THE CLERK: Please be seated.

THE SERGEANT-AT-ARMS: Order! Order! Mr. Speaker.

[Preceded by the Sergeant-at-Arms, the Speaker, accompanied by the officers of the Assembly, entered the Chamber and took the chair]

head: Prayers

THE SPEAKER: Good afternoon and welcome.

Almighty God, author of all wisdom, knowledge, and understanding, we ask Your blessings on all here present. We ask Your guidance in order that truth and justice may prevail in all of our judgments, for the benefit of all Albertans. Amen.

Hon. members and ladies and gentlemen, I would now invite Mr. Paul Lorieau to lead us in the singing of our national anthem. Please join in in the language of your choice.

HON. MEMBERS AND GUESTS:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
The True North strong and free!
From far and wide, O Canada,
We stand on guard for thee.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

THE SPEAKER: Please be seated.

Entrance of the Lieutenant Governor

[The Premier, the Clerk, and the Sergeant-at-Arms left the Chamber to attend the Lieutenant Governor]

[The Mace was draped]

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members and ladies and gentlemen, while awaiting the arrival of Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor, the Royal Canadian Artillery Band will play a tribute in recognition of Her Majesty the Queen's Golden Jubilee.

[The Sergeant-at-Arms knocked on the main doors of the Chamber three times. The Assistant Sergeant-at-Arms opened the doors, and the Sergeant-at-Arms entered]

THE SERGEANT-AT-ARMS: Ladies and gentlemen, all rise, please.

Mr. Speaker, Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor awaits.

THE SPEAKER: Sergeant-at-Arms, admit Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor.

[A fanfare of trumpets sounded]

[Preceded by the Sergeant-at-Arms, Their Honours the Lieutenant Governor of Alberta, Lois E. Hole, CM, and Mr. Hole, their party, the Premier, and the Clerk entered the Chamber. Her Honour took her place upon the throne]

HER HONOUR: Would everybody please sit.

It's a good thing that I at least had some consultation with my good secretary, Mary, or you might have been standing a lot longer, which wouldn't have been too good, I must say.

I have to say that I've been very fortunate to get around and visit many communities, many schools, and it has been delightful. I went to one school in Jasper where the children were all told, "The Lieutenant Governor is coming to your school," and they were all pleased. One little boy went home and said to his mother, "I don't know what's happening at our school, but the gardener is coming and we have to call her Your Honour."

head: Speech from the Throne

HER HONOUR: Fellow Albertans, it is my pleasure to welcome you to the Second Session of the 25th Alberta Legislature. It is again an honour to deliver the Speech from the Throne.

To begin, I want to take this opportunity to express to Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth II and to all members of the royal family the heartfelt condolences of Albertans for the loss of Her Royal Highness the Princess Margaret, Countess of Snowdon. Throughout her life Princess Margaret showed a genuine fondness for Canada and Alberta. All Albertans were saddened to learn of her passing and share the sense of loss felt across the Commonwealth.

While Albertans mourn for Princess Margaret, they are also remembering the late Hon. H.A. "Bud" Olson. His Honour, who passed away earlier this month, served with grace and dignity as Alberta's Lieutenant Governor from 1996 to 2000. He also served Alberta for many years as a member of the House of Commons and earned several distinctions through his lifetime for his many achievements on behalf of the province and the nation. To Mr. Olson's family and to those who knew him, I extend the condolences of all Albertans.

In memory of Her Royal Highness and His Honour I ask you to join me in a moment of silent prayer and remembrance. Thank you, ladies and gentlemen.

I also wish to express the great support that Albertans have for the men and women of Canada's armed forces who are serving in Afghanistan. For thousands of Albertans these soldiers are husbands or wives, sons or daughters, fathers or mothers, friends or neighbours. For all Albertans they are living symbols of courage and high principle. We send them our prayers and our hopes for a safe and speedy return. We also extend our deepest thanks to the families of these men and women. They, too, are contributing to the future safety and security of the nation, and to them we owe the most solemn of debts.

Fellow Albertans, 2002 is a notable year. The year marks the 50th anniversary of Her Majesty Elizabeth II ascending to the throne of the United Kingdom and Canada and assuming her rightful position as head of the Commonwealth. This is an auspicious anniversary that Albertans recognize with gratitude and love. Her Majesty has been a symbol of peace and stability for half a century. Long may she reign.

In honour of Her Majesty's Golden Jubilee the government of Alberta will introduce legislation this session that will officially commemorate the anniversary. The legislation will establish a new Premier's citizenship award that will recognize achievements of high school students in the areas of citizenship, community participation, and leadership. Each year five recipients of the Premier's citizenship award will be honoured with the Queen's Golden Jubilee citizenship medal, which will be accompanied by a $5,000 award. As well, the Queen's Golden Jubilee scholarship for the visual and performing arts will be established. These awards and scholarships will together serve as a permanent remembrance of this historic anniversary.

As the Golden Jubilee reminds us, 50 years is an impressive length of service. The world has certainly changed over the past half century. That's definitely true in Alberta. But what has remained constant over the years has been the unique character and record of accomplishment that the people of Alberta have shaped through hard work, concern for each other, and the sharing of common goals for their province.

I don't think there is a prouder person than an Albertan. Whether a citizen's roots can be traced back for generations in this province or whether that Albertan just moved here from elsewhere, the pride that goes with being an Albertan is immeasurable and irrepressible. This Alberta pride is based on respect, mutual achievement, gratitude for our good fortune, caring for others, and people coming together despite their differences to confront the challenges of the day for the betterment of tomorrow.

Nowhere was Alberta pride more evident than at the recently concluded Future Summit. At the summit Albertans were asked to look five, 10, and even 20 years beyond today to imagine what their Alberta of the future could and should look like. Though the detailed results of summit discussions are still being compiled, the general theme of the summit is clear. Summit participants said that Albertans are focused on the future. They are determined to build an Alberta for their children that is prosperous, caring, secure, and that above all maintains a positive, healthy outlook to meet the challenges it will invariably face.

Indeed, in 2002 Albertans perceive health and health care to be a top priority. They have told their government that the health system they have built together must be maintained and that it must not be lost or impaired due to inaction or fleeting comfort with the status quo. Albertans go further than that. When Albertans speak about health, they don't only mean services provided in hospitals or prescription drugs or ambulance services. They know that people's health status is affected by their lifestyles, their socioeconomic status, their education, their sense of inner security and external security, their feeling of being part of a larger community, their access to jobs and safe and healthy foods and cultural experiences, and by many other factors that exceed the scope of the conventional health system.

Albertans know that people's health can be improved by events as complex as a redesign of an ambulance system or as simple as a comforting hand to hold during an ambulance trip. Albertans know that health status can be affected by forces as impersonal as monthly labour statistics or gestures as personal as a person hearing the words: "You're hired. Welcome to the team." Albertans know that healthy approaches to life are developed by institutions as comprehensive as a well-funded school system or by individuals as dedicated as the teacher who takes a student aside to say, "Good work."

It is to the betterment of people's health and the province's health that the government of Alberta dedicates itself in 2002. The government will work toward improving the province's health system itself so that Albertans can be confident the system will be there for them and their children at an affordable cost.

But because there's more to healthy Albertans than the health system itself, the government will focus this coming year on improving all the factors and forces that come together to create a healthy Alberta. Factors contributing to a healthy Alberta are the same as those that contribute to a healthy Albertan. They are economic growth, fiscal stability, good schools, safe children receiving parenting in a caring and nurturing manner, strong communities, secure seniors, clean air and water, and confidence that the future is bright. It is these areas, all essential to the province's health, from which the government draws its goals and objectives for the new year.

Sustainable Health Care System for All Albertans

Ensuring the continued stability of the province's health care system is without a doubt at the top of the government's agenda in 2002. Sustainable health care is a formidable challenge that will test the leadership and ingenuity of Albertans. Albertans enjoy a very good health system, but change is needed if Albertans tomorrow are to have the same level of health care.

In January our government announced that it will implement the 44 recommendations of the Premier's Advisory Council on Health for improving the health system and keeping it affordable. Based on the council's recommendations, this government will work harder to build a healthier Alberta. This work will be assisted by an implementation team led by the former registrar of the College of Physicians and Surgeons.

The government will also launch a campaign to give Albertans reliable health information and encourage them to make healthy lifestyle choices. New 10-year targets will be established to reduce diabetes, obesity, chronic heart and lung disease, and preventable injuries.

In 2002 a task force will examine options for new revenues and to provide stable, long-term funding for health care with recommendations on funding made to the government by September. Government will give consideration to raising tobacco taxes and health care premiums with the goal of using these revenues to improve health, and later this year an expert advisory panel will recommend which services should be covered by Alberta health care insurance and which services, if any, should be deinsured.

Our government will also abide by the council's recommendations in taking measures so that Alberta's health care professionals are able to practise to the full extent of their training and education. In the next year it will work with physicians and health authorities to explore new options in physician compensation. It will also develop a plan to ensure that Alberta has the right number and types of health professionals, all working to their maximum potential to the benefit of Albertans.

This government will work to improve Albertans' access to the health services they need. This work includes moving toward an access guarantee for selected services and a web site with detailed information on waiting lists for selected services.

Other initiatives to ensure that these priorities are met include implementing a provincewide organ donation and transplant program, expanding the pharmaceutical information network to improve drug therapy and reduce costs, developing community-based health projects under the aboriginal health strategy, and providing better care for people with Alzheimer's disease and dementia.

A Healthier Alberta through Learning

Along with health care, education is a key priority of this government and a key factor in individual health and the health of the province. The government recognizes the vital role of Alberta's learning system in giving people the technical skills and the life skills essential to personal growth and good health. A good education system also gives the province the gift of a population ready and capable to shape the province's future in positive and meaningful ways. That is why the government will ensure that Alberta's learning system continues to be one of the best in the world.

In the past year the quality of the system was proven by the number one placement of Alberta students in international reading tests and their third-place finish in math and science. These results reflect the value of Alberta's educators and the commitment of this government to maintaining an effective system.

In the coming year the government will share and discuss a renewed vision for the kindergarten to grade 12 learning system which emphasizes building basic skills in the early grades and more specialized skills as students move through the system. It is an important time for all parties in the public education system to work together for the betterment of students. The government believes there is a great deal of goodwill on all sides. This goodwill guarantees that the long-term health of the public education system will be protected. Educators will be key to that long-term health. Government will do its best to ensure that Albertans' hopes and dreams for students are given every chance to be made real.

Postsecondary education is also vital to the economic and social health of Albertans. The government will continue to work closely with students and institutions to ensure that high-quality postsecondary learning opportunities remain accessible and affordable for all Albertans.

A Strong, Resilient Economy

Underpinning the health of Albertans is, of course, the health of the province's economy and of the government's fiscal plan. Alberta remains in the best position of any province to take the lead in responding to today's stagnant global economy. Alberta's economy is healthy and continues to grow. Economic growth is forecast to be about 2 percent this year, significantly higher than the Canadian average. This fundamental strength of Alberta will allow government to invest in spending increases in Albertans' priority areas, including health, learning, and children's services, increases that will be greater than the inflation and population growth rates and which will all contribute to people's health.

At all times government will stick to its fiscal principles. This year provincial revenues have fallen, affected by the aftermath of September 11 and other global forces, leaving government without the high windfall revenues of recent years. Therefore, in its 2002 budget government will present a plan that balances priorities with accountability. Government will not spend more than it takes in. It will not leave a legacy of deficits for tomorrow's Albertans to pay.

It will continue to put in place fiscal policies that encourage investment, job creation, and consumer confidence. It will also limit spending in some areas without reducing the quality of priority services.

For many years the government's fiscal policies have helped Alberta be recognized across Canada as the leader in government openness and accountability. This recognition began in 1993, when the Alberta Financial Review Commission recommended steps that fundamentally changed the way that government managed and reported its finances. In 2002 the Minister of Finance will establish a financial management commission to once again review and assess current fiscal and accounting policies to ensure that Alberta remains a leader in fiscal planning.

In the coming year development of Alberta's energy resources will continue to contribute to the province's economy and to the delivery of critical public programs. In an energy marketplace where short-term prices can be volatile, Alberta must continue to look to the longer term. Our government will continue to promote investment in Alberta's oil sands. It will continue to work with industry and the governments of Alaska, Yukon, and the Northwest Territories on proposed pipelines that will bring gas from the north to markets in Canada and the United States.

Trade is the lifeblood of the Alberta economy, with 1 in 3 jobs depending on international trade. The government will ensure that Alberta's interests are well represented by building stronger relationships with key trading partners, establishing formal ties in emerging markets, and working on improving access for our agriculture and service industries.

In co-operation with other provinces and the government of Canada the Alberta government will continue to take an aggressive approach in international trade negotiations to improve trade rules for our exporters and to open access for softwood lumber exports to the United States.

Our government will also continue to look for opportunities to strengthen and diversify Alberta's tourism industry, which is expected to generate $6 billion of economic activity by the end of 2005.

A Growing Agricultural Sector

Agriculture is an important part of Alberta's economic health and a vital component of its rural landscape. Our province is Canada's second-largest agricultural producer, and despite higher farm operating expenses and the worst drought in 130 years in 2001 our province saw farm cash receipt levels reach a record of approximately $8.3 billion.

This government will work with Albertans in 2002 to implement mechanisms that will ensure that agriculture continues to thrive. It will strengthen its support for the growth of profitable businesses involved in farming and agriculture services and processing, and it will increase support for producers and processors who are looking at new products, new markets, and better ways of doing business.

The merger of the Agriculture Financial Services Corporation and the Alberta Opportunity Company will provide additional support to the industry by creating a one-window approach to commercial financing for the agri-industry and for small businesses.

Albertans want to be sure that their food is safe and safely produced. In response, the government is working with other governments and industry groups on programs to help the agriculture industry meet international standards and to ensure that the industry continues to excel in food safety, innovation, and environmental performance.

Alberta's agriculture industry is well positioned for continued growth and is working toward achieving $10 billion in primary production and $20 billion in value-added processing by 2010. The government is committed to helping the industry meet these goals by continuing to stimulate economic development in agricultural communities.

It will also help protect agricultural communities through implementation of the agriculture drought risk management plan. This plan will allow more timely and accurate assessment of drought impacts on the farm economy and more targeted, timely, and cost-effective response measures if needed.

Healthy Communities

Our government is committed to ensuring that Albertans continue to live, work, and raise their families in safe, secure, diverse communities. Given new and somber concerns about security, the government will introduce legislation this session to improve the province's ability to protect Albertans, their property, their infrastructure, and their environment from potential security risks. It will also work with other governments to ensure a co-ordinated approach to security and emergency response.

Alberta's aboriginal peoples are key members of the province's communities. This year government will continue to implement the aboriginal policy framework with the goal of increasing the well-being and self-reliance of First Nations, Metis, and other aboriginal peoples.

There is no group for whom a healthy Alberta is more important than Alberta's children. They are the leaders of tomorrow's communities, but today they are our children, and their health in the broadest sense of the word is an uppermost concern. In 2002 government will take many steps to enhance the health of children, especially those who are most vulnerable. Consultation on the Child Welfare Act will continue in early 2002, followed by recommendations that will be shared with stakeholders this spring. New child welfare legislation will be drafted this year.

The government will join other provinces and territories in introducing legislation to make it easier for families living in different regions of the country to obtain court orders for child maintenance. This legislation will help ensure that children receive the financial support to which they are entitled regardless of where they live in Canada.

Through its youth in transition initiative government will work to ensure that youth acquire the skills and attitudes to live happy, healthy, and productive lives, are safe, supported, and connected to caring peers and adults, and have access to services that meet their diverse needs.

Alberta's seniors are also a key component of the province's health. Our government will continue to ensure that lower income seniors have the supports they need to enjoy their lives in security and dignity.

Housing is fundamental to the health and well-being of individuals, families, and communities. This year government expects to complete negotiations of a bilateral agreement with the federal government that will give Alberta access to approximately $67 million for low-cost housing initiatives over a five-year period. Government will also review the unique housing pressures in remote and northern communities.

In the area of workplace safety the Alberta government will work with employers, workers, and their families to ensure that people are safe while on the job. This spring a forum on workplace health and safety will bring together policy experts, enforcement professionals, workers, and employers to examine measures to reduce workplace injuries. The government will also bring forward amendments to the Workers' Compensation Act to improve service delivery, enhance clarity, and increase confidence in Alberta's workers' compensation system.

A Clean and Sustainable Environment

The health of Alberta's unmatched natural environment is also critical to the province's overall health and to individual health and well-being. In 2002 the government will further encourage practices that prevent pollution and other environmental problems. Be assured, however, that government will continue to move firmly to punish offenders who fail to live up to their environmental obligations. This government is committed to ensuring that Alberta's environmental standards and regulations are and will continue to be among the most stringent in North America.

Like many provinces Alberta has grave concerns about the impact of the Kyoto accord on Canada's economy. However, the Alberta government is committed to acting on climate change and reducing greenhouse gas emissions.

One of the most important challenges Alberta may face in the years ahead is continuing to ensure a safe and secure water supply. With Albertans' input the government will develop a comprehensive provincial water strategy that will look at means to ensure safe and secure drinking water while maintaining healthy rivers and lakes. Government will also continue to work with small Alberta municipalities to upgrade their water and wastewater systems.

Conclusion: A Healthy Alberta for the Future

Fellow Albertans, in all of its endeavours in 2002 this government pledges to maintain its focus on the present and future health of Alberta in all its aspects. It is not a job that government can do on its own. Maintaining Alberta's healthy outlook requires the goodwill and hard work of all Albertans.

Albertans accept that meaningful goals cannot be met without challenges. There is the challenge of building a sustainable health care system, of keeping the education system effective and responsive, of keeping the province's children safe, of keeping on track with the government's positive fiscal plan, and of keeping the environment clean. Albertans are up for the job. So, too, is this government.

From the beginning of our Queen's reign, indeed from its first year as a province and even earlier, the unique destiny of Alberta has been charted by the leadership, character, and values of its people. Through today's changing times these qualities will guide Alberta to continued growth, peace, and good health.

Thank you, ladies and gentlemen, and may God bless you all.

God bless Alberta.

God bless Canada.

God save the Queen.

THE SERGEANT-AT-ARMS: Order! All rise, please.

THE SPEAKER: Ladies and gentlemen, I would now invite Mr. Paul Lorieau to lead us in the singing of God Save The Queen. Please remain standing at the conclusion.

head: Introduction of Bills

THE SPEAKER: The hon. the Premier.

Bill 1Queen Elizabeth II Golden Jubilee Recognition Act

MR. KLEIN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 1, the Queen Elizabeth II Golden Jubilee Recognition Act. This being a money bill, Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, having been informed of the contents of this bill, recommends the same to the Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, I'm very pleased to introduce Bill 1, the Queen Elizabeth II Golden Jubilee Recognition Act. If passed in this Assembly, this legislation will permanently commemorate the Golden Jubilee of our Queen, Elizabeth II. The bill is much more than a statement of respect for the Queen. It also proposes the establishment of three new government programs in the Queen's name to acknowledge the very special contributions of Alberta's young people.

It outlines a program to recognize achievement among high school students in the areas of citizenship and leadership. It provides for awards of $5,000 to be presented to five students in these areas per year. It establishes another two scholarships per year for people studying the visual and performing arts. These areas of pursuit – citizenship, leadership, and the arts – are very much characteristics associated with the reign of Her Majesty, who has exemplified achievement in these areas during her 50 years as our monarch. For that reason I am very proud to introduce this bill in honour of Queen Elizabeth II.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Standing Orders Amendments

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, before we progress too far in the proceedings, the chair wishes to remind everyone that today the Assembly will be operating under the amendments to the Standing Orders passed last November. By looking at the front page of the Order Paper on desks today, members will note that the daily Routine has changed. Many of the items of business that took place before Oral Question Period will now occur after question period. I refer specifically to presenting reports by committees of the Assembly, Presenting Petitions, Notices of Motions, Introduction of Bills, and the tabling of returns and reports.

Immediately after question period on Mondays and Wednesdays we will have Recognitions. On Tuesdays and Thursdays Members' Statements will follow question period. Consideration of points of order and privilege will be considered after the business in the daily Routine but before the calling of Orders of the Day.

With respect to petitions, members will note that there is no longer an item of business for Reading and Receiving Petitions. Under the amendments of Standing Order 83(3) petitions must now be approved by Parliamentary Counsel at least one sitting day prior to the petition being presented. Only those petitions that are in order can be presented.

The fact that tablings now follow question period in the daily Routine may require some adjustments in how members conduct themselves. The chair does not want to see question period become the time for tablings. If members have items that they want to table, it should be done under tablings, not during question period. If there are documents referred to during question period, then they should be tabled but at the appropriate time in the Routine.

The chair realizes that it may work an unfairness for members not to have the ability to review a document referred to by another member in a question or answer. It should be pointed out that the chair did not set these rules but must try to enforce them as passed by the Assembly. As with all new procedures members and the chair will have to see how they work.

The chair would also remind members that the amendments to the Standing Orders make it clear that items tabled must be in printed form. Under the new Standing Order 37.1(1) any member, not simply cabinet ministers, may table a document by providing it to the Clerk's office before 11 a.m. on any day the Assembly sits. However, the document will not be considered tabled until the Clerk reads the title of the document at the appropriate time in the daily Routine.

The chair will have some additional comments concerning the operation of business when we proceed to Orders of the Day.

head: Ministerial Statements

THE SPEAKER: The hon. the Premier.

Olympic Athletes

MR. KLEIN: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to offer the congratulations of the government of Alberta and of all Albertans to the Alberta-based athletes who represented the province and the nation with such distinction at the 2002 Winter Olympic Games in Salt Lake City. At the appropriate time today letters of congratulations that I sent to medal-winning Alberta athletes will be tabled in the Legislature. It will be a big stack of letters, 21 in all.

Mr. Speaker, the fact that so many of Canada's medal winners are from Alberta or train in Alberta is a tremendous credit to the amateur sports programs offered in this province. It is also a credit to the skill of Alberta coaches and trainers and to the dedication of parents, families, and volunteers, all of whom make a vital contribution to the success of the athletes in this province. The work of those people and people like them across Canada was never more rewarded than by the exciting performances of our Olympic athletes in Salt Lake City during the Winter Olympics.

Canadian athletes set records for medals this year, an achievement that has made all Canadians exceptionally proud, but the athletes did more than win medals. They represented our country with utmost dignity and class. Whether they won medals or not, Canadian athletes showed the very best of the Olympic spirit and the qualities of teamwork and perseverance that distinguish the Olympic athlete.

Here in Alberta the Olympic Games were followed with intense interest by people in all parts of the province. This pride was based not simply on where an athlete finished in competition. It was based more on the fact that every athlete gave his or her best. That is the true value of sports, and it is a value that all Alberta athletes brought to their performances.

Canadian pride was not only evident in the performance of the nation's athletes. It was also fueled by a mischievous act of true Canadian spirit. A young gentleman by the name of Mr. Trent Evans, as members of the Assembly have probably heard, is the renowned Edmonton icemaker who was part of the ice crew for the Olympic hockey tournaments. In the course of his work Mr. Evans quietly planted a Canadian loonie beneath the surface of centre ice.

Now, I don't know if this act brought good luck to the Canadian hockey teams. The fact that both teams won gold suggests that they didn't need any good-luck charms, but the gesture by Mr. Evans was a true indication that the Canadian spirit is difficult, if not impossible, to repress. I should also add that the Alberta and Canadian pride shown by Mr. Evans clearly was inherited from his parents, for his mother is none other than the hon. Minister of Children's Services. So congratulations, Minister, for raising a son who has earned international recognition not only for his icemaking skills but also for his national pride.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I again extend my congratulations to all Canadian Olympic athletes. I extend those congratulations on behalf of all members of this Assembly and all Albertans and my thanks to them for making all Canadians so proud of their country. We will always remember the thrills and excitement they brought to all of us.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and offer congratulations from the Official Opposition to Canada's Winter Olympics team. In particular we can be proud of the Albertans and Alberta-based athletes who participated in the Salt Lake City games. In fact, Alberta athletes made up almost a quarter of Canada's team.

The success of these athletes is something we all take pride in. They are driven, determined young people pursuing a dream that embodies a relentless Canadian spirit. We commend our Olympic team for their commitment, dedication, and fortitude in pursuit of personal excellence. A province and nation watched and cheered with untold pride, patriotism, and respect.

We would also like to commend those parents, family, friends, and communities that have supported our athletes in their quest to get to the Olympics. They, too, exhibit Olympic spirit and are an important part of this success.

The passion of the athletes and their supporters has captured this nation. We will all remember the excitement of our gold medal women's and men's hockey matches, the heart-stopping events in figure skating, and the thrill of seeing so many of our athletes achieve medal performances or their personal bests. The recent Olympic performances will help to make the winter of 2002 memorable.

Mr. Speaker, I will close by again congratulating our Olympians, their families, their communities for a job well done. They have stirred a pride and patriotism that many of us did not know was there. Their efforts do embody a true north strong and free.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, before we proceed to the next order of business, I must apologize. I neglected to call on an hon. member during Introduction of Guests. Might we revert briefly?

[Unanimous consent granted]

(reversion)

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

MR. LORD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my great pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly two friends of mine who are also representatives of the Progressive Group for Independent Business who are here today. This is a group that is very involved in trying to address the many important issues affecting small businesses throughout Canada. Today seated in the members' gallery we have the admittedly controversial national president, Mr. Craig Chandler, who has come here today to see for himself what a great government we have here in Alberta, and team member Mark Lachance as well. I ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

head: Oral Question Period

THE SPEAKER: First main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Education System

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government has ordered teachers back to work. For all the day-to-day issues in our education system this move provides nothing but a quick fix, but it does not provide a cure. The public needs to know if the government has a plan for addressing the issues that led to the job action in the first place. My questions are to the Premier. Mr. Premier, does the government have a plan for reducing class sizes?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, we do have a plan for education, and it is a plan that has evolved to certainly give our students the opportunity to excel in education, as has been pointed out by the minister on a number of occasions relative to the way students score on international tests.

Relative to the specifics of the question, I'll have the hon. minister respond.

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In about September or October of this year we undertook a survey of all schools in Alberta to determine exactly what the class size was. From the kindergarten to grade 6 age group the average class size was 23. In kindergarten it was 19.7. In grades 1 to 6 it was 23.6. So we feel that the flexibility that is given to the school boards is by far the most important issue, and indeed in talking to the school boards since that time, almost to a T the school boards say that they want the flexibility to be able to determine what the class size is.

We have visitors from British Columbia here today, and they are probably one of the best examples of what happens when a Legislature legislates class size. In British Columbia the Legislature legislated a class size of around 23, I believe, and it was going down to 22. Well, Mr. Speaker, if your child was child number 24, your child didn't get into that class. That child would be bused to another school down the road. That is the fact of what happened, and we have evidence of that here today.

So, Mr. Speaker, we feel that, yes, class sizes are important, that smaller class sizes are important, but we also feel that what is equally very important is the flexibility that our democratically elected school boards have to determine the class size.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Resources are necessary to implement that flexibility. My second question to the Premier: does the government have a plan to give schools the resources they need so that parents no longer have to fund-raise for basics?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, again I would point out that certainly there's been an increase, a substantial increase, over the last five years for educational funding. For the first time, as I've pointed out many times, a line item was put in last year's budget guaranteeing teachers at least 6 percent, an unprecedented step, if I may say, in terms of budgeting with the ability of the teachers, of course, to negotiate – that is, the unions of the various locals to negotiate – with the various school jurisdictions for more if indeed that's where the school jurisdictions feel that they want to spend their money. It's the opinion of the members of this government caucus that, indeed, sufficient resources are being allocated to education. In fact, we have identified education as a priority, one of the top priorities of this government, and the increase in funding – I believe it's 40 percent over the last five years – is indicative of this government's commitment to education.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Will the Premier tell Albertans also that that increase that you're talking about was not enough to cover the cost of increased enrollments or the cost of increased input costs associated with providing education?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, that is all taken into account before and during the budget process.

Relative to the specifics as it relates to three-year business plans and so on, I'll have the hon. minister respond.

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I think what the Premier said needs to be underscored and continued on with this statement. First of all, since '95-96 funding for education in this province has increased by 41 percent. The hon. opposition is talking about '92-93. The system today is much different than it was in '92-93. We had 165 school boards, some that had no schools. So obviously it is a different system here today. It has gone up 41 percent. Teachers' salaries have gone up 17 percent. Enrollment has gone up around 6 percent. So, Mr. Speaker, these are some of the issues that are out there. We feel very strongly about education on this side of the House. It is important, it is our future, and we will continue to assure that our students will always get the best results in the world, as they did this year.

THE SPEAKER: Second main question. The Leader of the Official Opposition.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. During the teachers' strike the government said over and over again: there is no more money. This isn't exactly true. According to the latest quarterly fiscal update, the government has almost $2.5 billion set aside for future debt repayment, and at least half a billion dollars of this won't be used until the end of the next fiscal year. Will the government use just a fraction of this to solve the crisis that's in our education system right now?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, relative to that specific question I believe that the hon. Minister of Finance has a very good answer.

SOME HON. MEMBERS: Hello?

MRS. NELSON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. No, I won't start this term off with "Hello?"

We did do a briefing today on the third-quarter update, that all members have received and which I will be filing at the appropriate time in the House this afternoon. The hon. leader opposite was present. What he is actually talking about is that last year, not this current fiscal year, we were able to put aside money to pay off the debt of this province and free up that burden from the very children that we're talking about in the future and bring down the debt servicing costs in the future for Albertans so that those debt costs could be freed up forever.

The concept that he is putting forward is that we renege on that and go back and take those dollars out, increase the debt, spend beyond our fiscal framework – in other words, run us into a deficit – to resolve an issue that is already dealt with within the fiscal framework of this province.

Now, to bring this analogy close to home, that's what went on – and I hate to say it – in our neighbouring province of British Columbia, just across the mountains, and that's why they have moved from the position of being a have province to a have-not province and running $4 billion of debt on an annual basis and legislating major things. So the concept of what they're putting forward is to take the money that has already been put away to pay off our debt, pulling that back, increasing debt, increasing spending, running deficits, and putting it all on the backs of our children and our grandchildren. That's their policy, Mr. Speaker.

DR. NICOL: Mr. Speaker, bad education affects our children as well.

My question is to the Premier. Will the government finally make an official offer to fund the teachers' outstanding pension liability without taking the money out of the classroom?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, that was on the table, notwithstanding what the union boss might have told his membership. That was on the table. It is now off the table because job action has been taken. It was made quite clear before the job action that that would come off the table. It is now off the table, unfortunately.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

DR. OBERG: Thank you. I just want to add one point, Mr. Speaker. In the hon. Leader of the Opposition's preamble he mentioned bad results for students. In the recent exams – I just really need to reiterate this for this House – we finished number one in the world. That isn't just in Canada; that's the world.

Mr. Speaker, there's one other very key component that came back from those studies. In Alberta we were the only jurisdiction in the world – in the world – where the public system did better than the private system, and we're very proud of that.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Premier: is the government planning on biasing the negotiations again by putting a line item back into the education budget in the next budget period?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, well, I'll announce it now. The budget will be tabled, I believe, on March 19, so wait and see. I'm not going to discuss the budget now. There will be plenty of time after the budget is tabled to debate the budget and question the budget, and I'm not going to speculate at this point whether there will be any line items related to any salary relative to any sector at this time.

THE SPEAKER: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Teachers' Hours and Remuneration

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Surprisingly, given their actions this past year, the government believes that goodwill is important on the part of all parties in the education system. We learned that yesterday. My questions are to the Premier. By lobbing insults from Japan at our teachers about their working hours, was the Premier fostering goodwill?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I'm so glad, I'm very, very happy that the hon. member has raised this particular issue, because not everything was reported. The main thing that wasn't reported was that there was a challenge in one of the newspapers in a letter to the editor – it wasn't the Sun, but it was the other paper – where the writer pointed out – and I don't know if the writer was a teacher or not – that I was going to Japan and I should probably investigate how respected teachers are in Japan. So I asked the question of one of our staffers whose wife happens to be a teacher. She's been a teacher in Japan for 30 years, and I reported that. This is what he told me: that his wife works eight hours a day in the classroom – right? – five days a week and two weekends. Two weekends. That is mandatory. She earns the equivalent of about $50,000 Canadian a year, after 30 years of teaching. I said, "Do teachers go on strike in Japan?" and he said, "No, that is out of the question."

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. No matter what the spin, teachers considered it an insult. Mr. Premier, will you begin rebuilding that goodwill with teachers by apologizing to them now for those comments?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, why would I apologize for simply reporting what someone said to me? The husband of a teacher who obviously should know what his wife makes and the conditions under which his wife works. Now, what is wrong with that? Nothing.

DR. MASSEY: Mr. Speaker, to the Premier again. The teachers considered it an insult. Will you apologize to them?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, why would a teacher consider it an insult if I report what the husband of a teacher told me: that teachers in Japan spend eight hours of classroom time a day, work two weekends a month, and that his wife after 30 years of teaching earns approximately what a teacher in Alberta would earn after 30 years of teaching? What is insulting about that?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party, followed by the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Health Care Premiums

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This Premier and his Tory government pride themselves on cutting taxes, yet in yesterday's throne speech this government promised to implement higher health care premiums. If it looks like a tax, if it walks like a tax, if it quacks like a tax, then it is a tax. To the Premier . . . [interjections]

THE SPEAKER: It's quite okay for an hon. member in raising a question to have colourful expressions.

The hon. member.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. [interjections]

2:10

THE SPEAKER: I think, hon. Premier, the problem here is that the unrehearsed solicitations of expression didn't allow the hon. leader of the third party to conclude his question. We still have to get to that point.

DR. PANNU: Thank you. My question to the hon. Premier: since he promised Albertans tax reductions, why is this government now proposing a massive increase in the most regressive of all taxes, namely health care premiums? Duck that one, Mr. Premier.

MR. KLEIN: I will go on to repeat what I said earlier. There are two provinces in Canada that have premiums as opposed to a payroll tax. The reason we have premiums and the reason British Columbia has premiums is to point out to the population that health care is not free. You know, unlike the socialist way of sort of hiding it as a payroll tax and increasing taxes like the NDs do all the time, we're saying that there is a cost to health care, and premiums clearly identify that cost, Mr. Speaker.

Speaking to the extent to which health care premiums will be raised, I won't be specific at this particular time because that is a matter for the budget, which, again, will be tabled on March 19. At that time the Finance minister will outline what the increase is going to be and the rationale for the increase, but I can give the hon. member some hint as to the rationale. First of all, it was clearly recommended in the Mazankowski report that health care premiums be raised. [interjection] Yes, it was. Read the report.

Mr. Speaker, secondly, health care premiums have not been adjusted for a number of years. It is time to adjust those rates to reflect the true cost of insuring services that are insurable services under Alberta health, and that hasn't been done for some time.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second question to the Premier: why has the Premier turned his back on seniors, on municipalities, and on business groups like the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, all of whom strongly oppose hiking health care premiums?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, we haven't turned our backs on anyone. What we are proposing to do is the responsible thing and, I would point out, the reasonable thing, not only responsible but reasonable. It's a plan that will protect seniors, that will protect low-income Albertans.

AN HON. MEMBER: And the NDP.

MR. KLEIN: I don't know. There are some rich members of the NDs.

Mr. Speaker, it will reflect the real cost, the real and reasonable cost, of delivering health care services, especially as it relates to those services that are covered by health care premiums.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. How can the Premier justify targeting seniors and average Alberta families by hiking their health care premiums just so he can pay for further reductions in corporate income taxes in the next three years?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, the hon. leader of the third party alluded to seniors. I specifically pointed out that seniors, as they are protected in a number of other instances, will be protected, at least the low-income to middle-income seniors, relative to health care premiums.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Teachers' Labour Dispute

REV. ABBOTT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was very pleased to see this government take action to help Alberta students to obtain the education that they need and deserve. My question is for clarity purposes only, and it's to the Minister of Human Resources and Employment. How does this order affect the boards and locals that were not on strike on February 21 but have since taken a strike vote, such as the Timberline local and the Wild Rose school division teachers in my constituency?

MR. DUNFORD: Mr. Speaker, the order in council was quite clear, declaring the unreasonable hardship, but also to the appendix it listed 22 particular disputes that were in progress. That order does not impact or reflect on any of the other ongoing disputes.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

REV. ABBOTT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: if a strike should occur in some of these other unaffected locals, will the minister consider declaring an emergency after a similar time period has elapsed, as in the first order?

MR. DUNFORD: I'd like to point out to the hon. member and to other members here in the House that it's not the minister that declares the emergency. The Labour Relations Code contemplates that in the opinion of the Lieutenant Governor in Council, thus meaning the cabinet. It's cabinet that would make that decision.

REV. ABBOTT: Thank you for the clarification.

My second supplemental is to the Minister of Learning. Is the minister prepared to bring legislation forward to protect the education of Alberta students in the future?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On Friday of this week we will be having a very important court challenge that has been initiated by the ATA. We will wait for that, but I have given my assurances to the 37,000 grade 12 students, to the 550,000 students in Alberta that we will do what it takes to ensure that the teachers are not out on strike but, rather, in the classroom.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-East.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government had a chance to find a solution to the teachers' concerns before a strike began. My first question this afternoon is to the Minister of Human Resources and Employment. Why didn't the minister strike a disputes inquiry board to try and negotiate a solution before February 4?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. DUNFORD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Disputes inquiry boards of course are part of the Labour Relations Code and have been used in the past in various disputes that were either ongoing or had actually gone into a strike situation. I want to point out to the hon. member that a disputes inquiry board would look at a situation to see if there was anything that was unclear, anything that was confusing about a particular issue, and if there was any particular hope in being able to cause a recommendation that might bring the parties to an agreement. I think that not only at the time but in retrospect we can see that a disputes inquiry board would only have delayed the situation. I would think on behalf of all teachers, of all parents and children that if we were to have a situation develop, February would probably be the month to have it happen.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second question is to the Minister of Learning. Did the hon. minister oppose a disputes inquiry board because it would not take away the teachers' right to strike, which is ultimately what this minister and this government wants to do?

Thank you.

DR. OBERG: Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member I'm sure knows and as the hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment just alluded to, the disputes inquiry board is a mechanism for mediation. The contracts between the teachers' union and the school boards were up in September of this year – that is when they ran out – so they have been without a contract for roughly five or six months. They had that time in which to undertake mediation, and indeed many of them did undertake mediation. Because of one means or the other the mediation efforts were stonewalled, so I did not make the recommendation. Obviously, it is the Minister of Human Resources and Employment who makes this decision. But I think we have to be realistic. Mediation was going nowhere. To give it another month of mediation, to cause a month of undue hardship to students I think is a problem.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My third question this afternoon is to the Premier. Is the Premier planning any punitive action in legislation against the ATA?

MR. KLEIN: No.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-East, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Kyoto Accord

MR. AMERY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question is to the hon. Minister of Environment. Recent studies and reports by the Canadian Manufacturers & Exporters indicate that severe economic pain will be inflicted on the Canadian economy as a result of the implementation of the Kyoto accord. Could the Minister of Environment advise the House and Albertans as to what the impact will be on the provincial economy if the accord is ratified by the Canadian government?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

DR. TAYLOR: Thank you very much. The issue is one of a range of risk, and certainly in Alberta we've done a great deal of analysis. We've used some Australian modeling groups called ABARE. We've used our own modeling groups and different modeling groups, plus we've had these numbers validated or examined by university economists inside the province. What we have is a number in a range. What we're estimating is our range of risk based on a 200 megatonne, or 200 million tonne, gap between the Kyoto target and where we are today. In fact, the gap is much larger than that. We know and the federal government just has admitted that the gap is not 200 million, not 160 million, but 240 million tonnes. So for Alberta what this means at a 200 million tonne gap – and we know it's already bigger than 200 million, and by the end of the year we'll be able to validate the gap of someplace around 280 million to 300 million tonnes. We already know the price to Alberta, based on 200 million – so we know it's a conservative estimate – in a range of risk will be someplace between $2.9 billion and $5.5 billion, and that's a conservative estimate. We know that will cost Alberta someplace between 40,000 and 70,000 jobs. Now, are these numbers right? Well, just yesterday we had an economist from a university in Ontario, who is not associated with us in any way, who has done his own analysis and reported: Alberta's numbers are right; it is the federal government and the federal Ministry of the Environment that are flat wrong.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. AMERY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister. Since the United States of America, our largest trading partner, did not and will not sign the accord and opted for a made-in-America solution, did the Minister of Environment suggest to his federal counterpart a made-in-Canada solution?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

DR. TAYLOR: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Not only did the U.S. not sign the accord, but 92 percent of Canadian trade and 92 percent of Canadian trade partners are in noncompliance. So only 8 percent of our trade is in compliance or will be in compliance with the Kyoto accord. That's one thing.

In terms of a North American policy, we have encouraged the federal government to seek a policy that would cover the U.S., Mexico, and Canada. The Europeans can meet their targets because they have what is called a European bubble. For instance, Portugal can increase its emissions by something in the neighbourhood of 37 percent. So what they've done is they've just moved that around Europe and given it to Germany and given it to the U.K. and said, "We're meeting our targets," without any significant, real reductions. So that's why we're arguing with the federal government: because our major trading partner is the U.S., Mexico is a major competitor, and Venezuela is a major competitor, we need a North American or even a hemispheric model.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry, followed by the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Heritage Savings Trust Fund

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My first question today is to the Premier. Why is your government planning to use Alberta's nest egg, the heritage fund, to cover your government's mismanagement of the province's finances?

MR. KLEIN: I really don't know where you get that notion. You know, perhaps it comes from my media scrum yesterday, where I said – and I've said it many times before – that if there's one thing that's true in politics, it is that yes means yes, maybe means yes, and no means maybe.

Very simply I said that, yes, there's been some informal discussion about what should be done with the heritage savings trust fund. All members of caucus have different ideas as to what should be done with that fund, but the hon. Minister of Revenue has the matter under consideration. There's been no formal discussion in caucus or cabinet about the future of the fund, and as I pointed out yesterday in the media scrum, the status quo prevails. Today the status quo prevails. Nothing has been decided relative to the future of the fund, but I imagine that down the road it will be a topic of discussion certainly amongst government caucus members and perhaps eventually in the Legislature. Who knows?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. BONNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier. As of last night the Premier said that there were rain showers in Alberta. What has caused this drastic change in weather in government policy from last night until today?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. the Premier.

MR. KLEIN: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Again, what radio broadcast was he listening to? Did he question the reporter as to whether the reporter was perhaps paraphrasing or interpreting something that I said? I'll tell you precisely what I said in the news conference yesterday. I was asked specifically: is it raining? I said: in my mind it's not raining, but we've had sprinkles from time to time. But, no, we're not experiencing a rainstorm right now.

Unlike virtually every other jurisdiction in this country we're still budgeting, according to the third-quarter update, for an $18 million surplus. Albeit small and a lot less than last year, nonetheless we're in better shape than virtually every other jurisdiction in this country, Mr. Speaker. So it's not raining.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. BONNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Premier again. Will the Premier be sending a note to the co-chairs of the Future Summit and asking them to remove any recommendations about spending the heritage fund from their final report?

MR. KLEIN: No. If I get into that, Mr. Speaker, then someone else might say: Mr. Premier, you write the co-chairs and have them remove or add something. The Future Summit was an Albertans' exercise, and it was open and accessible to all the delegates. What made the summit so successful was that it was open and everything was on the table. We'll go through those recommendations and give them our fullest consideration.

Mr. Speaker, I'll have the hon. Minister of Revenue supplement the question.

MR. MELCHIN: Mr. Speaker, the Future Summit was an outstanding conference of delegates, a great cross section of Albertans. It was a chance for them to voice their opinions on a whole variety of topics. There was a chance for them to even talk about things such as the Alberta heritage savings trust fund. I would find it quite offensive that we would then go back to delegates and tell them that we didn't listen, that we don't care to have the recommendations even written up in a report.

It is imperative that we allow through a summit the voices of Albertans to come forward. That report will be completed by the end of April. We're looking forward to analyzing all those recommendations and will report to it in due course.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Bighorn Wildlife Recreation Area

MR. MARZ: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first question today is to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. The Bighorn backcountry area is a very large area, rich in resources, and a very popular spot for many recreational activities. I've recently received many calls and letters and another 52 letters just today from various recreational user groups including off-highway vehicle users, trail riders, and environmental groups, all with a very diverse set of opinions on how this pristine area should be managed. Now, with all these competing demands, how is this government going to resolve the issue of responsible access to this area in a way that meets the needs of Albertans?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. CARDINAL: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. That's a very good question. Of course the Bighorn backcountry is a very important area in Alberta. The area covers over 4,000 square kilometers, and about 80 percent of that, of course, is in the prime protection area of the eastern slopes policy.

Mr. Speaker, there are competing interests, of course, as far as access to the area, from environmental to recreational to industrial development, so what we've done is set up a committee of 15 independent members along with seven departments to look at laying out a plan, looking at areas such as the existing usage and looking at how we may minimize the imprint we leave once development takes place, and also to achieve a balance for Albertans between the economic development and the environmental management.

I just want to mention a few of the representatives that are representing the public, Mr. Speaker. One is the petroleum industry, trail riding, fisheries, environment, off-highway vehicle users, and residents of the Clearwater area also. So it is a very important area, and keep in mind that there will always be a balance.

MR. MARZ: My second question to the same minister: what is this 15-member advisory group or panel specifically doing to consult with Albertans about the use of this area?

MR. CARDINAL: Mr. Speaker, first of all, these 15 members are well qualified, and some of them represent agencies that already do a lot of work in the regions, in all the sectors in fact, and this group, of course, has developed a web site where individuals can contact the group. In addition to that, we are setting up a meeting on March 14 in Rocky Mountain House, where the public will be invited to attend and participate in the design of the process.

MR. MARZ: My final question, Mr. Speaker, is to the same minister. When will Albertans know what the advisory group is recommending, and will there be an opportunity to respond to those recommendations?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. CARDINAL: Yeah, Mr. Speaker. What I expect is the recommendations to be finalized later this spring. They will be made available to the public, and we will respond immediately to the recommendations, of course, keeping in mind again that there will always be a balance between the economic development and the environmental management of our lands.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Community Lottery Boards

MS BLAKEMAN: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Last fall in a panic state the government cut community lottery board allocations by 1 percent. The timing and notification regarding these cuts resulted in hardship for the agencies that rely on these funds to do their good work. The government has now put the community lottery board allocation process on hold. My first question is to the Minister of Gaming. When is the minister going to be forthright with the lottery boards and their agencies and tell them how long they can expect to be kept on hold?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. STEVENS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In this particular fiscal year, that is 2001-2002, some $53 million was allocated to community lottery boards.

AN HON. MEMBER: How much?

MR. STEVENS: Actually, $53.3 million.

As a result of the belt-tightening that was necessary this past fall, Alberta Gaming did its share, and there was a minor reduction in the amount of the allocation at that point in time by some 2 million or so dollars. The balance of the money has been allocated to community lottery boards, and the cheques are going out to the various recipients.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you. Can the minister confirm if the reductions were levied across the province without preferential treatment; in other words, did all boards get cut the same?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. STEVENS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The fact is that community lottery boards have different ways of dealing with the allocations that are provided to them. There are some 88 boards. Some have one meeting and one allocation. Others have two meetings and two-stage allocations. Accordingly, when it was necessary to make the deduction this past fall, some accommodation had to be made at that point in time to reflect the fact that some of the boards had in fact expended all of the moneys that had been given to them. We indicated at that point in time very clearly to the boards what the process was, and all of them know exactly where they stand with respect to how they were treated, but it was necessary to take into account the different ways that each of those boards had set up their allocations in making those deductions.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you. Again to the Minister of Gaming: why are there indications being given to organizations that the community facility enhancement program has run out of money and that there's no point in putting in an application?

MR. STEVENS: Well, the community facility enhancement program was started in the '80s and, in fact, is in its 13th or 14th year and fourth iteration. Each year there is some $25 million that is allocated to that particular program. The fact is that as you get towards the end of a particular program, as we are at this point in time – that is, with March 31 being the end of this fiscal year and with March 31 also being the end of this fourth iteration of the program – you come to a point where there is very little money yet there is a significant demand. Accordingly, what has been told to applicants is that we will be addressing the continuation of the CFEP program going forward into the new budget, and in the meantime we will continue to allocate what funds there are available based on appropriate applications. So that is the message, Mr. Speaker, that has been given to people who are interested in this program.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Teachers' Remuneration

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Contrary to the government's claims the 4 and 2 percent line items in last year's budget for teachers' salaries thwarted the collective bargaining process. It forced school boards to choose between a wage settlement for teachers well below those of comparable groups such as nurses, provincial employees, or even MLAs or to take resources away from students. The result now before us is a teachers' strike of unprecedented size and bitterness. My question is to the Premier. Why did the government arrogantly interfere with the lawful rights of teachers' locals and school boards to freely engage in collective bargaining through its imposition of a line item for teachers' salaries in the budget?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, if I may be permitted, I would like to begin the answer to the question with a question. Would the hon. member have been satisfied had we put absolutely nothing in, that they were guaranteed nothing, rather than 6 percent? Is that what he's saying, that he would have preferred that we guaranteed nothing rather than 6 percent? Now, I know I can't ask him a question, but perhaps the media can ask him the question after the session.

Mr. Speaker, we felt that we were doing something for the teachers by taking the unprecedented step of guaranteeing them at least 6 percent, 4 and 2, by making a guarantee, unprecedented, with the ability for the union to negotiate with the various school jurisdictions for more if indeed that's where the jurisdictions decided they wanted to spend their dollars.

MR. MASON: Mr. Speaker, will the Premier be straightforward with Albertans and acknowledge that there is a clear link between the government's unprecedented decision to impose wage controls on teachers through the budget and the resulting unprecedented provincewide job action by teachers?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, had we made no comment in the budget and said that we will put zero in the budget for teachers' salaries, that would have been wage control, that would have sent a very serious message. Putting a minimum of 6 percent in the budget guaranteed that amount at least, and as has been the case in various school jurisdictions throughout this province where there have been settlements, teachers were able to negotiate for more in some cases if not all cases.

MR. MASON: Mr. Speaker, is the Premier trying to suggest that since previous budgets, going back till the foundation of this province, did not have line items for teachers yet teachers had significant increases in their wages and living conditions, that was a less satisfactory approach than this wage control through the budget?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, this is not wage control. This is guaranteeing a minimum. You know, my math is not that poor, but a 6 percent increase is better than zero. Any of the university professors over there agree that 6 percent is better and greater than zero?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-West, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Osteoporosis Program

MS KRYCZKA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As chair of the Seniors Advisory Council for Alberta I have become very familiar with health issues facing older Albertans. A problem faced by countless seniors in our province is osteoporosis. In fact, 1 in 4 Alberta women over the age of 50 and 1 in 8 men suffer from osteoporosis. A number of my constituents have suffered broken bones as a result of what should have been minor falls. My question is for the Minister of Health and Wellness. What steps is his department taking to reduce the number of seniors who suffer these unnecessary setbacks year after year and to reduce the related costs to the health system?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, it's clear that the cost of our health system will increase as the average age of our population continues to increase over the next 10 to 20 years. As an example, in the area of osteoporosis we spent $14.2 million in the last fiscal year just for diagnostic tests to determine osteoporosis. The Department of Health and Wellness will be working with the Osteoporosis Society to develop a public awareness campaign around the relationship between nutritional, lifestyle, and activity habits and the development of osteoporosis, and I'm pleased to advise members of this Assembly that the department will be providing $100,000 to the Osteoporosis Society to administer the campaign. The focus of the campaign will be on women over the age of 35 who are approaching or who have entered the menopausal years, when decreases in estrogen put them at risk of losing one-third to one-half of their bone density. This group is open to changing health behaviours. I think that this is a very good example of wellness initiatives that the government of Alberta intends to promote.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MS KRYCZKA: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, my first supplemental is also to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Calgary and Edmonton have strong osteoporosis programs. Will this campaign include any specific activities to address the needs of those seniors and others who are living outside the province's major cities?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, I think that this is an important point to make, that we need to conduct an environmental scan that is a first step to a public awareness campaign, and the purpose of the scan is to identify the most effective ways of reaching groups within the province that could be better served by osteoporosis education. Again, within the context of the Mazankowski report this approach to the promotion of wellness and giving Albertans access to credible, reliable information on how to look after themselves is critical.

Certainly the issues of those who are living in rural parts of Alberta will be addressed. The scan also must consider the harder to reach populations within urban areas. Examples of that may be certain cultural groups, recent immigrants who perhaps do not have facility in the language. Lower income groups would be another good example, Mr. Speaker. Based on the information that we gather through this environmental scan, we will develop a strategy to inform these groups about lifestyle, nutrition, and activity choices that will best protect them from osteoporosis.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MS KRYCZKA: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second supplementary also to the Minister of Health and Wellness: does he have any further plans that would also contribute to the prevention of osteoporosis, say in the area of learning with young students in the school system, in the area of diet and nutrition?

MRS. NELSON: Good question.

MR. MAR: Well, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance, next to me, commented that that's a good question, and I agree. Clearly, one of the recommendations in the Mazankowski report that we intend on proceeding forward with is the improvement of curriculum in our schools as it relates to health. I think that that would be a very, very important point. The setting of the right trends in young people is absolutely critical to establishing lifelong trends for activity, proper nutrition, and so on.

So, Mr. Speaker, the short answer is yes. It is our intention to be working with my colleague the minister from the Department of Learning to proceed on developing curriculum, and certainly education as it relates to osteoporosis within an overall context of health education curriculum would be important.

head: Recognitions

THE SPEAKER: Seven hon. members have advised the chair that they would like to participate today, so we will go in this order. First of all, the hon. Member for Lacombe-Stettler, followed by the hon. Member for Red Deer-North, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow, then the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glegarry, Edmonton-Castle Downs, and Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Town of Lacombe

MRS. GORDON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Lacombe, a growing, vibrant community situated adjacent to highway 2 in central Alberta, has something to brag about. Harrowsmith Country Life magazine has chosen Lacombe as one of the ten prettiest towns in Canada. No other Alberta towns were selected. Harrowsmith Country Life editor, Tom Cruickshank, stated that articles such as the one Lacombe will be featured in in April's publication have been a huge plus for past winners, attracting large numbers of interested tourists.

Congratulations, Lacombe. I have always known that you were a special place. I am very proud to be a longtime resident and to represent your citizens' interests at the Alberta Legislature.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Peter Mercer

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today it's my great pleasure to recognize and honour the work of Peter Mercer as he prepares for his March 1 retirement from the Downtown Business Association. I met Peter within a few weeks of first being elected. He was knocking on my door to let me know what I could do in partnership with the DBA.

We have much to thank Peter for. He promoted and publicized the 1995 capital city downtown plan. This, in turn, brought us the demolition of the Rat Hole, the one-way to two-way changes for downtown streets, safety audits of downtown parkades, and the first two-hour parking meters.

Peter is also a huge promoter of the Fourth Street Promenade streetscaping and the installation of Roy Leadbeater's Aurora's Dance, also on 104th. His publicity made this a going concern. In fact, that is the comment I heard the most: Peter's ability to get stories about revitalization into the news and that Peter is a great party animal. He brought us all the best parties downtown: festivities around the Canadian Finals Rodeo, the longest line dance, and the chili cook-off, a great Santa Claus parade, and lots of downtown activities for Family Day.

Thank you Peter, and best wishes for your new endeavor.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Red Deer's Olympic Athletes

MRS. JABLONSKI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to rise today in the Assembly to recognize the Olympic champions from Red Deer. All members of the Olympic team from Alberta and Canada have made us proud and grateful for their honest, drug-free efforts, their graciousness, and their classic Canadian dignity.

I'm very proud to congratulate Jamie Sale from Red Deer and her partner, David Pelletier from Quebec, for their beautifully exciting and flawless pairs skating and their great Canadian attitudes. Our congratulations to Diedra Dionne of Red Deer, who, through persistence, determination, and faith, flew through the air with grace and beauty to win a bronze medal in aerial free-style skiing and to Ryan Smith from Red Deer, a member of the Canadian men's hockey team, who showed the true grit of Alberta hockey players, who never give up and always put their heart and soul into our great Canadian sport.

It is my pleasure to also congratulate our Olympic athletes from Red Deer, who competed with great talent and effort, our world cup champion speed skater, Jeremy Wotherspoon, and another great speed skater, Stephen Elm. In women's luge racing we are very proud and pleased to claim Regan Lauscher as our very own.

Congratulations to all these Red Deer athletes and to our entire Canadian Olympic team, their coaches, families, and sponsors. You have given a gift to all Canadians of an unforgettable 19th Winter Olympic Games of 2002 in Salt Lake City, Utah.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Canadian Forces Battle Group

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Earlier this year members of the Canadian Forces Battle Group, which consists of two infantry companies of the 3rd Battalion of the PPCLI, 1 Reconnaissance Squadron from the Lord Strathcona's Horse, and the logistics group from the No. 1 Service Battalion, all from Edmonton, were deployed to Afghanistan. They are part of Operation Apollo in direct support of the coalition against terrorism.

Our Canadian Forces have a long history of peacekeeping around the world, but they face real threats during this mission. They will conduct a variety of tasks where their safety will be threatened by land mines and resistance from the remaining Taliban and al-Qaeda fighters.

To all our soldiers who serve in Afghanistan, you honour us as a nation. Know that our thoughts and prayers are with you and that we wish you every success in your mission and a speedy and safe return to your loved ones. Thank you.

Walt Healy

MS DeLONG: Mr. Speaker, I rise today in the House to pay special recognition to an outstanding Calgarian who passed away in January. On January 12, Walt Healy, who was known around the world for his love of motorcycling, passed away.

Walt was an honoured resident of the Calgary-Bow constituency and the owner of Walt Healy Motorcycles, which he owned from 1931 until the day he died. Walt also loved to act part-time, appearing in several movies, including One More Mountain, where I was honoured to work with him. Walt won several awards and honours but may be best known for his commitment to safety while riding. His learn-to-ride program, implemented many years ago, has since become the Canada Safety Council motorcycle program and allows Canadians of all ages to share his passion for cycling and, at the same time, stay safe.

Walt was known as an outspoken, no-nonsense man with a heart of gold who lived life to the fullest. To quote from Walt: "On a motorcycle you smell, you feel, and you understand what's going on. It's a different feeling. You're a free individual, a free soul."

He was a true Albertan, a great friend to us all. We will miss him. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Canada's Armed Forces

MR. LUKASZUK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to join my colleague from Edmonton-Glengarry in acknowledging the brave Albertans who are currently maintaining the peace efforts in Afghanistan. On January 31, 2002, 750 men and women stationed at the CFB Edmonton Namao joined other members from Canada's armed forces on a mission to Kandahar, Afghanistan. We have complete confidence in their skills. It is with pride that we support them during this peacekeeping effort. The difficulties and dangers that they will face as they complete their tour of duty is a testament of courage and their devotion to Canada and her grateful citizens.

We also acknowledge their selfless families and friends, who are asked once again to put their fears and worries aside and accept the frightening task that lies ahead of their spouses, siblings, children, and parents. It is with the utmost gratitude that we honour them as well.

Canada is part of a coalition that will defend the fragile freedom in Afghanistan to ensure that this war-torn country, in despair for so long, has a chance to rebuild. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, the people of Afghanistan are depending on this coalition to provide them a chance of finally building a peaceful nation.

To our military personnel, Godspeed. To the families and friends, we join you in prayers and hope for their safe and quick return home. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

The Scott Family from Vermilion

MR. SNELGROVE: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's truly an honour today to rise in the House and recognize the Scott family from Vermilion. Now, all of us have heard of Becky Scott, who recently became Canada's first ever medal winner in a cross-country skiing event. It was a bronze medal, but more importantly or maybe just as importantly, it was done, unlike some of her competitors, drug free. I think you would all agree with me that she should be awarded the gold medal.

Mr. Speaker, Becky would be the first person to acknowledge that her parents were instrumental in her success. Walter and Jan Scott from Vermilion are truly gold medal parents. Becky has stated that when you take on a goal and put your heart and your soul into doing everything it takes to accomplish that goal, that is excellence. Well, Becky Scott truly is excellence.

On behalf of all her friends and supporters in and around the town of Vermilion: job well done.

head: Notices of Motions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise now to give notice that preceding Orders of the Day, I will be rising on Standing Order 30. Thank you.

head: Introduction of Bills

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

Bill 2 Child and Family Services Authorities Amendment Act, 2002

MS EVANS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 2, Child and Family Services Authorities Amendment Act, 2002.

The consultation that preceded this was, in fact, a comprehensive review taking place in the fall of 2000. The intent of this bill will be to clarify the nomination process for boards to address governance roles of the boards and their accountability to the ministry. Mr. Speaker, we have also had significant consultation with partnering departments of Justice, Learning, Health and Wellness, Community Development, International and Intergovernmental Relations.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 2 read a first time]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Little Bow.

Bill 3 Irrigation Districts Amendment Act, 2002

MR. McFARLAND: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce a bill, being the Irrigation Districts Amendment Act, 2002.

Mr. Speaker, this will accommodate small-volume water users who wish to use water without the necessity of obtaining the water licence under the current act.

[Motion carried; Bill 3 read a first time]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd move that Bill 3 be moved onto the Order Paper under Government Bills and Orders.

[Motion carried]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

Bill 4 Public Health Amendment Act, 2002

MR. MAR: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I beg leave to introduce a bill being Bill 4, the Public Health Amendment Act, 2002.

[Motion carried; Bill 4 read a first time]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Bill 5 Interjurisdictional Support Orders Act

MR. RATHGEBER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce a bill being Bill 5, the Interjurisdictional Support Orders Act.

Mr. Speaker, if this act is adopted by this Assembly, it will replace the existing Reciprocal Enforcement of Maintenance Orders Act, eliminating the need for the provisional orders and therefore two court applications in most support cases. A claimant who commences a support application or a support variation application under provincial or territorial legislation in another Canadian jurisdiction would have the application forwarded here, where an Alberta respondent would then present his or her evidence at a single court hearing. Claimants in Alberta would similarly have their paper applications forwarded to the respondent's province or territory for a single court hearing there.

I encourage all hon. members to support Bill 5.

[Motion carried; Bill 5 read a first time]

3:00

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd move that Bill 5 be moved onto the Order Paper under Government Bills and Orders.

[Motion carried]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Leduc.

Bill 7 Agriculture Financial Services Amendment Act, 2002

MR. KLAPSTEIN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 7, the Agriculture Financial Services Amendment Act, 2002.

The bill updates the current act to reflect the merger of the Agriculture Financial Services Corporation and the Alberta Opportunity Company.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd move that Bill 7 be moved onto the Order Paper under Government Bills and Orders.

Child Welfare Amendment Act, 2002

MS EVANS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 9, the Child Welfare Amendment Act, 2002.

This will amend current legislation to allow for interprovincial movement of children involved in child welfare, will streamline telephone applications, will in fact address amendments to enable a justice of the peace to handle telephone applications for apprehension orders, and will help us with the introduction of amendments to allow the Child Welfare Appeal Panel to be bound by the policies of the resources for children with disabilities program. Mr. Speaker, these amendments will allow for smoother co-ordination of issues and efficiency in the Child Welfare Act.

[Motion carried; Bill 9 read a first time]

Public Works Amendment Act, 2002

MR. SNELGROVE: Mr. Speaker, I request leave to introduce a bill being Bill 10, the Public Works Amendment Act, 2002.

[Motion carried; Bill 10 read a first time]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd move that Bill 10 be moved onto the Order Paper under Government Bills and Orders.

[Motion carried]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Energy Information Statutes Amendment Act, 2002

MR. STRANG: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 11, the Energy Information Statutes Amendment Act, 2002.

The following acts will be amended by this bill to retain and improve paramountcy of confidentiality provisions for those acts over the provisions of the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act: the Mines and Minerals Act, the Natural Gas Marketing Act, the Electric Utilities Act, the Oil and Gas Conservation Act, the Oil Sands Conservation Act, and the Coal Conservation Act.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 11 read a first time]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd move that Bill 11 be moved onto the Order Paper under Government Bills and Orders.

[Motion carried]

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Premier I'm pleased to file with the Assembly the appropriate number of letters of congratulations that the Premier has sent to Alberta-based Olympic medal winners. Many of those Olympians have been mentioned in statements here today. I will not read the names on all of the letters, but I do believe that these letters capture the pride that all MLAs and all Albertans have in these tremendous athletes.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. Deputy Premier, did you have tablings on behalf of your other position as Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development?

MRS. McCLELLAN: I do, sir.

THE SPEAKER: Please proceed.

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to table with the Assembly today copies of the report on university animal facilities for the year 2001 as required under section 52(5) of the Universities Act.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Finance.

MRS. NELSON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This morning I provided the government's 2001-2002 quarterly budget report for the third quarter to all Members of the Legislative Assembly. I am now wanting to file and table in this House the quarterly budget report as amended – in other words, the consolidated fiscal plan – as required under section 8 of the Government Accountability Act as well as the third quarter activity report for 2001-2002.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

MR. MAR: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have for tabling the requisite number of copies of a listing of the expenses and costs for the Premier's Advisory Council on Health. I note that for its 17 months of activity the total cost came to $326,454.30.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

MR. DUNFORD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to table with the Assembly two reports: the Appeals Commission for Alberta Workers' Compensation 2000 annual report and the Certified General Accountants Association of Alberta 2001 annual report.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This afternoon at the request of Mr. Barrie Schulha of St. Albert I wish to table the appropriate number of copies of a letter that he sent to me requesting that they be tabled in the Legislative Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I stand now to table the appropriate number of copies of a letter that I've written to Mr. Michael Chambers, president of the Canadian Olympic Association, congratulating him on the great work that Canada's team and Albertans did in the Olympics in Salt Lake City, expressing our thanks for all the entertainment and enjoyment that they provided for us for the last couple of weeks.

THE SPEAKER: Are there additional members?

Hon. members, the chair has three tablings today. First of all, pursuant to the Legislative Assembly Act I table with the Assembly five copies of the following Members' Services orders: service order 7/01, Constituency Services Amendment Order (No. 9), and 8/01, Constituency Services Amendment Order (No. 10).

I also table with the Assembly the report by the Ethics Commissioner into allegations involving the hon. former Member for Wainwright, Robert Butch Fischer, dated January 9, 2002. The report was distributed to members on January 9 of 2002.

As well, pursuant to section 32 of the Election Finances and Contributions Disclosure Act, Revised Statutes of Alberta 1980, chapter E-3, I'm pleased to table with the Assembly the 24th annual report of the Chief Electoral Officer for the calendar year 2000 and the 2001 general election.

head: Request for Emergency Debate

THE SPEAKER: Now, on our routine, having no points of order, no questions of privilege, we come to recognition of the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition on a Standing Order 30 application.

Education System

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to propose the following motion to the Assembly:

Be it resolved that this Assembly adjourn the ordinary business of the Assembly to discuss a matter of urgent public importance; namely, the actions needed to resolve the problems currently faced by Alberta's schools.

It is critical that we have this debate now. The discussion, the give and take that goes on, and the exchange of ideas has to be conducted beyond the scope provided by question period. It has to go beyond that scope where we can deal with it in the context of debate, because we're having a situation arise right now where there's potentially additional school jurisdictions that may enter into a strike position.

We have to have a clear definition from the government: what are the parameters, what are the expectations, and what are the future projections of where we expect to see our public school system moving? It's not enough just to say that the solution has to be achieved today. It has to be dealt with in the context of a long-run commitment to our education system, a long-run commitment to how we as Albertans want to see our education system supported, and those are the kinds of issues that we have to bring into this debate. We have to look at: what are the kinds of parameters that we as the decision-makers for this province want to put into the commitment on funding? In terms of class size what debate will go around creating class size parameters within the context of feedback from those school boards, from the teachers in terms of what is appropriate? What additional resources are available to possibly support a teacher in the classroom, whether those are computers, whether those are teacher aides, whether those are the kinds of access to textbooks that appears not to be there.

We also have to look at the overall commitment that we have to education in the context of the resources that we provide. How much of our education system is going to have to be funded from parent fund-raising, from community fund-raising, from partnerships with the business community? These are the kinds of things that we have to be able to discuss now in the open, in a public area like the Legislature so that we can effectively send signals to Albertans about what to expect we have as a commitment to the education system.

Mr. Speaker, we also need to clarify for Albertans the kind of expenditures that we currently have in our education system, how it compares, how it's keeping up to the changing number of students, to the changing costs of providing the learning environment. This has to be reflected in the concept that we have conflicting numbers out there. You know, it's easy to say that there's been an increase of 41 percent, but we also have to look at it in the context of: how does that keep up with the number of students and the cost of providing it in terms of computers that are necessary, the increasing cost of textbooks, the increasing cost of providing library services?

All of this has to be built into that debate, and we have to have the opportunity to address those issues here in this Legislature so that Albertans understand the parameters. They then will better understand what they're hearing when school boards or when teachers' local associations get involved in their negotiations. They'll also understand better what comes out of this Legislature when we hear the Minister of Learning or the minister of human resources or the Premier make comments about the parameters, what's available for discussion, what is on the table, what has been offered, what's being withdrawn. These are the kind of parameters that we have to be able to provide Albertans with so that they understand fully the debate that's going on.

Mr. Speaker, we also have to look at how we fund education in the future. We have to look at it so that the system will provide opportunities for all of our students. Do we have enough support for our special-needs students? How do we go about creating special-needs classifications? How do we go about dealing with population changes, community growth? How do we deal with making sure that adequate school facilities are available? This is the kind of thing that has to be looked at in the context of where we want to go so that Albertans understand and can basically feel comfortable that they appreciate the arguments that are being put forward by both sides in this discussion right now, whether it be the school boards or whether it be the teachers' local. These are the kinds of things we have to be able to look at.

We also have to look in the context of: what is a government's role in the event of the kind of teachers' strike situation that we've seen in the last few weeks and potentially could see more of in the future. We've seen the government in effect become involved when it shouldn't have in the negotiations. They have set parameters on what are expectations from the messages that they're sending out to the public. That, Mr. Speaker, needs to be clarified. Is this going to be the common practice of the government? Is this going to be something that all groups who deal with public dollars are going to have to expect in the context of how they negotiate for their contracts? Will there be public legislated guidelines put in place about these kinds of settlements?

The other aspect, then, is: how do we deal with the responsibility once those signals are sent? You know, we've heard now from the budget last year of a 4 and 2 offer to the teachers as a base, but what happens now if the local school boards decide they want to deal with a different kind of a settlement? Where can they get the resources? Are they free to deal with that? We've heard through public debate that the minister has essentially suggested very strongly – now, some people see it almost as a threat if the school boards use their reserves to provide for settlement in this context. What is the role of a reserve? What are the options for using that reserve? These are the kinds of things that we have to be able to talk about and to question the government on to clarify so that, in effect, we can have a true understanding by the people of this province.

Mr. Speaker, that outlines very briefly why we see this being critical to the debate today, because it's a matter of importance that the public sees a need for clear definitions so that they can interpret the actions that are going on on both sides and they can basically better understand the solution as well when we see either a negotiated solution or after the 15th of March mediated solutions that are being put in place for schools.

We also have to be able to convince them or convey to them that as a province we will respect that, that we will provide the resources to the school boards so that they can deal with the settlement, whatever it is, especially if it's a mediated solution where the school board, then, is left with no choice but to make some drastic decisions. What are the implications of that? What are the support systems in place if they end up having to make, in effect, classroom cut decisions?

So that, Mr. Speaker, is why we think it's very critical that this debate be conducted today, that this debate be conducted this afternoon, and that this debate be conducted in this Legislature.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Learning on the Standing Order 30 application.

DR. OBERG: Absolutely, Mr. Speaker. I would urge that this application is not in order, and I will do it for several reasons. First of all, the application, if I may quote, addresses "the actions needed to resolve the problems currently faced by Alberta's schools." As Minister of Learning it would be extremely naive of me to stand up here and say that there are absolutely no problems in any school at any one time. I think, equally, it would be naive of me to say that there aren't potential problems, that the teachers' strike has not been a problem, and I will address that a little later.

I think that any school jurisdiction, any jurisdiction in Canada, should be measured on its results. It should be measured on the outcomes that the students coming out of the system are showing. In Alberta we have unprecedented results. Prior to this motion in question period I talked about the results from the PISA exams, where we scored essentially the top marks in the world. I will say that it's for three reasons.

First of all, it's our students. I think we have excellent students in this province. I think our students are well motivated and are doing a great job. Secondly, I'll say teachers. I think that our teachers are doing an absolutely excellent job in this province and again are equally well motivated and doing a great job. And, Mr. Speaker, the third thing that I will say – and I will congratulate my department – is the curriculum. The work that my department does in curriculum with field testing, with diploma exams – all of these types of things are second to none in this world, and again I will repeat for the third or fourth time today that we finished number one in the world.

Often – and I believe too often – a jurisdiction is graded, so to speak, on the amount of dollars that they put in, and although I don't agree with that, I will state some facts. The fact is quite simply – and I'll use Stats Canada – that in the year 2000-01 we were ranked fifth in the country. We believe that in our ranking, using the same procedures, we are fifth again this year. However, Mr. Speaker, it is an apples and oranges argument, because, for example, in Manitoba they have included capital expenditures on a onetime basis within their budget. So if we were to include our capital expenditures of $613 million for schools this year, we would be sitting approximately third in Canada. By no means an emergency.

Mr. Speaker, the other point that I wanted to make quite simply – and the hon. Leader of the Opposition made this point as well – is that there has been a 41 percent increase in the dollars that have been allocated to schools since 1995-96. In the two budgets that I have brought down, 9.8 percent in the first budget and an 8.4 percent increase in the second budget – last year alone that amounted to an extra $245 million that has gone into the school system. Special needs were raised by the hon. Leader of the Opposition. We have more than doubled special-needs funding from '95-96 to 2001-2002, to the tune of around $327 million.

Another very important point – and I want to reiterate this – is that the surpluses that are existing within the school system today amount to around $180 million, according to their statements. Mr. Speaker, these have been arrived at by good judgments by the school boards. I don't want to belittle that in any way, but the point I want to make here is that that money is available to be used within the school system but more importantly that number has increased. That number has not decreased. Last year it was around $160 million. It has actually increased the amount of surpluses that are available to the schools. So I believe that it's something extremely important.

Another point that I wanted to make is the Alberta initiative for school improvement. This is something that is unprecedented anywhere else in the world; $68 million per year is put in for 734 projects on how to improve schools. No other jurisdiction in the world is doing this. We are by far – by far – ahead of any other jurisdiction in the world.

Mr. Speaker, I will say, though, that there was a problem facing the system, a very major problem, and that was when the teachers were not in the classroom, when our students were not learning, when our students were not having their right to education being upheld. This Minister of Human Resources and Employment made the correct step and put those students back into the classroom, back into the learning environment. I will also argue that this is a case of sub judice – and this case will be heard by the Provincial Court on Friday of this week – that the whole issue about the strike is a sub judice case and should not be discussed in this Legislature.

So I guess, Mr. Speaker, what I would state quite simply to close is that the main problem that has been faced by the school system in Alberta has been the teachers out on strike. It has been the teachers not in the classroom teaching students, students not learning. That has been resolved, plus on Friday of this week there will be a court case, a very important court case, where the Alberta Teachers' Association has challenged the right of students to learn. We feel that that is extremely important, and we'll be there.

So, Mr. Speaker, I feel that the Legislative Assembly and yourself in particular should not rule, should not vote in favour of the Standing Order 30 and that this is not an emergency of the proportions needed to adjourn the debate of today.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: Well, hon. members, I've now listened to two petitions with respect to this. I would ask hon. members to get the Standing Orders out, please, because so far I've heard no arguments from anybody with respect to urgency. Maybe I'll get one. I'm going to allow two more, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands and the hon. Government House Leader, and then I'm going to make a decision with respect to this Standing Order 30 application.

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, proceed.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I certainly take your point that the test of whether or not this debate ought to be allowed is whether it is, in fact, a matter of urgent public importance. I would argue that it is both urgent and a matter of very serious public importance.

The government has taken action, Mr. Speaker, to order the teachers back to work, and that is currently before the courts and will be resolved, we hope, by the end of this week. So, in fact, that particular decision is going to have a very great effect, particularly if the court rules against the government, in which case immediate action of some sort will be taken by the government. It's very important that this Legislature have a debate before that happens.

Secondly, Mr. Speaker, there are a great deal of school jurisdictions that still may be in a position to strike, and that may in fact happen very soon. These are not covered under this application, so that is another matter of very urgent debate. I think that it's important to recognize that even if the government is successful, based on what we have understood in the public debate around this issue, there may be long-term and immediate consequences in the schools even if the teachers are forced against their will to go back into the classrooms. There may be, in fact, very serious impacts that will make themselves felt very, very quickly.

I would indicate that there have been 350,000 students in 22 school districts out of school, and the chances of them not being affected simply because the minister orders the teachers back to work is, you know, remote, that there will be no ongoing impact that we will be seeing. The government seems to feel that it can snap its fingers under its very broad legislative mandate and the problem goes away. Mr. Speaker, the problem has not gone away. It's a serious problem affecting almost every student in this province, and this Legislature has a duty to deal with it.

I've seen time and time again the burning issues facing Albertans. The burning political issues are not debated in this Legislature in a timely fashion because the government doesn't want it. Well, Mr. Speaker, what's the use of this place if it's going to be dealt with in that fashion by the government? The important question we have is: what is going to happen to the students in Alberta schools? Quite frankly, the fact that the government would say that this is not a matter of urgent debate beggars belief.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader on the Standing Order 30 application.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I will be succinct. There are some very clear points that need to be made. Standing Order 30 provides for suspending the normal business of the House for a matter of "urgent public importance." Well, there's no question that education, public education, is certainly an issue of public importance. In fact, it was highlighted yesterday in the throne speech, which we will get to debate later on this afternoon if we're allowed to continue with Orders of the Day.

I would think it would be entirely appropriate for members, in debating the throne speech, to deal with the issues that were raised in the throne speech, and there are matters in the throne speech dealing with education, so it's not urgent to move off the normal Orders of the Day, Mr. Speaker. In fact, the normal Orders of the Day allow for debate on those public issues of importance in Learning as well as those public issues of importance in health care and other areas.

Also, we heard the Premier today indicate that the budget would be available on the 19th of next month. Some of the issues that were raised – and I agree with you, Mr. Speaker, that none of them previously raised any issues of urgency – related to spending in education. Well, there's no better place to deal with the spending issues and the amount of resourcing and the way that resourcing is done and, in fact, the business plan of Learning except in Committee of Supply and in the debate under the appropriations bills which will be before the House.

There were questions about government getting involved when it shouldn't have, and that comes to my final point. The urgency that was apparent last week was relative to our students being out of school and needing to get those students back into school before undue hardship was caused. That was dealt with by the government. There was an action brought before the court. That action is before the court as we speak. The decision is to be made on Friday. It's premature for this House to get into that debate while that matter is before the court, and, Mr. Speaker, that really is the only issue where urgency was in question at all. The rest of the issues relating to public education are very important issues and very important issues for this House to debate, and we should get on with that debate under the debate on the Speech from the Throne. We should get on with that debate under Committee of Supply when the budget comes down. We should get on with that debate during the interim supply, which obviously will be necessary because the budget isn't coming down until the 19th of this month.

So there will be plenty of opportunities in this House to deal with the issues of public importance, including the very important issue of public education. But it's not an issue that meets the test, Mr. Speaker, under Standing Order 30 to abrogate Orders of the Day. In fact, we should get on with Orders of the Day and reply to the Speech from the Throne and address the very urgent issues of public importance that were addressed by Her Honour yesterday.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, the chair has listened carefully to the arguments with respect to the issue of emergency debate and this application to adjourn the ordinary business of the House as brought forward by the Hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

First of all, the chair received notice that this application would be made at least two hours prior to this afternoon's sitting in the Assembly, so the requirements, at least the filing requirements, of Standing Order 30(1) have been met. At this stage the role of the chair is to determine whether or not the request for leave is in order, and that's what this discussion has been about: whether or not the request – the request – for leave is in order, not if the subject is in order.

The request for leave would be that under the Standing Orders the person who sponsors the request would "briefly state the arguments in favour of the request for leave" – I might point out that the brief request for leave was nine minutes in length – "and the Speaker may allow such debate as he considers relevant to the question of urgency of debate and then shall rule on whether or not the request for leave is in order." It has to do with "considers relevant to the question of urgency of debate," not at all with the subject matter before us.

So having listened attentively and having seen the words that were presented and recognizing that the sponsor of the motion went from 3:09 to 3:18, which was nine minutes – oh, by the way, to speculate for just 30 or 40 seconds or a minute ahead in the future, should the chair rule that this is in order, the amount of time eligible, then, for discussion would be 10 minutes.

The chair has great difficulty in determining any arguments that were put forward for urgency; that is, what we would take away from the general Routine for today, which has been posted. The Routine for today would see debate on Her Honour's speech, would allocate and afford members 20 minutes' participation for the mover and the seconder, would allow the Leader of the Official Opposition 90 minutes to participate if he chooses to participate, would allow other members 15 minutes to participate, and would allow for a five-minute exchange after that. That would provide considerably more time allocation, in fact, for debate on this subject than there would be if there would be a successful Standing Order 30 application.

The assessment is this: in the chair's view the criteria for the matter constituting a general emergency as required under subsection (7)(a) are not met on this application.

While the education system is a very important issue for this Assembly, within the technical meaning of Standing Order 30 it would be very subjective to determine that a genuine emergency exists at the present time. Moreover, the wording of the motion is such that it is very general, as it refers to "the problems currently faced by Alberta's schools," rather than to a particular emergency that would require the immediate attention of the Assembly. Of course, this could change if events unfold differently in the next few days. As the chair indicated in granting the request by the then Leader of the Official Opposition on May 24, 2000, things can change in a matter of a day to make something a genuine emergency that was not one the day before.

The chair again would also note that there will be an opportunity for members to discuss the state of education and other subjects during the debate on the address in reply, which is scheduled to proceed this afternoon. The chair again would note that the Leader of the Official Opposition is afforded up to 90 minutes under the rules of this Assembly to speak on the address in reply to the Speech from the Throne, which is more than the 10 minutes he would have been allowed under Standing Order 30 debate.

Accordingly, the chair will not put the question, and the request will not proceed.

head: Statement by the Speaker

Standing Orders Amendments

THE SPEAKER: Now, hon. members, before we proceed with calling Orders of the Day, I indicated earlier that I wanted to make some additional comments with respect to the administration of the rules as we go forward now. Before we proceed to the business under Orders of the Day, the chair wants to remind members of some of the changes to the Standing Orders adopted last November that will affect the operation of the Assembly.

As a result of those amendments, this will be the first time since September 1993 that a Wednesday afternoon is not devoted to private members' business. Monday afternoons will now be spent addressing Written Questions, Motions for Returns, and private members' public bills. Commencing Monday evening at 8 p.m., one hour will be devoted to Motions Other than Government Motions.

In terms of planning speeches, members should refer to Standing Order 29, concerning speaking times in the Assembly. The mover of a government bill or motion will have 20 minutes' speaking time but will be limited to 15 minutes in closing debate. The member who speaks immediately following the mover will also have 20 minutes. All other participants will be limited to 15 minutes' speaking time. The Premier, the Leader of the Official Opposition, and the mover on the occasion of the Budget Address will still have 90 minutes.

The five-minute reduction in members' speaking time is replaced by a question and comment period, which is a new feature of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta. This period will be available at second and third reading following every member's speech except for those of the mover in opening and closing debate and the member who speaks immediately following the mover. This question and comment period will be an opportunity to ask questions of the member who has just spoken or make a statement about that speech. Participation in the question and comment session must be relevant to the preceding member's speech and will be governed by the normal rules of the Assembly concerning the content of speeches as, for example, found in Standing Order 23.

The Canadian House of Commons has a 10-minute question and comment period where this rule of relevance applies. Members may wish to review chapter 13 of the House of Commons Procedure and Practice, edited by Marleau and Montpetit, particularly pages 530 to 531.

The difficulty with the question and comment session comes in determining how the five-minute period will be apportioned. Of course, for every member who wishes to ask questions to or comment on a member's speech, there must be an opportunity for the member to respond. What if three members want to participate? When combined with the three responses allowed, the member would see five minutes divided by six.

The chair is always a timekeeper of sorts, but unless the Assembly decides to get a time clock in the Chamber like the one found at sporting events, it would be difficult for the chair to calculate the apportionment of time for members. Furthermore, the chair would be so intent in making sure that he or she had caught all members who wished to participate and had calculated the time correctly that the chair would not be able to focus on the member's speech.

Therefore, the chair will allot 30 seconds to each member who wishes to participate in the question and comment session. The member whose speech has generated the questions or comments will have 30 seconds to respond. As many members as possible can participate for up to 30 seconds in the five-minute period. Unless participating members use considerably less than 30 seconds, it will mean that five members may participate in addition to the original speaker. If there are not enough members who wish to participate, then a member can be recognized more than once. The new rules concerning speaking times in the question and comment session will apply to the debate on the address in reply, so they will go in effect this afternoon.

This question and comment period is not available for private members' business. The time limit on speaking for members' and private members' matters is now 10 minutes except for the Premier and the Leader of the Official Opposition, with 20 minutes each. The chair will review these matters on Monday, the first day of private members' business under the amended Standing Orders.

The chair also would like to take this opportunity to note a few other matters not related to the Standing Orders amendments. The first is that the new committee rooms are now operational. They are located on the fourth floor of the Legislature Annex, and of course they form part of the precincts of the Assembly. For those members that have not had a meeting there yet, I would encourage you to go and look at these exceptional facilities.

On another matter, members are aware that the Revised Statutes of Alberta 2000 are now in effect. I want to let members know that when the Legislative Assembly Office received notice of the cost of purchasing the Revised Statutes, the chair wrote the hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General to say, basically, that as the Assembly is the body that makes the laws for the province of Alberta, shouldn't the members be able to find out what the law is without having to pay for it?

The Minister of Justice wholeheartedly agreed and, on behalf of the government of the province of Alberta, donated three sets of the Revised Statutes of Alberta 2000 for use by members and table officers in the Chamber. On behalf of the Assembly the chair would like to take this opportunity to thank the minister and also remind him that in previous days and on previous occasions all Members of the Legislative Assembly, the lawmakers of the province of Alberta, were provided with the complete Revised Statutes of the province of Alberta from the overall Minister of Justice in a gratuitous fashion.

Thank you very much.

head: Orders of the Day

head: Consideration of Her Honour
the Lieutenant Governor's Speech

Mr. Horner moved that an humble address be presented to Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor as follows.

To Her Honour the Honourable Lois E. Hole, CM, Lieutenant Governor of the province of Alberta:

We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Assembly, now assembled, beg leave to thank you, Your Honour, for the gracious speech Your Honour has been pleased to address to us at the opening of the present session.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

MR. HORNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is an honour that I have been given leave to move acceptance of the Speech from the Throne. The speech presented by Her Honour the Honourable Lieutenant Governor, Lois Hole, opened the Second Session of the 25th Legislature, and it is my pleasure to address the Assembly on behalf of my constituents from Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

I would like to take this moment to send regrets to Her Honour and the province in respect to the passing of Princess Margaret and our former Lieutenant Governor, the Hon. H.A. "Bud" Olson.

I would also like to join Her Honour in expressing the pride and the great support for our soldiers who are serving in Afghanistan. I would like to thank these Albertans for the great job they are doing in protecting our nation and the principles and values we are so fortunate to be governed by. We all join in the prayers of their families and friends that they will be kept safe while they're there on duty and will return with speed once they've completed their mission. Albertans are proud of what they are doing and the sacrifices that they are making to touch the lives of others.

Her Honour's speech touched on many important issues our government is facing in the upcoming year. Because the issues of health care and education are in the forefront of most of our minds, I am pleased that a great portion of Her Honour's Speech from the Throne discussed what goals lay ahead for our government.

If we are to continue developing our Alberta advantage in the future, we must work together as a unified province to create the new paths that will take us where we need to be. Last year at about this time, as I gave my maiden speech in this House, I said that I am here to represent the concerns of my constituents and speak within our government on their behalf. As a government we have promised to listen to Albertans. My constituents have made their wishes concerning health care known. They would like to see this government committed to a sustainable publicly funded system, a system they can trust to sustain their needs and the needs of their children into the future.

As a province we're once again in the spotlight of our nation to see how we will define the health care system that will sustain our growing population, allow for comprehensive and accessible services, and, above all, keep Albertans healthy. After a decade of public consultation and study on the challenges we are facing to preserve affordable public health care, a report was presented to this government by the Advisory Council on Health. This report will inevitably provide the direction to many of the solutions for the problems we are facing with our health care system.

I know that the commitment of this government is to work together to find the answers which best suit all of our needs. However, I firmly believe that in order to do this, we must continue to work as a team. In order to provide us with sustainable health care that works for all Albertans, we need to work with the regional health authorities, health professionals, and Albertans to ensure that we maintain the right direction.

Last year the throne speech stated that the government's priorities for health care would focus on access to health services, illness prevention, and effective regional governance. The council's report has focused reform on how this province spends our health care dollars. The promise of access, illness prevention, and effective regional governance are some of the concerns that Albertans have, and I strongly believe that we need to keep these in mind as we work through this process.

Mr. Speaker, to be effective, a government cannot support the status quo in a time when change is necessary. We cannot afford to build pillars to simply prop up long-standing and failing systems in this province. In order to move ahead and build effective systems that truly help people, not just catch them as they fall, we're going to have to work together to develop a better system. In health care all eyes are upon us to see what directions we now choose.

All eyes seem to be turning to our province for other reasons, as well, one of these being the ability of our students to excel in their studies and the commitments we have made as a province to ensure that every student receives the education they need to get ahead and enjoy a prosperous life and healthy lifestyle.

Mr. Speaker, as you know, I grew up as the youngest in a family of five boys, and many will attest to the special relationship which exists between the oldest and the youngest in a large family. My oldest brother has been there for comfort in bad times, and we've shared a great deal of mirth in the good times. His sage advice to me when I got married at a very early age, and even when I decided to enter the service of Albertans, has stayed with me.

My oldest brother, Mr. Speaker, has spent his career to date in a profession which I and I know all of my colleagues respect a great deal. It's a profession where people care, and they work very hard to achieve the results they do. I'm very proud of my brother; he is a teacher. We may not always agree on some of the issues or on management style, but we certainly respect each other's contributions and careers.

Mr. Speaker, much has been said in the media and around the province in the coffee shops and the constituency offices about education recently. I would like to express a key element of what my constituents have told me. They tell me that we need to review our policies as they relate to special-needs education and integration. Are we doing the right thing with the resources that we have? Have we swung the pendulum too far? Is there a better way? We need to answer these questions, and we need to involve the students, the parents, the teachers, the school boards, and the government.

Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, we may well find the answers to some of the concerns which have been expressed during this labour dispute, but through all of this we must ensure that management of the system stays where it is supposed to be. That means there probably should be some changes made. I'm not going to detail to this House what has been suggested to me in my constituency office, but on all sides perhaps change is due.

Education is a top priority of this government. School boards want to put funds where they deem they are necessary, and maybe we should look at ways that school boards could raise additional revenue. Mr. Speaker, the throne speech pointed out that this government will continue to stay ahead of inflation in enrollment and funding and that this government will ensure that resources are there for our students.

As a province we have the ability to set new standards for education across Canada. Alberta students scored significantly higher than the national average in math, science, and reading. We scored top marks internationally in reading and placed third in math and science. Scoring so high on international standardized tests given to 31 other countries shows a great deal about the quality of education and the dedication of the teachers in our province. It also shows, as has been noted today, the dedication of our students and the commitment that they have made to focus on their futures. As a province it's my belief that we must remain committed to our students.

An exciting advantage for Alberta students is the projected completion of Supernet by 2004. By this time every library, school, hospital, and provincial government office will have access to high-speed broadband network, closing the digital divide that is prevalent between rural and urban areas of Canada. With the development of Supernet, Alberta will be the most wired jurisdiction in the world. This will allow endless possibilities for our students and create opportunities for greater technological and communication services to be provided to rural communities by building such a network. Mr. Speaker, I believe this is akin to when telephones came to our province. The dramatic effect that this will have on bringing Albertans together is very exciting.

Internet services and advanced communication technology have changed our lives, and Alberta will be in the forefront of providing e-services, e-health, e-education, and e-commerce to help bring even the most remote parts of our province into the gateway of trade and services without ever leaving their communities. We have taken the first step in our country to fund a provincial Internet initiative, and the whole province is excited about the opportunities it will bring and how it will help us rise to the top of the knowledge-based economy.

The innovative ideas put into motion in Alberta, like the Supernet, have not only turned attention to our province but have successfully drawn investment and spurred great economic development. The advantages we have developed as a province have created an amazing pull for all kinds of investments. Our government has been actively seeking international investment and stirring up quite a response from countries like Germany and the United States. Overall investment in Alberta has increased 85 percent since 1996. We have created such an amazing atmosphere for business investment through the Alberta advantage, including our access to the NAFTA markets, favourable operating costs, and significant opportunities for business growth, that companies are finding it hard to resist, Mr. Speaker.

Alberta is such a diverse province. We have the capability to develop and advance technology in a huge range of areas. Our economy is driven by virtually everything: oil and gas, forestry, natural resources, agriculture, and technological development in communications. Alberta has it all. We are fortunate to live in a province that can pull from so many areas, giving us the unique ability to combine them and produce new and innovative ideas for future marketing.

Mr. Speaker, we are also developing the human capital in a knowledge-based economy, and we need to continue in that direction. Specialized skills come in many forms, even to exporting our experts on the maintenance of indoor ice surfaces, as the Premier mentioned earlier today. At the Olympics it was reported that an Albertan was in charge.

Value adding to our industries and finding ways to diversify our economy even further is having a very positive impact on our economy and is something we all realize we must maintain a focus on. Researching and developing value-added products could result in finding that innovative idea which could stimulate the agricultural industry and maintain the oil and gas industry as front-runners in the Alberta economy. In order for Alberta to hold steady in the international marketing of agricultural goods, we need to develop beyond production, and that same situation is necessary in our oil and gas industry.

International events like September 11 will continually threaten to upset our economy unless we diversify within our industries and are prepared to react proactively. Agriculture is very important to all Albertans. More than 82,500 people are employed in the primary ag and food and beverage industry in this province. Last year Alberta exports reached an estimated $5.8 billion in primary and processed agrifoods, and we exported our agricultural goods to 110 countries around the world. We were able to export close to $10 billion worth of manufactured food and beverage products, which is close to double that of primary production. All of this, Mr. Speaker, points to excellent opportunities for our province and for our farming communities in rural Alberta.

Research for our energy sector has exciting possibilities for developing Alberta as well. We have one of the largest reserves of tar sands in the world, and we are presently looking at economically viable technologies to develop these areas. Because of the vast oil and gas reserves we have in this province, we have the opportunity to take the lead in petrochemical research and development as well as nonconventional natural gas or coal bed methane research. Every day it seems that new advances are made and research is opening doors to develop and utilize oil and gas products that were either deemed impossible to capture for production or were not economically feasible for production. There perceptions have changed so much in the past decade that we must continue to invest in developing new and innovative products. We must find a way to stabilize our economy, and we need to look at ways to stabilize our provincial capital spending and diversify the resources we have available to us.

We live in an exceptional province. No longer are we the country bumpkin cousins in the west but a province with a growing population and a thriving economy.

I know I said in my maiden speech a year ago how honoured I am to be the representative in this Assembly for Spruce Grove-St. Albert. In my constituency I'm very proud of the relationships which have allowed so much co-operative effort between municipalities. Two examples are the intermunicipal planning being done by Sturgeon county and the city of St. Albert, which I share with my colleague, the hon. Member for St. Albert, and the Tri-Municipal Leisure Centre in Spruce Grove, which is something that my colleague the hon. Minister of Seniors and Member for Stony Plain and I share. The three municipalities of Parkland county, the town of Stony Plain, and the city of Spruce Grove had not only the vision but also gained the community support to make a grand facility become reality through partnership, planning, and co-operation.

The constituency of Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert sends our heartfelt congratulations to all of Canada's Olympians, and we are very proud of two from Spruce Grove who put their hearts into a magnificent effort. They are Jennifer Heil, Canada's youngest Olympian, competing in the freestyle moguls and coming in fourth in the finals by only .01 of a second away from bronze, and, Mr. Speaker, Don Bartlett in men's curling, coming home with a silver medal. Our congratulations to them, their families, and all of Canada's athletes for a job well done.

The Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert constituency is made up of growing, diversified communities, both urban and rural, with economic action from agriculture to e-commerce. But with growth comes challenges and a need to ensure that government is there on an ongoing, stable basis.

Mr. Speaker, my constituency is an amazing place. If you look at the map, we're right in the centre of the province. There's so much happening in my constituency right now with economic and residential development, investment in technologies. You name it; it's happening in Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

Not only are we on the centre of the map, but because of everything we have to offer, we're quickly becoming the hub of development in Alberta as well. Spruce Grove, Sturgeon county, and the city of St. Albert are great places for Albertans to raise their families because we have maintained that safe community feeling.

As a government, we need to continue to make the right and tough decisions about our investments. This is our future. This is the future of our children. I'm proud they will grow up as Albertans, as I am proud to be an Albertan. I am honoured and privileged to represent Albertans in this House, and it's my firm belief, Mr. Speaker, that as each one of us pledge to make a positive stand for our future and our children's future, there is nothing that we as an Assembly cannot accomplish for our province.

Thank you very much.

MR. CENAIKO: Mr. Speaker, it is an honour for me to second the motion for consideration of Her Honour the Honourable Lieutenant Governor's Speech from the Throne. It is, indeed, an honour and privilege to rise this afternoon and reply on behalf of the constituents of Calgary-Buffalo.

Mr. Speaker, the Speech from the Throne is one of the more important documents that we as members of the Legislature address in this House. It highlights our government's plans for the coming year and reflects the hopes and dreams of Albertans. Our job as elected members of this Assembly is to turn these hopes and dreams into reality.

To begin, I would also like to express to Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth II and to all members of the royal family the heartfelt condolences of Albertans for the loss of Her Royal Highness the Princess Margaret, Countess of Snowdon. She was very involved in charity work, community support, and goodwill missions. Her contributions to the Commonwealth and her spirit will be missed.

This year is a prominent year for Alberta, as 2002 marks the 50th anniversary of Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth II ascending to the throne of the United Kingdom and Canada and assuming her rightful position as head of the Commonwealth. This golden jubilee is even more special for me because I had the opportunity to take part in the silver jubilee in 1977 in London, England, which was an amazing experience. From the beginning of our Queen's reign and even from our first year as a province, the leadership, character, and value of our people have charted the unique destiny of Alberta.

As we all know, Alberta has royal representation that reflects our traits. The Honourable the Lieutenant Governor is the representative of the Crown in the province and exercises the monarch's powers and authorities with respect to Alberta. In the early years of Confederation the Lieutenant Governors were agents of the federal government and were expected to advise the provincial government as to their intent on federal legislation and to ensure that provincial legislation conformed to that of senior government. Over the years, however, with the gradual increase in the authority of provincial governments, the Lieutenant Governor's role as a federal agent is now focused primarily on the responsibilities as the sovereign's representative and the chief executive officer of the province.

Canada's Prime Minister appointed Her Honour the Honourable Lois Hole as Lieutenant Governor of Alberta on December 9, 1999. Before her appointment she excelled in careers as a successful businesswoman, best selling author, education advocate, and community supporter. Her Honour is Alberta's 15th Lieutenant Governor and the second woman in Alberta's history to serve Alberta in this capacity.

Her Honour the Honourable Lois Hole served as school trustee for St. Albert school district No. 6 from 1981 to the fall of 1998. She previously served for 14 years as a trustee and chairperson for the Sturgeon school division and for 11 years as a member of the Athabasca University governing council. Her Honour served as a director of the Farm Credit Corporation and as honorary chair for the 27th Canadian Congress on Criminal Justice as well as the children's millennium fund. Her Honour also served as a board member of the Canadian Heritage Garden Foundation, the Child and Adolescent Services Association, and the Quality of Life Commission.

Along with the Honourable Lieutenant Governor I am very proud of the Albertans who are contributing to the pursuits of safety, goodwill, and achievement. I agree with the Honourable Lieutenant Governor that for thousands of Albertans the men and women from 4 Wing, Cold Lake and the Edmonton Garrison serving in Afghanistan are husbands or wives, sons or daughter, fathers or mothers, friends or neighbours. For all Albertans these soldiers are living symbols of courage and high principle. All members in this Assembly send our prayers to all of them for a safe and speedy return. I would also like to send thanks to the families of these men and women. We know this is a difficult time for them.

We have had many other Albertans recently return from another mission of contribution, only this time for peace and goodwill, at the Winter Olympics in Salt Lake City. Alberta was represented by 38 of the 157 Canadian athletes at the Olympics. All of our Canadian athletes exemplified dedication, commitment, and confidence, three traits that all Albertans should endeavour to attain.

Alberta's 38 athletes' commitment to athletic excellence should also be viewed as examples of this province's commitment to wellness. There has been a great deal of debate and discussion regarding funding of our health care system when more talk should focus on the positive aspects of clean, healthy living. In addition to a healthy lifestyle, the Lieutenant Governor explained that Albertans know that people's health can be improved by events as complex as a redesign of an ambulance system or as simple as a comforting hand to hold during an ambulance trip.

I was honoured to be appointed chair of the MLA review of ambulance services on May 2, 2001. I had the pleasure of working with the hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake to review ground ambulance services and provide recommendations regarding future governance and delivery of emergency medical services. While recognizing that significant improvements have occurred with Alberta's ground ambulance services following previous reviews, my intention was to build on the successes of these reports.

Although Albertans receive excellent care from ground ambulance services, the system faces challenges in meeting the demands of a growing, aging, and increasingly urban population. These challenges place considerable pressure on municipalities, ambulance operators, regional health authorities, and the province to provide Albertans with access to well co-ordinated and responsive emergency medical services when they need them. Our task was to meet with stakeholders and provide advice and recommendations addressing the future governance and delivery of ground ambulance services in Alberta. Our review team firmly believes that the current structure is cumbersome and lacks accountability. The recommendations contained in our report to the hon. ministers of Health and Wellness, Municipal Affairs, and Human Resources and Employment recognize that ambulance service is an integral component of the health care system where municipalities and regional health authorities can work together.

In conducting this review and maintaining our focus on patient care, we attempted to strike a balance between guaranteeing quality service for all Albertans while controlling costs. To ensure a thorough examination of Alberta's ambulance system, we traveled thousands of kilometres and met hundreds of people throughout Alberta. The opportunity to see firsthand how diverse Alberta and its people are was truly remarkable and made me feel honoured to contribute to this province and to work alongside all my colleagues in this Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, my travels around Alberta also reminded me of how last spring you described how diverse the members are in this Legislature. Sixty-eight members have a business and entrepreneurial history, 24 were educators for a period of time, 16 are or were involved in the farming and agriculture industry, 13 have accounting or financial management experience, eight have oilfield experience, five have experience in computer technology, five are lawyers, five have experience in the real estate field, four have experience in the construction field, and four are professional authors. There are two members each with experience with the police service, nursing, and the forest industry. There is also a single member in each of the medical, floral, television and radio reporting, and social services fields. One is a pastor with the Faith Covenant church, one is a deacon and elder with the Christian Reform church, and one is a bishop with the Church of Latter-Day Saints.

It's fantastic that the diversity of nationalities and cultures in Alberta is reflected in the Alberta Assembly. Diversity is something that we must cherish. In Calgary-Buffalo Chinatown is one of the most dynamic and positive contributors to the community, and it's also one of the oldest communities in Calgary and Alberta. The first Chinese families arrived in Calgary over 140 years ago, and this wonderful culture has defined what it means to be an Albertan: hardworking and passionate, with strong convictions and a dedication to their family and community. I have had the pleasure to meet hundreds of residents of Chinatown over the past years and have cherished the occasions I've had with this vital community. I would like to thank them for their gracious invitations to numerous functions and their hard work in their community and wish them [remarks in Chinese] for a prosperous and happy year of the horse.

I was honoured by the presence of Mr. Winston Chow and Mr. Fei Hong Cheng, who attended yesterday's Speech from the Throne for the first time and were very moved by the messages from this government. The hon. Lieutenant Governor talked about this government's commitment to ensuring that Albertans continue to live, work, and raise families in safe, tolerant, diverse communities.

Given the new and sombre concerns about security, the government will introduce legislation this session to improve Alberta's ability to protect Albertans, their property, their infrastructure, and their environment from potential security risks. I, too, have been working on legislation that touches on what I refer to as the four points of safety in Alberta.

The first point of safety is preserving the overall protection of Alberta. I have prepared a motion, to be introduced this session, that will urge the government to work with Criminal Intelligence Service Alberta to enhance collaborative partnerships and co-ordinated programs with various levels of government, policing agencies, and the public. CISA will pursue effective strategies to detect, combat, and control organized crime in Alberta. Intelligence information sharing, joint forces, top-up funding, training, and investigative networking will augment a united policing front to attack organized crime groups. I believe that expanding Alberta's work with CISA will help this province effectively combat organized crime and terrorism and preserve the wellness, safety, and security of our communities.

The second point of safety focuses on our citizens. The government of Alberta has a vision of a safe society where justice prevails. Accordingly, goal 15 of the Alberta government's business plan for 2001-2004 is that "Alberta will be a safe place to live and raise families."

One of the biggest safeguards for this goal is Alberta's Police Act. The present Police Act came into effect in 1988, and over the following decade a number of issues were raised that led to the formation of a legislation review committee. In October 2000 the Minister of Justice and Attorney General appointed an MLA committee to conduct a public review of policing in Alberta. Following the 2001 provincial election, the committee was restructured due to the appointment of the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek to Solicitor General and the retirement of another member. The hon. Member for Lacombe-Stettler continued to chair the committee, and I was honoured to become a new member, along with the hon. Member from Dunvegan. The committee chose a three-pronged approach to the review of the Police Act: solicit public and stakeholder submissions in response to a discussion paper, review the findings of the police strategic vision project, and consult with experts on issues arising from these submissions.

The major themes arising from the submissions centred on levels of service and cost of policing. Many respondents see an inequity in policing either in service levels or in policing costs. There was also a general concern about oversight of policing, including responsiveness to provincial and local priorities as well as the investigation of complaints about police. A third common theme that emerged was the need for general policing standards established and monitored by the province.

From the perspective of policing itself, there are a number of challenges. Changes in policing environment include technological advancements such as the Internet, photo enforcement, and information technology. We have a highly mobile society, including criminals, which requires a greater sharing of information and more co-operation among Alberta's police agencies. This implies the need for more standardization among police and a requirement for more highly trained and educated police officers. This is further dictated by the development of global issues, including organized crime and international terrorism using high technology.

The committee tried to focus on overall themes and principles, only dealing with specific details where the issues demanded it. Many of our bold and innovative recommendations will raise questions about implementation and procedural details. Likewise, we have made a number of recommendations for areas that require further study. These are technical or long-term studies that require expertise and resources beyond that of the committee. The MLA policing review committee submitted our final report and recommendations to the Solicitor General just last week.

My third point on safety involves a private member's bill that I will introduce this session which will allow peace officers to seize vehicles involved in prostitution-related offences. I have met with community organizations, members of the public, and policing agencies regarding this legislation, and I have found that prostitution evokes strong and wide-ranging reactions and opinions. Some people strongly oppose the exploitation and violence associated with prostitution, while others resent the damage inflicted on their neighbourhoods. A number of these people want stronger laws enacted and fewer leniencies shown by the courts.

The variety of approaches taken to deal with problems associated with prostitution reflects the urgency felt by many stakeholders for solutions. Innovative strategies aimed at prevention as well as enforcement are being developed, and many affected communities are applying these strategies to deal with these problems.

Many people who live in areas far removed from prostitution tend to make a couple of false assumptions: first, that prostitution is covert or largely confined to industrial or commercial zones; second, that it touches mainly on the lives of adults. This is not the case. Prostitution is openly carried out in residential neighbourhoods near schools and playgrounds in my riding of Calgary-Buffalo. For families living in these neighbourhoods, raising children gets that much tougher when the world of prostitution meets society's youngest members: school-aged children who see prostitution near their homes and outside their schools. Dealing with these concerns requires special initiatives, particularly when it comes to their effect on children.

Prostitution teaches several wrong messages, among them the legitimization of females as victims. Prostitutes are stigmatized and disdained while their customers seem to be forgiven of any involvement under the current climate of public opinion. Prostitution also seems to create an attitude among men that women are inherently inferior. Any antiprostitution activities should include a re-education component that counters this attitude. I can assure all members that my private member's bill has an acceptable education component in place as a result of consultations with both the Calgary and Edmonton police services and over a dozen community groups affected by prostitution.

My fourth and most important point of safety for Alberta is directed at our children. Last spring I was honoured to take a leadership role chairing the review of the Child Welfare Act. The act has a very profound and direct impact on the lives of thousands of Alberta's children and families, and the protection of children is a top priority for all of us. The Child Welfare Act must achieve a balance between promoting and ensuring the safety and well-being of children while also respecting the fundamental responsibility of parents for their children. It must reflect the values and principles of the people of Alberta, and it must carefully counsel people motivated by the Child Welfare Act to perform their duties in the best interests of the child. We have just completed the majority of stakeholder and community consultations and have now begun to review several hundred submissions, which will provide us with recommendations and new legislation focusing on early intervention, prevention, child protection, family group counseling utilizing the extended family, fostering and adoptions, and services for children with disabilities.

The four points of safety for our province, its citizens, our streets, and our children will ensure that Alberta remains a safe place to live and raise families. I can assure all my constituents that I will pursue this goal to the best of my ability as one of my duties as their elected representative.

I was extremely proud to be elected as the MLA for Calgary-Buffalo last spring. Calgary-Buffalo constituents cover a wide array of cultures, the most in any one constituency in the province. It's also home to young families, single moms, postsecondary students, young professionals, seniors, and, last but not least, a number of homeless people. The residential concerns span from homeless shelters, low-income units, rental apartments, and single-family homes to million-dollar condominiums. This constituency is home to Calgary's largest arts and theatre community, which adds a unique vibrancy and culture to the inner city. We are also home to the second highest number of corporate office headquarters, with a downtown skyline that is the most beautiful in Canada if not North America. It's an honour to serve the residents of this extremely diverse inner-city community as their voice in the Legislative Assembly of this great province.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour and a privilege for me as representative of the constituents of Edmonton-Strathcona and as the leader of the New Democrat opposition to once again respond to the Speech from the Throne. I'd like to begin my comments by expressing my appreciation for the hon. Lieutenant Governor's presence yesterday in this Chamber and for her continued leadership, grace, and dignity. I know that she's highly respected by all Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, we're heading into interesting times in Alberta. For support of public health, education, and the environment we are heading into dangerous times. Yesterday's Speech from the Throne, though rife with pleasantries and rhetoric, was a mask for the government's true agenda. The government would like to cloak its agenda with talk of creating a healthier Alberta, yet its actual policies and its legislative agenda show no such priorities. I'll touch on four major policy area issues: health care, education, environment, and reduction of poverty.

This throne speech identifies health care as Alberta's first priority. Albertans are told that our health care system must not be lost or impaired due to inaction or fleeting comfort with the status quo. The New Democrats are well aware that the status quo is not an option for health care, but the real danger is posed by the government's determination to turn Alberta's health care system into a market commodity. The real danger to health care is posed by this government's determination to base health policy on profit instead of on wellness. We know that in the United States 20 cents of every dollar spent on health care goes to company profits, rich executive salaries, and administration. In Canada only 3 cents of every health care dollar goes to those items. What's the source of the discrepancy? Profit, multimillion dollar paycheques for CEOs, and an added layer of administrative cost.

The government is under the delusion that increases in costs to make room for profit will somehow save money. Is this why health care premiums are proposed to be increased by as much as 50 percent? Health premiums do nothing to promote the long-term stability of our health care system, and any increase will unfairly burden Alberta's seniors and every Alberta family. Health premium increases also represent a significant burden for small businesses.

The position of the Canadian Federation of Independent Business is made very clear in a letter dated February 13 of this year, the letter from Dan Kelly, the prairie region vice-president of the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, and Corrinne Pohlman, the business association director for Alberta and the Northwest Territories. In that letter they state, and I quote: our members are willing to engage in the debate on new ways of administering and financing this important service; we are very concerned, however, that the first major health care reform made in Alberta following the Mazankowski report would be to dramatically increase the tax associated with health care. End of quote.

Indeed, health premiums are a tax, and they are the most regressive and unfair sort of tax possible, but there's not likely to be the debate on health care that the CFIB and many other Albertans would like to engage in. Instead, the major decisions about health care are going to be made by committees, task forces, and commissions. Millions of dollars will be spent so a decision can be made about health care, but by whom? Will these committees be made up of average Albertans? Will they consist of people who are struggling to pay health care premiums and who are afraid that the government's plans to shift costs onto the sick and the injured will leave them unable to pay for necessary medical services? I think not. It wasn't mentioned in yesterday's Speech from the Throne, but these commissions will largely be either Tory MLAs or handpicked government appointees. These committees will be a continuation of the same kind of closed door process that resulted in the Mazankowski report.

While the Premier's Advisory Council on Health includes some excellent people, it also includes people with a clear bias towards expanding private, for-profit health care. Don Mazankowski, for example, sits on the board of an insurance company which stands to increase their profits if services are delisted and demand for private health care insurance increases. Another committee member, Dr. Brian Crowley, has authored a study for the Atlantic Institute for Market Studies, sort of an eastern Fraser Institute that advocates full-scale privatization. It's no wonder the committee advocated increasing the role of the market in our health care system.

If the government's prior strategy is any indication, then the seven committees being established will not only be a waste of time and energy, but they will also be handpicked to provide the response the government has predetermined. These committees are a smoke screen. They're a way for the government to avoid serious debate about the direction of health care and a way to avoid listening to the concerns of Albertans, just as the Speech from the Throne was also a smoke screen. It dealt in platitudes about health care instead of pursuing the real changes that need to be made in the health care system.

There was no mention of a much-needed provincial pharmacare plan. Such a plan would reduce the impact of our fastest growing health costs: prescription drugs. There was no mention of increasing the number of special or surgical clinics, such as the Royal Alexandra centre in Edmonton, within the public system, and there was certainly no commitment to prevent the intrusion of profit-based service delivery in our health care system.

It's time for this government to end this fear mongering about the sustainability of health care. It is also time for the government to come clean about its real spending priorities. A one-third increase in health premiums will raise about $220 million a year. Canceling or postponing a corporate tax cut planned for April 1, 2002, would save government coffers $275 million or near about. Clearly, the government is more interested in shifting costs onto the sick, the injured, and the average Alberta family than it is in the sustainability of the health care system.

Turning to education now, Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Speech from the Throne pointed out quite correctly that a key component of a healthy province will help the citizens with a strong education system. We are told that the government believes that there's a great deal of goodwill among all partners in the education system and that "this goodwill guarantees that the long-term health of the public education system will be protected." Fine words, but let's take a look at reality.

I recently received a letter from a former member of the Conservative Party who is extremely frustrated by the deterioration of classroom conditions in Alberta. In the letter he points out that the lack of funding, large class sizes, and teacher burnout have created an Alberta disadvantage. These are his words. He goes on to admonish the Tory government. He tells them, and I quote: you should be ashamed to call yourselves Conservatives; you are conserving nothing, trading culture for business and blighting the futures of the children you are supposed to support. End of quote. I believe he is absolutely correct.

This government has done nothing to foster goodwill around education and everything to undermine it. For example, this government has failed time and again to take positive steps to resolve the current dispute of the teachers. One of the major issues in this strike is the growing size of Alberta classrooms. It has the studies that have the numbers but is not willing to take action. What's worse is that the government waited four months, until the last provincial election was safely out of the way, to release a significant study telling the government that large class sizes are detrimental to learning. This government has done nothing to address this concern in the past year, and if yesterday's throne speech is any indication, it plans to continue neglecting this problem.

Another letter I received recently, this one from a senior citizen in rural Alberta, captured the current state of our education system quite precisely. I quote. The writer says: I believe that teachers are undervalued; they are the educators of my children and grandchildren and need tools which are now inaccessible; classes are too large, and many students need extra attention, which is not always possible. End of quote.

This government would convince us that large class sizes and teacher burnout are key to fostering goodwill among students, teachers, and parents. Goodwill was further deteriorated or undermined by the 2001 budget when attempted wage controls were introduced via a line item for teachers' salary increases. These wage controls are an affront to the independence of school boards and to the teachers' right to collectively negotiate salary increases. Since then the government has tied the hands of school boards, concocted a phony pension offer, and fostered an air of confrontation between teachers and government.

The government's approach to fostering goodwill was capped by the Premier's recent insensitive and insulting comments made while on a trade mission in Japan. Accusing teachers of being lazy and claiming that they worked only four or five hours a day does nothing to promote goodwill, Mr. Speaker. If the government cannot foster a healthy sense of goodwill among educators, how does it expect to foster growth of a healthy education system and a healthy Alberta and Albertans?

Turning to postsecondary education for a moment, Albertans were told yesterday that postsecondary education is also vital to the economic and social health of Albertans. I couldn't agree more. I wonder, however, how serious this government's commitment to postsecondary education is. This government has refused to address the fact that tuition fees tripled during the '90s. Alberta now has the third highest tuition costs in the country. Combined with housing pressures and other costs such as books and supplies, skyrocketing tuition has placed postsecondary education well out of reach for many young Albertans.

On the environment yesterday's speech was also chillingly scarce on any real details about this government's plans. In the last session Albertans bore witness to this government's callous disregard of the potential devastating impact of intensive livestock operations on the quality of air and water. In this session we are being promised a comprehensive water strategy. I shudder to think what the strategy might entail. Based on the government's record of environmental shortsightedness, Albertans can expect the question of interbasin water transfers to be resurrected. Will we also see the futile pursuit of the Meridian dam project? Both these proposals have been soundly decried by Albertans because of their environmental implications.

Albertans are increasingly aware of how intimately their health is affected by the quality of air and water. One cannot blame Albertans for becoming increasingly skeptical of this government's willingness to protect our environment. Instead, they are concerned that this government's water strategy is the same as the health strategy. Package our health care, package our water, add price tags, and ship them south for American profiteers. This is not a strategy for a clean environment and a healthy Alberta.

Now, the last point, Mr. Speaker, that I want to touch on is the issue of poverty. Perhaps the most scandalous absence in yesterday's speech, however, was the lack of any commitment to address the frightening increase in Alberta's poverty. Although it received a great deal of hype from the government when it was started, Albertans have heard nothing about the low-income review. We were promised recommendations and action in October, but not a peep was heard during last fall's session. Once again Albertans are being left in the dark about what the government will do to support Albertans living on low incomes. Not only do we have a responsibility to ensure that all Albertans are able to live with dignity; we must also remember that poverty has an extremely negative impact on people's health. While the flat tax has certainly made life easier for Alberta's top 1 percent of income earners, many Albertans find themselves losing out and falling behind.

School fees, delisted health services, and increased health care premiums are all putting financial pressures on Albertans. This pressure has been exacerbated by recent disastrous cuts in Children's Services. Despite clear evidence that early intervention prevents long-term involvement in child welfare, this government has clearly restricted the ability of community organizations to provide early intervention and support to families. To make matters worse, Mr. Speaker, the government is now prepared to blame parents instead of working to support families in a positive and timely manner.

To conclude now, Mr. Speaker, the Speech from the Throne has shown itself to be a smoke screen for the government's real priorities. While putting on a show of concern for Albertans' health, our education system, and our environment, their real objective is clear. This government is intent on tilting the Alberta advantage in favour exclusively of the wealthy and at the expense of average Alberta families. The New Democrats will continue to make health care our top priority in these coming months because we know that health care is also a top priority for the vast majority of Albertans, and we'll continue to fight for improvements to a public health care system.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

MR. McCLELLAND: Questions and comments, Mr. Speaker. I commend the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, my friend, on his speech. The hon. member mentioned classroom size and conditions, and I wonder if the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona would advise us of his intention or his thoughts in this area. I'm wondering if the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona feels that children with behavioral disorders should be part of an integrated classroom. Do you think that's a good idea?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The class size problem, that's well recognized by most stakeholders in this province, is exacerbated further. It's a serious problem as is. It's further exacerbated by the presence, by the integrative strategy of putting children with high needs into the classrooms of normal children. My own view is that integration is good, but we need resources to make sure that class sizes . . .

THE SPEAKER: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, did you want to proceed? Another one?

MR. McCLELLAND: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona spent a good deal of time on health care. Because in virtually every other enterprise competition leads to a better product at a lower price, why would that same truism not hold in the delivery of health care?

DR. PANNU: Mr. Speaker, the proof of the pudding is in the eating. There are health care systems which use the market as a mechanism to reduce costs. All those systems that are based on market-driven strategies are far more costly than systems like ours, which to this point have avoided the market mechanisms as a lever to reduce costs.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

MRS. JABLONSKI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My constituency of Red Deer-North includes teachers who work in Chinook's Edge, and River Glen school is part of Chinook's Edge as well. Although Red Deer teachers did not go on strike, Chinook's Edge teachers did. I received numerous calls from Chinook's Edge teachers who wanted to return to work. I wonder if the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona can explain to me why teachers were more concerned about returning to work than staying on strike.

DR. PANNU: Mr. Speaker, teachers have a legal right, a lawful right to engage in collective bargaining and to withhold their services as part of that democratic right and process. I think the teachers everywhere in this province have exercised that right and duly done so.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

MR. CAO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a great honour for me to speak today replying to the Speech from the Throne.

THE SPEAKER: Actually, hon. member, please, we're into the question and answer comment time.

MR. CAO: Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: Well, if there are no additional questions or comments, then we'll recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie to proceed with the Speech from the Throne debate.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's also an honour for me to be able to respond to the Speech from the Throne, and I would like to begin my comments by congratulating Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor on a job well done again yesterday. Certainly I concur with the comments of my colleague who said that she is well respected and loved by everyone in Alberta. I think that is certainly the feedback that I get. She is probably the most well known Lieutenant Governor we have had in this province, and that is also to her credit.

On behalf of all my colleagues in the Official Opposition I would also like to congratulate Her Majesty Elizabeth II on her 50th anniversary.

I'm looking forward to the debate on the bill that the government has brought in as their first bill, which will talk about the golden jubilee scholarships for the visual and performing arts. I think this is an excellent way to recognize this particular anniversary, and it will be interesting to follow the debate in the Legislature.

Unfortunately, it isn't quite as interesting to follow another Speech from the Throne as delivered yesterday. This is the ninth time I have heard speeches from the throne, and while they generally tend to consist of motherhood and apple pie kinds of statements, this one has particularly little substance in terms of setting out a direction for this province over the next year or over the next course of years, so that was somewhat disappointing.

We were certainly expecting a little more stuff between the pages that wasn't there, even though, Mr. Speaker, this government acknowledged on page 4 of the Speech from the Throne that change is needed. Unfortunately, as the pages unfold, we don't see much of a commitment to exactly what that means. What we did hear were platitudes and promises. What we didn't hear was leadership or direction. We heard things like working harder, will examine, will review, with no specific direction on where they're going and how they're going to do it. This is really too bad, because this government has done a very good job of making huge messes in both health care and education, and we were expecting them to take some time to explain how they were going to solve those issues, notwithstanding the fact that they have over $21 billion to spend in this province in a given year, which should be more than enough money for even the most inept managers to figure out how to do things, but apparently not.

MR. MacDONALD: Are they inept?

MS CARLSON: Well, a lot of people would say so, including many people on this side of the House.

DR. TAYLOR: There are not many people on that side though.

MS CARLSON: There are quite a few of them. Take a look, Mr. Minister. There are quite a few of them. So we'll see what they have to say. [interjection] I said: on this side. I didn't say that they'd be on our side. I think that you're going to find more and more, day by day, as the ineptness of this government unravels, we have more from this group agreeing with us than they are agreeing with the direction that you're going in.

I think that it's going to be very interesting to see what proceeds here. What we were looking for is a government that would take the bull by the horns, that would show some strong leadership and some strong strategic direction for today, tomorrow, and the future, and it hasn't happened. What do they do? They consult, they consult, and they consult. They hold another summit. They talk about examining. They talk about reviewing. [interjection] Well, there's no doubt that this government likes to promote the idea of asking Albertans what they'll do. Too bad they don't actually do what those recommendations would be. We've had a series of consultations over the course of the years that I've been in here where they talk, talk, talk, talk, and then go and do exactly what they want to do at the end of the day. That looks like another case here. This is a government that doesn't govern by strategic direction. How they govern is really by the latest popularity poll, and that does not bode well for us in the long term or in the future.

Our role as Official Opposition then becomes even more important, I believe, when we have a government that isn't sure of where they're going. If they were sure, we would have seen it in the throne speech. They are not sure, so they need some help. This government can certainly look to the opposition not only to oppose alternatives that they're promoting that we feel don't meet the best needs of Albertans through the kinds of filters that we use but also to propose alternatives. In opposing, I would like to remind the government in this Assembly that 75 to 80 percent of the time we actually vote with them. That doesn't mean that we blindly vote with them. We bring forward alternatives, new ideas, options, amendments that sometimes aren't adopted by the government, most often not, but that sometimes are. The intent of those is to strengthen what the government is doing and to sometimes help alter their course in a way that will facilitate the needs of Albertans in a little better fashion.

That's what happens when we oppose, but then we also have a responsibility to propose alternatives. We have done that many times over the course of the years that I've been here, and in fact ultimately the government sometimes adopts those proposals. I would refer members to just a couple of instances. One would be the freedom of information act, which was our former leader Laurence Decore's first bill when he came into this Legislature. He brought it in two sessions in a row as his first bill, and ultimately in 1995 this government adopted that idea and made it their own, bringing it in as their own number 1 bill.

Many of us in this Assembly were around to remember Alice Hanson's good work on social issues that was ultimately defeated at that level and brought back as a government bill and passed. Now we hear lots of talk about an idea that we've brought three times into this Legislature, which is the stability fund. We hear lots of feedback from the government and from people in the community that it's a pretty good idea and that we could easily see some form of that bill being brought into this Legislature in the future.

So I would suggest to government members that instead of just viewing us as opposition, they need to take a little broader look at what it is we do and how we can perform those duties. This government is very fond of looking at business-case kinds of models to adapt in what they're doing and to explain how they're carrying out their actions. So I would suggest to this government that they take a look at opposition as more of an advisory board in terms of role and function than they do as a traditional opposition sense.

If we take a look at what advisory boards do in the private sector, they are put in place not to have ultimate influence on decision-making but to advise on which direction the organization should move in terms of facilitating long-term strategic goals. What are those kinds of goals for Alberta? They're good government for the people at the lowest possible cost, providing the basic services that we as Canadians expect to have supplied with tax dollars, essentially health care, education, justice, and infrastructure, both hard and soft types of support. If the government would change the focus in how they see us and take a look at us more in terms of an advisory capacity, then I think we could see this government moving towards a more long-term strategic direction, because they don't seem to be able to do it without that kind of support.

So just don't think of us in terms of opposing and once in a while coming up with a bright idea that you'll adopt two or three years down the road, but work with us on an ongoing basis. That would mean some changes in legislative function. We would see things like more all-party committees, particularly the standing policy committees, where, as those members in this Assembly have seen, when opposition members are included on committees, we sometimes have some really good ideas. More often than not, we're much happier to work co-operatively to get a good idea brought forward than we are happy to work in opposition. This government, with the manner and format in which they run the government, force us into a position where it looks like what we do is oppose at all costs, but in fact they would be a much stronger government if they would work co-operatively with us in many areas. We have seen some good examples of that happen in many of the committees that I have participated in over the years, not the least of which would be PNWER, the Pacific Northwest Economic Region, and the Heritage Savings Trust Fund Committee. Now we see a FOIP committee being formulated that did really good work as an all-party committee in its last review, and we would expect the same thing to happen this time.

There are some real strengths and benefits to working with us.

You get better ideas and stronger direction if you include some opposing views or alternative views at the ground floor of building ideas and frameworks and legislation, much better than if you just surround yourself with people who think exactly like you. We have seen some true disasters in terms of legislation that has come into this Assembly when the government doesn't lift its head up and take a look in the broader community for input.

So I put those ideas forward to the government and hope that they will incorporate them into the kind of planning that they're doing, because if they don't take a look at some of those options, then we're going to see more of the same: $21 billion and it's not enough money for them to manage on in a province where our population barely tops 3 million people, where we have a strong basis in terms of basic programming. We're going to see that eroding in health care, in education, in infrastructure. We're starting to hear the concerns and the complaints from people now. What we see is a government who likes to take a band-aid approach, and a good example of that is what they're coming forward with again in terms of the task force that's going to examine options for new revenues and long-term funding for health care.

Why is it that they wait until we're in crisis mode before they take a look at putting some of those kinds of ideas into place? Why is it that this government can't do what businesses do and have ongoing think tanks working around these kinds of issues that we know are emerging, that we know are going to be critical to our future as a province in the short term and the long term, and have ongoing information flows with people who are outside of government who have got the kind of expertise that they can provide substance and good ideas to them? So why wait until the last minute, until we're on the brink of disaster in some of these areas, before they start to think about what they should have been doing in the past?

So, Mr. Speaker, I will conclude my comments by saying that there is only one thing that I completely agree with the government on in terms of this throne speech, and that is on page 4 where they say "Change is needed."

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Any questions or comments? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

MR. McCLELLAND: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My friend opposite in her comments mentioned – and I agree with her – that standing policy committees of the Legislature with opposition members can be very, very productive, in my experience. I'm wondering, though, if the hon. member has any specific committee in mind. What committee, in her estimation, would be the best to afford her attentions?

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie to respond.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've waited nine years to be able to answer a question in this Assembly, and so I'm quite happy to be doing so.

In response to the member's question, certainly I think it's a model that would work well with all of the SPCs, and I would be quite happy to take direction from the government on that and take one committee as a pilot project.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

REV. ABBOTT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie says that this is her ninth Speech from the Throne, but she charges that it shows little direction. Yet I read about 10-year targets to reduce diabetes, obesity, chronic heart and lung disease, and preventable injuries. I also read about a task force reporting by September, about an expert advisory panel being formed. These are specifics. My question to the member opposite: what would the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie specifically propose to sustain the health care system in Alberta?

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie to respond.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Let's talk about performance measures as an instance. We've seen repeatedly that the Auditor General has said that this government is not able to meet its own performance measures.

REV. ABBOTT: Mr. Speaker, the member opposite has said that she's waited nine years to answer a question, yet I just posed her one that I didn't get an answer for.

MS CARLSON: Mr. Speaker, for nine years I've also been listening to cabinet avoid the question, and this was also my first opportunity to do that.

MR. HANCOCK: Mr. Speaker, I'm chagrined to hear the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie indicate that she's listened to throne speeches for nine years and that this one contained the least substance, because this throne speech set a policy direction, which is after all the sublime role of government: to set the policy direction for our province and to provide a sense of where we're going and what our vision is. If this throne speech didn't do that for the hon. member, I am wondering if she would prefer a dull litany of program-by-program detail of what we should be doing, if she thinks that is the type of vision, the type of direction, and the type of enthusiasm.

MS CARLSON: I would like to thank him for his comments.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Okay. We shall resume debate again. The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

MR. CAO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to rise today and respond to the Speech from the Throne. I thank the hon. Lieutenant Governor for delivering the Speech from the Throne announcing to the House and this province the government's most important objectives or direction this year.

I believe that the Speech from the Throne reflects the priorities of all Albertans. It is necessary that as a government our priorities are in line with the people of Alberta, but much more is required. Our government must work very hard, ask some very difficult questions, and make bold decisions in guiding this province forward. I will be working hard with all my colleagues to ensure the most effective representation and the most efficient responses to Albertans' ongoing concerns.

As mentioned in the throne speech, the recent Future Summit provides a good measure of Albertans' views for the future. The people of this province and their government are on the same page, Mr. Speaker. We are not satisfied to sit idly by. Albertans can and will decide their own future. The Future Summit held earlier this month was a provincewide consultation on what Albertans would like our province to look like once the province's debt is retired. Information and opinions were collected and compiled from Albertans at regional forums and throughout the province.

We recognize that, despite recent economic volatility, Alberta remains in an excellent position to chart a course to continued future prosperity. A strong economy will allow ongoing support for an accessible, affordable, and high-quality education system; a clean and healthy environment; safe, caring communities; and a first-class health care system which offers affordable health services whenever Albertans need them. These are our major priorities for Albertans, Mr. Speaker, and this government is listening.

At the summit Albertans spoke strongly that they would like to see a robust, stable, resilient, and diversified economy. Mr. Speaker, we are on course. Our province is heavily involved in trade. We are a diversified economy, but we are also at the forefront of energy prospects in Canada, throughout North America, and around the world. Because of this leading position, all Alberta's objectives are linked to maintain and continue to grow our province's solid financial and economic position. Our hon. Premier has just recently returned from a Team Canada tour, a champion of Alberta. He will bring attention and investment to the fertile economic environment we inhabit. Alberta has long been known as attractive to foreign investors. Our Premier's trip it is sure will pay off.

We all know, Mr. Speaker, that Alberta's taxes are the lowest in the country. This government is committed to managing our expenditures within a set agenda of fiscal responsibility. During a time of general economic drop-off throughout the world, our tax rates and our commitment to fiscal responsibility puts us front and centre. Across the international commodity and financial markets a strong recovery is forecast. Alberta is in an enviable position to take advantage of this trend. By keeping taxes the lowest in Canada, we ensure that our small and large businesses have the tools and the freedom to orchestrate a leading and profitable economic drive. By giving individual businesses more control of their funds, they are able to invest smartly, creating jobs and marking a landscape for outside investment. This game plan benefits all Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta has big expectations, and our government has big plans to meet them. Our ever growing economy is continually bolstered by our commitment to innovations in science. Introduced in phases, the Supernet will be fully constructed in 2004, making Alberta the world leader in information technology and connectivity. In addition to connecting every library, school, hospital, and provincial government office to a high-speed broadband network, the Supernet will make the broadband services available to commercial service providers, which can then provide competitive services to every community in our province.

Throughout this government's extensive aims and initiatives, Mr. Speaker, our method of foresight and strict fiscal responsibility also extends to our natural environment. Indeed, Alberta has its eyes set to the future. A profitable, sustainable development of its natural resources is a government commitment.

We are absolutely committed to ensuring first-class health, education, and infrastructure in a growing economic environment. That is to say, Mr. Speaker, that Albertans' standard of living is key. This means ensuring safe and future-minded resource development. Alberta is concerned with maintaining a healthy natural environment. Our energy interests are subject to our conviction of not shortchanging our future and, more importantly, our children's future.

Mr. Speaker, serving my constituents in this session of our Legislature, I will present a private member's bill to reduce environmental risk for the health and wealth of our citizens. I will also introduce two motions. One is to institute continuous improvement measurements in our government operations and publicly funded organizations. The other motion is to look into the feasibility of delivering some government services through community association facilities, especially in the urban areas. This reflects suggestions from my constituents. In serving my constituents, I have also received opinions, queries, information, and I want to share them with all of you here today.

The Alberta government has invested significantly in education. From 1995 to 2002 the K to 12 spending has increased by about $1.1 billion or 41 percent, from $2.6 billion to $3.7 billion now. Enrollment growth during the same period is just around 7 percent. There are about 560,000 funded students enrolled in kindergarten to grade 12. The pay raise the government put in the 2002 budget is to make Alberta teachers' average salaries the highest in Canada. Now, never before has any salary increase for teachers been guaranteed in advance.

In addition, there is an outlay of around $1 billion for school facility upgrades and construction in the coming years. Albertans can rest assured of the fact that the government values the education of youth, our future, and appreciates the profession of teaching by our public investment, an increase in a time of shortfall, and by positioning the professional salary level as the highest among the provinces.

It's largely up to the school boards to decide how to spend those $3.7 billion. Spending beyond that in other areas such as health care, social services, road construction, and so on will be trimmed or affected, and people's jobs will be affected. By the way, a 1 percent increase on $3.7 billion is $37 million.

The downturn of the world economy and the sagging commodity prices have reduced the amount of money available for many public projects and private investment as well. In reality, many hardworking Albertans working in construction and manufacturing services could potentially get laid off, many workers will not receive a pay increase at all or may even face reduction, and many businesses were closed because of the downturn of the world economy.

So when public money is tight, we need to ponder the question of fairness and timing. Should one profession receive higher than the highest pay when it means job losses for others or lack of money to assist the less fortunate? As an MLA my vision is to ensure that Alberta has the highest employment rate, that Alberta has the lowest tax regime for workers, who can have a bigger net pay, and that Alberta's workers are rewarded for their quality performance to be among the highest paid within their occupation across the country.

What counts is the position of the salary level among peers in the same occupation, not the percentage of pay increase. By all indications Alberta's professionals, especially in the health services and teaching professions, enjoy the highest average pay across the nation. By the way, my aim is never – never – for Alberta's MLAs to receive the highest pay among their peers across the country, and they do not.

Reflecting the fact that Albertans are very pragmatic, I call on the leaders, especially union leaders, to settle with what's now available in the public budget and plan to surf the next wave of our economic upturn as part of their contract agreements.

In the broader perspective, in a longer term view I feel that we need to find innovative ways of funding and spending for public programs and services. First, we need to find ways to deal with the reality of high fluctuations of Alberta's public revenues. One possible way is to call on the private sector to provide capital finances and assume the debts and the public sector to pay the much smaller and steady amounts of this annual operating budget. This certainly would require changes in our financing legislation and regulations.

Albertans deserve better ways to share the wage increase among the stakeholders groups than the archaic employer/union confrontation model. This model always drags out the negative feelings and pits one side against the other. In the public's eyes it is wasting our valuable and scarce resources in those fights. I would venture a concept of a sharing summit, where representatives of stakeholder groups gather and work out together their wage increase shares.

Now, I would imagine a gathering of the local organized labour unions of doctors, nurses, teachers, public employees, and other stakeholder groups who are what I call sharing our public pizza. May I use the word "pizza" as an analogy? The representatives of these special interest groups would gather together, say, in Banff for a summit to come up with their agreement on slicing the percentages of increase of the pizza. This increase agreement will become the recommendation to the government to take into consideration in their budget development. Of course, the sharing summit concept needs to be thought out with further details. I have been told that 70 percent to 80 percent of public expenditures are for salary and wages. The sharing summit would provide fairness, balance, and understanding among Albertans' stakeholder groups.

Relative to other provinces Alberta is so fortunate that we still have quite a big pizza, may I say, to share, be it a notch smaller than previously predicted. Let's find a better way to share than to argue or fight over slices. However, regardless of the size of the pizza, a bigger share for one means smaller shares for the others. Our common aim is to work together to make a bigger Alberta pizza.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I am very proud to have this opportunity to respond to the Speech from the Throne. Alberta's economic horizon, alongside Alberta's other fundamental priorities, is being paid close attention, and I do see a healthy, prosperous Alberta.

Thank you.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Hon. members now have five minutes for questions or comments. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. At this time I have a question for the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort. Now, in the Speech from the Throne it is mentioned on page 11 in describing for this province, which is a noteworthy goal, a clean and sustainable environment. The direct quote here is:

In 2002 the government will further encourage practices that prevent pollution and other environmental problems. Be assured, however, that government will continue to move firmly to punish offenders who fail to live up to their environmental obligations.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort to respond. [interjections]

Hon. members, there was an understanding that questions will be for 30 seconds and the response will be for 30 seconds. For the chair to be fair to everyone, we are going to adopt the 30-second rule.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort to respond.

MR. CAO: I would love to respond to the hon. member. I don't hear your question related to what I said in the speech.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Mr. Speaker, thank you. Now, in response to what has occurred with the fire and explosion at Hub Oil, does this Speech from the Throne protect not only your constituents but the hon. Member for Calgary-East's? Is this enough to protect them?

Thank you.

MR. CAO: Still I don't see it related to what I said in the speech. My recommendation to you is that those questions probably should be directed to the question period.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Environment.

DR. TAYLOR: Yes. A question to the hon. member. He seems to be very knowledgeable in the area of technology. He mentioned the Supernet. I'm just wondering how he feels this will help his constituency.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort to respond.

MR. CAO: In my constituency, hon. minister, there's a Calgary public library and also many schools. There's even a college and the city hall. So all of those will be served by this Supernet.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glangarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you. To the Member for Calgary-Fort, Mr. Speaker. The grant for technology allowance is $40 per student.

AN HON. MEMBER: Forty-three.

MR. BONNER: You're correct; it's up to $43. But this is nowhere enough to meet the schools' needs in funding. Where do you propose we get the extra funding required?

MR. CAO: Well, again, it's not reflecting that in my speech, but I'd just venture my idea that the funding issues will be discussed with the minister responsible for the department.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Thank you so very much. We shall resume debate.

MR. MacDONALD: Mr. Speaker, I had another question.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much. Then in response to the speech yesterday afternoon by the Hon. Lois Hole, Lieutenant Governor, there are many issues that I want to bring forward in the time that I have. Mr. Speaker, at this time I would like to note that this fine province will celebrate its hundredth birthday on September 1, 2005, and it began its existence with 184,000 inhabitants.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort to respond. [interjections]

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar was recognized with an understanding that this was a question, and there was time left in the five-minute time period that was allocated. If this is your response to the Speech from the Throne, the chair will now recognize you to respond to the Speech from the Throne.

MR. MacDONALD: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. There was noise coming from the Environment minister, just noise, and I thought it was time to respond to the throne speech.

However, it began its existence with some 184,000 inhabitants, of whom some 80,000 were First Nations people. Revenue for the first fiscal year of this province was barely $2 million, of which half came by grant or, as some would say, subsidy from the federal government. Mr. Speaker, $175,000 was from fees on land transfers, and $130,000 was from the sale of butter. Now, so many years later Alberta has over 3 million citizens and revenues of over $21 billion, of which roughly 28 percent comes from nonrenewable resources. The future of Alberta will be based on the foundations laid out in this Speech from the Throne, delivered yesterday, as I said earlier, by Her Honour the Honourable Lois E. Hole. But birthdays such as our upcoming centennial are noteworthy events in the history of the province. Now, I don't know what we should do to celebrate this, whether we should, for instance, build arenas or build libraries or if we should just have very simple, inexpensive programs to recognize it, or if we should go on a massive public works program; for instance, start building things like, as they call it around Medicine Hat, the Taylor dam. Now, perhaps this is what should be done for centennial year. Who knows?

We have gone in a hundred-plus years from Rupert's Land to Ralph's world. The growth has occurred. It's certainly dramatic growth, but at the same time there's hunger in the inner cities. There are children going to school without food. [interjections] Other hon. members of this Assembly may laugh, but that is not growth. That is not a satisfied population.

Now, in listening to the throne speech . . . [interjections]

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Hon. members, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar has the floor. I would request everyone to please allow the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar to deliver his response.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In listening to the throne speech, one must remember and consider what happened only last year. We are told now that there is no money, but last year there was no end to the money. There was no end to the money because it was an election year, and we had introduction of rebate programs that cost $800 million for four months. We had another program – and this was also tax dollars – of $350 million for electricity rebates. Now, is this progress? Is this what sort of growth the public expects? I don't think so, and I think it was a very poor use of funds when you look at a year later. When there are children that are hungry, when there are seniors that can't afford their electricity bills, can't afford their heating bills, that is not, in my view, management.

Now, as I said before, a year ago, before the election, the government also instructed regional health authorities to increase access, reduce waiting lists. There were to be more MRI scans. There were to be beds opened and made available to the sick, and there were to be more operations. Now we have a full campaign, paid for by the taxpayers, to privatize our health care system. That wasn't mentioned in this document. That wasn't mentioned in this document last winter, this document here, A Positive Future for Alberta.

We talked about many fundamentals that were going to be improved, Mr. Speaker. There was to be paying down of the debt. We could no longer think of education as being only kindergarten to grade 12. We had to make commitments to lifelong learning. We had to develop programs for the whole student, whatever that is. Then we were going to increase – this is an interesting one – supply and choice and therefore lower prices for our electricity. If any hon. member can tell me, anyone, any household in this province who is enjoying electricity prices that are lower now than they were before electricity deregulation, well, then I think that they should bring these individuals to the Assembly, and they can tell us all how they're enjoying a cheaper price for their electricity since deregulation.

Now, Mr. Speaker, in this document there is no mention of the government policy – we're talking about the future here. There is no mention of electricity exports and which direction this government would like to take. There is no mention of how much longer we can rely on our natural gas supplies to provide revenue for the government. Where are we going to be in 10 years with our natural gas fields, or are they all going to be developed for the Alliance pipeline on the other side of the border into northeastern British Columbia? There's no mention of this.

Kyoto. Now, we're essentially watching our world melt away. [interjection] I hear an "oh." There are glaciers in the national parks which are the source of water for this city and, as a result, for this Assembly. The glaciers decade after decade are getting smaller and smaller in size. There are shorebirds that go to the Arctic to nest. They're going further and further north. There is conclusive proof that global warming is occurring.

Now, all hon. members, Mr. Speaker, are going to wonder: well, what does this have to do with the teachers' strike? It has this to do with the teachers' strike. The government doesn't want to put money on the table to end the teachers' strike because they're afraid they're going to need it in a big way not only to fight forest fires this spring and summer but also to provide drought relief for Alberta's farmers. This is what the money is squirreled away for, and I'm not saying that's not prudent, but all this is related. The teachers deserve some of that money that you have set aside, as well as drought-stricken farmers, as well as contractors who are going to have to fight the forest fires.

Now, with contract negotiations I was pleased to see in the update that was presented to all members of the Assembly, Mr. Speaker, about the labour relations in this province and how because of mediation processes we have stable labour relations. One of the performance measures is to have the lowest number of days lost to job action or strikes in the entire country.

The form of mediation that may have worked in the teachers' strike was the disputes inquiry board. It worked twice in the past three years, once in the city of Calgary with the public school division and once with I believe it's called the Buffalo Trail school division in Wainwright. So in the last three years this worked twice, the disputes inquiry board, yet on the eve of the largest strike in the history of the province the government saw fit not to use it, and I was disappointed in that. I think it was an appropriate time to try to resolve that series of disputes.

Why the confrontation and why no negotiation? I don't know. The only thing I can think of is the fact that in 1999 this government at its party policy convention decided that teachers should become an essential service. Now we have a government that's putting its own policies, the policies of the party, before the parents and the pupils of this fine province. The government, whenever they do that, disappoint me, Mr. Speaker.

Now health care. In the time that I have left we have to talk about the unfortunate direction that we're going towards: further privatization of our health care system. There are economic issues that we have to discuss with health care. There are certainly fiscal issues or demographic issues. There are issues relating to special service delivery. But Albertans believe, Mr. Speaker, in the fundamental principles underlying the Canada Health Act. Everyone deserves equal access to the health care they need regardless of the ability to pay.

When we get back to the settlement of this province, whenever it was Rupert's Land, everybody chipped in and co-operated. They worked together. From what I can understand and from what I see in the Mazankowski report, that's no longer going to be the case. We are no longer going to pool our resources so that if someone on Main Street has a very high health care bill, everybody shares in that. All the taxpayers would share in that bill. But with this system that is being currently proposed, that would no longer be the case. I think we are going against the spirit of co-operation that was evident whenever people worked together to settle this province and raise their families and build a basis which our prosperity is based on.

Now, I believe that this government should acknowledge its duty to provide effective health care in the most efficient manner possible. We need to take into consideration all spending on health care, both public and private. We all know that in the U.S. public-sector spending on health care is higher than in Canada. The public health care system that we currently have is one of our distinct economic advantages, and perhaps it'll be easiest for the hon. members across the way to understand, Mr. Speaker, because even Bart Simpson gets it.

Bart Simpson gets off the airplane in Toronto – I see the promo for his show – and he decides that he can walk cavalierly because health care is provided. Now, I don't think that's the right attitude, but it was noticed by the writers of that popular American show that this is what goes on in this country, and that distinguishes us from the Americans. The automobile manufacturers realize that, Mr. Speaker. Many bankers – in fact, the Toronto-Dominion Bank did a study, and they acknowledged the competitive economic advantage we have with our public health care system. To see it dismantled in any way, shape, or form is wrong.

With the Mazankowski report I don't know why we have to hurry. There's talk that this is not sustainable, but this is not true, that our system is not sustainable. We are spending a modest sum on providing public health care. We don't have an aging population. It just doesn't fly, the arguments that are presented to encourage and increase the participation of private health care providers. I have to question now: why does private health cost more? Well, Mr. Speaker, private businesses by their nature work hard to maximize growth and profitability. Neither goal is compatible with reducing the demands on our health care system or with keeping costs down. It takes more time and money for administrators to deal with a multitude of private. . . [Mr. MacDonald's speaking time expired]

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Hon. members, you now have five minutes for questions or comments. The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

REV. ABBOTT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member opposite talked a lot about our current challenges. Criticisms are easy, but I will give the Liberals one more chance. What would the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar specifically propose to sustain the health care system, to lower the energy costs, to clean up the environment, and to further improve our great education system?

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: The first thing that we need to do to clean up our environment is to have rigorous enforcement of all laws and regulations. Now, with our health care system we have to have stability and continuity, and with our energy system we have to have clear policies. There has to be a vote of confidence in the system. Surely this hon. member should know that there's not a vote of confidence in our electricity system, because if there was, there would be people coming forward to invest in new transmission lines.

Thank you.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

MR. HORNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was interested to hear the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar talk about privately delivered being much more costly and, of course, some of the other comments about how it raises the cost. I'm just curious if he's proposing that we purchase all of the private doctors' offices in the province and run them publicly?

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar to respond.

MR. MacDONALD: No, certainly not, Mr. Speaker, but I would advise and encourage the hon. member to compare our health care costs as a percentage of GDP with the Americans, who already have the system that the member opposite is proposing.

Thank you.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

MR. CAO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a question for the hon. member. Regarding your speech, you talk really about the money side, of costs increasing and all of that. So my question to you, sir, is: from whom do you want to get the money, and given the limited amount of money you have, from whom do you want to take away to give to the others?

MR. MacDONALD: Mr. Speaker, in response to the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort's question, there is an appropriate amount of money in this province. It's just that it's been mismanaged by this government.

Thank you.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

MR. KNIGHT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to just ask a simple question of the hon. gentleman that gave the speech. He mentioned a problem with compliance. I would like you to explain to me: what is the level of compliance with Alberta Environment's orders with respect to the energy business?

MR. MacDONALD: That, indeed, is a simple question. I would just refer the hon. member to the events that led up to the explosion at Hub Oil in the vicinity of Calgary-Fort and Calgary-East. That is his answer. There was no compliance of occupational health and safety or environmental laws.

MR. McCLELLAND: On questions and comments, I wonder if the member opposite would give us his thoughts on the notion of settling public-sector disputes through the final offer arbitration process?

MR. MacDONALD: Mr. Speaker, in response to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, there are processes that are in place in this jurisdiction, in this province, as the Minister of Human Resources and Employment is only too well aware, that will resolve each and every dispute, and I would remind the hon. member that we already have the second lowest if not the lowest days lost to strike action of any jurisdiction in Canada.

Thank you.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

MR. CAO: Thank you. You talk about the high energy, utility prices, and so on. So my question to you is: given that there's a rising wage demand for people who work in that industry, what's your proposal to keep the price low or the same?

MR. MacDONALD: Mr. Speaker, I had difficulty understanding that question. Could I ask the hon. member to repeat it, please?

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Hon. members, we are starting to run out of time, and at this stage I think it's only appropriate that the Assembly stand adjourned until 8 p.m.

[The Assembly adjourned at 5:28 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Wednesday, February 27, 2002 8:00 p.m.
 Date: 02/02/27
 [The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Please be seated.

head: Consideration of Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor's Speech

Mr. Horner moved that an humble address be presented to Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor as follows.

To Her Honour the Honourable Lois E. Hole, CM, Lieutenant Governor of the province of Alberta:

We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Assembly, now assembled, beg leave to thank you, Your Honour, for the gracious speech Your Honour has been pleased to address to us at the opening of the present session.

[Debate adjourned February 27: Mr. MacDonald speaking]

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Hon. members, it's my understanding that when the House adjourned, a member of your party was speaking at the time. Is that not so?

MR. McCLELLAND: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. I'm happy to defer to the Leader of the Opposition.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Thank you. All right.

The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I didn't know whose turn it was, so I thought that if two of us stood up, the decision was yours. I appreciate the consideration.

Mr. Speaker, it's a real pleasure to stand this evening and speak to the Speech from the Throne, that was delivered yesterday by the Lieutenant Governor. We've got a lot of issues that come up in the context of both the Speech from the Throne and what constitutes the proper mandate of government so that we can see how the proposals that fit within that speech and, I guess, the business plan or the initiatives that will be undertaken by the government over the next year fit within some of the mandates that we see for government and some of the planning and kind of the legal obligations that we as legislators have to the province that we represent and that we are to govern.

Mr. Speaker, I think all of us want to start by expressing our thoughts to the Queen, happy thoughts in the context of her celebration of her golden anniversary of ascending to the throne but also sad thoughts on the loss of her sister, Princess Margaret. I think it was very appropriate for that to be part of the recognition here in the Speech from the Throne.

The direction that we go from there is in the context of: how do we put together the policies that are important for the province under the mandate that we talk about? The Speech from the Throne in a number of places emphasizes the fact that the government is committed to recognizing and dealing with the priority areas that Albertans express again and again and again as being of great concern to them. We have to look at the history of what we've seen, Mr. Speaker, I think almost since the time I first came into the Legislature. At that point in time, the debt seemed to be a real issue, with health care and education following up. As the budget was balanced, we moved into an accelerated pay-down of the debt. The public's concern and Albertans' concern over debt and the role that the debt plays in our province began to fade in terms of concern that Albertans had, and education, health care, and children have kind of risen now to the point where they are much more on the minds of Albertans in the context of: how do we manage the province and how do we deal with the issues that are important to this province in that context?

Now, we have to put all of this into the perspective of what we as a province have. Everybody in our province recognizes the blessings that we have in the context of the natural resource environment and also the physical structure as a place to live. We have to look at it from the point of view of: how do we make sure that the optimism that is part of being Alberta, the optimism both in terms of our individual futures and also in terms of our collective futures, gets a chance to grow and to be part of the next generation's heritage as well? If we look at the things that are coming out of this report, the Speech from the Throne, basically a draft of the government's business plans, more specifics of which we'll see when the business plans come out associated with the budget, we have to look at what we can take out of this speech and say: how does it apply to where we get a sense that Albertans are putting their priorities?

Mr. Speaker, I have traveled the province extensively since January 1, trying to get a sense of what Albertans are thinking, what Albertans want us to deal with in the context of this legislative session. We began the year with an awful lot of concern about health care and children. That was the question that came up a lot. Then as we began to get a sense of what was happening because of some of the adjustments that were being made in the budget, some of the discussions that were going on in the communities about what next year might bring forward, there were a lot of concerns raised about how we are going to deal with education. There were discussions at that time starting to come out about the possibility of strikes, about the possibility of not being able to settle with the teachers the way we had settled with the other public services during the year prior. Also, there was a lot of concern about how we deal with the things that are important to this province in terms of our planning ability, our planning horizon, and the associated interaction between the business community, the service community, and their government. What we were seeing was that a lot of them were saying: how do we plan as a community, how do we plan as an organization, how do we plan as a business when we can't understand or we can't develop expectations about where the government is going to go from one year to the next?

There's been a lot of concern expressed now about the need for stability in our province, the need for predictability in our province, so that they as community organizations, individuals, or businesses can effectively plan their future and deal with their decision-making in a context where the government doesn't catch them by surprise, doesn't provide them with a working environment that creates uncertainty for them. There are a couple of different areas that they really wanted addressed in that context, Mr. Speaker, and they were both in terms of the government's expenditure fiscal stability but also in terms of the program stability. They were really concerned about the kind of changes that were going on in some of the laws and some of the programs where they didn't feel that the changes that were happening did reflect the discussions that they had with the government. In other words, they felt that they were brought in for discussions, and all of a sudden there was a totally different idea coming out as the solution which hadn't been discussed with them, hadn't been brought up to them in that consultation.

I think that reflects the possibility that we have of decisions being made without an iterative process going on with the people that are being consulted. It's great to go out and say, "What do you think?" and get all the ideas together, but when you do come to a decision-making time, what you need to do is take all of those ideas and go back again and say, "Okay; here's what the other people we talked to said," so that anybody then has a sense of: well, now we have a feeling of where that suggestion that's being adopted came from. When they're caught by surprise by not ever having heard about it, they end up saying: "Gee, who put that idea in? It sure didn't come from our discussions."

These are the kinds of things that we're hearing when we talk to the communities. A lot of the communities were very concerned about some of the cuts that went on last fall without consultation. They felt that there were adjustments made in the programs that could not be rationalized in the context of their perception of priorities for this government, and there were also changes in procedures that affected the business community. Some of them specifically were with the WCB. Others were with the rumoured at the time and now more substantiated but not final yet relationship the business community is going to have to play in the context of the reforms to public services. Specifically, the health care premiums is one that they keep talking about. You know, they see that in the end the business community is going to have to pay for that, whether it comes through their current benefit package negotiations with their employees or whether it's going to come through a greater effort by employees to get employers to pay their benefit packages or whether it's going to come through just the employees saying: "We can't make it anymore. We've got to have a higher wage so that we can pay our share."

You know, this is the kind of impact where the community is saying that they don't get a sense of participation in those decisions. They want to feel that they were part of it, because they were promised that they could be part of it when they were brought into the discussions in the first place. So we need to have that process put in place where when we do get a set of recommendations or a set of ideas that we're thinking about, there's a mechanism there to go back and deal with them so that they can effectively get a buy-in to those kinds of suggestions and comments.

When we go through the Speech from the Throne, the government starts off by talking about some of the different aspects, where they want to go. Commemorating the Queen's jubilee with the creation of the new student scholarships I think is a great idea, but it does help only a very small number of Albertans. In the sense that it does give the student a chance to set a goal – you know, the $5,000 value scholarship is significant – it will effectively make sure that they are challenged to perform and to excel. I guess the thing that was missing out of the Speech from the Throne would be the criteria that would be used to determine who is eligible. Is this going to be just based on academic standing, or is it going to be based on a need criteria? Is it going to be based on some kind of a community designation? These are the kinds of things that would help Albertans to understand how that's going to, in effect, come and affect them in their communities.

If we look at the focus that the Speech from the Throne goes into after that, it talks about health care and then goes into some of the other departments, but I want to start first of all by commenting on some of the impacts that are there in the context of health care. When we look at the report that the Premier's Advisory Council on Health brought forward, they had a series of recommendations in there, 44 I think in total. The government within a very short period of time basically said: we're going to accept all of these recommendations. I guess, Mr. Speaker, I would have felt much more confident in the government's ability to deal with those recommendations if they had come forward and said: "You know, we've considered all 44 of them. All 44 of them in some ways have merit, but this is the priority we want to put on them because these are the areas that we want to focus our limited resources on in dealing with trying to find solutions for our health care situation."

As members of part of the government, we recognize that nothing in a static situation is acceptable. We're always growing. We're always improving. We're always moving forward. So, you know, nothing can stay static, and this includes our health care system. New technologies are coming along, new organizational structures, new treatment methods, new drugs. All of these kinds of things have to be built into our decision-making process, and one of the fundamental things that health care has to be is a matter of creating priorities. You know, the doctors do that as they deal with you. Patients do it as they go into the system. Mr. Speaker, we have to look at how we deal with that in the context of our communication back to Albertans.

This report basically talks about health care in the context of a significant focus on revenue shifting, revenue generation. When you talk about health care with Albertans, revenue and revenue sharing, revenue alternatives were not really one of their first priorities. Their priorities were: how do we deal with waiting lists, how do we deal with access, how do we deal with the specialities? These things are mentioned in the Speech from the Throne, but they're away down the list. I guess I would've felt much more comfortable dealing with the government's intentions if they had been at the top of the priorities, because those are the things that Albertans speak about when they want to express concerns about their health care. It's not whether or not we're paying by health care premiums or paying by taxes or paying by cash. They want to know that they've got access to timely, adequate health care, and these kinds of recommendations and suggestions in the Speech from the Throne were at the bottom of the list. When we look at Alberta's position in expenditures in health care across Canada, we see that, you know, we are reasonably close to the top, if not at the top, of expenditures per capita in health care. So the dollars shouldn't be really that much of a concern. It's how we manage those dollars, how we make sure that those dollars are well spent.

Mr. Speaker, I've talked about a number of innovative processes and procedures that some of our health authorities have used to improve their effective use of our public dollars. I see nothing in here that talks about a process being put in place to expedite sharing of those cost-effective ideas from one health authority to the other. I know the minister has responded a couple of times when they've been asked about our suggestions, and he says: well, you know, the chairs of the health authorities meet all the time. But when I discuss health with some of the chairs of the health authorities, they tell me that the agenda they deal with has to deal with financing, has to deal with the relationship between the government and the health authorities. They don't have the time commitment in those meetings to deal with the lower level discussions that are going on about actual operational changes.

So what we need to do is put together a provincewide interhealth authority communication process where some of the operational managers, not the chief executive officers, get together and talk about how they're actually improving the delivery. One of the things that has been shown to be very effective is the Chinook health region's new program on transition into long-term care. Another one is the Capital Health Link here in Edmonton and how they're now expanding that a little bit into some of the other health regions. This is good, but why isn't it being opened up across all of the province?

I had a conversation with the executive here in the Capital health authority, and they were talking about how cost-effective it had been. I asked them: well, you know, if that Capital Health Link, that call-in health advisory system, has been so effective for people who start at home and make the call, why is it that they don't have a bank of phones at emergency so that people who are sitting there for two or three hours in the emergency room . . . And, Mr. Speaker, I can go on: four and five and six hours as well, because there are a lot of people who have sat there that long. Well, why not have a bank of phones there so that they can call the health link and effectively get some support, get some ideas on how to deal with their ailment that brought them to emergency without having to go through the high-cost process of going into emergency care? These are the cost-effective things that we need to start looking at because we as a province are already spending more than most other provinces in Canada on our health care. So, you know, we need to make sure that we have cost containment, cost-effective discussions going on as well.

I was going to kind of skip over the discussion of health fees, health premiums, when I first went through this yesterday and started thinking about what I wanted to say this evening, but when I listened to the responses that we got in question period today when the issues of health user fees were brought up both by the opposition and by the government members, I just couldn't contain myself any longer, Mr. Speaker. I had to make some comments. They're effectively saying that raising health care fees will solve the dilemma, that it will make everybody aware of the fact that health care is expensive. Anybody who has had even a basic introductory course in economics knows that fixed costs do not affect consumer decisions. That's a given. User fees are a fixed cost. They are not part of a consumer decision-making process.

There's a lot of information out there also, Mr. Speaker, that when you deal with fixed costs in terms of consumption decisions, you in effect create an expectation of an entitlement. In other words, I've paid my health premium; I get something for it. You know, we have to make sure that this kind of decision process is not occurring in our health care system, and that's why I don't think that increasing health care fees is a proper operational tactic to deal with sending any kind of a signal to Albertans that our health care system is costly and has to be more judiciously used.

There are other ways that we can do it, like that health link program that I was talking about, having the phones in the emergency rooms, having the option there for individuals when they go to a doctor to certify that they have used the health link first so that they do know that they do need to go to see their doctor. You know, this basically gives a triage system to make sure that the people who are using the high-cost part of our health care system are the people who really need it. We in effect have that a little bit now in the sense that our general practitioners, our family practitioners are in a way a triage into the specialist system. Well, we may need to think about also having some kind of an entry signal sent to our general practitioners. There are a number of stories that run around about, you know, the social visit to the doctor: not the medical visit to the doctor; the social visit. Well, you know, we've got to make sure that that kind of use of our health care system is not there. We've also got to make sure, with one of the more rapidly increasing cost parts of our health care system, the prescription drugs, that we're starting to deal with those kinds of issues.

Mr. Speaker, I tell this story in a number of community meetings when people have said: well, Ken, give us an example. I don't know whether I'm fortunate or unfortunate, but I've had an ulcer for a large part of my lifetime, and I probably have used every treatment that's been available for ulcers, all the way from the original, you know, eat potatoes, eat rice, and drink milk and take a vitamin pill.

That was it. You know, what we end up with is all those, including the antibiotic treatment that's been tried.

The last time I had a concern about my stomach and went to the doctor, he prescribed a new prescription that I hadn't tried before. It was 30 pills, $75. I couldn't believe it. I took them. It helped, but the next time I had a problem, I happened to be wandering around the drugstore and on the shelf was a now over-the-counter drug that I took probably 20 years ago under prescription. Mr. Speaker, $12 for 90 pills. So in effect three months' worth for $12 compared to one month's worth for $75. The over-the-counter one worked just as well for me, and I'm using it now. That's the kind of decision we should be looking at in the context of what prescriptions and which drugs we allow and encourage physicians to prescribe for Albertans. You know, that's very cost-effective.

We have to look at some of these kinds of recommendations. I know that a number of other provinces have procedures that they recommend to physicians in terms of how they schedule prescriptions, how they decide which prescription to give. Maybe we should be looking at some of these, not necessarily to interfere with the doctor/patient relationship but to be there so that we in effect make people think about the cost, make them look at the cost as they make their decision. That way we in essence send cost signals into the consumption decision. That's good economics, Mr. Speaker. Fixed costs are not good economics.

We also have to look at some of the other things that we talk about in here. There's a recommendation on page 5 where they're talking about looking at access guarantees for selected services. In the same part of the report they're talking about basically putting the waiting lists onto computers so that people can come in and look at a waiting list and decide whether they want to go to this or that or that other location based on how long the waiting list is. The question that automatically comes up there is: will this choice that's being made include travel costs for the patient if they decide to go to someplace distant where there's a shorter waiting list, or are they making the choice of paying for that as part of getting treatment early? Well, truly if what we're going to end up doing is have them pay the transportation cost so that they can get the treatment early, we've in effect created a two-tiered health care system, because the people with the money are the ones who can travel, get the service quicker. The people who don't have money to make that kind of a choice about traveling are the ones who are going to have to stay home. They're going to have to suffer, and they're going to become disadvantaged Albertans.

I guess we have to look at it in the perspective of, you know: what are we as a society? Are we a society that says that health care is important to us, health care is important in the context of our community, or is health care truly a commodity that we buy and sell? If we can afford it, we get it and we get it a timely way, and others have to take what's left. Mr. Speaker, I don't think that's what Albertans perceive in their health care system. That's not what I've been hearing them talking about as I've traveled the province. So I would be very cautious in terms of how this part of the waiting list access guarantee package gets put together. There was reference in here to ambulance services as well, and you know, if that's going to be part of it, that the transportation and the cost of getting those services at a distance is included, that may be an acceptable process.

Mr. Speaker, many of us who live in rural Alberta accept the fact that we are not going to get timely health care, timely services the same way as someone who lives at a point of concentration, but that's a choice on our part. When we deal with it here, when we're actually legislating processes that do not allow for that kind of choice, that's not acceptable. If people move to a community accepting the fact that they're going to be disadvantaged, that's different, but we have to make sure that we're not imposing economic hardship in the process of our legislative decisions.

Mr. Speaker, the next section that we get into in the Speech from the Throne looks at the focus on the learning system, and this afternoon we tried to conduct a debate on what constitutes a good learning system, what the government's role should be in that. We were shut down, saying we were supposed to do it in the response to the Speech from the Throne or in the budget debate. But the issue here comes out to be one of: this debate tonight is associated with the broad perspective of the government mandate, not an individual departmental focus. So we have to make sure that we get our comments on all of the aspects of government tonight, not just on education. So I was very disappointed in the way it turned out this afternoon.

In the other aspect here, what we have to do is look at how we develop our vision for the education system. I've often suggested, you know, that we have to make sure the school boards, the school community – the parents, the decision-makers, the teachers: all of the community – have input into defining what constitutes that community's delivery model. We can't have the government imposing criteria on that where they make conditions that are budget contingent. What we have to do is let them model their education system, and then through the negotiations that go on with the employee groups, whether it's the ATA or the support staff, they have to deal with how they staff the model that they feel would best deliver education in their community.

What we're also finding is that the government has announced that they're going to be putting out a new curriculum, and that's part of the material that's here in the Speech from the Throne. Mr. Speaker, I happened to be at a meeting last spring where the Minister of Learning made reference to how they were going to redesign the curriculum from kindergarten through grade 12, and the conversation that went through the room at that meeting was: where did this come from? We're basically seeing here now that that curriculum has been committed to, because it says "the government will share and discuss a renewed vision for the kindergarten to grade 12 learning system." But they've talked about it in these meetings as being already under way and being planned. I hope the government takes this sentence to heart and makes sure that this discussion about a new curriculum, a new process for learning is fully discussed with the communities before it is implemented. This is a good suggestion in this speech. I hope they carry through with it rather than the suggestion that was provided last spring, where it was almost presented as a fait accompli.

The only reference to advanced education that's in the Speech from the Throne basically talks about the government wanting to work with students and institutions to make sure that education is accessible. Well, that's a very broad, open statement. What are they thinking about? How are they looking at trying to decide whether or not education is accessible? How are they trying to decide whether or not education is affordable?

Are they willing to look at some of the investment share/return type of models that are out there for business? You know, students put some money into it; they get a benefit out of it. The public puts some money into it; we get some benefit out of it. How do those returns balance relative to the proportion of the costs that we are putting into it? Mr. Speaker, I think that from some of the rough work we've done on these kinds of models right now, we're asking the students to pay more than the share they should. We should be looking at trying to provide opportunities for students to deal with getting their education in a less costly way to them; in other words, increasing the public component in it. Then we'll get a better output in some of these investment share model type of analyses.

But we've got to make sure that we look at advanced education. How does it work? How does it function in the context of providing equality or equity of access for students across the province? More and more we're seeing programs focus on one or two institutions. The government's commitment to this Campus Alberta idea hasn't materialized the way it should. It's still institutionalized in buildings in the major centres, because that's where the volume exists to, in effect, create the economies of scale that are needed to make education cost-effective. The only institution we have in the province that's really stretching out to the reaches of the province is Athabasca University, and it has a limited curriculum that it offers and a limited opportunity for people who want to specialize in some of the more challenging and advanced learning environments.

I guess the next section that the government goes into is dealing with the focus on the economy. This is kind of the section that a lot of people are talking about right now in terms of how the government's interaction with what's going on in our economy really is being questioned by an awful lot of the business community in Alberta, by a lot of the people who are buyers and sellers in that business community. They've seen the instability that's created by the changes in the government expenditure patterns affecting their ability to plan. The sense of uncertainty and, kind of, commitment of the government I think started last year with the electricity deregulation, when the government told them that there wouldn't be a severe impact and there was. You know, they lost their trust in the government to say that stability was important, and that kind of was the real hard kick that made them start to think about what was going on. They're now looking at a lot of the other things that the government is doing and saying, "Gee, that's destabilizing as well".

They're not providing support to the business community, not support in the context of dollars being given to the business community but support in the context of a stable business environment. They're telling me now that operating in Alberta requires more than just low taxes. It requires predictability. It requires stability so that they can plan, they can deal with a good relationship with their employees, they can deal with good relationships with their suppliers. When they don't know what the government is going to do in terms of the contracts they have with the government, or when they don't know what the arm's length agencies are going to do as they are affected by the government's decisions, how do these businesses deal with their suppliers and their employees? They don't want to be in a situation where they jeopardize the working relationship they have with their suppliers and with their employees.

The uncertainty and the volatility that is becoming evident in terms of the government's activities is really starting to cause them some concern. I think the government needs to recognize that the fundamental role of government in terms of its relationship to the economic community is to promote stability, to promote accountability, and to promote predictability. That is not occurring right now in the context of the actions of this government, and we've got to start working on it.

Mr. Speaker, I'm not going to spend the next 15 minutes giving my normal talk about how the proper tools need to be put in place to deal with fiscal stability, because I don't doubt that everybody in this House has heard it at least once before. So I'll give everybody a break tonight and just go on to the next section instead of dealing with that one at this particular point in time.

I guess when we look at the financial management commission that the government promises to put in place to deal with the financial management of our province and where we're going, I would hope that some of those tools I talked about will come out of there, because we've had a number of groups say that these are good. The Chamber of Commerce thinks it's a good idea. The Institute of Chartered Accountants have started to talk about it as well.

Mr. Speaker, I guess the thing that has come out in terms of some of the debate we've heard the last two days both in connection with the Speech from the Throne and this financial commission but also in terms of some of the other comments that have started to float out from discussions that are going on in the community about what the government's intending has to do with the heritage savings trust fund. I think it's really important that, in effect, if any change – and I don't think it's appropriate at this point in time to make changes in the Alberta heritage savings trust fund and the relationship it has to Albertans – is going to occur, it should only occur if a referendum were held to give Albertans a true say in it.

They spoke very, very strongly in the '95 review, when they said that they wanted the heritage fund kept as a long-term income source to support Alberta when our oil and gas revenues begin to decline and we have to look at having an alternative revenue instead of increased income taxes or a possibility of a sales tax or whatever else you wanted to call it. That was not acceptable to Albertans. They wanted the heritage fund kept to provide them with the income so that they could deal with their future in a certain way. If we're going to change that, we'd better make sure that that's what Albertans are saying and that Albertans recognize the fact that based on their requests at that time we changed the management style and the management structure of the Alberta heritage savings trust fund to the point that an unplanned, short-term liquidation of any of that fund probably creates a situation where we will, in effect, be net losers, and we can't let that happen.

Long-term planning in the context of the equity investments of that heritage fund requires a long-term decision-making process, not a short-term decision-making process, because we will lose because of the equity situation, the equity markets, and the role the equity markets is now playing in that heritage fund if we liquidate it at this point in time. So we can't deal with that kind of decision-making without Albertans fully being allowed to participate through some kind of a referendum.

The other aspects that we come up with here, Mr. Speaker – and I want to wish the government all the success in the world as they move to try and work with the government of Canada and all of the other things that are necessary to facilitate better access to the international markets for our producers and our processors in Alberta. This has to be a priority in terms of our economic growth, but we have to do it in a way that, in effect, sustains the kind of Alberta that's important to us as well.

I guess the one little part of the economic section of this Speech from the Throne that kind of brought a chuckle as I read it was the reference to "establishing formal ties in emerging markets." My first thought was, Mr. Speaker: is this a bunch more trade offices that we're going to be establishing? And isn't it only about five or six or seven years ago that we were shutting these all down, saying that there are better ways to do it? I guess if that's really what that clause in this speech means, I would ask the government, before they undertake any more trade offices, to conduct a thorough analysis of the effectiveness and the benefits we've achieved from the trade offices that we have. Are they giving us an increase in trade with those countries that's above the trend for the countries if we hadn't had them there? There are a lot of model systems that would allow them to make that kind of a comparison. I don't want us to be putting in place just an assignment for somebody to go out and have a good time for a couple of years living overseas. That's not what we need to promote our economic growth.

There are a lot of options for us through the trade associations. You know, the Beef Export Federation has done a great job of promoting our activities in the international market in the beef industry. We want to focus probably more in the context of supporting some of these commodity associations and their efforts to reach out. They are the professionals, they are the commodity-knowledgeable people, they know where the market is for their product, and they have the resources and the knowledge to make sure that the information that's conveyed to the other side is adequate. Now, I'm going to put a qualification on that, Mr. Speaker, in the sense that I've worked internationally. I know how important it is in some countries to have a government tag along when you go into negotiations. You know, if those are the kind of justifications that will in a sense create the need for a trade office in those countries, we need to make sure that that is made plain to Albertans when we establish these. Custom and practice in some of these countries are such that if you don't have somebody who has political connections with you, you're not going to get a signed deal. If that's the country we're going into, that's the country we need to make sure we deal with, but we do it in the open. So that's why I'm suggesting that we need to have this full-fledged investigation of whether or not these kinds of offices truly bring us a benefit.

The last comment on the economic section there is that the government wants to make sure that they work to have open access for our softwood lumber. This is really important to us in Alberta. It's important to a lot of our northern and rural communities. I guess, Mr. Speaker, one of the things that I'd like to throw out here is that I heard a suggestion coming from Ottawa where they were going to enter into negotiations with the U.S. something similar to what they had in the previous agreement, where they would impose a national export tariff on softwood lumber and the U.S. government would drop their 32 percent countervail duty. Somewhere in my mind – I don't whether it's just open tonight or what – I have a recollection that we as a province have control over our resources. If that is really true, why is it that we are not dealing with trying to collect the appropriate tax to offset the U.S. rather than letting the feds do it? That would be an appropriate strategy for us. After all, those are our resources, and we need to deal with it. If that means entering into discussions with our lumber producers about changing the harvesting fees that they pay or the stumpage fees or the access fees, that may be a way to do it, but we should be getting that 13 percent, not sending it to Ottawa.

There are a lot of issues here that we come up with in the context of the agriculture sector when they talk about what we're dealing with in the context of rural Alberta, how we have to go into dealing with some of the new strategies. Mr. Speaker, I guess if there's one thing that's been coming up very, very frequently in my contact with the rural communities over really the last four or five months – it started to trickle in last summer – it was: what is the government doing when they're trying to reorganize the ag offices? What kind of focus are they putting on this value-chain reorganization? Where do we fit into it as small producers, or where do we fit into it as a community?

I guess, Mr. Speaker, if there's been a failure on the part of Alberta Agriculture, it's been to communicate clearly to rural Alberta what they mean by that reorganization, how it's going to affect them, how it's going to deal with them. I don't feel comfortable that the comments in here are going to help in having rural Alberta understand what's going on. A lot of people are saying that what this reorganization is doing is just putting in place a support system for industrial agriculture. It's got nothing to do with community-based agriculture. In fact, it's weakening community-based agriculture. It's going to take away from the communities any say in what agriculture is. They looked to last fall's intensive livestock act, the confined feeding operations act, in effect as justification for that, because they saw in there the province removing from the local community the kind of say they thought they should have in the location of those intensive livestock operations. They're seeing this as another step in that removal of opportunity for community-based agriculture. So I think the government really owes it to rural Alberta to make sure that if that is the case, they admit it, and that if it isn't the case, they get out there and explain to them how the average farmer in Alberta, the average rural community can benefit from this reorganization.

The indication that runs around in the community is that 51 regional offices will be reduced to 18. That, in effect, has created a lot of concern about access to information. It's created a lot of concern about the kind of information they're going to be able to get. A number of farmers have called and said: you know, what we've been told is that now if we want agronomic or crop science information, we'd better go talk to a commercial supplier, because they have field men that promote their product. Mr. Speaker, what kind of objectivity do we get if we go to Monsanto and ask them what crop to grow? They're going to give us a crop that requires their chemicals, that requires their processes, that requires their input. They're not going to give us an objective assessment of what's good for our farm, for our community. They're going to look at what's in the best interest of Monsanto. I pick only on Monsanto because it's the easy name to say compared to some of the other ones. It's not that they're any more self-serving than any of the others.

I guess the issue that comes up next in the speech is the reference to healthy communities with the activities and the discussions that have been going on today about what we are dealing with in the context of safe communities when the government is talking about changing probation requirements. We've got to make sure that the communities out there feel that we as a government are looking out for their interest. I would ask: is it in their interest to have people out there who are now being given a less-supervised probation? That has to be really looked at. What data is available to show that moving from a three- to a six-month visit with your probation officer is adequate? Do we have the investigative analysis that shows that that still provides for adequate reintroduction of an offending person into the community? Is that adequate? I don't think we do have that, Mr. Speaker, and if we do, if the minister has it, I would ask that it be tabled in this Legislature and that it be circulated to Albertans. Every mayor, every reeve, every community leader should be given a copy of it so that they can have a sense that there is some degree of evidence behind this change. Safe communities is one of the major concerns of Albertans. Safe communities, the ability to go out into your community, the ability not to feel threatened in your community: that's important to Albertans. We've got to make sure our activities support that concern and provide for solutions to those concerns.

Mr. Speaker, I'm just about finished, so we won't be going much longer.

I guess the interesting part of the Speech from the Throne is that one of the things that I probably have heard raised more than just about anything else as I've traveled the province is at the end of the Speech from the Throne. Mr. Speaker, if there's something that I think is a sense of what Alberta stands for, it's how we care for and treat our children, yet this is the second-last section in the Speech from the Throne. There have been so many concerns raised by groups from one end of the spectrum, from one age level to the other, about why it is we're reducing financial support for the prevention programs in our children's services area. Why are we removing so many of those support programs for families that will give them a chance to bring their children up and make those children feel part of the community, give those children a chance to grow, to feel loved, to have a sense that they do have value, that they do have worth? People are really, really concerned about the perception in the community that that kind of commitment we as a public are making to our children has been removed, and I really think that if the government is going to move in that area, they've got to reinstate those prevention programs, and they've got to make sure that the communities appreciate the fact that children are important.

Mr. Speaker, we went through a process of developing mandates for our regional children's authorities where we had those consultations under the commissioner's office. They basically said that the communities were going to have a chance to deal with developing the programs for the youth in their community. Prevention and family support were almost at the top of the list of every one of these business plan developments. Why is it that we as decision-makers on their behalf have made a choice, set priorities that have removed those programs? We've in effect pre-empted the authority that we gave to the children's services authorities to make decisions that fit their community, that reflected their community's wish, that reflected their community's collective decision on how they should support and provide the necessary growth environment for their children. I think that's one of the worst things that we've done in the last year when we removed those kinds of programs in support of children in this province.

We also have to look in that same context – but it's not even talked about in this speech – at the relationship that we've had to removing support for persons with developmental disabilities. Mr. Speaker, these are disadvantaged Albertans who need community supports. A lot of them, with a small amount of financial support, a small amount of counseling support can become effective participants in a community. If we don't give them those supports so that they can live independently, they're going to end up being institutionalized and much more costly for us as a province. We've got to make sure that we keep those community support structures in place for these individuals. They're Albertans. They deserve dignity. They deserve to be given an opportunity to live in the community, and we've got to make sure that our resources are there for them. This is another one of the areas that really has been brought forward in the past four or five months as people have seen the cuts that started in response to the second-quarter update.

Mr. Speaker, I guess the comment that I'd like to make about the environment section is that as we look at expanding our output – and I know that a lot of our new electricity generators, as an example, are looking at building in Alberta with the idea of exporting their electricity – I would ask a question as much as anything. Has the government looked into the opportunity of working with these companies as part of their approval process that if their electricity is being exported, it has to be exported in exchange for greenhouse gas credits? You know, that kind of option should be looked at, because if we're going to allow businesses to establish here in Alberta with the idea of exporting resource-based energy, then we should be saying: why allow them to export into another economic market at the expense of an alternative business that wants to establish in our area that doesn't export those resource-based credits into another market? We want to have the growth in our community, not the growth in somebody else's community, when we get the debit of the greenhouse gas. So I guess that's a question as much as anything.

This is one area where I think we're in an evolving state of understanding for a lot of people, including myself. This is one of the areas that I probably haven't kept up on as much as I should, but it's one of the things that I think we need to look at, especially when we're dealing with new energy suppliers. You know, these are not people that have been in the province, that have been growing in the province, or that are producing that energy source for consumption in the province. If they're going to establish here to supply a market somewhere else, then we don't want to become the source of location for other communities to come here, establish their greenhouse gas emitting energy sources, and then use the product without having to deal with the greenhouse gas that's emitted. I guess that's a concern that I've got when we look at some of the options now that are being speculated on in the context of some of our electricity generation options that are coming up or some of our new coal exploration projects.

Mr. Speaker, there are a number of other issues that need to be addressed, but more and more I'm getting into the area where some of the things I want to say deal with the actual expenditure patterns and the actual expenditure amounts. I would just serve notice that I'll make the choice right now to give everybody a rest from listening to my gravelly voice, and I'll pick up those specific items about the levels of funding and the priorities on funding when we get into the budget debate.

Mr. Speaker, I thank you very much for the opportunity to express my concerns about this agenda of the government, provide some suggestions for them. We'll see over the coming weeks what happens to those suggestions and those comments.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Hon. members, according to Standing Order 29(2) we have a brief period for questions, comments, and responses.

SOME HON. MEMBERS: No.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Yes, hon. members. It's a ruling that's already been looked into. If the hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition had spoken right after the mover, then there might have been something different, but inasmuch as there have been others in front, then all people who speak subsequent to that fall under Standing Order 29.

There being no questions, we'll go to the next member. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

MR. McCLELLAND: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Common sense and practical experience tell us that health, education, and social services are inextricably linked. This is especially true when we're considering the welfare of our children. In Her Honour's Speech from the Throne yesterday I was pleased to see the recognition that good health and a good life depend on much more than medical care alone. It's also about lifestyle, hard work, and having encouraging role models at home, at work, and at play.

I was also pleased to see the recognition of the fact that the more our children learn, the healthier they will be and the better lives they are likely to have. However, in my opinion, recognition of the societal benefits of early childhood intervention for at-risk children was not sufficiently emphasized in the throne speech. Today I'll try to make a case for why long-term, secure funding for early childhood intervention programs for at-risk children and families is in our enlightened self-interest. I'll try to show that it's ethically appropriate to identify and help those children most vulnerable in society who need and would benefit from our help in ensuring that they start life on an equal footing with their peers, and I'll demonstrate that it's in our economic interest to make the investment in children early so as to mitigate against the negative influence of learned helplessness.

Albertans through the Future Summit process have in my opinion clearly identified the necessity of providing a foundation for education and learning upon which future generations of Albertans will enjoy the same opportunity our generation enjoyed. In a knowledge-based world economy achieving this objective will not be easy. As members know, we are no longer competing in a local or even a national market. We now compete in a world market against the best the world has to offer. To do this, we must be able to draw on the broadest possible base, not just those children born into the best circumstance. We often make the case that to be competitive in a world environment, we must have a competitive tax base. Does it not follow that we should also nurture our most important human resource, our children, through whom our future is realized?

Earlier I stated that health, education, and social services are inextricably linked. As we will see, when we neglect this fact early on in a child's life, we often see the effects of that neglect throughout the whole of his or her life, often manifested in aggressive behaviour, low scholastic achievement levels, juvenile delinquency, drug and alcohol addiction, mental health problems, and possibly criminal activity.

We know that the primary societal foundation that nurtures the child, ensuring that the child has the best opportunity to grow into a contributing member of society, is the family. The vast majority of children in our province are born into families whose prime consideration is their children. But what of those children not so fortunate? What of the child born into a circumstance over which they have no control, perhaps born of parents with little control because they were born into a similar circumstance?

It is in our enlightened self-interest to work with these children to ensure that every child benefits from the best possible start in life. Intuitively we know that a person on the wrong side of the law, perhaps dependent on drugs or alcohol, will eventually find themselves in jail or perhaps in the welfare system, a burden to themselves and society. How do we break the chain? How do we break the cycle? Isn't it better to do what we need to do early and to try to ensure that every child has the chance to develop into a contributing member of society? More and more professionals in our health, education, and social services field understand this reality.

I recently met with one such professional, Mr. Gabe Mancini. Mr. Mancini is the principal of Mayfield school in Edmonton's west end. Mayfield school serves a diverse population, including some who benefit from an early intervention program known as Early Head Start. Mr. Mancini sent me the following letter. I'd like to share it with you, slightly shortened and slightly abridged.

Dear Mr. McClelland:

The systemic problem of poverty is inextricably related to the cultural issue of learned helplessness. Kids coming to school from middle income families have been exposed to over 1000 hours of print pages. They have higher and more sophisticated vocabulary levels in comparison to children coming from poor homes.

The interaction with parents of a middle income family, is [often] significantly more sophisticated. Parents provide a rationale for their decision as well as providing alternatives to behaviour – this is not a good idea, try this and let's see if it works. In contradistinction low income families [sometimes and typically] provide direction – [do this, without the rationale behind the decisions] . . .

When lower income students [from time to time] come to school, [not all but some] they have difficulties with following directions, poorer and impoverished vocabulary, and more aggressive behaviours. They also have lower expectations for themselves and so on. This "sets" them up for failure.

To avoid [this], they need a great deal of stimulation (being read to, higher level of vocabulary presented to them, problem solving strategies, encouragement) as well as appropriate behaviour management techniques.

He also included some demographic facts taken from a United States sample but applicable here. In 1950 fewer than 20 percent of children lived in dual-income or single-parent homes. In 1995 66 percent lived in dual-income or single-parent homes. This statistic would indicate that our education system is now doing far more parenting than was the case in the past. This statistic also indicates that there are far more children entering the education system with specific needs to be addressed before they are able to keep up with their enriched peers. Does it not make ethical and economic sense to do everything we can to ensure that children starting school do so with the strongest possible foundation? This means health and social service professionals and educators need to work together to identify at-risk children and families so that the remedial work begins at the earliest possible time.

Local early intervention programs such as Success by Six, ABC Head Start, Clareview Head Start, and Atonement Home Head Start, among others, have proven records of success. The May 2001 issue of the Journal of the American Medical Association reports that a 15-year study of the long-term effects of early childhood intervention in Chicago public schools indicates a clear link between early intervention in at-risk children and lowered high school dropout and juvenile crime rates. Now, we don't have to travel that far away. In November of 1993 the University of Alberta completed an extensive analysis of the Edmonton ABC Head Start program and had similar conclusions.

All this to say that we should consider education and our human potential long before school starts. We need to start thinking about what we can and should do to ensure that educators start with children ready to learn in their classrooms so that they can teach and not parent. We need to consider the harm done to society, families, and especially to children by FAS/FAE, fetal alcohol syndrome and fetal alcohol effect, and consider it the great public health problem that it is tragically, 100 percent preventable.

I want to conclude by reading into the record a letter given to me by Mrs. Joan McDonald of the Mayfield Head Start program. The letter was written by a mother thankful for the program that helped her family and fearful others may not be so fortunate.

To whom it may concern

I would like to take you through a journey. A journey in which I hope to open your eyes to how important you really are.

My story began just under three years ago. I had reached the beginning of my end. Being placed on bed rest for the last two-and-a-half months of my pregnancy with my son, scared me. I already took a bad turn, when my two-year-old daughter wasn't being heard, due to a later diagnosed speech disorder. If that wasn't . . . enough, she also began a violent spell, later found to be aggression due to the speech disorder.

My husband and I, knew we were in big trouble when even we couldn't understand our child. We began the trials of looking for help. Everywhere we turned, it seemed like a wall of rejection was thrown at us. Whether it be a lack of income or space, we had lost hope.

In trying to find help, we would go to see our Public health nurse. Then one day she had news of a new program. She went on to tell us how it was for low-income families, who need supports. Well, if any low-income family needed support, it was us. So, with no hesitation, I accepted to go to the Early Head Start program.

Held by denial about my child, I was extremely anxious. I thought I was the world's worst parent. Although, as the day arrived, to begin the program, we felt some form of relief. When we arrived we felt welcome, not so alone.

As the weeks went by, so many things became clear. My daughter had her speech looked at. Now we had a start. I began to realize that there was something I could do to help. When my daughter began smiling again, I knew we took the best first step we could have. With each step we took, we were closer towards our goals.

We had now found that my daughter had problems socializing with other children. Her speech problem was diagnosed as severe phonological delay. We also found that she had a chronic and organic behaviour disorder.

With the assistance of the staff of Early Head Start, we were geared to the necessary programs for my daughter. She was referred to a behaviour program, in which we saw drastic improvement. Then, my daughter was placed in a school, at the age of three and a half, for her speech. Once again, we saw extreme improvement. Her speech went from a severe delay to a mild delay in just five months.

Not only would I not have been able to get my daughter tested and receive a diagnosis, but I had no idea that her behaviour could be tested. I also had no idea about the programs that we had gotten into.

Now my daughter is five years old. My son is almost three. The pride they show every day is worth everything. My daughter is at the top of her kindergarten class, and my son has gotten over his anxieties.

In my heart, I know that my children's accomplishments are due to the help from people who wouldn't let me quit. These people are the staff at the Early Head Start program. Programs like this are so greatly relied on by both parents and their children for support. It would be a real shame if the families now and the families to come would have nowhere to turn.

I am hoping by sharing my story with you, maybe you could see just how important your contribution is. Through your funds, both of my children have good starts to promising futures.

If we lose our funding for this program, we will be losing a lot more than you could imagine. We would be losing hope for families just like mine, who would have nowhere to turn. All I ask is for you to continue contributing to our future by funding the Early Head Start program. Let another family take that first step to understanding.

Thank you.

Lisa Ferguson

Mr. Speaker, the experience Lisa shared with us highlights the importance of Head Start programs in our province. Just as the best first step that Lisa took was to enroll her child in an Early Head Start program, the best first step that we as a government can take is to ensure that every family like Lisa's has the same opportunities.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Are there any questions or comments with respect to the speech? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes. I couldn't agree more with the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford on the importance of early childhood, and I guess my question to him would be: as a member of the ruling party in the province why are your concerns not reflected in the Speech from the Throne?

MR. McCLELLAND: Well, as a matter of fact, they are, on page 10 in the second paragraph. My purpose in emphasizing it was to make the point in the House that this is extremely important not just to one side of the House or the other side of the House but to all members here and that this kind of priority is not forgotten on this side of the House.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: No further questions? We'll call for the resumption of the Speech from the Throne debate. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to be able to respond to the 2002 Speech from the Throne, which was delivered on the 26th of February. We're all here in this Chamber as elected representatives. I think my job as an elected representative is to seek the opinions and concerns and issues of constituents, and I do that in a number of different ways. I have a web site that they can consult. There's information on it and ways for them to give me feedback. Certainly I attend a lot of events in the community so that I'm easy to approach and I'm aware of what the community is doing. All of us, I'm sure, have phone calls and letters and e-mails that come in that are raising particular concerns or areas of interest and also meet and chat with people in the bank lineup or the grocery aisles. As well, I think some of us take additional measures of holding town hall meetings or public forums of some kind.

I was very interested and anticipated this throne speech and had a shopping list of issues that had been brought forward to me by my constituents, so I was looking very carefully and listening very carefully to the Speech from the Throne as to whether the issues that were raised by my constituents were going to be addressed in it.

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Hon. member, I just wanted to address the hon. ministers' debate back here. It's getting louder, so it's harder to hear the hon. member. It is her turn to speak, and she's the only one that's been recognized. So if you wish to carry on a lively debate, please do so outside in the chamber next.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was looking to see if those concerns that were raised would be reflected in the throne speech setting out the government's agenda for the 2002-2003 year. Some of the same issues came up, although based on the information I've collected from my constituents, not in the way they were looking for.

I'm going to go through some of those, sort of the top five, one of which was the Future Summit. I did hold a special town hall on that, so I got quite a bit of feedback. A second issue that's been raised a lot is teachers, education, postsecondary education. Third was housing, and that's including the issue of rent control and also the canceling of the private contractor housing subsidy program. Of course, health care is of enormous importance to the constituents of Edmonton-Centre, and along with that, concerns are increasingly being raised along long-term care. Finally is gaming.

When I looked at the Future Summit, it was interesting, because I couldn't find anything in the advertised government bills that was going to deal with anything coming out of the Future Summit or directly related to the Future Summit. I expected to see more around that or more coming out of this throne speech. I was a little surprised that there wasn't more of it, but perhaps the reasoning is that there's going to be a full-fledged report that will come out at some point in the future.

What I did was I held a town hall at my own expense. Although there was a direct request from the government for all MLAs to hold town halls, there was no assistance given. It was a choice that I had to make, whether I was going to hold a different kind of town hall on education or health care or whether in fact it would be on the Future Summit. I advertised it in my newsletter and on the web site. I sent posters out to the seniors' residences, the seniors' centres, the community leagues, churches, that sort of thing. I had a very, very good turnout, an excellent group of very thoughtful, committed people and, interestingly enough, a really great mix that was very representative of the people that live in the riding. I didn't know who was going to be there until I walked in that morning, but it was a very representative mix of the people that live in my riding.

I'll just run through some of the major points they raised when we looked at the issues that were thrown up into the air from the Future Summit. We actually had a facilitator. No matter how the question was put, through the facilitator or working off the workbook, the constituents refused to be limited to a strictly economic vision of the future of Alberta. They just would not go there. They kept pulling in a different direction to say: "No. You have to consider other things besides a strictly economic model." They were making the point that if individual Albertans are going to have confidence in their future, it will be essential to define and make a commitment to the fundamental social values that will make the province stronger, a very interesting point, and much of the rest of their discussion sprang from that principle.

The group that met was firm in recognizing families as a significant stabilizer for the community, both an economic stabilizer and also a social stabilizer. They were particularly interested in the definition of family. I do understand and it is referenced in the throne speech that we will have an opportunity to look at the family law statutes, hopefully through legislation this spring, and that we can look at incorporating some flexibility in how and what we understand families to be in this day and age. Of course, for constituents in my riding different models of family are very important, including models that would include same-sex families.

Another issue that constituents were questioning with the agenda that was being put forward with the Future Summit material was the compatibility of the principles of democracy and market forces. In some ways they were anticipating the cataclysm that's been caused by Enron and its relationship with their national government and that whole question of government promoting the advantages of a business community or a market community over that of its individual citizens.

This is very interesting, looking back at my notes as to how strongly they felt about that, and they felt it was not just for government to be promoting a business interest or a market interest. Economics and values cannot be considered exclusively. They expected government to be a leader, not a follower, and that government should be taking action to ensure that values are protected rather than only reacting once they're endangered. Good point. Again, that's a concept of prevention.

There was a concern raised about the current state of government monitoring and evaluation and enforcement in a number of areas: job safety, environment, and a number of other areas. This is interesting, because I think people didn't understand that when there was a downsizing or smaller government, a lot of the areas that go first that people don't notice for a long time are the monitoring, evaluation, and enforcement sectors. So when things started to go wrong, then people said: "Who was watching for this? The government should have been watching out for it." Well, maybe, but there was nobody left to watch because those jobs had all disappeared. They were the first group of jobs to go. That was an issue they raised repeatedly, and they felt that it was a job that government should be performing because really government was the only one that could perform it in an unbiased way.

Constituents felt that the public-sector and the public-service delivery of programs was still the best way to ensure maximum application of taxpayer dollars for services for Albertans. Okay. It's fair.

A lot of talk about prevention. My notes say: prevention, prevention; education, health care, social programs, et cetera. Therefore, it's with a great deal of concern that we look at things like the elimination of or cutbacks to children's preventative programs. We just had the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford make a passionate plea for restored funding into preventive services for children. Again, I think a penny of prevention is worth millions of dollars' worth of cure, and it's very shortsighted to cut those prevention programs.

My constituents were very clear that they didn't want tax refunds. When we started to look at the economy and that boom-and-bust economy from Alberta, they actually called the tax refunds bribes and were quite insulted. They also raised the point that business should shoulder their fair share of the tax burden. There were additional points raised about government spending a lot of time attracting businesses to Alberta only if the money is coming back to Alberta communities, which is interesting because what they were getting into was that they were troubled by nonresident ownership and the corresponding government policy, and they felt that Albertans were not the chief beneficiaries of our own resources. Good point. We should be. They're our resources; we should be gaining from them.

Moving on to another section, the section on teachers and education, postsecondary education. Out of all the phone calls and e-mails and letters that I have received around the concern for education, the teachers' strike, and those issues in the last six months, I have only had two that were not entirely supportive of the teachers and for a stronger, better supported public school system. Those two were against the teachers and in favour of the current government action. Everybody else supported the teachers and supported stabilizing education.

I had a very interesting experience a year ago when we were out door-knocking for the election. I have a lot of young teachers that live in my constituency, and some of them were very articulate and made it crystal clear to me. One young man said that he would not be the next generation of teacher martyrs, which is very strong language, but he meant it. He very clearly said: "Look. Other people value our degrees and our experience more than our own system does, and I will not pay my dues and put in the time. I'll take my degree and go somewhere else and make a heck of a lot more money." So we run the risk of having exactly the same situation down the road with teachers as we currently have with nurses, where we discouraged them all, we shooed them all away, and they left, and now we're having to spend enormous amounts of money to woo them back again. So he was very, very articulate about that.

There are strong connections with prevention programs in education, healthy lifestyles, and better futures for children, and I wasn't clear from the throne speech what exactly government would look to be changing. It doesn't seem to be indicating that those eliminated prevention programs for children were going to be restored. Are we looking at having hot lunch programs expanded into junior high schools or expanded into high schools? After all, what is the difference between the last day of grade 6 and the first day of grade 7? You don't get a hot lunch in grade 7. I'm not seeing anything that's indicating that that kind of understanding of the underpinnings of what youth need is forthcoming from the government. [interjection] Yeah. What is the real difference there? Is the family any better off now that the kid is older? No, the kid is just hungrier.

When we look at postsecondary education, again I've got a lot of students in the riding and their concerns about their carrying that intergenerational debt. We hear a lot of talk from the government about: we don't want to pass the debt on to the next generation. These people feel very strongly that they've already had the debt loaded onto their shoulders when they're walking out of university with $20,000-plus loans that they have to pay back. That didn't happen 10 years ago, five years ago, but under this government, with the changes and the increases in tuition, they are walking out of university with that kind of debt. That's what they're saying. So the intergenerational debt transfer is complete. It's already happened.

Housing and rent control and the private contractor housing subsidy program are huge issues for me. We've got a lot of private owners. [interjections] The rest of you can engage in this as soon as I've finished talking. A lot of people have brought up the issue of rent control. I've approached a number of different ministers about what they're anticipating and if they are looking to do anything to assist people who are looking at rent increases every three to four months, rents going from $600 to $900 for a one-bedroom. Thus far I haven't had any indication that there would be any consideration for that.

I think the last issue – and I know I'm out of time here – is health care and long-term care. These are closely tied to the housing issues. Constituent feedback has not been very keen on the Mazankowski report. They look for the future to be better, and what the Mazankowski report is saying is that the future is going to be worse. The report is not improving the system. It's not restructuring. It's just figuring out how to get Albertans to pay more.

I've run out of time. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Are there any questions to be offered with respect to this speech? The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

MR. SNELGROVE: Mr. Speaker, to the hon. member. You mentioned the government's support of Enron. If you could just give me some information as to what government supported Enron, at what time and in what country and to what degree. I'd be curious, and I'm sure the Senators south of the border would be curious too.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thanks very much. Well, if the member is really interested in it, I'm sure there's a good deal that's been written in the major American newsmagazines that are examining this. There's no question that there was promotion of Enron through the Bush administration, and it's not a problem for him to look that up. I'm sure he can do it.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmor.

REV. ABBOTT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Member for Edmonton-Centre in her response to the Speech from the Throne talked a lot about the future. Now, she was fairly broad and nonspecific. Most of her comments were negative. Our government, while planning prudently for the future, must also deal with the realities of today. So my question is: what part of Her Honour's speech does this member opposite support?

MS BLAKEMAN: Well, I would be supporting all of my speech. I don't know what else he could be referring to. [interjections] Oh, to the entire throne speech. Well, I think I spoke for 15 minutes. If the member was listening, it should be pretty clear to him what issues I support and where I have concerns.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: You have a second question, hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar?

REV. ABBOTT: Mr. Speaker, I listened very attentively for the last 15 minutes, and I did not hear any support, unlike her colleagues who were very supportive of Her Honour's speech and at least attempted to offer some solutions. I'm just wondering if the member opposite can outline anything that she supports, as many of her constituents have also done.

MS BLAKEMAN: I'm aware that the Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar asked a very similar question to my colleagues who spoke this afternoon, and truly it's not my role as a member of the opposition to be doing the work of the government.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: No further questions.

We'll proceed to the next member to enter into the debate. The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

MS DeLONG: I'd like to move that we adjourn debate for the night.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would move that we adjourn until 1:30 p.m. tomorrow.

[Motion carried; at 9:35 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Thursday at 1:30 p.m.]

Title: Thursday, February 28, 2002

1:30 p.m.

Date: 02/02/28

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

THE SPEAKER: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. O Lord, grant us a daily awareness of the precious gift of life which You have given us. As Members of this Legislative Assembly we dedicate our lives anew to the service of our province and our country. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Visitors

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

MR. GRAYDON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to the members a guest in your gallery from Grande Prairie. Mr. Wayne Jacques served in this House for two terms. He represented the Grande Prairie-Wapiti constituency. He represented that constituency with enthusiasm and, I've heard, at times with outrage. Mr. Jacques continues to serve the people in my part of Alberta as a board member of the Mistahia regional health authority, and I'm delighted to introduce him and have him join us here today.

Thank you.

head: Introduction of Guests

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

MR. HUTTON: Thank you. It is an honour for me today to rise to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly three outstanding members of the business community. They are Brian Ironside, Bruce Gordon, and Jim Taylor. Mr. Ironside is Manulife Financial vice-president of regional operations, and his territory covers the Yukon to Thunder Bay. Accompanying Mr. Ironside is Mr. Bruce Gordon, the executive vice-president of Canadian operations for Manulife Financial, a Canadian company worth $150 billion in assets, the number one insurance company in Canada. I've just left the Minister of Economic Development, and we were discussing the Alberta advantage with Mr. Ironside and Mr. Gordon. Accompanying these two gentlemen is Mr. Jim Taylor, former councillor of ward 4 and now the newly appointed executive director of the Downtown Businessmen Association. I would ask the three gentlemen to please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly, Mr. Speaker.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise with pride today to introduce to you and through you to all hon. Members of the Legislative Assembly my eldest brother. John MacDonald is visiting the city this afternoon on his way through to Kelowna to the Canadian Horticultural Council's annual meeting, which is going to occur in that city next week. John is a former president of that organization, and he's also a blueberry farmer in P.E.I. He is a father and a husband, and he's also a Montreal Canadiens fan, one of few in Prince Edward Island. I would ask him now to please rise and receive the warm and traditional welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you.

head: Oral Question Period

THE SPEAKER: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Education Spending

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the Premier said that spending on education has gone up by 40 percent in the past five years and that this figure takes into account increases in enrollment and inflation. Using the government's own numbers, it's clear that this statement is not accurate given the fact that real spending on education has gone up only 12 percent since 1995 and only 2 percent since 1992. My questions are to the Premier. When Alberta Learning's own numbers say that spending has gone down since this Premier's government took over, why does he continue telling Albertans that spending has gone up?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, the proof is in the budget, and if you will examine the budgets over the past five or six years, you will see that spending for education has gone up 40 percent. I'll have the hon. minister supplement.

DR. OBERG: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I do believe it is quite obvious, and I will go one step further and suggest to the hon. member that he look at the consulting report that Price Waterhouse did, which verified all of these figures. It does show, for example, that in 1995-96 the spending on basic education was $2.6 billion. It is now up to $3.7 billion, which obviously is in the 40 percent increase.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Why did the Premier say yesterday that the 40 percent increase in the expenditures included enrollment growth and inflation when it's only a monetary value?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I didn't say that at all. The hon. Minister of Learning said that. What he did say – and I'll have him elaborate once again. He did point out the increase relative to the student enrollment and relative, I believe, to the population increase in the province, and I'll have him reiterate those figures.

DR. OBERG: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What I said yesterday is that the enrollment increase was roughly 6 percent and the teachers' salary increase was roughly 17 percent over that time frame. I will reiterate once again that those are numbers that have been confirmed by an independent third party, so they are absolutely accurate. So it's gone up 41 percent in real spending. The enrollment has gone up roughly 6 percent, and the teachers' salaries have gone up roughly 17 percent over that time frame.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: why does the government insist on using 1995 spending figures as a reference point when everybody knows that in that year education wasn't properly funded and so you're starting from a base that is not sustainable?

MR. KLEIN: You know, Mr. Speaker, that comment is entirely subjective. We don't believe it was underfunded then; we don't believe it's underfunded today. As the minister pointed out, there has been a 41 percent increase in spending over the past five or six years.

THE SPEAKER: The minister.

DR. OBERG: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will just add a couple of things. One of the things we really have to remember is that that was a time when we made some major changes in education, and one of the ones that we always talked about is the number of school boards that were running at that time that actually had no schools. We had something like 160 school boards. We're now down to 64 school boards, so we decreased the amount of administrative dollars that were going out. We also put in administrative caps so that there were not as many administration dollars going out. More dollars were going into the classroom.

The other very important thing, Mr. Speaker, is that everyone tends to think that there was a 20 percent reduction in things like education. Well, education was 4.8 percent reduced.

THE SPEAKER: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: can the Premier tell us how much education spending has gone up as a percentage of all government spending since 1995?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I think that education spending accounts for about 25 or 26 percent of overall government expenditures. I would suggest that the increase in education spending is really commensurate with the growth patterns and the needs that have been identified within the school system, but I'll have the hon. minister elaborate.

DR. OBERG: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I don't have that right at my fingertips. However, I certainly will undertake to get that for him. As everyone here knows, the percentage spending on education has gone up dramatically. We've seen a lot of other departments that have had their budgets decrease, whereas education and health care have continued to increase. So we're very fortunate that that has occurred. I will, however, undertake to get those numbers to the hon. member.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: is your government demonstrating goodwill to teachers by presenting monetary figures instead of real value figures when you talk about the cost of education?

MR. KLEIN: Well, the question is: are we demonstrating goodwill to teachers? Well, yes, we are demonstrating goodwill to teachers. I believe it was a gesture of tremendous goodwill in last year's budget to put in as an unprecedented step a 6 percent guaranteed line item relative to salaries, unprecedented in this government, a lot better than zero, which is what the Liberals for some reason seem to think would have been appropriate. Nothing as opposed to 6 percent.

DR. OBERG: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will remind the hon. member that from November of 2000 to November of 2001 the inflation rate in Alberta was actually a negative number. It was under zero. There was a deflationary period. So I think that that has to be taken into consideration. This is over the same time frame when, as the Premier has indicated, we guaranteed a 6 percent increase to our teachers.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: was it showing goodwill to teachers when they were not informed that the money for the pension offer would actually come out of classroom funding?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I don't know that to be true. All I know is that something equivalent to 3 percent – well, actually, more than that because it's after-tax dollars – was put on the table relative to the unfunded portion of the teachers' pension fund, and that is now, unfortunately, off the table, the result of job action that has been taken by the union.

DR. OBERG: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Once again I'll reiterate the process that was involved there. Back in October of this year the president of the Alberta Teachers' Association and I met on the unfunded pension liability. At that time I said that we were open to discussions on anything to do with the unfunded pension liability. I did not hear anything back from the president of the ATA until around January, when I asked for a meeting with him. I subsequently formally put it on the table at that time. I felt – and maybe this was my mistake – that as a union leader it was his obligation to tell his clients, to tell his people about the offer. Obviously, the leader of the ATA chose not to. I believe it was to the true detriment of all the junior teachers, to every teacher in the system. I believe it was to their detriment. It is extremely unfortunate, but that is what happened.

THE SPEAKER: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Teachers' Labour Dispute

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In a confidential document I've received from Alberta Human Resources and Employment titled A Semi-annual Preview of Key Alberta Labour Negotiations, October 2001 to March 2002, in the education sector outlook there is this statement: "The government does not directly participate in education bargaining." My first question is to the Premier. Does the Premier agree with that statement?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, outside of the 6 percent line item in last year's budget relative to teachers' salaries, unprecedented, as I mentioned before, we do not become directly involved in bargaining with the teachers' union. That is left entirely up to the individual school jurisdictions.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Again, my second question to the Premier: how can the Premier say that there's no direct involvement with teachers' negotiations when the Deputy Minister of Learning in a recent e-mail instructs or tells school boards how to spend this money?

MR. KLEIN: Well, Mr. Speaker, I don't know that to be true or not, and I don't have the benefit of the document that obviously came to the hon. member in a brown envelope. Perhaps the hon. Minister of Learning knows more about it, but I sure don't. They don't leak a lot of information to me.

DR. OBERG: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I do believe that if the hon.

member would actually read the memo, what it states from my deputy minister is to be careful about using operating surpluses to pay teachers because the operating surpluses are onetime dollars – they're only there one time – and the teachers' salaries are a continuing expense.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My third question is to the Minister of Learning. Is running full-page newspaper ads interfering with local bargaining?

DR. OBERG: Well, Mr. Speaker, I guess you'll have to ask the ATA and the Canadian Teachers' Federation that because that's where the full-page ads were. We did run an ad. We ran a very factual ad, because at that particular moment in time there was a lot of misinformation that was being put out in the media.

DR. MASSEY: Interfering with bargaining.

DR. OBERG: I'm sorry, but it is not. Putting out the facts is not interfering in bargaining, Mr. Speaker. What we had done was we had confirmed all of the data that we were putting out, and it was confirmed by Price Waterhouse, which is, obviously, a very reputable firm. That was then made public, as our job as government is to make information public, real, factual information public to the citizens of Alberta, unlike the Canadian Teachers' Federation.

Speaker's Ruling Seeking Opinions

THE SPEAKER: The chair would like to apologize to the House. Obviously, there has been some movement of tongues in the last 30 or 40 seconds caused by the chair's decision not to rule out the third question from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, which sought to seek an opinion, which is against the rules. Now, the chair should have ruled the question out of order, and that would not have permitted the comments that did come unsolicited. We'll have to be a little more vigilant, then, perhaps in the future.

The hon. leader of the third party.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Learning has stated publicly that should the government lose its case on the back-to-work order tomorrow, he will introduce legislation to order teachers back. Moreover, the minister also seems to have a plan to unilaterally impose a contract settlement on teachers through legislation. The message the Minister of Learning is sending to teachers and all Albertans is pretty obvious; that is, if the court rules against the government tomorrow, the minister will just change the rules. My questions are to the Premier. Why doesn't the Premier tell this Minister of Learning to put a sock in it so he stops making inflammatory statements designed to provoke teachers thereby providing the government with the pretext to unilaterally impose a contract settlement through legislation?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, certainly a sock isn't required, because the minister is doing absolutely what he is required to do, and that is to speak to the welfare of the students – the students – the most important people in this particular dispute. It's the attitude of this government that students come first. The minister is saying that we will take every action necessary, legislative or otherwise, to make sure that the students' needs are met. That's what it's all about: the students.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Premier: as a way of rebuilding some trust with this province's teachers, would the Premier today in this Assembly make a firm commitment that the government will not unilaterally impose a contract settlement through legislation and instead abide by the arbitration process that is set out in the Labour Relations Code?

1:50

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I'll make absolutely no commitment one way or the other relative to legislation that may or may not be introduced in this Legislature. It could be – I'm not saying that it will be, but it could be – a matter for debate in the Legislature. Let's just wait and see what kind of legislation, if any, is tabled in this Legislature, and the hon. leader of the third party will have an opportunity along with every other member in this Legislative Assembly to debate the issue.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final supplementary to the Premier: when the Premier made a flat denial yesterday that the government is planning any punitive legislative action against teachers, was he not aware that the Minister of Learning is in fact working on a plan to unilaterally impose a contract settlement?

MR. KLEIN: You're absolutely right. The questioner is absolutely right, Mr. Speaker, in that no legislation, no regulations, no policy initiatives will be taken to bring about punitive action – punitive action – against the teachers. Understanding that, albeit inconvenient, teachers do have the right to strike in this province for the time being at least and perhaps forever. I don't know, because I don't know what kind of legislation, if any, is going to be tabled in this Legislature or whether that legislation, if it is indeed tabled, is going to be passed by this Legislature. But I will reiterate: nothing that this government contemplates in the future at any time is punitive relative to teachers. It's not the nature of this government to punish. We just don't do that.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

AES Calgary ULC Project

MR. CAO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that an electricity generation plant proposal by a company, AES, is outside my constituency but is within the distance of concern of some of my constituents living in the community of Erin Woods, my question is to the Minister of Municipal Affairs. Could the minister help explain to my constituents the approval process for such a project?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. BOUTILIER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Power plant approvals are a provincial interest and therefore must first go to the EUB for the process. I would like to say that the company would apply to the board, which would consider input from the municipality and other interested parties. After considering the input, the board may issue an approval, and in this case they did, and they may ask municipalities to amend their plans and bylaws if necessary. What I would like to state is simply this though: under the Municipal Government Act it stipulates that the decision of the EUB prevails over any local approval or a decision of the Municipal Government Board.

MR. SMITH: Mr. Speaker, if I could just take two seconds to supplement the minister's answer. That particular hearing for AES was a series of public hearings, public hearings at which all and sundry people from the member's area were invited to attend and did attend. People from the area of Chestermere were invited and did attend, and at the end, in fact, the people that were assembled there that evening gave the EUB a round of applause for the good job that they had done in holding those hearings.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. CAO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My only supplemental question is to the Minister of Municipal Affairs. Given that the Rocky View municipal council has voted rejecting the rezoning of the land for the power plant, what is the process available for the project owner and the citizens concerned?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. BOUTILIER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I mentioned earlier, certainly the EUB decision will prevail over a local municipality ruling, but I would like to also indicate that if an agreement can't be reached, an appeal can be lodged with the Municipal Government Board. However, the Municipal Government Act does require the municipality and the actual affected party to try to mediate the situation, which of course is another option in terms of mediation. So having said that, again it's a quasi-judicial board. Clearly, in terms of approval the Minister of Environment also has played a key role, and he may want to supplement my answer as well on the importance of the environment.

Standing Policy Committees

MS CARLSON: Mr. Speaker, standing policy committee members are paid significant fees with tax dollars over and above their usual salaries. That means that these committees should be open, transparent, and accountable to all Albertans, as it is in other jurisdictions, yet it is the policy of this government to restrict access to these meetings, limiting membership to Conservative MLAs, and often prohibiting access to taxpayers, media, and to opposition MLAs. My questions are to the Premier. How can the Premier justify a policy topping up committee members' salaries with taxpayer dollars when they use these committees as just another internal caucus review committee?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, SPCs are relatively new, since 1993 anyway, and they are government committees. They are standing policy committees that make recommendations to cabinet and therefore are government committees. The chairs of those committees, sitting on the front benches and in the seats across, can decide whether an item will be an open item on the agenda or will be an in-camera session. Ultimately, the decisions are made by the committee members, all of whom are government members, and those recommendations are carried via the committee chairmen or chairpersons to the cabinet table. So, clearly, it is the business of government, and I would remind the hon. member that she is not government. She is the opposition.

MS CARLSON: Mr. Speaker, I'll ask my question to the Premier one more time. How can the Premier justify a policy topping up committee members' salaries to the tune of more than $20,000 for the chairs with taxpayer dollars when they use these committees as just another internal caucus review committee, as he just stated?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I would say that the chairs of the committees are paid extra because they work very, very hard and work long, long hours not only to convene and to run the meetings but to do all the research that is required on the various subjects that come before them. I would advise the hon. member that the vice-chair of each committee is a member of the cabinet, and there's absolutely no extra pay for that. All the members of the committee are members of this caucus, both cabinet members and private members, and receive no extra pay whatsoever for serving on those committees.

MS CARLSON: Mr. Speaker, once again I'll ask the question because the Premier refuses to answer it. How can the Premier justify topping up committee salaries with taxpayer dollars when they could take it out of their own caucus budget rather than as an additional burden on the taxpayers of this province?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member does not or refuses to understand the structure. This is not a caucus committee. These are policy committees. These are committees of cabinet, and the chairs of those committees report directly to cabinet.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Grasshopper Infestation

MR. VANDERBURG: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to bring forward an agricultural issue, and I am an unpaid member that sits on the SPC on agriculture and municipal affairs. Last year farmers in my constituency had to deal with an infestation of grasshoppers due to severe drought conditions. With the dry winter and the expected drought farmers will be facing this year, grasshoppers are again posing a threat to our provincial crops. Tomorrow I'll be meeting with the Whitecourt-Ste. Anne agriculture advisory board, and I know this topic will be on the agenda. My question is to the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. Can you tell me what the potential is for another grasshopper outbreak?

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, there's no question that this was a huge concern in the agricultural community last year, and we had a widespread monitoring program working with municipalities, working with agricultural field men, agricultural service boards, and our own specialists. Unfortunately, the indications are that unless conditions change dramatically in the next short weeks, we will probably be faced with the worst outbreak we've had in 30 years. We came close to that last year. The area is expanding, and we would really like to see a very cold, wet spring to at least delay one of the hatches. Unfortunately, the ground was perfect for the laying of eggs and for them surviving over the winter, and the indications aren't very good for this spring.

MR. VANDERBURG: Mr. Speaker, again to the same minister: has your department identified areas of this province that will be hardest hit?

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, we do have an indication of what the areas are, and with your permission I'll quickly go over them. The areas are west and southwest of Edmonton. It is not common to have large outbreaks in this area: the county of Yellowhead, the county of Parkland, Lac Ste. Anne, the county of Athabasca, Wetaskiwin. That's in addition to the areas that have had problems: Barrhead, Westlock, Smoky Lake, Bonnyville, and then, of course, down the eastern border of Saskatchewan across the whole south of Alberta.

So, Mr. Speaker, you can see by those projections that this is widespread. Obviously, these are hungry, voracious little insects, and they will move where the food supply is, so we're monitoring it very closely this winter.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. VANDERBURG: Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Affordable Housing Agreement

MS BLAKEMAN: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Four provinces and territories have already negotiated affordable housing agreements with the federal government. Close to half the pot is gone while the government is only expecting to complete negotiations sometime this year. My first question is to the Minister of Seniors. Why has this government dragged its heels to the negotiation table and given other provinces the opportunity to scoop the funds?

MR. WOLOSHYN: Mr. Speaker, if ever there was an effort at misinformation, you've just heard it. I'd like to point out that as of last August, through the lead of Alberta in the meeting of the housing ministers in London, Ontario, the federal government went back to the drawing board and actually drew up in consultation with the provinces a plan that was made to fit each province, not a one size that doesn't fit anybody.

That process was finalized at the end of November. Unfortunately, I was unable to attend the meeting. Out of that, four provinces, one of which had a previous agreement, signed on. The commitment is there for the Alberta government to receive some 67 million dollars over the next five years. The process of negotiation involved is quite lengthy in that we want to ensure that the money we receive is targeted to the areas that are most in need, whether it be geographic or social.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister confirm, please, that the $67 million figure that he's referring to would be the province's share of that federal money, or is the province responsible for putting in half of that $67 million?

MR. WOLOSHYN: The $67 million is the amount of federal money that would be directed to Alberta over the next five years.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much for that information.

My last question is back to the same minister. Given that there is a retroactive clause in the new agreement, will the minister confirm if the funding for affordable housing is new money or if it's funding that he's already announced for other previous programs?

MR. WOLOSHYN: Mr. Speaker, I'm not going to go into the details of the agreement that we are currently negotiating. All I'm going to say is that the agreement will be the best one that we can possibly get to ensure that we continually improve the housing situation of all Albertans, social housing, the homeless, and I would say that we've done an excellent job there, since we are being used as a plan for the rest of the country. Our community plans are being used as a basis for the homeless funding. When the time comes, when the agreement is finalized, it will be made public so that all Albertans can know what's contained therein.

G-8 Summit

MRS. JABLONSKI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The 2002 G-8 summit is approaching fast. Ever since Albertans first learned that the summit would be held in Kananaskis, there have been many concerns raised by Albertans about potential violence and destruction by demonstrators. My question is for the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations. What preparations and precautions will be in place to ensure the safety of the environment and those attending the summit?

MR. JONSON: First of all, Mr. Speaker, it's important to emphasize that the summit is a federal government responsibility. However, this is a very important event for this province, for its residents, and for people that will be visiting as heads of state and also in various other capacities. A number of Alberta government ministries are very much involved in the planning process to make sure our priorities as a province are going to be met.

I'm not, as I think can be appreciated, in a position to discuss specific security matters, but I can tell you that very strong linkages are established between various groups involved in the security of the summit, including the G-8 summit management office, the RCMP, the Calgary Police Service, and other security officials.

It's also, I think, very important to emphasize, Mr. Speaker, that there is very extensive contact being arranged with the local governments in the area and the citizens in the area that is impacted by this particular major event. Every effort is being made to put the planning in place in an effective way so that the summit participants are safe, so that there is as little disruption as possible in the ordinary business and activity of Albertans in the area, and also very important of course are the environmental considerations that have to be given to this event and its possible impact. Everything is being done to mitigate any damage there.

Also very important and, I think, showing the balance that is being worked on here: there is work being done to make sure that peaceful protest is provided for in a constructive way. We know that this is a major international event. We want it to be successful, I think, on behalf of the people of the province and the participants, and we're doing everything we can to work towards that result.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MRS. JABLONSKI: Thank you. My second question is for the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. Given the dryness and forest fire dangers that Kananaskis experienced last year, what steps will be taken to protect the area from forest fires during the summit?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. CARDINAL: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. That's a very important question at this time because of the drought and low water levels out there and general dryness in the past five years in Alberta. But Alberta does have a very, very, excellent fire prevention program that we already, in fact, will be implementing tomorrow. On March 1 we will implement the fire prevention program. In fact, any individual that wants to start a fire will have to have a permit, and we've also encouraged the municipalities to try and consider permitting their applications for burning.

In relation to the G-8 summit itself, Mr. Speaker, we will be handling the fire suppression, fire prevention program the same as we did in the past. We will have the appropriate manpower available. We will have the appropriate equipment available. In fact, you know, when you look at last year's budget, it was over $170 million. In the last five years, because of the dryness, we spent an average of $150 million per year. We will continue doing that.

In relation to the specific question, we will continue monitoring the situation closely and take the necessary action that's required to make sure that the people are safe that are there.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MRS. JABLONSKI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My third question is for the Minister of Community Development. How long will Kananaskis be closed to campers, kayakers, hikers, and ordinary Albertans during the summit?

2:10

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Mr. Speaker, the area in Kananaskis Country where the summit is occurring is actually the Evan-Thomas recreation area, and certainly that will be closed to the general public. That will include the golf course, three hotels, the RV site, and, I suspect, the ski hill area as well. But they will only be closed for about a week leading into the summit, and as soon as possible after the summit is over and concluded, then they will immediately be reopened.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

PDD Boards

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last September this government came to an agreement with employees working in the PDD system that placed government employees at up to a 49 percent higher salary than community staff in the same jobs. In the past when this government settled with PDD workers, it provided PDD boards with the funds to cover the settlement. However, this year no additional funds were received, and the boards have had to struggle with these increases themselves. My questions are to the hon. minister responsible for PDD boards. Why has your government put PDD boards in an impossible bind by settling with workers and then not providing the dollars to support those settlements? Why are you downloading responsibility onto your boards?

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Well, Mr. Speaker, we're not downloading anything unreasonable here. What I would say to the hon. member is that we have asked for some co-operation during some very difficult times that were precipitated largely by the tragic events of September 11 last year, over which we had no control.

What I would like to remind the hon. questioner about is this. In the current budget we provided an increase of 9 percent to the PDD system, which is one of the largest increases to any government department. We worked very hard to try and affix some of those dollars toward the wage disparity between the community agency workers and the government workers working in some of our institutional care centres and so on. So with the 1 percent reduction there still remains an 8 percent increase overall.

Now, specific to the issue of the wage disparity, that is an issue that I'm abundantly aware of because I did make that recommendation in the Building Better Bridges report, which most members here will remember. We did provide about $23.4 million or thereabouts in additional moneys specifically for narrowing that gap. Those moneys went out to the community agencies, and to the best of my knowledge they were passed on to the workers. There will be a need to readdress this issue, and I will do that later.

DR. TAFT: Given that you've conceded there's a need to address the issue, then let's go back and ask: why have you reneged on your commitment initially in Building Better Bridges to "undertake the necessary steps to narrow the gap that exists . . . between agency/service-provider staff wages and government-employee staff wages"?

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Well, Mr. Speaker, there was no reneging at all. When I first authored the report and that particular recommendation, there was up to a 40 percent difference between what community agency workers were receiving and what government-employed workers were receiving. Through the increases that I just explained, which I believe started in the fall of 2000, we narrowed that gap from 40 percent down to 25 percent. So it was a recognition of the good and hard efforts that our community agency PDD workers provide, as do the government workers. However, given the recent settlements of 5 and 4 through the AUPE channel, that gap has grown a bit, and I will be looking at how to best address that, as I've already indicated.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Then is the minister committing to providing adequate funding to the PDD boards to not only cover increases in government employee wages but also to narrow the gap between government employees and service-provider staff? Is that a commitment?

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Well, Mr. Speaker, the government-employed individuals in the PDD system will be receiving obligatorily the 5 percent and the 4 percent. The other piece, which is the community agency workers, is what we're working on right now. There will be a new budget tabled, and the hon. member will have to just be patient, as will all members, to see what that budget contains.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, followed by the hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Health Care Premiums

MR. MASON: Thank you very much. Yesterday the Premier tied himself in knots trying to justify health care premium increases while posing as a tax cutter. A duck is a duck is a duck, Mr. Speaker. To the Premier: if an increase in health care premiums is not a tax increase, can he assure Alberta's taxpayers that they won't have to pay such an increase?

MR. KLEIN: No. I can't give that assurance at all, but I can give the assurance that a health care premium is a health care premium is a health care premium. So if it looks like a premium and it acts like a premium and does what a premium is supposed to do, it must be a premium.

MR. MASON: Does the Premier agree that tax increases and health care premium increases both come out of the same pocket of the taxpayer?

MR. KLEIN: Of course it all comes out of the same pocket. I mean, it reminds me of a former member of this Legislature, long since deceased, who said: there's only one taxpayer, you and me. Mr. Speaker, certainly it all comes out of the same pocket. But the simple fact is that there is a difference between a tax and a premium. First of all, with premiums you can be selective as to whom the premiums apply, as we have been selective in this government by shielding those who cannot afford to pay premiums from paying premiums, by shielding seniors and other people in unfortunate circumstances.

Another factor relative to premiums, Mr. Speaker. Unlike a payroll tax, unlike a tax, it clearly points out that there is a cost associated with health care, and one of the fundamental problems as it relates to the sustainability of health care is the perception by some that health care is somehow free . . .

MR. MAR: It's 18 million bucks a day.

MR. KLEIN: . . . when in fact it costs, as the minister points out, $18 million a day. I would point out that premiums only cover 11 percent of insured services, but at least it demonstrates that there is a cost associated with the delivery and the maintenance of health care.

MR. MASON: Mr. Speaker, the Premier in response seems to be having difficulty telling the difference between a tax and a premium. Once again to the Premier: why is he having so much trouble explaining the difference between a tax and a premium?

MR. KLEIN: I am not having any difficulty whatsoever explaining the difference between a tax and a premium. The problem we have in this Legislative Assembly, Mr. Speaker, is the hon. member, who has a very serious problem in understanding what I'm saying.

Speaker's Ruling Exhibits

THE SPEAKER: Exhibits are not normally the case for decorum in the Assembly. I would invite the hon. member to attend the Speaker's suite this afternoon. There is a beautiful bathtub there. He can take his two rubber duckies and play as he wants to.

The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Bighorn Wildlife Recreation Area

MR. OUELLETTE: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've been getting an abundance of letters on the Bighorn country. I've also attended a few public meetings held on access to the Bighorn area. What I'm hearing from the majority is that they are concerned that the use of mechanized vehicles, as in off-road vehicles, quads, snowmobiles, et cetera, would be banned in the area. So the question is to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. Are there any plans to ban off-highway vehicles or snowmobiles from the Bighorn recreation area?

MR. CARDINAL: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. A similar question came up in the House yesterday, but I'll try and expand on my answer to try and clear up the issue for the member and Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, the Bighorn backcountry is about a 4,000 square kilometre area in southwest-central Alberta. Eighty percent of the area is presently zoned as a prime protection and critical wildlife zone. In fact, there is so much interest in the area that it was recommended to be designated under the special places program. The committee that reviewed it, in fact, at the time – this is very, very important – recommended that it should not be designated in the special places program, that a committee would be set up, and the committee then would develop some form of an access plan for all the interested users in the area. Since then we've set up a committee of 15 members, also involving six different departments, to ensure that as we move forward with this plan, it deals with all interested users including the recreation users you mentioned, the environmentalists, wildlife interests, et cetera.

MR. OUELLETTE: My second question to you. I'm not fully understanding what direction your department is going, and I really just have a simple question: are they in or out?

MR. CARDINAL: Mr. Speaker, the recommendation – and I've said this all along. There is enough land in that area. There is enough interest by various interest groups to utilize the area. What I've suggested is that the end result will be a balance between environmental management and other users, including industrial development.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. OUELLETTE: That's fine. Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry, followed by the hon. Member for St. Albert.

Heritage Savings Trust Fund

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My first question is to the Minister of Revenue. Yesterday you appeared at odds with the Minister of Finance over whether or not the heritage fund should be liquidated to pay off the remaining debt. Is it the position of the minister to use the heritage fund to pay off the debt early even though it has been noted that it would be costly to do so?

MR. MELCHIN: We continue to look at the mandate of the Alberta heritage savings trust fund as to how we maximize its value and its potential for savings for Albertans in the future. When we talked about that review, it was not a discussion about how to spend it or how to chop it up or how to get rid of it. It was always about how you ensure that it's there for the intended purposes for which it ought to be there for the future.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. BONNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My next question is to the Minister of Finance. Is it the position of the minister to liquidate the heritage fund to pay off the remaining debt by the centennial in 2005?

MRS. NELSON: Well, Mr. Speaker, we've laid out a fiscal plan for this House. We've debated it here. Those kinds of debates have to take place in this Legislature in the longer term, and they haven't come to the floor of this House.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. BONNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: can this minister assure Albertans that their prized nest egg and the legacy of Peter Lougheed will not be blown on a burn-the-mortgage party in 2005 as a legacy of the current Premier?

MRS. NELSON: Well, Mr. Speaker, the nonsense that comes out of this hon. member is unbelievable. It's been demonstrated all day again.

Quite frankly, the heritage trust fund has been extremely beneficial to the financial stability of this province. It has not only been the financial backing of the province during the good times but in the very difficult times that we experienced from the mid-1980s through the mid-1990s. It has also been a vehicle that has provided a stream of revenue to the general revenue fund that has helped us ward off some of the costs as we were rapidly paying off our debt to get us into a better fiscal position. So to thwart or be loose about the future of the heritage trust fund I think is irresponsible and unfitting because that fund is reviewed by an all-party select committee of this legislature that makes recommendations as to the future of the fund. I used to be a member of it myself, Mr. Speaker, as I'm sure most members in this Legislature have at one point or another. The long-term plans of the fund are to be reviewed on an ongoing basis, as is the case with any of the funds that come before this Legislature, but there is an all-party committee that does just that and brings recommendations forward on an annual basis.

The Minister of Revenue is also responsible to make sure that the fund performs well, and quite frankly it has done extremely well. I am very pleased with the performance of this fund, particularly in a year when we have seen some very difficult economic market conditions. This fund has performed very well for Albertans.

So the hon. member in my view, Mr. Speaker, is out of line, he's frivolous, and he's out of tune.

head: Members' Statements

THE SPEAKER: Three hon. members today will participate in Members' Statements, but prior to arriving at that very important juncture in the Routine, let me just advise all hon. members that today is the 43rd anniversary of the birth of the Minister of Municipal Affairs.

The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Viking Cup

MR. JOHNSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. History is full of examples of where sport and cultural exchanges have nurtured understanding and goodwill between people of different national backgrounds and political persuasions. This has been demonstrated over the last few weeks as the world has been focused on the pinnacle of sport and intercultural activity, the Olympics. Here in Alberta in my constituency a youth sporting and cultural event, the Viking Cup, has been taking place biennially for the past 22 years with long-lasting benefits.

This tournament began as an idea generated on a wobbly train carrying the Augustana University College Viking team from Leningrad to Helsinki as part of a hockey tour in 1979. This led to the first Viking Cup international tournament with teams from Finland, Sweden, and Canada in Camrose in 1980. The event is sponsored by Augustana University College in partnership with the Camrose and Wetaskiwin communities and involves over 400 dedicated volunteer workers and approximately 100 billeting families.

The 10-team tournament is known worldwide for its quality; 233 Viking Cup players have been drafted by the National Hockey League with approximately 50 players currently playing in the National Hockey League. Twenty-four players of the Viking Cup played in the Salt Lake Olympics.

The Viking Cup has been won by national junior teams from Finland twice, Czechoslovakia with Dominic Hasek in 1982, Russia, U.S.A., as well as Canadian teams from NAIT twice, University of Alberta, McGill University, University of New Brunswick, Saskatchewan junior all-stars, and finally in January at Viking Cup 2002 the Augustana Vikings became the Viking Cup champions for the very first time. The Viking Cup has produced many winners and champions, but more important it has generated a spirit of friendship, understanding, and goodwill amongst its numerous participants.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Provincial Fiscal Policies

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We live in the most prosperous province in Canada, but this government continues to mismanage our financial resources at an alarming rate. Only two years ago we had an over $5 billion surplus, but a large percentage of it was blown on pre-election spending. While a few benefited by the government's wild spree, a whole segment of society was ignored and still suffers from the government's neglect today.

Alberta's programs and benefits for things like assured income for the severely handicapped and supports for independence are paid lip service by the government but little else. The Minister of Human Resources and Employment appointed a low-income review, but where is it? Every week calls come into my office and to my colleagues', but still there is nothing to be heard on this review. The government knows what it really needed to do is allocate more resources, yet they won't give this review priority over something like horse racing or gambling. So with inflation and the cost of living and as utility rates go up, benefits for the most vulnerable in our society stay the same, and with that, they fall further behind in the most prosperous province in Canada.

What are our priorities? Where is all the money going? Why can't those who need it the most to afford to live in our ever increasingly expensive cities get some needed help from the government?

In fact, the money is going the other way. As the third-quarter update shows, $34 million allocated for programs like SFI was not spent and therefore goes back to the government to help balance its budget and increase its surplus. The year before, about $13 million went unexpended in programs. How much could the benefits offered in these programs have been increased with that money, Mr. Speaker?

Only a decade ago we were hearing the same rhetoric we hear now about tightening our belts, making cuts, and raising taxes. One thing that has not changed in the last 10 years is this government's inability to budget.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

Jennifer Heil and Don Bartlett

MR. HORNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure today to rise and give praise to two extraordinary world-class athletes from Spruce Grove who showed their stuff at the Olympics and came out on top.

Jennifer Heil is a vivacious young downhill skier who caught the world's eye over the past year, blowing through the competition in several World Cup events, and is currently ranked ninth in World Cup moguls. She represented Canada beautifully in the freestyle skiing in Salt Lake over the past few weeks where she narrowly – and I mean narrowly – missed a bronze medal by a fraction of a point. All of Alberta was watching in awe as we saw our amazing athlete post jumps with higher degrees of difficulty than any other skier in the competition. We're all very proud of Jennifer and can't wait for the snow to fly in the years to come to watch this young lady take skiing to new heights.

I would also like to say congratulations to the lead of Kevin Martin's curling team, Don Bartlett, who, as I have been told, bound the team together as only one of the best leads in the country can do. Don and Kevin Martin work like a fluid machine out on the ice. We all thoroughly enjoyed watching some intense games. Don has worked with Kevin since 1989, and their ability to curl so well together certainly shows. We're excited about the silver medal Don and the curling team was able to play a key part in obtaining for Canada in men's curling.

Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert extends a huge congratulations to both Olympians as they made us so proud that they were representing us and Canada in Salt Lake.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Notices of Motions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I give notice that immediately after the daily Routine I will move as follows: "Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly affirm the importance of open access to reading material by recognizing February 24 to March 2, 2002, as Freedom to Read Week."

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: I believe the hon. member would want to do that under a Standing Order 40 provision. Is this correct?

MS BLAKEMAN: Yes. Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Normally at this time I'd be moving a motion that written questions and motions for returns stand and retain their places, but there are none on the Order Paper. I thought I'd better make that mention in any event so that the House was aware of the need for that.

head: Introduction of BillsBill 202*Environmental Protection and Enhancement
(Clean-up Instructions) Amendment Act, 2002

MRS. JABLONSKI: Mr. Speaker, I request leave to introduce a bill being Environmental Protection and Enhancement (Clean-up Instructions) Amendment Act, 2002.

[Motion carried; Bill 202 read a first time]

Bill 203
Gas Flaring Elimination Act

MR. MASON: Mr. Speaker, I request leave to introduce Bill 203, the Gas Flaring Elimination Act.

[Motion carried; Bill 203 read a first time]

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

THE CLERK: Pursuant to Standing Order 37.1(2) I wish to advise the House that the following document was tabled with the Office of the Clerk: Alberta heritage savings trust fund third-quarter update, 2001-2002 quarterly report.

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, for the interest of particularly the rural members of the House but I know all, I would like to table some very good maps that show the grasshopper infestation forecast for the prairie regions.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table two articles in response to a question yesterday from the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster, who was surprised to hear of Enron's involvement with the U.S. government. The first article is entitled Enron for Dummies, and the second is an in-depth research article on exactly that topic.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise with two tablings today. First of all, I'd like to table a set of letters expressing concerns over education funding and classroom size written, one, by Greg Balanko-Dickson, another by Dianne Gazdewich, another by R. Moore and the Moore family, and the fourth by Jeff Goth.

I would also like to table an extraordinary document called Making Medicare Better, a discussion paper by the Alberta Liberal caucus on how to improve Alberta's health care system.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My tablings today with the appropriate number of copies are letters from Albertans, five who are in support of teachers in the current negotiations. They are David Sloan . . . [interjection] Don't worry. I've got hundreds more coming. We'll just bring in a few a day.

They are David Sloan, Pat Eeckel, Norman Blais, Corinne Whelan. Lorie Welk and Lyle Weis, a businessman from Medicine Hat, are both concerned about how the government has handled the teachers' strike.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With your permission I have a number of tablings today. The first one is a bookmark put out by the Alberta Teachers' Association: "Public education benefits everyone . . . By accepting students from all backgrounds, public education prepares children to participate in a democratic society."

The second tabling, Mr. Speaker, is a handout I got when the Edmonton Catholic teachers picketed my office to support Edmonton public teachers, and it listed the conditions as to why there was job action taken by teachers.

The third tabling is titled Why Not Become a Teacher? It goes on to state that “there is a critical shortage of Chemistry, Physics & Mathematics teachers in North America and around the world.”

My last tabling, Mr. Speaker, is a notice about a public forum to discuss the teachers’ strike which was held on Friday, February 15, at the University of Alberta. It lists representatives from the ATA, parent groups, the Public School Boards’ Association, a Liberal MLA, an ND MLA. Unfortunately, no members of the Tory caucus would show up for this.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I’m pleased to table on behalf of the Minister of Community Development, responsible for provincial libraries, five copies of an excerpt from the Library Association of Alberta’s February 2002 magazine which elaborates on activities and purposes related to Freedom to Read Week, which is being celebrated this week throughout our province.

Also on behalf of the Minister of Community Development I’m pleased to table his congratulatory letter to the Library Association of Alberta acknowledging their good efforts in this regard.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

MRS. TARCHUK: Thank you. As chair of the Standing Committee on Legislative Offices I would like to table five copies of the financial addendum to the report of the Chief Electoral Officer, 2000 provincial confirmation process, and the Monday, March 12, 2001, provincial general election of the 25th Legislative Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings this afternoon. The first one is a letter dated February 13, 2002, from myself to the Minister of Energy, and it is in regards to questions about the composition of the 11-member EUB Advisory Committee.

My second tabling this afternoon is a letter that I received at the constituency office from the King Edward Child Care Society. The King Edward Child Care Society is very concerned about the elimination of the $15.6 million day care operation allowance by this government.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

2:40

head: Projected Government Business

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Opposition House Leader.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would ask that the government now share the projected government business for next week with us.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Obviously, there’s some tentativeness to the agenda for next week given that we’re in the first week of the session, but Monday afternoon, of course, under the revised Standing Orders would be private members’ business for the most part. At 9 p.m., depending on the pleasure of the Legislature this afternoon, we will possibly be dealing in Committee of Supply with supplementary estimates and then may request unanimous consent to revert to Introduction of Bills to introduce Bill 8, Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2002; failing that, as per the Order Paper.

Tuesday, March 5, in the afternoon under Government Bills and Orders for second reading bills 1, 4, 2, 3, 5, 8, and as per the Order Paper. Tuesday, March 5, at 8 in the evening under Government Bills and Orders address in reply to the Speech from the Throne and second readings on Bill 8 and Bill 1 and thereafter as per the Order Paper.

Wednesday, March 6, in the afternoon second reading of bills 7, 9, 10, 11, and as per the Order Paper. At 8 p.m. under Government Bills and Orders address in reply to the Speech from the Throne, Committee of the Whole on bills 8 and 1, and second readings as per the Order Paper.

Thursday afternoon under Government Bills and Orders third reading of Bill 8, second reading of any that remain on the Order Paper, and address in reply to the Speech from the Throne.

head: Motions under Standing Order 40

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre on a Standing Order 40 application.

Freedom to Read Week

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly affirm the importance of open access to reading material by recognizing February 24 to March 2, 2002, as Freedom to Read Week.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I had given the notice of motion earlier and had read the motion into the record.

Now, this is the 18th annual Freedom to Read Week. The members of the Book & Periodical Council Freedom of Expression Committee reaffirmed their support for intellectual freedom guaranteed by the Charter of Rights and Freedoms and acknowledged the ongoing commitment of Canadian writers, publishers, librarians, educators, and booksellers to support intellectual freedom and to be vigilant.

Mr. Speaker, books and magazines are banned regularly at the border.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. member, please, just explain the urgency of it. We’ll decide whether or not we go on to the debate.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you for your wise counsel.

There are three points that I’d like to make on pressing or urgent necessity. The first is that this is the week that has been designated in Canada as Freedom to Read Week. We were not able to bring up this Standing Order 40 motion prior to today with the throne speech and other business that’s been scheduled. This has been the first opportunity to do it, and if we don’t do it today, the week passes from us.

Secondly, usually the Ministry of Community Development would have given some sort of information bulletin on the importance of this particular week. I have checked the government web sites, and there has been no information bulletin that has come out. Therefore, there’s been no information disseminated by this government either on the content or the importance of Freedom to Read Week.

Thirdly, we still have problems about access to reading material here in Alberta. In one e-mail that I had, they were talking about an incident where a vandal mutilated books from a gay and lesbian section at a Chapters bookstore and then moved them to another section of the bookstore so that people couldn’t get at them and read them. Chapters thankfully reacted by putting them on display, but we still have issues every day, often quietly, where books are removed from libraries and bookshelves in Alberta, and the importance of that issue needs to be addressed.

So I think these are compelling reasons, Mr. Speaker, and with respect I think we need to show our leadership, as we are all elected leaders in this Assembly and it's not a matter of one member giving a private member's statement. I think it's important that we join together and that each of us in this Assembly signals our support and affirmation for Freedom to Read Week.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, under a Standing Order 40 application the proposer of the motion is afforded the opportunity to put arguments forward with respect to urgency. The decision to proceed is a decision of the Assembly, and it requires unanimous consent of all members of the Assembly to proceed.

[Unanimous consent denied]

THE SPEAKER: Hon. Government House Leader, a point of order?

Point of Order
Standing Order 40 Motions

MR. HANCOCK: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Under the Standing Order which provides that in the absence of a rule you have the right to make a ruling, I would like to raise a point of order on the last Standing Order 40. Bringing up a Standing Order 40 does not allow for a discussion of reasons as to why one might give unanimous consent or not give unanimous consent, and therefore the only opportunity that I have to deal with it is under this particular section.

I would not at any time suggest that a member does not have the right to bring up a Standing Order 40 under the rules. However, the bringing in of Recognitions into our Standing Orders started, as you might recall, through a House leaders' agreement which was an effort to make sure that private members in the House had an opportunity to recognize events and people that were important to our community. The clear understanding at the time was that we were bringing in Recognitions as a way of avoiding the need for the House to deal with these sorts of recognitions, which are very, very important to all Albertans but to do it without the need of an emergency debate and without detracting from Standing Order 40 and Standing Order 30, which allow for debates of issues of an emergency or an urgent matter. Therefore, it should not be taken by a negative vote in this House on a Standing Order 40 that anyone is denying the importance of the issue which has been raised but, rather, that Recognitions themselves were brought into the House under a House leaders' agreement, and they're now embedded in our Standing Orders for precisely this purpose.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie on this point of order.

MS CARLSON: Absolutely. There is no point of order, Mr. Speaker. The Government House Leader was simply looking for an avenue to bring forward his argument in terms of why this Standing Order 40 shouldn't have gone forward. In fact, my colleague from Edmonton-Centre made a very good argument on the pressing nature of this particular issue. This government had all week to bring forward this issue, and they have not. We have not seen it come forward in any other venue. Therefore, this is the last opportunity of the sitting of this week to bring forward what is, in fact, an urgent and pressing matter for all of us and is a matter that has not ever been given unanimous consent in this Legislature, certainly in the time that I have been here, which is now nine years.

MR. MASON: Mr. Speaker, I would observe that an apology is not a point of order.

THE SPEAKER: Well, hon. members, there's some validity to the argument put forward by the hon. Government House Leader about the historical development of Recognitions and Members' Statements, but that does not preclude an hon. member from coming forward with a suggestion that he or she may have with respect to a Standing Order 40.

The chair would like to point out again, though, that the following is also true, and this is the 28th day of February. February is and was Black History Month. February is and was Heart Month. February is and was Potato Month. On behalf of all Members of the Legislative Assembly the chair will provide recognition for those three very important events in the month of February.

The chair would also like to point out that the year 2002 is the International Year of Mountains and the year 2002 is also the International Year of Ecotourism.

When we arrive in March, the chair will provide members with an update of what March is all about.

[Government Motion 7 carried]

head: Consideration of Her Honour
the Lieutenant Governor's Speech

Mr. Horner moved that an humble address be presented to Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor as follows.

To Her Honour the Honourable Lois E. Hole, CM, Lieutenant Governor of the province of Alberta:

We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Assembly, now assembled, beg leave to thank you, Your Honour, for the gracious speech Your Honour has been pleased to address to us at the opening of the present session.

[Adjourned debate February 27: Ms DeLong]

MS DeLONG: Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure today to reply to the Speech from the Throne delivered by Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor. The Speech from the Throne, like no other event, sets the tone for the goals and the obligations of this Legislature and the government of Alberta. I am very proud to know that we are continuing to face the future bravely and that we are constantly moving forward. Some of the themes that Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor addressed are of extreme importance to my constituents and also bring a sense of the great challenges and opportunities that the next year will bring to Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, I know that the mandate of this government remains the same: stay the course of fiscal responsibility while maintaining excellence in programs and services that are most important to Albertans. It can sometimes be a tall order, and there will always be naysayers, but this government has consistently delivered a focused, reasoned, and progressive approach to achieving the directives of the people. We will continue to do this with the vigour and innovation that has become the hallmark of this government and all Albertans.

As noted in the Speech from the Throne, what Albertans can be very proud of is a booming economy in spite of tumbling financial markets across the globe. While other economies are speaking of job cuts and recession, Alberta has posted a growth rate of 4 and a half percent through 2001 with no fewer than 45,000 new jobs created over the year. Albertans are confident in their economy because they have confidence in this government that facilitates economic growth through the lowest tax levels in the country for individuals and businesses. We have won the trust of Albertans as the stewards of their tax dollars towards the goal of sound fiscal management, and it is seen in consumer confidence that only serves to drive the economy even further.

Although estimates for 2002 are more conservative in terms of job creation and economic growth, I have no doubt that Alberta will once again surpass expectations. Just a few weeks ago several Alberta cities were cited in a KPMG study for having the lowest cost of doing business in the world. This combined with some of the best trained and most highly motivated, ambitious workers adds up to an Alberta advantage that will continue to attract greater and more diversified investment into the Alberta economy.

Because Alberta has been a world leader in the sound management of its finances over the past decade, we are in a far better position at this time of economic downturn. Some economists have said that Alberta was lucky to have paid down its debt during times of steady revenues and low interest rates. This had, of course, absolutely nothing to do with luck. It had much more to do with the willingness of Albertans to sacrifice over the short term for the sake of their children and their children's children, a sacrifice that is showing real benefits to Albertans already.

Now at a time of extraordinary market uncertainty in the shadow of the tech bubble bursting, the terrorist attacks of September 11, and the corruption scandal of Enron, Alberta's prospects are bright. My constituents recognize the importance of strong fiscal leadership and the preservation of the good things we have built here in Alberta. Investors across the globe are scrambling to find safe, secure investments, and at the top of the list with a triple A credit rating is Alberta.

Although being fiscally prudent in the good times helped us to prosper, that prosperity has extended itself into current bear markets and has positioned Alberta to lead Canada's economic recovery. We are more than ever in a position to realize a standard of living for all Albertans that will only serve to perpetuate our excellence.

I know as do all Albertans that the adjustments to tumbling oil and gas prices are a necessary consequence of the new global economic realities. It brings me great pride and satisfaction to know that although Alberta is fiscally strong, we only strive to reinforce this sound footing by attracting new investment and innovating in the delivery of the best and most cost-effective programs.

Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor also discussed a very important aspect of living in Alberta: that we maintain safe and strong communities. It's one of the most important functions of government, to protect the security and well-being of our citizens, and again we're addressing new challenges in law enforcement with innovative, straightforward, and practical solutions that involve all Albertans.

Our efforts are increasingly effective, and our crime rates are now at the lowest level since 1985. Our overall crime rate is the lowest in western Canada, but again we're not willing to rest on our laurels. Through new and innovative models of service delivery, such as the provincial organized and serious crime strategy, youth justice committees and alternative measures programs, and youth attendance centres, we are fulfilling our mandate to keep Albertans safe while not breaking the bank. Even through our most turbulent hour we are continuing to tend to our responsibility to all Albertans. As Her Honour mentioned, anyone can steer a ship through calm seas, but it takes strong leadership to steer through rough waters.

In response to a very real need for greater service levels we are quickly responding to our obligations to our children and seniors with increased funding and greater focus on these key priority areas. Through the youth in transition policy framework Alberta will continue to be an excellent place for all children to come of age and become strong contributors to the society that has cared for them. Mr. Speaker, the youth in transition policy framework will guide cross-ministry program development of youth progressing to adulthood. Through the framework Alberta's youth will be one of the priorities of government ministries, and youth will be involved in determining the future direction of goals and business plans. The framework seeks to ensure that youth acquire the knowledge, skills, attitudes, and abilities to live happy, healthy, fulfilling lives that contribute positively to society, that youth are safe, supported, and connected to caring peers and adults, and that youth are involved in and have access to a wide range of flexible services that meet their diverse and unique needs.

Of equal importance to my constituents is that we continue to respect our obligations to Alberta's seniors. I was heartened to hear that we will continue to provide base supports for our seniors to live out their lives in comfort and dignity. As we develop a plan for the future, our heritage must continue to play a key role in the social and cultural development of the province. It is of the utmost importance that our seniors be regarded as a backbone of who we are as a people and that there be safeguards for their wellness, including affordable housing, accessible health care, and a strong base level of financial support. Our commitment to Alberta seniors to ensure that they share in the Alberta advantage serves to bolster the feelings of respect all Albertans have for seniors and each other.

Mr. Speaker, I am very proud of what we have accomplished as a government over the past year. I know that my colleagues share the pride that I have to be part of a strong team with the extraordinary leadership of our hon. Premier. I look eagerly forward to the Second Session and fully expect that we will continue to realize the goals of this government: to meet the core needs of Albertans while managing the province's finances responsibly.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: Before I, then, call on the hon. Member for Red Deer-North, might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

(reversion)

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's with great pleasure that I stand on behalf of the Member for Edmonton-Centre to introduce a group from Norquest College. They are accompanied by a couple of leaders, Mr. Cap Tiege and Miss Catherine Schmitz. There are in total I think 24 people in the group. I welcome them through you to the Assembly, and I'd ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of all MLAs assembled.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

MRS. JABLONSKI: Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to sit down so that the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar can do his speech.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

REV. ABBOTT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. All right. Thank you for the opportunity to rise today and respond to the Speech from the Throne. I would like to begin today by congratulating Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor for her grace and dedication to this province. It is always a pleasure when she attends this Chamber but even more so when she delivers the Speech from the Throne.

I would also like to take this opportunity to congratulate Her Majesty the Queen on over 50 years of duty and service to our province, our nation, and our Commonwealth. Her honoured commitment to service and duty has served this province well, and I know I join all members of the Assembly in wishing her many more years of continued success and happiness.

As Her Honour outlined on Tuesday, Alberta's future remains strong and vibrant in spite of new threats and challenges to our prosperity and way of life. Literally thousands of Albertans participated in our recent Future Summit through regional forums, on-line surveys, and mail-in workbooks. We confidently plan for a bright future in Alberta looking five, 10, even 20 years down the road. I'm proud to say that many residents of Drayton Valley-Calmar contributed some great ideas that will undoubtedly shape policy and planning in the coming years.

Yes, Mr. Speaker, the future is coming. As the men and women of our proud armed forces are deployed around the world to protect and maintain our way of life, I wish to join the chorus of Canadians giving thanks to these brave soldiers and their families for their bravery and sacrifice. I am confident that those military men and women trained here in Alberta will serve us well. The threats that we face can never overcome the potential and ability that we Albertans have always had to meet adversity with fortitude and new risks with optimism.

A perfect example of this spirit can be found in our agricultural sector, a sector that is vital to Alberta's health but one that faces both new challenges and opportunities. Mr. Speaker, Alberta is the second largest agricultural producer in Canada, with 23 percent of Canada's farm cash receipts despite having only 10 percent of the country's population.

Alberta is also the largest beef-producing province in Canada, as you well know, Mr. Speaker, with 41 percent of the national herd. This province is renowned for its food safety and quality products. Who hasn't heard of Alberta beef? Who hasn't tried it and loved it? The farmers and ranchers of Drayton Valley-Calmar produce some of the finest cattle in the province. Preliminary figures for farm cash receipts for the 2001 calendar year show a new record of just over $8.2 billion, consisting of $5.1 billion in livestock and livestock product sales, $2.3 billion in crop sales, and $862 million in direct program payments.

As we become even more innovative in areas such as the proposed cervid harvest preserves and other brand-new value-added sectors, this number will soar even higher, Mr. Speaker. Alberta boasts an estimated 500 food and beverage firms, forming the single largest manufacturing sector in the province. In 2000 the value of shipments of manufactured food and beverage products reached a record $9.2 billion. Preliminary figures point to $10 billion in shipments for 2001. That's 9 percent growth in this sector for the year.

Food sales from grocery stores topped $7 billion in 2001, while restaurant, caterer, and tavern receipts totaled just over $4.5 billion. The average Alberta household spends $6,500 a year on food. Now, that's more than 10 percent of the average household budget. I know, Mr. Speaker, that it looks like some of us spend more than others, but as outlined in Her Honour's speech, Alberta Health and Wellness will address this issue also.

As well, Mr. Speaker, Alberta's exports reached an estimated $5.8 billion in primary and processed agrifood products in 2001 sold to 110 countries around the world: again, a new record, an almost 10 percent growth from the previous year. Just over 54 percent of exports went to our friends in the United States.

These are incredible statistics from a vibrant and dynamic industry, but our agriculture industry also faces challenges, challenges that we can't necessarily control, Mr. Speaker. Weather experts from across the province are predicting another dry season. This could result in extended drought conditions, and I'm very pleased that the government will implement the agriculture drought risk management plan. This plan will help producers access timely and cost-effective response measures if needed. The plan will also allow for the province to better assess the impact of any drought on the farm economy in our rural communities.

I'm also proud, Mr. Speaker, that this government has committed to facing the challenges in providing health care to Albertans in the 21st century. The report of the Premier's Advisory Council on Health has provided a solid and balanced framework on which to build reform. In accepting the recommendations, this government is taking sound and prudent action to build a health care system that will meet the needs of our children and our grandchildren: sustainability. As her honour said, it is to the betterment of people's health and the province's health that the government of Alberta dedicates itself in 2002.

In building a positive health care infrastructure and network, reform must be approached from many different directions. We must look at the way we use the system and how health boards provide services. We must examine the role of health care professionals as well as the role of individuals using the system. We must not shy away from looking at how we pay for health care and how we spend our health care dollars. The people of my constituency believe in dollar stretching and prudent spending in all areas of government, Mr. Speaker, even health and education. We are in a time of constraint, and efficiencies must be found.

Now, we also face challenges in the economy as a whole, but again, Mr. Speaker, Alberta is not only positioned to meet these challenges; we will come through them stronger and better than before. A stagnant global economy has affected us all, yet Alberta remains in the best fiscal position of any province. Our economy continues to grow, and that growth will allow this province to continue to address Albertans' key priorities. These priorities include sound fiscal principles, principles that demand balanced budgets, payment of the debt, and lower taxes for both individuals and corporations. Small business tax cuts are of paramount importance, as these will allow more jobs to be created at higher salaries.

These prudent fiscal policies do not mean that we should not or cannot invest in the basic responsibilities of government. Rather, our fiscal principles will enable us to build the roads, the highways, and the infrastructure that will fuel our continued economic success. Our roads are our wealth creators, Mr. Speaker, and our fiscal principles will allow us to invest in the growth, the health, and the security of our citizens so that they can pursue their own individual agendas and pursuits. Our fiscal principles will allow us to ensure that our people will be educated and ready to meet whatever new opportunities or challenges await them that we cannot yet see. We will continue to turn out the top-ranked students in the world from our basic and advanced education systems.

Despite all the gloom and doom talk of opponents, naysayers, and special interest lobbyists, this province, Mr. Speaker, stands at the forefront of fiscal prudence and responsibility. We are ready to eliminate our debt completely within years, not decades. No other province can yet plan for that time when they overcome their debt, but I am proud to say that we can. This is a remarkable achievement, and we should never lose sight of how far we have come.

We can also be proud of the climate that we have helped to foster. When other Canadians think of Alberta, they see an attractive and vibrant place to live. Our tax policies, both personal and corporate, have compelled people to move to our jurisdiction. No sales tax, flat rate income tax, and high tax exemption thresholds have drawn people and industry from around the globe to Alberta. And when they get here, Mr. Speaker, they find a province with a quality of life like no other. They find a province whose beauty never ceases and a province that has room for all individuals who want a better life to pursue their dreams and aspirations. It's easy to get caught up in the negativism of our times and the narrow focus of a minor few. Opposition forces will come, but we will continue to do the right thing regardless.

Mr. Speaker, thousands of children go to school every day and receive a world-class education, an education that will provide the foundation on which to build a more specialized knowledge and a continued need to expand their own individual and collective horizons. Every day thousands of Albertans who get sick or find themselves in need of medical care receive that care in a responsible and professional manner. They encounter a health care system that produces results and that pushes the standards of excellence for not only other Canadians to follow but the rest of the world as well. Our health care system allows our seniors to enjoy the golden years, as they so deserve. Every day millions of Albertans and the thousands of others that follow them live and prosper in a jurisdiction that lets them keep more and more of their own hard-earned dollars so that they can decide how best to address their own needs and priorities.

This is a great time to be an Albertan, Mr. Speaker, an exciting time to be an MLA. I'm proud to represent the constituency of Drayton Valley-Calmor in this honoured Assembly. The Lieutenant Governor was correct when she indicated that our province has always had a unique destiny, one that is guided by great leadership, by character, and by the values of its people. I look forward to working with all Albertans in continuing that destiny and in building a positive future for our province.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, did you wish to participate? First of all, we're going to go to questions if there are some.

DR. TAFT: I have no questions.

THE SPEAKER: Okay. The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

MR. VANDERBURG: Well, I enjoyed some of your comments. To the member: could you expand a bit on the comments on the fiscal principles of this government and specifically how it relates to your constituents?

REV. ABBOTT: Sure. Thank you for the question. Actually, my constituents were very happy to see one thing in particular in this Speech from the Throne, and that is where it says: "Government will not spend more than it takes in. It will not leave a legacy of deficits for tomorrow's Albertans to pay."

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: Would there be additional questions from hon. members? That being the case, the chair will recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure for me, as it is for all MLAs, to respond to the Speech from the Throne. I will keep my comments quite brief and pointed today in light of the fine speech given by the Leader of the Official Opposition last night and the comments from my other colleagues. They've covered much of the ground I would have covered if they hadn't, so I will be able to keep my comments brief.

I will just go through certain points made in the speech here that I think are worth some comment. On page 4 of the speech it reads:

Factors contributing to a healthy Alberta are the same as those that contribute to a healthy Albertan. They are economic growth, fiscal stability, good schools, safe children receiving parenting in a caring and nurturing manner, strong communities, secure seniors, clean air and water, and confidence that the future is bright.

Of course, it's more or less impossible to dispute any of those. I would, however, like to add one in particular, a factor that is well substantiated by research nationally and internationally, a factor that contributes to the health of people throughout a society, and that is the factor known as equality. In fact, there is strong research from various countries in the world indicating that the greater the inequality in a society, the lower the level of health. You can in fact have very poor countries, such as certain countries in Africa, that have unusually high degrees of population health, and that is often attributed in the research to high degrees of equality. So I would like to have seen in the throne speech a notion of equality, and I would encourage this government to consider equality as one of its values. I would, for example, muse on the effects of the flat tax on equality among Albertans. I'm concerned that in fact the flat tax and any number of other policies of this government have exacerbated inequality.

I'd also like to make comments on a sentence farther down on page 4 that reads: "Ensuring the continued stability of the province's health care system is without a doubt at the top of the government's agenda in 2002." For a moment I thought there was actually a typographical error. I thought that perhaps they meant to say: ensuring the continued instability of the province's health care system. The simple fact of the matter is that over the last eight years the health care system in Alberta has been profoundly unstable. We can look at that in various ways. We can look at the wild swings in funding: down, down, down; up, up, up; and apparently down, down, down again. We can look at the thousands of layoffs and then the scramble to rehire staff with the ensuing staff shortages. We can look at the leadership or the management of the Department of Health and Wellness, in which there have been seven deputy ministers in nine years. The status quo for Alberta's health care system the last nine years has been turmoil. I would love it and I would thoroughly encourage the government if they ensured stability of the province's health care system, but when they speak in terms of ensuring continued stability, I'm afraid they're misleading themselves.

There are various comments in the Speech from the Throne on the Premier's Advisory Council on Health, the report there and the recommendations. Certainly some of those recommendations are well worth implementing, and I'm sure we'll see some of them implemented. We will work with the government to support those recommendations including, for example, an increase in tobacco taxes. We will, I hope, be able to support the Minister of Health and Wellness in efforts that he may pursue to ensure that the revenue from the increase in tobacco taxes goes to a dedicated promotion of health and wellness fund. It's an excellent idea, and I think that the minister, if he pursues that, can look forward to our support.

Of course, there are concerns that have been already raised at length in this Assembly in the last couple of days about health care premiums. An increase in health care premiums is something we will be actively opposing.

While I continue to focus on Health and Wellness, I'll also mention the suggestions farther down on page 5 that there may well be reductions in services that are covered under our public health care insurance system. Those are potentially very worrisome trends. Any move toward delisting is potentially a serious mistake, and we will be challenging the government if it moves in those directions.

As I move through the speech and move into the section of the speech on education and learning, I am again concerned that the government may not have a firm grip on reality when it says that "the government believes there is a great deal of goodwill on all sides" when it addresses the education system. I think that any claim that there's a great deal of goodwill on all sides in the education debate is delusionary. I'm expressing my strong conviction, in fact, that there is very little goodwill in the education debate and that we are looking to this government for leadership in establishing and expanding goodwill and reducing the animosity that is existing in the education area.

Moving further through the speech, I'll just skip ahead to the section on healthy communities. I note that there will be new child welfare legislation drafted this year. We'd all agree in light of events in the last weeks and months that any additional attention paid to the child welfare system will be welcomed. I would ask all members here to carefully read the speech given by the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford last night, a passionate plea on behalf of children. I'd encourage – let's see – the one, two, three, four, five cabinet ministers who are here at this moment to take that text to the next cabinet meeting and argue based upon the strong points . . .

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

Point of Order
Referring to Absence of Members

MR. HANCOCK: Mr. Speaker, it behooves me to rise on a point of order.

THE SPEAKER: A point of order?

MR. HANCOCK: Yes.

THE SPEAKER: Right now? Okay.

MR. HANCOCK: I know it's unusual during the reply to the Speech from the Throne, but it is normal not to refer to the absence of a member, and by referring to members by means of referring to their position in cabinet, it does indirectly what you can't do directly. The hon. member indicated that there were only five members of cabinet here, and that was an inappropriate reference.

THE SPEAKER: Okay. I tend to agree with that, but it was being done in such a nice way about conveying information someplace else.

So please continue.

Debate Continued

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In any case, I would encourage all cabinet members, whether they're here or not, to review carefully the speech given by the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford last night, which was a plea for very, very careful and compassionate attention to children. It was a commendable speech, and I think that he should be proud to have had the courage to stand up and make that speech, largely aimed at his own government, I would expect.

However, with those comments, Mr. Speaker, I will take my seat and carry on.

THE SPEAKER: Okay. We have provisions under Standing Order 29, so the hon. Government House Leader, followed by the hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs, and then followed by the hon. member for Grande Prairie.

MR. HANCOCK: Yes. I'm wondering if the hon. member would give any recognition to the fact that the single rate of tax, which he referred to as a flat tax, also afforded an opportunity to raise the personal and spousal exemption rate in this province so that many, many thousands of Albertans who have a single income and a family income of under $27,000 no longer pay any tax at all. I'd also wonder who in his comments he accuses of not having goodwill. We know that the government has goodwill; we know that there's goodwill with boards and teachers.

THE SPEAKER: Thank you. The hon. member.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There is a very long history of debate in our parliamentary tradition. This kind of debate is widely available to all MLAs, and I welcome it. It was fully available to government members and backbenchers under the previous Standing Orders, and they seldom used it. It's still available to them, and I will engage them if they use it at that time. At the same time, in my view there was no need to change the Standing Orders to create this platform. So while I'm delighted to engage in the traditional debates in the Legislature, I have no plans to respond to questions.

MR. SNELGROVE: It would not be a debate if the hon. member would please inform me what year the total funding to health care actually went down.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

Then the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

MR. LUKASZUK: In view of the member's criticisms of our health care system, it's my understanding that his Liberal cousins have sponsored a committee chaired by ex-Premier Romanow, an NDP, which may be very reflective of what the Mazankowski report has indicated. Any comments on that?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview. None?

The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

MR. KNIGHT: Redundant.

THE SPEAKER: Redundant?

Additional questions under Standing Order 29 to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview? There being none, the chair will then recognize the hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

MRS. JABLONSKI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is an honour to rise on behalf of the constituents of Red Deer-North and reply to the Speech from the Throne. First I would like to thank Her Honour the Honourable Lieutenant Governor for her touching address. I truly enjoy the official ceremony and protocol that surrounds the Speech from the Throne. It is an excellent way to begin the Second Session of the 25th Legislature. It reminds me of the history of this province and this building, and I feel very fortunate to be a part of it. It's exciting to be part of a province that has worked hard to make it to where it is today in just 97 short years. Alberta has such a bright future and boundless potential.

Everyone can recognize that the recent world events have altered our way of life. The events of September 11 have brought changes that we deal with every day and others that we have not yet begun to grasp. Despite the turmoil and the uncertainty that we have all faced, the people of this province have persevered, and that makes me very proud. As Her Honour stated yesterday, there is no prouder person than an Albertan. I certainly agree with this sentiment, even though I'm originally from Ontario.

I would like to take this opportunity to add my thanks to the men and women of our armed forces who are stationed around the globe to stand on guard for the Canadian way of life. I would also like to thank the families of our soldiers for their sacrifice. As a former member of an armed forces family I join with them in their hopes and prayers for the safe return of their children and spouses. I think that we can all draw strength from the bravery that the men and women in our armed forces display. I would urge everyone to never forget that they are some of our very own out there on the front lines making sacrifices, taking risks, and working hard to protect us. We must also remember the very brave members of our Canadian armed forces bomb squad who risk their lives every moment when they are attempting to locate and diffuse the horrific and inhumane land mines located in war zones like Bosnia, Herzegovina, Sudan, and Afghanistan. I thank them all.

Alberta, as I have said, is a proud province and a province that is proud of the achievements of its sons and daughters around the globe. Alberta has produced many exceptional people who have achieved incredible success. I would like to take this opportunity to congratulate the members of the women's and men's national hockey teams for their recent success at the Olympic Winter Games in Salt Lake City. Do you realize that Canada received more gold medals than any other country? We have 25 medals for the men's hockey team, 25 for the women's hockey team, four for the relay team, two for the pairs skating, one for cross-country, and that makes 57 gold medals, more than any other country.

As Her Honour alluded to, Alberta has built a rich history in a short time and has a lot to look forward to this year and in the years to come. Given the circumstances of the global economy, I think that we are fortunate to live in such a strong province. While the financial picture that is forecast is not as splendid when compared to last year's results, I must say that it is very promising when compared to the rest of the country and the continent.

The Alberta economy has evolved significantly over the last two decades and is now fundamentally strong and geared to withstand exterior pressures. People say that if any province can weather the current economic slowdown, it's Alberta. They're right, and that's thanks to the fiscal policies of this government. Even though the economy will grow less than it did last year, it will still grow a significant amount. Alberta is forecast to exceed Canada in economic growth for 2002 and remain competitive for the lead in economic growth among provinces across the country.

Activity in the energy sector is expected to slow down due to lower prices. However, investment in the oil sands is expected to remain strong throughout the year. Even though the number of wells drilled this year will be lower than last, the number will still be higher than it has been historically. This is good news for all oil and gas service companies in Alberta and especially for those in Red Deer.

The reduction in demand for oil and gas has brought along with it a reduction in prices for these commodities. Lower energy prices will result in lower government revenues, and as Her Honour stated firmly yesterday, this government will balance our priorities with accountability, and we will not spend more than we take in. This is the same principle that my husband keeps telling me: we will not spend more than we take in.

The government continued to display its dedication to fiscal prudence just last fall when we implemented a 1 percent spending reduction across all government departments. Difficult decisions were made, but like a strong and wise parent our government chose what was necessary. To further emphasize our dedication to fiscal prudence and commitment to accounting excellence, I am pleased to see that we plan to resurrect the financial management commission. As Her Honour noted, this commission is charged with assessing the fiscal policies and accounting practices of this government.

Health care is an area that affects all Albertans from a baby in the womb to the oldest resident. Albertans need to find a sustainable and affordable solution so that health care will always be accessible.

Alberta education achieves high goals, and we are proud of our results. The education in Alberta would not be as good as it is without our teachers. Teachers in Alberta do a good job, and many teachers do an outstanding job. I personally appreciate and value all teachers for I believe that they would not be doing the job they do unless they were truly dedicated to the children they serve. As chairperson of the Youth Secretariat I work with our youth advisory panel. This is a diverse group of 16- to 22-year-old Albertans who work together to help find the answers that will help our youth acquire the skills and attitudes they need to live those happy, healthy, and productive lives.

Our environment must be cherished and protected. In Alberta, as Her Honour noted in the throne speech, our "environmental standards and regulations are and will continue to be among the most stringent in North America." In my private member's Bill 202, the Environmental Protection and Enhancement (Clean-up Instructions) Amendment Act, I aim to make sure that when a spill occurs, a timely plan is put into place that states how and when a cleanup will happen and how long it will take. Whoever is responsible for the cleanup will then be forced to abide by the terms of the plan that is set in motion according to the terms of this amendment.

Children's services is a priority area and accounts for the most difficult decisions made in government. A review of the Child Welfare Act is being conducted at this time, and we are accepting comments from all Albertans. One area under review is the adoption section. The adoption task force of Alberta, which finds its chairperson in Red Deer-North, is asking for open adoption records with a noncontact declaration or a veto clause. With the help of our gracious Minister of Children's Services and committee members, an acceptable solution will be found and recommended.

I would like to once again echo the sentiments of Her Honour: staying the course is not something the government can do alone. It will require co-operation and input from the people of this province. We have a proven record of consultation and interaction with Albertans on important issues, the latest being the Future Summit that Red Deer was very proud to host.

In conclusion, I would like to quote from the daily bulletin of February 27, 2002: Alberta has been ranked third in the country for UFO sightings, with 40 sightings this year. Obviously, the Alberta advantage is well known even in interplanetary circles.

The throne speech eloquently illustrated the advantages of living in Alberta. We have work to do and promises to keep. Long live the Alberta advantage.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, we have now arrived where Standing Order 29(2) kicks in, and I just want to repeat it again. It says under Standing Order 29(2) that members are allowed "to ask questions and comment briefly" as well.

Then we will proceed to the next speaker. The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

MR. VANDERBURG: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour for me to have the opportunity to respond to Her Honour the Honourable Lieutenant Governor's Speech from the Throne. I'm proud to be a rural Albertan, and I'm very proud to represent the hardworking people living in the Whitecourt-Ste. Anne constituency.

I'd like to thank the Lieutenant Governor for talking about several rural concerns that were acknowledged in Her Honour's throne speech. I agree with Her Honour that agriculture is an important part of the economic health and a vital component of our rural landscape. Alberta is Canada's second-largest agriculture producer, and despite higher farm operating costs and expenses and the worst drought in 130 years in 2001, our province saw farm cash receipt levels reach a record of approximately $8.3 billion. Agriculture is very important, and it's part of Alberta's economic health, contributing over $16 billion in economic activity in value-added food and beverage processing and primary production. An often overlooked fact is that agriculture is Alberta's single largest manufacturing sector.

I also agree with Her Honour that the merger of Agriculture Financial Services Corporation and the Alberta Opportunity Company will provide additional support to the industry by creating a one-window approach to commercial financing for the agriculture industry and for small businesses. Alberta's agriculture industry is well positioned for continued growth and is working toward achieving $10 billion in primary production and $20 billion in value-added processing by 2010. The Alberta government is committed to helping the industry meet these goals by continuing to stimulate economic development in the agriculture communities.

There are some big challenges ahead, including another drought forecasted for 2002. I'm relieved that this government is prepared for another dry summer and its effects on the agriculture and forest industries. Alberta Sustainable Resource Development will officially launch the fire season March 1, 2002. Under normal weather conditions operations usually begin April 1. Dry conditions and warm weather have resulted in fire officials preparing for another potentially busy fire season. A significant lack of snow in parts of the province this winter means that the forest fire hazard conditions could be high or extremely high this spring. The Minister of Sustainable Resource Development summed it up best when he said that we cannot control nature, but we can take every precaution to protect the public and Alberta's natural resources.

Alberta producers who have felt the effects of drought on pasture and forage crops have new insurance options for 2002. Some areas of the province have experienced the driest conditions in over 100 years. Forage is critical to the health of the cattle industry. To help producers deal with the extremely dry conditions, the government has introduced a new pasture insurance option and has enhanced two of its existing forage insurance programs. Forage insurance compensates for production losses due to damage caused by natural perils. The lack-of-moisture insurance pilot program is new in this province, a wide insurance option that helps producers protect their pasture acres against the lack of moisture, based on readings from the weather stations selected for the insurance. I feel that in light of our dramatically altered fiscal picture from a year ago, these new insurance programs will offer a suitable safety net to protect people in the agriculture industry.

This season I will introduce two motions that will deal with two issues in rural Alberta that should get some more attention. In the first motion I urge the government to investigate a system of pooling all proceeds from charity casinos throughout Alberta. The proceeds would then be redistributed in quarterly intervals to all the charities – and I mean all the charities – across this great province. This will help charities, especially in our rural areas, to improve services to the community.

My second motion urges the government to re-examine the expropriation rules and regulations to ensure a streamlined system that encourages efficient and more economical resolve to land issues. Right now the government pays for associated legal fees for landowners during the expropriation process. No slight to lawyers, but they love this law, and there's no incentive for our constituents to settle land compensation issues in a timely manner. This expands the legal fees billed to the Alberta government. I believe that this government should also place a time limit from the time expropriation proceedings begin in the court system to the time that a fair settlement can be reached, and I express "fair." As the process currently stands, there is no time limit, and the legal bills, court time, and assessment stretch longer and higher.

I would again like to thank the people living in the Whitecourt-St. Anne constituency for choosing me as their MLA last spring. It has been an honour representing their concerns and a pleasure to work with the members of this Assembly.

Thank you.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: As per our Standing Order we now have five minutes for questions and comments.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

MR. CAO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I listened to the hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne. Maybe I didn't hear it well, but I would like you to comment on the safely produced food in your agriculture comment.

MR. VANDERBURG: Sorry. Did you say "safely"?

MR. CAO: Yes. Safely produced food.

MR. VANDERBURG: Well, thank you. It is a pleasure to accept a question on food safety, especially since it didn't take nine years for me to get a question, and I would like to refer it to the minister responsible. But I can comment that Alberta remains in the best position of any province to take the lead in responding to today's stagnant global economy. Alberta's economy is healthy and continues to grow. The economic growth is forecasted at about 2 percent this year.

MR. SNELGROVE: The hon. member mentioned in his speech that this was the driest summer in 130 years, and we've heard recently from the opposition and the media that it's global warming that has caused this drought. I'm just curious if he could tell me what caused the one 130 years ago.

MR. VANDERBURG: I'd like to refer that to the Minister of Environment, but of course I can't. He's right, you know. It's too bad that we didn't have the statistics for 150 years; otherwise, I could have extended it to 150 years.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands for a question.

MR. MASON: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I would like to phrase the same question in a very similar fashion. How does the hon. member square the continuing drought conditions, the increase in forest fires and so on with the climate change that is occurring and the government's position on the Kyoto accord?

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne to respond.

MR. VANDERBURG: Yes. Thank you very much for that question. There are some very good points you've brought up, and I think that we should expand on that. You know, I will continue and I think our government should continue to put in the fiscal policies that encourage investment, job creation, and consumer confidence. It will also limit spending in areas without reducing the quality of priority projects. If I didn't hear it quite right, you know, that's okay too.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: It appears that nobody else is rising for questions.

The chair will now recognize the hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

MR. KNIGHT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed an honour to rise today and address this Assembly to provide a reply to the Speech from the Throne from the perspective of the Grande Prairie-Smoky constituency. We are pleased to be able to join with other Albertans to recognize Her Majesty Elizabeth II ascending to the throne 50 years ago, and we applaud this long service to the United Kingdom and the Commonwealth. The Premier's citizenship awards are a very fitting way for us to remember this historic anniversary.

On a personal note, I was saddened at the passing of HRH the Princess Margaret. Through a longtime hobby I was privileged to be the caretaker of a motorcar constructed for the princess in 1975. This exceptional conveyance afforded us many pleasant hours touring Alberta's first-class highways and bi-ways, enjoying our natural beauty and friendly, pleasant citizens.

I am looking forward to the Second Session of the 25th Legislature with optimism. Her Honour has set the tone for the session: focusing on working to build a healthy Alberta. I believe we are all aware that we have much to do to fulfill the agenda we have before us. This agenda addresses what Albertans have been telling us over the past months: we need to work together for a better Alberta. The Future Summit's regional summit in Grande Prairie brought this theme forward from all working groups.

We need to make the necessary changes to ensure prosperous and healthy futures for all Albertans. Change is often not well accepted, but Albertans are faced with a number of challenges that will not accept the status quo. I am confident that Alberta is a strong and capable province, and the people who live here are hardworking and committed to making and embracing positive change.

The government of Alberta's dedication to improving people's health and the province's health in the year 2002 will be strongly supported by the constituents of Grande Prairie-Smoky. Sustainable health care is arguably our greatest challenge. It becomes increasingly apparent that a greater level of private involvement will be necessary to maintain Alberta's leading health care services.

It is interesting to note that in a recent national broadcast the former federal Minister of Health, Monique Begin, stated that it is time to open the Canada Health Act and allow private providers to deliver some services that will enhance health care in Canada. It will be remembered that this minister introduced the Canada Health Act under Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau. In light of this refreshing news from a prominent federal health care champion, we are assured that recommendations from the Premier's Advisory Council on Health are indeed leading Alberta to a new shared health care system where personal responsibility, families, communities, all levels of government, and private providers will contribute to long-term affordability and accessibility in our first-class system.

As Albertans we share many advantages. Primary among them is a learning system that is one of the world's best. Our ranking in international tests is proof of this, and it is clearly demonstrated here that Alberta has exceptional teachers, who remain dedicated to their profession. It is not by chance that executives from around the world come to Alberta to source educators. These test results are noticed, and with that comes recognition that Alberta's postsecondary institutions and universities continue to turn out top-ranked teachers.

The other point to be made with respect to these tests is that they show the government's commitment to our children's education and, as importantly, show our students' commitment to their own futures by making the effort to do well in their studies and excel in a competitive environment.

To ensure that Alberta's students continue to achieve, we as a government must investigate and promote a range of alternative investment initiatives that can provide the infrastructure that houses classrooms and equipment that students require to learn. Recent school audits conducted across the province have identified a number of structures that require repair and/or replacement, and addressing these pressure points is necessary to avoid increasing our infrastructure deficit.

Mr. Speaker, Grande Prairie-Smoky constituents are pleased to see this government's commitment to stick to its fiscal principles, and under this framework we will encourage the government to invest in our infrastructure in a timely, responsible manner. In keeping with this encouragement, we in Grande Prairie-Smoky will continue to insist that the trade corridor remain a high priority of this government. Trade is certainly the lifeblood of this province, and our ability in northwest Alberta to reach markets for our products is the key to our progress and prosperity.

Our products, Mr. Speaker, include some that are under extreme pressure in current trade action. I am very supportive of our government's co-operative effort with other provinces and the federal government to improve trade rules and open access for softwood lumber exports to the United States. We in Grande Prairie-Smoky support free, as well as fair, international trade.

Agriculture, as Her Honour pointed out, is a very important part of our province and of the Grande Prairie-Smoky region. Grande Prairie-Smoky is certainly no exception in this. We have many of the province's most productive and progressive producers. As agriculture expansion moves north in our province, we in Grande Prairie-Smoky welcome the opportunity to work with our government in support of producers and processors, who are strengthening our agriculture sector and ensuring that this sector continues to thrive. The goal of $30 billion in primary and value-added agricultural business by 2010 is realistic, and Grande Prairie-Smoky entrepreneurs will play a major role in accomplishing this goal.

A safety net system continues to be an important part of this sector, and we encourage and support this government's positive initiatives in this regard. This Assembly recognizes its responsibility to Alberta's children, seniors, and disadvantaged persons. Nowhere, Mr. Speaker, is this responsibility taken more seriously than in the riding of Grande Prairie-Smoky. Volunteers and professionals work tirelessly, side by side, to improve the quality of life for these sectors of our society.

A case in point, Mr. Speaker, is a group of individuals who have formed a society to provide low-income housing for disabled and other members of the Grande Prairie community. This group is currently beginning the development of a 47-unit complex suited to this purpose. It is this Alberta spirit that makes our province the best place to live and work.

Mr. Speaker, Her Honour has reported that aboriginal peoples are key members of this province's communities. This again is very true in Grande Prairie-Smoky. The commitment to continue with implementation of the aboriginal policy framework with the goal of increasing the well-being and self-reliance of First Nations and Metis is a commendable policy. However, some current policy and practices need to be reviewed to ensure that women and children in these communities benefit fully from any programs or policies.

Exploration for and production of energy resources has been ongoing in Grande Prairie-Smoky for more than 50 years. This major economic driver continued to grow through the ensuing years and today plays a major role in the success of many communities in my riding. There admittedly were some problematic practices in the drilling and production areas years ago. A responsible government has worked with industry to design environmental standards that will protect our natural heritage, maintaining healthy forests, clean air, and clean water for future generations.

Ongoing studies, science-based studies, will determine what action is appropriate with respect to flaring and venting. The stewardship of these resources – forests, air, water, and hydrocarbon reserves – has been successful and responsible and will provide benefits for all Albertans and Canadians for generations to come.

Arctic gas from Canada's north or Alaska will soon be playing a major role in the North American security of supply. It is very probable that this resource will be brought into Alberta, and Grande Prairie specifically, for possible upgrading and inclusion in the Alberta gas hub. This tremendous resource, the hub, allows resource owners to produce, process, store, and then market natural gas to six major markets in North America.

AN HON. MEMBER: How many?

MR. KNIGHT: Six. This investment in energy-related infrastructure is an Alberta advantage, but, Mr. Speaker, more important are the thousands of Albertans educated and trained to build, operate, and maintain these systems.

That, Mr. Speaker, is the Alberta advantage working on a daily basis in our communities. This industry and, indeed, the economy of our province would be negatively impacted by a hasty ratification of the Kyoto accord. The Alberta government commitment to science-based reduction of greenhouse gas emissions is much more in line with the actions of our trading partners in North America. Grande Prairie-Smoky constituents support the government's efforts to convince the federal government that ratification will unnecessarily penalize our business and citizens while it does very little to actually reduce global greenhouse gas emissions or global warming.

Mr. Speaker, a comprehensive policy, a provincial water strategy is not only timely but absolutely necessary for Grande Prairie-Smoky and, indeed, all of our province. Safe, secure drinking water and healthy rivers and lakes should be viewed as a birthright of Albertans. We are most certainly in a four-year plus time period of moderate to severe shortfalls in annual precipitation level. Groundwater and aquifers supplying some of our communities are showing an alarming decrease in volumes available. A comprehensive study will be a first step in allowing us to understand and design solutions to this most crucial concern.

Mr. Speaker, in conclusion, Grande Prairie-Smoky constituents will see in this throne speech that many of our most pressing concerns will be addressed by a government that has pledged to maintain its focus on the present in all aspects. I look forward to participating in these endeavours on behalf of the Grande Prairie-Smoky constituency.

Thank you.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Hon. members now have five minutes to ask brief questions and receive brief responses.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

MR. HUTTON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. After listening to the hon. Member for Grande-Prairie-Smoky, it now is confirmed to me that the constituents made the right choice on March 12, 2001.

I do have one question of the hon. member. He mentioned in his remarks about expanding the trade corridor, and I would like him to elaborate a little bit on that, please.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

MR. KNIGHT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I don't believe that I actually said that I would want it expanded. We just want it continued.

Thank you.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The chair is not seeing anyone rise to ask questions. If that's the case, the chair will now recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Not at this moment, Mr. Speaker.

Thank you.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Okay.

The hon. Member for Dunvegan.

MR. GOUDREAU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for giving me the opportunity to reply to Her Honour's Speech from the Throne. If the speech is any indication, the coming year promises to be one of the most important for Albertans in a long time. As a province we are embarking down several new roads that will challenge this government and the citizens we represent in this Assembly. Her Honour's words provided the people of our province with a clear vision of change, innovation, and renewal and outlined the big picture very nicely.

However, Mr. Speaker, what I would like to do today is shift gears and concentrate on the local picture that the constituents of the riding I represent, Dunvegan, see every day. I'd like to talk about Dunvegan's history, some of the problems the region currently faces, and how focusing on some key ideas could help to reinvigorate and diversify our economy.

Dunvegan, as I'm sure most members are aware, shares the northwest corner of Alberta with the riding of Peace River. It is among the largest ridings in the province and, as far as I'm concerned, one of the best. The people of Dunvegan are hardworking, diverse, and proud Albertans. We have one of the strongest Francophone contingents in the province and an unparalleled history.

The fort of Dunvegan was founded by the North West Company in 1793 and served as a fur trading post in Alberta's north. Later Catholic missionaries came to the fort bringing with them cultural vestiges of Europe and eastern Canada. They, along with occupants of other trading posts scattered across Alberta's north, provided a new heritage that even today deeply influences the people of Dunvegan.

Just as the trappers of the 18th and 19th centuries relied upon Alberta's natural resources to make a living in the north, the people of the 21st century rely heavily on Dunvegan's natural resources as well. Our major industries include agriculture, forestry, and oil and gas, and our major commodities include forage production, oil seeds, honey, and cereals. The region produces over 10 million pounds of honey per year. The town of Falher is known as the honey capital of Alberta and is home to the world's largest bee and the Falher Honey Festival, which takes place every July. The constituency is also the closest in Alberta to the Pacific Rim countries through the port of Prince Rupert.

So, Mr. Speaker, just as we are proud of our history in Dunvegan, we are also optimistic about the future opportunities that our resource base provides our young people. The town of Fairview, for example, is home to Fairview College, an institution through which we hope to educate our young people, to teach them new skills and keep them in the area.

However, Mr. Speaker, just as there is optimism in Dunvegan, there is also some cause for concern. Dunvegan is, in fact, like many rural areas, a net exporter of young people. The families in our 36 municipalities raise their families, and those children more and more are being forced to leave because while we have opportunity, we often don't have enough opportunity. This is potentially disastrous. Any community is created by the fabric of history. Any time that a large number of people of a specific generation leave that community, it means that the historical fabric is ripped and is not as strong as it once was. The people that we need to run our farms, businesses, hospitals, community and volunteer organizations, and municipal governments of the region won't be there to do that.

There's no reason why this should happen. With solid economic development policies that would encourage manufacturing and product refining in Dunvegan, we could diversify our economy and create opportunities that would keep our promising youngsters in the constituency. We could tap into the vast potential that this region has to offer. For example, while the region boasts massive numbers in honey production, most of it is refined and packaged elsewhere. Right there we see a prime example of a project that with just the right motivation and policy-making could get off the ground and create jobs in our region, which would encourage our young people to stay around.

The municipalities of Dunvegan have expressed the desire to take a more active role in developing the region. The will of the people is there. It must be matched by the political will of our government to effect change in the area. It is often hard to remind my fellow MLAs to the south – and believe me, Mr. Speaker, from the perspective of Dunvegan, Edmonton is south – of the natural benefits of Dunvegan as a constituency in which all facets of a resource- and service-based economy can be developed. There are no major centres in the constituency that most Albertans would associate with a picture of diverse economic development, but that does not mean that we are short on innovation and know-how. That economic diversity is there, and so are the seeds for greater development of Alberta's north. It benefits nobody in our province to see it depopulated by a lack of opportunity.

Further, Mr. Speaker, the constituents of Dunvegan would really benefit if economic development and learning policies would bring the tools of integration and the knowledge economy to our constituency. I must applaud the Department of Innovation and Science for forging ahead with the Supernet program, which will connect all schools and libraries within the province to the information super-highway. Supernet will help us to educate students and will help us to close the rural/urban divide that is apparent in information technology usage.

But that's just a start. The founding principle of the knowledge economy is that the ideas inside a person's mind are just as valuable, if not more so, than the resources this province has to offer. It is based upon the idea that human beings are the best capital and the best resource we have. The knowledge economy is about ideas, and this has major implications for our education system. Knowing the three Rs is one thing. Being able to appropriately apply them is another. Being inventive thinkers and being taught to think outside the mold is altogether different.

In the end we need an education system that prepares our students to be flexible and innovative so that they as the future leaders of Alberta's communities can develop every one of our urban and rural centres into the economic centres they all have the potential to be. In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, the more we teach our youngsters how to think creatively, the more they will be able to benefit each and every constituency in Alberta. Especially for constituencies like mine, which is comprised of much smaller communities without the natural economic attractions that cities like Edmonton and Calgary and Lethbridge hold, ideas are most important. In a sense we are always playing catch-up. If we can hold some aces up our sleeve, then it can only help us to develop new solutions in our own backyard.

Within our government and in the activities of Albertans we are already starting to see how the knowledge economy is being applied to our rural areas. In the agricultural sector crop diversification has allowed farmers, including many in my area, to experience some economic benefits. As Her Honour noted in the throne speech, the province is geared up to make over $30 billion in agricultural primary and value-added production by 2010. This is good news for all Albertans but especially those in our smaller communities.

We are pleased with the Department of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development's efforts to support a profitable agricultural services and processing business sector. Dunvegan welcomes these innovations and is always ready to help the department of agriculture lead Alberta into the 21st century. I encourage the department to work with municipalities in all the rural ridings and to take these innovations to the people who have done farming for generations and who are the guardians of a proud way of life.

In this vein, I'm also enthusiastic about the merger of the Agriculture Financial Services Corporation and the Alberta Opportunity Company. Creating opportunities for farmers and agriculture and food-related small businesses is the first step to strengthening the industry. By diversifying their economy and allowing them to oversee the next step in agricultural innovation, we can blend Alberta's past with its future and give a greater sense of economic hope to our rural citizens.

So in reality, Mr. Speaker, with the right fine-tuning there is much to be optimistic about. The people of Dunvegan are true Albertans and will say that with pride every time. They are ready and willing to be participants in our growing economy to ensure the prosperity of their families, neighbours, children, and the rest of Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, I hope that I have given you and the members of this Assembly a small insight into the constituency I represent. I also hope that there are others in this Assembly who have the same concerns and also share the same aspirations for their constituencies as I do for mine. It is my hope that we can all work together to effect change for our rural communities and for the continued prosperity of all of Alberta.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: We have another five minutes for questions or comments if any member wishes to ask.

Seeing nobody rising to ask questions, we'll proceed with the next speaker. Any other member want to respond? The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

MS KRYCZKA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a distinct honour and privilege for me today to stand in the House and respond to the Speech from the Throne. I wish, first of all, to pay tribute to the Lieutenant Governor for her eloquent reading of the Speech from the Throne. I would also like to take this opportunity to thank her for her tireless dedication to this province. I really feel that she is a superb representative of Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth II. The Honourable Lois Hole brings class and dignity and a wonderful sense of humour to her duties as Lieutenant Governor. Her Honour's unwavering commitment to Alberta is widely respected, and she brings renewed credibility to Alberta's traditions of monarchy and state, which is so very important, as it shows our youth the prestige of our traditions.

I would like to extend heartfelt condolences to Her Majesty and members of the royal family on behalf of my constituency of Calgary-West on the passing of Princess Margaret, Countess of Snowden. Condolences are also passed on behalf of Calgary-West to the family of the Hon. H.A. "Bud" Olson. He was a great Albertan and will be surely missed.

Mr. Speaker, I'm very proud to represent the people of Calgary-West in this Assembly today. I know that they share a vision for the future. I have discussed with them actually many of the initiatives and ideas that were brought forth in the Speech from the Throne. Their feelings are very clear that we as a government must continue down, first of all, the path of fiscal responsibility as we address Alberta's concerns both in the present and in the future.

Mr. Speaker, along with my constituents I am extremely proud of this province. Alberta is the province to live in. I think it is important for us to realize, though, why we are proud and that much of our pride has come from our history and also the good fortune that we have all been privileged to experience largely through the revenues of our energy sector.

But, Mr. Speaker, many Albertans are concerned about our future. They are pleased that the government has realized the need to be proactive and to undertake widespread public consultations through the regional Future Summits and also the Red Deer Future Summit. I attended the Future Summit in Red Deer, as well as co-chairing the Calgary regional forum and hosting a Future forum in Calgary-West. The commitment of Albertans at all these summit meetings was evident. They told us through their values, which were carefully crafted, their vision for Alberta five, 10, and 20 years into the future. It is a real daunting challenge to realistically think that far ahead, yet it was one that I feel they met very well. At all levels of consultation I was always very impressed with the depth of knowledge and caring of the participants.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that many Albertans think about the challenges of the future, and now, though, they look to this government. That means to me that every individual MLA is challenged to make responsible decisions on policies and programs that will move Alberta toward the future that they have envisioned. The future they envision is one outlined in the throne speech, and that includes a sustainable health care system, one which has a strong world-class education system, one which confronts the impacts of an aging population and workforce head-on, and one which meets these challenges with fiscally responsible decisions. Albertans do not want to be in debt, and they never again want to be in a deficit situation.

Mr. Speaker, Calgary-West constituents want this government's leadership also in committing to the challenges of health care reform. They understand the pressures that are currently on the system and that actions must be taken to save it. Our health care system and the Canadian health care system truly are at a crossroads. My constituents, I believe, realize that this government has to make many tough decisions. Many of my constituents also realize that to save our health care system, we cannot simply throw money at the current problems. As in the past that action leads us toward even higher expectations and a deficit situation. I believe they are waiting for outcomes as the government develops new ways to solve our health care problems and as we work through the recommendations in the report by the Premier's Advisory Council on Health.

Mr. Speaker, I realize, as do most Albertans, that health care reform is a very tremendous challenge. Just as we met our lofty goal in balancing our budget in the mid-90s and led the provinces to aim for fiscal responsibility, I believe we will meet this challenge and lead Canada into a new era of health care.

As I said earlier, my constituents would like to see government continue to consult with Albertans on the direction of health care. They want a sustainable – and that includes affordable – health care system. I believe the task before us is to make the best decisions possible and at the same time work to gain public consensus. We're going to have to exercise responsible leadership, making informed, tough decisions, and some of these decisions will be met with protests. However, they will be from a small, loud minority, and I feel, as do many of my constituents, that we must not be swayed by the noise but stand by overall public consensus on our decisions.

For instance, many of my constituents support the reason for raising tobacco taxes. They realize the detriment smoking has on our health and on our health care system and that this is one way to recoup some of the costs. I'm confident in this government's commitment to prevent and reduce smoking, especially among our youth.

Mr. Speaker, I very much appreciated the Lieutenant Governor's reference to the importance of a healthy lifestyle and contributing factors such as socioeconomic status; education; a sense of inner security and external security; the feeling of being part of a larger community; access to jobs; safe and healthy foods; and cultural experiences. As leaders we must try to ensure that the lifestyles that informed Albertans are choosing are ones that will lead to healthier living so we can progress at a fantastic rate. We need to remember that Alberta is acknowledged as a leader in Canada, perhaps begrudgingly by some. I've told myself, certainly lately: Karen, remember your commitment to consult with the grass roots on pending tough choices so that you will be informed, as you are part of making tough decisions.

Mr. Speaker, not only is our health system feeling the pressure of our growing and aging population; our workforce is aging, and the labour market will be under extreme pressure in 10 years or less. This government, I have to say, formally identified this problem of an aging population five years ago and more and now has in hand two major reports as a result: the long-term care review and the aging population study. Since the submission of the extensive long-term care report of which I was vice-chair, there have been many changes in the continuum of care which are supported by Albertans and key health care stakeholders. These changes give me confidence that our aging population and our future will not be taken for granted. I hasten, though, to add that our work is far from done, but we are leaders in Canada in these two major dimensions.

Mr. Speaker, many of my constituents are proud of the achievements of their students in our school system, and I would say that most of them are their children and grandchildren, but many are also concerned about the present labour situation in our education system. They are disheartened and they are very frustrated by the actions that many teachers have been convinced to take, and they feel that this was the wrong approach. I do not believe that confrontation is the best way to solve any problem. I have been a teacher and counselor for a long time in the public school system, and more recently, since being an MLA, I have spoken to many teachers from both the private and public school systems, and I have to admit that I've learned a great deal by engaging with the grass roots of these school systems.

There is no doubt that most teachers care deeply about our children and the importance of their work and that the system may not be perfect, but do they realize that we, too, are faced with challenges? I believe we must be able to communicate directly with those who are on the front lines and not through those who claim to represent them. I do not believe that teachers in our public school system are fairly represented. This is a clear challenge that MLAs, government, and teachers must face together to solve.

Based on the variety of comments to my office during the past three weeks, I am re-energizing in stating that a strike is not the best solution for anything. The government should take a long hard look at our education system with regard to making, perhaps, some needed changes that will benefit, most important of all in our learning system, the children. Our children and our grandchildren – and I have nine, so I have a real investment in the future of young people – are certainly the most important part of this province and a priority of this government, Mr. Speaker. We should frequently ask ourselves: how will this decision benefit their future? We should leave them with a province that they will want to inherit.

Mr. Speaker, it is important that this government has reconfirmed with Albertans that we will stick to our fiscal principles. I am hugely supportive, as are most of my constituents, of the government's pledge to balance priorities with accountability. I am extremely pleased this government has reconfirmed it will not spend more than it takes in. We will leave a province for future generations to inherit.

Even though we are in a period of less revenues, Mr. Speaker, I am pleased this government has pledged to work to sustain our strong economy. I am very pleased the Lieutenant Governor also shared with Albertans that this government will be reviewing and assessing our current fiscal and accounting policies to ensure we remain a leader in fiscal planning. My constituents will be encouraged knowing that we will not allow ourselves to fall into the trap of deficits and overspending.

Mr. Speaker, I am excited about the year 2002 and beyond, and I am very proud to reconfirm my commitment to my constituents and Albertans that Alberta will continue to be a leader in Canada for many years to come.

Thank you.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Hon. members, you now have five minutes to ask brief questions, to make comments, and to receive response.

Seeing nobody rising to ask questions or make comments, the chair will now recognize the Deputy Premier.

MRS. McCLELLAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise today to make a few comments on the Speech from the Throne. First, I too, as many of my colleagues have in the Legislature, would like to acknowledge the very gracious delivery of the speech by Her Honour. Our province is indeed fortunate to have Her Honour, the Hon. Lois Hole, as Her Majesty's representative. She has, as some have indicated, a wonderful sense of humour, but she has a warmth, a feeling, and a commitment to this province that few could exceed.

You know, Mr. Speaker, the throne speech is always an exciting time for those of us in the Legislature, I think on all sides of the House. It's our first day back in session. It's an opportunity to debate the legislation or the fiscal policies of government, but this year I think it was a very special day. Certainly the commemoration of Her Majesty's 50th year of reign as our monarch and the special music that was performed so beautifully added to that day, and I think a very fitting tribute to Her Majesty's reign and to her work and commitment through her reign were the scholarships, and I know that students in our province who receive those scholarships in the future will be very, very proud. Certainly they exemplify what Her Majesty has emulated through her reign.

The other thing that I think was perhaps more poignant to us this year was the fact that so many of our troops are fighting in Afghanistan. It's a reminder of the very horrific events of September 11, of the pain that families and businesses and friends for more than just the United States or the city of New York felt from those events and certainly is an acknowledgment of the importance of those folks who protect our peace, our security, and our safety. Every moment I think was important, and it's also important to recognize the commitment of the families of those men and women who leave their homes and go to protect what we hold so dear. So those things I think made this throne speech maybe even more important to me, and I have heard a few in the Legislature.

The other thing, though, is that this throne speech covers a number of areas that Albertans have told us are critically important to them, and having the throne speech follow so closely after the Alberta Future Summit, where men and women of our province came together to talk about the vision for this province that we all love so dearly and are so proud of, a vision for five years, 10 years, maybe 20 years down the road – so to have an opportunity after that summit to lay out some of the government's vision, plans, and priorities to follow through on that summit is particularly important. Certainly for all of us who either attended the summit or were able to read of the proceedings or to talk with people who did attend the summit – I think what really came home to all of us is the immense pride that Albertans feel in this province, the tremendous commitment they have to the positive future of this province, and the absolute desire to do anything they have to do to ensure that future is bright for this province.

I'm asked as I travel outside of the province why Alberta is so successful. We are 10 percent of the population, we are not a hundred years old, yet we are the second largest economy and the second largest exporter, and we continue to excel. I have always said that it's the people of this province. People of this province, when they're faced with a problem, don't say: we can't do that. They say: how can we? I think that exemplifies the Albertans that were at the Future Summit.

The throne speech also lays out the importance of our health system and the importance of the deliberations that we will all have over the next weeks, months, and perhaps years in ensuring the sustainability of this system. It is going to require a lot of work from all, and it's going to take a lot of dialogue, and I hope that from all members in this House it will be constructive and with the best interests of the health system as the final route, if there is one. I recall saying, when I had the privilege of being the Minister of Health in this province, that health should not be discussed in a political way. It is too important to all people. I believe the throne speech lays out some very important directions for the sustainability and improvement and increasing excellence of our health system.

I also read and listened with interest in the area of children's services. I, like some others in this House, have grandchildren, four beautiful grandchildren, and it hurts me and pains me when I understand that there are children in this province that don't have all of the necessities, maybe the love and caring and nurturing that all children have every right to have. I support what we can do to work with our communities – our communities, Mr. Speaker – to ensure that all children in this province have an opportunity to succeed, to learn, to enjoy good health, and to realize their dreams. I think that's an important contribution.

Mr. Speaker, we've talked about learning in this Legislature over the last days, and certainly it was discussed in the throne speech. Alberta has been proud for some time to have the most highly skilled workforce in Canada. That has not come about by accident. It has come about by the dedication of the men and women who teach, whether it's in the kindergarten to grade 12 level or in our postsecondary institutions, that commitment but also the commitment and the desire of the students in this province, whether they be children or adult students, to learn and to excel. We have to continue to ensure that we are on the leading edge in our educational opportunities. I believe that the plan that the Minister of Learning has set forward will allow us to do that. There are many components of learning. Some say that children learn more from the ages of one to five than they do at any other period in their lives. That speaks to the importance of children having that basis and background, but from that point on we also have to ensure that they have those opportunities.

It is no secret that I am a strong proponent of research. I am proud of the research facilities that we have in this province, whether they be in an institutional setting or, in the case of agriculture, in a setting that is less traditional, in fields and greenhouses and buildings. Our agricultural industry has benefited greatly over the years from research. Without good research we would not have the agricultural industry that we have here today that allows it to be the largest single manufacturer in this province. It is the largest single manufacturer in this province; 24 percent of the manufacturing is in agriculture. It has an opportunity to grow. It is a sustainable, renewable resource, and with good research we can continue to grow that industry, to have good jobs, to contribute to the economy, but maybe more importantly to ensure that the people of this province, of Canada, and the hundreds of countries that we export to have a safe, reliable supplier of a quality food product, and we will continue to work towards that end.

We talk about healthy communities, and many of the things I've talked about today contribute to healthy communities. I do want to make special mention of the volunteers in our communities. We are blessed in this province with having the largest volunteer community or commitment of individuals of any province in Canada. Canada is the leader in the world; Alberta is the leader in Canada. Those people, who are often not noticed and certainly not recognized often enough, maybe taken for granted, are people who contribute to the success and the strength of our communities and who are, I believe, the best decision-makers in the communities. Frankly, in most of our communities if you are an elected representative, a municipal representative, your pay is not very high, Mr. Speaker. It is a volunteer commitment, and we should always take time to acknowledge those folks.

The last thing that I'd really like to touch on is something that I think is perhaps most important to this province and beyond our province, to Canada and, I believe, to North America, and that is the issue of water. The Minister of Environment has put in place an opportunity to review and to come forward with directions on a water strategy. Mr. Speaker, we often think of water as turning on the tap and having a good water supply to drink and to operate our homes. We take it for granted. We do take it for granted. We have an abundance. We sit on the largest amount of fresh water in North America in this province, but it is a resource that we have to maintain and make sure that we protect the supply and the quality.

We think of water often, too, as irrigation. Well, in southern Alberta you think beyond that, because almost every community depends on an irrigation system for their domestic water supply. Recreation: to the best of my knowledge there is not a natural lake in southern Alberta. They are all fed by irrigation. So recreation is a part of it, but more important is that we have a responsibility as a province to ensure that we protect the quality and the use of that resource. Too often, except in times of drought or water shortages, we let the taps run. We don't think too much about it, and we should think about it all of the time.

So, Mr. Speaker, this is, to me, an exciting start to a session. Yes, we have some fiscal challenges, but as our Minister of Finance has clearly stated, we are fortunate. Because of good, good decisions that have been made in the past, this province is probably in the best position in Canada to withstand those fiscal challenges. Albertans have clearly told us how to manage our fiscal affairs. We will do that, and because of that our economy will continue to grow, maybe a little less than it has been, but we will come through this time.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2) kicks in at this point in time if there are questions, comments to the hon. Deputy Premier. Then, there being no indication of such, I will now call on the hon. Member for Airdrie-Rocky View.

MS HALEY: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a real honour, as always, to be able to rise in this Assembly and address the Speech from the Throne, which, as has been pointed out by the Deputy Premier, was so graciously done by our Lieutenant Governor. We're very fortunate to have a woman like that, of such high honour and integrity, to represent us in this important position.

As a child growing up in Alberta, I had probably not a rare opportunity, probably a fairly common opportunity to have had grandparents from other parts of the world. Three of my four grandparents came from the British Isles, and my grandmother on my maternal side came from London and was a huge fan of the royal family. So as a child it was into the scrapbooks every time a picture of the Queen or her sister or children or, you know, just anything to do with royalty appeared in any magazine anywhere. I had to cut it out and put it in a scrapbook. I have an incredible collection of pictures, of course, going back more than 39 years now, because I'm a little older than 39, but going back to then.

MRS. McCLELLAN: Say it's not true.

MS HALEY: It is true.

But it's wonderful to be able to go back and look at that and to understand, you know, the meaning of all of that, the history that we're attached to by having a tie to the monarchy. I know that there are some people who are against the monarchy, but I think it's just a wonderful connection to a country and a culture and particularly that we here in the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association, that we're all members of, also have links back into that system of government as well. So I, too, have deep sorrow for the royal family on the loss of Princess Margaret and for the Olson family here with the Hon. Bud Olson's death this past month as well.

To have an opportunity to address a few of the other issues that the Lieutenant Governor raised, particularly our soldiers going to Afghanistan – there is nobody in this room or probably anywhere in the world that didn't see the horrifying pictures from September 11 of the World Trade Center and what started this war against terrorism that we are part of as Albertans. Our troops are over there.

I pray for their safety and for their safe return and also for the strength that their families have in having a loved one go overseas to try and defend what we believe in here, which is democracy, which is what in fact we're here representing today. So whether, you know, a person is on the government side or on the opposition side, it doesn't matter. Democracy is what it's all about. It allows us to have an opportunity to get up and brag about our ridings or fight about issues or fight about financial issues. It's about priorities and trying to do our very best to represent the people that live in our ridings.

I particularly had to enjoy the one comment from the Lieutenant Governor about being proud Albertans. I have a number of friends and acquaintances in the United States, and when I meet with them and when I talk about Alberta, they tell me that I sound very much like a Texan. Texans in the United States are known to be number one in the patriotism game, but I think they would be hard pressed to beat out Alberta. Perhaps it's because we have links to Texas that go back years. When I grew up in the oil patch, a lot of the engineers and geologists and owners of a lot of the companies that were here investing in Alberta back at that time were of course from Houston and Dallas. I grew up with these guys coming out to the rig. My dad was a tool push on the rigs. Our Minister of Energy pointed out to me one day that he finally understood me after I told him that I had in fact grown up in the oil patch. Well, understanding me might be a little more difficult than that. But I learned a lot of interesting things in the oil patch, and one of them was to be very proud of who we are. We would go to other provinces for holidays, and when we would get back to Alberta, my dad would stop the car, get out, and kiss the ground. I always thought, well, this is a little weird, but when I saw the Pope do it, then I understood. This was my dad's Mecca. There was no place like Alberta, and he passed that, the love of this province, on to my brother and me and my mom, who – and we won't hold this against her – came from Saskatchewan. But she is as Albertan as they get, except when the Roughriders are in town.

Our Future Summit I think was a great thing. I think it changed; it evolved as time went on. When we originally came up with the concept of a Future Summit, the idea was: what would Alberta be like without a debt? Where would you allocate resources? Of course, the economy started to spiral down just a little bit. Oil and gas resources dropped dramatically and impacted our ability to maybe have a surplus this year and pay down more on our debt. That's unfortunate, but we will get back to where we need to be in due time. But the Future Summit, as it evolved, became something more meaningful, I think, than where it had originally started. It became something where people could talk about what they truly believed this province should be, how we should do things.

I was delighted that the Finance minister is going to look at how we do our books and if there are any other ways and things that we should be doing. We shouldn't be afraid to look at things like the heritage savings trust fund or any of the other issues. Everything should and could be on the table, and I for one think it's awesome that she's willing to do that.

Hopefully we'll be able to take out some of the peaks and valleys that we run into here when it comes to things like infrastructure and transportation, because without those two – you know, we talk about how the most important things in Alberta are health care and education and our seniors and our children. Everybody knows that. That's a given. The areas that are so easy to step past are the things that drive our economy, and transportation is one of the key economic drivers of this province. If you can't build an off-ramp, then maybe you can't build those businesses. That's a problem in my area. We need another overpass in Airdrie. Everybody knows that. Maybe 10 years from now we'll get it, but on a short-term basis we can't even do an on- and off-ramp on the highway, which means that two very large warehouses, that would have been factory outlet malls for Calgary, are not being built in Airdrie at this time. Hopefully we'll find a way to address those issues because if for the sake of a million and a half dollars you lose a hundred million dollars, you probably haven't accomplished very much in the big picture. So along with this review that the minister is doing I hope that there will be consideration given to things like that, how we can smooth out some of those issues so that our economic drivers can still be maintained.

Even though oil and gas are down, our dependency on oil and gas is decreasing. We in fact have a much more diversified economy than we did in the mid-80s, when oil and gas went down a bit – a lot – then too. Those are issues that we can work out. We've got a great group of people, and I know that there are a lot of great ideas that will come forward. The minister will bring back those great ideas, and we'll deal with them in this Assembly, because that's what this place is for.

With regard to our health care system, you know, we always talk about what we maybe don't have. We never talk about the things that we do have. You have a system that's using up over $6 billion worth of resources in a year now. Funding has increased dramatically in the last few years on this, yet you never hear about the thousands of people every day that go into the health care system and get exactly what they need. They get the diagnosis; they get the tests; they get the surgery if that's what they need. We have examples of that in some of our colleagues right here, in our Minister of Seniors, who just recently, you know, underwent very traumatic surgery and came out of it. He's doing so well; he's back at work.

Our seniors are, of course, right up there with children as being one of most important resources and probably an underutilized resource as well. Unrecognized perhaps is a better word. They are the ones that do so many things. I can tell you just on a personal level. My mom and stepfather are constantly volunteering their time to try and raise money for the Elks or for the Royal Purple or for a variety of organizations like that, that then turn around and contribute back into their communities. That in fact is, you know, one of the things that makes Alberta so strong.

We do have a great economy in this province. There isn't anybody that can compete with us anywhere. It's not just a Canada issue; it's a North America-wide issue. When the Fraser forum does their reports on North America, there's only one other part of North America that's ever as strong as we are, and that's Texas. That's oil and agriculture again that come back. So when things are bad there, they're bad here, but overall our two economies are the strongest on this entire continent. We have a lot to be proud of.

Agriculture. Being my favourite thing in the world, I just echo the minister of agriculture's comments from earlier. We have an unprecedented opportunity in this province for value added. It is my hope that by the year 2010 we are at that $20 billion value-added stage, because our resources are our resources. There's never, ever been a reason to ship raw resources out of this province when we have the ability to do the manufacturing and the value adding here. Move up the food chain, give our people the higher paying jobs, and take advantage of that wonderful resource that's renewable and ongoing.

Our Minister of Environment today released his Water for Life report. I'm sure it will be very controversial, but it will also be a fascinating discussion for Albertans to participate in. You know, I think that all of us as MLAs should be encouraging our constituents to get involved. They can do the workbook right on-line. They can pick it up from us if they want to, but everybody – everybody – in this province has an opinion on water, and I'm sure that we're going to hear from them.

Mr. Speaker, in concluding, I just want to say again what an honour it is to be here to represent the citizens of Airdrie-Rocky View, and I appreciate very much the opportunity to have been able to stand and speak in the Assembly. Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2) kicks in. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. At this time I have a question for the hon. Member for Airdrie-Rocky View, and it would be this. The hon. member was discussing the value-added industry and the importance of it to the Alberta economy, and I could not agree with her more. But can the hon. member explain, please, why we are allowing so much of our natural gas liquids to be exported, specifically ethane, in the Alliance pipeline and why it is not upgraded in this province?

Thank you.

MS HALEY: I would be delighted to take a shot at that. I believe that it was the National Energy Board of Canada, federal, that determined that this gas would go out in this form, and we've been trying to work with the industry, in fact, to have more work be done here in Alberta, but it's fairly difficult. Maybe the Minister of Energy could help me out here, but my understanding was that the National Energy Board of Canada approved that in that form, and the only way to undo it is to become very uncompetitive in this marketplace.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: There being no additional questions or comments, then the chair will recognize the hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

MR. HANCOCK: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I as well am honoured to have the opportunity this afternoon to make comments in address in reply to the Speech from the Throne. I would as well like to start by acknowledging and thanking Her Honour the Hon. Lois E. Hole, our Lieutenant Governor, for the job that she does and for the inspiration that she is to Albertans and particularly to Albertan children. Since the appointment of Her Honour and her taking on the role of Lieutenant Governor, she has made it a passion to attend schools in our province and to inspire schoolchildren in our province to succeed. I would like to thank her for doing the job that she's doing. She has really revitalized the role of Lieutenant Governor and therefore revitalized our understanding of the monarchy and the way that our monarchy plays a role in our democratic process. I for one very much appreciate that.

I'd like to comment just briefly on some of the aspects of the Speech from the Throne. The Speech from Throne in itself this year, in my view, was inspirational. I've been a student of government for a long time. I actually read speeches from the throne before I was elected, which I know not many people do. I have copies of speeches from the throne that have been signed by Peter Lougheed and by earlier Premiers and earlier Lieutenant Governors. I have a collection of them. I collect things like this.

Historically speeches from the throne tended to be a fairly dry litany of what was going to happen over the course of the year.

“We’re going to amend the Railway Act. We’re going to do this act. We’re going to do that act.” Really the role of government is to provide a policy direction for the province, a policy oversight for the province, to provide a vision, to provide hope, to paint a picture of hope for the province, where we want to go and how we want to get there, and then the role of government is to look to see what the best delivery model is.

For many of us the private sector does a very good job of delivering most things. The government is a necessary delivery vehicle for some other things, and not-for-profit or nongovernment organizations deliver very well in other areas. But it’s not the primary role of government to be a program deliverer. It’s the primary role of government to set the policy standard and then to make sure that there’s a delivery vehicle and then to audit to make sure that we’re achieving that standard. So the Speech from the Throne this year, in my view, really spoke to that.

A healthy Alberta, working together to build a healthy Alberta. What could be a better set of directions for our government in this year than that very topic?

To start the Speech from the Throne, they’re talking about recognizing Her Majesty’s Golden Jubilee with commemoration through the Premier’s citizenship awards, through the Queen’s Golden Jubilee citizenship medal, and through the Queen’s Golden Jubilee scholarship for the visual and performing arts, again setting a very, very good tone at the very front end of the document for something which I believe to be extremely important.

Mr. Speaker, the reason I’m here in this House today is because my parents taught me that we have an obligation. We have an obligation to give back to our community. We have an obligation to take care of our families and then to contribute to our community. So in this 50th year of the reign of Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth II, what more fitting way could we recognize that Golden Jubilee than to recognize citizenship and encourage citizenship, particularly in youth?

The citizenship award to one student from every high school in the province to recognize the values which make up citizenship and to recognize mentorship, leadership in those schools, and leadership in our community among our youth is to me one of the most important and most significant things that we could do, so I was absolutely delighted that we could recognize the jubilee in that manner and then in order to highlight it have a jubilee medal, which I hope will be presented right here at the Legislature and that we will bring the five winners of the jubilee medal each year to this Legislature to be presented that medal. Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, that medal could be presented at a luncheon where the Lieutenant Governor and the Premier and the Speaker could be in attendance, or perhaps we could even have them in the Speaker’s gallery and have the presentation there.

The opportunities are marvelous to highlight the fact that the Legislature is about citizenship. It’s about what we can each do in our communities to make our communities a better place. While we have the opportunity to be here and to debate public policy in this forum, what’s really important is citizenship back in our communities and how we each play a role in building our communities. So, Mr. Speaker, I’m absolutely delighted that the front piece of the Speech from the Throne was celebrating citizenship, particularly celebrating citizenship and mentoring of citizenship among our youth.

Mr. Speaker, the Speech from the Throne goes on to talk about “the unique character and record of accomplishment that the people of Alberta have shaped through hard work, concern for each other, and the sharing of common goals.” And again I’m inspired by those comments and by what they mean, what they say to Albertans, because what they say to Albertans is that we know and understand that Albertans are pioneers. They’re young, well-educated people who are ready to take on new challenges.

I’m reminded of the time when as minister of intergovernmental affairs I had the opportunity to attend in Redmond, Washington, with the Premier of our province. We met at Microsoft, and we met with their vice-president of research. Now, Microsoft spends $3 billion on research every year, and we were able to let them know that nowhere in this world is there a better place to do research and development of product than in Alberta, because we have a young, well-educated population who are entrepreneurial and pioneering. There’s no place where people have taken up computers faster. We’ve more computers per capita than anywhere else as far as I’m aware. Anytime some new product comes out in the way of a telephone, an electronic telephone, a VCR, the take-up in Alberta is faster than in most places in the world, and it’s because we’re pioneers. It’s because we’re prepared to step out, to try something new, to be entrepreneurial, to be different, to be daring, and to be good at it. So that’s what the Speech from the Throne says to me, and it says that this government recognizes that and will build on that, Mr. Speaker.

It goes on to talk about the Future Summit. The Future Summit is important. I was chagrined the other day when someone asked whether the Premier would direct the co-chairs of the Future Summit that they should not bring forward something that was said by Albertans at the Future Summit. The Future Summit is typical, a hallmark of this government, where we listen to Albertans, but we listen to Albertans not so that we can do everything minutely that we’re told by Albertans, because of course that’s not possible. There are 3 million and some Albertans, and there are many, many different views as to what should be done.

We listen to Albertans in the context of the Future Summit, Mr. Speaker, so that we can shape a vision for this province not based on the 83 people in this House and solely their views, not based just on us going out to our constituents, which is a very, very important part of the democratic process and shouldn’t be overlooked, but also on the types of summits and forums that the Future Summit provided so that there could be reasoned and educated thought and opportunities for discussion so that we can continue to reshape and rethink and relook at where we’re going and how we’re going to get there. So the Future Summit was a very, very important way to help Albertans have an opportunity to provide and guide us in setting a vision for this province.

We then get onto the real context of this speech, the theme of the speech, which was working to build a healthy Alberta and the betterment of people’s health and the province’s health that the government dedicates itself to in 2002. I want to comment just briefly. In the Speech from the Throne there was a comment that said that that is exhibited in many, many ways, not just by prescriptions of pills or providing surgical services but in so many ways that we make ourselves healthier. One of those ways was the teacher who took a student aside to say, “Good work.” I might have expanded that particular part of the speech to also say the student or former student who says to a teacher: you made a difference in my life; I would not be where I am today without what you’ve done for me in the classroom and what you did for me as a role model. We have so many teachers in this province who can tell us stories of being in a store or a restaurant or being on the street or in the parking lot at a movie theatre and having somebody come up to them and say: you were my teacher; you made a difference in my life. I’ve witnessed that happen, Mr. Speaker, and it’s about what makes this province healthy. It’s teachers who work every day with our students to make sure that our students have the opportunity to be the best that they can be, and they do make a difference.

Mr. Speaker, a “sustainable health care system,” because, yes, although we’re talking about health in the broad context, there’s also the health care system itself. We had the benefit in January of what’s called the Mazankowski report, the Premier’s Advisory Council on Health, and that was a very broad-reaching report, 44 recommendations.

I’m not going to dwell on all the recommendations, Mr. Speaker, but there were some in there that we don’t dwell on enough perhaps because we often think of health care on the acute care side. The first recommendation, Mr. Speaker, was one of wellness, and I again really would like to emphasize that. I often talk about in the Ministry of Justice, that I’m responsible for, the wellness side of the justice system. How do we make sure that we don’t spend so much on acute care in the justice system? We do it by making sure that our children have a good start, that they’re healthy, that they get a good education. If there’s any way to keep people out of jail, it’s to make sure that the barriers to their success are removed and that they have an opportunity to succeed. So when we talk about the health care system, wellness is very important.

One of the members of our caucus takes every opportunity to talk about the fact that we should be putting some of our resources into community programs for children so that they can be active and healthy in sports. That’s very right. We do need to encourage that active, healthy activity, and that’s done in so many ways in our communities by organizations, for example, like the YMCA, who provide healthy leadership opportunities for our children and for some of us as adults if we’d ever go. So on the wellness side of the agenda we could do better for Alberta if we would devote some attention to making sure that we are well.

There are so many things to say, and I’m going to run out of time, but I do want to say that we often refer to the Premier’s council as the Mazankowski report, but we shouldn’t lose sight of the fact that there were 11 people who served on that committee and many more who supported them and provided ideas. I want to just reference one who’s a constituent in Edmonton-Whitemud, Dr. Lillian Douglass, who I’ve had the honour and privilege of talking to about health issues since well before I was elected, when I was at a roundtable on health care as a representative of the University hospital and talking about some of the things that are so important and that have come through in this report, like taking measures so that Alberta’s health care professionals are able to practise to the full extent of their training and education. So many people in addition to Mr. Mazankowski made a huge contribution to that report, and I just wanted to take this opportunity to acknowledge that and to acknowledge the good work of Dr. Lillian Douglass, who’s a former president of the AARN, and the others on that committee who made such a contribution.

The other aspect of the recommendations that I wanted to touch on briefly was the question of the contribution of health care to our economy, and we mustn’t overlook that side. It’s not to say that the other ones aren’t important, but health research, particularly in the Capital region, is very, very important. If we look to the next 20 years and the impact that biotech research and development is going to have on our economy and therefore our well-being and our wellness, we can’t diminish that in any way, shape, or form. So, yes, we spend some $6 billion on health care, but let’s recognize what impact that has on our community in terms of the economic driver and the economic engine that it provides for us and the good work that’s done in our postsecondary facilities and our research facilities both in the public and the private sectors as spurred on by the emphasis that we put on health care, but it also contributes back to our community because of health care.

A Healthier Alberta through Learning: Mr. Speaker, it couldn’t be a more important topic. It’s essential that we deal with education in a meaningful way, that we constantly revisit, re-evaluate, and that we recognize the important contributors to education, those contributors again being our teachers. Our goal should be that our children always have the opportunity to be the best that they can be.

I’d like to just reference a comment that was made in a speech to the students in the Ismaili community during their Ishtar awards last year recognizing the success of those students. An ophthalmologist from Ottawa who was the president of the Ismaili community in Ottawa at the time was the guest speaker. He made the point that we have an obligation to maximize our potential, to be the best we can be so that we can contribute, so that we can give back, so that we can make our community a better place.

That would appear to be my time, Mr. Speaker, and I would just end where I started. We all have that obligation to build our community, to make our community a better place, and this document, the Speech from the Throne, is such a good framework for that.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2) option for hon. members. There being none, then I would now like to call on the hon. Minister of Finance.

MRS. NELSON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Because it is our first week in the House and we’re all excited about the opening session and being here again, I’d like to move that we adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would move that we adjourn until 1:30 p.m. on Monday, March 4.

[Motion carried; at 5:06 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Monday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

THE SPEAKER: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. O Lord, guide us all in our deliberations and debate that we may determine courses of action which will be to the enduring benefit of our province of Alberta. Amen.

Hon. members, would you now please remain standing for the singing of our national anthem, and please join in in the language of your choice as I call on Mr. Paul Lorieau.

HON. MEMBERS:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
The True North strong and free!
From far and wide, O Canada,
We stand on guard for thee.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

THE SPEAKER: Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Visitors

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly Mr. Sulev Roostar, charge d'affaires of Estonia. He is accompanied today by his wife, Mrs. Anna Roostar.

Since achieving independence in 1991, Estonia has undergone major political reforms and has obtained very impressive economic stability and growth. In 1999 Estonia joined the World Trade Organization and is now poised to join the European Union. Alberta is home to a vibrant and active Estonian community, and we're proud of the many ways that this community contributes to our province. Today's visit by Mr. Roostar is an excellent opportunity for us to learn more about each other and to discuss ways to build upon the Alberta/Estonia friendship. I would ask that our honoured guests please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

MR. RATHGEBER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed a great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all the members of the Assembly a very special guest who's visiting me all the way from Melville, Saskatchewan. I've known this woman for all the 37 years that I've lived on this planet. I'd ask that my mother, Jean Rathgeber, stand and accept the warm reception of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I do have two introductions today. The second one: they're coming into the gallery later. I'm not sure if the first group is here, but I am going to introduce them to you and through you to members of the Assembly. This is a group of 45 adult upgrading students from Alberta College, which of course is located in the wonderful riding of Edmonton-Centre. They're accompanied today by their instructor, Miss Kim Rusnak, and I'm very glad to be able to welcome them to the Assembly. They're supposed to be sitting in the public gallery, and I'd ask if you could give them a warm welcome.

Thank you.

head: Oral Question Period

THE SPEAKER: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Teachers' Labour Dispute

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased that the Premier has agreed to meet with the head of the ATA. This is what the Official Opposition has been advocating for months. My questions are to the Premier. Why did Albertans have to wait so long and experience the hardship of strike before the Premier would agree to meet with the ATA?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I would remind the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition that this meeting was requested by the head of the ATA. It's been our policy that we stay out of the negotiations. I understand that this is not going to be – not going to be – negotiating a settlement. We simply want to see if there's some common ground that can be reached, and we want to see what can be done in the best interests of the students.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Is the Premier free to elaborate a little bit on what he'll be talking about when he goes to meet with Mr. Booi?

MR. KLEIN: I have absolutely no idea, Mr. Speaker. It's Mr. Booi's agenda.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Can the Premier explain why he excused $85 million in oil royalties in the last two weeks? This is the amount that could have been used to resolve the teachers' strikes.

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, there is an explanation, and it's a reasonable explanation. Alberta Energy, the Surmont Producers Group, and Conoco Canada reached a negotiated settlement in their gas over bitumen issue that results in $85 million in waived royalties in exchange for a gross overriding royalty of 11 percent on future gas produced from the 146 wells in the disputed area.

I think it's important that we point out why this settlement was reached. The agreement was necessary after the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board concluded that continued production of natural gas in the group's wells presented a risk to future bitumen recovery on oil sands leases held by Conoco. The deal doesn't affect our current revenue bottom line, and the waived royalties will largely be recovered over time.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Learning.

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The hon. Leader of the Opposition stated that $85 million would solve the teachers' issues. I must remind the Legislative Assembly that for every 1 percent increase in teachers' salaries around the province it costs $23 million. That amounts to roughly 3 to 4 percent being in this range, so I would respectfully say that $85 million is not the number that it would take to solve a teachers' strike.

THE SPEAKER: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's misinformation like we just heard from the minister that's really causing the problem in all of this right now.

The court's decision to uphold the teachers' right to strike leaves Albertans with some important questions. The reaction from the government leaves us wondering who's in charge. The minister of human resources said that the government would appeal the court decision, and the Minister of Learning said that they wouldn't appeal it. My question to the Premier: can the Premier explain why each minister tells a different story?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, regardless of what the ministers have stated, this is a matter that is essentially in the hands of the Justice minister and Attorney General; that is, the issue of an appeal. I'll have him respond.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is essentially a labour negotiation issue. From a time perspective an appeal of the decision on Friday is not effectively a solution with respect to the labour discussions. However, it's still important that we consider the question of an appeal over the longer term with respect to the inherent underlying issues relative to the time frames and the tests that are involved when a court interferes with a decision of the Lieutenant Governor in Council.

THE SPEAKER: The Minister of Learning.

DR. OBERG: Thank you. I feel I must stand up to correct the statement that was just made, Mr. Speaker. At no time did I say that we would not appeal. I agree entirely with what the Minister of Justice has said. Perhaps the hon. Leader of the Opposition has been listening to some people that are telling them some falsehoods.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Attorney General: is he looking into why his lawyers and the people who recommended to go ahead with the court action didn't understand their own law enough to make sure that it was right?

MR. HANCOCK: Well, Mr. Speaker, I would suggest to the hon. Leader of the Opposition that the opinion and the work done by the lawyers in our department were in fact correct, that the law as we read it from the Supreme Court of Canada would clearly set the bar at a higher level. There is a question which could be appealed. That's why we have appeal courts. In fact, making the decision that the Lieutenant Governor in Council made, I'm convinced that we had in front of us the evidence necessary to make the decision. The fact that the court disagreed with that does not make the opinion and the direction given by our counsel wrong. It just means that there was a different viewpoint, and unfortunately in this circumstance the viewpoint of the justice prevails.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The ATA prefers not to talk to the Minister of Learning anymore, and the teachers want to withdraw all services from his ministry. My question to the Premier: is that going to mean that the ATA no longer can functionally work with the Minister of Learning and we should think about replacing him?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I'll have the hon. Minister of Learning respond in fuller detail, but I would hope that in the spirit of co-operation, in the spirit of doing what is best for the students, there would be co-operation amongst the teachers, the ATA, and of course the Department of Learning. Hopefully the meeting this afternoon will serve to resolve some of those issues to bring about the need for co-operation, because we're all in this together.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I will echo very much what the Premier has just said. What the ATA has stated in withdrawing their services from the Ministry of Learning is that they will not correct diploma exams. If diploma exams are not corrected, it is the student that suffers. They have said that they will not correct achievement tests. Again, if the achievement tests are not corrected, it is the student that suffers.

The committees that we have teachers on from the ATA at this moment are presently doing work that will help the students. Mr. Speaker, from my department's point of view we will continue to extend an invitation to the ATA. If the ATA chooses not to take us up on that invitation, that is their issue. We will, however, continue to ask individual teachers to give us their knowledge when it comes to our committees. The key component here is that it's going to be the students that get hurt.

THE SPEAKER: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Back-to-work Order for Teachers

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On Friday the Court of Queen's Bench clearly told the government to stop playing politics with teachers. I'm pleased that the hon. Premier is going to get involved directly with the negotiations with the ATA, and the fact that the Minister of Learning has been given a time-out and he's been sent to the corner is also a positive thing. Now, my first question is to the Premier. Will the Premier please explain how the government failed to recognize that the hardship would have to be proven in all 22 school jurisdictions where there were strikes?

Thank you.

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, first of all, to comment on the comment, I am not about to become involved in negotiations with the ATA. I want to make that abundantly clear. As a matter of fact, I received a letter about 20 minutes ago from the Alberta School Boards Association also asking for a meeting. That is the association that represents the various school districts that are indeed charged with the responsibility of negotiating contracts – negotiating contracts – and I'll have that meeting, just as I'll meet with the president of the ATA.

Having said that, I forgot what the question was.

MR. HANCOCK: Twenty-two jurisdictions.

MR. KLEIN: Oh, 22 jurisdictions. Mr. Speaker, this speaks to the court ruling, and on that point I'll have the hon. minister respond.

MR. HANCOCK: Mr. Speaker, I have to be careful how I say this. The Lieutenant Governor in Council considered whether or not in its opinion there was an unreasonable hardship to a third party. The court in reviewing that decision indicated that in its view it did not see that we analyzed each of the 22 separate situations separately and made decisions separately with those jurisdictions. In my humble submission, it is very difficult to see how anybody making decisions would sit down and say, when the unreasonable hardship is to a high school student who might not be able to complete their year, an international baccalaureate student who may not be able to complete their program, other students who will suffer hardship, how that hardship differs whether that high school student is in Edmonton or is in Airdrie or is in some other part of the province. Therefore, I think the logic is eminently reasonable to suggest that once you've determined that there's hardship to students, you can apply that determination with respect to each of the 22 different boards. So with respect I believe that the court used the wrong test, if I may put it that way, that in fact cabinet did deal with each of the 22 different jurisdictions and made those decisions and in that circumstance was entitled to do so.

Now, obviously the court disagreed with that analysis, put in their own analysis, brought into that analysis some questions of the different issues that were in dispute which, in my view, did not deal with the question of hardship. Fortunately, Mr. Speaker, that is why we have a Court of Appeal.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: can the hon. Premier please tell the House who gave the legal advice to proceed with the back-to-work order? Was it government lawyers or was it lawyers from an outside firm?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, all of the matters pertaining to the legalities of this case came from the Justice minister and Attorney General's office, and I'll have him respond.

MR. HANCOCK: Mr. Speaker, it goes without saying that when legal advice is given to government, it's given by and on behalf of the Attorney General.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My third question is to the Minister of Learning. Will the minister commit to spending as much energy on the issues in the classroom as he has on the issues in the courtroom?

Thank you.

AN HON. MEMBER: The results speak for themselves.

DR. OBERG: Absolutely.

Mr. Speaker, what the learning system is all about is having kids go through and learn what is necessary to be learned. I believe that we have seen that in the recent PISA results which showed us at the top in the world. You've heard me go on about this before. We have numerous examinations around Canada that show us that we're number one in Canada. We're number one in the world. Talk to some individual teachers and superintendents, and they will tell you that the school classroom conditions are better now than they've ever been. Special-needs funding has doubled.

Mr. Speaker, this hon. member is hallucinating a little bit.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last Friday the government suffered a stinging defeat by having its attempt to order teachers back to work ruled invalid by the Court of Queen's Bench. In his ruling Justice Wachowich made some strong observations, including that the government used fallacious logic and made fatal errors in its defence of a wrongheaded decision to call it a public emergency. I do commend the Premier for agreeing to meet with the ATA president later this afternoon in an attempt to dig out of the mess created in no small part by his colleague the Minister of Learning. A question to the Premier: in light of the Premier's statement last Friday that he appreciates and respects the ATA's decision to ask teachers to stay in class, is the Premier now prepared to work constructively to settle the outstanding issues in this dispute which involves not only teachers' salaries but also improving classroom conditions for students?

MR. KLEIN: First of all, Mr. Speaker, I don't consider this to be a "stinging defeat" by any stretch of the imagination. The kids are back in school. The ATA has given an undertaking that before any further job action is taken, if indeed it is even contemplated, there would be 72 hours' notice. To my knowledge the notice of the 72 hours has not been served as yet, so that indicates that the students will be in school for probably the remainder of this week and hopefully for much longer than that, until the end of June or somewhere around there, when it's the normal time to recess for the summer break.

But to answer the question, it's always been our attitude that we should get along. We have absolutely nothing against teachers. As I have reminded the Legislative Assembly before, in this caucus there are 20 former teachers – and I would daresay including yourself, Mr. Speaker – people who are absolutely dedicated to the cause of teaching and students.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second question to the Premier – and he may need some help from the minister. Are the services of the arbitrator the government appointed last week still available, and if not so, will the government commit nevertheless to allow, subject to agreement with the ATA, an arbitration process to go forward?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I don't think that this Legislative Assembly is the place to get into what might or what might not be contemplated in terms of legislation down the road. When the legislation is tabled, if it is indeed tabled, there will be ample time to debate it at that particular point. Relative to the specific question as it relates to the labour situation generally and very generically, I will have the hon. minister who's responsible for labour reply.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. DUNFORD: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The OC contemplated a dispute process, and when the OC was declared null and void, so was that dispute mechanism.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My last question to the Premier: will the Premier show a measure of goodwill toward teachers as he walks into the meeting with the ATA president this afternoon and rule out the possibility of a unilateral imposition of a contract settlement through legislation on teachers, and if not, why not?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I'm not about to discuss in any way, shape, or form a discussion that hasn't taken place yet.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Accreditation of Private Surgical Facilities

MR. HORNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Some of my constituents are concerned about a recent decision by the College of Physicians and Surgeons to accredit a private surgical facility in Calgary. This facility would perform procedures which would require an overnight stay. My question is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. When will this facility begin performing such procedures?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, the short answer is that I don't know when such a facility would be providing procedures, because an application has not yet been made. I can give this House a background with respect to what has happened so far. The College of Physicians and Surgeons has accredited Health Resource Centre's Calgary facility to perform five procedures requiring an overnight stay. The college has by doing so determined what is medically safe, but as Minister of Health and Wellness it would be my ultimate decision to decide if the facility will in fact maintain the integrity of the public health care system.

The next step, Mr. Speaker, that would have to take place before HRC could start providing services would be for HRC to submit a proposal. My department will then review the proposal and make a recommendation for my consideration. The criteria I will table at the appropriate time later this afternoon. The document is entitled Factors for Assessing Proposals to Provide Uninsured In-patient Surgical Services, and I will have the requisite number of copies to table at a later time.

MR. HORNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental is also to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Should this facility proceed, will Albertans be able to pay this facility to receive insured services so they can bypass the waiting list for joint surgeries in the public system?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, the short answer is no. The longer answer is absolutely no. Under the Health Care Protection Act it would be illegal for Albertans to pay for insured services, and to be perfectly clear, what we have here is HRC wanting to provide and deliver uninsured services. Under the Canada Health Act there are a number of recognitions for exceptions. Uninsured services are procedures that are paid for by the Workers' Compensation Board, the RCMP, the armed forces, other provinces, the federal government, and out-of-country residents, but I'm not aware of any health authority expressing an interest at this time in contracting out insured services requiring an overnight stay.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. HORNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the minister's response, how would the minister ensure that the public health system is not negatively impacted by this private facility?

MR. MAR: As I indicated earlier, Mr. Speaker, I will be tabling the criteria for review, and I must be satisfied that there will be no adverse impact to the public health system, that such a private surgical facility would in fact serve the public interest, and finally that it would not affect Alberta's ongoing compliance with the principles of the Canada Health Act.

Mr. Speaker, if HRC does submit a proposal, my department will provide a copy to the Calgary health region so that it can determine whether there will be any negative impact to the health authority. My department officials will also consider this feedback as they conduct their review and make a recommendation to me.

But to be clear again, Mr. Speaker, I want to assure this House and Albertans that I will not approve any facility that would clearly negatively affect our province's publicly funded health care system.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for St. Albert.

Children's Services

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last Friday night a Grande Prairie boy in the care of Children's Services was left unsupervised in a motel, and the boy proceeded to have a drinking party in his room with about 10 of his friends. My questions are to the Minister of Children's Services. Why wasn't there a safe, supervised overnight facility for this child?

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, we are currently looking into the situation as described by the hon. member. I'll be very pleased to bring forward a report when I have it, but simply put, I don't have all the information. I've asked the question, but I don't have it available.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: do motel owners now routinely supervise children in care as a result of the minister's hiring freeze on qualified caseworkers?

MS EVANS: No.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: can the minister confirm that placing children in motels is a result of the reduced number of caseworkers being unable to seek out appropriate placements for these children?

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, in this House last fall again and again and again I described that we added 475 positions to Children's Services. We had filled most of those positions. There were some positions in remote areas that were not filled. We have had an unprecedented increase in our budget, an unprecedented addition of Children's Services workers throughout the province. On this particular incident that the hon. member is asking the question, I do not know at this time whether or not cost containment or any other situation evolved, but I really suggest that it's premature for me to respond until I get all the facts.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for St. Albert, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Funding for Children's Services in Edmonton

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question is to the Minister of Children's Services. City of Edmonton councillor Michael Phair recently stated that budget cuts to the Ma'Mōwe Capital region are putting children at risk. Could the minister please tell us if this is true?

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, I was quite surprised that at the hearings with the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo on the Child Welfare Act there were allegations that there were significant reductions and cuts to the child service delivery system in the capital region or in Ma'Mōwe child and family service authority. In fact, in the last three years we have had phenomenal increases in our budget here. From '99-2000, when the budget was $120 million, we have increased to today. The current budget up until the year ending is $178 million.

Mr. Speaker, we have provided additional funds for the last two years to Children's Services for after school child care not only through agreements that were external to the funding model but with the Minister of Human Resources and Employment, who has assisted in providing additional funding.

So I'm tabling a letter later today or tomorrow, at your pleasure, Mr. Speaker, which I have sent to the councillor in question who raised these issues challenging them to in fact provide for us evidence that there have been significant cuts.

MRS. O'NEILL: My second question is to the same minister. Could the minister please tell us whether there has been any increase to Edmonton's family and community support service funding?

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, in the last year we've increased the funding to family and community support services provincially by about $5 million. We added an additional $1.2 million to the allocation in the city of Edmonton to raise it to in excess of $9 million.

Mr. Speaker, last November, in co-operation with the child and family service authorities and FCSS, we started looking at a funding model where if, in fact, there can be significant co-operation, the preventive part of delivering child welfare will move in large part to the agencies and support systems through family and community support services, and they're very anxious to take up that challenge. We currently have a committee working with representation across the province between FCSS and the CFSAs to look at ways and means to make sure that children that are only at moderate or at low risk are given supports throughout the community through Boys' and Girls' Clubs, through Catholic Social Services, through other agencies that do not immediately assume that children should be taken into the child welfare caseload, and I think this is very positive. We look forward to providing additional funds for FCSS through our budgetary process later this year.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the hon. Member for Redwater.

Water Management

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the Department of Environment's document Water for Life: An Introduction it says, "Although we suspect Alberta has large amounts of groundwater, we currently do not have data that indicates exactly where, and how much groundwater is available." My first question is to the Environment minister. What makes him suspect that Alberta has large amounts of groundwater when his own document indicates that he doesn't have sufficient data to support this statement?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

DR. TAYLOR: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The document is quite clear that we need to do further mapping to discover exactly where the groundwater is and the volumes of the groundwater. We just don't have good data on it yet.

One of the things that we're hoping will come out of this process that we've entered into is a good education process and a good process for Albertans to learn about water and our water supplies, both our groundwater and surface water. I would encourage anybody that would like to learn about that. We've got a very good booklet out that the hon. member has referenced, and it's quite clear that we still have a lot to learn about water in this province.

MS CARLSON: Then, Mr. Speaker, can he answer this question: how can he start or justify the political process of divvying up Alberta's water resources when he doesn't know how much water there is or even where the groundwater is?

DR. TAYLOR: I am not sure where she's got the idea that anybody is divvying up Alberta's water. We've started a consultation process to ask Albertans important questions about water and water utilization. Nobody is talking about divvying up, and I would encourage the members opposite to participate. I believe I sent all of the members personally one of the documents, and I would encourage them to read it.

MS CARLSON: Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: is doing essential baseline research considered a short-, medium-, or long-term goal of the consultation process?

DR. TAYLOR: Well, certainly, Mr. Speaker, we have to do research and find out information before we can come to any conclusion. What the document is clearly pointing out is that we have to have short-term goals, medium-term goals, and long-term goals. This process cannot just result in a short-term kind of view of water, because as our population grows – we've got the fastest growing economy in this country – we still have to go forward and understand short-, medium-, and long-term goals as we go forward in this consultation process.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Redwater.

Alberta Agriculture Offices

MR. BRODA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have been receiving numerous calls from my constituents concerning the closure of Alberta agricultural offices. They have heard that there will be no agricultural specialists in the field. Removal of these specialists will adversely affect rural communities. I would like to direct this question to the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. Could she please enlighten us about these changes?

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, I too have been receiving numerous calls and letters on this issue, as I think most of the rural members in this House have. First, I would say that it's wholly incorrect to say that there won't be any Alberta agriculture specialists located in rural Alberta. However, having said that, I will say that we are restructuring how we provide services in rural Alberta. We're doing it in response to the information and advice that we received through the ag summit process. So we will be changing the way we deliver those services. There will be hub offices. Some 16 in the province have been identified to date. They will have teams of specialists, and they will have research facilities, laboratories, et cetera. We will have collocations with other partners in some of our regions.

Our call centre hours will expand. You know, farmers don't shut down at 4:30 when our offices close. Their questions might come up at 8 o'clock at night or 6 o'clock in the morning, and those call centres are manned by knowledgeable people who can give answers, not one of these "push button number 1, 2, 3, or 4."

The other thing is the extensive use of our web site Ropin' the Web. Mr. Speaker, it's amazing the number of hits we've had on it from Albertans, from across Canada, and in fact from 127 countries in the world.

The last thing I wanted to say on this subject is a very important thing. I have also been receiving a lot of questions on support for 4-H. Let me make it very clear that this government is not reducing its financial support to 4-H. It is not reducing its support to 4-H. It is a fine program. However, what we are doing is working with the 4-H Council and 4-H Foundation to determine which is the best way to deliver those services to our 4-H members. When that determination is completed, we will let people know.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. BRODA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister. I had the understanding that MLAs would be advised of any changes in their constituencies. Now I understand that the staff of the Smoky Lake office have been offered severance packages, and as a result that office will be closed by the end of March. How can this process be consultation?

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, I'm not at liberty to talk about severance packages of individual Alberta Agriculture staff. That information is private and confidential. However, in this process we did talk with our staff first right across our whole rural services. We value our staff, we respect our staff, and we thought that they should be the first to know and should have options. So they have options whether there is an office remaining there as to whether they might want to relocate, whether they might want to take a severance. I can say this: that severance packages are voluntary, that they have to be approved by our deputy minister, and our staff are being encouraged to apply for any positions that might be available in our department in any location.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. BRODA: No further questions.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Health Care Premiums

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question, as he knows, is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Given that the Department of Health and Wellness does not keep track of how much is paid in health care premiums by businesses, how is the minister planning to assess the impact of an increase in premiums on Alberta businesses?

MR. MAR: I can give this background on the subject matter of health care premiums. First of all, Mr. Speaker, there hasn't been an increase in health care premiums since 1995. Over that same period of time, that seven-year period of time, health care costs have nearly doubled. I think it's well understood by Albertans by reason of health care premiums that our health care system is not a free system. It costs money. It costs approximately $18 million a day, and overall my concern has to be on the delivery of an affordable health care system that has high-quality services that people have access to.

Issues with respect to what may be paid for by employers and so on and so forth, Mr. Speaker – I think most people understand that that would not be the central focus of my attention.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps it should be.

Does the Minister of Health and Wellness plan to give Albertans a free choice about whether or not they pay health care premiums?

MR. MAR: Understandably, again I think most Albertans recognize the value of our health care system, that it's not only important to have good health but good health insurance. We do have a good system, Mr. Speaker, that is occasionally excellent, and Albertans support it. We support it in part through health care premiums. Those premiums which are collected to this point amount to approximately $660 million out of what amounts to what we'll spend this year, roughly $6.8 billion, so roughly 10 percent of the overall costs of the system. We continue to collect health care premiums from individuals. Understandably people don't want to pay more for anything, but I think that if Albertans understand the money that is collected for health care premiums goes to supporting the very good health care system that they enjoy, they'll understand that.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll take that as a no.

Since the great majority of Albertans have no choice under law about paying premiums, how can the minister deny that they are a tax?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, I am not a tax lawyer, nor am I here to give an opinion with respect to whether something is a tax or not.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, followed by the hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Rental Properties

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The former Member for Wainwright who recently resigned in disgrace while pocketing $345,000 in severance from the taxpayers of Alberta was an investor in Village on the Green, formerly known as Park Valley Village, located in the constituency of Edmonton-Highlands. Since this property was taken over by Ulysses Property Management, tenants have been hard hit by dramatic rent increases of as much as $250 per month and the deterioration of the properties. One tenant is quoted as saying: they have slumped up the place. To the Minister of Seniors, who is responsible for housing: what will this minister do to ensure that people living in these developments can be assured that their rents remain affordable and that they are not forced out into the street due to the gouging of property speculators and scam artists?

MR. WOLOSHTYN: Mr. Speaker, the issue as presented by the hon. member is one that is not only restricted to Edmonton nor to particular developers. It's something that we have been trying to deal with. First of all, if this is a question of whether we intend on getting directly involved in the rental market, the answer is no. The best solution to the problem is to ensure that we have a sufficient number of units available to people so that they do have some choice and the volume of supply is such that it keeps the cost down, and we are working on that with the various municipalities across this province.

MR. MASON: Again, to the minister, Mr. Speaker: since some of these properties have been a constant source of concern to the surrounding community for years, will the minister give us some idea of what might be done to ensure that they become stable, affordable, family-oriented housing which benefits the surrounding communities?

MR. WOLOSHTYN: I would like to do that, but unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, that is far beyond my role as housing minister. This is something that is best brought forward to the city of Edmonton, to their planning department. Hopefully they have addressed the issue and, if they have, will continue to address it to ensure that all their neighbourhoods are appropriate for the people that are living in them.

MR. MASON: Mr. Speaker, what will the minister do to ensure that tenants and communities are no longer victimized by the actions of speculators and scam artists?

MR. WOLOSHTYN: Oh, boy. The request is quite heavy-duty, Mr. Speaker. I can't anticipate what speculators and scam artists would be doing. I know that under the area where I have jurisdiction, with respect to seniors, we have a variety of programs such as Wise Owl to ensure that telemarketing and other things aren't hitting that particular segment of the population we have. We have a whole area of government that deals with consumer protection, and I think under that we can't do much more. I would hope that people who are victimized bring forward their concerns as quickly as possible to any appropriate person so that they can be helped as individuals and collective action may be taken by authorities when appropriate.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Alberta Supernet

MR. STRANG: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Residents of West Yellowhead constituency have been questioning me about the status of the Supernet project. My question today is to the Minister of Innovation and Science. When will Supernet come to the West Yellowhead constituency?

MR. DOERKSEN: Mr. Speaker, the Member for West Yellowhead understands fully the benefits that Supernet will bring to the rural community. Since the contract was completed last summer between Bell Intrigna, Axia, and the government of Alberta, a lot of planning has taken place to develop the build schedule. I'm pleased to let the member know that as of late February the build schedule was released. While I can't specifically tell him the individual community dates in the Assembly, if he logs onto www.albertasupernet.ca, a complete list of the build schedule and maps are available there. For any Albertan who does not have access to the Internet, they're welcome to phone any member of the Legislature and get that information that can be available to them.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. STRANG: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplementary question is to the same minister. What are the factors used to determine the order in which communities are to be connected to the Supernet?

MR. DOERKSEN: Mr. Speaker, there are quite a considerable number of factors that needed to be considered when we designed the schedule. Among those is access to right-of-ways. Among those is the design or the architecture of the electronics themselves. Weather, of course, is a factor. One of the parameters was that we did not want to strand existing fibre optics, so there's some negotiation that has to take place with existing fibre owners to utilize that fibre wherever possible. All of these factors have led into the discussion of how we build the Supernet and to which communities it will go first.

The last factor, Mr. Speaker, is that when a segment is finished, a test has to take place on that network to make sure that it's working. That will be the final test for each segment before it is certified as qualifying to be advanced to the Supernet.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. STRANG: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second supplementary question is to the same minister. Can the minister explain the pricing structure re urban and rural for the Supernet fee?

MR. DOERKSEN: Mr. Speaker, the rates that we are giving to the schools, the hospitals, the libraries, and the government buildings in the rural communities will be the equivalent rates to those that are charged in urban centres. That was a key consideration when we designed the contract because we wanted to make sure that rural users had the same access as urban users to be able to develop their communities and had the same availability as those in the urban centres have.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Seniors' Health Care Premiums

MS BLAKEMAN: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Alberta seniors have faced repeated economic penalties, be it increased electrical, telephone, and rental rates or the soon to be increased health premiums. My question is to the Minister of Seniors. Has the minister determined what the effect of this new health tax, this health premium, will be on Alberta seniors?

MR. WOLOSHTYN: Well, I'll speculate for a moment if I may, Mr. Speaker. Until budget day comes, we won't know if there is a premium increase and, if there is, how much. But to go along with the speculation, I would say quite clearly that to lower income seniors the impact will be zero because, as in the past, we will be supporting the health premiums to some 50 or 60 percent of seniors either partially or totally, and that will not change.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Given that 50 or 60 percent of seniors, as the minister mentioned, currently receive full or partial subsidy of health care premiums, has the minister and his department worked out how much subsidizing a higher cost premium is going to cost the government?

MR. WOLOSHYN: Well, Mr. Speaker, it will cost the government zero because what comes from my department goes into revenue, so it would be a balance.

MS BLAKEMAN: I think it's called forgone revenue.

My final question to the minister: has the minister and his ministry determined how many seniors will likely be pushed over the line into poverty by the addition of this new health head tax?

MR. WOLOSHYN: Yes, we have, Mr. Speaker. Not a single senior will be pushed into poverty by this government.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Trade Mission to Germany

MR. SNELGROVE: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Representatives of our government just recently completed a trade mission to Germany. I know it was done in conjunction with the Team Canada trade mission, but it still carries quite a cost. My question is to the Minister of Economic Development. Given the economic realities of today, can the minister justify to Albertans the cost of this mission?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. NORRIS: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and the hon. member for the question. I'm delighted to answer that. As you know, one of the beauties of this job, which I consider to be the best in Alberta, is to go out and sell what the Premier and the team have put together, which is the strongest economy in Canada, the strongest economy in North America, and the continued growth that is the envy of the free world. One of the purposes of these missions is to get out there and sell the Alberta message to foreign markets in order to continue diversifying our economy. We have five or six very major industries, and tourism is one of them. These trade missions serve as an ability for the Alberta government and certainly my department to get out there and tell the people of the rest of the world that we have created something very unique and magnificent here, the best economy in the world.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. SNELGROVE: Thank you. Well, Mr. Minister, given the development of the European bloc as a single trading nation, why would you target Germany? Did you have any results? Was there any success in this mission?

MR. NORRIS: Well, I guess I would need the hon. member's definition of success, Mr. Speaker. However, why we targeted Germany in specific is that it represents the third-largest economy in the world and the second-largest source of overseas investment. Aside from the obvious connection whereby more than 500,000 Albertans can trace their roots to Germany, including Premier Klein, there has been historically a very strong tie between the German economy and our own. We picked Munich because it represents . . .

AN HON. MEMBER: Beer.

MR. NORRIS: Well, yes. It represents the industrial and economic hub of Bavaria, Mr. Speaker. As a result, we expect to get a number of new foreign investment dollars.

With regards to the specific results of the tour, I am very pleased to announce that we met two weeks ago with a company who is now in the final stages of establishing a foundry here just outside of Edmonton. That foundry is estimated to employ 50 to 100 skilled people, long-term, sustainable jobs, Mr. Speaker. The investment is in the neighbourhood of $20 million to $25 million, and we are in ongoing negotiations with two other major companies who, if everything goes according to plan, will be setting up in Alberta in the next six months. Very tangible results, but again, as I said, when we have the ability to sell the best product in the world, it becomes very easy.

head: Recognitions

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, seven members have indicated their intent to participate in Recognitions today, but prior to calling on the hon. Member for Dunvegan, let me draw to your attention the recognition that this is now the 43rd anniversary of the birth of the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Dr. Andries Botha

MR. GOUDREAU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I would like to acknowledge a great Albertan and a great physician. Dr. Andries Botha works at the Grimshaw medical clinic, but even in his spare time he looks for new ways to contribute to the community and the wellness of Albertans.

On August 5 of last year Dr. Botha began his beyond-extreme bicycle trip in Prudhoe Bay, Alaska. Twenty-six thousand kilometres and 139 days later the trip ended in Tierra del Fuego in Argentina, the southernmost tip of the South American continent. This adventure took Dr. Botha through two continents and 13 countries, and as if that wasn't an outstanding achievement already, Dr. Botha then proceeded to climb Mount Aconcagua, the highest peak in the western hemisphere. The climb ended prematurely due to poor atmospheric conditions. Nevertheless, Dr. Botha's trip was a success. What makes this individual effort even more special is the fact that the trip was also used as a launching platform for a trust fund that Dr. Botha set up for children receiving cancer treatment. This is a great example of linking personal achievement with the good of the society as a whole.

Dr. Botha is a great role model for all Albertans, and it's with utmost pleasure that I stand and acknowledge his outstanding achievement. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, the time frame for recognitions is one minute.

The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

Preston Manning

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to recognize an Albertan who was raised on a dairy farm near Edmonton but never ventured far from politics. As a boy he roamed the halls of this Legislature. At age 45 he helped organize and subsequently became the first leader of the Reform Party of Canada. After the 1997 federal election Reform became the Official Opposition in Ottawa with Preston Manning as its leader. This political movement forced our federal government to get tougher on crime, cut the federal deficit, and rearrange government spending. He helped set the national agenda from here in Alberta. He was always gracious both in political victory and in defeat. Honest and respectful are two special words to describe Preston Manning. His contributions to this province and this country do not go unnoticed.

Mr. Manning retired from Canadian politics at the end of January. My colleagues and I and, I hope, everyone in this Legislature join together to wish Mr. Manning, his wife, Sandra, and their family all the best in the future.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Jarome Iginla and Ken Tralnlberg

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of my constituents in St. Albert today I wish to extend warm congratulatory wishes to two Olympic medalists from St. Albert, Jarome Iginla and Ken Tralnlberg.

Jarome grew up in St. Albert, lending his athletic talents to St. Albert minor baseball teams and St. Albert minor hockey teams. Jarome, with his mother, Susan, and his grandparents Rick and Fran Schuchard also lent their musical talents in entertaining community residents over the years. We all know that Jarome scored the second and fourth goals in the gold medal game for men's hockey, which we as a nation thoroughly enjoyed on February 24, but what we may not know is that Jarome donates $1,000 for each goal he scores to provide an opportunity for disadvantaged kids to play organized sports. To date Jarome has given $39,000 to this charitable cause.

The other accomplished St. Albertan is Ken Tralnlberg, who played on the men's curling team and proudly won a silver medal. Ken has curled with our St. Albert Curling Club and rink.

I am indeed proud to honour Jarome and Ken, our St. Albertan Olympic medalists.

India Day Celebration

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On February 3, 2002, the Council of India Societies of Edmonton held their annual India Day celebration. The theme for this year's outstanding award presentation and cultural celebration was Promoting Peace and Tolerance. The essays written by local high school students were very well done and deserve recognition by this Assembly. First prize, Manoj Kumar Saraswat, grade 12, essay entitled Should a State Restrict the Freedoms of Its People to Deal with Security Issues? First prize, Vishesh Kumar, grade 10, essay entitled Should We Apply Gandhian Solutions to Create World Peace? Second prize, Angela Sharma, grade 10, essay entitled How Should We Seek Peace in this Age of Turmoil and Conflict? Third prize, Anuj Saraswat, grade 10, essay entitled Freedoms and Human Rights Are Inalienable Rights of Citizens of a Democracy.

Mr. Speaker, I will table copies of these essays and encourage all members to review them.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

Carter Rycroft

MR. GRAYDON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and recognize another Alberta Olympian. Carter Rycroft plays second on the Kevin Martin silver medal winning curling team. Carter is from Grande Prairie, lived a couple of blocks from the curling rink, and after school and after supper he would run over to the curling rink and fill in if somebody didn't show up. As a result, he curled in the men's league, the mixed league, and the super league. You name it; he was there. And they were happy to have him.

Grande Prairie and indeed all Albertans should be very proud of Carter Rycroft, silver medal winner in curling at the Olympics.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood.

Keep It Simple Club

MR. MASYK: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to recognize a pleasant little surprise I found on 82nd Street and 117th Avenue in Norwood. I would like to congratulate Tom Charbonneau and Lawrence Lathe for a job well done. The Keep It Simple Club is actually a nice and fancy little restaurant they have going. When you walk into the club, you are pleasantly surprised with the elegant decor and pleasant service. This attractive coffee shop certainly is a much-needed improvement for this part of the city and is open from 7 a.m. until midnight, so it accommodates earlier risers and late visitors.

I wish them every success in their business and applaud their decision to provide rental facilities for 12-step programs and other recovery programs with extremely modest rental rates. With an excellent combination may their business prosper and their recovery program be helpful to many people in Edmonton-Norwood.

I'd like to invite all MLAs to visit this nice little spot in Edmonton.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Cross.

Heroic Almadina Charter School Students

MRS. FRITZ: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am very pleased and proud to recognize three very courageous young people. Thirteen-year-old students Hana Kadri and Mary Fares and 11-year-old student Anees Amr faced a very difficult situation on Friday while returning home on the school bus from Almadina charter school. There were 40 students on the bus that day, and Hana sensed that her classmates were in serious danger because to Hana and others the bus driver appeared to be very impaired. Students were very frightened on that bus.

Hana told me that she knew that Mary, her best friend, had a cell phone. They quickly put together a plan. Hana took the first step and called 911 to report the seriousness of the situation, and Anees gave clear directions to the Calgary police. Other students distracted the driver while Hana's important call was being made.

Mr. Speaker, the quick action of Hana, Mary, and Anees prevented what could have been a very serious tragedy, and I have written to the Calgary chief of police to strongly support that these brave students receive a special commendation from the Calgary Police Service.

I would ask all members of the Assembly to join me in congratulating Hana, Mary, and Anees for their heroic action.

THE CLERK: Pursuant to Standing Order 37.1(2) I wish to advise the House that the following document was tabled today with the office of the Clerk: Alberta Racing Corporation 2000 annual review, the hon. Mr. Stevens, Minister of Gaming.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I have two tablings. The first is the copies of the speeches prepared by students from Old Scona and J. Percy Page high school that I referred to in my recognition.

The second is five copies of a petition with 4,549 signatures from the Alberta Wilderness Association. The AWA is requesting that the government reverse the FMA process in Kananaskis, Ghost, Waiparous, and Burnt Timber forests.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings today. The first is from a teacher at a high school in my constituency. Janice Paproski is a first-year teacher who has 22 special-needs students in her class.

My second tabling is from a constituent, Dallas Becker, who has sent me an e-mail with suggestions on what the government needs to do to improve education.

The third letter is from a constituent, Janet Thomas. The letter is addressed to Neil Wilkinson, chairman, Capital health authority. This is outlining her horror at the treatment that was received by her father when he was in the University of Alberta hospital.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings this afternoon. The first one is the program from the International Human Rights Day that occurred on December 10, 2001, at Edmonton city hall. I would urge all hon. members of this Assembly to read the universal declaration of human rights on the back of this program.

My second tabling today is of course the appropriate number of copies of the judgment that came down from the Court of Queen's Bench, the reasons for judgment of the Hon. Chief Justice Allan H.J. Wachowich, on Friday regarding the ATA and our current government.

Thank you.

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, I have one tabling today of a letter I've written to Councillor Michael Phair of the city of Edmonton, which I referenced previously in a response I gave to the hon. Member for St. Albert.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two letters to table today and appropriate copies of them. The first one is addressed to me by Mrs. Fern Olson of Olds, Alberta. She expresses two serious concerns about the education system: large class sizes is one, and the second is the continuing undervaluing of teachers in the province.

The second letter, Mr. Speaker, is from Miss Colleen Cassady St. Clair, again expressing outrage at the way that the teachers' dispute has been handled by this government.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first is a copy of a letter sent by Stan Halluk of Calgary to the Minister of Environment regarding the western Canada study on animal and human health effects associated with exposure to emissions from oil and natural gas field facilities.

The second, Mr. Speaker, is a letter from the same Mr. Halluk to his MLA in support of my private member's bill on the elimination of natural gas flaring and venting.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With your permission I would like to table the appropriate number of copies of a letter I received in my constituency office from a teacher who has had 21 years' experience teaching in Fort McMurray, Manitoba, and now in Edmonton and who indicates in this letter that she has been watching things steadily deteriorate in the classroom over the course of her career.

Thank you.

Private Members' Business

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, before calling Orders of the Day and before the Assembly considers private member's business for the first time this session, the chair would like to review briefly how the changes will affect the operation of this component of the Assembly's business. First of all, private member's public bills will now be considered exclusively on Monday afternoons. The bills will be considered after Written Questions and Motions for Returns. Today there are no written questions or motions for returns. As a result, Bill 202 will be considered at second reading stage, and if there's time this afternoon, then Bill 203 will be considered as well. Private member's public bills start at Bill 202 as there was not a Bill 201 introduced.

Starting this evening at 8, there will be one hour's consideration of motions other than government motions on Monday evenings, and under Standing Order 8(4) these motions retain their places on the Order Paper until they're "given 60 minutes of debate [plus] 5 minutes for the mover . . . to close debate" unless the debate concludes before these limits are reached.

Under Standing Order 29(3) the time limits for speaking on private member's public bills, motions other than government motions, written questions, and motions for returns are 20 minutes for the Premier and the Leader of the Opposition, 10 minutes' speaking time and five minutes to close debate to the mover, and 10 minutes to all other members. There is no question and comment session for private member's business.

The chair would also note that the amendments to the Standing Orders may result in a different pace for consideration of private member's public bills, which should be interesting to monitor.

Environmental Protection and Enhancement (Clean-up Instructions) Amendment Act, 2002

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

MRS. JABLONSKI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to rise today to speak to Bill 202, the Environmental Protection and Enhancement (Clean-up Instructions) Amendment Act, 2002. I am very pleased because it represents not only ideas that I have about what constitutes fairness in contamination clean-up situations but also represents the values that Albertans hold regarding fairness and their environment.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 202 is an amendment to the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act which would make it mandatory for owners of any source of environmentally harmful substances to initiate remediation of damage caused by contamination through directions and time lines laid out by the Department of Environment. Further, if the polluter fails to comply with the directions set out by the department, it is then the department's duty to issue an environmental protection order. There are no ifs, ands, or buts. If a polluter fails to comply with the directions set out by the department, they will be issued an environmental protection order.

Finally, Bill 202 requires that the Department of Environment review the EPEA every 10 years.

Mr. Speaker, we in this Assembly all know that environmental accidents happen. We can try to minimize the occurrence of these through legislation, but in the end we also need legislation which governs behaviour when a spill does occur. It is common policy that when a spill is reported to the Department of Environment and if the spill does not pose an immediate danger to either human health or the environment, the department gives the polluter a good faith opportunity to clean up the mess that they have caused. In most cases this works. Albertans are good people, and when they create a mess, they clean it up.

Part of what makes this province so great is the respect that our people have for each other and for our land, but in some cases polluters abuse this good faith opportunity. In some cases polluters are allowed to delay taking meaningful action for years on end, and they often face no penalty for this delay. Meanwhile, the mess they have caused continues to grow, causing more concern to other affected landowners and Albertans. In these cases, it is often not until an environmental protection order is issued to polluters that they begin to take action. This is not right.

Mr. Speaker, most Albertans do act under the good faith opportunity to show that they deserve that good faith, and those who abuse this opportunity ruin it for well-intentioned Albertans. For those who do not clean up their spills, we have section 113 of the EPEA, which forces them to take remedial action through an environmental protection order.

The problem is that there is no continuity between section 112 and section 113 of the EPEA save for the discretion of officials inside of the Department of Environment. It is my belief that our employees in Environment are hardworking, honest, and thorough in their jobs. However, in cases where they have given polluters good faith opportunities to clean up spills and those polluters have refused to do so and they do not issue environmental protection orders, it is not right to ask Albertans whose property has been contaminated to have faith in Environment's discretion.

When we're talking about the protection of the environment, health, and property, we're not talking about subjects that should be at someone's discretion. These are far too important. We're talking about considerations that ought to be enshrined in legislation. Bill 202 represents a small step in the right direction. It provides a link from section 112 of the EPEA to section 113. It says to polluters: our good faith only extends so far; once you abuse it, your time runs out. It also says that polluters cannot plead for more time in order to stall again and cause more hardship to neighbours and those affected by spills. Believe me, Mr. Speaker, if I had my way, the minute a spill was discovered, it would be contained and immediately cleaned up. However, practical wisdom, scientific reality, and legal fairness suggest that this is not possible. But there's no reason why we cannot make the process more efficient in a reasonable manner. This is the point of Bill 202, and this is why I ask all members of the Assembly to vote in favour of it.

I know that there may be objections to Bill 202. Some may argue that normal routes of civil litigation already provide an avenue for the owner of affected property to seek a remedy from a polluter who refuses to clean up a mess. Fair enough. However, I think we need to put ourselves in the positions of small landowners and small business owners. It is often impractical or impossible for small landowners to take large corporations to civil courts. They simply do not have deep enough pockets to go through a drawn-out process like this without losing their shirts. Put plainly, it's often not worth the risk, and by the time they get a court decision, more damage has occurred. This damage affects all Albertans.

This speaks to another objection, Mr. Speaker. Some members may argue that Bill 202 is anti small business. Because private companies would face increased pressure to quickly clean up contaminated property, substantial costs may be added to the operation of their businesses. I would argue the opposite, that this bill protects small businesses. It gives owners more assurance that if another business contaminates their property, it will be contained and cleaned up quickly and that they won't have to operate their businesses in an unhealthy setting or incur excess legal costs to force a cleanup. This is just one advantage of this bill. Another advantage is that it would help Environment officials convince polluters to remediate sites quickly and prevent polluters from delaying cleanup efforts. This increases the likelihood that releases will be contained and unable to cause further damage.

In the end, Mr. Speaker, all of these points show that Bill 202 would provide all property owners with stronger protection for the environmental integrity of their property. This, in turn, would help protect the value of private and public property and would help to protect the overall environmental integrity of this province. Bill 202 also protects the polluter because it requires immediate containment of a spill, and by preventing a spill from spreading across property lines and into other areas, the cleanup will be concentrated in a contained space and will be less costly.

If 202 is passed, Alberta once again will be seen as a national leader in balancing the needs of the environment with the needs of Albertans, property owners, and businesses. Bill 202 simply requires that any source of environmentally harmful substances be contained and cleaned up as soon as physically and scientifically possible. I therefore urge all the members in this Assembly to support Bill 202.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the MLA for Edmonton-Centre it gives me a great deal of pleasure to introduce a group from NorQuest College who are visiting the Legislature this afternoon. Unfortunately, their timetable required that they leave, but on her behalf I would like to introduce the 16 visitors who were here. They were accompanied by teachers Ms Judy Dobbs, Mrs. Andrea Massing, and an interpreter, Mrs. Elaine Cotton. With your permission I would ask that the members of the Assembly do note that they were here to watch the proceedings today.

Bill 202
Environmental Protection and Enhancement
(Clean-up Instructions) Amendment Act, 2002

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the hon. Minister of Environment.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to support the bill brought forward by the MLA for Red Deer-North. Certainly, as we see it, the highlights of this bill would be that it requires the director to issue instructions for cleaning up after a release that has been reported under section 110 of the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act, and if these instructions are not followed, the director must issue an environmental protection order. Nice to see "must" put into this legislation. So often we see changes come that are not as incisive as this, and certainly in terms of environmental cleanup this is an added benefit as we see it.

Also, we believe one of the highlights is the requirement for review of the EPEA every 10 years with recommendations for amendments presented to the Legislature one year into the review. Having those sunset clauses are a good idea we think. As we see it, the object of this bill is to strengthen requirements for the director to be able to issue cleanup orders after the release of a substance that may cause, is causing, or has caused an adverse effect. No doubt the member has had some concerns from people in and around her constituency. We've heard some of those concerns as well and are very happy to see that she's taking action in that regard.

Currently there is a requirement for the person responsible for the release to take appropriate action. However, there are no provisions for the director to issue specific orders. As the member stated, most Albertans are very good corporate citizens. However, we do have some instances where that isn't the case, and we support this change. It's a reasonable change, Mr. Speaker. It requires the director to take action. Often legislation only says that the director may take a specific action. Under these amendments the director must issue the cleanup instructions, and if they are not followed, an environmental protection order may be issued.

Legislation of this size we believe also should be regularly reviewed, and every 10 years or after every second election is a good time frame to put in here. The one absence we see is that there is no mention in section 2 about a time line for issuing the instructions. It could be tightened up just a little bit in that regard.

Too bad this had to come forward from a private member. We would have liked to have seen this kind of direction from the government itself. However, I see that the Minister of Environment is on his feet to speak next, Mr. Speaker, so perhaps he will stand up and let the Assembly know that this is one of his first orders of business for this session.

Thank you.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Environment.

DR. TAYLOR: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and it is indeed a pleasure for me to rise and talk to this bill. The intent of the bill is very laudable, and we certainly support the intent of the bill. Nobody wants spills to be out there and to not be cleaned up. I mean, we all want spills to be cleaned up immediately. We all want them cleaned up appropriately and as quickly as possible.

Before talking about that aspect of the bill, let me talk about number 4. We wholeheartedly support number 4, section 257: "The Minister must begin a comprehensive review of this Act within 10 years." Certainly that is very valuable. I would think that all legislation should have that requirement in it. All legislation should be reviewed on a regular basis. I would certainly, you know, support that and encourage other ministers to take a look at having that in their legislation as well. It's a valuable thing to have. So, as I say, we certainly agree with the intent of the act. It's a valuable piece of legislation.

However, I have a little problem with just one word in the act, and that is the word "must." It says, "When the release of a substance has been reported under section 110, the Director must issue . . ." Well, in some cases that's good, Mr. Speaker, but in reality and practicality the way things happen are that somebody spills a little bit of diesel on the ground. They then phone the Department of Environment, as they are required to do, and say: we've had this spill; send somebody out. So we send somebody out. But in most cases – and there are thousands of these calls and thousands of these spills every year – by the time the department official gets out there, it's already cleaned up, and the department official looks at it and says "Yup" and signs off on it. It is cleaned up. For him then to have to go back, which he would have to under this legislation, and do an order, issue instructions and do the paperwork when the spill is already cleaned up, doesn't make a lot of sense. As I said, there are any number of these spills that industry responsibly cleans up.

So what we would like to see – and perhaps the member would consider it in some future iteration of the act as we go through the debate on this act – is that that "must" could be replaced with "may." Then if the company isn't doing their job, the director could certainly issue that order, but if the company has already got the spill cleaned up by the time an inspector gets there or if they are already doing their job, you know, and the inspector can see that even if it's not cleaned up, they've clearly undertaken to clean it up, that they're moving in the right direction as required by the act, then there's no need for the issuance of an order. This would mean that if we had to issue an order in the second case I've just given you as well, when the company is already doing their job, it would once again increase the volume of paperwork that we would have to do in the department. Quite frankly, we don't have the people or the budget to do that kind of volume of paperwork. So what we're saying is replace the "must" with a "may." Hopefully the member will consider that as we go forward, and in that case we would certainly be pleased to support the act.

Thank you.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

MRS. ADY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today in support of Bill 202, the Environmental Protection and Enhancement (Clean-up Instructions) Amendment Act, 2002. I would like to begin my time by commending the Member for Red Deer-North for introducing such an important piece of legislation. Passing this bill is very important, certainly so for its short-term gains but even more so for its long-term benefits, which are likely to surpass our own lifetimes.

The discovery of large deposits of oil at Leduc in 1947 catapulted Alberta from being a largely agrarian province to the forefront of the oil and gas exploration in the western hemisphere. Our economy depends on the revenues these activities generate, and the economies of other jurisdictions depend on the availability of oil and gas, which we're able to supply. Without this discovery and the many that have followed since, there's no telling where we'd be today nor what kind of province we'd be. These ventures, however, for all the benefits they stand to offer, also have risks. Underestimating them and the threats that they pose to our environment can have dire consequences for all, not just for us here and now but also for our children and our children's children.

Mr. Speaker, I was contemplating the ramifications of the impact of Bill 202, and I was reminded of a line from a primary school: don't make a mess you can't clean up. Maybe you've heard it. When we were young or younger than we are now anyway, our parents admonished us for spilling food or drink and told us to clean it up. It's not only common sense to do so, but cleaning up after yourself right away reduces the risks of falls and injuries and shows responsibility for one's actions, and quite frankly it's the right thing to do.

Somewhere along the way, though, that sense of responsibility or duty, if you will, sometimes gets lost. To carry on as if nothing has happened, to feign ignorance or not show the slightest concern for how one's actions might affect the livelihood and well-being of others has become the order of the day for some. Don't make a mess you can't clean up has become: cleaning up is messy; don't. Mr. Speaker, such an attitude is not acceptable to me and I'm sure not to most Albertans.

Bill 202 is in keeping with Albertans' concerns about the environment. At the recent Future Summit in Red Deer survey results indicated that when asked how to ensure the best future for the province, protecting the environment was a close second to improving the educational system among respondents.

The timeliness of Bill 202 therefore cannot be exaggerated. Its overarching objective is to strengthen existing legislation protecting our environment. Bill 202 reinforces the authority and the mandate of Alberta Environment by making those who pollute clean up after themselves not at some arbitrarily determined point in time but at a time line established by the department. Why should we expect anything else? Why should anything less be expected, let alone be acceptable?

Mr. Speaker, you don't have to be an environmentalist to know two things: first, the environment is vulnerable, and second, it is not ours to do with as we please. At best we are stewards of the land and we're only borrowing it for the duration of our lifetime. What we do with it, whether we cause it to improve or whether we cause it to deteriorate, will pass on to future generations. There is little room to move around that fact. Therefore, the protection we establish today will go a long way towards giving our children and our children's children access to a clean, healthy, and inviting environment.

In the past few decades we have begun to move away from the destructive path that celebrated built-in obsolescence and consumption at all costs. We have realized that not only can we and should we recycle, for instance, and that it is in our best interests and future generations' to look at how to find alternative fossil fuels; we have also learned that we need to establish a legal framework to develop pollution standards in order to better handle those who pollute.

What Bill 202 proposes to do, then, is to provide reinforcements to that legal framework. By amending section 112 of the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act, Bill 202 will make it mandatory for owners of any source of environmentally harmful substances to initiate remediation of damage in compliance with fixed guidelines according to the Department of Environment.

It all comes back to what I said before: you make a mess; you clean it up. The difference, Mr. Speaker, is that we're not talking about a spilt glass of milk or bowl of Jell-O. We're talking about chemical compounds that can seep into groundwater, toxins that can infest the soil and make the land infertile, and airborne pollutants that can spread over vast areas and infect a large number of people very quickly.

Mr. Speaker, it would appear to me that here in Alberta, energy resource rich province that we are, we must find a way to balance three very different yet closely interrelated priorities: our need to have an adequate energy supply, the significance to our economy of oil and gas exploration, and the importance of continued environmental vigilance. It is of equal importance that we find ways to prioritize these three issues all at once. While it may seem to some as if they're contradictory, we have to believe that it is possible to do just that. We must have environmental legislation that does not put a stranglehold on some of our province's most important sources of revenue, and we must ascertain that energy exploration, be it for oil or gas or something else, be conducted in such a manner that we do not compromise the beauty and the vitality of our environment.

Mr. Speaker, everyone here is familiar with the catchphrase "the Alberta advantage," and so are many Albertans. It is part of our vernacular, you might say, but also part of us as Alberta. There is a variety of distinct advantages to being an Albertan and to living in Alberta. We have the nation's strongest economy, we have the lowest unemployment rate in the country, we've had seven consecutive years of balanced budgets, and we have the lowest taxes of any province. We also have some of the most pristine environment to be found anywhere on the face of the planet. The beauty of the Alberta environment is second to none, and we must treat it as such. Each year millions of people visit our province, and many of them come here because they know how beautiful Alberta is.

Passing Bill 202 therefore is imperative. It will allow the Department of Environment to act swiftly and decisively whenever a situation arises that requires the department to take action against polluters. It will enable the department to do this in a manner specific to each situation. What it will not do is tie the hands of the department; rather, it will give legislative weight to the department's environmental regulations. Bill 202, furthermore, will not allow those responsible for toxic spills to waste time and, more importantly, waste Alberta's environment. It will mandate that cleanup efforts begin quickly, reducing the long-term threat of toxins to do lasting and maybe even permanent damage.

That said, it is clear that in the course of the last 55 years we've learned how to forge a balance between the intricate relationship of nurturing continued exploration and preserving the environment. We're still learning how to maintain that relationship and how to keep it balanced, of course, and Bill 202 is another step in that process.

We're a rich and prosperous province thanks in large part to our natural resources and our hardworking men and women, who have transformed this land into what it has become today. They have done so without losing sight of the fact that stewardship of the environment is a serious matter. Let's honour that commitment by passing Bill 202.

Thank you.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

MR. MASKELL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's important to me today to speak in support of Bill 202, the Environmental Protection and Enhancement (Clean-up Instructions) Amendment Act, 2002, sponsored by the hon. Member for Red-Deer North.

Mr. Speaker, over the last three decades Alberta ingenuity has led to a reduction in the adverse environmental and public health impacts from energy development and use. People demand a reliable energy supply and a clean environment, and this government has always believed that Alberta can have both. The Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act is this government's foremost example of environmental stewardship.

Those who operate or propose developments will be subject to firm but fair requirements that clearly spell out their environmental responsibilities. Under the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act the department protects Alberta's land resource base by ensuring that land used for specified industrial activities is developed and reclaimed in an environmentally sound manner. The act requires operators to employ effective and efficient conservation and reclamation measures. These measures ensure that the disturbed land is reclaimed to meet the goal of equivalent land capability.

Spurred by strong environmental concerns, competitive forces, and environmental regulations, businesses have developed innovative technologies and pollution prevention techniques that help protect Alberta's environment. However, accidents do happen, and more work can be done by this government to help preserve our environment and maintain its natural value.

Bill 202 is not proposing to reinvent the wheel, nor is it proposing wild and radical reforms to Alberta's current and effective Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act. I'm confident that this bill will not cause any undue administrative hardships on this government, directors of the act, or industries that work on or around the environment. The goal of increasing the efficiency of Alberta's environmental protection legislation proposed in Bill 202 adds a small yet important element to an act that already manages a staggering number of environmental issues.

Simply put, Bill 202 would prevent polluters from delaying their cleanup efforts. Alberta's Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act does currently have a process to deal with industrial spills, but as the law stands right now, if a spill does not pose an immediate threat to the environment, the violator does not have to take responsibility until an environmental protection order has been issued. This can take some time, while the condition of the land deteriorates. I'm sure the members in this Assembly would agree that just because a spill isn't immediately harmful to people or the environment doesn't mean that it shouldn't be cleaned up as fast as possible.

We would be remiss to allow violators of Alberta's rigid yet fair environmental protection legislation to stall and procrastinate from their duty as good corporate citizens to clean up any messes they have made to Alberta's land, water, or air. Any company doing business in this province must also be aware that Albertans care a great deal about their environment. This government is committed to ensuring it continues to have some of the most stringent standards for environmental protection in Canada and North America.

I believe that Bill 202 contributes to the government's dedication to protecting our province. All organizations in Alberta that I have dealt with are outstanding corporate citizens and are responsible and accountable to their stakeholders and to the public. However, we do not live in a perfect world, and we must be cautious of instances where companies or individuals abuse Alberta's good faith policy for the quick and complete cleanup of spills that do not pose an immediate emergency to a community.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that Bill 202 will help this government protect the environment without enacting unreasonable demands on responsible corporate citizens. Any legislation that protects the environment must ensure that the law-abiding companies are not punished as a result of the actions of a few. Bill 202 prevents this from happening. The focus of the Environmental Protection and Enhancement (Clean-up Instructions) Amendment Act, 2002 is on instances where the guilty party has not cleaned an industrial accident that poses no immediate threat to the environment.

Bill 202 would require the department to issue a time line under section 112 of the act that would ensure that cleanup efforts are not delayed. While Bill 202 would protect against harm to human health and the environment, it would also provide greater protection for the environmental integrity and value of private and public property and greater assurance to property owners whose land has been contaminated. I am sure that most companies have no problem cleaning up their spills or mistakes, hazardous or not. Most companies have trained staff and safety plans in place to deal with these situations, although I am sure they hope they never have to use them.

Mr. Speaker, under this legislation it would be cheaper for a business or individual to clean up a spill as soon as it happens rather than wait and do it later. The longer it takes for spills to be cleaned up, the more likely the possibility that the violators will be fined and still remain responsible for the initial expense of cleaning the spill. As the spill spreads as a result of neglect, there is more for the company to clean up.

If passed, Mr. Speaker, Bill 202 would empower directors of the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act to protect local communities from the negative by-products of industrial accidents on our environment. The bill would be an important addition to this government's commitment to revitalize communities by improving public health and environmental conditions and creating jobs. These are the direct benefits of protecting Alberta from the few violators of Alberta's environmental protection laws.

Bill 202 focuses on the balance between business both big and small and Albertans living in areas that could be contaminated. This government has a unique role in facilitating energy development while simultaneously protecting the environment and conserving Alberta's natural resource legacy. As our economy grows, so too does the likelihood of industrial accidents. Simply, Bill 202 would provide more protection against environmental harm than currently exists in the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act. Bill 202 will work for Albertans to protect this province's air, land, and water while building on the premise that environmental protection and economic prosperity should go hand in hand.

I believe that this government has enjoyed a great deal of success in balancing environmental and economic issues relating to the environment. Bill 202 will add to our preservation achievements.

Thank you.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I listened with a great deal of interest to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark and also the hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw regarding Bill 202, the Environmental Protection and Enhancement (Clean-up Instructions) Amendment Act, 2002, and I agree with their analysis.

The environment in this province is pristine when you compare it to a lot of other areas on the planet, but certainly there needs to be further protection. To strengthen the requirements for the director to be able to issue cleanup orders after the release of a substance that is causing or has caused an adverse environmental effect is noteworthy, and it should be done. Now, I don't know if this is a quiet admission that the current policy not only in the Environment department but you can look at it in Occupational Health and Safety, you can look at it in Municipal Affairs, this concept of voluntary compliance – if this is not a quiet admission that that entire concept of voluntary compliance is not working, well, then, that is further reason why I believe that all hon. members of this Assembly should support this legislation at this time.

I'll be brief, Mr. Speaker, in my comments, but I would remind all members of the Assembly of exactly what happened in Swan Hills, what happened at Hub Oil in Calgary, what happened in the hon. Member for Red Deer-North's own constituency a couple of years ago with the hydrochloric acid cloud. Fortunately the wind was blowing to the northeast and it did not go over the city of Red Deer early in the morning, but this cloud would have caused considerable damage to the health of many of the citizens of Red Deer. That is an issue of voluntary compliance, because this incident should not have happened, but it did, and what has to be done is ensure that it doesn't happen again. Another example certainly would be the BP fire last summer in Fort Saskatchewan, the ethane storage facility that leaked and then caught on fire. These are examples.

Now, I'm sure that there are going to be people who say that there was no pollution, that there was no property damage, that there was no one adversely affected over a long period of time by this, but we can't be sure, and this legislation will make the enforcement and protection of our environment that much better.

I don't think that we should perhaps stop here, but it is good to see the word "must" and not "may" finally being used in environmental legislation, and I would like to see this trend continue in other statutes in this province because it is my strong view that this concept or notion of voluntary compliance certainly does not work.

In conclusion, I will remind all hon. members of this Assembly – now, this didn't happen in this jurisdiction or this country, but it certainly happened in Texas, in Houston to be specific, and that is Enron. Enron had a lot of voluntary compliance to various investment rules, and it didn't work out.

Thank you.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

MR. LORD: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker, for this opportunity to rise today and speak, as well, to Bill 202, the Environmental Protection and Enhancement (Clean-up Instructions) Amendment Act. In a nation that unfortunately has no constitutionally enshrined protection of land and property rights, which in my view is one of the most important rights that any nation could or should have and rights that need protecting, it falls to Legislatures like ours to ensure that the average citizen and their property rights are well protected.

In modern times part of the protection of people's property rights entails the protection and security of its environmental aspects and characteristics. It is a job that most Albertans undertake not only with a sense of duty but also a sense of pride and appreciation: the protection of future owners' rights as it relates to the environment.

From farmers in their fields to urban dwellers across this province who all enjoy the benefits of their piece of land, our province prides itself on a history of sustainability and environmental protection. It is a history that extends way back in time, as well, in this province, way beyond the waves of European and other settlers, right back to the long history of aboriginal peoples in this land, who had and still have a profound respect for nature, a communion with nature and the environment. As stewards of our environment Albertans have always realized that for our province to remain at the forefront of national affairs, we must not only preserve the environmental security of our province, but we must strive to even enhance land conditions to ensure that our children and grandchildren continue to enjoy prosperity and a healthy, safe, and enjoyable environment.

I commend the hon. Member for Red Deer-North for bringing this legislation forward for discussion and debate. It seems to me that this is a reasonable bill and one that I will be supporting.

Bill 202 proposes to amend section 112 of the act to make it mandatory for owners of any source of environmental contamination to initiate remediation of damage as per the directions laid out by the Department of Environment. This principle ensures that the department is able to respond appropriately to each different situation. The director may request urgent action in one case, but for a less urgent situation in another the director, he or she, may request a different sort of remedial action. By being so flexible, Bill 202 properly respects the varying and complex nature of environmental hazards and the unique circumstances that individuals and corporations may unfortunately find themselves involved in.

Bill 202 has flexibility in it, but it should be pointed out that Bill 202 is also firm in its demands that once an environmental protection order has been issued for the cleanup of that site, that order must be followed. It must be carried out in order to ensure that Albertans really are protected. This province can afford to be and is accommodating in looking for reasonable and workable solutions for all parties involved in this sort of matter, but it also must be vigilant in ensuring that a reasonable time limit is imposed so that our co-operative nature is not left open to abuse.

Now, I am well aware of the importance of the oil and gas industry in Alberta. I'm sure we all are. I'm also aware that in addition to our proud heritage of environmental protection, Alberta also has a distinguished record of developing its strengths, both natural and otherwise, for the enrichment of this province. To a large extent that development has entailed the exploration and advancement of the oil and natural gas industry. The benefits of that exploration need not be expanded upon here other than to say that it is certainly one of the best advantages that Albertans have. Needless to say, this industry is one of the key pivots on which our provincial history and economy turned back in 1947.

However, along with the benefits that oil and gas have brought I believe also comes the admittedly sometimes onerous task of cleaning up after oil rigs and gas lines, especially if little concern was demonstrated initially by companies in a hurry. Now, most energy companies have done a superb job of ensuring that minimal damage is done to the surrounding land when they drill for oil and gas. For years Alberta's energy policy has already demanded the protection and enhancement of the environment, a policy that has shown a visionary consideration for the air, natural lands, and watersheds of our province. Even today many companies still aggressively pursue new technologies and techniques to ensure environmental sustainability and protection and to ensure that any necessary impacts to the land and the local environment are being kept to a minimum. We already have many good employees in the province working on that as well.

Bill 202 does not threaten energy companies' status as partners and stewards of the land. Rather, it provides them and their industrial partners with an opportunity to work with landowners and others to confirm their roles as protectors of the environment. They can show to us all that their responsibilities and commitments did not end when the oil stopped but, rather, continued to the cleanup and restoration of the local environment as well. This commitment also extends past the energy industry, of course, to other industries as well as they go about their business if that business impacts the environment negatively.

The point remains that when damage is done – and this does happen unfortunately – it needs to be repaired. Repair needs to happen in a timely fashion and in a responsible manner. It need not bankrupt a company or cause the abandonment of land, but advantages must not be given for inaction. Cleanup and restoration must happen in order to protect the property rights of present or future landowners.

Mr. Speaker, as a conservative-minded individual I don't get too carried away on issues. Environmental protection does not need to succumb to the overarching demands, overreaction, or fundamentalist viewpoints of a select few environmental zealots. I don't believe that we have to seal our borders and cut off contact with the land in order to protect it. We do not need strict regulations that stifle and suffocate economic advancement to calm those whose only perspective is to disallow civilization. What we do need to do is overcome the myth that economic development and environmental sustainability must always involve competing values, because it is a myth. We can all work together and steer in the same direction for the benefit of all. I believe that we live in a day and age when we can explore for energy, produce it, use it, and do so with a decent and sincere regard for the natural environment. We have and we can employ the technology of our times to address some of the problems we may face now or in the future. It is all entirely possible, and I'm confident that Alberta will be a leader in this respect.

I spoke earlier, Mr. Speaker, about the need of this Legislature to protect the land and assist landowners wherever possible. We belong to a province where stewardship is a serious matter. Thousands of Albertans rely on our land not only for the livelihood it yields but for the life it has to offer. Farmers, ranchers, townfolk, and basically anyone who goes beyond the larger city limits and spends time in the wonder of our land quickly comes to appreciate the bounty of our natural heritage and wildlife, and anyone who has traveled around this province is well aware of this attitude. One of the quickest ways for anyone to lose respect in Alberta is to act harshly or selfishly towards the natural world and its inhabitants. There is no excuse for that kind of reckless disregard of our nature, and our policies must not allow spills and other sources of hazardous materials to sit and even spread indefinitely.

Bill 202 strives to ensure that this sort of situation does not happen. It encourages parties to work together to find solutions. Perhaps most importantly it ensures that the Department of Environment has the power and the responsibility to enforce our standards and regulations. I know that Alberta's industrial and economic sectors are up to the challenge, and together all of us can encourage a clean and prosperous province for future generations. Our children and our grandchildren deserve no less. It only makes good economic sense. It has cost avoidance. It only makes good health sense and has great cost avoidance if we have a clean and healthy environment.

I support this bill. I urge all members of this Assembly to support this bill as well. Thank you very much for this opportunity to speak, Mr. Speaker.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to rise to speak to the private member's bill, Bill 202. It's the first bill that is being debated in this Assembly under the new rules for private members' bills. I would like to indicate to the Assembly that I'm pleased with the efforts of the hon. member in bringing forward this piece of legislation. I think that it is high time that we recognized the principle in law that polluters have a responsibility to clean up after themselves. One of the hon. members talked about training we all received as children from our parents about cleaning up our own messes, yet sadly that's not always been the way we've operated when it comes to pollution in this province. I think it is really important that we apply that principle to the environment as well and enshrine that in legislation.

Now, the key section of the bill is section 2, which amends 112.1(1) of the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act. I was just going through the Revised Statutes of Alberta and reading the sections of the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act which are amended by this bill. I know that this will please the Minister of Environment, but I find that there is an excessive use of the word "may" in our existing legislation and that everything of substance that I have been able to see in this very cursory examination of a limited number of sections seems to be optional. It's all on the table, as they would say. I think that when it comes to taking immediate action to clean up pollution, the word "may" is not always the appropriate word. The word "must" is sometimes necessary, and I don't think we should use the word "must" when we don't need to.

I was surprised to hear the Minister of Environment indicate that "may" would solve all of the problems which he had conjured up around this bill, but if we were to substitute "may," again it would simply have the effect of making everything optional. If there's a difficulty caused by the fact that something has been spilled, as he said, a little bit of diesel maybe on the road or on the ground, and by the time the officials for Alberta Environment get there, it's been cleaned up and then you still have to issue the order and go through an unnecessary bureaucratic procedure, well, it seems to me that he's got a point, as far as it goes. But is it solved by the addition of the word "may"? If you add the word "may" instead of "must," it also makes it optional in a case where the spill has not been cleaned up by the time the official arrives on the scene. It becomes optional, and other factors may determine the decision to allow pollution to continue to exist and not be cleaned up promptly and not be cleaned up by the person or company responsible for the spill in the first place. So I would suggest that if members opposite are indeed interested in improving this bill and making it work, another amendment, other than substituting "may" for "must," would be appropriate, and it might be along the line that says: if the spill has been cleaned up, you don't have to issue the order. That would certainly deal with the minister's concern without creating just another loophole that you could drive a Mack truck through, Mr. Speaker.

I think that the bill can easily be amended to do specifically what the minister indicates is necessary. That would strengthen the bill. It would still allow the bill to be passed by this Assembly, and I think it should be passed by this Assembly. I think that this is a small step in the right direction, because the alternative to having a prompt cleanup of a spill by the person responsible for the spill is not satisfactory. There are, in fact, a number of alternatives. The worst possible alternative is just to leave the pollution there. That I don't think I need to elaborate on, Mr. Speaker. That is probably the worst alternative.

The next worst alternative is that the government has to clean it up at taxpayers' expense, and we certainly don't support the taxpayers being on the hook for pollution and the cleanup of pollution of individuals or corporations or even other governments. That's just not what people pay their hard-earned taxes for, Mr. Speaker. The other alternative is that whoever comes along and owns the land later on or perhaps they own the land at the time of the spill if they're not the polluter, then they will have to pay for it. I don't think that that's acceptable either.

In my constituency of Edmonton-Highlands there is a 7-Eleven store that's under construction, and that 7-Eleven store has been under construction for nearly a year now. It's on 118th Avenue. What's happened is they built the store and were almost ready to open it, and they discovered that it was on the site of a previous service station, a gas station, and that in fact there was contamination of the ground around the store and under the store. So the opening of the store was halted, the finishing of the construction was halted, and they started to dig, Mr. Speaker. They dug and they dug and they dug, and they discovered that in fact the pollution had migrated underground, as it often does. So now the store is on stilts, because they've had to excavate under the structure.

Now, we didn't have the kind of legislation in place at the time that that service station was operating that we do now, and I would like to think that that kind of thing couldn't happen under our present legislation. But I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, that it points to the relevance of the hon. member's bill, and that is that when pollution occurs, it must be cleaned up and it must be cleaned up by the person who created the mess in the first place. There is no other acceptable alternative. If the Minister of Environment would like to find a way to ensure that we don't have to process orders for pollution that's already been cleaned up, then I'll support him in that, but it really occurs to me that there's a lot more in this bill that's positive than just the fact that it would have to be reviewed in 10 years. I think that the Assembly ought to find a way to address concerns that may exist on the part of the minister or legitimate concerns on the part of anyone else and make the necessary amendments in the committee and that we should pass this bill, because I think this bill is a good bill and it deserves our support.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

MR. SNELGROVE: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed a privilege to address the situation. I can probably come at it from a little different point of view than many of the other members. I've seen it from many different sides. I've had underground tanks in the businesses I've run. I'm licensed by the Alberta government to remove underground tanks, and I can tell you through that you get to see a whole different side of how the business works. I've also sat on a town council, as many of you have, and been aware of the abandoned sites and the contaminated sites in the many small communities we've got, and somehow we have to address that. I can tell you that one size doesn't fit all, and we'll never be able to describe a perfect way to handle all cleanups. So I was very happy to hear the words of the hon. opposition and our members that we do need a certain amount of flexibility with this. No one has set out to break a business or to make it cost prohibitive to do. We have to understand that probably a very high percentage of the spills and leaks right now are cleaned up quickly and efficiently and most businesses take their environmental responsibilities very, very seriously.

Some of the biggest problems we have right now in the communities are the unknowns. We don't know all of the sites, and we have no idea what contamination might even be there. We may have owners of properties that have no idea there were contaminants left on-site and therefore may need some time or some type of help to be able to organize how their specific cleanup will go. Contamination by itself is not necessarily something that is going to leach into neighbouring soil or damage the party's property beside it, but it very well could.

One of the myths, I think, is that it's underground tanks that have caused all of the leaking, and I can assure you from my experience that's not the case. Many of the old bulk stations in Alberta were all above ground, yet the areas below the pump distribution part of the bulk stations are some of the worst contaminated sites we've ever had to clean up. From a surface leak in those pumps we've had to move literally hundreds of thousands of yards of dirt to remove it all.

Even the technology that we have now to remediate the soil – I mean, it's been conventional thinking that we'll haul it away and put it in a landfill site, and if that's the only option to you, that's fine. However, the last few years have seen several Alberta companies develop technology for the burning of soil, which is now being used worldwide, developing the right temperatures to burn it so you don't release the particulates. The soil can be removed from the site and run through this type of – it looks much like a thing that would make asphalt. The soil is burned. It's spread out, or it's put back in the same hole it came from. You can put a plant in a location and maybe do half a dozen sites from the one centre. Now, it wouldn't be economically viable for one station to move in this soil burner, but it probably would be if you had 10 or 12 sites. I know that in Calgary they set up, and I think they did 16.

I think the idea to identify the problem, to work out the time lines and the method of remediation with the Department of Environment, and to bring forward a plan stating the time lines and the type of remediation is probably the single most important part of this bill as well as the section that says: "Now, you've said that you're going to do it. You've said how you're going to do it and when you're going to do it. Then you have to do it."

Also, Mr. Speaker, many of these sites have debatable ownership or debatable responsibility of contamination. In the last 15 to 20 years we've seen oil company after oil company being taken over. The smaller stations are closed, and that company itself may be taken over, so just to find who is responsible or who will be paying the bill can probably take longer than the actual remediation will take. So it's not just a cut-and-dried situation where we've got a spill. We have to contain it, and we have to do it now. In many, many cases it's testing. It's finding out if, in fact, the contaminant is leaching off into other areas.

It is problematic when your property borders another individual's business and their business becomes either shut down or inconvenienced by the type of remediation you may have done. If there's a big hole beside your business, you may have to limit access. There are a lot of reasons why the type of remediation has to be able to fit the situation.

We talk a little bit about being in a better situation than we are. The rules that the government has brought forward in the past decade will just about eliminate the possibility of underground contamination from tanks. The tanks are all now tanks within a tank. If one were to leak, it would only leak into a containment tank. Underground or aboveground tanks all have secondary containment within them now. So I think that in keeping with the philosophy that prevention is certainly the way to go, the government has addressed that in their petroleum tank storage regulations, and with the removal program they've had in place, they've started to address many of the problems that face the contaminated tanks.

We have talked about the concerns of inspectors maybe being a little overzealous or the rules being too stringent or strict, but that really doesn't have anything to do with this bill, Mr. Speaker. If the rules aren't right, change the rules, and if the inspectors don't know how to interpret the law or don't seem to be willing to do it, then maybe we could change the odd inspector.

The other thing that doesn't solve any environmental problem is paperwork. As a matter of fact, probably the biggest environmental problem we have as a government is we generate so much paper that we probably create more problems than we solve. But paperwork won't help get the job done. So I can understand the minister's concern that we don't need to follow everything up with a volume or volumes if in fact the job is being done. I think that's everyone's primary concern, that when we have a problem, we want it fixed, and we'd like to be able to notify the surrounding properties what's going to happen and when and what will be the result.

The other thing that we have to bring in as part of the legislative process is that because we make a law on one side doesn't necessarily mean it's going to be an expense to someone. There are a lot of cases where it's a win/win situation. You're expected to clean up your leak, and any contamination now is going to be looked at and cleaned up. "Why put it off?" would be the obvious question. You've done it now. If it's a leakage that's current, I think that should be dealt with slightly differently than one that's 40 years old. I think the flexibility the hon. members previous talked about is critically important, but I do believe that when it's recognized that you've created a problem or you're the one that's responsible for the property with the contamination on it, come forward with a plan, approval through the department as to the time lines and the method of remediation, and then the department has the stick to use after the carrot approach has failed to achieve the results that we all look forward to: a clean, safe environment for business.

So with that, Mr. Speaker, I would encourage the hon. members to give consideration to this bill. It's a step forward, and I think it's a good step. Thank you.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

MR. McCLELLAND: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a privilege to rise and speak today in favour of Bill 202, Environmental Protection and Enhancement (Clean-up Instructions) Amendment Act, 2002. I believe that this bill is a progressive step forward for environmental protection in Alberta. This is a bill that will ensure future generations will enjoy the pristine environment we now enjoy.

Over the last 50 years we've seen the evidence mount proving that a healthy environment leads to a healthy human being. We've also seen evidence of how contamination of a small area can quickly leach to other areas causing future problems and devastation and even putting human life in jeopardy.

The Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act was groundbreaking legislation when it was introduced back in 1992. It was a significant step for protecting Alberta's beautiful environment. The Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act was the result of large-scale public consultation to ensure that the Minister of Environment brought forward a piece of legislation that represented all Albertans' best interests. When the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act was debated in the House, it became evident that the entire House supported what the legislation was trying to accomplish. Of course, there were disagreements between the opposition and the government on some of the substance of the legislation, but overall all of the Members of the Legislative Assembly agreed that the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act had to be a government priority.

Mr. Speaker, this is still the case. In 1992 the basis of the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act was nine principles. Of these nine, I believe that two principles are near the top in importance: one, "the protection of the environment is essential to the integrity of ecosystems and human health and to the well-being of society," and two, there is "the responsibility of polluters to pay for the costs of their actions."

Mr. Speaker, Bill 202 upholds nine of the principles of the environmental protection act and provides a small change to the act so that the two principles mentioned earlier are made even stronger. Bill 202 is a small adjustment to current legislation, but it is one that has the potential to benefit Albertans greatly. It affirms to Albertans that we care about our environment. It shows them that we share in Albertans' vision of a province that is healthy, strong, and has a beautiful, clean environment.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to mention one of the most important strengths of the bill, and that is this: it will prevent polluters from delaying cleanup efforts. The purpose of Bill 202 is to ensure that the hand of the polluter is forced at a time line determined by Alberta Environment, therefore preventing the spread of contamination and in turn saving the province and, indeed, potentially the polluter money in the long run. But the essential element is that it protects the environment above any other consideration.

Environmental contamination does occur. We all wish that it would not, but we can't deny the fact that contamination will occur no matter how careful a person or business may be. When a spill occurs, I believe it should be cleaned up immediately. There should be absolutely no delay in the cleanup process, and Bill 202 will hopefully encourage polluters to clean up contamination as soon as possible. This bill is based on a principle that polluters will have to be responsible for their actions.

There are many benefits to cleaning up contamination as soon as it occurs, and this should be common sense, Mr. Speaker. I don't believe we should have to tell polluters to clean up contamination quickly, but the sad truth is that we do, not all but some. Bill 202 puts pressure on polluters to clean up their mess so that human life and the environment will be saved from future compounded problems.

Mr. Speaker, may I portray a scenario for the House on why this bill will be beneficial for all Albertans. When you drive around Alberta, it's not uncommon that you'll come across an oil well site. On occasion wellheads will spring a leak either from a broken seal or a malfunction in a piece of equipment. Oil could be sprayed all around the site, doing significant damage to the surrounding area. Now, usually the owners of the well site will clean up the mess as soon as possible so as to avoid a spread and compounding the damage to the surrounding environment and to the property value. But what happens when one of the companies takes a little longer in getting to the site to clean it up? Current legislation does not give legislative weight to the time line set by Environment for the contamination to be cleaned up, therefore opening the door for procrastination and more of the environment being contaminated and property value being subsequently diminished.

A company may take advantage of the good faith opportunity set out in section 112 of the act and clean up contamination on their own schedule. This means the contaminated area will become steadily larger. It's a fact that some of the spilled oil may seep into groundwater or cause problems with livestock. Bill 202 will force companies to clean up their contamination as soon as directed. By doing this, they will avoid having an environmental protection order slapped against them. By avoiding an environmental protection order, the polluters will avoid dealing with penalties, but most importantly it will encourage polluters to clean up contamination quickly, benefiting the environment and human health.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 202 has another strong point that I'd like to conclude with. It also requires that the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act be reviewed every 10 years. I believe this is a very, very important part of Bill 202. By requiring regular review, Albertans will always be sure that our environmental law remains up to date. As years go by, new environmental challenges and technologies develop, and I think it's important for this government to have it legislated that the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act be reviewed so our environmental law will always be current.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta is constantly growing. We must ensure that this growth is done in an environmentally sustainable and environmentally friendly way. Bill 202 ensures that the current act will continue to protect human health and the environment for years to come.

I believe our government is committed to ensuring that it continues to have some of the most stringent standards for environmental protection. They have always put Alberta's best interests to the forefront, and right now Albertans feel that environmental protection is a very important issue.

I'd like to urge and encourage my colleagues on both sides of the House to vote in favour of Bill 202. By passing this amendment, Alberta can continue to be a leader in this country in environmental policy. Again, I urge all members to vote favourably on Bill 202.

Thank you.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to take this opportunity to speak to Bill 202, which appears here under the name of the Member for Red Deer-North. I congratulate her for bringing this forward. I also listened carefully to the eloquent remarks made by my colleague from Edmonton-Rutherford, and I'm quite encouraged by the tone of those remarks and hope that all of us in the House will lend our support to this bill.

The bill obviously amends the existing piece of legislation that we have, the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act, and it amends it in a way which strengthens the bill, strengthens the statute. The act in its amended form will certainly help provide Albertans stronger assurance that if ever any area, any part, any neighbourhood, any site gets polluted because some substance is reported to have been released either in the air or in the ground or in the water, immediate action will be taken and that the obligations of the companies or the persons responsible for the release of the substance, the pollutant, are very clear and that they're enforceable by environmental protection order.

The Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, I think, quite rightly emphasized that the environment is important for our good health, for human life, and even for animal life. A healthy environment is needed for protecting all kinds of species including our own in the current phase of rapid industrialization of our provincial economy. He talked about wellheads and how spillage can take place. Pretty soon we'll have a bill before us that talks about gas flaring and those consequences and how it pollutes our environment and causes human health problems. So we need to do everything that we can in this Assembly to assure Albertans that we're aware of their concerns about the environment, about protecting it from pollution, particularly pollution that's caused by our own economic activities related, as I've said, to a growing pace of industrialization.

It is true that much of the spillage in the past of the contaminants that have led to pollution has been caused by oil and gas exploration, our transportation activities, but we do know that that industry has spawned a whole lot of other industries both in forward linkages and backward linkages. Lots of machinery is being produced in urban areas and rural areas, in small towns and big cities, and this production of industrial technology – machinery, parts, what have you – does expose these communities to the potential of accidental release of harmful substances.

This bill is an attempt to amend a 10-year-old piece of legislation, and I think it rightly proposes that this legislation be subject to regular, legislated 10-year comprehensive review. I'm not entirely sure if Bill 202 proposes that we start this year, perhaps, because the statute that's being amended, the review of which every 10 years is being proposed by this piece of legislation – if this includes that we start this year with a comprehensive review of the legislation that's been in place for 10 years, it would be important for the minister to take notice of the fact that this bill is recommending such a review. I understand the minister spoke favourably of this part of Bill 202, which proposes this 10-year obligatory review of this piece of legislation.

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that since the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act is 10 years old this year, the time to begin that comprehensive review may have come. This bill certainly is an attempt to address that question by proposing a particular amendment to a certain section of the existing legislation, but perhaps we need to go beyond that and encourage the minister and perhaps amend this piece of legislation here to include that the first such 10-year comprehensive review must be undertaken this year because this marks the 10th anniversary, as it were, of this piece of legislation.

So, Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to be able to support this bill before us in its second reading, and I will give some consideration to bringing an amendment later on if I think that's appropriate, which will be with the review of the act section of this proposed piece of the bill.

With that I conclude my remarks. Thank you.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure this afternoon to rise and speak to Bill 202, the Environmental Protection and Enhancement (Clean-up Instructions) Amendment Act, 2002. I would like to commend the hon. Member for Red Deer-North for bringing forward this piece of legislation, and it is a welcome bill. It is a bill required not for the majority of people that do business here in the province but for those instances where accidents do occur and we get accidental spillage or to deal with those people who hope to gain some type of economic advantage by not complying with our environmental standards here in this province.

Of course, we have to remember as well that whatever is bad for society is also bad for business. We certainly have seen many cases where, when violations have occurred, the end result is that the costs are much, much higher than compliance or, in the case of our underground storage tanks program, where compliance with new standards is just so much cheaper than what we're experiencing with the number of underground tanks that have leaked over the many years that we've had underground storage for gasoline here in this province.

When I attended the AAMD and C convention last fall and delegates there were asked to rank their concerns, their number one concern was certainly about air and water quality in this province. When we look at statistics supplied by the federal government, in Canada alone, Mr. Speaker, there are somewhere in the neighbourhood of 5,000 deaths a year that can be attributed to air pollution. The Ontario Medical Association deems the cost in Ontario to be somewhere in the vicinity of $1 billion because of air pollution. This is for admissions to emergency rooms, this includes admissions to the hospital, and it includes absenteeism from work. So we do have to look at this whole issue, and I think that Bill 202 does do an admirable job of dealing with spills and environmental hazards that do crop up.

Now, then, I also think that what this bill does, Mr. Speaker, is it certainly makes us much more vigilant as a society and particularly in this province here, where much of our industry is energy based. Of course, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona indicated that we do have spin-off industries as a result of our great oil resources here in this province and that when we look at our petrochemical industry, for example, we do have the potential for environmental spills that can be very, very costly, and cleanup costs and restoration do take quite a time.

Now, as well, we end up, Mr. Speaker, in this province in certain instances where cleanup is very, very difficult. I think most members would be familiar with the site on 82nd Avenue and 105th Street where gasoline from that particular station had leaked into the ground over many years, and it actually found its way into the sewer system that linked up with St. Joseph's hospital. Of course, when the extent of that leak was determined, the service station was shut down immediately. As well, to clean up that area is going to be a long and costly process, simply because some of that leakage has gone under the street and has migrated quite extensively from the underground storage tanks.

As we talked about as well, with the underground storage tanks, Mr. Speaker, another problem with this type of environmental hazard is the fact that it does get into the groundwater. Certainly with groundwater, depending on the various types of soil, the migration throughout the soil is either going to be quite quick, as in the case of it flowing through sand, or quite restricted, when we get a clay base. Just the same, it is a very, very potentially great hazard and something that we haven't encountered here in Alberta recently. But when we have leakage in underground storage tanks, when the water table rises, so do those contaminants, and certainly we want to keep those away from the surface as much as possible.

So in looking at this bill, Mr. Speaker, I certainly will be supporting this bill, as I am sure most members of the Assembly will. It is a very good bill, and, in closing, I'd just like to say that I certainly do urge members to keep the term "must" in this bill, because in far too many instances voluntary compliance just doesn't work.

With those comments, Mr. Speaker, I will take my seat and urge all members to support this bill. Thank you.

MR. CAO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my great pleasure to rise today to speak on Bill 202, the Environmental Protection and Enhancement (Clean-up Instructions) Amendment Act, 2002. I support the proposed amendment of the hon. Member for Red Deer-North that would have the owner of environmentally harmful substances remediate them according to the directives set out by the Ministry of Environment.

I support Bill 202 because it addresses the health and wealth of Albertans. I also support Bill 202 because the directives would ensure that immediate action is taken to contain and control the source and the movement of contamination. I commend the member for bringing this bill forward in the House for debate. As elected representatives I believe it is our responsibility to define the most effective legislation we can to protect the quality of life of Albertans.

I see environmental protection as a matter of the wealth and health of Albertans. The health of our constituents is at risk when harmful substances are not remediated properly or without efficiency to control the damage. The wealth of Albertans is also at risk when their property values are affected negatively by the pollution. It is often difficult to assess all the subsequent effects which will take place after a spill happens. If the spill is left too long before the remediation occurs, hazards that are leaked into the environment, whether they be on the land, in the water, or released into the air, are not easy to detect without conducting many different tests.

The land, water, or air that the hazard is released into does two things: it disguises the presence of contamination or environmental hazard by blending it within its own elements, or it acts as a carrier for that hazard to spread throughout more land, water, or air. Once contaminants are released, they could travel to a number of places which would pose serious health risks to Albertans. Hazards could make their way into the groundwater we drink, lie hidden in the soil our children play with, or get mixed into the air we breathe. For this reason I support Bill 202. The longer hazards are left, the more contaminants will inevitably spread and steadily become a more serious problem to the health of Albertans and our environment.

Environmental contamination poses great risk to the health of Albertans because it can be ingested through groundwater, as could happen through petroleum leakage or spill – inhalation of petroleum vapours from old oil or gas storage tanks is what happened in the Lynnwood Ridge area in my constituency – or can cause other serious health problems due to long or short exposure to harmful environmental hazards. Bill 202 provides greater protection against harm to the health of Albertans by placing greater assurances to clean up, through remediation efforts, any environmental hazard that could be in the communities.

Mr. Speaker, we have built a quality of life in Alberta that is among the best in the world. We are fortunate to live in Alberta for many reasons. Part of the Alberta advantage is the beautiful and clean environment we enjoy, as it adds greatly to the higher standard of living and quality of life. I believe we have a responsibility to the people of this province to ensure that we continue to protect the land, the water, and the air that is so important to the health of all Albertans and continue to treat the environment in Alberta as a precious resource.

Presently section 112 of the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act gives polluters an opportunity to remediate out of good faith the contamination that they have caused. I believe this is an honourable concept. Nonetheless, I believe it is a concept we must strengthen through more strict legislation. Alberta is expanding rapidly. Our population and our economy are steadily increasing. More people are investing in Alberta because it is a great place to do business, and there is great opportunity for investors to grow and expand. Of course, this growth and development is good for Alberta. However, I believe it is our responsibility as a government to ensure that the growth that occurs in this province is not only beneficial to our economy but sustainable for our environment. Mr. Speaker, if we were to let all spills, even the small and easy-to-fix, be remediated on the good faith of the polluter, we run the risk of two things: the problem not being remediated in due time and giving the impression to the people out there who would take advantage of this system and not act in good faith that there are limited consequences to their actions.

Bill 202 would not only ensure that spills are remediated in a more efficient manner but enhance the ability of the Ministry of Environment to define the terms by which a remediation process could take place without issuing an environmental work order. An environmental work order is a permanent record and can potentially have a greater negative impact on the polluter at a later date. The ability of the Ministry of Environment to negotiate the terms of remediation before an order is issued and have the contamination cleaned up in an efficient manner could be a most beneficial option to both parties. Bill 202 would ensure that the instructions provided by the director of Environment to the polluter are followed, giving a greater credibility to the instructions and ensuring a faster response to the hazard.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that Bill 202 is a responsible change to the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act. It is already a great piece of legislation. I firmly believe this amendment will provide the ministry with the ability to have hazards cleaned up more efficiently, removing the need to rely on the good faith of polluters. I believe that handling environmental hazards appropriately in this province is very, very important. Environmental standards are going to improve as our population and economy grow. We need the means to ensure that these standards are respected and any environmental hazards are dealt with efficiently as they are a risk to the health of Albertans.

A sustainable balance between the environment and the economy is a difficult line to find simply because it is always fluctuating. I believe that we can achieve a closer state of balance by finding ways to ensure that we react to contamination and hazards in a more efficient way. Bill 202 proposes to do just that.

I support Bill 202 because I feel that it will aid our government to ensure that the owners of environmentally harmful substances are remediating the contamination according to the directives set out by the Ministry of Environment with greater immediacy. It would allow the director of Environment to initiate actions to contain and control the source and the movement of contamination sooner.

The beauty of Bill 202 is that it's forward-looking, and I urge my colleagues to support the bill. Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Redwater.

MR. BRODA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to rise today and speak to Bill 202, the Environmental Protection and Enhancement (Clean-up Instructions) Amendment Act. I'm very pleased that the Member for Red Deer-North has brought this bill forward. This bill ensures that all who pollute our province take responsibility for any potential harm done to our land, our people, and our prosperity.

This sensible amendment brings a little bit more of a bite to an already strong, innovative, and excellent piece of legislation, the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act. Mr. Speaker, this act, when it was introduced back in 1991 by our Premier, unified many pieces of legislation into a single powerful act. The EPEA has served this government's ongoing commitment to maintaining the cleanest air, water, and lands of any industrialized nation. In doing so, the act has promoted the health and prosperity for this and our future generations and, also, the well-being and diversity of our unique plants, animals, and geography. Indeed, the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act is a prime example of government putting the values of Albertans first. Only after a massive public consultation was the EPEA proclaimed, and over the past 11 years it has been a strong tool for the Department of Environment to ensure that polluters are held accountable for their actions.

What Bill 202 proposes to do is make a small change to this already strong law and make it stronger by removing any doubt and ensuring that action will be taken to correct a spill of a noxious, corrosive, or toxic substance following a written request by the director of the act. Although there is room for a threshold of tolerance and understanding in some arrangements, when it comes to protecting our environment, we should exercise due diligence and not extend continual good faith to any person, organization, or company that has already breached the trust of government and is known to be a polluter.

One of the long-term effects of this amendment would be to ensure that due precautions are taken to ensure that Alberta's environment remains well cared for. I believe we have in Bill 202 an opportunity to practise prevention by providing strong deterrents against handling hazardous chemicals without the utmost care. Bill 202 also represents a small step forward in ensuring that individuals and corporations are treated with fairness under the other provisions of the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act.

Now, when a director of the act draws a line in the sand, infractions of written directives will be followed by swift action by way of an environmental protection order to ensure that our environment is cared for at all times. Bill 202 calls for consistency and respect for a written request to clean up spills, nothing more and nothing less. Albertans are strongly committed to preserving their environment and deserve to know that there will not be any wiggle room for violations of the EPEA with the written orders of the director of the act.

Bill 202 does not alter the balance between industry and environment but, rather, solidifies the principles contained within the EPEA to ensure that they are applied as soon as a polluter does not comply with the direction, the written orders of the Department of Environment. Some may say that the mandatory compliance orders might cause some hardships on the businesses that pollute. But do we factor in economic hardships when we hand out speeding tickets? It is the same principle. This bill will remove a degree of uncertainty by clearly defining what must take place after the issuance of a written order. This will give polluters and the department more clearly defined responsibilities when a request for cleanup is issued. This creates efficiencies by eliminating any and all guesswork for both the director and those who have a spill to clean up. Ultimately, Mr. Speaker, this can only serve to expedite the cleanup process.

We have seen in other jurisdictions the potential for catastrophe when the safe care of biological and chemical contaminants is overlooked. There must be no second-guessing on the part of the polluters. If they are caught, they will be cleaning up their own mess in short order as well as facing potential fines or other penalties. As an example, I know that in my own constituency there have been some spills. What we find sometimes is that the polluters, who are known polluters, change the name of the company or sell the company yet are principals of that company. This has to stop. I think that when you pollute a particular area, you should be the one that cleans it, because you not only polluted it but you also benefited by farming that particular area, by receiving the products from the ground. I think it's your responsibility as an operator to be diligent and look at what you're doing in this province, because we all want to continue working in our own province.

If we look at the oil and gas industry or any chemicals that are produced in this province, I think it's crucial that if you're going to do business, you should be very cautious and understand what is out there. We all have to live with the oil, gas, the chemicals. We breathe the air. If we don't look after what we've got here in this province – other people would like to move to this province and maintain it the way we have right now. I think we see other provinces, other countries looking at this area and saying: look at what Alberta is doing; we have to follow that example. I know that we have other issues coming up in the future such as the Kyoto agreement, but we also have to look at how we as a province exist so that we can have the benefits of good education, that we spoke about here in the last couple of days even in question period. This all takes into consideration what we do in this province, where the dollars come from for education, for our health system.

What we are proposing under this bill is to make sure that we have a good level playing field that we can all work in, enjoy as members and residents of this province and future generations to come. It's very easy to say: let's cover up what we've spilled; somebody else will do it. I think it's about time under this legislation – and as I indicated, I'm very pleased to see that the Member for Red Deer-North has introduced it – that we do put the onus on those operators and that there is nowhere to hide, that there isn't a rock big enough that they can hide under.

So with that I encourage all members of this Assembly to support this reasonable amendment proposed by the Member for Red Deer-North. It would be a big step in creating an act that is more transparent and is a more effective deterrent to mismanagement of dangerous chemicals, petroleum, or wastes.

Now, we're talking not only about the oil and gas. There are other things as well. We have to look at agriculture. So it's a big spectrum. It's not only one particular individual or company or group that we're targeting with this bill. When we look at the Minister of Environment, he's charged with all environmental protection within this province, not only in oil and gas but, as I indicated, agriculture and everything else that goes with it.

MS CARLSON: No. He's the Minister of Environment, not the minister of environmental protection.

MR. BRODA: Well, he's still the Minister of Environment. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: Now the hon. Member for Airdrie-Rocky View.

MS HALEY: I want to thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and I particularly would like to thank the hon. Member for Red Deer-North for the tremendous amount of work that she and her researcher have done trying to pull this together. I know how much work it is as somebody who brought forward a private member's bill, and I know how frustrating it can get when you know you have a great idea and maybe not everybody agrees with you.

I do support this bill providing that in Committee of the Whole we're able to change the word "must" to "may," and I don't say that lightly. It becomes just incredibly important when we legislate that we realize what actually happens out in the world, and I'd like to give you a couple of examples of how things get basically out of control depending on what the legislation actually says.

Before I became an MLA, I worked in the biomedical waste industry, and biomedical waste was everything from blood and blood products to chemical bags that were used in chemotherapy to even, as gruesome as it sounds, body parts. When people have surgery, the bits that they cut out of you have to go somewhere, and biomedical waste companies handle that waste and incinerate it. They did incinerate it at incredibly high temperatures to make sure that there are no chemicals or anything else that would pollute Alberta or, you know, any part of our environment, and that was awesome. But along comes the government, and they regulate everything, which is fine, except that from time to time regulations can get a little crazy. If you had a spill, a blood spill for example, inside the biomedical waste plant – and this could be a half a cup of blood or less, just something like a pail being introduced into the furnace that there might be a small leak from – you had to report it. It wasn't enough to just report it to the health authority. You had to report it all the way down through Environment, the hazardous protection. You name it. It became massive.

What we did with all of the rules and regulations is that we actually encouraged people to not report things because it was so complex. Something that could be so easily cleaned up with a chemical bath and a good flushing of water, that you could clean up yourself as an employee of this company became a major issue.

It was the same on the trucks. We used to pick up things like – you won't believe this one – finger paints the kids use in school. It turns out that years ago somebody discovered that there was a lead base in it, so of course it couldn't be used anymore. Stuff that we had been playing with as little kids had to now be incinerated. So a lot of it was sent to Swan Hills, but others were picked up by biomedical waste companies because we could incinerate it as well. Now it was just huge. If you dropped one of these boxes containing something and there was a little cloud of dust that went off from it, you had to report it and deal with five or six different people even up to and including RCMP and inspectors and regional health authorities. This is a lot of high-priced help that you're involving in something that's relatively easy to clean up.

So from my perspective after having lived through that kind of situation dealing with regulators in government and people who interpret legislation, it becomes incredibly important to me how things are worded. Whenever we say "must," it means that we're probably going to have to hire more people to go out and enforce the "must."

What happened in my riding because of the Water Act that's now taken effect – yes, Minister, your Water Act – is that the Department of Environment came along through their fish and wildlife branch and got involved in the siting of a dugout. Fine. You know, that's great. We need the department everywhere because farmers clearly don't have the expertise to decide where a dugout should be. The department sited the dugout at the top of a rise. I don't know. There's really not a lot of water that runs uphill, not in my experience.

Right beside that on another farm a farmer had the opportunity to have an oil company dig a dugout for him as they needed dirt for an infill on another spot where they had been working. Everything was going along fine. Fish and wildlife comes along and says: oh, we want to see your permit. Well, he didn't have a permit, and they said: well, you have to get a permit, and you'd better get a permit, and we'll come back and check your permit. Great. Perfect. He goes to the agriculture offices in my area, and the agriculture people tell him: "Oh, you don't need a permit for that. It's on your property, and there's no problem with having a dugout." Right? Agriculture says that you don't need one. Fish and wildlife says that you do. It turns out that Environment says: oh, yeah, gotta have a permit. Takes six weeks to get it, by the way. And once the six weeks is up, the oil company has gone because they're not going to sit around forever digging your dugout. They'll get the infill someplace else. So now he's got a half-dug dugout, and he's got to find the money to finish it.

As a member of our government – and I am very proud to be a member of it, but sometimes regulations and legislation that we pass here with nothing but the best of intentions don't always get translated that way in actual operation and practice. So we have to be more than just a little bit careful in what we say, how we say it, and what gets passed in Assemblies like this one. Whether it's here in Alberta, at the federal level, or in any other province in Canada, wording matters. We have ample evidence to prove that.

The point of all of this, however, is to say that if we get into Committee of the Whole and we can change that word from “must” to “may,” I am absolutely delighted to be able to support that, and I hope that we’ll all vote for it in second reading and see what happens in Committee of the Whole.

Once again, thank you to the hon. member for bringing it forward.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North to close the debate.

MRS. JABLONSKI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Bill 202 will make it mandatory for owners of any source of environmentally harmful substances to initiate remediation of damage caused by contamination through directions and time lines set out by the Department of Environment. Further, if the polluter fails to comply with these directions set out by the department, it is then the department’s duty to issue an environmental protection order. This bill also requires that the EPEA be reviewed every 10 years.

Mr. Speaker, I will consider the amendment suggested by the Minister of Environment to change the word “must” in section 112.1 to “may.” By changing this word, we will prevent redundant work from piling up on a director’s desk. In this way we protect the environment, too, from unnecessary paperwork. If there’s no need for direction because the spill is already cleaned up or is being cleaned up, then we’re just creating a make-work project. It’s not my intention to create unnecessary or redundant work.

I also believe that our environmental directors are competent and very conscientious. We will still accomplish the intent of this amendment without creating work. We will still maintain the word “shall” in the second part of the amendment of 112.1.

Mr. Speaker, this bill is not one giant step for mankind, but it is one small step for Albertans. It’s one small step that will lead to a protected environment and thus ensure the health and safety of Albertans and the health and safety of the environment.

There is a Cree Indian prophecy that states: only after the last tree has been cut down, only after the last river has been poisoned, only after the last fish has been caught, only then will you find that money cannot be eaten. Mr. Speaker, the people and the government of Alberta are the guardians of our environment, and it is up to all of us to make sure this prophecy is never fulfilled. Bill 202 will help to prevent the fulfillment of these words.

Bill 202, if passed, will make Alberta a national leader in balancing the needs of the environment with the needs of Albertans, property owners, and business. I therefore urge all members of this Assembly to support Bill 202.

[Motion carried; Bill 202 read a second time]

Bill 203 Gas Flaring Elimination Act

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I’m honoured and pleased to rise to speak to second reading of Bill 203, the Gas Flaring Elimination Act. This act is very straightforward. Its objective is to eliminate the scourge of gas flaring and venting from the rural Alberta landscape within 10 years. [interjections] Yes, if you’ll all take out your Reader’s Digest version.

Mr. Speaker, the Pembina Institute for Appropriate Development in a February 1999 report called Beyond Eco-terrorism: The Deeper Issues Affecting Alberta’s Oil Patch described gas flaring and venting as the most prominent air quality concern in rural Alberta. The most prevalent type of flaring was solution gas flaring of natural gas from oil wells and gas flaring at smaller processing facilities including sour gas processing plants. There is also significant concern about flaring at test wells where an energy company is trying to establish the pressure of the natural gas reservoir.

Residents living near flares have for many years documented problems with their health, their children’s health, and the health of their livestock, their crops, and surrounding vegetation. The Alberta Research Council recently found that flares fully combust only 64 to 85 percent of the gas that is being directed to them. More than 250 compounds are being emitted from flares as a result of incomplete combustion, including hydrogen sulfide, which is extremely toxic, and benzene, a known carcinogen.

According to the Pembina institute report in 1996 there were 5,246 active gas flares in Alberta. Those flares burned 1.8 billion cubic metres of gas, or about 8 percent of the volume produced. So in addition to the negative impacts of flaring on rural residents, livestock, and vegetation, flaring wastes a very valuable and increasingly scarce commodity.

I wish to acknowledge the fact that significant progress has been made in reducing gas flaring. A few years ago the energy industry made a commitment to reduce gas flaring and venting by 50 percent by the end of 2003 and a reduction of 60 to 70 percent by the end of 2004, I guess. The multistakeholder task force involving the province, the energy industry, and a number of public representatives was set up under the province’s Clean Air Strategic Alliance to monitor whether these reduction targets were being achieved. It looks like the 50 percent reduction target may in fact be achieved by the end of 2002, this year. This is a significant achievement, and I commend those involved for helping to bring it about.

At the same time, it is important to note that the approach to reducing gas flaring to this point in time helped Alberta get rid of the easy half of the problem; namely, the relatively large flares where it was most economic to recover the gas rather than to flare it into the atmosphere. Eliminating the second 50 percent of flaring is likely to be a significantly greater challenge.

I suspect that some government members are going to point to the progress made so far in reducing flaring and question the approach of legislating firm targets for further reductions and eventual elimination of this environmental scourge. In response I would say that sometimes you need legislation to keep your feet to the fire. This government has been a longtime advocate of setting legislated targets for paying down the provincial debt. I ask: why not use the same approach to eliminating an environmental hazard like gas flaring?

I see two major advantages to using a legislated approach to eliminating gas flaring compared to the existing largely voluntary approach. First, a legislated approach creates a more level playing field. Companies which make the investment to eliminate flaring on a voluntary basis are not penalized compared to companies who refuse to make that investment, and as the economic costs of reducing flaring further increase, this will become a greater and greater problem. The good corporate citizens, the ones that are willing to play by the voluntary rules, actually suffer in a competitive market relative to those who refuse to be good corporate citizens. I think that’s wrong, Mr. Speaker. That’s something we need to address.

Second, an approach which sets out minimum legislated targets is more transparent. Everyone understands clearly what they are expected to achieve in terms of reductions. Even those who favour the current approach, the current voluntary approach, have said that Bill 203’s target to eliminate all but emergency flaring under strict conditions is in fact achievable. I want to stress that the bill does include a provision for flaring in the case where there's a real threat of an accident or an explosion.

I also think that it would be naive for members to believe that the progress that has been made thus far has settled the problem of gas flaring. Nothing could be further from the truth. As just one example to substantiate that the issue of gas flaring is far from being resolved, next week in Fort Saskatchewan the Heartland Citizens' Coalition is sponsoring a public meeting on gas flaring and what needs to be done to get the oil and gas industry to eliminate this problem.

I believe that this bill sets up a very reasonable process for eliminating flaring within a 10-year period. Bill 203 establishes a broadly based advisory council consisting of representatives from government, industry, labour, and the environmental and scientific communities to establish a threshold volume for gas flaring that would be subject to elimination within 10 years. The composition of the advisory council in Bill 203 is similar in terms of its composition to the multistakeholder task force set up under the Clean Air Strategic Alliance. However, unlike the CASA task force the advisory council will have the power of legislation behind it. The advisory council will be given the necessary legislative tools to get the job of eliminating gas flaring done.

I remind all members that Bill 203 is being debated at second reading, which is a debate on the principles and intent of the bill and not on its detailed contents. While there may be some details in the bill on which members have questions, I would be very open to consider amendments from members on any side of the House at the committee stage. I think the bill's approach is a very reasonable one and that government members and all members of this Assembly consider the bill on what it is setting out to achieve, including reducing the level of conflict between rural Albertans and the oil and gas industry and improving the environment throughout rural areas of the province.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to indicate that one of the great challenges, I think, which faces us all is to maintain and improve the quality of life in the rural areas of this province. It's under attack like never before. The quality of life in rural Alberta is why many, many people live there, have moved there, or have stayed there, yet with the rapid industrialization of the province it's placed under significant pressure from a number of quarters. One of them and one which has certainly become a very, very serious irritant in rural Alberta is the intrusiveness of the oil and gas industry on their lives.

In particular, I want to stress that the flaring and the venting of gas in this province have had very serious problems. While I think that almost all Albertans share the view that violence and sabotage is the wrong way to deal with it, the fact remains that of all of the political issues in this province this is the one issue that has led to those kinds of things. We need to do, I think, a better job of communicating to Albertans that we are going to take very firm and strong action in order to eliminate this scourge, and I urge members, in conclusion, to support Bill 203, the Gas Flaring Elimination Act, at second reading.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne.

MR. VANDERBURG: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to speak to Bill 203. I believe that the intent of the member is good. However, I cannot support the bill. Before I talk on it, I'd like to invite the member out to Whitecourt-St. Anne and have a look at some of the situations that I've worked in in the past. I've come to realize that flaring is a necessity. We need to have an opportunity to create a safe workplace, so I would like to invite you to come out and have a look at some gas plants and some areas where we do flaring where it's necessary.

I have to also commend you on Bill 203. It's very easy to read. I've read lots of these bills and motions since I've been here, and some of them are very difficult to get through, but you've done a good job in writing it.

The purpose of the act "is to establish a time frame in legislation that will eliminate the flaring and venting of solution gas in Alberta within 10 years." I would say that it may be more appropriate to state that you'd like to urge the government to act, to continue to work toward the elimination of flaring rather than the statement made. Mr. Speaker, flaring is a sensitive issue in Alberta. Oil and gas revenues bring a lot of money to our province, and without them we would most likely not be in the enviable shape we are in today.

I believe that Bill 203 is premised on rhetorical-based research and not scientific study. This government is currently waiting for results of a study that'll bring scientific evidence and world-class research to bear on this issue. The western provinces' human and animal health study is an ongoing study that will provide us with the necessary scientific data to make informed decisions on the future of industry in Alberta. This government has taken a leadership role with respect to this study by giving $11 million toward its completion. It's estimated that the study will be complete in 2004, and when the recommendations are received, we will then have the proper scientific evidence to guide the government if it changes policy. I'll repeat: the scientific evidence to guide government. Mr. Speaker, if we pass Bill 203 today, we would be doing so based not on this scientific data that's so much needed but on speculation.

We have another scientific study that researched the effects of, among other things, gas flaring on crops. It was conclusively found that there was no significant effect of short-term exposure to ethylene on barley, canola, or field peas. It also conclusively found that there was no significant evidence or effect on barley yield from exposure to ethylene pattern that was derived from ambient air monitoring data during the highest month of exposure at an Alberta petrochemical facility. We have the results of this study, and I suggest that we wait for the results of the human and animal health study before we make any decisions either way. A wrong decision could cripple the industry that is the backbone of our resource-based economy. It would be unwise, inappropriate for government to pass legislation before the results of the study are completed. We need to have factual information and scientific data available before we can pass legislation of this magnitude, and I again repeat: scientific data available before we can pass legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I would also like to point out that this government is already working viably to eliminate flaring. There have been significant decreases in flaring in Alberta since 1996. The Energy and Utilities Board has set flaring reduction targets for the industry. By the end of 2003 they have set a target of 40 to 50 percent reduction in volumes flared. Forty to 50 percent. These reductions are firm and will be met. The government is well on its way to considerably reducing flaring.

Even though we are moving towards eliminating flaring, Mr. Speaker, it is impossible for flaring to be completely eliminated at this point. Like I talked about in the preface of my comments, there are many, many safety concerns when we must have flaring on-site to ensure the best possible and the most safe working conditions available. We must take into consideration exploration and production. In almost all cases natural gas drilling requires release of excess gas. If we eliminate flaring completely, it would stop drilling activity in remote areas. This is because when you drill, you have to release the gas that's produced during the process, and currently the safest way of doing so is by flaring. Surely we wouldn't want to put that gas out in the raw form. We do not have the current technology to release gas safely in remote areas other than by flaring. When we have the technology, then maybe this legislation would be a better idea, but as for right now it's not going to happen.

Mr. Speaker, we cannot support this bill because we do not have the scientific evidence or the technology available to support it. Again: do not have the scientific evidence or the technology to support it. The data is on its way, and I'd ask the member opposite and Albertans to remain patient as results will give us the information we need to make the right decision. In many cases flaring is used for emergency safety purposes, not for convenience.

Thank you.

MS CARLSON: Mr. Speaker, I'm happy to speak to Bill 203, the Gas Flaring Elimination Act. It isn't very often in this Legislative Assembly that we see two environmental bills come up in one afternoon, and I'm very happy to see that this is an issue that's topical at least to private members in this Assembly if not necessarily the government. I hope that these actions will closely be followed by government actions, seeing issues debated and legislation brought forward that will support positive changes in how our environment is managed within this province. It's good to see that the Member for Edmonton-Highlands brings up the issue of gas flaring. It's one that's very important for us to be talking about in conjunction with a number of other related kinds of environmental hazards that we see in this province.

I was a little disappointed when I first saw the bill being brought forward, because it came to my mind that we have quite a number of very burning environmental issues in this province that need to be addressed and the Member for Edmonton-Highlands chose to bring forward an issue where there has been some progress made over the past few years and where we have seen some good collaborative efforts being made between industry, environmentalists, and the government.

It was my intention to speak a little more critically of the bill than what I will now, Mr. Speaker. Having heard from one private member who supports government actions is enough to actually urge me to aggressively support the Member for Edmonton-Highland's bill, because once again the private members who support government actions come to this table, in my opinion, somewhat uninformed, inside-the-box thinkers, and unadaptable towards changes that could be progressive for this province. So it's a grave disappointment with only one speaker having come forward that we see the kinds of comments being made here. I was happy to see that the member who spoke, who was the Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne, brought forward the discussion about the western provinces' human health study and said that we needed to talk about the science before we took legislative action. I wish he would share that principle with the Minister of Environment, who has recently brought forward a consultation process on water in this province in the absence of any science-based evidence indicating the kinds of quantities and resources and longevity for water in this province. Perhaps they could get their lines of communication open. The Minister of Environment certainly has something to learn and benefit from.

AN HON. MEMBER: I'm just a lowly backbencher.

MS CARLSON: That's okay. You can start. You can start today. You've got lots of company, but you need to pull a few more to your way of thinking.

Mr. Speaker, in terms of the western provinces' human health study, yes, it's under way. Yes, it takes a look at gas flaring as a part of the process of impact on human and animal health. In fact, it was my privilege to recently meet in Washington with one of the world experts on air, a fellow who is collaborating with Dr. Schindler, whom we all know in this Legislative Assembly quite well, on assessing some of those impacts and is using parts of this health study in developing their paper.

However, he believes they have enough information, base data to go forward on now to talk about some of the impacts, particularly of gas flaring. It would seem, then, that that certainly is science-based research. So for the Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne to say that we have to wait before we move forward on this kind of work is really not accurate. In fact, there have been a number of studies done over the years in different areas that are science based and that do have some well-documented evidence and have drawn some conclusions.

In general, for the most part, what those conclusions say is that there are very definitely health impacts on people and animals to deal with gas flaring. Now, where the debate comes into effect is whether those are isolated in regions or more widespread in nature and what the other contributing factors are to those health risks or detrimental health effects. There's an argument to be made that you need a certain set of conditions to be met for the health impacts to be substantive and negative in nature. His paper will come out with this. I'm looking forward to reading it and pushing the government to take some action when it comes out.

So what the Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne said isn't completely accurate. In fact, there's lots of data. In fact, there are negative effects on both humans and animals. We welcome the moneys that the government has allocated to this most current study being undertaken, because it will be far more encompassing than former studies have been, but it isn't the end of the story on this particular issue and shouldn't be taken into account as being the bible for what will happen. There are certain actions that the government can take in the meantime and in fact, I would suggest, has been taking.

It was interesting that when this bill came up, we had the opportunity to talk to a good friend to all Albertans, be they wildlife- or landscape- or people-based, and that's Martha Kostuch. Martha has been a longtime member of CASA, the Clean Air Strategic Alliance Association.

MR. MacDONALD: She lives pretty handy to a big gas plant.

MS CARLSON: And she lives – that's exactly right – very close to a big gas plant and, I think, could be called by all members in this Assembly as an expert on this particular issue. She's spent a great deal of her life fighting for issues that pose health risks to people in the community, not the least of which is . . . [interjection] Yes, she was even a friend to them, because good legislation and good changes are progressive for everybody, even if some companies go kicking and screaming along the way.

In talking to her, in fact – and I'm paraphrasing, so please don't quote me in terms of saying exactly what she stated in terms of this – her concerns were that most of the things being suggested in this bill are being undertaken in great part by CASA and that they have made some excellent progress in terms of reducing gas flares, and a community, proactive, collaborative effort to eliminate them is definitely what's needed.

As the Member for Edmonton-Highlands said, the 50 percent reduction should be met by the end of this year. They're looking to go to 70 percent reductions by the end of 2006 and 2007, and that's all good news. But what can help them along that way, and what can take us down the road to completely eliminating gas flaring? Technology advances certainly can. What we certainly need in this province now are more efficient and effective burns. We know the technology's out there. For some reason there seems to be a gap between what they can do in the laboratory and what happens out in the field, so I think the government needs to take a serious look at that. That would be proactive.

The Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne talked about safety concerns with flaring and why it was needed and necessary now, but that's really inside-the-box thinking, Mr. Speaker. We need to be pushing these companies a little harder to take a look at other options. What are the conditions that exist that cause them to have to do flares, and why is it that those flares aren't always efficient burners at this time? That's what we need to take a look at. It's not very forward thinking – in fact, it's backward thinking – to state that this is the only way to handle that particular problem. I don't believe that for a minute, and I don't think the companies do either.

Certainly I receive every year many phone calls, letters of concern, and anecdotal evidence about the impact of gas flaring in this province. We have come a long way in taking a look at this issue but certainly not far enough. So it is important that the issue be raised, I believe, in some sort of a legislative fashion, and a private member's statement is a good way to do it. I certainly hope that the Minister of Environment gets in on this particular debate, because he's supposed to be responsible for being in charge of overall air and water quality, and that the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development will come forward and tell us what initiatives companies are bringing forward.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

MR. OUELLETTE: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to rise today and speak to Bill 203, the Gas Flaring Elimination Act. Ensuring that industrial and economic development in Alberta proceeds in a reasonable manner is a responsibility that this government takes very seriously. Since the first well was struck in Leduc in 1947, Alberta has had a proud and distinguished association with the oil and gas industry. It is an industry that altered our course of history and forever revolutionized our way of life.

Most of us in this Assembly realize the importance of the development of oil and gas. Over 33 percent of government revenues come from the exploration and development of oil and gas. Most of our debt and much of our provincial infrastructure and extra program spending can be attributed to the royalties the government earns when world markets sustain high prices.

This industry, with all the benefits, also comes with challenges that include protecting the environment and the safety of surrounding areas and people. It is a challenge that the energy sector takes very seriously. Each year millions of dollars are spent by the energy industry to ensure that the environment is not overly harmed by the development of land. Each year time and effort is invested in developing new technologies to ensure the safety of local communities and individuals.

Part of the requirements necessary to protect the safety and health of local residents includes flaring. Flaring, Mr. Speaker, involves the burning of waste gases during well testing and in petroleum production operations. While flaring may occur to dispose of unwanted and unusable volumes of gas and to depressure gas processing equipment for maintenance, flaring is also used to protect people and the environment during emergencies. Flaring is an important safety procedure, especially at facilities that handle sour gas. Hydrogen sulphide in sour gas is toxic and heavier than the gases that make up our air. When flared, the hydrogen sulphide is converted into less toxic sulphur dioxide, which is dispersed in the plume of hot gas from the flare. If not flared, these gases could pose serious health hazards to workers and adjacent landowners.

With the handling of any sort of dangerous toxic gases, concerns are raised when they are released and burned in the atmosphere. Questions and concerns on flaring range anywhere from health and environmental impacts to whether flaring is a waste of gas that perhaps could be captured and refined for other uses. Concerns are also raised on smoke, noise, and odour problems.

The government of Alberta has delegated authority for the regulation and monitoring of such energy industry practices to the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board. The board has taken steps to review flaring and to ensure that the safety and the environment of Albertans is protected. In July of '99 the EUB directed industry to eliminate the practice of flaring where possible and, where elimination was not possible, to reduce the volumes to be flared. The EUB also asked industry to find alternative uses for gases that were previously flared and to design and operate flares so as to increase their efficiency and minimize the release of products of incomplete combustion.

Alberta's energy industry took this challenge seriously and responded with many improvements. A multistakeholder group was formed to address this issue, including representatives from industry, government, the EUB, and interest groups. Frameworks were established for managing routine flaring activities, and actions have been established to lead to the eventual elimination of flaring. The eventual elimination of flaring is a worthy goal but one that requires much, much more work. Mr. Speaker, I firmly believe that these studies need to be undertaken and solutions found by scientists, experts, and professionals rather than armchair experts who like to think that they know a thing or two about hot air.

Industry and professionals have produced a guide for operators in situations where there are no reasonable alternatives to flaring. Funds have been invested in the sponsorship of research to assess the viability and the alternatives to flaring and to optimize flare design to ensure maximum combustion efficiency. Industry has also been successful in increasing the promotion of gas recovered in operations. In fact, the Energy and Utilities Board reports that Alberta conserves about 94 percent of all solution gas produced.

SOME HON. MEMBERS: How much?

MR. OUELLETTE: Ninety-four percent. The rest is generally treated as a waste stream and flared.

These are results that we can all be proud of and results that have evolved along with time, technology, and expertise. They have not resulted because of a pie in the sky or unnecessary and harsh regulations. The Energy and Utilities Board's commitment to safety and to examining this issue has not ended by simply monitoring the situation. The EUB has been working with the Clean Air Strategic Alliance, otherwise known as CASA, and reduced upstream solution gas flaring by 15 percent from '96 levels by the end of 2000 and 25 percent by the end of last year. These targets, Mr. Speaker, were firm, and the EUB is once again working with CASA to implement regulatory measures to ensure industry compliance.

Future CASA air emission standards are being re-evaluated this year. In addition to this, Mr. Speaker, a study that is in part supported by the government is being undertaken to investigate whether there is a link between oil and gas emissions and animal health. This study, the first of its kind, is scheduled to be completed by 2004. The Alberta government has already invested millions of dollars into this project, a sign of its commitment to this important issue.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that before any more action is taken, we must complete studies like this one. We must ensure that experts, health officials, and scientists are allowed the time to monitor and investigate this further and come up with recommendations for action. We must not fall into a trap of getting ahead of experts by creating unnecessary rules and regulations that would cause more harm than good.

I would urge all members to vote down Bill 203 and allow industry, scientists, and experts the opportunity to do the jobs that they were trained for. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise and participate in the debate this afternoon on Bill 203, Gas Flaring Elimination Act, as presented by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands. First, before I get into my organized speech, I would like to remind the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake that the citizens of Turner Valley would take exception to his remark that the oil or particularly the gas industry started, I believe, in 1947 or 1948 with the Leduc discovery. There was a viable natural gas industry and a significant production for decades in southern Alberta, specifically in the Turner Valley area, previous to the Leduc discovery. I'm told that from Calgary you could actually see the gas flare from Turner Valley. There was that much gas.

One thing that I do at this time commend the government for – and I see this outlined in the third-quarter fiscal update – is a commitment to do the western Canadian flaring study on gas flaring. I think that is necessary. It is necessary after one has an opportunity to read the book entitled Saboteurs, written by, I believe, a Calgarian, Andrew Nikiforuk. This book outlines to Albertans just precisely what the controversy is between landowners and gas producers and the whole issue of flaring.

Now, I happened to run into someone during Minor Hockey Week, Mr. Speaker, and they had this book under their arm. I approached them and asked them about it, and they urged me to read it and I did. It is available in the library here, and I would urge all hon. members of this Assembly to read Saboteurs before you vote on this bill, as presented by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Earlier this afternoon in debate there was a lot of talk about having to have this flaring because it is a safety issue in gas plants and in other production facilities, and that is absolutely correct. There can be upsets; there can be mechanical failures. The easiest way to depressure the facility is certainly with the use of the flare, and that has gone on.

Other hon. members talked about testing wells. Mr. Speaker, certainly, whenever you test a well or you want to do a production test on it, to flare the gas off is only reasonable. But when we look at the statistics that are now being produced on the supply of gas and the production of gas in this province, one has to notice that in 1999 – and I think this is an excellent way of handling this – there are two categories for gas. There is raw gas production, and there's processed gas production. To clarify that for all members, processed gas production refers to gas usage dispositions downstream of Alberta gas plants, and this is specifically mentioned here, because it is easy for members to get confused between raw gas production and processed gas production.

The hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne was talking about the reduction in the amount of gas flared. The amount of gas – and this is in millions of cubic feet. In the last decade there has been no reduction really in the amount flared to atmosphere, but there has been a significant increase in the production of gas in this province. For instance, in 1990 gas production in this province was 117 million cubic metres. Now, in the last year that I have the full figures for, it is in excess of 170 million cubic metres. So there has been a significant increase in the amount of production, and the amount of gas that has been flared has remained pretty much the same, around 2.2 million cubic metres. But that's not to say that that is right. This gas has certainly increased in value, and that would be a natural incentive, as it increases in value, for there to be less flaring, because it's too valuable a commodity just to be flared. There are certainly issues relating to the environment.

I think this bill has merit. We were talking earlier about a 10-year plan. We're talking about 10-year plans, for instance, in health care. So why can't we have one, as the hon. member suggests, for gas flaring and reduce this even further? It is a worthwhile goal to reduce gas flares. A lot of the contentious issues that face landowners and oil and gas landmen I think could be resolved easier if there were less flaring.

There have been studies done. There has been conclusive proof established that gas flaring affects the health not only of humans but certainly animals. A noteworthy example would be the beef cattle in the area of Sundre. There has been a great deal of difficulty, particularly with one cattle owner and his herd. There is a dairy farmer I believe in the St. Albert area who has concerns. Every time there is flaring in the vicinity of his farm, if the wind is blowing in the right direction, then the cattle certainly are sick. Now, I don't know, as the hon. member has suggested, if the milk is sour, but certainly the cattle need attention from the veterinarian, who I believe is the Morinville veterinarian.

Now, there are many different and various examples from across the province, and that is why I would have to urge all members to support this bill. We can't underestimate, or we can't just simply dismiss and pretend that there are no statistics relating to this because the studies have already been done, and if people perhaps work together, Mr. Speaker, with solution gas – I'm astonished at the statistics brought forward by the hon. member, but solution gas, excess gas from oil production, certainly could be used to produce electricity on a small local scale. There could be natural gas flaring as well. Instead of flaring it, it could be used as a fuel source for small, say, four- or five-megawatt turbines. There are answers to this problem besides just simply cheaply flaring the gas off.

Mr. Speaker, in conclusion I would like to urge members to read Saboteurs by Andrew Nikiforuk before you vote on this bill, and at this time I would like to adjourn debate on Bill 203. Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's been a very progressive and exciting day. We've made excellent progress on this historic day, it being the first full day of private members' business, and since we are very close to the hour, I would move that we now call it 5:30 and adjourn until 8 this evening.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:25 p.m.]

Title: Monday, March 4, 2002

8:00 p.m.

Date: 02/03/04

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Please be seated.

head: Motions Other than Government Motions

501. Dr. Pannu moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government, in the interests of fiscal prudence and tax equity, to not increase health care premiums and instead cancel the scheduled reductions in corporate income taxes for fiscal years 2002-03, 2003-04, and 2004-05.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour and privilege to move Motion 501, that stands in my name on the Order Paper, as the first motion of this spring session, 2002. It's an honour to move this motion on behalf of the New Democrat opposition and on behalf of hundreds of thousands of Albertans of all political stripes who believe that the government is making a huge mistake by hiking health care premiums. The New Democrats have long maintained that the provincial government should phase health care premiums out and should certainly not be increasing them. Make no mistake: by hiking health care premiums by up to 40 percent, perhaps even 50 percent, Albertans are going to be asked to swallow a significant tax increase.

In question period last week the Premier tried to justify increases in health care premiums by saying that they remind Albertans that health care isn't free. I find this claim and this rationalization ludicrous, if not totally ridiculous. I think Albertans are fully aware that health care is one of the most important services provided by their government and is funded by taxes and by other government revenue sources.

The question is: who pays the health care bill? What the government is doing through its stated intention to continue reducing corporate taxes over the next three years is saying that corporations, who benefit enormously from the cost advantages of a publicly funded system, should pay less. In contrast, the Premier wants to shift a greater share of the cost of health care disproportionately onto the shoulders of average lower and middle-income Alberta families and small businesses. That health premiums are a tax is beyond question, and I suspect that even the Premier knows this and would agree with it. What he doesn't seem to grasp, however, is how unfair, impractical, and unpopular this particular tax is.

Premiums are an unfair tax. The people that will be hit hardest by an increase in health premiums are exactly the ones who are already struggling with the current rate of premiums: lower middle- and middle-income seniors and working families. In fact, we know that a family of four in Alberta can expect to pay approximately $4,200 for health care services such as ambulance services, dental and optical care, home care, and prescription drugs. All of these dollars are out-of-pocket expenses. Already burdened by this $4,200 shortcoming in out-of-pocket payments for health care, two-parent families already pay $816 in so-called health care premiums. A 40 percent increase in health care premiums would burden those Alberta families with an extra $326 a year in taxes. Unlike personal income taxes, where despite the move to the regressive flat tax the amount paid goes up with income, health care premium increases bear no relation to a family's ability to pay or its income.

During the last election Premier Klein promised Albertans that the only way taxes were going in this province was down. Yet barely a year later Albertans are being forced to rework their household budgets to make room for a big increase in the form of increased health premiums. Instead of spending money to keep themselves healthy, preventing use of the health system, Alberta families will be spending their money on health premiums. Not only does this reversal belie the Premier's election promises; it does so in the most unfair way possible.

Instead of having a fair and progressive tax regime, Albertans have a tax system that rewards a very few Albertans and punishes the vast majority, the rest of them. For example, if you assume a 40 percent increase in health care premiums, a fairly safe assumption given recent comments from the Premier and the Minister of Health and Wellness, an Albertan earning $30,000 per year can expect to pay back all but $17 of the tax break they received from the introduction of the new flat regime: all of this to increase premiums. On the other hand, a person earning $250,000 will lose a mere 2 percent of their flat tax savings. There's clearly a shift in who is being burdened by these increases. The top 1 percent of income earners, who make $250,000, will gain tremendously, while the majority will be shortchanged.

Let's turn to small businesses now. Health premium increases also represent a significant burden for small businesses. The position of the Canadian Federation of Independent Business is made very clear in a letter dated February 13 of this year from Dan Kelly, the prairie region vice-president of the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, and Corinne Pohlmann, the CFIB's director for Alberta and the Northwest Territories. In that letter they state:

Our members are . . . willing to engage in the debate on new ways of administering and financing this important service. We are very concerned, however, that the first major health care reform made in Alberta following the Mazankowski report would be to dramatically increase the tax associated with health care.

Small businesses are already saddled with the costs associated with collecting premiums on behalf of Health and Wellness. They will now face the daunting challenge of including a larger health care premium as a benefit for employees in order to compete for top workers. If the premium increase and the generous tax cuts to our corporations both proceed, it's obvious who will come out ahead. Large and profitable corporations will have cause to celebrate, while Alberta families and small businesses will be left to struggle.

Now, the administrative costs of having premiums, Mr. Speaker, is another matter that should receive some attention. Health care premiums are a very economically inefficient tax. When the massive administrative and compliance costs associated with this tax are considered, it becomes very clear that not only are health care premiums aggressive; they are also very wasteful. Alberta Health and Wellness spends more money chasing down people who can't pay their premiums than it spends on administering the rest of the public health care insurance plan. In the fiscal year 2000-2001, $44 million in premiums was written off because Albertans were simply unable to pay it. Money spent tracking down Albertans who have difficulty paying the premiums could be better spent on improving health care delivery.

We are not the only ones, by the way, who oppose health care premiums. Some Tories do as well. Contrary to what the Premier likes to think, there's widespread support across the political spectrum for phasing out health care premiums. It is true that we the New Democrats are strongly opposed to health care premiums, particularly in light of the generous tax breaks being offered to profitable corporations, but we are not the only ones. In October, 2000, Mr. Speaker, grassroots members of the Progressive Conservative Party passed policy resolutions calling for an end to health care premiums.

In the same month the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford strongly expressed the belief that health care premiums are a tax that should be eliminated. In the last session of the Legislature a member of the Conservative caucus introduced legislation that would have ended the collection of health care premiums. In fact, in June of last year the Minister of Seniors, the Hon. Stan Woloshyn, made it clear that he believes . . . [interjections] I'm sorry.

Speaker's Ruling Referring to Members by Name

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Hon. member, I don't know who's typing your speech, but you've got a number of references to names, and the tradition in the House is that we use either their portfolio or the constituency they represent. This is several times you've kind of moved over there, so if we can just catch that, please.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for your instruction.

In June of last year the Minister of Seniors made it clear that he believes premiums should be eliminated, at least for seniors, as soon as possible. Instead, seniors and other Albertans are going to bear the brunt of increased premiums. We know that the Premier and the Minister of Health and Wellness are unwilling to listen to Alberta families on this issue. We are surprised that they are unwilling to listen to Alberta's small business community and astounded that they won't take direction from their own party members and caucus colleagues.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, let me make the following observations. Burdening hardworking Albertans and middle-income seniors while proceeding with an extremely generous tax cut for already profitable corporations sends a clear signal to Albertans, which is that this government continues to listen to only what it wants to hear. It continues to tilt the so-called Alberta advantage to high-income earners and larger profitable corporations while asking Alberta families to pay more.

I urge all members of the House to support Motion 501. Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

MR. VANDERMEER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise today and speak to Motion 501, urging the government not to increase health care premiums but rather defer decreases to corporate taxes.

First off, I would like to say that I believe the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona has brought forth an admirable motion not to increase health care premiums. As you know, last fall I presented a private member's bill to eliminate health care premiums altogether. However, I have reservations about supporting Motion 501 because I believe lower taxes promote economic growth, which will have a positive impact in our province and could even boost our economy to help support our social program funding.

Mr. Speaker, we all know that costs to our health care system are increasing at what could be considered an exponential rate, increasing approximately 64 percent over the past decade. This fact has forced the government to look seriously at creating new ways to maintain health care in the province. A number of experts have advised our government that our health care system is not capable of withstanding the pressures it is facing, and changes are going to have to be made.

Along with the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona I, too, have reservations about increasing health care premiums in this province. Low-income Albertans have expressed their concerns to this government that an increase in provincial health care premiums will increase the financial burdens on those who do not qualify for subsidies. Subsidies are available only for Albertans who make under the base claim amount on income.

Mr. Speaker, it is my belief that as a province we have always been committed to helping low-income Albertans and should continue to make sure they are covered. The MLA task force on health funding and revenue generation has been asked to evaluate both overall health funding and the merits of different sources of revenues. That task force will submit recommendations to the Minister of Health and Wellness by September 30, 2002. I strongly encourage the task force to look at finding ways to eliminate health care premiums altogether. They are a financial burden on our citizens, especially those in low-income brackets.

Premiums bring in approximately $640 million to $660 million per year in revenue and account for approximately 11 percent of Alberta's health care expenditures. The annual costs of collecting and billing for health care insurance premiums are approximately $13 million to $16 million and an additional $4.5 million to collect delinquent accounts. Delinquent payments can become a financial burden on individuals and families, hurting credit ratings and straining Albertans who are struggling to get ahead.

Many recommendations have been made, and our government is committed to developing a health care system which is fair to all Albertans, easily accessible, and capable of providing Albertans with a sustainable system in the future. Though I do not support the increases of health care premiums, I do believe that we should back away from reducing corporate income taxes. We have to face the challenges in health and in our economy and revise the system. To try to fund a greater portion of health care from business taxes will mean that Alberta will become uncompetitive in business investments and a strong market that is fundamental to the strength of our economy. As a golden rule you are only as strong as the weakest link, and it is not wise to jeopardize something as important as a healthy economy to support a health care system in need of revitalization.

Mr. Speaker, it is well documented in the economic statistics that support our government policy how successful Alberta has been because our government has been able to support and allow business to grow. Alberta needs to remain competitive with other jurisdictions. Presently we have a strong economy, and we are attracting international investment. It is not enough of an Alberta advantage to have the lowest tax burden of any jurisdiction in Canada. In a world where businesses can locate anywhere, we must remain globally minded in order to draw international attention and bring investment into Alberta. If high corporate taxes drive business away, Albertans will be left with fewer jobs, lower wages, and a lower standard of living. We cannot afford to risk losing what advantage we have as a great place to invest and draw business to, because it will mean greater hardship to Albertans than simply using corporate taxes as a source of revenue to fund health care costs.

In the long run, the revenue needed to provide government services, including health care, depends greatly on a healthy economy. It is a proven economic strategy that lower business taxes generate economic prosperity. As a government we are looking ahead to address the specific issues of health care funding and revenue generation – an MLA task force on health funding and revenue generation, chaired by the Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti – to elevate both overall health funding and the merits of different sources of revenue. The task force will be submitting recommendations for the Minister of Health and Wellness by September 30 of this year, and I look forward to sharing some of my ideas with that committee. We need to find other solutions to our health care challenges without damaging the competitiveness of our economy.

Government anticipates that over 40,000 new jobs will be created in Alberta by proceeding with corporate income tax reductions. These jobs could be in jeopardy under Motion 501. It is for that reason that I speak against Motion 501. We need to continue with fiscal responsibility. Motion 501 is not fiscally responsible but will only continue to prop monetary supports against the problems we are having with the health care funding. We cannot go against current economic policy of lower taxes and risk losing important business investment.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is an honour to speak to Motion 501:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government, in the interests of fiscal prudence and tax equity, to not increase health care premiums and instead cancel the scheduled reductions in corporate income taxes for fiscal years 2002-03, 2003-04, and 2004-05.

I will be speaking in favour of this motion. I think it's a well considered motion and merits our support.

There are, as other people have commented, two aspects to this motion. One is the reduction in the corporate taxes, and the other is preventing the rise in health care premiums. On the issue of reducing corporate taxes, we are in general in favour of low taxes, but we must also recognize that taxes are the price of civilization. There is a point in reducing taxes at which you begin to defeat yourself. The member before me, who was speaking to this issue, indicated that low taxes and lowering taxes are proven ways to stimulate the economy. I would argue that that's a fallacy. That's a mistake.

Certainly there is a point at which taxes get in the way of economic growth, but let's think this position through. If we were to reduce taxes endlessly, we would end up with no taxes, and surely we all recognize . . . [interjections] I guess perhaps we don't all recognize, but those of us who are thoughtful enough on this recognize that taxes are necessary for many of the things that attract businesses, whether that's roads or an educated workforce or a competitive health care system or a functioning justice system or approved regulations. So taxes are a price of civilization, and a certain level of taxes is necessary – is necessary – for a solid economy. In fact, there are any number of business location studies that will indicate that the tax rate alone is nowhere near the top of the list of issues considered by businesses when they choose new locations.

I also point out that there are a number of studies, including a recent one that found Alberta cities to be among the most competitive cities in the world for economic activities, that point out that Alberta's and Canada's health care system is a competitive advantage for companies wanting to locate here when they compare Canadian cities to American cities. So we need to protect our health care system. While we as a caucus typically stand in support of lower taxes, we do recognize that lowering taxes endlessly is self-defeating.

On the issue of the health care premiums I think we must need to repeat this over and over so that it settles into the minds of all MLAs: health care premiums are a tax. An increase in health care premiums is a direct contradiction to the position of this government that the only way that taxes in this province are going is down. In fact, health care premiums are the worst kind of tax. Traditionally through the last century civilized countries have relied on the basis of a progressive tax, in which those at the higher end of the income scale contribute more to the well-being of society than those at the lower end. We've backed away from that in this province with the introduction of a flat tax, so people at the top of the scale pay the same portion of their income towards taxes as people at the lower end of the scale. They get, as a result, a much bigger break. Health care premiums are even worse than a flat tax. They're a regressive tax.

So what this means is that a family on an income of $20,000 a year will pay potentially about 5 percent of their taxable income for health care premiums, a substantial expense indeed for a family at $20,000 a year. An executive at $100,000 a year pays exactly the same amount, which works out to 1 percent. So this is genuinely a regressive tax. The higher you go up the scale, the smaller percentage of your income you pay, yet you get the same benefit, so it is indeed the worst kind of tax. It's terribly, terribly unfair.

Alberta should follow the lead of eight of the other 10 provinces and eliminate this, and I would like to remind the House that in the lead-up to the last election a number of PC candidates actually ran on a platform that if they were elected, health care premiums would be eliminated. As well, the PC Party convention before the election passed a motion calling for the elimination of health care premiums.

For those of us who were at the Future Summit a few weeks ago in Red Deer, one of the most interesting parts of the Future Summit was a presentation at noon hour on the first day on some recent polling information of Albertans. What that poll found is that the top-of-mind issue for Albertans was concern over health care; 52 percent of Albertans indicated that that was their highest concern. The number of Albertans who identified taxes as their top-of-mind concern was 2 percent. It was the lowest level of all the categories of issues identified. There's no question that the public is concerned about health care, and I think we can assume that there's no question that the public would like to see health care premiums ultimately eliminated.

For those reasons, Mr. Speaker, I think I can speak for all of my caucus that we think this is a well thought out motion. We would urge all MLAs to support it. Thank you very much.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

MRS. ADY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to rise today and speak to Motion 501, as put forward by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona. Quite simply, I'm proud that this government has committed itself to addressing the challenges in providing health care services to Albertans in the 21st century. The report of the Premier's Advisory Council on Health has provided a solid and balanced framework on which to build reform. In accepting the recommendations of the panel, which included some of the most respected and health-knowledgeable individuals in Alberta, this government is taking sound and prudent action to build a health care system that will meet not only the needs of our children but our grandchildren as well.

In restructuring a health care infrastructure and network, reform must be approached from many different directions. We must look at the way we use the system and how health boards provide services. The government has responded by forming a Committee on Collaboration and Innovation, that will help to establish clear roles and responsibilities for government and health authorities.

We must also examine the role of health care professionals as well as the role of individuals using the system. To this end the government has committed to take steps to enable the development of new approaches to providing health care. This new approach will encompass a broad use of health care professionals and a new way for the public to access health care.

Mr. Speaker, we must not shy away from looking at how we pay for health care and how we spend our health care dollars. The government has created also another new committee that will review by this fall ministry funding options and formulas to ensure that government funding in health care is affordable and sustainable. As part of this move the government has also committed to look – to look – at raising health care premiums, premiums that have not been reviewed since 1995 and that used to cover approximately 17 percent of the costs of running the Alberta health care system.

DR. TAYLOR: How much?

MRS. ADY: Seventeen percent. As the Premier said today, those health care costs have actually doubled in seven years. Today those same premiums cover only about 11 percent of health care costs.

MR. LUKASZUK: How many?

MRS. ADY: Seven years. Eleven percent of health care costs.

As stated by the Mazankowski report, “the advantage of increasing health care premiums is that . . . it would remind Albertans that the costs of health care services are significant.”

Mr. Speaker, the hon. member across the way would have Albertans believe that there are no costs to health care. This is not the case, and Albertans need to know and understand the costs and the responsibilities of a world-class health care system. It is my hope that the sacred aura, that somehow we can offer a public health care system for free, will be broken. Albertans need to understand that it costs $18 million a day to run our present health care system.

AN HON. MEMBER: How much?

MRS. ADY: Eighteen million dollars a day.

Even Roy Romanow, the former Premier of Saskatchewan and present head of the federal government’s inquiry into medicare, has recognized this point.

AN HON. MEMBER: He was NDP; wasn’t he?

MRS. ADY: Yes.

Mr. Romanow has said:

Each of us lives in a society where our citizens have come to believe that every possible medical problem or condition, from the most innocuous to the most life-threatening, can and should be addressed. Immediately!

What is clear is that the attitude that absolutely everything can and will be taken care of is no longer sustainable. And, perhaps, not even realistic.

Health care premiums, as our Premier has already indicated, Mr. Speaker, help to demonstrate that there is a cost associated with the maintenance of health care.

Mr. Romanow has gone on to say:

History teaches us that this is one of the fundamental understandings behind medicare at the very beginning – that it wasn’t going to cover everything for everybody at all times.

There have been a couple of generations or more since medicare (was introduced) in Canada which have not experienced that debate about what it can or cannot do.

The Mazankowski report addresses this debate and challenges us to look at these key issues as we prepare a health system for tomorrow.

With respect to health care premiums the Mazankowski report goes on to say that if decisions are made to increase health care premiums, there should be corresponding benefits to Albertans including more choice, better access, and more control over how they spend their health care investment.

In return for their premiums, Albertans can and should demand more choices and innovation in their system. They should expect and receive a system that is affordable, sustainable, and provides them with the best bang for their buck. If individuals and families are going to pay more to access the health system, there should be a parallel effort to increase quality, access, and choice. Mr. Speaker, I know that the government will follow through on this commitment and that the health care system will be better off because of it.

The government has also realized that some individuals require help to pay their premiums. In 2001 close to 17 percent of all non-senior Albertans paying premiums received a full or partial subsidy. For seniors close to 41 percent received help through the Alberta seniors’ benefit as well as full health premium waivers. An additional 18 percent of seniors not on the Alberta seniors’ benefit received a premium subsidy. Help is available, Mr. Speaker, and the government will ensure that assistance will continue so that those Albertans who truly need help with the premium will receive that help. As our Premier indicated in the House last week, we will pursue a plan that will protect seniors and that will protect low-income Albertans.

We also face challenges and opportunities for reform in the economy as a whole. But again, Mr. Speaker, Alberta is not only positioned to meet these challenges; we will come through them better than before. While the government has always indicated that corporate income tax restructuring would only proceed subject to affordability, I believe that the true intent of this motion is to delay corporate income tax reform permanently.

Mr. Speaker, the hon. member would have us believe that a trade-off needs to occur between a policy to reform the health care system and a policy to reduce corporate income taxes. That is simply not the case. Albertans’ priorities include sound fiscal principles, principles that demand not only a balanced budget and payment of the debt but lower taxes for both individuals and corporations. These policies do not come at the cost of the basic responsibilities of government. Rather, our fiscal principles will enable us to invest in the health of our citizens.

Reform in the health care system needs to occur, but reform must also occur in our approach to corporations and businesses. Income tax reduction will benefit all Albertans, and no one in this Assembly should ever lose sight of that fact. Our economy will benefit from these reductions if we can afford them, and that’s good news for the hardworking men and women of this province. A healthy economy means more money in the hands of individuals and more jobs and opportunities for those people willing to work for them.

Mr. Speaker, I urge all members to vote against this motion and, rather, support necessary changes to both the health care system and our corporate income tax system.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to be able to rise and join in the debate around Motion 501, which is urging the government to not increase health care premiums and to cancel the reductions scheduled for corporate income taxes for the next three fiscal years. I've had a very entertaining evening listening to the previous speakers. In particular, the Member for Edmonton-Manning was particularly impressive. I think that with his ability to tap dance around the issues, he should be onstage.

What I find most interesting is: what is fiscally responsible about increasing the burden upon the taxpayers and refusing to look at having an equitable and balanced requirement from the business sector to contribute to what makes Alberta such a great place to be and do business, particularly when we're looking at placing a burden upon the taxpayers of a regressive tax? My colleague from Edmonton-Riverview has already done an admirable job of outlining why it's regressive, so I won't go into that again, but I think it was important that that point was made.

You know, I like to have tax reductions as much as the next person, and I want to see a tax regime in Alberta that is conducive to people wanting to do business here and people being successful in business here. I think I just disagree with the members opposite about what that amount is and how much forgiveness should be given to companies at different times around their taxes.

I view this current discussion around increasing health care premiums really as a health head tax in that it's affecting every person indiscriminately and in a regressive manner. In my constituency of Edmonton-Centre I have a lot of seniors that are living on a fixed income, and they are middle- to low-income seniors. As well, I have a lot of students who, again, are on their own kind of fixed income. Neither group has much ability to generate more income for themselves as there's more expectation placed on them by this government to pay more out of their pocket.

It's always an interesting discussion, because the government is playing this interesting kind of not a shell game but a left-hand pocket/right-hand pocket distinction where they say: oh well, we'll give you a tax cut of a hundred bucks. So you're paying a hundred dollars less out of your right-hand pocket, but you're now going to pay user fees and health care premiums and additional licences, taxes, tolls, and whatever other means the government wants to talk about, and that is going to amount to $150 out of your left-hand pocket. So individual Albertans in fact are paying more money to the government, but it's not specifically a tax. It's called all kinds of other things. I would maintain that in fact it is a tax.

The Member for Calgary-Shaw mentioned the seniors who were receiving a full or partial subsidy of their health care premiums, and I'm glad she raised that, because I think it brings up an interesting dilemma for the government. They're supposed to be generating more revenue for themselves, but in fact they are going to have to do an internal transfer or a transfer on the books because they're going to have to increase the subsidy they're transferring across departments for the seniors that are already receiving these full and partial subsidies. If that subsidy is higher, they're going to have to cover it, and although it's not cash, it's going on the books.

But I am more concerned about those seniors that are not eligible at this point for that full or partial subsidy of their health care premium. In five years I've watched these people slide a little closer to the poverty line, to strained circumstances, or in many cases to getting to the point where they now qualify for the subsidy from the government. So should the government put through a health care premium increase that's in the 40 to 50 percent range, it'll be interesting to see how many more people in fact end up on this subsidy because they don't have the income and they've now got the expenses against their income that would qualify them for that. That's why I was asking the minister the questions about that this afternoon.

The other interesting part of this motion is around the businesses and the co-payments. I'm not hearing a lot of discussion and feedback from the government members about how the business community is reacting to the concept of having a 50 percent increase in their co-payment where they are participating in a plan where they're paying part or all of the health care premiums, and many people would call this, in fact, a payroll tax. The businesses that I've talked to and that I've read about certainly aren't too happy about this concept. In fact, they're saying things like, well, they just wouldn't be involved in that co-payment scheme or that payroll tax scheme. Where does that leave the employees? Well, then, the employees have more expenses out of their pockets, and they're going to be looking for the businesses to pay them more to cover this. So how did this make us take a step forward? I don't think it did.

So we've got a regressive tax that particularly causes problems for those on fixed incomes, that being seniors and students. It's a payroll tax that I think takes away some of the advantage to businesses, and it is a health head tax. There's no question.

When I looked at some of the arguments that came out of both the growth summit and the Future Summit, in both cases reductions in income tax were very low on the list. Out of a list of 60 things out of the growth summit in '97, the reduction of personal income tax was really low on that list, but health care, quality health care, was very high.

As I was listening to the Member for Calgary-Shaw, I was wondering why there seems to be a belief from the Conservatives that improved access, improved quality, improved wait list times cannot be achieved in the public system. Why does there seem to be a thought that this improvement can only be achieved by going into the private sector, that they're the only ones that are capable of that? Why? Why can't those improvements be made in the public system? They can be made in the public system.

I'd like to see some tabled documents, if that's possible, of how money spent on health care has doubled. I keep hearing that figure. It has become a mantra, but I'm not seeing the support documentation for that.

AN HON. MEMBER: Have you read a budget lately?

MS BLAKEMAN: Yes, I've read a number of budgets, but it's not being backed up with proof there.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: When hon. members ask a rhetorical question, they really aren't looking for a whole bunch of answers, so we'd like to hear the rest of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre's speech.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In closing, I see the government increasing the tax burden. Whether they call it a tax, a premium, a licence, a toll, or a duck, it's still increasing the out-of-pocket payments from Albertans while the government is trying to pretend they're not taking that money out of their pocket. In fact, they are, and it's done in a way that's regressive, and I really object to that. I'm a believer in a progressive tax system, and I think this government has moved us a long way away from that, and I just flat out disagree. So I'm certainly willing to support the motion brought forward by the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona. I think there's a lot of merit to it, and I appreciate the opportunity to be able to speak in support of it.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MRS. McCLELLAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just a few points that I'd like to cover. Certainly I'd be the first to admit that ideologically the member who proposed this motion and I are probably quite a ways apart. So I'll talk first to the issue of the motion that suggests not lowering general business taxes. I've listened to the debate, as others have in this House, and I listened with interest to the Member for Edmonton-Riverview saying that businesses don't locate necessarily – and I'm paraphrasing, and forgive me if I'm wrong – on the basis of tax.

However, in my discussions over the years with the business community they have a variety of things that they look for when they look at locating in a province or a country. The first on their list is political stability. Well, that's pretty good here. Tax and fiscal policies are probably next on their list. Quality of life issues are next, and that would cover things like safety of communities, policing. Cultural and sporting opportunities for their family are high on their list, and it goes on. Nowhere did I ever have a businessperson say to me that they would really like to see more tax. So that I found interesting.

The other thing is that when we talk about the reduction of taxes to the business or corporate community, there are a good number of studies which clearly show that the economic payback is there and there very strongly, and I don't think any report disputes that.

The other thing that is neglected in this discussion, when we talk about health care premiums in this province being a tax and why don't we join the eight other provinces that don't have that, are we saying by our silence across the way that we want to join them in having a payroll tax, which pays for that in all provinces, or a provincial sales tax, which clearly in those provinces is earmarked for that? Mr. Speaker, Albertans have clearly told us that a sales tax is not in the cards.

What are we really talking about in this whole issue? I don't think there's any question in my mind or in any quarter in this House, Mr. Speaker, that we don't agree with the fact that we want a sustainable, quality health system. I think that's the goal of all of us. How we get there we may differ and we may disagree on. However, we did ask a panel of experts to take a very hard look at the sustainability of our health system. These were people not just from Alberta but experts from across Canada well respected in their various fields. In the report there is a recommendation that we do increase health premiums to more properly reflect a percentage of health costs. Certainly in 1995 when we froze health care premiums, we made a decision to do that at that time. However, in not revisiting the issue for some six or seven years now, we have gone from having something that covered about 17 percent of our health costs to about 11 today.

Mr. Speaker, Albertans that I talk to value the system we have here. They value the fact that our pharmacy coverage for seniors is unparalleled. When we talk about this impact on seniors, no other pharmacy program in Canada to my knowledge is as good as the one we have for Alberta seniors, where we cap the total amount that they can pay for a prescription. There are only four provinces that offer any allied health services to their seniors in podiatry, chiropractic, optometry, and dental. No other province that I know of – and we may be close with a couple – has long-term care rates at the rates that we do in Alberta. These are parts of the health system that aren't covered under the Canada Health Act necessarily, but they are important to us, and they do come at a cost.

I don't like taxes any better than anyone else. However, I will say that a reminder of the fact that health care at the level of excellence and access that we want comes at a cost is not a bad reminder for all of us, and we should cherish and protect this system and use it wisely. I think that's important.

I support continuing to protect low-income earners, and we have increased the level at which they are eligible for either reduced or no premiums. I certainly support protecting seniors, who in most cases are on fixed incomes, and ensuring that those who cannot pay do not. However, I have had many seniors that are in a position to pay say to me that they do appreciate being able to contribute. In fact, I recall when I was health minister having some seniors send in a cheque, which we couldn't accept, for their health premiums because they really did want to contribute because they felt the system was so valuable and important to keep.

Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to speak to this. I just want to say, finally, to members that I do not see paying a premium in this province as a cost. I see it rather as an investment in excellence, in quality, in access, and in services in a system that we can be very, very proud of held up against anywhere in Canada.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, followed by the hon. Provincial Treasurer.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise to support Motion 501, which is sponsored by my colleague from Edmonton-Strathcona. Motion 501 urges the government to not proceed with plans to increase health care premiums and instead cancel the scheduled reductions in corporate income taxes during the next three fiscal years.

The reason we have linked the increases in health care premiums with the reductions in corporate income taxes is because the Conservative government is in a very real sense using the proposed increases in health care premiums to pay for next year's reductions in corporate taxes. Just look at the numbers involved, Mr. Speaker. Hiking health care premiums by 40 percent will raise an additional $260 million in government revenue. Reducing corporate taxes will permanently reduce government revenues by $275 million next year and by over $700 million two years after that.

Former Provincial Treasurer Steve West announced the Conservative government's decision to cut corporate taxes in half in September of 2000, permanently reducing government revenues by about $1 billion annually after four years. At the time, I warned the government that it may not be able to afford such generous corporate tax cuts, which were significantly deeper than the cuts to personal income taxes that resulted from the government's introduction of the flat tax. Last April the corporate tax rate was reduced from 15.5 percent to 13.5 percent. This is already a very generous tax break given to the corporate sector. This reduction gives Alberta one of the lowest tax rates for corporations in North America. At the time that the former Provincial Treasurer announced his plans to cut corporate taxes in half, oil and natural gas prices were at record levels and the government was on its way to posting a record $5 billion budget surplus even after paying Albertans billions of dollars in energy rebates previous to the last election.

Well, times have changed. Oil and gas revenues are down sharply. The government has imposed a hiring freeze, made deep cuts in children's services, and says that it can't afford to pay the province's teachers more than 4 percent this year and 2 percent next year. On top of this, the government is considering steep hikes to health care premiums, other kinds of health user charges, and the delisting of some health services.

The net effect of the tax policy changes has been twofold, Mr. Speaker. One effect is to reduce reliance on more stable revenue sources like personal income taxes and corporate taxes while increasing reliance on more unstable revenue sources like oil and gas royalties and gambling revenues. Altogether since 1998 the Conservative government has permanently reduced personal income taxes by 1 and a half billion dollars per year. As mentioned, unless the government changes course, the government will reduce corporate taxes by an additional billion dollars. That is a total hit of $2.5 billion a year on government revenues.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I think it's appropriate at this time to call attention to the Auditor General's take on this situation. The Auditor General in his last report indicated that we have to look at these tax cuts as expenditure items; the government is expending so much of its revenue for a certain purpose. But, he says, they have not defined the purpose, they have not defined the results that they wish to obtain, and they have no way of measuring the results that they obtain as a result of this policy. So it doesn't meet the test of the Auditor General as he would apply it to a government expenditure on any other item. The Auditor General is clearly not disagreeing with the government on a policy basis, but he's saying that there's no clear, defined objective for these tax cuts and there's no way of defining whether or not we've reached the objective. Clearly, these tax cuts are not responsible expenditures on the part of the government until they meet the Auditor General's test, and then we could debate them, I think, on some basis of deciding whether or not they accomplish what the government wants to do.

Now, the second effect of the Tory's tax policy changes has been to significantly shift the tax load away from high-income earners and profitable corporations onto middle-income earners and small business. The introduction of the government's 10 percent flat tax reduced taxes for the highest income earners by a breathtaking 43 percent between 1998 and 2001. However, middle-income Albertans with taxable incomes from $30,000 to $60,000 saw their taxes go down by less than 10 percent. The question must be asked: can we afford the planned reductions in corporate taxes, especially if they have to be paid for by steep hikes in health care premiums? The answer to this question, Mr. Speaker, has to be no. It's time for the government to change course and put the planned reductions in corporate taxes on hold indefinitely. That's exactly what Motion 501 calls for.

Were the government to do the right thing and put its planned corporate tax cuts on hold, the New Democrat opposition would be supportive of retaining those elements that primarily benefit small business. Those elements are a reduction in the small business tax rate to 3 percent by 2003, and an increase in the amount of business income that qualifies for the lower small business tax rate to $400,000 next year from $300,000 this year.

Those, Mr. Speaker, are things that we're prepared to support, tax reductions for business, which the New Democrat opposition is prepared to support. Let me repeat that in case anybody thought they misheard me. Retaining those elements of the corporate tax cuts that primarily benefit small business would cost $43 million next year and $31 million the year after that according to information that was provided to us by the Canadian Federation of Independent Business. That's just a little over 10 percent of the total cost of reducing corporate taxes over the next three years.

To sum up, Mr. Speaker, by canceling all but the small business components of the planned corporate tax cuts, the government would save $232 million next year, $410 million the following year, and $640 million each year after that. Meanwhile, Alberta companies would continue to enjoy some of the lowest rates of corporate taxation on the North American continent while making an important contribution to helping to pay for the public health care system. Businesses benefit enormously from a well-educated and healthy workforce. Paying for health care collectively through taxes is much more cost-effective for business than having to incur additional costs to pay for health care through private insurance or health care premium increases.

A recent survey conducted by the New York based consulting firm KPMG found that Canada was the least costly place to do business out of nine industrialized countries. Canada had a 14 and a half percent advantage over the United States. KPMG found that Canada's universal health care system was a significant factor in keeping the cost of private health benefits down.

Moreover, New York based investment firm Morgan Stanley Dean Witter found that General Motors pays an average of $3,000 in private health insurance benefits for each of its U.S. employees. These private health benefits add $931.70 to the cost of each GM vehicle produced in the United States.

The bottom line, Mr. Speaker. Asking corporations to forgo planned reductions in corporate tax rates is very fair and very reasonable. Asking Alberta families who have been hurt by other recent tax change policies, such as the flat tax, to pay more in health care premiums is neither fair nor reasonable.

I urge all members of this Assembly to support Motion 501. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Treasurer in the minute and a bit left.

MRS. NELSON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I wanted to make a comment at the very beginning about the concept of the benefits of a very competitive tax system and what it has meant to Alberta in the last number of years and what we believe it will mean to Alberta and to Albertans over the next several years.

First of all, Albertans enjoy the lowest overall tax regime within Canada. Clearly, we recognized a number of years ago that to be competitive in Canada was very, very important but equally important was to be competitive on a North American basis, not only on our corporate side but on our individual side. That's why, Mr. Speaker, last year Albertans kept $1.1 billion of personal income tax in their pockets so they could decide what to do with those dollars. We felt that was an important step as a government to move forward to encourage people and young people in particular to stay in Canada to pursue their dreams and their businesses here in this country.

In fact, in December I just finished putting forward an additional $75 million adjustment to protect against bracket creep on the indexation of the personal income tax so that we would in fact continue to have that benefit.

Mr. Speaker, insofar as health care premiums I think it's very important that we are very fortunate in Canada to have . . .

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. minister, but the rules of the House are such that the time for consideration of this item on this day has finished.

Just a reminder. We do have time allotments that allow 60 minutes, so when that's been calculated, then the hon. member proposing the motion will have five minutes to conclude the debate, but that will have to wait till next Monday evening.

9:00

head: Committee of Supply

[Mr. Tannas in the chair]

THE CHAIR: I'd like to now call the Committee of Supply to order.

head: Supplementary Estimates 2001-02
General Revenue Fund, No. 2

THE CHAIR: The chair would like to first of all remind hon. members that we've just gone through where 10 minutes was the maximum. Again we're back to 20 minutes as the maximum, but because you're allowed unlimited times to get up and ask a question and have it responded to, you're invited to use less than 20 minutes.

Anyway, it has been suggested that we have a brief overview from each minister and then questions. Is that agreeable?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE CHAIR: Objection? No? Okay.

Then I believe if we start, we're going to start with the hon. Minister of Children's Services.

MS EVANS: Thank you very much. I would point out that on page 15 of the 2001-2002 supplementary estimates from the general revenue fund there is a supplementary appropriation of $500,000 assigned to cover extra costs which might be incurred by this ministry as a result of the teachers' labour dispute. Obviously, Mr. Chairman, currently the department is assessing what costs, if any, were required to be spent. If at any time there are funds that are not used – I assume there would be considerable funds that would not be used – then this supplementary funding will be lapsed at the end of the fiscal year.

Just a couple of quick examples. These funds would be used to cover additional respite care to parents of children with disabilities who are unable to send their children to school for learning purposes. It would also assist with extra staffing costs which could be incurred by group homes and other residential services, ensuring that staff were present during those hours when normally their charges, their children in care, would have been in school. These are at least two examples of areas in which we believe there may be some interruption, and in the best interest of children these funds would be made available to cover any of those costs that could be involved in the extent of a significant interruption of services.

Could I just point out that during the springtime or particularly in spring breaks service providers and families are expected to take care of children during those breaks, but interruptions which may not be expected, such as the interruption of a teachers' strike, necessitated that we be prudent and that we provide some capacity to fund those costs should they be incurred.

So with that, Mr. Chairman, I will sit down and be prepared to answer any questions.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Minister of Environment.

DR. TAYLOR: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. As you can see in the supplementary estimates, we're just getting over $8 million extra, and it's broken really into three sections. Six million dollars of it goes to two programs. We have Climate Change Central in Calgary, which is the operational partnership between government, the private sector, and environmental groups. That board runs independently from governments, organized as not-for-profit, and the board of that group is made up of industry sectors and environmental groups and is strongly supported by the environmental groups and the NGOs.

So what we're doing is offering them more funding. Four million dollars of the $6 million goes to the study on flaring. We have a three prairie province study going on flaring which looks at the effects of flaring on animal and human health, and it's being strongly supported by CASA, Clean Air Strategic Alliance. It's a very valuable study. We're just at the present time trying to get industry and the other two provinces, Manitoba and Saskatchewan, to kick in their fair share and are having some difficulty with the other two provinces. But I would point out that this study really makes the bill introduced by the hon. member opposite, who's standing up and talking while I'm speaking, totally unnecessary. I will comment on that bill – Bill 203 I think its number is – at the time.

Finally, the other roughly $2.2 million is simply a transfer from Sustainable Resources over to Alberta Environment. They're lapsing the money. In good faith our good minister of sustainable resources has agreed to kindly pass that money on to Alberta Environment – I wish other ministers would follow his suit – and we are going to be using that for water issues.

Thank you very much.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Solicitor General.

MRS. FORSYTH: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to rise on behalf of the Justice minister and speak briefly on that and then speak on behalf of the Solicitor General.

Alberta Justice's supplementary estimate is at $1.5 million. The supplementary estimate covers the cost of wage settlement in the most recent collective agreement between the province and AUPE. Besides the negotiated salary increases, about 65 percent of Alberta Justice employees are affected by salary-grade increases in the contract. The contract settlement had a significant impact on the Justice ministry. Many of our judicial clerks and administrative support staff had been held in inappropriate salary grades, and in-scope adjustments were necessary to keep staff compensated appropriately.

Under the Alberta Solicitor General's supplementary estimate is $4,369,000. The supplementary estimate covers the cost of wage settlements in the most recent collective agreement between the province and the AUPE. Besides the negotiated salary increases, about 85 percent of the Alberta Solicitor General's employees are affected by salary grade increases in their contracts. Many others are affected by increases in shift differentials. Because Alberta Solicitor General is a people ministry, the contract settlement has had a huge impact on my ministry. The bottom line is a raise of about 13 percent for many of my employees.

Thank you.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thanks. We've had everyone speak, the ministers that wanted to?

THE CHAIR: To my knowledge. Is there anyone going to speak for the other ministers?

MS BLAKEMAN: For aboriginal affairs? Nobody speaking? Okay.

MRS. McCLELLAN: If you have questions, I'll answer them.

MS BLAKEMAN: Okay. Thank you.

Well, thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Another year, another supplementary supply. I've done at least one a year and sometimes two a year since I was first . . .

AN HON. MEMBER: And you say the same things, so sit down.

MS BLAKEMAN: Yeah, as much as I'd like to say, "Ditto, and you can take all my previous speeches," you know, there's always something new. This government is always willing to entertain.

I think that the fact we have one or two supplementary supply budgets a year really speaks to the government's ability to manage or rather . . . [interjections] Well, it's not a terribly complimentary thing I just said.

AN HON. MEMBER: They can't tell.

MS BLAKEMAN: I guess they can't. I appreciate the cheers though.

I think it also speaks to a lack of stability and sustainability. I mean, what's interesting about all of this is that if we look back over the 10 years of Ralph's world, I think we were all told that if we participated in the belt-tightening, we would all benefit, that things would be better. Certainly for the seniors that I've talked to and also for the students who are experiencing that intergenerational debt transfer by way of having student loans now of $20,000-plus as they come out, they don't see stability and sustainability out of all of this.

I think we were expecting or we were told that we were going to get, you know, lower taxes, programs for prevention, deluxe service delivery. All of this was promised to us. Do we have it? Well, no, not particularly. You see, we've been told all the way along that we don't have a revenue problem, that it's a spending problem. To quote the Minister of Finance: "Hello? Hello? Hello?" The government keeps giving us comparisons based on today versus the lowest funding level from this government, which is 1995. They go, "Look how much more we're spending," because they picked the figure that's from the very lowest spending date that they had. They can say, "Wow, we're spending double the amount that we were before," and I find it . . . [interjection]. Yes. Lies, damn lies, and statistics indeed.

I don't think we can say that spending is that much higher than 10 years ago. Now, revenue is still high, and the Treasurer did just put out her third-quarter update. In fact, when we look at the revenue, the revenue is still high. It is still high. It's the second-highest ever third-quarter update for revenue overall, and the revenue from taxes is almost the highest ever. Energy royalty is the second highest except for last year, which was some sort of extraordinary banner year. So we don't have a revenue problem here, but everything still needs money. We need money in Justice. We need money in municipalities, support for the voluntary sector, seniors, infrastructure, education, health care. There are calls from the sectors themselves, there are calls from the citizens saying: "This isn't what we expected it to be. It isn't good enough."

So how is it that all this extra money could have been put into the system and we're still not getting the program delivery that we were promised? There's a disconnect here. But I guess that this is Ralph's world, that you can take all that money and you still can't do it right. You can collect all that money and you still can't do it right. Did we get stability? No, we did not. Did we get sustainability? Obviously not. This is going up and down like a yo-yo. We can't seem to get either of those, and I think, looking back, what we did was we cut stupid and then we spent stupid. Now we're 10 years into this, and we still don't have this under control.

I want to look at the Children's Services budget. I have to sort of gently question. I appreciate that the minister says that there's more money needed to be put into Children's Services because of disruptions during the teachers' strike. I just have to make that tiny little question about, well, who caused the teachers' strike? Who put a situation in place that caused the teachers to be so upset that they walked out? I would say this government.

I look at what's being said about the budget in Children's Services. The minister said some things in question period this afternoon that honest to goodness made my head come off. You know, my head pops off when I hear the minister say things like: all these positions have . . . [interjections] Hang on. I'll do a demonstration later. The budget increases that she's quoting, from $120 million in '99-2000 to $178 million, I'm assuming in this year, the 2001-2002 budget, and I think: well, I can look at that two ways. Either I say: "I'm sorry; I don't believe those figures. I don't see that you've included inflation here. I don't see that you've worked in or you're admitting to an increase in the number of children that you are delivering those services to, because obviously, if in '99-2000 . . . [interjections] The government solution is a band-aid, yup. You know, is that increase in the figure including inflation? Is it including any increase in the numbers of children that we are supplying these services to?

On the other hand, if I accept these figures and I go, "Okay; you had another $58 million in the Children's Service's budget," then why on earth are we having programs that are being cut? But then the minister says that the programs aren't being cut. That's what makes my head pop off, because I'm getting phone calls from people that don't get these programs and services anymore. So after she said this this afternoon, I got on the phone and phoned some of the people I know in the sector and said, "What is this; how can she say that there's more money going in here and there have been no cuts?" which is what she says. There have been no cuts.

Well, a patient couple of people pointed out to me that what it would be, given her comments, is that everybody took the 1 percent cut, so I'm told. So, in fact, there was a cut across the board to the children's regional authorities, and they passed that on to their providers. Also, Ma'Mōwe was already running a deficit, and they were made to trim their budget to come in at a zero budget. I'm assuming that that's where this is coming from.

You know, that's the same thing that we experienced in the '90s with the RHAs. It costs a certain amount to provide these services. The government creates a whole other administrative network of regional health authorities, decides how much money they're going to give them, gives the money, and the regional health authority says: we can't provide the services you're expecting us to provide for the money that you've given us. So they run a deficit, and then they get in heck from the Treasurer, who says that you can't run a deficit. Figure that out.

But we have another disconnect between what it actually costs to deliver those services and the amount of money that the government gives them, and simply the fact of the government saying "We shall give you X amount" does not make the programs cost X amount. So where are services being cut here? I'm really disappointed in that and especially when they are early prevention programs for children. I'm really disappointed in those choices that were made here, but I appreciate that that money is not going to be in here, that we're just dealing with a request for half a million dollars to address the additional costs of having to look after school-aged children who were not in school during the teachers' strike, and that's what the half a million dollars is for. I'll tell you there are still kids not getting services that they want.

All right. We'll look at Justice. Now, this is interesting, and maybe I can get the Solicitor General up and speaking on behalf of the Justice minister to answer a question here. I was expecting the $1.5 million that has been requested by Justice partly to be covering the settlement that was reached in the fall with the Crown prosecutors, where they had a grid increase at the top end, I think, and there was also an agreement to hire five more Crown prosecutors. Now in fact what I'm being told is that this is an AUPE settlement for clerks and administrative staff. So perhaps the minister could tell me how the costs were covered for the Crown prosecutors, because again I have a beef with the choices and the priorities that this government has. I think there's a real question about whether there is access to justice and good access to justice in this province.

I mean, right now we have a problem with courtroom space, with Crown prosecutors and their workload, and with vacancies on the judicial bench. So we have a problem. There are choices that are made in the department and there are choices that are being made in this supplementary supply that I don't think are increasing and guaranteeing access to justice.

I might make this same comment about the funds that are being requested under the Solicitor General's area. Again, she's saying that this is an AUPE wage settlement, grade increases in shift differentials for staff. But, you know, I know that there are situations in the court system right now where they can have the litigants and the defence all in the courtroom, and the judge is there – they're in a courtroom, assuming we can get all that stuff happening – and there's no court clerk available for them, so the whole system grinds to a halt. Or there's no security. In fact, there was a justice that made quite a big deal out of this and recommended that people get a transcript of that particular court proceeding and approach the government with it to underline how serious this is. This is not the first time that I've heard this issue being raised.

So I see the request for additional funds for administrative support people under Solicitor General and Justice, and I certainly understand why that's needed. If the whole system is grinding to a halt for the lack of people that are in the support services and you've got expensive people like judges and lawyers sitting around waiting for a court clerk, yeah, we're in trouble here, and there is a real question about access to justice.

I mean, on the other side, we're looking at choices that are being made by the Solicitor General where I'm suspecting what's happening here is that we're going to take more or less the same amount of money and stretch it a bit further, because last week we were dealing with the issue in the news about having parolees reporting to their parole officers less often. Sure enough that would result in fewer parole officers needed or their working less hours, because if you have someone that's only reporting once every three months instead of reporting every month, yeah, you'd need less staff. I'm wondering if those are the choices that this Solicitor General is making to stretch her budget a little further, but I challenge her as to public safety. I think this is a public safety issue, and I don't see the choices and the priorities being put in place by this government that are going to give us good public safety and access to justice.

Now, you know, I've got all kinds of facts and figures on spending patterns and how many special warrants we've given and how many supplementary supplies. The truth of the matter is that, you know, this government can come up with as many videos and songs and dances as they want. I just don't see good management of money. I see an incredible yo-yo effect. I see money being put into a system that doesn't appreciably get any better. We were told that we were going to have a restructured health system. We don't. We're still reviewing it. We're still getting reviews and task forces and things coming out to tell us what we should be doing there, and now we're going to start that same review process with education. So 10 years from now we'll still be having another review about how to really invest in education and improve the system. So I just don't see good fiscal management. I don't see good fiscal priority making by this government, and I'm just going to continue to disagree with them.

So I don't need to take up my full amount of time today. I can see that the Member for Edmonton-Calder is most eager to get up and join this debate, and I'm looking forward to his contribution. Aside from heckling me, I'm sure we'll all be interested in what he has to say.

I do find that this is a very poor way of managing money: to constantly – constantly – every year have to come back once or twice for a supplementary supply. Chances are pretty good that a month from now we'll be looking at – and I can't quite remember the exact term. [interjection] No, it's not. It's the one where we're into the next fiscal year, but we're now approving . . . Interim supply: that money be moved around in the fiscal year that we're in; so backwards. Isn't that interim supply? Okay, so that's moving the money around that we've already spent to actually make it match what happened. Boy, if I were allowed to do that with my books in the nonprofit world, my life would have been a whole lot easier, but I wasn't allowed to do that. I had to deal with what actually happened.

So you're always at this dilemma at this point. Do you support the increases that are being asked for going into the different departments because the money is needed and you know it's needed and you want to see it go there? Or do you say: "I've had it. I've had it with constantly having to come forward and say, 'Oops; oh oh, we need to shift this money around; we need to add more money in because we didn't plan properly, we didn't foresee things, we didn't put the priorities in, we didn't make the choices'"? I think to continue to approve these things is to encourage the government in its bad practices. So maybe this time I won't vote in support of this. Now, the government certainly has enough votes in this Chamber to outvote me, but maybe it's just a small personal stand that I can take to make my point that this is poor fiscal management.

Thank you very much for the opportunity to express those opinions, Mr. Chairman.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I have a question, if the Minister of Environment would indulge me. I'm just wondering if he can give any more details on the gas flaring and health study and the $4 million allocation for that.

Thanks.

DR. TAYLOR: This is an ongoing study that started two and a half to three years ago. The total price of the study is about $18 million, and it was started when the present Minister of Infrastructure was the Minister of Environment. We've got about another year or 18 months to go in the study. It is being run by a group of international experts. There is a board of directors made up of international experts. In fact, I can't remember some of their names, but there are a couple out of major universities in the U.S., seen as leaders in this whole area, who are advising the study. The study is being run out of the University of Saskatchewan, and it's being run, as I say, by the three prairie provinces.

The unfortunate part is that the other two provinces haven't really contributed any money yet, and there's still about an $8 million pocket left that needs to be funded. So what we've said to the other provinces and to industry, which really hasn't contributed a fair share yet either, is that we'll put in $4 million more, because Alberta has essentially paid 100 percent of the money up to date. We've spent, I think, $11 million so far, which is about a hundred percent of the study, and there's about another $8 million to go. We've said:

we'll commit another $4 million; industry and you provinces of Manitoba and Saskatchewan, it's time for you to front up now and put up some money.

So that's about where we are right now: looking for the other $4 million to complete the study.

DR. TAFT: Thank you very much.

Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2002

MRS. NELSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 8, the Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2002. This being a money bill, Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, having been informed of the contents of the bill, recommends the same to the Assembly.

[Motion carried; Bill 8 read a first time]

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to all parties for that unanimous consent.

I would move that the Assembly now stand adjourned until 1:30 tomorrow afternoon.

[Motion carried; at 9:37 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Tuesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Tuesday, March 5, 2002

1:30 p.m.

Date: 02/03/05

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

THE SPEAKER: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. Our Father, we confidently ask for Your strength and encouragement in our service of You through our service of others. We ask for Your gift of wisdom to guide us in making good laws and good decisions for the present and the future of Alberta. Amen.

Please be seated.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Seniors.

MR. WOLOSHTYN: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm very honoured to introduce to you and through you to the Assembly a group of about 49 grade 6 students and nine adults from Graminia school. The teachers are Mrs. Janice Carsell-Michaud and Mrs. Colleen McGhan-Cox, and they are accompanied by teaching assistants Mrs. Heather Friskie and Mrs. Debbie Fagan along with parent helpers Mrs. Tina Sautner, Mrs. Alanna Taylor, Mrs. Sheryl Hennig, Mrs. Yvette Schuh, and Mrs. Leslea Martin. I also have the privilege on Thursday of attending their DARE graduation. DARE is the drug abuse resistance education program, one of the best programs that has ever come into schools, sponsored by the RCMP and city police. I'd ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

MS EVANS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I rise today, I'd like to thank our hon. Member for Edmonton-McClung, who has given me the privilege of introducing two guests this afternoon that live in his constituency but will be properly recognized later by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark. The guests are Sid Hanson and his lovely wife, Emily. Sid has been the chairman of the Edmonton Regional Airports Authority. Many of us were privileged to honour and recognize Sid last week as we said good-bye to him in his role as chairman. He's been an outstanding leader. He has made aviation history in this province with the things he has done. I would ask Emily and Sid to please rise so we can warmly acknowledge their presence in the House this afternoon.

head: Oral Question Period

THE SPEAKER: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Children's Services

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On February 22 Children's Services placed a troubled 15 year old in a Grande Prairie motel with no adult supervision. According to an article in the Grande Prairie Daily Herald-Tribune, a 13-year-old girl was among the 10 youths found by the RCMP partying in that room that night. In today's Edmonton Journal the minister is quoted as saying that this practice is "rare, discouraged," yet the motel owner told the Official Opposition that he is asked twice a month to take overnight guests from children's authorities. My question today is to the Minister of Children's Services. Does the minister consider twice a month in one hotel a rare occurrence?

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, at your pleasure I will table some documents that I will read from in part today that respond to the hon. member.

We do not believe that it's advisable to provide residence for children in a motel. We at all times look for placement within either residential homes of foster families or in group homes. This situation was most unfortunate in that the child in question that had been resident in the motel had had an obvious – what shall we say? – error in the management of the paperwork that surrounded the child's transfer, and there was a lack of knowledge by the worker that was supposed to be attending and supervising the child. I do not believe that any of these circumstances are ones that we would condone. While they are regrettable, I am assured today that they are doing everything in their power to make sure that this does not happen again. It is an embarrassment, obviously, but one that we're working to ensure doesn't occur again.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Does the minister think it is acceptable that while this incident happened well over a week ago, she still did not have the information for this House yesterday?

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, I did not have the information for the House yesterday, and for that I apologize. We have been working very hard to provide the follow-up on the basis of the comments that the hon. member has made. We have done a review of the situation, and we have spoken to the people that are in charge of that authority. I am truly sorry that this incident occurred. I am only thankful that nothing that seems to have been materially wrong has happened to harm either the safety or well-being of the children, but it is something that wherever possible we work to our utmost to avoid.

Mr. Speaker, may I just to this Assembly say one thing. I had three sons, and God knows that as a good parent I tried to do my level best. From time to time they did things that I did not approve of, and I followed up on that. To try and attack this minister for the things that we do that are right for over 15,000 children every day is wrong. We've got ministers, people that are working out there doing as much as they can to be prudent parents. [interjection] If the hon. member would only listen, she might find out that in 99 percent of the cases we are a hundred percent right.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister tell this House what her department has done in the past week to make sure that the parents' home is the best place for the child, when only a few days ago Children's Services saw fit to remove this child from his home?

MS EVANS: You know, Mr. Speaker, with great regret I did not hear all of the hon. member's questions, but I assume they related to the due diligence of what had been put in place in the department within that authority this past week. I will table the answers to the three questions: why there wasn't a safe, supervised facility for this child, asked yesterday; relative to the motel owners and relative to the confirmation about how we place children in motels, today.

On the latter point that has been raised by the hon. member, the Leader of the Opposition, I will table further work that has been done in the authority on behalf of the children.

THE SPEAKER: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Special Case Review

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Children's Services has promised to release a report this week on the special case review that looked into the tragic deaths of Angel and Shaniece Kerrigan-Kinahan, the Slave Lake twins found dead in a Thunder Bay motel room on January 27. I am very concerned that the Minister of Children's Services may have biased . . .

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

THE SPEAKER: Just a second. Let's hear what we have to say here first.

DR. NICOL: I'm very concerned that the Minister of Children's Services may have biased the outcome of this commission before it even started, because on February 4 she told CBC radio that after the private guardianship order was in place, the responsibility was not hers but was instead the twins' grandfather's, Mr. Kerrigan. To the Minister of Children's Services: did the special case review consider whether or not recent cuts to the Children's Services budget played a role in the events leading to the deaths of those children?

THE SPEAKER: Now, hon. minister, on a point of order.

Point of Order Referring to Persons by Name

MS EVANS: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's my understanding that one does not raise in this House the names of children, and I would question whether or not the hon. member, in raising the question in the fashion he has done – has he made in fact a breach of what we understand is our parliamentary procedure? There's confidentiality in dealing with children.

THE SPEAKER: On this point of order are there additional points?

MS CARLSON: Sir, will we deal with this point of order after question period, which has been the traditional time to deal with points of order?

THE SPEAKER: Are there additional comments on this point of order?

Well, hon. members, the traditional time in which one would deal with a point of order would be at the conclusion of question period. However, in terms of the efficiency of this particular parliament on this particular day, the point of order raised by the hon. Minister of Children's Services is an interesting one. The hon. minister says that it would not be appropriate to raise the names of certain children in this Assembly. Yet it would appear to the chair that the names of these children have been common public knowledge for several weeks now, and it has been commented on by a number of individuals, including the hon. minister herself, and these names have been publicly reported throughout the media in this country.

So I think that it's probably prudent to deal with this point of order now and indicate that it's not a point of order and ask the hon. leader to proceed.

DR. NICOL: Mr. Speaker, will the minister respond to the first question?

THE SPEAKER: Another interesting fine point, hon. leader. With strike one one could almost argue that the hon. minister has responded to the first question.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister explain how she is not biasing the outcome of the special case review when she has already stated that her department is not to blame?

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, I am not sure in which context the hon. member is using the words. We have been very careful in the statements issued about special case reviews in every circumstance not to bias those reviews. We have been very careful in the most recent circumstances where we appointed a special panel to make sure that somebody was appointed from outside the province, to make sure that we provided somebody with huge credentials, a doctor renowned in his various areas of expertise. We've done our utmost to make sure that we provide an unbiased opportunity for the panel to look at the issues.

Mr. Speaker, I have not been familiar with any context in which we have tried to shift emphasis, lay blame, or change the context. The only article that has appeared before me has been something as stated by the member that is responsible for the College of Social Workers in Alberta.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the minister: will the minister promise this House that the results of the special case review will be made public?

MS EVANS: Well, Mr. Speaker, I've stated it again and again and again. We will be as transparent as we can without breaking any confidentiality. The report will have two parts. It will respond on what our findings are and recommendations from the special case review, and it will also deal with and address those issues which were identified as human resource issues.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. "It is our belief that supports and services for children and adults with developmental disabilities and their families are in jeopardy and that individuals are being put at risk." Those are the words of the Southern Alberta Community Living Association. Yet the Minister of Children's Services maintains that children are not being hurt. My questions are to that minister. Does denying youngsters previously approved for funding and services not hurt children?

MS EVANS: Well, Mr. Speaker, until today I thought the hon. opposition had forgotten me, but they haven't, so I'm glad to be back.

Mr. Speaker, that's a very serious question. I have been privileged to receive a number of concerns on behalf of the parents and on behalf of the children from the hon. Member for Lethbridge-West, who has reviewed with me not only a videotape of the actual meeting but has given me names and addresses of people who have asked questions. Obviously there are individual answers to individual cases, but we have been doing our utmost to make sure that children who have disabilities have the privilege of having supports.

Later today I will speak in this House on legislation that will address the ways that children receive supports. We think it's important for policy to provide a framework for their opportunity to receive dollars, that it shouldn't be at the whim of somebody making decisions or an appeal panel to judge whether it was right or wrong. We've done our utmost, Mr. Speaker, to find ways and means to support those children with special needs. I should add that across Canada one of the reasons why children take a look at Alberta with special advantage and why people move here is because there are more supports provided here for children with special disabilities than there are anywhere else from sea to sea.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. MASSEY: It's interesting, but that's not what I asked, Mr. Speaker.

Does denying youngsters previously approved for service not hurt children?

MS EVANS: Well, Mr. Speaker, since last fall when we first worked on cost-containment strategies, I have asked for people to bring to me names and circumstances where children have not received service that they must receive in order to look after the best interests of the child. If there are specific examples, the hon. opposition and other members have not thought fit to bring those forward to me.

More recently I met with a number of social workers from across Alberta. I asked for the same thing: please give me names and addresses so that if children have been denied service that they absolutely need, then we would look into it but in the confidential manner in which we handle every case file, hon. member, and not just bringing it out to air here in the Legislative Assembly as if we have suddenly found something that's wrong in the system.

We have been doing everything possible, and if I go back to the resources that we've spent this past year, let's reiterate: $647 million spent on children's services this year, huge increases from three years ago – $647 million, Mr. Speaker – and the only one of three ministers that will see additions still provided for children as identified in the throne speech, something that further underscores the commitment of this government to the children of Alberta.

DR. MASSEY: Well, I'll try again, Mr. Speaker. Does denying youngsters previously approved for service not hurt those children?

MS EVANS: Well, Mr. Speaker, without saying specifics, how can I respond to that?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Back-to-work Order

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday in this Assembly the Minister of Justice said that even if another mechanism is found for settling the province's dispute with teachers, he's still leaning towards appealing last Friday's court ruling which threw out the government's back-to-work order. The Minister of Justice seems to be taking lessons from a former colleague on how to waste public dollars on suicidal missions in the courts. My question to the Premier: why won't the Premier rein in the Justice minister before he needlessly wastes more public dollars on a pointless appeal of a court ruling on the back-to-work order?

MR. KLEIN: Well, I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the hon.

leader of the third party is full of anticipation and speculation. Nothing has been decided. My recollection of the question that was asked of the Justice minister and Attorney General was: was an appeal being considered? His reply was that if – and that is an if, if underlined – an appeal is to be launched, it wouldn't be launched on the case itself, in other words the issue of the dispute, but it would be launched on a jurisdictional basis. But there has been no decision whatsoever as to whether an appeal will be launched.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second question to the Premier: does the Premier stand behind his Justice minister, who said in this House yesterday that Justice Allan Wachowich of the Court of Queen's Bench interfered – these are the words that the minister used – with a provincial cabinet order in ruling on the government's back-to-work order?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, the hon. Justice minister and Attorney General is a wonderful lawyer and, I understand, a very competent lawyer and as a lawyer is entitled to express an opinion relative to any decision, as is any other citizen free to express an opinion. How I feel about that opinion makes no difference at all. As a matter of fact, I have no thoughts whatsoever on that particular opinion. This is a matter of law and a matter on which lawyers could and should rightfully comment.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. If the Premier is not willing to take a position, let me ask the minister himself. Will the Justice minister withdraw his offensive use of the word "interference," which resulted in the Chief Justice of the Court of Queen's Bench taking the very unusual step of defending his actions in an on-air radio interview? Would you like to comment on it?

MR. HANCOCK: Well, Mr. Speaker, you can use whatever synonym you wish for the word, but the comment essentially that I was trying to make yesterday was that when a court reviews an order of the Lieutenant Governor in Council which is expressed in legislation to be the opinion of the Lieutenant Governor in Council, there's a very high standard. In the judgment itself there's a distinction made between the Lieutenant Governor in Council operating as an administrative body or operating as a legislative body. Obviously, the court and I have a difference of opinion as to whether we were legislating or administrating.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Teachers' Labour Dispute

MRS. ADY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday Premier Klein and then the ministers of Learning and Human Resources and Employment met with the head of the Alberta Teachers' Association. As a result of these meetings, caucus will be reviewing a plan that may lead to a possible resolution of the current labour dispute. My first question today relates to one part of the proposed solution: a Mazankowski-style educational review. To the Minister of Learning: can you confirm that a report of this nature is being considered and outline what sorts of things would be included in such a review?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Yes, this was something that was raised in the conversations that were being had yesterday. I must also say that this has been raised in the context of the Future Summit. We will take a look at all of these suggestions, and I do believe there is some merit in this. I believe there's merit in continually evaluating our system, in continually attempting to come up with a better system, and I'm certainly one hundred percent behind anything that will do that. The specific details I cannot give the hon. member here today, but I will confirm that we are taking a look at it.

Speaker's Ruling Oral Question Period Practices

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, normally caucus matters are not the purview of the question period. Now, this is rather interesting, where a government member has raised a question to a government minister and they've agreed publicly to discuss caucus matters.

Proceed.

MRS. ADY: My second question, hopefully as good as my first, is to the same minister. If binding arbitration is part of the solution, how does what is being proposed differ from what government outlined in the original back-to-work order?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

DR. OBERG: Mr. Speaker, thank you very much. I will say that I'm a little cautious in talking about this purely because it is speculation and again given the hon. Speaker's previous ruling. We were asked by the leader of the ATA to take a look at binding arbitration. Our first look at it shows it to be very similar to what was brought forward to the emergency tribunal, so we are looking at the specific details of that. I do believe though, again, that it is a little too early to comment fully on it, and in the due course of time perhaps – perhaps – this Legislature will have a look at it.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MRS. ADY: Thank you. My final question is to the Minister of Learning. What role will school boards play in this? Don't they have a say?

DR. OBERG: Well, Mr. Speaker, that's an excellent, excellent question, because over the last four or five months the school boards in many cases have been the forgotten party in all of this. The school boards are the ones who will be signing the contract. So, yes, they do have a say, and I will announce today, as the Premier has announced, that the Premier and I will be meeting with the head of the Alberta School Boards Association tomorrow to discuss what has taken place. I do not want to prejudice any of the discussions, but I expect that it will be a very frank, a very blunt, and a very good discussion.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Cross.

Low-income Programs

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With the visit to the Herb Jamieson Centre last December one would think that the Premier and this government would have a greater appreciation and a sense of urgency for the plight of the homeless, the poor, and the disabled of this province. My first question is for the Premier. Why is this government trying to balance the budget on the backs of the poor and the disabled using the $34 million originally budgeted for low-income programs that has not been used?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, to my knowledge we're not, and we have no intention to do so. It's the policy of this government to look after those who truly can't fend for themselves in society, and I think we're doing a darn good job of doing just that.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: given that in the third-quarter fiscal update that we all received last week Human Resources and Employment spending is $34 million lower than budgeted due to lower costs for supports for independence, labour market development, and skill development programs, why can't you do the right thing and increase SFI rates and the rates for the AISH clients now? Why make them wait until some low-income review from the minister . . .

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, before I have the hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment respond, I would like to point out to the hon. member that the AISH program is unique in Canada.

MRS. NELSON: The only one of its kind.

MR. KLEIN: Yes, it's the only one of its kind in Canada, and we are so fortunate in this province to be able to have a program that looks after an assured income for the severely handicapped. To my knowledge no other province, no other jurisdiction in this country has such a program, so that's something to keep in mind when he criticizes a program that is unique in this country. Relative to the specifics of the question, I'll have the hon. minister respond.

MR. DUNFORD: Well, let's examine the facts, Mr. Speaker, if we could. First of all, I think that because of the leadership and the philosophy of this particular government, we have the Alberta advantage well at work within this province, and what we're starting to see, of course, and what the hon. member has inadvertently allowed me the opportunity to do is to tell you and to tell all Albertans that the number of clients dependent on our supports for independence programs is down. These people are in fact working, and isn't that what we want?

We receive money from the federal government under the labour market development agreement, which, I might add, is an excellent example of flexible federalism. It works very, very well, but again because of the high employment levels within Alberta there were fewer clients coming forward that needed the assistance of the LMDAs, and because under our agreement we can't transfer those moneys into other particular areas, then of course it is something that we don't fill up the full component of that contract with the federal government. The SDP program that he's referred to is the acronym for the skills development program, and once again we have Albertans out in the workplace working and gaining training, gaining experience, making money, paying taxes, all of those things within this Alberta economy.

Now, here's where, of course, the key is, and I think that even the hon. member in his household would have a basic understanding, a basic understanding of the fact that because of the decrease in these numbers you do create a little bit of a surplus, I think about .03 percent of our particular budget. You don't start funding operating, ongoing programs with surpluses.

2:00

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Human Resources and Employment then: when can the disabled, those Albertans who cannot work, expect an increase in their benefit rate under the AISH program?

MR. DUNFORD: Well, under the AISH program, as a matter of fact, we've just made some recent – actually, it was under supports for independence. Pardon me. The AISH program, if that's now what he is discussing, is part of the low-income review that we're currently looking at. We have received a report from the low-income review committee not only in terms of what they heard when they went around and listened to all Albertans that had an interest in this particular area, but they also made recommendations based on the input that was received. As a department we are currently examining this, and in the due course of time we of course will be going through the internal process and then presenting something to this House in terms of our response.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Cross, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

School Bus Driver Qualifications

MRS. FRITZ: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Last Friday a very serious incident occurred. It's been alleged that a school bus driver who tested at nearly three times the blood alcohol limit while driving created some very serious problems. There were 40 ECS to grade 9 students on the bus that day. Luckily, due to the intervention of a few very brave students the serious potential for disaster was averted. So today my questions are for the Minister of Transportation. Mr. Minister, what are the qualifications that are required by your department for a person to drive a school bus?

MR. STELMACH: Mr. Speaker, any person wishing to drive a school bus in excess of a seating capacity of 24 would have to have either a class 1 or a class 2 driver's licence. If that particular bus has air brakes, they would also need their air brake endorsement. The school board and/or bus contractors would also require further screening of the drivers by looking at their abstracts. They cannot obtain this without the written consent of the applicant, and section 66 of the Motor Vehicle Administration Act allows insurance companies, police, and also school board contractors to further investigate and check the abstract but, again, on written consent of the applicant.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MRS. FRITZ: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister. The fact is that a driver's abstract is simply a snapshot, I understand, of the previous three years of their record, so it may not show a previous suspension or conviction. How can a bus company obtain the full history of a prospective driver?

MR. STELMACH: Mr. Speaker, I'll just make it very clear that nothing is ever removed from a driver's abstract. That record will remain with the driver for life. It's just that it's a three-year snapshot, and it is possible to further check into the person's driving record by asking of course and, again, receiving written consent to see if there's any criminal record, as well, with respect to that particular applicant. So there are provisions. In this particular case it's the three-year picture, snapshot, and in those three years of course part of the record wasn't included.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MRS. FRITZ: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister. Given the situation, I'd ask the minister: will he commit to reviewing the school boards' and bus companies' systems for screening applicants?

MR. STELMACH: Mr. Speaker, we will commit to again sit down with school boards and school bus contractors to look at how we can look at the process. But I just want to remind the House that on a daily basis there are about 200,000 students on about 5,500 school buses. I don't want to diminish this particular issue that happened, but if you look at the kilometres, on a daily basis that's like going around the world 10 times in one day. We have to be more vigilant, more diligent, and I assure the House that we will continue to monitor and work with school boards to ensure that this does not happen again, but overall we have a pretty decent school bus driving record in the province of Alberta.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the hon. Member for Redwater.

Bighorn Wildlife Recreation Area

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions today are all to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. What tracking or enforcement does your department do to enforce its policy that off-highway vehicles are not permitted in areas designated zone 1, prime protection?

MR. CARDINAL: Mr. Speaker, the area that's been mentioned in this House a number of times is the Bighorn backcountry, and I indicated earlier that that area covers – it's a very sensitive area – over 4,000 square kilometres.

AN HON. MEMBER: How big?

MR. CARDINAL: Over 4,000 square kilometres, and 80 percent of it is prime protection area. In fact, during the special places process which took place the last number of years, it was nominated as a site to be designated as a special places site. The appropriate committee, which is normally selected by the municipalities in the area, reviewed it and decided at the time that the area should be left as it was with additional work in relation to how access would be dealt with in that particular area. Of course, since then we've set up a committee of 15 members representing various organizations like the petroleum industry, trail riding, guides and outfitters, off-highway vehicle users, which the opposition member mentioned, snowmobilers, and also residents of Clearwater county.

Mr. Speaker, what will happen is that there is going to be a public meeting on March 14, I believe, at Rocky Mountain House, and of course at this public meeting we will hear from the general public to determine what processes should take place in order to arrive at a multi-use area keeping in mind that, yes, we have to protect the environment, but we also have to allow the development that's required that it is possible to do in the area.

So, Mr. Speaker, I am confident that with the participation of those members that are living out there and the users, we will come up with a decent plan. That area is over 4,000 square kilometres, and the public, both people that want to protect the environment and people that want to use parts of the area for other uses – it is possible to do that. We have no problem doing that.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. He didn't answer the question, so I'll ask this one. What actual steps has his department taken to ensure that off-highway vehicles are not being used in this area of the Bighorn? We would actually like an answer to this question.

MR. CARDINAL: You know, maybe the opposition would do it a little differently than we did. No doubt they would. No doubt they'd put the rules in first and then put the committee in after to determine how you may deal with the rules. We don't operate that way. We don't operate that way, Mr. Speaker. We look at the whole area of 4,000 square kilometres. Eighty percent is prime protected area, but there is an opportunity for multi-use in the area, and this is exactly what's happening with the 15-member committee. The 4,000 square kilometres will be reviewed thoroughly.

Just remember – I want to mention it again – that it was recommended to be designated for special places. That was not accepted by the committee from that region. They said that that area should be multi-use, and that is exactly what we're doing.

MS CARLSON: So, Mr. Speaker, with two nonanswers is this minister actually saying that they are doing no tracking or enforcement or taking any steps to ensure that off-road vehicles are not used in the Bighorn?

MR. CARDINAL: Mr. Speaker, that is, you know, the concern out there. Some of the public are concerned that there are too many off-road vehicles in any area of Alberta. Then, of course, you'll have the others that want to protect the area completely. You can be assured that we will always keep a balance, keep the environmental side protected and also the development side that can be developed in a reasonable way developed.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Redwater, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Romanow Commission

MR. BRODA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In recent media comments it appears that the Romanow commission is hearing similar concerns as were brought forward to the Mazankowski group. My question is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. What is the cost of the Romanow exercise versus Mazankowski's?

Speaker's Ruling

Questions outside Ministerial Responsibility

THE SPEAKER: The first commission that the hon. member is referring to falls under federal jurisdiction. It is not within the purview of a member of Executive Council in the province of Alberta. However, if the minister feels that he is certainly capable of answering the question, he can proceed.

Romanow Commission

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, there have been a number of commissions that have been created across Canada to review the issue of the Canadian health care system. Of course, there's been the Claire commission in the province of Quebec, the Fyke commission in the province of Saskatchewan, the Kirby Senate commission and the Romanow commission, and of course our own Premier's council on health care, led by former Deputy Prime Minister Mazankowski.

Mr. Speaker, I can indicate that there have been many similar findings in these reports across Canada, whether it's coming from economists or from health care professionals or patients themselves, and whether it comes from an NDP government or a Parti Quebecois government or a Liberal government, many of the same conclusions have been arrived at.

I can indicate, Mr. Speaker, that I have investigated this particular question. The cost of the Fyke commission, which was for the province of Ontario and commissioned by then Premier Romanow and delivered to now Premier Calvert of the province of Saskatchewan – that report was estimated at being $2 million. The Romanow commission has a budget which has been disclosed to the public as being in the range of $15 million. By comparison, the numbers which I tabled, I believe, in this House yesterday, the cost of the Mazankowski report, came in at $326,000.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. BRODA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: how will the Romanow report tie in with the Maz report?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, we have said all along that from the perspective of the provincial government of Alberta there are good ideas that are meritorious of investigation that have emerged from other jurisdictions in Canada. I believe that Mr. Romanow will do a very good job in his public hearings. Any recommendations that come out of Mr. Romanow's commission that may be applicable to the province of Alberta and would be of benefit to the delivery of health care in this province we will be prepared to evaluate and move forward on if those good ideas. . .

AN HON. MEMBER: Make sense.

MR. MAR: Make sense. Exactly.

So, Mr. Speaker, we will look at what Mr. Romanow prepares when his report is delivered later on this year. I believe that November is the timetable he has set out. In the meantime we are proceeding with the 44 recommendations set out in the Mazankowski report.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. BRODA: No further questions here.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Grant Funding Policy

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The federal cultural spaces Canada program offered $80 million to improve infrastructure for artistic communities. Alberta's arts and cultural groups have not had access to funds like these since 1967, and now they can't get reliable matching funding because this government is dithering about lottery fund allocations. My questions are all to the Minister of Gaming. Why is the minister jeopardizing access to federal money by his on-again, off-again grant funding policy?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. STEVENS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the hon. member knows, each year in this House lottery fund estimates are tabled and debated, and each year, in the last few years, those estimates have had allocations relative to funding for various grant programs including the arts foundation, which, by the way, is under the responsibility of the hon. Minister of Community Development. Once again this year, when the budget comes down, there will be an Alberta lottery estimate, and we will at that point in time address that issue.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Given that the minister lunches with some community lottery boards, whereupon their woes disappear, will the minister commit to lunching with all the boards to solve their application woes or at the very least inform them all if there's going to be a program to access?

MR. STEVENS: Well, Mr. Speaker, I don't get invited to lunch by all community lottery boards, but if I receive invitations to lunch, I can tell the hon. member that I will give them due consideration, because, as may be apparent, I do like to eat lunch.

AN HON. MEMBER: And dinner and breakfast.

MR. STEVENS: Yeah. Three squares a day is appropriate.

I think the answer to this question, Mr. Speaker, is similar to the answer to the first, and that is that each year the items which make up the Alberta lottery fund estimates are tabled. They will again be tabled along with the budget later this month, and at that point in time the issue that the hon. member has raised will be the subject of debate.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Well, be it CFEP grants, lottery board grants, legacy grants, or changes in gaming policy, what is this government's long-term commitment to supporting the voluntary sector?

MR. STEVENS: The commitment of this government with respect to the voluntary sector is significant. The gaming scheme that is in place in Alberta is a charitable one, and the resources associated with that are for the purposes of charity. For example, in the year 2000 as a result of licences being granted to various charities and not-for-profit groups in the province, which would be for casinos and bingos and raffles, they earned something in the order of $175 million.

AN HON. MEMBER: How much?

MR. STEVENS: One hundred and seventy-five million dollars, which went directly to those particular groups.

In addition to that, the funds that went into the Alberta lottery fund, which come from gaming exclusively, were allocated to a number of foundations, two of which are under the responsibility of my ministry, the community facility enhancement grant program and the community lottery board program, and in the past year they had about $75 million allocated to them. In addition, I believe that there are five foundations which are funded through the Alberta lottery foundation which are under the responsibility of the Minister of Community Development, and I think they amount to another $50 million or $60 million. But beyond that, Mr. Speaker, I think it's important to recognize that the entire Alberta lottery fund is for the benefit of community and public initiatives, and all Albertans are beneficiaries of that.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, followed by the hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

Municipal Land Reserves for Schools

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the Urban Development Institute, which represents commercial developers, joined the city of Edmonton in opposing the Conservative government's push to have a supermarket located on municipal reserve land in the Callingwood area of Edmonton. The Municipal Government Act is clear and unambiguous: municipal reserve land can only be used for parks, recreation areas, and schools; it cannot be used for supermarkets or other private purposes. If municipal reserve land is deemed surplus, the law requires that the land is transferred back to the municipality in which it is located. My question is to the Minister of Municipal Affairs. In light of the strong opposition not only of the city of Edmonton but also from the development industry, will the government now back off on its plans to force the school board and the city of Edmonton to locate a high school with a supermarket there?

2:20

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. BOUTILIER: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. To the hon. member, first and foremost, one thing for certain is that Albertans are not afraid to think outside of the box, because we are in the 21st century. That being said, right now we have a dispute between the city of Edmonton and the Catholic school board. I have offered mediation. In terms of the work within the Catholic school board and the city of Edmonton, though, I hope that they will take up our offer regarding mediation pertaining to this local issue to be dealt with with the local electors.

MR. MASON: Mr. Speaker, given that the minister has been behind this cockamamy scheme from the beginning, isn't his offer of mediation somewhat like asking Ariel Sharon to mediate between the Palestinians and the Israelis?

MR. BOUTILIER: Well, Mr. Speaker, allow me the latitude to respond in this way. The city of Edmonton has sent correspondence to the province indicating this, and I quote: city council is fundamentally opposed to the removal of their authority to make decisions regarding land use. I will table this at the appropriate time. However, what I find interesting is that I read in the Journal and the Sun that the city of Edmonton says that they'd like to have the province involved. So what is it? Do they want us to allow them to utilize their authority, or do they want us to be involved? How we were involved is through mediation.

MR. MASON: Mr. Speaker, why can't this minister get it through his head that allowing a commercial supermarket to locate on municipal land reserved for schools and parks sets a dangerous and undesirable precedent and that he is in effect asking the city of Edmonton to break the government's own laws?

MR. BOUTILIER: Mr. Speaker, what's very important at the end of the day in these two jurisdictions as they work together is quite simply this: no matter what takes place, it is the authority of the city of Edmonton. If it's so determined in evaluating the pros and cons to transfer the land from the city of Edmonton to the Catholic school board, that is solely a decision of the city of Edmonton and its local electors.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

Workers' Compensation Board Review

MR. HORNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The government has been reviewing the workers' compensation system for some time now, and I've had a number of calls in my constituency office. The review has included a lot of extensive public consultation. Could the Minister of Human Resources and Employment please advise this House what outcomes or status we are looking at for the WCB review process now?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. DUNFORD: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. We're on the spring list, as you might know, for bringing forward amendments to the Workers' Compensation Act. What we'll be looking at primarily, I think, comes into four areas. First of all, we want to make the workings and the decision-making and the appeal system inside the board more transparent. The second thing that we want to do is to provide an accountability framework whereby, then, all Albertans would be able to analyze and evaluate the operations of the WCB, because there would be an accountability framework which would then be audited by the Auditor General.

We want to remove the apparent conflict between the Appeals Commission and the WCB by moving the Appeals Commission further away from the WCB and having it report to the Minister of Human Resources and Employment and of course, then, have a governance model similar to the Labour Relations Board. Lastly, we want to provide an opportunity for conflicting medical opinion to be dealt with. So a pilot is contemplated between WCB, the Alberta Medical Association, and the College of Physicians and Surgeons.

Now, all of these changes, of course, will have a price tag to them, and as I understand it, the current estimate for cost is that it will be less than 1 cent per $100 of payroll, which is the normal assessed level of the WCB.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. HORNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Could the minister advise the House if the concept of minor employee contributions to encourage a cost-benefit relationship was reviewed?

MR. DUNFORD: The answer is no, because that would be a violation of the Meredith principle, wherein there is a no-fault insurance system that is put into place that looks after the medical costs and wage loss for an injured worker, and of course it is funded entirely through premiums of an employer.

Just as an aside, I remember a rookie that came into this House in 1993 that actually went further than question period, actually put it in a private member's bill. I think I still hold the record for being skunked the most.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. HORNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the recent increases in the WCB premiums in Alberta, could the minister advise the House: how does the WCB compare to private insurer options?

MR. DUNFORD: Comparisons are not only difficult but dangerous. The beauty of the workers' compensation system is that employers are required by law to be covered by injury insurance, and in Alberta and all of the other jurisdictions that have Workers' Compensation Board systems, the total cost, the total liability of all of that is then spread throughout all of those employers in all of those sectors. In a privatized system you're going to have cherry-picking, and you're going to have, then, a real disparity of coverage for workers.

Speaker's Ruling

Points of Order during Question Period

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, before calling on the first of four hon. members to participate in Members' Statements, just let me make a brief comment with respect to the operation of question period today, particularly the intervention of the point of order which was right at the very beginning.

Normally points of order are dealt with at the conclusion of question period, but today's point of order was such that if it had not been dealt with at the time it was dealt with, then there would have been a question of whether or not the questions being proposed by the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition could have been proceeded with. Kind of hard to deal with that at the conclusion. It had to be dealt with at the time.

The time clock was kept running during that point of order, so for those hon. members who have sent me notes basically asking were they denied an opportunity to participate in a question today because the chair chose to deal with the point of order at the time, the answer to that question is no, they were not denied. In fact, today's question period went five minutes beyond the norm of 50 minutes; it went almost 55 minutes. In fact, there were 12 sets of questions raised today by hon. members, and the average tends to be about 11 and just above. So we are above the average in all of it, and it was the judicious thing to do.

Now, before dealing with Members' Statements, let me just point out to all members that today is the 10-year anniversary of the first election of the hon. Member for Little Bow, who arrived in this place by way of a by-election because, he says in a note to the chair, he was motivated determinedly by the Deputy Premier at the time who said publicly, quote: who cares about the Little Bow by-election?

I might also point out that today is the 61st anniversary of the arrival upon this planet Earth of the hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

head: Members' Statements

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Sid Hanson

MR. MASKELL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last Tuesday I, along with a number of members of this Legislature, was a guest at the Edmonton Regional Airports Authority at a reception honouring Mr. Sid Hanson.

Sid Hanson retired from the Edmonton airports board of directors on December 31, 2001, following a distinguished 10 years as a founding board member and as the authority's second chair for the period 1997 through 2001. Sid has played an enduring leadership role in defining and delivering the vision of Edmonton airports as an industry leader. In 1998 his focus was on delivering new air service along with further development of the air terminal plan. With the very rapid growth in our market the authority launched its strategic vision for a $300 million air terminal redevelopment.

I wish I could describe all of the accomplishments this outstanding Albertan has made to this province, but most of you will remember the grand opening of the southeast terminal in December 2000. It opened on time and under budget and opened in plenty of time to receive the world in 2001 for the grand events of July and August. Premier Klein was part of this magnificent event and was particularly pleased to see the scope and breadth of the authority's vision.

In summary, through the Sid Hanson era and particularly seen in the challenges of the last few months post 9-11, the authority has been able to continue to focus on the short-, medium-, and long-term future with the confidence and conviction that it has the right plan and the right team to guarantee industry leadership in delivering outstanding aviation and airport services to our capital region.

Thank you, Sid Hanson.

THE SPEAKER: To both the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark and the hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw, it's totally inappropriate to mention the names of individuals who are currently sitting and operating in this particular House and this particular parliament, so appropriate punishment will have to be meted out at a later opportunity.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Education System

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The current teacher dispute has again raised the need for an independent look at our schools. Selecting a narrow set of achievement scores and, based on those scores, making the generalization that school and classroom conditions are better than they have ever been is the kind of denial that has blinded the government to the problems facing our schools and helped lead to today's strife. We need a truly independent look at education in the province. Such a commission could look at three basic questions.

First of all, what is. What is the state of our schools? Let's look at claims with respect to class size, parent fund-raising, the lack of basic resources such as textbooks, the need for support staff, and the exclusion of low-income students from some programs in schools.

Secondly, let's look at what should be. Albertans have firm and varied ideas as to how they want education shaped now and in the future. Let's look at concerns about the adequacy of funding formulas, small schools, rural education, program accessibility, fees, and program affordability.

Thirdly, what should be done. From such an examination will come a list of recommendations, a blueprint, if you will, for the future of the education system. The last examination of our schools reported in 1972. The Worth Commission on Educational Planning issued a report entitled A Choice of Futures: A Future of Choices. Suggestions in that report led to provincewide kindergartens, calling even then for the province to assume fiscal responsibility for K to 12 education in order to provide equity and foreshadowed schools such as the one in inner-city Edmonton now offering year-round schooling.

One of the first bills former Alberta Liberal leader Laurence Decore introduced in 1993 in the Legislature was a bill to establish a royal commission on education. In the 1990s Alberta Liberals repeated that request. Such an examination has long been needed. The problems the government faces today with teachers may well have been avoided if this work had been done a decade ago.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Sandra Ladwig

MRS. JABLONSKI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Does your mother love you? Was she thrilled by the miracle of your birth, or did you ruin her life? Does she hate you? These are questions asked every day by adult adoptees who may never have the chance to know their birth family. A painful, gaping wound that never heals leaves a hole in their hearts, and many adoptees who never find their birth family rarely experience true peace and wholeness in their lives. There are close to half a million people in Alberta affected by adoption. Adult adoptees, many with a blessing from their loving adoptive parents, search to find the answers that they have been asking for since they were old enough to understand.

Is the government able to make things right so that adult adoptees can access their birth records? Are adults not capable of and responsible for working out their own relationships? The government has acted in the best interests of the child by providing a loving adoptive family. Once a child becomes an adult, do they not have the right to their own personal information?

For 43 years Mrs. Sandra Ladwig has been searching for birth families. She has done this voluntarily with no wages or income because of the indescribable joy and priceless happiness that is experienced when the majority of birth families are reunited.

Sandra is truly an angel of mercy. Without any benefit to herself or her family she selflessly strives to unite families that are desperate to know each other. She has helped thousands of families over the past 43 years and receives at least 10 phone calls a week asking for help. Sandra has been encouraging the provincial government for the past 25 years to change legislation to open adoption records with a no-contact declaration.

Yesterday was Sandra's 61st birthday. She may be close to retirement, but this does not slow her down. She's determined to see that the right thing is done, and when it is time for her to retire, there will be no need for 10 phone calls a week.

Sandra knows better than anyone else these words of Robert Munsch:

I'll love you forever,
I'll like you for always,
as long as I'm living
my baby you'll be.

The time has come for adoption records to be opened. Then Sandra Ladwig will be able to retire knowing that birth families will be able to find each other when they are ready to.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Aboriginal Culture

MR. CAO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In recognition of Native Awareness Week I would like to share with our colleagues a great life-enriching experience. Two summers ago I had the honour of being a guest at the powwow event in Lac La Biche, and I will remember that experience vividly. I was donned with full ceremonial headwear. I felt its weight on my head, but it was the spiritual and cultural value that has been impressed deeply in my feeling and my memory to this day and forever. I joined a parade of chiefs in the ceremonial dancing steps, in time with the chanting and the drumming. The sound, the sight, the colourful dresses, the friendly people in a beautiful natural setting of rolling hills and verdant woodland and the deep blue sky of Alberta: what an environment to be in.

I also realize that as Canadians having heritage from other lands, we can always find the culture of our heritage in those lands if we feel the need, but our aboriginal culture can only be found here and nowhere else in the world. In fact, this experience made me realize that our aboriginal culture needs to be nurtured and sustained as part of Canadian and Albertan development.

I'd like to point out the need to understand the cultural differences. I would like to use the words of Professor James Dempsey of the University of Alberta. At Chief Big Bear's trial the charges were read out in court and ended with the statement that the offences were against the peace of our Lady the Queen, her crown and dignity. The translator could not find the Cree equivalent for many of the legal phrases. As a result, some words, such as the word "crown," were translated literally. Big Bear responded: "These people all lie. They are saying that I tried to steal the great mother's hat. How could I do that? She lives very far across the great water, and how could I go there to steal her hat? I don't want her hat, and I did not know that she had one." Dual interpretation of this kind of encounter exists to the present day.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE CLERK: Pursuant to Standing Order 37.1(2) I wish to provide acknowledgment that the following required tablings were deposited today with the office of the Clerk by the hon. Mr. Mar. These are annual reports for the years 2000-2001 for the Alberta Association of Registered Occupational Therapists, the Alberta Health Facilities Review Committee, the Alberta Mental Health Board, the Chinook health region, the Palliser health authority, the Headwaters health authority, the Calgary health region, the David Thompson health region, the East Central health region, the WestView regional health authority, the Crossroads regional health authority, the Capital health authority, the Lakeland regional health authority, the Peace health region, the Northern Lights regional health services, and the Northwestern health services region.

In addition, the following document was deposited with the office of the Clerk by the hon. Mr. Mar: the Alberta Cancer Board annual report, 2000-2001.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

MR. STRANG: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have the proper number of copies to table today on behalf of the Evergreen local ATA members.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of a letter from myself to the Premier asking for an investment in Alberta's future to adequately fund child care and pay early childhood educators at a reasonable level.

My second tabling today is five copies of a report entitled The Shame of Canada's Nursing Homes: A Testimony of the Experiences of Older Persons in Care Facilities in Canada. This report was prepared by FAIRE, Families Allied to Influence Responsible Eldercare, and it's looking at what's happening in our eldercare facilities and seeking solutions to respect the rights and privileges of our older persons.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today with the privilege that I've been asked to table copies of a petition collected in Canmore expressing very serious concerns about reductions in health services in that town. It has been signed by 256 persons, a substantial portion of that population.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table five copies of a letter that I received a couple of weeks ago from the executive director of the Calgary Women's Emergency Shelter. In this letter the director has raised some serious concerns about the appropriateness of the language of the Alberta Children's Services survey. She draws particular attention to the confused goals of the survey. She wonders whether it's to improve services or to justify reduction in services, plus she is very concerned about the systematic bias built into the questions that Albertans are invited to answer.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, I rise today to table the required number of copies relative to questions posed in the House by Her Majesty's opposition and hope that they will suffice as an answer for the first part of the issues that arose.

Bill 1

Queen Elizabeth II Golden Jubilee Recognition Act

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Community Development on behalf of the hon. Premier.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed my great pleasure and privilege on behalf of our hon. Premier to rise and move Bill 1, Queen Elizabeth II Golden Jubilee Recognition Act, for second reading.

Mr. Speaker, this is truly a unique and wonderful bill, a great piece of legislation. I want to congratulate our Premier for sponsoring it and bringing it to this House, and I want to thank all of my colleagues for supporting it. It is truly a unique occasion. We haven't seen anything like it in the history of our province and of this Legislature, and we and our successors are not likely to see anything like it again, certainly not for a long time to come. The British monarchy has had more than its share of long-lived monarchs, but even among them golden jubilees have been rare. So I think it is most appropriate to take time to appreciate this very special moment. We are in fact the first Alberta Legislative Assembly to celebrate a monarch's golden jubilee, and we could well be the last. That may not be a momentous achievement as things go in the world today, but it is a special achievement nonetheless. It's an important occasion for most Albertans. Above all, it's a very happy occasion, and such occasions can be all too rare in this very frantic and fragile world.

I can't help but draw your attention, Mr. Speaker, to the fact that the Queen's jubilee year coincides quite happily with another jubilee achievement. Princess Elizabeth, as we know, ascended the throne of Great Britain on February 6, 1952. Sixteen days later an Alberta team of amateur hockey players, the Edmonton Mercurys, including our good friend Billy Gibson, ascended the podium as gold medalists at the 1952 Olympic Games. On February 6, 2002, Queen Elizabeth celebrated the 50th anniversary of her ascension and, may we call it coincidence or call it destiny, a professional team of Canadian hockey players marked the occasion by winning the gold medal at the 2002 Olympic Games. Not all of the 2002 Olympic hockey champions are Albertans, but some of them are, and I'm prepared to acknowledge all of them as honorary Albertans. In the meantime, we have two golden moments to celebrate now and to remember and treasure for years to come: one of them in honour of the Queen and one of them in honour of all Canadians. We know that the Queen has special regard for Canada, and I am confident that she, too, rejoiced with the rest of us when the gold medal came home to Canada.

As I'm sure you know, Mr. Speaker, our province has a unique connection with the royal family. It was named after Princess Louise Caroline Alberta, the fourth daughter of another long-lived British queen, Her Majesty Queen Victoria. Of course, our Legislature colleagues from Banff-Cochrane and Rocky Mountain House would remind us that it is a distinction that we share with the jewel of the Rockies, Lake Louise, and the thriving foothills community of Caroline. When Queen Elizabeth ascended the throne, that occasion was marked by the naming of many streets, parks, schools, hospitals, and other very familiar landmarks throughout our province, reminders to this day of that event and that happy occasion.

In 1952, when Queen Elizabeth II was just beginning her reign, Alberta was looking forward to and making plans for its golden jubilee in 1955. Now, as the Queen celebrates her golden jubilee, the province is getting ready and making plans for our 100th birthday, our centennial, in 2005. As Minister of Community Development I have the great privilege of being the minister responsible for both these landmark events, the recognition of the Queen's golden jubilee and the celebration of Alberta's centennial. I know there will be many synergies between the two celebrations, and I look forward to participating further in the planning and in the sharing of the results with my colleagues in this House and, indeed, with all Albertans.

But I'm not here just to dwell on the past, Mr. Speaker, and to point out happy coincidences. Jubilee and centennial celebrations are as much about the future as they are, of course, a salute to the past. I'm pleased to announce that Bill 1 establishes two Queen's golden jubilee scholarships, that will be awarded annually to outstanding students in the visual and performing arts fields. They will be administered by the Alberta Foundation for the Arts, which will look for young artists who show exceptional talent and potential, supported by clear educational goals and objectives. The years of Queen Elizabeth's reign have seen a remarkable growth of the arts in our province, Mr. Speaker, and I know you to be personally a great supporter of that cause, as are all members of this House, I'm sure, both in terms of quality and quantity. I should point out that there are awards-cum-scholarships already available for the literary arts through our Community Development sponsored Grant MacEwan awards for the literary arts. Hence these two new scholarships will focus on the visual and performing arts.

Mr. Speaker, in 1952 most Alberta artists, like our Olympic champions of the day, were amateurs, dedicated amateurs who knew that they had to be builders and lay strong foundations for future growth. They built those foundations and built them well, as our first-class artists, art organizations, and their appreciative audiences regularly demonstrate. As a mature arts community we are now producing many talented, focused young artists with legitimate ambitions to become world-class professional performers, artists, and educators. These two Queen's golden jubilee scholarships will bring well-earned recognition to Alberta's arts community by selecting two of the best and brightest students and showcasing their talent, their vision, and their abilities. Inspired by those who have laid these foundations, these young people will leave lasting impressions and impacts in Alberta and, in some cases, abroad. Mr. Speaker, this is the most significant recognition that the arts in our province have received in a long, long while, and to have them surface and highlighted in Bill 1, a bill sponsored by our hon. Premier, is indeed an accolade of large proportion.

Bill 1 also establishes the Premier's citizenship award, which will be given to one student each year in each high school in Alberta for outstanding contributions through their citizenship, leadership, community service, and volunteerism. As well, the Queen's Golden Jubilee Citizenship Medal will be awarded each year to the most outstanding five students from among those who are receiving an award under the Premier's citizenship award referred to earlier. I'm very proud to be associated with this program, and I look forward to meeting the first recipients of these awards and meeting many more after that.

Mr. Speaker, let me close by saying that the second Elizabethan era has been good to Alberta. We have thrived and prospered as perhaps no other part of Canada and few parts of the world. From one of the poorest and most remote parts of the country we have grown and matured to become one of the wealthiest, one of the strongest, one of the most stable provinces in the Confederation. Thanks to tremendous changes in transportation, communication, and other foundations of our province, this growth is expected to continue and to be very healthy throughout its reign. No one, not even the Queen herself, would claim that she is responsible for our success, but that does not mean that we cannot recognize and appreciate her as a symbol of our good fortune and celebrate her jubilee as a way of celebrating and giving thanks for the peace and prosperity that have marked the Elizabethan era in Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, earlier last summer, as part of the 2001 world games I had the great privilege of hosting two members of the royal family for a very special luncheon, which focused around the youth of this province. Bill 1 in a similar vein is also dedicated to celebrating and saluting our youth in Alberta.

On behalf of all my colleagues I express our deep thanks to Her Majesty for 50 outstanding years, and may I close by saying: long may she reign, and long may Alberta prosper under her reign.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to have this opportunity to speak to Bill 1 and to heartily endorse and support the action of the government in choosing to mark the golden jubilee of Queen Elizabeth II in a manner such as they have done; that is, making it possible for our young people in our high schools to be recognized and through that recognition to further their education.

I think that the whole notion of citizenship awards is going to be rather interesting in terms of the schools when they try to make those. Before I talk actually, though, about the citizenship awards themselves, I'd like to express the real need that we in the opposition see for a wide range of scholarships and a wide range of grants. The costs of education in our province are rising, and there's always been the concern that students whose families lack fiscal resources may be excluded from some of our institutions. So the more opportunities that can be provided for scholarships and for grants, I think, the better students will be. But I don't think that in any way it should remove the obligation of the government to make sure that schooling, the public schools, are open to all youngsters regardless of the parents' ability to pay and that our postsecondary institutions welcome students, again, not based on their ability to pay.

With that aside I'd like to look at the awards being in the two categories that were chosen, citizenship and visual and performing arts. I know that one of our local high schools already has a citizenship award, and I think it speaks to the importance that that high school attaches to leadership in the school and particularly volunteering and community service. So schools, I'm sure, in many parts of the province are already very aware of the need to encourage citizenship and to have in place rewards for those youngsters who exhibit exemplary leadership skills. It's going to be interesting to watch as the criteria for awarding the citizenship awards are developed, because there are some very conflicting views of citizenship that have been traditionally held.

The first view is a more conservative view, and that is the view of a citizen and the citizen's obligations. That notion is that you have an obligation as a citizen in a democracy to promote and to serve the common good, and it's a position that often has, in fact in most cases has the public good being placed before the private good. So it's a conception of citizenship that really focuses heavily on a citizen's obligations.

The second conception of citizenship is one that we hear of often these days, and that is the citizen's rights: the rights of a citizen to have protection from the government, the rights of citizens to promote individual liberty, and the rights of citizens to promote their individual interests. There's even – and you hear this often at election time – a cry from people who are very deep into the citizens' rights movement to insist that even voting in an election or not voting in an election is their right as a citizen, and any move to encourage them to vote or any laws such as exist in other countries to make voting mandatory they would oppose with great vigour.

So there are two, as I said, somewhat conflicting views of citizenship, and I suspect it's the former, citizenship and your obligations as a citizen, that is emphasized, and maybe most appropriately, in the schools of the province. But it will be interesting to see how students are judged with respect to the receiving of the awards.

A quote was, I think, attributed to Adlai Stevenson, and that quote was: "As citizens of this democracy, you are the rulers and the ruled, the lawgivers and the law-abiding, the beginning and the end." I think that that notion of a citizen is one that we borrow from liberally in our country.

The awards, as I said, are very appropriate. The selection of citizenship, I think, in some ways may be ironic if it's a citizenship award being sponsored in the name of a monarch, but those ironies aside I think they're excellent awards.

I'm also very pleased with the visual and the performing arts awards being included as part of this marking of the golden jubilee. The great focus in the province the last number of years on technology and on the sciences, I think, in some cases has been at the expense of the visual and performing arts. In fact, all arts and humanities, I think, have suffered. There have been pleas from those who would speak in the interests of the humanities for greater recognition, and for that reason I am pleased to see that it was deemed appropriate to select out the visual and performing arts for two of the awards.

All in all, it's an awards program that should have a widespread effect across the province, Mr. Speaker, when every school will address the notion of what it means to be a good citizen and what it means to be a good citizen with respect to that particular student body.

With those few comments I'd conclude, Mr. Speaker, and congratulate the government for bringing forward Bill 1. Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Gaming? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre then. Harmony here in the House. Good.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I just wanted to speak briefly to this bill because it involves scholarships and students, and I have so many students that live in my riding.

To me the Queen has been on the throne and the ruler of the Commonwealth and associated with Canada my entire life, and I'm glad of the opportunity of having something to associate the Queen with besides her occasional appearances on television and her Christmas messages. This brings it a little closer to home.

I know when I was in high school and, I think, going into university, there was such a thing as a Princess Elizabeth scholarship. I'm not sure if that was honouring her specifically; I'm assuming that it was. I think those scholarships are probably known as the Rutherford scholarships now, but it's nice to see that this has come full circle.

I am particularly impressed with the goal of assisting the future development of Alberta youth. Certainly education is, I think, a major route into great possibilities for Alberta youth and particularly when we don't have to look very far into the future to see the need for skilled workforces and knowing that intellectual property or intellectual pursuits will become the future manufacturing product. That's what we'll be looking mostly to deal with: the intellectual property and pursuits.

Secondly, I like to see citizenship as a cornerstone, and I hope that maybe in the future we'll be able to expand some programming around this scholarship program that does really get out there and try and encourage especially young people to engage more actively in promoting citizenship through a number of things, through things like keeping up on current affairs, on voting, which, I'm afraid, is not very appealing to our young people these days. I think that in some cases the government policies reflect that. So keeping up on current affairs, voting, community involvement, in particular volunteering. You get a better sense of the community that you're in if you are able to volunteer and work with other people that are out in that community.

I did have one question. When I look at the scholarship for the visual and performing arts, it's not specific whether it is just for the same high school students as – the Premier's citizenship award says that it goes to "one student in each high school in Alberta." Then it goes on to talk about: out of those students "the 5 most outstanding" receive the medal. Then it talks about the visual and performing arts scholarship. It's separate. Does that mean that postsecondary students could apply for it, or is there a cutoff? It's only for high school students?

MR. ZWOZDESKY: It starts after grade 12.

MS BLAKEMAN: It starts after grade 12. Great. Oh, that's wonderful. That's even better. Okay. Terrific.

I'm really glad to see this because there are not as many bursaries and scholarships available for students that are pursuing any of the arts, and I can certainly speak from experience there. So it's really nice to see one, especially for that kind of money. It is a significant contribution.

Now, I just had a few other questions. When I look at the criteria for the citizenship award, it's saying that the recognitions, the details of it, will be prescribed by regulation, and I'm just wondering why that was done here. The details are given quite clearly for the other two, yet when it gets to that one, it says, well, check the regulations. I never, especially with this government, like to see things go into regulations, because they sort of disappear into a black hole. You know, it's very difficult for the public to find when the regulations come out. It's very difficult for them to track and actually find a copy of the regulations and find out what's supposed to be going on. So I would far prefer to see whatever the criteria is built into the legislation.

This is obviously meant to be a feel-good bill, a sort of Canadian version of Mom and apple pie, a do-nice, be-nice sort of bill, and I appreciate that. I think it's perfectly appropriate that we mark a significant event in someone's life with something significant like this. But, in closing, I'm not going to relent from urging this government to consider the many other ways that we could be assisting the future development of Alberta youth, particularly when we look at the possibility of restoring prevention programs, restoring early intervention programs for youth, reviewing and prioritizing and properly funding the RHAs for their programs. Same thing: adequately funding the children's authorities and their programs for youth.

So if we're really looking to promote youth and citizenship and health and well-being and even the attainment of a postsecondary education, I think there's more to it than offering a scholarship, as valuable as that is, and I encourage the government to be more vigilant in that area.

I appreciate the opportunity to speak in support of this bill. All things considered, I think it's a good idea, and I'm pleased to see the province choosing to do something which will enhance youth and particularly which would encourage youth towards a postsecondary education in whatever area.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Gaming.

MR. STEVENS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that we adjourn debate on Bill 1.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 2
Child and Family Services Authorities
Amendment Act, 2002

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

MS EVANS: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Just briefly to recap the intent of the Child and Family Services Authorities Amendment Act, 2002, as I cited the other day. Extensive consultation with all of our partners, including the 18 child and family service authorities, their board members, and chief executive officers, took place. Partnering departments consulted were Justice, Health and Wellness, Learning, Human Resources and Employment, Community Development, and International and Intergovernmental Relations. As a result, these amendments have come forward.

Mr. Speaker, I think that most significantly the intent of this act will clarify the board nomination appointment process, the governance roles of the boards, and their accountability to the Minister of Children's Services. If the proposed amendments are passed, I believe that it's safe to say that there will be a much clearer understanding of the role of the authorities and a much clearer articulation of the process for selection.

I would be remiss, however, if I didn't cite just one thing. This past year we had a lay member, if you will, that assisted in the board selection process. It was highly successful with very few complaints as a result.

With that, I would pass to other speakers who may wish to comment on this amendment act.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to say a few words about Bill 2, the Child and Family Services Authorities Amendment Act, 2002. I have to begin by thanking the minister for showing me the courtesy of a briefing on the bill before it was introduced. I found that very valuable, and it's consistent with her past practice, and I really do thank her for it. I think it makes for better consideration of the legislation and a fuller understanding of what the government intends. I don't think it means that we're always going to agree, but it's a practice that I applaud and thank her for.

The changes before us in Bill 2 have appeared to be primarily administrative, but I think that when we read through them, the question that does arise is: is there a shift of power through Bill 2 of more authority back to the minister's office? I guess I would pose it as a question to the minister. Was that one of the intents, that there would be that kind of a shift? It would be understandable, Mr. Speaker, if that is what has occurred, because there has been a great deal of difficulty with some of the authorities in terms of them carrying out their mandates and there's been a great deal of difficulty with a number of them in terms of their ability to provide services with the budgets that they have been allocated from the government. So I guess underlying this: is there a principle that says that there should be more authority in the office of the minister?

I think there's an attempt to provide some clarity. I think trying to make more clear the distinction between the authority and the board is probably a useful thing to have done, and it will serve all of us in the long run.

The notion of the size of boards is an interesting one, and I think the reducing of the number of members is probably appropriate. I remember the battles that have gone on about the number of school trustees that there should be and in this city and in Calgary the moving back from seven school trustees to nine. The kinds of arguments that are made about representation with respect to the size of the board I think are rather interesting. It seems to me that some of the boards, given their size, were unruly and that the reduction to 11 will serve everyone and certainly expedite the business of the boards.

There are a number of questions again besides the centralization that need to be raised, but I think maybe some of them are more appropriate when we get into the detailed discussion of the bills at the committee stage, Mr. Speaker.

So, with that, I think I'll conclude. Thank you.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

MRS. ADY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to bring forward my support for Bill 2, the Child and Family Services Authorities Amendment Act, 2002. The Child and Family Services Authorities Amendment Act is necessary to clarify the board nomination and appointment process, governance roles of the boards, and their accountability to the Minister of Children's Services. The proposed amendments are the result of a comprehensive review of the act carried out in the fall of 2000.

Consultations have taken place with stakeholders including the boards and chief executive officers of the 18 child and family service authorities. The partnering departments of Justice, Health and Wellness, Learning, Human Resources and Employment, Community Development, and International and Intergovernmental Relations have also been consulted. The proposed amendments are the result of this consultation.

The preamble of the act will highlight the principles of early intervention and integration. The current preamble does not sufficiently highlight early intervention and integration as important components of the community governance model. These principles will be separated, and it will be clarified that integration of programs and services is best achieved through partnerships in communities and other ministries. This will result in a preamble that more clearly reflects the principles underlying the community governance model.

The amended preamble will also clarify that while boards are responsible or answerable to their communities, they are ultimately accountable to the Minister of Children's Services. The amendment will remove the two consecutive term limitation for a board member and replace it with a seven consecutive year limitation. In addition, the minister will have the authority to extend the seven consecutive year limitation. When a vacancy on a board arises before the end of the board's full three-year term, a new member is appointed only until the end of the term. Because of their shortened term these new members do not have an opportunity to serve the full three-year term. The proposed amendment will allow a board member to fill an interim vacancy of a short duration and thereafter continue to serve the equivalent of two three-year terms. The flexibility provided through this approach will assist with the retention of good board members and help ensure continuity of expertise.

The act proposes to reduce the maximum board membership from 15 to 11 and grandfather those boards with more than 11 members until such a time as attrition reduces the membership to 11. Mr. Speaker, fewer members will strengthen the governance role of the boards, as a 15-member board may be difficult to manage. Decreased board sizes will also alleviate difficulties with board recruitment.

The act will also clarify that a resident of a First Nations reserve with the geographical boundaries of a child and family service authority is a resident in that region and is therefore eligible to sit as a member of the board.

The proposed amendments will clarify that the board of a child and family service authority governs rather than administers the CFSA. The changes will be clear that CFSA boards govern on behalf of and are subject to any parameters set by the Minister of Children's Services. Sections 8 and 9 will be amended to specifically authorize the minister to provide the boards with written governance expectations and to require those boards to comply with those expectations.

These amendments will further strengthen the concept of board governance and clarify the accountability of the boards to the minister. It is proposed that amendments provide the minister with regulation-making authority with respect to four specific matters: one, listing of core child and family services; two, roles and responsibilities of board chairs; three, confidentiality; and four, conflict of interest. Regulating these matters will provide needed clarity and consistency across the province and will further strengthen responsibility to the community and accountability to the Minister of Children's Services.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Any questions or comments for the Member for Calgary-Shaw? Seeing none, anybody else wish to speak on this bill?

The hon. Minister for Children's Services to close debate.

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, in closing, I'd like to just make one brief comment to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods. On the face of it one would assume that there would be increased power to the minister, but the thrust of this is increased accountability by the boards. The boards must submit their financial statements on time and must make every effort to adhere to the principles, the budgetary framework, and the policies that are contained therein. So while we view it as accountability, there may be some who view that it gives the minister more power, but it's not so much the power of the minister as it is the enforced accountability. That is what we hope to clarify.

Originally when the boards were defined, they were more at the discretion of their local authorities' domains. In other words, they could chart more of their own course, and there has been a subtle shift in emphasis, one being that the staff stayed on because of the successor-right issue. They are still provincial staff, so that was different than the original definition of the board. So they are perhaps more linked to the department by design than that.

The second is that unlike the boards of education or the regional health authorities, they do not have the prerogative of accumulating any surpluses, and they do not have the prerogative of conducting themselves with a more autonomous framework. They must be participants in the overall framework under the current design. So this attempts to clarify that and attempts to clarify that while they have the duty to their communities, they have due diligence and a duty as well to the ministry and to the department and to the other boards who may or may not have the resources to complete the task for a year.

Our current challenge, if I may, is to make sure that we refine the funding formula so that everybody will get fairly funded on the basis of what their own menu is, their own demographics are, and this will assure that the minister will be able to make those sharings possible, particularly at year-end when there might be some that could have accumulated surplus and some that could have accumulated deficits.

Now, it raises several other issues really when you think about that because we're working with them to try and refine the formula, but in the meantime this is to just assure that there are some very clear guidelines for the authority of the minister, the authority of the board and the CEO in response to the various issues, and primarily, honestly budget drove a good part of that.

With that, I would conclude on this motion.

[Motion carried; Bill 2 read a second time]

Child Welfare Amendment Act, 2002

MS EVANS: Well, Mr. Speaker, just briefly. There will be others, no doubt, that would speak to this, and in conjunction with my introduction in the House the other day in the reading of Bill 9, I believe that the amendments proposed here will enable us to be more effective in doing the business of child welfare delivery.

One thing I should profile is that the amendments allowing the Child Welfare Appeal Panel to be bound by the policies of the resources for children with disabilities program is our very strong attempt to make sure that we are not governing or administering programs by appeal but that we are administering programs by policy. We have an expert panel that will be adjudicating some of our programs in this regard so that we put a framework out about what should and should not pertain and so that we will put families through much less agony, if you will, in the appeal process. So this will establish a framework. It will be clearly understood by the families, and it is not in any way an attempt to make it difficult for families to follow the appeal process but to make it less necessary for them to appeal and make the governance quite clear in the manner in which our policies are administered. So while the legislation may be the first point that's coming through to the House, the really significant item is the work that is currently going on behind the scenes in meetings with parents and discussion of special-needs children with the staff in Children's Services.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

MR. CENAIKO: Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring forward my support for Bill 9, the Child Welfare Amendment Act. As part of the current Child Welfare Act review now under way I have been traveling the province listening to concerns Albertans have about the present act. These concerns are wide ranging, and recommendations will not be incorporated into the act until spring 2003, but I'm very committed to improving life for Alberta's children and youth. As a former member of the Calgary Police Service I was involved with hundreds of cases, in fact some of them with you, Mr. Speaker, dealing with abused children. The health and safety of children throughout Alberta is critically important, and it is an area I am most concerned with.

While recommendations from the Child Welfare Act review won't come before this House for another year, currently we have some minor amendments before us in Bill 9. The bill proposes amendments specific to particular portions of the Child Welfare Act. The amendments will change current legislation to allow for interprovincial movement of children who are involved with child welfare. Bill 9 would allow an apprehension order carried out in another province or territory to be considered as an apprehension in Alberta. The proposed amendment will apply, where it is determined by child welfare officials, in both the apprehending jurisdiction and in Alberta if it is in the child's best interest to be cared for in Alberta. This approach is consistent with the Premier's commitment to co-ordinate child welfare programs interprovincially.

The act will also streamline the telephone application process for apprehension orders. Amendments will authorize a justice of the peace, in addition to judges of the Provincial Court, to handle telephone applications for apprehension orders. The changes apply to occasions when it is impractical for a child welfare worker to appear personally before a judge or a justice of the peace to make an application for an apprehension order. Through Bill 9 a child welfare worker would be able to speak directly with a justice of the peace rather than have to page the judge on call. Justices of the peace are available 24 hours a day, seven days a week to handle other similar court matters. Section 17 of the act provides that a justice of the peace may handle in person applications for apprehension orders. The changes would simply extend this authority to include telephone applications.

Other amendments will allow the Child Welfare Appeal Panel to be bound by the policies of the resources for children with disabilities program when rendering RCD agreement decisions, resources for children with disabilities. These policies are established by the Minister of Children's Services. The Child Welfare Appeal Panel is a quasi-judicial body established by the minister. The panel may hear appeals respecting various decisions made by a director of child welfare including decisions relating to the terms of a resources for children with disabilities agreement. Because the appeal panel is not currently bound by policy, decisions concerning RCD matters may be overturned by the panel. As a result, the ministry has no way to maintain the integrity of the resources for children with disabilities program or to control program costs. Appeals regarding RCD agreements make up approximately 59 percent of the Child Welfare Appeal Panel caseload. This high percentage is due to the fact that the RCD program has no statutory or regulatory parameters. The proposed amendment is supported by a recent decision of the Supreme Court of Canada.

Mr. Speaker, I ask for support to these amendments to the Child Welfare Act in order to accomplish three goals: one, allow for smooth co-ordination of interprovincial child welfare issues; two, efficiency in telephone applications for apprehension orders; and three, ensure that the Child Welfare Appeal Panel is bound by resources for children with disabilities policy.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. With that, I move to adjourn debate on Bill 9.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 3

Irrigation Districts Amendment Act, 2002

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Little Bow.

MR. McFARLAND: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me a great deal of pleasure today to move second reading of Bill 3, Irrigation Districts Amendment Act, 2002.

Mr. Speaker, these amendments are designed to help our irrigation districts manage the water allocated to them more effectively and more efficiently. I don't have to remind this Assembly that in a year of predicted water shortages, managing our resources has never been so important as this year. In the southern area of our province the impact of irrigation is irrefutable; 80 percent of southern Alberta's agricultural production and 70 percent of our processing is directly linked to irrigation. More than 1.3 million acres of crops are grown within our 13 irrigation districts, totaling nearly 20 percent of the province's agricultural gross domestic product.

Irrigation means more than economic benefits, Mr. Speaker. Nearly 50 communities, varying in size up to and including the city of Lethbridge, use irrigation water for their domestic use. Water provided by irrigation districts also serves industrial users. Water enhances fish and wildlife. Water enhances our recreational opportunities. This legislation, which helps our irrigation districts to use water more efficiently and more effectively, has positive, wide-ranging impacts.

As a background to this legislation I would like to remind members that after two years of review by all the stakeholders, the Irrigation Districts Act was passed in 1999. I would like to acknowledge our Minister of Gaming, who chaired that particular review, which came into force in the year 2000.

The act applies only to irrigation districts within the 13 that I've outlined in Alberta. It does not impact or apply to the 250,000 acres of private irrigation, which is under separate licence throughout the province. Through the Irrigation Districts Act in 1999 we gave these 13 irrigation districts more autonomy and greater responsibility. They now have the capacity, the rights, the powers, and the privileges of a natural person, subject to certain limitations set out under the act, regulations, and bylaws.

We changed the role of the Irrigation Council from one that approved many of the day-to-day operations of the districts to one that now monitors the operations and financial performances of the districts and acts on behalf of the minister as required. It also conducts hearings with respect to petitions and all other matters of appeal.

Mr. Speaker, this new act provides greater flexibility in managing water to meet crop production requirements and also allows more effective use of water. Our amendments to this act are a direct result of consultation with the stakeholders. After working with the new legislation that was proclaimed in 1999 for two years, the irrigation districts identified that some sections of the legislation needed clarification in order to honour its original intent. The amendments will make it clear that users of small volumes of water can receive water from an irrigation district for purposes other than irrigation, as they have in the past, and they will not require a separate water licence to do so under the Water Act.

Other amendments facilitate the transfer of small portions of an irrigation district's licensed water allocation or small changes to the expansion limit of the irrigation district itself. There are other amendments, Mr. Speaker, not substantial in nature, which are included in order to clarify the existing legislation, to eliminate some ambiguities, and to correct some minor contradictions. With your indulgence I'll briefly highlight three changes that we're proposing.

Section 11 would allow the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development, upon a request by an irrigation district, to waive the requirements for a plebiscite when an irrigation district proposes to transfer a small part of the water licence. When I spoke with the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, the New Democratic agriculture critic, I know that he was concerned about this particular section, and I know he'll listen to these following comments as well. Certainly this would only be done if the minister is satisfied that the volume of water to be transferred is so small that it wouldn't have a significant effect on the overall water supply to the balance of the irrigators in the district.

As well, under proposed changes to section 12 of the act the minister could also waive the requirement for a plebiscite when an irrigation district proposes to change its expansion limit. Again, this would only be done if the minister were fully satisfied that such a change wouldn't have a significant impact on the overall water supply to the balance of the district's irrigators.

These are good changes, I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that will allow the irrigation districts to manage their allocated water. None of these changes would increase the volume of water allocated to any irrigation district, so nobody would receive less than what is currently going past the delivery point. The water allocated to irrigation districts remains as defined in the water licences issued to them by Alberta Environment under the Water Act.

I'll now move on to the proposed changes for section 19 of the Irrigation Districts Act. Here we're proposing to create a new rural water use category. This would allow the use of a maximum of 25,000 cubic metres, or approximately 20 acre-feet, of water annually for purposes other than household or irrigation. As it stands, without the amendments many people who used to receive water from an irrigation district are now technically in contravention of this existing act because their annual volumes exceed the one acre-foot which we're now proposing to move to 20. Under the old irrigation act and the water resources act there was no volume specified in the definition of domestic or household use, and this will clarify that. This new category of use will also allow those users to continue to receive water for such things as shelterbelts, small livestock operations, small industries, or wildlife habitat projects.

I think it's very important to remember, Mr. Speaker, that it was the irrigation districts that asked us to make this change so that they can continue to serve their water users in a better fashion. These 20 acre-foot maximum volumes are very small in relation to the total volume of water that the irrigation districts manage. In many instances it represents less than 3 percent of their total allocation under their current water licence, but it is enough for maybe a small feedlot or a small industry like a small dairy farm. I want to stress that any medium or large user, such as a large confined feeding operation or a large industry, would still need to apply to Alberta Environment for their own water licence under the Water Act. We're not changing that.

Finally, I'd like to outline proposed changes to section 26. When an irrigator applies to transfer irrigation acres to another parcel, he or she must provide written confirmation from all mortgagees that they consent to the transfer. This ensures that the holder of the mortgage on the parcel from which the irrigation acres are being transferred is informed and consents to the transfer, as the removal of the irrigation acres could significantly reduce the value of their property. When the act came into force in 2000, Mr. Speaker, the banking industry and the irrigation districts noted a potential problem, but they worked together and found a solution and implemented that solution on a voluntary basis until we could make the necessary amendment to this legislation. I want to commend them for all working together on this issue. This amendment simply formalizes the process agreed to by the irrigation districts and the lending agencies.

So with those few words, Mr. Speaker, I close the debate on second reading. I do want to thank the 13 irrigation districts, all the stakeholders, and the water users for their participation in proposing these amendments. I particularly would like to thank the Irrigation Council and the director down there for helping put this together. I would acknowledge that we've met with the hon. Leader of the Opposition, our agriculture critic, and I look forward to hearing his comments.

Thank you.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise this afternoon to speak to Bill 3, the Irrigation Districts Amendment Act, 2002. I want to begin by thanking the Member for Little Bow and also the secretary of the Irrigation Council, Mr. Len Ring, for the information they provided to me in terms of helping to understand the debate and the discussion that went on in the community and within the drafting of the bill so that we could understand fully the implications of it.

I guess the focus of the bill really has to do with some of the things that are important as we move into looking at how we're going to manage water in the province. The issue that we have to look at here is: is the set of amendments that we're being provided with today going to really contribute to that? A lot of the issues that came up, as the Member for Little Bow said, are being developed and put in place in response to requests from irrigation districts to help make their management decisions and their processes user-friendly and administration friendly, administration easy, and that's the kind of thing we have to kind of look at.

The process that we go through in dealing with this I think has to look at quite a number of different aspects. In reflecting on the discussions that I had with the Member for Little Bow and the head of the Irrigation Council, the only question that has come up in my mind since that time and then reading the bill, you know, as it's finally put on paper, has to deal with the changes that are occurring in section 11. This focuses on the ability of an irrigation district to petition the minister to basically allow for a partitioning of their acreage to change the definition of their licence, the acres served.

In the proposal now it talks about the idea that the minister can waive the requirement of a plebiscite. What I would like to put out is a question at this point. If we look at the full section that's being amended, there is a provision in the early parts of that section for public meetings connected with the application to transfer an allocation of water. I would like some clarification.

When I put the original act together with the amendments, I don't really see if it flows through that those kind of public meetings have to be held prior to the request to a minister to make a waiver of the plebiscite. The act basically says that these public meetings have to be held to provide information for members of the district in order to prepare them for the vote on a plebiscite. But if the district chooses instead for a small allocation, can the district go straight to the minister, or do they have to go through the public awareness process? Because if they're not going to actually go to a plebiscite, it's not a how-to-vote or what-your-vote-means type of a public meeting. It's more just a process of saying: we intend to ask the minister to allow us to go ahead with this without having a plebiscite, and this will be the consequence of this change in our licence. I would suggest that that would be important so that the members of the district are not caught unawares, and I support the idea that, you know, there is not a number associated with what constitutes a significant transfer.

I don't think we want to start saying that it's 10 acre-feet or it's so many cubic metres per second or anything like that. That's not for us to make a judgment on, but we need to have a process in place where the community members – in other words, the participants in that irrigation district – have an option to, in their own mind, somehow judge whether or not the transfer is going to be significant or not, because that's what in effect would happen if there was a plebiscite. So if the minister is going to make an exception, we want to make sure, if there are members in the district community who sense that there may be some complications associated with that transfer, that there's a process for them, first of all, to get good information and to express their view to the minister before the minister makes the decision.

You know, I think it's important that the public know about this before they read it in the paper or get it through the district newsletter that some of their licence has been adjusted. So in that context, as we move into the next stage of debate and get into committee, I would hope that the government looks at just that sequencing and whether or not they really feel comfortable that enough public awareness is present before the minister makes a decision. If the minister is only going to make a decision based on the information presented from the board, there is the possibility there that they're getting a one-sided view, because obviously the minister is going to get the information from the board. The minister will also get information from the proponents of the transfer, but there needs to be a process so that if there potentially may be some members of the district, you know, participants, holders of part of that licence or holders of an agreement with the district for access to water through that licence, they should be given the chance to just say: hold it; we need some more information; we need to be given a better explanation.

As we move into that part of the discussion where we're dealing with sectional analysis in committee, I would hope that the Member for Little Bow explains how that input will occur, because in looking at the act, I see a very good definition of what happens before a plebiscite but not quite as clear a definition of what happens before a ministerial decision. That needs to be clarified.

In the whole first section, where the public notice applies to the ministerial decision, it needs to be put into the section there about the ministerial part of it. What it says now is that "where the Minister waives the requirement of a plebiscite . . . the board must" and then goes through a public notification process. Well, I would like to see the public notification process be before the minister makes that decision so that if there is a community action or a community concern, then the community can, you know, effectively have input to the minister before the decision is made. Now, I want to clarify again that when I'm talking about the community, I'm talking about the individuals who participate in the licence, not necessarily, you know, every world citizen. So that's the kind of clarification I guess I would ask, because the Member for Little Bow, you know, specifically illustrated that section when he was introducing the bill in second reading. Other than that, Mr. Speaker, I think the bill does a lot to facilitate some of the administrative issues both in terms of partitioning off or adding to some of the irrigation districts.

I think this is something that's going to really be significant as we move into some of the future debate about water in terms of what happens to licences, how do we deal with licences, and who has control over those licences. What we're seeing is that when the administrative costs in some of the irrigation districts are really quite small, it may be quite convenient and quite cost-effective for some of those to start discussing the possibility of how do they, you know, combine some of that administration. This bill would go to the point of facilitating the possibility of a union of a couple of those smaller irrigation districts if they agree to come together, and it allows the acreage and the water licence quantity to be matched.

I guess the interesting part of partitioning here, especially to partition off a small subsection – and this falls out of some of the other implications of what we're allowing when we're freeing up an irrigation district to partition off some of their licences. Mr. Speaker, I think everybody in the House is aware that I have access to water through the Lethbridge Northern irrigation district. There are possibilities where if I were to say, "I want my farm partitioned off," because this partition is open to definition, does that give me a separate licence? What freedoms do I have with that licence? Even if we're starting to talk about, you know, partitioning off or setting out a separate licence for some of these other uses, like the nonhousehold use that's defined here, we're in effect transferring to those licence holders a marketable good in the sense that they then will have a fixed licence.

This is another clarification I would ask: if that happens, does it transfer with the priority of the irrigation district licence or does it transfer with a priority of the time of partitioning? Because if you can partition off part of that district, like the water that comes to my farm and my acres, and then I want to sell them to somebody who wants to have access to water, that's quite a capital gain for anybody who would want to sell that licence in the future. You know, how are we dealing with this in the context of value of these partitioned-off licences?

We saw an illustration of the value of water in southern Alberta last year. The prices that were put on water in southern Alberta last year cannot be interpreted as a long-term equilibrium value of water because these were short-term risk management premium-type pricing situations. We saw some individuals transferring their water access agreements from one farmer to another, totally allowable here, and I think the highest price I heard was $160 an acre, where that acre was eligible to receive eight inches of water. So if you transfer that to an acre-foot basis, you're basically ending up with something around $240 to $250 an acre-foot of water. So that in effect really puts a signal into our community and into our discussion about what do we do in the context of a value trade-off here in terms of who has the ownership of that water when it's under a group licence and who should the benefits of that accrue back to.

That, Mr. Speaker, is way beyond the intent of this amendment, but what it does is it kind of raises some issues that we have to start thinking about as we go into the next round of discussions about what is water, what is water worth, what's quality of water, what's ownership of water, what's transferability of water? You know, as the Minister of Environment has said, what about interbasin transfers? What about new storage facilities? So all of these kinds of things. As we get into that debate, we should be looking at the context of: when we change legislation, are we creating wealth for someone that we didn't intend to directly with that legislation?

In the context of the 1995 Water Act I think the debate at that time when we traveled the province listening to Albertans speak about water and the importance of water to them – they said that they saw water as a public good. We have to then start questioning whether or not amendments to subsequent acts or supporting acts, such as the irrigation act, that deals with both the access to the ownership of and the delegation of use permits – Mr. Speaker, I go back and I erase the words “ownership of,” because there’s no such thing in the context of these licences in an irrigation district as individual ownership by a farmer. It’s a right to access agreement more than it is an ownership. So I’ll let that explanation be what I mean by the word “ownership” when I used it at that point. It’s right to access, and what they’re doing is transferring these rights to access the water as opposed to transferring ownership of it.

We have to start thinking about this in a much broader context. If we are providing individuals in the province through licences, through agreements, through legislation with the ability to in effect create a new concept of property, that concept of property being a piece of paper which gives them access to water, we as a public should be really seriously looking at how we want to deal with the relationship between that access piece of paper and our concept of the ownership of water, which under that 1995 act was deemed to be a public good.

So I guess in the context of where we go with this kind of legislation, I think that those comments I’ve just made, Mr. Speaker, are intended to kind of trail off into the future, not specifically to be something we need to deal with in the context of this act, unless we want to start saying: okay; if these transfers occur within a district, then some recognition of the wealth creation by that transfer should be noted. We should be then deciding who has access to or who is the recipient of that payment in the context of wealth.

I know that in the preceding summer, last year, when farmers were transferring their water access agreements, what we in effect had was the farmer saying, “You can have my water,” and as a trade-off they took a lower income, because, you know, their land was then either being summer fallowed or it was being used at a lower productivity level. So it wasn’t really just a sale of an asset type thing or an access agreement, but it was a trade-off of income. We have to look at that in the context of how we judge what is the fair value of those agreements that developed last summer.

This gives us a sense of how important water is to Albertans, especially to the agriculture community in southern Alberta. We saw that value put on it last year in the context of farmers with investments associated with certain styles of farming, certain crops that they were producing. Rather than idle all of that investment, they were willing to go out and purchase the access to water from other farmers. Again, as I said, that’s a short-run decision, so we can’t take that value as something that we could deal with in terms of capitalizing long-term present value. The very fact that farmers were willing to make those kinds of trades indicates that this is a discussion that needs to be held.

Further to that, Mr. Speaker, I had a chance – I think it must be about a month or six weeks ago now – to attend a public meeting in southern Alberta where the South Saskatchewan River basin was dealing with their first public meeting. This is a possibility of a plan. They were presenting their river basin management plan, which all river basins have to do now under the 1995 Water Act. It was interesting because almost the whole focus of that meeting in the context of how they were going to deal with water management within the district focused on: how do they in effect create property rights for water; how do they create transfer mechanisms for that defined property right? This sends a message that in an area where water is scarce, we have to be very cognizant of any type of change we make in legislation that affects the value of water for the users of that water.

If we look at some of the issues that they were raising, it was all associated with, you know, if the public puts a high enough value on water for a particular use, they will be willing to come up with the actual dollars that are necessary to encourage a transfer of use access. In other words, if you want water for in-stream maintenance, if you want water for an urban use, if you want water for minimum flows, if you want water for an ecosystem support system, if you can’t bid it away from other users, then the community as such doesn’t feel strongly enough about that particular use of water that you come up with the cash that’s necessary to buy it.

So, you know, that was an interesting perception, because when we went through the debate on the 1995 Water Act, a lot of the discussion that went on about these river basin management plans was focused on basically sufficiency of water, whether or not the stream flow management plans, the management of the flow through on dams were adequate. This was all the kind of discussion that went on at the time, and very little of the discussion in 1995 was associated with pricing transfer mechanisms. Whereas now all of a sudden as we get into making this actually work, we’ve turned to a situation of marketizing water within these river basins, creating a pseudomarket or in fact a functional market for water as a commodity. I guess the thing that I again go back to is that in the context of some of the things we’re dealing with here in terms of the ease with which we’re facilitating partitioning of small amounts of water, those small amounts still will have a value. We need to look at the consequences of what we’re doing in the future as we look at how we want to manage water across our province.

I know a lot of these issues will be addressed by the undertaking that the Minister of Environment initiated last week, but this is where we have to start looking: what is water, what does it mean when we start talking about transfers of water, and what does it mean both to the recipient community and to the community both in the short and the long run when you end up with water being diverted out of that community?

I guess in conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would hope that just because this is a set of amendments that are initiated by the irrigation districts, by the users of water and that this act in effect is internal to the operation of these irrigation districts rather than the large body of water policy across Alberta – other than the one issue that I raised and would hope to have clarification on in committee, I would hope that everybody at this stage would support this, because it does reduce administrative burden and promotes timeliness when decisions have to be made. So I hope that everyone in the Legislature finds this bill to their liking and will support the irrigation districts in their requests.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Rocky View.

MS HALEY: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I just want to rise today very briefly to support the amendments proposed to the Irrigation Districts Act. [some applause] The kiddies are playing, you know; they really are. Sorry, Mr. Speaker. I don’t have any control over these people. [interjections] Until they want to speak in the next caucus meeting.

Anyway, Mr. Speaker, this legislation will benefit a number of my constituents who rely heavily on access to water delivered by the irrigation districts. My colleague from Little Bow prefaced his comments about the value of irrigation, and I’d like to echo his sentiments and add a few of my own.

In my riding, where the Western irrigation district operates, it is readily apparent that an irrigation district does much more than just deliver water to irrigation farmers. Yes, irrigation by itself, just for farmers, is incredibly important. There are 1.3 million acres of crops grown within the province's 13 irrigation districts, and that's everything from barley and beans to potatoes and sugar beets. But there are many rural residents and other users of small volumes of water that rely solely on irrigation districts for their water supply. Irrigation provides domestic water to nearly 50 communities, several of them in my area. It means economic strength, and our provincial irrigation infrastructure supports 3,200 jobs in the agricultural processing sector and 680 jobs in the manufacturing of agricultural and other machinery.

We know that population growth in centres close to irrigation development is higher than the normal provincial average. In fact, more than half of the rural water users in southern Alberta depend on irrigation for all of their water needs, from drinking to fire protection. Recreation and wildlife habitat projects also benefit from the availability of water in these dry areas of southern Alberta, and it is imperative that we continue to serve these types of projects. However, many of my colleagues here today have enjoyed the benefits of Chestermere Lake without even realizing that it was not a lake at all but rather an irrigation reservoir owned and operated by the Western irrigation district and made available to all of us to use.

I have to tell you that it's not always an easy ride between Chestermere and the Western irrigation district, but it has smoothed out a lot in the last few years on the fight over the level of the lake and how much everybody is going to pay. It has improved, and I'm very grateful for that.

Irrigation has delivered water to wetlands as well, which helped reverse the declining population of some of our threatened and endangered species. As an example of that, in Alberta there are four different irrigation districts that have received the coveted blue heron award, given by the North American Waterfowl Management Plan. It's a co-operative international program that covers the United States, Canada, and Mexico. In the case of the Western irrigation district there are about 50 Ducks Unlimited projects. Thirty of them are part of the North American Waterfowl Management Plan. Those projects contain approximately 65,000 breeding pairs of ducks and 2,000 pairs of geese. The area comprises about 10,000 acres of wetland projects and upland nesting sites.

Healthy wetlands improve wildfowl seasonal movement, and irrigation in Alberta feeds about 80 different bodies of water, amounting to more than 300 square miles of water surface and more than 1,000 miles of shoreline. You know, you just have to think about the impact not only on the birds, fish, and animals but on the people that can enjoy having access to water that way as well in a dry part of this province.

The amendments proposed in this legislation are important to all end users even though the total amount of water supplied to them is minimal. Ask a hamlet about water for fire protection or talk to an acreage owner who needs water for their shelterbelt or their horses or visit a small livestock operation that needs water for their cattle, and you'll soon see the value to them of having an irrigation district in their area.

Mr. Speaker, we aren't changing the intent of the legislation that we passed in 1999. In fact, we are strengthening the spirit of the Irrigation Districts Act after working with it for the last two years. These amendments are empowering; that is, they allow each district to deliver water to users in their area and to do so in a manner that meets the needs of that particular region. Remember, we are talking about small-volume users here only. Major water users like large industry or a large livestock operation would still need to obtain their own separate water licence under the Water Act. That's a necessity, and we are not changing those rules.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would reiterate my support for these amendments on behalf of all Albertans who are served by irrigation districts but especially on behalf of my constituents, who know and appreciate the advantage that it affords them. Thank you.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Any questions or comments for the hon. Member for Airdrie-Rocky View? Anybody else wishing to speak on this bill?

The hon. Member for Little Bow to close the debate?

Bill 4

Public Health Amendment Act, 2002

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

MR. MAR: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to move second reading of Bill 4, the Public Health Amendment Act, 2002.

Mr. Speaker, as we look at new models for delivering health services and how to make the best and most appropriate use of a limited health workforce, we need to reconsider the role of registered nurses. Responding to requests from the Calgary and Capital health regions and the council of health region CEOs, I'm pleased to propose the Public Health Amendment Act to provide greater flexibility in how registered nurses are employed to provide extended health services in Alberta.

First, Mr. Speaker, the proposed legislation formally recognizes and creates the title of nurse practitioner for the highly skilled registered nurses who provide extended health services. Also, under the current legislation a registered nurse who provides extended health services must be employed by a regional health authority, a provincial health board, or the Department of Health and Wellness. The intent was to make sure that nurses had the support services that they need to practise safely. The Public Health Amendment Act achieves the same purpose by legislating not who may employ a nurse but the criteria that any employer must meet in providing appropriate supports to its nurses.

A further amendment provides authority to make regulations on additional training, experience, or conditions of employment. Alberta Health and Wellness is consulting on amendments to the regulations that will include employment criteria like linking nurse practitioners to laboratory and radiology services, public health referral networks, pharmacy services, and other resources.

Mr. Speaker, the support of this House for the Public Health Amendment Act also supports an expanded and more flexible role for nurse practitioners in delivering quality services as part of a more sustainable public health care system.

That concludes my remarks, sir.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In case the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness thinks that we don't believe he does anything right, today we're going to endorse this initiative. I can see that he's delighted.

Mr. Speaker, we all recognize that there is constant room for improvement in the health care system, and one of the ways that's widely accepted for achieving that improvement is to allow more flexibility for some of the highly trained people who work in the health care system to fully utilize their knowledge and expertise. So that's the reason that we will be voting for this bill.

Besides the change in definition the main change that the bill introduces is moving or altering restrictions on who can employ nurse practitioners under the act, moving it out of the act and into regulations. Moving the requirement out of the act and into regulations of course can be seen as operating in two ways. We do recommend in our own discussion paper on health care, called Making Medicare Better, that the government act quickly to ensure that all health care professionals can fully utilize their training and expertise. I think we would probably all agree, including people in the profession, that in Alberta we have not always been making the best possible use of our medical professionals. So I think these amendments as proposed under this legislation can be seen as a positive way of allowing more flexible work arrangements for nurse practitioners and better use of multidisciplinary teams of health professionals. Up until now nurse practitioners have only been able to work in areas designated as underserved by Alberta Health. Proposed changes to the regulations could help ensure that nurse practitioners are better utilized. According to some government documents we've obtained, the proposed changes to the regulations will allow other organizations such as nonprofit community groups to directly engage nurse practitioners.

Of course, my comments would not be complete if I didn't express a few reservations. We are always leery of control being shifted out of legislation and into regulations. We are concerned that the public, through the full legislative process, needs as much opportunity as possible to see how health care policy is being developed and what all the issues are, and probably the most effective single vehicle for providing the public with that opportunity is the Legislature itself. As material or as issues are moved from legislation into regulation, the accountability to this House is diminished and the transparency for the public is also diminished. The devil, of course, is in the details in this process, and those details will be in the regulations, which are not, I might note, before us now. I would encourage the government to return to historically common practices of many years ago of introducing regulations in tandem with the legislation so that a full debate can be undertaken.

I think that with those comments, Mr. Speaker, I will take my seat and endorse the legislation on behalf of the entire caucus.

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Member for Edmonton-Riverview for his endorsement and gracious comments and now call the question.

[Motion carried; Bill 4 read a second time]

Bill 5 Interjurisdictional Support Orders Act

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

MR. RATHGEBER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General for Alberta it is my pleasure to address the Legislature today and support second reading of Bill 5, the Interjurisdictional Support Orders Act.

The Interjurisdictional Support Orders Act, or the ISO Act, as I will refer to it, is a welcome piece of legislation because it will allow spousal and child maintenance orders to be obtained, varied, and enforced more efficiently when the parties reside in different Canadian jurisdictions. This will benefit many Albertans, including children, parents, former spouses, and former common-law spouses.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Hon. member, since you are the sponsor of the bill, you will need to move second reading of this bill.

MR. RATHGEBER: Mr. Speaker, I move second reading of Bill 5, the Interjurisdictional Support Orders Act. Thank you.

Mr. Speaker, in June of 1998 the MLA review of the maintenance enforcement program and child access, chaired by the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed, presented its excellent report on ways that maintenance enforcement could be improved. Recommendation 36 suggested that the province "seek more cooperative measures nationally" to reduce delays and alleviate other difficulties associated with the reciprocal enforcement of maintenance orders. It is hoped that the proposed Interjurisdictional Support Orders Act will successfully meet this recommendation by making reciprocal enforcement less complicated and less time consuming.

Every province and territory has been working towards passing similar ISO acts so that it is easier for individuals who are entitled to support under provincial or territorial legislation to receive their benefits in a timely manner. It is my understanding that Manitoba and the Yukon Territory have already passed their respective ISO acts and that Ontario has introduced its version. A model ISO act was developed by the Federal/Provincial/Territorial Family Law Committee and drafted by Alberta's own Legislative Counsel. At their conference in August 2001 Canada's Premiers reviewed the model act and expressed their commitment to pass their respective version within one year.

Mr. Speaker, the ISO Act will replace and significantly streamline current procedures under the Reciprocal Enforcement of Maintenance Orders Act, or the REMO Act, as it is known. Under REMO a person claiming support from an individual in a different Canadian province or territory must first bring a court application in his or her own jurisdiction. For example, a mother raising children in Alberta would have to attend court in Alberta in order to make an application for child support from the father who happened to reside in Ontario. At the hearing the Alberta court may only grant what is called a provisional order, or one that is enforceable until it is confirmed by a court in Ontario at a second court hearing.

Not only does the mother have to incur the time and the expense of a court application in Alberta, but the father in Ontario must also attend a second court hearing in that province. The two-hearing process under the REMO Act is also required, for example, when a father residing in Alberta finds that his financial means have significantly been reduced so that he would like to decrease the amount of support that he currently pays. If the recipient of support lives, for example, in British Columbia, there must be first a provisional hearing in Alberta and then a confirmation hearing in B.C. The time that it takes for both jurisdictions to hold court hearings can create considerable delay in obtaining an enforceable support order or changing an existing one. In fact, this complex process can take up to two years in many instances.

AN HON. MEMBER: How long?

MR. RATHGEBER: Two years in many instances.

Like other Canadian provinces and territories Alberta has recognized the need to change and improve procedures for obtaining and varying support between jurisdictions. Mr. Speaker, under the Interjurisdictional Support Orders Act only one court hearing will be required in almost all cases. An Albertan claiming support or applying to increase or decrease the amount of support payable under an existing order will only need to complete a paper application rather than attend court.

This paper support application or support variation application, as the case may be, will set out what the person is requesting, such as an original amount of support, a new amount of support, whether higher or lower or none at all, or an amount of support arrears to be canceled. The paper application will also contain a copy of the statutory or other legal authority relied upon, the party's financial circumstances if relevant, and the other party's financial circumstances to the extent which they are known. All of the evidence in the application will be sworn so that it is reliable. An individual will be able to submit his or her paper application at their nearest courthouse. The application will then be forwarded to the other party's province or territory for a single court hearing held there.

An Albertan will only have to attend court if he or she is the respondent to a paper application started by somebody in another jurisdiction. An Albertan responding to an application will receive notice of the hearing from their nearest court. He or she will be able to attend this hearing to present evidence, at which time the court will also consider the sworn evidence that the applicant in the other province or territory included in their paper application. In this way the ISO Act protects the right of both parties to have their point of view heard.

If the court requires further information from the person in the other jurisdiction in order to make its decision, it will be able to request this information through the courthouse where that person submitted the paper application. Once it has considered all of the evidence from both parties, the court will be in a better position to grant an order that may be acted upon or enforced immediately. There will no longer be delays because a second hearing was required or another court must confirm the order before it becomes enforceable. This will be of great benefit to many Albertans, especially those who rely on court-ordered support payments for their quality of life.

I should point out, Mr. Speaker, that two court hearings may still be required in a few varied cases, as the ISO Act will only apply to support applications brought under provincial or territorial legislation such as our Domestic Relations Act or the Alberta Parentage and Maintenance Act. When parties residing in different jurisdictions are involved in divorce proceedings under the federal Divorce Act, they will still have to obtain or vary their court orders in accordance with the provision of that federal legislation. Unless parties involved in a variation application agree to have their application in a particular province or territory, the Divorce Act currently requires a court hearing in both of their jurisdictions using the provisional and confirmation order process which I described earlier. Two court hearings may also be required under the ISO Act if one of the parties resides in a reciprocating country that still uses the two-hearing procedure. However, most of the states that Alberta reciprocates with in the matters of spousal and child support have already moved toward the single-hearing process. The United States and all other Canadian provinces and territories will be using the new one-step court hearing process along with Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, the Interjurisdictional Support Orders Act will only make it easier for parties in different Canadian jurisdictions to obtain or vary a maintenance order. It will also make it easier for support recipients to enforce a court order if the person required to pay lives in a different province or territory in Canada or if one of the parties moves to a different province or territory.

[The Speaker in the chair]

Mr. Speaker, the 1998 MLA review of the maintenance enforcement program and child access found that many Albertans were concerned about their ability to enforce a court order when they or the other party moved out of Alberta. Enforcement between Canadian jurisdictions will be more efficient under the ISO Act because there will no longer be a 30-day waiting period when Alberta receives an order from another province or territory to send one of its orders to another province or territory with a request for enforcement.

In contrast to the current REMO Act, Mr. Speaker, the ISO Act will make all maintenance orders granted in Canada immediately recognizable by another province or territory. This is because all of the Canadian provinces and territories have substantially similar legislation entitling individuals to support. However, where a support order is granted in a reciprocating jurisdiction outside Canada and one of the parties wishes to enforce it in Canada, the other party will still have 30 days to apply to the court to set the order aside as improperly obtained.

Mr. Speaker, there are other significant features of the Interjurisdictional Support Orders Act that will help Albertans obtain the child or spousal support they are entitled to or make it easier for Albertans required to pay support to understand and respond to court orders. There will be alternatives regarding which jurisdiction's law applies so that individuals, especially children, are more likely to be granted the support they deserve. For example, if the law of the place where the children reside does not give them entitlement to support, the law of the jurisdiction hearing the application will apply. Courts will continue to provide written reasons if they refuse to grant support, if they refuse to increase or decrease the amount payable under an existing order, or if they decide to set aside a support order. This is to increase the parties' understanding of a decision that may not be favourable to them.

Mr. Speaker, there will be longer appeal periods so that the parties have sufficient time to bring an appeal given the time it takes to transfer documents between jurisdictions. The Ministry of Human Resources and Employment will continue to have the ability to bring or to respond to support applications on behalf of Albertans receiving social assistance even when the other party resides outside of Alberta.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, the Interjurisdictional Support Orders Act will significantly benefit Albertans including the recipients of spousal or child support, the individuals required to pay said support, and others. In most situations where parties reside in different jurisdictions, the streamlined procedures under the ISO Act will remove the need for two court hearings. This will make support applications less lengthy and complicated, reducing legal costs for the parties involved and the court costs borne by Alberta taxpayers. Perhaps more importantly, the new reciprocal process will enable support beneficiaries, particularly children who rely on maintenance for their standard of living, to receive the amounts they deserve in a more efficient and time-effective manner. Improvements in obtaining and enforcing support orders are particularly warranted today given the increased mobility of Canadians between provinces and territories. Finally, by passing the ISO Act, Alberta will meet its commitment to assist in the co-ordination and harmonization of reciprocal support legislation throughout the dominion of Canada.

Mr. Speaker, I am happy to have been given the opportunity to present Bill 5, the Interjurisdictional Support Orders Act. Our government is confident that Albertans addressing matters of spousal and child support that involve other jurisdictions will greatly appreciate the improvements that the Interjurisdictional Support Orders Act provides to them.

I encourage all hon. members to support Bill 5 at second reading.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm glad to be able to have the opportunity to address the debate on Bill 5, Interjurisdictional Support Orders Act, in second reading.

Maintenance enforcement and issues arising out of maintenance enforcement I've been told is the area where MLA offices get the most calls and the calls that are most difficult to deal with. I can certainly believe that. I've been working on this issue since 1998, and it is an issue that strikes very close to people's hearts and to people's pocketbooks. I think what we have to continue to remind each other is that, bottom line, we are talking about support for children. That's what makes the concept of the maintenance enforcement program so important, because it's easy to get distracted by the adversarial nature of divorce or of separation between common-law partners, but what we're really talking about here is securing financial support for children.

The truth is that there are very few alimony orders that are granted by the courts anymore. There's an assumption that women are able to get out and earn their own money, to resume a career or start a career. We just don't get alimony orders being made anymore, so really probably 98 percent of what we're talking about here is maintenance orders for children.

We all know, I hope for MLAs trying to assist their constituents from their constituency offices, how difficult it is to try and track down a reciprocal maintenance order from another province or, worse, a foreign maintenance order. So I am supportive of what the government is attempting to do here, not particularly because it's this government but because it's an initiative from across Canada, where all the provinces and territories are trying to align themselves with identical or very similar legislation so that we can have fairly seamless transference. As the Member for Edmonton-Calder pointed out, we've always prided ourselves in Canada on our mobility rights and that we have an increasingly mobile population. Indeed, as we are in a global marketplace, that mobility widens even further. So if we have people that are traveling and living all over the world that we are trying to either seek support from or get support to, it's important that we're able to do that with the least number of restrictions placed in front of us as possible.

Certainly what's come up in a lot of the work that I have done is the issue of what I'll call access to justice. I think it gets very frustrating when one party is able to continually draw another party into court for a variance, for a provisional order, for a change in a support order, for a new order, for whatever. The other party has to constantly go to court to answer this. We'll see whether this is successful in what we're trying to do here, and maybe we can transfer that to some of the work that we're doing in the province, because ultimately we are trying to achieve a fair balance here. We need to have a system that works as well as possible so that we cannot inconvenience people too much and still achieve getting that financial support for children.

By the way, I was shocked and surprised at how thorough the Member for Edmonton-Calder was in walking through exactly what is contained in this legislation. I can believe that his writer was up all night writing that speech for him, and he delivered it very nicely. There was a good deal of information in there. I think that is very helpful, as we have more and more people that are following our proceedings through the on-line Hansard or the live audio. I think it's helpful to have that kind of very clear description laid out here in the Assembly so that others can follow and understand exactly what the legislation is meant to be. So congratulations and a gold star to the Member for Edmonton-Calder.

AN HON. MEMBER: Brent's got a girlfriend.

MS BLAKEMAN: No, no. I don't think we can go that far. But it does save me some work in not having to do it for the same purpose and walk through it all. [interjections] I know; I know. The frat boys. You get them going and, you know, off they go.

A couple of points that I did want to raise around this. It is important that this legislation be aligned as closely as possible with the other legislation that's being proposed. There are a couple of differences that I'll come back to later and put the question forward to the Member for Edmonton-Calder, and perhaps he can answer me at another time or find the answer for me.

I'm assuming here that the designated Alberta authority would be the maintenance enforcement program director, and he can confirm that for me. Now, the authorities are ministerial appointments with the power to delegate and with protection from prosecution for personal liability for acts that are conducted in good faith. There's no provision – and there is provision in the Ontario legislation – that says that the Crown is not relieved of liability. I think in fact what they're trying to say is that they are relieved of liability here in Alberta. So I'm wondering why the province has chosen to deviate from the Ontario legislation in that manner.

Now, there's another issue, and I don't know how we can get around these. They're essentially security issues. I hope that we will continue to seek a way to do this. I understand why the information has to be asked for and given, but I think there are underlying security problems in some cases here. I hope that we can continue to seek a way to get this information and maybe hold it privately where it doesn't jeopardize someone. Specifically I'm talking about the insistence, the right insistence, that home addresses and financial information, particularly from claimants, who are usually the women, have to be given as part of the order. What's happened in my experience with some of these cases is that where there is a particularly acrimonious separation or divorce and one party has been successful in removing himself or herself from the public eye and has managed to stay away from any kind of encounter with the other individual, of course now they have to go to court to get support for their kids and they have to put their home address down on the application form. So, bingo, the spouse gets to know instantly how to get hold of them, and there's a real personal security issue there. I understand why you have to give a home address – it's only fair – but there is a personal security issue there that we have not been able to figure out a way to deal with and successfully surmount the problem.

The same thing with the financial information. Again, it's only fair when you're talking about support amounts and you're talking about how this is all going to be figured out and who pays what and when and all of that. Yes, clearly to be fair and to have a balance, both parties have to be given their financial information. But, once again, there is a clear possibility that that can be taken advantage of when you have that kind of detailed financial information like where your bank is, how many bank accounts you have, what's in them, and what cheques you've written. It's not difficult for someone to follow that through and get very detailed personal information and use it to track somebody down and cause personal harm to them. You know, on the one hand, in this province we've made some attempts to address the issue of family violence or domestic violence or violence against women, whatever you want to call it. There's more that we could be doing, and this is an area where it's a definite loophole. There's a legal reason for it, but there's a definite loophole here that I'd like to see us continue to attempt to find a solution for.

Another one of the questions I had is that there is no required process for the designated authority. The designated authority does serve the respondents in accordance with the regulations, but it's not clear when the support application will be forwarded to the courts and under what circumstances, and this again differs from the Ontario legislation. So why isn't the process the same as that for the registration and enforcement of orders made outside of Alberta? Are the Alberta courts aware of this? How, specifically, are the designated authorities going to serve the respondents here?

In Ontario when an out-of-province order arrives, it goes to the designated authority who is a clerk of the court, and here, as I asked you in the very beginning, I ask you to confirm whether the designated authority was the director of maintenance enforcement. In Ontario that designated authority is a clerk of the court, and then of course you're already in the court system, so when you have an order to appear, it's coming from the courts. We're not going that route, so why aren't we going that route? Why did Alberta make a different choice there? We're joining Manitoba and the Yukon in not using the courts. I thought the whole purpose of this was that we were all going to align and paddle our canoes in the same direction, and we've got some that are doing it one way and some that are doing it another way, so if I could get that question answered as well.

In Alberta the courts must give reasons for refusing to make a support order, but other jurisdictions require written reasons and delivery of these reasons to the appropriate authority. We don't seem to be saying that, so how come?

If I can just take a step back for a moment and look at the whole concept behind the foreign orders. When I've dealt with this, the big frustration has been the small number of other sovereign countries that we the province of Alberta have actually negotiated a reciprocal agreement with. As I said, as we move more and more into a global economy where we potentially could have borderless countries and people moving around – well, look at the European Community. You've essentially taken the borders of those countries away, and with one passport you're moving through all of them, and I think it won't be very long until we could have a time when people are easily moving around different countries in the world. Well, it's great if they can move around, but if we're trying to chase them down to get a reciprocal order happening, that's very difficult. So my encouragement here is that there be a commitment on behalf of the government to continue to work on setting up reciprocal agreements with other countries. One I'm thinking of quite specifically, that I've worked on, is Holland, and we don't have a reciprocal agreement with them and we need to. It comes to our attention because we have a claimant in Alberta. So that's money for kids that are living in Alberta that we're not being successful in being able to get hold of and making sure that our kids get that support money. That's not specifically addressed in this legislation. It's a bit of a tangent, but it's worth my going on it, I think.

Oh, miscellaneous points. There's no definition for child, which is really interesting. Generally there's a lot of tradition and precedents around when you no longer have to pay support because the child is no longer a child; they're an adult. Just to clarify then. Usually you would be paying maintenance until the child has reached 18, at which time they have achieved an age of majority. In other words, they're an adult. You're not paying maintenance anymore, unless – and this is the exception provision – they are attending a postsecondary institution and living at home with one of the parents. Then essentially they're a dependent adult while they are pursuing that postsecondary education and still are eligible to receive that support from the other parent. Here we are not defining child. So that strikes me as a rather glaring omission.

There are a number of other ones that are omitted as well. Certified is not defined. Clerk is not defined. Regulations are not defined. Oh, what a surprise in Alberta.

Alberta courts will be allowed to impute income in provisional orders. I'm wondering why this is specifically included in the legislation. Now, I think this is a good idea, but I know I'm going to be hearing from people that are wondering why it's in there. So why was that choice made? I'm assuming that it's flowing from the excellent work done by the Member for Calgary-Lougheed, from her maintenance enforcement review in '98, but I'd be interested specifically in why that's being included here.

Here's another one. Why was it chosen to use the term "as soon as practicable" instead of "promptly" when you're referring to the review and forwarding of applications? It's a small difference but an important one if you're waiting for something to happen there and if you're trying to get a grasp of what a reasonable time line is. They're obviously legal beagle terms, but the sponsor of the bill is a lawyer, it's my understanding, so perhaps he'd like to tell me why those choices were made.

Also, our legislation is referring to sworn documents as opposed to affidavits. Is that for more generalized understanding? Again, why was that choice made?

The 18-month expiry period for the support applications in the courts. I've already been asked a question about that, and how was that 18 months arrived at? How did you pick that one? Was it just sort of out of a hat, or was there some reasoning behind that about why it would be 18 months? Did it perhaps come from one of the other jurisdictions, or was it the experience of the courts here in Alberta? Why?

I'm very pleased to see any movement forward on the whole issue of maintenance and maintenance enforcement and support. I think it's important that whenever we work on this issue, we look to instill a balance to ensure that there's equity and fairness in the way both parties are treated here. I believe that I see that in this legislation that's being put forward, but I do have some questions that I would like answered. Until that point I can't give it unqualified support, but I'm certainly willing to speak on behalf of my colleagues at this point and say that we're interested in having the questions I've raised answered and we are looking upon this bill with favour. Hopefully I'll be able to give it unqualified support in another stage of readings.

Thank you very much for the opportunity to speak to this.

MR. STEVENS: Mr. Speaker, I move that we adjourn the debate on this bill.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 8

Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2002

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader on behalf of the hon. Minister of Finance.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure on behalf of the hon. Minister of Finance to move second reading of Bill 8, that being the Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2002.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to have the opportunity make some comments about Bill 8 and the supplementary estimates. The supplementary estimates are traditionally used as an opportunity for further grants to an existing service in addition to the sum already appropriated, to extend a service that the government already has in place, for a new expenditure on behalf of a newly enacted statute – so if there has been a change in legislation and there's need for financing that change, then it has often been done through supplementary estimates – to meet the cost created by an unexpected emergency. Again, we've seen those requests before the House in the past. They're also used to transfer money from one vote to another in the budget, and they've also been used to extend the purposes of a vote. So they have a variety of uses, and that's the case in the bill before us this afternoon.

I'm interested in the appropriation for Children's Services. The information that we have in the bill is that the reason for that particular item being there is a result of the dispute with teachers and the removal of services from schools. The sum that is in the bill is fairly considerable, $500,000, so it would be interesting to know exactly what the details of that expenditure are.

I assume without further information, Mr. Speaker, that it must be concerned with providing services to children and to the parents of children who found themselves with youngsters out of school and having to provide care for those youngsters. So I would appreciate hearing from the government in terms of what needs exactly are going to be met with this sum. Are they day care costs? Are they tutoring costs? Are they costs that could of course have been avoided if the government had acted earlier to resolve the dispute with teachers? There were some suggestions from this side of the House how that could've been done going back as far as last April.

It's interesting that there would be a group of costs selected out to be paid for, for instance, under the Children's Services budget, but there were a number of others who also had losses and who had to cover costs including parents and teachers and small businesses. The withdrawal of those services had wide-reaching effects on people, so I think the government owes the House some further explanation as to exactly how those dollars in Children's Services are being expended.

One of the other concerns we have as an opposition is requests like this coming forward – and it seems it happens session after session – without any sort of long-term plan in terms of financing that would somehow or other accommodate these out-of-budget expenditures. Now, I think we all realize that it's impossible to predict everything that could happen, but the kinds of requests that we've had in the past for funds to be set aside for emergencies I think bear even closer scrutiny and consideration by the government because of the kind of history we've had with the number of these requests that come forward.

So I have those questions about Children's Services. There are similar questions about each of the departments, Mr. Speaker, and I know some of my colleagues have some questions about those specific departments. So with those questions and comments I'd conclude. Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 8 read a second time]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's been another excellent day in the House, and I want to thank you for your stewardship in that regard, which at this hour of the day leads me to say the following: I'm going to move that we call it 5:30 and then adjourn until 8 tonight. The reason that I would seek the Assembly's concurrence in this is because, as we all know, our Muslim community friends have been invited by the Speaker to a very special celebration in honour of their festival Eid Al-Adha, which will take place in our rotunda in a few minutes' time. I am sure all members will join me in extending our sincere congratulations to all members of our Muslim community, and I hope you will all be able to join me there.

With that, I move that we do call it 5:30 and adjourn until 8 this evening.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:03 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Tuesday, March 5, 2002

8:00 p.m.

Date: 02/03/05

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Please be seated.

head: Consideration of Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor's Speech

Mr. Horner moved that an humble address be presented to Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor as follows.

To Her Honour the Honourable Lois E. Hole, CM, Lieutenant Governor of the province of Alberta:

We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Assembly, now assembled, beg leave to thank you, Your Honour, for the gracious speech Your Honour has been pleased to address to us at the opening of the present session.

[Adjourned debate February 28: Mrs. Nelson]

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

MR. LUKASZUK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. [some applause] And thank you too. There's something about Castle Downs that keeps the members enthusiastic.

Mr. Speaker, it is indeed an honour and a pleasure for me to rise today and respond to the Speech from the Throne. As Her Honour delivered the speech last Tuesday, I could not help but think of the valued institution that she represents. On behalf of the residents of Edmonton-Castle Downs I would like to join other members and Albertans in offering my congratulations to Her Majesty the Queen on the occasion of her golden jubilee. In 1947, Mr. Speaker, a few years before my time, Her Majesty dedicated herself to the service of the Commonwealth, a dedication she has more than fulfilled with a tremendous amount of grace, duty, and honour. She has provided us with a noble example to follow and a head of state of whom we all can be very proud.

Her Honour outlined a vision of a healthy and vibrant province, an objective that all of us have a role to play in and work towards. Be it in health or education, agriculture or the environment, the government is positioning Alberta to respond to the needs and challenges of the 21st century.

There is no more pressing area, Mr. Speaker, than education. As Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor indicated in her Speech from the Throne, "a good education system also gives the province the gift of a population ready and capable to shape the province's future in positive and meaningful ways." While there are many challenges in the present system, there is much to be proud of with respect to our education system. This government stands ready to ensure that students, teachers, parents, and every Albertan have an opportunity to fully participate in an education system that will help people get the technical skills and the life skills essential to personal growth and good health. In 2001-2002 total government spending for basic education will be $3.7 billion, an increase of $245 million.

AN HON. MEMBER: How much?

MR. LUKASZUK: In case anybody asks "how much," Mr. Speaker, $245 million from the previous year.

This is an incredible amount and a testimony to the importance that this government places on the needs of our students. From 1995-96 to 2001-2002 spending on K to 12 increased by $1.1 billion, or 41 percent. Enrollment growth over the same period was only 7 percent. This money goes towards supporting over 2,044 ECS to grade 12 schools, some 591,000 students and approximately 32,000 fine certified teachers. Every day, Mr. Speaker, all these factors come together and produce a result that all of us can be proud of. We should never lose sight of the fact that every day good things happen in Alberta when it comes to education, and I am proud of the commitment that this government will make towards education in the coming years.

This government has a commitment to education, and it can be seen in the first bill that was introduced this session. The new Queen's golden jubilee scholarship for the visual and performing arts recognizes the valued contribution that these areas of study offer to Alberta. Bill 1 also creates a new series of scholarships that recognize the importance and value of citizenship, community participation, and leadership in our high school communities. In fact, five recipients of the Premier's citizenship award will be honoured with the Queen's Golden Jubilee Citizenship Medal, which will be accompanied by a $5,000 award.

Students' good citizenship is a mark of many things, Mr. Speaker, including the steady and positive influence of good teachers. Teaching involves more than students simply acquiring skills. It involves students taking pride in their work and accomplishments. It involves students taking pride in their school and community. It also involves students moving past the lessons of a textbook and embracing a philosophy of learning in general.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Hon. minister, it's not committee yet. Perhaps later. Right now we're in Assembly and would be listening to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

MR. LUKASZUK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The minister will be interested to find out that by offering these scholarships, the government is once again illustrating its commitment to lifelong learning in our province. We have seen the value of scholarships in the past and the role they can play in building a vibrant province.

In May of 2000 the Department of Learning announced a new partnership with industry to establish a new scholarship program that would annually reward and encourage Alberta's top young apprentices. In October of last year 50 first-year apprentices, Mr. Speaker, from across the province became the inaugural recipients of a $1,000 award under the registered apprenticeship program. These awards recognize high school students in the RAP program, a program that allows full-time high school students to begin an apprenticeship training program as early as grade 10, earning credits towards a high school diploma or a certificate and an apprenticeship program at the same time. This program provides a primary example of how the education system can be specialized to respond to the individual needs of students and their unique circumstances. More than 750 students are enrolled in this program, and this number stands only to increase with time. In fact, Mr. Speaker, Alberta trains approximately 20 percent of Canada's apprentices, even though we have only 9 percent of Canada's population. This is a testament to the good work going on in this area.

Another testament to the good work in education, Mr. Speaker, is the Alberta initiative for school improvement. In schools throughout the province the Alberta initiative for school improvement is changing the way teachers, parents, students, and administrators meet educational challenges. This program has helped develop new ideas and approaches to improve learning in more than 700 AISI projects across the province. Programs ranging from early literacy initiatives to providing equipment for special-needs children, AISI is designed to help local schools address local issues. By focusing on local issues, the program is flexible enough to meet the challenges and needs of local educators and local students. It is also a program that has many partners, including the Alberta Home and School Councils' Association, the Alberta School Boards Association, the Alberta Teachers' Association, the Association of School Business Officials of Alberta, and the College of Alberta School Superintendents. Also involved in this program are the various faculties of education from universities across Alberta.

The strength of the program and the opportunity for success can be seen in the diversity of goodwill and all partners involved in this remarkable program. Over $68 million has been allocated to this program for the 2001-2002 school year.

Despite the tension and problems of last year, educators, students, and parents are coming together to produce marvelous results. In the latest OECD program for international student assessment tests Alberta students scored the highest marks in reading and were among the top three in science and mathematics. PISA assesses the international achievement of 15-year-old students in reading, mathematics, and science and is conducted by the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development. In both science and math Alberta's results were not significantly different from the top two. Alberta students scored significantly above the national average in all three subjects. When compared with other nations, Mr. Speaker, Alberta's top students performed very well. About 24 percent of Alberta's students scored in the top 10 percent in reading, 19 percent scored in the top 10 percent in science, and about 18 percent scored in the top 10 percent in mathematics. That is good achievement.

I believe that there are many opportunities ahead in the coming months and years awaiting parents, students, educators, and administrators. Indeed, as Her Honour indicated, "It is an important time for all parties in the public education system to work together for the betterment of students." Mr. Speaker, this is not government's task alone but an opportunity for teachers, administrators, parents, and students to address challenges within the system and keep Alberta's education on top of the world.

Over the next three or four years this government will be working with partners to review Alberta's curriculum. Here is an opportunity to look at many diverse issues including boosting Alberta's Canadian history component. Mr. Speaker, a former Premier in this Legislature Peter Lougheed indicated that he wished he had established an intensive history course as part of the school's curriculum. Perhaps there are other areas where Albertans feel we should be headed. For instance, as part of our government's overall efforts to increase awareness of health in the lives of Albertans, perhaps more emphasis could be placed on physical education and health programs in our schools. In an increasing international society where business is conducted with consumers from around the world, new emphasis could be placed on students acquiring a second language as well.

There are other opportunities for constructive changes. I mentioned the RAP program earlier, Mr. Speaker, as a positive indication of how the system can respond to the individual needs of students. There is a new Calgary high school under way that will offer room for postsecondary students as well as high school students. This will offer students an opportunity to prepare for the next step in their education. We must not be afraid of offering innovative options for students and other primary partners in education. In all of this there will be roles and responsibilities for many partners and institutions presently in the system. Each has a meaningful role and opportunity to positively affect the future course of change in the education system. The hard feelings and negativity of the past should not be a barrier to meaningful dialogue on the future course of education, teaching and learning, in our province. We must all come together and focus on the students we aim to teach and the remarkable gift that they each have to offer to our society.

I congratulate all the members on the important work we have already accomplished in education, and I look forward to the important work to come. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to have the opportunity to speak this evening to the Speech from the Throne. It was Benjamin Franklin who said, "Blame-all and Praise-all are two blockheads," so I'll try to avoid being accused of being a blockhead this evening by starting off with some praise for the speech that was delivered from the throne. That praise particularly is for the awards that have been proposed in recognition of the Queen's golden jubilee.

Those awards will affect every high school in the province. What more appropriate way to mark the jubilee than through a program that encourages and rewards students who provide leadership, who are volunteering their time and services to the community, who are making a marked difference in their own high schools. It seems like a very appropriate and a continuing recognition of the importance of democracy and strong communities. Along with that, the scholarships for the visual and performing arts, which we learned a little earlier today are going to be available to both high school and post high school students – those two awards are long overdue. I think that, as I said earlier today, there's been a great focus in the province on science and technology, and sometimes that has come at the expense of concern for the humanities and the arts. I think this is very timely and very appropriate that it was done as a jubilee project.

Having said that, Mr. Speaker, it doesn't preclude the need for affordable postsecondary programs. We have to be concerned with the rising cost of tuitions at postsecondary schools and institutes across the province. Most important is the impact that those tuitions have on students and particularly students who come from low-income families, where high tuition and high loans scare students into opting for programs that are short and inexpensive, hardly the two criteria we'd expect students to use when they are selecting the kind of profession they're going to pursue, some of them for the rest of their lives. So we have to be concerned with affordable programs, making sure that affordable programs are there for students. Coupled with that, I think this makes a contribution . . .

I yield to the chair, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: May we briefly revert to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

MR. CAO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There are 75,000 people in Alberta celebrating the end of the annual hajj to Mecca and the festival of Eid Al-Adha. Among the 75,000 we have five here with us in the members' gallery. I would like to introduce to you the mother, Yashmin Rajan, the daughters Ruhee Rajan and Uzma Rajan, and two young friends Noreen Lalani and Azra Lalani. I would like to ask the House to give them a really great welcome as they stand.

Thank you.

head: Consideration of Her Honour
the Lieutenant Governor's Speech

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Thank you, Edmonton-Mill Woods. It was my oversight on that.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think that this forms part of the continuing, ongoing grant and scholarship programs at our institutions and in our high schools. I think that making sure there are resources there for students in need and resources there that reward students who perform well in institutions and want to proceed is extremely important.

Mr. Speaker, I read a report not that long ago that indicated that in the United States it's almost at the point where the first year and in some states the first two years of postsecondary schooling are almost completely assured by public financing, and it was a goal that was established by Canada at the United Nations in 1976. It's encouraging to see that at least some jurisdictions are still working towards that goal. So I think that the whole thrust of the scholarship program is a good one. I'm pleased it was here.

I thought another thing in the throne speech was encouraging, and that was the broadened notion of health to include more than just health, to include the total well-being of individuals, the kinds of services that we find in the community, and a much broader look at the well-being of individuals. I think that's a healthy perspective. We often, I think, in the Assembly get into silos where we tend to look at the world through various departments and their activities, and I think the throne speech in doing that encourages us to take a broader view.

Having said that, I think that the comments about the Learning department and the goodwill that the throne speech indicates exists on all sides – at first I was a little skeptical of that, given the events of the last number of months and the dispute with the teachers. But I was encouraged, of course, by yesterday's meeting of the Premier and the president of the Alberta Teachers' Association and the coming meetings with the president of the Alberta School Boards Association that that goodwill is going to actually be fruitful and will result in all sides being able to come to agreements that serve youngsters in the province.

Having said that, I think there is a need for a hard, independent look at the education system. As I said in my private member's statement earlier this afternoon, Mr. Speaker, it was 1972 when the last report on education was delivered, the Worth commission on education, and that report had an effect on the system and helped it, I think, to progress. In a conversation with Dr. Worth I asked one time how many of the recommendations in that report did he feel had been acted upon. His guess was that between 40 and 45 percent of the recommendations had in one way or another affected practice in the schools of the province, and they were in some important ways. Universal kindergarten is a reality, and that was a recommendation in the report. There were recommendations in the report that the government take on major responsibility for financing K to 12 education and that they do so in the name of equity, trying to even out, making sure that every youngster across the province had the same resources in terms of accessing programs, and things like year-round schooling. I believe Eastwood school in the inner city in Edmonton has ventured into year-round schooling, and there are other places in the province involved in or looking at such configurations for the school year. So they were positive things that came out of the report.

I think it's very timely that we have a good hard look. As I said, there's been progress in funding. I think that the government tried very hard to work at equity and to rid the system of those school districts that had access to great resources for their youngsters, being able to have high assessments and draw on resources for their schools, and in other parts of the province school districts located in areas that were not so fortunate and not having the same resources and hence not being able to finance their schools to the same extent. So the government has done that evening out, which I think was necessary. I think it's gone too far. I think that local boards still need some resource base to draw upon, and I would like to see that in the future.

More important and I think the big issue here and the one that has led to the kind of strife that we see in the school system is the need for an adequacy formula. How do we determine exactly how much money should be budgeted for education? As far as I can understand it, Mr. Speaker, there is no rationale for determining how many dollars will be put into the per pupil grant or into various programs. What we have today is a result of having the budget cut, divided by the number of students we had, and that money sent out. Since those years it's been tinkered with, but we have no real base for determining the resource needs of schools. Adequacy funding is on the agenda of many states. They've gone at it in a variety of ways. Minnesota, I believe, has a basket of measures that they consider, a basket of measures put together by some professional experts who say: "If you're going to have a kindergarten program, these are the resources you need, and this is what it will cost to provide those resources. If you're going to have a high school program, these are the resources you'll need, and this is how you go about determining that."

So adequacy funding is a huge issue. Other districts have tried to look at very successful schools and say: what were the resources that were supplied to that school to allow them to enjoy the success that they do? Then they use that as a base measure for determining adequacy. But it's becoming a court issue in some jurisdictions with states being challenged in the court for failing to provide an adequate program for students. It's certainly a bone of contention with many special-needs parents, the whole notion that the money that the youngsters require, the support that they need in the classrooms, often isn't there, and it's a challenge, I think, for the government not mentioned specifically in the throne speech but something that I hope will be addressed by the department.

Besides funding or besides the adequacy and equity, we have to look at stability, and it's instability in the system I think, again, that's led to some of the problems we have today. Earlier in the afternoon we introduced a stabilization bill, a bill that would go a long ways to putting into perspective the value of having a stabilization fund so that the kinds of ups and downs that the learning system experiences could be avoided, not just the learning system but other services provided by government. It's the kind of fund that could bring that long-term stability and make possible the long-term planning that most people agree is needed if we're going to make progress in the school system.

There was no mention in the throne speech of class size, something that has been really crucial in talks with teachers. Mr. Speaker, I can understand the government's reluctance to put class size in legislation, but I can't understand the government's reluctance to set targets. They've done it in the past. They did it with teacher education when they decided that all elementary teachers in this province should have a university degree. They set that as a target. It took them a number of years to get there, to achieve that target, but at least everyone knew where we were going. I think that with class size, if you look at the number of states that have put in very rigid legislation, they recognize the importance of class size. I am the first to admit that class size alone doesn't make a difference, but I think smaller classes K to 3 certainly make possible some differences in terms of instruction and learning strategies for children and at the high school level. I note that the Pugh Foundation at the postsecondary level uses a measure of 80 students for core subject teachers; that is, an English 30 teacher in any one term would not have more than 80 students to instruct, to mark their papers, and to consult with. I'm sure if you were to take that kind of a measure across this province, as we found in our small survey, at least 75 percent of core or postsecondary teachers face workloads larger than that. So I think there's room there for progress to be made, and I would hope that the government will see fit in the coming year to address it.

There are many other things that the system could benefit from. I think things like parent fund-raising would become a thing of the past, at least for basics.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar on a question.

REV. ABBOTT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to thank the hon. member for his speech, and I'd just like to ask: what is the hon. member proposing as a method of determining adequate funding for individual schools? If that number should end up totaling higher than the current $3.7 billion that we already invest, which is, by the way, an increase of $232 million over last year, then how will he pay for this increase?

DR. MASSEY: I think the question of adequacy is one that I've insisted has to be addressed. The government doesn't know what a program costs right now. They can't tell you what it costs to educate an IB youngster, so you don't know what you're getting for the money you're now spending.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Second question, the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

REV. ABBOTT: Thank you. What is the hon. member proposing as a method of determining adequate funding for individual schools?

DR. MASSEY: Well, I think that I indicated some of those. The state of Minnesota uses a basket of measures. Other states use exemplary programs. Schools that have high achievement, have made progress: they use those as the model and as the basis for funding other schools. There are a number of models out there. Odden – and I forget the other author's name – has a needs-based model where each school goes through a very detailed assessment of the kinds of needs and the kinds of programs they're going to deliver, and they use that as the basis for their funding.

MR. VANDERBURG: I'd like to ask the member if he could expand a bit on the comments he made regarding requisitioning. Where he mentioned just for a few sentences about the opportunity for a partial requisitioning, could he expand upon that please?

DR. MASSEY: For a number of years we've indicated that we believe that school boards need some requisitioning power, some resource other than the provincial government to meet local needs. We were at that as a province a number of years ago. I believe the number was about 80-20. Eighty percent was provided by the province and 20 percent at the local level. We've suggested 85-15.

When the government took over funding, it had really become distorted.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Yet another question, the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

REV. ABBOTT: Thank you. Yes. Also the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods mentioned smaller class sizes. My question for the member is: how much smaller?

DR. MASSEY: Well, I think the research that the government paid for in Edmonton, the $100,000 study they conducted, said that class sizes of 17 were appropriate, supported by research across the continent.

REV. ABBOTT: So the Liberals then are proposing that all classes should be capped at 17?

DR. MASSEY: We had asked that class sizes for K to 3 be set at 17 – that's a target – and that from grades 4 to 9 it be 25 and that high school classes be capped at 30 as targets to work towards in the future.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: No further questions? Then we'll call upon the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

MR. LORD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a great honour to rise today and finally be able to respond to the Speech from the Throne. To begin with, I would like to offer my congratulations and my sincere gratitude to Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor. Her continued devotion to our great province is commendable, her personality delightful, and we are all very grateful.

Mr. Speaker, I'm very proud to stand here today representing my constituents in the riding of Calgary-Currie, and with their views in mind I am pleased to support the Speech from the Throne. Its positive messages, its overall directions for Alberta are commendable, and as we look forward to the next year and build upon the experiences of this past year, I think it will prove very valuable.

It was a tumultuous past year, Mr. Speaker. During the past year we saw our society's foundations rocked in ways that were previously unimaginable. Historically, North America has been a relatively tranquil continent compared to the rest of the world. Generally we have been spared much of the sorrow and turmoil that other societies have been subjected to, but how the world has changed for us since September 11, 2001. On this day of infamy, indelibly etched into our minds forever on this day of stunned disbelief, shock, and horror, did we indeed lose our innocence as four hijacked airplanes before our very eyes, over and over again on every channel on our televisions, stopped being modern transportation wonders and became instead massively destructive airborne firebombs. Our innocence was gone as many innocents lost their lives that day. Many others were physically scarred for life. All of us who watched have been emotionally scarred. Even those of us who witnessed these events from the safety of our living rooms still share with the victims' families the sad realization that our tranquil and trusting way of life may have come to an end.

What kind of future do we face as a result of all this? Well, it is a unique historical situation, Mr. Speaker, more difficult than any other conflict in history. We are not at odds with a single nation or block of nations. This is not a geographical war. Our enemies are amongst and surrounded by many who would be our friends. Indeed, some of our adversaries may even be amongst us disguised as our friends, or maybe they are only shadows in the night, whisperers in the wind, figments of our imagination that are creating fears that lie heavily on our society, fears indeed sought after and inspired by these evil groups of evil individuals whose only common traits are their hatred and jealousy of others, jealousy of others' successes. They have a blood lust for killing innocents and an unquenchable thirst for external power and control that they would never be able to earn without weapons.

Do they pose a threat to us? Yes, Mr. Speaker, I'm afraid they do. They pose a threat to us all. It may not be obvious, it may be hidden beneath the surface, but I think that collectively we are all a little more wary, a little less trusting, and a little harder in our general attitude towards outsiders than we were before that first plane struck the tower in New York City. In other words, we are all in danger of becoming a little more extremist in our own attitudes and thinking, the very thing that they would like to foster or should I say fester within us. In many ways the major battleground in this war may be in our hearts and in our minds. We must be courageous in facing our fears such that we ourselves do not create an ever more fertile ground for this virus to breed, this virus of extremist attitudes which they have been so infected with. We must not allow such attitudes to find fertile ground within our own minds in which to grow. We must continue instead on our own path, one that follows peace, order, and good government.

Will there be more terrorist attacks in North America, indeed maybe even some here in Alberta? Yes, Mr. Speaker, there almost certainly will be, at least in North America. It will be part of our way of life from now on. We must come to expect it, but to use the vernacular, we must also cowboy up, get over it, and get on with it. We cannot let such people deter us. Slowly but inexorably these human viruses will be rooted out throughout the world. In the meantime, we must remain vigilant and resolute in the face of these expected atrocities. It is up to us elected officials right here today, as well as in all other governments and Assemblies across the world, to be at the forefront of this war of emotions, this so-called clash of values and to continue to lead the way out of it through our words and deeds.

A crucial component in this battle is our armed forces, our men and women in uniform who have served our country so well on so many occasions in the past all around the world and who we all know will continue to do so during their current deployment in Afghanistan. As Albertans and as Canadians we are very proud of our men and women in uniform, small though their numbers may be, but who pound for pound are among the greatest and most effective fighting forces in the world. We thank them for their continued commitment to serve. We thank them for their courage and willingness to sacrifice. We just thank them.

On a lighter note, Mr. Speaker, some of our other Canadian men and women in uniform, in different uniforms, chased away a different kind of ghost just recently and a 50-year-old ghost at that. Incredibly, almost like a fairytale come true, both the Canadian men's and women's hockey teams recently won Olympic gold in front of the entire world in two of the most exciting, indeed riveting games of modern times. Wow. I think it's safe to say that virtually our entire nation coast to coast probably came to almost a complete stop as people tuned in to watch or listen to those two games. I myself was absolutely riveted to CBC radio announcer John Hancock's blow-by-blow or should I say penalty-by-penalty description of both games while I was driving down the highway. Finally once again the inventors of hockey are the world champions of hockey, as it should be.

Alberta as usual did more than our fair share of contributing to this Canadian victory. Three of the players on the men's team are Albertans. Scott Niedermeyer and Jarome Iginla were both born in Edmonton, and Ryan Smyth was born in Banff. In addition, Eric Brewer plays for the Edmonton Oilers. From the women's team Jayna Hefford and Danielle Goyette both live in a city of champions otherwise known as Calgary. They and all the other players on the teams and all the other Olympic athletes as well did a tremendous job and make us all very proud. On behalf of my constituents I would also like to send them our very best wishes and congratulations.

The Olympic Games in Salt Lake City, Mr. Speaker, were a welcome distraction from some of the pressing issues that we must otherwise contend with here in the government of Alberta. In the course of the past year much of the industrial world has been in the throes of a recession. The growth and surpluses we were experiencing have in many cases evaporated. The rate of increase has decreased dramatically. Now, as Einstein might have said, everything is relative, of course. Certainly our own economy has fared relatively well, but Alberta has taken a few hits too, and life is not the same. Gas and oil prices have plummeted, causing a major drop in provincial revenues. Now, one person's bad news may be another's good news, and the drop in energy prices is great news for consumers, just not from a government revenue perspective. One would hope that these savings being experienced by the public, all these savings in energy costs, would mean less demands on the government, but this does not appear to be the case, unfortunately. That demand continues unabated and appears infinitely insatiable.

Some days, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that government spending is sort of like feeding a growing baby dragon in your living room, the deficit dragon. The more you feed it, the more it grows. The more it grows, the more it demands. The more it demands and the bigger and hungrier it gets, the more it threatens to devour you unless you feed it more. Solutions are elusive. If you attempt to kill this growing threat in its infancy, this baby deficit dragon, then as a politician you will quickly be publicly pilloried as a baby killer. Solutions seem improbable, the system intractable, inertia inevitable, but find solutions we must.

Mr. Speaker, the Mazankowski report on health care is an excellent example of the type of proactive thinking that we need more of to deal with these issues. We in Alberta can still brag about having an outstanding health care system, still one of the best in the world, and we'd like to keep it that way. But we all know, at least I'm sure that members on this side of the government know, that if you are not continuously moving forward in this world, if you are not continuously improving, then you are moving backward towards defeat and obsolescence. We cannot allow ourselves to be fooled into thinking anything else. Albertans won't allow it; we won't allow it. But we must also be aware that the treadmill is speeding up. That is why our government announced in January that it will seek to implement the 44 recommendations of the Premier's Advisory Council on Health in order to maintain our health care system, not just in terms of being one that delivers quality health care but also one that is financially sustainable. It is a direction that involves making not only tough choices but, even more importantly, wise and well-informed choices. The Mazankowski report is a very good start.

The same can be said for our commitment to education, Mr. Speaker. This government is committed to providing all Alberta students regardless of age or circumstances with access to a quality education. This means developing and maintaining a curriculum that meets the demands of the modern world. This means making sure we have qualified and committed teachers and that we have cost-effective, energy-efficient buildings appropriate and functional for the activities for which they are being used.

Also, Mr. Speaker, I'm very pleased to note that the Alberta Supernet is well under way. This is an unprecedented initiative which will result in 4,700 facilities in 422 communities throughout our province having superfast access to the network. Thanks to the Supernet, Alberta will be the most supercharged, fired-up, wired-up jurisdiction in the world.

Mr. Speaker, I am proud to be an Albertan, proud to be a member of this Legislature, and proud to represent my constituency of Calgary-Currie. On the whole, this is the best time in history to be alive and to be an Albertan. We lead the nation in economic growth and employment, we are taking bold steps on a variety of fronts and to a brighter future, and we are prudently planning for that future, in which we will continue to sustain the Alberta advantage.

With that having been said, I again thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, a question?

MS CARLSON: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I wonder if the Member for Calgary-Currie would tell us how he expects to fund the fight in what he called the virus of extremist views?

MR. LORD: Mr. Speaker, I'm very pleased to have received that question, since it means that I will not have to wait for many, many years to answer a question in this Assembly as the hon. member opposite noted the other night, to which I was going to respond: had she joined the correct side, the government, she wouldn't have had to wait so long.

In answer to the question that the hon. member opposite has raised, Mr. Speaker, I'm very pleased to say that we are all working hard on this side to cut unnecessary expenditures in order to raise the funds required to meet all of those demands and pay for those costs.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have another question for the Member for Calgary-Currie, and I would just like to also make the comment that I'm quite proud to not be a part of this particular government.

In his speech he stated that he welcomed distractions from pressing issues. But doesn't the Member for Calgary-Currie think that his first priority should be to address those pressing issues, and could he list what he sees them as being for the benefit of this Assembly?

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

MR. LORD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When I mentioned that they were welcome distractions, it certainly implies that all of us are working very hard on the issues that this government is facing. A distraction, in fact, is something that takes you away from something you're working very hard on. Consequently, I guess I would question the question itself, which implies that we aren't working hard.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

MS CARLSON: Well, Mr. Speaker, he didn't actually ask the question. What I wanted to know was why he welcomed distractions from pressing issues when he should have his priorities straight?

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

MR. LORD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm quite sure that in fact we have our priorities straight in this government, and we are working very hard on those priorities. Health, education, and all the many other issues that we are working on formed the bulk of my speech, but I did think it was important to recognize the accomplishments of our Olympic athletes and our men and women in uniform.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have another question for the Member for Calgary-Currie. Could he tell us who he thinks created the current deficit that we have now, what party it was in power that couldn't manage with more than $21 billion in revenue?

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

MR. LORD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The issue of government financing in this province is indeed very complicated. I should point out that from the city of Calgary alone nearly $500 million a year leaves that city for the federal government in fuel taxes. So were we to get the better deal with the federal government, which is taking so much money out of Albertans' pockets and not returning it, we might not be facing some of the issues that we currently are facing. Having said that, it appears to me that the demands for spending emanate from the opposite side of the House.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs has been dying to ask a question.

MR. LUKASZUK: Well, Mr. Speaker, it isn't a matter of life or death. I just wanted to point out to the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie that as he drives to Edmonton from Calgary, he will be glad to notice that the sign City of Champions appears under the sign of Welcome to Edmonton and not Welcome to Calgary. So a correction needs to be made.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: I don't know that that's a question, but do you wish to reply, hon. Member for Calgary-Currie?

MR. LORD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The competitive nature between Edmonton and Calgary is of course very well known, and while Edmonton currently has claimed the title "the" City of Champions and my speech did say "a" city of champions, we hope to rectify that situation shortly.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour this evening to rise and respond to the Speech from the Throne, which was delivered by Her Honour Lois Hole, Lieutenant Governor of Alberta and, I would like to add, also a resident of St. Albert.

In the Speech from the Throne Her Honour mentioned the golden jubilee of Her Royal Highness Elizabeth II and in particular the acknowledgment of the fact that we will be having a Premier's citizenship award and a Queen's Golden Jubilee Citizenship Medal for those high school students who achieve in the areas of citizenship, community participation, and leadership. I would like to suggest that I like every other member in this Assembly feel that our students in St. Albert can certainly rise to the challenge of working towards receiving that award and certainly towards receiving that medal, which would indeed be an honour.

The Queen's golden jubilee scholarship for the visual and performing arts was also mentioned in the Speech from the Throne, and I'd like to also say on behalf of the community of St. Albert that we have in our community a strong sector for the cultural arts. In particular for the visual and performing arts we have St. Albert Place, where we have our Arden Theatre, and of course we also have our library and also Profiles Public Gallery, which serves to profile, literally, local artists with their wonderful visual talents.

We have also, interestingly enough, an item of news most recently with the namesake of our Paul Kane high school. One of his paintings, Scene in the Northwest, fetched $4 million on the auction market, but what I'd like to point out is the fact that at Paul Kane high school in St. Albert there are students who have actually executed marvelous canvases that are hanging in the halls of our public buildings in the community and certainly are there in the halls of the high school. They have an excellent visual arts program. As well, our community has a strong performing arts community, that also showcases the Children's Festival every year, and we've had the opportunity to do that for the last six years in our community.

I would also mention that we have very strong, visible, and enjoyable art in public places monuments, if you will, or sculptures around the community and murals that again will inspire students, young students and high school students and postsecondary students, to reach for and strive for achieving those scholarships and indeed that medal.

In the Speech from the Throne our Lieutenant Governor reflected on "the unique character and record of accomplishment that the people of Alberta have shaped through hard work, concern for each other, and the sharing of common goals for their province." As presumptuous as it may seem, Mr. Speaker, and certainly as boastful as I may sound presumptuous, I believe the latter attributes are specifically those of the people of St. Albert.

To further paraphrase the throne speech, I can honestly say that the pride that goes with being a St. Albertan is immeasurable and irrepressible. My constituents do care for others, and residents, sometimes despite their differences, are very willing to confront the challenges of the day for the betterment of tomorrow. Nowhere was that willingness to articulate our vision so evident as at the Future Summit roundtable discussions that I held in my constituency in late October of last year. At that those roundtables, in preparation for our discussion and our collective search for the vision for the future of Alberta, many of the participants mentioned that we did want to work towards a caring community, a safe community, an educated community, and, by all means, a healthy community with healthy Albertans in a healthy province.

However, Mr. Speaker, I am reminded of the adage that was, well, interestingly enough, expressed by Mark Lee in The Next Karate Kid movie when he observed that ambition without knowledge is like a boat on dry land. With that adage in mind I know that we have ambition in St. Albert. I know that we do not have a figurative dry land of opportunity in Alberta, but I also know that we have a strong foundation of educational opportunity in St. Albert.

In my community we have a comprehensive and inclusive learning opportunity that encompasses the concept of lifelong learning. I can only point to the programs we have that go beyond the schooling component of education, the library programs where we have the award-winning program of Computers for Seniors. Our library is on the APLEN system. We have 13 CAP sites, or community access programs, where we have computer terminals of access for the public around the community. In fact, one has just been placed in the post office opposite my constituency office on Perron Street.

Our St. Albert protestant schools, our greater St. Albert Catholic schools, and our Nord-Central Francophone Scolaire all have programs that are encompassing of community endeavours to learn beyond the classroom as well as in the classroom.

Most recently we have the establishment of the St. Albert campus of Fairview College. Among the many programs that Fairview College offers in St. Albert is the only one that we have for motorcycles, for the maintenance and the upkeep of motorcycles, authorized and certified by Harley-Davidson in western Canada, for those who might be aficionados of motorcycle lore and enjoyment.

We also have Visionary College, which is a private music college, and of course Athabasca University has the MBA program. Also in St. Albert we have St. Gabriel school, which provides cyberlearning and cybercurriculum for grades 1 to 12 to 600 or so students, and I think that probably every member in this Assembly has perhaps a student, two, three, or more in their constituency who accesses their program, their grades 1 to 12, through the cyberschool. So when the Speech from the Throne mentioned a healthier Alberta through learning, I believe that we as St. Albertans can certainly attest to our desire to reach a healthy Alberta. We hope to be healthy Albertans in a learning environment.

As I mentioned earlier, too, the theme of the throne speech and the overarching interest of St. Albertans is for an enabling environment created by a government that points to healthy Albertans in this healthy Alberta. We want and we will work towards a health care system for all Albertans.

I'm also proud to say that many of those points that were recommended in the Premier's Advisory Council on Health, led by the Rt. Hon. Don Mazankowski, had mentioned a number of initiatives that I think have begun in St. Albert. So our desire is to continue to find new ways of delivering health care that are not only efficient but that provide a ready opportunity for citizens to access health care.

I'd like especially to speak about the fine programs that are available and also the services, of course, at Sturgeon community hospital. We do have challenges though, and we do need to look after those who cannot look after themselves in many ways and must do so in specific health facility settings. So it is with great eagerness that I hope we will be able to construct a new Youville auxiliary hospital that will provide us with more long-term care beds that are direly needed in my community.

I'd also like to mention the remarkable strength of our seniors who live in their homes and live independently, of course with the aid of some home care. In particular I want to mention two elderly women who are extraordinary in so many ways. I'd like to acknowledge Bertha Kennedy and Elsie Dittman, both who are in their early 90s and who live in an older neighbourhood of St. Albert but are still contributors to the quality of life in St. Albert, and it's because of them that we want to build on our past and look to our future.

The St. Albert Chamber of Commerce, which represents 70-plus small businesses, is indeed a testament to the desire of my community for a strong and resilient economy. The establishment of a financial management commission as mentioned in the Speech from the Throne is welcomed by my constituents who pride themselves as being the prime drivers of the economic engine that carries our train of products and services through our social landscape of health care, education, social programs, and a justice system founded on a rule of law.

I would also like to acknowledge the fact that many of the residents in St. Albert are members of the military. They work out of the base at Griesbach, but they reside with their families in my community. They are a source of strength, and they are also a source of great assistance in our community programs. I would like to pay tribute to their efforts both home and abroad, and certainly we wish them well, great safety, and much appreciation for their work on our behalf.

There is a mention of healthy communities in the Speech from the Throne, and if there is something that my community desires most and will work most diligently to achieve, it's a safe and a caring community. In that respect, I would like to acknowledge the RCMP who assist us in this task. Inspector George Shillaker and members of the RCMP work in many, many community programs, most specifically the DARE program, which is much coveted by all my grade 6 classes and can only be provided to a select number of them due to a shortage of personnel and resources.

We also have a desire to engage in the youth in transition program, and our youth community centre, which has suffered a setback because of a reduction in funding most recently, is keen to find alternate ways to fund the program and to work with the storefront school which is just adjacent to it in our Grandin mall.

Our other challenge is to find affordable housing in my community, housing that will provide opportunities for individuals to house themselves, to look after themselves in a safe and a livable environment.

So I would like to conclude, Mr. Speaker, by saying that the challenges that have been articulated by Her Honour in the Speech from the Throne are challenges that members of my community most readily accept, and it is my honour to share the responsibility of representing those views, those energies, and that enthusiasm and willingness to find and work towards solutions that I share with my colleague the Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert, who represents the northwest segment of the city. Together we are very eager to put into practice and to implement those initiatives which the citizens of St. Albert feel are most attentive to what we want this province to be in the future but most specifically in the immediate days to come as we work at legislation to enhance the quality of life in Alberta.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Under 29(2) I would like to put a question to the Member for St. Albert. She spoke at some length about the resources available to libraries and the different library programs that she was able to access in her constituency. I'm wondering if the member is satisfied with the current level of funding that's available to the libraries in her constituency.

MRS. O'NEILL: Mr. Speaker, in reply to the hon. member, of course I'm not satisfied. I would like a lot more money, resources, opportunities for my library. However, what I must say is that I would commend the library board in St. Albert for the opportunities that they have taken to fund-raise and those who are willing to contribute to the fund-raising in order that we may have these quality programs.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: No further questions?

The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

MR. JOHNSON: I don't have a question.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: No, no. You're speaking. There being no further questions, the hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose then would be speaking.

MR. JOHNSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to be able to respond to the Speech from the Throne. I'd first of all like to thank the Lieutenant Governor for what I consider to be a very, very good speech. It's not only a very good blueprint for the government's agenda for this coming year but I think also for the future. It is visionary, it's realistic, and it's positive, as one might expect from our Lieutenant Governor, and it develops logically and clearly from its title, Working Together to Build a Healthy Alberta.

While it is made clear that the health care system is at the top of our agenda, the speech is very strong in making a distinction between a healthy system and a healthy Alberta and the health system. Simply put, there's more to a healthy Alberta than just our health system.

The speech skillfully discusses the meaning of a healthy Alberta in terms of economic growth and fiscal stability, good schools, safe children being cared for and nurtured by parents, strong communities, secure seniors, clean air and water, and an Alberta where confidence for the future is bright. It is clear that all systems and qualities must work together in concert, as the title indicates: working together. The backbone that ties these forces and qualities and systems together I believe is our education system.

While I could comment on all of the issues that were raised in this speech, I want to take a few moments to respond to the comments that were made specifically relating to our education or our learning system. Education has been so important in my life and in my career, and I expect that we could all say the same thing. Whether talking of health or a healthy Albertan or a healthy Alberta, education, as stated in the speech, is a key priority of this government. It is not only a key priority of this government, but it is a key concern of my constituency.

Education plays a very important role in Wetaskiwin-Camrose. Many retired teachers in this province point to Camrose as the place where they took their normal school training in the '20s and perhaps the '30s, and I believe the school closed in the late '30s. Many people talk about their years spent at Augustana University College, where we celebrated our 90th year just this last year, or perhaps NorQuest College in Wetaskiwin. We're proud of our two excellent high schools, one in Camrose and one in Wetaskiwin, and of course we feel we have a very strong elementary and secondary system in our many schools in Camrose and Wetaskiwin and Millet.

Mr. Speaker, the importance of a strong emphasis and strong support for our education system just cannot be overstated, and before we look to a bright future for Alberta built on a strong educational system, we should consider the foundation upon which we will build. That foundation is our past and our present education system. The Speech from the Throne indicates that our education system "continues to be one of the best in the world." The speech gave evidence in terms of results. "In the past . . . the quality of the system was proven by the number one placement of Alberta students in international reading tests," and they finished third in math and science.

Mr. Speaker, while on sabbatical from Augustana University College in 1994, I spent some time studying education systems in eastern and western European countries. I concluded that we have a better education system than we often give ourselves credit for. Our teachers are well trained and well qualified and do a very good job in the classroom. Many of them are a product of our strong universities, particularly the universities of Alberta and Calgary and the University of Lethbridge. Our curriculum is designed to develop students with the ability to think creatively and independently, thereby giving them skills to meet the challenges of a changing job market.

It was interesting to me when I was interviewing some students in a little town in the Czech Republic, a town called Tábor. I talked to two grade 12 students there. They had both been on Rotary exchanges in Canada the year before, and I asked them to compare the two systems, in their home country of the Czech Republic and in Canada. They both said to me that if you really want to be trained how to think, how to solve problems, how to think independently and creatively, then you should go to Canada for an education system. If you're more interested in learning facts and memorization, well, they would rather stay in their home country. Well, I think that we would rather teach our children how to think and to be creative, and I think we do a pretty good job.

I found also that our facilities compare very favourably. We have done a remarkable job of incorporating fine arts and sports into our educational system, providing students with a well-rounded foundation for lifelong learning.

Public education in this country and in this province by and large has done a very good job. As the minister of education stated in a speech in question period just a few days ago, there's one other very key component that came back from those [achievement] studies. In Alberta we were the only jurisdiction in the world . . .

"In the world," he emphasized.

. . . where the public system did better than the private system.

Our system, Mr. Speaker, to continue the quote, is "second to none."

While we have many strengths from which our province has benefited clearly, we also must work on improvements. We must improve our teaching of languages in our school system. We must define the roles of our stakeholders better, such as the role and the authority of our school boards. At a time of emphasizing healthy Albertans, I would also like to see more attention given to our physical education offerings in our schools.

I am pleased to read that in the coming year the government will share and discuss a renewed vision for the kindergarten to grade 12 learning system which emphasizes . . . basic skills in the early grades and more specialized skills as students move through the system, providing a strong foundation upon which to build. I am further delighted to read that "it is an important time for all parties in the public education system to work together for the betterment of students." Mr. Speaker, so much more can be accomplished when all stakeholders work together, and who isn't a stakeholder when it comes to education, working together for the common benefits of all: our teachers, our administrators, parents, school boards, government, the teaching profession itself, staff, the public, and of course I must include students as well.

Mr. Speaker, I attended the Future Summit in early February as the moderator of the session on learning. I was pleased to see participants of many and diverse backgrounds working together to find common ground and a united vision for our learning. No doubt the conclusion of this session will be a significant start as we work together to refine and improve on our education system, that we can already be proud of, as I mentioned before.

It is always wise to build upon our strengths. I look forward to the opportunity to contribute to a renewed vision of our learning system, and I'm sure all of my colleagues in this House, my teaching colleagues, my parent colleagues, my grandparent colleagues, want to be participants as we share and discuss this renewed vision of our K to 12 system that we read about in the throne speech. Just as a strong education system is the foundation of a healthy Alberta and healthy Albertans, so too is a solid K to 12 learning system the foundation for postsecondary education and lifelong learning. I'm pleased to read of the government's continuing commitment to high-quality postsecondary learning opportunities and that these opportunities will remain accessible and affordable to all Albertans. I'm proud of our postsecondary opportunities through our universities and our colleges, from the university colleges and technical institutes. I'm also very pleased to see the expanding Campus Alberta concept as institutions find more ways to collaborate in offering more and better opportunities to students of all ages to learn. This, too, lays a firm foundation for a healthy Alberta and healthy Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, while one section of the speech dwells specifically on a healthy Alberta through learning, the theme is cleverly woven throughout the speech in all sections. For example, health status can be affected even by the statement: "You're hired. Welcome to the team." And I ask what makes a person employable? How do people learn to be team members? Well, it's through an effective school system. Another point

Albertans know that healthy approaches to life are developed by institutions as comprehensive as a well-funded school system or by individuals as dedicated as the teacher who takes a student aside to say, "Good work."

A healthy Alberta is built on a well-funded education system and such dedicated teachers, and we must strive for both.

A third example: "The government will also launch a campaign to give Albertans reliable health information and encourage them to make healthy lifestyle choices." Our schools are pivotal in helping our youth to make healthy lifestyle choices.

Or another point: "Through its youth in transition initiative government will work to ensure that youth acquire the skills and attitudes to live happy, healthy, and productive lives." Children acquiring skills and attitudes come first and foremost through a solid education system that not only trains children but lays the foundation for developing skills and, maybe even more important, lifelong attitudes.

Mr. Speaker, this throne speech is extremely positive, and it gives us good reason to be optimistic about a healthy Alberta in the future. I thank you for the opportunity to glean and comment on issues and directions by looking at a healthy Alberta from a learning perspective. Thank you very much.

At this time I would like to move that we adjourn debate.

Second Reading

Bill 1
Queen Elizabeth II Golden Jubilee Recognition Act

[Adjourned debate March 5: Mr. Stevens]

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise today and speak in support of Bill 1, the Queen Elizabeth II Golden Jubilee Recognition Act. I'd like to thank the Premier for introducing this as Bill 1 last week in the Legislature, and I'd also like to thank my colleague the Minister of Community Development, who spoke to Bill 1 at second reading and addressed the Assembly about the Queen's jubilee scholarship for the visual and performing arts as proposed under this bill.

I want to speak today, Mr. Speaker, about the citizenship awards that this bill will establish, awards that will recognize outstanding young Albertans who go above and beyond in their communities, who give freely of their time to support other people and worthy causes, who give back to their communities and to the province, who, in short, show us what it means to be a good citizen. There are many awards that recognize outstanding achievement by young people in academics, and that's entirely appropriate. There are many awards for those who excel in sports. But I am particularly pleased that now we will have a Premier's award to recognize young people who exemplify the best qualities in citizenship and leadership.

Mr. Speaker, under this program a student from every high school in the province will be recognized with the Premier's citizenship award in recognition of the Queen's golden jubilee. The awards will be presented to students who make a significant contribution to their communities through good citizenship, leadership, community service activities, and volunteering, and I'm hoping, Mr. Speaker, that those awards will be accompanied by a special pin recognizing that leadership and, hopefully, a certificate which will be signed by the Premier. Perhaps, we could even encourage local service clubs to provide a monetary scholarship to go with them, because I think we really do need to recognize in each of our communities and each of our high schools those of our students who are going above and beyond.

The five most outstanding of these students, Mr. Speaker, from across the province will be recognized with the Golden Jubilee Citizenship Medal and a $5,000 award that they can use for further education or development. Hopefully, again, we can recognize these students in a special manner. Perhaps they could be brought to the Legislature and the award presented here, either before the bar or in the Lieutenant Governor's suite or the Speaker's suite. Perhaps they can be honoured with an opportunity to meet with the Lieutenant Governor, the Speaker, and the Premier. In short, Mr. Speaker, I believe that we should make this award a special award, link it to the Legislature, and say in this award and demonstrate in this award that we appreciate citizenship and leadership in our communities.

Mr. Speaker, as members of this Assembly we often talk about the importance of young people, about investing in their future, about ensuring that young Albertans have opportunities to reach their goals, but until now we have not recognized in any significant way the many young people who exceed all expectations and show us truly what it means to be a citizen. In future we will call upon these young people to lead this province, and these awards will recognize Alberta's very best: young people who are clearly ready to take this vital responsibility.

It's easy to forget, Mr. Speaker, that Alberta is a relatively young province, not yet a hundred years old. When settlers came here in the 1800s, there was very little, but people worked together. They planted the province's first crops. They built our first cities and roads. They formed our first school boards. In short, people in our communities built our communities by giving of themselves. They achieved this by working towards a common goal, a common goal that we still have today, building a better place to live for our children and our grandchildren, and giving something back to their community.

Through the Premier's citizenship awards and the golden jubilee medals we will celebrate the achievement of today's young Albertans who exemplify the qualities of citizenship, volunteerism, and community participation. Those are the cornerstones of a caring society. They're an important part of what has made Alberta the strong, vibrant province that it is today and will allow it to continue to grow in the future.

Mr. Speaker, one of the reasons that I got involved in politics was the belief that was instilled in me by my parents that you have an obligation to give something back to your community, to contribute in the best way that you have the capability to do. And I can't coach soccer. I would encourage all members of the House to support this bill so that we can encourage young people in all of our communities to give back to their community, to show leadership in their community, to help build their community so that Alberta can continue to be the great place that it is so that others can see through their leadership how to make their communities stronger.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to speak to the bill. No questions.

Those were excellent words spoken by the Government House Leader, and certainly I support what he had to say about this bill. It's good to see that we have support in all aspects of young people's lives, but having said that, certainly this is a welcome addition to recognizing the kind of contribution that young people make in this province. It's nice that the government has come out with this as their first bill given that this is the 50th anniversary, and we're happy to see also that there's a substantive dollar value attached to these scholarships. While on the one hand it does help point out how much financial assistance students need in order to complete their postsecondary education in this province at this particular point in time, it is decent to see at least that the government has recognized that need and that we're going to see scholarships in the amount of $5,000 each. That certainly still doesn't get them through the first year of school, Mr. Speaker, but it is a significant contribution.

MS BLAKEMAN: It certainly cuts their debt down.

MS CARLSON: Yes, it helps to cut their debt down. There's no doubt about that.

One thing that I have been struck by time after time in my own constituency is the quality of leadership that we see from today's young people, and I think the citizenship medal certainly recognizes that. My colleague for Edmonton-Mill Woods attends many of the same functions I do because while the high schools are in his constituency, we share students in those two high schools. We are constantly struck by how much time and effort and genuine concern these students show in terms of building better communities, in the leadership aspects of bringing other students along with them to learn the ropes and learn how to organize and learn how to manage and still keep their grades up, keep very high grade point averages. So I am constantly awed by the abilities of these students and look forward to seeing where they go on their life path and watch to see what they succeed in and how they change the world that we live in in future times.

As the minister said, there always have been a lot of scholarships and support for students who work hard and are talented on the sports side of things. I'm happy to see that happen because as my colleague for Edmonton-Centre said, I am a coach and have been for a number of years and I know that those kids make huge efforts and that not every child is talented in the same areas, but it certainly is past time that we recognized in a significant and serious way the contribution that students make to our development and their development through good citizenship.

So I'm very happy to be able to support this bill, and I'm sure that it will receive unanimous support from all members in this Assembly.

[Motion carried unanimously; Bill 1 read a second time]

[Motion carried; at 9:29 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Wednesday at 1:30 p.m.]

MR. HANCOCK: Mr. Speaker, in light of the good work that's been done today, I would move that we adjourn until 1:30 p.m. tomorrow.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Wednesday, March 6, 2002

1:30 p.m.

Date: 02/03/06

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

THE SPEAKER: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. O God, grant that we the members of our province's Legislature may fulfill our office with honesty and integrity. May our first concern be for the good of all our citizens. Guide our deliberations this day. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Guests

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's with great pleasure that I introduce to you and through you to all Members of the Legislative Assembly one of my favourite schools in the constituency, favourite because my kids went there. Today we have 56 students in attendance and seven adults. The teachers are Mrs. Caroline Lepps and Mrs. Helen Meiers. They are accompanied today by parent helpers Mr. Pat Ryan, Mr. Greg Abesamis, Mrs. Tammy Bruens, Mrs. Liz Moniz, and my good friend Mrs. Jo-Anne Ward. It's Holy Family Catholic school. I would ask that they please all rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glangarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much. I have a number of introductions today. I would like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Marj Bouchard and her son Bill. Marj is a longtime volunteer with minor hockey in Edmonton. She has served as the novice city category director. She has run an arena for many years during Minor Hockey Week, and she has also hosted the Bill Bouchard memorial tournament for 27 years. They are seated in the public gallery, Mr. Speaker, and with your permission I would ask that they now rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the House.

My next introduction, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you the students of one of my favourite schools, St. Philip Catholic elementary school. This is the school that my children attended. They are accompanied today by Mr. Jerome Burghardt and Mr. Roger Millette as well as parents Mrs. Pauline Sevigny, Mrs. Marie Yaremko, Mrs. Emily Reichert, and Mrs. Elaine Vervoort. They are seated in the members' gallery, and I would ask them all to rise now and receive the traditional warm welcome of the House.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

MR. LUKASZUK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As you may know, Edmonton government MLAs, which now are quite a numerous bunch, may I add, would like to foster a spirit of co-operation with the city of Edmonton, and in that spirit we have teamed up into a buddy system with city councillors. It is my pleasure to introduce my buddy city councillor from the city of Edmonton, Mr. Allan Bolstad. I would ask Mr. Bolstad, who happens to be a constituent of my seatmate, to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

MR. JOHNSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly two very special guests from my constituency: Mr. Andrew Church, acting president of the Agriculture Financial Services Corporation, and his wife, Bev. They are seated in the members' gallery. As acting president Mr. Church's extensive experience in business administration and agricultural finance provide leadership to the AFSC, which assists approximately 26,000 Alberta farmers and agribusinesses to achieve their operational and financial goals. I'd like to ask Andrew and Bev to rise in the gallery and be received by the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

MR. BOUTILIER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce a lady who is a citizen of Fort McMurray and who is very active in the postsecondary institution of Keyano College, where my wife actually teaches. She's the executive assistant to the president and also, I might add, a very good friend of the Member for Drumheller-Chinook. I'd ask Wendy Crawford to stand and receive the very warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, we'll deal with your point of order under the regular Routine aspect; okay?

head: Oral Question Period

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition with the first Official Opposition question.

Children's Services

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I want to provide the Minister of Children's Services with an example of one parent's struggle with her ministry, a struggle that is shared by dozens of other parents. This parent has tried to appeal to the Child Welfare Appeal Panel about the level of funding for her child, only to be told by the panel that her case is not in that jurisdiction. My question is to the Minister of Children's Services. Whose jurisdiction is it to make sure that handicapped children who need intensive behavioral intervention get the full support recommended by their professional staff?

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to say thank you to the hon. member for providing me with a specific example that I can follow up on. The reference points that have been made both in the media and from hon. members about the adjudication of some 85 cases to the tune of $3.5 million – I want to clearly state that all those who have gone before the appeal panel who have received services will not have those services reduced if they have been judged at an appeal to be appropriate services. Any service reductions that may have occurred over the last six to eight months in services to children with developmental disabilities have been done in consultation with the families and have been done in a manner which we would hope would reduce what might be excessive in service but keep the service requirements in the best interests of the child. While those adjustments may have caused some hardship, we have asked for a review of all of those adjustments that have been done in the last eight months. So, simply put, if in fact any hon. member or anybody in Alberta wishes to present to me circumstances which are tangible evidence that some of those reductions may have hurt children, we are more than happy to go back. Our job is to protect the children.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My next question is to the Minister of Learning. Why is it that your department referred these children back to the children's services appeal panel when they had already referred them to your department saying that it was your department that was responsible for providing that intervention?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

DR. OBERG: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. If there is a jurisdictional issue on the local level, we will certainly get to the bottom of this. The ultimate panel that is responsible for this is the child welfare panel, that the hon. Minister of Children's Services looks after. However, I will give the hon. member the undertaking that if there has been a jurisdictional issue there – I do not agree with having one group causing a child to go to the other group within government. If that did occur, I will get to the bottom of it.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question is to the Premier. With both ministers saying that the other is responsible, will the Premier commit to looking into and clarifying for this parent which minister is responsible so she knows which minister to go to get a solution to her problem?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. the Premier.

MR. KLEIN: I think I heard the hon. Minister of Learning say that he's committed to getting to the bottom of this situation, and I will ask both ministers today to discuss this matter and iron it out.

THE SPEAKER: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Women's Shelters

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last year the Ministry of Children's Services launched an internal survey which will supposedly help it improve services. Yesterday a letter was tabled in this Legislature from the executive director of the Calgary Women's Emergency Shelter stating that the goal of this survey seems not to be to improve services but to cut them. To the Minister of Children's Services: can the minister explain how this survey is even remotely fair when it gives people the impression that maintaining services could mean a trade-off as a 5 percent tax increase?

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, I'm aware that a member of the third party tabled a letter. I received a copy of that letter. I'm not sure that it is the survey that was done by Children's Services or if, in fact, it was the survey that was done through permission that I granted to the association for women's shelters across the province, which Jan Reimer sought and received permission from my department to release. I can assure you that with the deputy minister and the executive director of the Alberta association of women's shelters we are reviewing not only the funding model but the manner in which technology links up with the department. We are reviewing whether or not the system to envelope funding to the local authorities across Alberta to deal directly with the shelters is the appropriate fashion or if, in fact, the dollars which we have increased substantively in the last two years could be better meted out through the department because shelters don't exist in every single authority.

There are 19 shelters we fund, 28 shelters in all in Alberta, and we are working more closely than we ever have with Children's Services and the women's shelters.

Could I point out one success that was reported to me just this week from the director of the association for women's shelters? Apparently, because of our conversations we've already been able to open doors for a better dialogue with law enforcement authorities and women's shelters across Alberta. So we are doing our utmost to be co-operative, and I can assure you that if we had the directors from all the shelters sitting in this Assembly today, they would tell you that we've made headway.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Back to the Minister of Children's Services: why did the survey contemplate that women's shelters should no longer be the responsibility of government? Who's going to pay? Are you going to charge room and board?

MS EVANS: Well, Mr. Speaker, it has never been the intent of Alberta Children's Services ministry or this government to divest ourselves of responsibility. There has never been one thought to entertain that. There have simply been questions about the funding and the manner in which we're funding them through Children's Services. At one point some of the women questioned whether or not Children's Services by the very title was the appropriate area. We have understood that they understand that we are working hard with them. It's a ministry of government.

Also, Mr. Speaker, I'm going to enlighten this House that we are working in close co-operation with the hon. minister in charge of the Solicitor General's responsibilities because sexual assault centres across Alberta are asking us for information as well, and the hon. minister may wish to elaborate on that answer.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question again to the Minister of Children's Services: how much did this survey cost, and will it be released to the public?

MS EVANS: Well, Mr. Speaker, I would be very happy to provide those details, but again I want to confirm whether or not this is our survey, the Minister of Children's Services' survey, or if in fact this was the more recently released survey that happened within the last two months from the association of women's shelters. But with any survey that we have undertaken on behalf of services for women who have experienced family violence, we'd be happy to provide that information.

THE SPEAKER: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Ma'Mōwe Child and Family Services Authority

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. According to an Edmonton city council Community Services Committee report, cuts to the Ma'Mōwe region are putting children at risk. My questions are to the Minister of Children's Services. Given that the minister claims that millions of dollars have been put into the system, why are at least 25 preventative programs in this region being axed?

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, previously in the House this week I tabled a letter that I sent to Councillor Michael Phair inquiring under what circumstances, what survey, what information they had, and what report was the basis for claiming there had been significant cuts in Ma'Mōwe children's services. In actual fact cost-containment strategies were only effected in the last part of the latter part of this past government fiscal year, and my information would in fact deny that the draconian cuts that have been suggested were actually made. We made some alterations to programs. Last fall I identified in this House programs that we actually reduced or removed; for example, a learn to swim program. There are three premises under which we undertook cuts as far away from the child as possible to make sure we were working with families that needed child protection as our priority and to keep children where at all possible safe from risk and enabling them to grow up in the four pillars of our ministry: safe and healthy, successful at learning, and working as well with the aboriginal pillar.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you. To the same minister, Mr. Speaker: are children not being hurt when anger management, stay-in-school, and academic support programs are cut?

MS EVANS: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think that the hon. member is talking about a program that is in part delivered by the school authorities in some situations. Anger management programs in schools happen within schools, but we support anger management programs as parents and through parental groups.

One tremendous stride we've made with the child and family services authorities is to put them in close collaboration with family and community support services. We have a preventive strategy group working on putting those preventive dollars up front so that we'll be able to provide stronger preventive programs in the future, and the communities themselves have come forward very responsively to that.

Mr. Speaker, the capital region, if our plans are successful, will see an injection of at least $3 million more for preventive programs to make sure that those programs are available, to do those kinds of things that help children from being at risk.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: why is the ministry abandoning prevention, one of the pillars on which the department's services were supposedly built? Why are you abandoning that?

MS EVANS: Well, Mr. Speaker, we are, simply put, not abandoning prevention. We are working very strongly and positively. I've just identified the family and communities support services model, but let's get back to the basics.

Every hon. member here knows that this budget has increased some 35 percent in the last two years. There isn't another commitment across Canada and there isn't another budget across this province that has increased as much as we have for Children's Services, and while I may, the children with special and unique abilities, of which we have about 9,000 children, receive an average of $50,000 apiece over and above other programs that are being provided through either the Department of Learning or Health. We provide as much as a quarter of a million dollars for one special-needs child.

Mr. Speaker, I am taking offence, indeed, on behalf of the children that are well served by many programs in this province. We should be proud of those programs.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, followed by the hon. Member Calgary-Buffalo.

NHL Player Levy

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the Premier announced a new tax. It will no doubt be a relief to Alberta taxpayers to learn that this tax will not be paid by them but by NHL players. However, it is clear that this is an actual tax and not some other form of waterfowl. To the Premier: how much revenue will this tax bring in, and how will that revenue be spent?

MR. KLEIN: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's not a tax that quacks. Details of the tax or facility fee or call it what you want will be outlined in the budget on March 19, but this is a proposal that has been visited and revisited now about – what? – three times I think at the request of the two NHL teams here in Alberta, the Flames and the Oilers. Basically, they've asked for a system that would levy a form of taxation on visiting players or players who come to Alberta to play. It would be a tax similar to that levied by I believe it's 14 other jurisdictions in the United States, where players from outside that jurisdiction are required to pay a tax, and I understand even inside those particular jurisdictions. So this is a tax or a facility fee or call it what you want – I don't know what name we've attached to it or what name will be attached to it – that certainly will not involve taxpayers' dollars generally but will be a specific tax on the players, players who earn a million dollars or so on average.

1:50

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Will the Premier assure the House that before the owners of the two teams in question receive what is clearly tax money, they will undertake not to move the hockey teams out of either Edmonton or Calgary?

MR. KLEIN: That's an interesting question. I don't know if we have any control over that, but certainly it's the opinion of Mr. Bettman, who has stated publicly that he wants to keep the so-called small market teams alive, particularly in Alberta, the Oilers and the Flames, because they do provide a tremendous amount of excitement. They do provide a vehicle for community spirit, and they contribute significantly to the economy, Mr. Speaker. The teams have indicated that until they have the opportunity to deal with the fundamental problem – and that is the problem of salaries – which won't come due I believe until 2004, they need some form of relief that doesn't involve taxpayers' dollars generally, and that's precisely what we're trying to do.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the existing agreement with the city of Edmonton requires that the Oilers stay in Edmonton until the year 2004, why can't this government do just as well and ensure that both teams stay in Alberta until at least 2008 or perhaps beyond?

MR. KLEIN: Well, Mr. Speaker, no one can predict what's going to happen in 2008, never mind next year, but I've received clear indication and I believe the Finance minister has received clear indication that indeed the owners of those teams want the teams to remain here. They're committed to those teams.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Family Law Review

MR. CENAIKO: Mr. Speaker, as a member of this Assembly a topic that is brought up regularly by my constituents is the issues surrounding family law. For that reason I am pleased Alberta Justice is reviewing all legislation that deals with family law. My questions today are to the Minister of Justice and Attorney General. How will this project make a difference to those Albertans who are struggling with the many aspects of Alberta's family law system?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. HANCOCK: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to answer questions with respect to this very important project, because just last week our public consultation process wrapped up, and we're continuing the technical consultation yet for a while. The driving force behind this was the Member for Calgary-Lougheed with a review of the maintenance enforcement program and child access and at that time brought forward in their recommendations that there needed to be a review of the family law and a simplification of it. Again at the justice summit in 1999 one of the key recommendations coming out of that was that family law needed to be simplified, consolidated, the access needed to be improved, and the forms needed to be simplified. So in response to that, Justice has had in its business plan for the last two years a review of the family law. We've reviewed internally, we're now consulting externally, and we hope to bring forward legislation this spring. We'll be examining areas of provincial jurisdiction, aiming to streamline the law, making it more accessible to Albertans, more affordable for Albertans, and clearer for Albertans.

MR. CENAIKO: To the same minister: will this review expand the definition of marriage?

MR. HANCOCK: No, Mr. Speaker. First of all, marriage in its definition is under the purview of the federal government, but the Alberta government has made it very clear that in our view marriage is between a man and a woman. What we are doing under the review is we're reviewing issues like spousal support, child access and maintenance, and the obligation of individuals with respect to support and other issues like that surrounding family law.

At the same time, Mr. Speaker, we're also reviewing issues relating to other types of personal relationships. These are not relationships that are created by government, but they're relationships which exist in society and which need to have access to rule of law when those relationships break down or when dependencies have been created in those relationships.

So, Mr. Speaker, I'd reiterate. We're not moving to change the definition of marriage or the definition of spouse. We understand what those mean in our society and in the religious institutions and the way we've historically dealt with them, but we will through this process attempt to deal with the issue of other adult personal relationships.

MR. CENAIKO: Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: when can we expect to see these changes?

MR. HANCOCK: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's been a long process because of the complexity of the issues and because we have to coordinate as well with the federal government. They had a consultation on family law matters last June. We're still waiting to hear what their intention is with respect to introduction of their legislation. Obviously, to a certain extent we'll want to align some of our terms and some of our processes with the federal law relative to issues around custody and access, issues around maintenance and support, because it's important, whether it's under federal jurisdiction or under provincial jurisdiction, that people are treated fairly and equitably and relatively in the same manner. So those issues have to be addressed.

As I indicated earlier, we're wrapping up our technical consultations with respect to our law. We're working very hard to make sure that some, if not all, of the family law package is available for this spring's session.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Little Bow.

Day Care Worker Review

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government has forgotten about the homeless, the poor, the disabled, the children, and the day care workers. Last April the Minister of Children's Services said that the Clelland report on day care worker salaries was not yet ready to be tabled. In November, seven months later, it was said that it is not yet ready to be tabled. Surely it is ready now, 11 months later. My questions are to the Minister of Children's Services. Since the minister has boasted that her department will be one of the few to get new money this year, will some of that money go to address the chronic underfunding in the salaries of day care workers?

MS EVANS: Well, Mr. Speaker, we're waiting for the new budget to come out, and I would advise the hon. member that he could wait and see.

The other thing, Mr. Speaker. I should advise that at a point where we may have been able to make some policy decisions or recommendations, the family day home operators came forward. Currently we're still undertaking a review of their expectations, because it was their belief that if there were any resources from the early child development funding or anything else that was added to this program, they would be given some equivalent consideration.

Mr. Speaker, further, we have been working in close co-operation with the hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment about some of the options available in light of the review that he's currently doing on the low-income issues that were raised earlier last year. He may wish to supplement my answer about what his department intends to do.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: is the minister admitting that she will be not addressing the issue of salaries for those who care for so many Alberta children despite the urgent need for action? You promised.

MS EVANS: Well, Mr. Speaker, you know, if we owned day cares in this province, then we would be responsible for every issue, including the payment of salaries. The very success of the operation of day cares, especially those parent co-operative day cares, is that parents are involved, community members are involved, the private sector is involved, and we do not define their budgets. Many Members of this Legislative Assembly would be familiar with day cares in their communities that are operating successfully, but let's be clear: we do not currently pay the workers in day cares. We have moved up from some $25 million that used to be paid in operational allowances to day cares to over $50 million, last year about $57 million, that goes out through operations that are provided not through an allowance but through the parents who bring forward their evidence of needing supports for day care, and through their applications dollars are provided in subsidies to those day cares to support those children. I think that the red herring here is that we are underpaying day care workers. We do not pay day care workers as a government. We support children in the best interests of children through their parents, who make application for those day care supports.

MR. MacDONALD: Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: given that there is more to operating a government department than appearing on TV clutching a teddy bear in front of a corporate jet, when will you table the Clelland report?

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, that is not a worthy question, but I will give the response that I work as many as 20 hours a day on behalf of children and would challenge all members in the House, including the hon. member, to do the same thing.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Little Bow, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Farm Income Support Programs

MR. McFARLAND: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. At a time when accrued farm incomes have been reduced in excess of 50 percent over two years, I'd like to ask the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development why a 30 percent premium discount has been stripped from the grain producers in this province.

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, the 52.9 percent reduction in accrued income was for the 1999 and 2000 income figures. You could conversely say that in 2001 the net farm income rose by 39.4 percent and crop income rose by 1.8 percent. However, statistics are not the best way to gauge the seriousness or the positives in the agricultural community.

What is important is programs like our safety net program, that the member alludes to. Mr. Speaker, in the year 2000 a 30 percent reduction in premiums was introduced by the crop insurance corporation, or Ag Financial Services. It was done in response to low commodity prices, in response to high input costs, and it was continued in the year 2000 to respond to continued low prices and high input costs. This was a discount offered by the corporation. It was never intended to be there forever but to respond to a situation. I'm pleased to say that although input costs are still somewhat high, they have come down, and commodity prices have increased. Ag Financial Services is no different than any other part of this government. We have to be prudent with our budgeting. We would like to offer this program indefinitely, but this year we're not able to continue a discount.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. McFARLAND: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for the answer. In addition to the discontinuance of the 30 percent discount, will this crop year's premiums be going up another 30 percent?

MRS. McCLELLAN: Well, Mr. Speaker, if you do not offer a 30 percent reduction, you will pay an increase of 30 percent because you will pay the 30 percent that was offered as a discount before. However, beyond that, this is a crop insurance program. It is a safety net program. It's a tripartite program supported by the federal and provincial governments and contributed to by the producers. Because commodity prices are higher this year, because you are insuring the value of that commodity, premiums will be higher this year. However, so is your protection, and that is really what this program is in place for.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. McFARLAND: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the premium rate hikes and disappearing discounts, can the minister indicate when the new revenue insurance type program will come into effect for our producers?

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, we were able to make some changes to our crop insurance program again this year, some improvements, we believe. We've been able to include protein coverage for durum and red spring wheat. We've been able to offer separate levels of coverage for Argentine and Polish canola. There was a lot of work done with farmers, with focus groups throughout the year on a change to the program that would better reflect the cost of production. We were not able in this crop year to introduce those changes. This is a tripartite program. It requires a sign-off from the federal government, the producers, and the province. The province, I believe, agrees with these changes. The producers definitely agree with these changes, but we do not have a sign-off from the federal government at this time.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry, followed by the hon. Member for Peace River.

Low-income Review

MR. BONNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the Minister of Human Resources and Employment told us he had received the low-income review initiated nine months ago, in June of last year. The challenges facing people on low income are great. To the minister: when can we expect to see the results of the low-income review?

MR. DUNFORD: Mr. Speaker, we're working on the government response as we speak. While we don't have a particular date currently as to when the reports would be made public, we are just about at the point where we can start moving through the internal process that we have as a government, and then we'll release at some point in time the low-income review MLA report on what they heard. We'll release the report on what they recommended and the government response to that recommendation.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. BONNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: has the release of the report been delayed because most of the suggestions involve extra resources that are not considered a priority by the government for the coming budget?

MR. DUNFORD: No, and the hon. member knows us better than that. He knows that we approach the situation with care and compassion for those Albertans who need our assistance. What we're trying to do, of course, is make sure that we bring forward a plan that will provide for the needs of individuals that we have in Alberta. After all, I remind the hon. member that unlike any other jurisdiction in Canada we are prepared to measure up in terms of our performance, and of course our ability to provide needs to Albertans who need assistance is one of those measurements.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. BONNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: when this report is tabled in the Legislature, will the report contain the actual comments from participants and the full recommendations of the committee, or will we receive the sanitized, edited version?

MR. DUNFORD: Well, Mr. Speaker, the member is not very continent; is he? I can assure the hon. member – and of course we go back many, many years; we've had many, many discussions; he has learned that he can trust me – and I'll tell him again that the reports we received from the low-income review team and their recommendations will be submitted to the public just as we receive them.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Peace River, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Softwood Lumber Trade Dispute

MR. FRIEDEL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This question is to the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations. Recently some media reports have suggested that the softwood lumber dispute with the United States was close to being resolved. However, other reports would indicate that there are still many unresolved issues and the dispute is far from being settled. The lumber industry is hurting because of the dispute, and inaccurate information certainly doesn't help anyone. I wonder if the minister could clarify the issue for us by advising what stage the negotiations really are at.

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, we are very much aware that these negotiations are extremely important to the industry in Alberta and to the communities across particularly northern Alberta that depend upon this industry and contribute to it.

Mr. Speaker, negotiations are continuing. Last week there was another very detailed and intensive round of discussions with United States officials and our officials and those, of course, from other provinces, and it also involves of course the federal government. Both the United States and Canada agreed, I think, that certainly it's in the best interests of both countries and the industries involved to continue towards a policy-based decision rather than going, as could be a possibility, back to the World Trade Organization or to a legal challenge through NAFTA.

We feel that at this point in time progress is still being made. A greater understanding of the characteristics of the Canadian industry is being achieved, and we have meetings scheduled again next week, Mr. Speaker, to make further progress towards what we hope will be a conclusion in a constructive way for Canada and for Alberta of this very, very difficult trade matter.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. FRIEDEL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: realizing that Alberta is a relatively small player in the lumber industry compared to B.C. and Quebec, could the minister tell us what steps are being taken to protect the interests of Alberta exporters in these discussions?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, ever since we started into these negotiations with the United States, we have worked very closely with other provinces and with the federal government. The hon. Minister Pettigrew has co-ordinated meetings of the ministers in this regard. Also, a very important factor in this is that we have in Alberta the Alberta Forest Products Association, and this has established the softwood lumber trade council, that meets on a regular basis for their provincial officials, the most recent meeting being held on March 4, 2002.

Industry representatives, Mr. Speaker, accompany our officials, accompany the delegations that we have involved in this round of negotiations, and they are there so that they can receive immediate feedback from the negotiation, the discussion table, and report back as people involved in the industry to the people back home in Alberta as to what is happening. They also, of course, are a route for people in the industry to make suggestions, to be part of a continuous process of the overall negotiations.

So we are certainly doing our very best to keep the industry informed, not just those that are directly involved in the industry but also the people that represent the communities of northern Alberta.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. FRIEDEL: Yes, Mr. Speaker. My third question was going to be regarding the amount of information that went to the industry players. I think the minister did answer that in the second question to some extent, but I wonder maybe if the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development would want to add to that, because he also works extremely closely with the industry in Alberta.

THE SPEAKER: Very quickly.

MR. CARDINAL: Yes, Mr. Speaker. It's very important. Alberta may be, you know, a small player in the overall picture of the exports to the U.S., but as far as the impact on the industry in Alberta it is great. Over 50 communities depend on forestry as their major source of revenue and income. Over 50,000 people are employed in that industry. So it is important because I think all of our constituents are impacted in one form or another in the industry, and definitely the industry has been involved.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Gas Flaring Study

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Members of the western interprovincial scientific study which has been established to answer questions about the impact of flaring and fugitive emissions have described Alberta Health's progress on the human health component of this project as "lagging more than is liked." My questions today are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. How far behind is this department lagging in its contribution to this study?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, I'll be happy to take that question under advisement.

MS CARLSON: Well, Mr. Speaker, there's a lot of money that was dedicated to this project, and that's our next question. What does the minister have to show Albertans for the money that his department committed to this project in the most recent plan? You got permission from the Minister of Finance for two years of financing. Where is the money?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, I'll take that question under advisement.

MS CARLSON: Mr. Speaker, how could it be that the minister doesn't know about a study that has money dedicated to it in his own department studying human health effects of gas flaring in this province, a very important issue to Albertans?

MR. MAR: I didn't hear a question in that, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Private Surgical Facilities

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Earlier this week the Minister of Health and Wellness tabled a document purporting to set out requirements for companies wanting to open private, for-profit hospitals in Alberta. The minister has set up a cozy little scheme with little or no input where he gets to make a decision behind closed doors while relying on information provided from those who hope to benefit and profit from opening such a facility. My question to the minister: in light of the fact that the opening of private, for-profit hospitals will have major implications for future public health care delivery in this province, how can the government justify completely freezing the public, including health providers and patients, out of the approval process?

MR. MAR: Oh, Mr. Speaker, I've been waiting for this one. The characterization by the hon. leader of the third party of these things as being private hospitals is completely, patently false. The College of Physicians and Surgeons has accredited the Health Resource Centre's Calgary facility to perform certain overnight procedures, but it is clear from the Health Care Protection Act that they cannot operate a hospital.

Let me also suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. leader of the third party has made an incorrect characterization of what we are doing versus what we are not doing. What we are not doing is we are not setting up a for-profit, parallel health care system. We are not doing that. What we are doing is this, and I hope that the hon. leader of the third party can understand this particular portion of what we are doing. We are allowing private providers of service to provide services to the public system, and this is an issue that arose when the Premier and I were at the Premier's Conference.

One of the Premiers of a province in Canada said that there's no room for for-profit, private providers within the public single-payer system. Another Premier commented on this. He said: "If you are ill and you go into a facility and your only requirement for accessing that facility is the production of a health care insurance card, then here are the questions you're going to ask. Does this place have the people and the equipment to diagnose my condition and treat me so that I get better? You're not going to ask: what's the internal rate of return of this place? What's the corporate structure? Who owns it?" The fact is that what we are talking about is private providers of service within a publicly paid for, single-payer system.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. PANNU: Thank you. The minister's attempt to deny the reality will not change the reality.

My question to the minister: why is the minister refusing to give the public a say in the approval of what are private, for-profit hospitals in everything but name?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I'm sorry. It's all right; I'll let the hon. minister supplement my answer. But as the hon. minister pointed out, there is no such thing as a private, for-profit hospital.

Mr. Speaker, I used to have right in the front of my binder – but I was prevented from using it – a little card that I used to flash. It was the Alberta health care card, and I used to say: the only card you need to access medical services in this province is your Alberta health care card.

That's what the minister was saying, that yes, certainly private operators can contract to regional health authorities to provide services; there is nothing wrong with that. As the minister said, a patient doesn't examine the corporate structure of a doctor's office or a clinic. He wants to know if he or she is going to be cured. That's what is fundamental and important to this question, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question to the Minister of Health and Wellness: will the minister assure this House that he will not approve any application for an overnight surgical facility, which is another name for a hospital, a for-profit hospital, that has any level of foreign ownership whatsoever since this could expose Alberta's health system to a NAFTA challenge?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. MAR: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish to make it perfectly clear yet one more time on this occasion: we will not have private, for-profit hospitals in this province. But the College of Physicians and Surgeons has determined that there are certain procedures that are currently done in our public hospitals – publicly owned, publicly funded hospitals – that can be done safely in a private surgical facility that may require an overnight stay. The issue of what can safely be done within a private surgical facility has been satisfied by the tests set out by the College of Physicians and Surgeons. It then remains incumbent upon the Minister of Health and Wellness for the province of Alberta to determine whether the contracting of certain types of procedures to such facilities can be done without impairing the public health care system. We will assure Albertans that we will do that.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Electricity Rates

REV. ABBOTT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question is for the hon. Minister of Energy. As the minister knows, I have had numerous calls and meetings with angry farmers and acreage owners in my constituency showing me their recent power bills. I've discovered that rural customers served by EPCOR and Utilicorp are being charged rate riders from 2000 and 2001, making their rates the highest in the province. How can these companies back-charge for two years and at a higher rate than any other company?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. SMITH: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. The ability for EPCOR, in this case, and Utilicorp to charge a deferral rate is set out in the Electric Utilities Act. In fact, the charges accrue from the price that the power companies bought power for in the year 2000 and from the price they paid for power in 2001. In 2000 under the regulated rate model they were, as they were in previous years, entitled to charge for the difference in what they paid for the power and what they sold the power for. This occurred in 2001, as well, from the regulated rate option, which was set at 11 cents.

The interesting part if you look across Alberta, Mr. Speaker, is that EPCOR and Utilicorp in this particular area have the highest deferral account rate for the year 2001 and I believe the year 2000. In fact, ATCO in their service area has no deferral rates, no rate riders for the price of power. They do have a small deferral account for another side. The second-least increase belongs to Enmax out of Calgary.

So what the utility companies are doing, Mr. Speaker, is charging correctly for power that was purchased in the year 2000 under the regulated rate model and then agreed to in the year 2001 in consultation with consumer groups on a process on how to collect that money. These fees will dissipate in 2003, after two years. A deferral account or a rate rider is not a new procedure under this new competitive market model. It took place before in the form of a regulated rate model.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

REV. ABBOTT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental is for the same minister. My constituents have also noticed their consumption rates for January are higher than experienced for similar time frames in the past years. Why?

MR. SMITH: Well, Mr. Speaker, there are some issues about load settlement, and there's a load settlement committee whose job is to reconcile the actual use of electricity. This can get fairly complicated if you're in a rural electrification association, because those, in effect, are a bulk purchase and then they're rolled up annually, so there's an accounting issue.

Secondly, active meter reading is important. There's an absolute horror story out in the newspaper about a meter-reading error that occurred with EPCOR, Mr. Speaker, that in fact resulted in the people leaving their house.

Now, I know members of the governing party are interested in every constituent, and although we hear the byplay from the opposition, it probably indicates a lesser degree of compassion for their constituents.

REV. ABBOTT: That's exactly right. Thank you.

Mr. Speaker, my final supplemental is again for the Minister of Energy. There is a large amount of previously regulated generation that wasn't sold in the past electricity auctions, and these PPAs are slated for sale this year. Will the minister guarantee that any funds raised in this upcoming auction will be used to offset these rate riders?

MR. SMITH: Well, Mr. Speaker, one of the great things about what's happening now in the marketplace without the government prescribing any regulated rate options is there will be no rate riders in the future, so that's a good thing.

Secondly, Mr. Speaker, those who have signed contracts with utilities will also not be subject to deferral rate charges or rate riders because they are contracted for the actual price that they're paying now. So, in fact, the new competitive market model works strongly on their behalf.

With respect to the balancing pool, we don't know. No one knows with certainty, Mr. Speaker, what proceeds or, in fact, possible negative proceeds could be accruing from that auction. What we do know is that we will be committed to exit any power that is held by the Balancing Pool inappropriately to the hands of the private sector as diligently and as expeditiously as possible.

University of Alberta Pandas Hockey Team and Golden Bears Volleyball Team

MR. HUTTON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am very pleased to recognize the outstanding athletes of our University of Alberta. It was a stellar occasion last weekend as the Pandas hockey team and the Golden Bears volleyball team both captured 2002 national titles in their respective sports. It was all the more exceptional as our U of A captured its third and fourth Canadian Interuniversity Sport titles of the year. It takes great skill and dedication to win championships, and the Pandas demonstrated this with abundance in Regina by winning their second title in three years.

The players and coaching staff are a part of a rich tradition of athletic excellence at our U of A, and these achievements build on our university's national reputation for good sportsmanship and athletic excellence. I join the Minister of Community Development and all members of the Assembly in extending congratulations and best wishes to both U of A teams on their latest successes.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Norman Rodseth

MR. STRANG: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to rise today and recognize the outstanding achievement of one of West Yellowhead's constituents, Norman Rodseth. Norman's service to Alberta has been exemplary. For many years until his retirement in 1992 Norm worked for the Alberta forest service and served as vice-president of the Alberta Council of Trout Unlimited. Through his long career Norm undertook many projects and initiatives, all designed to improve Alberta's environment and the condition of her wildlife. The commitment remains today.

Norm is a conservation education program instructor, and in addition to that he teaches fly-tying, fly-fishing, and building rods. On March 1 Norm's accomplishments and his commitment to Alberta were recognized through the Alberta Order of the Bighorn. This award was created in 1982 by the government to recognize the outstanding contribution of fish and wildlife conservation made by private individuals, organizations, and corporations. I would ask that all members join me in congratulating Norm for this tremendous achievement and in wishing him continued success.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Bill Bouchard Memorial Hockey Tournament

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Earlier today I had the honour of introducing to you and to all members of the Assembly Marj Bouchard and her son Bill. For the past 27 years she's organized and run the Bill Bouchard memorial hockey tournament in memory of her late husband. Marj hosts her hockey tournament for peewee-aged players at Rosslyn Community League. It is one of the few tournaments which continues to be played outdoors. Some participants are quite disappointed when they learn they'll be playing outside. Yet when asked at the end of the season what was their highlight, they reply: playing in Marj's tournament.

Marj receives a great deal of support and help from her sons Bill and Paul and a host of volunteers who fill the many required positions.

Notable participants in her tournament over the years are Hnat Domenchelli, who plays with the Minnesota Wild of the NHL; game officials Lance Roberts, who refereed at the Calgary Olympics and in the NHL, Greg Hilker, a linesman at the Calgary Olympics, and Kevin Acheson, a referee at the Salt Lake City Olympics.

Marj, thank you for the many years you've dedicated to minor hockey here in Edmonton.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Stan Schalk
Peter Leyen
George Berry

MRS. JABLONSKI: Mr. Speaker, thank you. If you had to live in a half-ton truck for two months or in a tent in minus 20 weather, how would you feel about three men who decided to build you a home? One handicapped resident is so grateful that she can't say thank you enough. Stan Schalk and his partner Peter Leyen of P & S Investments teamed up with Red Deer architect George Berry to create affordable transitional housing. The unique thing about this partnership is that they don't do it for money. They do it out of a sense of duty and out of a sense of love. Through the creative skills of George and the construction skills of Stan and Pete two affordable housing projects, one with 14 units and one with 22 units, are now housing people who would not have had a home to hang their hats without the efforts of these three men. George, Pete, and Stan worked with funding from the provincial and federal governments along with their own funds to build beautiful suites with oak cabinets, ceramic tile, new appliances, and oak trim. Beating all the odds, George, Stan, and Peter proved that where there is a will, there is a way. Indeed, they found a way to do His will, and all of Red Deer is truly grateful.

Thank you, George, Stan, and Pete, for proving that Red Deer is a caring community. Thank you to these three champions who have earned more than an Olympic medal; you have earned stars in Heaven.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Redwater.

Order of the Bighorn Awards

MR. BRODA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to recognize Dave Powell of Lacombe, Murray Mackay of Ponoka, Norm Rodseth of Edson, Calgary's Bill Turnbull, Edgar T. Jones and his wife, Jeanne, of Edmonton, and Andy Russell of Waterton Park, and the Bow River irrigation district. These individuals and corporations were inducted into the Alberta Order of the Bighorn, which the government of Alberta established in 1982. Members of the order of the bighorn have enriched the lives of many Albertans through their outstanding contribution to the conservation of Alberta's world-renowned fish and wildlife resources.

I would like to congratulate the runners-up of the order of the bighorn and to recognize the corporate sponsors and the excellent presentation made by our own Minister of Sustainable Resource Development at the award presentation on Friday, March 1, 2002.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Linda Bull

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On March 8, 1908, women workers in New York took to the streets to protest dangerous working conditions and low wages. Ninety-one years later women continue to come together on or around March 8 to celebrate past victories, identify new challenges, and plan needed actions. Today I would like to recognize a woman of action whose passion for peace, justice, and empowerment of oppressed people is inspirational: Linda Bull. Ms Bull received her BEd and an MEd from the University of Alberta, from my former department, and is now completing a doctoral degree on peace and nonviolence.

Her work has taken her across five continents, delivering a message of empowerment and peace and challenging those in leadership roles to be advocates for peace and justice. She is the 2001 recipient of a scholarship from the Mahatma Gandhi Canadian Foundation for World Peace, and she is a guest speaker at the 2002 International Women's Day program planned for this Saturday, March 9, in City Hall. I encourage all of my colleagues to try and attend that function.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Jean Fraser

MS KRYCZKA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very proud to recognize Barbara Jean Fraser in this Assembly today. Jean is a constituent in Calgary-West who was recently honoured by appointment as a member of the Order of Canada. Since the 1970s Jean has been a very strong influence in education in Calgary. She was a trustee and then chairman of the Calgary board of education and a member of the senate of the University of Calgary, where she was chairman of the external relations committee and the chancellor's search committee, to name a few. Jean was also a member and then chairman of the Mount Royal College board of governors and was again a member of many governance committees. Since 1978 Jean's exemplary leadership has also been an influence on the Calgary board of health and the Calgary regional health authority. Her skill in governance has benefited many committees such as quality care, policies and finance, and corporate accountability.

Mr. Speaker, Jean Fraser's compassion and exceptional leadership abilities have inspired others to actions which have brought about changes in health care, education, and social services. Congratulations, Jean, on your appointment.

Thank you.

head: Orders of the Day

head: Government Bills and Orders
Second Reading

Bill 10
Public Works Amendment Act, 2002

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

MR. SNELGROVE: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to move second reading of Bill 10, the Public Works Amendment Act, 2002.

It really is an honour for me to bring forward a piece of legislation that actually removes duplication and redundant legislation. I think it's a trend whose time has come. Although public works are not the most dynamic type of bill to bring forward, I think it's very important that this Assembly recognize that if it were not for our public works and our infrastructure, the economy that provides the wealth to fund many of the other bills we deal with would not be there. So I think that when we can help this industry streamline and eliminate paperwork, we're certainly on the right step.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Now, everyone has been delivered a copy of Bill 10, and I'll run through it briefly, Mr. Speaker, and comment on some of the major changes, and I'll certainly look forward to the discussion in committee.

Before I go through the bill, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to take the opportunity to thank all the stakeholders for their input during the developments and the amendments you see before you today in the bill, particularly the Alberta Construction Association, the Alberta Roadbuilders and Heavy Construction Association, the Surety Association of Canada, the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, and many others who all provided very valuable comments and were of great assistance to us in the department. We're sincerely grateful for their support.

The original Public Works Act dates back to 1922 and hasn't been significantly updated since the 1970s. Since then there have been significant developments in contract and tendering law and business practices that have made many parts of the act unnecessary or unworkable.

The amendments to the act which are proposed in this bill result from the recommendations of two groups that were given the task of reviewing the legislation over the last few years: an industry/government working group and the Premier's Task Force on Construction Contracts. As I've already mentioned, stakeholder input and consultation were also key.

Going quickly through the bill, Mr. Speaker, you'll see first that the definitions of the act are clarified and updated. As government departments are restructured and streamlined over the years, it makes sense to replace department names in legislation with more generic references so we don't have to keep updating them.

The repeal of section 2(2) recognizes that under contract law principles, a binding contract is created when a tender is accepted and that the subsequent signing of the contract is only a formality. Similarly, the change to section 7 reduces the potential for conflict between the act and established contract law.

The new section 8 allows the government to award a contract to someone other than the lowest bidder without the present requirement of an order in council. Dating back many decades, the requirement for an order in council was first included to ensure government accountability. However, since then various court decisions have established contract law principles of fairness, good faith, past performance of the contractor, and so on, which allow contracts to be awarded to someone other than the lowest bidder. The government has been and will continue to follow these contract law principles. Also, other public-sector agencies such as municipalities, school boards, and regional health authorities are not required to obtain orders in council under these circumstances. So this amendment will make the government consistent with other private-sector owners. Just for clarity, Mr. Speaker, this is not changing how a contract is tendered or how it is awarded. It is simply the follow-up paper trail to it.

Changes to section 9 now reflect current tendering law in Canada and are consistent with a standard form of bid bond commonly used in the industry.

Sections 10 and 12(2) and (3) are no longer needed as these requirements are now commonly specified in contracts.

The effect of repealing section 13 is to delete unnecessary definitions and to extend protection under the act to all levels of subcontractors. Quite honestly, Mr. Speaker, it really doesn't matter what you want to call someone who's provided a good or service to a job. They should be paid regardless of what a bond company or a contractor puts them as to what level of subcontractor. So by eliminating the term "subcontractor," we've provided that protection from top to bottom.

One of the things we heard very clearly from our stakeholders, Mr. Speaker, was that the differences and inconsistencies between the Public Works Act and the Builders' Lien Act are confusing and unfair to contractors. A significant change in section 14 provides greater consistency between the two acts by extending the period for a claim arising from a contract, other than for a highway or road, from 35 to 45 days. Similarly, the following section ensures that the process for paying money into court under this act parallels the commonly understood process under the Builders' Lien Act. The claim period for highway and road contracts remains at 90 days due to the nature of the heavy construction involved and the way the payment is calculated under these contracts. This, too, mirrors the 90-day claim period for the oil and gas service sector under the Builders' Lien Act, and it's what the industry wanted.

Changes to section 17 ensure that subcontractors and suppliers can get the information they need should they wish to file a claim for nonpayment.

Finally, while some outdated offences in section 18 are repealed, the maximum fine for offences under section 33 is updated to $1,000.

Bill 10 will assist contractors who build the infrastructure that is so important for Alberta's economy, Mr. Speaker. I urge all members of this Legislature to give this bill their full support. Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure to rise today to speak to Bill 10, the Public Works Amendment Act, and I would like to thank the hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster for sponsoring this bill.

Right off the bat I can inform not only the hon. member but all members of this House that this is a welcome bill by our contractors. It is also a bill that will help harmonize different pieces of legislation in this province. I can say that with confidence, Mr. Speaker, in the fact that we have also had extensive consultation with many stakeholders, and for the most part they are in favour of the bill. Of course, we do realize that with any piece of legislation there is a certain degree of compromise that must be taken by all parties, and they certainly expressed their confidence in the fact that for any contentious issues ongoing consultation will take place and that if changes are required, then certainly the work that is yet to be done on this bill will be done.

One of the important parts of this bill is that it will harmonize two different pieces of legislation: the Builders' Lien Act and, of course, this piece of legislation, the Public Works Amendment Act. One of the other strengths of this particular bill, Mr. Speaker, is the fact that it does provide a great deal of clarity and consistency between the pieces of legislation that were missing before. The one question that kept coming up in our consultation was: is the 45-day period enough? We see that perhaps in the future this may have to be extended.

As I was mentioning, it is a very good piece of legislation. We do realize that the tendering process in public works is a complex process, and it is extremely important and incumbent upon us as elected members to protect the taxpayers' money while still giving the government the flexibility it needs to get the job done. So when we do look at the act, Mr. Speaker, there appears to be a number of changes that are welcome that will simplify this whole issue of tendering and the awarding of contracts, and I do look forward to speaking to this bill as we move on through committee and into third reading.

I do note as well, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. member did in fact outline very well the changes that have occurred in contract law principles since the 1980s and the fact that we don't necessarily have to award contracts to the lowest bidder anymore. Other issues and factors that do come into place, of course, are the criteria, which include fairness, good faith, past performance of the contractor, and so on. Particularly in other public-sector agencies such as municipalities, school boards, and regional health authorities these public-sector agencies are not required to obtain an order in council approval if they do not wish to award the contract to the lowest bidder.

So, as I said, Mr. Speaker, we certainly are supporting this piece of legislation, and I would urge all members of the Assembly to support it. Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the ND opposition.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak on Bill 10, Public Works Amendment Act, 2002, in its second reading. I had a quick look at the bill, and clearly part of the purpose of the bill is to harmonize different pieces of legislation and to simplify and reduce redundancies where they might be. To the extent that it succeeds in doing that, we will certainly be happy to support it.

The bill essentially eliminates the legislated time periods, security requirements, et cetera, from the public works contracts and tenders. It also increases ministerial prerogative in terms of accepting tenders other than the lowest. Since the bill removes legislative restrictions regarding time lines, rules, standards, et cetera, it certainly, I guess, puts these things more at the discretion of the minister. It certainly will give greater room for the minister to draft contracts. It will also be easier for the minister to accept a tender other than the lowest one. Whereas the minister previously needed an order in council to accept a tender other than the lowest, he or she will now be allowed to simply not accept the lowest tender. So it eliminates the need for the ministers to go through the order in council process.

As a result, the concern I have is that overall the amendments may mean that there'll be less transparency and less predictability, and that's something the contractors may not like, the latter part in particular. Although there will likely be standard contracts with standard terms, developing and breaking these standards will be at the discretion of the minister.

Our concern here – and I will simply register this concern at this point. We will have the opportunity to look at the bill in more detail in committee and, if necessary, be able to amend it. One concern that we do have, Mr. Speaker, with respect to the bill is the removal of the requirement that if the minister is not accepting the lowest tender, he or she must obtain an order in council. I think that was a provision in the previous legislation that needed to be kept. It provides a second check and assures the public and everyone else that everything is done absolutely appropriately and beyond any reason for suspecting that the decisions were made on grounds other than the ones that are in the best public interest.

The general trend, Mr. Speaker, in the legislation is towards removing legislative constraints and making significant policy decisions subject to regulations and ministerial powers and discretion. This bill certainly reflects the same trend, and we certainly have a concern on this one.

So the issues of transparency and matters related to regressive removal of legislative constraints on the decision-making process are the two concerns that we have that we want to register and share with the rest of our colleagues. Hopefully as we go through the various stages of debate on this bill, we should be able to address those concerns and improve the bill.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have at this time a few remarks regarding Bill 10, the Public Works Amendment Act, 2002, as proposed by the hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster. In reviewing this legislation, I see that there has been an extensive consultation process completed, and the member wouldn't have to go too far for the consultation process because of his background in the construction industry. I think the hon. member would have a familiarity with the industry and the contractors involved, and I believe this is reflected in this legislation, because from what I can see, it's noteworthy and it is meant to bring this act in line with current tendering law and the Builders' Lien Act, which we dealt with in this Assembly last session. As I understand it in reading this, we are going to be given the same deadlines for filing a lien as in the Builders' Lien Act.

However, I do have a few reservations, one in particular at this time, Mr. Speaker, and perhaps other members of the Assembly can discuss this and perhaps shed more light on this specific issue. As I understand it here, the proposal is to eliminate the section requiring an order in council to accept a tender other than the lowest one, and I don't know if that is necessary. I don't know how many times that has been used in the past. Perhaps the hon. member can at some time advise not only myself but other members of the House regarding this: specifically how many times, if any, was this section needed? It obviously was intended to ensure that there was another form of accountability, as described by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, but it is something that we cannot forget, particularly when we're dealing with tax dollars.

The majority of the projects certainly would be noteworthy, and they would be necessary to improve not only urban areas but certainly municipalities, rural areas, whether it's roads, whether it's bridges, whether it's public buildings. These are very important to the communities in which they are located, but it's also very important that there is a wise use of tax dollars not only in the construction of these facilities but also in the period leading up to the start of the construction. So accountability is an issue, and I'm curious as to why, if this order in council was seldom used, we would have to eliminate that. Did it take up a lot of cabinet time? I don't know.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have one more observation, and that is with the proposed legislation and the current Public Works Act and the discussion in here on the levels of subcontractors. Sometimes subcontractors can be left holding the bag, shall we say, and it is unfortunate. Some of them are smaller businesses, they're family-owned businesses, and they can't afford that. I think this is an improvement, and I would like to point that out to the hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster and commend him for the proposed change that would eliminate the specific reference to subcontractor and simply rely on the word "person." Now, that would be, I believe, the repeal of section 13, and we follow through with the notice of claim in section 14(1).

With those comments, Mr. Speaker, I will cede the floor to another hon. member of this House. Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise to speak to second reading of Bill 10, the Public Works Amendment Act, 2002, and I honestly think that my colleague the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona was far too kind in his comments with respect to this bill. He'd raised a number of concerns, but I think those concerns are very, very serious.

I just want to preface my remarks by saying that I've had in my experience in municipal government quite a bit of opportunity to deal with issues around the awarding of construction contracts. They can be sometimes quite thorny, but certainly I think that in our system . . . [interjections] You know, we can elaborate as much as necessary to elucidate the hon. members opposite, Mr. Speaker.

In the system used in the city of Edmonton – and I'm sure it's rather different than in the city of Calgary, where they let the commissioners run the whole show – we have an executive committee system where members of the council on a rotating basis sit with the mayor and senior administration and deal with issues that come up from time to time with respect to a number of issues including the awarding of contracts. If a contractor feels unjustly dealt with, Mr. Speaker, then he or she has an opportunity to come before the committee and challenge the process. So you have an opportunity to find out how some of these things work in some detail.

Sometimes the contractors have a point in terms of ambiguity in the process, and that's the first point I'd like to make, that this bill removes a number of steps and removes a number of checks and balances which would in many cases protect contractors who are often small businesses. Certainly we found a number of times that smaller companies felt they were unfairly dealt with in terms of a process. So if you provide a better framework, a firmer framework for evaluating those and making sure that things are done appropriately and transparently, then that benefits the small business community, who often depend for their livelihood on contracts let by municipalities or, in this case, by the provincial government.

But the broader concern, Mr. Speaker, is the other way, and that is the concern that the process is fair and that it's honest and that contractors are not mistreated without some check and balance. I've seen a number of cases where this has occurred. All of the checks and balances that exist to make sure the tendering process is clear and transparent and fair are taken out by this bill.

Now, sometimes you don't want to accept the lowest tender. If for some reason a company has not performed in the past or you don't think that it has the expertise or the size in order to appropriately deal with the contract, you can sometimes award the contract to someone else. If you think that the contractor is lowballing the bid, then you have a duty to award it to someone else. But there needs to be a check and a balance to make sure that, in fact, something untoward is not happening, and this happens from time to time. The requirement in the present legislation that the minister doesn't have to take the lowest tender but has to justify it to cabinet is a prudent one. I would make the statement and make it advisedly, Mr. Speaker, that corruption is not unknown in the relationship between the construction industry and government. It is not unknown.

I can give some examples from my own experience, Mr. Speaker. In one particular case I had a worker who'd been working on a job come to my office. This job involved a large water main. He came into my office and told me that at a certain point this main had been improperly constructed, with the result that the lining inside the main had spalled off. There's a concrete lining inside a steel pipe the size that a person could walk upright in. This had been reported to the owner of the company. The owner of the company instructed the crew to cover it up and put the dirt over top of the line, and they signed off on this to the city. What would have happened, of course, is that in about 10 years the steel would have rusted through, and there would have been a massive leak underground, with no one understanding what had caused it, and it would have had to be fixed by the taxpayers.

So I took the worker to the city solicitor and the head of our water branch, and I took the worker to the police as well. The result was that the city ordered the line drained, and they did an inspection. Exactly where the worker had said this had occurred, in fact the lining had spalled off the inside of the line. So restitution had to be made by the company, and all of this work was done at the company's expense.

The question arises, Mr. Speaker, that when the expenditure of public money is undertaken in the awarding of contracts, there must be checks and balances and there must be transparency in the process. I'm not making this in reference to anyone presently sitting opposite, but I am making it as a general point. Otherwise, it is an invitation for corruption to occur. This bill for some reason removes the protection that we have against that sort of thing occurring in our own department.

The other aspect, Mr. Speaker, has to do with the limitation on awarding contracts to companies that owe money for past work. This is a matter that's come up a number of times as well in my previous life, and I'm sure that other people who've had involvement in municipal government would have had similar experiences. There's a dispute over money, yet the contractor with whom the dispute exists wants more contracts and wants more work but doesn't want to settle the issue. One of the strongest levers that you have is simply to not award additional contracts, and this has been taken out as well. I suspect that in the long run, this amendment will cost the provincial government millions of dollars that would otherwise have been recovered without costly litigation.

So I can't support the bill, Mr. Speaker. I think it's dangerous. I think it's going to result in considerably increased costs to the government in the long run, and it has the potential of leading to a very, very bad situation with respect to the awarding of contracts in our province for construction of highways or whatever. It's not prudent, it's not thoughtful, and it gives the minister far too much power.

So I would urge hon. members to consider whether or not all of the clauses of this bill merit the approval of this Legislative Assembly, and hopefully the government may consider what steps they might take at committee stage in order to mitigate the damage which I believe this bill is going to cause to the administration of multimillion dollar budgets and infrastructure programs in this province.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: First question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

MR. McCLELLAND: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. During the Member for Edmonton-Highlands' comments he referred to a specific construction company that didn't undertake its responsibilities and was subsequently sued. I don't doubt the veracity of what had happened, but I'm wondering if the Member for Edmonton-Highlands would identify the company involved so as not to cast aspersions on the reputation of other businesses that may do business with the city.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

MR. MASON: I'll take that question under advisement, Mr. Speaker. If I get advice that it's a prudent thing to do, then I would be pleased to stand in this place and tell the entire House the name of the company.

AN HON. MEMBER: Why raise it in the first place then, Brian, and cast aspersions?

MR. MASON: Because he wanted an example.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: If there are no further questions, the hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster to close debate.

MR. SNELGROVE: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to thank the hon. members for some suggestions. I will try and find out how often it has been necessary to get an order in council. That's a valid point.

I think the critical part of that debate is that it's not going to change the way it's done now. It's simply going to change the fact that we have to go get the Lieutenant Governor to sign the bill. The minister will still have the right to determine whether the contract is accepted or whether a contract that's provided is accepted, so it's not a case of changing the process.

I think it's very important to recognize in this that the individual responsibility for that contract now is going with the contract. Anyone who has been in the contracting business, particularly if you've been contracting with the government, will know that you get a package about this thick. The very first part of that package would be half a dozen, maybe 10 or 12, pages that are the actual tender documents themselves. Then you will have, if the book is an inch and a half thick, an inch and a quarter of general contract conditions. At the end of most contracts you will have the specific conditions which will relate to that contract. So we routinely provide one and a half inches of a two-inch book for conditions that probably do not apply, and in those conditions may be clauses still that are different from the tendering contract, from contract law. So it's important that we address each contract on its individual requirements: for bonding, for the protection of – we don't want to use the term subcontractors, because I believe all people that provide goods or materials to a job should be covered at whatever level. It's important that that tender recognize the individuality of that contract.

I think that when the hon. members have a chance to look maybe a little more carefully through the bill, they will see that what we're doing is eliminating the duplication of many of the requirements. It's not eliminating them; it's making them specific to the contract you're dealing with.

I can tell you that in the contracting business – and I appreciate that the hon. opposition member is aware that I've operated in the construction business over 25 years – the contracts never got simpler. Many, many times it's not only to the benefit of the government; it is to the benefit of the contractor to, one, have plain language and, two, have that contract specifically say if they can withdraw their tender, the amount of security required to bid or to perform the job, individually marked in that particular tender.

So I take the concerns of the opposition members. I certainly hope it wasn't my company that put in the line that the hon. member talked about, because that would be just recently off warranty, I'm sure. However, Mr. Speaker, I appreciate their concerns. We'll discuss it more fully in committee, and I will try and get the answers the hon. member mentioned.

I move that we vote. Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 10 read a second time]

Bill 7

Agriculture Financial Services Amendment Act, 2002

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Leduc.

MR. KLAPSTEIN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to move second reading of the Agriculture Financial Services Amendment Act, 2002, and in doing so would like to outline for this Assembly the details of proposed amendments to the Agriculture Financial Services Act.

First a little history. In December of last year the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development announced our government's intention to merge the operations of the Agriculture Financial Services Corporation and the Alberta Opportunity Company. Since that time both organizations have been working together to ensure a smooth transition on behalf of the small business and agri-industry clients that they serve. Both AFSC and AOC are strong organizations with dedicated staff and proud histories. By reducing administration and combining the business strength of both organizations, we are looking to enhance delivery of one-window, made-in-Alberta financial solutions.

AFSC, as members may know, serves Alberta agri-industry through 50 offices throughout the province as business centres for insurance, income protection, farm lending, and commercial financing. AOC serves Alberta's small business sector through 10 offices, providing financing to viable small businesses when it is unavailable from conventional sources. AOC's reach will be significantly increased through its merger with AFSC. That, I believe, can only strengthen the services it has delivered and will continue to deliver. The amendments we are proposing give AFSC expanded responsibility for the business assets, obligations, and opportunities of AOC. Modifications to the act also include several changes that will provide AFSC with more flexibility in the delivery of effective and efficient financial products and services to Albertans.

The merged company will operate under the name Agriculture Financial Services Corporation. The previous two boards will be merged into one board. In order to ensure a smooth transition, directors have been appointed to serve concurrently on both AFSC and AOC boards until this legislation takes effect. The appropriate sections from the Alberta Opportunity Fund Act are being incorporated into the AFSC act to allow the business of lending and financial assistance presently conducted by AOC to carry on as part of AFSC. Once this amendment is proclaimed, the Alberta Opportunity Fund Act will be repealed.

As well, we are proposing several changes relative to AFSC's involvement in providing crop insurance. If these amendments are passed, AFSC will be able to offer, should government deem it necessary, a price support program that relates to market prices or input costs. What this means is that AFSC will have more ability to respond to the needs of agricultural producers.

Amendments will give AFSC more flexibility to deal with misrepresentations by their clients. Currently AFSC can cancel a contract of insurance for only one year when a misrepresentation occurs. AFSC wants and, I suggest, needs the ability to cancel a contract for a longer period of time, depending on the severity of the misrepresentation.

Amendments will clarify wording related to deadlines for farmers making crop insurance claims. We also propose to reinstate a clause from the former Hail and Crop Insurance Act which was omitted in the merger that created AFSC. This clause deals with the farmer's exemption under the Civil Enforcement Act. Other proposed changes will allow for retroactive regulations to be passed to deal with an agriculture disaster or an emergency situation.

Members will also note that this act will change the individual lending limit from $1 million to $2 million. It is apparent that the $1 million lending limit, which has been in effect for some years, needs to be changed. The size of projects being financed has grown substantially. We know that the costs of land, buildings, and equipment have been the major factors. This $2 million limit will enable AFSC to deal with some projects that in the past they have been unable to accommodate. The act will allow AFSC to act as a ceding insurer; in other words, be an intermediary through which reinsurance could be offered to other government departments to ensure that fluctuating costs due to unforeseen disasters are not a strain on budgets.

Mr. Speaker, that highlights the changes we are proposing. We are looking forward to the results of this merger between two outstanding organizations. Small business and the agriculture industry are strong contributors to the Alberta economy, especially in rural Alberta. We'll continue to invest in our entrepreneurial spirit by providing meaningful and unique financial services that aren't readily available from the marketplace.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise this afternoon and discuss Bill 7, the Agriculture Financial Services Amendment Act.

I notice with a great deal of interest anytime the Alberta Opportunity Company, which was established in 1972, is discussed. Now, the first thing to recognize here, Mr. Speaker, is the objective of this bill as I understand it, and that too is noteworthy because of the objective to improve the delivery of service in a more efficient manner. There are claims that up to $1 million in administrative costs could possibly be saved with the unification of these two corporations or companies. But I would have to question even why it is necessary at this time to have the AOC, or the Alberta Opportunity Company, in a free enterprise, free market economy such as the one that we enjoy in Alberta. I don't see the need for having the Alberta Opportunity Company.

Now, there are those that will say: well, it's not really involved with taxpayers or tax dollars. But there are debt servicing costs here, and they usually, depending upon the year, range from $5 million to $6 million. This is certainly noted in the fiscal plan from 2001 through to 2004. You have them in a business plan.

When you think that the Alberta Opportunity Company was established in 1972 to provide financing for viable Alberta small businesses that are unable to find the financing they need through conventional financial institutions, well, there are those that would say: go to a chartered bank, go to the Alberta Treasury Branch, or go to a credit union. There are some offshore banks that certainly individuals could approach. Since 1972, Mr. Speaker, the mandate was to give priority to businesses located in smaller communities where access to capital may be more restricted. A lot has changed in the last 30 years. A lot has changed certainly with the banking industry. There's no doubt about that. There's no denying that in the banking industry for some enterprises with user fees and with electronic transaction fees, it's almost become some sort of cash cow. But we're here to discuss the unification, shall I say, of the Agriculture Financial Services Corporation and the Alberta Opportunity Company, not to discuss the fees and the cost of those fees and the profits of the banks.

A lot has changed in 30 years, and I don't think we in this province need the Alberta Opportunity Company any longer. Now, if a person has a small business that they're interested in starting or promoting in a smaller community, I believe there is access to capital that perhaps there wasn't 30 years ago. I know there are many people concerned about the lack of venture capital in this province, but perhaps that's something that we could work at improving. Certainly the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East has discussed this with members of this side of the Assembly, and there are some excellent ideas or proposals available to provide venture capital. But how fair is it now, Mr. Speaker, when we think of businesses that have been not prospering in a community for any number of years – let's say for the last 30 years – as a family-owned business, a family-owned construction business? We could select any town at random in this province, but let's select Kitscoty.

Now, in Kitscoty there is a business, and it's been transferred from one generation in the family to the other and has prospered.

Someone comes along and they're seeking funding through the AOC to set up some competition. With that particular community what may happen is that that competition could go awry. There could be no businesses. Everyone could suffer as a result of that. With the financing that's available, a viable small business or a family-owned business perhaps cannot compete on the level playing field. Perhaps there's no need for a business there. For the company, if they have a sound business plan, if they have a strategy to develop or attract a market for their product or their service, then the banks will tip their hat to that business plan, and they will provide the money at a competitive rate. Then everyone is on the same level playing field.

I'm not stating that the Alberta Agriculture Financial Services Corporation be eliminated, but I think that this province has outgrown the need to have an enterprise such as the Alberta Opportunity Company. Now, I don't know how much money precisely is dealt with here through the AOC, but I believe - and I could be corrected if an hon. member of this Assembly has the precise information - it's in excess of $100 million.

MR. MASON: How much?

MR. MacDONALD: I believe it deals with finances over $100 million. Now, I could stand corrected, and if anyone has that information, I would love to hear from them.

We have to be very careful about this, and we have to understand the changes that have occurred since 1972. I think this enterprise or this organization is no longer needed. I could never understand why it was needed. Gosh, I think, Mr. Speaker, there was even money that went from AOC to various pine shake manufacturers. At one time six or seven - no; it would be longer than that. It would perhaps be 10 years since that happened. So, you know, there are various enterprises that received money in one form or another from this company. I would just caution all members that times have changed, and we do not necessarily need this company.

We are certainly grateful for our free enterprise system, our free market system, and whether you're in Kitscoty or whether you're in Calgary or whether you're in Whitecourt, I think if you have a viable business plan, there is no need for an outfit such as the AOC. Perhaps you can go to the bank. You can select your bank or your financial institution, and that's it. I think the time has finally come for not only this government but all governments. I think this is to me an indication that we're still in the business of being in business, and it's time to stop that practice. I would urge members to consider that perhaps this bill is the time to achieve that objective. I just cannot understand why in this province we need an organization like this now. We've come a long way. It may have served a purpose, but I can't see the reality of allowing this amalgamation. Just simply, I think that the AOC should be eliminated.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

3:40

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, I'm a little more equivocal on this bill. I think that it's got some interesting points. Obviously the government is trying to appear as if it's modernizing and streamlining and so on, and there's nothing really bad about that. I tend to agree that the AOC is something that we should look at, and I certainly think policies that would be in some way conducive in an overall way to the formation and growth of small business that are available to everyone would be preferable.

But I do want to indicate that we feel that the Agriculture

Financial Services Corporation has been and will continue to be very important for Alberta farmers. The concern that we have is that the merger may in some way shift its focus or direct it in some way to stop offering some of the services to farmers that it presently does. That is, I guess, the big concern. The AFSC has provided many, many valuable services. They include loans to farmers, insurance, income protection, and other things, and those things are beneficial.

Certainly we believe the family farm is under attack in this province like never before, and the policies of the government which promote the development of large agribusiness as the right approach in rural Alberta are not helping. So we're really concerned, for example, that we not be closing offices of the AFSC as part of this amalgamation. There are now about 50 offices provincewide, and we think that maintaining the accessibility of the corporation to Alberta's farmers is very important and hope that any amalgamation or merger doesn't mean the loss of programs or offices or resources that are currently available to farmers.

I don't want to speak very long on this bill; that is, unless anyone has any questions they want to raise that I could elaborate on. [interjections] Mr. Speaker, I only told actual facts, but that was another bill.

Mr. Speaker, I will also indicate that we're generally supportive of the increase in the loan limit from $1 million to $2 million. We think that reflects the current state of affairs.

So the last caution I would raise is that as we amalgamate and modernize, there's been a temptation to try and make these publicly owned corporations look like private-sector corporations, with very, very fat salaries for CEOs and, you know, all of those kinds of things. [interjections] The WCB would be a case in point where that kind of corporatization is . . .

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Hon. member, sorry to interrupt you, but the hon. minister doesn't know that he has to wait until after you've finished your speech before he might ask you a question under Standing Order 29 as well as other rules.

Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I was enjoying the hon. minister's questions with one ear, but I'm sure that he appreciates your correction.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, the corporate model that's been developed and that we've seen, for example, in the WCB is not where I think we should go on this. We should be making sure we put the resources right in the front line where they can help the farmers and help the small businesses if that's deemed necessary and not create some kind of high-powered corporate executive team with salaries in the six figures.

So with that caution, Mr. Speaker, I'll indicate that we'll support this bill at second reading and look forward to any comments any members may have. Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: A question, hon. Minister of Environment?

DR. TAYLOR: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I regret I asked my question at the wrong time. It was just a slip, I'm sure.

The hon. member is suggesting that the CEO of the AFSC, Agriculture Financial Services Corporation, is making in the six or seven figures, and I'm just curious if he actually knows what the salary is of the CEO of that organization or if he's just making it up like most of his other information?

MR. MASON: I'll deal with his last comment last, Mr. Speaker, but

I want to indicate that I did not say that I knew what the salary was. I understand that the position is currently being head-hunted. I do not know what the salary is, and I did not claim to know what the salary was. I did say that I hoped the government would avoid the model that we've seen in the WCB, where the executive salary is over $300,000.

AN HON. MEMBER: You didn't deal with the last part.

MR. MASON: Shall I deal with the last part of his comment?

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: You've run out of time, hon. member. It's 30 seconds each.

A question, hon. member, or to carry on debate on this bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods on the bill.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to have the opportunity to make a few comments about Bill 7, the Agriculture Financial Services Amendment Act, 2002. I have some sympathy with the aims of the act, and it arises out of some concerns we've had in our constituency working with people who are living in poverty and experiencing poverty. The roundtable on poverty was fortunate enough to get a grant from the community lottery board to run a series of sessions for people who are experiencing poverty and who are interested in starting their own businesses. We were able to have some general sessions and then to run an incubator for some of those people who had ideas that were worthy of pursuit. One of the great difficulties that that group of individuals has of course is securing financial backing for the projects that they bring forward. There are a number of reasons for that, but they do have a great deal of difficulty.

It seems to me that as you read the proposed bill and the kind of promotion that is expected, there's quite a difference in the classes of businesses that are going to be eligible for support. I'm not making a comment as much as I'm asking a question. One of the purposes is to provide "employment and business experience for Alberta students through loans for the creation, expansion or operation of student business enterprises." The following one: "Companies, associations and groups formed for the purposes of attracting industrial development and expansion within their communities." And the last one: "Industries involved in pollution control, including recycling of products." It seems to me that those classes of business are going to find a very difficult time gaining financing in the normal commercial market, yet they are quite different from some of the other ones that are going to be supported: "Alberta services and products to enhance their marketing and export potential" or "commercial enterprises offering a high degree of job opportunity in relation to capital investment."

It seems to me that there's quite a discrepancy. There are two distinct groupings of businesses that are going to be eligible, and I wondered if the crafters of the bill had considered that and made that kind of distinction when they were putting forward the listings and the purposes that we have here. I think there are some conflicting assumptions. One is the need to "promote the development of resources and the general growth and diversification of the economy," and the other assumption is that the current financial structure won't or can't respond to those needs. Yet that doesn't seem to me to be equally true for all of the companies that are listed here.

This may be a more appropriate question at committee stage, but it's one that I would be interested in having some information on. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Leduc to close debate.

MR. KLAPSTEIN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have no further comments other than to move that the vote be taken.

[Motion carried; Bill 7 read a second time]

Bill 11

Energy Information Statutes Amendment Act, 2002

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

MR. STRANG: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to move second reading of Bill 11, the Energy Information Statutes Amendment Act, 2002.

This bill will ensure the prompt, accurate submission of vital energy information by industry allowing government and the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board to continue acting in the public's interest by effectively managing energy and mineral resources and revenue and facilitating the achievement of cost-saving negotiated electrical rate settlements.

This bill will amend a number of energy-related acts to ensure that the specific information provided by industry under these acts or their regulations is protected from disclosure despite FOIP, extending the same protection to royalty forecasts and information provided by industry. The following acts will be amended by this bill: the Natural Gas Marketing Act, the Electric Utilities Act, the Oil and Gas Conservation Act, the Oil Sands Conservation Act, and the Coal Conservation Act.

These acts require industry to submit information to the Crown or the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board including analysis of geological and geophysical data required by the Crown to manage Alberta's mineral resources, royalty information required by the Crown to levy and collect appropriate resource revenues, information required to submit to the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board for the purpose of achieving cost-saving negotiated electrical rate settlements, and royalty forecast information required by the Crown for government revenue forecasting and budgetary planning. Privacy provisions under these acts protect this information from disclosure.

The FOIP regulation currently makes these privacy provisions paramount over the FOIP Act in relation to this information. This protection helps to maintain the competitive environment that drives energy and mineral development in the province by ensuring that the information provided to the government or to the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board, often developed by companies at considerable expense, is not available to their competitors through the FOIP Act. In this way the protection contributes to maintaining a fair level playing field among all energy companies.

In its 1999 final report the Select Special Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act Review Committee recommended that the existent paramountcy provision established in compliance with the act should continue but suggested that in actual practice paramountcy should preferably be established directly in an enabling act and the use of the FOIP regulation should be reserved for the time-sensitive situation. This bill achieves the recommendations of the committee by moving the paramountcy provision from the FOIP regulation into the energy-related acts. It also provides the same paramountcy for royalty forecast information.

The act recognizes, however, the need to balance the objective of open, transparent governance with that of providing reasonable protection of sensitive business information so that the information continues to be provided in the timely and accurate manner necessary for effective governance. Consequently, when the acts or related regulations do not always limit the duration of confidentiality provided for the information, this bill includes time limits in the act on how long the confidentiality can override the FOIP Act. This time limit has been set at a reasonable level, bearing in mind how long the information may remain sensitive.

Transferring the paramountcy provisions to the act from the FOIP regulation and extending the paramountcy regulations to royalty forecasting information is in the best interest of Albertans. It provides a level of certainty to the industry that the information they submit will not be shared with their competitors. This will foster a co-operative environment where the necessary information is most likely to be submitted by industry in a timely and accurate way. By creating an environment conducive to timely and accurate reporting of vital information by industry, this act will allow the Energy ministry to fulfill its responsibilities for the stewardship of Alberta's resources and resource revenue and for the development of those resources in a manner consistent with the public interest. It will also facilitate the achievement of cost-saving negotiated electrical rate settlements. Industry and government must in this way continue to work together in the best interests of the province.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

4:00

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, this is certainly not another Bill 11, but it certainly raises alarms on this side of the House. It's Bill 11 in another form, but it's also one that I don't think is without questions.

In the hon. Member for West Yellowhead's opening comments at second reading here this afternoon, Mr. Speaker, there was an indication that this is discussion between industry and government, and that's fine. That's a good thing. But there's another leg to the stool, and that's the consumers. Industry and government – it's fine to have a consultation process, but there are consumers who are also going to be affected by this legislation, whether they're consumers of electricity, whether they're consumers of natural gas, coal certainly. The hon. member is cognizant of the role that coal plays in electricity generation. It's 78 percent of the total of the province. Seventy-eight percent of the total electricity generation in this province comes from coal-fired plants.

[Mr. Lougheed in the chair]

Now, when we look at excluding information – and the hon. member talked about the information flow, but I would like to remind that member, Mr. Speaker, that that information flow is a two-way street. Information certainly can go into organizations such as the Power Pool, the EUB, which are regulatory bodies. Now, people at the Power Pool may take exception to that, but they are a regulatory body. But also consumers. I believe that consumers have a right to know and should be able to do a follow-up request in FOIP. I can certainly understand where the hon. Member is coming from, whether as a member of this Assembly or a businessperson with confidential information or confidential knowledge or a confidential process or a process that should remain confidential because of the research and development over a period of time that went into the development of that process.

I can understand that part of the argument, but when one thinks of the important role – and I will again use the Power Pool as an example and the EUB as an example – that they have in regulating industry for the benefit of all Albertans, not for the benefit of a few but for the benefit of everyone, the decisions that are made, I'm sure, are made with the interests of the majority at heart. But I don't understand the concern for this, because there are sections available currently in FOIP, or Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act, that would allow for the confidentiality requirements and the requirements of documents of a sensitive nature from the enterprise.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member can correct me again if I'm wrong, but my interpretation of this is that this act is also going to give the time limits that the member described earlier. There is to be an extension of some of those time limits, and my question at this time would be: why? Why do we need an extension of those time limits?

Now, we realize certainly that there is legislation, Mr. Speaker, that's paramount over the FOIP Act. We are dealing here with the Electric Utilities Act, the Mines and Minerals Act, the Natural Gas Marketing Act, the Coal Conservation Act, and that's it, I think. One has to recognize that with the Mines and Minerals Act and the Natural Gas Marketing Act there are particular records, as I understand it, where paramountcy will expire on December 31 of this year. I think this is also applicable to the Electric Utilities Act, and I could stand corrected on this. We have to recognize that the government, you know, does not want to contradict the FOIP Act, but I think there's an effort being made here to make it clear that the provisions in the acts mentioned as amended are going to prevail over the FOIP Act. What this really does, as I understand the member, is provide clarity for everyone.

When you consider that, as I understand it, this legislation is designed to protect sensitive information that has always been considered confidential or potentially confidential, we are not making any information off-limits that wasn't already protected, whether indefinitely or for the set periods of time that I discussed a little while ago. But if we are just clarifying these sections in light of FOIP, there are sections of FOIP that are already set aside, and I don't understand why we need to go this way. There are questions, Mr. Speaker.

Now, the FOIP Act has three mandatory exemptions. There are also 11 discretionary exemptions and a commissioner, in this case an acting commissioner, to rule on other issues. I don't know if this Bill 11 is showing a lot of confidence in the government's own FOIP legislation to protect information. This isn't a ringing endorsement.

We all know exactly how important a stable electricity generation and distribution system is to the province. What are we going to do here? Now, let's say that an individual party across the province wants to have a look at, let's pick for instance, the subsidies that are going to some of the generating stations that are currently being constructed, natural gas generating stations. These subsidies are called location-based credits. They are certainly happening in the northeast section of Calgary. They're happening in Grande Prairie, I believe in two locations in Grande Prairie.

What happens if consumers or perhaps some competitors don't feel that this is a level playing field, these location-based credits? Are they going to have access to this information, exactly, precisely what the location-based credits were in the auction? I don't know. Perhaps the hon. member can not only share with this member but all members of the House this information. Will individuals or enterprises be able to seek that information? Will they be able to seek information such as the over $1 billion that I understand has been put into the transmission administration from proceeds from the PPAs? Now, there's also the issue of taxes or municipally owned utilities' taxes in lieu of. Where exactly would that money, if there is any money, be going? In light of these changes will anyone ever be able to find out?

Now, I'm told that many of the electricity generators know one another's costs because they've been in the business for awhile and it is a competitive business. They can pretty well tell exactly what it costs per kilowatt to generate electricity, but in light of what has gone on with electricity deregulation in this province, I don't know, Mr. Speaker, if it is wise to be amending the Electric Utilities Act in regards to FOIP.

There are many documents that one can view on-line from the EUB, and they're very interesting reading, but at the same time we have to ensure that there is accountability and not only accountability but accessibility to the public, whether they be consumers of electricity or perhaps generators of electricity. Perhaps there's information there that it would be wise if it was available to all citizens of this province. I'm not sure why we need this legislation as it has been described to me this afternoon.

Now, in regards to the Mines and Minerals Act and, in the time that I have remaining, the Natural Gas Marketing Act there are many changes occurring with our royalty system, and the hon. member in the opening remarks in debate at second reading touched on this. I don't have to remind anyone in this Assembly of the importance of Alberta's natural gas industry not only for exports, but we have to look at the revenue that we get in this province from natural gas. This whole process has to be open, and it has to be transparent.

For instance, Mr. Speaker, the Auditor General two years ago raised reservations about the integrity of the metering system. I believe that the Auditor General was concerned about the age of this metering system and whether we were missing anything. Now, we can only go back to . . . Well, let's go back 20 years, to 1982. These are in billions of dollars. There was over $4 billion in natural resource revenue collected and about $7 million in non natural resource revenue. Last year was an extraordinary year, but let's look at 1992-93.

Natural resource revenue as a percentage of government spending was 12 percent, but there was, again, a significant amount of revenue collected. Excuse me, Mr. Speaker, there was $12 million dollars in non natural resource revenue collected, and in 1999-2000 there was $4.6 million in natural resource revenue collected. Excuse me, there was $2 million collected in 1992-93.

Now, it's an important source of revenue. If there's ever to be any questions regarding, you know, the changes to not only natural gas and natural gas liquids, the royalties on those resources, the public has every right to know. To think that perhaps this is confidential, that this is proprietary, oh, no. I think the public has every right to know.

Now, we look at some of the changes, and they may seem insignificant. But whenever a royalty regime is modified, exactly what happens? You know, are we going to identify ethane, for instance, as a distinct resource? If we're going to do that, perhaps recognize other natural gas liquids in the residue gas, are we going to calculate royalty and allowable costs on natural gas liquids extracted at straddle points? If this information is withheld from individuals or organizations such as the Parkland Institute or the Pembina institute, who want to look into whether we're getting fair value for our royalties, then I think they should be allowed to, Mr. Speaker, and they shouldn't be prohibited in any way, shape, or form by FOIP exemptions.

We have constant changes, and when we think of our oil and gas system, it's so easy to look at this and think: oh, well, everything is fine; we're getting $4 billion. Well, maybe we could get $4.5

billion. You know, we look at the current formula and how it's based and the royalty rates for both old and new gas. There is price sensitivity between the base and rate caps for, again, new and old oil and gas. We can look at select prices. We can contemplate having a third tier for oil pools that have been discovered, and we could pick a date. We could pick a date of 1995. All this could be going on, and perhaps the public would not be aware of this.

Now, if we're to look at a summary – and this should be available, and I'm urging the hon. member to ensure that it always is – there's the base rate for new gas, what the current rate should be, what the future rate should be. There's a marginal rate for new gas, old gas. This is a complicated issue. There's a rate cap as the price goes up or the price goes down, Mr. Speaker. This is very, very important. Certainly production of conventional oil in this province is declining. There's no doubt about that. Unfortunately, natural gas production at some time – we're in the mature western Canadian sedimentary basin, and some wells have been producing gas for a long time. For instance, wells in Turner Valley first came onstream in 1912. You know, we all think of Leduc, but that only came onstream in 1947, and it's two or three years ago that the Leduc field went out of production. So, you know, when we have a decline in conventional oil production and there's going to be a corresponding decline in natural gas production, we have to be confident that this government is getting the maximum amount of revenue that they can from these diminishing resources. With these changes as proposed and explained by the hon. member, I don't know if someone wants to check and see if this is being done, but they will have the opportunity.

Now, you look at all the changes that have occurred in the oil and gas industry and we think of programs to reactivate oil wells and we look at wells that have lower productivity and horizontal re-entry oil wells and experimental oil sands royalties.

Mr. Speaker, I'm disappointed that my time is up on this issue, but thank you.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Government Services.

MR. COUTTS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure today to get up and speak to Bill 11, the Energy Information Statutes Amendment Act, 2002. As Bill 11 ties into the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act, as the minister responsible for that piece of legislation I think it's important for me, in view of what I've just heard from across the way, to maybe give a bit of a history as to why this particular piece of legislation is here today and the kind of scrutiny that it received back in 1998 by then an all-party select committee to review the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act for the province of Alberta.

That committee, again an all-party committee, made a number of recommendations that have over time been incorporated into amendments across government, and this particular one dealing with energy information is one that that particular committee dealt with. The committee recommended that paramountcies should not be established in the FOIP regulation, which is where they traditionally have been, but should be housed in the appropriate ministry statutes.

Now, I've sat in this House for a number of years and heard members opposite saying that they don't like things in regulation because they can be changed rather quickly and without scrutiny by the public and that they would like to see things in statutes. So what you have is the recommendation of that 1998 committee coming forward doing exactly the things that they've been advocating for to make sure that the proper information is put into that ministry's statutes and in this case the Department of Energy.

I should also point out that the committee did not recommend as to whether or not individual paramountcies were necessary or not, so then you have the situation where it's actually taken right from regulation and put into the statutes, but the actual debate on whether they're necessary or not was not discussed by that committee. However, in saying that, the committee clearly felt that there would be situations where the information was of such a sensitive nature that it could be made paramount to the FOIP Act. They also were very, very clear that these paramountcies should, when possible – when possible – be brought before the Legislature for debate and approval, and that's exactly what we have today: the discussion on those paramountcies.

I'd like to thank the Minister of Energy for following through on the recommendations of that 1998 all-party committee and also the MLA for West Yellowhead for taking action on the review committee's recommendations, moving to transfer these energy-related paramountcies from regulation into statute, where it's clear and delineated for all to see.

I further appreciate the work that the minister and his department have done to bring clarity and specificity to the identified paramountcies and perhaps most of all for taking actions to propose time limits for these paramountcies. The time limits ensure that the paramountcies are not ongoing and that after a reasonable period of time has elapsed, access to information requests for the identified types of information can be made. This is an important component of the act, and it's to everyone's benefit.

So, Mr. Speaker, with those few words and the reassurance that the 1998 committee recommendations are now being followed through on, I hope that all members will vote for this particular piece of legislation.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Mr. Speaker, I have a question, please, for the hon. Minister of Government Services. Understanding that whenever the FOIP committee met, the last select special committee, could the minister tell me, please, if the Power Pool and the transmission administrator were playing an active role in the distribution of electricity in this province?

MR. COUTTS: In relation to that, Mr. Speaker, when we're talking about freedom of information and protection of privacy and the government's involvement and private-sector involvement in making the decisions that eventually end up in legislation, we are accountable for the resources of this province, but at the same time we're also accountable to the point of bringing in not only the stewardship of those resources but bringing in the private sector to make sure that when they're doing their competitive businesses, they are also protected, and that's what this bill does.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the minister's comments on the act. One of the things which he talked about was that we are taking things out of the regulations and putting them in the act. Does the act not only do that but strengthen and make much more rigid the provisions for withholding information from the public?

MR. COUTTS: I don't think it does. Because of the time lines that are involved, it also adds a time line so that access can be made but at the same time allows companies to go out into the field with confidence that all of the information that they're working on is held for the betterment of the resource and for the betterment of the people that are working within their companies, Mr. Speaker.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Are there no further questions then?

Any other speakers on this bill? The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

MR. HLADY: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to have the opportunity to speak to Bill 11, the Energy Information Statutes Amendment Act, 2002, and as the chair of the standing policy committee on energy and sustainable development I certainly have an interest in this legislation and making sure that it's helpful to the energy industry.

Mr. Speaker, Albertans demand high levels of quality in our health care, our education, our teachers, nurses, and doctors, and everything that we can do out there. To be able to do that, we've been very fortunate because we've had such a strong energy industry that's allowed us to achieve these things and to have the highest paid folks in all of these areas. Without that, that would have been very tough.

Now, I was having trouble when I was listening to the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar trying to determine whether he supports this or doesn't support this bill.

MR. MacDONALD: I needed five more minutes.

MR. HLADY: You needed five more minutes. Were you going to support this? No? Yes? Okay; he's not going to answer for me.

What I thought I'd do is just sort of speak to it from the point of view that maybe if he actually owned an energy company, he might have an understanding of how important this legislation is to energy companies. Energy companies spend a great deal of time and effort to obtain and analyze the geological information and the geophysical data. When they spend literally millions and millions of dollars every year to go and determine whether it's a . . .

AN HON. MEMBER: How many dollars?

MR. HLADY: Millions, billions actually, of dollars to try and determine whether it's a good decision to drill for these assets that are sitting underneath the earth, whether they should be used now, do they need to wait for later, what's the timing for it. Those are tough decisions for a company, and they spend a lot of money to try and determine that. The government needs this information and needs access to that information so that we can determine what we have in proven reserves and probable reserves and to make determinations on what we have for potential revenues in the future given what we have as an asset here in the province.

This information obviously can remain sensitive for a long period of time. It relates, as I say, to the resources that these companies are leasing from us. They're not currently economic, but they may be economic in the future. That's up to the company to decide. If we don't have access to that information, we can't make those decisions that we need to make to decide whether the company should still have access in the future, whether they should have those leases recalled in the future, and it's a tough thing for us to do all the way around.

The fundamental of it is the fact that it wouldn't be fair if a competitor to the companies that have done that specific work would have access to this information through FOIP alone and if by going and doing a FOIP application they could find out what the assets are underneath those leases. They would be able to create an unfair competitive advantage over the people that have spent their time and money on these particular discoveries. Mr. Speaker, this would actually discourage the companies in many ways from doing further investment or giving us the straight information. If they knew that this was going to hurt their ability to be a competitive company, there would be a real challenge for us as government to be able to get accurate information and determine what sits out there as an asset for Alberta.

So through this bill what we want to ensure is that all energy companies are really playing on a level playing field and that one company's information will not at least for a specified period of time be available to another through a FOIP application. So really this bill just supports a level playing field. Companies certainly can be confident that despite the FOIP Act their information will be protected. This is one of the many reasons that Alberta is such a great place to do business, Mr. Speaker.

AN HON. MEMBER: Hear. Hear.

MR. HLADY: You betcha.

Comparing us to other jurisdictions such as Alaska, where there are three major players – they have a very different structure up there that has not allowed a truly competitive playing field to develop, and they don't see 50, 100, 200 different companies competing for those and creating a very valuable asset and getting it to the marketplace. That's one of the problems they have up there today.

The government levies a royalty, Mr. Speaker, and that's a very, very sensitive topic to all of the players out there. That's what's allowed us to be the successful and productive province that we are. The way we as a government levy this certainly helps us to make sure that we get the best economic rent that is possible out of the oil and gas reserves and coal reserves that exist. But this information is very sensitive, and for us to achieve this from the industry, as I've mentioned before, including their sales prices, the costs of production, processing, and transportation to the markets – all of those are very dependent on whether they are being successful as a company, which affects their price in the marketplace if they are a public company. Those things are crucial for us to be successful, but they won't release that if they don't know that information is going to be protected.

Ordinary Albertans would be concerned if this kind of information about themselves was going to be accessed, and that's why we have FOIP, to help protect people. Doing this act allows us to protect the corporations so that they can still be competitive and function in a successful way in Alberta. Knowing that their information is safeguarded, I believe industry will be much more confident to help us to understand what is there as an asset.

Mr. Speaker, I certainly am pleased to support Bill 11 and encourage all MLAs to do the same. Thank you.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Any questions under Standing Order 29?
The hon. Member for West Yellowhead to close debate.

MR. STRANG: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I guess just a couple of items that were mentioned by Edmonton-Gold Bar. The first thing I would like to relate to is his saying that there's nobody there to look after the consumer. Well, I mean, I think that's why we have the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board. But I think the biggest thing that we're missing on this aspect here with the information we're looking for and why we've got to have paramountcy is, number one, we're not looking for pricing; we're looking for production. Then our hon. Minister of Revenue can get the proper revenue for us so that we can do what we need for our province.

I guess the other thing that I'd like to state now, too, is the aspect of what's transpired. We had this team, as the hon. Minister of Government Services stated, the select special freedom of information and protection of privacy review committee. They stated that we needed this. I think there were a couple of things that were in this bill.

We listed all the different acts that we're going to look at. The Oil and Gas Conservation Act, the Oil Sands Conservation Act, and Coal Conservation Act were open. They had no sunset clause. So what we're looking at now is going for a five-year. As my learned friend from Calgary-Mountain View stated, we need to have this privacy. So we're looking at the five-year time frame, and then it should be able to be open. This way, it's going to give the aspect of government the proper information so they know what the production is, and I think that's the big thing.

I guess the bottom line, to back up my colleague the Minister of Government Services, is that we're always hearing in this Assembly that, number one, we're doing stuff behind closed doors. Here we get a recommendation from the select FOIP committee stating that they want to move it from regulations to statute. So I think we can have full debate in the House, and then we'll have a better understanding.

With that, Mr. Speaker, thank you very much.

[Motion carried; Bill 11 read a second time]

head: Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Tannas in the chair]

THE CHAIR: I'd like to call the Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 1 Queen Elizabeth II Golden Jubilee Recognition Act

THE CHAIR: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate an opportunity at committee to recommend to all members that the Queen Elizabeth II Golden Jubilee Recognition Act is noteworthy, and at this time the creation of three new awards in recognition of the Queen's golden jubilee will perhaps help students with the high cost of education.

This bill, I understand, will cost in excess of $30,000 annually. The money is coming from the Alberta heritage scholarship fund. This is the same fund that is used to provide the Rutherford scholarships, and the government will be increasing the fund or drawing on pre-existing resources.

Now, it was just the other day that I was reading in the paper – and the hon. Minister of Justice will certainly be sympathetic to this – that law school tuition fees have gone up in the last 15 years since that hon. member went through law school. Perhaps this will in some small way help, Mr. Chairman, many of the students who are faced with the burden of high tuition fees. This will certainly help, and I believe that Alberta students deserve every possible recognition of their scholastic achievements and their excellence.

I also support any measure that will make going to college or university easier. Certainly, Mr. Chairman, university has to be accessible to everyone regardless of how many thousands of dollars the fees are. I don't think an individual or a family should be burdened with debt into middle age to pay for university or postsecondary education. What separates us from a lot of other countries is that everyone here has an opportunity to seek further education past high school, and that opportunity is in facilities that are well funded. The only unfortunate thing about this bill is that it shows how much financial assistance even our brightest students need in going to postsecondary schools.

Now, in section 3 there is the question of how these awards and scholarships are to be granted. The Premier's citizenship award will be each year granted to one student from every high school in Alberta for showing a significant contribution to the community through leadership, community service, and volunteering. One would only have to look around this Assembly at the pages, Mr. Chairman. I'm quite confident that the pages and future pages in this Legislative Assembly will be eligible because of their scholastic achievements for some of the awards that are outlined in this bill.

We look at citizenship medals; we look at scholarships for the visual and performing arts. All this is noteworthy, but we cannot in our support of this bill fail to recognize the need of other students, other students who may not have the opportunity to, say, give part-time service to Members of this Legislative Assembly by participating in the pages program.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, when you consider the article that was in the newspaper concerning the high cost of law school, this bill may be in a small way a recognition of tuition fees that are getting out of control. They're getting so high that many people cannot afford to go there.

It is significant to have Bill 1 here, the Queen Elizabeth II Golden Jubilee Recognition Act. Fifty years. Well, there are some members of this Assembly that probably weren't even born. When Her Majesty received the sad news that her father's, the King's, life, as the BBC described it, had peacefully come to a close, she was in east Africa on a tour. A lot has happened in 50 years. There are members of this Assembly who I don't believe were born at that time, but certainly a lot can happen. I certainly wish the Queen and other members of the royal family good health and continued success.

This bill is symbolic in its recognition not only of the golden jubilee, but I think all hon. members of this Assembly would be encouraged to think about this: this is in a small way helping some people cope with the high cost of education in this province. Perhaps we can work at ensuring that education is accessible and affordable to each and every student in this province if they want to receive more education after high school in the postsecondary system.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It gives me a great deal of pleasure to also add a few comments at Committee of the Whole on Bill 1, Queen Elizabeth II Golden Jubilee Recognition Act.

As the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar had stated, there are a number of members in this Assembly that were not alive when she was crowned the new Queen, but for some of us, we have vivid memories of that occasion.

MR. MacDONALD: Did you sing God Save The Queen as a child in school?

MR. BONNER: Yes, we did, as a matter of fact. We used to begin each day with The Maple Leaf Forever, and in my very first years of school we sang God Save The King. After February 6 of 1952, Mr. Chairman, we would sing God Save The Queen, and that was a significant change for students in grade 3. Yes, we sang God Save The King prior to that. I won't ask the hon. Member for St. Albert if she sang God Save The King. I'm sure she is far too young for that to have occurred.

AN HON. MEMBER: She was in Jurassic Park.

MR. BONNER: I will let her respond to that comment, as I'm sure she will. Having been involved with her in education in St. Albert, I know that she is more than capable of responding to that comment.

It was quite an honour here, then, today to speak to this bill, Mr. Chairman. The coronation of our new Queen was a very, very important part, and if I recall correctly, the Edmonton Bulletin at that time put out a special issue, as did the Edmonton Journal, and both of these papers had paid quite a bit of attention to this great feat. At that time I never guessed that I would be standing in this Assembly today speaking on a bill of this nature, and it certainly is a privilege to be able to do it. For this to be the first government bill that we are debating, Bill 1, it is also a pleasure to see that it is not contentious, and I'm sure that it will have the support of all members in the Assembly.

Now, then, what Bill 1, the Queen Elizabeth II Golden Jubilee Recognition Act, does is create three new awards in recognition of the Queen's golden jubilee, and this is divided up into three very, very important awards: one being, of course, the Queen's Golden Jubilee Citizenship Medal; the second being the Queen's golden jubilee scholarship for the visual and performing arts; and a third area on the Premier's citizenship award in recognition of the Queen's golden jubilee.

As the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar also stated, any moneys that are funneled into education are certainly a very good investment, and it does show the confidence we have in education and not only the confidence we continue to have in education but also the confidence that Albertans have had in education from the inception of Alberta as a province and even before that time, Mr. Chairman. We all realize that public education is a means that gives every child in Alberta an opportunity to move forward. It is one of the reasons and a strong reason that so many of our forefathers moved to this province, in that they saw opportunity not so much for themselves but for their families. They realized that a public education system was essential for this to happen, and they also saw that a strong education system would not only benefit themselves but would also benefit their neighbours. This is certainly symbolic in that it does continue to support education in this province.

When I look and I see that this bill will cost at least $35,000 annually and the money will come from the Alberta heritage scholarships fund, I think that when we look back to the inception of this fund by then Premier Peter Lougheed, certainly he would be in agreement with the cost of these funds coming out of the Alberta heritage scholarships fund because this is exactly one of the reasons that the fund was established: for future generations. What better way than to help them fund their education?

Certainly for the students that this will assist, this will lessen the burden of their costs, and for students in our postsecondary institutions, all of them have experienced tremendous increases in tuition. Certainly in the good times in Edmonton and Calgary that we've seen over the past few years, for those that are required to travel to Edmonton and Calgary and stay in those cities, we've seen tremendous increases in the cost of rent. As well, Mr. Chairman, certainly over time other costs of attending postsecondary institutions have also increased very much.

I would hope that these awards would make the difference, that perhaps some students, when they do receive them, would make the decision to remain in school. It certainly for some will lessen the probability that they will have to hold down a part-time job, and it will certainly lessen the hours that they have to work, or in some cases it might mean they don't have to work at all and can devote all their time to their studies.

As I look here, I see that the Queen's Golden Jubilee Citizenship Medal will be in the amount of $5,000 per student, the Queen's golden jubilee scholarship for the visual and performing arts will also be 5,000 per student, and the Premier's citizenship award in recognition will be decided in the regulations. Again, a big boost to education for those students who are fortunate enough to get these. I would certainly hope that perhaps even down the road we could look at increasing the quantity, the number of awards that we give out here, as well as the amount of money that's included in each award.

With those comments, Mr. Chairman, I certainly have enjoyed the opportunity to speak to Bill 1, the Queen Elizabeth II Golden Jubilee Recognition Act, in Committee of the Whole, and I know that all members of this Assembly will support this particular bill.

Thank you.

[The clauses of Bill 1 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

THE CHAIR: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE CHAIR: Opposed? Carried.

Bill 2
Child and Family Services Authorities
Amendment Act, 2002

THE CHAIR: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Certainly I have a few comments to offer at this time regarding Bill 2.

Now, this idea of reducing the size of the boards could free up money from administration to those who really need it, and that's the children. I think that is a good goal. There certainly have been unforeseen administrative costs, and there have been complications surrounding the creation of children's services in 1999. Two of the largest authorities, of course, are the Calgary Rocky View and the one here in Edmonton, Ma'Mōwe, and now they represent 80 percent of all caseloads. The other authorities have run with deficits since their creation. For the first two years of the authorities' existence, as I understand it, the ministry bailed them out of their deficits at the end of the year but not this year. One has to question, whenever we're reviewing this legislation in committee, Mr.

Chairman: have the children's authorities been effective? Will this bill make them more effective or simply more responsive to the direction – now, I don't know whether this is correct or incorrect – from the minister?

Now, if we look at section 1 – and we have to have a close look here – the preamble to the act will no longer state that the well-being of children is to be best achieved “through the enhancement of prevention and early intervention programs and services.” Instead, it will only recognize the need for enhancement of these programs and services, and (c) adds to the preamble a clause stating that the programs and services must be provided in a way that is responsible to the community and accountable to the government.

Now, further on we are striking out the clause that defines agreement. We are talking about the change of the definition of child and family services to include services provided for in regulation. Will the regulations at this time – and perhaps further on in the debate the minister will clarify for the Assembly – also be changed in order to change the scope of the services provided? I would assume that that is going to happen, but certainly if in the course of time the hon. minister could answer that question, I would appreciate it.

Now, further on here in the new section 4, Mr. Chairman, the following is added after section 2: each region must be administered by an authority; the pre-existing authorities will continue; and there is notification that the CEO “is to be appointed by the Minister on the board's recommendation.”

Of course, here we get further on in the amendment to section 3, the reduction in the number of board members to 11. Is this in regards to the ministerial review of authority members? And authority members are to be replaced with – the description here is “board members.”

Now, there is permission that the minister may extend a term of office from three consecutive years up to seven.

Section 6 amends section 4(1) of the act by defining the authority as having the “rights . . . and privileges of a natural person,” but further defines these rights as “subject to this Act and the regulations.”

Now, further on we're going to replace “an Authority” with “a board.”

We are going to have an amendment to section 6, which reads, “An Authority is an agent of the Crown in right of Alberta” – and this is an addition – “under the Minister's direction.”

We are three years since the creation of Children's Services, and this is an overhaul that I believe, Mr. Chairman, is necessary. If the object of this amendment act is to give the minister more control over the children's authorities and to reduce the size of the board of each authority, then we will have to support this. There certainly are – and it's been outlined in the media; it's been outlined in question period here; it's been outlined in a lot of different places – some of the problems, and there has been a significant amount of money spent. I believe there is in excess of $645 million budgeted for Children's Services, and we need to ensure that that money is going where it belongs, and that's to enhance the children of this province who are for whatever reason in need of care and in need of professional attention.

With those remarks, Mr. Chairman, at this time I will cede the floor to another hon. member of the Assembly, and I look forward to hearing a brief response from the minister in regards to the questions that I have at this time in committee.

Thank you.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I also would like to add a few comments to Bill 2, Child and Family Services Authorities Amendment Act, 2002, and welcome the opportunity to address this bill. It is a very important bill, and it also is a bill that deals with perhaps some of the most vulnerable people in our society, certainly the people who have not yet reached their position in life where they can take care of themselves or provide for their care down the road. So I think it is a very critical area, I think it's a very important area, and I think it's one that we have to certainly put the necessary resources and the necessary people in place to take care of children and families in our society.

One of the things I do notice is that there are three important areas that the bill deals with. First of all, the bill will downplay the importance of prevention and early intervention in the Child Welfare Act. Another area this will look at is that it will reduce the children's authority boards from 15 to 11 members, and what it will also do, Mr. Chairman, is it will transfer from the authorities to the minister, and it will outline how the authorities will operate under this bill. It will place the emphasis on the power of the minister to give orders to the authority.

Now, then, when I look here as well, I can see that we have had overruns in both Ma'Möwe and Calgary Rocky View and that 80 percent of all caseloads are involved in these two areas. In looking at this whole situation of families and children and the family services authorities amendment act, I think we have to look at the demographics, and certainly when we look at demographics in these two areas, it's interesting to note that Edmonton, Mr. Chair, does have in the neighbourhood of 16 percent where we have a lone parent in charge of children. Calgary is slightly lower at around 13 percent. As well, when we look at why there would be such a large grouping in these two authorities, we also have to look at the incidence of low incomes. Again when we look for the incidence of low incomes in families, we see that Edmonton is somewhere in the range of 21 percent and Calgary is just slightly under 20 percent. So certainly those statistics bear out why the majority of these cases would be centered in the big cities. I know that so many people view our cities, particularly our larger cities of Edmonton and Calgary, as areas to go to when they need help. So, as a result, a greater amount of the workload is going to be in these two authorities.

Now, then, I do like the fact that we are going to reduce the size of each of the boards of the authorities, and of course by reducing that, there will be more moneys available. Yet I also think we have to take a very hard look here at why these authorities have had deficits and have had to run with deficits since their creation. Certainly if the need is there, then it indicates that we can solve the problem probably by combining two different methods to increase efficiency and to make them run as efficiently as they can, but also, Mr. Chairman, we do have to look at the idea here that if, in fact, they cannot make it on their budgets, then certainly the amount of the budget that we give to those authorities must be increased.

We look at the fact that people who do require the benefits from child and family services authorities tend to congregate in our larger cities of Edmonton and Calgary. We do know that in dealing with children, we are never going to be one hundred percent correct, but we certainly do want to increase that efficiency. We do for example want to make certain that no child falls through the cracks. I know that is the wish and the desire not only of all members of this Assembly but all Albertans. We do have so many different ministries and organizations involved. Hopefully we can become more efficient and not allow any children to slip through the cracks.

As well, I noticed that one of the major changes will be in the preamble to the act, where it will no longer state that the well-being of a child is to be best achieved "through the enhancement of prevention and early intervention programs and services." Instead, it will only recognize a need for enhancement of these programs and services. I think it's critical that we look at a model which best achieves the well-being of the child and makes that paramount.

I think of a convention that I attended in Chicago a year and a half ago, and I see, Mr. Chairman, that in the city of Chicago, for example, 70 percent of the children who attend school are on a hot lunch program, again the huge impact that this type of a program would have on those that have to fund it, those that have to make certain that it does perform what it is meant to do. I think that we have a real opportunity at this stage in this province to look at our early intervention programs to see, as so many people that have spoken in this Assembly have brought to our attention, that for every dollar we invest into early intervention today, we save $7 down the road.

So with those comments, Mr. Chair, I will be taking my seat and allowing other members to speak to Bill 2, the Child and Family Services Authorities Amendment Act, 2002 in Committee of the Whole, and I certainly look forward to hearing their comments. Thank you.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to have an opportunity now at the committee level to address Bill 2, the Child and Family Services Authorities Amendment Act, 2002. There are a number of concerns. I think that when it was in second reading, I indicated that we supported the bill and will be voting for it, but it's not without some reservations. We wonder if the total impact of the bill is not going to be one that places more authority in the minister's office. That may not have been the intention when it was drawn up, but it may be the result of the kind of provisions that we find in the bill.

I think we agree that the defining of authority and the defining of board is a good thing. It brings clarity to the act and, more importantly, will make it clear to administrators, to board members, and to chairs exactly where their responsibilities lie. As I said, I think that that's a good thing for the act and for the authorities.

I go back to one of the recommendations put forward in the report Connecting the Dots, that looked at the social workers in the province. One of the recommendations that that report made was that every change be viewed through the eyes of children and that the question be raised: does this change make things better for children and directly affect them? I looked at this bill, even though it deals more with administrative and governance concerns, through that prism, and I wonder if there aren't some concerns.

We would hope that local authorities would have the power to deal effectively with concerns and to make plans for their jurisdiction. Certainly that was the intent of breaking the system up into a number of authority regions. But a bill such as this, which seems to give more decision-making to the minister, may work against the interests of children, because I think even the minister would admit that she is not in the best position to be making a lot of the decisions that the authorities and their administrators have to make and that there are a whole host of decisions that are better made at the local level. When you start constraining what they can do at the local level – it's one thing to make it clear what they can do, but if in the process of adding that clarity you start to constrain or take powers away from the boards, then I wonder if we are really serving the best interests of children. So it's a concern that permeates this bill, and it's a concern that is going to be raised when we deal with the companion bill, Bill 9, later in the session, Mr. Chairman.

The reduction of the board members to 11 is, I think, a good move. Large boards tend to be unwieldy. I know from working on a school board of nine that at times even that was too big, but I think 11 is an appropriate number. I think the mechanisms put in the bill to ensure that there's some continuity in membership, that all members on a board are treated equally in terms of their ability to serve, and the length of time they're able to serve as members are a good thing.

The section that has the minister giving boards written directions and expectations I think has to be looked at really carefully in terms of what the scope of those directions to boards will include. Again it goes back to my concern that there may be a limiting of local authority and a centralization of power in the minister's office, and I think that would be unfortunate. There's been a great deal of difficulty, I realize, with some of the boards in terms of them carrying out their functions, but I think a lot of that is wrapped up in the education of board members and the responsibility that the board members themselves take in terms of preparing themselves to oversee an authority in the province.

I think there are a number of other items with respect to confidentiality: giving the Lieutenant Governor in Council the authority to make regulations regarding confidentiality and information possessed by the board, and then regarding conflicts of interest. But the one on confidentiality is one that I think should raise some red flags. We have to be clear, we have to be certain when children are in government care, children that the government is dealing with, that those dealings are open to public scrutiny. We've had some unfortunate cases in the last few months in the province where there were obviously problems within the system. Even the method in which those problems are being investigated raises questions as to the openness and, more importantly, the fairness of how families and children are being treated by the system.

So with this whole business of what can be kept confidential, certainly we have to make sure that we protect children, but we also have to make sure that in that process it doesn't carry protection for the government and allow the government to escape the kind of scrutiny that is demanded by the public and should be a normal part of the operations of a democracy and that the government is held accountable for actions they are involved in.

So I think with those comments, Mr. Chair, I'll conclude, and as I indicated, we will be supporting Bill 2. Thanks very much.

THE CHAIR: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE CHAIR: Opposed? Carried.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Wednesday, March 6, 2002 8:00 p.m.
 Date: 02/03/06
 head: Government Bills and Orders
Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: We'll call the committee to order.

Bill 8 Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2002

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill?

SOME HON. MEMBERS: Question.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: You're ready for the question, I guess.
 On the clauses of the bill are you agreed?

MR. STEVENS: There is one speaker on 8, Mr. Chairman.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The chair hasn't seen anyone rise to speak.

MR. STEVENS: If you have the patience of Solomon, you will have the ability to see someone rise.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The rule of the Assembly is that members will only be recognized in their own position, where they're supposed to sit, and the chair now sees the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie wanting to speak. The chair will recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It was my understanding that we were going to finish up in committee on Bill 2 this evening, and that was the small misunderstanding that occurred, but we're quite happy to finish up on supplementary supply in committee at this point in time.

This is my first opportunity to speak to these supplementary estimates, Mr. Chairman, so I do have a few comments to make in terms of the dollars that have been requested at this particular time. The good news about this particular supplementary estimate is that it's a very small amount. In fact, it's probably the smallest request that I've seen for supplementary estimates since I have been in this Legislature. However, we have to remember that it is the second time that this government has come back for supplementary estimates, and that was quite a bit more money at that time. We're looking at $15.513 million, all of which goes towards operating expenses and capital investment, and I do have a couple of questions about this.

I'll just start at Children's Services perhaps. We have seen an increasing number of concerns and problems with Children's Services here over the course of the past year, and now the government is coming back and asking for $500,000 "to provide funding to address the additional needs of children receiving services under the Child Welfare Act that arise from a labour dispute in the education system." This labour dispute, Mr. Chairman, is just indicative of the ongoing problems that we have seen in Children's Services. We continually in our offices get concerns about the way things are being managed in Children's Services. They don't seem to have adequate resources to investigate or to provide support to the families and to the workers. The workers are just absolutely overburdened with work at this particular time.

Through the newspapers we have seen some horrendous cases that have occurred just this last little while, two small girls dying in transit to a new residence, why they were let go when there had been some problems with their health and with their care, why they were put in the care of a person who wasn't used to raising small children at that particular point in time – it was the children's grandfather – to be transported over a couple of provinces with a two year old, which, I would have to say, would be an onerous task for anybody without support or help, be they male or female, old or young, something that I would seriously question if I had someone I knew who was planning to do that. Yet these professional workers gave the okay for that to happen.

We have more recent cases in the news. We have the young man who was taken into custody, put in a hotel room without supervision, who partied hard all night with his friends, not the least of which were a number of also underage girls, where there was lots of liquor and lots of other inappropriate activities happening. We have to question why this is happening and how it is that the Minister of Children's Services doesn't know that these things are going on. It's a horrendous state for this particular department to be in. So the questions that really come up for us are: what are the additional needs specifically, not only in this request but in this department?

There is a point when you do cutbacks in a department where you just completely become unmanageable and inefficient. I would say that this is probably the case in this department, and that is a very big shame. Who's at risk more than anybody else are young people who are already at risk and parents who need support and assistance and training. That's what I have to say about that particular dollar value.

In Environment we see just over $8 million coming through. I'm always happy, Mr. Chairman, to see requests come for program dollars in Environment because I think that this has been a department that has taken the greatest number of hits over the past nine years, and it's interesting to see that the minister is addressing what I believe to be some of those concerns.

I'm happy to see the support here for the western provinces human and animal health study. It's too bad that the other provinces have not yet come up with their share or some portion of the contributions for this study, because they, too, will benefit from it. We could hope that industry would also be prepared to pay their fair share on this one because it is the effects of industry that we are actually seeing being studied, in this case on animal and human health.

Now, it's my position that Environment is responsible for the animal side of the study and that Health and Wellness is responsible for the human study side. As we saw today in question period, the health minister clearly doesn't have a clue what's going on in terms of that study, and it is our opinion that that money has not been properly spent or accounted for and that they haven't taken the right kinds of factors into account when taking a look at the studies themselves and how they'll be followed. We would hate to see this province put animal health before the needs of human health, but it certainly seems to be the road that the minister of health is traveling down. So what I have to say to that is: "Good news for Environment. Job well done. Hope you can recover some money from the other provinces and from industry." You put your colleague in Health and Wellness absolutely to shame, and we would expect him to step up to the plate and do the work that he is supposed to do.

We had a good discussion, I thought, with the minister this week on this particular study and on the changes that are happening in Climate Change Central and are quite satisfied with those, Mr. Chairman, and believe that while there are instances where the minister and I will disagree on how things are decided and how policy decisions are made, there isn't much to be concerned about in terms of how he's managing these two areas. We've had some concerns about Climate Change Central because they seem to be a little slow off the mark, but I believe that the work they're doing is good. It may take them a while to get to where they need to be, but they are on that road. We'll be watching, but I'm hoping that I'll only have good things to say about that organization in the future.

We always have a concern about the estimates in terms of their not being broken down in more detail. We just get the line items and no specific detail, and sometimes it's hard to tie down ministers or their staff to get that feedback. Fortunately, we were able to in Environment this time, but I haven't even had time to talk to my other colleagues to see how those requests have gone in the other departments and whether or not they've gotten more feedback. I would continue to urge the government to work in a co-operative fashion in this matter because, quite frankly, we have less questions and less concerns and can actually make a contribution in some instances to good strong policy decisions, and we would hope that that's the route that most ministers would choose to take.

Justice is getting $1.5 million to provide for increased costs due to salaried staff settlements. So we see this as an ongoing issue in a couple of areas, and my question is: how can it be that the government doesn't manage effectively enough that they understand that these salary negotiations are coming down the pipe and that there is every expectation that people will get increases that are at least similar to the kinds that we as politicians get, tied to the weekly wage in this province. If we're prepared to do that for ourselves, then why is the government not prepared to do that with other organizations that they need to negotiate and deal with at a minimum.

It would appear that in this department and several others in terms of these estimates requested, the government wasn't prepared to do that and hadn't put any kind of process in their management plans where they have the flexibility to accommodate those requests and settlements as they occurred, so they come back in supplementary estimates. To me that is indicative of poor management, Mr. Chairman, and we would expect the government to do a lot better so that they don't have to come back for more money when issues should have already been dealt with earlier in the fiscal year. It indicates that there is no plan, which we have been saying for a long time, or that there is a plan perhaps and it is just to squeeze people other than themselves when it comes to salary negotiations. I think that that's something that has to happen.

Also, it's touching the surface of the kind of issues that we see occurring in Justice with their staff. There aren't enough judges; there aren't enough clerks; there aren't enough support staff. We've got huge backlogs. That creates an astronomical amount of problems, but even more than that, to speak in terms that this government understands, it costs money to have those kinds of backlogs. Unfortunately, that's what we see happening: to try and save a penny, this government has cost the taxpayers a pound. Inefficient management is costly; there are no two ways about it. So they need to get their act together. I seriously hope that we're going to see that kind of management as an issue addressed in the budget and that we could look to some sort of improved record in that regard, but that's not likely because they haven't been able to figure it out for almost the last decade.

The Solicitor General asks for almost $4.4 million. Again, staff settlements: same issues that I talked about in Justice. I think that now is the time to start asking whether or not these new divisions of ministries have actually been effective or if they were just good excuses to give more people frontbench positions and the salaries that go along with that, Mr. Chairman. It doesn't seem to me that we have met the needs of the people better or been more efficient or more effective in the delivery of services, which should be the kind of benchmarks that the government looks at when they decide how they're going to overhaul how government is delivered to the people. Maybe there's some obscure plan in the back of their minds that will prove to be efficient sometime in the future, but I doubt it, and I think that all those people directly affected by the salary negotiations this year would also doubt it. I look forward to being corrected by the Premier or any minister who would like to come forward and share their long-term strategic vision with us and a framework that's actually going to deliver services in an effective and efficient way, Mr. Chairman, but I'm not holding my breath.

So with those comments I believe that I have finished talking about supplementary estimates for this particular time. Let's hope that we don't have to come back two times in the next fiscal year for the same kinds of issues.

Thank you.

[The clauses of Bill 8 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: Opposed? Carried.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. STEVENS: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Having confirmed that my memory is inaccurate along with some of the other members', that in fact we did get to vote on Bill 2, as the transcript of Hansard clearly indicates – it obviously was a very smooth, quick vote on Bill 2 – I would like to move that we rise and report on Bills 1, 2, and 8.

[Motion carried]

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

MR. LOUGHEED: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following: bills 1, 2, and 8.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Opposed? So ordered.

head: Consideration of Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor's Speech

Mr. Horner moved that an humble address be presented to Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor as follows.

To Her Honour the Honourable Lois E. Hole, CM, Lieutenant Governor of the province of Alberta:

We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Assembly, now assembled, beg leave to thank you, Your Honour, for the gracious speech Your Honour has been pleased to address to us at the opening of the present session.

[Adjourned debate March 5: Mr. Johnson]

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands. [some applause]

MR. MASON: Thank you, one hon. member, two, three. Mr. Speaker, it's my pleasure to rise and give my reply to the Speech from the Throne, delivered at the opening of the session by Her Honour the Honourable Lois Hole, the Lieutenant Governor of Alberta. I feel proud to be represented by Mrs. Hole in her capacity as the Lieutenant Governor of this province. I don't think that we could ask for a better representative of our province.

I want to indicate that I listened with great care to Her Honour and have had a chance to go through the Speech from the Throne a little more thoroughly subsequent to that time, and I find it's an interesting document, Mr. Speaker. It talks about and its headline is Working Together to Build a Healthy Alberta. That is a very, very laudable goal. I congratulate the government on that title of this speech, because I think that is quite frankly its strongest point, the title. It's interesting that the government has chosen the theme of a healthy Alberta for this Speech from the Throne. It seems to have a couple of trends, a couple of elements. One is a healthy individual and health in its classical sense: the health of someone, absence of disease, and wellness, those things. It also then talks about the health of the province, and I think that is very appropriate. So I would like my remarks to follow along those two themes.

Increasingly, research and people who study the question of health of individuals and of communities have come to the conclusion that one of the biggest single indicators of health for an individual and indeed for a community, even including up to a province, is the absence of poverty, specifically the absence of relative poverty. Recently in Edmonton we had a speaker, Richard Wilkinson, who is a health policy senior research fellow at the Trafford centre for medical research, the University of Sussex in the U.K. He's written a book called Unhealthy Societies: The Afflictions of Inequality, and he says that among the developed countries it is not the richest societies which have the best health, but those that have the smallest income differences between rich and poor. Inequality and relative poverty have absolute affects: they increase death rates.

He goes on to say in the book that research is increasingly able to document the human costs of particular features of the social and economic structure of modern societies. In particular, the underlying causes and pathways responsible for the excess mortality which occurs in less privileged sections of society are becoming clearer. Not unexpectedly, their broad outlines have much in common with the likely sources of a number of other social problems – including emotional disturbance in childhood, poor educational performance, crime and violence.

Now, it's interesting to me, Mr. Speaker, that these conclusions are reflected in some of the background documents prepared for the Mazankowski report.

8:20

MR. MacDONALD: What's that report again?

MR. MASON: It's the Mazankowski report, sometimes known as the 'Mazankowski' report.

The background paper, the context paper Opportunity for People and Communities to Improve Their Own Health, prepared by Larry Bryan, says on page 18 that "income-related disparities in infant mortality are two-thirds higher in the poorest neighborhoods than [in] the richest." It goes on to say people in the lowest income households were nearly twice as likely to smoke compared to those in the high-income households. He says:

- Those with low incomes were more likely than those with higher incomes to: be heavy users of physician services, visit [emergency rooms], be admitted to hospital, take multiple medications and require home care services.
- Seniors with low incomes have increased odds of institutionalization.

All of these, Mr. Speaker, are contained in the context paper for the Mazankowski report, and indeed the Mazankowski report includes some positive recommendations with respect to those things. But does it go far enough?

I think, more importantly, the question is for the government and for the Speech from the Throne. If in fact the theme of the Speech from the Throne is the health of the individual and the health of the province, then why is there not one word in it about poverty? Can we say that poverty is not a problem or that it's going away as a result of the economic boom caused by relatively high energy prices? Well, a couple of years ago the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association released a report, and it indicated for a number of cities – large, medium, and small – in the province that poverty rates continue to be a very, very serious problem, ranging from in excess of 15 percent in the cities with the lowest poverty rate to over 20 percent in the centre with the highest rate, which happens to be the city of Edmonton, Mr. Speaker.

Nearly 1 in 5 Albertans lives at or below the poverty line, and we have a situation where the government policies are tending to widen the gap between rich and poor in our province. Statistically this can be shown. The policies of flat tax, the policies of user fees such as health care premiums, ironically, are contributing to the widening of the gap between the rich and the poor in this province, which according to experts is the single biggest determinant of illness and lack of health in a community.

So, Mr. Speaker, the government talks about health as its priority, yet it cuts preventative programs for children's services. It drags its feet on the low-income review. It brings in taxation policies that favour rapid accumulation of wealth at the high end of the scale and which create difficulties, financial and otherwise, for people at the low-income end of the society. A number of years ago, not too long ago, the government completely walked away from all social housing programs even though these had been devolved from the federal government at the request of the provinces, who claimed that it was constitutionally within their jurisdiction. When the federal government did that, the reaction of the government of Alberta immediately was, essentially, to get completely out of that business.

So we have a serious problem with health, and, Mr. Speaker, I would submit that the government is complicit in that, has created conditions and policies which foster that. I find it ironic indeed that the major thrust of the Speech from the Throne deals with improving the health of Albertans. Clearly, not all Albertans are equal, in the government's view, when it comes to health.

Now, the other question, Mr. Speaker, is the health of our communities, the health of our province, and the government is quite rightly talking about a strong and resilient economy. I will not stand here and deny that the economy has been growing rapidly in Alberta, that the rate of industrialization has been increasing, and that more Albertans are working now than a few years ago. But does that mean that the province is healthier? I think in one sense it is, but in a number of other senses it's not healthier, and there are a number of issues that I think need to be addressed in terms of the health of the province.

One of the major ones is the state of the environment. There's also a very well written section in the Speech from the Throne about the environment of our province, but the words belie the reality once again, Mr. Speaker. First of all, the government talks about the grave concerns it has about the Kyoto accord, this in a section that's entitled A Clean and Sustainable Environment. The government is pleased to provide Albertans with a variety of different numbers on the costs of Kyoto for Alberta. Sometimes the numbers provided are correct and sometimes they're not, but I think that they are all inflated and take no account of the costs of continued changes in the climate on Alberta. We are faced with a dramatic situation of ongoing drought year after year in the southern part of this province. Now, any climate expert worth their salt will tell you that one of the effects of climate change in our particular area of geography is increasing drought in certain parts of the continent, especially those parts towards the interior of the continent, such as southern Alberta.

Where in the analysis of the costs of the Kyoto accord to the Alberta economy does the government subtract the cost of not doing something about global warming and climate change? Where does it add on the balance sheet the costs of drought to Alberta farmers, the costs to the government? Where does it add the dramatic costs for fighting forest fires? Where are its projections and its analysis of the impact over a period of time of this steadily worsening situation on the economy, not to mention the people, not to mention the environment and the flora and the fauna? Since the government likes to place everything in the context of numbers and money, it seems to me that the analysis around failing to deal with climate change ought to be clearly part of the planning documents of the province.

Now, we've just learned more recently that Alberta now is running out of water for economic growth. This is after the government has worked very hard to promote industrial development all around the province, no longer limited to cities, but you can see it now spread out all over the province helter-skelter as it sprawls across the face of the province. The government's quite right in pointing out that that produces jobs for people. It does. But, Mr. Speaker, on the other hand there is a cost to it.

Particularly I want to come to the question of the agricultural policy of this government, which promotes intensive livestock operations and has yet to deal with the ecological and health effects of some of those operations, particularly those of a very large scale. The Premier, of course, as we know, has suggested that the number of hogs in the province ought to be dramatically expanded.

So, Mr. Speaker, I think that the government speaks out of both sides of its mouth with respect to the question of environment and of health of individuals of the province.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

REV. ABBOTT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Member for Edmonton-Highlands was quoting extensively from the Mazankowski report, linking health and wealth. I'm wondering how the second member of the third party is proposing to end poverty in Alberta. Is it through increased taxation and more government handouts?

MR. MASON: Well, Mr. Speaker, I will respond to the 71st member of the first party by suggesting that a variety of measures would be appropriate. It is particularly the style of taxation which benefits wealthy people at the expense of poor people which we think ought to be changed, not necessarily increasing taxation for everybody but ending the tax holidays for the wealthy people.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Anybody else wishing to ask a question or make comments? The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

MR. KNIGHT: Mr. Speaker, to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands. I was interested in his comments with respect to Kyoto and the inference that the provincial government has their numbers wrong. I'd like the hon. member to explain to me to what degree global warming will be reduced once Canada ratifies Kyoto.

MR. MASON: Well, Mr. Speaker, I was reading with interest the comments in the paper the other day of Dr. Schindler, who's a world-renowned expert, who said that it would take four Kyotos to actually deal effectively, and obviously Kyoto is a compromise because of the opposition of the United States and particularly the current president who is, as we all know, very closely associated with the oil and gas industry in that country.

MS DeLONG: I also have a further question. It seems that you missed answering the question in terms of the effects of Canada signing the Kyoto agreement. We already know the U.S. isn't going to. Okay? So what would be the effects of Canada signing the Kyoto?

MR. MASON: Well, it's obviously better than doing nothing. It is a small step. You know, a journey of a hundred miles begins with a single step, and if we refuse to take that step, then we will not leave the Earth to our grandchildren in any fit condition. In fact, there will be mass starvation, desertification, and depopulation of the human race.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

MR. LORD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to address a question to the hon. member opposite in a similar vein, the concern about Kyoto. I'm wondering if the hon. member opposite is aware that the Bloc Quebecois have made statements to the effect that Alberta should bear most of the brunt for Canada's entire commitment to Kyoto. Does the hon. member's party support the Bloc Quebecois in their quest to have Kyoto put mostly on Alberta?

MR. MASON: No.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

REV. ABBOTT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Incidentally, I'd rather be the 71st member of a party with 73 than the second member of a party of two.

Some strong accusations in that speech. I was wondering if the member could state which numbers from Alberta Environment are false or inflated, as he mentioned, and if he would be willing to table documents to prove such allegations.

MR. MASON: Mr. Speaker, I could table the minister's correction in the House to his comments.

DR. TAYLOR: Unfortunately, I missed some of what the member was saying.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Minister of Environment, but the five minutes allocated for questions and answers are up.

Would any other hon. member wish to respond to the Speech from the Throne? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Thank you for the opportunity to rise this evening and address Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor and the Speech from the Throne. It is always a pleasure to have her presence in the Assembly and listen as she reads the Speech from the Throne. I know that not only myself but many members in the Assembly look forward to her little side comments, which add her own personal touch to the speech.

Mr. Speaker, I listened with great interest to the words of the Lieutenant Governor, particularly as she outlined the direction we as a province are to travel in the coming year, and it struck me that some concerns of Albertans were not being addressed. Albertans look forward to the Speech from the Throne as it provides us with some sense of purpose, a plan that not only recognizes the challenges we face as legislators but also sets a course of action to meet our goals. This is critical, as one of the government's major roles is to create a stable environment for Albertans. In the Speech from the Throne this very theme was echoed by the participants at the Future Summit. "They are determined to build an Alberta for their children that is prosperous, caring, secure, and that above all maintains a positive, healthy outlook to meet the challenges it will invariably face."

Mr. Speaker, one of the roles of government in developing that stable environment for business, for our municipalities, and for Albertans is to provide stable, equitable, predictable long-term funding. The onetime roller-coaster model currently employed by the government is not working. In a time when we have had the second most money come into our coffers in the history of this province and we are making cutbacks, it is unforgivable.

Planning by our municipalities and businesses which rely on provincial dollars is difficult at best when funding is clawed back or projects are deferred or canceled. The cuts to the fuel tax rebate program, which amounted to approximately $10 million for Edmonton and $12 million for Calgary, lead to a lack of trust and respect that municipalities have for their provincial counterparts. When the province makes a deal with municipalities to provide funding and then reneges on that agreement, the planning and budgetary process for the municipalities is thrown into disarray. It is unacceptable to download this responsibility to municipalities without giving them access to appropriate funding.

Mr. Speaker, the Alberta Roadbuilders and Heavy Construction Association has also expressed concern over the present funding practices of this government. They have studied the recent projected cuts to the Alberta Transportation budget for the coming year, and if these cuts are confirmed, their studies indicate large job losses and a strong possibility of business failures due to the sudden loss of cash flow.

The Official Opposition does have an alternative to the current budget practices of the government. We have proposed a fiscal stability fund. Unlike the heritage savings trust fund this fund would be a short-term savings account meant to smooth out the peaks and valleys of our volatile economy. We would contribute to the fund during good years. When our revenues fall, money would be withdrawn so essential programs like health care, education, children's services, and infrastructure enhancement would continue as planned. This would not be used to fund new initiatives and programs but, rather, to maintain existing essential services.

The second fund is a targeted savings account called the infrastructure enhancement fund. As we know, in some years in Alberta there is a lot of money to go around. During these years we would be able to put money into this fund to pay for the acceleration or enhancement of infrastructure projects in the following year. This means that once the money is in the bank, projects can be announced and contracts signed.

Mr. Speaker, I agree with this statement in the Speech from the Throne: "Indeed, in 2002 Albertans perceive health and health care to be a top priority." Health care has been at the top or near the top of priorities of Albertans for many years. They want a public health care system there for them when they need it. They are very concerned when the government talks about services that are to be deinsured. They are very concerned when they see an increase in their health care premiums of up to 40 percent. This increase is nothing more than a head tax. Albertans are very concerned as this government moves towards a health care system which is market driven even though there is an abundance of evidence which shows that private, for-profit medicine increases costs and waiting times in the public system and increases administration waste and creates barriers to equal access.

In a province as rich as Alberta, Mr. Speaker, no sick or injured person should ever go without medical attention because they are poor and cannot afford it. No Albertan should ever have to choose between putting food on the table or taking care of their medical needs. These decisions are being made more frequently by people on fixed incomes as they get squeezed by increases in the cost of living. Albertans get very concerned when they look at the American model of health care and see that 40 million Americans have no health care coverage – 40 million Americans have no health care coverage – and that the leading cause of personal bankruptcies in the United States is health care.

One of the targets to increasing revenues for stable, long-term funding for health is to increase taxes on tobacco products. If this government has identified the use of tobacco products as a contributor to the poor health of Albertans, why have they not made this entire Legislature Building a smoke-free building?

Once again in the Speech from the Throne we see education listed as a priority of the government. The major unresolved issues in the recent strike by 21,000 Alberta teachers have been identified for a number of years, but the government has failed to address the concerns as raised by the ATA. Failure to do so eventually led to the largest strike in this province's history. According to a one-page summary of education spending prepared by Alberta Learning and leaked to the press, spending on education rose 34.6 percent between 1992-93 and 2001. By Alberta Learning's own assertion education spending has not even returned to the 1992-93 levels when inflation and student population growth are factored in. The fact is that funding for education is $64 million lower than it was in 1992-93 when adjusted for inflation and student population growth. That's a 2.33 percent decrease and a far cry from the government's claims that education spending has risen dramatically. And this, Mr. Speaker, occurred when times were good in this province.

We go forward in the Speech from the Throne to praise student achievement when compared against students internationally. Mr. Speaker, if teachers were in private business and had results like have been mentioned in the Speech from the Throne and by other members in this Assembly, they would not only get double-digit raises, but they would also get bonuses in the double-digit range. The Premier had raised the expectations of teachers with comments prior to last year's budget. Teachers were shocked when they saw a line item limiting their raises to 4 and 2 percent. When other sectors funded from provincial revenues were getting double-digit raises, teachers got a total of 6 percent. It is not unreasonable that when other issues designed to improve classroom conditions were ignored and no commitment was made to build and improve the education system for tomorrow, the only alternative for teachers was job action.

In a keynote address to the Conservative policy conference in April of 1999, Eric Newell, chairman of Syncrude Canada, said that Albertans risk being unable to realize their dreams because the government isn't spending enough on education or on research and development.

During question period on February 29, 2000, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods asked the Provincial Treasurer of the day the following question:

On the Wednesday before last week's budget the Treasurer promised Albertans that 2,200 new teachers and teaching aides would be hired. The 2,200 teachers and aides were part of a list that supposedly included more computers, severe disability funding, expanded early literacy programs, and increases in teachers' salaries.

The government knew of these unresolved issues but chose to continue underfunding public education in this province. What is unreasonable is that the government knew a strike was looming yet did absolutely nothing to prevent it. Hopefully the anticipated meeting between the Premier and the president of the ATA, which has taken place, will result in positive action that will avert any more job action by teachers in this province.

Mr. Speaker, not all Albertans are sharing in the benefits of our fast-growing economy in this province. Homelessness and a growing shortage of housing affordable by low- and moderate-income households is an escalating issue. It is severe for those with fixed incomes, particularly in our larger cities of Edmonton and Calgary. This Quarter, a publication which provides information on the city's current activity and issues, indicates that there is a need for at least 5,000 more low-income and special-needs housing units in Edmonton. The need ranges from subsidized housing for low-income families through to short-term, emergency shelter for people with no home but the streets.

Mr. Speaker, events of September 11, 2001, harshly reminded us of how small our world has become and of our role and responsibilities as members of the international community. I look forward to new legislation referred to in the Speech from the Throne which will be introduced this session to improve the province's ability to protect Albertans, their property, their infrastructure, and their environment from potential security risks.

But our responsibilities as members of the global community extend far past the borders of this province. At a recent meeting of the Standing Committee on the Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund I made a proposal that we should adopt a policy of ethical investing when it comes to the fund. Ethical funds represent about 3 percent of all mutual fund assets, but asset growth recently has been around 75 percent per year. In the United States social and ethical funds account for 13 percent of the market, with a growth rate almost as high as that in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, socially responsible investing is increasing because investors realize that what is bad for society is also bad for business. I am certain that Albertans do not want us investing their money if a company's practices go against social standards. Investors take environmental, social, and community interests into account when they decide which companies to invest in. This is an area where we as a province could take a lead.

Mr. Speaker, as my time winds down on my response to the Speech from the Throne, I have to briefly mention the Alberta advantage. Certainly when we look at the Alberta advantage, the major reason we have an Alberta advantage is the people, but we also have other reasons. We have an agriculture industry that was recognized by people around the world before we became a province. When we look at our forestry industry, which also plays a major role in this province, it again has been recognized since before the turn of the century. When Peter Pond in 1778 recorded the occurrence of bituminous sands at the confluence of the Athabasca and Clearwater rivers, we knew that we had an Alberta advantage.

So, Mr. Speaker, what we need in this province certainly isn't to create wealth. What we need in this province is to redistribute that wealth to all members of the province.

Thank you.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Any questions or comments for the hon. member? The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

REV. ABBOTT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was wondering if the Member from Edmonton-Glengarry could expand on how he would increase the transportation budget from a so-called fiscal stability fund this year when this year would actually be a year of contributing to such a fund according to the Liberal model of contributing in years above the five-year average of resource revenues?

MR. BONNER: That is a very good question and one that should be answered because the road builders of Alberta definitely would like an answer to that, particularly when their anticipated budget has been cut somewhere in the neighbourhood of $700 million. If we had an infrastructure enhancement fund, then those moneys which would have been put in there as we use our five-year average could have been used to keep those people in business today instead of laying off workers.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

MR. LORD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question to the hon. member opposite. During my time as a stockbroker I did considerable research on social and ethical investment funds. Unfortunately, they had an extremely dismal rate of return in comparison to most other funds. I'm wondering if the hon. member opposite would like to elucidate on whether or not he thinks we should still invest in those funds even if they have a far lower rate of return than other funds.

MR. BONNER: Actually at one time, as people got more involved in ethical investing and socially responsible investing, I probably thought that it was a slow-growth market. But certainly all the research indicates today that ethical investing in the long run is going to provide much more of a stable environment for investing because we don't have environmental concerns to clean up after, we don't have violations against human rights in other countries.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The chair would like to recognize the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

MS DeLONG: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Our hon. colleague from Edmonton-Glengarry very nicely outlined many things that would be very nice to spend more money on, and I could add another 10, 20, or 30 that would do wonderful things for Alberta. But the question, of course, is: where do you want to take the money from? You were talking about large amounts of money here. You're talking hundreds of millions, billions of dollars.

MR. BONNER: An excellent question. Our biggest problem, Mr. Speaker, in this province is that we have a boom-and-bust economy. As well, in this beautiful province we do have oil reserves which are running dry. These are not the oil reserves that are in the Fort McMurray region but in the western Canada basin. So it is essential that we smooth out the peaks and valleys with some type of an enhancement fund.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

MR. McCLELLAND: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wonder if the Member for Edmonton-Glengarry would tell the House: if the circumstances were to be such that this province did have a Liberal government, would the first priority be the redistribution of wealth or would the first priority be the creation of wealth?

MR. BONNER: Yes. Certainly, in reply to the hon. member's question, the first priority of a Liberal government would be to establish a budget which was sustainable. Mr. Speaker, we would make certain that the funding for all programs in this province was predictable, sustainable, and we know that this would be of benefit to all.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

MR. BOUTILIER: Thank you so very much, Mr. Speaker. My question to the hon. member. First of all, I want to make a comment and thank him so much for recognizing the Alberta advantage in Fort McMurray. That is very important.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: I hesitate to interrupt, but the allocated five minutes are up.

The hon. Minister of Government Services.

MR. COUTTS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I do now move that we adjourn debate on this particular item.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

head: Government Bills and Orders
Second Reading

Bill 5
Interjurisdictional Support Orders Act

[Adjourned debate March 5: Mr. Stevens]

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Happy to have an opportunity to speak to Bill 5 in second reading in the Assembly. At the rate that we're ripping through these early bills, it's going to be not very long before we're through the entire agenda that this government has brought forward. [some applause] While government members have just applauded that particular concept, what it means is that there isn't very much meat and substance in what we've seen so far.

AN HON. MEMBER: Good planning. Good planning.

MS CARLSON: It's not good planning.

AN HON. MEMBER: It's called co-operation.

MS CARLSON: Co-operation. Well, yeah, we're happy to cooperate in some instances, but certainly we're looking forward after this spring break to seeing some more substantive items coming forward. However, that isn't to say that some of the bills we have seen have not been good.

DR. OBERG: Be careful what you ask for.

MS CARLSON: That's okay. We're happy to be in there. I know you don't like to be here, but, Mr. Speaker, we're happy to deal with substantive issues that make a difference to Albertans, so we'll be here as long as it takes to settle some of those outstanding issues. [interjections] Yes, yes, especially me. I'd like to be here, you know, right till July.

AN HON. MEMBER: All four of you?

MS CARLSON: It only takes one of us. You guys have got to keep quorum, not us.

AN HON. MEMBER: All four of you and one sidekick, eh?

MS CARLSON: No, it doesn't take that many. We've had lots of evenings when just one of us has been able to keep the business of the Assembly going for quite a long time.

On Bill 5, Mr. Speaker, I am quite happy to support this particular bill. It is a step forward in terms of interjurisdictional support orders, and that happens to be an issue that I deal with quite frequently in my constituency. Not only is there a large number of single parents in my constituency, but people seem to have known over the years that I also have been a single parent for many years, soon to be 16 years, and certainly understand the issues that come up around moneys and custody and trying to raise children on low-paying or small-paying or part-time jobs. So this is an issue that I understand, I believe, quite well from both personal and practical experience and having to negotiate and lobby for any number of single parents over the years, both male and female, who have had problems receiving support from their estranged spouses.

What we see, then, in terms of the highlights in this particular bill is that there's going to be some uniform legislation developed by provinces and territories. We've seen it passed in Manitoba, it's been introduced in Ontario and the Yukon, and we can only hope that soon we'll see it in the other provinces as well. Without a doubt, the biggest issue we have with nonpaying, noncustodial spouses is that they simply move out of the province in order to evade their responsibilities and become deadbeat dads or moms. They just laugh at the custodial parent when they try to get the moneys that are owed to them, because there are no arrangements interprovincially that work well.

What we find here with maintenance enforcement is that they don't even address the issues that are out of province in any kind of serious and significant fashion. They write these issues off quite quickly, and we see people who are really having trouble raising their kids and not getting support from the natural parents of that child. It's really important that we have this kind of interjurisdictional support for this particular issue. This bill brings forward those issues, lines them up properly and makes sure that we're going to see an improved way for support orders to be attained or varied between the jurisdictions. So it's a good step in the right direction.

I would wish that the legislation was tougher. I would wish that we would see really tough penalties in this regard for nonpaying spouses, and I would wish that we would see a bigger overall maintenance enforcement. It is a problem in many ways, for people who hide assets are still getting away with it. Decades after the program was first introduced, we still have people who are very adept at hiding assets and a maintenance enforcement program that is slow and cumbersome in its responses. It's sometimes successful but not very often. We see a judicial system that isn't lined up to support maintenance enforcement when they do finally haul a deadbeat parent into court. So we need to see an alignment there in terms of seeing the needs of children being met as the first priority, rather than the abilities of these people to get away with nonpayment.

We also need to see a change in the way of thinking, I believe, about noncustodial parents who are falsely accused of not providing support. We have some instances where that's an issue. We also have some discrimination issues around primarily men who are custodial parents in terms of getting their access, in terms of just the way maintenance enforcement deals with them on their own. It seems that they often will assume right off the bat that the male parent is the offending parent. It's certainly not the case in my constituency. I have an increasing number of custodial parents who are male and who are doing an excellent job of raising their children and have the same issues with their estranged spouses in terms of money collection and in terms of them leaving the province and just never coming up with the kind of support that is reasonable and can be expected.

So this is a really good, strong step in the right direction, but it certainly isn't enough in terms of this particular issue, Mr. Speaker, and I would hope that the member who is the sponsor of this bill and the minister will seriously undertake to do a thorough and systematic review of the process and bring forward legislation soon to address some of these issues. This is something that I think is an issue that we could have all-party support on, all-party co-operation as we work through the issues. We all know what they are. Let's sit down at a table, identify the top priorities, and start to address them. This is the kind of issue where we could see some excellent work being done in this province. We have seen some of that kind of co-operation happen in this Legislature in the past, and it would be very interesting and productive to see it happen again. This is exactly the kind of issue that we could look forward to working with the government on.

So I look forward to hearing what the minister has to say about that and applaud them on at least bringing this forward as a first step in this process.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Any questions or comments for the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

MR. McCLELLAND: I wonder what the hon. member opposite would think about the notion of having a court-ordered maintenance payments source deduction and then the resulting funds going to the recipient so as to be a separation from the sometimes heat that's generated through access when one parent is not paying and the other parent has refused access.

MS CARLSON: Well, the member should know that, in essence, that is what happens with maintenance enforcement now. When families are separated, when there is a divorce, there is automatically an application given to the custodial parent to apply for the maintenance payments to go to maintenance enforcement and then delivered to them to make that kind of division. The problem, as I see you saying it, is that it doesn't first go to payable deductions. That would be an improvement. They get there eventually.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Is there any other member who wishes to ask a question of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie? I recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

MR. McCLELLAND: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The notion would be that the payment would be a source deduction similar to tax and would go through the federal government so that the recipient custodial parent would have a consistent source of funds. Therefore, any shortages or if the funds are not paid by the parent, it would be handled exactly the same as a tax deduction not paid, removing the heat between the estranged parents, thereby providing access for the noncustodial parent.

MS CARLSON: It's a good idea. It happens now in terms of when maintenance enforcement garnishees wages, and they do that with the employer. That's a little more acrimonious, so this may be something serious to look at. However, having said that, to speak in defence of noncustodial parents, some of them really don't want that kind of information to happen. They don't want to see the enforcement orders and have been very good at making payments regularly and consistently. So there still, I think, needs to be an opt-out clause for both parties, but I think that would help.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Okay, is there anybody else who wishes to ask a question?

Anybody else wishing to speak on the bill? There is a member who wishes to speak on the bill. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. At this point I would like to get on the record regarding Bill 5, and certainly I would like to offer my support to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder in regards to this bill. Any time there can be an improvement in the contentious issues that can surround maintenance enforcement, I think it is a valid objective.

Now, to improve the process for obtaining and varying support orders where the claimant and the respondent live in separate jurisdictions. There are many times in the constituency office of Edmonton-Gold Bar that individuals come in and express a great deal of frustration, and if this legislation will reduce that frustration, which perhaps it will, then I'm in full support of it. I don't know how other hon. members of this Assembly feel about this or how often they get constituents coming with a great deal of frustration.

Now, this new legislation will also deal with how support orders made outside of Alberta can be registered and enforced in Alberta, and there are many examples by members from all parties in this Assembly talking about how individuals are coming to Alberta. They're coming from B.C., they're coming from Saskatchewan, they're coming from Manitoba, from all over Canada, to work here and carry on their lives. This legislation is to replace Alberta's existing enforcement of the Maintenance Order Act with legislation that's consistent across provincial and territorial jurisdictions.

I think everyone should support this legislation. I would encourage all members, Mr. Speaker, to do so. This legislation, in my view, should make it easier for claimants to obtain an initial support order within the framework of reciprocating jurisdictions. It will also, in my view, allow for a streamlining of court proceedings, and this should result in more efficient processing of applications and thus improve services to all Albertans. It is extremely important that the legislation be consistent with that of other jurisdictions; namely Ontario, Manitoba, and the Yukon.

Now, with those comments, Mr. Speaker, I shall cede the floor to another hon. member of this Assembly who would like to participate in the debate. Thank you.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Any questions or comments for the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder to close debate.

MR. RATHGEBER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed a pleasure to rise and close debate on Bill 5, the Interjurisdictional Support Orders Act. I note that the Official Opposition has agreed to this bill in principle. Yesterday, following my much heralded and accoladed speech in second reading, the Member for Edmonton-Centre posed a number of technical questions, and I propose to deal with those technical answers in Committee of the Whole.

So, in closing, the Interjurisdictional Support Orders Act will streamline the process for obtaining and varying court orders under provincial or territorial legislation when the parties live in different jurisdictions. Rather than a court hearing taking place in each jurisdiction, one single court hearing would occur in the respondent's jurisdiction, which will allow for quicker enforcement of Canadian orders once they are registered in Alberta.

I believe that all members who have spoken on this bill are in favour of the principles of the legislation, and I encourage all members to support Bill 5 at second reading. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 5 read a second time]

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. STEVENS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that the Assembly stand adjourned until 1:30 tomorrow afternoon.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Community Development.

International Women's Day

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to recognize International Women's Day tomorrow, March 8. This is a time to reflect on the progress made to advance women's equality, to look at the challenges of today and tomorrow, and to celebrate women's achievements.

In Alberta we have worked hard to remove barriers that would otherwise prevent women from achieving full equality. As Minister of Community Development with responsibility for human rights and for women's issues I know that we will continue to make good progress. The Human Rights, Citizenship and Multiculturalism Act includes gender as a protected ground, which means women may not be discriminated against because they are women. This act also provides for protection against sexual harassment. It addresses equal pay for the same or similar work. It also seeks to prevent discrimination based on pregnancy or source of income.

Though legislation offers protection, one of the best ways to bring about change is through education. This is a very significant part of International Women's Day, and it is an important role within my ministry. The Alberta human rights, citizenship, and multiculturalism education fund, also within my ministry, has funded a variety of education projects addressing issues of concern to women, including an emphasis on young women. However, women's issues go beyond the jurisdiction of one government ministry. As Alberta's minister responsible for women's issues I value the contributions made by other Alberta government departments that provide programs, services, and legislation of benefit to women.

Our elected female colleagues are excellent role models and leaders for women in this province. Alberta has had other strong female leaders in the past, as we all know. The best-known examples of course are the Famous Five: Henrietta Muir Edwards, Nellie McClung, Louise McKinney, Emily Murphy, and Irene Parlby, all of whom helped lead the struggle for women's equality that resulted in women being recognized as persons with full rights to participate in politics in Canada.

I also value the work of the federal/provincial/territorial ministers responsible for the status of women, with whom I have already met once and with whom I hope to meet at least annually. This important partnership allows us to collectively address issues that cross jurisdictional boundaries. For example, our work in the area of violence against women and women's economic independence is particularly noteworthy. The indicators of violence against women is one such project that will provide clear information that is useful for developing policies and programs that support women who unfortunately are victims of violence. It will also help to prevent further violence from occurring. As status of women ministers we are also undertaking a study to identify growth sectors of the labour market that offer high-paying jobs in which women may be underrepresented. We will also identify strategies pertaining to issues regarding recruitment, retention, and so on.

On Saturday, March 9, it will be my great pleasure to attend a special celebration of International Women's Day hosted by the Indo-Canadian Women's Association, care of the Mill Woods Welcome Centre for Immigrants in my greater area. I invite everyone to join me and to otherwise use this special occasion to recognize the contribution of all women and, in particular, Mr. Speaker, of Alberta women, to help celebrate their strengths, their contributions, their achievements and to think of ways that we can continue to foster equality and other issues of importance.

Please join me in acknowledging International Women's Day.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased today to rise in response to the minister's statement on International Women's Day. International Women's Day came about because of the Bread and Roses March of 1908. This march was a pivotal moment when women took their dreams and their visions to the streets. They knew things had to change, and they made it happen.

But dreams and visions don't become a reality overnight. It takes little steps and small victories to get to something greater. In honour of International Women's Day I challenge all members of this Assembly to help a young woman make a dream a reality. Help her take a small step. Give her a hand in achieving that victory. It could be your daughter, your granddaughter, your niece, or maybe your friend's daughter. Take the time to talk to her; find out what her dreams are. What is she afraid of? Where does she want to be next year, in five years, or in 10 years? Listen to her current favourite CD, and learn why she just can't live without it. Let her listen to the CD that you can't live without, or maybe your first choice is still on vinyl. Read each other's favourite book. Spend time volunteering together. Hang out at the mall and find out what all the fuss is about. Let her pick out your clothes before you do this. Set a fitness goal, and work together towards it. Learn all the rules to one sport and get off the couch and go play it. Teach her how to change the oil in her car. Help her learn about investing. Take the time to find out what she needs to do now for that totally cool job in the future. Now help her do it. Go for a walk somewhere new. Visit a museum or an art gallery, and learn more about one of the artists. Teach her how to cook that old family recipe. See how much fun you can have with just $10. Teach her how to lobby a politician. Help her organize a letter-writing campaign. And don't say that you are too busy. We can all be too busy. Stop and think of the people who have made a difference in your life. Now be that person for a young woman. Don't just recognize and celebrate. Take action and inspire.

If you need inspiration, remember the words of Nellie McClung: "Never retreat, never explain, never apologize. Get the thing done and let them howl." She also said:

The women who have achieved success in the various fields of labour have won the victory for us, but unless we all follow up and press onward the advantage will be lost. Yesterday's successes will not do for today!

Those words are as true today, Mr. Speaker, as they were when Nellie first said them.

Thank you.

head: Oral Question Period

THE SPEAKER: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Children's Services Special Case Review

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It has been reported that the Minister of Children's Services wants to know why her department did not fight for temporary guardianship of the twins who later died in a motel room in Thunder Bay. My question is to the Minister of Children's Services. The minister's own news release states that in addition to the special case review, there will be another internal investigation into staff accountability. Will the results of this be made public, and will the minister's role in this be also investigated?

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, we have issued a notice that we will have a press conference tomorrow at about 10:45 a.m. We will at that time outline the response that has been outlined in the opposition's question. The minister's own role in this no doubt will be a part of the public scrutiny and is always up for review, but clearly I will be responding on the two areas of the special case review and the human resource issues that we were reviewing.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Why did the minister not cooperate with the Alberta College of Social Workers when they asked for the names of the social workers involved so that they could do an internal review within their profession?

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, that's an excellent question. About two weeks ago I saw to my considerable surprise an article in the paper that referenced that the minister may in fact be on a witch hunt, which in fact in my view compromised what would have been a very credible college response. It was a fairly significant article that almost identified prematurely what the outcome of an investigation may or may not be. I have written – in fact, that letter no doubt will be distributed today to the college – a response to the college saying that in my view that was a serious compromise of their effectiveness in doing an unbiased investigation.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The department is the minister's responsibility. Will you commit to review process rather than trying to pinpoint any one or two employees in this case?

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, process is a great deal of what is being done with the special case review, and I will respond further and clarify further what process reviews will be involved following tomorrow's release.

THE SPEAKER: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Handicapped Children's Services

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Official Opposition is hearing from parents of handicapped children that prior to last fall's budget cuts their children qualified for support, but now they no longer do. As an example, one couple's child was born with cleidocranial dysostosis, which means that the jaw cannot function properly. To the Minister of Children's Services. This child used to qualify for support from your department but doesn't now when the medical processes are needed.

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, just prior to the commencement of our question period I received from the hon. member opposite a copy of a letter relative to the circumstance he has identified, and I will be very pleased to look into it and give a proper response. The intricacies not only of the letter but of this particular case, I think, would behoove me not to respond about it and give a half-measured response but to just confirm once again that this government spends for handicapped children's services for 9,000 children an average of $55,000 per child, or $55 million per year. I hope there is no inference that we are not spending money on children with special disabilities.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My next question is to the minister of health. Will the minister of health take the responsibility for children whose medical needs are no longer covered by Children's Services because these now fall under medical? In this case it's dental procedures.

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, there are certain types of conditions that are considered medical in need as it relates to what is referred to by physicians as maxillofacial conditions. Whether this particular individual case falls within the ambit of the program that we have for dealing with those conditions, I don't know, but certainly if the hon. leader would be good enough to forward to me the information, I'd be happy to look into that for him.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question is to the Premier. Obviously, we have a case here where a child has fallen through the cracks between Children's Services and health care. Will the Premier ensure that children who have medical needs where prevention measures have been taken care of by Children's Services will have them covered either by Children's Services or by Alberta Health?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, the hon. Minister of Children's Services has given an undertaking to investigate this matter and to report through the Legislature.

THE SPEAKER: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Early Intervention Programs

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. St. Michael school in Edmonton is one of the many to feel the cuts to early intervention programs. Sixty-three percent of their children are from single-parent families, 56 percent are from families on social assistance, and 42 percent of their children suffer attention deficit hyperactivity. My questions are to the minister of social services. Given that department cuts have meant the loss of this school's guidance counselor and social worker, does the minister consider them unnecessary in a school like St. Michael?

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, the particular circumstances in St. Michael school I would be pleased to take a look at along with the staff of Ma'Mōwe child and family services authority. It relates, in fact, to those supplementary supports that are provided to the school for the intervention programs.

Mr. Speaker, since last fall we have been working very clearly with three principles in mind: to in fact make any cost containment or reductions as far away from the children who are most at risk as possible. We have been working very hard to make sure that the children's needs are the primary focus, that health and safety come first. We have been working to be sure that we address that significant child welfare caseload that has been a part of our authorities' concerns over the past year.

Mr. Speaker, over the past five years child welfare caseloads have increased 65 percent. The number of social workers has increased by 60 percent, and the budget that is in Ma'Mōwe that is for child and family services increased 20 percent this year over last year to $178 million – I can't stress that too much: $178 million – which two years ago was less than $130 million.

We're putting money in the system even though we have cost-containment measures. We're doing our level best to put our priorities on the needs, the special needs of children. While parents and while our society abdicate that responsibility and when they do, we have found ourselves involved in many more cases than we might have been in the past. It's a trend, Mr. Speaker, that we hope we can curb. The early intervention programs – the hon. member is right – are an important part of what we have to work on, but we cannot do that in peril to those that are more acutely affected.

DR. MASSEY: Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: aren't you really adding to that caseload when the principal at St. Michael indicates that without those early intervention programs, those youngsters are going to end up being placed in government care?

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, every time there have been reductions or realignments of programs, there has always been another program available. I think that while we have not probably gone as far as we could have to communicate those on some of the frontline circumstances – perhaps St. Michael school is one of them – many have found other programs as options that they have found worked very well. I would be very pleased to follow up on the issues at St. Michael school with, obviously, the Minister of Learning as it pertains to learning issues and see if there's something more that should've been done in this situation. We are not denying the importance of early intervention programs, but simply put, we have been trying to use our dollars as wisely as possible, and we have been focusing not only on those early intervention programs but on the home visitation and early childhood development programs that we are also funding. Let's be clear. Last year we doubled the amount of money in this province that went out in early intervention and early child development. It is not a case of cutting and removing programs as much as it is trying to get the allocations right within every child and family services authority.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you. To the same minister, Mr. Speaker: has the minister visited schools like St. Michael, and would you commit to visit St. Michael to see the impact of those cuts?

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, of course I would visit St. Michael school. I have visited schools, and I could certainly provide the hon. member with the number of schools I've visited.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Teachers' Labour Dispute

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Earlier today the government announced that legislation will be introduced next week which sets up an arbitration process to settle the teachers' contract dispute. My question is to the Premier. Will the Premier assure this House that the legislation to be introduced next week will contain a sunset clause and apply only to this round of collective bargaining and not to future rounds?

MR. KLEIN: I think I can safely say that the legislation being contemplated would anticipate a sunset clause, Mr. Speaker, because we do want to in all sincerity return bargaining to the local jurisdictions, where it rightfully belongs.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Will the Premier also assure this House that the legislation to be introduced will not include provisions that will remove the teachers' right to strike after the contracts reached through binding arbitration expire?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, nothing of that nature is being contemplated in the legislation.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Will the Premier ensure that the upcoming review will focus on strengthening public education in this province and involve widespread public consultation with parents, teachers, students, school boards, and the general public, in stark contrast to the closed-door process used to develop the Mazankowski report?

MR. KLEIN: The form and nature of the summit or blue-ribbon panel or Mazankowski-style commission has yet to be determined, but I can give the hon. leader of the third party assurance that virtually everything will be on the table. There are so many factors involved in this complex issue of education, Mr. Speaker, and we need to have a full and broad-ranging discussion on all of these issues, issues such as student/teacher ratios, special-needs children, sparsity and distance, postsecondary. I mean, the list goes on and on and on. There are so many issues. Believe me; since it was announced that this is being contemplated, my office has received numerous phone calls with suggestions and ideas as to what should be included in this study of education. So it's my feeling and I believe the feeling of caucus that it should be wide open, and virtually everything is on the table.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-East, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Kyoto Accord

MR. AMERY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question today is to the hon. Minister of Environment. The Canadian Chamber of Commerce recently released a report estimating the cost of the Kyoto accord to the Canadian economy at about $30 billion, very close to our minister's own estimate. It is clear that the federal Liberal government is not listening to Canadians. In fact, the federal Liberal Environment minister just unveiled his hot air trading policy in Vancouver yesterday. So my question is to the Minister of Environment. Could the minister explain to Albertans as to what is the meaning of this hot air trading policy?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

DR. TAYLOR: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is a very important issue to Albertans. In fact, yesterday in the speech, if I could just quote a couple of phrases from it, the federal Minister of the Environment talked about buying emission reduction permits, buying emission reduction credits, and buying credits in the international marketplace. Who has to buy those? Well, I'll tell you who has to buy those according to this speech: major industrial plants, of course, which Alberta has plenty of in Fort Saskatchewan, Joffre, and other places in the province; oil sands operations – who else in Canada has oil sands operations? – petroleum refineries; and electrical generators. So those are the companies that will be penalized by having to buy emission credits.

These emission credits, Mr. Speaker, will be bought on an international market by these companies, which will increase the cost of these companies' products. As they increase the cost of these companies' products – you know, we compete with Mexico, whose products will not be increased; we compete with Venezuela and the U.S., whose products will not be increased.

So our position is very clear. If – if – the federal government ratifies this, Mr. Speaker, they must recognize that they're ratifying it on behalf of all Canadians, and all Canadians must share equally and fairly in the cost and not just Albertans.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. AMERY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: could the minister outline to Albertans as to what is the Alberta alternative to the Kyoto accord?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

DR. TAYLOR: Certainly, Mr. Speaker. Well, in the first place, let me say that we recognize that climate change is important, and we are taking many actions that I could outline: a project in Weyburn, Saskatchewan, with us and the federal government looking at carbon capture and storage. Perhaps the Minister of Innovation and Science would like to comment on that further when I'm done. So that's one thing. But we're doing many projects like that: Climate Change Central and Ride the Wind! in Calgary and so on.

Overall, Mr. Speaker, our position is very clear. We need a North American approach to climate change that includes the U.S., that includes Mexico, that includes Canada, because 92 percent of our trade is with countries who are noncompliers. We need a North American approach just like the Europeans have what they call the European bubble. Quite frankly, the European bubble can meet their goals, because in Germany they closed down a whole bunch of industries that were noncompetitive in East Germany and they reduced their CO₂. Portugal can increase its emissions by 30 to 37 percent, so they spread that around the European bubble.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. AMERY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Could the minister explain to Albertans who are very concerned about the effects of climate change on our water supplies as to what his department is doing to address this very important issue?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

DR. TAYLOR: Yes, Mr. Speaker. We announced a proposal or a consultation process this week where we are going to go out and look at issues all around the water supply, you know, in terms of how we deal with water, how we conserve water in this province, how we look after our water, because water is vital to future economic growth of Alberta.

I will make just one comment. There is not a clear connection in the science between the climate change and dwindling water supplies that we see in Alberta today.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Private Registry Offices

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Identity fraud seems to be a growing business in Alberta. It is also a crime. On November 14, 2001, the Minister of Government Services stated in this House, "Let me reassure you that drivers' licences are safe in Alberta today." My first question is to the Minister of Government Services. In light of the headline news from Calgary of what may be the largest fake driver's licence scam of its kind in Alberta, can the minister still assure us that things are fine?

Thank you.

2:00

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. COUTTS: Mr. Speaker, absolutely. I can stand here and let Albertans as well as this House know that our system is safe and secure in Alberta today, and we are always on the lookout for fraud and forgery. Always. It's a policy of this province that no one should be susceptible to this type of thing. We are working with stakeholders in this particular incident, particularly the Calgary city police. We co-operate through our department of registries to make sure that this type of thing does not happen in the future, and as a result of that, I can announce to this House today that effective this morning a freeze on the date of birth that goes onto a driver's licence will remain on that customer's record forever. There is no provision today to change the date of birth on that driver's licence. We have made that correction today.

One thing we'll make sure of is that this stays forever, that that date of birth will not be able to be changed without the approval of the registrar of Alberta Registries.

MR. MacDONALD: Again, Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: given that we need to ensure that all registry systems are secure and protect the privacy and confidentiality of personal information of Albertans, will the business contract of the private registry company in question in Calgary be revoked until this matter is investigated by your department?

MR. COUTTS: Mr. Speaker, this particular incident has absolutely no bearing on the particular registry office. It does have everything to do with an employee of a registry office and how that employee went about doing her work.

Mr. Speaker, our contract with registry agents is a very successful system in this province. Privatization is not the villain here. This is a particular problem with an employee, and this could happen in any business. It could even happen in a public utility business. It could happen in a private business. It's one of those things that when you take a person, a human being, and technology and put them together, if the motives of that particular individual working in that office, wherever that office may be, are against the rules of society, that's what causes the problem.

So, Mr. Speaker, I can say that of the 6 million transactions that our registry offices in Alberta handle today on behalf of Albertans, those 6 million transactions are handled in a safe and secure way.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister. Let's go north, in this case to Edmonton. Can the hon. minister be certain that things are fine when just this past January in Edmonton an accredited driving school was charged with offering a bribe with regards to a client's driving test while the same day a Mill Creek registry was charged with forgery and taking secret commissions?

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. COUTTS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that this registry was charged, it would not be appropriate for me to comment. However, I will say that because that individual was charged, the registry office was closed immediately. That is no different than where the employees in registry offices must sign a code of conduct and ethics, and if they violate that code of conduct and ethics, they are immediately dismissed by the registry agent manager.

I would also like to reassure Albertans that I will be contacting our stakeholders, and in this particular case the stakeholder will be the Alberta Registry Agents Association. We are going to take a look at criminal record checks or security clearances for all employees of registry agents' offices, and we will be doing that in the very near future.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Confined Feeding Operations

MR. MARZ: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first question today is for the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. Earlier this year the Natural Resources Conservation Board took over responsibility for approving confined feeding operations, or CFOs, as we now call them. This new process has caused some alarm amongst some neighbouring constituents of CFO developers who fear the new process will allow for a huge and sudden increase in the number of CFOs in their neighbourhoods. My question to the minister is: how will these constituents who have concerns with the CFO application have their concerns heard and fairly dealt with?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. CARDINAL: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Of course, the NRCB is providing a very good and important service for Albertans for a very, very important industry. Agriculture is very important to all Albertans. In fact, Albertans living near the CFOs will actually have more to say in the decision-making process as far as approval with the new legislation that is in place. An example of this: the NRCB will notify Albertans that are living near the proposed CFOs, and these Albertans will also have an opportunity to review applications and provide their input and comments.

As well, of course, because municipalities are very important in the process, municipalities will be a part of the decision-making process. Municipalities will have an automatic standing with the NRCB and will be asked to provide input in the application process. This is the important area, Mr. Speaker, that in fact the NRCB will ask municipalities to identify areas where CFOs may apply and where they may not apply, and I think that is a good process to have.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MARZ: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second question is to the Minister of Environment. Some experts still express concerns about the impact of CFOs on water quality and say that another Walkerton is right around the corner. What assurances can the minister give that the water supply in rural Alberta will remain safe?

DR. TAYLOR: I'd like to assure the member that because of these changes in the way it's going to be handled, there is no change in environmental regulations. The environmental regulations, I think, will be in fact put into effect more appropriately because they are going to be done by one body that oversees the whole thing, and as a result it'll be consistent across the province, Mr. Speaker.

The other thing I would say is that Alberta does have the most strict drinking water standards in the country and the most strict standards for operators in the country. So certainly as we go forward with that, Mr. Speaker, we will maintain that and maintain our high-quality water.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MARZ: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Minister of Environment: given that some small farms and residents have told me that they've been waiting over a year to get their water wells registered, is Alberta Environment placing a higher priority on water well licensing for CFOs than on residential water well registrations?

DR. TAYLOR: No. I can assure the member that that has not in fact happened. What has in fact happened, Mr. Speaker, is that this program was ongoing for three years, and we actually got most of the applications in just the last few months. We have 25,000 applications on our desks right now, so we will get to them hopefully by the end of March.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

Out-of-region Patients

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Calgary health region recently instituted a policy of limiting access for out-of-region patients during times of high demand. Rural doctors are worried that this will mean limited access and greater restrictions for rural residents. My questions are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Given that the minister is ultimately responsible for the health care of all Albertans, what is he doing to ensure that rural Albertans receive the same access to care as urban Albertans?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, I have asked this question of the regional health authority in Calgary. I've been advised that there are approximately 12,000 people that come from outside of the regional health authority to seek medical care within that particular region's boundaries. They assure me that the most urgent and emergent of cases are dealt with within the city of Calgary. They, of course, do have critical times when they are not able to take all people who come in, but those that have the most emergent and urgent needs do get looked after immediately.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

2:10

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Even so, how does the minister justify providing one level of care to residents, say, of Bragg Creek and a different level of care to residents just down the road in Okotoks and High River?

MR. MAR: Well, Mr. Speaker, that's not the case at all. We treat all people based on their medical need and not based on the geography in which they live.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As RHAs begin closing their doors to patients from outside their regions, what is the minister doing to ensure that Albertans don't end up with 17 different levels of care?

MR. MAR: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think it would be fair to say that we have much more of a system now than we ever have. The hon. member will recall a time when there were over 200 hospital boards and health regions throughout the province. There are now 17. I can assure the hon. member and members of this House that more than ever our regions are working together. They are collaborating. They are ensuring that transportation among and between regional health authorities is as seamless as possible, that the people who have the highest needs are dealt with immediately. Of course, an individual who has an urgent or emergent need, regardless of where they live in the province, will get the care that they require.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora is heading up a committee that is responsible for looking at further opportunities for collaboration among and between regional health authorities. I expect some good work to be done by that member and the members on his committee, and they'll be coming back this fall. But make no mistake about it, Mr. Speaker. More than ever our regional health authorities are working together and collaborating, and their interests are not in their regions but on patients in the province of Alberta.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Justice System

MR. HLADY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Members of Calgary's legal community and specifically the Alberta branch of the Canadian Bar Association have brought a number of concerns to my attention about our justice system. It is their opinion that an overall lack of provincial funding is causing problems in how justice is administered in Alberta. My questions today are to the Minister of Justice and Attorney General. Because the Canadian Bar Association has identified court facilities as a critical situation, can the minister update us on the status of a new single-court complex previously discussed in this House that could be paid for by the private sector?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. HANCOCK: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Calgary court situation is indeed an interesting one. We have six different locations for courts. It was identified in January '99 at the justice summit as an area where there was confusion among the public as to where to access courts from time to time, and of course we're reaching a point where we've reached capacity. Infrastructure has been very helpful in both providing the renovations on a timely basis and providing – we have what we call affectionately the trailer courts in Calgary, and those have been very helpful.

But it's very, very necessary that we proceed with a court facility, a justice facility in Calgary on a timely basis. Because of the need to look for innovative ways to do that in order to get the financing, we will certainly be considering – and we've been promoting, and I've been talking with the Minister of Infrastructure and others in government and with the private sector – how we might do that with a public/private partnership.

MR. HLADY: To the same minister: can the minister respond to concerns that inadequate resources have led to the deterioration of our justice system?

MR. HANCOCK: Well, Mr. Speaker, inadequate or under funding is always a matter of opinion and a matter of perspective. We have a very good justice system in this province, and we provide justice services on a very timely basis and, I would suggest, with good quality. The people working in the system do a very, very good job. We've supplemented the funding with supplementary estimates last fall when we needed to add additional prosecutors and to pay better in that area, and we've since had a supplementary estimate just last week which helped us address the issue with respect to judicial clerks, which was a problem.

So we're moving to deal with areas where there are resourcing problems and have handled that area. We also, of course, have had a bit of a problem, particularly in Calgary, which I think is what's generating some of the letters from the Canadian Bar Association, in that the hiring freeze in government has impacted the fact that as we had problems in the judicial clerk area, we had an unusual number of vacancies in that area. So we've had to work around that.

But, Mr. Speaker, services are being delivered on a timely basis. Where there have been holdups, those holdups have been limited to areas where there is not an urgency. We've been working with the courts and with the court services division to make sure that the services are delivered on a timely basis to Calgarians.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister to supplement.

MR. LUND: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is indicating that there's been a problem with providing services as it applies to the Court of Appeal. It is true that we did have some difficulty. As the hon. member probably knows, back a year ago January there was a mold discovered in the old Court of Appeal. We had to move the people out of that building. We then had difficulty housing the Court of Appeal in another location. We have tested a number of buildings to make sure that the air quality meets the standards that the Court of Appeal justices feel is necessary. It has not been a case of lack of money; it's been very difficult to site the Court of Appeal. Of course, there has been some inconvenience because they did have to sit in Edmonton as opposed to Calgary. But certainly we have done everything we possibly can to find air quality that would be satisfactory to the Court of Appeal.

MR. HLADY: Well, thank you very much for that answer.

Can the minister address the concern that a lack of funding is increasing the time to trial in Alberta courts?

MR. HANCOCK: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. In fact, average time to trial across Alberta has not increased but has been reduced significantly in recent years. The average time to trial in Provincial Court was 14 weeks, the same as it was in 1996-97 and three weeks shorter than 1998-99. Times in other courts have fluctuated up and down since the 1990s, but average time to trial in our courts has remained relatively stable.

There are some very interesting developments in that area, Mr. Speaker, that I believe the hon. member and others in this House might be very interested in. You've been reading lately in the newspapers about the collaborative law project in Medicine Hat, where they're finding that the family law list has essentially dried up because lawyers are working with their clients to keep things out of the courts, to resolve things on a collaborative and a mediated basis. It's a very positive approach and one which is spreading across the province. Medicine Hat leads the province again in that area.

Mr. Speaker, I would encourage other ways of mediation, arbitration, and the collaborative law process which takes those issues that don't need to be in the courts and, quite frankly, aren't effectively resolved in the courts out of the courts, and that allows the court resources to improve our time to trial even more.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Land Acquisition

MR. BONNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In November the county of Barrhead gave a campground back to the province in exchange for $10,000 and three paved approaches. Alberta Transportation needs the land for a road project. My questions are to the Minister of Transportation. Is this type of innovative funding strategy available to all municipalities?

MR. STELMACH: Mr. Speaker, land disposition and land acquisition is done by the minister responsible, and that's the Minister of Infrastructure.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. BONNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My next question is to the Minister of Infrastructure. How did your department decide that a campground was worth $10,000 and three paved approaches?

MR. LUND: Well, Mr. Speaker, I will have to take that particular question under advisement because, quite frankly, I cannot follow every land transaction that we have in the province of Alberta, because there are hundreds if not thousands of them annually.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. BONNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister. The province had previously turned the campsite over to the county for one dollar. Is land for road projects really that expensive?

MR. LUND: Well, Mr. Speaker, usually with any land – and a campground is one of them – the process is very straightforward. We first offer it to the municipality, and if the municipality is not prepared to purchase the land, then we move out to the private sector. Once again, for this particular incident that the member is talking about, I wish he would have asked me to get some information for him. I cannot follow on a daily basis every transaction.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

NHL Player Levy

MR. MASON: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the Premier confirmed that this government is considering yet another new tax, this time on hockey players. The Premier also indicated that the idea of tying this tax to an agreement to keep the Oilers and Flames in Alberta was interesting. The New Democrat opposition has received positive reaction to the idea of tying any sort of tax assistance for NHL teams to some sort of agreement which keeps those teams in Alberta. To the Premier: has the Premier given any further thought to the role that this tax might play in keeping NHL hockey in Alberta past 2004?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, indeed, all the steps that we have taken as a government – the lottery program, the contributions to improving the infrastructure of two publicly owned facilities, i.e. the Pengrowth Saddledome and the Skyreach arena, and the taxation system – are designed to keep those two teams in Alberta. This has been done in concert with the management of the two teams, and while there's been no formal written assurance that the teams will remain here, everything that is being done is being done to keep the teams here at least until 2004, at which time the fundamental problem of salaries can be discussed.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Would the Premier agree that Albertans would be justifiably angry if the government gave the owners of the Oilers and the Flames millions of dollars of tax money yet they moved the teams anyway?

MR. KLEIN: Well, Mr. Speaker, it only stands to reason that if the teams are not here, then there would be no taxation. I mean, who would we tax? Do you mean that the Buffalo Sabres are going to come in here and play with themselves and pay the tax? Think about it. [interjections]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands has the floor.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, clearly the Premier is rattling his sabre.

In the event that one or both of Alberta's NHL teams are moved in the next few years, what will this Premier tell Albertans about this historic lost opportunity to secure the future of NHL hockey in Alberta? How will he explain his failure to act?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, if the teams are lost – and I don't think that they will be. I think the measures that we've taken, the measures that the two teams have taken to bring back fan support – by the way, the way the two teams are playing right now makes it I don't know if I should say quite likely but possibly likely that they will make the playoffs. It's that kind of fan support, it's the kind of support that the teams receive from the government and the municipalities that will provide assurances to Flames and Oilers fans that the teams will be around until they can come to grips with the fundamental problem. That's the problem of salaries, and I understand that can't be negotiated until the year 2004.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Physician Achievement Review Program

MS DeLONG: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A constituent recently asked about a questionnaire she filled in about the practice of her family doctor. She wanted to know what this information is used for. My questions are for the Minister of Health and Wellness. What is the physician achievement review program, and why is the public participating in it?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, this is the first program of its kind in North America. The PAR program, as it's often referred to, requires the practice of every licensed physician to be reviewed at least once every five years, and since the program was instituted in 1999, some 1,600 physicians have participated.

The program is unique because it gives patients an opportunity to evaluate the performance of their physician, and each physician's review includes a series of questionnaires that are completed by the physician, that physician's peers, and a number of the physician's patients. By answering questions about the performance of their doctor, the public can provide very valuable feedback on how physicians can provide the best care to their patients.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MS DeLONG: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Also for the Minister of Health and Wellness: how many Albertans have completed the questionnaires?

MR. MAR: I'm advised that some 40,000 Albertans have participated in performance reviews of their doctors under the PAR program. The public will continue to play a key role in this very important aspect of physician continuing competence programs.

There has been an independent review of the PAR program, Mr. Speaker, and it was found in a survey of patients that they very strongly support this particular program. The program will help Albertans understand that all health care providers, including physicians, must maintain a safe and competent level of practice.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MS DeLONG: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. How can Albertans get the information about the independent evaluation of the physician achievement review program?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, as I indicated, an independent review has been conducted as required under the Medical Profession Act, and at the appropriate time later today I will table the report that has been prepared. As I indicated also, this is the first program of its type in North America and is being adopted by the college of physicians in the province of Nova Scotia and is currently being looked at by the province of Manitoba. The College of Physicians and Surgeons of Alberta will provide copies of the review to the public, and I'm advised that they will post it on their web site. My department will also refer public inquiries about this important report to the college.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Children's Services in Grande Prairie

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We have a breaking story from the Grande Prairie Herald-Tribune which indicates that another 16-year-old city youth was weeks away from returning to his mother's care when he froze to death December 20 after a drinking party blocks away from the group home child and family services placed him in. Could the minister please tell us why this youth wasn't properly monitored?

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, today I cannot tell the hon. member what she is asking. I will certainly undertake to bring it forward. I have checked all of the information to date, and I know that there are more questions I have. So I will bring it forward when it's appropriate.

MS CARLSON: Well, Mr. Speaker, can the minister answer this question then: what's wrong with the care that she's providing to youth in Grande Prairie? We have ongoing incidents where youth in care are not properly supervised and are not properly taken care of.

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, if this is a generalization referencing the case that was brought forward the other day, there are some very unique circumstances which have been involved in that case. It's not a general epidemic that affects one particular stream of youth or one particular situation. They're very individual cases. My preliminary review of the second situation would indicate that it's not remotely connected with the first situation. There was a question in this House the other day, for example: was it a regular occurrence to have children unsupervised in motels or having access to motels? In fact, according to the authority it isn't a regular case; it is a rare occurrence. Although motels are sometimes used to harbour families in situations when family violence has occurred, it is not regular to put children in them. So I would rather not generalize and to be very specific in my response and provide more information later.

MS CARLSON: Mr. Speaker, as twice a month for drinking parties for youth in care is twice too often, can the minister tell us why this death occurred on December 20 and it's only coming to light now?

MS EVANS: Not today.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, followed by the hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Low-income Program

MR. CAO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question today is to the hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment. Mr. Minister, you have indicated to this Assembly that you have received the report from the MLA committee that reviewed the low-income programs provided to Albertans. In the meantime people are still facing problems. For example, a constituent of mine who was on the AISH program now receives a Canada disability pension, a monthly income of over $860. That disqualifies him from AISH coverage by a mere $10. Now he has to pay $60 per month for his medication. That takes away from his food money. To the minister: when are you going to fix this problem in such a way that the lower income who are on medication can get help?

MR. DUNFORD: Mr. Speaker, the member is quite right in identifying this problem, and it happens almost continually as people are on the AISH program as the disability income increases. This, I think, points out the need that we had for that low-income review team. Of course, it was one of the things that's been identified. Some of these programs are simply not fair. They don't provide the kinds of services that people need, in my view, and I hope, then, that all members in this House will see that some reform is required.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. CAO: Thank you. My first supplement is also to the same minister. Considering the tight budget, could the minister look into these situations case by case, based on the personal hardship circumstances, while waiting for the broad-brush policy changes?

MR. DUNFORD: Well, we'll do what we can, Mr. Speaker, in that sense, but again I think the member is on to an excellent line of questioning here. It shows the need that we have here in Alberta to move away from labeling, to move away from entitlements, and start looking and treating people as individuals with individual needs.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. CAO: Thank you. My last supplement to the same minister: what is it that my constituent can do to get his medication covered so he doesn't have to spend his food money on medication?

MR. DUNFORD: What I might suggest at this point, Mr. Speaker, because we're talking now about a specific constituent, is to make sure that we've been advised, and we'll look into it on an individual basis.

THE SPEAKER: Yesterday in the question period several questions were addressed to the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness. The hon. minister would like to respond to those questions now, and that's permissible, but under our long-standing tradition I also will accord, then, the opposition member who raised the question a supplemental with respect to it.

The hon. minister.

Gas Flaring Study

MR. MAR: Very good, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie asked about a western Canada study on animal and human health effects associated with exposure to flares. My recollection from my time as Minister of Environment is that there was a program going forward on animal health studies, and that is continuing. We still have committed $2 million to fund a human health portion on this particular study, but we are deferring our commitment on this study. While we think that it still has potential to be of value, we will determine our next steps once the study on animal health results are available. The Minister of Environment may wish to supplement, sir.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

DR. TAYLOR: Certainly, Mr. Speaker. This is an ongoing study. It's a three- to four-year study. The total cost of the study is in the neighbourhood of about $19 million. The province has spent $11 million so far. It's a study that crosses the three prairie provinces. We're in a position now where just in supplementary estimates the other evening we were given another $4 million for this study. There's another $4 million on top of that that needs to be spent, so we're presently encouraging the other provinces of Manitoba and Saskatchewan. They haven't put in any money yet, period, so we're encouraging the provinces of Manitoba and Saskatchewan to contribute their fair share. However, they are in a little different financial situation as they have NDP governments.

Alberta Winter Games

MR. RENNER: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's with great pleasure that I rise today to acknowledge the success of the Alberta Winter Games held February 16 to 19 in my constituency of Medicine Hat. [some applause] Thank you, hon. members.

The Alberta Winter Games provide a competitive opportunity for Alberta's developing athletes mostly between 12 and 17 years old. This year there were approximately 2,800 participating athletes, coaches, and officials. Many of these committed athletes will continue on to the Canada Games and, Mr. Speaker, perhaps one day to the Olympics. You know, Jamie Sale, one half of our Canadian gold medal figure skating pair in Salt Lake City, was first an Alberta Games athlete.

To organize the games, much co-ordinated hard work is required. I would like to acknowledge the entire board of directors for a job well done; in particular, Mr. Ron Zablocki, chairman, and Mr. Ken Sauer, vice-chairman, who spearheaded the outstanding event. Of course, I would like to acknowledge and thank the roughly 3,000 volunteers and countless corporate and organizational sponsors who ensured the success of the games. If you're keeping track of numbers, Mr. Speaker, you will note that there were more volunteers than participants. Southeastern Alberta's generous support and dedication has shown itself once again. Finally, I would like to congratulate all of the athletes. Your commitment to training and excellence serves you well and our province well.

As usual, Medicine Hat's local athletes were well represented and particularly successful. I would like to send out a special congratulation to the Medicine Hat athletes participating in archery, biathlon, bowling, boxing, curling, fencing, gymnastics, judo, hockey, ringette, squash, and various skiing and skating events.

Mr. Speaker, hats off to Medicine Hat, our wonderful host city for the 2002 Alberta Winter Games.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Public Health Care System

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's public health care system is sustainable. Spending on health care in Alberta today is not out of line with historic levels nor with other provinces, and the fundamentals of an outstanding system remain in place. What Alberta's system needs more than ever is steady, strong management. It needs stable funding. It needs innovation within a public framework. Albertans deserve an efficient and effective health care system, and the Alberta Liberal opposition is working hard to ensure that Albertans get exactly that.

The Premier and others have gone to lengths to convince Albertans that provincial spending on health care is soaring and out of control. By reliable measures that simply is not true. Once inflation and a larger population are accounted for, it turns out that the Alberta government is spending about the same amount on health care as it did 10 and even 15 years ago. We had an excellent system then. We can have an excellent system again.

The current boom-and-bust cycle in health care funding is wasteful and harmful. It is unacceptable that events a few months ago on the other side of the world are determining how long Albertans wait for health care services today. Stable funding is needed, and it is possible.

The most recent Auditor General's report contains over 20 pages of detailed recommendations on ways to improve the system, but rather than improving management, the provincial government seems intent on turning health care over to market forces. Market forces do work well for many things, but they do not work well for health care. In study after study the evidence of this is overwhelming. For-profit hospitals in the U.S. typically function at about 65 percent of capacity. Alberta's major hospitals run at over 90 percent capacity. It may well be that there isn't a for-profit hospital in North America that operates at the efficiencies routinely achieved by hospitals in Alberta.

This doesn't mean there isn't room for improvement. There are a host of innovations that should be enacted within the public system. Specialized surgical centres for such things as eyes and joints are operating with wonderful efficiencies within the public system. Alberta's health care system does not need radical surgery. It needs steady, strong leadership.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

International Women's Week

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to acknowledge and to speak in support of International Women's Week in Alberta, March 3 to 9. While disgracefully there are many countries and numerous communities around the world who treat their women as second- and third-class citizens, I wish to point out that the intrinsic value of women and the rightful position of women in society is first-class.

Over the past several months there were two pertinent events that took place in St. Albert. The first was an exhibition called Connecting Voices at our Musee Heritage Museum, which was a collage of photographs, taped voice interviews, and art pieces created by and for women of St. Albert past and present. The other event was a one-person play written and performed by St. Albert actor Maureen Rooney, who presented an historical, autobiographical drama of six remarkable women who played significant roles in building our community.

The task as I see it before us today, as we reflect on the successes and the circumstances of women around the world, is to raise the awareness of every man and woman that every human being, that every woman is first and foremost equal in dignity and rights.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Public Health Care System

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When historians look back at the year 2002, they may well write that it was a landmark year for our Canadian health care system. While the Alberta Tory government speeds up privatization of the system based on the Mazankowski report, the federal Romanow commission will issue its final report by year's end. It's very clear that the Alberta government's strategy is to implement the Mazankowski recommendations incrementally in the hope that it won't give Albertans who advocate strengthening Alberta's public health care system a tangible focus to shoot at. That's why no fewer than seven Tory-dominated task forces, panels, and committees have been set up to implement this report. The government clearly hopes that if they can generate enough fog, the Mazankowski report's core recommendations of delisting, user fees, and further privatization will be obscured.

The New Democrats oppose turning health care into a market commodity. We reject privatization. Evidence from the U.S. and elsewhere clearly shows that this will only drive up costs and impede access. Instead, we propose gradually extending public coverage to include home care and prescription drugs. Instead of shifting more costs onto the sick, the injured, and the elderly in every family, the New Democrats support funding health care as a shared responsibility through the public treasury.

Finally, the federal government must contribute a greater share of health care funding if we are to maintain a national health care system available equitably to all Canadians. Innovative solutions to the problems facing health care can and must be found within the public system. If medicare is to be strengthened rather than put on the road to ruin, it will be due to the efforts of the millions of Canadians who know that medicare works. The New Democrats built medicare. We ask all Albertans to join with us in making sure it's strengthened and sustained.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Presenting Reports by Standing and Special Committees

THE SPEAKER: The chair of the Public Accounts Committee.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As chair of the Standing Committee on Public Accounts I hereby submit five copies of the report of the Standing Committee on Public Accounts for the First Session of the 25th Legislature covering the committee's activities in 2001.

Thank you.

head: Notices of Motions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Community Development.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, normally at this time I'd be moving a motion regarding Written Questions and Motions for Returns; however, there are none on the Order Paper. Nonetheless, I thought it important to mention this for the awareness of the House.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Learning.

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm giving oral notice today of Bill 12, the Education Services Settlement Act.

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Community Development.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, in supplement to the excellent accolades that are already offered by our Premier to Alberta's Olympic team, I'm pleased to add my sincere personal congratulations as minister responsible for sport in Alberta to all athletes, coaches, trainers, parents, and family members, and also to hereby table personal letters of congratulations to our Olympic medal winners, including Ryan Smyth, Eric Brewer, Jarome Iginla, Kevin Martin, Don Bartlett, Don Walchuk, Carter Rycroft, Ken Trahnberg, Jamie Sale, Catriona LeMay Doan, Cindy Klassen, Beckie Scott, Deidra Dionne, Alanna Kraus, Colleen Sostorics, Cassie Campbell, Kelly Bechard, Hayley Wickenheiser, Danielle Goyette, and Dana Antal.

I'd also like to just note quickly, Mr. Speaker, that I will be attending on behalf of the government of Alberta and all Albertans the special celebration on March 11 at Edmonton city hall to honour these outstanding Alberta-based athletes in the Pride in Our Olympians ceremony.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-West,

MS KRYCZKA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With your permission I would like to table five copies of three letters from constituents of mine in Calgary-West – Gisele Durand-Smith, Trevor L. Smith, and Claude J. Durupt – requesting that the Bighorn wildland recreation area be designated as a wildland park.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With your permission I'd like to table five copies of a document known as Edmonton this Quarter: Winter 2001-02. This document shows that Edmonton's population includes a significant and growing segment of people for whom basic housing is unaffordable, inappropriate, or simply not available.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have this afternoon two documents that I would like to table for the convenience and for the information of all hon. members of the Assembly. The first one is proposals that are being discussed, hopefully currently, for changes to the Appeals Commission of the Workers' Compensation Board. The second document is also related to proposals to change and improve, hopefully, the Workers' Compensation Board. These are for all members of the Assembly.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

MR. MAR: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Sir, I beg leave to table the requisite number of copies of a document entitled Alberta's Physician Achievement Review Program: a Review of the First Three Years.

MR. MASON: Mr. Speaker, I'm tabling today with your permission five copies of a letter from Mr. Stan Halluk of Calgary addressed to the Minister of Health and Wellness on the subject of toxic flaring. As flaring and venting of solution gases pose considerable risk to public health, Mr. Halluk is urging the Minister of Health and Wellness to support Bill 203, the Gas Flaring Elimination Act.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today with your permission. The first is the required number of copies of a letter from Neil Evans, who is dissatisfied with how the government has handled the concerns of teachers, writing in part that he's disillusioned with the negative attitude and that a school system that used to be the best in the world has been changed.

The second letter is from Pam Head, who wanted her voice heard in the Legislature with respect to health care reform and A Framework for Reform report. She urges the Premier to go slow on a very important issue and, you know, in her and my opinion, take a lot of planning and public input. So she would like the Premier to slow the process down.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Projected Government Business

DR. MASSEY: Would the Government House Leader share with the Assembly the projected government business for next week?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

head: Orders of the Day

head: Transmittal of Estimates

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Finance.

MRS. NELSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have received a certain message from Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, which I now transmit to you.

THE SERGEANT-AT-ARMS: Order!

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, the Lieutenant Governor transmits estimates of certain sums required for the service of the province and of certain sums required from the lottery fund for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2003, and recommends the same to the Legislative Assembly.

Please be seated.

MRS. NELSON: Mr. Speaker, I wish to table the 2002-2003 interim supply estimates. These interim supply estimates will provide spending authority for the Legislative Assembly and for the government for two months ending May 31, 2002. Before that date, probably by mid-May, it is anticipated that spending authorization will have been provided for the entire fiscal year ending March 31, 2003. As announced previously, we are tabling Budget 2002 on March 19.

Interim supply amounts are based on departments' needs for routine monthly payments. In addition, they also need to make some annual payments at the beginning of the fiscal year and at the beginning of the quarter. Payments also need to be made for deposit by government clients before the due date of June 1.

head: Government Motions

[Government Motion 12 carried]

Second Reading

Bill 6 Student Financial Assistance Act

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Learning.

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a great pleasure for me to stand today and move second reading of Bill 6.

Bill 6 represents a compilation of two acts, the Students Finance Act and the Student Loan Act.

By way of background, earlier this year the chartered banks in Canada decided to withdraw from the student loan portfolios. Subsequently what has happened is that the government of Alberta and numerous governments across the country have had to go in and set up a direct loan authorization process, and that is what this act is. This act does go further in that it allows for more harmonization with the federal Student Loans Act and, indeed, Mr. Speaker, provides a much better system for the students.

There has been considerable consultation with student groups around the province, including ACTISEC, CAUS, as well as numerous graduate student associations and things like that, and they are all in favour of that, Mr. Speaker. I will be tabling letters in support of Bill 6 probably when it is in committee.

In essence, what this does is it gives us the authority to give direct loan assistance to the students of Alberta. Again, as I stated, Mr. Speaker, the students of Alberta are very much in favour of this. The Students Finance Board is continued on.

The other point that I will make, Mr. Speaker, is that eventually the Student Loan Act and the Students Finance Act will be repealed. They will not be repealed until those loans that are under those acts have expired. So they still will be acts under the government of Alberta until the loans that have been placed under them are finished.

Again, Mr. Speaker, I don't foresee any problems in this. We have had extensive consultation, and I do believe that it is a very good bill. The students of Alberta believe that it's a very good bill, and I will very soon be tabling correspondence from all the various students' groups around the province in support of this legislation.

I await the debate in the Assembly, and hopefully we can move on to legally give the students of Alberta the right to the student loans that they are receiving and will continue to provide one of the best student loan programs in the country of Canada to our students.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to have the opportunity to speak at second reading of Bill 6, the Student Financial Assistance Act. My overall view of the bill is one that agrees with the minister. I think it's a bill that should be considered good progress on the way to a sound loans program, and as such, it's welcomed in the Legislature. We, too, have had an opportunity to talk to a number of the students involved, and they are welcoming the bill as just that, as progress.

The essential thing that the bill does is put the loans program firmly back in the control of the government, where the motive, I think, is more of a social motive, one that is concerned with encouraging students, easing the way for students to progress into the postsecondary school system as opposed to the profit motive that seemed to be driving some of the bank dealings with students and one that certainly the students felt quite keenly about. I think students are looking forward to the government re-establishing their control over it.

I think one of the other good things about it is that although there's still the federal and the provincial government involved in the program, there's one-stop shopping for those students now. That's something that, again, is encouraging for students, and I think accessing the loans program is made easier by the changes that are in Bill 6.

One of the concerns – and it's not inherently a problem in Bill 6, although Bill 6 perpetuates it – is the need to distinguish between undergraduate and graduate students. At the current time they're all treated similarly under the loans program, and I think we'll all agree that there are vast differences in the lives of undergraduates and graduates. Graduate students tend to be older. Many of them have established families and are studying while they're taking time away from their occupation. Many of them have their families with them, as opposed to undergraduates who can live in residence. I don't think you'll find many graduate students living in residence. Five or six or eight undergraduates living in a home is commonplace, but you don't see the same groupings of graduates because of their family circumstances. The kind of research tasks that graduate students find themselves involved in and the kind of dedication to their programs is different for them than it is for undergraduates.

Most importantly, I suspect, at least for the graduates students, is the whole problem of costs. Their costs for the most part are much greater than the costs that undergraduates face. All you have to do is look at renting a two-bedroom or a three-bedroom apartment in this city to house a family while you're studying, and you can see the kinds of financial barriers that immediately arise for a graduate student who is coming from out of city to study here.

So there are huge differences in costs, and the obligations of graduate students, that they have to continue to pay while they're studying, are again costs that I think are much greater than they are for most undergraduates. So I think that in the future with the changes that the government undertakes – and this may be more at the administrative level than it will be at a legislated level – is some recognition of the need to differentiate the kinds of costs that are allowed for under the loans program.

Some of the other assumptions in the loans program I think have been looked at too. One of the big problems for many students is the assumption of parent help and that there will be some contribution to the student's program and that the loan they eventually are able to secure will be dictated in part by their families and the contribution that their families make. The Canada Millennium Scholarship Foundation has done some research on this parental contribution, and they've discovered that about a third of the students under the age of 22 are not receiving assistance from their parents and that a significant number of students aged 22 or more are getting help from their parents.

So the whole business of parental support is really quite problematic. The indication is that summer employment is no longer able to play as significant a part as it used to in terms of meeting student costs. For instance, one in 10 students doesn't work during the summer. They travel; they opt to do other things. Eighteen percent of the students who do work, in this survey that the foundation conducted, earned less than $2,000 during that summer period, and when you take out their living expenses, it left them very little to contribute towards a program. Thirty percent only earned between $2,000 and $4,000, the $4,000 coming close to covering tuition. So I think that some of the assumptions in the present loans program about students' ability to earn are ones that should be revisited as we move to improve the program.

I suspect that most of the comments I have are, again, about the administration of the current program and the need for changes there. I guess if there's a plea from students, it is that the way in which loans are determined or the amount of money they are allowed to borrow be given careful scrutiny and that there be built into that criteria some mechanism for change that keeps current the costs for accommodation and the other kinds of costs that students face. There's also a need for some consistency in what the loans program will allow them to consider as a cost. For instance, they're allowed to claim fees that are levied for some programs – and most notable was the $7,000 for the dental program here – but other program fees are not acknowledged by the loans board. It puts an additional burden on students who are unable to borrow the kinds of dollars that they need to actually pay the costs that they face.

I think with that, Mr. Speaker, I'll conclude. As the minister indicated, the students across the province are encouraged by the legislation. They're happy to see it back with the government, and they look forward to working with the government to make sure that it meets the needs of all students.

Thank you.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, it's an honour to stand and speak to Bill 6, the Student Financial Assistance Act, and I as well would like to indicate the support for this bill. Even though it was a reform necessitated by the withdrawal of the banks from the administration of student loans, it is a good step and I think one which students have advocated for many years. I myself in my first real job was working for a student organization. Some may not call that a real job, but I did. We advocated . . .

MR. HUTTON: ETS?

MR. MASON: No, it was before then. It was a long time ago.

We regularly visited this Legislature to put forward the position of students, sometimes in very, very large numbers, Mr. Speaker. One day we came across with 5,000 students to speak with the minister of advanced education at that time about the concerns of students. Many of these concerns have not changed in the 20-odd years since that time, but it is indeed a positive step to get the banks out of the way in what is essentially a government-to-student relationship, which has as its objective making postsecondary education more accessible.

It was always, in my view, sort of mixed up, because it was a loan, and therefore the federal government and the provinces all thought that it might be better delivered through banks because they give loans, and in many respects the features of it as a program to encourage accessibility were lost. I think we're well rid of the banks from this particular program, and the government, I think, will have more accountability, less bureaucracy, less paperwork, and I think it can only benefit not only the government but particularly benefit the students.

I want to take this opportunity as well, Mr. Speaker, to talk about a couple of things about the student assistance system in Alberta that have been bugging me for 20 years or so.

3:10

DR. MASSEY: You haven't paid back your loan?

MR. MASON: No. I did pay back my loan.

One of them is the enforced parental contribution. Under the system we had then and still have today, parents of adult students are required to make a contribution, or at least that contribution is then deemed as part of the student's available income and is deducted from their eligibility for the loan. At least, that's how it was, and I understand from students we visited this summer as part of our youth initiative tour that this has not changed. I think there's something fundamentally unjust about assuming that students who are adults, who are mature, who live on their own, who don't live with their parents, in some way continue a financial dependence upon them and that the government, the state, insists on this relationship before it's willing to provide funding for those students. So that's one thing that I think, Mr. Speaker, ought to be addressed.

The other one — and it's been addressed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods as well — is the assumption that a certain amount of income can automatically be earned in the summer. I do think that students should work if they can in the summer to earn money towards their education and that the bulk of that money ought to be saved and put towards the education. I think that's fair, but we need to take into account the differing circumstances of students and their ability to save money. There are wide swings in the job market for students, and I don't think it's anywhere near as good as it was when I went to school, Mr. Speaker, where a student could have a summer job virtually at the drop of a hat. It's not necessarily that way today, nor are the relative wages necessarily as high, and of course there are wide variations in the living costs facing students. I still hear from students and did hear from students quite a bit this summer that there needs to be greater flexibility in that respect as well.

I'm pleased to see that there's a continuation of student representation on the board, which was one of the things we achieved back at that time, and I think it's probably been beneficial for all parties in that respect. Mr. Speaker, sometimes it feels that the more things change, the more things stay the same. But I think that we are seeing some positive change in this bill, and I would be pleased to support this bill at second reading.

Thank you.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Any questions or comments for the hon. member? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, will be speaking in favour of this piece of legislation, and given the comments of the others who have preceded me, I will not take the time to go over the same ground to a great extent.

I would like to note a concern that I'm hearing constantly from constituents. The single largest educational institution in the province, the University of Alberta, is in my constituency, and I hear from them directly and indirectly constant concerns about the rapid rise in the cost of tuition.

Tuition increases are sort of the other side of the coin from a bill that makes student loans perhaps easier or more efficient to obtain. By increasing tuition and then providing more loans to cover that tuition, we are in some ways perhaps defeating ourselves. I would suggest that there would be a lot to commend in a system in which we didn't emphasize loans and debt so much as we simply emphasized merit and open access to universities at a lower tuition rate. So there is a connection between loans and tuition that I want to draw the attention of the House to, and we all know that tuition fees have risen rapidly in Alberta in the last several years.

There were reports in the newspaper in the last few days that next year tuition fees at law schools may be something like $9,000 a year, which is a substantial amount of money. Equal and open access to postsecondary education I think is fundamentally important to our society for a number of reasons. Obviously, the more highly educated a society we have, the more productive it is likely to be, the healthier it is likely to be, the better generally our social conditions will be. So I think we would all agree that a well-educated populace is a desirable outcome, and to the extent that this bill will enable people to attend postsecondary educational institutions more easily, it is to be commended.

I want to draw the attention of the House to a few aspects of a highly-educated population. Yesterday I was in Calgary for the day participating on a panel looking at the social determinants of health. It's not simply that high education is a close determinant of wellness, but it's also the fact that social integrity or the sense of a society holding itself together and making sense, making coherence, and caring for one another also relates to the general health of a population.

As we increase inequalities in societies, we often see health decline, and as we increase equality, we see health improve overall. One of the opportunities for increasing equality within a society is making education widely available, including postsecondary education, to all citizens. So there is an important health component, albeit indirect, to making postsecondary education as widely available as possible.

I also draw the fact of the principle of fairness. We would all agree, I think, that all citizens, at least as babies and as children and as young adults, deserve a reasonably equal opportunity to fulfill their lives. An education funding system that is equally available to all is important, and I am again concerned that as we raise tuition fees, even though there's a loan program in place, we screen students on the basis not just of merit but also on the basis of the wealth of their family. I think that goes against the basic principle of fairness, which dictates that people should be rewarded and should be granted opportunities on the basis of merit, not on family wealth.

Finally, I'd just note the importance of freely available or widely available education for a healthy, functioning democracy, a society in which everybody is well educated and has the opportunity to understand how society operates, the history of the society, the nature of politics and has the opportunity to study and to contribute to that democracy to the highest level possible. This bill will inch us in those directions. I would like to see a complementary approach taken, which would be to not simply make loans more available but actually to see tuition fees reduced.

Thank you.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Any questions or comments for the hon. member? Anybody else wishing to speak on the bill?

The hon. Minister of Learning to close debate.

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'll keep my responses very brief. This is a very good bill. It's a bill that is needed to continue our student loan practice. For the benefit of the House I won't get into it a lot, but what I will quite simply say is that during my tenure as Minister of Learning the amount of dollars that have gone into student loans and to student financial assistance has gone up 44 percent. It's something that we place an extremely high priority on and will continue to place an extremely high priority on. As the hon. opposition members have stated, this is a very important bill for the students of Alberta.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 6 read a second time]

Bill 15 Dairy Industry Omnibus Act, 2002

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to move second reading of Bill 15.

The bill, the Dairy Industry Omnibus Act, 2002, has been a long time coming. In fact, for several years our department has been working with the Alberta milk producers to create an independent, democratically elected commodity board. It is an industry that wants and deserves control over its own future. I am going to keep my remarks short in moving second reading, Mr. Speaker, because I want to give my colleague from Drayton Valley-Calmor, who has given yeoman's service to the work in developing this legislation, an opportunity to speak to the legislation. I should, though, take a moment to just talk briefly about the value of this industry to our province, because often we take the dairy industry, I think, for granted.

Mr. Speaker, our industry, despite what may be believed, is growing in size and stature. In fact, there are 850 dairy producers in this province. The value of their raw milk alone is at about $350 million. We have 24 processing plants. They are owned and operated by 18 companies, and the value of their manufactured, processed dairy products last year reached $1.5 billion.

AN HON. MEMBER: How much?

MRS. McCLELLAN: That's $1.5 billion.

Mr. Speaker, I am confident that the self-management of this industry will help it build on its successes and it will find more effective ways to work together to continue to grow.

Again I want to sincerely thank those members of the industry who have provided a great deal of their time and their insight into helping us develop this legislation. I have every confidence that this industry is in a position where the government can step back and let them run the show. We have 16 other commodity groups in this province that have established boards or commissions under this same legislation, and they are very successful. This will allow our producers to govern their industry's milk production, their marketing systems, just as producers in most other provinces do.

Again, my thanks to the Member for Drayton Valley-Calmor for his dedication to the legislation and this industry, and I know that members in the House will look forward to his comments on this bill.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmor.

REV. ABBOTT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I'd like to thank the hon. minister for that great compliment. I understand that a yeoman is the lowest ranking seaman, working down in the bowels of the ship. Yesterday I found out that I was the third-lowest ranking, but today I find out that I'm the lowest ranking. So thank you very much, I think. I'd also like to say thank you to the staff of Alberta Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. They're up in the gallery watching this today, so thank you very much.

As mentioned by the hon. Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development, the objective of the Dairy Industry Omnibus Act is to shift the governance responsibility for dairy production and marketing away from government and into the hands of dairy producers. This change in governance is a direct result of the industry consultation and recommendations led by my constituency predecessor, MLA Tom Thurber, in the summer of 2000. Following the Thurber report, dairy producers elected producer delegates to help lead the change to self-governance. These delegates then elected the interim Dairy Board and interim Policy Committee. These producers are now leading the process to self-governance, and they have been keeping their industry colleagues informed of their progress.

The province's largest dairy producer association, which represents almost all 850 producers, has been solidly behind this proposed change. Producers envision one umbrella producer organization in the future, one organization that conducts board regulatory functions as well as education, marketing and research, and other activities. Alberta's milk processors have been involved at every step and have representatives on both the interim Dairy Board and interim Policy Committee. Both producers and processors would like to make the regulations less complex. As the new board establishes, they plan to minimize regulatory burdens on producers and processors.

Now, the Dairy Industry Omnibus Act repeals one act and amends two acts. The first major task of this bill is to repeal the Dairy Board Act. This will remove direct government responsibility for the operation of commercial dairy activities such as licences, quotas, milk hauling, and payment systems. Under this part of the omnibus act the producer and processor assessments, previously collected by the government, will be turned over to a new producer board to use in managing the system.

Although this bill dissolves the current Dairy Board, it is anticipated that those government staff needed to perform industry functions will stay with the new organization. As well, I understand that during the transition, the new organization will maintain the two offices that the industry currently occupies in Edmonton and Wetaskiwin. The office space in Wetaskiwin will be available to the industry until 2004. As part of the transition the records for items such as licences, which the dairy board currently holds, will be transferred to the new organization. This will be accomplished through a specific regulation of the Lieutenant Governor in Council.

Now, the second major item is to amend the Dairy Industry Act to ensure that food safety inspectors have all the necessary powers to safeguard milk and dairy products. In the past food safety inspectors used powers under the Dairy Board Act. Since that act will be repealed, inspectors need in their own legislation the same powers that they use today. So this is simply a transfer of tools from one act to another. Amendments to the Dairy Industry Act will also ensure that milk test results are available to inspectors, the producer board, and the processor. This will actually streamline operations by ensuring that only one test is required to accomplish food safety, milk quality, and milk payment goals. Efficiency, Mr. Speaker; I love it.

It is anticipated that the new producer board will be created by regulation under the Marketing of Agricultural Products Act. Consequently, the third major item is to amend the Marketing of Agricultural Products Act to ensure that the new milk producer board has all the tools that are required to operate the system. While this bill does not actually create a new producer milk board, it does open the way for the industry to form the type of organization that it needs. As the minister mentioned, under the Marketing of Agricultural Products Act a producer plebiscite is required before forming any new producer board. I expect that a plebiscite will be held this spring.

Now, this type of board is not new to Alberta, Mr. Speaker. There are several types of producer boards under the Marketing of Agricultural Products Act that govern their industry similar to those planned by the dairy industry. Most other provinces have producer self-governed dairy industries similar to what Alberta's dairy industry is proposing. A few housekeeping items to both the Dairy Industry Act and the Marketing of Agricultural Products Act are also being considered in these amendments.

Although the Thurber report recommended keeping the industry much the same as it is today through the transition period, this industry needs to continue to grow. We all should be drinking more milk, Mr. Speaker, to keep our bone density up and our health care costs down. Since the goal of the industry and the government team working on this project was to make the transition to self-governance happen without changing the day-to-day operations of the industry, the dairy industry itself will actually notice little direct change when this bill takes effect. Licences, quotas, pickup of milk from farms, delivery of milk to the dairy plants, and the milk payment system will operate virtually the same as it does today. The real change is that the producers themselves will now be responsible for operating the system as opposed to the government.

Now, since the Thurber report both producers and processors have been involved in extensive consultations towards developing the new system. As the minister mentioned, there is widespread support within the industry as a whole for this initiative, and the further advancement of this bill is in the hands of the producers through the aforementioned plebiscite vote this spring.

Mr. Speaker, I encourage all the members to support the Dairy Industry Omnibus Act, a bill which shifts control of commercial dairy industry activities away from government and into the hands of industry stakeholders.

In the words of the Thurber report, it is time to create a new industry organization capable of building on the successes of the past and ensuring a strong and viable Alberta dairy industry into the future.

I'd like to thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I would gladly entertain any questions that my colleagues or the hon. opposition may have.

3:30

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. To the hon. member: I have heard many comments and speeches . . .

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Hon. member, I recognized you to speak to the bill. The first two movers do not have the five-minute option according to Standing Orders.

REV. ABBOTT: I wasn't moving anything.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The first two speakers do not have the five-minute option under Standing Order 29.

MR. MASON: I'm sorry. Well, Mr. Speaker, I will briefly speak to it, and I will include the question that I was going to ask the hon. member within the context of my remarks, which will otherwise be very brief.

I'd just like to indicate from our point of view our support for the main aspects of this bill, particularly the concept that the producer group should be self-governing. We agree with that. That's worked very well in a number of other areas, and we don't see the need for the government to be appointing all of the people. We're sure that the producers are quite capable of doing that.

Mr. Speaker, the question I was going to ask, though, is that I've heard on the other side of this House many, many comments about the Canadian Wheat Board and how people who grow wheat ought to be able to sell their wheat to whoever they want, including across the border, and that they shouldn't be having some board telling them what to do. My question, then, to the hon. member would have been: what's the difference between milk and wheat as far as the members opposite are concerned?

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Any questions or comments for the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands?

REV. ABBOTT: I have a comment. The comment would simply be that it's very different from the Wheat Board because people can still export milk without a quota system, which they cannot do under the Wheat Board. So if you would like to export milk to the United States, you're allowed to do that. This act will not change that. People do it now, and you'll be able to continue to do it after this omnibus act is passed.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, are you rising to ask a question?

MR. MacDONALD: No, Mr. Speaker.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Okay. The chair doesn't see anybody else wanting to ask a question, so we'll recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. At this time I have a few brief remarks, and I too have questions that I would like to get on the record regarding Bill 15.

The hon. Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development has certainly emphasized the importance of this industry to the entire province. One does not just have to motor through the fine constituency of Drayton Valley-Calmar to see silos, and anytime you see a silo, you're probably going to see in the immediate vicinity a dairy barn. Regardless, this is an industry that is not only in the fine constituency of Drayton Valley-Calmar but across the entire province. There was mention of the significant value-added product that's created. I believe the hon. minister said that it was in the range of $1.5 billion.

Now, there are 24 processing plants, and they're operated or owned by 18 companies. I'm curious to know how many of those companies are Alberta companies. There was some talk, some discussion – perhaps it was not true. I would certainly like it to be clarified, not only for this member but for all Albertans, as to the ownership of dairy marketing in this province. Certainly the 850 producers are local. Some, of course, will be family farms. But of this industry, how much of it is owned and controlled by Albertans, or is it concentrated in the hands of a few? To have a staple food product such as milk in the hands of a few I don't think is wise, nor is it prudent.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Other questions that I have are regarding the quota system, or licence system. The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar in due time probably has an explanation. What mechanisms are there to exchange these licences or quotas? What value is placed on them, and how is that value derived? As the economy expands, what mechanism is in force to increase the number of producers? Now, I'm sure there's a good answer for this, and I would be very anxious to hear it. Certainly, as I understand it, with the quota system for milk it's different than, for instance, another agricultural commodity such as canola. If I could have an explanation for that, Mr. Speaker, I would be very grateful.

At this time I will cede the floor to another hon. member of the Assembly. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to speak to Bill 15, the Dairy Industry Omnibus Act. I guess what I can start off by saying is that this is an interesting act. It basically takes what has been a legislated or regulated industry for, well, most of my lifetime. I can remember when my father as a dairyman first got a quota, and I was hardly old enough to understand what quota meant. But basically what has happened is that, you know, this kind of process has grown to where we now have a very heavily controlled industry in the sense that it doesn't exhibit very many of the characteristics that are normally thought of when we talk about competitive commodity production strategies or markets.

If we look at the dairy act that's going to be replaced by this, it basically was set up to make sure that the regulated industry or the controlled industry did have an accountability back to the public. As I look through the act now, I see that basically what we're doing is taking that accountability part out and turning over to the dairy farmers, the dairy processors, the collective industry, a process that will allow them to in effect be self-governing in the context of not having to come back through the Dairy Control Board. I guess the question that comes up in this context is: how does this compare to other commodities? We have a lot of other commodities now that have organized under the Marketing of Agricultural Products Act, where the dairy industry will have the option to set up. You know, they'll have to have their plebiscite, et cetera.

I guess what we're looking at here is the issue of in a sense turning over to a self-governing body, without a lot of public input and a lot of public participation, the power to control both price and quantity. The end result here is going to be a really interesting process which goes far beyond any of the other commodities that are currently under the Marketing of Agricultural Products Act. None of those groups has the option to control the number of producers, who is a producer, the entry into the production of that commodity. All they have is the power to control promotion and support for that commodity industry.

So what we're looking at here is a lot of questions that come up in the context of what would be the motivation for the dairy industry now to consider the consumer concerns about price, the consumer concerns about issues that reflect on competition in that market, but also associated agricultural producers who may want to enter into that industry. What we're going to see here is basically the creation of almost like a joint monopoly in the sense that they each produce into the market but don't have any market forces to react to. I guess that in a sense comes into this discussion more as a caution as opposed to "I think this is a bad idea," because the idea that we can reduce regulation, reduce the role of kind of a government overseer is good. But what we need to do is make sure that there still is a degree of responsiveness to the consumer and a relationship with the dairy industry in a way that we have some semblance of market forces working. I know I've talked to a number of people in the dairy industry about this act, and they've said: well, market forces come up when a consumer wants a new product, but the idea of the supply/demand interaction is totally lost when we start dealing with this kind of a process.

It's a number of years back now, before I got involved as an elected official, that I was doing some work in looking at what was the relative effectiveness of the pricing mechanisms in the dairy industry. It was quite interesting in the sense that over the three-year period that I was looking at, none of the producers experienced a negative rate of return on their investment. The more efficient and better producers actually were getting upwards of 30 to 35 percent return on investment. In other words, their investment was paid off in three years. What industry has that?

This is an issue of how do we deal with dynamics in the industry when we're going to turn absolute control over to them without any public participation in the context of the board that controls how they work, and I think it's something that needs to be just put on the record. As I mentioned before, I support moving out under the Marketing of Agricultural Products Act. All I would suggest is that as we do that, there needs to be consumer input into the decision-making process, because they are a special industry. They are not like the other commodity industries that operate under the agricultural products marketing act. Free entry is possible in almost all of these other commodity groups that are administered under the Marketing of Agricultural Products Act.

In this case now we've got a closed system where the opportunity exists for exploitation. You know, this is the kind of thing that works out. We have to look at it from the perspective of how we work this, because the principles of supply and demand are sure not going to be put into this kind of a structure. So we have to make sure that we look at it from the perspective of: are we making sure we have a responsive industry when we end up with it operating under this act? The specifics of how it's going to work are basically not as relevant now as what the end result is, because they're basically going to operate under the same process of price-setting, quantity-setting as was done before under the dairy control act, but now the public has lost a voice.

I guess, Mr. Speaker, if there's anything that I would suggest on that, that is the concern that has to be put on the record, you know, as we go into dealing with this particular piece of legislation.

Thank you very much.

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, if I could just make some closing comments. There have been some very good questions and comments made and I think some reasonable support for the principles of this bill. However, as in second reading we are dealing with principles only, it would seem prudent to take all of the questions and comments, which have maybe been a little more far-reaching in some cases, and look at dealing with them all in Committee of the Whole, where we have far more latitude and time. I know that the Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar will be anxious to answer a number of the questions and express his appreciation for the positive comments that have been made regarding this bill.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 15 read a second time]

Bill 13

Administrative Penalties and Related Matters Statutes Amendment Act, 2002

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Yes, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Minister of Environment I would be pleased to move for second reading Bill 13, the Administrative Penalties and Related Matters Statutes Amendment Act, 2002.

Bill 13 was initiated as part of an overall effort, Mr. Speaker, to provide a clear and consistent, efficient and effective approach to the delivery of environmental compliance programs in Alberta and specifically the administrative penalty process in both Alberta Environment and Alberta Sustainable Resource Development. Proposed changes which amend parts of the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act, the Water Act, the Forests Act, the Public Lands Act, and the Mines and Minerals Act will ensure that regulated parties face the same administrative penalty process regardless of which of these laws they've broken.

Mr. Speaker, in the most basic sense these amendments clarify the rules of the game and make the administrative penalty process the same across the five pieces of legislation. For example, if you were issued an administrative penalty under the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act or the Water Act, you could appeal the decision. However, if you were administered a penalty under the Mines and Minerals Act, the Public Lands Act, or the Forests Act, you have no right of appeal. Bill 13 will establish a process to develop an appeal process under regulation in each of these acts.

Similarly, if you're a director of a corporation or an employer and you direct someone to break the law, under the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act, the Water Act, or the Mines and Minerals Act you can be held directly responsible for that violation. However, under the Public Lands Act or the Forests Act the same director or employer could not be held liable, even though they are the most responsible for the situation.

Another example, Mr. Speaker, relates to the timeliness of the regulatory process. Right now under the EPEA, the Water Act, or the Forest Act there's a two-year statute of limitation to issue an administrative penalty. Not so under the Public Lands Act or the Mines and Minerals Act. Under those two pieces of legislation there's no statute of limitation, and penalties can be issued more than two years after the incident occurred. These inconsistencies are not reflective of the government's commitment to timely response.

The Administrative Penalties and Related Matters Statutes Amendment Act also addresses how fines are calculated, Mr. Speaker. Under the EPEA and the Water Act administrative penalty amounts apply per contravention per day. Under the other acts they are only able to assess a penalty for contravention, meaning that it is more difficult to stop an ongoing contravention and there is simply no incentive to stop.

Mr. Speaker, these are just some of the examples of the types of situations that the Administrative Penalties and Related Matters Statutes Amendment Act is meant to address. These changes will benefit everyone involved in the administrative penalty process: the regulated community, the regulators, both the ministry and the Ministry of Sustainable Resource Development, and all Albertans. Regulated sectors will have the benefit of clearly understanding the administrative process regardless of which act is in effect and which laws are being broken. In addition, they can be sure that when Alberta Environment or Alberta Sustainable Resource Development issues an administrative penalty, it will be done quickly and fairly and there'll be a consistent appeal process. The changes also create efficiencies in government by providing more flexibility when responding to laws being broken, making Albertans confident that government is able to respond fairly, quickly, and efficiently when environmental and natural resource laws are broken.

Consultation on the proposed changes occurred in January of 2001, and over 45 stakeholder groups including industry stakeholders, recreational groups, and municipalities were consulted, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to report that there was significant support for the proposed changes.

In closing, I'd like to reinforce that the proposed changes are not new to environmental and natural resource related legislation. They are just simply being made consistently available across all of the legislation. Many sectors in this province, including the oil and gas sector and the agriculture sector, are regulated by more than one of these five pieces of legislation, and they should be able to be treated in the same fashion regardless of which act is applicable. The Administrative Penalties and Related Matters Statutes Amendment Act will ensure that consistency and will provide a harmonized, interdepartmental approach to the use of administrative penalties.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to, again, move second reading and encourage the support of the members of this House for Bill 13.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have a few comments at this time in second reading of Bill 13. It is good, it's a positive thing to see that the Minister of Environment is addressing the need for increased and more stringent penalties. One only has to look at the tourism industry in this province to realize how important that's going to be for the future, for the future economy of the entire province, and recognize the need to protect our environment now so that people will see this province and its natural beauty and want to visit. They're certainly not going to want to visit a community or a province that for whatever reason has had lax standards, and as a result of those lax standards – no one is going to want to visit a slagheap.

This is encouraging to see. We've had some spectacular failures, in my view, in this province. We look at the Swan Hills waste treatment plant and the immediate surrounding environment. We look at – I brought it up in this Assembly before – the unfortunate incident of Hub Oil in Calgary, Mr. Speaker. The list is long. We have increased concern among rural landowners over oil and gas developments and the encroachment of batteries and production stations that are in the immediate vicinity of residences.

So I'm pleased to see this. I note that in the forestry industry I was the recipient of a lot of information through freedom of information, the FOIP Act, and I was astonished. It was sort of pleasing to see and I would like to recognize that the government and the Department of Environment are going about their way as quietly and efficiently as possible with the resources that are available to prosecute and fine individuals and enterprises that are breaking the laws as we know them. For instance, one company had taken a Cat and had pushed gravel into the course of a stream. Environment officials noticed this, and they took it to the attention, certainly, of the individual company, and that company had to pay money. There was an overcutting of timber. That was also dealt with, and the department officials are to be commended.

But how much of this is going on and getting away from them because simply they don't have the resources to deal with the matter I can't say for certain. It is perhaps more important that we at this time recognize that we need a sufficient number of enforcement officers and the funding to support them. It's fine to address the need for increased and more stringent penalties, but there also has to come with that a team to enforce the law.

Now, again, if this is sort of a quiet acceptance of the fact that some of the voluntary compliance that's been attempted in the last eight years has not been as successful as initially thought and we're going to get tough on polluters, people who are perhaps taking a few more timber resources than they should, well, then again I would have to commend the department.

Mr. Speaker, the hon. minister can write all the regulations and come up with as many penalties as he can, but if there is insufficient staff, then the legislation means absolutely nothing, because you have to have enforcement. The companies that are out there have to know that there's a willingness by the authorities to enforce their regulations and their laws.

Now, continued cuts and department reorganizations of one type or another make it difficult to design and carry out long-term plans. We've certainly seen that with the department of health - and that has been recognized by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview – because, you know, that department has had so many changes over the years. Fortunately, Alberta Environment has not been affected as detrimentally, but one can only hope that they don't have the same fate as Alberta Health and Wellness.

This government's reliance on self-reporting is also, Mr. Speaker, of concern. While self-reporting with appropriate penalties for failure to report is an important part of the enforcement process, it does not replace officers and random inspections. Now, I see that the hon. minister in charge of Alberta Human Resources and Employment is recognizing the need to have an increased frequency of random, independent inspections to ensure that occupational health and safety laws and regulations are being abided by.

I would encourage the Minister of Environment and the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development to do that as well, and I'm sure it will be done, because there's nothing like field inspection. There is nothing like it. To encourage the personnel to get out from behind the desks to see what's going on out in the field I think is a good idea, and I would encourage the hon. minister to ensure that it's going to be done.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the government's increasing pace of resource development means that enforcement is even more important than ever. I think this bill will increase the personal responsibility that directors have for the work done by their companies, and it is good to see that this change is taking place.

In conclusion, I would like to offer to all hon. members of the Assembly the information that I did receive through FOIP. It does show that this hon. minister's department is certainly out and about in our northern forests and they're making sure that the resource companies are abiding by the obligations of those licences.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the ND opposition.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was trying to take a quick run through Bill 13. I would like to make a few observations during the debate on second reading of Bill 13, Administrative Penalties and Related Matters Statutes Amendment Act. As the Minister of Justice in his introductory remarks has drawn to the attention of the House, the main purpose of the bill is to make the administrative penalties, both the mode in which they are realizable and enforceable and the stringency of the penalties as well, I think – insofar as possible these matters should be made consistent across the various statutes which cover the areas of environment, mines and minerals, public lands, and so on.

It outlines some very interesting responsibilities. I'm looking through the bill to find that the section on vicarious responsibility runs throughout the various sections of this bill. Again, I appreciate the minister's observations that the enforcement side of it is addressed in this and the ability of the minister to make sure that these penalties are realized, that they're paid, and for those who fail to pay them, there are consequences. Those things are spelled out more clearly in the bill.

I have a few questions. Maybe the minister can educate me on this. Administrative penalties as distinct from penalties that might result from court decisions – I don't know if they are appealable. On the one hand, I do want to make sure that there is certainly in legislation powers available to the government to make sure that once these penalties are assessed, the offending parties pay those and that the government has the power to compel those parties to pay those penalties on the side of enforcement. We also want to make sure that we respect the principles of rule of law and therefore the opportunity for those who are assessed those penalties to be able to address them, challenge those penalties in a lawful manner. But the notion of administrative penalty is something that I haven't had a chance to pay enough attention to to understand the exact nature of it and whether or not it's appealable.

So one concern that I would have is with respect to whether or not the substance of this bill is fully respectful of the traditions and the principles of rule of law and the ability of those who are subjected to those penalties to seek redress if they come to the conclusion that either the penalty is too high or stringent or else is uncalled for. I'm sure the minister would help me on this, give me a little, I guess, law 101 on this when he has an opportunity to do that. But I certainly see in general that there is good reason that some of these administrative penalty rules and procedures should be made consistent across these various areas so that there is both ease of enforcement and clarity by the citizens of this province as to their understanding, what they are infringing and what kinds of penalties will result across those areas.

With those remarks, Mr. Speaker, I'll sit down and let other members make some comments if they so choose. Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader to close debate?

[Motion carried; Bill 13 read a second time]

Bill 9
Child Welfare Amendment Act, 2002

[Adjourned debate March 5: Mr. Cenaiko]

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to have this opportunity to make some comments about the principles and the assumptions that underlie Bill 9, the Child Welfare Amendment Act, 2002. I should start by thanking the minister for taking the time to brief me briefly on Bill 9 and to outline the reasons why she thought that this would be a good piece of legislation. I also thank the Government House Leader for arranging the schedule this week so we had an opportunity to meet with some of the stakeholders who have an interest in the bill and were unable to have that meeting until later in the week, so I thank him for accommodating us.

The bill seems to have a number of assumptions and principles that seem worthy of support. The assumption that there is a need in certain cases to apprehend youngsters quickly and that the kinds of legal procedures that they must go through shouldn't unnecessarily impede the process I think is a good one. The minister in our conversation was able to give some good examples of where a worker was with a youngster who was in a situation where there could have been trouble, and the context was one that was not in that youngster's best interests, but the worker was unable to do anything because of the need to contact a judge to get the order that was needed. The worker really had her hands tied and was unable to act in the youngster's best interests. So anything we can do to make sure that that doesn't occur and that children are apprehended when that's deemed necessary by workers I think is a move in the right direction. It's not that part of the bill that I'm going to spend the majority of my time on.

Before I do move to the principle that I think is most worthy of examination, I would like to make a couple of comments about the out-of-province apprehensions. This, like the first assumption, is that easier apprehension of out-of-province children is in the best interests of those children, and again I believe that's true. Agreements that allow children from Alberta who leave and are found in another province to get back to Alberta quickly and to have it dealt with quickly are in the best interests of the children. Also, the fact that other jurisdictions, other provinces, have or are considering similar changes to legislation I think is a move in the right direction and again an improvement in the system.

The big assumption, of course, and the one that has parents and some professionals very, very concerned is the assumption that appeal panels should operate under direct supervision of the minister. I think for the minister's part there's the belief that by the minister sending direction to those appeal panels, by building fences around their jurisdiction, that makes the process fairer to appellants. On the surface of it that might be true, but I think you have to look at the kinds of grave reservations that parents and professionals have and the root of those reservations.

Of course, the first result of this legislation would be to destroy the independence of appeal panels. The appeal panels at the present time make wide-ranging decisions based on new evidence as it comes up, and they're very free to make decisions that again are in the best interests of the children. By the minister taking on and setting a policy that circumscribes their operation, the fear is that this will exclude appeals from children when new circumstances arise. This has happened in the past. It's also a fear that those narrowed grounds will make it tougher for parents to seek relief in the court systems.

So there are two real fears, and they're rooted in, I suspect, the difficult lives many of these parents have had in trying to obtain the kinds of resources their youngsters need to grow and to thrive and to develop to the best of their abilities. Often those parents spend many hours and weeks and years of their lives pleading for services, trying to acquaint themselves with every aspect of the law and anything that has to do with their youngsters. Even when they do sometimes get awards, they still have trouble getting the kinds of services that have been awarded to them. For many of these parents it's been an uphill battle, and they view anything that would constrain them or constrain other parents in that search for the best for their children as something that should be avoided. Many of these parents are under considerable stress, and the feeling is that this will just add to that stress and distress for parents who have to go through the appeal process.

One of the fears, of course, is that the kinds of things will happen to the appeal panel that happened to families as a result of the recent budget cuts. The Southern Alberta Community Living Association has, I think, contacted a number of MLAs in the House and left with us their concerns about the impact of the cuts on families. What's happened with the cuts is that they have seen the eligibility criteria narrowed to restrict access, and their worry is that that same manipulation could happen to the appeal panel so that eligibility would be narrowed. When the contracts were reviewed, supports were eliminated or reduced, and the concern again is that an appeal panel might find itself in the same place, having new directions were the minister to deem it appropriate to curtail their activity or the kinds of judgments that they could make.

The cuts in that region resulted in children who had previously been able to access service now being denied funding, and a further impact of the cuts was that many parents were required to start to partially fund the supports that their sons and daughters were receiving. It was deemed that this was done on the perceived ability of them to pay for those services. The respite services, for example, were changed so that the one-size-fits-all model was applied. Where there used to be an individualization of the respite services, there's now just one service regardless of the kinds of circumstances the family finds itself in.

The elimination of some of the programs and again the impact of those cuts on the Children's Services department and how the cuts were carried out with respect to service has parents, at least some of these parents, very, very nervous. I think that nervousness is at the root of some of the fear they have with the change they see in Bill 9 with respect to the appeal boards.

There are some other concerns about the timing of the bill, the Child Welfare Amendment Act, the public consultation just about over if not over at this time – they wonder why it wasn't raised as an issue earlier in order that there could have been more public input into the considered changes – and real concern about the process of the introduction of Bill 9.

The concerns are so grave, Mr. Speaker, that I hope the minister will consider, before we complete work on Bill 9, removing the references in the bill to the appeal panel and leave things as they are. I think there's good evidence from the history of those panels that although some of their judgments have been very, very costly in terms of the resources that were needed, the decisions were the right decisions in terms of particular children, and anything that would leave those children through the appeal process without the kinds of resources that they need or would cast them into searching other departments, for instance the health department, for similar services I think would be very, very unfortunate. So I'm hoping that before this is over, the minister will see fit to amend the bill to assure Albertans and to assure parents of handicapped children in particular that they will have access to appeal panels that are fair and not in any way unreasonably constrained.

Mr. Speaker, we will be waiting with interest to see the response of the minister to the concerns that are being raised. I'm sure that her office is getting their fair share of messages from parents, and we have an amendment ready to introduce at the appropriate time should the minister not move to make such a change.

With those comments, Mr. Speaker, again I think the bill has a couple of very, very good improvements of the system. I think that if we could set aside the concerns over appeals or if we could change the appeal process, it would have our support.

Thanks very much.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the ND opposition.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak on Bill 9, the Child Welfare Amendment Act, 2002, in its second reading. I'll make a few general observations, and I'll express one very serious concern, a concern that represents the difficulties that some of my constituents have experienced in the past. They're worried that with the changes to section 120 being proposed by way of Bill 9, their lives will be more difficult and certainly deprive their children of the very necessary services that they need.

The bill, Mr. Speaker, certainly in part is a response to some of the recommendations made by the Auditor General. It's designed in principle to facilitate the transfer of children who reside in Alberta but are apprehended elsewhere, to bring them back to the province, in other words, and, secondly, to allow justices of the peace, who can currently give apprehension orders only in person, to issue apprehension orders over the phone. These two changes in the existing legislation that are sought by Bill 9 are fine. They address the difficulties that the existing legislation presents and certainly facilitate both the apprehension and the getting of orders for apprehension. What's really at stake here in this piece of legislation is that it will allow, as I said, better apprehension decisions to be made, and we support that. The interjurisdictional co-operation that is sought by way of this legislation is also something that's good.

The related changes to the handicapped children's services appeal panel are the ones that are a matter of grave concern to me. I've had several cases that have come to me through my constituency office at Edmonton-Strathcona where parents needed help in order to seek services for their severely handicapped children, services that those families themselves simply could not have afforded. They had to of course go through this maze of appeals and deal with the different departments: Learning, Health and Wellness, and Children's Services. These three departments get involved when dealing with provision of these services. Only one of these departments, which is the Children's Services department, has an appeal process.

What's tended to happen is that the appeal panel finds that children need Learning- and Health-related services, but the appeal panel puts the financial obligation on Children's Services. Binding appeal decisions to ministerial policy, as is being proposed here, means that children and families who need to access these extremely important and expensive services may lose access to them, especially services that should flow out of Learning and health services. So the lack of co-operation between Health and Wellness, Learning, and Children's Services is a chronic problem, is a perennial problem. Parents get very frustrated, when seeking the needed services for their children, having to deal with these three departments, which have competing or contrary or contradictory obligations and claims with respect to the provision of those services.

So the changes specifically to the handicapped children's services appeal panel – I've seen at least five parents who have had the chance to read this, and I concur with them that some of these services simply may be discontinued and may not be available to them if this bill passes without amending that section – I think it's on page 6 of the bill – which amends section 120 by adding the following after subsection (6): "In the hearing of appeals under this section, an Appeal Panel is bound by policy established by the Minister concerning agreements under section 106." That causes a great deal of concern to me, because this then makes the appeal process and the appeal panel's decision subject to being overruled by a minister, which has not been the case in the past. The families needing these services have sought and found and received relief, well-deserved relief, because the panel had the power to make decisions which have guaranteed the provision of the services to children who are in extreme need of these services. I would ask the minister to seriously consider dropping that section of this bill.

For the remaining part of the bill I think we will be happy to support the bill in its present form, but we would certainly seek to see the section related to changes in section 120 either dropped from the bill or amended to ensure that the concerns that I have heard from my own constituents and the problems that I had to deal with on their behalf in the past can still be addressed and that the change in the legislation is such that I can still help my constituents with respect to their ability to access the services that their children who are severely handicapped need, services that are extremely expensive and beyond the capacity of any hardworking, normal family in this province to be able to pay for on their own. I would certainly hope that the minister will address this part of the bill and address it in a way that meets the approval of the constituents that I've referred to and satisfies my concerns, and I'm sure they are shared by other members of this House as well.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity for me to get up.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Any questions or comments, or did you wish to speak?

MR. MacDONALD: I wish to speak.

4:30

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Okay. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, if there are no questions.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much. At this time I, too, have some comments that I would like to get on record regarding Bill 9. It is certainly my understanding that there are a lot of contentious issues relating to children's services these days. We saw that earlier in question period, Mr. Speaker.

Specific to this bill I know that the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo is busy with the consultation process regarding the Child Welfare Act. It would have been, I think, better for the children, better for the ministry if this bill perhaps were delayed, and we could hear directly from that hon. member just precisely what has been discussed not only in Edmonton and in Calgary but in Lethbridge, Grande Prairie, Fort McMurray, and Medicine Hat, all over the province. That was an extensive consultation process that I think has just concluded. I'm sure there is paperwork to do and policies to prepare.

Certainly parents seem to be very angry with the direction, and these are parents of children who have developmental disabilities, parents with autistic children. There are many parents who have expressed disappointment or fear at the spirit of this bill, Mr. Speaker. I know parents from across this province who are always trying to do what's best for their child, and sometimes that means moving to a different location to have access to a program or therapy that will improve the ability of the child to learn and to function not only in the family but in the school setting and in the community hopefully at some time in the future.

Now, when we think of programs for children with learning problems, there are many places to go. I learned this firsthand, Mr. Speaker, in the Edmonton-Gold Bar constituency office. Certainly there are moneys available in Children's Services. There's also money available in Learning. There's also money available in Alberta Health. Some of these programs, I acknowledge, are very, very expensive. There could be a range of between $30,000 and $50,000. There are some programs that are taught at the University of Alberta that are recognized worldwide. Speech therapy is one, for instance. There are people who are willing to go the extra mile to ensure that these children have a future.

[The Speaker in the chair]

As I understand it, Mr. Speaker, there's $3.5 million spent this year funding services for 85 children who are technically eligible. Now, granted these programs are expensive, but this Bill 9, the Child Welfare Amendment Act, 2002, will dictate that the appeals process and the appeals panel must follow government policy in assessing cases. This is going to be impossible for the parents. It is going to be impossible in my view.

There are some things that will work, I suppose, Mr. Speaker, and certainly the intention here, as I understand it, is to provide for out-of-province apprehensions of some children, and the apprehension order process should be quicker and less expensive by allowing for less senior legal employees to carry out certain tasks. That, I suppose, a person could live with, but whenever we consider that we're going to make it harder for parents to appeal funding decisions by making the decisions of the appeal panel subject to the policy of the minister – these files that I'm familiar with are difficult. I can only express my frustration, but I cannot imagine how the parents feel, and the parents, as I said before, are willing to move from one area of the province to another to have access to one of these programs. To think that by moving, for instance, an autistic child who is receiving intense therapy, doesn't have verbal skills, has difficulty with any sort of behaviour that we would deem as normal for a child in an elementary school – if we can improve even if it's 85 children across the province with the program, I think we should continue to do so.

Now, if we don't, what consequences will we pay in the future? This money spent now not only will improve the lives and the future of the children, but it will also, Mr. Speaker, certainly improve the lives of the entire family.

There are many people who have expressed concern about Bill 9, and their concerns have been expressed quite eloquently by the Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods. We need, in conclusion, Mr. Speaker, to ensure that parents' legal right to appeal funding decisions will not be denied. We need to ensure that that is done, and I'm sad to say that it is my view that this bill will make it easier for the minister to cut funding to handicapped children, and that disappoints me.

With that, I will conclude my remarks at this time on Bill 9 and cede the floor to another hon. member of this Assembly. Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 9 read a second time]

head: Government Bills and Orders
Third Reading

Bill 8
Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2002

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Finance.

MRS. NELSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's with pleasure that I move third reading of Bill 8, the Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2002.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Yes, just a couple of comments. It's really a question, Mr. Speaker, that I still haven't received an answer to. I notice that under the supplementary supply there are moneys in Justice and in Solicitor General for increased staff salary settlements, and that seems to me a legitimate reason to ask for supply, but I don't understand, I guess, why there wasn't a similar request from Children's Services to cover the new agreements that were reached after the budget was passed last year. It's just a matter of information more than any concern. The money in Children's Services, $500,000, was money deemed needed as a result of the teachers' dispute.

Thanks, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm delighted to have the opportunity to speak to Bill 8 at this point and perhaps will attempt to provide some information to the hon. member with respect to the questions he just asked.

The supplementary supply estimates for Justice and for the Solicitor General were essentially provided because there was an inordinate adjustment to salaries in those two departments as a result of us having within the departments – for example, in the Department of Justice judicial clerks and administrative support not only received the 5 and 4 percent in the overall contract, but also there was a need to adjust within the pay grades internally in order to make those particular areas competitive and to deal with the long-standing grievances in the area with respect to the way they were classified. The Solicitor General's department had similar issues with respect to their department, where the wage settlements with AUPE had an inordinate effect in those two departments which wasn't necessarily shared in other departments of government because of the type of and classification of workers that we had.

So that was the need for us, and we didn't have the ability, didn't have the flexibility within either the Solicitor General or the Justice budgets to deal with the extent of the wage pressure as a result of the settlement because we had already been dealing with other issues. As the member might recall, last fall there was a supplementary estimate, for example, of $6.5 million to deal with issues, again mainly wage issues but also new positions for Crown prosecutors.

All departments of government were affected by the 5 percent settlement with AUPE this year. I think all departments had budgeted a small amount for that and were able to meet the wage settlement within their budgets for the additional amount that hadn't been budgeted by making a provision for it in other ways, but Justice and the Solicitor General, because of the significant adjustments in areas like judicial clerks and admin support in our departments, were not able to manage and therefore needed the supplementary estimate.

[Motion carried; Bill 8 read a third time]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We've made good progress this afternoon on the agenda that we had scheduled, and although it's early, I know that the weather is bad and members would like to get on the road home. Therefore, I would move that we adjourn until 1:30 p.m. on Monday.

[Motion carried; at 4:44 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Monday at 1:30 p.m.]

head: Introduction of Visitors

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly Mr. Hector Romero, Mexico's new consul general stationed in Vancouver. This is the consul general's first visit to Alberta since his recent appointment, and we're looking forward to a fruitful and beneficial working relationship with him.

Mexico is a growing trade and investment partner for Alberta. Since NAFTA was introduced, the province's exports to Mexico have increased tenfold, and two-way trade totaled over $960 million last year. Alberta and Mexico work together in many areas including energy, agriculture, tourism, education, housing, and technology. This visit is a good opportunity to discuss ways to expand Alberta's relationship with Mexico, particularly given recent discussions about continental energy markets, North American border security, and forging stronger ties between Canada and Mexico.

I would ask that our honoured guest please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

head: Introduction of Guests

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly employees from Alberta Justice and Solicitor General strategic management services and from Alberta Justice and Solicitor General human resources. These individuals are here on the public service orientation tour, which I understand is being promoted and carried out by Leg. Assembly offices and your good offices. I'd ask Mr. Stephen Gauk, Ms Sylvia Church, Ms Jocelyn Partington, Miss Sarah Lynch, Ms Kathryn Delahunt, Mrs. Anna Silver, Mrs. Pat McGill, Mrs. Annie Lam, Ms Inessa Serebrin, Ms Candice Mah, Ms Tanya Kotowich, and Ms Sylvia Getschel to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this House and a sincere thank you for the good work that they do on behalf of Albertans.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

MR. LUND: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a great honour for me to have this opportunity to introduce to you and members of the Assembly some 14 people from the property and supply management branch of Alberta Infrastructure. These people do tremendous work on our behalf in the operating and maintenance of government-owned properties, the procurement and the sale of surplus supplies, and the real estate services. I believe they're seated in the members' gallery. I would ask that they now rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

MS EVANS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Part of the very honoured and august crew that are here today from our departments who do great work on behalf of Albertans, and this time in Children's Services legal department, are two of our outstanding employees, Diane MacDonald and Nela Afonso. I'd ask that they rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise in the Assembly this afternoon to introduce to you and through you to all hon. members of the Assembly Karen Beaton. Karen is the president of local 37 of the Edmonton public teachers. She has been involved in the teaching profession for over 34 years and has been a principal in an administrative role for the past seven. Mrs. Beaton is in the members' gallery, and I would now ask her to rise and receive the warm and traditional welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood.

MR. MASYK: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It gives me pleasure to rise in the Assembly today to introduce to you and through you 21 students from the St. Gerard elementary school along with their teacher, Mrs. Lorraine Williamson, and parent Mrs. Treva Swick. I would ask them to rise in the public gallery and receive the warm traditional welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

MR. LUKASZUK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed a pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly four fine individuals from ATCO company, and they are Mr. Bart West, director of corporate affairs; Ms Kerry Hite, assistant executive officer; Ms Ariadne Richardson, executive assistant; and Judy Mohs, project resource team. I would like to ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

head: Ministerial Statements

September 11, 2001, Terrorist Attacks

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, today marks six months since the horrific terrorist attacks in the United States on September 11 of last year. People throughout the United States, Canada, and around the world are pausing to remember this solemn date. The impact of these attacks resounded around the world for they were not just attacks on the United States. Among the victims of the attacks were people from dozens of different countries, including Canada. These attacks were truly against all humanity, and they affected each and every one of us very deeply.

Today we look back at September 11 and remember the feelings of shock, horror, outrage, and the outpouring of grief and generosity. Thousands of people across the province sent messages of condolence or donated money to the families of the victims. Many organized fund-raising campaigns, and some even traveled to New York to bear witness to the tragedy. As well, Canadian soldiers from Alberta are overseas to help fight the war on terrorism in Afghanistan. It is a very dangerous but important mission, and Albertans stand proudly with them as they serve this noble cause.

The September 11 attacks made us realize that no one is safe from terrorism. Even today acts of terrorism continue to take place in many parts of the world. The reality is that North America is no longer excluded from these types of events. Here in Alberta we took decisive action following the attacks. The hon. Premier immediately established a ministerial task force to make certain that Alberta is as prepared as possible.

Mr. Speaker, much work has been done in the last six months. There has been a review and tightening of Alberta's emergency response plans. There has been the establishing of connections with federal law enforcement and intelligence officials. There has been action taken to ensure strong linkages are in place between the various organizations that play a role in counterterrorism and emergency preparedness, and we have made a major effort to ensure that Albertans have the information they need. The work of the task force continues, and improvements are still being made, but this province is well prepared and has been recognized for having strong plans and procedures in place.

Mr. Speaker, September 11 was a day of tragedy that none of us will ever forget. It was day of horror and devastation, but during the last six months people overcame the terror to join hands across national, cultural, and religious lines to act in unity, bravery, and inspiration. Today we remember the tragedy, but at the same time we're inspired by the strength of the human spirit.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Opposition House Leader.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the six months since the terrorist attacks on the United States our world has become a far different place. On that fateful morning lives around the world were forever changed. People all over the planet watched in horror and disbelief, wondering what will be next.

In response to the vengeful acts of terrorism we could do two things. We could let terrorism win by giving in to feelings of fear, prejudice, racism, and intimidation, or we could rise to the challenge, give out a helping hand to our fellow citizens, band together as a society, and recognize how fragile and special our freedoms and security are. Since September 11 millions of people have chosen to open their hearts rather than close them. Instead of beating us the terrorist attacks have brought us together as a society, recognizing in each other the wondrous potential for good that we all possess.

We have seen it time and time again since September 11, from the firefighters and aid workers who went to New York to help to our men and women of the armed forces currently serving in Afghanistan, from donations and drives started up in local communities for victims of September 11 to the ribbon campaign started by local Alberta teens. People have provided help in the form of goods, their time, their labour, and, for many, their lives. These are some of the heroes that rose to the occasion in the aftermath. Their work goes on today just as it began six months ago. We owe them so much.

To our men and women in Afghanistan we send our thoughts and prayers. As we struggle to ensure that terrorism does not win, we look to you for strength and for protection. We join your families and friends in wishing you a successful mission, and we are anxiously awaiting your safe return home.

Here at home steps have been taken to ensure that violent attacks like September 11 never happen again, but while we must take steps to guard against such violence, we must also be sure not to sacrifice that which makes our life so special and unique: our freedom and our liberty. September 11 will never leave our thoughts, but let us hope that as time goes on, we continue to follow the example set by millions across the world who have opened their hearts, not closed them, to their fellow world citizens.

Thank you.

head: Oral Question Period

THE SPEAKER: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Teachers' Labour Dispute

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A year ago on April 5 the Premier said: we'll work with our teachers to make sure they are fairly compensated and given as good a work environment as possible so that they know they are appreciated, end quote. To the Premier: is stripping teachers of the right to strike a sign of appreciation?

MR. KLEIN: The right to strike is a labour issue, Mr. Speaker. It has nothing to do with the quality of teachers. It has something to do with negotiations that have taken place in the past that give teachers the right to strike. It has nothing to do with the quality of teachers. Throughout the public service we have people who are wonderful individuals, wonderful employees, and many of them have the right to strike. It doesn't speak to the quality of teachers. It speaks to a labour issue, and that is the right to strike.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Does taking class-size targets out of teachers' contracts show teachers that they are appreciated?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I want to make something abundantly clear today, and if I have to go over this three or four times, I will. I had the opportunity of meeting with the president of the Alberta Teachers' Association, Mr. Booi, and subsequent to that meeting I had the pleasure of meeting with the president of the Alberta School Boards Association to get both sides of the issue. Both sides agreed to arbitration. They wanted a legislated arbitration process. A legislated arbitration process. Following my meeting with Mr. Booi – now listen to this. This was his statement publicly through the media to all the people of this province including the Liberal opposition:

We never thought that this year's contract would resolve the really difficult situations that have driven 21,000 teachers to strike. We know it's going to take a good hard look at the problems, and if we have a good close look at the problems we'll probably start to see some of the solutions down the road.

Mr. Speaker, as the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition will see this afternoon, the bill represents the best efforts of government to reach a compromise amongst the three parties – teachers, school boards, and government – and on the nature and the scope of an arbitrated process. The bill stipulates that the arbitration will deal not only with salaries . . .

THE SPEAKER: Hon. Premier, we shouldn't be into the debate of the bill before the bill is actually introduced.

The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: why has the Premier reneged on his commitment to provide a good working environment for Alberta's teachers?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, this was going to bring me to the other point. That point was raised by Mr. Booi himself and he agreed and again I repeat what he said:

We know it's going to take a good hard look at the problems, and if we have a good close look at the problems we'll probably start to see some of the solutions down the road.

That's why we have announced publicly that, indeed, we're going to convene a blue-ribbon panel or a commission or some form of process to look at all of these issues, a plethora of issues affecting education in this province, and come to a solution that will ensure sustainability for quality education down the road.

THE SPEAKER: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A year ago the Premier went on to say: it's now the teachers' turn to be rewarded for helping get Alberta's finances on track. To the Premier: would the Premier consider an unfair arbitration process a reward?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, an arbitration process is a legitimate labour tool. Arbitration is a legitimate labour tool. I would remind the hon. member that, yes, we want our teachers to be amongst the highest paid if not the highest paid in the country, and indeed they rank right up there. All the statistics show that to be the truth, the absolute truth. Further, to guarantee that teachers get some form of raise, we took the unprecedented step of guaranteeing, as a line item in the budget, 4 and 2, a 6 percent increase, unprecedented, with the ability of the various locals of the teachers' union to negotiate for more, as they have done in a number of jurisdictions, some awards up to 11 percent.

1:50

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Teachers' classes will continue to get bigger, and there will be no extra help for special-needs children. Does this also fit the Premier's definition of a reward?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, over the long term those are some of the issues amongst the countless issues that need to be addressed: class size, taking into account that there are differences throughout the province relative to class size; special needs. There are differences relative to special needs vis-a-vis English as a Second Language versus those who are physically or mentally disabled. There's a multitude of issues. There are the issues of sparsity and distance. The list goes on and on and on. This is why we want to gain the cooperation of the teachers, of the parents, of the School Boards Association, of the union, of the government, and ordinary citizens to engage Albertans in this discussion as to what we do to ensure that we achieve sustainable and quality education in the future.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Does the Premier consider it a reward for Albertans to have made no commitment in this process to improving classroom conditions in Alberta?

MR. KLEIN: Well, Mr. Speaker, that's what the panel is for. Again, there are differences throughout this province. There are some areas and some schools that have perfectly acceptable ratios. There are some schools that don't. There are some schools that are facing very special circumstances. What I'm trying to say – and I'm sure that the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition will agree with me – is that one size does not fit all. We've got to come to a resolution as to what is right relative to the individual school districts throughout the province.

THE SPEAKER: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. "The government believes there is a great deal of goodwill on all sides. This goodwill guarantees that the long-term health of the public education system will be protected. Educators will be key to that long-term health." Words from the government in this Chamber less than two weeks ago. My questions are to the Premier. Does bickering over what was agreed to with the president of the Alberta Teachers' Association with respect to arbitration foster that goodwill?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, it is not a matter of bickering. I am not bickering; I am simply presenting the facts. It's so typical of the Liberals. They don't want to listen to the facts. You know, they pick up the Edmonton Journal or the Edmonton Sun and they quote when it suits them. Now, if I take a public comment attributed to the president of the ATA and read it back to them and they don't like it, then they start to complain. They say: "Oh, no; that's not fair. That's bickering." You know, slaying the messenger is the term we used to use. All I am in this case is the messenger sending Mr. Booi's words back to the public and to the opposition.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, and again to the Premier, Mr. Speaker: how does stripping teachers of their rights through legislation foster goodwill?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I reiterate and I stress again that arbitration is the route that both the Alberta Teachers' Association and the ASBA, the Alberta School Boards Association, wanted to go. They wanted to have a legislated process for arbitration. Both sides – both sides, the ATA and the ASBA – stressed that the arbitration should limit itself to salaries. It's as simple as that.

DR. MASSEY: Again to the Premier, Mr. Speaker: can you honestly look teachers in the face and say that the actions of this government since last April have fostered goodwill?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, we have tried our darndest to foster goodwill amongst the teachers, and not all teachers are dissatisfied with the actions of this government. We have 20 of them in our caucus.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The only mistake that teachers made in their yearlong dispute with this Conservative government was to trust the assurances of the Premier and to take the Premier at his word during their meeting last week. Since that meeting, every statement that the Premier has given confirms that he has chosen to double-cross and stab our teachers in the back.

Speaker's Ruling Parliamentary Language

THE SPEAKER: Whoa, whoa, whoa. Please, hon. member. The English language is a very beautiful language, and I'm sure that there are many phrases in the English language which may provide a similar kind of conveyance that the hon. member will want, but decorum still will remain in this Assembly.

DR. PANNU: My question to the Premier, Mr. Speaker: why, after the teachers showed good faith by not renewing their strike after the back-to-work order was struck by the courts, do the government and the Premier seem hell-bent on declaring war on teachers?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, no one is declaring war on anyone. All we're proposing through legislation is to put in place a process for arbitration, a process, by the way, that coincides quite nicely with what both sides asked for in my meetings last week. What's wrong with that?

Again I read back the words of Mr. Booi: "We never thought that this year's contract would resolve the really difficult situations that have driven 21,000 teachers to strike." Those situations are classroom size, special needs, and so on. "We know it's going to take a good hard look at the problems, and if we have a good close look at the problems we'll probably start to see some of the solutions down the road."

I agree with Mr. Booi. I agree that we should have a good hard look at some of the solutions. There have been many changes to education over the years, but it's been since 1972, I believe, that this was last studied in a comprehensive manner – that is, the whole issue of education – and now is the time. On that point I agree with Mr. Booi.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. No one likes a surgical strike and not our hardworking teachers in this province for sure.

THE SPEAKER: Whoa. Hon. member, please. You have signed an agreement that says that there'll be no preamble. Now, your name is on that document, so would you please proceed to your question.

DR. PANNU: Why has the Premier stabbed the province's teachers in the back by proposing a mediation process that is so draconian that it's tantamount to imposing a legislated contract settlement on the teachers?

MR. KLEIN: There are no mediation processes being contemplated. An arbitration process is being contemplated through legislation, Mr. Speaker. Again I reiterate: this legislation to be introduced later today is quite consistent with what both the ATA and the Alberta School Boards Association have requested.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Why does the Premier refuse to recognize that the only losers from the arbitration process that he is prepared to impose on teachers will be the province's students, whose education once again will be disrupted and disturbed?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I would hope that there is no disruption in the classroom, because the most important people in this whole situation are the kids, the students. I would think that the hon. leader of the third party would understand and respect the importance of the students in this particular matter and wouldn't make any statements that might be inciteful or might be construed as being inflammatory. I would expect the hon. member to be in a nonconfrontational mode and try to resolve this issue rather than standing up and for purely political ND socialist purposes start to nag on the government to further his own cause.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Regional Water Initiatives

MRS. JABLONSKI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The communities of Blackfalds and Lacombe are in urgent need of quality drinking water. Ponoka, Hobbema, and Sylvan Lake need an effective long-term solution to their water supply issues. These communities are keen to participate in the development of a regional water supply system in partnership with the city of Red Deer. This partnership is the best long-term solution available. My question is for the Minister of Environment. Will the minister support a regional drinking water initiative for these communities through legislation?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

DR. TAYLOR: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My colleague is right. There are serious water quality and serious water supply issues in central Alberta, particularly around the communities of Lacombe, Blackfalds, Ponoka. These communities and several others along with Red Deer have gotten together to form the North Red Deer Regional Water Users Group. The idea of this water users group is that they wish to take Red Deer water from the town of Red Deer and pipe it out to these various communities. Now, it makes sense for a lot of reasons. One is the economy of it. These other communities will not have to upgrade and spend a lot of money upgrading water systems. Also, we can guarantee a high quality of drinking water, the same quality as Red Deer would get, with this type of piping to these communities.

There is one glitch or one small hiccup, I suppose one could say, in this situation, Mr. Speaker. In the communities of Lacombe and Ponoka the water would originate in the Red Deer River, which is part of the South Saskatchewan River basin, and be discharged into the North Saskatchewan River basin, and this water basin transfer is not presently allowed under our act in the province. Now, it would be treated water, of course, that's all through the system and treated water that would be discharged, but even treated water is not allowed to be discharged from basin to basin. Therefore, it would take a special act of the Legislature to allow them to do this.

MRS. JABLONSKI: Mr. Speaker, the wells and aquifers are running dry for these communities. When will we be able to see changes in legislation so that these communities can have quality drinking water?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

DR. TAYLOR: Yes. We understand the problems of the communities, Mr. Speaker. They had to ration water last summer even, will probably have to do that this summer. Right now we are presently working on the process of developing the act that we would need to bring through the legislative process.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MRS. JABLONSKI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My last question is also to the Minister of Environment. If the minister is willing to support a regional drinking water initiative, will he also consider supporting a regional wastewater initiative?

DR. TAYLOR: Yes, I would also consider that. I think the regional wastewater issue is very important as well. Once again, it's economy and it's safety, and these big regional systems I think make a lot of sense. I'll be supporting both the drinking water and the wastewater systems.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, followed by the hon. Member for Medicine Hat.

Chair of the Premier's Advisory Council on Health

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In early January the Minister of Health and Wellness told the media repeatedly and in unequivocal terms that the chair of the Premier's Advisory Council on Health had been cleared in advance by the Ethics Commissioner of any conflict of interest. My questions are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Given that his statement turned out to be false, can the minister explain how he made such a serious blunder?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, I apologize for being incorrect on this particular piece. However, I think most people will understand that the Department of Health and Wellness has a great deal to do. I cannot be expected to know all of the intimate details that occur throughout our department. I've apologized for this. The issue has been dealt with. I don't intend on referring to it again.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the department officials explained away the minister's mistake by saying that he misread a memo about Mr. Mazankowski's business interests, why won't he table that memo in the Legislature tomorrow?

MR. MAR: I don't intend on doing that, Mr. Speaker.

DR. TAFT: Had the minister in any way, shape, or form raised this issue with the Ethics Commissioner before he made his comments?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, I speak with the Ethics Commissioner on a frequent basis. I discuss many different issues with him involving many different people. We are very careful in our efforts to ensure that people that we appoint to various commissions and agencies and boards are free of conflict. I intend on continuing with that avenue of communications with the Ethics Commissioner.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Medicine Hat, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Treaty 8 Taxation Decision

MR. RENNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Over the weekend I received several calls from constituents concerning the recent decision of a federal court regarding Treaty 8 taxation status. Given that I am not knowledgeable about the specifics of this case and concerns were expressed to me about possible long-term ramifications, I would like to pose my questions this afternoon to the hon. Minister of Revenue. Can the minister explain how it was argued that Treaty 8 members should not pay tax on off-reserve activities?

THE SPEAKER: If the province is involved.

MR. MELCHIN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think it is important that we have a chance to at least update everybody on this complex issue. The province does act as an intervenor in this case specifically.

The case was brought forward by Mr. Gordon Benoit, and his claim was understood that anyone who adhered to Treaty 8 and their descendants would not be subject to taxation. Oral arguments were heard on January 22 of this year, and the case was concluded at that time.

In 1992, when the case was first brought forward, three members of the Benoit family initiated litigation in the Federal Court of Canada. They were claiming that as members of Treaty 8, First Nations were exempt from taxation. But since the litigation began, a number of other parties have also been added to that claim. Several Treaty 8 tribal councils were added as plaintiffs.

Last Thursday the Federal Court released its decision. Judge Douglas Campbell found that the plaintiffs were entitled to claim the benefits of Treaty 8, including the treaty right not to have any tax imposed upon them at any time for any reason.

MR. RENNER: Mr. Speaker, can the minister advise what role the province of Alberta played in this case?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. MELCHIN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The province in 1999 chose to act as an intervenor. Shortly before the case was actually brought before trial, the plaintiffs served Alberta with a notice of constitutional question. Alberta elected to intervene in the case upon learning that the litigation deals with the issue of whether all members of Treaty 8 First Nations are exempt from any form of taxation. In other words, Alberta joined the case to protect its taxation abilities. Intervenor status will allow our legal counsel to put forth arguments, submissions, to question witnesses, and appeal if necessary.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. RENNER: Thanks. My final question, Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: apart from the obvious potential loss of revenue, can the minister comment on other long-term implications this decision could have on Alberta?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. MELCHIN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There are some 30,000 Treaty 8 members in Alberta and upwards of another 7,000 in the provinces of British Columbia, Saskatchewan, and in the Northwest Territories. Canada Customs and Revenue Agency is the lead defendant with respect to this judgment. They're currently reviewing the impact of the judgment in conjunction with their other federal departments.

We also – Alberta Revenue, Alberta Justice, and Alberta Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development – are reviewing this 180-page decision in detail. It's inappropriate at this stage to comment on the specifics of the case or its potential ramifications as the matter is still under review, but we would like to say that Canada Customs and Revenue administration and the intervenors have until April 8, 2002, to decide whether we will file for an appeal in the Federal Court of Appeal.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Teachers' Remuneration

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Learning's salary has increased by 105 percent since he joined the Assembly, while a teacher with four years of schooling who had a comparable salary as the minister back in 1995 has had his or her salary increased by only 10 percent over the same period. Now, the minister may not feel that this is a fair comparison, so after adjusting for inflation, his salary increase was more accurately a mere 82 percent. However, the same teacher's salary decreased by over 2 percent after adjusting for inflation. My first question is to the Premier. Why does the Premier and this government present statistics and figures to Albertans that have been manipulated in a way that suit their marketing needs as opposed to presenting clear information?

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

MR. KLEIN: Well, Mr. Speaker, speaking of manipulation, you know, and talk about manipulating figures – I mean, the hon. member across has set the perfect example.

Now, here's the case, and I'll try to relate this to the teachers or a teacher, because we're talking here in the abstract with the exception of the minister, who is sitting here live and real. The minister at one time was a backbencher, and by the way he was a medical doctor and took a tremendous salary loss, I would think, to participate in the Legislature. So if we want to go on, we can start with a teacher who was a medical doctor and then became a teacher, if we want to start that way. But we'll start on an even playing field. We'll start teacher there, MLA here. Well, this MLA went from a private member to cabinet. Okay? Naturally his salary doubled. Now, if teacher X in the system is promoted to a superintendent because he has outstanding administrative skills, then I would think that his or her salary would double too.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

DR. OBERG: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just want to throw one other statistic in here, and that was the statistic from my being a doctor to my being an MLA now. My salary decreased by 75 percent.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Very well. My next question will be to the Minister of Learning. Why does this minister insist upon saying that teachers' salaries have gone up by 41 percent since 1995 when the number fails to adjust for inflation or student enrollment increases?

Thank you.

DR. OBERG: It's really hard to attempt to get across statistics to this person when they don't actually listen to what is being said. Mr. Speaker, what I said was that the amount of money spent on education has gone up 41 percent. Teachers' salaries since 1995 have gone up 17 percent since that time.

MR. MacDONALD: Again, Mr. Speaker, to the Premier: why does the Premier and this government continue to emulate Enron and skew the numbers you use in a way that provides misinformation to Albertans, who count on their government for accurate information?

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. Premier, that's not a question. That's just – I'm not sure what that is.

Children's Services Funding

MS DeLONG: Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Children's Services. Media reports quote the federal heritage minister, Sheila Copps, as saying that the minister's cost containment was an issue in the deaths of the twin babies. Is this true?

Speaker's Ruling

Questions about Media Reports

THE SPEAKER: Well, hon. members, one of the things that we do not do in this Assembly is ask in the question period whether or not a media report is correct or not. We're above that. But if the hon. minister wishes to proceed, she may.

Children's Services Funding

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, if I could address the issue of cost containment and comment on Neegan Awas'sak. The special case review, with the lead role of Dr. Charles Ferguson, determined that there was no cost containment as an issue. In fact, there was a record in Neegan Awas'sak of some surpluses for the past previous years. None of the cost containment issues affected any of the decisions we made.

I would just like to comment, Mr. Speaker, that since 1994 we've received $2 billion less for federal funding for funding social programs and others that we have, in health, in our government. Perhaps the hon. minister of intergovernmental affairs would like to add to the response about costs.

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, yes. Since 1994 there has been a $2 billion reduction in the major source of funds from the federal government to assist provinces in this area. The Premier and representatives of this government have certainly made strong representation to the federal government to the effect that this action is unwise and that this trend should not continue. This is a major area of federal funding under the Canada health and social transfer program, and it is an area which certainly impacts upon the province's ability to fund these programs.

MS DeLONG: My second and final supplemental is to the Minister of Community Development regarding reports that Copps said that Ottawa granted Alberta $140 million in heritage funding last year, money the province ultimately had discretion on. Did we receive this money, and have we cut arts funding?

THE SPEAKER: Well, Mr. Minister, there's no continuity between the first question and the second question here in subject matter, so be very imaginative, hon. minister.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. Minister of Canadian Heritage did provide $140 million, I'll have to get out my forensic flashlight to find it because I don't believe we received that. But we have received some money from the federal government this year, about $8 million, and we're grateful for that.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, that should put a wrap on it.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Children's Services

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. According to Children's Services 2000 annual report, there's been an increase in the deaths of children who are in the care of a child welfare director, from seven in 1995-96 to 12 in '99-2000. There's also been an increase in the deaths of children receiving services from the ministry, from six deaths in 1995-96 to 19 deaths in 1999-2000. To the Minister of Children's Services: why in the past seven years has the ministry not implemented effective policy changes to prevent further deaths?

MS EVANS: Well, Mr. Speaker, the death of a child is always tragic. It is hugely tragic not only to the family, but if it's the death of a child in care, it is hugely tragic to those in our ministry. Today the deaths of children that died while they were in care do not relate to issues of practice. They relate primarily to causes which can range from the children being medically fragile in the first place to other things that put them at risk.

Let's put Alberta's children in the context that we should: 750,000 children, approximately 14,950 children in care, and of all of those children that are in government care, there are many children that are medically fragile and are at risk. When we have deaths, albeit they are always tragic and always regrettable, the inference from the hon. member may well be that it has been because of neglect or some additional travesty heaped upon a child. Frequently we have unknown deaths, but we always do a special case review. We always do a fatality review. When children die, Children's Services take action.

MR. BONNER: Mr. Speaker, given that the number of deaths has tripled – and this is in the minister's own report – why did the budget of the authority which includes Slave Lake decrease by over a million dollars in the latest fiscal year?

2:20

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, in 1999, when we carved out Children's Services budgets for the 18 authorities, we found that there were differences between authorities. The mobility of children was part of it; the mobility of children and families in foster care was part of it. Sometimes the budgets had to be adjusted midyear. Frequently there were other issues that evolved, such as the moneys that are there for handicapped children's services. The correlation, I would suggest, between the bottom line for any one of our authorities and the deaths of children is completely misleading. The correlation is simply not there. We still have work to be done on the funding formula for Children's Services, but any relationship between that and the death of the children is completely misleading.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. BONNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: while its budget for children was being cut, why did the authority's CEO receive a salary increase of $23,000?

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, the boards of the child and family services authorities review their goals and objectives and make determinations on the salaries for those authorities and for those staff. Particularly relative to merit, they provide that information as well to the deputy, who reviews them very carefully. It does not account for what the base is or what some of the other extraordinary provisions are. The reductions, where they were for cost containment in each authority, were tailored to what the board and the authority thought was best and thought was prudent management, keeping those dollar reductions as far away from the child as possible.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, followed by the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Following the Premier's meeting last week with the president of the ATA he led teachers and the people of Alberta to believe that a fair arbitration process would be put in place to resolve the teachers' dispute. It is apparent that the so-called arbitration process will be nothing more than a backdoor legislated settlement on the government's terms. By also taking away the teachers' right to strike, this proposal amounts to nothing more than a new form of slavery. Why did the Premier mislead Alberta's teachers about his government's intentions?

MR. KLEIN: Well, Mr. Speaker, no one misled anyone. Relative to slavery I would suggest that the hon. member go back and look at the film Roots again to understand what slavery is all about.

MR. MASON: Mr. Speaker, why did the Premier mislead Albertans about his government's intentions?

MR. KLEIN: No one was misled in any way, shape, or form. Again, I read back the words of Mr. Booi, who said:

We never thought that this year's contract would resolve the really difficult situations that have driven 21,000 teachers to strike. We know it's going to take a good hard look at the problems, and if we have a good close look at the problems we'll probably start to see some of the solutions down the road.

Those are the words of Larry Booi, president of the ATA, who also in a meeting with me – and there are copious notes to back this up – didn't anticipate other things being in the arbitration process. He wanted the wage issue settled. That was the position of the Alberta School Boards Association, and they do have a role in this particular process. Or does the hon. member not believe in duly elected school boards? If he doesn't, then have him stand up and say so, Mr. Speaker. The arbitration process that will be debated in legislation later on today is, to my mind, precisely what the ASBA and the ATA want.

MR. MASON: Mr. Speaker, how can the Premier claim to be acting in the best interests of Alberta's students when he is taking action which will poison the labour relations in the schools for years to come?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I think that this government is doing, first of all, precisely what the ATA and the ASBA want us to do. Secondly, I sense that there is an impasse relative to the negotiations that should rightfully take place. There is an impasse, and when there's an impasse, people look to a third party, the third party being the government, to resolve the impasse, to find a way out. We try to do what is best in the public interest.

Now, there is absolutely no way that we are going to please all the people all the time. We will never please the socialist NDs. I know that for sure because philosophically we are miles apart. That's why they have two, and that's why we have 74. So we will never agree with the NDs.

But having said that, Mr. Speaker, both sides are looking to this government to find a way to keep the students in the classroom so they can get an education. That's what it's all about.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Lack-of-Moisture Insurance Program

MR. DANYLUK: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to address my question to the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development regarding the lack-of-moisture insurance pilot program. In order for a program to work effectively, coverage needs to be equitable. In the present program there appears to be some disparity between traditional grasslands and bush pastures. Traditionally northern Alberta bushland has a comparable or higher carrying capacity per acre than grassland. There are individual farmers or ranchers who are unable to acquire insurance coverage without due consideration to grass production. Their assessment for the ability to produce grass on bushland is strictly dependent on municipal assessment but not on the ability of traditional production. [interjection] Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This would potentially cause hardship. Why is the new lack-of-moisture insurance pilot program not providing the same level of protection for wooded, treed areas opposed to grassland areas with the same production capabilities?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister with all the background having been given with the question.

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, the weather-based pasture program is unique. It's the first time that we have actually used weather stations that are chosen by the producers to measure moisture, and this program, when precipitation conditions are less than 80 percent of normal, pays a producer.

The issue around bush pasture is a bit difficult in this new program because, as the hon. member indicated, this has been dealt with in three ways in the past. We've had native pasture, we've had bush pasture, and we've had improved pasture. The municipal assessment would indicate how dense or open the bush pasture is.

Given the newness of the program, Mr. Speaker, given the fact that there was a drought in much of this area in the past, and given the urgency of this, Ag Financial Services consulted with a number of producer organizations across the province. It was decided that for this year, this would be the basis that it would be held on. On the issue of whether there is an advantage to southern producers or northern, I would suggest to the hon. member that if he looks at it closely, he will understand that the increased premiums that southern producers will pay for coverage will pretty much make it a wash as to who has any perceived benefit.

MR. DANYLUK: Without the preamble, Mr. Speaker, I will say that given that we have bush pastureland that has the same caring capacity as grassland, in the future can we look forward to having the program being fair and equitable to producers for both areas?

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, I think all members or at least all rural members in this Legislature will know that as we provide insurance programs, we consistently and constantly try to improve those programs because they are a risk-management tool. We are not talking about a grant program here. We're talking about an insurance program where producers are buying insurance to protect themselves against risk.

Bush pasture has to have some grass to qualify for protection. We're working with the cattle association and the grazing reserves to fine-tune the program for next year, but as I said in my earlier response, given the urgency of the drought situation that was there, we felt it important to proceed, as did the producers and their organizations that we talked to.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. member, 30 seconds.

MR. DANYLUK: My final supplemental is again to the minister. With the delayed implementation of the lack-of-moisture insurance pilot program there was some question as to the accessibility and the knowledge of this new program. Were producers adequately notified about the deadline and parameters of the program?

THE SPEAKER: Thank you very much. We'll come back to you another day.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne.

Justice System

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Judges and lawyers throughout Alberta have repeatedly asked this government to address the problems that chronic underfunding has created for the administration of justice in this province. Most recently an eloquent and articulate appeal was made directly to the Premier on behalf of the legal profession. My questions are all to the Minister of Justice. Why have you cut judicial administration to the point where the court's function is seriously compromised?

MR. HANCOCK: Well, Mr. Speaker, I don't believe that to be true. In fact, we have a justice system in this province which is accessible and open to all parties. There are issues that come up from time to time. Particularly in the past six months we've had a situation in Calgary where because of the pressures and because of the good economy, quite frankly, people being able to get jobs that are higher paying, we've lost some judicial clerks, for example. We moved to rectify that situation by improving the salaries for judicial clerks in the last round of provincial bargaining that happened. Now we're dealing with the situation of finding people to fill those jobs. That's proceeding apace. Justice is available to Albertans. Sometimes some things take a little longer than others, but nobody is in jeopardy of not being able to receive justice.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you. Is the minister finding it acceptable that we've got clerk and security shortages, we've got delayed and canceled court dates, we've got courtrooms closed, judicial vacancies, we have Crown prosecutors still carrying large caseloads? Is this acceptable?

THE SPEAKER: Okay, hon. member. The same applies.

MR. HANCOCK: Mr. Speaker, management is always an iterative process, and one has to deal with things as they arise. People move from job to job and take advantage of better opportunities. When that happens, you'll have a vacancy; for example, in the judicial clerk process. When judges retire, you have vacancies in those positions. It's entirely acceptable. In fact, it is a constant state of affairs in every department and in every business that you will have vacancies and you will have to recruit to them.

This government has recognized over the course of the last year that we needed, for example, to add 6 and a half million dollars in supplementary estimates last fall so that we could pay Crown prosecutors better and make sure that we retained them because of the competitive situation we found we were in, and we did that. We found in the supplementary estimates just a few days ago that we added another million and a half to the budget because of the need to adjust salaries for judicial clerks and administrative support, and we did that. These are management processes which are clearly in order, and clearly we're handling the situation.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you. Well, wouldn't the minister find that it would be more effective to have a long-range management plan rather than constantly being two steps behind and having to use supplementary supply and patch things up as he goes?

MR. HANCOCK: Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member clearly hasn't been paying attention. We have three-year business plans, which we debate every year and bring forward every year, and we have the opportunity to discuss them, but we do not put – and she should be aware of this – in our business plan a line item for salaries. We don't put in a line item for salaries because that is subject to a bargaining process. The very members that are complaining that in the Learning budget last year we tried to move teachers to the top in Canada by adding 4 and 2 percent are now saying that we should budget specifically for the increases that are going to come through a bargaining process. Well, you can't have it both ways.

head: Recognitions

Interpretation Canada Awards

MRS. TARCHUK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to recognize all of our park interpreters and, in particular, those who were recently honoured at the Interpretation Canada national awards of excellence. The national gold award for personal interpretation went to Kananaskis Country staff member Don Den Hoed for a program about beavers. The national silver award for personal interpretation went to Don Den Hoed and Erin Couillard for a Kananaskis program on flowers. Honourable mention went to The Kananaskis Chronicles video and to Moose on the Loose by Wendy Pope and Lisa Ryan and to The Superbirds, again by Lisa Ryan. Also awarded honourable mention was a Beauvais Lake provincial park program on rattlesnakes performed by Darrel Croft and volunteer musician Jessica Titley.

These are outstanding examples of the excellent interpretive programs offered by Alberta Community Development staff at our provincial parks and protected areas, which attract more than 8 million visitors each year and help us to understand and appreciate our natural environment.

Congratulations to everyone.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

First Anniversary of 2001 Provincial Election

MR. HORNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to rise today to recognize the one-year anniversary of the 2001 provincial election in Alberta. Tomorrow, March 12, marks the one-year anniversary for 23 members of this Assembly, and as the Speaker mentioned earlier today, on this day, March 11, in 1997 many veteran colleagues in this House were elected for their first time.

As a new member of the Assembly I would like to congratulate all of my colleagues on a job well done, because I now know how difficult this job can be sometimes. It was hard to imagine when we were elected exactly what being an MLA was going to entail. We have come to learn what it means to be lawmakers and what it means to represent Albertans. We all have an important role to play in the development of Alberta. This is the greatest province in Canada both as a place to live and do business, and I believe it's important that we work together as members of this Assembly to build and protect our province for all Albertans.

Thank you to all of my colleagues, both veterans and recent electees, for an excellent year of service. I'm looking forward to working with all of you toward an even better Alberta. Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Edmonton Symphony Orchestra

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Too often these days the people who make up the fabric of our society – educators, health workers, families with children – find themselves not just struggling for fair wages or better working conditions but for respect. I stand today to recognize a group that shares this struggle, the musicians of the Edmonton Symphony. Alberta's life has been diminished this past month because of a labour dispute that has silenced the Edmonton Symphony Orchestra. This dispute appears to be less about money than about accountability and respect. The people who make the music, the musicians, want some of the respect they deserve. They are responsible for performing the music; they want the corresponding opportunity to have a meaningful say in how their professional lives are run.

History remembers musicians and music. Whether it is Beethoven or Bach, Lightfoot or Tyson, O Canada or The Messiah, music and musicians are measures of our greatest achievements of beauty and imagination, and their work is timeless. As Albertans let's do whatever we can to end the dispute at the Edmonton symphony and return its beautiful voice to our lives.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Kids Kottage

MR. BONNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last Wednesday I along with other members of the Assembly had the opportunity to attend the seventh annual Kids Kottage breakfast with the Premier and his wife, Colleen, who is the honorary chair of Kids Kottage.

Kids Kottage is located in the constituency of Edmonton-Glengarry and is a 24-hour crisis facility for children up to 10 years of age who are in danger of abuse or neglect. The Kottage serves as a temporary home, providing a safe, cheerful environment 24 hours per day seven days a week. They not only offer this early intervention program but also offer follow-up support and counseling for families who utilize the Kottage. Parents may use Kids Kottage when they are afraid they are going to hurt their child due to physical or mental reasons, housing problems, domestic violence or the threat of domestic violence, and where parents are having serious relationship problems.

Kids Kottage relies on the generosity of the community to raise the majority of money it takes to run their program. Thank you to the many sponsors, the dedicated staff, and the wonderful volunteers, whose combined efforts provide a much-needed service to families in crisis situations.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood.

Nick Fylypiuk and Ron Tomy

MR. MASYK: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's with great pleasure that I rise in the House today to recognize two very special volunteers from Edmonton. These two men have worked hard to help others through the Balwin community hall for many years, and both have decided to retire.

Mr. Nick Fylypiuk is retiring after donating his time and efforts for 40 years. Most recently I know that he has worked with the executive of the ladies auxiliary at the Balwin community hall. On behalf of all members of the Assembly I'd like to express my gratitude to Nick for his hard work and dedication in the Edmonton community over the past four decades. I'm sure that Mr. Fylypiuk contributed a great presence, that will be missed.

The other individual I would like to recognize today is Mr. Ron Tomy. Mr. Tomy has decided to retire after donating his services as a volunteer at the Balwin community hall for over 20 years. Most recently Ron has focused his efforts as a member of the executive for the Balwin casino. I'd like to take this opportunity to extend my thanks to Mr. Ron Tomy for long years of effort and dedication.

I'm certain that both Mr. Fylypiuk and Mr. Tomy will be missed at the Balwin community hall. However, the group of people that remain at the hall will have no problem filling the shoes that they leave behind.

Thank you so very much, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North

Great Kids Awards

MRS. JABLONSKI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This past weekend I had the great honour along with the members of the Alberta Youth Advisory Panel and members of Children's Services to participate in activities and celebrations with 16 outstanding Alberta children and youth selected as the 2002 Great Kids award winners. Selected from nearly 400 nominations, these great kids between five and 18 years of age have made invaluable contributions to their families, their communities, and their schools. Their acts of kindness, their personal perseverance, and their service to others make them all outstanding members of this province.

The highlight of the celebration was receiving their awards from the Premier, Mrs. Klein, and the hon. Minister of Children's Services. The lights in the room were bright but not as bright as the light shining in the eyes of these 16 remarkable children when they went on stage to receive their awards.

A big thank you to the sponsors who helped make this possible: IBM, TransCanada, Fantasyland Hotel, West Edmonton Mall, and Office Depot.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to congratulate Lacey Bruckhoff, Shelby Renschler, Matthew Royce, Ashley Tessier, Brett Berger, Kimberly Connors, Yuri Dashko, Kyra Gladue, Bethan Jeffreys, Kyle Lillo, Benjamin McConnell, Kelsie Pagacz, Trevor Brown, Cheyenne Price, Reed Waselenchuk, and Myron Wolf Child. Thank you for your great contributions to your province, and never forget that you are a great kid.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Learning.

Bill 12 Education Services Settlement Act

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce a bill being Bill 12, the Education Services Settlement Act.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 12 read a first time]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

Bill 18
Social Care Facilities Review Committee
Amendment Act, 2002

MS EVANS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to move first reading of Bill 18, Social Care Facilities Review Committee Amendment Act, 2002.

Mr. Speaker, this will help clarify the mandate of the committee, among other issues.

[Motion carried; Bill 18 read a first time]

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

THE SPEAKER: Please proceed, Mr. Clerk, if you have any.

THE CLERK: Pursuant to Standing Order 37.1(2) I wish to advise the House that the following document, Surface Rights Board and Land Compensation Board annual report, 2001, was deposited today with the office of the Clerk by the hon. Mr. Cardinal.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and table five copies of a letter written on February 21, I think, by the Minister of Human Resources and Employment to the president of the Alberta Teachers' Association. An attachment to the letter is Teachers' Dispute Resolution Tribunal: Terms of Reference. The last of the six terms of reference includes the following, that "the Tribunal shall ensure that each party has a fair opportunity to be heard on all issues relevant to the dispute."

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have one tabling today. I'm tabling five copies of a New Democrat opposition submission to the Meridian dam preliminary feasibility study dated September 28, 2001. The submission strongly argued against the Meridian dam proposal because it would have some irreversible negative effects on the rare species of plant and animal life, the ecological systems, and moreover it was the worst possible investment of public funds. We are pleased to find out that the Meridian dam proposal is now officially dead.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have this afternoon one tabling. It is entitled Where is the Outrage? The Power of Politics and the Politics of Power. It is an examination of the causes and effects of deregulation on the electrical industry in Alberta. It was written by Keith Provost, professional engineer.

Thank you.

2:50

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table the appropriate number of copies of an article from the Arizona Republic describing a host of serious concerns with kidney dialysis centres operated by for-profit chains, including the deprofessionalization of staff and a number of cases of death.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. With your permission I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of a brochure from the Kids Kottage Foundation which outlines all their services that are available to families in crisis situations.

Thank you.

Second Reading

Bill 203
Gas Flaring Elimination Act

[Adjourned debate March 4: Mr. Macdonald]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Energy.

MR. SMITH: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I wish to rise on this private member's bill and appreciate the interest of the member in Alberta's largest industry, that represents some 20 percent of all economic activity in this province. In short, the bill is unnecessary, the bill is redundant, the bill is a bad bill, and I would recommend to members of this caucus not to approve this bill when it comes up for the second reading.

Mr. Speaker, it's a frivolous and vexatious attempt at taking a run at government policy to eliminate flaring and venting of gas throughout the province. If the member would have done more than scratched the surface of research and ever had the opportunity to leave Edmonton and actually see the results of the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board's work to reduce flaring, he would know that flaring reduction has exceeded targets set by the board. It's something where there are half the flares burning today from a 1996 baseline.

Mr. Speaker, from the time that I probably saw my first flare, there has been a tremendous change in technology, and in fact this is going the right way. I've got to put a lot of faith, confidence, and also recognize the good work of the clean air strategy for Alberta group, the CASA group, that works hard with all stakeholders to ensure that we have good, safe practices in Alberta.

In fact, if you were to look at the safe practices in the oil industry, which is by definition a fairly risky industry, you would look back, and with the handling of sour gas, or hydrogen sulphide, in Alberta there has in fact never – never – been a civilian fatality due to the presence of hydrogen sulphide. So Alberta's record and Alberta's workforce's records are very, very, strong in handling a very high pressure, very dangerous product that comes from many, many metres underground. It is, then, thanks to the technology of places like the University of Calgary and the University of Alberta and NAIT and SAIT, which have been the training backbone of this industry over the last 40 years. There is no better environment, there is no better workforce, and there is no better set of rules and regulations to handle emissions, flaring, and the handling of dangerous products in this province.

The flaring, though, does add just a dash to the debate on greenhouse gases and greenhouse gas emissions, and it would be remiss of me not to take this opportunity, Mr. Speaker, to talk about how one manages the overall environmental impact of this industry. If in fact you really do look at what does occur with greenhouse gas emissions and the change of environment – and I must speak in support of Mr. Buckee's statements. He said that the science of climate change is not complete, and in fact I think he as president of Talisman virtually dismissed the science of global warming. So the forces of environmental protection and other forces, in response to it, instead of responding with facts, responded by simply calling him names.

I think if you look at the Alberta record of how we handle our product and our services, we probably do a better job than anybody else in the world. In fact, that's one of the reasons why people from all over the world seek Alberta expertise in handling these difficult situations. So, you know, as much as they talk about how the tales and the many words that are uttered by politicians make their own contribution to global warming, I would say that if you are examining global warming, if you are looking at greenhouse gas emissions, the first thing you do is you look at the hydrogen molecule, which provides us with all of this energy throughout the world, and that 80 percent of the emission occurs, Mr. Speaker, from the combustion of that hydrogen molecule and only 20 percent from its resource extraction industry.

So, in fact, Mr. Speaker, Albertans have directed this government and this government's agencies to develop policies that are fundamental and key to maintaining and keeping a clean air, a good air environment, and one of those is the strategy that is now under way with gas flaring, the reduction of gas flaring, and also the reduction of venting gases in the production of oil and gas. You'll also see across Alberta many fewer teepee burners, which is the way we used to burn up sawdust and chips years ago. Through government policy those are now cogen opportunities.

In fact, if you look at the members from Grande Prairie-Smoky and Grande Prairie-Wapiti here, they are in fact going to be beneficiaries of a program where formerly wood chips were just burnt and sent up into the atmosphere. That is now being converted to electricity and to steam. It's because of policies such as deregulation and the new competitive market model, and it's the policies of attacking those environmental emissions that kill people and not just warm people that is the success of this government and the success of this industry and its ability to manage its own business. I think that is going to continue.

Certainly the program where we can put small cogeneration plants now into small gas production facilities, further eliminating flaring, further eliminating solution gas, closed-chamber testing, and all the technological innovation that you see in this industry being put to play in it tells me that the only gas that really needs to be eliminated, Mr. Speaker, when I look at the Gas Flaring Elimination Act lies with the NDP third party opposition. So I would highly recommend that members rise up and suppress this gas.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have just a few comments that I would like to make on Bill 203, the Gas Flaring Elimination Act. I would like to thank the Member for Edmonton-Highlands for putting this bill forward and sponsoring this bill. Certainly with the amount of research that we do have presently on the effect of gas flaring in this province, it is an issue that I know all members of this House are concerned about. I certainly think all members of this House would also support an environment where we wouldn't have any gas flaring.

We have to as well realize, Mr. Speaker, that in the history of the province we have had quite a long record of gas production. I was getting a little bit of help with this bill when I looked at key dates in the Canadian oil industry and found that in 1883 the first gas was found in Alberta, and this was at Langevin near Medicine Hat. It was when the CPR was drilling a water well that they happened to find gas instead.

AN HON. MEMBER: Was it a deep well?

MR. BONNER: I don't think it was that deep. No.

In 1901, Mr. Speaker, the first commercial gas field was developed in this province at Medicine Hat. It's quite interesting to note that one of the early visitors to Medicine Hat after the gas was found was Rudyard Kipling, and Rudyard Kipling described this gas strike as having "all hell for a basement." So he certainly was quite studious when it came to looking at the gas production here in the province.

Now, then, Mr. Speaker, I think we have to be realistic as well when we look at gas flaring. When we get reports from the Pembina Institute and we see that according to their statistics even the last 20 percent of flaring cannot be eliminated, then I think we do have to seriously look at the whole issue and the safety factors that are involved with flaring. When we test a well, want to do a production test on it, to flare off the gas is only reasonable, and of course we also want to be able to flare off gas when we reach critical situations in the production of natural gas and for whatever reason it is interfered with.

It is also quite interesting to note that in the last decade, while our production of natural gas has in fact increased quite extensively, there hasn't been a significant increase in the production of gas in this province. So it would seem to me that this is not a problem that is increasing but certainly a problem that the oil industry is taking a very hard look at and doing their part to hold levels of flaring at the same level and not allowing them to increase.

I think we also have to look at perhaps the reason that this bill was introduced by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands; that is, where we have a lot of documentation, particularly in areas around gas wells where there is a significant amount of flaring, on the hazardous effects that it does have on animals and humans in that region. Certainly our goal would be to hopefully reduce emissions as much as we can, but presently, Mr. Speaker, in the province we have not had a serious increase in the amount of gas flaring.

So, Mr. Speaker, those are a few comments that I wanted to get on the record. In closing, I look forward to debate in this House by other hon. members and would once again like to thank the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands for sponsoring this bill in the House. Thank you very much.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Finance.

MRS. NELSON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, for recognizing me. I'm interested in Bill 203, the Gas Flaring Elimination Act, as presented by the member from the third party. From a former life I was most interested to see what this was all about, and as I read the bill, it became abundantly obvious that it's not really about gas flaring elimination but more about setting up another council to regulate an industry that is already regulated by one of the best regulatory bodies that the world has ever known, a world-renowned regulatory body, the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board, formerly known as the Energy Resources Conservation Board, that has been in existence for well over 60 years and is revered all over the world as being the most effective regulatory body that there is in the resource sector.

I was a little amazed to see what kinds of things this council would be doing, and again, as the Minister of Energy alluded to earlier, basically what they are attempting to do has already been put in place through the mechanism of a variety of co-operative and collaborative approaches through CASA, the Clean Air Strategic Alliance Association that came about a number of years ago, where industry, environmentalists, and government joined together to look at strategic processes and procedures that could be put in place because they were the right things to do to make sure that not only conservation was in place but that the development brought together economic development with environmental protection so that we wouldn't have difficulties down the road. CASA's process has been extremely successful over the years and has dealt with a number of very difficult issues.

I remember back in 1995, when there was a huge concern rearing its ugly head called climate change, global warming. Through the help of CASA and the energy ministers from across Canada, Alberta drafted a program called the voluntary challenge program. We went to our industry players and asked them to come forward with initiatives that would cut back the emissions that were coming out of Alberta and Canada and would be helpful for other jurisdictions so that they, too, through technological enhancements and initiatives would be able to cut back on their emissions so that we truly would have a clean environment. That process was taken up by almost 90 percent of the producing industries in western Canada and I believe by about 75 percent across the country.

What that process did, Mr. Speaker, was allow for the initiatives that were being done in Alberta and in Canada, because they made sense to do, to be promoted worldwide. I guess there was a lot of talk back in those days where you would have six scientists on one hand say that this was going to happen and six scientists argue on the other hand. We said: "Let's do things because they make sense. Let's move forward because it makes sense to do it. It's good economics to do it so that we don't have problems down the road." That's what the voluntary challenge program did. It did it because, in the overall scheme of the global economy and global climate change, we recognized that Canada contributed less than 2 percent of the emission problem, but Canada had the ability to take the lead on the technological enhancement to help those entities worldwide that were contributing 10, 15, 25 percent of the emission problem, particularly those entities in the Third World. This initiative was very successful.

So what happened back here at home? As we looked at ourselves, we said, "If we're going to be part of the solution of providing the technological enhancement and we're going to also be part of the solution of providing a cleaner fuel down the pipeline like we did with our expansion of our natural gas where we put a clean-burning fuel down a pipeline to get rid of a not-so-clean fuel in the United States, what would we have to do back home?" Well, we wanted to make sure that our emissions and flaring were brought down. Again, through CASA, the Clean Air Strategic Alliance, a flaring committee was struck to look at how we could reduce flaring concerns of solution gas in this province.

What this bill is asking for, this committee has exceeded by far. In fact, under the Energy and Utilities Board report in the year 2000 the flaring of solution gas has been reduced by approximately 38 percent from the 1996 baseline levels. That exceeds the 15 percent reduction target for the year 2000. It also exceeds the 25 percent reduction target for the year 2001. So this process of coming together with industry and environmental groups and government truly works. It improves on the 30 percent reduction recorded in 1999, and it far outstrips the 10 percent per annum reductions envisioned in this particular legislation. So already the process is successful and moving forward, Mr. Speaker.

I don't see any need for this piece of legislation, quite frankly. I think groups like CASA that can put together a flaring and venting project team to show success like they have demonstrated is the way to go. It brings the players to the table because it makes sense to be there. It's not because the heavy hand of government says: thou shalt do this or that. It's because it absolutely makes sense for them to be there, and we can see how this has been successful with this organization in a number of initiatives.

The hon. Minister of Energy alluded to deregulation. Quite frankly, with the cogeneration facilities that have occurred on industrial campuses throughout Alberta, we have seen tremendous success, in particular in our petrochemical areas, where they have been able to manage to provide not only for their own electrical needs but also additional electrical needs to go into the grid. So these initiatives coming forward from industry and government working together as a team have been very successful.

To legislate this through is redundant and counterproductive, so I would hope that the hon. members would not support this bill. I see no need for another council to come in and try and move into an area where the regulations have been rigid – they're tough but they're fair – where industry and government have come together to join forces to put forward best practices and have been successful, and where industry and government have come together to have a lead, not only in Canada, not only in North America but worldwide, with initiatives that have led this industry worldwide.

So I would hope, Mr. Speaker, that hon. members would not support Bill 203, as presented by the member of the third party. I would say that if the member of the third party would like to see this, certainly I'm sure that field trips could be arranged so that you can see the initiatives firsthand and realize the benefits that have come from such close arrangements such as CASA, such as the relationships with the industry, the environmental groups, and the government. I would encourage us to reject this bill.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the opposition health critic I took particular note of Bill 203, the Gas Flaring Elimination Act, from the perspective of the health of Albertans. The whole thrust in our province, and I think across the country, is preventing illness rather than treating it. Gas flaring, of course, is – I think we would all agree – regarded in some situations as a health issue and indeed a threat to health and at times a cause of death. So it is an area where we need to watch out for the health issues, and I'd like to just discuss some of those for a moment here.

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

The effects of gas flaring on health arise from a number of concerns. First of all, there are the respiratory concerns, the simple fact of people anywhere within the vicinity of the flare breathing the fumes from the gas flare and as a result suffering respiratory disease, either immediate discomfort and distress or a long-term degradation of their respiratory capacity. There are certainly concerns among experts and among residents of Alberta on the effects of gas flaring on healthy respiration.

There are also concerns over the effects of carcinogens from gas flaring. Certainly some of the by-products from the gas industry are known to be carcinogenic, to be cancer causing, and properly disposing and controlling of those waste products is crucial to the health of Albertans. So again the issue of gas flaring is very important.

Beyond that, there is some evidence, both from animal studies and from human studies, of the effects of gas flaring on both birth defects and miscarriages. This applies, as I said, not only potentially to human health but also to the health of livestock and, I suppose, possibly wildlife. There has been, for example, evidence of increased rates of miscarriages among cattle and cows in areas where there's intense flaring of gas.

So there's no question that gas flaring is a serious health issue, and any steps taken to reduce gas flaring I think are to be commended. So I've read this proposed bill, Bill 203, with some interest and enthusiasm, for it does propose phasing out of potentially all gas flaring in the province within 10 years, by the end of this decade or thereabouts.

The bill, in fact, doesn't get specific on how this phasing out will occur. It does propose that flaring will be reduced by 10 percent a year each consecutive year, commencing January 1, 2003, and that this whole process will be overseen by a new council which they propose to call the advisory council on gas flaring elimination.

Now, there are views and points of debate over whether we can or ought to attempt to eliminate all our gas flaring. I think that by anybody's measure there has already been progress made on this concern in Alberta in the last several years, and industry and the government and the opposition, I might add, are undoubtedly all to be commended for this progress, but there is much that remains to be done.

I know two views taken on this issue. One is that we can perhaps achieve only an 80 percent success rate on eliminating gas flaring and that eliminating the final 20 percent of gas flaring is going to be impractical or exceedingly difficult. At the same time, there's another view that says that we should set our standards high. We should set our standards so that we have to really stretch to achieve them, and that sort of standard would be a 90 percent or even 100 percent target for eliminating gas flaring.

The proposal in this bill, as I understand it, is to eliminate 100 percent of gas flaring. I think there's much to be said for setting such a high standard, and as the Minister of Energy earlier confirmed, it's only because of prodding and encouragement and regulations set by government that so much progress has been made to date. I would encourage us to consider continuing in that process and setting very high standards to eliminate all gas flaring if at all possible within the next decade.

I know from personal contacts as well as reading in the area that this is a particular concern for ranchers and farmers and that this government would probably do well for its supporters in rural areas to look at potentially eliminating all gas flaring in Alberta. There are 5,200 active flares in Alberta, and virtually all of those are in rural areas. So that's an enormous contamination of our environment and at the same time an enormous opportunity.

The Minister of Energy and, I believe, the Treasurer both commented on the success of collecting these wastes and rather than just flaring them using them to power electricity. That's a creative and innovative solution to a problem where everybody wins, although I must note that the price of power the other day spiked up to $420 a megawatt hour. So perhaps if we had all 5,200 wells cogenerating, we might – might – just bring electricity prices under control, although I'm not too optimistic. This was, I believe, at 7 o'clock in the morning last Friday.

I think there's also an opportunity here for the New Democrats and the government to join forces and work together in achieving the betterment of all Albertans. I'm sure that the Liberal opposition is prepared to encourage that sort of collaboration on such a good cause.

So with those comments, Mr. Speaker, I will take my seat. Thank you.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

MR. CAO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for giving me the opportunity to speak on Bill 203 as proposed by the Member for Edmonton-Highlands. Let me first say that any proposal that intends to protect our environment ought to be considered very, very seriously. This province does not just belong to us; it belongs to our grandchildren and to their grandchildren. As representatives of everyday Albertans in this Assembly we are charged with being the stewards of the environment and making sure that it is kept in great condition now and in the future. This is a responsibility that all members of this Assembly accept and cherish.

The member across the way is proposing that we in this House impose a 10-year legislated time frame to eliminate gas flaring across the province. What this bill would do is eliminate the source of toxins that are released into the air and throughout Alberta. This bill has the best intention behind it, as it aims to protect the overall health and the environmental safety of Albertans. Mr. Speaker, I believe in the good intent of the bill and the Member for Edmonton-Highlands for the idea, and I thank him for the opportunity so we can have an in-depth understanding of the subject.

The history of oil and gas development in our province is long, Mr. Speaker. Since the first strike outside Leduc Albertans have been excited about the potential that oil and gas production offers us. By the same token, the concern for our environment has been just as prevalent since the early 1960s. For example, there has been concern about the proximity of oil and gas wells to farmlands in our rural areas. These concerns have never been sidestepped or dismissed by our government. Instead, they have been dealt with through the creation of sound legislation and consultation with all concerned stakeholders, especially since the mid-80s as governments worldwide began to realize the harmful effects of air pollution, such as the depleted ozone layer, breathing and skin problems. This government endeavoured to make sure that the booming oil patch could coexist with a healthy environment, and we are vigilant in this goal. The health of Albertans always comes first: no ifs, ands, or buts.

We see this from many views and studies, workshops and investigations. We have studied many of these issues. We can without doubt be sure that as a government we are not authorizing any activity which endangers the health of Albertans. Just look at the creation of the western provinces human and animal health study which was launched in 1999. By studying this issue, this government has truly committed itself to the safety of Albertans. Furthermore, this study has been funded by both the government and industry.

As a person with, I should say, a whole past area in the oil and gas industry I can say with confidence that it makes more fiscal sense to flare gas efficiently than it does to flare it inefficiently, and this fact is not lost on the oil and gas companies who operate in our province. Our oil and gas companies are looking to use gas as efficiently as possible because that means that the more gas that can be sold, the more profit can be made. As well, flaring and burning gas efficiently means that our oil and gas will last longer and will put money in our coffers for years and generations to come.

Finally, our oil and gas companies are becoming increasingly mindful of their effect on the environment. They understand, just as this government does, that destroying the environment benefits absolutely nobody. Oil executives have children just like the rest of us, and they don't want their children and grandchildren to suffer from lack of environmental practices. This is why companies around the globe are developing new and innovative strategies and technologies to mitigate harmful effects on the environment. They, like operators in other industries, understand that it is in their own best interests to waste as little of their products as possible.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I think that we should be mindful of the positive effects that the oil and gas industry has on our province. We see that when we regulate appropriately but also allow industry to innovate, positive environmental and economic results occur. This is not to say that our history has been perfect. There have been bumps on the road. However, history suggests that when those bumps have occurred, government and industry have come together to find solutions that benefit everybody. When some partners in the industry have chosen to shirk their duty, this government has taken them to task. In the end, what has resulted is a mutually beneficial relationship with clear lines of responsibility and accountability.

These are just some of the reasons why the bill is quite unnecessary, despite the intent. We know that government and industry are working to improve gas flaring efficiency. We also know that we have made tremendous strides in reducing the amount of flaring that does occur in this province. In fact, we've reduced flaring in this province by more than 30 percent since 1996. Our departments of Energy and Environment are working hard to ensure that the gas producers in this province release gas in an efficient manner so as not to harm our environment. We are working hard and we will continue to do so. Our history is one that indicates that this government will always look out for the environmental health of Albertans. As a person with a long professional and technical experience in the petroleum industry I can attest that flaring is necessary for the safety of the industry operation and the safety of the workers at the site. In oil and gas operations we constantly deal with very high pressure, very high temperature, unstable and unsteady states of flow. Flaring is a needed safety valve and a necessary part of safe and responsible engineering design. Flaring is at times also used for the incineration of dangerous substances, making them more neutral. Total elimination of flaring is unscientific and dangerous to the lives of our workers. The Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, with his work experience in pressure vessels, must agree with me on this.

I commend the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands for bringing up the idea, but for the abovementioned reasons I cannot support passing Bill 203 into law. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

3:30

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

MS DeLONG: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure today to rise and speak to Bill 203, the Gas Flaring Elimination Act. This bill may seem like a good idea, but I can assure the members of this Assembly that this government is already working to accomplish what this bill proposes. I would like to update the House on some of the actions and results that are currently being taken to improve the already world-class oil and gas industry in this province.

In July 1999 the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board put out a comprehensive set of requirements addressing all forms of flaring in the petroleum industry. The requirements are found in guide 60 of the Upstream Petroleum Industry Flaring Guide. Guide 60 requires that by December 31 of this year all solution gas flares be evaluated to determine if the gas can be conserved. The Alberta Energy and Utilities Board has specified criteria and evaluation procedures that must be used to determine if gas conservation is economical. All flares that were within 500 metres of a residence must have been evaluated already and the results discussed with the residents. The industry has taken guide 60 and is following all of the recommendations, rules, and procedures for gas flaring. We have seen significant reduction in gas flaring since 1996, and we hope to see even more changes in gas flaring by the end of this year.

The Alberta Energy and Utilities Board is also very much involved in the reduction by increasing field inspections of facilities throughout the province and placing more emphasis on measuring and reporting flared and vented solution gas. The Alberta Energy and Utilities Board staff also respond to all complaints about flaring and venting. The staff regularly monitor the 50 oil bitumen batteries with the largest flares and regularly requests that the oil company complete an economic evaluation of gas conservation. This increased monitoring has been one of the major factors in reducing flaring in this province. The EUB will continue their good work, which will inevitably result in more reduction of gas flaring.

The Alberta Energy and Utilities Board is being proactive, and they make presentations all around Alberta to increase awareness of gas flaring. They continue to encourage further gas conservation and are working hard to reduce the number of gas flares in this province. I do not believe that we should give the EUB a legislated time frame. They understand the industry well enough to know what can and cannot be accomplished.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta continues to move towards the almost full reduction of gas flaring. For instance, in the year 2000 93 percent of the solution gas was conserved. That means that gas could have been flared, but, instead, alternatives were found and solutions were reached. This is true through the entire industry. Where conservation can occur, conservation will occur. This government will continue to evaluate and monitor gas flaring in the province and will continue to find ways to reduce gas flaring.

Mr. Speaker, we are currently trying to find the technology to help the industry conserve even more solution gas than it already has. We have been working together to find alternatives to gas flares. As technology progresses, the number of flares in Alberta will decrease. We are currently beginning to install power generators around Alberta. These power generators help conserve gas and eliminate flaring, and as the technology allows, more and more will be installed.

Mr. Speaker, there has been a significant reduction in gas flaring in Alberta. The AEUB has been setting targets and goals for the industry, and they have been meeting the targets. For instance, in 2000 a target of 15 percent of solution gas flaring had to be reduced. The industry saw this goal and exceeded it by reducing 38 percent of solution gas flaring. In 2001 the target was set at 25 percent, and it is estimated that the industry will have exceeded that target through the elimination of almost 50 percent of gas flaring. These numbers show that there is progress being made in the reduction of flaring.

The government and the industry have been working together to ensure that the public and the environment are considered and protected. To quote Pierre Alvarez, president of the Canadian Association of Petroleum Producers:

We understand the public's concern about flaring and that's why we moved to surpass the flaring targets. The oil and gas industry is committed to the long-term goal of eliminating routine solution gas flaring.

By passing Bill 203, I feel that we would be slapping the industry in the face. They have been working very hard, co-operatively, and successfully in reducing flaring. I don't feel that we should legislate a time line for them to follow. We must continue to allow them to work co-operatively to find solutions that are ideal for Alberta, and eventually gas flaring will be eliminated.

Mr. Speaker, I should say almost eliminated, because right now I don't feel it is safe to eliminate flaring completely. We must take into consideration that there are many reasons for flaring, one of which being that when an emergency occurs at a facility, flaring must be allowed so emergencies can be dealt with. If you were not allowed to flare, then the operation of these facilities would not be safe. We must also continue to allow flaring during the drilling and completion of wells. This again is a safety measure. When a company drills a well, there is a gas produced during the process. The most economical and safest way to deal with the by-product gas is to flare it off. Technology may soon be developed that will allow for a different way to eliminate the gas, but until then we must allow it to be flared so that the lives of our workers are not put in jeopardy.

Mr. Speaker, this province is currently looking for new ways to eliminate gas flaring. Coupled with this, there are studies that are researching what effect gas flaring has on wildlife, agriculture, and human health. These studies help guide us when we make decisions about new technologies in eliminating gas flaring. I believe that we should wait for these studies to be completed before we make any decisions in regard to the oil and gas industry. We do not want to weaken the sector by making a poorly informed decision, especially when the sector has been so co-operative with this government in finding ways to reduce the amount of flares that take place in Alberta. To pass legislation that would affect countless Albertans before the studies are complete would not be wise or appropriate. We must be patient and wait for the results before making any decisions. The government must have received all the necessary data on gas flaring before we can make such an important decision.

I appreciate the intent of the member opposite, Mr. Speaker, but I do not feel that it is wise for us to proceed with Bill 203 as it currently stands. Thank you.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

MR. HLADY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is great that I have a chance to stand and speak to Bill 203 today. I really wanted to speak to it because I am very concerned over some of the potential damage that it could be doing to our economy here in Alberta.

We have right now the Clean Air Strategic Alliance, which is the CASA flaring and venting working group, working on this very issue, and it has a much broader mandate. It's looking into further flaring and venting reductions over a longer period of time. Alberta has been working with B.C., Saskatchewan, and Manitoba as well as with the private sector in an effort to address these questions, and we've put a lot of money into that. At this time I believe we've put in almost $11 million. That is a substantial amount. The Science Advisory Panel is a world-class group of scientists, and they've been retained to ensure that the study is scientifically sound and properly carried out to determine what the effects are of flaring gas today. It's a very comprehensive study that involves measuring the exposure of emissions to both beef cattle herds as well as wildlife. I think we'll see some really great things coming out of this over a period of time.

I'm also concerned because I think the potential for a new council like this to come along is also going to at some point want some teeth, and if you have some teeth in it, then you have some real problems. What happens if it doesn't achieve what you want to have it achieve in 10 years? Would he shut down the oil and gas industry? Then we would be in serious, serious problems in this province.

I think, Mr. Speaker, there's another process that's going on right now that this has a little bit of mirroring to although on a smaller scale, and it's the Kyoto process. The Kyoto protocol as it's going forward right now has very, very detrimental effects that would be happening to Alberta if you saw that kick into place. We are right now waiting for the federal government to come up with its position and see what happens and what they think about implementing the Kyoto protocol here in Canada. I think it's important that people understand what the Kyoto protocol is and how it affects Alberta and our economy, because that directly relates to the kinds of things that could happen if you had something like this Bill 203 kick in and affect our economy.

As the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Energy mentioned earlier, Canada produces about 2 and a half percent of the world's emissions, yet we have the best technology today out there for making sure that we have minimized emissions in both the oil and gas industries. The billions and billions of dollars that it would cost, Mr. Speaker, to implement reductions that would take us from 2 and a half percent of the world's emissions down to, say, 1 and a half percent of the world's emissions, if you took those same billions of dollars and applied them to China and India and Russia, you could potentially cut the world's emissions by 20 to 30 percent. That's where they have very, very, dirty coal, as an example, creating the production of energy in those countries, but they are not committed to the Kyoto protocol. They don't have to meet any standards. That is one of the big failures and falling down parts of the Kyoto process.

So while we are trying to do everything we can here, we see other parts of the world not doing anything. In the bigger picture of making sure that we have a healthy world to live in, that's not effective. Now, we will continue to do what we're doing today, Mr. Speaker, and make sure that we do have the highest standards in the world, and we will offer them to the rest of the world so that they can achieve the same standards that we do already enjoy here.

I don't know how many folks here in the Legislature saw in the news – I think it was in today's newspapers – that Calgary was actually found to be the cleanest city in the world, folks, in the world. It doesn't get any better. There you go. I think that's a wonderful thing, beating cities such as Honolulu and every major city in the world. I think Honolulu was second, so that gives us a really good standard to see that we do care about the environment and we're doing everything. Everything that we've got planned right now is happening and working very effectively.

The flaring, you know, is certainly a challenge, but as I think you've heard many members today speak to it, we have seen the fact that it does have a purpose and it's a process. The study group is going to continue to work hard over the next number of years to make sure that we do remove, minimize, and eventually eliminate it. Can we do it in a 10-year process? Hopefully, we can do it quicker, but I think that interfering in the process that's going on would only be a negative.

I think another piece in regards to the effect that this would potentially have on our economy is, again, competing just inside North America, Mr. Speaker. The United States has already decided not to be involved in the Kyoto protocol. However, their energy plan is to actually achieve better standards than are being put forward in the Kyoto protocol. Right now the Kyoto protocol certainly supports the European Union, and it's designed to make it a much more effective economic tool against North America for the European Union. A lot of people don't understand that. Right now inside the European Union you have a bubble of about 17 countries, and inside those 17 countries they're trading in amongst themselves on credits, on emission credits. What they've come up with is a net sum of zero inside the European Union, so therefore all the 17 countries really don't have to do anything. They're already at a net sum of zero, and they're fine.

Canada and the United States didn't have any major partners that we could trade with, and therefore it made no sense, and that is why the U.S. has backed out of the Kyoto protocol. Unfortunately, our federal government is still considering going ahead, and it's looking like they may ratify in June or later, and that would be very detrimental to our economy here in Alberta.

A couple of other players that aren't involved. Mexico has also decided not to ratify, and even the Japanese – Kyoto is where the protocol was signed – have adapted and amended what they are going to fulfill in regards to the Kyoto protocol. The Kyoto protocol asks for emissions reductions to be everywhere. The Japanese had figured it out that it would just destroy their economy even further than it is today. Therefore, industry in Japan will not have to meet the emissions standards that are being put forward in the Kyoto protocol. What the Japanese are planning to do today is to meet the emissions reductions by doing it through vehicles and through residents and so on but not through industry because it would have been so harmful to the industries inside Japan.

So I think, Mr. Speaker, this is something that we have to be very vigilant with and watch and realize, when we're going through this process, that bringing forward legislation that would hurt the economy here in Alberta is something that we have to be very careful about, and I think Bill 203 potentially does that.

Just quickly I wanted to speak a little bit that Alberta Environment as well as Alberta Energy are very in touch with what's going on and staying close to this and working closely with the Clean Air Strategic Alliance. I think we will see a lot of good results coming out over a short period of time, and I look forward to seeing these results work favourably for our environment.

Mr. Speaker, thank you for your time.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan.

MR. LOUGHEED: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you to the member for bringing forward Bill 203, the Gas Flaring Elimination Act.

Mr. Speaker, if I were to go out into Edmonton and around the area there asking people what they knew about flaring and venting, I suspect there would not be many individuals that would understand the issue. Similarly, in the member's own constituency of Edmonton-Highlands it's probably not a big issue among many of the residents there. Same thing in Calgary, I would expect, although perhaps in the oil centre of Canada there may be a little more understanding of what flaring and venting actually are. If I were to tell them what the preamble said, this preamble for the bill where it says that "the flaring and venting of solution gas adversely affects the environment and ecological systems," some people may become concerned if they accept that at face value and believe that that is the case. That statement is quite easily made. Commonly it's claimed, though, that those concerns are voiced merely by opponents of the industry and that there's little or no evidence of any problems.

The other preamble goes along with something that is also of concern. The first statement expresses concern for those working in the vicinity of flaring and venting. Mr. Speaker, for the people I represent their concerns are not related to people working in the vicinity of flares but rather for those residents who live in the area of flares, flares that are ignited during the development of a gas well. Initially I said that there probably wasn't much interest in flaring and venting, but there's a real and dramatic change from apathy to really intense interest in my constituency when a resident of this constituency of Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan realizes that a rig is set up and some gas company is drilling about 200 metres from his or her house. In many cases, unfortunately, there's been no notification. There's been no information about the impact on any neighbours. There's no compensation offered for any real or feared negative impacts, and there's no opportunity to have their water well tested prior to the drilling to prove that either water quality or supply were affected by the drilling of this test gas well.

Now, the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board has responsibility for all the regulations under which these operators drill. If the regulations aren't working for the benefit of the residents of Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan, then I believe it's my responsibility to speak to that issue on their behalf. I must add as well though, Mr. Speaker, that the AEUB field-workers have done a good job of reacting to concerns and in fact have shut down operations where they feel inadequate notification has been given. The AEUB is, however, constrained by current regulations that could work better in those densely populated areas, those rural areas like Strathcona county, where there are many acreage developments.

A resident in the constituency is currently objecting to proposed drilling literally in his backyard. He's told me that he's suggested that his concerns and objections could better be dealt with prior to the sale of petroleum and natural gas rights. He has a great many concerns, many that go well beyond flaring and venting. He has concerns about contamination of water wells in the area and also concerns about property devaluation because of either pipelines crossing his property, eliminating the possibility of further subdivisions, or also having the gas well right next door to a proposed subdivision.

Mr. Speaker, people are committed in my constituency – those people that are in the vicinity of gas wells – to the reduction of flaring, sometimes at a great deal of their own personal cost. There are other alternatives such as in-line testing, and they would like to see in the development of newly drilled wells, rather than developing them through flaring, having them developed through in-line testing. In fact, another local resident, who owns the mineral rights, feels so strongly about the flaring of these test wells as the gas wells are being developed that in fact he will not allow his mineral rights to be accessed, and he won't allow production to proceed until he's assured that there'll be no flaring in the vicinity. He's insisting that there be some other alternative.

In-line testing identifies the composition of gases and liquids that are in the well, and that allows the producers to predict what the well will yield. It also allows them to plan around the composition and put in place the necessary infrastructure to manage the well. However, it's standard practice to discard the gases. Excess gas or solution gas has to be taken out of the way. The most common way is just to flare it off as a safety precaution, and it's also for production efficiency. Frankly, these producers are more concerned with getting the resource out quickly rather than efficiently and over the long term. It's a race among the producers to get the biggest slice to market as quickly as possible, and this is causing waste. The flaring process is wasteful. It's environmentally questionable and may impact human, animal, and ecosystem health.

There are other alternatives, Mr. Speaker, and we should address them as a priority of government. Another alternative to flaring in the oil patch is to return that natural gas back into the ground after separation from the oil, and it can be done in the same well location or in an adjacent well. The reinjection technology is well established and completely eliminates the majority of the need for flaring. This would help, also, to preserve gas for future generations if we have no use for it immediately.

Other options include the consumption of currently flared gas through power generation. That presents an opportunity to bring additional power into the Alberta grid, and in the deregulated environment it can also lower the price of electricity for all Albertans. The flaring project team, a part of AEUB's Clean Air Strategic Alliance, has suggested that royalty be waived on gas producing this cogenerated electricity. This gas otherwise would just go up in smoke and the royalty would be lost.

Other suggestions are to provide financial incentive for the elimination of flaring and also through the mechanism of flow-through shares to apply to infrastructure upgrades, for instance in power generation, for these onsite small electric generators. Both of those options would be at no cost to government but would increase Alberta's power and productive capacity. Vapour recovery units which compress and store gas for future use are making gains in their cost and energy efficiency, and ultimately there are many viable options at hand. The waste of that valuable resource, the natural gas, is not an option that we should consider.

We've talked often in this Assembly about the Kyoto accord, and just in these past few minutes, even, there's been concern expressed about the ratification of the Kyoto accord by Ottawa. If, in fact, Ottawa does go ahead and ratify, the emissions from gas flares and from venting will be considerably impacting Alberta. If we can prevent flaring and prevent venting, we will be able to reduce those emissions and move closer to addressing the Kyoto accord ratification standards.

At this point in the debate though, Mr. Speaker, I'm left with a few questions. I'd have to ask if the advisory council proposed by this bill is really the way to deal with concerns of residents in the vicinity of flaring and venting. Especially I'm concerned about those residents in the constituency of Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan within close proximity of test wells being drilled where they may in fact, upon the striking of gas, flare for two or three days. Do the current regulations protect the public and the environment adequately? What can be done to ensure that reliable data is available and that research provided by either industry or environmental organizations is not regarded with skepticism? As I have stated, there are considerable concerns expressed by people from the constituency, people whom I respect and whom I represent. Whether their concerns are validated by science or not, they must be considered and evaluated.

This bill has some merit. I do not know yet if it's the proper vehicle to address my constituents' concerns. Thank you.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands to close debate.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to close debate on second reading of Bill 203, the Gas Flaring Elimination Act.

Those of us who represent opposition parties in the House are sometimes accused of introducing bills that we know don't have a chance of passing the government caucus. Now, I happen to think that this is a very legitimate thing, as opposition parties have a responsibility to put our policies forward in legislation even if they are at odds with government policy.

MR. LUKASZUK: You have policies?

MR. MASON: We have more policies than you'd care to know, hon. member.

Judging from the comments made by government members during the debate, it looks like this bill will not be accepted by the Assembly, based on what I've heard so far, and I find that disappointing.

I find that some of the criticisms of the bill suggest that some members haven't studied it carefully enough. For example, the Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne said that he couldn't support the bill because sometimes gas has to be flared in an emergency situation, and that has been echoed by at least three other members of the House who've risen to speak. But if the members would look more carefully at the bill, in section (2)(d) there's a limited exception in cases of an emergency where it may otherwise be a threat to the safety of the public or to personnel.

[The Speaker in the chair]

The Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie left the impression that gas flaring was no longer one of the burning environmental issues in Alberta, but my travels around the province in the last two years have suggested that gas flaring is very much a burning environmental issue and continues to be so. In fact, several members of the government caucus have risen and spoken about the concerns of their constituents with respect to this problem. So I would ask the House: if the situation is so completely under control, why are we hearing hon. members representing their constituents say that the constituents are extremely concerned in some cases about this?

Now, it's clear that there has been progress in the last several years to reduce the amount of flaring, and I want to once again commend the work of the flaring/venting project team set up under the Clean Air Strategic Alliance for their excellent work so far. As I've said earlier, Bill 203 should be seen as an acceleration and a complement to and not a replacement of the work that has been done by them so far.

Mr. Speaker, let's be clear. There is one issue that comes up more often than any other when it comes to the question of the quality of life in rural Alberta, and that is gas flaring. I'm quite surprised to hear the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow call this bill a slap in the face to the energy industry, when we are continuing to see asthma – Alberta has more asthma than any other province in this country – when we're continuing to see other lung diseases, when we're continuing to see stillbirths, when we're continuing to see illness and death in animals and in humans. I would suggest that we need to go much further than so far. It's not the time to pat ourselves on the back and just say: we can rest on our laurels. What we need to do is to take concrete actions to finish the job.

Now, I was surprised when the Minister of Finance indicated that Alberta has very tough, very rigid regulations when it comes to gas flaring and venting, yet we all know that this is entirely a voluntary approach. So which is it, Mr. Speaker? Are we tough in our voluntary approach, or are we soft in our regulations? I think it's clear and has been clear that the easy 50 percent of gas flaring and venting has been dealt with, but increasingly it's going to be more expensive to get rid of the next 10 percent and the 10 percent after that and the 10 percent after that. Increasingly the voluntary approach, I submit, will break down because companies that comply will be placed at a competitive disadvantage with companies that do not comply. Therefore, the whole system is bound to break down. We need a bill that clearly sets guidelines over a 10-year period. That's long enough. We've been very liberal, so to speak, in considering the time available, and it's time that we dealt with this issue once and for all.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion lost]

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, before proceeding to the next order of business, which is second reading of Bill 204, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands has advised in writing that he wants to rise on a question of privilege.

Privilege
Misleading the House

MR. MASON: Mr. Speaker, I'm rising under section 15(1) of the Standing Orders: "A breach of the rights of the Assembly or of the parliamentary rights of any member constitutes a question of privilege." Under subsection (5) I am indicating that I'm raising this at the first possible opportunity, and therefore the two hours' written notice does not apply.

Specifically, Mr. Speaker, as soon as I had a chance to peruse Bill 12, which was distributed to the Assembly this afternoon, I realized that in fact Bill 12 and its provisions were at definite variance to statements that the Premier had made to this House. So my question of privilege is that the Premier has misled the Assembly with respect to the actions that the government was going to take relative to the teachers.

In Alberta Hansard of February 28, 2002, in response to a question from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, the Premier says:

You're absolutely right. The questioner is absolutely right, Mr. Speaker, in that no legislation, no regulations, no policy initiatives will be taken to bring about punitive action – punitive action – against the teachers.

He goes on to say:

But I will reiterate: nothing that this government contemplates in the future at any time is punitive relative to teachers. It's not the nature of this government to punish. We just don't do that.

Now, Mr. Speaker, having had a chance to briefly review Bill 12, I see that there are a number of provisions.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. member, please. The question of privilege is a very, very important question. This is not a debate on Bill 12. The hon. member advised that he chooses to rise on the basis of what was said in Oral Question Period this afternoon, so please focus on that. This will not be a debate on Bill 12.

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It was not my intention to make it a debate but to bring to your attention those provisions of the bill which I believe to be punitive and therefore not in accordance with what the Premier told this House. If you wish, I can briefly enumerate them. Section 6(2) . . .

THE SPEAKER: No, no, no. Please, please. We're dealing with a question of privilege presumably arising out of the question period today. I'm sorry; you have to focus.

MR. MASON: Mr. Speaker, on February 28 the Premier made statements to the House which I've just quoted from Hansard. There are a number of provisions in this bill which are clearly punitive, and I would ask that you rule that there's a prima facie case of privilege in the sense that the Premier has not told the Assembly the truth with respect to the government's intentions and that it be referred to the Privileges and Elections Committee for a hearing.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The questioner opposite may wish at some point to raise a point of order but certainly not a point of privilege. I would direct the member to understand what points of privilege are in fact all about and perhaps remind other members of the House. Points of privilege deal with, specifically, breaches of a member's rights or a member's ability to perform the rights given to him by the electorate in this Assembly, or parliamentary rights, if you will, but what you may have a disagreement on is a totally separate matter.

I personally don't see that there's anything punitive about the bill in question, but that debate will come up, and the Speaker may well wish to rule on anticipation in that regard. Should you have another viewpoint with respect to that bill, there will be ample time, in other words, for you to discuss and debate that, but I fail to see personally how it is that your particular rights as an individual member in this House are abrogated or in some way impacted by a disagreement you might have with something that was or wasn't said.

I would ask you just to review that definition. More specifically, if you wish to refer to the definition in Beauchesne, it specifically states, Mr. Speaker, if you'll allow me to quote from section 24:

Parliamentary privilege is the sum of the peculiar rights enjoyed by each House collectively as a constituent part of the High Court of Parliament, and by Members of each House individually, without which they could not discharge their functions and which exceed those possessed by other bodies or individuals. Thus, privilege, though part of the law of the land, is to a certain extent an exemption from the ordinary law. The distinctive mark of a privilege is its ancillary character.

It goes on to talk about what constitutes privilege, and there are numerous pages of examples here where privilege questions have been addressed by former Houses.

In short, our own Standing Orders very clearly state under section 15(2):

A member wishing to raise a question of privilege shall give written notice containing a brief statement of the question to the Speaker and, if practicable, to any person whose conduct may be called into question, at least two hours before the opening of the sitting.

It goes on to talk about what constitutes the nature of the matter addressed in the complaint.

Now, this talks about the conduct of an individual as it might impact another member's ability to function in this House, and I don't believe that is what the issue before us is. I don't find there to be a point of privilege, speaking personally, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The chair will allow for brief additional comments if there are any. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar on this alleged point, please.

MR. MacDONALD: Yes. At this time, Mr. Speaker – and this is certainly a very serious issue – I would like to point out that on February 27, 2002 . . .

THE SPEAKER: Hon. member, please. We're dealing with events that happened in the House today. Let me just read again what this says, the Standing Orders that these hon. members in this Assembly have written.

15(1) A breach of the rights of the Assembly or of the parliamentary rights of any member constitutes a question of privilege.

We're talking about the individual rights of an individual in here or the rights of the Assembly.

(2) A member wishing to raise a question of privilege shall give written notice containing a brief statement of the question to the Speaker and, if practicable, to any person whose conduct may be called into question, at least two hours before the opening of the sitting and, before the Orders of the Day are called, shall call attention to the alleged breach of privilege and give a brief statement of the nature of the matter addressed in the complaint.

Well, needless to say, neither one of those two clauses have been dealt with.

(3) If the Speaker is of the opinion that the matter may not be fairly dealt with at that time, he may defer debate on the matter until such time as he determines it may be fairly dealt with.

Now, there are no rookies in here, none whatsoever. If we're going to talk about something that occurred on February 28, the time to raise that would have been February 28, not today.

I want to just deal with the Blues today. Quite frankly, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands said the following: "Mr. Speaker, why did the Premier mislead Alberta's teachers about his government's intentions?" Further, the Member for Edmonton-Highlands: "Mr. Speaker, why did the Premier mislead Albertans about his government's intentions?" A breach might be constituted by a deliberate attempt by one member to chastise another member with a direct accusation. One should be very careful about calling – how does that phrase go? – the kettle black or something to that effect. I don't know what it is.

If the hon. member chooses to provide in writing a statement with respect to this alleged point of privilege, the hon. member should do so and under the Standing Orders provide "written notice containing a brief statement of the question to the Speaker and, if practicable, to any person whose conduct may be called into question" – in this case, if it is the Premier, provide him a copy as well – "at least two hours before the opening of the sitting," meaning tomorrow, "and, before the Orders of the Day are called." We'll deal with it tomorrow afternoon if there is one.

Bill 204
Traffic Safety (Cellular Phone)
Amendment Act, 2002

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Stettler.

MRS. GORDON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker and Members of the Legislative Assembly. I tried to phone ahead, but phones aren't allowed in this Assembly.

Since the introduction of cellular phones in 1983 there have been dramatic changes in the industry. With a growth rate of about 40 percent per year it is estimated that today there are 120.1 million cell phones in use in the U.S. By 2005 it is estimated that there will be 1.5 billion cell phones used worldwide. Changes in technology from heavy, cumbersome, and expensive devices to inexpensive, miniature, handheld units much smaller, in fact, than a package of cigarettes have had a significant impact on when, where, and how we conduct our affairs, both business and personal. Does the use of handheld cellular telephone technology while driving increase the risk of a crash? Will crashes likely increase with the increasing numbers of users of cell phone technology in the future? What, if any, are the options for enhancing the safe use of cell phones by drivers? Safe driving must be our first priority. I strongly believe driving to be a privilege and not a right.

Before I begin, I would like to thank city of Edmonton Councillor Dave Thiele, who, like myself, believes we need to look long and hard at this entire issue. You might recall that Councillor Thiele was interested in implementing a municipal bylaw making the use of cell phones illegal while operating a motor vehicle within the city of Edmonton. However, he does agree with me that piecemeal won't work. Any changes would have to be done provincially.

Did you ever in your experience in this Legislature when it comes to private members' day wonder how an idea comes forward? Many of us in this Assembly over the last few years have stood up and brought forward many ideas either through bills or through motions. Most of us get our ideas from our constituents, from the people that we deal with, the people that have sent us to this Legislature. This bill is no exception. I have over the last couple of years had a great deal of discussion with many, many people over cell phone use, and I can stand here today and say that many long-distance truck drivers as well as many bus drivers, particularly those driving for Greyhound or Red Arrow, have certainly told me time and time again about the abuse and use they see of cell phones, particularly on highway 2.

Along with an incident that happened with myself and my constituency secretary, I am now standing before you bringing forward Bill 204. Bill 204 proposes to legislate the safe and responsible use of cellular phones while in the care and control of a motor vehicle. This bill would amend the Traffic Safety Act to ban the use of handheld only cellular phones. Punishment for this offence would be a fine specified in regulations.

Several countries have already looked at this issue and have banned cell phone use. They include Japan, Great Britain, Spain, Brazil, and Switzerland. Are we right and they're wrong? Stateside on November 1 of last year New York state began enforcing the U.S.'s first statewide law banning handheld cell phone use. Worth noting, similar legislation is pending in 42 other American states. In Canada several provinces are studying this issue. The province of Newfoundland and Labrador plans on banning the use of handheld cell phone devices sometime this spring.

In a study conducted in September 2001, 80.8 percent of Canadians polled believe that cell phone use while driving should be banned. Of the Albertans polled, 92 percent consider using a cell phone without a hands-free device to be dangerous, and further, of those, 77 percent support a complete ban on handheld cell phone use while driving.

My goal: hands-free, preferably utilizing voice-activated recall, 300 to 400 numbers stored, accessed automatically by you simply by issuing a voice command. No fuss, no muss, hands-free.

An Edmonton city police spokesman said that with the increasing traffic in this city over the past few years, police in Edmonton think it's a step in the right direction to reduce property damage and injuries. He went on to say that there are few statistics available linking collisions to handheld cell phones, mainly because few people are willing to admit that they caused the accident when distracted on the phone.

Distractions. Yes, I admit there are many: radios, other passengers, drinking coffee, the eating of fast food, cigarettes, more cigarettes. However, safe driving must be our first priority. As I mentioned earlier, many, many long-distance truck drivers, the companies they represent, and long-distance bus drivers have contacted me over the last couple of weeks. They see the abuse and use of cell phones each and every day. They told me that they very much support this bill. Now, it would be wrong of me not to tell you that I also have had a number of phone calls, e-mails, and faxes from people that don't agree with this bill, and that's what's great about a democracy.

We were talking about distractions. A handheld cellular phone is one such distraction. You say: how does that differ from all the other distractions? It is a distraction that we can do something about. We can look at legislating this differently. Let's be proactive, not reactive. Approximately, so I am told, $50 worth of hardware can convert handheld to hands-free.

AN HON. MEMBER: How much?

MRS. GORDON: Fifty dollars.

I would ask you to consider for a moment what you see if you're parked out in front of a high school anywhere in Alberta. You see the students leave that high school to get into cars, trucks, whatever. Often those vehicles are newer than the ones that we drive, but one thing you will see that is very common is that most of them have a cell phone in their hand. Now, think about it. They have that cell phone, they get in the vehicle with their friends, and they are using the cell phone. I would like to see us encourage the use of hands-free.

I don't believe that this problem is going to go away. Let's be the first in Canada. Let's lead the way. Let's have this debate nationally. Let's show this nation, indeed all of North America that safe driving does come first.

Colleagues, I think back to 1984 and our infamous seat belt legislation. I wasn't here in 1984, nor were any of you, but do you remember . . . [interjections] Yes, there was one person here in 1984, our hon. Speaker. I remember the debate that took place in Alberta in 1984 regarding seat belt legislation. "We can't do this. It's an infringement of my rights. Nobody is gonna tell me what to do." Alberta was the last holdout, the last province to make belting up mandatory. I don't know how you feel, but I feel very strongly today that in 1984 we made the right decision, that seat belt legislation is a good thing, and I believe that by belting up, we have saved numerous lives. I have to tell you on this point that the RCMP in central Alberta are very, very concerned because under the age of 25 in central Alberta are the worst offenders.

Let's do something about cell phone use. I ask you to support this, to consider me standing here today, because I tell you that at some point in time we will be considering this issue in this Assembly.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

MR. MARZ: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise to speak to this bill. I'd like to thank the Member for Lacombe-Stettler for raising it. It gives me an opportunity, as one who likes to protect individuals from an abundance of legislation, to get up and speak to this issue again.

As the hon. member pointed out, Mr. Speaker, in her eloquent speech, there are many distractions in driving today, and there always have been. There'll likely be more as technology increases. One of the new vans I saw has a television in it. It's behind the driver, but if you recline your seat far enough, you can actually still drive and watch this little television set. I was recently at a motor home show, and they have these televisions actually in the console between the driver and the passenger, which makes it possible to watch these. They may be wired in such a way that makes it impossible with the ignition on, but certainly someone could change that.

I've witnessed in my travels back and forth to Edmonton and around the province a number of distractions. I've witnessed people reading a book while they passed me. I try to drive the accepted speed limit, which isn't necessarily the legal speed limit, as we all know, on highway 2. I've noticed people reading, I've noticed them putting on their makeup, and I've noticed them dipping down below the level of the dash where you can't even see them. I don't know if they're picking something off the floor or not.

We have tape recorders. We have cassette players. There's a distraction in seeking through your collection of tapes and CDs. That's a distraction in itself. Changing them is another distraction. Looking up numbers in a phone book, Mr. Speaker. Whether you have a hands-free or a voice-activated, to call somebody, you still have to have the number. Looking up the number in that tiny little print while you're driving in itself is a distraction. I don't know if anybody has tried that here – not that they would admit to it – but maybe we should ban phone books. I'm not too sure about that.

The hon. member mentioned smoking, and I can relate that many, many, many years ago before I quit smoking – and I'm sure that there are probably some in this Assembly that maybe haven't quit yet, but most people have. I'm sure that we can all relate, those that have smoked, to that experience when those hot ashes drop on your seat between your legs and the excitement that ensues from that experience.

Mr. Speaker, the point I'm trying to make here is that there are a lot of distractions, and there will be more. Technology and products that supposedly make our life easier while we're driving will make new products possible. Are we going to legislate each individual one as we go? I don't believe we need to do that, because I believe that we have some legislation already in effect. It's called driving without due care and attention. Any officer – and it's been a long time since I've been in that position – that sees an individual driving in an erratic manner, whether it's dropping cigarette butts or weaving back and forth because there are pages of phone book flying or there's a hand trying to dial a number, if he notices erratic driving caused by any of those things, they can be stopped and be charged under that particular act. I think it's a good charge to lay: driving without due care and attention.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I will allow for many of the other members of this House who I'm sure would like to get up and speak on this very important bill, and I will end my comments at that. Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

MR. RATHGEBER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to have the opportunity to rise today and speak to Bill 204, the Traffic Safety (Cellular Phone) Amendment Act, 2002. First, I would like to thank the Member for Lacombe-Stettler for bringing forward this bill and for initiating the discussion that it has created regarding cell phone safety.

It seems that each year there is a new technological advancement that enables us to look closer or farther, hear better, go faster, or work more efficiently. Our society is constantly flooded with new technologies, and by virtue of the law of demand the unwanted products are discarded or ignored while others that are more popular become instantly essential and thrive commercially.

If there's one product that has since its introduction demanded a place in our society in terms of mainstream application and need alongside the computer, Mr. Speaker, it is definitely the cell phone. The recent growth of cellular telephone use is a phenomenon that crosses all age and gender boundaries. More than just the latest electronic gadget, cellular telephones have become integral parts of our business and personal lives. They are used to schedule appointments, broker deals, call for assistance, report emergencies, and maintain contact with loved ones. You only have to go to dinner and a movie to be reminded of how cellular phones have become incorporated into our daily lives and into our society.

Everywhere you go, there is one ringing or someone talking on one. Mr. Speaker, cell phones have entered into nearly every aspect of our daily life, and that includes the time when we're on the road commuting. It is not surprising that people will attempt to optimize their travel time by communicating with coworkers or loved ones while en route. When an opportunity to contact someone either to stay in touch or to get important information presents itself, most members of our society seize it. In the past, however, contact hasn't been as readily available and not nearly as instantaneous. In this day and age, however, it is as easy as pulling out your handheld telephone.

Concern regarding the safety of operating a motor vehicle while using a handheld cell phone has been of such sufficient magnitude that legislation banning their use has been initiated in jurisdictions all around the globe, as the sponsor of this bill has accurately point out. Bans have taken place within international jurisdictions as well as in several states in the United States of America. This trend in legislative activity that we're all witnessing around the world is based on the assumption that hands-free cellular phones are much more safe for motorists, while handheld cellular phones provide too much distraction to allow for their use.

For this assumption to hold true, Mr. Speaker, hands-free designs should reduce the demands on the user of the cell phone while driving. Distractions associated with dialing, holding, or even reaching for a handset should all be reduced while using a hands-free model. If hands-free adapters provide this benefit – and I'm advised that several models do boast some of these benefits – then the mandatory use of hands-free units would provide a clear safety gain for motorists on Alberta highways.

There are studies and experts that claim that cell phones cause inattention and that this lack of focus is what causes drivers on cell phones to have accidents. There are some disputes surrounding the number of contradictory studies done in this area, but I believe, Mr. Speaker, that enough evidence has been gathered to support the simple conclusion that using a handheld cell phone while behind the wheel can be and often is unsafe. The distraction caused by using a handheld cell phone can take a motorist's attention away from the road and provide increased opportunities for accidents to occur.

Mr. Speaker, according to the Ledger marketing study released in 2001, almost 54 percent of the Canadian population uses a cell phone either regularly or occasionally. Alberta surpasses the national average in this regard with over 64 percent of Alberta's population using cell phones either regularly or on an occasional basis. Just in terms of rough numbers, 64 percent of 3 million people works out to about 1.9 million Albertans with a cell phone.

A 1999 study done by the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration in the United States revealed that more than 85 percent of cell phone users in the United States used their phone at least occasionally while operating a motor vehicle. If we're able to assume that Alberta's population could be compared to the population of the United States in terms of cell phone use, then this would indicate that a very large number of people in Alberta talk on a cellular phone while driving.

In my mind, Mr. Speaker, the most important issue surrounding cell phones is that they ought to be made safe while their user is driving an automobile. One method to make handheld cell phones more safe is to use them when accompanied by hands-free attachments. Hands-free phone operation reduces the total amount of distraction that is caused when a telephone call is taken while driving. By allowing the driver to maintain both hands on the wheel and to be looking ahead at the road in front of him or her, hands-free devices provide an obvious benefit. The voice-activated phones that are currently available on the market provide a similar benefit but are quite expensive to buy. These hands-free systems employ the same idea that many motor companies are integrating into their new vehicles. Having stereo controls on the steering wheel is something that is, albeit slowly, becoming more prevalent in new vehicles today, and like the hands-free cellular phones, they allow the driver to remain focused on the road.

The industry is well aware of the risks that driving while talking on the phone creates, and it is time for them to make meaningful strides in making their product easy to use on the road. As a Legislature, Mr. Speaker, we can make a law that states that people of this province may not talk on the telephone while driving unless the phone offers hands-free, driver-ready operation, but if the cell phone manufacturers price these phones out of the market, then I'm afraid that any bill that we pass into law with the goal of banning handheld cell phone use while driving will inevitably be broken by Albertans. With that said, I would like to urge cell phone manufacturers to co-operate with this Legislature and with this legislative initiative to produce affordable hands-free phones that are safe to use on the road.

I urge all hon. members of this Assembly to support this bill so that we can take steps to ascertain that the roadways in this province are safe and to further ensure that drivers in Alberta are as safe as possible while behind the wheel. With this legislation and co-operation from the industry I think that we can save lives and save health care dollars on Alberta roads.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the Solicitor General.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to rise this afternoon in the debate on Bill 204 as proposed, the Traffic Safety (Cellular Phone) Amendment Act, and I urge all hon. members of this Assembly to support this legislation. Anytime there is a fatal crash on our highways, there's always this argument of whether it was caused by the use of a cell phone or not, if a cell phone was involved. If that debate can be reduced or limited by this legislation, then I think we should certainly restrict the use of cell phones.

Now, a person who is driving on a highway would not be permitted to use a cellular phone, car phone, portable computer, or fax machine unless it had a hands-free feature. This is an issue of public safety. This restriction, I would like to note for all hon. members of the Assembly, does not apply to a person driving an emergency vehicle or using a phone to report an emergency, and that is quite important here.

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

There are many reasons, but one only has to come to any one of a number of traffic circles in the constituency of Edmonton-Gold Bar either in the morning or the afternoon rush hour and see the combination of events that take place in various vehicles. There are some people who've got a Tim Hortons coffee in one hand and a cellular phone in the other.

4:50

AN HON. MEMBER: And a dog on their lap.

MR. MacDONALD: Yes, there's the odd vehicle with a family pet pressing its nose to the window as well.

These are not practices that are increasing the safety of the individuals in that vehicle or the other individuals driving in the traffic circle, Mr. Speaker. It is not in the interests of safety.

Now, the price of the hands-free device was certainly discussed earlier in the debate. It's not that much. There are many different countries that have instituted laws against using a cell phone and driving, and they include Brazil, Australia, Israel, Italy, and Portugal. Certainly it's not too long ago that I read about the interest of the state of New York, which has a lot more cars and a lot more drivers than Alberta, and the traffic congestion there would be significant. Well, I don't know if New York City would have more congestion than Calgary, but certainly those roads are quite congested, and they are having this active public debate on cell phones and the safety of vehicles.

Now, we're not the only Legislative Assembly considering cell phone legislation. British Columbia, Quebec, and Newfoundland have considered bans or restrictions. I understand that Ontario and Nova Scotia have had private members' bills introduced to ban cell phone use by drivers, again except in emergencies. If any hon. member of this Assembly can provide not only this member but others with an update on the Ontario and Nova Scotia legislation, because I don't have it before me.

There certainly is a high percentage of Albertans and Canadians – in fact, I believe that in a recent copy of Insight into Government there was an article about the use of cell phones or the purchase of cell phones as a unit. It was a sign of the prosperity of this province. As I recall, we had the highest use of cell phones per capita in Canada, but more than 40 percent of Canadians have access to cellular phones, and the rapid growth of the cell phone technology in the marketplace has certainly raised questions about the risk of crash involvement associated with their use in automobiles. The simplest way around this is to have a hands-free device. Perhaps if this bill were to become the law of the land in this province, whenever you purchase a cell phone or you go back and upgrade your cell phone, you will simply buy the accessory that gives you the hands-free feature.

Now, there are people with different views on this subject. The Canada Safety Council, Mr. Speaker, states that road fatalities have decreased over the years despite this great surge in cell phone use which I have mentioned, but I think we should recognize that using a cell phone can be yet another distraction. The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills talked about distractions.

MR. MARZ: A whole list of them.

MR. MacDONALD: A whole list of distractions. Certainly the hon. member is correct, but this is just one more.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would again like to remind all hon. members. It's not too far from this Assembly. They can go to the traffic circle at 98th Avenue or the one over by Bonnie Doon at either rush hour. Pick your time and just stand there for five minutes and see the action with cell phones, family pets. It's quite a balancing act between refreshments and the use of the cell phone. It is my view that that is not in the interests of public safety, and I would urge all hon. members of this Assembly to please support the bill as proposed.

Thank you.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The Solicitor General, please.

MRS. FORSYTH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to join the debate on Bill 204, the Traffic Safety (Cellular Phone) Amendment Act, 2002, sponsored by the hon. Member for Lacombe-Stettler. I believe that this bill will contribute to reducing driver distraction and improve traffic safety in Alberta. Alberta's transportation system is becoming more and more dangerous as Albertans respond to the desire to travel faster, work faster, live fast, play fast, and the faster the better. Their need to keep up is affecting many aspects of our lives including how we behave behind the wheels of our vehicles.

Mr. Speaker, I'm aware that there are laws that encourage drivers to drive safely, and these laws have enjoyed success. Alberta Transportation has introduced the Think and Drive campaign, that has been successful and an educational tool to help drivers pay attention on the road, yet collisions and fatalities continue in this province. Driving while talking on handheld cell phones is one of the worst culprits, and I was one of those culprits until recently. I don't think that exclusively banning handheld cell phones would dramatically reduce driver distraction. There are many different factors, including car stereos, food, coffee, pets, and children, that all take drivers' attention away from the road. I believe that Bill 204 can make an important contribution to driver safety because using a handheld cell phone is one of the most avoidable distractions. I drive on Alberta highways every weekend, and nothing bugs me more than seeing people talking on their cell phones or having their children unbuckled, as my colleague for Calgary-Egmont will agree. Legally in this province children must be buckled up in the name of safety. If children are able to move around a vehicle without being restrained, they distract the driver. I think handheld cell phones pose a similar danger to driving.

You know, Mr. Speaker, we're not magicians, who can do more than two things at once, though we believe that we can. It's ridiculous for anyone in this House to believe that they are in complete control of their vehicle while talking on a handheld cell phone. Head movements, concentration, and vision are split between using the handheld cell phone and effectively manoeuvring in traffic. I know that many people will say that they are capable of doing two things at once, but I really feel that driving conditions have changed in this province. Alberta roads are busier with many sizes of vehicles and more lead-footed drivers. Simply talking on a handheld cell phone has become a very dangerous attraction when you combine these factors. What may not have been deemed an issue before is now an important one. Taking handheld cell phones out of drivers' hands does not mean that they will become greater drivers, but realistically, banning handheld cell phones will be part of the solution, along with fines and education programs and an improved transportation infrastructure.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 204 does have support from transportation stakeholders. The Independent Insurance Brokers Association of Alberta, the Alberta Motor Association, and the Canadian Automobile Association all agree that using a cell phone while their vehicle is in motion is an added risk to drivers. Other countries that have been mentioned – Japan, Great Britain, Spain, Brazil, and Switzerland – have all banned the use of handheld cell phones while driving.

Another important point is that Bill 204 would not ban all cell phone use. Drivers could still use hands-free units, which are considerably less of a distraction. There are benefits to drivers having cell phones in their vehicles. It can be a safety issue to be able to call for help if your vehicle has broken down. I've had to do that, Mr. Speaker. Police services appreciate calls from drivers reporting accidents or impaired drivers that they see on the road.

We'll have to consult with police on the enforcement of this legislation, but when it comes right down to it, cell phones like cars themselves must be used responsibly. We turn off cell phones in this Assembly because they're a distraction. We cannot deny that the research and legislation from other jurisdictions in Canada, North America, and all over the world are all moving towards banning cell phones.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 204 is not a quick-fix solution to the issue of driver distraction. If we have learned one thing about governing, it's that there's no such thing as one quick-fix solution or even an easy way to solve an issue. However, reducing the number of drivers driving with one hand will help reduce driver distraction on Alberta roads and highways. This bill is simply doing what's right. I believe Bill 204 will make a positive contribution to overall traffic safety in Alberta.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

5:00

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Peace River.

MR. FRIEDEL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With some misgivings I find it necessary to rise today and speak against Bill 204. The reason I say "with misgivings" is that I feel a little bit like a traitor speaking against this idea proposed by my colleague from Lacombe-Stettler. After nine years of working with her, I've developed a high degree of respect for her good judgment, but on this one I think we're just going to have to agree to disagree.

Like many new technologies, Mr. Speaker, cell phones have impacted and even revolutionized our way of life since taking hold of the market back in the early 1990s. Most people now own one, and we've gotten quite used to seeing people walking down the sidewalk looking much like they're talking to themselves. I agree that cell phones have also impacted the way we drive and the way we conduct ourselves on the road. I can well remember the difference when I purchased the earliest version of a vehicle-mounted cellular phone. It meant that I could conduct a greater part of my business on the jobsite where I needed to be or on the road rather than being tied to my office for a good part of the day. Yes, I agree that a good thing can be abused if people want to. Lack of common sense or good judgment would be the best way to do that, but how many times have you heard that you cannot legislate common sense? And intentionally or otherwise, that seems to be exactly where this bill is heading.

No doubt the use of cell phones while driving has caused some accidents. Driver distraction is probably the greatest cause of all motor vehicle accidents. But why do we single out just one form of distraction for special attention? We already have legislation that provides a penalty if you drive without due care and attention, and that legislation has enough teeth to deal with negligent use of cell phones. Why would we want to go to the extent of making it illegal to use a handheld phone, even though most of the time there is no undue risk in doing so? Mr. Speaker, as legislators it's easy to fall into the temptation of wanting to protect people from themselves.

Just because some people abuse a good thing, should we overreact and punish everyone to stop it?

There are any number of studies dealing with the risk of using cell phones while driving. No doubt some are valid. Unfortunately, many others simply justify preconceived ideas. The truth of the matter is that there is no conclusive evidence that a handheld cell phone is a significant cause of accidents compared to other causes. Studies at the Harvard Center for Risk Analysis and the AEI-Brookings Joint Center for Regulatory Studies both concluded that the risk posed by cellular phones while driving alone appeared small in comparison to other dangers on the road. So whom do you believe? Should we believe the New England Journal of Medicine, which found that driver distraction quadrupled when cell phones were used, or do we believe the study I just quoted done by the Harvard University? Did either of these studies take into consideration the difference in road or traffic conditions? It doesn't take rocket science to understand that a driver needs to be a lot more alert in downtown Edmonton on Jasper Avenue, for example, than on a highway out in the country?

Mr. Speaker, I don't really believe that it's the minor distraction of talking on a telephone while you're driving that's the problem. That isn't much different than talking to a passenger or listening to the radio or reading signs or billboards. The real problem is the other things that you might be doing, like looking up the phone number or dialing the phone or writing messages, and those are no different whether you're using handheld or hands-free. I believe there are many types of driving distractions that are far more dangerous than using a phone, but they're often not pursued because they're harder to document and prosecute. Take, for example, reading a roadmap. I've even seen people trying to read a newspaper while they're driving down the street. I suppose because it would be hard to prove that they're actually reading it, the officer has to be sure of that ground before he issues a ticket. But under this bill they only have to catch you holding the cell phone, and you would be automatically guilty.

What about drivers that try to tune their car radio or those who have their radio on so loud that they can't hear anything else? What about those trying to settle down squabbling kids in the car or holding a pet on their lap? Maybe we shouldn't allow children or pets in the vehicle because they can be awfully distracting. I've seen drivers trying to use a rearview mirror to put on makeup or brush their hair while driving.

The American Automobile Association published a report last May dealing with levels of driver distraction. A person or object or event outside the vehicle was the cause of over 29 percent of distractions; adjusting the radio, cassette, or CD was 11 percent; other occupants in the vehicle was 10 percent. Cell phones only rated 1 and a half percent of total distractions. Even the minor task of adjusting climate controls accounted for more, at 2.8 percent of specific distractions. I'm not sure how they ever arrived at that kind of information or in what context it was intended, but if it's even remotely accurate, I think we had better rethink what we're doing here.

Mr. Speaker, car manufacturers and after-sale retailers are now making a great variety of information and entertainment devices for our vehicles. You can check your e-mail, surf the web, use your PalmPilot, watch TV or a movie, or even use a GPS in your car. How are you going to deal with those once we start to pick and choose among road distractions?

The point of all of this, like I said earlier, is that we cannot legislate common sense and good judgment. We have to have good general laws – and I emphasize general – and then rely on our police to enforce them properly. If necessary, put a few more teeth in the law we already have. Perhaps make it simpler for law enforcement officials to charge drivers with reckless driving regardless of the nature of the distraction.

Mr. Speaker, we all have to become more responsible for our driving habits, and we have to stand by the consequences of the decisions we make. Try as we might, we will never be able to legislate that kind of attitude. While I fully understand the good intentions behind Bill 204, I believe it is too selective in its attention to one specific driving distraction, so I would have difficulty supporting it. Every member in here is going to have to wrestle with this in their own way, but I would prefer to look at a practical, meaningful way to encourage drivers to make their own good driving decisions.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's heartening to see such enthusiastic interest in Bill 204, the Traffic Safety (Cellular Phone) Amendment Act. Actually, I'm genuinely interested in the various views here, and I think they do capture some of the difficulties in passing legislation like this, whether it's a good idea or not. I think ultimately I would vote in favour of this, but it's not without some questions.

In the background research that we've been doing, the case against cell phones is not quite as clear as I initially thought. My first exposure to the concern over using cell phones while people are driving came from an article I encountered while reading the New England Journal of Medicine looking, actually, for information on the privatization of health care. While I was pouring over that research, lo and behold, here was this article on the risks of driving and using a cell phone. As at least one other hon. member has mentioned, that particular research found a fourfold increase in the accident rate of drivers using cell phones as opposed to those who didn't. So I, based on that information, would have immediately endorsed this kind of bill. However, some other information and research contradicts that.

Certainly the position put forward by the Canadian Automobile Association suggests that the picture is less clear than that initial research suggested. They do make some interesting points about the difference between talking on a cell phone as a driver and talking to a passenger in the vehicle. One of the things it suggests is that unlike a caller on the other end of a cell phone, a passenger can see when the driver needs to focus on driving and can further serve to alert the driver to hazards. So a passenger in the car having a conversation is part of the driving context, whereas a person on the end of a cell phone having a conversation is not. That, I think, helps explain the difference between ordinary conversation in a vehicle and conversation through a cell phone.

There are also a number of questions around at exactly what point during a cell phone conversation accidents are likely to occur. Do they result primarily from dialing, for example, or from having only one hand on the wheel or from reaching for or holding or dropping a phone? Right now we're not sure, and if we aren't sure, then there may be a flaw in Bill 204 in that it allows conversations to occur, and all it really does is prevent the manual handling of the device. But if that's not the problem, then we may be passing legislation here that's of no effect. On the other hand, a strong majority of the Canadian Automobile Association's members, a full 91 percent, do believe that cell phones distract drivers from safe driving, so public opinion would be probably on the side of supporting Bill 204.

I would also point out to some of the members, such as the hon. Member from Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, that just because there are many distractions when you're driving, whether it's children or fast food or cigarette ashes dropped in your lap or animals or whatever, that doesn't justify encouraging and allowing yet a further distraction. I think there's a problem in the logic there, but certainly I would dispute the logic. Just because there are a lot of distractions doesn't mean we should allow and encourage a further one. So I'm not prepared to accept that particular line of reasoning, as carefully thought through as it is.

I would be delighted if, for example, the Minister of Health and Wellness were to support a study that looks more deeply into this issue, on the effects of cell phone use on auto accidents in Alberta, again in concert with the whole thrust towards reducing accidents, reducing illness, and increasing wellness. We want to look at all kinds of ways of improving public safety, and reducing car accidents is one. I would encourage the minister, if he were so interested, to support some research into this issue.

When the dust all settles on this question for me, to the extent that we have the information on it, I am inclined to support the bill. Although there are questions for me about how effective it will be, I think that we are better off to err on the side of safety. There are tragedies every year in this province that involve car accidents and cell phone usage, and any step we can reasonably take to reduce those I'm prepared to support, so I will be supporting this bill.

Thank you.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont.

MR. HERARD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise, albeit in reverse order or whatever order, to support Bill 204. I'd like to begin by complimenting the Member for Lacombe-Stettler for introducing this piece of legislation, because this may be one of the more important bills to come before the Legislature in terms of the potential to save lives and reduce property damage.

Let me begin by putting things in context. I'm not at all opposed to cellular phones. For one, I use and have been using a cellular phone for years, and I've had experience with both the older style handheld, which were pretty heavy and cumbersome back then, and of course the hands-free. I can certainly attest from my own personal experience that when I was using handheld cell phones, I had very many near misses and almost caused quite a number of collisions. I haven't had that experience with the hands-free model in the car, and I don't think it's because I'm seeing any better or anything like that. I think it was just too difficult to try and hold onto this thing and – I used to smoke at the time too – try and drive with your knees, you know.

MR. LUND: Did you do your hair at the same time?

MR. HERARD: No, hon. member.

Resistance to cellular phones would truly be futile because these devices have become so common that you can hardly go anywhere these days without almost being able to take part in someone else's conversation or have your own conversation interrupted by a cell phone call on pretty much any given day.

Mr. Speaker, it's no wonder that in the space of a few short years so many people have decided that they must be able to be reached at all times no matter where they are, no matter what they're doing, no matter what time of day or night. You hear cellular phones in the movie theatres, on buses, in malls. You see people talking on them while shopping for groceries, while riding in elevators, on golf courses, on the beach, and once in a while you even hear one in here. The big problem is that you see people talking on them and holding onto them while they have the care and control of a vehicle. Everything has its time and place, and I believe that handheld cellular phones have no place in the hands of a driver who has the care and control of a vehicle because that's a very important responsibility we have to take very seriously.

It might not be every day, Mr. Speaker, that we hear about accidents involving vehicles where at least one of the drivers was found to be talking on his or her cellular phone, but it's certainly becoming more frequent. I think one of the problems we're having with this whole area is that I don't think our police have the database systems in place to keep track of that kind of stuff. In other words, accidents get reported, but if you look at their form, there may not be any input there for a driver that was, in fact, driving and having a conversation at the same time. So when you talk to some of the police officers, they say: well, you know, it happens more often than we're able to report because we really don't have the computer system that will keep track of those things. It's unfortunate that they don't have the detail in their system to look after that.

Such accidents have become so commonplace that we can hardly bat an eye anymore, and I for one am not comfortable with such pervasive indifference to what quite obviously is a growing and continuing problem. Bill 204 offers us an opportunity to stem the tide and take some action before the problem gets even worse.

I'm informed, Mr. Speaker, that the manufacturers of cell phones have done so remarkably well in the penetration of the marketplace in the adult world that they're now currently spending most of their marketing and sales expenses targeting six year olds. This problem is just going to continue to grow, and as society becomes more and more cellularized, think of what's going to happen a generation from now or even 10 years from now if six year olds are walking around with their cellular phones. Maybe by then they'll have them grafted on their heads or something; I don't know.

Anyway, it's a major risk to use a cell phone while a vehicle is in motion, and we've heard it several times here today: there's more than four times the risk of being in a crash than for someone that isn't involved in a call. I mean, we can argue these statistics all day long because, you know, the way that the studies were done, there probably isn't enough data. I guess one of the reasons for that is because of what I just finished saying, that the police don't have anywhere on their form to record it, so the data is just not there. But this level of risk during the time interval of the call may be comparable to driving with a blood alcohol content of .08, which is the legal limit in many U.S. states and many provinces.

Obviously, this bill would only affect handheld devices. Drivers could still use hands-free units, but Bill 204 would be a step in the right direction, to my way of thinking.

It should seem to be quite obvious – we've heard some hon. members indicate that you really can't legislate common sense – that when you've driving, using a cellular phone could result in a serious accident where you can lose your life or kill or maim other people. It ought to be obvious, but it isn't, and it's difficult for people who don't believe in legislating in-your-face types of legislation to support measures that appear to be doing that. But I think many people have already talked about the seat belt legislation and how that has definitely been shown to save many, many lives, and I think this particular bill is essentially along the same lines. So even though I don't personally like to see legislation that's in your face and legislating everything that we do, when it comes to safety, when it comes to, you know, the possibility of killing and maiming people and destroying property, then I think, because this problem will continue to grow, that we need to do something.

So, Mr. Speaker, with that, I would just urge hon. members to support the bill and would move to adjourn debate on this bill.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Once again a very progressive afternoon, and in view of the hour I would move that we now call it 5:30 and adjourn until 8 this evening.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:23 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Monday, March 11, 2002

8:00 p.m.

Date: 02/03/11

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Please be seated.

head: Motions Other than Government Motions

Health Care Premiums

501. Dr. Pannu moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government, in the interests of fiscal prudence and tax equity, to not increase health care premiums and instead cancel the scheduled reductions in corporate income taxes for fiscal years 2002-03, 2003-04, and 2004-05.

[Debate adjourned March 4: Mrs. Nelson speaking]

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Hon. members, I believe there's one minute, and then we call upon the mover of the motion. If there's no one wishing to speak in that one moment – there is. The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

MR. SNELGROVE: For one minute, Mr. Speaker. Thank you very much. I think we've really talked about all we need to talk about on this motion. Government has a big picture to look at, and I think we're starting to really pick, when we're going to focus on one particular tax issue over another or tie the hands of the Finance minister or the Revenue minister with what they can and can do. I think it's very important that we look at everything as we govern. Whether it be health care premiums or hotel taxes or personal income tax, it behooves the government to keep an open mind and keep an avenue for all income and expenditures.

So with regards to this motion, I think that while we appreciate that no one likes to see an increase in premiums or taxes, sometimes we have to pay for the things we want as Albertans and as Canadians.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I would have to conclude debate.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Okay. Well timed, hon. member.
The hon. leader of the ND opposition.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've got five minutes at my disposal. I rise to conclude debate on Motion 501. This motion urges the government to not proceed with plans to increase health care premiums and instead cancel scheduled reductions in corporate income taxes during the next three fiscal years. The reason the increases in health care premiums are linked in this motion with reductions in corporate taxes is because the Conservative government is in a very real sense using the proposed increases in health care premiums to pay for next year's reduction in corporate taxes.

I've listened in vain for sensible arguments against this motion by government members. What I've heard instead are purely ideological arguments in favour of corporate tax cuts, combined with fallacious rationalizations that levying a head tax on individuals and families somehow makes people more aware of the cost of health care. Make no mistake, Mr. Speaker; health care premiums are a tax. They're a particularly regressive and unfair lump-sum tax, a tax that disproportionately falls on lower and middle-income earners, but they are a tax nevertheless.

Government fiscal policy is about making choices, Mr. Speaker. This Conservative government is choosing to shift the tax load from profitable corporations and wealthy individuals onto average Alberta families and small businesses. In September 2000 the Conservative government made a deliberate decision to cut corporate taxes in half, thereby permanently reducing provincial government revenue by about $1 billion annually at the end of a four-year cycle. Moreover, on the personal income tax side the government introduced a flat tax which disproportionately benefited the top 1 percent of income earners in this province, thereby giving up another $1.5 billion in revenue.

Last April the corporate tax rate was reduced from 15 percent to 13 percent, a very generous tax break given to the corporate sector in a province where corporations already enjoy an enormous tax advantage. Since last fall the government has imposed a hiring freeze on the civil service and made deep cuts in children's services. Today Bill 12 and its more than draconian provisions was introduced because the government claims that it can't afford to pay the province's teachers more than 6 percent over two years. On top of this, the government is considering not only steep hikes to health care premiums, but if recent budget documents leaked to the New Democrats are accurate, the government is also considering reducing seniors' dental and eye care coverage and delisting some health services.

The question must be asked, Mr. Speaker: can we afford the planned reductions in corporate taxes, especially if they have been paid for by steep hikes in health care premiums? The answer to this question has to be no. It's time for the government to change course and put the planned reduction in corporate taxes on hold indefinitely. That's exactly what Motion 501 calls for. Were the government to do the right thing and put its planned corporate taxes on hold, the New Democrat opposition would be supportive of retaining those elements that primarily benefit small businesses. The small business elements represent only 10 percent of the revenue reductions from the corporate tax changes. Businesses benefit enormously from the well-educated, healthy workforce.

Paying for health care collectively through taxes is much more cost-effective for business than having to incur additional costs to pay for health care through private insurance or health care premium increases. Asking corporations to forgo planned reductions in corporate tax rates is very fair and reasonable. Asking every Alberta family who has been hurt by other recent tax policy changes, such as the flat tax, to pay more in health care premiums is neither fair nor reasonable.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I urge all members of the Assembly to support Motion 501. Thank you.

[Motion Other than Government Motion 501 lost]

Financial Planning for Retirement

502. Ms Kryczka moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to take on a leadership role to encourage Albertans of all ages to assume personal responsibility for planning their financial security in retirement.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

MS KRYCZKA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased today to begin debate on Motion 502. Alberta has one of the youngest populations in Canada, but like the rest of the country we are experiencing an aging trend. The number and proportion of seniors has increased steadily since the mid-1980s, and currently about 303,000, or 10 percent of Albertans, are 65 years of age and older. By 2026 it is predicted that Alberta's seniors will more than double, to 750,000, or about 20 percent of all Albertans. As the number of seniors increases, the pressure on the Canada pension plan will likely increase. To add to that fact, there is a growing trend among Canadians toward early retirement; that is, to retire prior to the age of 65.

However, there is a second, rather conflicting trend that concerns me, and that is the steadily increasing life expectancy for both men and women in Canada. In 1996, for instance, Statistics Canada reported that the average retirement age was 58.5 years for women and 61.4 years for men. Ten years earlier, between 1987 and 1990, only 29 percent of people retired before the age of 60, whereas 10 years later, between 1997 and 2000, that rate had increased to 43 percent. When the Canada pension plan was established in 1966, Canadians' life expectancies were considerably lower than they are today.

In 1960, according to the World Health Organization, life expectancies at birth for women and men in Canada were 73.9 and 68.1 years respectively. By 1997 those figures had risen to 81.4 for women and 75.8 for men, according to Statistics Canada, and in Alberta it's even higher. For women it's 81.5 years and 76.5 for men. So the average man in Canada in 1966 would retire at age 65 and then live to collect CPP for about three years. In 1997 the average man is retiring at 61.4 and can start drawing on CPP, and he's expected to live to 75.8. Instead of three years of drawing CPP, the average man will now do so for 15.2 years or more, and it will be even more in the future. While increasing life expectancy is generally considered a measure of the overall health and wellness of the members of society, we must recognize that it is putting added pressure on the CPP, especially as the baby boomers reach retirement. This pressure is likely to increase further.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, if Canadians and especially Albertans wish to continue maintaining the same standard of living or lifestyle in retirement as they had prior to retiring, it is imperative that they are informed and begin to plan . . .

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Hon. members, we have only one hon. member who's been recognized this evening at this time, and that would be the hon. Member for Calgary-West. Those people who wish to engage in lively conversations with people at some distance from their desk would please do so outside in the anterooms that are adjacent to this Chamber. In the meantime, we'll hear only from the hon. Member for Calgary-West.

MS KRYCZKA: . . . and save for their retirement years as early and as wisely as possible.

The fact is that not enough Canadians and Albertans, especially those in their 30s and 40s, are addressing the importance of personal financial planning toward retirement. Whether the reason is that they don't know how to invest, whether they are afraid of the fluctuations of the stock market in a volatile economy, or whether they think that planning for retirement is something that can wait until another day, recent research confirms that 1 in 3 families in Canada will not have enough savings for retirement to maintain their present standard of living. This is cause for alarm. It is important that all Canadians and Albertans make informed lifestyle and financial planning decisions early on so that when they formally retire, they are financially ready to retire. However, in 2000, Canadians filled just 9 percent of the total allowable room of $300 billion for registered retirement savings plans.

Mr. Speaker, in its June 2000 report Alberta for All Ages:

Directions for the Future the steering committee for the government-wide study on the impact of the aging population, which I chaired, states that "individuals are primarily responsible for their own financial security" and that being adequately prepared for retirement is an individual and family responsibility. True, the federal government administers the CPP, to which both employers and employees make payments, and it also provides Canadians with old-age security payments and for some the guaranteed income supplement. It is doubtful, however, that most people will find income from these sources sufficient to maintain the kind of lifestyle and quality of life to which they have been accustomed.

Preparing for retirement involves more than just being able to pay your utilities, your food, and other basic living expenses when that stage of life evolves. Preparing is a matter of lifestyle also, ensuring that you can live independently with dignity and in good health. The concept of living healthily encompasses a person's physical and mental health and also his or her social and financial health, an approach endorsed by the recently released Mazankowski report and by the Canadian Association of Pre-Retirement Planners, Alberta chapter.

"It's hard to teach an old dog new tricks," says an old proverb. Agreed, awareness and good habits are best developed early in life. Government and families can help our young people to develop a level of awareness of lifestyle and financial planning much earlier than we experienced. Many youngsters think they know all there is to know about using a credit card but may not know very much about the true purchasing power of money. It is critical that young Albertans, through levels of classroom curriculum which are appropriate to their stage of life, learn to understand and appreciate the importance of financial planning. Alberta Learning's career and life management program, or CALM, is presently offered at the senior high level in grade 11 and helps young adults develop a grasp of the importance of personal financial goals, financial planning, budgets, and financial challenges that they will face in life.

Mr. Speaker, beyond secondary school education, mostly it is in every adult Albertan's interest to take steps on his or her own, though, toward being informed at this new level or stage in life. This may mean investing in an RRSP, a group RRSP, or a company pension plan. Other investments may involve securities such as stocks and bonds, real estate, or owning one's own home, all approaches to building one's future financial security.

Merit Construction Association provides over 18,000 member employees with a benefit plan that has set the standard for the construction industry. Merit also offers other programs and services that increase workforce productivity and employee satisfaction, such as a group retirement and pension plan. Government education programs could stress the importance of planning for retirement through, for example, a vehicle such as a government newsletter with key messages to the 35-plus: (a) how many dollars do I need or want, (b) quality of life as I define it, (c) legacy investments are mine to spend or give to a charity of my choice.

Obviously, Mr. Speaker, financial investments can involve risk, and it is important that people not only know that there are risks but also that they have the means to gauge the risks they are likely to face when investing. Investing may be something an individual chooses to do on his or her own or it may involve consulting a financial planner. Prior to heeding the advice of a financial planner or an investment broker, however, individuals should ascertain that the planner or broker is accredited and that the advice therefore has merit. We take our cars to be repaired by certified mechanics, we make sure our doctors and dentists are accredited, and we require those who sell liquor to be licensed. There is, however, no mandatory regulation for financial planners to be certified in Alberta at the present time. Why not? Often – too often – the public, especially the elderly, are victims of characters who prey on them, knowing that they may be vulnerable to fraud, scams, or inappropriate investment advice. As things stand now, it is possible for anyone to assume the role of a financial planner in Alberta. Section 21 of the Financial Consumers Act, Revised Statutes of Alberta 2000, addresses this issue, but to this day it remains unproclaimed.

Granted, Mr. Speaker, with the exception of Quebec there are no federal or provincial licensing or certification requirements for financial planners elsewhere in Canada. The closest we come to such licensing is the Canadian Association of Financial Planners. Its code of ethics acts as a surrogate for any federal or provincial licensing and accreditation requirements by mandating that certain standards be met and that CAFP members carry errors and omissions insurance and also pass CAFP ethical examinations.

It is true that in Alberta most financial planners do have a background in taxation, investments, securities, insurance, or accountancy. Financial planners may also be taxation specialists, investment brokers, securities brokers, insurance specialists, or accountants, required by law to be licensed and registered to practise. For example, the Securities Commission regulates the brokerage industry. However, anyone, whether trained or not, can hang out a shingle and call himself or herself a financial planner. Hardly a week goes by without a story on the news or in the paper about an unsuspecting person who lost most of his or her retirement nest egg.

I thank you, and I encourage everyone to support Motion 502.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to respond to Motion 502, which is asking:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to take on a leadership role to encourage Albertans of all ages to assume personal responsibility for planning their financial security in retirement.

I appreciate the member opposite and her concern for seniors of today and for tomorrow. Knowing her position with the Seniors Advisory Council, that makes a certain amount of sense, but it's an interesting concept that we have. We have an expectation that there should be individual responsibility involved in financial planning, yet we haven't quite reached the point where that individual responsibility can or is possible to kick into place.

Certainly when we look at how pension or retirement investment income works today, it's not the same deal as it was 20 or 30 years ago or even, I guess, more particularly between generations. In my parents' generation they both worked for the same employer their whole life, and there was a pension that was offered. It was a contributory pension from both sides. They were able to retire on that, and it was augmented with their contributions to the Canada pension plan. When my grandparents retired, they were just able, I think, to receive the very beginning of the Canada pension, but they had to live on what they had saved up or on what they were able to have their children look after them with.

So the concept of having one employer your whole life and having a pension plan that goes along with that: I think we can't count on that for the future. Certainly we have a lot more people that have part-time work, which doesn't come with any kind of benefit at all. We know now that we expect people to have four or five or six different employers over their working life. In fact, payment of pension benefits is becoming more and more rare.

So I take the point from the member that it's going to be up to the individuals to look after their retirement because it doesn't look like there will be a lot of pensions flowing through from companies, but I don't think that's going to happen, to be honest with you. I think we're going to have to look forward and prepare for that because I think there's going to be a group of people move through that just are not ready for it. They thought they were going to be involved with a single employer and a pension plan, and that's not the way their working career worked out. By the time they realized that, they were past being able to really contribute large amounts of money into a savings account or into an RSP or some kind of investment scheme that was going to give them a retirement income. We know that only 9 percent of the boomers today are making use of their full eligibility or the full amount that they can put into their RRSPs, and I think part of that is that they don't necessarily have the extra money set aside to be able to do that.

Now, you know, I've never worked in sectors that paid a lot of money, and frankly I didn't have the money left at the end of the day, once I paid for the rest of my costs, to be able to put anything into an investment scheme. People say: oh, now, come on; you could have put five bucks in or 50 bucks in. But there are a lot of people that work paycheque to paycheque, earning minimum wage or slightly above that, even 10 bucks an hour, and there just isn't money left at the end of the month to put into a retirement income. So I think we're going to have to learn to deal with that.

We're going to have to look at things like what programs are available, what kind of housing programs are available as that particular sector of boomers moves through into retirement. The member is right: we need to look and start thinking about that retirement planning and understanding all of that at a much younger age. I agree that elementary school is not too soon to start talking about that and having kids really understand it. I think the first time I ever heard about this I was a young adult, and it didn't mean that much to me at the time. Perhaps if we had learned it earlier, it might have had more impact.

Certainly if we're going to be looking at adding it to something like the CALM program, of course we also have to be looking at the ancillary costs that go along with that: the in-service cost for the teachers, the supply teachers to replace them as they're away at the in-service, the cost of textbooks and reference materials, et cetera. That doesn't come for free either. There is a cost involved with that but probably a cost that's well worth while.

Now, when I go back and I look at that sector of the population that isn't doing well with retirement income, either they didn't know and didn't plan soon enough or they just didn't have the money. I think we know that there's a huge intergenerational wealth transfer that's coming down the pipe, and we may as governments need to think very carefully about whether that wealth transfer is taxed. It may well be that that is the only money that's available to that particular generation of people as retirement income, period. If the government is going to tax half of it away or 40 percent of it away, then the government is going to end up probably having to pay for the social service programs to support those people. So it's a balance. It's always a give-and-take.

The other give-and-take is the whole concept of individual responsibility. This government is very keen to say, "We want less governing; we want less legislation," but very quick to turn around and say: "By the way, we want to legislate this particular part of your private life, and we want to legislate that part of your private life. Oh, we want you to do something this way, too, and we're going to legislate it." I just find that really interesting, the number of times that that's come up even in my five years in the House. They don't want to legislate business or clean environments, but boy, they sure want to regulate people's personal lives.

When we look at the concept of responsibility, again there's a give-and-take in that too, because I think responsibility is balanced by rights and privileges. If there is a responsibility for something, then there has to have been something that was gained on the other side. That's part of what I was talking about before, with people making enough money actually to have extra money to be able to invest and therefore be able to balance, to have that responsibility, to be putting money into their own retirement. They have to be paid enough to have enough money left over to invest that, so there's a balance that happens there. I think there's a responsibility that's balanced with an authority and an ability, which again is underlying that same concept. So we have to make sure that we don't have people that are overtaxed, that are paying through licences and fees and premiums and different varieties of taxes, that they still have enough money left. We have to make sure that there's reasonable food, shelter, and safety and that that's available at a reasonable cost for people.

I think the concept that's being brought forward here by the member, although again I question the eagerness to legislate people's private lives, is very interesting, coming from this government. The concept of it is not one that I'm going to speak against. I think it would be a great world if we had people that were knowledgeable enough to know that they needed to save for their retirement. That would be a very good thing, and again I agree, particularly when we look at introducing this whole concept into school at an elementary or a junior high school level. I think that by high school it's almost too late; people have already started to develop their spending and saving habits. That educational portion needs to happen before then.

So the last part of this is that if there's going to be a rule or a law or legislation that's going to make people take this responsibility, then as always I'm asking: how do you monitor this, and how do you enforce it? Is there going to be some kind of penalty? Is there a carrot and a stick? Is there some sort of encouragement? Alternatively, is there some sort of penalty if people don't follow that? I think the last thing we need is legislation that's saying that you must do this and then it's meaningless because there's no repercussion if someone doesn't follow it. As well, there has to be a monitoring system in place because it's not fair if some people are following the game, or doing everything they're supposed to, and others don't and blatantly get away with it.

So whenever there's a request from the government members to have some sort of rule or legislation or imposition placed on Albertans, I want to know what the plan is to monitor this process, and I want to know what's contemplated by way of enforcement for this, if that's including punishment, if it's including some sort of encouragement scheme.

I know that the member will have five minutes to wrap up at the end, and maybe I'll get a chance to hear her answers to my questions. Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Leduc.

MR. KLAPSTEIN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to join the debate on Motion 502, which urges the government "to take on a leadership role to encourage Albertans of all ages to assume personal responsibility for planning their financial security in retirement." Motion 502 would help all Albertans plan to face some of the hard realities that we may encounter as a province in the near future. Motion 502 is a well-timed idea because according to the demographic studies of Statistics Canada, a greater number of Albertans are moving into their retirement years. Also, individuals are expected to live longer now in Alberta than ever before.

Our longer life spans can be attributed to the strength and resilience of Albertans but also are because Alberta has one of the highest standards of living in the world and a state-of-the-art health care system that is second to none. Albertans are not only living longer lives but more vigorous and richer lives, and Motion 502 seeks to ensure that all Albertans continue to do so well into their most golden years.

Mr. Speaker, the highest proportion of Canada's aging population is the baby boomers. More than any European nation or the United States our demographics are uniquely balanced to the high end, with the single largest demographic group being born between the years of 1945 and 1946. These individuals are nearing their sixties now, and the majority will soon be retiring. In fact, according to well-known demographer David Baxter in his presentation at the recent provincial Future Summit, baby boomers were born as early as 1938. If many boomers are already retired or living a semiretired lifestyle, this has implications on productivity, the workforce, tax revenue, lifestyle, housing, and social service utilization, especially health care. What we need to do as a government is integrate this new information in our work; for example, the seniors' policy initiative, which has as one of its five committees a financial planning committee.

The question is: are baby boomers doing all they can to ensure that they can maintain their standard of living well into their later years? In Canada the average life expectancy of an individual who has already reached the age of 65 is 18.4 years. That is just the average, and it is much higher for women than for men. At least half the boomers will be living well beyond the year 2025, and by that time, Mr. Speaker, it's projected that the number of senior citizens as a percentage of Alberta's total population will have more than doubled compared to today's population.

The strain on programs like the Canada pension plan will be unprecedented, and the burden to support these programs will fall on the next generation. Already there is a substantial unfunded liability in the Canada pension plan, and it will only grow as the demographic shift continues upward. The Canada pension plan will be there for the older generation but only at the expense of the shrinking proportion of Canadians that continue working. As a sign of the trend, in this budget year maximum CPP contributions have been increased by 11.8 percent from the previous year. This trend, which must continue just to maintain current Canada pension plan benefits, could cause further drains on productivity, reduce the disposable income of the workforce, and possibly cause an economic downturn that should not be underestimated. Motion 502 presents an opportunity for this government to show leadership to this end and be certain that all our citizens prosper well into the new century.

Mr. Speaker, we need to ensure that Albertans take personal responsibility for their financial security and retirement in the near future. If we can get out this message about the importance of planning for financial security well into the later years of life, it may well convince the boomers to continue to work on an alternative or part-time basis for the sake of their own future prosperity. Albertans don't want to have to rely on the social system to get by in their older age. Albertans don't want to be a financial responsibility of the next generation as they get older.

I think government can play a role in informing Albertans of the facts they will face in retirement. We are very helpful when Albertans make a transition into the workforce, providing career training, guidance, and even financial assistance. It is just as important that we extend advice or counsel to all Albertans when they plan for their retirement as throughout their career. We should not stand by while people leave the workforce perhaps totally unprepared for what awaits them in their retirement.

Many Albertans initially feel that they are financially well equipped as they go into retirement but never expect to live for 20 or 30 years beyond the age of 65. Nevertheless, a significant percentage will inevitably live well into their 90s. One factor that may lead to this is the rather deceptive statistic of life expectancy at birth. Currently life expectancy at birth for Albertans is around 78 years, which is pretty good, but does this mean that a person retiring at 65 can expect to live only 13 more years? Absolutely not. As I mentioned earlier, a person living to age 65 will on average reach 83 and a half years of age, a full five and a half years beyond their life expectancy at birth. If they calculated their savings to only last for 12 years but live an additional 18, 20, or 25 years, they may find themselves in serious financial trouble. What a shame it would be to see someone who's saved so diligently and calculated so earnestly live out their last years in abject poverty, living with family, or being supported by government-funded programs. It happens far too often. Motion 502 would help to prevent this kind of innocent mistake that too many people make as they plan retirement.

In a recent Statistics Canada survey one in three Canadians is not financially prepared for retirement. There is clearly a need for more education programs and information to ensure that Albertans make the right decisions as soon as possible about how much they should be saving for their retirement and when they should be planning to leave the workforce.

In June of 2000 in the report Alberta for All Ages: Directions for the Future the steering committee for the governmentwide study on the impact of the aging population stated that individuals must bear the primary responsibility for their own financial security. Although there is a social safety net through the guaranteed income supplement and old-age security that will keep Albertans above a base level, these levels are constantly being challenged to keep up with the standard of living to which many Albertans have become accustomed. It is important that Albertans know all the facts and outcomes when they are deciding when to retire from work. I think that government is in a unique position to provide leadership and to work with educators and business to promote heightened awareness of lifestyle and financial planning.

Mr. Speaker, Motion 502 also encourages the government to establish standards for financial consultants in Alberta, addressing a need expressed by those in the industry. With all of the investment tools out on today's market, including thousands of mutual funds, stocks and bonds, performance indexes, or commodities markets, it is important that brokers, consultants, and dealers be straightforward and honest and, above all, trained and certified. It is a sad story that occurs far too often, and we have all seen or heard of retirees losing their life savings because they invested too aggressively in stocks, bonds, or commodities based on some neighbour's so-called advice. More than being just unfortunate, it is a story of gross misconduct when that advice comes from an unqualified consultant or financial planner. If we could ensure that financial planners in this province meet a bare threshold of understanding of, first, their ethical obligation to the best interests of their client and, second, an understanding that elderly clients' investments should be risk averse, we would be helping prevent needless misunderstanding and the potential for mishaps.

Mr. Speaker, Quebec is the only province that requires all financial planners to be licensed and registered as certified financial planners. L'Institut quebecois de planification financiere is a nonprofit organization responsible, under the provincial act respecting the distribution of financial products and services, for granting the diploma required to obtain the certificate authorizing the use of the financial planner designation and setting the continuing professional development requirements for financial planners. The IQPF obtains its revenues from its activities rather than from fees imposed by legislation. It has awarded diplomas to more than 4,500 financial planners in Quebec.

The benefits to following Quebec's example in Alberta are threefold. First, more Albertans would be confident that their money will last as long as they do, bringing peace of mind, less stress, and a sense of wellness. Second, if more people trusted the investment system, a greater amount of savings would be transferred into higher earning investments, which would create wealth for all Albertans. Third, there are significant opportunities for cost savings to government if seniors of the future are not forced to rely upon the social safety net.

Mr. Speaker, I could go on at length about the importance of ensuring that all Albertans plan their retirements properly. I'm very thankful that the Member for Calgary-West brought this pressing issue to the attention of the Assembly, and I encourage all members to support this very important motion.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to have the opportunity to make a few comments about Motion 502 and to express some grave reservations about what has been placed before us this evening. I don't think we have to look far – we can look to Margaret Thatcher's Britain – to see the results of schemes such as this and the kind of horrendous problems and the horrible impact that it has had on people, people at the most vulnerable time of their lives, when they're retiring.

There are a number of problems that they've had to deal with. Some of those have already been raised by the two previous speakers, but the misselling of private schemes to Britons is a scandal of major proportions. There's a fundamental conflict of interest when you have brokers or companies promoting schemes for private pensions and giving advice. The Britons have found this to their great chagrin. No matter how they've tried to regulate it, the problems are still in the system. They can't rid the system of the inherent conflict of interest there is between someone selling a financial instrument to a citizen and their interest in making a profit or making a living based on those sales. So the kind of sound advice that a scheme such as this is predicated upon they found it very difficult to actually have occur.

One of the other unfortunate parts of schemes such as this is that it promotes loss of faith in the pension system itself, and we heard some of that in a previous speaker's comments: you know, the sky is falling down; the CPP is not going to be there for people; people are getting older; there's not going to be money around. That kind of rhetoric in Britain caused a tremendous loss of faith in the public pensions in the country and in the private pensions that they were advocating. So there's a disservice to the entire pension system by a scheme such as the one being proposed here.

Other problems they had were huge administrative costs. We have no handle on that yet in this country in terms of the administrative costs of the kinds of private pension plans that are put in place. With participation in one of these schemes, you put in place a scheme that you think is going to render you a decent income. Then you find, for instance, as they did in Britain, that it depends on when you retire. If you had retired in October 1987, when there was a stock market crash, then you would have had a pension that is 30 percent less than if you had retired in September of that year. So horrendous problems in terms of the actual payment of the pension.

[Mr. Klapstein in the chair]

I guess the most damning indictment of proposals such as this is that the most severe impact is on low earners; they're the people that it hurts most. Those low earners are frequent job changers. It's most often women and it's most often ethnic groups that suffer when this kind of scheme is promoted. If you look at the Alberta statistics, 98,600 Alberta families have an average income of $14,400 a year. Now, tell me how much of that money, of that $14,000, is going to be left over for investments in the kinds of schemes that this kind of motion is predicated on. I'd say, Mr. Speaker, that it's going to be precious little. So some of the most vulnerable people in the province are going to be the ones that are ultimately hurt by this kind of scheme.

In Britain 90 percent of those who transferred out of occupational schemes to self-administered schemes ended up losing. The benefits they actually ended up having were less than if they had stayed with the schemes that they were in. Again, it points to the danger of bringing forward, I think, a motion like this that doesn't address the problem. I think if you again look at the British experience – and there's a push on in the United States right now for these same kinds of private schemes – a third of elderly Britons still depend on a means-tested welfare system for their income once they're retired. If that's where we're going, Mr. Speaker, I would be most distressed.

I think for those reasons that I've given, I will be voting against this, and I'd urge other members of the Assembly to consider it very carefully before they support it. Thank you very much.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

MRS. JABLONSKI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to have the opportunity to rise in the Assembly tonight and speak on Motion 502. I would like to commend the Member for Calgary-West for her efforts and commitment to raising issues regarding senior citizens in Alberta. The seniors' population is growing and aging at an increasing rate, and it's therefore very important to discuss as many aspects of aging as possible while there is still time to react as a government. I don't think there is anyone here in this room tonight that will escape the aging process, as Ponce de León never did find the fountain of youth, and when Harry Potter did find it, he destroyed it for the good of mankind.

Motion 502 addresses two important issues that Albertans deal with every day: getting older and financial security. It has been said by some that ignorance is bliss. Well, I can assure you that those who are ignorant, unable, or uneducated in the ways of retirement savings are not blissful when the time comes to retire and they are forced to change their lifestyle in a major way due to lack of income.

As we all know, growing old is inevitable. Alberta has a population that is aging with each year. I was initially astonished to learn that in just 20 years the Alberta seniors' population will more than double in size. Acknowledging this fact now enables us to realize the difficulty this circumstance will provide when it is upon us. I've heard that the Canadian pension plan may not be able to take care of all of us who have contributed to it when we need it.

As I understand it, Mr. Speaker, there are two reasons that may cause the CPP to falter. The first is the increasing older population that we are experiencing here in Alberta and throughout our country. Fortunately, Alberta has one of the youngest populations in Canada, and we can benefit from the experiences and solutions of others.

When our population of seniors doubles in the next 20 years, you can bet, however, that the majority of the population of seniors across the country will have increased by at least that same rate and will be older than us. What this tells me is that there will be more than double the number of Canadians drawing from the Canadian pension plan over today. You don't have to think about it long to see that it will place a great strain on the CPP, and older Albertans will qualify to draw from CPP after most other Canadians are already seniors.

The second problem with the CPP that I foresee, Mr. Speaker, is that with the current low birth rates Canada is experiencing, there will be significantly fewer people paying into the Canadian pension plan at the time when there will be the most Canadians drawing from it. Just for the record, I have done my patriotic duty and personally contributed three Canadians who are paying CPP and, so far, two grandchildren who will also be paying CPP in the future. This grim certainty for our younger generation's national retirement fund should encourage us all to take a closer look at better educating those younger citizens towards lifestyle and financial planning, including retirement planning.

In 1999 a steering committee was commissioned to study the impact of the aging population, and they produced the report Alberta for All Ages: Directions for the Future. The report recommended that the government encourage the expansion of financial planning education for Albertans of all ages. In addition, the report recommended that the Alberta seniors' benefit be reviewed and adjusted on an ongoing basis to ensure that it continues to meet the needs of seniors, reflect changes in costs, and achieve the goal of ensuring that older people do not live in poverty. Mr. Speaker, this motion certainly speaks to the report completed in 2000 by the steering committee, and I believe that it is one more voice among many that is asking this government to take a closer look at how people grow old in this province and to recognize the gamut of consequences that comes with aging.

Who then, Mr. Speaker, can help us get our finances in order for retirement? Well, financial planners can. We are all aware of financial planners. It's hard to pick up a newspaper or watch television without noticing an ad for some organization or individual who wants to secure your financial future. How are Albertans to know which of these service providers are worthy of their business and their trust and which are not? I have yet to see an analysis of this industry depicting the results gained for consumers by each company. In Alberta there are no background or educational requirements for financial planners. I understand that there is a risk that one assumes by asking another to invest his or her money for the future. However, with no safeguard or standards set in this province for proprietors of this service, it is a dangerous game to play when the stakes include your ability to retire comfortably.

I have attended a seminar on financial planning and have seen individuals encourage seniors to remortgage the houses that they spent their entire lifetimes working to pay out and then using that money to invest in stocks and bonds. One other province in Canada has regulations and requirements for financial planners, but in Alberta anyone can assume the role of a financial planner. This means that you can hand your life savings to me or anyone in this room to play with. Even though I may have no training or only limited experience in the field, I could charge you a high commission to invest your money.

So how does government help Albertans to help themselves lower the risk of poor retirement planning or a poor choice of a financial adviser? I think that education is the key to empowerment in this area, Mr. Speaker. If Albertans are well versed in the ways and means of retiring successfully, more will go out on their own to secure their future. We as a government should want them to make the right decisions for themselves, and the right decisions will be made by those who have the power of knowledge.

There is a program of studies in the Alberta Learning curriculum called CALM, or career and life management. It has been developed to teach high school students about everyday life skills, including financial planning, that they will need to be successful when they leave home. In fact, this weekend I supervised a conference by the Youth Advisory Panel discussing the CALM program, and they will be recommending that the CALM program be enforced and standardized throughout the province.

Then there are a great number of younger adults who are in the workforce today, Mr. Speaker, who are unprepared to plan appropriately for their preferred lifestyle as they go through life and eventually retire. How are these young adults, male and female, to learn the importance of planning for tomorrow? According to a 1999 Statistics Canada survey, there are over 1.5 million Canadian families in which the primary earner is over 45 and who have no private pension savings. I understand that many families have tight budgets and that saving today for the future is not terribly realistic because the demands of the present are just too great and incomes can't be stretched far enough to make that accommodation. However, I believe that with encouragement and education people will be able to see that they can make a tremendous difference to the quality of their future if they strategically set aside some money each year for retirement.

In Alberta, Mr. Speaker, we could follow the example of our neighbouring province to the east. The Saskatchewan pension plan, SPP, is a voluntary plan designed to provide a pension plan for individuals with little or no access to private pensions or other retirement savings arrangements. The plan is available to anyone between 18 and 69 years of age. Eligibility is not dependent upon residency, income, employment status, gender, or membership in other plans. Since 1986 SPP has grown to $193 million in assets and 30,000 members. The plan is designed for flexibility so that members can make it fit their life situation and budget. It is voluntary and flexible – payments can be made at any time during the plan year – and portable. Individuals can join and contribute to the plan regardless of where they reside.

Mr. Speaker, in an article in the February 12, 2002, edition of the Montreal Gazette the writer Catherine Solyom cited an Ipsos-Reid poll released the day before. According to the poll, one-third of Canadian women compared with 28 percent of men are concerned that they don't have enough to save for retirement. Almost half, or 47 percent, said that they have to make a more determined effort to live within a budget compared with 37 percent of men. Why? It has nothing to do with being born to shop. Women have good reason to be apprehensive.

First, women live an average of six years longer than men. The average Canadian widow is 58 years of age and hence needs more money to retire. Secondly, the big issue is the risk of outliving their money. Thirdly, women are also out of the workforce 11 years longer than men, caring for the children, their parents, or both. Other facts revealed by the survey suggest that a larger number of women, 60 and 52 percent respectively, have no idea how much money they would need for their retirement. Many of the women surveyed said they wanted to have greater control of their destiny. In short, Mr. Speaker, participants in the survey realized the importance of being knowledgeable in matters of financial planning, but becoming knowledgeable involves a significant investment and commitment of time.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

I support Motion 502, Mr. Speaker, because it sends the message to this Assembly that we need to ensure that our citizens are well educated early about preparing for their preferred lifestyle in retirement. Motion 502 also draws attention to the fact that there are no certification requirements for financial planners in this province. I urge the members of this Assembly to consider the merits of this motion and join me in support of it.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Thank you for the opportunity to speak to Motion 502, which is sponsored by the Member for Calgary-West. I must say off the bat that the intent of having people plan for their financial independence and future is a very, very good idea and certainly one that more and more Canadians are taking advantage of and also the responsibility for.

It's also been said that Canadians as a whole spend more time planning for their vacations than they do for planning for their financial well-being. Certainly for those people who grew up in the era that I did, there has been a tremendous tendency for us to rely on employer or government pension plans for retirement rather than other funds. Certainly it has only been within the last few years that more and more people are getting involved in financial planning. But again I think what we have to do, as well, if we look at records of RRSP contributions by taxpayers – and the figures I'm quoting here are from 1998 – when we look at the number of taxpayers, the majority of taxpayers are certainly in the lower income brackets.

If, for example, we look at the bracket of even $30,000 to $40,000 of annual income, we have roughly 1.4 million taxpayers in that bracket. We have 1.38 million with room in their RRSPs, yet we only have roughly 700,000 that are taking advantage of that. It's a very small percentage, and of course the reason for that is that with $30,000 to $40,000 there just isn't enough money after they take care of providing a roof over their head and certainly food and a car and, if they do have a family, taking care of those needs. Those do put a primary responsibility on that person rather than looking at their financial future.

Now, if we look at even bumping that up to the $60,000 to $80,000 bracket, in 1998 we had 492,000 taxpayers in that bracket. We had 488,000 of those taxpayers with room in their RRSPs, and we had out of that group 374,000 that were making contributions. Again, these people had the disposable income where they could make those types of investments, so we do have to realize that making the right decision doesn't always mean that you can fulfill that action.

When we start looking as well, Mr. Speaker, at the people we would like to target this bill towards and have involved in this program, these are young people who are finishing up their education or new members of the workforce, and of course they have many other expenses which are certainly primary when it comes to planning for their financial future and doing something about it. They start looking towards their first job, and many of them have debts to pay off at that stage, particularly if they happen to be students.

We see that university students today, quite a number of them, are graduating from university with $25,000 in student loans, so they do have a priority there to pay off their student loans. If we want to draw a comparison, we as a province have set that as our priority over the last eight years. We have made debt repayment our number one priority to the extent that we are now nine years ahead of our schedule, yet, Mr. Speaker, we have had to cut essential services in this province to maintain that. So what do we tell these people that are in exactly the same spot, that have debt requirements to meet: that they do not fund their essentials such as paying back student loans, that they do not eat to the extent they would like to, that they live in the very lower standard of rental property? So it seems that there is a contradiction here, that what we expect these people to do, we as a government are not prepared to.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry, but the time limit for consideration of this item of business on this day has concluded.

9:00

head: Committee of Supply

[Mr. Tannas in the chair]

THE CHAIR: I'd like to call the Committee of Supply to order.

head: Interim Supply Estimates 2002-03
Offices of the Legislative Assembly, Government, and Lottery Fund

THE CHAIR: Are there any comments, questions to be offered with respect to these estimates? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thanks. Just to double-check here, I have 20 minutes to speak to this? Thank you.

Okay. Well, another spring, another interim supply budget. This government's amazing lack of planning never ceases to amaze me. The government is asking for I think it's $4 billion this time out, which I find interesting because last year the entire budget I think was for $21 billion, which broken down into 12 months would put us at about $1.75 billion in expenditures per month. I would assume that the government would be looking for $3.5 billion to cover the two months that they're asking for in this interim supply, but no. In fact, they're asking for $4 billion. I'm wondering now: is this casting into the future an omen that we can expect an even larger expenditure budget coming forward if I look at the ratios that have just been given to me?

I've thought about this, and as I said with the supplementary supply bill, you know, I'm not willing to support this government's poor management anymore. I understand that the government is asking for money so it can do its business and pay people. I'm sure an hon. member will get up and say: "Well, that's not nice, you know. Are you saying, Laurie, that government staff shouldn't be paid or that grants shouldn't be given out? You know, you're being mean and unreasonable." I have to say: sorry, but this is supporting a really bad habit, and I'm no longer willing to support that bad habit. Out of the six years that I have been in this Assembly to debate a budget, there's been an interim supply budget five times. Now, that's pretty poor management. Even if you say, "Well, you know, last year, for example, there was a late election, so there was no possible way that we could have had a budget passed by the end of March," okay. Fine. Still, there were four years of really poor planning then.

I mean, let's look at this year, for example. The government could have easily called us in in the middle of February, the beginning of February so that we had ample time to have a throne speech and, as traditionally, two weeks later have a budget speech and have the full amount of time that we needed to debate this budget and have it done by the end of March, which is the end of the fiscal year. But, no. The government chooses to bring us in on the 26th of February and is now saying: oh, well, gee, darn, you won't even have a budget presented until the 19th of March, and therefore it's not possible to debate and pass a budget before the end of the fiscal year. That is just bad planning.

I mean, is it a surprise that the fiscal year ends at the end of March? I don't think so. I think that the fiscal year has been ending at the end of March for some time. So it's not as though this is a moving target. The government knows very well when the end of the fiscal year is. Why can't they manage to actually get the budget up in time so that we can debate it and pass it before the end of the fiscal year? This is just bad planning, it's bad management, and I won't support it. I'm not going to feed into this bad habit. It's like a druggie. I'm not going to give this government another fix so that they can be poor managers again. I won't. I'm not going to support it anymore.

We just had a motion, Motion 502, that was saying that we must have individual responsibility, that we're going to force people to have individual responsibility to plan ahead and have their retirement income nailed down. I'm sure that if the government could manage to actually force people to do this by the time they were 30, they would be willing to. Two minutes later we are talking about: "Well, oops, sorry. We didn't plan well enough, so, gosh, can you just vote us $4 billion to carry us through for a couple of months?" I mean, this government's disapproval of someone who lives paycheque to paycheque is palpable, but what is this government doing? It's saying: gosh, can you just advance me $4 billion against when we'll actually manage to get this budget done? Unbelievable. But all the faces over there are looking like: "Oh, no, this is what we usually do. This makes perfect sense to us." You are borrowing against your paycheque. You are borrowing into the future to pay.

What was it in Popeye? Wimpy said: I'll pay you Tuesday for a hamburger today. That's what the government is doing: I'll pay you once the budget is passed for $4 billion today; okay? Well, it's not okay with me. I don't think it should be okay with you either, but the government seems to think that that's fine and that it's okay that they do not have their fiscal house in order enough that they are able to get a budget presented before us in enough time to debate it before the end of the fiscal year. I'm not buying it, and I don't think you should either.

I look at what's been presented to me, this lovely printing job. I flip through it and see that there are amounts that are asked for in every department. Okay. Fine. It's distinguishing between the lottery fund payments and nonbudgetary disbursements. Okay. Fine. I'm going: "All right. So you're asking for all of this money. Oh, look; there are no performance outcomes. There are no targets. There are no descriptions of what this would be paid for. There are no business plans. There's nothing. Just give me $4 billion and trust me." Well, you know what? I don't trust you guys. I don't trust you at all. I don't trust you to be good managers. I don't trust you to get it done before the end of the fiscal year. I don't trust you. I don't trust anything you've ever shown me in here. But I certainly don't trust you when you say: "Give me $4 billion, and I won't bother giving you anything to do with outcomes, anything to do with targets, anything to do with performance measurements, anything to do with business plans. No, no, no. Just give me $4 billion, and I'll get back to you." Not good enough. Not good enough.

Now, let's talk about trust. I raise the issue of trust with this government. That's an interesting concept here, because how do I trust this government, especially around whether there really is money or not? The government says that it has no money, but when we look at the third-quarter update that the Treasurer recently released regarding the fiscal year that we're still in, that shows that we have the second-highest revenue ever. The second-highest revenue ever. "But we have no money. Trust us." Well, no, I don't think I'm willing to go there.

I guess my question to the government is: that money that you don't have, do you not have it today, or do you not have it tomorrow, or do you not have it yesterday? Well, we know you had it yesterday because it's in the third-quarter update, but I don't trust this government as to whether it has money or it doesn't have money. It seems to be this amazing shell game, and all the energy goes into moving the pea around underneath the walnut shells but not any kind of real, transparent budgeting that everyone can see and understand. There's nothing to be seen that goes along with this interim supply. It's just a bunch of numbers saying: trust us and give the government $4 billion, please.

So they say that they don't have any money, and I've questioned that. They may not have any money today, but certainly their use of the interim and supplementary supply in place of formal budgeting suggests that they can get money if they want it or they can get money if they need it. I think that that's asking a lot from the Alberta public.

You know, I know and understand that there are 74 votes on the government side. That's fine.

9:10

AN HON. MEMBER: Seventy three.

MS BLAKEMAN: Seventy three. [interjections] You're missing one. Yeah, you think you'll get him back soon enough.

But that 73 is really only representing 30 percent of the vote in Alberta. Seventy percent of the people didn't get represented on the government side. That's what we're left to do here, uphold those 70 percent that didn't vote in this government. I'm perfectly willing to stand here and say: "No, I don't trust the government. No, I do not see sound financial management. No, I don't see good planning. I see a lot of moving money around. I see a lot of, well, no, we don't have money, but in fact we do have money for things that we want to do. No, we're not going to show you any kind of business plans or outcomes or targets or performance measurements for this amount of money. Just grant it to us and trust us." I don't trust you, and I don't think that many Albertans trust you either.

You know, when I look at other examples of whether or not I would consider this government to be good fiscal managers, I look at the cyclical nature of the Alberta economy, the boom and bust, the high natural resource revenue and low natural resource revenue. This government has done nothing to work with that. My colleagues here in the Liberal caucus have been talking about a stability fund since, I think, the days of Laurence Decore, that we needed to do something to smooth out those peaks and valleys of the Alberta economy. The government did nothing. We had huge spending cuts in the early '90s, and I think they cut stupid at the time. Then as we got more and more natural resource revenue in, they spent stupid, and that didn't really help us except that now everyone can point to figures and go: look; we're spending as much money today as we did 10 years ago, whatever, but we're not getting anywhere near the same level of service.

Now the government says: "Oh, dear, we're in another downturn, and now we're going to cut stupid again. We're just going to go into different departments like Children's Services and say that that's it. You know, we're going to cut all of the preventative early intervention programs for children." Well, if that isn't cutting stupid, I don't know what is. I mean, we have such short-term thought around planning and around good fiscal management from this government that I can't support any fiscal plans that they put forward. I've yet to see things put in place that I would consider wise financial planning. The way this government operates, it would never tolerate this from any nonprofit that was out there, and they probably wouldn't tolerate it from a business either, but they seem to think it's okay if they do it.

So we've had citizens on a roller-coaster ride of spend and slash and spend and slash. You know, how do we even expect individuals to try and keep up with their own personal planning, to keep in sync with what this government is doing when the government is back and forth and back and forth? Certainly my colleagues here in the Liberal caucus have talked and called for some time for stability, predictability, and sustainability in our finances, and I think that's a very reasonable thing to be asking for.

MR. BONNER: And equitable.

MS BLAKEMAN: And equitable. Oh, excellent. Another suggestion from one of my colleagues that we look at equity as well, and I think that that's a wise suggestion.

We need a budget management program that can manage to get us a budget that's brought in and debated before the year-end so that we don't have to go in for an interim supply. We need good enough budget management that we don't have a government coming back to us not once but twice – twice – in one year for supplementary supply, which I've always found a very interesting concept. We can manage to sort of overspend in budgets. Well, that's okay; we'll just come back and do a supplementary supply and go: whoops, uh-oh, if I can just move money backwards into this account or into this department to cover the fact that we overspent our money, then when the books all come out at the end, you know, two or three years from now, we can look back and go, "We were exactly on target in that department." What a bunch of hooey. The department was over, and they had to put money into it after the fact so that they all came out even. So we've got a government that can't manage to get its budget presented and debated before year-end. Then during the year we get one or two – or I suppose even three is possible with this government – supplementary supplies that are dealing with overexpenditures in departments during the fiscal year. Unbelievably bad planning, but the government just keeps on doing it.

You know, I think any member of the government would be hard-pressed to stand up and tell me that anyone in Alberta gave them a mandate to budget this badly, that they came in with all their 74 seats and that gave them a mandate to be poor fiscal managers, that it gave them a mandate to budget badly. [interjections] Well, my hon. colleagues on the other side seem to disagree and believe that they were given a mandate to be poor budget managers and poor fiscal managers. I think it's a sad day when they admit that, but at least they're admitting it, so I'm glad to see there's some honesty coming forward there.

MR. NORRIS: Question.

MS BLAKEMAN: Oh, I can see that the hon. Minister of Economic Development is going to be up and joining in the discussion right after I'm finished, I'm sure, Mr. Chairman.

MR. NORRIS: I'll just let you talk all night.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you. I appreciate the support. That's really good of you. He's going to let me speak all night.

MR. BONNER: How much are they asking for here?

MS BLAKEMAN: They're asking for $4 billion. You know, $4 billion is the entire budget, the entire economy for many countries in the world. They run the whole year on that much money for everything and for all of their people. But no. In Alberta we want $4 billion handed over for two months' operation with no accountability at all put in place, none, zip, zero, nada. Nothing in this book puts forward any kind of accountability, any kind of targets, any kind of "This is what we're going to do with it."

The most that I can get out of that is a one-liner. I just loved that. It said:

Amounts to be Voted are categorized as:

- operating expense, which includes expenses such as salaries, supplies, grants, amortization of capital assets and debt servicing costs.

Well, that's descriptive. Or

- capital investment, which includes the acquisition of land, buildings, equipment, highways, bridges, dams and other capital assets
- non-budgetary disbursements, which include the exchange of cash for another form of asset, [and]
- Lottery Fund payments.

That is the sum total of the description of what $4 billion is going to be used for by this government. That's it. That's the entire description, and Albertans are to trust this government and say, "You betcha; we're going to hand over $4 billion for this." Absolutely no accountability whatsoever, and I will not support this government in this anymore.

I think I've very clearly stated why I'm not going to support it anymore, and I'd be happy to send my remarks out to Albertans, letting them know what this government feels is acceptable budgeting and acceptable financial management. I hope more Albertans will be reading Hansard and listening to the live audio to understand what the government thinks is an acceptable way to come into this kind of management, because I certainly don't think it's acceptable, and if most Albertans tuned in and listened to it, they wouldn't find it acceptable either.

I've almost used up my time here, Mr. Chairman, and I appreciate the opportunity. I'm just going to check through my notes to make sure I said everything I wanted to. Yeah, I have. Those are the points that I really wanted to raise. I mean, there's not much else that you can say. We're given so little information in this, just the amounts in each ministry that they are wanting for two months' worth of operation, a grand total. They tell you how much is lottery fund, how much is general fund, and how much is their capital investment, all divided out, but together they add up to $4 billion, with the very brief description that I just read to you of what the money is going to be spent on. Then it says: please vote this for us.

Once again they're in here asking for this money on the 11th of March, and they have made no attempt to bring in the budget, which they could have. We could be debating here tonight a budget on a given department and have the entire budget voted on before the end of the fiscal year, which is the 31st of March, as is appropriate. Every other nonprofit, every voluntary-sector organization, every business has to get this done before their year-end, except for government, who can manage to stand here and say: "Oops, darn; didn't get it right. Oops. Uh-oh. Give me $4 billion, and I won't bother telling you how I'm going to spend it." Totally unacceptable.

Well, I guess I've made it pretty clear how I feel about this. Thanks for the opportunity.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I wasn't intending to speak tonight, but given what we've just heard, I thought I'd better explain to the hon. member what interim supply is, because it's pretty clear that she doesn't have the same understanding that I think perhaps other members of the House do.

I want to begin, with all due respect to the hon. member, by explaining that last Thursday, as required by Standing Orders, the Government House Leader did in response, I should say, to a member from the opposition provide a complete and detailed outline of what this week would be all about, and that did include the issue of interim supply.

Now, we are in Committee of Supply, and one of the issues that we have the ability to debate and discuss, of course, is interim supply. The way this process works, in a nutshell, Mr. Chair and hon. members, is that today is the first of two days that we have a chance to discuss and debate interim supply. Tomorrow, being Tuesday, will be the second day, and then we will also introduce the interim appropriation bill. Now, on Wednesday that bill, which will receive second reading, will hopefully be approved, and we'll move on to Thursday, at which time it will again surface in the form of a bill, and it'll be discussed in the Committee of the Whole stage. Then on Monday it will go to third reading. On Tuesday the budget will be tabled along with all the business plans and all the details that any member of this House or any member of the public could ever hope to have. That was all very clearly and plainly outlined by the Government House Leader last Thursday as projected government business.

The reason that we're looking at interim supply and the provision of certain funds come April 1 is because we have to have certain programs and services ready to go when April 1 arrives. Otherwise, you would not have hospitals, you wouldn't have anybody to staff them, we wouldn't have the wages to pay them, you wouldn't have schools, we wouldn't have any moneys to pay the teachers, you wouldn't have a justice system, you wouldn't have any courts operating, the Solicitor General's department wouldn't be there, in my case, in Community Development, we wouldn't have moneys for persons with developmental disabilities, and the list goes on and on and on. All that interim supply does is simply provide us with the ability to ensure that come April 1, there will be moneys in place to allow government to continue. Now, this is nothing new. The member has been here for six years, by her own admission. She knows what goes on in the community, and I'm sure that she's paid very close attention to that.

I should also say on the point of accountability, which the member mentioned many times, that I think it's important to remind all members in this House that we are subject to a very careful and a very scrutinous review by the Auditor General on an annual basis. He makes his recommendations, and we respond to those recommendations. Secondly, all members of the House who sit on Public Accounts have the opportunity to come and speak at Public Accounts, have questions answered not only from relevant ministers but also from their staff and from members of the Auditor General's department. It's a very good and a very full accounting-type system.

Now, this is a bit of an unusual year, and the member has alluded to that. I just wanted to clear up a couple of things here. First of all, effective March 25 this House will be recessed until April 8. Clearly, anyone looking at the calendar would understand that that is beyond the date of April 1. So basically we've got this week and we've got next week and then we're adjourned until after the April 1 deadline. So if we don't bring in an interim supply bill, Mr. Chairman, then we don't have the ability to provide the many excellent services and programs that this government intends to continue providing. So that's the first point.

The second point is with respect to some of the specific comments that the member made, and I just want to note a few of them. She's asking: why is it that $4 billion is requested? Well, the answer very simply is: because that's what it takes to run government services and government programs for about two or three months. A further question was: is this an even larger expenditure anticipated? Well, I anticipate that the incoming budget, although we won't know till March 19 for sure, will show some increases in certain areas. For example, in the throne speech we heard that health care, education, and I believe children's services are at least three areas that will receive some type of increase because the population is growing and expanding and more services are needed, but again we'll have to wait for the final numbers to come out, and it's just an unfair criticism to make at this stage.

There's another comment that was made, Mr. Chairman, in relation to the interim supply bill, and that was something about being poor managers. Well, I think that when you take a look at the record, if the government of Alberta were a poor manager, you'd see some deficits being run, you'd see an unsecured debt being run, I don't think you'd see a triple A credit rating, and so on. Now, those are very enviable benchmarks that the government has attained, and there has been some help from time to time from members of the opposition. [interjections]

Chair's Ruling Decorum

THE CHAIR: Hon. members, this is called Committee of Supply, not general, noisy visiting time. I wonder if those people who are engaged in lively conversation, who are now drowning out the Deputy Government House Leader as he tries to make some comments with respect to this interim supply, could move out to the outer chambers so that the rest of us could hear the hon. Deputy Government House Leader and others who may follow him when they're recognized.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Chairman, for that cautionary note, because this is very valuable information for all members to know.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: There was a comment made about borrowing into the future. Well, this is not borrowing into the future. This is simply saying that come April 1, we need a budget in place to start the year. The House will not be in session, so we don't have the ability to bring something in, as I indicated, the week prior nor the first week after.

Now, the member has made several comments about not knowing exactly how these moneys are going to be spent. I would just say: well, if you want proof of how the moneys are going to be spent, this interim supply, then go out into the community, take a look at the hospitals, take a look at the schools, take a look at the court system, take a look at some of the many other excellent facilities we have, and that's where and how the money is being spent. It's nothing new. These facilities have been there for many, many years. They will continue to be there for many, many years. So that's the short answer to that.

The hon. member referred to something about not seeing any evidence of good planning. Well, I'll tell you what good planning is, Mr. Chairman. It's bringing in a solid three-year business plan for this House and all Albertans to review, and that's quite a rare commodity in this Confederation. Not every jurisdiction does that. That's good planning, and it'll show you what the plan is for three years out. If you wanted to have a look at where we're at this coming year, take a look at last year's three-year plan, because that's where you'll find some of the answers.

Secondly on the issue of good planning, I think we're probably the only jurisdiction that voluntarily provides quarterly reports, regular updates, which the Minister of Finance works very hard to provide so that all Albertans will be kept up to speed, knowing exactly where their moneys have gone, what is being targeted, whether we're on track or a little off track or we need to catch up, and so on. Yes, from time to time things do go bump in the night. We had a very large and tragic bump in the night come September 11. So you have to make adjustments for that. No one can predict those tragic circumstances, but they do happen, and then we share the burden evenly and equally. In this case everyone had to reduce by 1 percent to ensure that we didn't incur a deficit. Why? Because not running a deficit is also good planning, and that's what we're pledged to do.

Now, it's unfortunate that the member indicated that there's nothing she can support in this interim supply. I'm not going to give her the usual rhetoric she was expecting, because she outlined in her first few comments that no one would want to stop providing services for seniors or for children. Of course not, but ensuring that we have this interim supply business passed will also ensure that those services continue to be provided.

The final comment I'll make, Mr. Chairman, is with respect to some confusion that appears to exist on the opposite side with respect to how supplementary supply works as compared with interim supply. Now, I don't understand the logic of someone who would stand up and argue when we bring in a supplementary supply estimate that provides for some additional funds to occasionally be spent in certain areas where those moneys are needed. On the one hand, you sit and you listen in this House to complaints: we're not spending enough there; we're not spending enough there; we're not doing enough there. On the other hand, from time to time we will bring in a supplementary supply bill with extra appropriations and we do provide those extra moneys. Then there are complaints about: why are you spending the extra money? Well, you can't have it both ways. As one former individual indicated in this House, you can't blow and suck at the same time. So you have to make up your mind on which side of that argument you are.

This interim supply bill is simply a way of allowing government services and programs to be continued. I would urge all members to stick to that point, understand it clearly, and please let's get on with this debate and have this appropriation-related bill and its outcomes passed and supported. With that, Mr. Chairman, I'll take my seat and look forward to listening to others.

Thank you.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I found it interesting that the previous speaker took it upon himself to lecture another member about interim supply. It might have run more true had that member gone back and visited the very comments that that member made in this House about interim supply a few years previous. Talking about blowing and sucking at the same time, it seems to me that we just had a great example of it from the minister, and we'd be happy to table some of his previous comments.

When you look at the Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2002, Mr. Chairman, there are I think a number of points that can be made. I guess the first question and one that is constantly asked at this time is: what is the rationale? Where is the money going to be spent? Where is the detail from each of the departments in terms of how this money is going to be allocated? I go back to the Auditor General's report, and one of the very first comments that the Auditor General made was: "We recommend that the Department of Treasury, in conjunction with other ministries, clearly define the core measures and targets in the government business plan." Now, the Treasury department's response to that was that they accepted it. They said: yes, we should have core measures; we should have targets.

It seems to me that having accepted it, then when a bill like this comes before us, there's an obligation to report the progress. Where is the money going? On which of the objectives is the money going to be spent? What has been the progress to date? That's one of the very difficult positions this kind of bill puts legislators in. We don't have a report on the progress on those objectives that we can use to judge the appropriateness of the expenditures in each of the departments.

In Learning, for example, the amount of money that's being requisitioned, 588 million plus dollars, is almost equivalent to the entire Edmonton public school board budget for a year to look after 80,000 students. Now, it seems to me that before you bring forward a request like that to the Legislature, there is some obligation to earmark where those funds are going to be spent or on which objectives progress is expected to be made.

The Auditor General, for instance, under Children's Services made a number of recommendations, and again I'll quote from the Auditor General.

We recommended . . . that the Department of Children's Services review the funding formula to ensure that the allocation of resources . . . is consistent with the expected needs of each [child and family services] Authority.

He goes on to talk about that.

Well, the department in response to the Auditor General says:

Accepted. The Ministry is committed to improving the funding model taking into consideration variations between regions, best practices in case and program management, and the impact of legislated and mandated program parameters.

Again, here's a department that says, "Yes, we accept that." But what do we have with the bill before us this evening? A request from that department for 121 million plus dollars and no supporting documentation, nothing in terms of the kind of progress that has or has not been made on objectives such as that. It's one thing to say that you agree with the Auditor General. It's another thing to put into practice those beliefs. I think that that's fundamentally what's wrong with what we have before us. We don't have the kind of detail that you would expect. I can't believe, for instance, that the government would allow a school board to present a budget for this amount of money without more detail. In fact, for this amount of money, for a school board that was spending 500 million plus dollars, there would probably be volumes of documents supporting that expenditure. So it's a basic flaw in terms of what we have behind us.

One of the other things – and it's been mentioned by a number of the speakers – is that the budget planning seems to be at best erratic. There are increases, and then there are cuts: increases and cuts. I don't think that the impact of that is fully understood by some of the ministers. I attended a group of citizens concerned with funding for adults with disabilities and a number of those people who are in group homes, and the pain and the agony of even a 1 percent cut was evident at that meeting, Mr. Chairman.

These group homes have in place contracts with individuals who have to be on duty, some of them on call 24 hours a day. They have in place contracts for facilities. They have in place contracts for services. To turn around at the point in the budget year that the department did and ask them for a 1 percent reduction was really most distressing. It meant for them going into debt, being unable to handle it, looking at curtailing services for the coming year to be able to make up the funding loss. It was an evening of great frustration, to say the least.

I think that that's just one small example of what happens when you can't depend on the government funding to be there, to be stable, and to be consistent. Even once it's passed in a budget, you still can't depend upon it because somewhere down the road during that budget year the government may change and change plans. It just seems an incredibly poor way to be delivering services and programs to Albertans.

I think there are a number of examples of changes and midyear changes that can also be cited: the changes to the contractors in Children's Services, a great number of people who had spent a lot of energy and a lot of their life putting services in place only to find that their contracts were discontinued. Questions about how the finances are being handled by the department: we get no information when we have the requests in a document such as appears before us this evening.

I think the third thing I would like to indicate, Mr. Chairman, is that there has to be a better way. We heard some of the reports out of the Future Summit, requests that echoed the requests we've had for a stability fund. Now, whether a stability fund would have been applicable in this situation – probably not. But I think it does ask the government, because this goes on year after year after year, to at least take the problem seriously and to address it so that next year prior to budget time we're not going through this same exercise as we have year after year. Surely, given the kinds of mechanisms the government has put in place for the financial management of the province, there are ways that this kind of asking for money before the budget is passed can be reduced or eliminated.

One of the obvious things is to pass a budget before the end of the year. I go back to my experience with school boards, where that became the rule, that you had to have in place your budget before the school year began. That only made good sense.

I think we're all very supportive of the unintended or the unpredictable. I don't think anyone in the House would argue that the government shouldn't have the freedom to come forward and ask for funds when unfortunate mishaps or something entirely unpredictable happens. I think, should that be the case, that it would certainly be entertained with support by the Legislature. But it's the predictable; it's what we know is going to be there. It's the costs that we know are going to be incurred coming before the Legislature year after year, where we pass a good portion of the budget before we ever have an opportunity to look back at the progress of the previous year, where we never have the opportunity to look at progress toward targets, where we don't have the opportunity to look at performance measures, and we don't have the opportunity to assess the appropriateness of the government's previous year's plans before we are already approving a couple of months' worth of expenditures for the next year. I think it's just a poor way, Mr. Chairman, for the government to be conducting business in the province.

I think with those comments I'll conclude, Mr. Chairman. Thank you.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I welcome the opportunity to speak to the interim supply estimates for 2002-2003 and certainly to make some comments in regard to what other speakers have indicated here in the House this evening.

Certainly these are funds that we are going to be voting on and allocating to keep many of our programs going through April and May of this current year. I also see that these are categorized into operating expenses, which includes expenses such as salaries, supplies, grants, amortization of capital assets, and debt-servicing costs. Now, these amounts to be voted in are also categorized as capital investment, which includes the acquisition of land, buildings, equipment, highways, bridges, dams, and other capital assets; plus nonbudgetary disbursements, which include the exchange of cash for another form of asset; and lottery fund payments.

The Minister of Community Development certainly spoke and informed us this evening, and I would have to compliment him. He's come a long way since the days he used to ask: well, what is the difference between a deficit and a debt? I also have to say that we're in full agreement with him as well that we need a budget in place by April 1 as we start our new fiscal year. He also indicated that all we have to do is go out in the community to the hospitals and schools, and we can see where and how our dollars are spent and how many. But unfortunately, no, we cannot see how those dollars are spent and certainly get a handle on where these dollars are going.

It is ironic that here we are asking for moneys to tide us over for the next two months because even though we knew our year-end was going to be March 31, we did not plan this session and have a budget in place which could be passed in time for our April 1 start. Certainly that is not the obligation on this side of the House that was not fulfilled; it is the obligation on the other side.

I also look here and I see that we are asking for $4 billion to take us to May 31, 2002. Now, this represents 16.6 percent of the year. When we look at the amount that's being requested as a percentage of our total budget of $21.6 billion from last year, we see that this amounts to 18.5 percent of the budget from last year. So again we are looking at an increase of approximately 2 percent to carry us forward. You're asking for 2 percent more in dollars to cover the portion of the year, so this is again a little confusing. Now, I've read through this book that was provided to determine if some of these costs are front-end loaded or whatever. Does this mean that somewhere down the line we're going to have to perhaps cut 2 percent from everybody's budget throughout the next year because we've got 2 percent ahead? I don't know.

I also know, Mr. Chairman, that if we were to take this piece of information to any bank in this country, or in the world for that matter, and ask for $4 billion without any breakdown in costs, they would be asking us to leave. Yet we are asking the taxpayers of this province, on the basis of figures like this, for us to pass $4 billion in spending. These are not good business practices.

As the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods has stated, we want to be flexible, particularly when we are faced with the unpredictable. We all realize that at times there are going to be unfortunate circumstances that we can't control, and we had a good example here a couple years ago when we had a huge forest fire that raged in northern Alberta, and certainly we required extra funds to pay for that. Those are unpredictable circumstances, Mr. Chairman. We also have the potential this summer of a tremendous amount of problems because of the drought that most of us, I think, are expecting in southern Alberta, again a very unfortunate circumstance and one that we will definitely have to be prepared to pay for if in fact that does occur.

As well, Mr. Chairman, this certainly again has absolutely nothing in here that would address the roller-coaster economy that we experience in this province. It would be good if we did have some method to smooth out our spending, because we do know that our revenues certainly do fluctuate and that that is required.

Now, then, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre mentioned our need for equitable, predictable, stable long-term funding. Again, when our municipalities, when our road builders in this province, when our school boards, when our health authorities are all asking for this type of funding and certainly we cannot see far enough ahead that we require these moneys to start the fiscal year, then we still have not learned our lessons here.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Varsity – and I can always remember from my early days in the House here that one of his common pieces of advice to all members was that you have to plan your work and work your plan. Now, we know that we need these moneys on April 1. That would be the plan to have these moneys available, but this type of budgeting certainly is not working our plan very well.

So we do have, Mr. Chairman, a lot of room for improvement here rather than on so many occasions having to revert to interim supply to carry us through. This seems to happen on a yearly basis, and we do know that there are many mechanisms which would be preferable, which would, if instituted, get away from this type of supply. We should have a budget that's presented in this House that could be voted on and be in place before the end of the year, and we would certainly not have to go to interim supply. Yes, there are some cases when we do have to go to extra funding, when we do have the unpredictable and unfortunate circumstances, but for predictable costs and predictable times this is a very poor answer.

I do know that if the former hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo were here, he would certainly be saying something along the lines like: history is a torch that illuminates the future. What we have to do in this House is look at how we've conducted our business over the years and look at that example and see how we can do it better in the future.

Thank you.

MS BLAKEMAN: I just had one brief question back to the Deputy Government House Leader, the Member for Edmonton-Mill Creek. My question was: if the budget for 2002-2003 had been introduced, debated, and passed prior to March 31, 2002, would the government have needed an interim supply estimate? I think the answer is no, in which case all of my comments on poor planning stand.

Thanks very much.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Tuesday, March 12, 2002

1:30 p.m.

Date: 02/03/12

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

THE SPEAKER: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. Our Father, we thank You for Your abundant blessings to our province and ourselves. We ask You to ensure to us Your guidance and the will to follow it. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Visitors

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

MR. DUCHARME: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure this afternoon to introduce Mr. Ernie Isley, former Member of the Legislative Assembly, who is seated in your gallery. Mr. Isley represented the Bonnyville constituency from the 19th through the 22nd Legislature. I would ask Mr. Isley to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome.

head: Introduction of Guests

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

MR. LUKASZUK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed a pleasure to introduce to you a number of members of the Holy Rosary club, fine individuals of Polish descent. I guess that would be synonymous. Among them is Mr. Marian Hajdasz, president; Tadeusz Szczepanski, first vice-president; Clarence Jarock, second vice-president; Agnes Jarock, treasurer; Walter Linkewich, secretary; and all board members. I would ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a real pleasure today to stand and introduce to the Legislative Assembly a person who's looking down from the top now when he used to sit down here with us. Mr. Percy Wickman is here to join us. Percy, wave up there, and everybody give him a round of applause.

Mr. Speaker, I also have two other introductions I'd like to make. Mr. Len Borowski and Mr. Ross Demkiw are in the public gallery. They were candidates that ran in the last election for us. I'd just like them to stand and be recognized as coming in to look at what's going on here now.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

MR. MAR: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly Mr. Joachim Lemaire. Joachim is from northern France, and he is in Edmonton as part of the Edmonton Glenora Rotary Club student exchange program. A part of that exchange program requires students to attend high school in their host country, and even though Joachim graduated from grade 12 in France, he is attending Eastglen high school here in the city of Edmonton. Over the course of the year Joe will be living with three different Glenora Rotary families. His current family is Margot Ross-Graham and her husband, Mick Graham, and their three children. I had the good fortune of being able to meet Joe and his host earlier this afternoon, and I would ask that the two of them please rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of this Assembly.

head: Oral Question Period

THE SPEAKER: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Education System

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. After his last meeting with the Premier, Larry Booi said:

From the beginning, teachers have been concerned about classroom conditions, fair salaries and initiatives to recruit and retain teachers . . . and it is important that the . . . process provide an opportunity for all three concerns to be raised.

My question is to the Premier. Why is the Premier misrepresenting the position of the elected president of the ATA and the thousands of teachers that he represents?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, far be it from misrepresenting the president of the ATA. As a matter of fact, that's precisely what we have in mind: to address those particular situations through a blue-ribbon panel or a commission or some form of process that has yet to be determined to address a multitude of issues facing education today.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Learning to supplement?

DR. OBERG: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There are just two things that I wanted to add if I may quote to you, and this is from the ATA web site. March 4: ATA President Larry Booi meets with Premier Ralph Klein and subsequently with Minister of Learning, Dr. Lyle Oberg, and Minister of Human Resources and Employment, Clint Dunford. The Premier agrees to bring to caucus and cabinet for discussion two potential approaches to resolving disputes: number one, initiating an arbitration process and, number two, establishing a commission to investigate teaching and learning conditions. Right from the ATA web site.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Arbitration procedures can include more than just wages and salaries.

My second question is to the Premier. Is it the government's policy to make no commitment to improving the conditions of schools in this province over the course of the upcoming teachers' contract and in the current negotiations?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, we have committed to take a good hard, thorough look at the situation. Putting those kinds of conditions in a contract doesn't really solve a thing, because as I explained in this Legislature yesterday, one size simply does not fit all. What we need to do – and Mr. Booi agrees – is to have a full and thorough examination of education to ensure its sustainability for future generations. That's what it's all about.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Learning to supplement.

DR. OBERG: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Once again I will quote from the ATA web site.

Impending changes in education point out the need for teacherboard cooperation. Neither party can operate in a vacuum and expect complicated problems to be resolved during the heat of regular collective bargaining.

DR. NICOL: Good negotiation includes all the conditions, Mr. Speaker.

My final question to the Premier: can the Premier explain why his legacy to Albertans will be overcrowded classrooms, overworked teachers, and no extra help for special-needs students?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, nothing could be further from the truth. Notwithstanding our commitment to look at education, to ensure sustainability of education for future generations, we have provided in our budgets reasonable increases to accommodate precisely what the hon. Leader of the Opposition pointed out.

To explain the amount of extra money we have put in to accommodate special needs, to accommodate early literacy programs, to accommodate a number of issues, I will have the hon. minister supplement.

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Special needs in itself has more than doubled, from around $158 million to a little over $300 million in the last five years. When it came to special needs, we had a full review on this involving all of the stakeholders. There were some 20 or 30 stakeholders. They brought back 66 recommendations, all of which we accepted. This government, this department accepted each and every one of them.

When it comes to class size – and this, you will be pleased to know, will be my last quote of today: “I am the first to admit that class size alone doesn’t make a difference.” That was the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods in his response to the Speech from the Throne.

THE SPEAKER: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Money Not Spent during Teachers’ Labour Dispute

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The government has saved over $50 million as a result of the teachers’ strike. According to the Premier last Thursday, not a single penny of these dollars will go directly back into education. That money will instead be put into general revenue. My questions are for the Premier. How can the Premier justify not putting the money saved as a result of the teachers’ strike directly back into the education budget?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, this is money that wasn’t spent within the budget, and it goes to other priority areas. I would remind the Leader of the Official Opposition that education, albeit very important, extremely important, is a priority area, but there are other priorities. We have a multitude of issues to deal with that require money. They complain that every single thing we do is underfunded. Underfunded. So this money will go to address some of those problems, the problems that they have brought up. We have infrastructure problems. We have problems related to seniors. We have problems certainly related to health. We have problems related to sustainable resource development, children’s services, transportation, PDD boards, administration of justice, municipalities. You name it; we’ve got it. So that money will be put to good use indeed.

1:40

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Why will the Premier not make this money available to school boards to cover the additional costs that are going to be associated with this arbitration and with the settlement? They need that money in education, Mr. Premier.

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, this government did not go out on strike. This government did not go out on strike. The $50 million that was budgeted for teachers’ salaries was not used. It goes back into the general revenue fund and is used as the government deems appropriate. I can tell you that those dollars will be used in priority areas to address many of the urgent needs that I’ve previously outlined.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Why won’t you give that money back to the school boards to cover the costs that are associated with this arbitration process that you’ve put in place? That’s going to increase their costs over and above what was in the budget before. They deserve that money, Mr. Premier.

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, first of all, these will be onetime dollars. I can’t in my wildest dreams imagine that this arbitration process is going to come anywhere near $50 million.

I’ll have the hon. minister supplement.

DR. OBERG: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For every 1 percent increase in teachers’ salaries around the province it costs us roughly $23 million. The key component here is that those dollars are ongoing. They are not onetime dollars. The savings that were retained from the strike were a little over $50 million. According to our accounting practices, those dollars have to be put back into general revenue.

I will not comment on the upcoming budget, but I think that people will be more than pleasantly surprised as to what occurs.

THE SPEAKER: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Teachers’ Labour Dispute

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Premier and his Minister of Learning have acted like vigilantes, sniping at teachers and poisoning the atmosphere in schools across this province. My questions are to the Premier. How have the Premier’s attacks on teachers improved the learning atmosphere in our schools?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, the preamble to the question is entirely wrong, which made the question invalid, because we have not in any way, shape, or form tried to undermine the value of the teachers. We have not attacked the teachers, we have not acted as vigilantes, and we are not in any way, shape, or form poisoning the classroom situation, so the question is invalid.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: how does the Premier’s teacher-bashing lure bright students into the profession and retain teachers in the schools? Just how does he intend to do it?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, again the preamble to the question, you know, where he alludes to teacher-bashing, makes the question invalid. One relates to the other, and we are not teacher-bashing. Why would we teacher-bash? There are 20 teachers in our caucus.

DR. MASSEY: To the Premier, Mr. Speaker: how does taking away teachers' right to assemble and violating their Charter rights improve the atmosphere in our schools?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I have never in my life heard anything so ludicrous, so ridiculous, so untrue. Teachers can assemble anytime, anywhere, anyplace that they want to assemble: in the lunchroom, in front of the Leg., in the hon. member's office if he wants them to assemble there, in town halls, in church basements. Wherever they want to assemble, they can assemble.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party, followed by the hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

Teachers' Arbitration Legislation

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. One week ago the province's teachers offered this government labour peace, asking in return only for a fair and unbiased arbitration process. The Premier did a total flip-flop last week, first agreeing with the teachers and then doing a complete reversal, throwing statesmanship to the wind, ending up in vindictiveness. My question to the Premier: how can the Premier possibly justify double-crossing Alberta's teachers through his government's reprehensible and unacceptable actions?

MR. KLEIN: There was no double cross. Nothing was reprehensible, Mr. Speaker. To enlighten the hon. member of the third party, there was a process, and indeed the decision to bring in the legislation was taken after considerable debate and consideration.

I'll go through the process. The notion of legislation, whatever that legislation might be, was first brought to agenda and priorities a week ago Monday. It was then taken to cabinet. It was then taken to caucus. While that process was going on, I had the opportunity of meeting with the president of the ATA and the president of the Alberta School Boards Association. The draft legislation was then taken to agenda and priorities again. It was then taken again to caucus. So there was a very thorough process and, I can assure you, a very lengthy and considered and intelligent debate on this issue before the legislation was brought forward, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Why did the Premier cave in to his Minister of Learning and the right-wing hawks in his own caucus, who have for months been demanding that government extract its pound of flesh from the teachers?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, that simply is not true. There's been no discussion whatsoever about extracting a pound or an ounce of flesh from the teachers.

Relative to the minister's role in all of this, I'll have him respond.

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Premier is absolutely correct. When Mr. Booi came and met with, first, the Premier and, secondly, with the Minister of Human Resources and Employment and myself, the issue, as I read from these quotes on the ATA web site, about class size, the issue about instructional time, PTRs were all to be put forward to a commission, a summit, an investigation of the learning system, which will take place this fall. We did agree to that. The president of the ATA also stated that he wanted a very narrow focus on the arbitration. He did ask for legislation with binding arbitration. He wanted a narrow focus. What I will say, though, is that the president of the Alberta

Teachers' Association did not ask for school boards not to be able to run a deficit.

There is another party to this matter. That other party is the employers, whom we subsequently met with, who put forward their case to the same group of people. One of the conditions that they demanded was that they cannot run a deficit. So, Mr. Speaker, we attempted to marry the two that were put forward to us, and you subsequently have that legislation, which will be discussed later on today.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question to the Premier: why did the Premier decide to be so utterly callous and decide to return the goodwill of teachers with the most draconian piece of legislation that has ever been introduced in the entire political history of this province?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, the legislation now being debated is far from draconian, and it certainly is not callous. As a matter of fact, the majority of the legislation is in accordance with what the president of the ATA and the president of the ASBA requested.

We have brought forward legislation that keeps students in class – of no concern to the socialist NDs, no concern whatsoever. Students, you know, don't pay unions dues, so why think about them. Many of them aren't active contributors to the ND Party, so forget about the students. You know, the NDs want us to forget about the students. Well, we want to think about the students. They are the most important people in this debate.

The arbitration process provides for a fair salary settlement that will at the very least make Alberta teachers the best paid on average in Canada, which they already are, Mr. Speaker, and establishes a high-level review of longer term issues in education. That's what's important. We've committed to that. We want to achieve sustainability in education for future generations.

Maintenance Enforcement Program

MR. VANDERBURG: Mr. Speaker, in the past year ATCO Gas sold off its Viking-Kinsella natural gas fields and will be disbursing to ATCO Gas customers this month approximately $405 million in profits from the sale. My question is to the Minister of Justice and Attorney General. I understand your department is making a court-ordered garnishee of these payments to divert into the maintenance enforcement program. Is that true?

MR. HANCOCK: Well, yes, Mr. Speaker. Anytime maintenance enforcement finds a source of money going to somebody who hasn't paid their bills, they garnishee it.

MR. VANDERBURG: Again to the same minister: how many of these court orders will be issued, and what will your department spend to collect $200 to $500?

MR. HANCOCK: Well, Mr. Speaker, they aren't court orders. They're simply garnishee summonses. We have a process to take them off the word processing machine. It's a matter of filling in the details as to who is being garnisheered and from what source. I don't know how many pieces of paper are involved in this, but it's simply a matter of maintenance enforcement sending the paper over to ATCO, saying: if you're sending money to these people, please send it to the court instead because we have a garnishee and they haven't paid their bill.

MR. VANDERBURG: My final question again to the minister: I just want to know what this will cost us per garnishee.

MR. HANCOCK: Well, Mr. Speaker, I don't know the exact cost that will be involved, but the bottom line here is that there is a considerable amount of money going out from ATCO Gas to Albertans. Most Albertans will not be affected by the action that is being taken by maintenance enforcement, but those Albertans who haven't paid their maintenance payments to take care of their children will be subject to a garnishee. We garnishee those funds wherever we can find a source of income or a source of funds that somebody is receiving if they have not made their payments to take care of their children. That's what maintenance enforcement is about. We make no apologies for that, and we will be garnisheeing those moneys.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Health Care Premiums

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Based on the numbers from the Alberta School Boards Association, this province's school boards will be out of pocket up to $8 million annually when health premiums rise. In addition, teachers will see up to $3 million stripped off their paycheques every year because of premium hikes. To the Premier: how can the Premier justify an $11 million claw-back of funds from classrooms and teachers?

MR. KLEIN: Relative to premiums, that issue will be addressed in the budget, Mr. Speaker. But to speak generally to the issue of premiums, premiums were introduced in this province to give Albertans an understanding that there is a cost associated with the delivery of health care services. It's not hidden in a payroll tax or other kinds of taxes; it's up front. Originally premiums were to cover 20 percent – two zero percent – of all insured services. They now cover 11 percent. What we're attempting to do in accordance with the recommendation in the Mazankowski report is bring those premiums in line with the true cost of delivering insured services.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. So what's the sense in paying provincial funds to school boards, only to strip those funds back from those boards?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, it's not only school boards. If indeed we deal with this, everyone will be involved. This is not peculiar or specific to school boards. It is a fact of economics that we need to make adjustments to the health care premiums to reflect the true cost of delivering insured services.

DR. TAFT: Will the Premier admit that higher health care premiums are certain to have a direct impact on classroom funding?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, any adjustment to health care premiums upwards will have a direct impact on the payroll of every single employer in this province that pays a portion of health care premiums. For those who don't pay a portion of health care premiums, of course it will have no impact. I would suggest that there are literally thousands of employers – businesses large and small, public institutions large and small – that pay all or a portion of their employees' health care premiums, and yes, they will be affected. But don't try to intimate in any way, shape, or form that this is exclusive and specific to school boards. It's not.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-West, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Seniors' Benefit Program

MS KRYCZKA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thousands of lower income Alberta seniors live better quality lives due to the provincial government's seniors' benefit program, which is one of the best in Canada. However, yesterday morning I learned that there is concern in Calgary that, to quote, seniors' benefits offices will be closed in Calgary, Red Deer, and Cochrane. My main question is to the Minister of Seniors. Is this rumour accurate, and if not, could the minister clarify what is happening, if anything?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. WOLOSHYN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The offices will be relocated in Calgary, Lethbridge, and Red Deer. With respect to Calgary, we've entered into a contract with the Kerby Centre, and what was previously administered through a government office will now be handled in the Kerby Centre. They do an awful lot of good work with seniors, and we felt that it would enhance their operations. Certainly having a contract with Kerby is a benefit to all seniors in the Calgary area. There won't be any interruption of service. As a matter of fact, it will be improved.

In addition, we've also arranged with the Lethbridge Senior Citizens Organization a similar kind of arrangement where our office will be housed in their facilities, again with the intention of bringing the service closer to the user; namely, in both cases the senior.

In Red Deer we're currently having discussions with the Golden Circle Resource Centre to see if we can find some better way of delivering information in that city also.

The other service centres – namely, Edmonton, Stony Plain, Medicine Hat, St. Paul, and Grande Prairie – will remain for the time being as they are.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MS KRYCZKA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I do have a supplemental to the same minister. Could the minister inform us of the date that these changes will take effect and any other changes that seniors should know as a result; for example, a change in telephone numbers for seniors' inquiries?

MR. WOLOSHYN: The changes will be effective on April 1, and I would stress that the seniors, if they do want to make a call, stick with the provincewide seniors' information line. In that way, there won't be confusion with the numbers in the interim.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Children's Services Fatality Investigation

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In December of last year a child in the care of Children's Services escaped from his group home and later froze to death after a drinking party. My questions are all to the Minister of Children's Services. Why did the minister not hold a special case review of this teenager's death?

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, there will be, in fact, a special case review of this teenager's death. Let me just cite further that there have been, I believe, allegations in this House before that there wasn't follow-through on behalf of this child when in actual fact the child and family services authority staff had contacted the RCMP immediately. This is, like all of the deaths of children, an absolutely tragic situation. It's a situation where supports were provided and where the child chose to make other choices on his own behalf. Again, some children that are severely at risk who have been apprehended, have been protected, have been cared for then find ways on their own to leave the group home, and it's most unfortunate.

2:00

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you. Well, given that this seems to be an issue, why does the department not have standards and procedures in place to protect these children who have a track record of running away? Why is this a surprise? Why isn't something in place?

MS EVANS: Well, Mr. Speaker, there are standards in place to protect children, and rarely but sometimes children will find their own means of being able to convince adult support workers that they are managing appropriately. This is a very frequent phenomenon associated as well with suicides, where children, once they've arrived at a certain decision, will put in things, little blocks, little ways of telling people that they're going to do something quite differently than they're going to do. They may illustrate for a period of time absolute trustworthiness and then break the pattern. It's something that they've already preplanned. In this situation we don't know all of the circumstances. It will be part of a special case review with a special case review panel.

Mr. Speaker, quite recently I've determined that we will look again at the special case review process to see if there are other ways of enhancing the process so that we can look at all of the practice issues concerned, involve the College of Social Workers where appropriate and look at expanding the role. It is something that has been reviewed for a period of time in conjunction with the Minister of Justice and the medical examiner as we look at the practices of the fatality inquiry and to see whether or not there are ways of reviewing all parts of the situation where we have the unfortunate tragedy of losing a child, to see if we can do better, learn more, and improve our practices throughout.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MS BLAKEMAN: Well, thank you. Is one of the things that you looked at making a full public fatality inquiry automatic every time a child in care dies?

MS EVANS: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's very interesting that the hon. member raises this. There are parts of models throughout Canada that we're looking at, most particularly in British Columbia, where there are fatality inquiries involved with a much-expanded mandate for the number of children that die, not only children that may die during a period while they're in care but all children. For example, in Alberta that would include over 450 children if we looked at the situation of all children whose deaths have occurred and say: all right; what has happened in this particular situation? So prior to the Child Welfare Act being tabled in this House, something we intend to do hopefully in the next year or in the spring of next year, we will have examined that issue thoroughly. There is work being done currently in Children's Services to examine that issue and work being done with the other cross-ministry initiatives that are part of how we look at taking care of children better.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Mountain Pine Beetle Control

MR. STRANG: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Infestations of mountain pine beetle can devastate pine forests in western North America. In British Columbia the current pine beetle infestation is now the largest in B.C.'s history, affecting more than 600,000 hectares and damaging $4.2 billion – and that's billion dollars – worth of timber. My question is to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. What steps is your department following to prevent the same devastating infestation in Alberta?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. CARDINAL: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. That is truly an important question because forestry continues to be an important industry here in Alberta. We do have a very efficient beetle monitoring system in place here in Alberta. We monitor beetle infestations in fact in B.C., the U.S., and also the national parks to determine the threat or the potential threat to Alberta. We also use some special traps to assist us in monitoring the numbers of beetles that may be entering our forested areas in Alberta. Also, we are currently planning control measures with Banff national park, and with their co-operation, of course, we hope to take actions that will slow the beetles' movement into Alberta this spring.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. STRANG: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental question is to the same minister. Can the minister tell the Assembly if these preventative steps are being done in time to control mountain pine beetle populations in the province of Alberta?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. CARDINAL: Yes, Mr. Speaker. If necessary, we can take extraordinary measures under the Forest and Prairie Protection Act. In fact, going back, by acting quickly, Alberta successfully dealt with a major outbreak in the southeastern slopes in the early '80s at a cost of around $6.2 million. Our target is of course to control major outbreaks within one year of discovery. Currently there are no major infestations in the eastern slopes. This could change rapidly if Banff infestations are not controlled, and we will of course continue monitoring the situation.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. STRANG: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second supplemental question is to the same minister. How does your department know that its control activities are working?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. CARDINAL: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Just very briefly. We are focused in our efforts, of course. Alberta has been fortunate to have experienced only two outbreaks since 1985, and no sustained beetle populations were detected in the province until early 1997, in Banff actually. My department, of course, will develop an emergency process and response to the issue in order to deal with it.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Children's Services Standards and Policies

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There are still many questions that the minister has left unanswered about the death of a teenager in Grande Prairie while in government care. My questions are all to the Minister of Children's Services. Why is it that the minister is taking more than three months to decide whether or not she should call a special case review in the instance of this death?

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member opposite seems to create an impression that it's at the whim of the minister whether or not a special case review is called, and that's not the case. It is absolutely policy that the deputy minister, when the time is appropriate, engage in putting together a recommendation to the minister for the evolution of a special case review. Yes, it happens, and it's a matter of sequence when we've got all of the facts and everything ready to follow through with.

In some cases, Mr. Speaker, we're more expedient than in others. It depends entirely on some of the situations that are going on both within the authority and in the case that's involved. It's no mystery. There will be a special case review that will in fact provide recommendations back through the department as well as address the issues that may emerge as a result of the review of the authority.

MS CARLSON: Well, Mr. Speaker, maybe she can answer this question. Why did they take a child into care like this, who is a security issue and at risk for running away, when they can't provide those facilities? She has told us in this House that she is unable to provide those kinds of secure facilities.

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, there are some issues that relate to particular cases that are confidential in nature, and I will withhold response on any particular details. This is not unlike many of the other situations where tragedies occur, where there are some circumstances which cannot be divulged in the House. Last week we released a report with considerable portions of that report severed. It should be a clear indication under our laws and the protection of information that we do not release all of the details. However, I can assure the hon. member that we continue to work in the best interests of the children.

MS CARLSON: Mr. Speaker, the last report from this office showed that there were no standards. Is that going to be the outcome of this report as well?

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member leads this House in a direction which is totally inappropriate. There are standards. There are standards that deal with private guardianship. There are standards that deal with tragedies that emerge that involve children. In the last-referenced document, which resulted in response to the deaths of the children from Slave Lake, there was an acknowledgment that in the case of private guardianship, it would be worthy of clarification. It did not seem to imply or it should not be taken implicit that in all of those areas – i.e., in private guardianship – we don't have policy and standards and that they are not throughout our ministry and perhaps even in other parts of that particular authority. That authority and that report identified one area, and to gather that information and infer that we do not have standards and policies throughout Children's Services is an absolute injustice to the people that know thoroughly that there are policies in place.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Last week the Premier met with the president of the ATA in his office. It seemed at the time that a degree of agreement was achieved. Yesterday the Premier repeatedly quoted Mr. Booi out of context in order to justify his betrayal of Alberta's teachers. To the Premier: when the Premier agreed to refer the arbitration process to cabinet and to the Tory caucus, did he indicate to Mr. Booi that this process would goose-step over teachers' collective bargaining rights by taking away their right to strike?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, what I conveyed to the two ministers involved and what I conveyed to caucus was an honest portrayal of what was conveyed to me by Mr. Booi. Again I find it very difficult to provide an appropriate and a meaningful answer to a question that had as its prelude such a vicious and unthoughtful prelude.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, I think we're getting somewhere.

Did the Premier tell Mr. Booi that the arbitration board will be legally prevented from approving any contract which would cost the government even a single nickel more than they've already budgeted?

MR. KLEIN: Well, Mr. Speaker, the arbitrator will make the determination. We provide in the budget what we deem as a Legislature to be appropriate for the operation of schools in this province – it's as simple as that – with the local jurisdiction ultimately – and this will be after this arbitration process takes place – to determine how those dollars are to be spent.

MR. MASON: Mr. Speaker, did the Premier tell Alberta's teachers that the process he had in mind would set up the government as judge, jury, and executioner?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, you know, again I don't know what the NDs are striving to do, other than to denigrate really the decorum and the dignity of this Legislature by using such words as callous, pound of flesh, vigilante, goose-step, slavery, fascist, totalitarianism, you name it, and the list goes on and on.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenarry.

Charging Inmates User Fees

MR. CENAICO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is reported that a county in Massachusetts, United States, is going to charge inmates $5 a day for room, board, and three meals a day in county jails. With today's fiscal realities in mind my questions are to the Solicitor General. Will the Solicitor General examine this program to see if something similar could be instituted in Alberta?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MRS. FORSYTH: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to let the Member for Calgary-Buffalo know that officials in my department will revisit the idea. I've been told that we examined it in the past, but due to legal opinions we received at the time, they felt that Alberta did not have the jurisdiction to charge these types of user fees.

However, I'd like to say that I'm interested in what the member is saying and in looking at new programs, and I plan to find out what's going on in the United States. I want to emphasize, though, that Alberta's provincial correctional centres are already the most cost-efficient in the country. We've had provinces visit us. Our offenders are at a cost of about $86 a day, half the cost of the federal institutions and about $40 to $50 a day less than privatized facilities in Ontario. Mr. Speaker, I also want to emphasize that I'm going to be going to Ontario and looking at their privatized facilities.

MR. CENAIKO: Mr. Speaker, in the same county in Massachusetts inmates also currently have to pay for their own haircuts and transportation. Will the Solicitor General commit to looking to see if these can be implemented in Alberta?

MRS. FORSYTH: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to tell the hon. member that offenders in our correctional facilities already pay for their own haircuts. The conditions in our facilities are very spartan. We're not talking about Club Fed here. If offenders want Club Feds, they have to go to the federal institutions. Our facilities are clean but bare. The food is plain. There are no pool tables. There are no colour TVs, just the black-and-white models that one of our members brought in. In fact, I'm now looking at making all of our facilities smoke free.

MR. CENAIKO: My final question, Mr. Speaker, is again to the Solicitor General. What type of work are inmates required to do while in custody in provincial jails, if any?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MRS. FORSYTH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I can tell you that the offenders in our correctional facilities don't lie around all day unless they're sick or they're in court. All sentenced offenders are assigned to work crews. Our young offenders go to mandatory schooling or do various kinds of labour. Last year our inmate work crews provided more than 1 million hours of free community labour worth about $6 million to Albertans. Our offenders cut firewood, clean trails, pick up garbage, all sorts of things. I want to emphasize that our offenders are not paid to do this work.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry, followed by the hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Children's Services Practices Review

MR. BONNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the recent case of the twins who died in Thunder Bay, the Minister of Children's Services said that there would be a review of staff accountability. Clearly, two staff members have already been held accountable and been given the entire burden of blame, but whether the minister herself will take any responsibility is still unclear. My questions are to the Minister of Children's Services. Will the minister make public the review of staff accountability, in particular the review of her own accountability?

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, we have been very accountable in this. We have been very transparent. We do not release the confidential nature of the human resource consultant review. However, in the arbitration process which will follow, there will be some discussion about that. In terms of the recommendations in the special case review that deal with policy, throughout the 15 recommendations there is accountability. Regrettably children died, but we took action. We have been accountable.

MR. BONNER: Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: why are child welfare staff being blamed for failing to follow standards and procedures that aren't even in place?

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, I believe that all the releases and all the comments made by this minister on this issue were relative not to the standards but to the practice issues. The special case review precipitated some review following the human resource and practice issues. They were not policy issues. They were reviewed by two external legal people that were involved, one a human resource specialist. They were not deemed to be practice issues. In the words of Dr. Charles Ferguson you could have a million dollars and you could have all the policies in the world; the lack of sound decision-making relates to neither one.

MR. BONNER: To the same minister, Mr. Speaker: isn't it your job to make sure that proper standards and procedures are already in place?

MS EVANS: Yes.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster, followed by the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Crop Insurance Fund

MR. SNELGROVE: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Alberta crop insurance fund is a fund that's built by contributions from the farmers, from the two levels of government. The fund started in 1994 with around $88 million and went to $408 million. The interest income on that fund last year was approximately $24 million. The 30 percent reduction in premiums cost approximately $23.7 million. Could the Minister of Finance tell us why she felt it necessary to cancel this very successful program which had attracted many farmers to it?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MRS. NELSON: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This is a very important fund that has been built, again, by a triparty agreement between the federal government, the province, and the producers within this province. It's built on an actuarial basis, where you would have a 25-year sound relationship within the fund to build up an asset base. Decisions on an annual basis as to what to do with the income earned from the fund are made either to enhance the fund, the benefits of the fund, or to look at reductions in crop insurance premiums. Those decisions are not made by the Minister of Finance but, rather, are under the jurisdiction of the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development, our Deputy Premier, and I'd ask her to supplement the answer.

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, I dealt with this issue earlier in question period, on the decision to not proceed with the 30 percent reduction in crop insurance premiums this year. In that answer I did indicate that that reduction had been put in place in two crop years, the two past crop years, to offset higher input costs and low commodity prices. As commodity prices have increased, inputs have settled and somewhat reduced. The decision was made not to proceed with the 30 percent reduction in premiums this year. However, as indicated earlier in my response – and I won't go through all of them today in the interests of time – we were able to provide some enhancements to the crop insurance program which had been indicated to us as important by the producers.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. SNELGROVE: Thank you. Could the ministers commit that the interest or the revenue income from this fund would stay in the fund to be used by producers in the future?

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, I can certainly answer that question. All moneys that accrued to that fund are held in that fund and are available to ensure that there is a crop insurance fund available in times of call on that fund. So the fund builds over a period of years, as has been indicated. It is to be actuarially sound over a period of 25 years. Some years – and it can be successive years – there are calls on that fund. So it's important that we have a fund basis that actuaries tell us is the appropriate number to ensure that the insurance fund – it is an insurance fund – is there for producers when they need it.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, the time for question period has left us. However, the hon. Minister of Transportation wishes to respond to a question raised in the House the other day. As per our tradition, should I recognize the hon. Minister of Transportation, then the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry, from whom the questions originated, would also have an opportunity for a supplemental.

The hon. Minister of Transportation.

Land Acquisition Negotiations

MR. STELMACH: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. With respect to the question asked to me by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry on Thursday, March 7, I would like to advise that negotiations for this piece of property, the campground that he had referred to, took place between Transportation officials and officials from the county of Barrhead. This is an important safety project to remove two high-radius S-curves and straighten out a section of highway 18 through the county of Barrhead. These negotiations were carried out by officials within the parameters of governing legislation, regulations, and operating policies of the government. The department gained four acres of land, which will result in the removal of three very unsafe approaches. The county gained three new approaches and reclamation of an oiled approach. Although the county requested 250 metres to be paved on an adjacent local road, we were unable to accommodate this request due to cost. The full settlement, including the four acres of land, two of which were an operating municipal campground, was an agreed-to amount of $10,000.

If the Member for Edmonton-Glengarry has any further questions or wants a look at the plan, we'd certainly be able to invite him to the office and research it further.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, for this opportunity. To the minister: given that the province originally sold the land to the county for $1 and bought the land back for $10,000 plus three paved approaches, is this a fair bargain for the province in this negotiation?

MR. STELMACH: Mr. Speaker, the original transfer of the campground to the county of Barrhead took place back in 1996, with discussions initiating in 1995. That was at a time when the Department of Environment had to significantly reduce some of its operating costs, part of which was to divest themselves of campgrounds that were rather costly to operate. At that time, there was a significant deficit in the operating of this government. As a result, following those difficult decisions that were made in '94, '95, and '96, what has happened is that we have, of course, additional predictability and stability not only in this government but in its operations, which has now encouraged tremendous unprecedented growth to the province. Part of that growth is not only in people, but it's also in the number of vehicles. As a result, today, in 2002, we have more vehicles and highways. Some of these highways that conveyed less traffic certainly than they do today are now coming up with safety concerns, and we must address them and address them as quickly as possible so we ensure the safety of our traveling motoring public.

Day with a Doc Program

MR. CAO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First I want to thank the Calgary regional health authority for having entertained my request for participating in their Day with a Doc program. My thanks also go to the emergency staff at the Foothills hospital for donning me in a white coat and letting me play pretend doctor. The experience was informative and rewarding for me as an MLA, having hands-on experience. This is one of many of CHR's initiatives to share information and seek input from a variety of stakeholders toward ensuring the sustainability of CHR's world-class health care system.

2:30

I spent the whole afternoon in the emergency ward, starting out with a nurse at the triage desk. I felt the dedicated, professional work of the triage nurses in handling a continuous line of incoming patients. I shared the frustration of people waiting for their turn in discomfort and pain. I saw many ambulance staff who brought in patients and waited patiently for the opening of beds. Dr. Gil Curry allowed me to shadow him around from patient to patient. For the whole afternoon we were on our feet, walking from one case to another, and never sat down.

At times I had a chance to talk to patients themselves. Many patients were senior citizens with previous conditions. There was a mother with her newborn infant, a young worker with his hand nailed to a two-by-four wood block, a number of middle-aged patients with heart and lung problems. All in all, I sensed their confidence in our excellent health care system and our dedicated nurses and doctors, who were working tirelessly in an outstanding team spirit.

I am very pleased with the government's commitment to a sustainable health care system available to all Albertans. It is vital that the change process engages our stakeholders and partners in a rational debate through open dialogues and factual information. With our hands-on experiences I have no doubt that Alberta continues to have the best health care system possible.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Ministerial Responsibility

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to talk about the importance of ministerial responsibility in a democracy. One of the pillars of democracy is accountability of the elected officials to the voters. At regular intervals MLAs are required to set their actions before the voters and ask for a mandate to continue. Within our democracy the bureaucracy is responsible for carrying out the policies of the elected officials. By its nature the bureaucracy is supposed to make sure that every person accessing a particular service is treated fairly, impartially, and without prejudice.

The bridge between the democratically elected officials and the bureaucracy is the office of the minister. The minister is responsible for taking the policies of the elected MLAs to her or his department and implementing programs that reflect these decisions. The minister must also answer to the Legislature when programs do not reflect the will of the elected officials and thereby the desires of the voters. The minister can take the credit for a well-run department and must accept responsibility when the desired outcomes are not achieved. Questions about the successes and failures in a department must start with the minister.

Staff in the bureaucracy are, like any employees in the public or private sector, responsible for their actions. They are required to follow operating policies and procedures and perform their duties to the best of their ability. Staff cannot be blamed for the absence of clear formal operating procedures and policies. Staff cannot be blamed for inadequate funding levels. Staff cannot be blamed for a lack of support resources. Staff cannot be blamed for unreasonable workloads. Staff cannot be blamed when ministries are judged first and foremost on their financial bottom line.

The minister must accept responsibility for ensuring that there are clear formal operating procedures and policies. The minister must accept responsibility for funding, support resources, and workloads. A minister must never scapegoat or blame. Nobody is claiming that it's easy to be a minister, but they are paid to do a job, and the Legislature and the voters expect it to be done.

Alan Anderton

MRS. JABLONSKI: Mr. Speaker, I rise to acknowledge the life and work of Alan Anderton of Red Deer, who was chair of the Persons with Developmental Disabilities Provincial Board until his untimely death on March 10, 2002.

Alan served two terms as provincial chair of the PDD board, chair of the Michener Centre Board, and on the family and social services advisory committee that recommended a PDD program like the one we have today. A motivator and champion of the PDD community, Alan once said: I believe we can all make a difference and that making a difference is important. This man certainly made a difference to the PDD community in Alberta. His leadership and vision helped earn this program a reputation as one of the best in Canada and earned Alan the respect and admiration of many. Alan brought extensive knowledge and experience from several sectors – business, local government, and voluntary board work – that served him well as PDD chair.

A resident of Red Deer, he was well known as a man who cared about his community and his neighbours. He was elected three times as alderman and mayor of the district of Mackenzie. He also served as the chair of the regional health authority, hospital board, and on the national hospital accreditation committee. Alan held degrees in economics and commerce and an MBA and was a certified management accountant. He worked in the forestry industry, was a business strategist for a publicly traded satellite communications company, and owned and operated a distribution house in western Canada.

Alan Anderton was an Albertan who made a difference. He will be remembered by people from all walks of life, in particular the PDD recipients and families, who are able to live fuller, more satisfying lives in the community thanks to this pioneer and advocate. On behalf of the Legislature I offer our sincere sympathies to Alan Anderton's wife, Corinne, and their four children.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

Warner Civic Centre

MR. JACOBS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to recognize the people who live in the villages of Warner, Coutts, Milk River, and much of the county of Warner. This is a story of people working together to help themselves. It is a story about thousands of volunteer hours of labour and community fund-raisers and significant financial contributions from many local businesses and members of the community.

This is a story about people working together to renovate the Warner Civic Centre, which was built in 1957 and provided the only ice arena between Warner and Great Falls, Montana. The teams that play in this minor hockey league, consisting of several age groups, come from all over southern Alberta as well as from northern Montana. A couple of years ago some people in the community decided that their ice arena needed to be renovated, enlarged, and improved. They recognized the importance of recreation for their youth. This renovation will guarantee that their kids will have a good hockey facility for years to come.

This is a story, Mr. Speaker, of an effort by people to help the survival of rural Alberta. This story shows that people can work together to help create a brighter future for small rural communities.

On Saturday, March 9, 2002, I had the honour of attending the opening ceremonies to celebrate the completion of this renovation. The people have done a great job. The facility is something they can be proud of. There were hundreds of people in attendance from all over southern Alberta and northern Montana. The efforts of civic leaders and volunteers were recognized. I was able to bring greetings on behalf of Premier Klein and the Hon. Ron Stevens, Minister of Gaming, and presented a plaque commemorating the donation made under CFEP and the community lottery board, which, I'm happy to say, to me was a good use of lotto dollars.

Mr. Speaker, I commend the leaders and people involved in this project for their vision and effort. Thank you.

head: Introduction of Bills

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Finance.

Bill 17
Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2002

MRS. NELSON: Mr. Speaker, I request leave to introduce Bill 17, the Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2002. This being a money bill, Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, having been informed of the contents of this bill, recommends the same to the Assembly.

[Motion carried; Bill 17 read a first time]

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Community Development.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table an official letter of sincerest condolences to Corinne Anderton and her family on the very sudden loss of her husband and our good friend, Mr. Alan Anderton. As our Member for Red Deer-North indicated, Alan was indeed an incredible visionary, a tremendously committed hard worker on behalf of PDD, and a great servant to the public of Alberta. We shall all miss him, and we sympathize deeply with Corinne and her family on this sudden loss of a good friend, Alan.

Thank you.

2:40

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Government Services.

MR. COUTTS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased today to table five copies of the Alberta Real Estate Foundation 2001 annual report. This is a landmark year for the foundation as they celebrate 10 years of service to the real estate industry as well as Albertans.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Learning.

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table the prerequisite number of copies of a letter from Brad Wuetherick, president of the Graduate Students' Association, in support of the student finance and loan amendment act, 2002.

THE SPEAKER: Minister of Learning, it would help, as well, if you would table the document you quoted from earlier this afternoon in the question period.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings today. The first is a letter from Cliff Hansen to the Premier requesting that the Evan-Thomas area be considered for protection. The second is a letter to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development supporting the Chinchaga wilderness as an officially recognized protection area. The third tabling is two letters from David Donahue, who is also in support of conserving wilderness, particularly pointing out that clear-cut logging is destroying our wildlife and wildlife habitation.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table background information on the costs of health care premiums to teachers and the impact that an increase in those premiums may have.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table five copies of some background information on the costs of health care premiums to school boards.

Thank you.

Privilege
Misleading the House

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, yesterday afternoon in the Assembly the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands rose on a purported point of privilege, and the chair advised certain directions that the hon. member might choose to take, including that of following Standing Order 15(2), where written notice would be provided. The chair did receive by 11:25 this morning a letter from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands that he was choosing to proceed with a question of privilege against the Premier.

The chair will now recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Premier's statements made in this Assembly on February 28 in my view misled the Assembly with respect to the government's intentions regarding the teachers' dispute. I would submit that as we were misled, it interfered in a real and appreciative way with how we as the opposition conducted ourselves with respect to the government's potential actions and the legislation.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the clear distinction between what the Premier said on February 28, which I quoted yesterday, and the content of the legislation did not become apparent, obviously, until the legislation was tabled in the House yesterday. So I rose at that time, having quickly perused the legislation and realized that in fact the Premier's statements to the House in connection with that legislation were clearly misleading to us on this side.

Mr. Speaker, the argument will no doubt be made that this is simply a dispute between members as to facts. I would argue that the features of Bill 12, which were presented yesterday, are so grossly at variance with the Premier's statements that no reasonable person could conclude that the legislation was not punitive in nature.

So I would argue on that basis that my privileges and privileges of other members of the House have been violated by statements made by the Premier which were misleading to the Assembly with respect to the content, tone, and nature of the legislation tabled yesterday.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Privilege is about protecting the rights of members. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highland's submission has absolutely nothing to do with protecting the rights of members and absolutely everything to do with him trying to characterize a debate that's going to happen and characterize a piece of legislation in a manner which is quite consistent with the characterizations that he's used in question period today and yesterday. If anything is offensive to this House, those misleading preambles to his question were.

To say that Bill 12, which is going to be debated fully this afternoon in this House and this evening in this House and probably tomorrow in this House, is a punitive piece of legislation is at best an opinion from that hon. member. I wouldn't even characterize it as a dispute of facts. It is simply his characterization, probably not his alone; I would guess that his seatmate may share his opinion. But I would doubt if anyone else in this House would characterize the legislation as punitive, regardless of what they think about its terms. [interjections] Regardless of whether they do – and some of the members opposite say that they might characterize it as punitive – it would be simply that, an opinion. It's not a fact, and it's not even part and parcel or substance of the question of privilege.

The Premier, making his statement, which was a true statement, that this government will not be punitive to teachers, did not mislead the House, and to go one step further, that is not something which is the subject of privilege in any event. Privilege, Mr. Speaker, is a question of

- freedom of speech;
- freedom from arrest in civil actions;
- exemption from jury duty;
- exemption from attendance as a witness.

These are from the House of Commons Procedure and Practice book, which you so kindly gave to House leaders some couple years ago and admonished us to read on Saturday mornings. I think the only contempt here is that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands has not taken your admonition to read the book.

There are questions of privilege when people are obstructed from doing their duty; in other words, if they can't attend or if they're frustrated in doing their duties. And I use that term in the legal sense, not in the sense in which the hon. member is obviously frustrated.

Mr. Speaker, there's clearly no issue of privilege today. The hon. Premier indicated in response to a question on February 28 that as a government we would not be bringing forward punitive legislation. The legislation with respect to teachers was tabled yesterday, and it's not punitive legislation, as much as the hon. member wants to characterize it as such. He can do so in his speech, which he's quite able to do later on today, and I'm sure he'll be giving a speech later on today. It does not in any way impugn his ability to carry on his duties as a member, and it's not a breach of privilege. It's not even a point of order. It demeans the concept of privilege.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, the chair does appreciate the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands advising the chair this morning to give the chair an opportunity to deal with the matters that have been contained in Hansard, and the chair is prepared to rule on this purported question of privilege raised by the Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

As the chair understands it, the member's purported question of privilege is that the Premier deliberately misled the Assembly in connection with comments he made about what would or would not be in Bill 12, the Education Services Settlement Act. The Member for Edmonton-Highlands raised this purported question of privilege yesterday, March 11, following the division on second reading of his Bill 203.

At page 235 in Hansard he indicates that he had just, quote, perused, end quote, Bill 12 and was raising the matter at the first opportunity under Standing Order 15(5). The chair invited the member to provide fuller written notice prior to today's proceedings and to give the notice to the Premier if he was to be the subject of the purported question of privilege, which the member has done.

The thrust of the member's letter, which he elaborated on today in the Assembly, is such that there were deliberately misleading statements giving rise to a prima facie breach of privilege.

First, the chair wants to emphasize that deliberately misleading the House is one of the most serious charges that can be leveled against another member. The authorities are clear that such a charge proceeds like a contempt, which in turn proceeds like a question of privilege. Erskine May, the 22nd edition, at pages 111 and 112, discusses this issue and states:

The Commons may treat the making of a deliberately misleading statement as a contempt. In 1963 the House resolved that in making a personal statement which contained words which he later admitted not to be true, a former Member had been guilty of a grave contempt.

More senior members in the House may recall that the Profumo affair in the United Kingdom is the basis for the reference. I'm glad to see the Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs nodding in agreement.

The chair has also reviewed recent allegations in the Canadian House of Commons on similar charges and found that they were advanced as matters of contempt. As the chair indicated, an allegation of deliberately misleading the House is a very, very serious matter which should not be made lightly or for purely partisan reasons.

In this case the allegation made by the Member for Edmonton-Highlands focuses on a certain subjective interpretation of Bill 12. Such an allegation is at best a disagreement between members and hardly meets the test of a point of order let alone a contempt of the Assembly. Differing interpretations of bills are properly the subject of debate. It should not be necessary for the chair to remind members that it is the Assembly, not the government, that passes the laws of this province and is where the debates on those laws take place.

Accordingly, there is no prima facie question of privilege. As the chair has indicated before, questions of privilege should not be raised lightly. The rights and immunities as well as the responsibilities of a member are matters that should be treated with utmost seriousness and respect.

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, that deals with that matter, but the chair does want to take an opportunity to ask hon. members to please recognize in the discussions and the intercourse that occurs here verbally between hon. members, regardless of whether or not it is a question being raised or an answer being provided, that the usage of certain words does have connotations which may not be what the hon. member using the word might necessarily mean.

Now, the chair doesn't want to replay or relive certain things, but all of us have individual backgrounds and heritage, and some words that may be used in a context by other members may have great offence for certain members of another heritage. If one is not careful about that, one may insult and humiliate and cause unfortunate castigations to another member that the originator of the statements may not want to have done. As an example, if you are a member of Germanic heritage, a Canadian albeit but a member of Germanic heritage, words such as goose-stepping, slavery, enslavement have certain connotations that when used in the year 2002 may cause reflections back to events of another century and another time and may not have been the intended usage of the originator of a comment.

Now, the chair has intervened in the past when some members of this House had raised utterances against other members, including: why don't you go back to where you came from? This is clearly out of order, clearly inappropriate, clearly offensive and not in keeping with the democracy that we have in the province of Alberta at this time.

So I would ask hon. members to be very cautious about the usage of their words. The English language is a very beautiful language, it is a very colourful language, and many words have multiple meanings. Yet the language has so many words that with a little bit of effort one can find a better usage of a word than perhaps we have experienced on several occasions in the past. This is decorum. This is what it must be all about for parliamentarians, and the standard expected of us is a higher standard than would normally be expected in places other than this Assembly.

Second Reading

Bill 12
Education Services Settlement Act

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Learning.

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm standing today to move second reading of Bill 12, the Education Services Settlement Act.

I have moved many bills in this House. I have been in here for nine years, and each and every time I move a bill, I start with: it is with great pleasure that I move this bill. Mr. Speaker, I feel that this bill does not represent that. I feel that this bill represents a breakdown in the collective bargaining that occurred between the school boards and the Alberta Teachers' Association. This is the end point of a process that has occurred over the last six to eight months. This bill will be a onetime bill I hope. I hope that we can go back to the local bargaining process, to the process where school boards sat down with their local teachers and worked out agreements that were satisfactory to both of them.

In putting this bill forward today, as I've indicated in question period on several occasions, it comes about at the request of the Alberta School Boards Association as well as the Alberta Teachers' Association. Mr. Speaker, we are not proud of that. It would have been much better to have the agreements settled by the local people. In saying that, however, this bill is now before the Legislative Assembly, and there are some issues that need to be discussed. I will attempt to deal with them in a very general manner in dealing with the principles of the bill.

First of all, Mr. Speaker, I'll talk about the principle of fairness within the arbitration tribunal that is included in this bill. The Alberta Teachers' Association will nominate a member of that arbitration tribunal, the Alberta School Boards Association will nominate a member of that tribunal, and the government of Alberta will nominate the chairman of that tribunal. If there is a majority amongst these three that agree on a particular settlement or a particular binding arbitration agreement, that majority will rule the day. If there is no majority, meaning if all three have different opinions, then it will be the chair's duty to put forward the collective bargaining agreement that he so wishes.

Mr. Speaker, there are several other issues here, and there are a lot of things that deal with the arbitration process. There are a lot of issues around that. We feel that as much as possible we have taken it from the Labour Relations Code. We have attempted not to add in other things. I will not hesitate to point these out because I feel that they are the issues that were being discussed today in question period as well as with the Alberta Teachers' Association, the Alberta School Boards Association.

The first one, Mr. Speaker, is quite simply the principle that school boards can only pay a settlement that they can afford. The government of Alberta sets policies in this province. It is not the School Boards Association, it is not the Teachers' Association who set the policies of taxation, who set the policies of this government. Therefore, in this legislation is a section that talks specifically about school boards running deficits and saying that any arbitration settlement cannot lead the school boards to run a deficit. This is something that is in keeping with what the citizens of Alberta think, what the citizens of Alberta realize, that running deficits, that taking the money out of the classroom to pay for this is not the way to go.

Mr. Speaker, there are also some other issues. One very important issue is the agreement that we thought we had with the Alberta Teachers' Association that I read to you today and indeed was even on their web site which basically established a commission to investigate teaching and learning conditions. As Minister of Learning I think that's extremely important. It has been 30 years since we had a full-fledged commission to take a look at the learning system. I believe that a lot of the changes that we have made in my term as Minister of Learning need to be evaluated. We need to have the external people come and take a very objective look at what is occurring. I have no problems in doing that because I know that our public school system is the best public school system in the world bar none. That's something that we should be very, very proud of.

Mr. Speaker, in saying that, I'll draw attention to the part of the bill that talks about pupil/teacher ratio, class size, as well as instructional time. These are three very critical issues that need to be discussed, and today, in coming into the Legislature, I was asked about these issues, asked if this bill stripped out these rights from contracts.

Today, as of right now, in the collective agreements there are three collective agreements that deal with instructional time, there are two collective agreements that deal with class size, and there is one collective agreement that deals with pupil/teacher ratio. That's out of around 64 different collective agreements that are around the province. We felt that everyone had to start on the level playing field when we have a very fair and open discussion about what is happening in our children's classrooms, about what is happening in teaching conditions, dealing with the needs that many members in this Assembly have brought up.

Special needs. Absolutely. A very important, important element about special-needs education is integration. What effect does integration have? Should we continue on with integration? Should we not continue on with integration? Mr. Speaker, these are very important issues. As I stated previously – and again there is much wisdom in what the ATA has put on their web site, where they stated: "Neither party can operate in a vacuum and expect complicated problems to be resolved during the heat of regular collective bargaining." There is no problem that is more complicated than that of special-needs education. It is something that I've committed to giving a thorough look at, giving a thorough review of, as well as anything else in the education system. We are coming to a point where we are looking at distance education. We are looking at different ways of ensuring that our children are learning. I fully concur with the element that this commission will be doing probably later on in the summer or fall. So again that was something that was agreed to by the Alberta Teachers' Association and the Premier and subsequently myself.

Mr. Speaker, there are also some issues in here about the right to strike. Well, what is in this bill basically states that the right to strike will be taken away until there is an agreement in place. There have been people that have talked about it saying that this makes it an essential service, that this takes away the right to strike. It is anything but the truth. There are 47 boards that are encompassed in this agreement, possibly less if there are settlements signed before five days after this has passed. There are 47 boards. There are another 17 or so boards that are out there that have agreements in place. Their right to strike has not been taken away. They have legitimate collective bargaining agreements. Yes, they can strike, and yes, they can do whatever they want when their collective bargaining agreement comes up. So this does not take it away. It is a very common practice in binding arbitration – that is what we were asked to do – to limit both parties from either striking or locking out until the binding arbitration process is done. That’s exactly what this bill does. It also puts in a finite time frame, because that is another important principle. There must be a finite time frame to the arbitration, and the finite time frame is August 31 of the year 2002, at which time the arbitrations of the 47 boards must all be complete. Again a very important element.

Another element that is in here is that the contract will be two years. Mr. Speaker, I don’t think anyone in this Assembly or anyone in Alberta would contemplate being back in a position in September of this year where we again would have strikes. There have to be two years at least of labour peace so that we can continue bettering the education system, the learning system. In this bill is a clause stating that the binding collective agreement will be until September of 2003.

Mr. Speaker, we have attempted to narrow the focus of an arbitration settlement to salaries. We have opened up a debate that all Albertans will be having come this fall about the learning system, about conditions in the classroom, about classroom size, about special needs, and quite frankly about anything else that is raised in the learning system, because it is incredibly important. It is something that this government believes is one of the most important elements of any government, and I would daresay that all governments think of that across the country. So we are open to that, because we want to hear if there are better ideas, if there are better ways to do things. We will look at it, and we will be open minded enough to take that, but we cannot bias these talks by putting into the collective agreement issues that will be discussed.

Another point that must be made, Mr. Speaker, because they are questions that have been raised, is quite simply that if the school boards and the Alberta Teachers’ Association locals want to put it in as memorandums of understanding, as letters of understanding, they can quite simply put that in on instructional time. They can put it in on pupil/teacher ratio. They can put it in on class size. They can add it to the agreement. What this legislation is saying is that it cannot be part of the collective agreement until we have had a very important and very critical discussion about the whole learning industry, so to speak.

Mr. Speaker, I feel that, as I stated, in a perfect world I would not be standing here putting this bill forward because we would have labour peace, and we would have had a settlement signed by the two parties that are negotiating it, the school boards and the ATA locals. Unfortunately, through a lot of different events – and no one is completely, one hundred percent innocent in all of this – we have come forward and put this bill in to bring labour peace, to allow our students to stay in the classroom.

Mr. Speaker, just in closing, I want to say one really important thing, and that is something that we all have to think about. Actually, I’ve said more than one, but I will say the most important thing, and that is that the learning system is about students. It is about students first and foremost, and that is the most critical element. That is the element that this side of the House, this government believes in strongly and will do anything for, because the rights of a student to education are paramount.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I do agree with the minister on one thing, and that’s that it’s very unfortunate that this bill is in front of the House. It’s a shame. Shame on the minister and shame on the government for introducing a bill that so viciously attacks a professional group.

They had the opportunity, Mr. Speaker. They had the opportunity, and they let it go by. They could have settled this dispute amicably. The president of the Alberta Teachers’ Association and the Premier met. The grounds for a good settlement that would have returned classrooms in the province to normal were set in place, and that was bypassed. What we have is this kind of a sham bill that pretends to be working in the interests of children and in all reality is a bill designed to crush a professional organization. What’s even more insulting is that the government distorts the teachers’ position and perspective by saying that this is what they wanted in Bill 12. Is that not the ultimate insult, to turn around and say to them, “Yes, we’re only doing this because the teachers wanted it”?

Mr. Speaker, there are a number of principles that underlie Bill 12, not many of them that are very pretty. The bill seems to say that a commitment to study schools absolves the government of the responsibility to be fair, a principle that I think most people would find very, very hard to support. The bill talks about a study, very briefly about a study, and then goes on to take away the rights of teachers and to restrict the kinds of negotiations and bargaining that will go on. It seems to me that it has things backwards. Certainly if the roots of the dispute are class size, if the roots of the dispute are 10 years of chronic underfunding, if the roots of the dispute are the loss of school board authority, their inability to raise resources, if the roots of the dispute are special-needs children being warehoused in classrooms because there are inappropriate resources, and if the roots of the dispute are that the government gave other professional groups double-digit awards, then why weren’t those issues addressed? Why do we put the cart before the horse? Why don’t we have the study and then the resolution? It’s incredible that the bill is presented and pretends to resolve matters in this way.

Another principle that the bill seems to support is that teachers talking to each other is harmful to the system. I think it has to be the first bill that I can remember being in this Legislature – and I’m sure it’s a rare thing in others – that tells individuals what they can talk about and who they can talk to. This is a bill that by definition restricts what teachers can say to each other. [interjections] Look in the definitions. Look under the definition of a strike. What does it say under the definition of a strike? [interjections]

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods does have the floor.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Another principle that it seems to adhere to is that punitive arbitration will somehow or other improve the situation in the schools. We just heard the minister say that this is going to lead to peace and that two years down the road things are going to be better. This bill sows the seeds for labour unrest, for professional unrest for the next decade in the province. The two years are going to pass quickly, and if the calls that we’ve been getting from parents and from teachers are any indication, it’s not a matter that’s going to be dismissed that easily and dismissed with a bill such as Bill 12.

Another principle that the bill seems to support is that local bargaining is a complete failure and that the results of any agreements that are entered into with the teachers have to be tightly controlled and dictated by the government. Every move that the arbitrator and the negotiators make is restricted by this act. They are not allowed to talk about the very things that caused the strike in the first place. They aren’t allowed to talk about class size. They aren’t allowed to talk about special-needs children. They aren’t allowed to talk about needed resources. Those things are all off the table. Mr. Speaker, they didn't have to be ruled out by the arbitration. They didn't have to be enumerated. The arbitrator could have been left free to suggest a strategy by which those kinds of things could have been resolved, and that didn't happen. Instead, we have this putting of the arbitrator in the box and constraining what they can do. The kinds of resources that they can use when they are trying to make agreements have been greatly restricted. A number of boards have situations where there's obviously a need for more resources. The arbitrator won't be able to comment upon that and certainly won't be able to take that into consideration when awards are made.

Unbelievably, the minister thinks that this bill is going to end up resolving the problems, and anything but that is the case, Mr. Speaker.

Going back to local bargaining for just a minute, I heard the president of the Alberta School Boards Association and her concern that local boards be able to settle with their teachers, that they have the freedom to work out agreements with their teachers. Well, it seems to me that both the Alberta Teachers' Association and the Alberta School Boards Association have lost that ability and that this has usurped their authority in terms of any kind of negotiations, any kind of settlement that they could come to locally. We are truly now into provincial bargaining, and any hope that they might return to the days when local agreements were made I think has vanished with Bill 12. Again the tragedy is that it could have been avoided, Mr. Speaker. We didn't need it. We didn't need Bill 12. Every opportunity was there for the situation to have been worked out. The kind of poisoning of the atmosphere in schools is going to ultimately not be in the best interests of children and students, and it's going to result in working conditions and in school situations where young people thinking of going into the profession are not going to want to join. It's going to make those teachers in the profession who can leave and who are ready to leave make that decision to get out much faster than they would otherwise have done.

A number of principles, Mr. Speaker, in Bill 12, all of them bad. The minister had the audacity to mention the word "fairness," that somehow or other this was a fair process. I can't quite understand how, having heard what he's heard in this Legislature since it resumed, having heard what he's heard from the Teachers' Association and the Alberta School Boards Association, he could possibly have believed that fairness is an underlying principle of this bill.

The other principles that are there, again, I think are really very questionable, and it's a sad day for the province, Mr. Speaker. It's a failure of the government to do the right thing, and it's particularly a failure of the minister who had the chance, who had every chance to make things better and failed to take advantage of it.

I think that with those comments, Mr. Speaker, I'll conclude. This is a seriously flawed process. It's an astounding piece of legislation, and when the history of the province and this government is written, it'll take its place alongside Bill 11. Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

REV. ABBOTT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There are few things more essential to our success than education. Education gives us the power to improve ourselves, to reach our goals, and to fully participate in our communities. It benefits us as individuals and as a society.

In Alberta we understand the value of education, and we understand the value of our teachers. I still remember my first grade teacher, Mrs. Eldridge. I loved her, Mr. Speaker, and I am truly thankful to those great teachers who now teach my kids in Drayton Valley. Teachers are the cornerstones of our education system. We could provide students with the best books, the newest technology, and the greatest facilities. We could give them all of this, and it wouldn't make any difference without a good teacher. Teachers make all the difference when it comes to learning. It is absolutely vital that we keep them in Alberta's classrooms.

Mr. Speaker, it is time to settle the disputes about salaries and benefits and ensure that Alberta's teachers are able to do their important work with children. This bill compares apples to apples as we look at teachers' salaries across the country. This bill ensures that the settlements are sustainable and affordable, and it calls for teachers to stay on the job while doing so.

Now, I believe in democracy more than anybody, Mr. Speaker. Last year when I sponsored the private members' bill called the Citizens' Initiative Act, I declared my absolute commitment to the one person, one vote cornerstone principle of democracy. I know that teachers have a right to strike if they so choose via the democratic process, and that happened. The teachers walked off the job to bring attention to the issues, and those very issues will be addressed.

This bill does not permanently remove the strike option nor does it declare teachers an essential service. It says that teachers cannot strike nor can boards lock out during the arbitration process, which is common practice in arbitration. Bill 12 will keep teachers in the classroom, it will resolve their pressing issues around salaries and benefits, and it will allow us to then take proper time to address teachers' other concerns in a thoughtful and constructive manner. As a former school board trustee I also know how important it is to review the education system in a comprehensive manner, and we will do that, Mr. Speaker. This bill says such in the preamble.

We have a great education system, and our teachers are a huge part of that. We need to move forward together. This bill does that, and therefore I am pleased to support it, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2) kicks in. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to ask the hon. member if the provision of the bill which provides that no school board may run a deficit in order to make a settlement and the arbitration board cannot so order means that teachers are going to get anything more than the 4 and 2 percent that's already budgeted by the province.

REV. ABBOTT: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think that would be a question more appropriately put to the arbitrator. However, I do know that the taxpayers of Alberta are very happy to see that provision in the bill.

THE SPEAKER: Additional questions?

Then, hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, should I recognize you now for participation at second reading?

MR. MASON: That's suitable, Mr. Speaker. I'd be glad to speak now. I would be pleased to give my views on Bill 12 today. I begin by noting that the minister indicated that he gets no pleasure out of introducing this bill, and believe me, the opposition also gets no pleasure out of this bill. It's quite appropriate the minister ought not to get pleasure out of introducing this bill, because this bill is perhaps the worst piece of legislation to come before this House since before Bill 11 was introduced a couple of years ago. The minister also indicated – and I noted this with interest – that every party has some responsibility in bringing about the breakdown that has occurred that's given rise to this bill.

So what is the government's responsibility in that, Mr. Speaker?

Well, the minister didn't say nor has the Premier or the minister indicated any assumption of responsibility for this situation in their response to any of the questions put to them during question period or at any other time. It's fine for the minister to say in a very offhand and generalized way that the government bears some part of the responsibility – that's clearly what I infer from his statement – but he doesn't take the responsibility to take the responsibility, and that, I think, is some of the problem.

Let's go back to the budget a year ago, when for the first time the government included line items for wages only with respect to teachers. This was the first time it has ever been done. I hope and pray it's the last time it will ever be done, but the Premier has consistently argued that that was a guaranteed raise for teachers. In fact, the opposite is the case, Mr. Speaker. It was a ceiling, a cap, and a clear indication to boards that if they provided more money than the 4 and 2 percent, it must come at the expense of classroom conditions.

Now, the teachers have been very, very consistent and I think quite principled on the point that they do not want their wages and working conditions to come at the expense of the children in the classroom, yet the very situation that was created by the government set the stage for the entire dispute that has evolved and emerged subsequently, and that was the genesis of it. That is where this whole problem began, because the government said: this is how much school boards have to pay an increase. Of course, that amount was very, very substantially below other settlements that the government has agreed to – for example, their settlements with nurses, their settlements with doctors, their settlements with provincial employees – and need I say, Mr. speaker, regardless of their settlement for themselves.

So that created the seeds of the present conflict, and the government proceeded to water those seeds and encouraged them to grow and fertilized them. There was plenty of fertilizer applied to those seeds, and the discontent grew. We then had a situation where the Minister of Learning was constantly getting into verbal battles and jousting with the ATA, and there were antagonistic remarks made not only by the minister, but from across the ocean in Japan the Premier piped up about how good Alberta teachers had it relative to teachers in that country. You talk about comparing apples to oranges. Well, there's a very, very real difference.

Mr. Speaker, things continued apace, and the government got itself involved very directly, starting with that budget, between the school boards and the teachers. Now we hear in the House today that the government doesn't want to be involved between the school boards and the teachers and they think that the school boards should handle the whole issue.

To prove their point, instead of agreeing to an arbitration, which would put all of the issues on the table and which would be an unfettered arbitration in which the arbitration board could take into account the actual financial conditions of teachers and comparable wages and so on, there's an artificial condition that's placed on there in this bill, and that is the one which requires the arbitration board to not award any settlement which might have the effect of placing a local school board in a deficit position.

Now, what is that other than the government simply saying in legislation that they will not contribute one more nickel than they've already budgeted towards this teacher settlement? They're washing their hands of it, Mr. Speaker. They're saying: no; if the school board doesn't have the money, you can't give them a wage increase. When has that ever been a condition for arbitration, Mr. Speaker? When has that ever been a condition, that the school board doesn't have the money even though the province could supply the money and has saved $50 million on the strike so far and has a massive tax decrease for corporations coming up in this budget? Yet the arbitrator is in no position to award a settlement if the school board doesn't have the money, but the school boards don't have the money. The province has the money.

Therefore, what the government has done is indirectly imposed its wage settlement on the teachers through this so-called arbitration process. What it's really saying is: you get 4 and 2, like we said from the very beginning. You can't give more because the school boards don't have it, and if the province isn't going to put any more money into the settlement, then it's 4 and 2 because that's what the government budgeted.

We find this to be a deeply offensive bill. I want to deal with the language that has been addressed by yourself, Mr. Speaker, and by members opposite. We believe that this bill is authoritarian in nature. We believe that it is reactionary in content, and when we use words as you have described, it is not with any national connotation, but it is with a political connotation. The sense that governments have overridden the rights of their citizens in the past is an important lesson that we mustn't forget, and we must be able to recall some of the political history that's taken place so that we are not condemned to repeat the mistakes of others. Certainly if those comments were taken in any way as implying a national comment, then that was not intended, and I would be very sorry if anyone took offence because of that. We're talking about the politics of this, Mr. Speaker. That's the issue.

3:30

The government is using its majority to impose a settlement on the teachers. It is not allowing them to strike. It is stacking the deck in terms of the composition of these arbitration boards. Normally, Mr. Speaker, an arbitration board consists of one person representing the employees, one representing the employer, and they jointly agree on a third person, who is neutral, in order to chair it. But the way the government has structured this, there's one from the school boards, one from the government, and one from the teachers. So automatically the deck is stacked 2 to 1 against the teachers. They don't have a chance. Furthermore, if the minister doesn't like how their representative is performing, he has the authority under this bill to yank that person off the arbitration board so that it can get on with the business of delivering the 4 and 2 settlement that the government has wanted all along for teachers. It's taking away teachers' right to strike into the bargain.

Mr. Speaker, we view this particular bill with amazement, with great concern. We believe that it is an affront to the democratic traditions of the people of Alberta. We believe that this bill takes away rights, imposes conditions, and forces people to work for a fixed amount, whether they want to or not. Their only opportunity is to resign.

AN HON. MEMBER: Slave wages.

MR. MASON: The hon. member brings up the words "slave wages." Mr. Speaker, slavery is a term which means that people are required to work not of their free will and for whatever remuneration the employer cares to provide. They don't have a free choice. They can't bargain. They have to take the job. They have to work there. The only exception to that here, Mr. Speaker, is that the people have the right, I suppose, to quit.

I would remind members opposite that when the Nova Scotia government last fall attempted a similar move with respect to that province's nurses, the nurses resigned en masse. That put the government right behind the eight ball. The government quickly realized its mistake and corrected the situation. But it puts the government clearly behind the eight ball in the contradiction that they're creating, because if the teachers or the nurses or any other employees won't work for what the government has to offer, then the government has a big problem.

The Minister of Learning indicated that this bill will bring labour peace for two years. Mr. Speaker, that is nonsense. You cannot order people to work under conditions and for wages that you set, take away their basic rights, and expect that you can call that peace. It's not peace. It's an enforced settlement, and there will not be peace. There will be, I'm convinced, ongoing dissent, ongoing disruptions, and I think that the government is living in a fool's paradise if it believes that it can achieve labour peace through this particular piece of legislation.

I want to deal also a little bit with the role that the government played once the strike had got under way. The government waited. We heard the minister say that he has to wait a certain number of days before he can make a case that there's actually an emergency and go to court and order the teachers back, so he waited. But the strike started in Edmonton and in other places before it started in Calgary and other places, so we had the ridiculous situation of the government going before the courts and arguing that an emergency had occurred in Edmonton because the teachers had been out for three weeks but that an emergency also existed in Calgary, where the teachers had only been out for a few days. Again the incompetence, the arrogance, and the lack of any conception of what it's like to collectively bargain were apparent, and the judge did what in my view was exactly the right thing. He threw the government's case out on its ear. What happened then, Mr. Speaker? The government had for a second time created a huge mess in this whole dispute and antagonized things even further. The government lawyers were virtually laughed out of court.

Then what did the teachers do? They said: "We have the right to go back on strike. The court has upheld our right, but we're not going to do it. We're not going to do it." Instead, they wanted to talk to the government and see if there wasn't some basis for an agreement that could be reached, and that was a good move. It seemed at first that the Premier was receptive to that move by the teachers. It seemed that we might be on the way to solving something and have some real labour peace. The teachers did not go back out. They behaved very responsibly. They sacrificed their own personal and immediate interests in favour of achieving a workable long-term solution, and they met with the Premier.

What happened then? Well, the Premier indicated that there would be an arbitration process, that the arbitration process would be along the lines that had been envisaged, but the bill is completely different, Mr. Speaker, and I think that it is a travesty and a tragedy.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2) kicks in.

The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul, followed by the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar and the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MR. DANYLUK: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. To the hon. member of the third party: in your opinion, if the 4 and 2 guaranteed increase was a cap on salaries, then do you feel that the use of the additional 3 and a half percent put to the instruction block takes money out of the classroom if it is used for teachers' salaries?

MR. MASON: Yes.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

REV. ABBOTT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In light of the recent ruling that you just made regarding respecting the rules and traditions of this House, how does the Member for Edmonton-Highlands justify citing such nonsense like the Premier's trip to Japan or references to slavery in a speech that's supposed to be about the principles of the bill.

MR. MASON: I'd be pleased to answer that one, Mr. Speaker. I cited the Premier's speech in Japan because I thought it was extremely inappropriate for him to intervene from halfway around the world by comparing Alberta's teachers to teachers in Japan. It was completely inappropriate.

In terms of slavery, I think I explained very carefully in my speech, Mr. Speaker, that the imposition of labour that is not voluntary under terms and conditions set by the employer, or the government in this case, is in our view a form of slavery. We used the term in its political sense and advisedly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wonder if the member could expand on how he believes the government has mismanaged this total process.

MR. MASON: Well, thank you, hon. member. I would be pleased to do that, because I wanted to come to the question of the teachers. The teachers met with the Premier and thought that they had an understanding whereby an arbitration process much broader than the one contained in this legislation would be used. Of course, they found out just on the same day as the bill was introduced that in fact there are a number of very, very rigorous constraints on the arbitration board and that they can't force the boards into a deficit position, which gets the government off the hook completely for contributing any further money, and furthermore that classroom conditions would be excluded from the arbitration, which they would not have been had it gone to arbitration in the normal process.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader, under this provision.

3:40

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the member has indicated that he believes that anything above 4 percent would have to come from the 3 and a half percent instructional block and therefore would be taking money from the classrooms, is the hon. member accusing teachers of having taken money from the classrooms in every other year that they've bargained since time started? Because there was only a per capita grant given before.

MR. MASON: No, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, would there be additional questions? We still have time under this provision.

MR. CAO: Well, I would like to ask the hon. member regarding his previous statement, when he was asked whether taking 3 and a half percent out of the classroom is for the teachers. To the first question he said yes. Then in his next answer he said no. So can you explain which one?

MR. MASON: Yes. They're different questions, Mr. Speaker. Clearly, in the context of the government putting line items in place for teachers' salaries, the answer is that it should not come at the expense of the other money because the government has made it clear to school boards that that money won't be replaced. Previously the whole system was quite different. The government would give a block. The negotiations would take place, and if there was a shortage in one year because of a settlement, the government would make it up in the next year. In the past even Conservative governments were considerably more generous than this one.

THE SPEAKER: Additional? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I would like to ask the member if he could tell us what he thinks the government should have done.

MR. MASON: Mr. Speaker, I would begin by not including it as a line item in the budget, letting the local boards settle the dispute, and if there are shortfalls, then cancel the planned cut to corporate income tax and pay the boards the money they need to improve and resolve the dispute and provide good education to students in Alberta.

THE SPEAKER: The time has now left us in this particular provision.

I will now recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MR. LUKASZUK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I find it very difficult to not comment on some of the statements made by the previous speaker, particularly those that pertain to comparing this government and the members of this Legislature to other countries and other political parties of the past or present that can be described as totalitarian and promoting slavery.

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

First of all, Mr. Speaker, all it does is show that the hon. member has a gross lack of insight into what it is that he professes. Second of all, I find that to be a personal affront and perhaps even an insult to many Albertans who indeed come from jurisdictions where such practices take place.

MS CARLSON: A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: On a point of order, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Point of Order Allegations against Members

MS CARLSON: Mr. Speaker, I rise under 23(h), (i), and (j). We have just this afternoon received a ruling from yourself talking about the wise use of words and making allegations against other members. I do believe that that is exactly what this member then continued to do in his opening comments.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm hoping that you will not find a point of order there, because I listened carefully to what the Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs said in his opening, and I think his reference was simply to say that there was a ruling made earlier in this House with respect to not using certain types of words or phrases in this House that might connote some disrespect or drum up ill feelings on the part of those who perhaps lived through a particular period of history. We all know that Alberta is comprised of people from many parts of the world, and for some those words that the Speaker referred to earlier in his clarification would indeed be offensive and would potentially create a lot of hardship and heartache. I don't believe that the hon. member referred to those words by name. I think he referred to them in a generic sense, and perhaps it might even have been based on some of his own personal experiences in his own family. From that standpoint I'm hoping you will not find it to be a point of order.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona on the point of order.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to remind the House that this afternoon the Speaker made a very important and interesting observation with respect to the use of words: how they get heard, how they get interpreted, and how attribution of those meanings to particular persons can breach the order of the House.

Now, I just want to draw the attention of the House to the word "totalitarianism." Totalitarianism at one time was associated with Stalinism, with Maoism, with Hitler's fascism. Since when can the use of the word "totalitarianism" become offensive to people coming from these countries? In fact, people came here to an island of freedom, escaping totalitarianism. I don't understand.

The point is this, Mr. Speaker, that this impugns the use of words that are standardized – everyone understands what they mean – and people in this country have fought, given their lives against totalitarianism, against fascism. To say that using this word would be offensive I think is simply not appropriate, and I'll ask the member to take his word back and go on with his speech.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford on the point of order.

MR. McCLELLAND: Yes. Mr. Speaker, this clearly is debate. This is not a point of order.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs on the point of order.

MR. LUKASZUK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My comments were clearly directed at comments made earlier by the previous speaker. However, they were not intended to insult in any way or manner any member of this Assembly and particularly the member in question. If they have offended any member, I do indeed withdraw my statement.

Thank you.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: I hope that resolves the matter. Thank you.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs to proceed with the debate.

Debate Continued

MR. LUKASZUK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On the actual bill in question I rise today not only as a member of this Assembly but also as an educator and as a person who indeed holds teachers in very high esteem. I'm sure that every member in this House can think of at least one teacher that has in some profound way changed the course of that member's life. I particularly can think of my grade 12 or 11 high school English teacher, Mrs. Margaret Hogan, who indeed has contributed to my completing university and perhaps even ending up here among the hon. members of this Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, there has been a lot said about Bill 12 by members of the opposite parties and perhaps even by the media that is not in this bill, but very little has been said about what actually is in this particular piece of legislation. Albertans indeed value education and the education system in this province and want to have a choice in its future. Students want to receive the best education possible, and parents want to see their children succeed. Those priorities are reflected in this bill, and I believe that they're shared among all of the members of this particular Assembly. As government we're here to support students and parents in reaching these goals. We are committed to our students. Their learning is one of our government's top priorities, and we are unwilling to compromise this.

The labour dispute in school jurisdictions, Mr. Speaker, has put education on the front pages, making this the right time to take a step back and take a good look at the bigger picture. Bill 12, the Education Services Settlement Act, puts the wheels in motion for a broad review of Alberta's education system, and this government has undertaken to review Alberta's education system. Over the next 18 months Albertans are going to have the opportunity to participate in dialogue about our system and directions for its future, and this may be a marvelous forum for the members of the opposition to actually produce some constructive criticism for a change.

Our system is already among the best in the world. We have a lot to work with and a great foundation to build on. Of course, before we get around to planning for the future, there are some very immediate issues we need to resolve right now. The Education Services Settlement Act will bring out resolutions to the ongoing labour dispute between teachers and school boards. Mr. Speaker, labour dispute between teachers and school boards: these disputes have gone on long enough. They can keep us from moving our system forward and can place students' learning in a precarious position. The hon. Premier has met with the Alberta Teachers' Association and the Alberta School Boards Association. They did agree that at this point binding arbitration is the best option for everyone involved, especially students. The arbitration process the government has established will protect students from further strikes or lockouts, and it will keep them protected for the full two-year term of the arbitrated settlement.

This is not anything new, Mr. Speaker. The binding arbitration process generally rules out strikes or a lockout while the process is under way, and then once contracts are in place, they are binding, making any job action illegal. This is not a loss or any threat to democracy. It is a standard process. The union and the school boards would have or should have known the terms going into this process. The tribunal will consider the immediate issues related to teachers' salaries and benefits. It will take into account local economic conditions and school boards' financial situations, and the tribunal's decision will be binding upon all parties. This is a fair and reasonable process. It will move us past the immediate issue of teachers' salaries and benefits and allow us to engage in a far more constructive discussion about our system and policy directions, like those that impact the classrooms.

Mr. Speaker, this is an important discussion. We need to approach it openly, with collaboration, and we need to take the time to do it right. It's a universal truth that keeping a sense of perspective in the middle of a disagreement is difficult. The issue can seem insurmountable, and the distance between two sides can seem a light-year away. The ATA's own position on this, as reflected in the position paper on their web site, is that impending changes in education point out the need for teacher-board cooperation. Neither party can operate in a vacuum and expect complicated problems to be resolved during the heat of regular collective bargaining . . . Teachers can implement educational policies more effectively when they have helped to formulate them.

I hope that the ATA will read this legislation and take the opportunity to participate in the long-term review of education policy which is forthcoming, Mr. Speaker. As a government we are absolutely committed to keeping our system focused on students first. Bill 12 lives up to that commitment. My hope is that teachers and school boards across the province also put the interests of students first and work together towards a settlement.

Foremost as well, Mr. Speaker, my hope is that the parties in the opposition will also put the interests of the teachers as their priority and not attempt to score political points on an issue as sensitive as this.

Thank you.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Hon. members, any questions or comments? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to ask the Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs what talking about Mrs. Margaret Hogan has to do with the principles of Bill 12, which is what debate is supposed to be at second reading, when Bill 12 is a strike-breaking, contract-stripping settlement act?

MR. LUKASZUK: First of all, Mr. Speaker, there is nothing strike breaking in this particular piece of legislation. Let the record show that. However, my mentioning of a previous teacher simply shows this government's and my personal respect for the profession of teaching, and that is what exactly is reflected in this particular piece of legislation.

MR. MASON: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the hon. member: when he asks the opposition to put the interests of teachers ahead of political advantage, just to paraphrase, how does he feel that the government is putting the interests of teachers first, ahead of their political advantage?

MR. LUKASZUK: Mr. Speaker, this member obviously was not listening again to what was being said. I clearly said that we should be putting the interests of students ahead of anybody else and not teachers. This member purports that teachers are more important in the system than students.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmor.

REV. ABBOTT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was happy to hear the member's speech. He talked about himself as a former educator, and he also commented on the excellent education system that we have here in Alberta. Perhaps he could just expand on that a little bit, about why he feels that we have such an excellent education system in Alberta now.

MR. LUKASZUK: Thank you for that question. Mr. Speaker, I have the unusual privilege of being able to compare Alberta education to systems of learning in other countries, and I find it to be superior and second to none. However, is there room for improvement? Yes, there always is. I think this government and all the members of this Chamber are dedicated to continuously improving the system.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie on a question or comment.

MS CARLSON: Yes, Mr. Speaker. In response to my earlier question the Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs said that this was not a strike-breaking bill, but my question to him is that I'm wondering if he forgot to read one of the key highlights of the bill, which takes away the teachers' right to strike until August 2003.

MR. LUKASZUK: Mr. Speaker, I would be surprised that a well-seasoned member of this Legislature would be reading legislation of this type for the very first time. Every time there is binding arbitration, there are limits on strike during the arbitration and then during the settled agreement.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands on a question or comment.

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to just indicate to the hon. member, first of all, that he might want to take a look at the Hansard account of his last sentence tomorrow, that maybe he misspoke himself and he meant to say: the students.

The question I have for the hon. member, then, is how students' interests are protected when teachers are so clearly unhappy with the legislation and how the labour climate is going to be affected, in his view, over the next few years by this legislation.

MR. LUKASZUK: Mr. Speaker, I firmly believe that the best place for students is in the classroom, and that's what this government has been striving to do. I also believe that teachers, being professionals, will be able to put their personal feelings aside and continue to deliver the best education possible.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Debate to resume. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am happy to have an opportunity to debate Bill 12, Education Services Settlement Act. I'm not happy to agree with the content of the bill nor with the process by which we have seen motions come forward in this Assembly, where this particular piece of legislation can be rammed through and debate, in fact, stalled. We have a bill here that takes away people's right to bargain. At the same time that the bill is introduced, we have the Government House Leader also taking away the right to debate if he doesn't like the length of time it takes or the essence of the content of the debate.

So this is a very lead-footed treatment of a bill that shouldn't really be required at this particular point in time. In principle I am completely opposed to the bill.

AN HON. MEMBER: It might insult speeders.

MS CARLSON: Well, that's true; it could insult speeders. Maybe I'll have to think about that and rephrase it. I'm sure one of these honourable gentlemen in here will be coming up with a question of clarification on that during my five minutes. I look forward to that.

What we have is the very first piece of substantive legislation come through this House that is going to be rammed down the throats of Albertans whether they like it or not in record speed because of the legislative processes that this government has also put into place in recent days.

When we take a look at the object of this bill – and perhaps that's what the former speaker didn't do, because he seemed to miss the boat on exactly what the intent of the legislation is. So I'll lay it out carefully, and perhaps he can respond later on in questions. What it does is set out to force teachers to stay in the classroom for the next 18 months. That is strike-breaking by anybody's definition or terminology, Mr. Speaker. It is also, in fact, a process that is intended to break the kind of collective bargaining processes that we have seen come forward in past years.

The object of it is also to have them working under contracts that make no mention of classroom conditions, clearly, from everything we heard, a contradiction of what the Premier committed to when he talked to people from the ATA: put everything on the table for arbitration and suddenly changes his mind and claws back those issues that he doesn't agree with or doesn't want addressed at this particular time.

It's designed so that the government doesn't have to spend any extra money, because school boards cannot incur deficits as set out in this particular arbitration process. Do we want the government to spend money willy-nilly as they would say we do? That's absolutely not true. Mr. Speaker, we have a budget of over $21 billion in this province for this past year, and this government can't make it work. What is wrong with their management processes? It isn't a matter of singling out individual groups and saying that they can't have any money. In fact, this government doesn't know how to manage, and they need to learn how to do that. They need to be able to put in frameworks where they can manage that money. Small countries run on less than $21 billion a year. People with much greater populations than ours run on less than those kinds of dollars. This government just can't get it right and hasn't been able to get it right for the past decade, longer than the past decade in fact.

What we see in terms of background on this legislation is that we've got 48 different public and separate boards that have no contracts for the past year and for the upcoming year. This act applies to 47 of those school boards and the 48th, Elk Island, whose school board has not ratified the proposed contract, so they can become part of this arbitration process if the school wants to. We see this kind of interference coming forward right after we've seen what has been the largest teachers' strike in Alberta's history. Why a strike? Because we saw government interference at all levels in the beginning of the processes, when they should have just backed out and let the boards do their jobs. But that's not the way this government likes to do business. So what we have is a very punitive kind of bill.

It was interesting, Mr. Speaker, that when we earlier this afternoon heard the Member for Edmonton-Highlands bring forward a point of privilege, the discussion of punitive measures was hotly debated. The Member for Edmonton-Highlands stated what the Premier had said; the Government House Leader said not. I would like to agree with the Member for Edmonton-Highlands in stating that the government's comments made by the Premier were in fact punitive in nature. To back that up, I want to back us up into question period for just a minute. The Government House Leader said that there was nothing punitive about what the Premier said, yet today in question period the Premier said that teachers couldn't have the money assigned to them because they had gone out on strike.

Let's just set the stage for a moment on this particular issue if we could. I would refer all hon. members to the Oxford Dictionary, 10th edition, and the definition of "punitive," which says: inflicting or intended as punishment. Then I go to the Premier's comments today in response to a money question, and this is very important in terms of the principles of why this bill is good or bad, should be or shouldn't be supported, because what we have here is, in fact, a punitive bill. The Premier, in response to a question from our leader, who wanted to know why the Premier wouldn't make the money that they had saved through the strike available to school boards – now, if we think about this, this money had already been allocated to school boards in this province to be paid out at set times during the year. That money was already budgeted for salaries of some kind. Be they teachers or aides, salaries was the allocation.

Now the teachers go out on strike. There are some cost savings there in this portion of the budget year, but the Premier says that instead of allowing that money to stay within the education budget, they are going to claw it back into the general revenue fund and use it elsewhere. So our leader asks why he doesn't make it available to education. The Premier clearly states, "Mr. Speaker, this government did not go out on strike." So, Mr. Speaker, I say to you that if that is not a punitive measure having been taken on behalf of this government, then the definition as explained to us in the Oxford Dictionary cannot be accurate.

I challenge what the Government House Leader said earlier in his response to the point of privilege here, because what we have seen by this government time and time again, particularly when it comes to dealing with teachers, is very punitive indeed. I think there can be no questioning that, and I am surprised that he would try to defend that.

MR. HANCOCK: Of course there could be questioning of that.

MS CARLSON: Well, if that's what you want to put on the record, then you get to ask me a question in a few moments, and that will be interesting to see. They take away the right to strike; they take away the money. What's left? [interjections]

Well, it is my opinion, there's no doubt, and I am certainly entitled to give that opinion in this Legislature and to speak on behalf of the teachers, many of whom I have had lengthy discussions with for many months now, many months prior to the negotiations actually starting, because the teachers in this province were a little wary of this government and the direction that they would go in, and they were right to have those kinds of concerns, Mr. Speaker. We've certainly seen them played out in all of this government's actions.

Late, late tonight, I am expecting, when we finally get to committee on this bill, Mr. Speaker, I will be discussing some of the points of the many people who have sent me letters, a few inches of them here – and these are the ones that I haven't tabled so far. I'll be reviewing those in committee, which I expect will happen quite a bit later this evening, not on the second day of debate, as is the normal course of action for the processes of debate policies in this government. This government wants to do all of these particular stages of the bill – and I know you're going to say that committee isn't a stage, but generally speaking it's been the practice of this House to have second reading on one day, give us an opportunity to go out and talk to the stakeholders and find out what their responses and feedback are, and then come back at another time, not even usually the next day, to deal with the bill in committee but, generally speaking, sometime in the future, so that this government can attempt to live up to its statements of being open and accountable.

You can't be open and you can't be accountable when you don't let the people of Alberta have their say on legislation and when we ram through stages of a bill like this has been . . . [interjections] Well, I see that there are a few members that don't like what I'm saying, and I eagerly anticipate their entering into debate on this particular bill. It would be quite outstanding to see that happen, but I don't hold my breath on that particular topic because it hasn't generally happened that we see many government members enter into debate. Certainly we have seen one teacher put his comments on the record, and I would expect that we would hear from every single former teacher in this Assembly on this particular bill. At the very least they owe their profession the knowledge of how they stand on the bill and why they stand the way they do. At the very least they would have a professional courtesy to their colleagues to do that. So we would expect them to all get up and put their comments on the record.

In the few moments that I have left to speak on this particular bill, I would like to address one particular aspect of it that I find quite offensive in principle, and then later I will come back to this in some more detail. Mr. Speaker, I would refer you to page 3 of the bill, where we talk about interpretation. Particularly what I am concerned about is 1(1)(f), where it talks about the definitions of strike. This is in fact an impossible situation for people to work by and sets an interesting precedent for the government's own behaviour in other departments and other areas, which we will be pursuing in the future.

If we take a look at that particular section, it says:

(f) "strike" includes

(i) a cessation of work.

Well, they can't do that, of course, with the legislation we see here.

(ii) a refusal to work or to continue to work by 2 or more employees acting in combination or in concert or in accordance with a common understanding.

So exactly what does that mean in layman's language? It looks like the Government House Leader may have had a hand in helping to draft the legalese in this. What I see is that what we've got here is, as an example, a principal who instructs a teacher to perhaps supervise a lunchroom. Then in accordance with this, can that teacher go to a teacher colleague and discuss whether or not that person wants to do the supervision or whether or not they're not going to do it? In fact, they can't do that according to this legislation. If you take a look at this, it says, "A refusal to work or to continue to work by 2 or more employees acting in combination or in concert or in accordance with a common understanding." In fact, according to this particular piece of legislation, those two employees can't even talk to each other about what the issues are. [interjections]

Well, if you don't think it says that, then stand up and defend the legislation, because my interpretation is that that's exactly what it says.

We go on, and what does it say there, Mr. Speaker? [interjection] No. You see, that's the problem. That's a very interesting comment by the minister of health, who also happens to be a lawyer. They draft this legislation in the kind of language that's very hard for people to understand, and that is exactly one of the reasons why we want to be able to take this legislation out to stakeholders and give them time to have it reviewed and give them time to have it interpreted in terms that laypeople can understand. But not this government. They say, "No, no, no, no" and then ram it down everybody's throats. We have seen that time and time again with this government in different kinds of legislation that they've brought in here.

Let's talk about the notwithstanding clause. That was a perfect example. I saw every single lawyer on the front bench come in that day and say: there's absolutely nothing wrong with this legislation; we have reviewed it; it's great legislation. We send it out to the public, get it back in, and guess what? They were wrong.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar on a point of order.

Point of Order Relevance

REV. ABBOTT: Point of order, Mr. Speaker. Beauchesne's 459, relevance. She's speaking about something totally different than Bill 12 here.

MS CARLSON: On the point of order, Mr. Speaker, he should have been listening to the debate. In fact, if we take a look at any of the relevance references that we would go to, being Beauchesne's or Erskine May, you will find that there is clear definition on relevance, and in fact it isn't easy to define. Erskine May clearly points out that it can often be a long and winding trail, taking some time to get to the relevance of the issue, which is in fact a particular tactic that the Speaker himself employed when he was a member of this Legislature.

In fact, I got to my point quite quickly in pointing out how this government has misinterpreted their own legislation on one particular matter. I could have gone to many other particular matters but chose not to. So there is clearly no point of order.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands on the point of order.

MR. MASON: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I just want to indicate that according to Beauchesne's 459, cited by the hon. member opposite, it starts off with the sentence: "Relevance is not easy to define. In borderline cases the Member should be given the benefit of the doubt, although the Speaker has frequently admonished Members who have strayed in debate." Subsection 2 is also very interesting. It says that Standing Order 11(2) calls on the Speaker to bring to order "members who indulge in persistent repetition."

Now, I would think that if the hon. member has strayed in the discussion, it was no more than many other hon. members have occasionally strayed. I don't know what caused the hon. member opposite to rise on this point of order, but I suggest that it may be in order that we can prolong this debate on the bill.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmor rose on a point of order on Beauchesne's 459. This is a great learning experience for hon. members. I would like to refer the hon. member to the last sentence in that particular section, which says, "In practice, wide discretion is used by the Speaker and the rule is not rigidly enforced." However, it's important for everyone to try and focus on bills at the second reading stage. We are talking about the principles of the bill, and I hope that this resolves the issue. I don't see a point of order in this. Thank you.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie to proceed.

Debate Continued

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am happy to continue on with the debate. Unfortunately, with the new rules we only have 15 minutes to speak to the issue at second reading, and I have, in fact, a great deal more to say. I only just barely started to talk about my major concern under "Interpretation."

THE ACTING SPEAKER: As per Standing Orders the chair will now entertain questions and comments for the next five minutes. The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

MR. DANYLUK: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Comments made by the hon. member from the opposition stated that the government can't get it right and also that the government can't manage. Without having a budget debate, all we hear from the party opposite is: spend, spend, spend. Could you please tell us how you would reallocate funding to address your priorities? Where would you decrease and where would you increase?

MS CARLSON: Mr. Speaker, in response to the question from Lac La Biche-St. Paul I would state this: take a look at your own household budget. If you had $21 billion to work with, you would be able to appropriately manage the money and follow through to the right programs, and that is exactly what we would do on this side of the House if we were in power.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to ask the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie about her comments about the punitive nature of the bill. She referred to the Premier's comments with respect to the money that had been saved during the strike and the Premier's comments to that. Does she care to comment on what the Premier had to say about the withdrawal of the offer of the pension liability?

MS CARLSON: Well, of course I would like to talk about that. This is a clear tactic by the Premier time and time again to play to the optics of people in the province. What he puts out there are those feel-good, sound-nice messages, and he floats little trial balloons, but in fact when it comes down to the short strokes and he actually has to act on the information he put out there, he can't do it. He backs up, and he entrenches back into that very right-wing conservative mind-set which is not at all open and accountable to the way that business should be conducted in this province and is not, in fact, acting in good faith.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Justice.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member in her comments seemed to try and insinuate that the definition of strike suggested that two teachers couldn't talk together. I want to ask her where in the definition in section 1(1)(f) it says that the strike includes teachers talking together. In fact, does it not read that strikes include "a refusal to work or to continue to work by 2 or more employees acting in combination"? Where does it say that they can't talk about things?

MS CARLSON: Well, Mr. Speaker, these lawyers. You know, they only read half the sentence, and they don't complete the full thought. Let's go back to what it actually says and talk about it in complexity. So we talk about 1(1)(f)(i), (ii), (iii). We talk about there, just to complete the one that he was talking about there as he only read half of it, that it's "in concert or in accordance with a common understanding." How do they come to that common understanding if they don't talk? I would ask you that question.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry, followed by the hon. Member Edmonton-Rutherford.

MR. BONNER: Thank you. A question to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie: how will passing this particular bill, Bill 12, enhance the learning environment for students in all of our schools?

MS CARLSON: Well, I would like to thank my colleague from Edmonton-Glengarry for the very good question, which is the exact response I hear government ministers give to their colleagues when they lob them puffballs. So thank you very much for that. I have to say that it's already my second puffball in this Assembly, and I am very happy to have received it, but in fact just on the surface does it look like a puffball? In fact, there's a very important point to be made there: how are students' lives going to be improved by strike-breaking or contract-stripping? The answer is: they won't.

MR. McCLELLAND: In the opinion of the member opposite what is more pressing in this dispute, the classroom conditions or teachers' salaries?

MS CARLSON: No doubt, Mr. Speaker, the most pressing issue . . .

AN HON. MEMBER: A sign of intelligence.

MS CARLSON: That is the first sign of intelligence we've seen on this particular issue.

Classroom sizes are far more important. In fact, the most important part of this bill has been stripped out of it by the Premier.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs, I regret the five minutes have lapsed. Debate will resume. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. In the 15 minutes that I have to speak to Bill 12 in second reading, I'd like to speak against this bill. In principle I do object to what's being brought forward. There are three areas that I would like to talk about: consultation, respect, and long-term effect.

Now, it's interesting, because I heard both the minister and the Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar talk about Albertans approving of what the government is doing here, and interestingly I don't think Albertans have had an opportunity to make any statements back to the government on any part of this process. So I'm wondering where the assumption is made that Albertans have given this government a mandate to break the strike of any teachers and to offer forward what's in this legislation.

Let's look at some timing here. You know, eight days ago things looked like they were going pretty well. Two days later, last Thursday, we had notification of this bill that's now in front of us. So when in there was the public supposed to know what was in the bill and be able to approve of it and give that mandate back to the government to proceed with this? There wasn't the opportunity to do that nor the time. We've had a guillotine of closure put in front of us on the Order Paper with a series of motions that make it very clear that the government has the power at any time to bring forward a time limit on how much debate is to be spent here.

Now, part of our job as representatives – or at least I consider it my job as an elected representative in this House – is to take legislation back to my constituents; to give them a copy of the bill or tell them how to get a copy of the bill, download it from on-line; get their feedback on it; bring forward questions that they have; ask the questions as part of the debate in the House; and again take that feedback loop back to my constituents so that they can give me some direction in how they think I should be proceeding with the bill.

But I am obviously not meant to have an opportunity to do that this time around, because it appears that this debate on this bill is to be finished either today or perhaps, by the grace of the House leader, tomorrow, which is a very short, almost impossible time for me to do any kind of a feedback loop with my constituents or with the Albertans that I'm in touch with. Again I question how the government expects that they have a mandate from Albertans to proceed with this legislation, to have brought forward what is in this legislation.

Now, I'm wondering what the hurry is, what the threat is that the debate has to be completed on this bill. The teachers agreed that they weren't going to go back on strike. That was quite clear. So why the urgency that this bill must be debated? Why do we have those guillotine motions in front of us on the Order Paper hanging over us like a scimitar to say that we can run through all three stages of the bill in one day should the House leader decide and that in each stage the amount of debate can be limited? What's the big hurry? What's the big rush? The teachers have said that they're not going anywhere. They said that they'd stay in the classroom, so why are we in such a hurry to race this through? It doesn't allow us to get feedback. It doesn't allow us to get input from our constituents or from other Albertans.

I think there's an additional point of interest in there, that the tribunal can, if it so decides, proceed in private or behind closed doors. This government has a great proclivity to making decisions and having meetings behind closed doors, and once again that works against the whole concept of public scrutiny for this process or public input, if you'd like.

As far as consultation with Albertans that empowered this government to bring this legislation forward, I severely doubt it. I'd be really interested to go out now and do focus groups and polls and other things and say: a year ago when so many seats went to the Conservatives, was this what people understood was going to happen? Did they think that they were giving a mandate to do this, to do Bill 12? Were they giving the government a mandate to do that when 70 percent of the people did not vote for the government that is now in power? Seventy percent did not vote for them. Albertans did not give this government a mandate to do Bill 12 at all.

Now, I'd like to talk about the relationship that the government has established with workers in this province and the concept of respect and value for workers. There have been a lot of nice words spoken very recently in this House about teachers and not so many before that, but overall I haven't really seen the government or government members walking the talk on that. So why should teachers believe that this is a good deal for them or that the government has the teachers' best interests at heart here? I don't see that, frankly.

Certainly in the past and even in the future I don't find that Alberta is a warm place for unions. To me that is reflected by the fact that even our Labour Relations Board has very much a vocal non-union person appointed to it. That labour board is supposed to be there strictly for union and collective bargaining processes, and we have a non-union person. That speaks volumes to me about the amount of respect that this government has for – I can see the Minister of Justice is getting really excited, and I'm looking forward to his debate on this subject. I'm sure he will have much to bring forward. I haven't seen a lot of respect, a lot of warmth for union workers in this province.

It's been interesting to me that in the private conflicts, this government has refused to entertain, would never dream of entertaining any kind of replacement worker legislation, which would have helped the private disputes settle sooner. Some of the very long-running labour disputes like Dynamic Furniture, Calgary Herald, Ziegler Lumber, even the brewery drivers this last summer went on for an awfully long time.

This government, boy, wouldn't do anything to help the workers in those strikes, but you come around to anyone that's being paid from the public treasury, yowza, we want that strike stopped now, says the government. I mean, they're standing in front of us saying: you've got to debate this entire bill in one day or we're going to stop you; we're going to bring in closure. So I just find it really interesting that when it comes to how they treat their own workers, their own employees, or workers in the public sector, this government wants to have pretty tight control on them, but they're not interested at all when it's in the private sector. Those workers, forget it.

I don't think that there's an atmosphere of respect for workers here in Alberta at all, and it's long been said in certain corridors that this government would like to break unions. I sure wouldn't like to believe that that was true, that there was any kind of concerted effort on behalf of the government to do that, but neither do I see the corresponding respect for workers that would make me believe that there was no possibility of that. So I guess it remains on the table. Do the teachers feel respect from this government? Should they feel that this legislation was a good deal for them? I look at the Premier and the whole setup of who these teachers were negotiating with.

We have had a past example – and everyone seemed very happy about it at the time – of a discussion between a union leader and the Premier that settled the problem and settled the strike. Everybody was happy with what the settlement was. So we've already had that precedent put in place. Then we get to this strike, and the same sorts of things are mentioned, that certainly we have a government that comes forward and, I believe, interferes in the collective bargaining process by detailing in their budget what the settlement amounts were to be. How can you bargain at all when one side has already said, "That's it, and we're not moving from it"? That's not a bargaining position, and it's certainly not a collective bargaining position.

So that was already set out by the government, and obviously there was going to be some request that the Premier get involved in this. The Premier leaves the province for almost the entire time that the teachers are out, and while he's away, he takes an incendiary shot at the teachers via the international media. Now, he may not have intended for that to be as insulting as teachers found it, but I can certainly tell you that the feedback I got was that they were very insulted by what was said while he was out of the country.

DR. TAFT: How could he not have intended it?

MS BLAKEMAN: Well, I will give him the benefit of the doubt that he didn't intend that, but it certainly looked suspicious.

I think that the government set itself up to be the main negotiator when they set those amounts in the budget. They demonstrated that they had control of the money. They were the piper; the government was going to call the tune. Thus there's an expectation that the Alberta School Boards Association had little influence in this process at all and that the teachers should deal directly with the government, which is what they tried to do. As a result, what did they get? The government orders the teachers back to work, but that court order is struck down, and within a few days we have the legislation that is before us, which I do see as punitive.

Now, a couple of times questions have been raised about whether there's a constitutional challenge in this legislation, and it's centered around 1(1)(f)(iii), "a concerted activity by 2 or more employees to refuse to comply with responsibilities assigned by their principal or their employer." I think that's very interesting, because this is in fact under a definition, but I think it cries out for more definition in itself. What do they mean by responsibilities? What is it that these people are restricted from not talking about or not acting upon or not discussing or not appearing to be in a concerted activity about? What responsibilities? What exactly is a concerted activity? Is that a heated discussion? Is it an exchange of paper, a letter going back and forth or an e-mail? Is it a physical activity where they're walking down the hall and discussing something? Perhaps even having a fistfight, if we're going to define it that way. None of these things are very clear, and from that arises deep suspicions from people who at this point have no reason to believe that the government is interested in the best interests of these teachers at all. It just brings it more so.

I think the last thing I want to talk about is the long term. This does concern me. I had raised in the House and before constituents that young teachers – they have their BEd; they've got a couple of years of teaching under their belt – had made it quite clear to me, when I talked to them in the last year, that they would not be the next generation of martyrs to the teaching profession. That really distressed me. The story that one young teacher told me was that out of five friends who had all come through with their BEd at the same time and all got positions as teachers, he was the only one that was still teaching. The rest of them had been wooed away. Other employers really valued that BEd degree and valued the experience that they had as teachers and paid them significantly more. He was the only one left in the teaching profession, and he was beginning to feel a bit like he'd been had, that he'd made the wrong decision in continuing on to be a teacher, and he was not going to be the next generation of martyrs.

Now, I've just had an e-mail from another constituent that I've had ongoing correspondence with around this issue, and she said: that's it. She won't be back teaching again next year. She's not going to go into a classroom where she doesn't feel respected by the government. In fact, she was quite clear that her rights had been taken away.

I think that long term this is a problem for us. If we have a profession where the people that are in it feel that they're not appreciated, they're not respected, that they will get arbitrated, they'll get tromped on, however they're going to feel, people start not to go into that profession. We've experienced that in Alberta already with the nurses and what the government did to the nurses in the mid-90s. We're now in the position of having to pay bonuses and pay very healthy salaries to entice nurses back to Alberta to work in our hospitals again. We can easily go down that same road with the teachers. If we don't want them to work here and they feel that this is not a welcome place for them to be working, why on earth would you use that BEd and go into teaching?

Thanks very much.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Any questions or comments? The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

MR. LORD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question was in regards to the statistics quoted by the hon. member opposite in which she said that 70 percent did not vote for this government, knowing full well that probably 80 percent did not vote for her party either. My question is: did the member use that 70 percent figure in a malicious and intentional manner, attempting to mislead viewers and listeners and this Assembly into thinking that 70 percent of the people did not support this government and so are in fact opposed to this party?

MS BLAKEMAN: No.

MR. MASON: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, are you rising on a point of order in question time?

Point of Order Imputing Motives

MR. MASON: Yes, I am, with respect to that last question, Mr. Speaker. That question was clearly inappropriate. [interjections]

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands has the floor.

MR. MASON: Mr. Speaker, it's very inappropriate to ask a question which impugns the hon. member's motives in making her speech, and the citation is . . .

MS CARLSON: Standing Orders 23(h), (i), and (j).

MR. MASON: Standing Orders 23(h), (i), and (j). Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the assistance, because it was so clearly a misuse of the new rules. I knew that there was a citation that could be made, and I appreciate the hon. member helping me because I wanted to be very quick.

- (h) makes allegations against another member;
- (i) imputes false or unavowed motives to another member; [or]
- (j) uses abusive or insulting language of a nature likely to create disorder.

Mr. Speaker, I would submit to you that that last question was not only inappropriate and an abuse of the new rules but violates those sections of our Standing Orders.

4:40

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've been in this House for almost nine years, and I've heard about every type of point of order that I think is probably imaginable, but this one is a whole other category. It's sort of similar to the attempt by this member for his point of privilege earlier.

The issue here is one of inappropriateness. Now, I know what the member is likely driving at, but I think that when the member reviews 23(h), (i), and (j) and when he reviews the Blues in particular, he will see that no allegations were being made, no abusive or insulting language was being used, no false or unavowed motive was being used, which is what 23(h), (i), and (j) talk about.

Having said that and in consideration of where the member was going, I think he should also understand very clearly that when a member, such as the Member for Edmonton-Centre moments ago, deviates a little bit from perhaps a point or tries to bring in some kind of an example to support a point, it has been the tradition of the House to allow rather wide-ranging latitude. But under the new rules we're allowed to question some of that latitude, and I think that is all that the Member for Calgary-Currie was doing: simply asking for clarification and perhaps even relevance. So I would hope that this misunderstanding would be cleared away that way.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie on the point of order.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. While certainly the rules of this Assembly allow for wide-ranging latitude, that does not include imputing motives, which was clearly where that particular member was going.

Just to correct the Deputy Government House Leader, he has been in this Assembly for over nine years, not less than.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie on the point of order.

MR. LORD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On the point of order which the member opposite has raised, I guess I would have to first question: when is it incorrect to raise a question, a question only, in this Assembly asking whether or not someone used a statistic in a misleading manner or whether they just misunderstood the use of the statistic. So I merely asked a question, and asking a question is not a statement of fact that could be used to impugn anyone's reputation.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie on the point of order.

MS CARLSON: Yes. "Misleading" is specifically a Beauchesne disallowed word.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Anybody else wishing to speak on the point of order? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

MR. McCLELLAND: There is a distinction between debate and a point of order. A point of order has to do with the orders, the rules, with which we conduct ourselves. Debate is when we have a disagreement of opinion. You're okay; I'm okay. No, you're not. Yes, you are. That's normal debate.

So this is clearly, in my opinion, for what that's worth, Mr. Speaker, a point of debate, not a point of order.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie had the floor when he was asking a question to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands rose on a point of order, and this has generated a very interesting debate. The chair does not have the Blues before it to be able to make a ruling and reserves to make a ruling later on.

May we proceed with the questions and comments.

MS CARLSON: A point of clarification, Mr. Speaker, under 13(6) of Standing Orders. It was the Member for Edmonton-Centre.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: I stand corrected. It was the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Debate Continued

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Questions and comments in whatever time is left? The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

MRS. JABLONSKI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre mentioned a number of times the best interests of the teachers in her debate. I understand very clearly that as a member of the government I have the best interests of all the taxpayers at heart and especially the students of this province. So my question for the hon. member is: whose best interests are more paramount, those of the teachers or those of the students?

MS BLAKEMAN: When we're talking about Bill 12, it's clearly about the teachers, and that's why I'm addressing it about the teachers. This is not about the students. It's about the teachers. We're not legislating students here. We're legislating teachers.

MR. HANCOCK: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to ask the hon. member if she or any of the members of her caucus have ever read section 178 of the School Act, which indicates that the Minister of Learning must at law not pay to a school board money for teachers' or other employees' salaries when there's been a cessation of service and whether or not, having read that section, if they have, they would realize that that's a prudent section so as to not allow school boards to benefit from a lockout.

MS BLAKEMAN: I take it the member was using that as an opportunity to make a statement, and there's no question involved.

MR. MASON: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to ask the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre if she believes that the government, having accrued additional money into general revenues, could, notwithstanding the act just cited by the Attorney General and Government House Leader, allocate the money towards education and specifically towards teachers' salaries.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you for the question. My understanding is that until the end of the month, which is March 31, the end of the fiscal year, departments are in fact allowed in many cases to move the money around in their department as they wish unless it's specifically enveloped. Therefore, with money coming out of the Department of Learning, one assumes that they could have reallocated it inside of the Department of Learning. The decision has been made by the government, as espoused by the Premier this afternoon, that the money was going to be removed from the department and put into general revenue. I think the money should have been reallocated inside of the Department of Learning.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

REV. ABBOTT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question to the Member for Edmonton-Centre is this. Your colleague from Edmonton-Ellerslie seems to think that a guaranteed raise is a punishment. Do you share this erroneous viewpoint?

MS CARLSON: A point of order, Mr. Speaker, under 23(h), (i), and (j). He is imputing motives, clearly, in terms of what I said earlier.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie on a point of order.

Point of Order
Imputing Motives

MS CARLSON: Mr. Speaker, in the comments just made by the member, he is imputing motives in terms of what was said earlier.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar on the point of order.

REV. ABBOTT: Mr. Speaker, I think that if you check the Blues, it will clearly show that the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie called Bill 12 a punitive action. Of course, with Bill 12 we know that there's going to be a guaranteed raise to teachers. So my question was simply one of logic. Does she think that a guaranteed raise is punitive?

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Hon. members, this is an opportunity for members to be asking questions and making comments on the debate that has occurred. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie has risen on a point of order citing 23(h), (i), and (j). The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar has responded. I hope that members will read the Standing Orders very clearly. Section 23(h) states that a person can rise on a point of order when an hon. member "makes allegations against another member," 23(i) states, "imputes false or unavowed motives to another member," and 23(j) states, "uses abusive or insulting language of a nature likely to create disorder." I hope that hon. members will act as hon. members and will debate in this House with respect for one another and discuss issues that are before it.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: I believe that the five minutes allocated for this section are over, and we shall resume debate.

MS DeLONG: Mr. Speaker, the past months have been difficult times for education in our province. In the face of ongoing disputes between teachers and their school boards, students have been left with uncertainty. Albertans have been through strikes and lockouts, they've seen collective bargaining in their jurisdictions stalled, and they've wondered how much longer this unrest and uncertainty will continue. With Bill 12, the Education Services Settlement Act, we can reach a conclusion. This bill will protect students from reoccurring job actions. It will bring a sense of security and stability back into classrooms, and it will start teachers and school boards on the road to reasonable and affordable settlements.

On the need to resolve these issues, the Alberta Teachers' Association and the Alberta School Boards Association agree. They agree that these disputes have reached a point where the best approach to resolving them is binding arbitration. ATA President Larry Booi describes this point as the edge of the knife. He says, and I quote: we are on the knife edge here; we can move forward and deal with some difficulties, or we can continue with the increasingly hostile and problematic situation. I think we're going in the first direction. This legislation is definitely going in that first direction.

Once these labour disputes are behind us, we can start looking ahead. This legislation focuses on the issues at hand, is student centred, and also looks to the future. In the preamble of this bill it lays the groundwork for a broad and very valuable review of Alberta's learning system. This commitment demonstrates that all issues will have a chance to be aired, salary issues through arbitration and other more complex issues through a broad review.

Bill 12 reaffirms our commitment to students. It moves us past these difficult times for our learning system, and it prepares us for the future. It also sets out a fair arbitration process for teachers and boards. The three-person panel that would be charged with finding settlement would include an individual appointed by the Alberta Teachers' Association, another appointed by the Alberta School Boards Association, and the chair appointed by Human Resources and Employment. Fairness is further demonstrated by the fact that both parties have the opportunity to present their perspectives to the tribunal.

The bottom line is that we can't allow this dispute to continue on indefinitely. The Education Services Settlement Act puts us on the road to resolutions and points us squarely towards the future. I think we all agree that this is the direction that we need to be headed in. Alberta has one of the best learning systems in the world. It's time for us to move past our current challenges and start getting ready for the challenges of the future together.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Questions or comments?

Debate will resume. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak on Bill 12, Education Services Settlement Act, in its second reading. It's a sad day when we in this House are in the process of taking away by way of this bill the right related to job action, that in our democratic society all of us enjoy. It's a right that's one of the fundamental human rights that every civilized society not only respects but puts in its constitution. Canada does do that. The Charter of Rights and Freedoms, that makes us all proud citizens of the democratic society, sanctions that right. The essence of this bill, the very fundamental driving principle of this bill, has to do with whether or not that right must be respected, legislatively protected, and in practice not only tolerated but in fact celebrated as a profoundly important statement of democracy, democratic rights, and democratic citizenship.

That's what I find most offensive – most offensive – about this bill. Whether you are a teacher, whether you are a parent, whether you are a grade 12 student, whether you are a grandparent, all of you are challenged by this proposed law, this bill. This bill is an affront to the fundamental right, it's an affront to the conception of education in our society that is supposed to educate our young into becoming democratic citizens. Education in a democracy must be education for democracy. What this bill does, if it passes through this House, is make a clear statement to our grade 9s, to our grade 10s, grade 11s, and grade 12s, who are able to understand more profoundly the issues of democracy and governments and governance, that this right is no longer seen as a sacred right in this province. To withdraw, to retreat even for a moment from our commitment to fundamental human rights, to fundamental democratic rights, is to signal that what's happening here poses a serious threat to the future of democracy in this province. That is why this bill has the smell of totalitarianism, and I am opposed to totalitarianism.

I am opposed to totalitarianism, and I respectfully ask all of my colleagues in this Legislature to announce their opposition to totalitarianism. It is important for us, whenever we get a chance, whenever it's important, to stand up for our fundamental principles. That makes this Legislature an important institution in this society. It's only in places like Pinochet's Chile or in Samozza's Nicaragua that such fundamental rights are mocked and taken away, not in the kind of democracy in which we live, and that's the challenge. That's the challenge we face. That is what's most offensive about this bill, and that is why it's not only a matter of concern or should be a matter of concern to teachers. It's not just about the taking away of the teachers' rights or attacking their interests. It's a bill which has consequences for the future of democracy itself, and therefore all Albertans have a stake in whether or not this bill in its present form goes through this Legislature. I hope it doesn't. I will certainly do whatever I can to convince my colleagues in the Legislature as well as to send a message out to Albertans about what is really at stake. I ask all of you to vote against this bill when the time comes.

Let me look at the substance of this bill. What does this bill do? How does it threaten democracy? This bill already imposes on the teachers a unilateral arbitration process. Teachers already call it a tainted arbitration process, 32,000 of them.

[The Speaker in the chair]

Why do they do this? They do it because this bill, in contrast with the terms of reference of the arbitration process that were attached to the order in council – and they were passed by this government just 10, 15 days ago or two weeks ago – included in it the possibility that there'll be one independent arbitrator that the government appointed. Of the six terms of reference, the last term of reference – and the Minister of Human Resources and Employment would remember that because he was instrumental in making sure that the sixth term among the terms of reference was there, and I compliment him for that. He stood for that. It is that particular term of reference that has been removed from what the arbitration panel here in this bill can or cannot discuss and debate and do.

So this bill represents a dramatic reversal and retreat from what this very government two weeks ago wanted to use in order to bring peace and negotiated settlements to our schools, to our education system, to the classrooms of this province. This bill is not about settlement. It's about unsettling everything that was contractually agreed upon and practised for years, and in any employer/employee relationships not only the words of the contract are important, but the unwritten understandings which both parties are willing to respect are just as important. What this bill does is simply throw away the work of years and years of negotiations which built constructive, collaborative relationships between the teachers as employees and school boards as employers and replaces that model of collaboration and reasonable negotiation with legislative dictate.

Just because the government is represented by 74 members in this House is no reason for this government to disrespect the very principles, the very practices, the very institutional arrangements which made the education system of this province one of the best in the world. Don't underestimate the significance of the collaborative model that governs the relations between the employers and the employees in this province over generations in building a good-quality system that we all pay lip service to. What this bill does is undo that very fundamental condition that must prevail if that education system is to remain excellent, if it is to continue to guarantee to our children the very best education that they're capable of getting.

That's what this bill is undoing, and I submit to you that that is why I will not be able to support this bill, Mr. Speaker. The Premier said – let me go back a bit, because we do need to put it in context. On March 1 the government release said the following, and these are the Premier's words. He said, "I can't negotiate a settlement to the teachers' dispute, but I'm willing to meet with Mr. Booi as he has requested and see if we can develop some options to bring the dispute to an end." The Premier goes on to say:

I appreciate and respect the ATA's decision to ask teachers to stay in class in light of today's court decision, and I hope that by all parties working together, we can ensure that students stay in class without further interruption. Achieving that goal is the priority [of this] government.

I just want to remind the House that that has been the priority of the teachers as well. That is why, although the government's order in council was struck down by the Court of Queen's Bench of the province, teachers decided to return to school, return to the classroom, because students' interests were also a shared priority for them. They agreed with the Premier.

Then in good faith they entered into negotiations with the Premier, and now they feel double-crossed and stabbed in the back. I think they are right about this. They have been betrayed. Their good faith has been spurned, and instead this bill now has turned towards punitive and vindictive legislation, that will not be forgotten by teachers and that will not be forgotten by the parents of children whose educational interests have been served with great distinction by the teachers of this province, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker, there are other provisions of this bill and principles underlying them that I would like to draw to your attention during the remaining time. This bill is highly objectionable because it restricts arbitration to only those things that have nothing to do with instruction as such.

Teachers have been concerned about the conditions under which learning takes place. It is those conditions that have been simply set aside, have been rendered unnegotiable by the provisions of this bill, and that's very, very, very unfortunate, Mr. Speaker, because if it is really the interests of the students that this bill is supposed to serve, then it is those conditions of instruction and learning that should have been put front and centre in this bill. Arbitration should have been about the creation and the negotiation of those conditions so that the quality of learning of our children would be protected, would be treated as the first priority, and other things would be later. But that is not to be if this bill is to go through.

What else is wrong with this bill, Mr. Speaker? It ties the hands of the arbitration board. It asks them to look around and look at various contracts of unionized workers, non-unionized workers, other comparable professions and whatnot, and at the end, having said all that, then it says: but you can't give an arbitration award which will push a school division to a deficit situation. That is really hindering the ability of the arbitrator to really do justice to the inquiry.

Mr. Speaker, I'm happy to take some questions, so I'll sit down now.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, Standing Order 29 now is available.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs, followed by the hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

MR. LUKASZUK: Could the member please expand on his manifesto and tell us what is so patently unreasonable or unfair with binding arbitration set in a bilateral agreement between the employee and employer?

DR. PANNU: There is no bilateral agreement here, Mr. Speaker. The ATA is saying that they are not party to this agreement. There is no agreement. They, in fact, are complaining that the agreement that they had entered into with the Premier has been violated and violated violently.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

MR. HORNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. leader of the third party, I assume, agrees that teachers view the classroom conditions and integration and conditions of learning as the priority over and above even, in fact, salaries. In light of that, is he suggesting that he would deny parents, school boards, teachers, and all of the involved stakeholders the opportunity to review these items as opposed to simply sending them to an arbitrator and not having any involvement?

DR. PANNU: The arbitration should deal with things that the collective agreement between teachers as employees and school boards as employers have negotiated for the last 20 years. Why take an extremely arbitrary action to tell school boards and teachers, "You cannot continue to negotiate items and issues on which in the past you have achieved a very good agreement and worked collaboratively together"?

MR. McCLELLAND: Would the hon. leader of the third party refresh my memory, please? It seemed to me that when the Alberta Teachers' Association went to court and had the previous arbitration order overturned, did that arbitration order not have all of the other issues on the table that the leader of the third party would like to see on the table? Yet the ATA overturned it.

DR. PANNU: The ATA didn't overturn anything. It was the court that overturned the order in council, Mr. Speaker.

MR. LOUGHEED: Could the hon. member indicate – he talked a little bit in his speech about the importance of the teacher in the classroom – what he considers the most critical factor in a student's education?

DR. PANNU: Mr. Speaker, the question doesn't relate to the bill. I'm very happy to answer any question related to the content of the bill.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

MR. HORNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A little bit of a follow-up to my first question. Again, when I spoke with teachers and have continually spoken with teachers through the last six to eight months, special needs, classroom conditions, integration: those are the things that they tell me are more important to them than the salary. The parents also tell me that. All of these people want to have input, not just by an arbitration. I think it's something that all stakeholders should be involved in, not just the collaborative negotiation process.

DR. PANNU: I think, Mr. Speaker, I agree with the hon. member. It wasn't the teachers' choice to be thrown into the hands of the arbitrators. That was the decision made by the government. Teachers simply accepted what they felt they couldn't change.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MR. CAO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the hon. leader of the third party. The president of the ATA was reported to say in the newspaper that he doesn't like arbitration, binding on all parties, to end the dispute, but he feels it's the only fair solution to end the current deadlock and suggested that it might be led by a three-person panel, with one member chosen each by the teachers, the school boards and the government.

So this bill is all about that.

THE SPEAKER: Sorry. Time.

The hon. member.

DR. PANNU: Mr. Speaker, I wonder what the question is.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wonder if the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona could tell us what he finds to be the most offensive part of the bill.

DR. PANNU: Mr. Speaker, I welcome this question. Taking away the teachers' right to strike, the most fundamental human right: that's offensive. Tying the hands of the arbitration panel so that it can't do anything is extremely offensive, and one other point . . .

THE SPEAKER: I think, hon. member, that our time has now left us for this matter.

Now the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise this afternoon to enter into debate on Bill 12, the Education Services Settlement Act. I think this is a bill that, if every member of this House really had a choice, none of us would be standing to speak to today. We would have rather seen the process of settlement of contract achieved through the process of collective agreement between the teachers and the respective school boards. You know, this is the process that's in place. This is the process that has followed out of over a hundred years now almost of development, what has been proven to be a very effective means to deal with both working conditions and a level of remuneration for individuals when they end up dealing with an employer. This kind of process has been developed over this period of time because what we end up with is the sense that if individuals don't get together in a collective way to deal with the negotiations, no kind of standardization or no kinds of conditions that affect everybody, as opposed to affecting the individual, can be put in place.

If we look at the position of the teachers as they entered into this negotiation six months ago, what we see is that they were making choices at that time to deal with both what is a fair mechanism and a fair level to determine their actual dollar value of pay, but they also wanted to deal with a whole broad spectrum of other issues that affected their ability to deal with a viable work condition. This, I think, was as much where the idea of collective agreements began as anything. It was for safety. It was for work conditions. It was for the ability of an individual to be heard. You know, this was the basis of the whole process of collective agreements. That's where it started.

It's more and more focused now on just the issue of what is a fair level of pay. But we have to look at it from the perspective of at what point does a contract relationship again enter into the conditions, where it's very important that we allow for a complete discussion of all of the aspects that are associated with the workplace from both the employer's and the employee's perspective, in this case the school boards at the local level and the local of the ATA. It's become very evident when we listen to parents, when we listen to teachers, and when we listen to citizens in the community who are involved in what's going on in their community. They've been expressing real concerns about the current status and the current conditions of our education system all the way from the macro perspectives that don't deal with this contract down to the specific issues that were really being addressed by the teachers and the school boards in the context of the aspects that are associated with this type of contract that started off six or eight months ago.

The main aspect here is: what is kind of the safety or the personal position of the teachers when they enter into the classroom? Stress causes a lot of concern for teachers; it causes a lot of concern for the students in the room. As we look at how to go about dealing with the process of trying to focus on education and trying to focus on learning for our students, we have to be able to make sure that in effect the negotiation occurs on all of the issues that are relevant to the ability of our young people to learn, to learn effectively and to learn to the fullest of their ability.

If we look at what's been happening in the process of this collective agreement, I guess this is kind of like: how did we end up standing here in the Legislature today debating Bill 12? It basically boils down to the fact that over the process of these contracts, the process that normally would have been in place was limited and was corrupted by outside influences, the first one being the comments that were made with respect to all public servants in the process of our preparing for the election that we went through a year ago. Basically, everybody who worked for the public service or in a public service role was told that they would be treated fairly, that they would be treated with respect, and that they would be treated in a sense equally.

Mr. Speaker, I don't think anybody at that point in time took that to mean that every one of them would get exactly the same percentage increase in salary, but what they wanted to see was that they were treated in a way that showed their profession to be essential to this province and that their contribution in a professional way was valued. What happened was that the health care areas were settled significantly before the election with what in effect created benchmark expectations of basically settlements that would allow for those professions to recapture some of the remuneration they had that was lost in the '93 to '95 period, I guess, but it would also allow them to sense that they were in a profession valued by the province.

One of the big concerns that has come up in the process of this debate as I've dealt with people in the community has been the question: what's happening that so many of our teachers now are leaving the profession? Not because they're retiring but leaving because they're moving off to other jobs. What about when you go to the universities in this province? You find that 20 to 30 percent of the graduates out of the faculties of education are not actually going and taking jobs in the field of education. They're not taking jobs based on the expectation they had when they went into the profession, when they went into a university. So in effect they've had something happen to them that has diverted their attention away from where they set out to go, and this in a sense leads us to wonder what that was. Is it a sense that their chosen profession is not valued? Is it a signal that the pay package they receive inside that profession isn't competitive with others?

Mr. Speaker, I think it's important that we do look at the fact that in Alberta the government lays the claim on the table that the teachers in this province are paid as well as anywhere else in Canada. Yet what we see, in effect, is that because of the cost of living here, because of other factors of living in Alberta, the actual sense of achievement in terms of financial position by the teachers isn't at the same level as it is in other provinces. So we have to make sure that when we talk about things like, you know, they're paid the same as or at the top level of all Canadian teachers, yes. But what are their expenses associated with living here in Alberta? We have to make sure that we deal with this kind of thing from the perspective of fair treatment. [interjection] The member sitting next to me here just said: yeah, we've got the lowest unemployment.

Mr. Speaker, I'll tell you from the perspective of an economist that all that does is drive up wages. That doesn't mean that we can be satisfied with cutting back the wages of our teachers. We have to make sure that the marketplace has a place to function because if we don't do that, we end up with comments like we just heard, where people in effect are led to believe that because we have low unemployment, that means teachers can accept low pay. That goes against every aspect of labour market economics that you can ever find in a textbook, because when unemployment goes down, the rate of pay has to go up so that we end up with an aspect that gives fair treatment to individuals.

When they're dealt with under a collective agreement, we have to recognize the fact that these kinds of agreements carry over for what in effect is a two-year period. We have to make sure that a process is in place where those teachers have the ability to see a fair package over the whole life of that contract. We can't deal with it as of today; we have to deal with it in the context of the life of that contract. We see other provinces now starting to enter into negotiations with their teachers that will raise their salary levels above what we're offering our teachers after our settlement. That is in effect what we have to deal with in the context of the whole perspective. We have to make sure that they are put in a position where they feel that they are treated with value for the effort they put out.

The other thing, Mr. Speaker, that I wanted to get at as we go through this whole process is that for as long as we've had collective agreements in education, the process of discussion about classroom conditions has always centred around the context of negotiation with the teachers. That's where it starts. I'm just as much in support of the idea that the school boards, the community, the school councils should have a lot of input into what constitutes the appropriate classroom conditions, but in many cases it requires the teachers to raise the issue so that we can in effect begin to discuss it at the local level. We shouldn't be dealing with this from the perspective of trying to make sure that we impose these kinds of conditions at a provincial level, that we make sure that they're excluded at a provincial level, and that's what Bill 12 is doing. It's making sure that the issues of concern to the communities are not brought into a fair discussion through this process. We want to make sure that in effect the communities are part of it and that we have in place through our legislation processes that in effect provide the opportunity to deal with classroom conditions. Elected school boards and school councils, that are available at each school in this province, are the ones who should be making those kinds of decisions about school conditions, not some arbitrary panel appointed by the Premier, who deals with a whole bunch of situations. [interjection]

We've got another comment from the bleachers here that talks about how this is not going to be an arbitrary appointment. We've heard nothing from the Premier yet that talks about how he will in effect be making these appointments to this commission. If we look at how he went through appointing individuals to all of the other study groups that he's had in place in the nine years he's been in power, he hasn't done it in a consultative way with the communities. He's done it as: let's ask for people to be appointed who support his point of view. Mr. Speaker, that's not the way to deal with this.

We have a process in place to deal with classroom conditions. It's the school boards and it's the school councils, with input from the teachers, with input from the parents, with input from the kind of process they have in place. The member here says: they don't want it. I have yet to talk to anybody on a school board or a school council that doesn't want to deal with the issues of classroom size, support for teachers, and the number of aides for special-needs students.

What they're operating under, Mr. Speaker, is a condition of budget restraint from the government that prevents them from dealing with these issues the way they think they should. We've got to make sure that they have that flexibility to deal with those issues. We've got to make sure that they're in a position where they can bring forward constructive suggestions about how we deal with the process of developing a good education system for our students so that we end up with a true development of process, so that we end up in a position where we have to make sure that the process goes through and that the whole issue of education and learning is discussed.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Tuesday, March 12, 2002

8:00 p.m.

Date: 2002/03/12

[The Speaker in the chair]

THE SPEAKER: Please be seated.

Hon. members, before calling on the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition to continue his remarks in second reading, I'd like to recognize the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie to clarify a matter.

MR. LORD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to respond to an objection which was received earlier this evening in regards to a question that I asked. I just wanted to assure the Assembly and you that the intent behind my question was not to impugn the motives of the hon. member opposite in statements that she made but merely to clarify the intent and the facts that were stated, and thus I apologize if she feels that I have impugned her motives.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Second Reading

Bill 12
Education Services Settlement Act

[Debate adjourned March 11: Dr. Nicol speaking]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's again just a chance to give me more opportunity to pursue some of the issues that I was talking about before in the context of, first of all, how we got into the position we're in, how some of what we're faced with now could have been averted but also to look at in effect what is an appropriate process and whether or not Bill 12 really deals with what could be an appropriate process.

The way we need to look at this from the perspective of the debate that is under way is to deal with, I guess, whether or not we could be in a position today where the collective bargaining process is progressing more in the context of the way it is intended under the law. Mr. Speaker, as I said at the start before the break, I don't think any of us is happy at being here today debating this bill. It's a set of circumstances that has precipitated it, and we have to look at this bill and whether or not we're going to support it in the context of: what are the outcomes that we can see from the process that is provided in the context of the arbitration outlined in Bill 12?

When we look at it from the perspective of where it goes in terms of the relationship to a normal process, it doesn't even follow what would normally be relevant under, say, an arbitration process that would be set up, you know, through the process that was started a couple of weeks ago with the government's back-to-work order, which in a way was precipitated by the emergency decision by the government which was later overturned. That arbitration process, which is set out under law, would have allowed for all of the aspects of the current negotiations to be on the table.

It's interesting, you know, as we look through the process and we look at kind of how the arbitration tribunal will be set up, the power that they'll have. I guess it starts in a very appropriate way in the sense that each of the bodies that is involved gets a chance to nominate an individual to the tribunal, but what the government has done in there is also taken the opportunity to be a little bit heavy-handed in the sense that if they don't feel the appointed or the nominated representatives are facilitating movement on the issue, then they have a chance to in effect revoke that appointment and go through a process, I guess, of reestablishing or redefining the tribunal, which then creates a discontinuity in the discussions.

I guess I would hope that as that happens, we don't end up trying to deal with it in the context of being overly critical of the individuals that are appointed, because you know each one of them has to make sure that the views of the group they represent get expressed in the context of this dispute resolution and through this arbitration. If we look at it through different aspects and when we get down to kind of the ground rules under which the arbitration can occur, I guess we have to question why it is that the government in effect took off the table a lot of the aspects that are there in the context of the concerns being raised by the individuals in it, whether it's the ATA or the school boards.

If we try to determine the impact that this is going to have on the outcome, there appear to be some real difficult kinds of situations that come into it in the sense that the arbitrators or the panel, the tribunal, is going to have to be able to really delve into the operation of the school board to a degree that you kind of question the time frame properly allowed them. Basically, we're seeing in here that conditions that have to come up in terms of class size cannot be part of the negotiation.

Does this mean that the settlement can't result in an increase in class size, never mind the targeted or the preferred decrease in class size? Will that be part of it as well? If that becomes part of it, then in effect what you've done is limited the arbitration to the predetermined outcome that the government has. If you take into account the fact that school boards have to deal with the other salary settlements – and a number of the school boards I know tie in their support staff settlements to the settlements that the teachers get – what you end up with is the possibility of trying to deal with the process of: how do they settle it?

If the teachers get an increase, then the other staff get an increase. In many cases we've heard the 3 percent that was provided to the school boards called "available to negotiate with the teachers." It truly isn't, because it in effect makes sure that that part of the budget is tied into whatever settlement is there. So for a lot of those school boards basically the 4 and 2 that we've seen provided in the budget is going to be the only option that comes out, and if that's really what this act is going to do, it's going to really prevent any kind of appropriate spirit of the process to be conveyed into any kind of a solution beyond what was in the budget last spring. I think that that in effect makes this process overly restrictive.

We've seen some school boards across the province who have settled with their teachers, but they've done it on the basis of the fact that those schools did have a surplus position to carry themselves through this year. Then they looked at the business plans of the government and said, you know, "If we do this this year, use up the surplus this year, in effect we can then move into next year with a sustainable process with some adjustments," given the fact that they're looking at increases in the budget as prescribed in the business plans again for next year.

What you end up with is a real situation trying to deal with equity across the province, because what we in effect now have is that some school boards that had surpluses can deal with the solution that's going to be arbitrated, but does that also become part of the negotiation in terms of the previous settlements? What you're seeing in here are restrictions that will not allow a school board to either go into deficit or increase their deficit. Does going into deficit mean on an annualized basis so that they can't tap into the surplus they've got, or does it mean on an accrual basis so that they could in effect have access to that surplus for the one year?

You know, when we start putting words on a piece of paper, it's very difficult to see how these kinds of things can be operationalized in the context of having the arbitration operate at each school board or for each of the contracts in an equal way. If what we're going to do is see some school board/ATA contracts allowed to be more flexible in the context of their use of a surplus or a projected other revenue, what we'll find is that in the end we have a lot of discrepancy across the province in terms of what the settlements will be. We also have, then, a different set of expectations that come about in terms of: how is the government going to handle this in the subsequent negotiations? What we'll have, then, after August 31, 2003, is a lot of catch-up that'll have to be negotiated into these contracts or a lot of equalization, not because of the market forces that would determine what is fair remuneration for teachers in that school division but because of outside, imposed intervention activities by the restrictions that are placed on the arbitration process through Bill 12.

Mr. Speaker, I think the thing that needs to be looked at here – and I hope that it eventually ends up getting looked at in the context of the commission or tribunal, whatever appropriate word gets attached to it when it gets set up. Very obviously, if some school boards right now are working with surpluses and others are either in a deficit or threatened-with-deficit position, then what we're looking at is a very strong signal that there are inappropriate allocations of resources from the Ministry of Learning out to the various school boards. Will the commission or the tribunal be authorized to look at the funding formulas that determine how dollars are allocated out to the various school boards? This, in effect, presents the umbrella under which the arbitration process can operate. Will we have adjustments made so that school boards that have rapidly increasing populations or a higher incidence of need for special support services in the classroom, whether it be teaching assistants or technology supports – will those be recognized in the funding formulas? Obviously, because of the way it works right now, the definition of that funding formula doesn't provide a fair allocation of the province's money out to the relative communities.

Mr. Speaker, this is one of the things that's wrong when we start looking at an absolute per-pupil grant, because what it does is it doesn't take into account the differences of the community, the differences of the growth in that community. We're always dealing one year behind for those communities that are growing very rapidly, and they end up having to deal with additional costs of that education system a year prior to the formula recognizing the fact that their population has grown. So we have to make sure that our funding formula in effect recognizes the fact that we're always dealing with a lagged-type operation. Even when we deal with the September 30 enrollment statistics as the basis for the grants, what you end up with is the fact that if you have a transitory community, a lot of people are moving into that community during the year and they end up with growth issues. I think that if we look at some of them, especially some of the new areas of Calgary or the new areas of Edmonton here, those create really severe restrictions on what can happen, especially when the budgets are allocated down to the school at a particular level.

So, you know, these are the kinds of issues that we have to look at in the context of: is this bill providing the flexibility that would give us an equitable settlement in an arbitration process? Mr. Speaker, I don't think it does. We've seen too many of the ways that the restrictions on this will end up with, basically, a constraint on the arbitration process that won't address the issues that were raised, whether it was by the ATA or by the school boards, in the context of their initial attempts at negotiation.

If we also look at, you know, the approach that's taken through this arbitration in the context of if it gets buy-in from all of the individuals involved, in the contacts that I've had in the last 24 hours since the bill was introduced, basically I think everybody recognizes the fact that very few of the teachers are accepting this as being reflective of what they were expecting in the process. I've also had a couple of calls from individuals who serve on school boards, who are concerned about the limitations that it puts on it as well. So what we're seeing is that some of the voices that are out there saying that this is good or this is bad don't reflect the real operational aspects when you come to looking at it from the perspective of each individual school board and their local ATA they have to negotiate with.

The arbitration process that gets set out here focuses just on the money aspects of a settlement and effectively, as I've said already, backs the arbitration process into recognizing or accepting what is in the budget from last year as the final settlement for teachers, because the flexibility there doesn't allow for anything beyond that. But we also have to look at how the process will be set up to incorporate the other issues, because they can't occur in the context of just a pay package for teachers without looking at issues like class size as well. I think I've touched on it a little bit already, Mr. Speaker, in the sense that if a settlement occurs that is going to require extra dollars from the school board, the only way they can be prevented from going into a deficit position is by altering their class size. Is that going to be allowed or is that not going to be allowed under this arbitration?

In effect, are we just downloading the decisions about the base pay and the base pay structure to the school boards in saying, "You can't go into a deficit, so if the settlement is above what you have in your budget, you're going to have to adjust the classroom size"? Yet in the context of this bill it says that we cannot deal with classroom size, so I guess the question that comes up is: is classroom size not part of the negotiation from the proactive point of view of either the school boards or the teachers? Is it also restricted and prohibited in the context of a passive approach, where in a sense it precipitates out of the end solution?

I would really hope, Mr. Speaker, that if we're trying to make sure that this process deals with class-size neutrality in the arbitration process, it is neutral both ways in the sense that the teachers are not in a position where they can introduce their working conditions into this negotiation. But we also have to have it so that the arbitration process, through the restriction that's in this process about deficit financing, doesn't in effect force onto the teachers a negative direction from what they put into the process. In other words, we'll end up with larger class sizes to suit the arbitrated solution rather than smaller class sizes, which was part of the negotiation in the whole process.

I guess some of the other things in the context of the approach that was taken in this bill that really bother me are some of the interpretations or the allegations that are coming out about the freedom of different groups to react and participate in public events or public activities that associate with the debates surrounding the outcome or the process in the interim. Specifically, Mr. Speaker, I'm talking here about the restrictions in this bill that limit how people can in effect discuss or participate in processes that are involved in a decision by the administrator.

You know, if two or more employees refuse to comply with responsibilities assigned, if those responsibilities are in the context of this agreement or if they're part of an administrator's new approach to dealing with teaching, with the classroom assignments, with anything that in effect comes up through that school or the school board management, this bill basically says that for the next year and a half teachers can't talk about that to anybody else, to another teacher. If one of those people that gets involved in that discussion then becomes . . . [interjection] Well, the member here says that it's mistruer, and I would like to have her stand up after my speech and explain where she says I'm misreading this. It says in there that "a concerted activity by 2 or more employees to refuse to comply with responsibilities assigned by their principal or their employer" constitutes a strike under the definition of this act. [interjections]

MS CARLSON: Exactly. Read it. You haven't read it. You've been misled by your own members. [interjections]

THE SPEAKER: Hon. member, the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition has the floor.

DR. NICOL: If they get together and refuse to undertake an activity over the next year and a half, whether it's included in this agreement or not, they in effect are precipitating a strike in the definition of this act. To me, Mr. Speaker, that limits the ability of teachers within a school dealing with their school principal or dealing with their school council when they're asked to do something that was or was not directly involved in this negotiation. That in effect constitutes a violation of the conditions, the way I read it. In that context, I think it limits the possibility of any kind of constructive discussion about classroom conditions, about teaching conditions, about the approach that we have to open participation in our government, in our public services.

The end result, Mr. Speaker, is that we have to look at this from the perspective of: is it going to be enforced to the word, or is it going to be enforced to somebody's arbitrary interpretation of that? In other words, we're setting ourselves up for a whole series of different interpretations of it. You know, we've seen discussion arise now just by my standing here talking about it. If that can bring forward a set of discussions in the context of this debate, then what prevents that same kind of misinterpretation that the provincial Attorney General is talking about across there in the context of, gee, one school board or one school council or one school principal can have that same kind of misinterpretation?

All I'm dealing with is the process of how if we're going to have a clear definition and a clear delineation of where we want this arbitration process to go, then we'd better make sure that it's in the act. We'd better make sure that it's there so that everybody knows where the bounds of this are, where the bounds of these kinds of limits will take effect, or whether the bounds of these kinds of things will get the support of the government or not get the support of the government. We don't want to have to utilize the court system on a consistent basis to interpret how this act is going to be applied and what rights teachers have to deal with it.

You know, Mr. Speaker, it's interesting in the sense that there have been allegations that this has been directed at the teachers, yet there's no limit in this bill that I can see that limits two school board members from getting together and talking about dealing with the same kinds of concerns about the contract that the teachers are prohibited from talking about. So we've created this to deal with this kind of an approach, but it says two or more teachers, so it would in effect – all I'm saying is that that creates a discrepancy. [interjections]

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, the chair has recognized the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Now, to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, you're sitting proximate to a mike that is live, which means that whatever thoughts you might have to yourself unfortunately are conveyed to everyone else in the Assembly because the microphone picks them up.

So may I just encourage the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition to continue and everybody to listen.

MS CARLSON: I was just responding to the minister.

THE SPEAKER: Excuse me, hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie. You don't have the floor. There's nothing to respond to. Do what you do in life. Recognize that the hon. Government House Leader is a man. Ignore him.

The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

DR. NICOL: Mr. Speaker, is that the kind of advice you give to everybody when a man stands up to talk?

What we've got is a situation here where in effect any two or more people can get together from the administration side, from the school board side and not be subject to the restrictions of this act. But any two or more people from the teachers' side who get together to talk about the implications or to take action with respect to the implications of this act in effect are found in violation of the act. We've created a one-way scrutiny, a one-way penalty, Mr. Speaker, and that's not what we should be dealing with if we're trying to talk about fair representation, fair legislation, and reasonable responsibility in a democratic society.

As we go through and look at the other processes here that affect the principle or the operation of it, we get to the kinds of issues again that focus on the matters to be considered. I think the main part here that we have to look at is the approach that comes from trying to deal with aspects of job certainty and job conditions that in effect allow for the teachers of this province – you know, the approach of this arbitration affects them. I don't believe that what we're dealing with here is openness when we look at how this act and the process set out follow in the context of some of the aspects of the normal process of arbitration that would come up under the labour code, which normally would be the guidelines for any kind of negotiation undertaken by the teachers and their local school board as they look at it.

As we get to looking at the principle here, Mr. Speaker, I think we have to basically question whether or not this is going to create a good environment over the next year and a half. I've talked in that context about the sense of who can talk about what's happening. But also when we look at it in the context of how the teachers will be able to relate to the administration and relate to the students, anytime we now are going to have a school council come along and say "What do you think about changing some of the processes?" in effect what we're going to have is a situation created where an interpretation of this act and how this act will impinge on the ability of them to enter into a negotiation with the teachers to change their work process, their work commitment, their work direction, their work timing over the next year and a half will all have to be done within the context of this kind of evaluation, in terms of how it looks at or how it affects this particular piece of legislation.

In the end, Mr. Speaker, what I'm just trying to say is that I find the process that's outlined in Bill 12 to be very restrictive. We could have had a process put together that allowed for all of the issues that were raised by all sides in this to be addressed without having to be so restrictive and so limiting in the context of how we as legislators impose a settlement process on them. The end result is going to be that we're going to have a lot of mistrust, a lot of questions raised about the intent, and how we deal with the process of getting any kind of a solution that serves the children of our province. We have to make sure that the school councils, the school boards, and the teachers have built into their commitment to learning the flexibility that will suit the needs of children within that school as individuals and as a classroom over the next year and a half.

This bill, Mr. Speaker, puts limitations on what the school boards could do in the context of their negotiations with teachers, puts limitations on what a school council or a school administrator, namely a principal, can do in the context of dealing with any kind of change in requests for teachers. I think that we've got to make sure, as we go through this process, that this bill develops more flexibility so those kinds of things can be addressed. We'll be addressing some of those kinds of things when we get to amendments to the bill, but in the meantime I think the thing we have to really look at is: is this bill in the best interests of kind of the overall relationship that we have in the education system in Alberta? I would suggest no, that we're really faced with an imposition here of a solution to a problem that could have been addressed through dealing with the process in an up-front way, dealing with the process in a way that was consistent and fit with the current parameters of the collective bargaining process and the negotiations that are built into it.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I'll conclude and pick up this debate in a little more detail when we get to committee, where we can talk more specifically about how we would like to see changes put into some of the sections. It's important, you know, that we do make sure that this bill doesn't limit what can happen in the context of settling a collective agreement with the teachers. It's an imposed arbitration that's going to really limit what issues can be addressed, issues that were important enough to the teachers that they felt they should have been brought up in the context of their negotiations for a new contract. By not allowing them to occur here, in effect the government has said: we don't think those are the kinds of issues that should be talked about today; we're going to talk about those sometime in the future.

Listening to the Premier today, it could be as much as a year and a half into the future before the results of the commission get brought forward. Knowing how things work, after that it'll probably be another year before anything can be done with the recommendations out of that commission or tribunal. What we end up with, then, is that in effect a lot of the classroom conditions that the teachers and the parents and the school boards are raising today won't be addressed for at least a year and a half or two years down the road if this bill is passed, and I don't think that's the kind of approach we want to take to education. I think we need to address those issues now, while they're critical, so that the students that are in the system today aren't disadvantaged through the process.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I think I'll let someone else have a chance to speak to the bill. Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: Standing Order 29. We'll go with the Minister of Justice, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, and did I see the hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert?

The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I normally listen and did listen today to the hon. Leader of the Opposition's words with a great deal of interest. Even when I don't agree with him, I admit that he makes an awful lot of sense and clarity. But I want to ask if the hon. leader is aware that the section of the bill which defines strike is almost a direct lift from the labour code. I quote the labour code, section 1:

"strike" includes

(i) a cessation of work,

(ii) a refusal to work,

(iii) or a refusal to continue to work,

by 2 or more employees acting in combination or in concert or in accordance with a common understanding for the purpose of compelling their employer . . .

The definition that's being objected to is a direct lift from the labour code.

DR. NICOL: Mr. Speaker, it's the idea that it gets imposed into this bill and the fine that goes directly to the teachers that make this an issue. We have to make sure that the issues that come out here are not punitive in the context of any kind of open discussion. The very fact that we've put it into this piece of legislation allows it to be brought forward and made part of a contract, and in effect it becomes a hammer within that contract, that anybody that wants to contain the development or to contain the discussion of two people can do it through that clause.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

MR. McCLELLAND: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week I'm sure I recall the leader of the Liberal Party supporting the Alberta Teachers' Association when they tried to have the arbitration overturned, and it was overturned. That arbitration included all of the issues that the hon. member has said should be on the table, so now when it's much more narrow arbitration on the table but with the specific intention to have all of the other issues dealt with in an exhaustive review . . .

THE SPEAKER: I think time – we've arrived at it.

DR. NICOL: Mr. Speaker, the problem is that what we were dealing with before was overturning a process of an imposed settlement, not an arbitration. What we're seeing here now is an arbitration that doesn't even fit the definition of a normal arbitration, where it usually takes into account all of the conditions that are on the table. This is not a fair arbitration under any kind of a definition of a labour code. I don't know how anybody can support it.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

MR. HORNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition commented that parents, school boards, and involved stakeholders want to be involved in the solution, and we agree on that point. They have been expressing their concerns, but it should be on a provincial basis, not on a regional basis. Why would you deny them the right to be a part of a provincial policy discussion regarding classroom conditions? It's an in-depth review of the policies of education, which should be by all Albertans and not individually from each division. The items should not be entrenched in employment contracts, and we need to remember who the managers of the system are.

DR. NICOL: I'm on record many times saying that this is the responsibility of the school board. It's done at the local level. We should not be imposing classroom decisions and classroom conditions at a provincial level on a local school board. That's who we give the power to, and they are responsible to their communities through their elections. Do we want to overtake their elections and overturn the responsibilities and the commitments that they've made to their communities when they're elected to do this at their community level? I don't think so, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

MRS. ADY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member referred to the idea that he felt like a study would take too long, and I refer back to the California model, where they legislated class size and overnight they didn't have enough buildings or enough teachers and they were hiring first-year kids out of university. Don't you think that a study that took time to thoughtfully look at that and make those kinds of changes in a thoughtful way would be a better idea?

DR. NICOL: Mr. Speaker, the local school boards get involved in dealing with this. They have to make their decisions and make their allocations and resources on the basis of all of the resources they've got, whether it's dollars, whether it's buildings, whether it's support resources. They are the ones responsible for this. They should be the ones that do it. They should be the ones that make that kind of a decision in a collective negotiation with the teachers who provide the services and with the parents who have to meet the education needs of their community and their children.

THE SPEAKER: I'm afraid, hon. members, that we've arrived at 12 seconds. I think it's impossible to deal with.

Now, the next continuing debate. Did I see movement from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar?

MR. MacDONALD: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I, too, have a few comments regarding Bill 12, the imposed arbitration Education Services Settlement Act. It's a bad act by a bad government, a government that is completely out of touch with the citizens that a year ago elected them to this massive majority. Here, precisely one calendar year later, we have a bill that has been described as beyond punitive. It is vindictive. It's vindictive against the collective bargaining rights of teachers across this province. I even had a constituent phone me enraged about this legislation and compare it to the enabling act that was passed in 1933 in Germany. This was my constituent's comparison to this legislation, and that's how frustrated and upset that individual is.

Now, teachers across this province, Mr. Speaker – and I understand from earlier in question period today that there are 20 of them in the government caucus – want respect. They want respect from their government, and unfortunately they're not getting it. The teaching profession in this province is responsible for transmitting the collective knowledge of this community, this city, this province from one generation to the next. Perhaps the most important job in all of the province is the transfer of information from one generation to the next, and that's provided by the teachers. For this government to pass or to attempt to pass this legislation is wrong.

I think the best thing to do is to alert all hon. members in this Assembly, Mr. Speaker, about how this is going to destabilize not only collective bargaining in the education sector in this province but also in health care and also in the public service. Now, there are many negotiations going to be coming forward soon, and when a government bargains in bad faith, you're going to have trouble, and the government in this case has been directly participating in education bargaining. Half of the members of this Assembly, I'm sure, have had a look at the e-mail that was sent directly from the Deputy Minister of Learning to various school superintendents and school boards across the province. That, in my view, is direct involvement, certainly the 4 and 2. Now there are people indicating that the 4 and 2 really meant a two-by-four, and that's what the government has hit the teachers with, hit their organization over the head with, a two-by-four, with this bill. We need to remind ourselves of the past, the difficulties there have been in negotiating contracts with health care professionals and with the public service. Now we see this, and I'm afraid the future does not look bright for the collective bargaining sector in this province.

How can anyone rely on this government any longer after the jurisdictional errors that were outlined in the reason for judgment by the Hon. Chief Justice Allan Wachowich, the jurisdictional errors that were described, and I would encourage all hon. members of this Assembly to read that decision. There was a great deal of insufficient information, as I understand it, before the Lieutenant Governor in Council. Now, when we think of insufficient information, whatever information there was or whatever information the Department of Learning has before them, in this bill we're no longer going to be able to have access to that. I don't understand why this wouldn't be available for the arbitrators.

Mr. Speaker, privileged information from the Department of Learning should be made available in this case. If we're going to have this imposed arbitration, why not have the government provide information which would be helpful to the arbitrator? Unless there is something to hide. Now, I heard an hon. member snicker. I'm sorry; there is the issue of class size that has to be dealt with, and there is the issue of the maximum amount of time a teacher may be required to instruct students. These are all outstanding issues. Now, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods has certainly in a very determined and dignified manner brought this whole issue of class size not only before this Assembly but through all of the school districts in the province, and people are well aware. Whether this government wants to recognize it or not, it is an issue with parents, and it's an issue with the teaching professionals.

When we think of fair labour relations, we only have to look, Mr. Speaker, at the preamble of our own Labour Relations Code. This is completely forgotten in this bill. The individuals who were responsible for the drafting of this legislation certainly did not take into consideration the preamble of the Labour Relations Code, and for all hon. members in this Assembly I would like to bring them some familiarity with it. I would encourage you to please read this. The preamble talks about "a mutually effective relationship between employees and employers" and how critical it is so that Alberta will "prosper in the competitive world-wide market economy."

It is fitting that the worth and dignity of all Albertans be recognized by the Legislature of Alberta through legislation that encourages fair and equitable resolution of matters arising in respect of terms and conditions of employment.

Bill 12 is not respectful of that preamble.

Whereas the employee-employer relationship is based on a common interest in the success of the employing organization, best recognized through open and honest communication between affected parties . . .

In this whole series of negotiations in my view the government has not conducted itself in that described term.

Now we look further and we see other examples that could be very well used by the government. The hon. Minister of Justice said earlier in this house – and I'm afraid it is just not true what the minister stated regarding the definition of "strike" in comparison with the definition that's in Bill 12 and the definition that's in the Labour Relations Code. They're very different, and I believe the words used to describe it by the hon. minister were: an overly aggressive interpretation. That was the description that was provided by the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

One important point that the hon. minister did not clarify for the Assembly is the fact that in Bill 12 a strike is “a concerted activity by 2 or more employees to refuse to comply with responsibilities assigned by their principal or their employer.” The section in the Labour Relations Code is much longer, to start with, and there’s no mention of the school principal in that definition. I can only conclude from this, and I say this with reluctance, that it’ll probably – time permitting, it could take five years – wind up as a court challenge finally in the Supreme Court. But of course we know, hopefully, that this bill will reach its natural life at the end of the summer of 2003.

But that is not true, and what this does is try to divide the ATA. This government has been trying to divide the ATA for years. I can’t understand why this government can’t be friends with the teachers of this province. Why do you always try to provoke the teachers? The principals and the teachers want to belong to the same bargaining group, or they want to belong to the same professional organization, and that is how it should be. This is divisive. This is very divisive, and it only brings me, Mr. Speaker, to this conclusion, and that is that it is another example of this government’s provocation of the teaching profession.

We all know that in April of 1999 a recommendation came from the Progressive Conservative policy convention that wanted to make teachers an essential service. I can only conclude from what has gone on in the last six months with these so-called negotiations that this lack of attention to detail with our public teachers across this province is because we want to provoke the public and have the public get upset with the teachers. I don’t think that we should put our parents or the province’s pupils after the policies of our respective political parties. Pupils and parents, Mr. Speaker, should come first.

Now, I go further through this document, and I don’t know where to stop in the 15 minutes. I sure wish I had 20 minutes, Mr. Speaker, but I only have 15 with the new rules in this Assembly. The schedule at the back – and the only reference in this bill to the schedule at the back is, of course, in the definition of “employer,” and that’s in 1(1)(d): “‘employer’ means an employer named in the Schedule.”

Now, when you see the list of school districts that were involved in the original back-to-work law that was struck down in the courts, the order in council, we have 20 districts, but in the schedule here I believe we have 45 school districts. So with one broad sweep of the broom we have put 25 districts in this schedule, and we have extended beyond the 22 districts to include the following, and I’m not going to name them in the interest of time.

My question to the government would be this. I’ve heard in the last six months that we support local bargaining. Well, why don’t you support local bargaining with these 26 districts? Why did you sweep them into this bill? Why did you not allow them to try to work out their difficulties among themselves? We all know that the best collective agreement is the one that’s mutually agreed to by both parties, not one forcing its wishes on the other. That’s what stable labour relations are all about, Mr. Speaker. This schedule: why would we do this? If you were having difficulty with the 22 districts that are listed in Chief Justice Wachowich’s decision, well that’s fine, but why add so many more?

There are over 25,000 teachers involved in this schedule and over 440,000 pupils. We can’t take democracy . . . [Mr. MacDonald’s speaking time expired]

THE SPEAKER: Thank you, hon. member. Under Standing Order

29 the Minister of Learning, followed by the hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

DR. OBERG: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Very quickly, is the hon. member aware that any local school board together with their local Alberta Teachers’ Association is able to have a letter of understanding, a memorandum of understanding, or a side agreement to the collective bargaining process which enables them to put in PTR, class size, hours of instruction: anything that they want. Is the member aware of that?

MR. MacDONALD: Yes.

MR. VANDERBURG: Mr. Speaker, I think the member is trying to mislead the public when he compares the legislation in front of us here tonight to the issues that happened in Germany some 60 to 70 years ago. My family lived through those times. The crimes against my family because of the acts of the day of the German government were very serious. You’ve insulted me, and you’ve insulted my family. You should be ashamed of yourself.

MR. MacDONALD: Mr. Speaker, I would remind the hon. member that in 1997 in this province in Fort McMurray the hon. Premier said this: I believe in free speech as long as you say the right thing.

Thank you.

MR. HORNER: Mr. Speaker, the hon. Minister of Learning has already mentioned that local bargaining units can bargain, can negotiate all of the items which the opposition is saying are not included in this binding arbitration, yet his only response was, “Yes.” There’s nothing that stops them from negotiating all of these other areas and side agreements.

MR. MacDONALD: Mr. Speaker, in response to the hon. member’s question I would advise him to please read section 38 of this bill, which is essentially an invitation to refuse to ratify collective agreements.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member in his comments went off on some remarks I had made to an earlier speaker with respect to the definition of “strike,” and he’s right: I didn’t read in the last part of that definition in Bill 11 because the last part of that definition in Bill 11 had not been referred to by earlier speakers. They had been specifically focusing on the part about the refusal to work by two or more employees and saying that that was not allowing two teachers to get together and talk, which is blatantly wrong.

MR. MacDONALD: Mr. Speaker, I’m sorry. I didn’t understand the question because I believe the hon. minister was confused between Bill 11 and Bill 12.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview to continue with second reading.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There have been many fine points made by my colleagues through this debate in the last several hours, and some of them I would like to reiterate or reinforce, and perhaps I’ll be able to find some points of my own to bring into this that have not yet been considered. I was here listening when the minister of education introduced the bill and indicated that he felt, I think, that all MLAs would agree that it would have been better to settle this labour dispute through negotiations. I'm sure he's right: we would all agree with that.

Today marks the first year that I've been an MLA. I go back through the first budget that we debated in this House, the first budget that I was involved in debate with, and one of the things that was immediately brought to my attention was this special line item that singled out schoolteachers for salary increases for the next two years, the now well-known 4 percent and 2 percent. There was a lot of debate over that. Why were teachers singled out and social workers or MLAs or nurses and anybody else not singled out? I watched and participated and probably wasn't fully aware at the time of the significance of that particular note in the budget, but what it serves to do for me is to bring to my attention how inflexible this government has been in its supposed negotiations in the education sector.

A year ago the teachers, as I understood it, were making requests or noises about wanting a settlement in the range of 20 or 22 percent or something, but we have seen them back away from that position. We've actually seen settlements in the range of 11 percent. The teachers have compromised. The teachers have shown a signal that they are willing to move. Yet we stand here today without any movement at all on the offer that's being presented to fund teachers' raises. So when I listen to the Minister of Learning talk about the importance of negotiations and how nice it would have been to settle this whole episode through negotiations, I can't help but think that there never really was a possibility of this being settled through negotiations, because I have seen no sign of good faith or meaningful negotiating occurring on the part of this government. So right away when I saw the minister introduce the bill, I found I had to disagree with his perspective on it.

If we go through the bill section by section – and a number of us have done so – I think it is worth really dwelling on a handful of particular points. Section 1(1)(f)(iii), on page 4, says that “a concerted activity by 2 or more employees to refuse to comply with responsibilities assigned by their principal or their employer” constitutes a strike. I, for one, find that to be a heavy-handed and very restrictive statement to put into law. If we are talking here about two teachers working together or discussing the possibilities of what to do next in their labour disputes, I think we are intruding too far into the rights of respected professionals in this province and into the rights of teachers. I do reflect on the comments from the hon. Leader of the Opposition that it's curious how one-sided this bill is in that it doesn't apply that sort of restriction to anybody else involved in the negotiating process, simply to the teachers.

I also am concerned – and I think it reveals much about the intent of the government – when they talk here under matters to be considered in regards to the arbitration and the bill says, “The arbitration tribunal must be satisfied that an award can be implemented without an employer incurring a deficit.” Well, given that in all meaningful ways this government determines whether or not an employer will incur a deficit, this again seems like a derailing of any possibility of meaningful negotiations or negotiations in good faith with the teachers. It seems more and more to look like a setup for confrontation to me.

We could go on, section by section. The limit on contents of the collective agreement specifically prohibits the collective agreement, as I understand it, from addressing issues such as “the number of students in a class” or “pupil-to-teacher ratios” or “the maximum time a teacher may be required to instruct students.” Surely these are reasonable things to be negotiating over. These are working conditions. What kind of arbitration or what kind of negotiation are we looking at when those kinds of issues are forbidden from the process by law?

So there are many specifics in this bill that are, I think, simply unacceptable, but we all know that, of course, this stage of the debate is to address principles. So let's go and look at some of the principles behind this legislation.

One of the principles, it seems to me, is the centralization of power. We are seeing a continuation of the ongoing process, that has driven this government for now many years, of bringing power into its hands, removing power from, for example, local property tax payers, people who are now expected to pay property taxes to cover education but have had their right to have any direct say over that removed. That money is taken away from the local property tax payer, comes into this government's coffers, not into the school boards' coffers, and then is redistributed at the whim of this government. So we are seeing there a centralization of power.

School boards, I don't think in anybody's mind, have anywhere near the local power that they once had or the local power indeed that they were intended to have when they were created. One of the principles that's very much at work here is centralization of power. Along with that, of course, there's a loss of local control. No school board here in this province really has the local control it needs, and certainly that local control is being diminished by this bill. I mean, these are boards now that will not be allowed to run any deficits. They will not be allowed to negotiate on particular and legitimate issues over working conditions. There is no true local leeway for the school boards. So we are seeing an erosion of the fundamentals of democracy, which is the right of people to control their own local lives.

We're also seeing here an ongoing principle, a tactic, perhaps – it's not a principle, or it stems from the principle of centralizing power – which is setting up a political buffer between this government and the issues, in this case creating a buffer out of the school boards. We've seen this sort of thing done over and over with, for example, children's authorities and regional health authorities and any number of other boards. I was discussing earlier today that this very issue was brought to my attention by a coalition of people around PDD boards. They ask: what's the point of the board? Well, the point of the board, it seems to all observers, is simply to be a buffer, to be a shock absorber between the real people of this province and the government. That is exactly what we are seeing here occurring, being foisted upon our local school boards, organizations that once had the heart and soul of the local community and now are no more than political buffers for this government.

Well, of course, we're seeing a suspension of the teachers' right to strike temporarily over the next 18 months or so in this bill, and I think we need to all be concerned that that is a development that may easily be renewed once it's implemented in this legislation. Maybe we'll be debating a bill a year from now to extend that suspension of a reasonable right to strike.

This bill, of course, ties the hands of arbitrators in many ways, as I have indicated, and I might as well . . . Oh, he's not here. I won't anticipate the question from the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

The arbitrator's ability to address this issue is very limited. All kinds of issues, as I've said, are no longer on the table, so what are we doing there to the collective bargaining process? We are weakening it. We are delegitimizing it. I'll talk later on during committee about the effects of this, I believe, on the whole collective bargaining process.

Finally, I'm concerned here about a principle of union-breaking, a principle of hostility towards unions. I stand here today not as a member of any union. In fact, very seldom in my life have I ever been a member of a union, but I value unions, and I think we should all value unions. Over the last century unions have been vital in many of the advances that we consider civilizing improvements in our society. Whether it's reasonable working hours, whether it's worker safety or public education itself, those are all benefits to our society that have been brought forward largely through the efforts of unions. So I value unions, and I'm concerned in a province where unions already are in many ways relegated to a very minor status, but if we weaken them further we ultimately weaken the strengths of the ordinary citizens, of the working people of this province. That's a principle that I think is unworthy, and it's a trend in this government that I think is very worrisome.

Mr. Speaker, with those comments I'll take my seat. I'll save further comments for undoubtedly lively debate during committee.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

MR. SNELGROVE: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm wondering: would the hon. member support a return to local taxation for schools, where we have the incredibly wealthy boards like Strathcona and Fort Saskatchewan being able to operate schools at a very high level as opposed to some of the poorer rural boards?

DR. TAFT: Mr. Speaker, when the first question was brought to me under 29(2), I indicated that I felt there were plenty of opportunities already existing for this kind of debate. I would engage that sort of question in committee, but I'm not going to participate in 29(2).

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

REV. ABBOTT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm just wondering why the hon. member opposite is refusing to participate in the standing rules. Why are these standing rules any different than the standing rules that we had last session that he participated in, and why are they any different from his Liberal cousins' in Ottawa, who have this very same provision?

DR. TAFT: He should know the answer.

THE SPEAKER: Standing Order 29 permits for two things: the raising of questions and the making of comments.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I was pleased to hear the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview talk about the tremendous contribution that unions have made to western society and also to Alberta, and I wonder if he could elaborate on many of the achievements that unions have provided to our modern society.

THE SPEAKER: Additional comments, questions? The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

REV. ABBOTT: I just think it's a sad day for democracy, Mr. Speaker, when we have members that were elected to this House that refuse to speak under the very Standing Orders that we have as a House passed.

MS CARLSON: Mr. Speaker, this provision, Standing Order 29(2), allows for comments, and it is certainly within the purview of any member of this Assembly to refuse to continue to support a Standing Order change that we did not support in the beginning.

MR. MASON: I would like to make a comment with respect to this. There is nothing in the Standing Orders which makes the answering of questions compulsory. There are no rules around it with respect to this as there are some rules with respect to the formal question period part of the Assembly. You know, if members opposite are experiencing frustration when they don't get their questions answered, welcome to the club.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The member who just spoke made reference to the negotiating table, and he then made reference to the role of the government. My question is very direct to him. Does he know who the parties are who sit at the negotiating table?

THE SPEAKER: No additional questions, hon. members? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Again, it's a pleasure to rise this evening and to speak to Bill 12, the Education Services Settlement Act. It is quite surprising, it being the first substantive bill that we've had to deal with in the Legislature this year.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. member, please, can I do the really terrible thing by interfering and asking if I could have the indulgence of the hon. member to revert to introductions? Four speakers ago I was supposed to do this, but I kept recognizing a certain hon. member, and he kept asking questions. So would that be permissible with the Assembly if I revert to introductions? The time will be awarded back.

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

MR. HORNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I don't recall you asking for reverting to introductions before, but that's okay.

Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a constituent, Lori Benner, who is a school trustee with the Parkland school division and is very interested, obviously, in our debate this evening. I would ask her to rise – she's seated in the public gallery – and receive the warm traditional welcome of this House.

head: Government Bills and Orders
Second Reading

Bill 12
Education Services Settlement Act

THE SPEAKER: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry, my apologies. Please continue.

MR. BONNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will continue here. It is a pleasure to rise to speak at this time to what I believe are the principles that Albertans are indeed desirous of, and that is that we as a government bring integrity to the table during negotiations. Albertans realize that for harmony to exist after settlements in contract negotiations, each side must believe that the process was fair and honest, that both sides were willing to work together to resolve the issues, and that compromise would be required by all parties. Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, we see, as a result of that process not being followed, Bill 12. Bill 12 is a piece of legislation that I certainly cannot support.

AN HON. MEMBER: Is that a quote?

MR. BONNER: No. That was not a quote. Those were my own words.

I also noticed under Government Motions on the Order Paper, day 9, by the hon. Government House Leader: "Be it resolved that, pursuant to Standing Order 73(2), Bill 12, Education Services Settlement Act, may be advanced two or more stages in one day." Now, Mr. Speaker, on this particular point it gives me the whole idea and the evidence that the government is finding it very, very difficult to defend this particular bill in the format in which it is written. Anytime that we have to bring in a time-allocating device, such as a guillotine, to limit or end debate, particularly before we've even had an opportunity to start debate on a bill, then I think we have serious problems with that bill. When we listen to the comments of many of the members who have taken the opportunity to speak, we certainly do see that this bill is quite controversial.

Earlier this evening I had the opportunity to attend a science fair at Scott Robertson elementary school in the constituency of Edmonton-Glengarry, and I must say that I've had the pleasure and the privilege of attending those science fairs for the past five years. It was five years ago that the now principal, Terry McPherson, and a young teacher by the name of Linda Spielman came into this school, and together they thought it would be a good idea to have these science fairs. Now, then, before Mr. McPherson came into the school, all of the extra assignments, extracurricular activities in the school were assigned. His comments tonight were that the job got done but that it didn't get done very well.

In the five years that I've been attending these science fairs, I have noticed an incredible increase in the quality of the projects by the students. I've noticed an incredible amount of effort put in by the students. The participation by families at this event, Mr. Speaker, is incredible. This is what I think the hon. Lieutenant Governor meant when she read in the Speech from the Throne:

The government believes there is a great deal of goodwill on all sides. This goodwill guarantees that the long-term health of the public education system will be protected. Educators will be key to that long-term health.

Mr. Speaker, in talking with that particular principal tonight, he certainly was quite fearful of his role in this particular bill. He was quite fearful of that goodwill being maintained by teachers to participate in extracurricular activities, to walk that extra mile, that they've done so well. It always amazes me in this House how we will tell educators of the magnificent job they are doing, that when our students compete against other provinces, when our students compete against other countries, we have the best public education system in the world. Yet we are, with pieces of legislation such as Bill 12, tearing apart that education system. Why?

Well, I do want to say as well that the entire process that we now find ourselves in got off to a very bad start when the government made the unprecedented move of including line items in the budget that limited the settlements to 4 and 2 percent. While the Premier indicated at that time that this was only a starting point for negotiations and that it was time for teachers to receive fair compensation that would reflect their sacrifices over the years, his words did not turn into action. This, Mr. Speaker, was at a time when the government was announcing unprecedented surpluses in this province, and we singled out this particular group of people to limit their salaries.

Now, then, the teachers had done their share in helping this government out when times were tough. I happen to have this in my hand here, and the source is Alberta Learning and Statistics Canada. From 1994-95 to 2001-2002 there was an accumulated percentage increase of 15 percent in teachers' salaries. This is by the government's own department. Now, if we look at the period of time that this was taken over, the eight years, we will see that this amount didn't even keep up to inflation. Is it any wonder that teachers are angry?

Now, as well, other conditions have occurred in the classroom over the last few years. We've certainly had the integration of special-needs children. When I was still teaching, Mr. Speaker, I happened to have the opportunity to have the integration of some special-needs students. They certainly do add, in some respects, to the classroom; they certainly do take away in others. I suppose I was one of the very fortunate teachers who had special-needs children in their class because they had a full-time aide. Yet when I speak with teachers in some of the schools in my constituency who have a little higher percentage of special-needs children, they have many, many concerns.

In one particular instance we have a Down's syndrome child in one of the classes that doesn't have an aide. We have a child with ADD who only has an aide half the time. We have children with many special needs who must be tested. Each one of those tests is in the neighbourhood of $600, and of course the school must pay for that. So that certainly takes moneys out of their budget which could be spent for many different educational needs. As well, Mr. Speaker, the school pays for those tests. If that child happens to move to another province or if they get a child in from another province, then that testing does not flow through. What happens is that the testing must be redone. So we have those types of situations that are impacting classroom teachers in this province that we didn't have before we had full integration.

As well, I was quite interested this morning to hear some of the results from the last census. In Alberta we've had a 4 percent growth in population in the last five years. The majority of this growth is in urban areas, and a lot of this is because of an influx of new Canadians. Of course, when we start looking in the classroom at English as a Second Language and trying to help students in this situation, Mr. Speaker, again we put tremendous pressures on schools, and we put tremendous pressures on teachers in the classroom, who are already dealing with many different situations.

So when I see as part of Bill 12 that Bill 12 will limit the scope of the arbitrators of the collective agreements to salaries only, what I find disturbing is that when we talk about goodwill, such issues as class sizes, student/teacher ratios, or any other provisions dealing with maximum hours that a teacher may be required to instruct students – this is not a part. Again, I was paying close attention when it was discussed earlier that, yes, this arrangement can be between ATA locals and their school boards, but we are talking about school boards right now, Mr. Speaker, that are strapped for dollars. All of these issues, the issues that do promote goodwill, cost money. As well, we've seen that for school boards that have put some of these conditions into the contract, this has limited their flexibility and at times has cost school boards more money. Certainly these are issues that should be included when we do look at the collective bargaining agreement.

Now, then, Mr. Speaker, this piece of legislation is going to set back education in this province. There is absolutely no way that it will not. For the first time in this province we have had teachers, many teachers, who are upset. I know that for anybody who was teaching in the '60s, '70s, or '80s, if strike was ever mentioned in the classroom, you would have a group of teachers who would absolutely refuse to go on strike. You would have teachers who would absolutely say that no matter what other people did, they were going to be in the classroom with those students. Unfortunately, when strike votes were taken around this province, that support for the students had been eroded. We have outlined a number of reasons here this evening as to why that support was eroded. We have looked at reasons why we are now in an adversarial position, why we don't have a position where there's co-operation. I know that this bill is not going to help the situations in schools, that this is a further hindrance.

I know that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview certainly talked about union-breaking. I would have to say that when we get an adversarial position, we are looking at union-breaking. Many of the MLAs that just celebrated their fifth anniversary here a day or so ago will certainly remember that shortly after we were elected in '97, there was a situation at Gainers.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, for this opportunity.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, Standing Order 29. The hon. Member for Medicine Hat.

MR. RENNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've listened intently to the remarks by the member, and I heard him bring something up which I've heard before brought up by other members, and it has to do with reference to surpluses and the government could have spent surpluses on teachers and teachers' salaries. I'd just like to ask the member how it is that he would propose that ongoing salaries would be accommodated by onetime surpluses.

MR. BONNER: Mr. Speaker, one of the great difficulties that this government has had is certainly how to deal with our roller-coaster economy in this province. We do need predictable, stable, sustainable funding for all programs, and by implementing a fiscal stability fund as proposed by the hon. leader of our party, this could be accomplished.

Thank you.

THE CHAIR: I'd call Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 12 Education Services Settlement Act

THE CHAIR: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I am pleased to have the opportunity to look at Bill 12 in more detail after we had an examination of the principles of the bill earlier this afternoon. Where I'd like to start, of course, is with the preamble. It's a preamble that puts in place a commitment to examine the learning system in Alberta. This is one of the very first bills that our party under Laurence Decore put to the Assembly in 1993 and 1994. The kind of commission that we had in mind at that time was a much more comprehensive look at schools and schooling in the province than what is proposed here. This is much narrower, and I don't think it in any way is going to serve to make the public or the teachers feel better about Bill 12.

It is an examination. We need an examination of the school system top to bottom, and that has to include everything, and I mean everything, Mr. Chairman, including and most particularly the adequacy of funding and how the kinds of funding that schools receive is determined. It seems to most people involved that there is no rhyme or reason to the kinds of funds that are allocated to a school. Depending on the economic climate in the province, the percentage increase is jacked up a few percentage points, and when things turn sour in the market, that percentage becomes less.

There are a number of things that such a commission would have to look at: the objectives of our schools, what we expect from them, what kinds of priorities should be emphasized in our schools. But along with those goals the resources and the means of achieving those goals have to be included. Given the kind of climate that the government has created, this is going to take an extraordinary individual or group of individuals to head up, and it's going to have to be people who have the absolute confidence of teachers who have been so wronged and are so wronged by the contents of Bill 12.

The preamble and even naming it as a preamble, Mr. Chairman, I think relegates it to a minor position. Also, the kinds of items that are listed under it are much narrower than the kind of examination the school district and the parents that I hear from want and the teachers that I hear from absolutely need.

So it's there. It has no time lines attached. You can think right now in the present situation that if such a commission were appointed – I think I heard earlier that there wouldn't be any action on it till the fall. If the commission were to meet for 18 or 24 months, that's another two years. Before anything could be acted upon, it would be two and a half, three years, and I don't think that's going to be very useful in trying to solve the present situation or do anything to dissipate the kinds of problems that Bill 12 is going to visit on the system.

I'd like to look at the section on definitions, Mr. Chairman. One of the very first calls I got this morning was from a principal, and that principal was upset about the definitions and how Bill 12 defines a strike. The bill says that a strike includes, one, "a cessation of work" – so if teachers stop working, that's a strike – two, "a refusal to work or to continue to work by 2 or more employees acting in combination or in concert or in accordance with a common understanding." So if two teachers are sitting in the faculty lounge and decide that they aren't going to take their youngsters on a field trip this year, on a visit to the museum, that can be considered a strike under this definition.

Further, the third definition goes on to say, "A concerted activity by 2 or more employees to refuse to comply with responsibilities assigned by their principal or their employer." One of the very first things the principal said to me is: this divides principals from their staff; they're inserting a clause that is going to make it difficult for that kind of collegial attitude that we have in our schools to operate; it's going to pit teachers against principals. Secondly, "2 or more employees": two or more teachers in a concerted activity can constitute a strike because they don't want to do what the principal says. I remember having great arguments with a principal, Mr. Chairman, about holding a spring concert and the whole staff in revolt and voting against it. We didn't want it. Under this clause, if that would happen in a school, it would be considered a strike. Not only would it be considered a strike, but later on in Bill 12 there would be a whole series of fines levied. "A person who is neither the ATA nor an officer or representative of the ATA who strikes or causes a strike contrary to this Act is guilty of an offence and liable to a fine not exceeding $1000." So those teachers sitting in the faculty lounge deciding not to take their youngsters on a field trip could under this kind of definition be accused of striking.

The Government House Leader tried to tell the Assembly that that's exactly the same language that appears in the labour act, and that's not correct, Mr. Chairman. Under the labour act the clause goes on to say that they have to be meeting for a purpose to compel "their employer or an employers' organization to agree to terms or conditions of employment." So that meeting has to be to coerce the employer, and that's absent from this. This stands alone, and it's an incredible piece of legislation. As I said, it was one of the very first things I heard in a phone call from a principal from rural Alberta about his concerns.

It points out, I think, that another important aspect of the legislation is that it's not that reader friendly. This is legislation that applies to 32,000 teachers, to school boards across the province, yet you're going to have to have legal advice in terms of how it's to be interpreted, and I'm sure one of the very first things that the Teachers' Association is going to do is put out a companion piece from their legal staff saying: this is what this bill really means. I think that's unfortunate, and I think it attests to the hasty manner in which this bill was crafted and put together over the weekend. I think the mere fact that the Government House Leader didn't understand the clauses and how they could be interpreted or misinterpreted is evidence of that, Mr. Chairman.

I'd like to move from those definitions and look at section 4, and section 4 is really a very heavy-handed section. These are referring to the appointments to the tribunal. It says:

If in the opinion of the Minister of Human Resources and Employment a member of the arbitration tribunal is unduly or unnecessarily delaying proceedings, the Minister may

- (a) revoke the appointment of the member, and
- (b) appoint another person . . .

So individuals appointed to these arbitration tribunals are going to be working under the heavy threat of the minister. If things aren't moving fast enough, if he doesn't like the way things are going, you're gone. "I'll get someone else to fill your place." I think it's going to make getting qualified people to serve on these tribunals a real challenge. Who's going to want to be an arbitrator and who's going to want to sit on a tribunal when they're placed under that kind of an axe by the legislation? Again, completely unnecessary in terms of trying to resolve the dispute.

I'd like to move on now to section 6(1) and the kind of criteria that have been laid on the tribunal, and this is one of the most offensive parts of the legislation. It's the part that coerces the tribunal to work in a particular manner in terms of determining what the wage settlements should be, and it enumerates the kinds of things that they have to look at. They have to look at "wages and benefits in private and public, and unionized and non-unionized, employment, including the wages and benefits of teachers in other provinces and territories of Canada." So the tribunal has to look across the country and see what other teachers are being paid. I suspect, Mr. Chairman, that a rather punitive tribunal could actually sit down and also look at private school teachers' salaries and determine those private teachers' salaries, which are usually in this province 30 to 40 percent less than those being paid in the public system, and justify an award or the decision they make based on the salaries and the salary increases that are being paid in the private schools.

It's interesting what's left out of it, where they aren't to look. It doesn't tell them to look at settlements in other sectors. It doesn't tell them to look at the double-digit settlements that medical doctors in the province received. It doesn't tell them to look at the double-digit settlements that the nurses received. No. It excludes those and confines itself to other public entities and to looking at factors like layoffs and working hours, et cetera. The whole section is designed to constrain and to make sure that the awards are minimal, and it may as well have come out and said that in plain language: make sure that whatever you award, it's the least you possibly have to, and use any kind of justification that you can find to make that award small. So it's a reprehensible section of the act, and again I think it just shows the depth to which the government will stoop to penalize teachers and poison the atmosphere in schools.

I look further on in the section. One of the other things that they have to consider is "the local economic conditions within the geographic [region] of the dispute." That is what has usually occurred in local negotiations, and the strength of local negotiations, Mr. Chairman, is that they have been able to look at local conditions. We had a group of teachers in to visit us from Fort McMurray, where the costs for accommodation are extremely, extremely high. It makes you wonder about the kinds of awards that are going to be made in Fort McMurray when the boards up there lack resources and the teachers are being faced with skyrocketing costs. We were told by this group of teachers that it's impossible for a beginning teacher to come to Fort McMurray and live alone in an apartment. The costs are such that the teaching salaries just don't accommodate that kind of expense. Again, this tribunal is going to be doing everything it can to make sure that only minimal gains are made by those teachers, and even with this kind of provision in the law they're going to have a very difficult time adjusting their awards to the local conditions.

I mentioned the business of looking at private schools. I'm amazed that it didn't actually make it into the act, Mr. Chairman. It may again speak to the hurry with which the bill was put together. Section 6(2) I think is also a rather interesting provision. It says:

The arbitration tribunal must be satisfied that an award can be implemented without an employer incurring a deficit, or if the employer already has a deficit, without incurring any greater deficit, over the period during which the collective agreement has effect.

Mr. Chairman, this just leads to bad practice by boards. When I was on the school board in Edmonton, we had to come to grips with this. Previously, boards hid money in budgets to accommodate teacher increases, and it was buried all over the place, as I say, hidden so that should there be a contract agreed to with teachers, the board could then dig the money out of these hidden places and accommodate the raise.

When I was on the board, we decided we wouldn't do that. We decided that if we made settlements that were above the budget that had been determined, we would go into deficit and we would pick up that deficit the next year. With that, we opened the books to the Teachers' Association and the other groups that we negotiated with and said: "Look, here is where the money is; this is what we're spending. If we make an award, we're going to go into deficit." That was fine because that was open and it was accountable. I think everyone understood it, and it made sense. This doesn't allow that kind of openness to occur in negotiations.

I'm going through rather quickly. Another concern we have with this particular clause is the kind of on-again, off-again financing that government ministries receive. We've had the example in Children's Services of a budget being set, of people going out and contracting with individuals and then, lo and behold, two-thirds through the fiscal year the minister turning around and saying: now I need 1 percent back from everyone. Well, what's to prevent that same thing happening or, even worse, the boards saying at the negotiations: we're going to have to hold back a chunk of money in case the government changes its mind and comes after us for some money because they've mishandled the budget again. So it's a bad clause in a bad bill, Mr. Chairman.

I'd like to move to the judicial review. The legal language aside, Mr. Chairman, as I interpret this – and I stand to be corrected – really these clauses, particularly 13(1) and 13(2), severely constrain what can be challenged in the judgment of a tribunal. There are really going to be very, very limited conditions under which a group that has been offended by a tribunal judgment or decision can go to the courts and seek redress. Again, it speaks to the punitive measures in this legislation, and that's just completely unacceptable.

I have some further comments, but I think at this time, Mr. Chairman, I'll conclude and go on to those at a further time in the committee. Thank you.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. I've read through all of the e-mails and letters that I've received around this whole issue, which has now culminated in the presentation of Bill 12, the Education Services Settlement Act. So in Committee of the Whole, which gives me an opportunity to go clause by clause or to comment on particular words or phrases, I'd like to review some of the points that were brought out. In particular what caught my eye again was the preamble. It's specifically setting out what cannot be considered, and I think that the exclusion of these particular areas is important.

The preamble is talking about "a commitment to examine the learning system in Alberta." It then talks about that this "commitment to examine" will include, but not be limited to, a study of the number of students in a class, pupil-to-teacher ratios and the maximum time a teacher may be required to instruct students enrolled in Kindergarten to Grade 12.

Now, that's an interesting one too; I've got to come back on that one.

Therefore these items should not be the subject of further negotiation or included in a collective agreement between the employers subject to this Act.

It's the exclusion of the discussion of those working conditions from this legislation and from what's being perceived by many as a legislation that takes away the right to strike. It's also taking away the teachers' ability to negotiate for their working conditions. It's exactly things like the pupil/teacher ratio that is part of their working conditions.

It strikes me that the government is trying to have its cake and eat it too in this particular circumstance. They want highly educated, motivated, experienced, high-performing teachers, but they don't seem to want to allow the teachers to have any say in their working conditions. I'm struggling to believe that the issues of salary and working conditions can be severed, and I don't think they should be severed.

My colleagues have spoken eloquently about the government's attitude towards unions. I attempted to but was not nearly as articulate as what I heard my colleagues from Edmonton-Riverview and Edmonton-Glengarry talk about. I think that taking people's right to strike or limiting what a dispute resolution is about does take away people's ability to negotiate their working conditions on a daily basis. The alternative to a collective bargaining process is to have the government or the government through the Alberta School Boards Association negotiate with every single teacher individually. Obviously, that's not an attractive proposition for the government. It's much more convenient that there's a large group of people that a deal could be struck with, and that's the end of it.

It has to be a fair process. If you're going to say, "You can't talk about how much money you're going to make," well, then you have to offer people a reasonable salary. If you're going to say, "You can't talk about the working conditions that you have," then those working conditions have got to be reasonable enough that nobody is going to want to talk about them or feel they have the need to talk about them.

As I went over those letters and e-mails and messages from phone calls in that file, a file about three inches thick now, a number of issues were brought up repeatedly by the people that were contacting me. Over a hundred of the contacts that I had, about a third of them, were from my own constituents, and the others were copies of correspondence from people living in other constituencies. A couple of themes emerged, repeatedly talking about young teachers leaving the profession and not coming back, taking their BEs and going away and working in another sector with them. As I mentioned in my debate during second reading, I think this should be a cause of real concern for us because we already know that we've got an aging workforce. We know we need young, vital people coming in, and the fact that we are scaring them away or making it unattractive for young entrants into the teaching workforce I think should be of real concern for us.

Another issue that's raised repeatedly is teachers paying for class resources from their own pocket. Unfortunately, I can remember my mother doing this, I can remember my aunts doing this, and now I read that teachers are still doing it, although it even looks to my eye like they're doing more of it, that they're paying more money out of their pocket for resources for the classroom. I know that the minister has said that that's not happening, but there's a disconnect many times between what this government says is happening and what we actually see in the classrooms. One woman said she'd just spent $350 out of her own pocket. I believe her. I can believe that, knowing the kind of money that my mother and my aunts and even my grandmother spent. Yeah, 350 bucks; it's easy to see.

Another theme that continually comes up is the need for parent fund-raising. In my schools in Edmonton-Centre, inner-city schools, the parents of the children there are immigrants or new Canadians. For the most part, they're working several minimum-wage jobs. There is no option of parent fund-raising there. They are working. So in fact the fund-raising that's done in my schools in Edmonton-Centre is done by the teachers. They run the fund-raisers; they raise the additional money.

Again another theme repeatedly raised is class size and how difficult it is to provide a quality experience and a consistent amount of time with each child in a class when the class size is too large. There's been much said about ratios and targets and all kinds of other things. I think the point, then, that really needs to be underlined is that we have to address that in some way, shape, or form. I would prefer a target. If it has to be firmer than that, okay; fine. To not address it is to allow things to get to a point where it is now, which I think is a problem.

Another theme that comes up is the lack of teacher aides or support for teachers in the classrooms when they're dealing with special-needs kids, mild- and moderate-needs kids, and with behaviour-challenged children in the class. I know when I went to school, I was in some very large classes.

DR. TAFT: Were you behaviour challenged?

MS BLAKEMAN: No. Yeah, I probably was behaviour challenged.

I was coming through in classes where there were, like, 36 in a cohort that I sort of traveled through elementary school with. That's a very large class, but there were no special-needs kids in those classes. There were no behaviour-challenged kids except, as my colleague from Edmonton-Riverview says, probably me. That's interesting because there are three MLAs that went through those schools, and they are all now in the Official Opposition, three good Liberals. I'm speaking of my colleagues from Edmonton-Ellerslie and Edmonton-Riverview and myself.

I'm sure it must have been difficult for those teachers dealing with a class of 36, but impossible to deal with a class of 36 that included special-needs kids, that included integrated kids that were coming in with handicaps or with developmental disabilities. No English as a Second Language kids. So in our open-heartedness and our desire to be inclusive, we've created a situation that requires support, and I think it's really unfair that we expect teachers to operate in large classes – 25, 27, whatever – having to deal with a number of kids that require an additional amount of attention, both for those kids and for the kids that didn't require special attention. They need a certain amount of time as well.

The final theme that came up over and over again as I went through all of those e-mails and phone messages and letters was the working conditions of the teachers.

I felt it was important that I put on the record those issues that people kept raising. You know, some of those letters are dated as far back as last spring. June 24 is one date I remember when teachers were starting to write and say: "You know, I'm really concerned about what's happening here. We need help. We need support. We need appreciation. We need respect for what we're trying to do here." I think my comments, when I was speaking in second reading, about a lack of respect for the workers and the professionals in our province are really coming home to roost with us.

This government does seem to struggle with respecting people that work for a union, and I think that's wrong. I'm not a member of a union, but I certainly have a lot of respect for what they bring to our province and in fact some of the things that they've insisted on. I think if we trace it back, we'll find out that public education was something that was lobbied for by the unions. They wanted to see publicly funded, public education. Prior to that, education was privately funded. You could send a kid to a privately funded school. There was no public education system that was available for any kid to go to. That was brought to us as a result of lobbying from the worker class, the people that were involved in the unions, and I thank them for that. I don't think they should be reviled for the work that they do in this province. I think they should be respected for it, and I'm certainly willing to give them that respect.

So I wanted to make sure the comments and the themes of the concerns of all of those people who had so faithfully written to me and, I'm sure, to others and phoned in and sent letters got incorporated into this debate. Alberta is not a province where people get really involved. You know, I look up at the public galleries right now. I can't see into the members' gallery, but I don't think there's anybody up there. [interjection] No. I'm being told it's empty. So we've been joined by a few very hardy souls this evening. There have been a couple that have come in and out tonight. But for a bill that really is going to affect an awful lot of people, not only teachers in the profession but also parents, you know, we don't have anyone here watching what's happening in this debate.

Now, of course, with technology they could all be at home glued to their computer listening to it on live audio, and I hope that that's what happening. All of that is just to underline the point that Alberta is not a province where people jump up and down and get involved in protests very easily, but that doesn't mean that they're not concerned about the fate of education, that in fact they're not concerned about the outcome of this bill. I was impressed by the fact that we had so many letters and e-mails and phone messages from parents, from administrators, from teachers, from business-people, all of them commenting on how important education was, how valuable teachers are, and how much we need to support what they're doing and to respect the collective bargaining process. I know that not many people bother to write, but it's certainly important that we acknowledge their effort and the time they take when they do in fact do it. I wanted to make sure that was honoured, and I'm pleased that I've had the opportunity to do that, Mr. Speaker. I look forward to being able to rise and debate again on this issue.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I will make a range of comments of different types here. One of the things that I think is important for us to consider is the background to this debate, an accurate picture, let's put it that way, of the state of education funding in Alberta today compared to the last 20 years.

I'm looking right now at a graph produced by an accounting professor at the University of Alberta that has adjusted Alberta per student spending on education for inflation. So this gives expenditures per student adjusted for inflation. That allows us to compare these reasonably over a long period of time. This particular graph stretches from 1981 to this year, and it shows that our funding this year is below every single year from 1983 until 1984. There's an 11-year period through the '80s and '90s in which we were spending more on education than we are today. Funding then trailed off very consistently or very considerably through the middle '90s, and then it sort of zigzags its way up a bit to today's level. But what we see there is a deficit in funding, in many regards, or a shortfall in the necessary funding over the last eight years when we compare the last eight years to the preceding 10 or 12 years. The people who have absorbed that reduction in funding are the teachers and the students.

As a result, I think they've carried that far enough, they have reached a breaking point, and the anger that's built up and the frustration that's built up in the education system is now spilling over into the labour dispute that we're seeing today.

When we look more closely at the bill itself, one of the things that really jumped out is the time frame of this bill, the fact that the bill runs through until I believe it's August of 2003. That raises the question: what then? What will we be facing 18 months from now in the education system? I think we can be certain that we'll be facing angry teachers. I predict – and I'm obviously on public record here – that we will be facing a bitter labour disruption 18 months from now in the education system as a result of this legislation that we're bringing in today.

MS BLAKEMAN: You don't think there'll be a huge injection of money and then an election and then they'll take it back?

DR. TAFT: No, I don't.

I think that this bill, that particular clause of the bill and this kind of time frame, sets up a situation that simply delays and inflames the hard feelings that have already developed over the last several years in education.

There are various other aspects of the bill that I think actually directly or indirectly devalue and degrade teachers in relation to other public-sector workers. No other public-sector workers have been forced into this sort of a situation. None of them have been restricted to such limited increases in funding. None of them have been subjected to being itemized in the provincial budget. None of them have been subjected to this kind of legislation, an arbitrary imposition and restrictions on the arbitration tribunal, that the teachers are being subjected to. So I can well understand that an effect of this bill is to make teachers feel devalued and degraded, and I think one effect of that's going to be to discourage new teachers from entering the profession. I think a subsequent effect or related effect is that it's going to dishearten veteran teachers.

The second half of today my constituency office received about 25 phone calls and e-mails, all of which expressed outrage on this particular legislation. I think that reflects the fact that the veteran teachers, parents, and the children in the education system are taking offence to this piece of legislation. I think it's fair to say, in fact, that this legislation does make a sham of any local bargaining process.

We can look at the experience in other sectors to see what this is likely to bring us. We can look to experience in the health sector to see where the education sector is likely to line up. Today we are short of staff in the health care sector. We're searching the continent for nurses, yet we were laying off nurses by the thousands just a few years ago. We are short of all kinds of other health professionals, people who were disheartened and left the province some years ago. I think there's a genuine risk that we're going to see that same pattern repeat itself in the education system. In the health care system the changes that were brought in through regionalization forbid the participation of anybody from the health sector, any doctors or nurses, from influencing them. We are going to see the same thing occur here, where teachers are not being invited to the table to negotiate or to work out the problems. In fact, educators are being frozen out of this process. We are shutting out the very people who work in the system and have the most intimate knowledge of how the system can be improved.

I've made a number of other comments earlier in the evening on this legislation. I will simply end with the question: what's the hurry? Why are we rushing this through? Why are we being forced to fight line by line and clause by clause to buy a few minutes of extra debate on this legislation? The teachers are at work. The students are in school. The system is functioning. We do not need to invoke closure on this bill.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to stand and talk briefly about the general clauses of this bill. I'd like to begin with a series of quotations, and I'm wondering if members opposite can identify who has made these quotations.

The first one, I think, is very interesting and very apt, Mr. Chairman: "Government is not reason; it is not eloquence; it is force. Like fire, it is a dangerous servant and a fearful master." Anybody have any idea who said that?

AN HON. MEMBER: Lenin.

MR. MASON: No, hon. member. It was George Washington, the other famous revolutionary.

Maybe the hon. member will know this one: "If you want peace, work for justice."

AN HON. MEMBER: Stalin.

MR. MASON: No. Pope John Paul II.

Mr. Chairman: "Never do anything against conscience even if the state demands it."

AN HON. MEMBER: Khrushchev.

MR. MASON: No. Albert Einstein.

Mr. Chairman: "One who uses coercion is guilty of deliberate violence. Coercion is inhuman." Mohandas Gandhi.

Mr. Chairman: "There is something within the human spirit that cries for and demands to be treated with basic fairness and justice. When such is violated, peace is undermined. Seeking justice for others is a way to peace." Myron R. Chartier. I've never heard of him either.

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

Mr. Chairman, I want to come to the clauses of the bill. I'm going to be introducing a bit later some additional amendments with respect to this bill, but I want to touch very briefly on them now.

The bill is a collection of steps taken to step on the rights of Alberta's teachers under the guise, Mr. Chairman, of protecting students. In the discussion earlier on second reading we heard people posing the question: are you in favour of the teachers or the children? That is clearly a false dichotomy. That's setting up one against the other. We believe that dealing fairly with teachers, giving them good working conditions, giving them a fair remuneration, and respecting their rights is a key element in a strategy to help Alberta's students, and any member who tries to set the teachers against the students is doing a disservice to both, Mr. Chairman.

This bill contains any number of clauses which are designed to squelch the rights of teachers. Let's begin with section 3 of the bill under part 1, the dispute settlement process. That sets up the establishment of the arbitration tribunal. Now, we know very well,

Mr. Chairman, that normally in an arbitration process between two parties – and the government says that it wants this to be between two parties; that is, the school board and the teachers – both sides appoint a member of the arbitration panel, and those two members jointly select a third neutral party to ensure that the arbitration process is balanced. That is a time-honoured method of choosing an arbitration board, but the government is not doing it in that way.

We're hearing lots of rhetoric from government members and ministers that they are trying to follow the normal process of arbitration here, but it's not so, Mr. Chairman. It's clearly not so. They are going to have three members as per usual, but one will be selected by the teachers, one by the government, and one by the school boards. So one is set by the employer, one is set by the employer's employer, so to speak, and the other one is the teachers. So automatically the teachers are going to be outvoted on a 2 to 1 basis. Not only that, but if anybody gets out of line in the committee, the minister has the power to instantly replace them. So, clearly, the deck is stacked against the teachers in this so-called arbitration process.

That is not enough, however, for this government, Mr. Chairman. They have set a range of things which the arbitration board must consider. This government and this party in power have a long tradition of trying to stack arbitration by forcing them to consider things other than what is a fair remuneration for the work, but in this case the government has gone even farther and they will not allow the arbitration panel to recommend any settlement which might place a local board in a deficit position.

Given the budgetary system established for this round of negotiations, where the money set aside for the increases for teachers is clearly laid out in the budget, it means that in almost every case a demand which exceeds those amounts will place the board into a deficit position. Therefore, indirectly the government is doing what it couldn't do directly, and that is to impose a 4 and 2 regime on Alberta's teachers. So again, Mr. Chairman, we're seeing that the government is stacking the deck. This is section 6(2), and that is going to be the subject of one of our amendments as well.

Now, the next thing that the government has done is to ensure that it has complete control over any information that goes before the arbitration tribunal, especially as it respects government information, and who can appear. It says:

Despite anything in this Act, when a document is in the official possession, custody or power of a member of the Executive Council or of the head of a department of the public service of Alberta, but a deputy head or other officer has the document in the deputy head's or other officer's personal possession and is called as a witness, the deputy head or other officer, acting on the direction and on behalf of the member of the Executive Council or head of a department, is entitled to refuse to produce the document on the ground that it is privileged.

So here we go, Mr. Chairman. The government can withhold any information it wants from the tribunal, which is already stacked with its own appointee, which is already constrained by the limitations on what it can consider and is prohibited from placing any board into a deficit position. Now the government can keep secrets from the tribunal and doesn't have to produce their documents on how they've managed the whole matter with respect to teachers and their salaries.

Now, here's another one, Mr. Chairman, that really concerns us in the New Democrat opposition. Section 23 says that the collective agreement can't deal with

- (a) the number of students in a class;
- (b) pupil-to-teacher ratios or student-to-teacher ratios;
- (c) the maximum time a teacher may be required to instruct students.

Those are normally elements of working conditions and would normally be part of the collective bargaining. Almost in any area we would find that the employees have a right to negotiate their working conditions, and that includes such things as the number of students they have to deal with or the amount of time that they have to spend with them.

So what this really says is that the board can impose any length of instruction that's required, and it can't be arbitrated. Now, we hear informally from the other side that, well, there could be side agreements. I think the Minister of Learning alluded to this earlier today. There could be side agreements to deal with that, but since the arbitration can't deal with it and since they can't strike, what chance do Alberta's teachers have to actually get these things dealt with? I would suggest, Mr. Chairman, that it's between slim and none.

Now, of course, there's the required section ordering teachers back to work and cutting off their right to strike for the duration of this agreement. So, Mr. Chairman, it's very clear that Alberta teachers are being asked to enter these negotiations not with one hand tied behind their back but hog-tied completely, both arms, both legs, hog-tied and delivered up to the slaughter of Bill 12.

So, Mr. Chairman, I would like to, if I may, introduce an amendment, and I will read it as follows. I have copies that can be distributed to the members.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: Hon. member, you will have to give a copy to the table as well as to all the colleagues. If you could just wait for a moment, please.

MR. MASON: Yes, sir.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: Hon. members, an amendment is being moved by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, and we shall refer to this amendment as amendment A1.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much. Mr. Chairman, I move that Bill 12, the Education Services Settlement Act be amended as follows: section 2 is amended by striking out subsection 3, and section 23 is struck out. I'll just speak to that briefly.

Before I begin, though, I notice that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs suggested that we ought to pull our chairs together with the Official Opposition, and it's apparent to me that someone that can't tell a quote from Pope John Paul II from that of Stalin couldn't be expected to tell the difference between New Democrats and Liberals either.

Mr. Chairman, I want to indicate that we have moved this amendment because it restricts the agreement from containing any provision that deals with class sizes, student-to-teacher ratios, or the maximum time a teacher may be required to instruct students. As I've indicated, these matters are clearly matters which affect the working conditions of teachers, and as such they ought to have a right to collectively bargain on these points.

Furthermore, Mr. Chairman, I'd like to indicate that we certainly have recognized that Alberta's teachers have made the quality of education a primary objective of their negotiations from the beginning. I think it's a credit to Alberta's teachers that that has occurred, and I believe that we ought to allow them to continue to negotiate on that basis. The teachers have refused on several occasions to sacrifice the conditions faced by their students in order to obtain a temporary financial advantage for themselves, and again I think that speaks well to Alberta's teachers.

We have heard, Mr. Chairman, and we know that not only do parents actually have to fund-raise in schools for necessities, not withstanding the denials earlier by the Minister of Learning, but that teachers give freely of their own private personal time in order to add extra dimensions to schools, including extracurricular activities, including all sorts of things like sports, drama, and many trips that students and classes sometimes take. We've also learned during this discussion that teachers routinely use their own money to buy classroom supplies which are no longer available because of this government's constant cutbacks.

Mr. Chairman, I want to indicate very strongly that the New Democrat opposition feels that we should not be eliminating these matters from the arbitration process in favour of a vague scheme to study these questions. Given this government's track record, particularly with the Mazankowski report, we have no confidence that those issues will be fairly or adequately dealt with through the process the government has outlined.

With that, Mr. Chairman, I will take my seat and see if any other members wish to speak to this amendment.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, just for clarification purposes, the amendment that has been moved has the signature of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona. For the record, I'm wondering whether you're moving this motion on his behalf or on your own behalf?

MR. MASON: I apologize, Mr. Chairman. Yes, I intended to move it on his behalf.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: Thank you.
The hon. Minister of Learning.

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I will speak to the amendment. Section 23 is a very important part of this act, and this is something that we will be talking about in the summer to fall with regards to our education commission, which is alluded to in the preamble of this act.

I must bring to the attention of the House the other factor in this, and that is that there are presently three boards in the province of Alberta out of the 64 boards that have the maximum time of instruction in their contract, there are two boards that have pupil-to-teacher ratios in their contract, and there's one board that has the student class size within their contract. So I really feel that by taking this out, what we've done is leveled off the playing field for a true discussion of these issues. These are very, very important issues to the future of education and the future of learning in this province. My government has given a commitment to fully investigate these issues, but we have to start off from a level playing field, and that's what's here.

The other thing I will say, Mr. Chair, is that there is absolutely nothing – nothing – stopping the school board and the local ATA, if they feel that PTRs are important, that instructional time is important – if both of them feel that way, they can put in a letter of understanding or a memorandum of understanding to the collective agreement. It is grievable. It is legally binding. It cannot be in the collective agreement, which is what this says.

We are all starting from a level playing field, and I would urge all the members of the Legislature to vote against this amendment.

Time Allocation on Bill 12

16. Mr. Hancock moved:

Be it resolved that when further consideration of Bill 12, Education Services Settlement Act, is resumed, not more than one hour shall be allotted to any further consideration of the bill at Committee of the Whole, at which time every question necessary for the disposal of this stage of the bill shall be put forthwith.

MR. HANCOCK: Mr. Speaker, we've been in committee for more than an hour. I'd understood that there were amendments going to be put forward. Committee is a line-by-line consideration of the bill. After every speaker on the other side finished speaking, they finally moved one amendment. It's obvious that there's no intention to deal with this in a reasonable, straightforward manner. Therefore, it's necessary for us to ask that we move Government Motion 16 and pass it forthwith.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Well, Mr. Speaker, here we go. It's closure already. The first substantive bill. Let the record reflect that government members clapped and applauded for this particular motion, which is a closure motion.

DR. MASSEY: For shame.

MS CARLSON: That's right. For shame on every single member in this Legislature that supports this particular motion.

DR. MASSEY: Because they're overwhelmed by the opposition.

MS CARLSON: They are. I think that's a good point. They are overwhelmed by the opposition. After only one small hour of debate in committee they feel driven to bring in closure on a bill that has yet to be put out to stakeholder groups for their approval.

Mr. Speaker, it's absolutely appalling that this is how they use their heavy-handedness to force legislation through this Assembly, particularly on this bill. What they're doing with this bill is that they take away the right to strike, and now they take away the right to debate. When do we see the potential for closure to be introduced with this particular bill? At every single stage before we've even started to debate the bill. The right to debate is taken away and coincides very well with the taking away of the right to strike and in fact, if we take a look at some of the clauses in this bill, the right to even assemble and discuss and debate.

So, Mr. Speaker, this government, who has this huge majority, is frog-marching this bill through the Assembly as fast as they can. Why? Because they don't want to send it out to stakeholder groups. What would be wrong with doing that? What would be wrong with sending a bill out to community groups, to parent associations, to teachers, to a variety of boards, to the trustees and finding out what they think of it clause by clause so that when they bring a bill in, they bring in a bill that's good and solid and doesn't have the kinds of clauses up for consideration as being questionable at least?

We see that my colleague, when he gets a chance to, before our small hour of debate is up, will be bringing in an amendment that will be dealing with what we think is a clause that does not allow teachers . . .

MR. HANCOCK: He could have done it an hour before.

MS CARLSON: Well, you know what? He couldn't do it in the hour before because it's only one hour and we haven't even had a chance to properly debate the bill in committee, never mind get to the stage where we talk about the amendments, Mr. Speaker. So I would suggest that the Government House Leader is completely incorrect and erroneous in that accusation he has made.

What have we seen in the past in this Legislature when this government frog-marches legislation through? We see mistakes, Mr. Speaker. We see them having to come back to correct legislation through amendments and behind closed doors through regulations. We have seen them withdraw legislation when they've done that in the past, and I would like to remind the Government House Leader of the notwithstanding clause, which turned out to be a huge public relations disaster for them and was absolutely the wrong kind of legislation for them to bring forward, yet to a person on their front bench they agreed and supported it when it came in. When there was a public outcry against it and a swelling of support against that particular bill, they had to make some drastic changes.

For people to be able to take a look at the legislation and bring their feedback into the Assembly and get it through their thick heads that there's something wrong with the legislation takes some time, and that means that we've got to have time to get it out to the community and get it back in. That does not mean that you bring it in at second reading in the afternoon, bring it in committee in the night, the next afternoon we see third reading, and it's over and done with. People don't have that kind of commitment to put towards screening legislation. People have jobs. They've got families. They've got outside commitments. They need time to think about the legislation, to send it out for legal review in many cases. That can't happen in less than 24 hours, which is what we see with this particular legislation.

So, Mr. Speaker, there is no doubt that we absolutely oppose any attempt by this government to bring in closure, particularly in the heavy-handed kind of manner that we have seen it brought in this evening. We are happy to stand on these votes, because it's absolutely undemocratic what they're doing and certainly isn't the open and kind of accountable government that they state they like to bring forward. It just simply isn't true. It's a heavy-handed, steamroller approach that doesn't work for the people of Alberta, and it certainly doesn't work for the opposition.

MR. DUCHARME: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to raise a point of order.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Point of Order
Reflections on a Member

MR. DUCHARME: It's 23(j). The Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie on two occasions during her debate referred to the government as frog-marching. Also, as the Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne indicated earlier, he felt that his heritage had been somewhat abused. At this point in time I would like to state the same and would demand an apology.

MS CARLSON: No problem, Mr. Speaker. He's got an apology and a withdrawal of those particular remarks if they offend him. Certainly there was no intent to offend in this particular instance, and if he could suggest some better terms that mean the same thing to me, I would be willing to take them under advisement.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Hon. member, we have two people that have spoken to it and a withdrawal. There's no need for further debate on the point of order unless you have a new point of order.

MR. MASON: Mr. Speaker, if I can speak to the point of order.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The person who occasioned the rise to a point of order has withdrawn the remark. That ends the matter for the time being.

Bill 12
Education Services Settlement Act

THE CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to propose an amendment to Bill 12: that Bill 12, Education Services Settlement act, be amended in section 1(1)(f) by striking out subclause(iii). You have copies of the amendment. This is a clause that I mentioned in my previous examination of the bill in committee. What it does is take out the clause that says that a strike is deemed to be "a concerted activity by 2 or more employees to refuse to comply with responsibilities assigned by their principal or their employer." It just doesn't make sense, Mr. Chairman.

THE CHAIR: Hon. members, just so that we all know it, the amendment as moved by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods will be known as amendment A2.
Go ahead.

DR. MASSEY: Okay. Thank you.

It just doesn't make sense, Mr. Chairman. As the Government House Leader said, it was lifted from the labour act, but the lift wasn't in its entirety. The labour act has the reason that there has to be an effort by these two individuals to compel the employer to act in a particular manner. They're trying to coerce the employer. The labour act says that that's a strike and that they can't do that, but without that, it doesn't make sense. More importantly, it just is so out of tune with life in schools. The debates over school policy and school activities are constant. It's part of the give-and-take of making a school setting work. I can think of at least three examples from my own experience where this kind of a clause, had we been under this kind of arbitration and working under Bill 12, would have been considered a strike, and it would have been ludicrous.

I can remember a group of teachers objecting to being asked to teach French when they had no background in the subject and a principal saying: "Oh, yeah. You know, we can get you some books and some recordings, and you can do it." And the teacher said: no, I'm not going to do that. Yet under this clause that would be considered a strike, and they would be subjected to their fines. I can remember similar arguments over music and males on staff with no musical ability being asked to take music classes saying: no, we're not going to do that; we're not qualified. I gave a previous example of a school concert where a principal, because that particular principal liked to have a healthy bank account, decided we would have a school concert every year, and the staff said: "No. We've had enough of it." Ridiculously enough, that would be considered a strike under this bill. So our proposal is that we'd get rid of it altogether, Mr. Chairman.

I guess one last observation is that it's potentially divisive, and I did have a call from a principal who objected to it, saying: you know, that really puts principals against teachers. It's contrary to the kind of climate that most principals and staff try to create in the school. This does nothing to enhance it and in fact has the potential to impede it.

With those reasons, I'd ask for the support of the Assembly, Mr. Chairman.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Minister of Learning on amendment A2.

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. What I will do is read two sections. The first section I will read is from the existing School Act. Under section 18

- a teacher while providing instruction or supervision must . . .
- (g) subject to any applicable collective agreement and the teacher's contract of employment, carry out those duties that are assigned to the teacher by the principal or the board.

That is in the School Act.

I will now read what is in the Labour Relations Code. In the Labour Relations Code in section 1(v) under the definition of "strike,"

- "strike" includes
 - (i) a cessation of work,
 - (ii) a refusal to work, or
 - (iii) a refusal to continue to work,
- by 2 or more employees acting in combination or in concert or in accordance with a common understanding for the purpose of compelling their employer or an employers' organization to agree to terms or conditions of employment or to aid other employees to compel their employer or an employers' organization to accept terms or conditions of employment.

Mr. Chairman, under section 1(1)(f) the definition of a strike in this act reads:

- "strike" includes
- (i) a cessation of work

Again this is directly taken from the labour act.

- (ii) a refusal to work or to continue to work by 2 or more employees acting in combination or in concert or in accordance with a common understanding.

Mr. Chairman, again this is directly from the labour act. If two or more employees refuse to work, that constitutes a strike.

- (iii) a concerted activity by 2 or more employees to refuse to comply with responsibilities assigned by their principal or their employer.

As I have just stated under section 18(g) and will state again, Mr. Chairman: a teacher must

- (g) subject to any applicable collective agreement and the teacher's contract of employment, carry out those duties that are assigned to the teacher by the principal or the board.

Mr. Chairman, the section that the hon. member is wishing to delete is a combination of the School Act, where it outlines a teacher's duties and is basically saying that any concerted activity not to do their duties – not to do their duties – is constituted as a strike, and that is definitely under the Labour Relations Code as printed.

DR. MASSEY: You didn't read the whole thing.

DR. OBERG: Yes, I did. [interjection] No, I didn't.

THE CHAIR: Hon. member.

DR. OBERG: Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

So, Mr. Chairman, I would urge the Assembly to vote against this amendment for the reasons that I have given.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Mr. Chairman, notwithstanding the comments of the Minister of Learning I would urge members of the Assembly to support the amendment. It is clearly in the context of this legislation going to be used as a sword of Damocles over the heads of any teachers who might wish to take exception to the direction that they're given and the labour climate the government is creating. This is open to abuse, and notwithstanding the fact that it is mirrored in current legislation, I think it is dreadful. Obviously we need to review provisions of existing acts if this is in fact the case.

I'm tempted to urge members to leave it in because I suspect, Mr. Chairman, that this particular clause may in fact offend the Charter of Rights and Freedoms and would give rise to a successful challenge of this legislation. So I think the government ought to be cautious in retaining this, but I certainly think it's interesting, and it's interesting to learn that it pre-exists in existing legislation. Quite frankly, I think this is extremely open to abuse, and to impose heavy fines because a couple of teachers may oppose unfair direction from a principal or other administrator – and that can certainly be the case – I think is wrong, and I support the member's amendment.

THE CHAIR: Are you ready for the question?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd just like to make a comment here in support of the amendment as proposed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods. In looking at the Labour Relations Code and comparing it to section 1(1)(f)(iii), subclause (iii) in the Labour Relations Code specifically states:

- (iii) a refusal to continue to work, by 2 or more employees acting in combination or in concert or in accordance with a common understanding for the purpose of compelling their employer or an employers' organization to agree to terms or conditions of employment or to aid other employees to compel their employer or an employers' organization to accept terms or conditions of employment.

So if we're not going to include the entire section (iii) under the Labour Relations Code, then I certainly think that all members should be supporting the amendment as proposed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Thank you.

[Motion on amendment A2 lost]

MR. MASON: Mr. Chairman, I would like to move on behalf of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona an amendment to Bill 12, that the Education Services Settlement Act be amended in section 3(2) by striking out clause (c) and substituting the following: “(c) appoint one additional member as chair of the tribunal whose appointment has been agreed to by the ATA and ASBA members of the tribunal, and.”

THE CHAIR: This amendment will be known as A3, should it ever be delivered.

MR. MASON: Mr. Chairman, if that amendment has now been distributed, I'd be pleased to speak to it. This is the amendment which fixes a major flaw in this bill, and the flaw is that it is a fixed game, as the president of the ATA has said. This is not a normal arbitration process. This is not the structure of a normal or a fair arbitration tribunal. This is in fact something that is designed, in our view, to fix the game against the ATA so that they don't have a chance. It's a bit like shooting fish in a barrel. The fish really don't have much of a chance in this kind of situation.

Now, I've listened with interest as the hon. Minister of Learning has said that the government wishes to extract itself from the relationship between the school boards and the ATA. Well, I can't think of a better way to do that, Mr. Chairman, than to remove themselves from the arbitration tribunal that's going to settle the issue. Obviously, with all of the other safeguards in place, the government is not at risk of losing millions and millions of dollars, because the rest of the legislation really prevents that from ever occurring. So why wouldn't the government agree that if you want an arbitration process that is in the least bit fair, it should be established on the same basis as a normal arbitration under the labour act?

I don't think the minister will be able to get up this time and point to a section in the labour act and say: we just pulled it out of the labour act; it's already the existing practice in these matters. If you're going to have arbitration, Mr. Chairman, the arbitration needs to be fair. That's already provided for in existing legislation. I see no reason to impose a government-appointed member into this tribunal, which can only have one effect, and that is for the school board member and the government member to gang up on the teachers' member and produce a result that's going to leave no one happy except of course the government, and that's not what arbitration is about.

Thank you.

11:50

THE CHAIR: The hon. Minister of Learning.

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'll speak on two points with regards to this section. First of all and I think by far the most important thing I can say tonight is that this form of panel was suggested by Mr. Larry Booi, president of the Alberta Teachers' Association, to us, one hundred percent verbatim from what Mr. Larry Booi said.

The other thing that I will add to alleviate some of the hon. member's concerns is that it is a majority rule panel. So if the ATA and the ASBA arbitrators agree, then that will be carried forward. It is a majority rule panel.

Mr. Chairman, because this came directly one hundred percent from what the ATA had said, I would suggest that the Assembly vote it down.

MR. MASON: Just to briefly respond to that, Mr. Chairman, we don't know the context of the proposal from the president of the ATA. We do know that many things have changed since the time he came out of the Premier's office with a smile on his face. He's not smiling now, and that's not because he's changed his mind. That's because the government has changed the rules of the game. So to suggest in the context of this bill, which the ATA is vociferously opposing, that it came from the president of the ATA and it should therefore be no problem to members of this House to adopt it, I think, is clearly not a reasonable argument to be made.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion lost]

[Motion on amendment A3 lost]

THE CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I would like to take this opportunity to speak to Bill 12 in committee, just a few comments in regards to the preamble. I certainly commend the government at this point for setting up a study of classroom conditions. I think, in looking at the classroom conditions, we have to definitely look at the examination of all factors which are included in classroom conditions. Certainly the major reason that we are here today is the adequacy of funding for schools. This has not been a priority of this particular government and school boards since 1995. We certainly have not had long-term, predictable, stable funding, and it certainly has led to a number of situations in our classrooms. Particularly when we look at when revenues have dipped or available dollars just aren't there, schools have had to make cutbacks. These certainly affect the working conditions of teachers. It also affects the learning conditions of students.

As we look at this legislation, we certainly know that one of the areas that should be under examination here is the factor of the greater stress that has been placed on teachers because of their increasing role in the teaching of students of every imaginable ability and, as well, of students who do have special needs. I was very disappointed this evening when the Government House Leader brought in closure, Mr. Chair. There are quite a number of educators in the Assembly here this evening. Some of these educators have a long and distinguished career in education, and I certainly would have welcomed their input into this debate. I also think that many of them, if they had the time, perhaps might have. It is quite interesting to note that we have had a number of divisions here tonight, and constituents from these particular constituencies represented by former educators are going to be quite interested to see what part of the debate and how much of the debate their member participated in.

When we do look at Bill 12 under Committee of the Whole and we do look at the increased stress of teachers, I would hope that part of this study would include over the next 18 months, Mr. Chairman, just how many sick days are taken by teachers who are certainly going to be feeling increased stress because of this situation. I would also like this committee to look at how many teachers go out on long-term disability or on stress leave. I also think that another important factor here, Mr. Chairman, should be the number of new teachers who leave the profession. All of these factors are definitely going to impact education in this province.

I think that another issue that is not mentioned in here is having an adequate supply of textbooks so that each student has their own textbook when necessary.

As well, Mr. Chairman, in the preamble we certainly have avoided technology, and as we all know technology can be the black hole when it comes to eating up funds in schools. Certainly the amount of funding that is presently provided by the government does not anywhere begin to meet the needs and demands in schools today, so as a result we do have a tremendous amount of fund-raising that's taking place just to supply the essentials of education and not the extras.

One last point that the preamble does not address is new curriculum. Now, a number of years ago, Mr. Chairman, when we introduced a new science curriculum into our schools, teachers first of all were provided in-services, the textbooks were available to all students before the new curriculum was put into place in the schools, and all the aids that teachers required and all the supports were in place as well. I think that this is also another issue that could have been put into the preamble here that certainly would aid teachers in dealing with their everyday situations in the classroom and improving the learning conditions in the classroom as well as working conditions.

So with those few comments, Mr. Chairman, I will cede the floor to another one of the members. Thank you.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I am happy to be able to respond at committee to Bill 12, the Education Services Settlement Act. We have only 24 minutes left to debate this bill because of closure brought in by this government.

The first point that I wish to address here are some comments that were made earlier in the evening by myself. I talked in second reading about this government frog-marching this bill through the Legislature, and another member took offence at those comments and asked me to withdraw them, and I did, Mr. Chairman. I apologized for any offence, stating that it certainly wasn't my intent to personally offend anybody or any particular group with the words that I had said and then withdrew those words.

Having had some time to reflect and actually do some research on the definition of that word, I would have to say, Mr. Chairman, that I stand by my comments of not wishing to offend any person or any group by using that terminology but do regret having withdrawn that word for a variety of reasons which I will now indicate. If we take a look at Beauchesne, which is the parliamentary rules and forms that we use quite often in this Legislature, and we look at 489 under the words that have "been ruled unparliamentary for the following expressions," we don't see "frog-march" there anywhere. If we look, Mr. Chairman, at the freedom of speech . . .

MR. HANCOCK: There could be offensive words that aren't included in that list.

MS CARLSON: And that's true. There could be offensive words, but let me finish my comments, and then certainly the Government House Leader can comment.

If we then look to Freedom of Speech in Beauchesne – and I refer members to 75, 76, and 77, which are on page 22 and which come under the heading Privilege – "the privilege of freedom of speech is both the least questioned and the most fundamental right" of members. Then I would refer members to Erskine May Parliamentary Practice. Chapter 6 talks about the privilege of freedom of speech, where in the opening comments it states that subject to the rules of order in debate . . . a Member may state whatever he thinks . . .

And I'm sure in this case they also mean she thinks.

. . . fit in debate, however offensive it may be to the feelings, or injurious to the character, of individuals; and he [or she, I'm sure] is protected by his or her privilege from any action for libel, as well as from any other question or molestation.

So then I would refer members to this small pocket dictionary, the Collins English Mini Dictionary, which has only 40,000 entries, which we know, Mr. Chairman, is not very many for a dictionary. What do I find under the terminology "frog"? What I see is: frog-march, a verb, force a resisting person to move by holding his arms. In fact, that was exactly my intent when I used that terminology in my debate before. This government is effectively taking teachers and frog-marching them through this legislation. So that was the intent of what I had to say earlier.

I will definitely in the future reserve my right to withdraw a comment until it has been fully researched because particularly this day in this Legislature we have seen members who support the government's position on this bill trying various tactics to limit the terminology and the words that we have used in this Legislature. I don't want to see that practice continue unless it can be defended with the kind of documentation that we have available to us.

So I will end my comments on that particular point because I have many other very important issues that I would like to address in the few remaining moments that we have, not the least of which, Mr.

Chairman, is the lack of entry into debate we have seen by members of this Assembly who support the government's position on Bill 12. What particularly concerns me is those members who in their lives before politics were, in fact, teachers. I believe and I'm sure that many teachers in this province also believe that when bills come before the Legislature that are particularly applicable to any particular expertise that people who have moved through their role in life, out of a profession and into politics and political decision-making may have had and may still have, it is fundamentally important for those parliamentarians to stand up and be counted and put their comments and concerns on the record in the Legislature so that those who are watching and are affected by the decisions made in this Legislature can see what their opinions were and can weigh those opinions based on their actions. What we have seen here today in this Legislature is very, very few government members actually get on the record. I count one, two, three, four, five in terms of those who participated. Too bad – isn't it? – that only one of those people speaking actually came from a teaching background.

So, Mr. Chairman, I would ask where the rest of the members in this Assembly were on the record. Why didn't Wetaskiwin-Camrose have anything to say about this bill? We have seen that the government has limited debate. We have only 17 minutes and some odd seconds left, and we see that he didn't have any comments. Why is it that . . .

MR. LUKASZUK: You used up too much time.

MS CARLSON: No, I didn't use up too much time. Your government limited the amount of time that we had to debate on this.

Now, we have one, two, three, four, five, six, seven, eight, nine, 10, 11 for sure members in this Legislature that came from the teaching profession and had nothing to say. I'm wondering why Edmonton-Meadowlark has had nothing to say on this particular bill. I am sure that he has many friends and former colleagues . . .

MR. HANCOCK: A point of order, Mr. Chairman.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Government House Leader is rising on a point of order.

Point of Order Imputing Motives

MR. HANCOCK: Mr. Chairman, under 23(h), (i), and (j), imputing motives and generally causing debate, the hon. member is supposed to be in Committee of the Whole and supposed to be discussing line by line the sections of the bill. Instead she's using the opportunity to lecture people about their duties as MLAs. The members of this House full well know their duties as MLAs and have spent a good deal of time over the last month and a half talking about this issue. They don't need to be lectured by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie on their duties in the House. If she's complaining about lack of time, she should be getting on to amendments to the bill, which is what committee is for; otherwise, she's just wasting everybody's time.

THE CHAIR: Hon. member, on the point of order?

MS CARLSON: Yes, absolutely on the point of order, Mr. Chairman. Given the late time of this evening, the Government House Leader is a little touchy and is finding a point of order where there is none. Had he listened to my earlier comments on freedom of
