribution to our education process.

[The Speaker in the chair]

Again I thank you for the opportunity to speak to Bill 205 at this stage, and I would urge all members not to support this bill. Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

MRS. ADY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to have the opportunity today to speak to Bill 205, the School Trustee Statutes Amendment Act, 2002.

We live in an age where we place a premium on accountability. "The buck stops here" could almost be our motto, you might say. Beyond that, as a legislative body elected by our peers, we have made promises, both while running for office and since forming the government, that we must keep to our respective constituents and to all Albertans. Part of any such promise must include a commitment to steer clear of any conflict of interest, both those that are real and those that are perceived. As public servants we have to adhere to certain laws and regulations in order to avoid finding ourselves in a conflict of interest situation.

We are of course not alone in having to observe such laws and regulations. There is a long-time prohibition on what often is called insider trading on the stock market, for instance, and physicians cannot accept money from drug companies to prescribe particular drugs to the exclusion of others. Quite frankly, NHL hockey referees can't even work games in the same city they're from, and that goes the same for off-ice refereeing staff. That's how far-reaching the concern of potential conflict of interest is in our society.

Mr. Speaker, school boards are no exception in this matter. Bill 205 takes a two-prong approach to streamlining the circumstances and conditions under which an individual can become and serve as a school board trustee. First, it narrows the limits on who may serve as a trustee, and secondly, Bill 205 nips in the bud any candidacy that might otherwise be plagued by conflict of interest, particularly those of a pecuniary nature.

With its amendment, Mr. Speaker, Bill 205 is now an even better bill than it was in its original format as it makes the nomination and the election procedures for school trustees fully consistent with the Local Authorities Election Act. Currently this particular act mandates that any municipal employee wishing to run for office must take a leave of absence without compensation prior to his or her nomination. In the event that the employee wins the election, he or she must resign from his or her position with the municipality.

At the present time, Mr. Speaker, many of the crucial provisions of the Local Authorities Election Act do not apply to candidates for school boards. At the present time, therefore, an individual can be an employee of the school and run for its school board in an election. Quite clearly this scenario opens up the possibility that a wide range of conflict of interest might arise.

If passed, Bill 205 would drastically limit the possibility of such conflict of interest by making a person ineligible to be nominated as a candidate for election as a trustee of a school board if on nomination day he or she is a school employee in whatever capacity of whatever school anywhere in Alberta. For instance, under Bill 205 a school employee living in, say, Sherwood Park would no longer be able to run for school trustee in Edmonton any more than he or she could run in Sherwood Park. But, differently, what can't be brought in through the front door won't be brought in through the back door either thanks to Bill 205.

Being a school board trustee is a task that carries with it significant responsibilities. To be sure, Mr. Speaker, it's a voluntary engagement, but beyond that, the person who is elected to the school board is entrusted with nothing less than creating and administering the best possible learning environment for our children. We already know that for a job fraught with such a high degree of responsibility, the pay isn't that great. Trustees tend to get compensated only for the time spent in meetings. Why, then, would someone want to be a trustee? This is a job that not only involves a lot of responsibility, but it also involves making tough decisions, decisions which from time to time a lot of people will not like.

The reasons why someone would run for a position as a school board trustee are probably as widespread and as many as there are trustees, Mr. Speaker, but I think that aside from the strictly personal there is a core value that is shared by all trustees. They really care about public education, and they're really concerned that children in public education get the high-quality education that they deserve. True, to be a school board trustee does not empower someone to shape the curriculum, nor does it bestow upon someone the responsibility to determine how knowledge is transmitted from teacher to student. That said, school board trustees are given wide latitude in a variety of arenas, and chief amongst them are policymaking, communication, and finances.

The public is most keenly aware of the work of school board trustees when their local school board votes on the budget. However, they do not make these budget decisions in a vacuum. In a sense it's fair to say that the school board trustees act as referees when it comes to the budget. Teachers and principals have their particular areas of concern, and parents have theirs. To mitigate, the trustees come and visit the schools, ask questions, hold public meetings, and then make their decision on what gets funded and by how much.

Mr. Speaker, by establishing restrictions on who may serve as a school board trustee, Bill 205 would also limit the number of occurrences when due to pecuniary interests a trustee must recuse himself or herself from deliberations. Moreover, Bill 205 would establish parameters around the specific kinds of circumstances that would automatically be deemed in conflict for reasons of pecuniary interests.

This bill makes a lot of sense to me. By passing Bill 205, we would make the regulations for school board elections consistent with other kinds of elections that occur from time to time in all municipalities. Clarity, I think we can all agree, is good, Mr. Speaker, and particularly so when it might help us to avoid conflict of interest or perceived conflict of interest. Considering that trustees of school boards tend to wear three different hats – that of policymaker, communicator, and those in charge of the purse strings – it is vitally important that they and their on-the-job performance be squeaky clean. We all know that regardless of how ill-formed a perception might be, it often sticks.

Undoubtedly conflicts of interest will occur in the future just as they have in the past. Bill 205, however, will go a long way in trying to prevent situations such as those that arose in the Northern Lights public school division and the Medicine Hat public school division. We've already heard how many trustees had to recuse themselves in each situation. The numbers themselves may be appalling, but what is an even greater source of concern is that in recusing themselves, they were not able to fulfill the trust that their constituents had placed in them by voting for them. That is why it's imperative that all of us who hold public office at whatever level avoid conflict of interest, real and perceived, whenever possible.

In the case of trustees and school boards the code of ethics of the Alberta School Boards Association states unequivocally that a trustee will resist every temptation and outside pressure to use [his or her] position as a school board member to benefit either [himself or herself] or any other individual or agency apart from the total interest of the school jurisdiction.

Mr. Speaker, our constituents, be they young or old or in or out of school, deserve Bill 205, and I urge all of my colleagues to vote in favour. Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Medicine Hat.

MR. RENNEN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to spend a little bit of time discussing Bill 205. As some members may know, I did speak to this bill at committee stage, and at that time I expressed I guess it could be best stated as cautious support for the bill. I recognize that there are some issues. I enunciated at that time the issue with respect to the Medicine Hat board from my perspective as the Member for Medicine Hat, and I recognize that the Member for St. Albert has a very legitimate concern that needs to be addressed.

I guess the concern that I have – and in the ensuing days since I last spoke I have had some of my concerns somewhat alleviated, but Mr. Speaker, as you well know and as all members know, in this world nothing is black and white. It sure would be nice if it was. It sure would be nice if we could know that the issue at hand, the problem that we've enunciated, will be solved for all time by passing this bill. Unfortunately, that's not necessarily the case. On the other hand, I think this bill goes a long way toward solving that problem, and if we discover after the bill goes into practice that there are other issues that were not addressed by this bill or that there are further interpretations of this bill that do not necessarily conform to the wishes of the House and the understanding the members had during the debate on the bill, then I think that we have at least moved the yardsticks along.

One of the things that concerns me, Mr. Speaker, about the debate that we've had on this bill is the constant reference to teachers. I'm not concerned about reference to teachers. What I'm concerned about is the fact that the bill does not address itself specifically to teachers. It addresses itself to employees of school divisions. I think that's a significant difference. There's been the assumption that this refers to teachers, but it also refers to administrators. It refers to support staff and everyone else who is employed. While we've heard arguments about whether or not teachers should or should not be eligible to serve, I don't think anyone would argue that administrators would be even less in a position to be eligible for standing on school boards.

So that's where I get to my comments about black and white. The issue, no matter what we discuss in this place, always seems to be various shades of gray. I'm going to, as I said before, support the bill. Although I see this not as entirely white, not as entirely fixing the problem at hand, I think it's decidedly moved away from the black side. It is a very light gray. I think it resolves the problems as best we can, and if it doesn't, we can always deal with that at a later point.

So with that, Mr. Speaker, I'll take my place.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

MR. BOUTILIER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to say that the advice I was given was to stand on my chair, but I'm pleased to say that I am standing on the floor. I would like to rise to speak against Bill 205.

I spoke to citizens in Fort McMurray who belong to school boards, and quite simply, also, I spoke to citizens and teachers, and the input I received is that they believe that things are not broken and leave them alone. I would like to say that I believe that no matter what background a trustee or a teacher brings, they obviously, as all members of this Assembly would agree, want to serve the best interests of the public. The hon. Member for St. Albert, who's brought this important issue to the floor, I think, though, should be recognized for the important points that she has raised. In dealing with a conflict of interest, obviously her intention – and I do not at all question the spirit of what she's attempting to do – is to look at conflict of interest areas that can be avoided in the future.

I do believe, though, that there are ways to be able to deal with the conflicts of interest, be it at a municipal council or be it at a school board council, without having to go to this Bill 205. In my discussion, in my background as a teacher, both my wife and I, I can say – and I know that some hon. members in this Assembly who have similar backgrounds have served in some instances where they in fact belonged to one board and actually worked for another board, and ultimately they would not be able to contribute because they would be forced to take a leave of absence.

I think the financial restrictiveness of this could present some problems. As was mentioned by some other members in here this afternoon, unless you won the lottery, you may not be able to participate. I believe that Bill 205, based on the situation that is presently in my constituency – we have had many citizens who in fact work for one school board and actually then serve in an elected capacity in another school board and do a very good job, and I can say without fear of contradiction that it works very well.

I don't want to lose the intent of what is being attempted to be achieved here, but at this point based on what citizens have talked to me about, I'd like to say that I'll speak against Bill 205 at this time. I think the contribution of be it teachers or be it other citizens, no matter what board they work for or in fact serve in their elected capacity, serves democracy well. Consequently, I will not support Bill 205 at this time, but I thank the hon. Member for St. Albert for having a very, I think, spirited debate on an important topic and serving citizens of all Alberta.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, for recognizing me. I'd like to speak on Bill 205 in its third reading. The last time I spoke on this bill was on April 8, and I laid out in some detail my reasons for opposing this bill. The bill has since been somewhat amended, but the primary objections that I had to the bill stand, and the hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake has iterated those concerns quite eloquently.

I think the bill really in a sense is trying to address a problem that doesn't exist except in theory and potential, and we can always think of things that might happen. It will disenfranchise or certainly discourage not only 32,000-plus teachers in the province, who do such a wonderful job in serving our public education system and hundreds of thousands of our children in hundreds and hundreds of communities, but it also will take away from many other employees the opportunity to run. So it will affect 30,000-some teachers, their spouses, and if you include all the other employees who will be affected, the count is into hundreds of thousands, and I think the bill goes too far in trying to secure some concern that should be addressed with respect to conflict of interest in so doing. I think there are easier ways, less extreme ways in which the matter of conflict of interest, whether it has to do with an employee working for a school board running for a school board position or an employee or a nurse or a doctor working for a health authority – you know, it has to deal with that, ways in which those matters can be addressed without taking away from such a large number of people the opportunity to run unless they are willing to pay a heavy financial cost, in this case now.

It's a bill that has received considerable debate in this House. The bill comes at a time, Mr. Speaker, with all its faults and the perceived threat as seen by teachers, administrators, educational administrators, and other school employees of their ability to run, an attack on their rights – teachers see it as an antiteacher bill. It's certainly antidemocratic in my judgment. In a House which symbolizes our democratic rights, which is here to protect those rights – for this House to be asked to pass a bill that in fact will limit those democratic rights quite severely for a particular group of people who serves our education system I think is simply something that we shouldn't even think of proceeding with, but here we are with this bill. It's before us. As I said, Bill 205 received some considerable debate, a discussion on it, a debate on it. It may have been drafted long before Bill 12 was drafted. Bill 12 has caused very serious damage to the relations between teachers and the government.

The Member for Airdrie-Rocky View, in relation to her comments on the debate on the estimates for the Department of Learning, drew the attention of those broken relationships and that the government has to make special attempts to repair those. This Assembly has that responsibility as well. Bill 205 is a private member's bill. This Assembly should ask the question of whether or not the passage of this bill will hinder the healing of that broken relationship just as the hon. Member for Airdrie-Rocky View the other night raised a similar question while we were debating the budget for education under the Department of Learning.

Mr. Speaker, I wish I could support this bill, because the one redeeming feature of the bill is that it narrows the class of people who are now identified as having a potential pecuniary conflict of interest and argues on that basis that it is this group of people that are the ones who should be not allowed to run for school board office unless they meet some very stringent conditions. That's the good part of it. I wish I could vote for that part and still see the rest of the bill defeated. That is not possible.

Mr. Speaker, I have carefully thought about this bill, reflected on it. I would like the hon. Member for St. Albert to have some time to further reflect on the bill; so do the rest of us. In light of that, my desire that we have more time, give ourselves more time, I would like to move that the motion for third reading of Bill 205, School Trustee Statutes Amendment Act, 2002, be amended by striking out all the words after "that" and substituting the following:

Bill 205, School Trustee Statutes Amendment Act, 2002, be not now read a third time but that it be read a third time this day six months hence.

I have a copy of the motion to be distributed, Mr. Speaker. I would like to have that motion distributed now.

THE SPEAKER: Well, all hon. members heard the words of the amendment. The chair will view that as a hoist amendment, and debate will now proceed on the amendment, which is a hoist amendment, and the debate will be restricted to the words of the amendment.

5:00

SOME HON. MEMBERS: Question. [interjection]

THE SPEAKER: I'm sorry. Some hon. member said something but did not rise. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry on the hoist amendment.

MR. BONNER: Yes. Could we see the amendment first?

THE SPEAKER: Yes. In all fairness to all hon. members it must be circulated. We'll wait until that's done.

Hon. members, there is a document that's being circulated, and basically it says that it's being moved by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona that the motion for third reading of Bill 205, School Trustee Statutes Amendment Act, 2002, be amended by striking out all the words after "that" and substituting the following:

Bill 205, School Trustee Statutes Amendment Act, 2002, be not now read a third time but that it be read a third time this day six months hence.

So whatever debate that will follow now will be on this amendment, restricted to this amendment only.

HON. MEMBERS: Question.

THE SPEAKER: According to our rules, we must now proceed to put the motion for third reading before the Assembly. However, I'm going to recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods as a result of some consultation that occurred in the last few minutes.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would move that should there be further standing votes on this bill, there be a one-minute division bell.

THE SPEAKER: Such a request, hon. members, requires unanimous consent. Would anyone in the Assembly be opposed, should there be a division, that the bells ring for only one minute?

[Unanimous consent granted]

Bill 207

Alberta Wheat and Barley Test Market Act

[Debate adjourned April 29: Mr. Horner speaking]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

MR. HORNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just would like to conclude my comments by simply saying that the family farm in Alberta is extremely important to Albertans, and creating more value-added in the province is the saviour of the family farm. I believe that by allowing choice, we will accomplish that.

Thank you very much.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View to close the debate.

MR. HLADY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to say thank you to all hon. members for their good discussion and full debate on the issue. The one point that I would like to make to the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona is that there will be no new board out of this. I don't think he understood at the time that this would not be creating a new board. Bill 207 does not eliminate the use of the Canadian Wheat Board. Rather, it seeks to offer choices to our farmers and allow them the options to work in a free market and have the choice of doing what they want.

The one regulation that I could possibly see coming forward at this time would be that there would have to be an opt-in time. So possibly around January 1 every year the farmers would have to make a choice whether they're opting in, using the Canadian Wheat Board as a marketer, or opting out and allowing themselves to do their own choices.

Mr. Speaker, I've had a couple of responses. The Western Barley Growers Association – I have a tabling that I will put forward with the appropriate number of copies – has said a little bit in regard to this bill:

“Alberta farmers will have the opportunity to become full participants in the Alberta advantage with the passage of this bill,” said Albert Wagner, President, Western Barley Growers . . . commenting on Bill 207.

Also, the chief agricultural critic for the Alliance, Howard Hilstrom, has put forward a letter that has said that.

So, Mr. Speaker, I will table those letters and look forward to calling the question.

[Motion carried; Bill 207 read a second time]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. STEVENS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that we call it 5:30 and adjourn until 8 o'clock this evening.

Motor Vehicle Exhaust System Standards

507. Mr. Yankowsky moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly of Alberta urge the government to introduce binding and enforceable legislation to make it a provincial offence to operate a motor vehicle with an exhaust system that has been modified such that it no longer meets the standards for noise suppression set out in the Motor Vehicle Safety Act of Canada for that class of vehicle.

[Debate adjourned April 29: Dr. Taft speaking]

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to carry forward the debate I was making before by saying thank you to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview for forwarding to me some detailed information and some of the background legislation from the Highway Traffic Act on acceptable noise levels for highway traffic and giving me a sense of how noise from vehicles is controlled. There's even an attachment of the decibel ratings, as I understand it. So I do appreciate that effort by the sponsoring member of this motion.

Having gone through some of the material, as much as I could understand it, and having given some thought to my own experience with the issue of motor vehicles that have been modified and are extremely loud, I'm inclined to speak in favour of this motion. I think it's probably a good idea to extend the legislation controlling the noise standards of vehicles to cover vehicles that have been modified after they've been purchased. There's no reason, it seems to me, that people should be able to go home and modify their vehicles to make them really noisy and get away with breaking the law that otherwise they couldn't break if it were an unmodified vehicle. I like the idea that noise, as I was saying when we adjourned before, is a health issue. There is actually interesting research on the noise effects, the stress effects, and the health effects of being exposed to inordinate noise, and there are moments in this Assembly when we probably all feel that stress and maybe even feel that a health issue is involved in our day-to-day work. Anyway, that's an aside. That might be the subject for a different motion from the same member or somebody else.

Seriously, there is a health issue to excessive noise, not simply going deaf but actual effects from the stress caused by the noise: increased rates of disease, increased rates of cardiovascular disease. So I think I will be supporting this motion, and I encourage others to give it very serious consideration as well.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

MR. LORD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I finally get up to do a speech. Good evening, everyone. It's my pleasure to rise in support of Motion 507 tonight, which urges the government to work to eradicate an increasing pollution problem in our communities, specifically altered mufflers which are designed to produce excessive noise. In fact, I am very pleased to support this motion since it is an issue I've been concerned with for some years, and in fact I even introduced a similar request myself some years ago while on Calgary city council, only to be told that this was a provincial matter. Well, now, here I am. You know what they say: if at first you don't succeed, try, try again. So here we go.

Mr. Speaker, as an Albertan let me say that I appreciate the space and the general tranquility found throughout Alberta even in our cities, at least in the residentially zoned communities. It is one of the reasons that I chose to make this the province where I raised my family and enjoyed my life. Walking down some of even our busier streets in the summertime is generally still a pleasant experience because there isn't the dense noise traffic, broken exhaust systems, and so on that some of us are familiar with from having visited foreign cities and countries. Many Albertans I think would agree with me in choosing to live here for some of the same reasons. Cleaner air, fewer crowds, a more comfortable amount of space: these are all some of the Alberta advantages.

However, there is something that often disturbs our enjoyment of this peace, and that would be the quite astounding amount of noise that can be generated by a souped-up muffler. In fact, it's quite an oxymoron when you think about it: a muffler which is deliberately designed to make noise as opposed to muffle noise. Mr. Speaker, why some people would deliberately want to create an excessive amount of noise, deliberately want to upset the tranquil atmosphere of a quiet residential community – well, that's something that I will leave up to psychologists and social studiers to speculate upon.

But whatever sad excuse such people may have to attempt to justify such behaviour, suffice it to say that mufflers which have been altered away from factory specifications to deliberately cause noise pollution I personally do not feel in any way make a positive contribution to our communities. They especially do not make a positive contribution when their owners deliberately roar up and down quiet residential streets early on Sunday mornings or very late on Saturday nights and many other nights as well, which unfortunately happens quite regularly in my constituency and throughout the city as well.

Recently there have been scientific discoveries that prove that there are detrimental and severely damaging effects to people caused by noise pollution. Noise pollution causes stress in many people and can cause a number of other problems as well: loss of sleep, hearing damage, distraction at a critical moment, even heart palpitations. I support Motion 507 because I believe that noise pollution is a problem that is steadily growing in our province and needs to be addressed wherever possible. It is especially acute in the inner city, where there is constant traffic and thus a bit of a problem anyway without the added burden of empowering people who are deliberately trying to disturb others by letting them modify their mufflers. We see it more and more with motorcycles but also with beefed-up sports cars. They rev them up and race them up and down the block to stop at the next red light. Then they repeat the process all the way down the next street. It's distracting, disrupting. As I mentioned, the scientific studies have now proven that excessive noise is even harmful to our health, and it isn't just me or the Alberta health authorities that are saying this, Mr. Speaker.

While Alberta is leading the health revolution in Canada and while we're being innovative in looking at new ways of doing what we can to ensure that Albertans are healthy and enjoy a high-quality life, we should recognize that the World Health Organization itself has recognized excessive noise as not only a nuisance but a health hazard which should be taken seriously. It is also apparently the case that while all of us are affected, babies are particularly susceptible to the effects of excessive noise. Because of their not-yet-matured state of development, loud noises can damage babies' tender eardrums and may be causing some damage that will be irreversible. If this damage or impairment of hearing happens to an infant at an early age, it can lead to other complications such as speech impairments. A child continues to learn different sounds and tones until about the age of eight, and apparently these developments become difficult if the child is unable to properly hear the sound or audibly recognize certain tones.

As I mentioned earlier, impairment of hearing isn't the only extent of the damage that can be caused, however. Higher noise levels can cause higher blood pressure, heart rates, and increased levels of stress. As many of us are aware, stress creates fitful sleep patterns which affect the everyday activities of the individual. None of us are strangers to stress. I believe, Mr. Speaker, that we have enough cause for stress in our lives without the added pressure of excessive and very unnecessary noise on our streets.

The World Health Organization has also linked excessive noise levels with something else which may not be commonly known. Noise pollution's ill effects have been linked to psychophysiological damage, where a person, especially a child, could become overly fearful of the external world or develop other anxieties or phobias. Of course, it is understood that not every child is going to grow timid and have a hard time developing socially because one overly loud bike blew past him on the street unexpectedly, but these types of occurrences apparently can breed a fear or apprehension which may not be detected until later in life.

If you think about it, how many people still have or have had to get past a fear of dogs from their childhood? You can understand why others may fear bikers or teenagers in hot cars if you think about that. Fears and traumas don't always have to be physically related. You don't have to be bitten to be afraid of dogs. In fact, dogs are commonly feared, interestingly enough, because of their very loud and sometimes unexpected barking, another type of noise pollution. I am concerned that these types of loud noises as made by modified mufflers might be causing similar consequences, and the occurrence of modified mufflers appears to be becoming more and more trendy. I feel, Mr. Speaker, that this is a trend that should be muffled before it gets any worse.

Now, people have tried to do this before, but under the current situation it is difficult to gauge or measure excess noise. There is no meter or instrument that has been developed to accurately gauge these levels in an uncontrollable environment such as on a moving vehicle speeding down a city street. It is hard to measure the noise emanating from a moving vehicle in exact decibels as added to the background noise in the community. This is why, Mr. Speaker, Motion 507 suggests an easier, more enforceable, and appropriate measure of what should be looked at instead. Banning mufflers which have been altered outside of the manufacturer's specifications would alleviate most of the problems officers have in trying to measure vehicle-specific noise levels.

Mr. Speaker, there's currently a provision in the Highway Traffic Act which sets out regulations for muffler systems. It simply states that vehicles must have an exhaust system, and this system must work without excessive noise. However, the term "excessive" is not defined by the act, and that's what makes it extremely difficult to enforce.

Motion 507 urges the government to determine a definite way of addressing what is or is not acceptable to be driving on our streets. Mufflers which have been modified from the original manufacturer's specifications in order to make more noise should just be disallowed.

All the officer would have to do if he believes that a vehicle is causing excess noise is look at whether or not the muffler has been altered. He wouldn't have to have noise meters, decibel levels measured over a period of time with base background noise levels established first, the engine working at a certain rpm and so on, and all the other technical aspects. All he'd have to do is just look at the muffler and see if it was modified or not.

Mr. Speaker, it is no secret that we are rapidly growing as a province. We spend a great deal of government funding on infrastructure and building roadways to accommodate the increasing population in Alberta. Municipalities do plan their road systems to decrease the increasing noise from extra vehicles. However, some options like noise barriers along highways are very expensive, and these barriers certainly are not an option on most residential streets. I believe that Motion 507 is a reasonable and logical method of cutting back on that type of noise pollution. We have a responsibility to Albertans to continue to protect their quality of life, which is being threatened by a small number of vehicle owners. I think people like to enjoy some quiet in life. I think that if they wanted to be exposed to loud noise that some people think is inappropriate, they could just turn up the rock and roll on their stereos behind closed doors. I don't think they need to be hearing noisy vehicles roaring down the streets.

In conclusion, I will be supporting Motion 507, and I congratulate the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview for introducing it and for being concerned with reducing noise-related health risks in our communities. I certainly hope that all members of this Assembly will support this motion. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: I have two hon. members. I was looking at the opposition to see whether or not there was going to be a back and forth. The hon. Minister of Environment on the motion.

DR. TAYLOR: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I feel compelled to rise and speak against this motion. I mean, how much are we going to get involved in regulation of people's lives? We now want to, you know, legislate car exhaust. Is the next step to legislate human exhaust and the noise pollution that it causes? There's this whole issue around noise pollution that we already have controlled under the Highway Traffic Act. We don't need more motions. We don't need more legislation. We're far too involved with people's lives already, and this is just another step in being involved with people's lives. It's totally unnecessary.

For people to stand in this House, Mr. Speaker, and suggest that it causes heart palpitations and brain damage—sorry for laughing—is absolutely ridiculous. I don't know where people get this kind of information from. Surely not our researchers. It must be Liberal researchers.

Thirdly, Mr. Speaker, I think this is unnecessary, totally and completely unnecessary. You know, we have, as I've said, a Highway Traffic Act, which controls this. If we do pass this, what's the next step? Are we going to ask people to pass some kind of rule or legislation regarding how loud people play their car stereos when they're driving down the road? Is that the next step?

So I would encourage all members not to accept this motion. It's further interference in people's lives when it's already covered under the Highway Traffic Act, and we don't need that kind of interference. I mean, this Legislative Assembly is going far too far in interfering in people's lives. After all, from my perspective we passed a law on bike helmets which is totally inappropriate, and I know we can't go back and revisit that.

It's a situation where we don't need any more interference in people's lives. Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry, followed by the hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure to rise tonight and provide a few comments from the official Liberals in the House, not unofficial comments as the Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat tried to say.

In looking at this whole motion regarding the noise suppression for cars and what is acceptable noise and whatever, we have to look at the Highway Traffic Act. I'm looking at section 125(2).

No person shall create or cause the emission of any loud and unnecessary noise from a motor vehicle, any part of it, or any thing or substance that the motor vehicle or a part of it comes into contact with.

Now, then, that certainly leaves this whole issue of noise open to interpretation.

I also see in the Highway Traffic Act, if we look at sections 46(1) to (5), that these are some of the things that are covered: an inadequate muffler, operating a motor vehicle with a disconnected muffler, operating a motor vehicle with baffle-plate or other parts removed from the muffler, operating a motor vehicle with an enlarged exhaust outlet on the muffler, operating a motor vehicle with a device increasing noise and causing flame from the exhaust. So here again we do have this basically covered in the Highway Traffic Act already.

As well, when we look at federal legislation, Mr. Speaker, this is certainly much more definitive. It's definitive to the point where when these vehicles are tested – and I'm reading right now from section 2(b)(i): “the exterior sound level does not exceed 83 [decibels] when a value of 2 [decibels] is subtracted from the highest average sound level recorded.” Now, this is certainly a very good standard and one that we all can abide by. When we start looking at mufflers, I think we also have to look at this whole idea not only of altered mufflers but, as the act says, mufflers which have not been maintained, muffler systems which have not been maintained, and those that are there to make automobiles quiet and safe.

As well, we look at this whole issue, Mr. Speaker. For example, if we want to look at Car and Driver Magazine, a very reputable magazine which outlines so much when it comes to the operation and the purchase and whatever of cars, muffler problems account for over 30 percent of air pollution in America. I would assume that that same figure applies here in Canada. If we want to look at another very reputable report, Consumer Reports, it says that cars with broken mufflers can get almost half the gas mileage of those with new mufflers. So certainly the advantages of operating motor vehicles with proper exhaust systems that are well maintained and functioning well do add tremendous advantages.

Of course, we have to realize that sound waves travel very similarly to water waves in that they do use that wave action, but there's one big difference, and that is that when sound waves are dispersed, they move in all three directions. I'm sure we've all been in a rat hole or in a tunnel or whatever and had some young person who really wants to hear the noise on their car, and they will rev that engine when they're in those positions. We certainly can hear that sound reverberate, and it's probably something that they do down in Cypress-Medicine Hat and get quite a bit of enjoyment from. If they don't, it's probably because they don't have any rat holes.

Anyway, Mr. Speaker, I do have to agree with the hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat that we do have provisions in the Highway Traffic Act and, as well, we do have provisions in federal legislation as to what standards should be appropriate for the various vehicles, so I think there's certainly an adequate amount of legislation to deal with this particular problem. Again, if we are going to make any changes, then rather than passing a motion in this House, we should be amending the Highway Traffic Act to include more stringent controls or spell out those controls that are in the federal traffic act.

Again, Mr. Speaker, those are my comments. I certainly don't think that we need any more pieces of legislation. The legislation we have, both at the federal level and the provincial level, is more than adequate for dealing with this situation.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

MR. SNELGROVE: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I guess I'd like to bring this back to why I think this kind of thing should be discussed as a motion and not legislation, because that's where it belongs: as a discussion on probably some problems that Albertans are looking at. If we just go back to the motion and read it, it doesn't mention anything in it about noise. It doesn't say “noise” at all. It simply says that you cannot operate a “vehicle with an exhaust system that has been modified” and “no longer meets the standards” set out in motor vehicle safety. So we automatically presume: oh, it's noisy. Well, it might be, or it might be that the exhaust was designed so that that vehicle fits the emission standards of the country it's running in.

Now, we are a country that's concerned about greenhouse gases and all the emissions we make. Is it right, then, that we can just take the mufflers off, whether they're quiet or not, and allow the emissions to go out? I don't think so. I agree with the hon. minister and members: no, we don't need more laws. We probably have enough laws, but obviously the laws aren't quite clear enough, maybe, about what we allow and what we don't allow with a muffler.

Let's take it just a step further, though, when we talk about standards and not just emission. We've probably all seen these vehicles out now with the little covers on the back taillights with some nice little shape, whether they're little lines – the one we saw on the weekend had a little bunny. A Playboy bunny logo was the total taillight. It's kind of ironic that a Playboy bunny would be the total taillight, but it was. [interjections] I don't write this stuff. Mr. Speaker, what I'm saying is that if there's a minimum standard for a taillight, that should be maintained. I don't think anyone would argue that, whether it's on the roof, on the side, or wherever they put all these now, but when they start to cover them, they start to become hard to see and maybe in certain circumstances impossible to see.

DR. TAYLOR: You obviously noticed the Playboy bunny.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Hon. minister, you have had your chance to speak. You only get one time.

MR. SNELGROVE: I know it would be a great concern to most people, Mr. Speaker. We don't know whether our minister is starting to think like the opposition or they're starting to think like him, but it's scary either way that shakes out.

I just want to make the point that if it weren't so obvious to most people here that mufflers, probably particularly on motorbikes, are a problem, we wouldn't all presume that the hon. member's bill has to do with noise. Much of the information that comes out about it is directed at noise, but his motion says that it should be better than or equal to how the vehicle was designed and built. That's a pretty fair statement. To me, Mr. Speaker, I believe that when we have concerns like that as members, this is where we bring them: through the motion process, not bills, not something that we can't get down. Nail it down as a motion. If it's a problem, it will be looked after. We'll come to some kind of consensus here, and maybe the minister will pick it up.

If it's a bill, then we have a problem. This is a motion. From the point of view of how the motion is stated, that a muffler should be as good as or better than it was built to meet the standards for pollution, for emission control, I can accept that, and Lord knows that I'm not one that really is in favour of a lot of bills, I've got to admit.

DR. TAYLOR: Bike helmets. Bike helmets.

MR. SNELGROVE: We should stick a bike helmet on every muffler, Mr. Speaker, and we'd kill two birds with one stone.

I know that the hon. member here would be concerned that my speech is too short. The simple fact is that pollution is a major concern of all industrial nations, especially ones with this number of vehicles in them. This motion states: let's leave the controls there. Noise obviously is a problem. I think that with some tweaking our laws can handle it. We don't need a new law. We certainly need to be able to enforce them. Other than that, I would just urge you to give consideration to the fact that it's a motion, not a law, and take it from that.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood.

MR. MASYK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure and privilege to speak in favour of this motion. It's quite different living downtown in a city on one of the major arteries, when you hear a bunch of hippies going up and down the street raising a bunch of racket at 2 in the morning versus some country boys going to town with loud mufflers out in the country. Noise control is very, very important if you happen to be where I live. I work very, very hard during the day, so at 2 o'clock in the morning I like to have my rest. You hear some noisy muffler tearing up and down the street and think it's something with 700 or 800 horsepower, and here it's a little Toyota or something. It's this muffler that magnifies the motor. That's exactly what the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview was telling me about, and I happen to believe him. So I have to support this.

It's one thing to live out in the country and go to town with a couple of straight pipes. There you're just a country boy having a little fun, but in the city it's trouble. Mr. Speaker, that's why it's very important to put a damper on some of these noise amplifiers, and I would like everybody to support it. My windows are rattling at different times of the night, and the speakers – I don't know how big they are, but it's like a rock and roll band inside of a car.

So I would encourage everybody to support the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview's motion. Thank you very much.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

MR. JOHNSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure for me to rise this evening and add my thoughts to Motion 507. I'd like to start by thanking the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview for his initiative and efforts to bring this idea forward. I agree with his belief that noise pollution from vehicles is an important issue, and I'm pleased to contribute to the debate.

Vehicle noise pollution is an issue that at its very roots has been derived from the success of our society. As Canada moves forward as a nation and continues to prosper, Canadians are able to enjoy life more fully. The ability to enjoy each day as we do comes from our high standard of living. This is especially true in Alberta, where we enjoy the lowest overall tax load and have the highest tax exemption rates in the country. Because this government has tried to create an economic environment where people can find opportunities, succeed in business, and still have the best social programs, Albertans find themselves with more disposable income than many others around the world. With increased disposable income Albertans are able to do many things like save, take holidays, renovate their homes, and fix up their cars, trucks, and motorcycles. Many Albertans are automotive enthusiasts. Some enjoy fixing cars as a hobby, and for others it is a livelihood. Whether it be for pleasure or for profit, many of those with automotive knowledge are passionate about their interest. Many modifications can be made to automobiles in this day and age; however, the one that we are concerned with here today can cause a lot of noise and disturb pedestrians, residents, and business owners who live and work along roadways.

In the eye of an automotive enthusiast muffler modifications have benefits, including enhanced engine performance as well as serving as a magnet for attention for the vehicle as it goes whizzing by on the roadway. Both of these factors are sure to bring the driver some pleasure as he or she drives it down the road. The problem with muffler modification is that they draw attention to the vehicle because they are significantly louder than most other vehicles on the road. When several motorists with modified exhaust systems are in close proximity, the noise can really be quite deafening. I'm sure that all members of the Assembly have been on a busy street in midsummer and heard the roar of engines racing down the streets in packs. I have noticed that as cars, trucks, and motorcycles go by that have been decked out, sometimes I'm unable to hear a conversation that I'm having with someone perhaps on the sidewalk. When I'm unable to hear a person talking next to me, I may miss out on some important sounds that would give me clues as to what's going on around me. With that said, Mr. Speaker, I think that we could agree that the level of noise that some modified mufflers create and the hearing difficulty that results can pose a significant danger to pedestrians.

In fact, noise isn't simply a nuisance. It's harmful to bodily health. Excessive noise is associated with increased blood pressure, headaches, low frustration tolerance, ringing ears, and loss of sleep. Noise levels above 70 decibels increase the risk of heart attacks by 70 percent. I am familiar with the health risks that can be caused by exposure to excessive noise. There is ample medical proof that hearing damage can be disruptive and have life-altering effects. I think that with health and quality of life considerations in mind, it would be of great benefit if we were to examine a way to reduce vehicle noise pollution in this province.

The Highway Traffic Act provides that motor vehicles propelled by an internal combustion engine shall be equipped with an exhaust system that cools and expels gases without excessive noise. It is easy to see the ambiguity that accompanies a term like "excessive." With an imprecise term such as this in place, it is very difficult for law enforcement officers to prove that noise emitted from exhaust systems is too loud. "Excessive" is a term that can be interpreted subjectively and may carry one meaning to one person and a completely different meaning to another.

The other factor that contributes to the difficulty that law enforcement officers have when trying to attain a conviction against a noise-polluting motorist is that there must be proof that someone was disturbed by the noise caused by the vehicle. With this qualification included, the burden of proof goes beyond measurement or observation on the part of the officer and includes a third party. This inclusion of third-party evidence adds further complications to an already difficult process of attaining a conviction against a vehicle noise polluter. If we were to examine the possibility for comprehensive noise control legislation, the effectiveness of law enforcement agents could be significantly enhanced. If there were a firm guide or limit that motorists and manufacturers could adhere to, this problem could be eliminated.

Calgary city council has already voiced their support for this motion and has stated that they would support any initiative undertaken by the province to address vehicle noise. The city has received several noise complaints from residents along major roadways as well as requests to erect noise barriers along thoroughfares that border residential areas. These large walls serve the purpose of deflecting road noise back onto the roadway while keeping it out of the neighbourhoods. While they are effective and serve their purpose, perhaps the need for large, unsightly walls all around our cities could be reduced or eliminated if Alberta had more comprehensive noise control laws. Reducing noise levels on Alberta highways and municipal roadways throughout the province will increase the quality of life and health of Albertans.

Automotive manufacturers sell vehicles that meet the standards set out in the Motor Vehicle Safety Act of Canada. The standards listed in the act serve to ensure that vehicles that operate on roads in Canada are safe. Safety can certainly be seen to include a reasonable noise level when one considers what it is like to be on a busy street and be unable to hear due to loud road noise. Automotive manufacturers have accommodated the desire to have streets that are as quiet as possible when they manufacturer their products and as a result manufacture quiet and safe mufflers.

Supporting this motion to ban modified mufflers that don't meet the standards of the Motor Vehicle Safety Act will help to achieve an Alberta with less noise pollution and a more comprehensive and effective automotive noise pollution law. The benefits that would result from this Assembly supporting this motion include health and safety concerns as well as infrastructure issues. Hearing loss changes a person's life forever, and hearing damage is something that will never leave those who have suffered from it. I think that removing an unnecessary source of noise pollution is a positive step towards reducing the health risks that loud mufflers contribute to. In addition, supporting this motion may help to keep our neighbourhoods and roadways beautiful and open and not crowded in by large walls that protect residential areas from the intrusive and overpowering sounds of traffic.

I think that even motor enthusiasts can see the merit of this motion. There is nothing that says that they cannot modify their automobiles and motorbikes in any way that they like; however, the components must meet the standards set out in the motor vehicles act of Canada.

I would urge the members of this Assembly to join me in support of this motion. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: We do have the opportunity if we go the full limit to hear from the sponsor of the motion if he wishes to close debate. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

MR. YANKOWSKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to thank this Assembly for extending me the courtesy to present Motion 507 and giving it a fair hearing. I want to thank all of the speakers that spoke for and against Motion 507. Your thoughts and ideas are certainly very valued.

I want to quote from a letter to the editor that appeared in the Edmonton Journal on January 29, 2002, and it's captioned "Noise bylaw appears silent on late-night snow plowing."

Is there still a noise bylaw? I will tell you why I ask.

I live in the Beverly area . . .

That's my constituency.

. . . where they just love to practice pro-active snow removal at any time of the day or night.

We were scared awake at 1 a.m. on a Monday night by the God-awful rumbling and scraping of a 15-ton front-end loader which was low-blading a parking lot.

So I called the police and the dispatcher said she would send a car out.

Meanwhile, my whole house is vibrating as this scraping noise that could literally raise the dead continued.

At 1:45 a.m., my six-year-old is awake. While we sit and watch the loader, the police come and talk with the operator.

Then I get a call saying, ". . . sir, there really is nothing we can do because this is the only time this poor fellow can exercise his God-given talent to plow this lot."

Did I mention that there was no snow on the ground.

So is there a noise bylaw or did I turn off my stereo so many times for nothing?

Keeping this letter in mind, I want to repeat again what the World Health Organization findings are on the effect of noise on people, and I quote. The recognition of noise as a serious health hazard as opposed to a nuisance is a recent development. The World Health Organization considers the health effects of hazardous noise exposure to be an important public health problem, especially among children. The World Health Organization has linked high levels of ambient noise to social and health problems such as noise-induced hearing impairment, interference with speech communication, disturbance of rest and sleep as well as psychophysiological, mental health, and performance effects such as increases in blood pressure, higher heart rates, and increased levels of stress hormones. These health effects in turn impact on behaviour and also interfere with attentive work and recreational activities. However, whether regarded as a nuisance or as a genuine health hazard, noise exposure is known to affect work, household productivity, quality of life, and property values. Unquote.

So if noise exposure affects work, keeping in mind the letter to the editor that I just read, what kind of a day did this father have at work the next day when he literally got no sleep that night? I hope that he wasn't an airline pilot, because I sure wouldn't want to be flying with him. What kind of a day did that child have in school? It's a six-year-old child. Be it in kindergarten or grade 1, what kind of a day did that child have in school if it went to school at all? If noise exposure affects household productivity, what kind of a day did the mother have? Whether she went to work or if she stayed home, there probably wasn't much productivity. If noise exposure affects quality of life, then certainly these people's quality of life was affected. If noise exposure affects property values, then these people's property value could indeed be affected. If they, say, bought a house on a supposedly quiet residential street and then it turns into a very noisy street with people roaring around with mufflers that are not up to Motor Vehicle Safety Act standards, then their property values can certainly be affected. And how many neighbours in that neighbourhood maybe paid a visit to their doctor the next day after this snow removal incident? It would be interesting to note, and as we struggle with health care costs, this is something to take into account.

Alberta Treasury Branches Act

24. Mrs. Nelson moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly concur with the continuation of the Alberta Treasury Branches Act.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Finance.

MRS. NELSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In 1938 members of this Assembly did something very special, innovative, and indeed historic. They created a financial institution that would proudly and respectfully serve Albertans for the next 50 years and beyond. In November of 1938 the Alberta Treasury Branches Act was passed, and the bank was established with $200,000 of government money.

Through good times and bad ATB Financial has been an outstanding asset for the province of Alberta. In recent years ATB Financial has performed exceptionally well. It has succeeded in turning a deficit of over $150 million in 1997 into a surplus of over $430 million at the end of the last fiscal year, and that surplus is now approaching $600 million. Alberta Treasury Branches' financial assets have grown from over $3 billion in 1997. The majority of those assets are loans to Albertans and Alberta businesses.

Mr. Speaker, previous ministers responsible for the act have indicated that the government will consult with Albertans before any fundamental change is made to the mandate or status of Alberta Treasury Branches. I wholeheartedly agree with this approach. Before we make any decisions with regard to this institution, we must have a thorough review of the financial services industry in Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, I am very confident in ATB Financial's ability to continue to provide excellent service to Albertans and solid financial returns for taxpayers. Therefore, as per the requirements of section 35 of the Alberta Treasury Branches Act, I move that the Legislative Assembly concur with the continuance of the Alberta Treasury Branches Act.

9:00

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands on Motion 24.

MR. MASON: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I know that this is not Committee of the Whole, but I have questions with respect to this for the minister, and maybe she can address them at the end.

First of all, I want to say how much the Alberta Treasury Branches have meant to Albertans. They were formed at a time when the banks were simply instruments to make profit at the expense of the people of Alberta, particularly the farmers. We all know the resentments that occurred and existed when people lost their farms and their property to unaccountable and uncaring corporations based in other parts of the country. Since their creation the Treasury Branches have played a major role in this province and its development and have helped hundreds of thousands of Alberta families in towns, in cities, and on the farms.

I just wanted to express my real concern with the government's direction. I appreciate that the minister has indicated that she's prepared to support the principle of public consultation, but it's our view that the Treasury Branches are seen by the government as a bit of an embarrassment. Here we are one of the most right-wing governments in Canada, and they own a nationalized bank. Yet there was good reason for the creation of that institution, and those reasons continue to this day. So I just want to put on record the position of the New Democrats in this Assembly that the continuation of the Treasury Branches needs to be more than just a motion put forward on a temporary basis by a government that may well be planning to get rid of it and privatize it. We do not see the Treasury Branches as a target for privatization. In fact, we think that its role as a publicly owned and accountable institution should be expanded in this province, and I think that many, many Albertans would concur with that sentiment.

I would like to ask the minister exactly what the nature of the motion for continuation is. What is the function that it plays, and why is it being brought forward at this time? There's I guess some concern that we have about the nature of this motion and what it means. It doesn't indicate any commitment to the continuation of the Treasury Branches as a public institution. So maybe the minister could just explain for some of us who maybe have not been around as long as others what exactly is behind this motion and why she's bringing it forward at this time.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, you can't have a back-and-forth. That's what I was trying to signal. So we'll close debate when the minister wishes to.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, like the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, would also hope that the minister is able to answer some questions around the nature of this motion. I'm sure I can say on behalf of the whole caucus that we are unclear why this motion is being brought forward in this particular way. In the way it's phrased, "be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly concur with the continuation of the Alberta Treasury Branches Act," the word "concur" suggests that we're agreeing, concurring with somebody else. "Concur with" is a curious choice of language. Are we being asked to agree to the continuation of an act of the Legislature, and if so, why does this issue even come up? Is this part of the mandatory review of the legislation, and if so, then why aren't we doing a proper review? Is this what the whole review amounts to? One motion and a few minutes of brief debate?

So the real questions for all of our caucus are: why are we doing this, why is it being done in this way, and is this in fact the entire review? If not, is that then why the minister, the Treasurer, links this motion to the issue of selling ATB? That is how I understood her comments. Okay; she may correct me on that. When the minister referred to the need to publicly consult before any sale of the ATB is undertaken – at least that's how I understood her remarks – it made me wonder: is this motion a precursor to the sale of Alberta Treasury Branches? If it is, let's be up front and address that square on. If it isn't, then please correct our impression here.

The Alberta Treasury Branches in their long history, a 64-year history so far, have been a remarkable institution, especially in rural Alberta. I would think that many of the MLAs here will find a deep and abiding loyalty to Alberta Treasury Branches in their constituencies in smaller centres. The Alberta Treasury Branches have been there for farmers and for small businesses when no other banks were there, and they're still there and are offering excellent service and earning the provincial government a substantial return. They are a significant tool of economic stability for this province.

If you look at the other provinces in this country, there are maybe only two things that separate Alberta from other provinces. One is the extent to which we have the astonishing natural resource of petroleum, and the other is owning our own bank. It may be that those two things work together to explain why Alberta is as prosperous as it is and why, for example, rural Alberta is flourishing in a way that perhaps rural Saskatchewan or rural Manitoba are not.

So the Alberta Treasury Branches are important to this province, to the people of this province, and if there is some suggestion through this motion that we're beginning the process or lining up the necessary factors for the sale of the Treasury Branches, we would certainly like to know that. So, in a nutshell, why are we doing this? That's the question I hope the Treasurer is able to explain.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Are there any comments or questions to be offered with respect to this speech before we go on to the next speaker? The hon. Minister of Finance.

MRS. NELSON: A comment, Mr. Speaker, for clarification for the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview. I'm referring to section 35 of the act, which I referred to in my opening comments. The act clearly says:

At least once in every 5-year period following October 8, 1997, the Minister shall ensure that a member of the Executive Council introduces into the Legislative Assembly a motion that would have the effect of facilitating a debate in the Assembly on the question of whether this Act should be repealed.

So all I am doing here is simply saying "let's continue the act" and just fulfilling the obligations under section 35. Nothing more, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Any further comments or questions to be offered with respect to this? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you. A question to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview. Given the minister's response, it would seem, would it not, that this act is designed to play sort of a game of Russian roulette with the Treasury Branch? Sooner or later the chamber's going to come up with the bullet.

9:10

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, do you wish to respond to the question?

If there are no further comments, questions, or answers, we'll now call upon the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre on Motion 24.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I do understand that this motion, Government Motion 24, asking us to "concur with the continuation of the Alberta Treasury Branches Act," refers directly to or springs from section 35 of the Alberta Treasury Branches Act, in which it's asking a member of Executive Council to facilitate a debate in the Assembly on the question of whether the act should be repealed. I was hoping for a bit more robust discussion, considering how much grist for the mill there is on the Treasury Branches in Alberta. I do agree that they certainly did have an important part in our history, particularly for rural areas and small towns, at which point they were the only banking institution that would be willing to open up, to set up shop so to speak, in smaller rural centres, allowing those centres to have a banking institution. Nobody else would go there. Over time as the rural centres grew larger and there were enough people for competition, we got some of the other banks in there that we're familiar with.

I think at a certain point the activities of the Alberta Treasury Branches and the fact that they were under the direct administration of the government and Executive Council gave rise to a lot of nervousness and some questionable practices. In 1997 I believe there was a move to distance the government from Alberta Treasury Branches, to establish a board of directors that the bank would be reporting to instead of reporting directly to whichever minister was assigned to it. The Treasurer. This was certainly a good move on behalf of the government because then they didn't have to be responsible for answering all those embarrassing questions about West Edmonton Mall and others that have come up since then, because now they can claim that there's a board of directors in place that makes all of these decisions and the government is not directly responsible. But we certainly did have a point in the last 10 years where the government was directing actually many of the business dealings of the bank, and I think that was cause for great concern.

In that 1997 amendment of the act the government ended up putting in its standard clause for review, that all legislation will be reviewed every five years. I think in some cases it might be seven years. No. It's always five. I personally support reviewing the legislation every five years. As we slowly work our way through some of the older statutes, we come to understand that nobody has opened them up or looked at them in some time. The language is archaic, and there's gender-biased language and all kinds of things in there that really need to be updated. So I support the five-year review. I certainly support it coming up in this Assembly.

At this point I think I'm willing to go with Government Motion 24 to continue the act on. But I'm looking forward to other members, particularly those from rural constituencies, joining in on a robust debate and commentary on the usefulness of the Alberta Treasury Branches and the place that it holds today amongst banking institutions.

So with those comments, I will take my seat and look forward to comments from members of the government. Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Before the question is called, the hon. minister to close debate? Okay.

Second Reading

Bill 26
Workers' Compensation Amendment Act, 2002

[Adjourned debate May 1: Mrs. McClellan]

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Okay; the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise to speak to Bill 26. I think this is a very important piece of legislation and probably one of the most important to come before us in this spring session, if you can call it a spring session. I want to thank the minister for his hard work and diligence in attempting to resolve some of the questions around the Workers' Compensation Board. They have been a real sore point for many Albertans and for injured workers in particular for a number of years, and it's good that some attempt is being made to resolve the issues. It's also been a real issue and sore spot for the government, and I recognize that there must be a desire on the opposite side to try and deal with these issues once and for all. I think, though, that unfortunately this is not a final resolution to the questions that have arisen around workers' compensation but in fact is a step towards their resolution. The bill contains in my view some positive elements and some elements that are in fact a disappointment. I've characterized it outside the House as two steps forward and one step back, so tonight I'm going to talk about the two steps forward as well as the step back.

I think that this is a question and an issue that really requires all parties in the House to work towards a solution. It's so important and so critical to those people who need compensation and who have been suffering as a result of the lack of fairness in the existing system that I think we ought to try to put aside to a limited degree the partisanship that normally surrounds the debate around some of these issues and see if we can't work towards a solution on behalf of injured workers and in fact everyone in the workplace who may face the possibility of an accident.

The Workers' Compensation Board and the workers' compensation system in this province are based on the Meredith principle, which the minister has talked about on a number of occasions. The Meredith principles include a number of things. It includes the right of workers to receive compensation benefits at no cost to them for work-related injuries. It's based on the principle that employers are to bear the direct cost of compensation and in return to receive protection from lawsuits arising from injuries. It includes that negligence and fault for the cause of injury are not considerations – in other words, it's a no-fault approach – and it must be a system administered by a neutral agency having exclusive jurisdiction over all matters arising out of the enabling legislation.

The issue in workers' compensation is really one of accountability. The foundation is the Meredith principle, but the structure of the Workers' Compensation Board has to be built on trust. We've got an outcry from workers, and this has gone on for a number of years. I don't have to recount the actions that they've taken to draw public attention to their plight: hunger strikes, camping out, sit-ins, all kinds of activities which come from the desperation that they feel. It demonstrates, I think, that there's been a breakdown in the trust relationship around workers' compensation. The culture of denial which was identified by retired Judge Samuel Friedman in the final report of the Review Committee of the Workers' Compensation Board Appeal Systems means that most workers and in particular a majority of injured workers do not trust the Workers' Compensation Board as it now operates.

We should also be very clear about who's being protected by the current structure of the Workers' Compensation Board. Primarily it is set up to protect employers. Employers share the risk of paying for workplace injuries, a small price to pay, especially because most injuries are avoidable when proper safety standards are upheld, and they get the benefit of protection from lawsuits. Workers on the other hand give up their rights to legal recourse, and that is a very significant right to give up in a democratic system. The right to pursue justice through established means should not be given up lightly.

So what have workers received in return for giving up this basic right? Well, they're promised, according the Meredith principle, compensation benefits at no cost for work-related injuries. What they have received on the other hand is a culture of denial and a board which essentially behaves like an out-of-control corporation. Justice Friedman's review committee found that 70 percent of respondents rated the appeals process as poor, contrasted to the fact that only 1 percent gave the appeals process a top rating. Clearly, workers are not satisfied with the systems in place.

Now, normally when trust is found to be lacking, we look to more formal mechanisms of accountability. If workers can't trust the Workers' Compensation Board to uphold its end of the Meredith bargain, then there ought to be some mechanism to force employers to do so. In the mid-1990s, however, the minister then responsible for the WCB gave up the Legislative Assembly's right to oversee the board's operation and hold the board accountable for treatment of injured workers, and without that element there is very little accountability. Since then, the WCB has not been accountable, and it's been very evident in all sorts of ways.

Fair claim settlements have been sacrificed in the name of cost cutting. CEOs have been given exorbitant salaries and enormous golden handshakes. For example, the former CEO, Mary Cameron, was being paid over $350,000 per year, and when the previous CEO voluntarily left his position as CEO, he received a $580,000 golden handshake. Given these generous salaries and payouts, it's no wonder that workers are asking themselves: if my claim is being denied, where then is the money going?

Another example of the lack of WCB accountability was the decision to have the WCB donate $100,000 to the 2001 World Championships in Athletics. The donation was made at a time when the WCB claimed to be facing a cash crunch. It also came at a time when the chair of the WCB happened to be the CEO of the 2001 world championships. Now, that would be considered a conflict of interest in most places, but at the WCB it seems that it was just standard operating procedure.

Now, while lost time for claims has dropped significantly from about 4.7 percent to 2.3 percent, the actual number of claims has tripled, and this clearly implies that more workers are filing claims but that their claims are either being denied or being whittled down. Either way, workers are not getting the treatment they deserve. Why should workers expect to get fair compensation? The employers are holding the purse strings, and the board seems to be interested in protecting its own interests first by doling out generous salaries and gifts and so on to its friends. Employers' interests come second by denying claims to allow premiums to stay very low. Workers meanwhile finish last in the list of priorities. It should be the role of the minister to correct this imbalance, and this legislation was an opportunity for him to do so.

[Mr. Johnson in the chair]

Now, I want to talk about some of the things that appear in this act which I think are beneficial. The first one is to set up an independent appeals system. That is certainly something that I think will benefit the workers in the long run. Even if it's just a perception that there was a conflict there, I think it needs to be corrected, and I think this act does so. It does set up an independent appeals commission, and I think that will give some satisfaction to workers and will certainly reinforce the sense that when an appeal is heard, it actually is going to be a fair process.

Now, another positive section in this bill is section 23, which makes the Auditor General of the province the Auditor General of the Workers' Compensation Board. I think that is helpful in increasing the board's accountability, and I think that it certainly is something which will at least give members of this Assembly considerably more confidence that issues are actually being addressed and problems are being pointed out and solutions are being demanded.

Another portion of the act, section 44, talks about increasing the fines for contravention of the act, and that is something that we are generally as well in support of.

There are issues around medical panels. I know that some injured workers want to see the medical panels make the final decisions, which are binding, but I believe that it's actually preferable for the panel to have a final decision only on the medical assessment. That's one of the most important factors in the decision if not the most important factor. The area of competence of the medical panel needs to be limited to what it is actually able to pass judgment on, and that is the question of the actual medical assessment.

Now, the problem with the bill – and it's a serious one – is the question of the onetime payouts. This is one in which the minister's statements a year ago or more are in contrast to what is actually before us, and I think that the expectations of workers, of people who have been treated unfairly by this system, some of whom have been introduced in this House, of labour organizations, and certainly of our caucus have not been met in any way by this. This is in fact, Mr. Speaker, one of the biggest disappointments of the entire act. Instead of having a resolution to this question, it's all left open and it's all delegated to the cabinet to resolve. Given the history of this issue and the suffering of workers and the years and years of delays in getting justice, it's natural that this is not acceptable. They don't consider this acceptable, and this is for us a litmus test on the bill.

I have to say that I am very appreciative of the work of the minister. I'm very appreciative of some of the positive elements of the bill, but for us this is the test, and the bill fails the test because it doesn't resolve the issues related to the injured workers who've been denied claims and a satisfactory delivery on what we believe was a commitment to provide a fair mechanism to do that. I'm going to pay some attention to that in the committee stage, because I think there are ways that this can be done, but simply to turn the whole matter over to the cabinet because the employers don't want to pay the costs that may be associated with accidents is a violation of the Meredith principle, which says that the employers bear the responsibility for those costs. So if the workers are truly entitled to benefits, then it must be the employers that pay that, and it is not satisfactory, it is not acceptable to breach that simply because the minister cannot get support from the business community to pay their due. That is not an acceptable answer. There has to be the political will on the part of the government as a whole to insist that justice is done. If the employers don't agree, then surely the government needs to make sure that injured workers receive justice in any event.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Are there questions of the Member for Edmonton-Highlands?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Not for questions but for continued debate?

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Right.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to have an opportunity to rise in second reading debate of Bill 26, the Workers' Compensation Amendment Act, 2002. This bill has been a long time in coming, with a lot of people waiting for it on both sides, I think, with a great deal of anticipation, hoping that it will solve a lot of problems that have been in the system for a very long time. I don't think it is going to solve these problems.

When I look back, there are certain things like taxes and customs that seem to be a law unto themselves, a law above all others, and it strikes me that the way the WCB operates has come to be the same. It operates as a law unto itself, above all other things. It doesn't seem to be impacted by other laws. For example, the WCB predates the Canada Health Act, so it's not subject to it. So we have the WCB being used as a reason to have private health care facilities offering surgeries to WCB patients so that they can run them through faster and supposedly get them back to work faster. Time seems to be an issue of great importance to the WCB at this point. I think we do want to get workers back to work, but it's more than just getting them back on the job. This is about a lifetime, and always injuries take time to heal. There's such a rush to get workers back onto the job now that I think we make mistakes and may cause much longer term health issues and cause ourselves more problems. Unfortunately, at that point nobody else is around anymore, and it's just the worker that's left to deal with this.

The other thing that always comes to mind when I think about the WCB is that the creation of the WCB was not an altruistic move. This came out of mining accidents in the Maritimes, and it was the coming together of owners saying: we're going to get our butts sued off if we don't come up with a way to stop the workers from suing us if there are terrible mine accidents.

MR. BONNER: The Hillcrest mine disaster in Alberta.

MS BLAKEMAN: The Hillcrest mine disaster in Alberta. I'm sorry; I've been corrected. These weren't mining companies standing up and going: jeez, we think we should start this program for the good of our workers. These were owners coming together going: "This is a serious financial consideration for us if we end up getting sued because we have somehow caused these workers death or injury. We've got to come up with a scheme here where we won't get sued." That's the deal, or at least that's how it started. The workers would be paid a portion of salary, a percentage of salary for the time it took the worker to recover, and along with that, money was put towards rehabilitation.

I have kind of a funny tie to workers' compensation and rehabilitation, because I grew up across the street from what's now called the Millard centre. In my day it was called the Workers' Compensation Rehabilitation Centre, in Belgravia on 119th Street and 71st Avenue. I have very long memories of the workers who went there to try and get rehabilitation so that they could go back to work.

So that's where we're starting from with this. I mean, it is about getting workers back to work, but it's getting them back to work in a healthy way where their long-term health is maintained and regained. It's also an understanding that this is supposed to be about a balance. It's supposed to be about a give-and-take: the workers receive coverage, but in exchange they don't sue the owners of companies. When that starts to break down, when it becomes uneven or imbalanced, we've got a problem, and I think that's what has happened.

Certainly it may not be illegal, but it's darn hard to take. When we have injured workers who are losing their homes or who have to move from an apartment to a cheaper apartment because they're struggling to get their WCB payments and they look and see that the CEO is being paid over $300,000 a year, it's a bit hard to take. I know that there's been a defence that, well, in the world of business that's what this job is worth. Okay. But the other side of that is that these workers are worth something too, and they're supposed to be getting reasonable compensation, not poverty, not losing their possessions, but some kind of reasonable deal to keep going. I think we've hit a point of imbalance, and that's part of what's causing the struggle here.

I know that Calgary-Montrose spoke in favour of this legislation saying: you know, it's an okay deal; it's not perfect but there's stuff in it that's worth supporting. I guess it's always a question of: is the glass half full or half empty? Usually I think the glass is half full, except when it comes to legislation, because my experience has been that if you accept a piece of legislation that isn't the best you can possibly make it, it's such a long time until you can get that legislation opened up again. It's at least five years, and that's if somebody is working today to get it reopened. So is it acceptable for me to pass what we have in front of us? No, it isn't, because it will be a long time before we get back here, and there are a lot of injured people along the road before this act is opened up and made better, the rest of the glass is filled, the rest of the loaf is baked, or whatever kind of example you want to use.

I don't get a lot of WCB cases in my constituency office in Edmonton-Centre. I don't know why that is. I know that most of my constituents work in the retail and service sector. Perhaps that's why, although I know that people in the retail and service sector also get hurt on the job. I don't tend to get a lot of people coming into my office asking for help, so I'm by no means an expert on this. I know that other MLAs' offices handle a lot more cases than we do, but one of the things that I do notice coming up repeatedly is the frustration over having the WCB's doctors' panel override what the worker's own doctor has said is the problem. There have been a number of attempts to sort of fix this, but it never quite seems to happen.

It logically doesn't sit right with me when a worker has gone to their own doctor or worked with their own doctor over an injury, when their own doctor says that they need more time or that this is the injury, and WCB says: "No. We're going to do a literature review of the file, and we're going to determine something else." Huh? I mean, how can that possibly happen when you have a WCB doctor who doesn't actually physically look at the worker but can decide from the case file that they're going to override what that individual's own doctor has said? That never sat right with me.

The other thing that we notice in my constituency office is that there seems to be an automatic turndown, that the first time you apply for WCB, you're automatically going to get turned down, and then the worker has to turn around and go through the whole appeal process. I don't say this with any flippancy, but that does seem to be what's going on here. You really have to question that. Again, what was this deal supposed to be? The deal was supposed to be that we looked after injured workers and helped them get rehabilitated so that they could go back to work and earn a decent living. What's the other side of the deal? The owners weren't sued. We have an imbalance here because we are not looking after those workers well enough.

I also would argue that we're not getting people retrained or getting them back to work adequately either. Part of my concern about the retraining is: "Okay. Fine. You know, you got hurt badly enough. You're never going to go back and do the kind of work you did before." Well, then, for heaven's sake invest the resources to get somebody retrained enough that they can actually make a go of it in another sector. Don't give them this six months' worth of something at NAIT or SAIT where they don't walk out of it with anything that's going to get them a job. I mean, give your heads a rub. How is a 55 year old with six months under their belt from NAIT supposed to be able to go and get a job in a different sector competing with 22 year olds? It doesn't happen. Now you've got a 55 year old who's still trying to support their family and live with some kind of dignity who's been told: sorry, you're supposed to get out there and compete with the young bucks in a different sector that you've supposedly been retrained in. No, you haven't. You know, that's some kind of weird night school thing. You have not been trained in a different career.

So once again I feel that the deal is broken here. It's costly to society when you have those people who don't get adequate training to go into a different sector, a different field successfully. When they're not able to do that, what do they do? Well, I imagine that they go back to their old sector even though they're not supposed to do it, even though their doctor says: don't lift anything heavier than 10 pounds. What the heck are you supposed to do? So you go back. You go back out on the rigs; you go back out as a welder, whatever you used to do, because you know how to do it. You also know that you can get paid 25, 26, 28, 32 bucks an hour doing it, so you go and do it even though it'll probably shorten your life, even though it may cripple you. But you didn't get trained in something else successfully. My other really big beef against what's happening with the WCB today is that we don't follow through on that. We're not really cementing the deal.

Now, a couple of things in here are good. I like the idea of the annual general meeting being open to the public. A good idea. You can have people come. They can look at the books. They can, you know, follow the proper meeting procedure and get their voices heard. Excellent. I like the idea of the minister being made responsible for the Appeals Commission.

The possibility of an arm's-length appeals panel and the older contentious case appeals. Well, that one kind of fell apart. I know that there was great hope and lots of promises, and then it's been withdrawn. So once again the deal isn't being carried through here. It's in the act; it's supposed to be happening. That's good. But we've already had the minister on record saying that he's not going to do it right now, and he doesn't know when. It's hard to support something that's in legislation when you've already been told: "I don't think so. Well, maybe not, but I can't tell you when." Well, when? Ten years from now? Twenty years from now? I'm supposed to work to pass an act that isn't complete? There's already an acknowledgment that there's not going to be follow-through on some aspects of this. There's a longer time line in there – it's moving it from 12 months to 24 months, also a good idea – and some performance measurements, which are good.

I want to talk about two other issues that I think need work or I guess would go on my bad side of the ledger here. One is around the administrative penalties, which have been increased, and again there's not a balance here. There are much stiffer penalties and punishment, it seems, for the worker side than for the employer side.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The second is this whole concept – and it's been called many things here in the Assembly, but I'll call it the private followers or private investigators that are contemplated in the act. Again I wonder why there's such effort and such money contemplated being spent to chase down workers to prove fraud when we already know that the incidence of fraud is pretty low. So why are we spending all of this resource to try and catch these supposed bad workers when we know that the fraud rate is low? That doesn't work for me, and I haven't heard a good explanation of why that's contemplated in there. That's the end of my speaking time.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods to ask questions?

DR. MASSEY: No.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods to enter debate.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to have an opportunity to speak at second reading of Bill 26, the Workers' Compensation Amendment Act, 2002. I thought I'd start with just a brief overview of the intent and then look at the specific principles that seem to be imbedded in the bill, and we'll make a framework for debate of the specific sections when we move into committee.

The main purpose of the bill of course, Mr. Speaker – it has two expectations, I guess – is to improve the Appeals Commission, the commission that hears the appeals of denied claims by injured workers. The effectiveness of the Appeals Commission has certainly been compromised, and Bill 26 was to address those concerns.

The second expectation for the bill was that it would deal with the long-standing, contentious claims. All of our offices have heard from injured workers that they weren't dealt with fairly by WCB and have been denied the compensation that was legitimately theirs, and it's unfortunate that the government really hasn't dealt and admits that they haven't been able to deal with these claims in Bill 26. The minister has admitted that these claims may not be settled until he can get a consensus of employers as to the total cost of those claims and who actually is going to do the paying and if there is compensation owed, how it must be payed, and even the kind of punishment that would be meted out if the payments weren't made. That's unfortunate, because that was one of the hopes for this bill.

There are some other issues, I think, that are more appropriately examined when we look at the specific sections, but one of the issues that is going to become more prominent as debate proceeds is the rather sweeping powers of the special investigation unit. The way that this unit operates distresses a number of people.

So with that kind of overview of the bill, I'd like to look at some of the specific principles, Mr. Speaker. I think that one of the main overriding principles is that the Appeals Commission should be representative of the interested parties, and that's a principle that I think we can support. We can support it, yet in this bill the cabinet makes that appointment, so it's open to question, I suspect, as to how unbiased those appointments will be.

The second principle is that the Appeals Commission should have powers that are similar to those of a legal court. That's an important principle, Mr. Speaker, particularly in this bill, where the commission will have retroactive powers, which are powers that we have to be extremely careful about granting to any body but particularly a body such as the Appeals Commission, and we have to know exactly how those powers are going to be exercised. There's a further complication in that it frees the Appeals Commission from any legal action. I'm not sure that that will hold up to challenge, but at least it's here. That principle that the Appeals Commission should have powers similar to those of a legal court is one that I think we'll want to debate further.

There are some less important principles in the context of the total bill. One principle is that there's need for a clear definition of the term "worker," exactly who is included under the act, and the bill goes to some extent to try to define who exactly the workers are that are covered and those who are not covered by this legislation.

A further principle is that there is a time limit in which claims have to be filed. This would seem to be on the surface a useful and legitimate principle, that you have to file your claims within a specific period of time. Now, whether the time periods identified in the bill are the appropriate ones I think is another question and one again that we'll want to come back to.

There's also some more definitional work. There is a principle that there's a need for a resident clause, defining exactly who is considered a resident of Alberta under the act and can make claims and can be dealt with by the act. Again there's a rider in the bill that this definition can be overridden by the board, and I'm sure we're going to want to come back to that particular item and to raise some further questions about the appropriateness of having such a clause.

The bill is based on a further principle that the obligations of employers after an accident occurs must be explicit. This has caused some problems in the past. The act lays it out very carefully that there are obligations that the employers have to follow, and it lays out the kinds of actions that are to be taken. I think it makes it clear to everyone that's involved what kinds of activities must follow when an accident occurs. I think that's a good aspect of the act and a principle that's worth endorsing.

Some carryovers from the previous act. That the review body is needed for assessments is a principle that's included in this bill, and a further principle is that there's a need for medical panels to adjudicate. These, as I said, are carryovers. There are not a lot of changes, although there are some questions that have to be raised about the review body and the medical panels and their operations if workers are going to be assured that they're going to be treated fairly. The act indicates a need for an assessment review board, and again this is carried over from the last act. There are some questions that have to be asked about that assessment review board and the way that it's intended to operate in Bill 26.

When you move on to further sections of the bill, there's an outline, a principle indicating that the penalties for violations of the act need to be made explicit. There's a section there and there are questions about how public the consideration of violators will be under the act and how much information will be made public about supposed, or alleged, violators. I think it's a rather murky area and an area that most would feel needs to be expanded and needs to be explained in better detail than the act does as it is presently constituted.

So the bill is predicated upon a number of principles, some of them positive, some of them that are open to question, and certainly a number of them where the specifics that support the principles need to be explored further. We do that appropriately at the committee stage of the bill.

With those few comments I'd conclude. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Any questions or comments?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've been listening with interest to the comments on this piece of legislation, and we have a tremendous amount of background. Although I've only been an MLA for one year, I've already had a number of visitors expressing various concerns about the WCB and, in particular, most strikingly from constituents who are injured workers. There's not a large number in my constituency, but they are very important. Each one of them matters deeply. Of course, the ones that I've seen as an MLA and I'm sure the ones that we all see as MLAs are the most difficult cases, many times workers with very serious and enduring injuries. So this is, as the Member for Edmonton-Highlands said earlier, certainly an important piece of legislation for us.

I was reminded of the history of the Workers' Compensation Board at a recent funeral I attended, an elderly fellow who had been a judge for many years in the Camrose area actually. He had begun working shortly after World War II at a job painting grain elevators. He was a fellow who kept correspondence throughout his life, and at the funeral they had samples of different aspects of his life. Included in that was a series of letters between himself and his employer at the time expressing concerns over the Workers' Compensation Board. This would have been 1948 or something like that. The employer was writing to him, wherever he was stationed painting these grain elevators, saying: you need to be sure to put rails around your paint platform on the grain elevators because the Workers' Compensation inspectors are going to be coming around and checking up on you. And so on it went. Anyway, it was interesting to watch the correspondence.

I know from the injured workers who have come to see me in my constituency office that a lot of faith was placed in the two reviews done of the Workers' Compensation Board, the one by the Member for Red Deer-South and the one by Judge Friedman. In fact, the workers who have talked to me felt that those were pretty reasonable documents, pretty reasonable reviews, and were looking forward to them being realized in this legislation. I think we're all seeing that they were only partially realized in the legislation as it is proposed right now, and undoubtedly as the bill moves through committee and so on, we'll have ample chance for discussion of that. There are of course concerns over the medical panels and the Appeals Commission and so on.

I also hear concerns from employers about the Workers' Compensation Board, and they're frustrated with various aspects, not just the level of the premiums but also, for example, the rigidity with which they feel the Workers' Compensation Board operates. For example, I think of a baker in my constituency who feels it's unfair that he has to pay in a small bakery the same kind of rates as major industrial bakers have to pay when, you know, in a major industrial bakery you might fall into a Mixmaster that's as big as a truck and be whipped into pieces and mixed into a loaf of bread as opposed to in a small bakery where the injuries may be much smaller, much less serious. So he feels there's a real rigidity with the Workers' Compensation Board.

What struck me is that from all sides the Workers' Compensation Board lacks credibility. It doesn't seem that anybody trusts it particularly, and that of course is I'm sure not news to the minister responsible. He's caught between many competing forces, but when things come down to legislation, it seems to me that we need to weigh out the consequences of our decisions for the workers and for the employers. It seems to me that while the employers may be faced with an increase in premiums, maybe a few dollars or depending on the size of the operation maybe substantial, that's a much smaller price to pay than a worker pays who is seriously and permanently injured, the kinds of workers that we all see coming into our offices.

When we reduce it to the simple human scale of who is suffering the most and where should justice fall, it seems to me that the benefit of the doubt should be given to the injured workers, and I think that is very much the conclusion that the reviews of the Workers' Compensation Board came to. I am concerned, when I read about the legislation and see some of the reactions to the legislation, that we forget the simple humanity that should be flowing through this bill, and we forget that people are – while they're not losing their lives literally, they're losing their lives figuratively, people who are so seriously injured that for the decades remaining of their lives they can't live it properly. That's a terrible, terrible price to pay, and I think that those people deserve the benefit of the doubt, and I certainly will be watching as debate goes on to argue where I can, to remember those people, and to understand the pain that I have seen in their faces when they've come to my office and I'm sure the same thing that all of you MLAs have seen as well.

So that's how I will be approaching this legislation. I realize it's difficult. It's complex. I'm not expert in it, but it is ultimately a piece of legislation with a profound impact on individuals' lives, and I'll be watching for that.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Any questions or comments with respect to this speech? If there are no further speakers, I'll call on the minister to close debate. The hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment to close debate.

MR. DUNFORD: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to thank the speakers that have risen in the debate in second reading. I appreciate the comments from all members regarding the principles of the bill, and I know that when we move into committee, there are a number of revisions perhaps that people will want to make and of course they'll certainly be welcome.

I want to, though, reiterate a couple of things at this moment in time, and that is: let's not forget that of the two reports that have been referenced most recently by the Member for Edmonton-Riverview, there were something like 59 recommendations that were made through those two reports. I believe that, not counting the legislation today, 49 of those recommendations have been accepted. Some of them don't require legislation, Mr. Speaker. Some of them have been a matter of policy. The policy has been adopted and accepted by the current board of WCB.

That current board is in the process of hiring a new chief executive officer. One of the things that I'm pleased about this time is that rather than just simply going out and trying to select the new CEO, they've spent time on developing a CEO profile. It was developed, by the way, by the search committee, but then it was adopted by the full board. Once they had that profile developed, then they went out and started to seek individuals, men and women, from probably across this continent – I don't know to what extent – that would fit that profile. Part of that profile is a new sensitivity toward the injured worker and a new sensitivity as to how the needs, the desires, the wishes of that injured worker have been articulated through 83 MLAs that we have on the floor of this Assembly. If there was any motivation for any of this that's happening, it wasn't the board of WCB that caused all of this to take place. It wasn't employers around the province that caused this to take place. It was MLAs and it was injured workers coming together in offices all through this province to try to find a way to deal with this.

Now, here we have a rather comprehensive bill, and I think most members agree with what we're trying to do as we move forward. I hope that as we debate, then, through the rest of the steps of this bill in the going forward that we focus on what I believe Edmonton-Highlands refers to when he talks about two steps forward . . .

MR. MASON: And one back.

MR. DUNFORD: Well, just be patient. Two steps forward, because that's what we're talking about as we move from an old system, as we move forward, and let's remember that the Workers' Compensation Board system of Alberta is not a broken tool or a broken thing here. When you look at how it generally works for most workers within the province, this is a good system. Now, we have a philosophy around this place, and I think it translates itself and it's articulated by all members in this Legislative Assembly, that just because something's good doesn't mean it can't be better, and of course that's what we're trying to do. So we have to go forward.

Now, the step backward I think that people are referring to is the fact that we don't have, as we look at the bill, a coherent, concise way to deal with the contentious claims. I don't feel at this moment in time that I have to apologize for that. I think the record is pretty clear that I want something done in that particular area and that we've provided enabling legislation for that to be done, and actually I take some exception to the general theme that I've heard tonight, the automatic assumption that nothing's going to happen. We don't know that yet. We have contemplated that something will happen, and we're still working our butts off – butts have been mentioned by some of the members as well – to find a way in which we can move forward on that being fair to all of the people.

One of the things that was not articulated by the Member for Edmonton-Highlands in the Meredith principle was of course the idea that it would be current employers looking after current injuries. We can't forget about that aspect of it. Certainly I'm not forgetting about it, but the overriding concern is that we will find a way to look at contentious claims, find a way to bring closure to contentious claims, find a way so that each MLA sitting on the floor of this Assembly will be able to look at their constituents and say that there is a process in place now that is better than what we had before and that there will be more confidence in those decisions and that we will try to find a way to go back in history where there's no legal obligation on the part of anybody to do that, so anything that gets done is something above and beyond what is required by law. We're trying to find a way to move forward as hopefully a combined unit, both having done something for the future and having done something for the past.

With that, I move second reading.

[Motion carried; Bill 26 read a second time]

THE CHAIR: I'll call the Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 24
Child Welfare Amendment Act, 2002 (No. 2)

THE CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Chairman, and I rose when I spoke before to this bill in some anger I suppose at it, and I continue to be very concerned about this bill. I won't go on at such length tonight, but again I ask all MLAs here to consider what they're voting on. Just consider a piece of legislation that begins with a clause: "Despite any decision of any court," a piece of legislation that is about taking children away from their families. This is not about mufflers. This is not about fish. This is about families. I have enough knowledge of child welfare situations to realize there are in fact times when that is the appropriate thing to do, but I think that as a Legislature and as legislators we need to weigh very, very carefully a bill that talks about removing children from their families and suggests that that decision should be removed from any consideration by the courts.

This is an exceptional circumstance; not as exceptional as I would like, because we are talking about over 600 cases. I expressed the concern that I'll be mildly surprised, if this is ever challenged, that it actually withstands a legal challenge given the serious, serious nature which it is addressing: breaking up the family. I mean, what's more profound, what's more fundamental to our society than the family and then putting that beyond the courts? I don't think that this would stand up.

[Mr. Johnson in the chair]

So I needed to reiterate that. I've also expressed my views to this Assembly on my great, great disappointment that the situation requiring this bill ever arose, the fact that some 600 children were taken into temporary guardianship and did not have proper case plans filed within 30 days or in some cases even close to 30 days. Again, I will not review that, but I do remain very upset that we have to bring this bill forward.

Thank you.

THE ACTING CHAIR: The Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much. This is actually my first opportunity to speak to Bill 24, the Child Welfare Amendment Act, 2002 (No.2). I share the concerns that have been raised by some of my colleagues, and the Member for Edmonton-Riverview raised my number one concern. We have an obligation as legislators in this Assembly to create good legislation and hopefully to create legislation that won't be immediately challengeable in the courts and hopefully not easy to win by somebody else in the courts. I think that's what we're contemplating doing here with this legislation. By putting forward something that says essentially that it – it's not that it puts itself above the law, but it creates a separate place for it.

"Despite any decision of any court." What? How is it appropriate that we try and inoculate legislation from being challenged in the courts? There should always be an avenue of appeal, and that's why we have the courts and we have things like the Charter, to be able to test legislation to see if it's good. I think this legislation is imminently loseable and that if it gets into courts, it won't stand up at all. That's just time, for anyone that's involved in the legislation, where everything gets suspended while it's before the courts. And it's money, taxpayer money, to have the Crown prosecutors or whoever from the Justice department go up and defend this in court for however many appearances that takes.

So I think we have to be really careful about trying to put ourselves above the courts. I think the courts and the Assembly need to work in a respectful partnership but not in this kind of challenge: you know, I'll say something that means that what you have to say doesn't count as much. In some ways it's counterproductive; I think that's what I would be calling this.

What's really at issue here? Okay; what's really at issue here is that there were some 620 temporary protection orders that existed out there that had not been filed with the courts, contrary to what the Child Welfare Act says. So there was at one point legislation that was brought through this Assembly and debated saying that we need to have these case plans that are filed within 30 days of apprehending a kid and that these are to be registered with the courts at the same time. All right; let's accept that as a given then. That's the way we're going to do this. Well, then let's do it.

Now, what we have is a repeated failure to do so by the department. Why are we having trouble doing this? Is it because we have a staff shortage? Is it because our forms are confusing? Is it because we are apprehending too many children or not enough children or we're going for too many TGOs and not enough PGOs? Instead of looking at the circumstances around why this isn't working, this legislation just goes back and goes: "Okay; forget all of that. Let's just say that we don't have to do it or, rather, let's just say that we did do it. It's deemed to be done." I think that's much more of an issue.

I'll tell you kind of a little story. I'll take the names out of it. I don't have a lot of children in Edmonton-Centre, so the first time we had a child welfare case come to us, it certainly got the attention of the staff in the office. We had to call a lot of people for help with this because we didn't know who to call, we didn't know who the contacts were, and we didn't know the legislation. This was a whole new experience for us, and we couldn't find out on behalf of the mother what she was expected to do to get her kid back. This was a situation where a couple of kids had been apprehended. One kid was returned immediately. She was trying to get the second and third kids back, I think, and one kid had never been taken. It was one of those quite complicated manoeuvres.

We wrote to the then minister responsible for child welfare saying: okay; what exactly is this parent supposed to do to get these kids back to conform to this? No response. We waited the traditional six weeks for an opposition member to get a response back from a minister. We didn't get anything. We sent a fax over going: you haven't responded to this letter dated six weeks earlier; here's another copy of it in case the first one got mislaid somehow. No response. We sent another fax after a period of another three or four weeks going: what is the problem over there? We got a phone call back saying that they'd never seen the first letter, ever. Well, the first letter we've now sent twice. So then I had to stop the minister in the hallway and go: what is the problem here? Why can't I get an answer from your office about what this parent is supposed to do to conform to whatever rules or whatever guidelines in order to get her kid back?

Well, you know, if there had been a case plan that had been done on that kid, if there had been a case plan that had been filed on that kid, we would have been able to find out from my office what that parent – maybe it was a father – was expected to do. But there wasn't, yet in the legislation itself we see a need for these case plans to be filed. I can see why they should be filed, so that they become part of a public document and so they become part of the reasoning that the government has essentially gone to court and said: "We're going to take this kid out of whatever situation they're in, and they will become our ward. They'll become a ward of the government. We will look after this child until certain circumstances change." And the circumstances are laid out in that case plan.

So I understand why and I agree with why we should have those case plans and why they should be filed, because I could have had access to that. But at the time this was happening, I'm sure this kid was one of many with no case plan. We can't find out what the parent is supposed to do. The parent therefore doesn't do it. Therefore, when they go back again after a prescribed period of time and say, "Okay; can I get my kid back, please?" the answer is: no, you didn't do what you were supposed to do. "Well, what was I supposed to do? Nobody told me, and there's no access to any information about it." So, one, I think there's a good reason why there's supposed to be a case plan. Two, there's a good reason why that case plan should be filed as part of the court order for the TGO.

Here we have a situation where for whatever reason – we haven't heard any explanation from the minister as to why – all of these TGOs weren't filed. I'll note that there are a series of cases that culminate in this amendment act being brought forward. I think in the first version someone representing the department came forward and said: "Well, yeah, we're supposed to conform to this, and we mean to conform to it, and we will conform to it. We'll get right on that." Then the next time it comes into court, we've got the same department, maybe even the same official – I don't know – going: well, no, actually we're not going to be able to conform to that. Then we end up with this piece of legislation that goes: okay; retroactively for anything after February 21 we're going to deem that this has happened, despite "a temporary guardianship order for which a plan for the care of the child has not been filed in accordance with section 31(3) is deemed to be valid from the date the order was made," and this applies only to temporary guardianship orders made before February 21, 2002.

So it is to get around the problem that these TGOs have not been filed, and somewhere there's something that says that if you don't file it within 30 or 31 days, it's null and void. So we have a situation where the department that is to be the parent for these wards of the government has in fact not completed what they were supposed to do. They didn't follow the law. This act is an attempt to go back and go: "Okay. Forget all of that. We'll just say it didn't have to happen, and then we'll be even." But that's not the point of legislation. We had these guidelines in place for these kids for good reason. As I've already pointed out, it's also good reason so the parents can tell what they're supposed to be doing as well as the government understanding what its plan for care is. I mean, this case plan or care plan is supposed to have a lot of information in it.

What exactly is the plan to get this child restored back into the family that they were taken from? That's the point of it. What do the parents have to do? What does the government have to do or child welfare have to do? What kind of services and support does this kid need? What kind of service and support does the family need? That's why you have this case plan, so everybody understands what needs to be done to improve the situation and ultimately to reunite the child with their family. That's what we're all trying to do here, and to not have done that for an extended period of time and then to attempt to negate that or nullify that is even worse.

Now, let's get to the real root of the problem here. For whatever reason, you know – I want to know why it wasn't done, and if there was a need for it to be done before, why isn't there a need for it to be done now? I think there is a need for it to be done now, especially in light of the difficulties that this department is seeing. There have been choices about trying to change the delivery of services for these kids by going to a regional health authority system. There's lots of controversy out there about whether that's working or not working, and what's at the heart of this are children and families in Alberta. We know that families get troubled and that kids can get in trouble as a result of that, and I take it that the job of government is to try and move both of those parties to a point of healing and getting back together again to normalcy. So what's the problem? Why can't we get these plans done?

I think that it has to do with two things: one is priorities and the second is resources. This is a larger discussion about what government is for. What's government supposed to do? What ministries are we really supposed to have here? I think this government loses its way sometimes. In its eagerness to be forever reducing the budget and therefore being able to reduce taxes, it forgets that it's responsible for providing certain programs and services, and children's welfare is one of those programs and services it's supposed to provide and provide well. This is not a place to go cheap. It's a place to be careful, because you're affecting a lifetime. Whatever age that child is when it's apprehended, you know, if that kid lives to 80, the actions the government takes will affect that child for the rest of their life. So you've got to take this stuff seriously. I think you have to put the resources into it to show that you're taking it seriously, and at the point where you don't have enough staff resources to write the darn plan and file it with the courts, you've got a problem.

So take a step back, look at how the resources are being distributed, look at what the priorities of the department are. If the priorities of the department really are to have well children and healthy families, then invest in that. It is an investment. Stop looking at this stuff as being a cost. Look at it as being an investment. If the government chooses to always look at these things as a cost, you're always going to be looking for ways to cut the cost, because you're seeing it as a big dollar sign there that's somehow imposing on your ability to cut taxes for somebody. That's what this argument reduces itself to: children are a cost, and we've got to reduce that cost so that we can give the middle and upper income-earning Albertans some kind of a discount, a money-back guarantee. Boy, you've got to watch your priorities with that, because if you keep that up, eventually it's going to cost you a lot more, and we know that. There are all those numbers about how successful Success by Six and all those early prevention and investment programs are.

What I'm saying here is that I think that what this has really done is to bring into the Legislature and bring into the public eye and into the media the way this government is viewing children's services. It's viewing it as a cost, not as an investment. I think we've got to change that, flip that around, and start viewing what we're doing for these kids in the programs and services that we're offering to them and their families as an investment. We've got to take that seriously. It doesn't mean that you have to spend more money, but you've got to spend your money right. You've got to take it seriously. You've got to make your priority not just a cost-cutting exercise. That's the concern I have that goes along with this whole bill.

I know that it hasn't received a lot of attention outside of this House, and it doesn't seem like all that many other people are really upset about what's happened here, but I think it's wrong. I think it shows a deficiency in the way we've been approaching this issue. I think that it's probably caused a number of individual MLAs some problems in trying to help their own constituents, because again they can't find out what it is they're supposed to be doing or what the parent is supposed to be doing to correct this situation and get their kid back, so that, you know, costs time and effort and resources from the constituency office level.

Ultimately we are talking about citizens. I know that children, until they reach the age of majority, don't have rights, and I know that they're just viewed as an expense, but it's part of my earlier argument. I think you have to view this as an investment, because I think it ends up costing us a lot more if we don't pay attention at this point in time. Frankly, it's cheaper. It's cheaper to pay attention to these kids now than it is if you end up with kids incarcerated or involved in the criminal system somehow. You know, there are all kinds of other possibilities of where they can go that cost us a lot more money down the line. So invest in it now. What's that saying?

AN HON. MEMBER: Pay me now or pay me later.

MS BLAKEMAN: No. I'm thinking about an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure. There you go. It took me a while. That's what's really important here. A stitch in time saves nine is another one. It's about prevention. Do the small thing now. It saves you the much larger thing later.

What we're looking at here is support for a minister and support for a ministry that needs to be able to do the job right and needs to be able to view it as an investment and needs to know that what they're doing is the right thing. Rather than somehow our having children that are called clients or customers, which is even worse, this is government providing a service. This is not a business, and it shouldn't be viewed as a business. It is government providing a service that they're mandated to do. The government has got to be really careful when it starts looking for things to unload, to say that we're not responsible for this and we're not responsible for that.

Well, there are things you are responsible for. One of the things that government is responsible for is children that have to be taken away from their families or apprehended or taken away from a dangerous situation. They then become wards of the government, and we have to look after them properly. One of those is to do the case plan and register it so other people can have a look at it. It's half a loaf to be able to do the case plan and then hide it somewhere where nobody else can get at it and read it and understand what's supposed to happen with it. If you've done the work for the case plan, you should have no problem registering it with the courts, in which case you don't need this act, which then goes about setting itself above the courts by saying: no matter what any court says, we're still right. Well, it's not a condom. You can't protect yourself against this stuff. You've got to do the right thing here. You've got to do the right thing up front.

So I'll be interested in what the other members of the Assembly have to contribute to this debate in Committee of the Whole, and I'll be interested if the minister is willing to respond here as well. It's not that it's bad legislation, but it's not dealing with the situation at hand. It's not dealing with what needs to happen. It's just trying to cover it up, and that makes it bad legislation.

So thanks for the opportunity to speak to this, and I'll look forward to other members' contributions.

THE ACTING CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I've been looking forward to the opportunity to make some comments on Bill 24, the Child Welfare Amendment Act, 2002 (No.2), and I, like other members in the Assembly, certainly have grave concerns over a bill that overrides the law. It overrides the law because in the original act there were checks and balances put in place which would prevent this very situation from arising.

Certainly one of those was the fact that within 30 days of a child being apprehended, a case plan would have to be filed, and those case plans were very, very important. They identified the needs of the child and the steps to be taken to provide those needs. They list the immediate needs and how they are to be fulfilled for that child, whether those needs be shelter or a secure environment. They also list the long-term needs such as permanency of place, where the child will end up once the temporary guardianship ends.

These case plans also fulfill many other important roles, one being that they will communicate to the parents what they need to know in order to regain custody of their children. Of course, it is vital to the well-being of society that we have strong, functional families. The case plan not only identifies what happens to the child, but it also identifies the scheduled treatment for parents themselves. It is indeed an all-encompassing plan. It sets out required therapy and medication, if necessary, for one parent, both parents, whatever. Again these plans must be set in place, Mr. Chairman, in order that the well-being of the child takes place.

Now, then, as well, the case plans keep social workers accountable to children. The case plans identify the resources required to help the child. Ideally, the case plans also give social workers the reassurance that these resources will be provided by the ministry.

What's happened is that initially over 600 of these case plans were not filed, so at the end of 30 days what happens is that those court orders are not valid. What must take place is that these children must be reapprehended or the parents have every legal right to have their children back, putting those children back into a situation we've already identified as being at risk for children.

As well, there are some other situations here where court orders must be signed by the worker, by the parent, and by the children if they are 12 years or older. Now, in fulfilling these requirements, there are some reasons why this may not take place, and the minister did outline those. In some cases it's very difficult to find the parents, or in other cases, even though they can contact the parents, the parents don't want to agree or co-operate by signing these papers. In some other cases the courts may have adjourned. So we can see why in some situations it might be extremely difficult to get these case plans in order.

We talk and we pride ourselves so often in this Legislature and we continue to state that we have the Alberta advantage. The majority of us continue to live in a society which is full of advantages, but the advantages aren't shared by everybody. We look at our children that are in these positions, the children that are most at risk, the children that are most vulnerable. What do we say about ourselves as a society when we cannot add this advantage to all members of our society, particularly those members who are most vulnerable?

When looking at this bill, we have to determine certainly what is the best way to deal with the situation that we find these children in today. It may be a case, Mr. Chairman, as another hon. member has said, that we might have to hold our noses and pass this piece of legislation because in the end it might be the best thing for those children. It certainly does not solve problems. It certainly does not address the ongoing situations that we have in Children's Services. As I said when I rose to speak on this, I still have many great concerns about a piece of legislation that is required to override the law.

I don't know, Mr. Chairman, how many times we would have to do this. Are we going to be coming back in the fall and saying that we need another bill – it may be Bill 52 at that point, which would be the Child Welfare Amendment Act again – to do the very same thing that we're doing here today. The assurances we gave to those children, to those families that we had a system in place that would work, that it would be the best chance for those people just don't seem to be working.

I look at a quote from Mother Teresa: "Loneliness and the feeling of being unwanted is the most terrible poverty." We all know that Mother Teresa's compassion and devotion to the destitute was second to none. Certainly these children cannot be in any worse shape than they are right now. Probably the reason that in the end I will support this legislation is because there are almost 600 children out there that require and deserve much better than they have been provided with so far.

Thank you.

THE ACTING CHAIR: The Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Just a few comments on Bill 24. I think of two positions on Bill 24 that I heard most recently and that I guess summed up where we are. One was from a social worker who wrote me an e-mail and said: "Okay; we made a mistake. Let's get on with it. This has to be done. Just pass the bill and do what has to be done." That was followed by a second e-mail – I'm not quite sure whether it was from a worker or someone within the department – that said that there's no way Bill 24 should ever be passed by the Assembly, that it's reflective of what's going on in the department, and that it's an affront to pass Bill 24.

There's a real distaste on the part of the opposition, and I know that the minister, too, has mixed feelings about the bill that's before us, but I think in the final analysis there hasn't been an alternate solution come forward that would deal with the position that the department is being put in because of the court rulings. We have to, I suspect, Mr. Chairman, hold our noses and pass this piece of legislation, as regrettable as that is.

So with those comments, Mr. Chairman, I'd conclude. Thank you.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Tuesday, May 7, 2002

1:30 p.m.

Date: 02/05/07

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

THE SPEAKER: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. O Lord, grant us a daily awareness of the precious gift of life which You have given us. As Members of this Legislative Assembly we dedicate our lives anew to the service of our province and our country. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Guests

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Leduc.

MR. KLAPSTEIN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to members of the Legislature 29 students from Hay Lakes school as well as their teachers Doug Lyseng and Nicole Lindberg. If they have not already joined us, I believe they will be joining us momentarily, so I would ask that the Assembly extend to them our traditional warm welcome.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

MR. GRAYDON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce – and I'm not sure that they're here. They didn't check in with my office, and I have no information yet, but I was expecting from my constituency the Grande Prairie Christian school. So if they're here, I'd ask them to rise, and if not, we'll welcome them anyway.

Thank you very much.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would just like to acknowledge and introduce to you again today the students from Keenooshayo school who are here this week long in the Legislature. They are seated in the public gallery this afternoon. I'd like to acknowledge their presence and ask them to please stand and receive the warm welcome again today.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Cross.

MRS. FRITZ: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly a very dear friend of mine, Vicki Dippner. Vicki is visiting from Palm Springs and was absolutely delighted to see all that snow in Calgary. We graduated together from nursing in 1972, and this weekend we had a lot of fun reminiscing with our classmates from the Calgary General hospital at the alumni banquet. So, Vicki, I'm really glad that you're here today, and I'm really pleased and proud to introduce you to my colleagues in the Assembly. I'd ask that people help me give Vicki a warm welcome.

head: Oral Question Period

THE SPEAKER: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Electricity Billing

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's the final bill that consumers have to pay that matters, so if the bills are higher, then deregulation has failed those consumers. The deferral accounts, that the Premier calls hypothetical, exit fees, and other assorted charges since deregulation have contributed to those higher bills. So, too, has the government's faulty billing system. My questions are to the Premier. Why did the government wait over one year without doing anything for higher electricity bills and billing problems when the minister was alerted last year by a report from the Alberta market surveillance administrator that stated that the electricity billing process that the government developed was faulty?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, to say that we didn't do anything for a year is wrong. As a matter of fact, we put in place very substantial rebates to shield people against rising electricity prices. Believe it or not, the actual cost of power has gone down since regulated times.

Before I go any further, there's something that the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition has to keep in mind; that is, any citizen of this province can stay on the regulated rate – the regulated rate. I think that the individual or the family can stay on that rate for at least another four years, Mr. Speaker. So if the price of power is going up in a regulated environment, what then is the basis of the complaint from the Liberals?

The actual cost of power has gone down since regulated times. In 2000 the average wholesale price was 13.3 cents per kilowatt-hour, compared to 7.1 cents in 2001 and 3.8 cents so far this year.

Mr. Speaker, I would point out also that rate riders are the legacy of regulation – the legacy of regulation – when consumers had to pay for forecasting errors. The government made a decision in late 2000 to defer rate riders because we felt that it would be easier for customers to pay these costs this year when prices are low than last year when prices were high ostensibly due to a phenomenal rise in the price of natural gas.

Mr. Speaker, there are also some other extenuating circumstances that the Liberals, if they want to be totally honest about this particular issue, would research and talk to the public about: metering and service problems that occurred back in 2000, which are not linked in any way, shape, or form to deregulation. The hon. Minister of Energy has written to companies involved asking them to improve their practices in these areas, and we need to look into all these issues – all these issues – and not just pick and choose and cherry-pick so that consumers know and understand what they are paying for and get true and honest information from the Liberals, who are not providing that true and honest information.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier if he'll listen this time. The billing process was said to be failing. What have you done to correct the billing process, Mr. Premier?

MR. KLEIN: A number of steps are being taken to address some of the issues relative to billing, particularly as they relate to certain service charges that have now been unbundled and are being presented on the bills. Indeed, in some areas of the province those charges are much higher than consumers, customers, originally anticipated. Now, the ministers of Energy and Government Services are meeting with the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board. I believe it's today. Following that meeting, there will be a meeting with the power companies, Mr. Speaker, to get to the bottom of the problem, and if the Minister of Government Services finds that there's anything untoward, he will launch an investigation to ensure that there are no violations, no unfair trade practices.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. According to the Alberta market surveillance administrator, why were the computer programs designed to calculate energy consumption used without being properly tested?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I don't know. That is a highly technical question, and I will take it under advisement for the Minister of Energy.

THE SPEAKER: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: why did the government develop this billing policy that allows the load settlement agent, the person who collects the data, to be the operator of the distribution system?

MR. KLEIN: Again, Mr. Speaker, this goes deep into matters of administration, and I will take the question under advisement and refer it to the minister.

DR. NICOL: Mr. Speaker, he's known – these have been reported to him for over a year.

Since this government has a set of regulations a foot high in the library for the electricity industry but none for protecting consumers, isn't it the approach by the government that leads to higher and inaccurate bills for Albertans?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, again, the incidents that lead to the hon. leader of the Liberal opposition's statement are of a highly technical and administrative nature.

The fundamental policy has to be addressed, and the fundamental policy relative to deregulation is to allow for competition so that prices overall will come down but, more importantly, to create an environment to allow for more generation of power, using all forms of fuel and sources to generate additional power.

1:40

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: why is the Premier asking for a study into billing issues when the government has already had this study, that's a year old, outlining the problems with the billing? Why haven't you been doing something about those remarks?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, this is not a study of the billing issues. This is an examination to determine if there is indeed a violation of the Fair Trading Act.

THE SPEAKER: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Holy Cross Hospital

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the Premier said that if it had been the intention of the purchasers of the Holy Cross hospital to simply tear down the hospital and build condominiums, then its value "would be in accordance" with the $20.6 million that the appraisal indicated. The Premier then suggested that it sold for one-quarter of its appraised value because the hospital building was kept. Well, that's just plain wrong. In fact, the appraisal gave the site such high value because it envisioned keeping the main hospital building for alternate uses, much as has occurred. My questions are to the Premier. Given that government policy states that, quote, land and/or facilities shall be sold for their fair market value and fair market value shall be estimated by an independent appraisal, end of quote, can the Premier tell us why government policy was ignored when the Holy Cross was sold for one-quarter of its appraised value?

MR. KLEIN: Well, Mr. Speaker, maybe the hon. member will ask former Bishop O'Byrne, you know, why that decision was made or ask former Alderman Jon Lord, who now sits as the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, who was on the disposition committee. The simple fact is that market value relates to what a person, an individual, or a company is willing to pay for a piece of land. According to my research – and my research comes from talking to people who were directly involved with the disposition committee – one of the four proponents that came forward actually wanted the government to pay the proponent to take the property off their hands. As I understand it, there was no value of any consequence to that property at that particular time, and the price we got was deemed by the disposition committee to be a fair and honest price.

DR. TAFT: Keep working on your research.

Now that the Premier has had more time to consider the issue, let me repeat a question from yesterday. Given that various independent assessments placed the value at $8.4 million for the land alone to over $20 million, why was the price for the land and buildings listed by the CRHA at only $4.9 million?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, for an educated person I am absolutely surprised at his lack of knowledge relative to how the real estate market works. He can take where he hangs out his shingle and say: this piece of property is worth $20 million. But if no one is going to pay him $20 million, he's not going to get it. You know, you can have any kind of evaluation you want on a piece of property, but if people aren't going to pay it, you aren't going to get that price. It's as simple as that.

DR. TAFT: Well, let's bring some commercial real estate agents into the process. Given that a commercial real estate agent handled the pending sale of the Charles Camsell hospital in Edmonton, why is there no sign that such an agent was used in the sale of the Holy Cross?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, there was a process, as I understand it, that was in place. It involved the Calgary regional health authority establishing a disposition committee. The committee was made up of a number of citizens and involved, as I pointed out, a city councillor, in this case the alderman for that particular ward. It involved the clergy because of the religious association that the Holy Cross had with the Catholic church. It involved community leaders. It involved representatives from the RHA, as I understand it, and there was a good and fair and impartial adjudication of all the proposals that came forward, and at the end of the day the committee recommended a sale for a certain price.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party.

Children in Care

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Even worse than placing vulnerable children in unaccredited foster homes is putting them up in hotels and motels. Three years ago the government promised to end the practice of placing children in hotels and motels, yet the

New Democrats have learned that over 30 children in the Capital region are being put up in hotels due to an acute shortage of foster homes and group homes. We have been told that many of the children being placed in hotels are under eight years of age. My questions are to the Minister of Children's Services. Can the minister tell this House how many children in care are being put up in hotels or motels in Ma'Mōwe Capital region and elsewhere in the province?

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, to the best of my knowledge the policy is being followed through with; in other words, not using hotels and motels. It's not only a costly practice where we have to do that, but it is a temporary and an emergency practice. There is in fact a shortage of foster parent placements here in the Capital region. There's work being done by the authority to try and find residences for the children in other authorities adjacent to this. I can't give the precise number. Let's be clear that it's not children being placed into hotel rooms all by themselves. It is 24-hour supervision. It is a situation where the children are closely monitored and people are with them. The children are not unsafe. The worst part of this, at least on a temporary basis, is that it is a very high cost. Certainly when we do this sort of placement, it's not done . . .

AN HON. MEMBER: First of all, for the children it's a high cost.

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, it's certainly a cost, and it is certainly preferable to have them with temporary guardians or guardians, as be the case, where they are well looked after, but in an emergency situation we have in the past done this and will continue to seek homes for them.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the minister knows that children are placed in these hotels, would she give us the average time for which they stay in the hotel and whether, when there, they are looked after by staff who are appropriately accredited social workers?

MS EVANS: Well, Mr. Speaker, I will be very pleased to provide a briefing from Ma'Mōwe Capital region. It is the only authority right now that may be using temporary foster placements or temporary guardianship within hotels. How many days they will be there: I can't provide that, but I am certain we can get the detail.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the minister can't properly look after these children in government care, why are 186 full-time positions being cut in the Ministry of Children's Services?

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, I would hope that because we are providing temporary accommodation in other places, it's not assumed that we're not caring for children or providing proper care. We are doing that. The reductions of Children's Services staff that are in this year's budget are administrative reductions. They are not on-site, where the child interfaces with social workers. They are entirely administrative. The positions that were reduced over the last six months in Ma'Mōwe Capital region took effect to some IT positions. I have a complete breakdown, not with me at the moment, but those positions, administrative positions, had nothing to do with the caseworker/child interface or the work that's done with the families.

G-8 Summit

MRS. TARCHUK: Mr. Speaker, the upcoming G-8 summit in Kananaskis is expected to draw thousands of protesters and will require potentially millions of dollars worth of high-security measures and provisions. As a result, some Alberta businesses in and around the Calgary and Bow Valley areas will need to close entirely during the summit and will experience a loss of income. My question is for the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations. What provisions is the Alberta government putting in place to compensate Alberta businesses for losses incurred as a result of the G-8 summit?

1:50

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, as has been mentioned many times in this Assembly – and I think it has to be emphasized – the G-8 summit is entirely a federal event. Compensation for businesses that experience a loss of profit due to the summit would be the responsibility of the federal government, but I would like to add further, and that is that we in the provincial government have been discussing with the federal officials the issue of compensation both for costs incurred by the Alberta government and by Alberta businesses. Negotiations continue on establishing a clear agreement to address these types of issues. The federal government has indicated that it will soon announce a compensation package that deals with these issues surrounding businesses.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MRS. TARCHUK: Thank you. To the Minister of Community Development: given that tourism operators in the Bow Valley rely on the pristine and natural beauty of the region, what precise policies and procedures does Alberta have in place to ensure that the Kananaskis environment will not be damaged by the summit?

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Well, Mr. Speaker, the G-8 summit, which is occurring June 26 and 27, as we all know, is something that we as Community Development are participating very, very closely with the federal government on because it is their initiative, but in specific answer to what we're doing there, I think the hon. member who represents the area would be comforted to know that we will be ensuring strict adherence to the various acts that might be impacted by this: the Wildlife Act, the Water Act, the Provincial Parks Act, and so on. Secondly, we'll be ensuring that the policies that are in place there, such as the Kananaskis recreation policy, which we've had for many years, will also be adhered to, and thirdly, we'll be stepping up our business, so to speak, with our conservation officers who look after that very special area of the province and ensuring that no random camping is occurring, ensuring that the protections that we have in place are being followed, and ensuring otherwise that nothing wrong or illegal is occurring to the best of our abilities.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne.

Working Alone Regulation

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last April the government introduced a working alone regulation for Alberta workers who work for whatever reasons as gas station attendants, taxi drivers, security guards, or store clerks to protect them late at night. Could the Minister of Human Resources please provide this Assembly and all Albertans with an update on how this working alone regulation is working one year after it was implemented?

Thank you.

MR. DUNFORD: Well, Mr. Speaker, of course, the information is correct. We had allowed companies up to April 1 of '01 to comply with the regulation. Since that time, as we carry out normal inspections with our field staff, if they are in a situation where they recognize that a working alone situation might exist, then part of their normal inspection is to see if there's compliance with that. However, the one thing that we can't do and that the regulation was never considered to do was prevent crime. What we were trying to do with the working alone regulation was if something untoward happened at a work site, there would be an opportunity for someone involved in an emergency situation to have the ability to seek help. As a matter of fact, last night we had a rather unfortunate situation take place not only in Calgary but at the particular Subway outlet where Tara McDonald had been killed. There was actually a robbery that took place. So the investigation now will be as to whether or not their compliance with regulations had carried on and whether there's any kind of a situation there that needs to be looked into.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: can the Minister of Human Resources and Employment explain to the Assembly if at that particular work site, at the Subway, the employers and the employees discussed a work safe hazard assessment to deal with late night clerks?

Thank you.

MR. DUNFORD: Mr. Speaker, that was part of the regulation. It's not only good enough for an employer to show an inspection that they have emergency devices, communication devices in place, but the important thing is that it can be shown that the employees in fact are aware that devices or procedures are available and that, yes, they in fact can administer whatever emergency procedure they need to put into place.

As to the question being asked at this particular point in time, I can't confirm whether or not the employee that was involved last night in this particular robbery, which is under a criminal investigation, has been talked to by the employers. Of course, as we get involved with our inspection, that's obviously one of the questions that will have to be answered.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: do employers have to complete a hazard assessment for each employee who meets clients alone at their work sites, or do they have to conduct a new hazard assessment every time this worker enters a new work site?

MR. DUNFORD: Well, it's too bad there wouldn't be four questions for this member, because it sounds like there's another shoe to drop after that one. I'm not sure I understood the question properly, but under the regulation it is contemplated that for a work site and for a work procedure a hazard assessment is done. As long as the circumstances surrounding that work site or that particular procedure within that work site remain the same, then of course the hazard assessment that's been done would apply. If there are changes to that, then clearly they would not meet the regulation if they didn't update and strengthen their hazard assessment.

Resource Roads in Northern Alberta

MR. VANDERBURG: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In Whitecourt-St. Anne I deal with a wide variety of industry – oil, gas, forest companies, and many agriculture operations – that count on resource roads to access their operations. Recently a Federal Court of Canada decision overturned a decision to build a resource road in northern Alberta because of an objection from the First Nation community. My question is to the Minister of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development. What are the implications of this decision for my constituency of Whitecourt-St. Anne and other northern resource communities?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MS CALAHASEN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The case that the member refers to is Mikisew versus Copps, where a permit to build a road from Garden River to Peace Point was quashed because of inadequate consultation with the Mikisew Cree First Nation. My understanding is that the feds are appealing this decision. However, in terms of what our officials from Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development and Alberta Justice are indicating, the implications to us are that, first, we always have to remember that recent court decisions are making certain provisions that as a province we need to consult where it impacts constitutional and treaty rights. Secondly, we have to look at: what are the implications? We must consider the concerns of First Nations and what that means in terms of what happens to the development in this province. Third is that I think we have to look at what we have to do, and that's to be able to build a made-in-Alberta consultation policy based on the aboriginal policy framework, which was released a while back. My officials are developing such a policy to be able to address the concerns the member has brought to our attention and to make sure that we continue to develop the roads as needed in this province of Alberta.

MR. VANDERBURG: My final question is to the same minister. The Northern Alberta Development Council has spent a lot of time developing a transportation study in northern Alberta and has presented it to this government. How will this affect the plan that's been developed?

MS CALAHASEN: Well, Mr. Speaker, clearly the decision prevents at least temporarily the construction of a road through Wood Buffalo national park, the very road that the Mikisew Cree Nation was against. This also prevents the completion of the plan to connect northeastern Alberta with the Northwest Territories, B.C., and of course Saskatchewan. However, this decision does not interfere with what we call the overall northwestern Canada integrated road concept plan, which is a vision for long-term integration of highways, which my colleague from Peace River has been working diligently on. I would suggest that maybe if he wants to speak to the chair of NADC, he certainly can talk about that specific area. But I think it's important to note that whatever happens, discussions with the feds and my officials as well as Alberta Justice must continue in order for us to be able to ensure that we continue to develop the road plans that have been identified as a vision for northern Alberta.

2:00 Road Construction and Maintenance Funding

MR. BONNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The provincial government will collect $569 million in gasoline and diesel fuel taxes this year. This tax is supposed to pay for road construction and maintenance. However, they're only spending $526 million on road construction and maintenance. My questions are to the Minister of Transportation. Why is your department spending $43 million less on road construction and maintenance than the government collects in revenue from the 9-cent per litre gasoline and diesel fuel tax?

MR. STELMACH: Mr. Speaker, the amount collected from fuel taxes roughly averages about $600 million a year. All of that is spent on Alberta roadways. Part of the 9 cents that we collect goes in the form of a grant to Edmonton and Calgary, which is approximately 5 cents a litre, but all of the money that we raise from fuel taxes goes to roadways. In fact, our budget before the House is about $893 million, so that includes the 500 and some million dollars, close to $600 million in fuel tax plus about $189 million in registry fees and licences.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. BONNER: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Given that the amount of dollars given to Edmonton and Calgary does not approach the $43 million difference, could the minister please tell us where the extra millions of dollars are being siphoned off to?

MR. STELMACH: Mr. Speaker, the amount of grant to Edmonton based on 5 cents a litre is in excess of $65 million, and the 5-cent grant calculation to Calgary is about $85 million.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. BONNER: Thank you. To the same minister, Mr. Speaker: how can the government consider funding road construction and maintenance with a new toll road tax when the fuel tax, which is supposed to be used for road construction and maintenance, is already in place and not being used as intended?

MR. STELMACH: Well, Mr. Speaker, I can ask all Albertans: how about the $700 million that leaves Alberta every year in federal fuel tax? That's 10 cents a litre, and none of it comes back. In the last 10 years I believe we exported $7 billion to Ottawa, and we got about 1 percent back, about $72 million. However, in terms of infrastructure and the amount of fuel tax that we collect, again I would like to repeat that all of that money goes to infrastructure, whether it goes in the form of municipal grants or to hard road infrastructure in the province of Alberta.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

One-day Sportfishing Licence

MR. HORNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a number of very avid sportfishing enthusiasts in my constituency who've come to me with an interesting suggestion. Evidently in Alberta we do not have a one-day sportfishing licence available to people. This means, especially if you're a visitor from outside the province or another country vacationing in our fine province, you have to purchase a five-day licence in order to fish regardless of how long you might be in the province. Some of my constituents believe that tourism could benefit from being able to offer a one-day fishing licence or one-day fishing packages. My questions are to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. Can the minister please tell us why we don't have a one-day sportfishing licence available in our province?
