So, Mr. Chairman, our farmers don't think they need some third party, some monopoly to tell them what fertilizer to use. They don't think that they need a monopoly or a third party to tell them what seed to use or what variety to grow, and thank goodness they don't have to wait on the monopoly or third party to tell them when to harvest or we wouldn't be having this debate today I'm sure. But, in fact, that's what we do do when it comes to marketing.

I have asked people who process that product if they would appreciate being in a monopoly, if they would appreciate milling all of the flour and then putting it in a central system and that system would sell into the world markets for them. And you know what? They're not too interested in that at all. Why are our producers not allowed to market, to make business choices, to be the judges of which market is best for them so that they can maximize their returns, handle their storage – all of these costs are borne by the producer – as well as the cash flow needs of their farm instead of some organization, some monopoly deciding when they will get paid? Yes, we've said thank you for cash advances, but that is not the same as having the choice to make the business decision, to manage the risk on your own farm.

We have great debates among ministers of agriculture across Canada, and the federal minister wants farmers to practise good management and risk management. Well, I say to Minister Vanclief: give Alberta farmers a chance and they will do that. They have proved it over the years.

We're not asking, Mr. Chairman, that all of Canada come into this test market. We're saying: let Alberta try it for a period of 10 years. If you don't want to do it in Saskatchewan, fine. If you don't want to do it in Manitoba, fine. If you don't want to do it in B.C., fine. When I met with the Wheat Board and they spent a day in Winnipeg explaining to me how good they were, my comment at the end of the day was: "Gentlemen, I do not have to make any comment, because you have made my point for me. You are so darn good that you don't need to be a bit afraid of us. People will choose you as a marketing choice and, of course, reject the free market system. Why not take that chance? Why not run that risk?" There were a number of my colleagues with me, and they will suggest that the Canadian Wheat Board did not take us up on our offer.

They tell us that we're doing great in value-added and that we have lots of processing in wheat. Well, we do. Sixty-five percent of it's in eastern Canada. Sixty-five percent of wheat processing is in eastern Canada, and the majority of wheat is grown in western Canada, particularly the good milling variety. Well, I don't call that fairness, I don't call it any part of the Alberta advantage, and I don't know why we have to continue to be in these two commodities the persons who ship the raw commodity to somebody else to have the jobs. Been there; done that. We really don't need to do that today. We want to see value-added opportunities like we have in mustard, like we have in canola, and certainly like we have in oats.

Mr. Chairman, it only makes sense to give our producers the option, to give them the freedom to market their product. That is all they ask. You know, the farmers in this province do not need their money spent on ads that try to convince people that the Canadian Wheat Board is the best. They don't need mail-outs, they don't need brochures, they don't need television ads, they don't need all-expense paid trips to be told that the Canadian Wheat Board does the best job for them. You know what? Give the farmers the freedom in this province, and they will make the right choice. Our farmers have proved time and time again that they are very capable of being good, good producers and managers and I believe would, given the chance, make the right choices in marketing wheat and barley. After all, they do it in everything else.

This is about breaking down barriers to producers, this is about letting them make their own decisions on their own behalf, and this is about breaking down ancient – ancient – monopolies that were put in place for far different reasons back in 1943, 60 years ago virtually, Mr. Chairman. Let us in Alberta grow the value-added side of our industry on behalf of both rural and urban residents in this province.

Mr. Chairman, again, this is a made-in-Alberta solution. I know it'll be a made-in-Alberta success if they will just listen and give us choice and give us freedom. Thank you.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

MR. LUND: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It gives me a great deal of pleasure to rise this afternoon and make a few comments relative to this very important issue that has been a plague upon Alberta farmers. I want to thank the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View for bringing this forward again. It's great to see an urban MLA recognizing one of the problems that Alberta agriculture has, and I'm sure that he's looking at it from the point of view of what other industry or what other profession would have such a millstone around their neck as the Canadian Wheat Board.

We are not talking about eliminating the Canadian Wheat Board. I have people in my constituency who feel that they want to continue to use the Canadian Wheat Board, and that's fine. They should have that option. We don't understand why it is that the administration of the Canadian Wheat Board is so opposed to allowing farmers to carry on an extension of their business and market their product in the way they see fit. When you think about it, the Canadian Wheat Board has a bureaucracy that has been built up over time through this monopoly that they have, and they have all kinds of contacts throughout the world. What are they afraid of? Why would they be afraid of allowing farmers to market their own product?

Certainly, when the Canadian Wheat Board was set up, the situation was completely different. I remember that even on our own farm for years we simply produced. We took it to the gate and expected somebody else to market it. Those days have gone, and things have changed dramatically. Basically, back then, you produced and hoped there was a market for it. Farmers have changed completely. Today they look at where there's a market and then would produce toward that market.

I just think of, like, the malting industry within, you know, the province of Alberta and the opportunity that would be afforded them if they could go to direct contract with a producer. There are a number of things, like variety, that the maltster might want. Does he want a certain type of two-row, or is it a six-row that he wants? What does he want? They could direct contract and get their varieties that they wished to malt.

I believe that, in fact, there is great opportunity if you go the extension to that and have the companies invest a lot of money in research. If they knew that they could contract the variety, I'm sure they would spend money on research, and we would see two things. We would see increased production at the farm level, and we would see added value to our products right here in the province. I think about just a few years ago when farmers were wanting to set up a pasta plant and the difficulty they had. They simply could not because of the problem with the Canadian Wheat Board being in the way.

Now, while I would like to see this 10-year experiment, there are some other problems and things that the Canadian Wheat Board, possibly by default, maybe by design, managed to get into. I'm talking there about transportation. The Kroeger report, the Estey report all said that you've got to get the Canadian Wheat Board removed from transportation. When you think about it, with the rolling stock that the railways have and the control that the Canadian Wheat Board has over that rolling stock, they can make it extremely difficult for off-board grains to move to port.

Also, of course, they can create a real problem at the port, and we saw this about four years ago, when they just simply flooded the west coast with wheat that was going absolutely nowhere. There was no home for it. It ended up being stored out there. Then when people had, like, canola that they wanted to ship, they couldn't get cars, but they also couldn't get storage out at the west coast because the terminals were plugged with wheat, just being used as a storage bin. So ships would come in; they'd maybe pick up half a load and then have to go and berth in another location. Some even had to go down to Seattle to finish their load. Well, the farmer pays for that.

So I think that when you look at the overall situation, transportation needs to be more free flow. Of course, the ideal would be if we'd have open rail so that you would even get more competition within the transportation system. Now, I know that the board would be quick to point out that they have changed some of their ways of dealing with the transportation issue, and they have looked at some contracting as opposed to the old way where they just simply allocate cars, and, I guess, credit to them, they're noticing that some of these things could in fact improve the return to the farmer.

Overall, I think that it's a slap in the face of farmers when, in fact, they can't market their own grains as they see fit and allow more added value on the prairies. We saw in the transportation, when the first off-board barley was allowed, how difficult it was for producers to get producer cars. The board simply continued to tie them up. As a consequence, the difficulty there gradually over time did evolve so that we do have a little bit freer movement, but it still is a problem, and in order for this experiment to work, we need to go that one step further.

I would certainly urge all of the members in the House to vote for this very progressive move to have the dual system.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I would like to have this opportunity to speak to Bill 207 in committee. I take it that it's 10 minutes that I have, so in that brief time I would like to make a few observations on this bill in committee and then introduce an amendment that I have ready for distribution. Perhaps I can have the amendment distributed now, while I am speaking in general about the bill.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: If you're going to propose an amendment, it had better be circulated now. We shall refer to the amendment as amendment A1.

DR. PANNU: Okay. Mr. Chairman, I should read the amendment that I am proposing into, I think, the record. The amendment stands in the name of my colleague from Edmonton-Highlands, and it moves that Bill 207, Alberta Wheat and Barley Test Market Act, be amended in section 2(2) by adding the following after clause (b). So clause (c), which is being added, reads as follows: "the price per unit of wheat and barley sold within the test market must not be lower than the current Canadian Wheat Board price." Then, next, clause (d) reads as follows:

- Producers are required to provide information to the Canadian Wheat Board about all sales, including
- (i) units sold and purchased,
 - (ii) price per unit, and
 - (iii) the identity of the purchaser.

So, Mr. Chairman, the amendment is clearly intended to make sure that there's no conflict between the federal Wheat Board legislation and the legislation that is before us, Bill 207. In order to be sure that this conflict does not exist or prevail, the amendment is introduced to address that problem, that I see as a serious potential problem with the bill: that it may, in fact, come into conflict with the existing federal legislation and thereby become inoperable. There's no point in passing a bill in this Assembly which we know in advance is in contravention of the federal legislation and then hope that we have done the right thing by passing it in spite of that information being available to us, because that won't be the right thing to do. What we want to do is certainly make sure that with the resources of this House the debate in the House is well informed, is cognizant of the constraints within which we must bring whatever legislation we want to bring into this House and vote on it.

I have spoken in the past on this bill, Mr. Chairman, and drawn attention to the fact that just a few years ago the hon. Member for Leduc spoke passionately against a similar bill and drew attention to why it is that the bill should be defeated. Indeed, a bill very similar to this one was defeated by this very Assembly, and I do commend the efforts of the Member for Leduc, who then spoke against the bill and drew our attention, the attention of this House, to some compelling reasons why the bill should be defeated. Those reasons that he gave then are valid today.

I just want to read into the record, into the Hansard, some statements that we have received by way of letters, e-mails, and other communications from concerned wheat producers in this province. The first one is an e-mail that we received on the 17th of November, less than 10 days ago, from Barry and Lana Love. Barry and Lana come from Hardisty, and I will just read a short excerpt from their fairly long letter addressed to me. I quote: years ago farmers fought to establish the Canadian Wheat Board for fair pricing practices and to have a better market for their grain. Grain buyers were dictating the price according to the desperation of the farmers' need for cash to pay their mounting bills. Do we want that system back? Absolutely not. End of quote.

Then, Mr. Chairman, from another communication, that we received from the Canadian Wheat Board, a response to a Grain Growers of Canada proposal for a parallel market. Again, I quote from the Canadian Wheat Board response: in reality, a dual market is not a sustainable structure. It would eliminate the benefits for farmers of the CWB single-desk system. End of quote. Another quote from there: in a multiple-seller environment, even at a low exemption volume, these sellers would compete away the single-desk selling premiums. End of quote. So success stories for value-added processing in western Canada are also questioned in the CWB document.

One other quotation from the National Farmers' Union submission to the House of Commons Standing Committee on Agriculture and Agri-Food:

Producers gain several advantages from orderly marketing including risk management; predictable and fair delivery opportunities; relatively stable and predictable prices; security of payment; and market development.

Another article on the dual markets in Ontario, and there is a quote from there.

The chair of the Ontario Flour Millers' Association has a blunt message for prairie grain industry players considering whether the Canadian Wheat Board should organize a trial open or dual market: "It doesn't work."

That's the quote from there, Mr. Chairman.

So there are lots of letters and phone calls and e-mails that we have received. Given that I had a very limited time, I just wanted to bring some of these concerns and positions that have been stated in those letters before this House and urge that we either vote this bill down or at least amend it so that it is in compliance with the existing federal legislation governing the Canadian Wheat Board.

The amendment, Mr. Chairman, that I have put before the House is designed to remove any potential conflict between the provisions of this bill and the existing federal legislation which governs the Canadian Wheat Board. I would therefore urge all members to support the amendment that I've just introduced, and then we can later on deal with the bill as a whole. I think it will be much improved if this amendment is voted for and added to the bill as it presently stands.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: On the amendment, the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

MR. MARZ: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Just a few comments on the amendment. The amendment takes away what the bill is proposing to do. This is a 10-year test. The Alberta Wheat and Barley Test Market Act is a test of the free market. To control the price so that it can't go below what the current selling price of the Canadian Wheat Board is is not a proper test of the free market. It flies in the face of exactly what the Member for Calgary-Mountain View is trying to show here.

The other part of the amendment is:

- (d) producers are required to provide information to the Canadian Wheat Board about all sales, including
 - (i) units sold and purchased,
 - (ii) price per unit, and
 - (iii) the identity of the purchaser.

This is something producers would have liked the Wheat Board to provide to them for years and haven't been able to get that. I would say that it would be good information for this government to have so we can have a proper comparison, not comparisons that the Canadian Wheat Board would have to be able to massage and put out as they see fit to make themselves look good. This is information I think our government should have and that I would support our government having, not the Canadian Wheat Board. We have to have a comparison, and I don't want a comparison that the Canadian Wheat Board can have and decide on how to publish those figures.

So I would urge everybody in this House to defeat this amendment because it takes away the intent of the bill itself. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

MR. LORD: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'd also like to rise to speak against this amendment. Quite frankly, I'm a little shocked that someone would introduce an amendment that completely goes against the entire purpose of the bill and would defeat the intention of the bill. In calling for increasing competition, we're looking to improve the market for the poor struggling farmers out there. Clearly, opposition members do not understand the concept of competition or the intended benefits of competition. This amendment, if passed, would not allow competition at all. It calls for selling at exactly the same price and also, incredibly, to reveal all the customers, the prices paid, and the sales amounts of what an innovative new competitor would be able to do that the old monopoly could not.

I mean, imagine if 50 years ago, for example, the only person that could sell computers was the government-funded program that invented the UNIVAC, that used to fill a room. Imagine if no competition was allowed and anyone that wanted to try had to sell at the same price as that original UNIVAC cost. Imagine how different the world would be today. We wouldn't have the computer age, the information age. We would never have put a man on the moon.

In creating free markets, people have to be able to innovate, and this amendment just absolutely prevents that. Imagine starting a small business. I can just imagine the hon. member opposite starting a small business, trying to compete against a huge monopoly corporation and having to turn his customer list over to them with the prices that he negotiated with them and expecting to survive as a small business. I mean, I just can't believe that this would even be proposed, frankly, Mr. Chairman, so I'd urge all members of this side of the House to defeat the amendment.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to respond to some of the comments of the hon. member. It's clear to me from the comments of that hon. member, also representing an urban municipality, I might point out, that the intention of the bill is to lower prices that the farmers receive. He said it himself right here: suppose somebody comes along and can beat the price and offer the grain for a lower price; what a wonderful thing that will be and will help us put a man on the moon and all sorts of other wonderful things. But it seems to me that there may be a few producers who can undercut the overall price that farmers receive for their grain. There may be some big producers, perhaps the brewing industry, that would like to have an opportunity to lower their input cost. Who will suffer? Who will suffer if this bill is passed? The small family farmer is the one that will suffer.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, but under Standing Order 8(5)(a)(ii) and 8(5)(b), which states that all questions must be decided to conclude debate on a private member's public bill which has received 120 minutes of debate in Committee of the Whole, I must now put the following questions to conclude debate.

[Motion on amendment A1 lost]

[The clauses of Bill 207 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

SOME HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: Opposed? Carried.

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 3:59 p.m.]

[Ten minutes having elapsed, the committee divided]

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

For the motion:

Against the motion:

Bonner	Mason	Taft
Carlson	Pannu
Totals:	For – 39	Against – 5

[The request to report Bill 207 carried]

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would move that the committee now rise and report.

[Motion carried]

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

MR. JOHNSON: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration and reports Bill 207. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Opposed? So ordered.

Bill 208

Fiscal Stability Fund Calculation Act

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Just a chance to talk at the introduction of Bill 208. I'd like to move second reading of it.

The idea behind this bill was to have the government look into the process that would be available through our fiscal planning if we were to look at the idea of having stability and stability funds as part of the budgeting process. The bill, in effect, would allow for a test of whether or not the kind of process that we need would be available for, you know, giving us that stability, and it would also allow us to look at different structural components and structural ways to put together that stability fund.

The idea would be that if we looked at historical data, the fluctuations that occur mostly in that revenue, to look at it and pull together some of the ideas that would be – I guess what it would do, Mr. Speaker, is really give us a chance to look at the amount of money that we could save both in terms of giving predictability to those expenditure patterns and also give us a sense of how much we need to put into that stability fund. By doing these simulations on it, over time you'd be able to look at the degree to which any kind of fluctuation would be able to be met by stability funds of different levels or different funding plans that would go into them, the idea being that, in effect, we'd want to look at that.

Now, Mr. Speaker, what we end up doing is basically talking about the idea that if we could put in place this kind of a stability fund, whether it was tied to both the infrastructure components or just the social programs, this would also be able to be brought forward. You're well aware of the fact that for years now the Official Opposition has been proposing the use of a stability fund along with their budgeting practices for the Legislature, and we've basically introduced this kind of legislation on two previous occasions, and then this one was basically to ask the government to look and see whether or not those kinds of stability processes would contribute to our budgeting process.

It was interesting that in the last budget after we had submitted these bills, you know, the financial review commission was out there talking about how stability could be brought to the process of budgeting for the Legislature and for the province, but what it in effect did was it also looked at the idea of using the heritage fund as that stability fund and the issues that came up associated with that in terms of how dollars could be transferred back and forth. The end result was that the financial review commission chose to recommend that all dollars be put into the heritage fund from the natural resource revenues, and then they would be allowed to in effect take out 3 and a half billion dollars to put it into the general revenue. Anything else would be there as a stability, and then that would get added to the heritage fund.

I guess the issue there and the process that we've got here would allow us to look at how we can deal with determining whether or not that heritage fund would have grown or would have been enough to sustain over the long run with that 3 and a half billion dollar transfer out. What we've been talking about as the Official Opposition in recommending would be that, in effect, the dollars that would go into general revenue wouldn't be designated as a specific hard number amount, the 3 and half billion that the financial commission recommended, but would be calculated on a moving average so that you could reflect the changes that occur in terms of the overview and the process of getting those kinds of numbers generated.

The main focus would be that by doing this calculation we could see whether or not a hard number, 3 and a half billion dollars, or a moving average or maybe possibly even some other mechanism for funding that stability fund would really work and provide us with the proper operation of this fund in the sense that it would be sustainable, it would be big enough to carry us through a couple of years of down, below average revenue, but it would also, then, give us a sense of, if it was getting to be too big: what do we need to do with it in terms of the surplus revenues that are accumulating there? That would have been one of the advantages of using the heritage fund because it would have just automatically been there for the future. But if we were going to deal with the focus that was on, you know, the magnitude of a single separate fund, we'd have to know whether or not we would have the dollars that were in it that we could put into it in terms of the focus that would have to come out of providing that stability.

I guess, you know, one of the things that we wanted to achieve by asking for this kind of a calculation was, in a sense, to test these numbers of options that I've talked about, to force a strong look at what were alternative ways of bringing stability, what kind of partnering we could do between the general revenue fund, kind of the social expenditure part of it, and some of the other parts. Should we include the total value of the budget, the approximate $20 billion that we've got in it now, or should we include only those parts that are truly associated with particular different aspects? The programs that we've talked about and that we've tried to put forward for you really show that we would like to see the entire budget as part of the component that deals with stability rather than just looking at the issue of how to approach it from the point of view of separate parts of the budget. If we could put in the whole budget, then we wouldn't have to deal with any of the other aspects.

But as I talk about that, the thing that's really critical to recognize here is that this kind of stability and this kind of management of the budget is only good and only works if we do have, in effect, a sustainable budget to start with. What we've seen is a lot of processes that are coming out now by the government where they're dealing with the financial deficit of the province and transferring that off into other deficits and other aspects where we've got infrastructure deficits, we've got local government deficits, we've got authority deficits that, in effect, don't show up as part of the financial deficit. So if we look at it from the point of view of what is the true provincial budget that we want to make sure that the stability fund covers, we've got to make sure that it includes all of those expenditure parts and all of those issue parts that have to deal with the focus of the calculation that we're wanting the minister to go through on this so that we can make sure that, in effect, we have been able to show the functional part of it.

You know, Mr. Speaker, it would have been interesting to have seen the kinds of calculations that the financial review commission went through in order to determine the $3.5 billion transfer from the heritage fund into general revenues and also how they came up with the rationalization for the fact that they were going to in effect put all of the resource revenues into the heritage fund to start with instead of accounting them separately and accounting them in a way that the process, you know, in terms of getting those kinds of calculations, truly put in place.

Now, if we look at some of the discussions that the financial review commission had on this process and when I made my presentation to them, it's quite interesting. That was the way they looked at what was the mandate both of provincial budgeting and the review commission in bringing together the ideas that were necessary to deal with the stability that comes up as part of that kind of process. And, you know, the second spin-off that we see on this now is the heritage fund consultation. When the process of the financial review commission was being looked at, there was public feedback that said: we didn't want to see the use of the heritage fund for that stability function. Yet now in this consultation it's coming up again. But if we do that and tie the two funds together, what we run into are some real issues about how we, in effect, bring about the proper and independent mandates that exist for those funds.

You know, you could see in the way it was working that there was a lot of opportunity for the heritage fund to become too readily available for alternative uses. If we started doing these kinds of simulations that would look at the different ways that we could use it and the different ways that we could bring stability to the budgeting process, then, in effect, that's what we were trying to ask that the government undertake through this study that would show all of the different aspects. It would have been interesting, as I said, to see how the financial review commission actually went about doing that, and it would be, I guess, appropriate to ask the Minister of Finance to provide this Legislature with a sense of how that kind of process was followed. You know, how did they come up with those numbers? What kinds of confidence intervals were they looking at? What kinds of probabilities of being able to sustain their budget did they work with?

The focus that we wanted to look at here was how well it could work and how well it could provide all of these functions. You know, the main thing, too, is: how do we put together that full budget? As I mentioned a few minutes ago: do we have sustainable infrastructure built into the current budget? Also, do we have a process where we can in effect bring about some kind of aggregate level of probabilities that are associated with trying to get those calculations made about it to bring that into place? The main thing is that we go through this calculation, we provide some public viability and public justification for both the magnitude of a stability fund and the proper operation of that fund.

Mr. Speaker, I guess that was the kind of process that we wanted to see accomplished here. We need to, you know, look at whether or not it still would be useful to have that kind of information provided to the public. Then we can go about saying, "Yes, the idea of a stability fund will work," and we've got the background data to provide to Albertans to in effect make sure that they can be confident that we're managing their budgets properly.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I'll allow other people in the Legislature to have some comments. Thank you.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Dunvegan.

MR. GOUDREAU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to rise today and speak to Bill 208, the Fiscal Stability Fund Calculation Act. This bill is premised on the idea that, one, the government is not prepared to deal with unexpected declines in revenue and, two, that any reduction in social program funding and other expenditures is unacceptable.

On both points, Mr. Speaker, this bill is simply wrong in its assumptions. The tragic events of last year proved that this government is both fiscally prudent but also flexible in its response to unforeseen circumstances that affect the budget. The hon. Minister of Finance when introducing last year's budget indicated that budgets are not about pinning hopes on forecasts; they're about acting responsibly. And act responsibly she did. The minister followed through on her words with a clear picture of Alberta's fiscal position with the first-quarter update. When the update showed that revenues were declining and that the situation required diligent monitoring, the minister firmly cautioned that the government must stick to its commitment of fiscal responsibility, that we must be cautious and realistic with future expectations.

The quarterly update process helped this province respond swiftly to a changing situation. Exactly two weeks later the horrors of September 11 unfolded, and an already weakening world economy was thrown into unstable times. Days after those events the hon. Premier and the minister announced corrective actions to preserve Alberta's fiscal position and expenditures responsibly. The results of those actions, which included a hiring freeze and then a cross-government budgetary lapse of 1 percent, helped to keep Alberta's books in the black.

In fact, on the whole, for the 2001-2002 fiscal year the government was able to balance the budget for the eighth consecutive year, repay a portion of the debt, provide $3 billion to address infrastructure requirements, and increase spending for priority areas, all of this, Mr. Speaker, in spite of $646 million in lower than expected revenues.

Bill 208's premise that the government is not prepared to deal with unexpected declines in revenue clearly does not hold. It is important to note that, in particular, Health spending increased by 14 and a half percent over the previous year and Learning received a 21.4 percent increase which included capital grants. This money was used to upgrade and construct health facilities and equipment, recruit physicians, and increase funding for MRIs. Learning used its money to increase operating grants to institutions; upgrade, expand, and construct educational facilities; and create new entry spaces in key degrees and apprenticeships.

But the real success story, Mr. Speaker, is that despite a 44 percent drop in resource revenues and an unstable economy this government was able to respond prudently and not at the expense of priorities important to all Albertans. Throughout the downturn in the economy Albertans were able to continue to receive world-class health and educational services. Important infrastructure projects did proceed, albeit at a slower pace. In essence, the impact to Albertans' daily lives was kept to a minimum, and despite Bill 208 and opposition beliefs to the contrary government continued serving Albertans. That is responsible leadership. That is what the people of this province expect, and that is what the people of this province received. All of this occurred in a turbulent year of unknowns. This record of achievement stands in stark contrast to opposition claims and the principle behind Bill 208 that somehow the government's failure to use smart fiscal tools caused essential programs such as education and children's services to suffer.

Realignments need to happen, Mr. Speaker. It was because of the government's diligence that they were able to respond to the circumstances of the situation. Prudent action was taken. The priorities and goals of the budget and Albertans were maintained, and the financial books of this province are better for it.

Past successes do not mean, however, that we should not necessarily look for new ways to do things in government. The continual review of Alberta's fiscal framework is an ongoing process that looks towards the future to provide innovation and excellence. The Minister of Revenue is currently reviewing the heritage savings trust fund, and the Minister of Finance over the summer announced the results of a review of our fiscal and accounting policies to ensure Alberta remains a leader in fiscal planning.

This bill, that requires the Minister of Finance to research and report to the Legislature on certain paths not taken, serves no useful purpose. Decisions have to be made with the best information on that day. A report such as the one proposed in this bill would not add to the public discourse on the future of this province. Albertans are forward-looking people and generally not prone to second-guess themselves. One has to wonder, Mr. Speaker: what would hon. members across the way do with this report besides point out that special interest groups had not received enough money? One has to wonder what is the point of a report that asks a hypothetical question such as: what would you have done with a billion dollars? One has to wonder if the assumptions and wishful thinking that are evident in this bill are more appropriate for the horoscope section of the local paper rather than for a serious discussion on the fiscal future of this province.

Clearly, Mr. Speaker, the fiscal policies of this government were able to positively respond to negative economic forces of the past. As I have previously said, we want to make sure we remain on the right track to be able to respond to these sorts of situations in the future.

Through this year's review by the Financial Review Commission this government was able to examine the fiscal policies that have brought us so much success and recommend new ideas and ways to ensure Alberta's fiscal position well into the future. One of the recommendations of the commission called for the establishment of a stability fund, a fund that would help to stabilize the impact of volatile resource revenues on the provincial budget and a fund that would help the province in case of emergencies or disasters. It is important to note, Mr. Speaker, that according to the Financial Review Commission all natural resource revenues will be deposited into the stability fund while a set amount of money will be transferred from the fund to go towards general program spending. The only time the set amount can be exceeded will be in the cases of emergencies or disasters or when there are in-year declines in other revenues.

Conversely, when looking through the bill before us, it seems that the hon. member would have the government transfer money from such a fund at the drop of a hat to protect the sustainability of social programs. What one does not find when reading through this bill is an indication of which social programs or other expenditures the government would protect in times of economic turbulence. Mr. Speaker, Bill 208 does not answer this question because it does not want to. This bill does not define what is essential or a priority to government because some hon. members believe that every program and every expenditure is beyond review no matter what the fiscal reality may be.

For some members in this House no matter how much this government increases funding, it will never be enough. Funding issues are always an emergency or a disaster waiting to happen. With that sort of stability fund as envisioned by this bill, members would be tying the hands of government to find efficiencies and new ways of delivering services while also opening the government up to every interest and lobby group not satisfied that their area of interest is receiving enough support from the taxpayers of Alberta.

I believe that the taxpayers of this province, who ultimately must fund every expenditure, deserve better. I'm confident that the government through the next several months will deliver a stability fund that is designed to stabilize revenues rather than stabilize spending sprees. Mr. Speaker, the government has spent the last 10 years putting Alberta's fiscal house back in order, and they are not about to turn their backs on that hard work.

I would encourage all hon. members to vote against this bill and wait for the realities and successes of the government's new fund to take shape. Thank you.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to stand and support Bill 208, the Fiscal Stability Fund Calculation Act. It's too bad the Member for Dunvegan didn't read the bill and hasn't been listening to his own Premier, because in fact they have had a great deal of talk about putting in place the stability fund, another good idea that they've taken from us. It will be interesting to see how they implement it over the next few months and how we see it come down into the next budget year.

In fact, a stability fund is a really good idea. We know that because the Premier has been saying that. It'll be interesting to see if he will prepare a report on finances to talk about how it can be put in place or whether he'll just do another money grab from the heritage savings trust fund, which we don't think provides the kind of solution to the instability in program funding that we've been facing in this province for many decades but particularly how we've seen them put in place over the past decade that the Premier has been in power.

Mr. Speaker, it is with very good intent that we take a look at how do we merge and implement the processes that the Premier has put in place with the kind of legislation that we are suggesting to be brought forward. So with that in mind and with the full support of the Leader of the Official Opposition, whose bill this is, and our caucus I propose to bring forward an amendment at this time. The Leader of the Official Opposition would like to have brought forward the amendment himself but can't bring forward two at the same time when he's speaking to his bill. So I will be moving that the motion for second reading of Bill 208 be amended by deleting all the words after "That" and substituting the following: "Bill 208, Fiscal Stability Fund Calculation Act, be not now read a second time but that it be read a second time this day six months hence."

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, the amendment, I believe, has not been circulated as yet. Has it at least been provided to the table officers?

MS CARLSON: Yes. It has been approved with a minor adjustment.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Okay. I see that the pages have it. Please circulate those amendments. I believe this is a hoist amendment.

MS CARLSON: Yes, it is.

So, Mr. Speaker, it is with great interest that we await what unfolds before the next six months, to see how the government, in fact, does implement the stability fund. At that point, if we support the stability fund as implemented by the Premier of this province, then there won't be any need to continue on with this bill. In fact, this bill has so far accomplished its intent; that is, to in a serious and a significant way bring forward an issue that is of extreme importance to this province. So in the best interest of the House and not wanting to waste any of the valuable time that could be devoted to other bills given the context that we're in, I support this particular amendment.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

MR. LORD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to have the opportunity to rise today and speak to the amendment to Bill 208, the Fiscal Stability Fund Calculation Act, as introduced by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie in regard to the bill from the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, who, I might add, I'm very pleased to see in attendance again today, having been greatly missed.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, it is customary for us not to make reference about people's attendance in the Assembly.

MR. LORD: I apologize for that, Mr. Speaker, and withdraw that remark.

In any case, regarding Bill 208 and the amendment being proposed to debate it six months hence or deal with it today, there are always good arguments on both sides or on even more sides of every issue that comes before the government. In fact, no one has a monopoly on predicting the future or predicting what the outcomes of any particular course of action may be. So it comes as no surprise that this particular issue has many people in favour and many people against. Even at that, opinions may well change back and forth in the future depending on what the current situation becomes.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, are you rising on a point of order?

Point of Order Relevance

MS CARLSON: I am, Mr. Speaker. I draw the member's attention to Standing Order 23. We are on the amendment. I expect that member to speak to the hoist specifically. If you look at 23(a) and (b), he is not relevant.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: On the point of order, the Member for Calgary-Currie.

MR. LORD: On the point of order, Mr. Speaker. I am speaking to the amendment. I clearly said that in my opening sentence and was just about to refer to it again when the hon. member opposite stood up.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: I hope that resolves the clarification.

The chair will recognize the Member for Calgary-Currie to continue.

Debate Continued

MR. LORD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I was mentioning in debating this amendment and whether we should deal with it today or six months hence, regarding Bill 208 I was going to say that it isn't even just the legislation that is the only variable here. It is, in fact, people who are applying the legislation which often makes the difference on the success or failure of any particular bill the government puts forward. This, of course, clouds the issues even further sometimes. However, I would say that in my own personal opinion, after careful deliberation of the expected outcomes of this amendment as it applies to Bill 208 as proposed, while I find some of the goals of Bill 208 to have some merit, I have no doubt that this amendment would not be helpful at all and that we should, in fact, deal with this bill today, a bill that I believe does have some merit. While I have no doubt that it appeals to a great many Albertans who have considered it or may even expect it to have some benefit, I find I am unable to support the overall idea of the bill and amendment before us. I believe that we should deal with it today.

A stabilization fund for capital purposes only may be a very good idea, but a stabilization fund dealing with operating deficits and operating expenses, I think, is not something that we should proceed with or wait around six months to deal with. There is little reason in my mind, in fact, to see this bill move forward for approval, and thus we should defeat the amendment and, subsequently, the bill.

However, just for the sake of argument, Mr. Speaker, let us assume that we didn't do that and that the Legislature were to move this bill forward and eventually establish a large general fund in the manner proposed. In doing so, proponents claim that Albertans would greatly benefit by having the fund provide for and serve as a cushion in times of serious economic downturn. Frankly, isn't that what the already established heritage trust fund is for? Do we really need to deal with this amendment or the bill? At first glance it does seem reasonable to conclude that another proposed fiscal stability fund would offer even further government department insulation or, if you will, protection in cases of downturn in the revenues coming to government and that thus it would, presumably, provide for even further stabilization and approved predictability from year to year. There's certainly a solid argument to be made that this may be a good thing in many ways. In fact, the hon. member opposite should be congratulated for his initiative in bringing this forward.

My concern, Mr. Speaker, is that such a fund, in providing increased stability, if implemented incorrectly and especially if implemented in a manner which applies not just to capital expenses but also allows for operating deficits – my fear is that it might provide increased protection and insulation from having to take the hard corrective measures and useful budget reductions that might have provided even more benefits than stabilized revenues might.

It might seem a counterintuitive argument, not easily understood, but to use an analogy, think about a forest in which there has never been a forest fire. Think about all that deadwood that accumulates and all that tangled underbrush, which is never cleared out, and how it starts to choke off the life in the forest, especially new life. We used to think that all forest fires were bad, but we now know that this is not always the case, that the occasional fire going through might actually be a good thing in terms of rejuvenation and clearing out all that deadwood and tangled underbrush and so on. This is very important to allow new growth to sprout instead of always being overshadowed and killed off by the status quo deadwood.

Now, doesn't the occasional funding crisis in government budgeting also create a not dissimilar process, as does a forest fire, in that large tangled growth of government spending, bureaucracy, and the status quo? A budget crisis has a way of just cutting through all that obstructionist process aimed at stalling cutbacks, protecting turf, and maintaining status quo, which is what the amendment before us would promote. It does; doesn't it? We're all too familiar with that process.

So let's weigh the benefits of total stability in our budgeting process versus the drawbacks and what effect the amendment before us would have on that. As its name suggests, a fiscal stability fund, like the one that Bill 208 suggests we study, would offer, at least in the short term, budgetary stability. It would be there to fill in the gaps in times when the regular budget, due to an unexpected decrease in oil and gas revenues, for instance, wouldn't let us quite do what we have been accustomed to doing and would like to do, yet things are not serious enough to draw upon the heritage savings fund. A fiscal stability fund would at such a time perhaps enable us to maintain all our current programs at customary levels, albeit at an operating deficit.

With an economy as cyclical and resource driven as Alberta's, it is certainly true that we are familiar with how revenue shortfalls can have a negative impact on a variety of key government priorities, including health and education. However, Mr. Speaker, the resources of a fiscal stability fund in times of economic stagnation could be used to offset the loss of revenues and thereby allow many good programs to continue completely unaffected. However, it could also allow stale-dated, obsolete, and expensive government programs to remain unaffected as well, programs that could and should have been cut off a long time ago, but they continue unabated, unaddressed, and unaccountable since there is no great pressure to change. The deadwood starts to pile up, and over time there can be a lot of deadwood in a hurry because it's always easier, more politically polite, and just plain friendlier an approach to never have to give people who are enjoying the status quo any bad news. No one likes to give people bad news, and those who have become dependent and accustomed to the status quo certainly don't want to hear about any bad news or changes being made either. So the tendency definitely leans toward no one ever making those tough decisions.

At the same time, there are always many voices calling for new programs. The tendency when money is more plentiful is to just add them as well, so those expenditures get built into the base. When money gets tight again and deficits start to soar, we know, scientifically, from studying the stock market and other human decision-making processes, that people always tend to err on the side of optimism, hoping for a better day tomorrow. So everyone drags out the tough decisions, avoids the bad news much longer than they really should, hoping that the money will come back soon, tomorrow hopefully, but when it doesn't, pretty soon you now have a really big problem.

In spite of how positive a completely stabilized funding program may seem at first impression and despite the idea of this amendment before us promoting that, Mr. Speaker, I firmly believe that Bill 208 would cause more harm than it would do good, and the amendment would do the same, especially if such a fund became a target for lobbyists and those who have not shown fiscal restraint ability in the past. For those who don't believe this would happen, I'm sure that even many members of this Assembly have some very vivid memories of having to make a lot of tough calls already in terms of prioritizing and trimming programs. Members will recall, I'm sure, how doing so is always fraught with difficulty, full of contention, generally a very unpleasant task, that many would prefer to avoid, especially when it came to implementing necessary cuts.

Currently the job is already tough enough, Mr. Speaker, with so many expensive programs considered important or essential to Albertans, and taking away that honest defence that there's just not enough money coming in makes it all the worse. Again, in referring to this amendment and the problems that it would create, I'm concerned that a large general fiscal stability fund would lead to temptation within departments to spend what they cannot afford as well as lead to complacency and also be subject to much demand. I am concerned that with a large general fiscal stability fund it may seem unnecessary to some to always have to live within our means. I am concerned that the existence of a large fund of this type, allowing for operating deficits, may lead us to postpone making the tough, necessary decisions that would be better done sooner than later.

I come to this viewpoint honestly, Mr. Speaker, not through theoretical intellectualizing but by practical experience. As a small business entrepreneur during virtually my whole working life, I know how difficult it can be to determine what you can afford to spend or plan to spend over the next year without a predictable revenue stream to work with. Setting priorities cannot only be difficult; it can also be wrong very quickly.

With that, I'll conclude my speech, Mr. Speaker, and thank you for this opportunity to speak to the amendment.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: On the hoist amendment, the hon. Member for Redwater.

MR. BRODA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On the amendment to the Fiscal Stability Fund Calculation Act as presented, I will not centre on an idea of a fiscal stability fund, which is what the member across the way would like us to believe this bill calls for. Besides, the government's own fiscal management commission has already called for a fiscal stability fund to be enacted. As such, postponing six months hence, as the amendment calls for, does not have any reason or logic to even have an amendment. Instead, I will focus on what the bill really asks for: a study with flawless premises that would produce equally flawless . . .

MS CARLSON: Mr. Speaker, a point of order. He can't do that.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie is rising on a point of order.

Point of Order Relevance

MS CARLSON: Once again, Standing Order 23, Mr. Speaker, specifically 23(b). Could you please advise the member that he has to speak to the hoist, not to the original bill, as he just indicated he wanted to do?

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Redwater on the point of order.

MR. BRODA: On the point of order, Mr. Speaker. As I indicated in my opening remarks, it is on the amendment. I have to have a flow-through to the bill as well, and without doing that . . .

AN HON. MEMBER: Flow through all you want.

MR. BRODA: I can flow through on the amendment. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Are you done with the point of order?

MR. BRODA: Yes, I am, sir.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Anybody else wishing to speak on the point of order?

The chair has heard this argument. As you all know, a hoist amendment is a wide-ranging debate, and there is some flexibility to include matters that impact the bill and particularly the hoist issue.

So the chair now recognizes the Member for Redwater.

Debate Continued

MR. BRODA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Bill 208, referring to it, does not ask for a fiscal stability fund. It only calls upon the government to create a report which would determine how a fiscal stability fund would stabilize the position of the government, protect social programs, and improve the long-term planning of the government. So to say that we're going to amend and postpone it for six months hence, I don't know what changes could be made to the bill that would be so important to advance it six months hence.

Using an analogy that if $1 billion were put into a fund starting in 2000-2001, there's the pie in the sky, Mr. Speaker. To me the whole exercise seems a little pointless. One billion dollars was not put into the fund in 2000-2001, so asking Finance officials to prepare a report based solely on a hypothetical premise seems to be a waste of their time. After all, they are hard at work, doing what they do. As indicated earlier, to have an amendment to postpone it henceforward does not make any sense to me, Mr. Speaker.

If I may be blunt, I'm not sure that there is a case to be made that this government is remiss in any of the areas that this report would address. To start, let's take a moment to consider the long-term planning of this government. When this government committed itself to reining in social spending and eliminating the yearly deficit and overall debt, we said that we wanted to be debt free by the year 2025. We also wanted to ensure that our social programs were always adequately funded. Now, it's not 2005, but we are years ahead in eliminating the debt and are on track to make Alberta the first and only debt-free jurisdiction in Canada. If that doesn't count as first-rate, long-term planning, Mr. Speaker, I don't know what does. So as I indicated earlier, to advance it six months hence has no relevance here. Let's deal with the bill itself rather than amending it.

We are, therefore, a forward-looking government. Every budget we produce, every decision we make has everything to do with what is best for Albertans now and in the future. This is what the creation of the Financial Management Commission was all about, Mr. Speaker.

That brings me to social spending, Mr. Speaker. Bill 208 seems to be based on a supposition that social spending in Alberta is inadequate. It is true that there is always a program or service that some people think ought to be provided by government but isn't. This is true on both sides of the House. The beauty of the legislative debate is that we can all bring these concerns and causes to the table and reach a compromise that is mindful of the interests and desires of all Albertans.

On the amendment, Mr. Speaker, many times I've indicated that I don't see any relevance to moving it six months hence. Inevitably, however, we have come to the conclusion that the government's role in social matters isn't to be all things for all people. Our role is to help those in need; as our Premier has indicated many times, a hand up, not a handout. Sometimes this means that the government should test their own programs, and often it means revising and discontinuing a program if the program isn't achieving the objectives it had intended to.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it's true that some of the policy innovation takes place in the years when the province's revenues are greater, and we can attribute that to the fact that the government is able to top up social spending in those years. This is not to suggest that the spending in other years is lax. Study by study shows that Alberta routinely ranks as a province with one of the highest financial social systems in Confederation. Given this, it always amazes me when claims are made that we're letting programs deteriorate all over the place. I ask: "How much do we have to spend? How much do we have to tax?" Instead of just looking at the amount of money spent, why don't we keep doing what the government has always done, look at the ways it is spent and ensure that the priorities of Albertans are met?

Mr. Speaker, Albertans have indicated that Health and Wellness and Learning are their top priorities. They want to ensure that we have a healthy, capable, and intelligent population not just because it would help our economy but because these are essential components of a good life. We responded to these priorities. Learning budgets increased to $4.2 billion in 2000-2001 and to $4.7 billion in 2002-03. Over the same time, Health and Wellness budgets have increased from $5.6 billion to $6.8 billion. With our response to the Mazankowski report we've indicated that we're not just going to throw money at the problems in health care but work to make the system more efficient and more effective.

We want to ensure that Albertans get the best service for every dollar the government collects. That's our goal; we work hard every day to achieve it, and we achieve these goals in a responsible manner, Mr. Speaker. This government will take the road that best suits Albertans. We will do it with their input, and we will do it with a view to providing the best government possible. This is what we've always done.

So, Mr. Speaker, on the amendment, again, I believe that this government has set a lot of priorities for Albertans, and I think we've done a lot in the right direction.

DR. TAYLOR: That's why there are 74 of us.

MR. BRODA: That's why there are 74 of us.

Six months down the road when we bring this to second reading, if that's the wish of everyone, I don't think much is going to change. Again, Mr. Speaker, we don't need a study to tell us what we've been doing right. We don't need a bill like Bill 208, which doesn't actually call for anything effective but merely trades on outdated notions of how to best spend our way out of problems.

So I do not support the bill, nor do I support the motion. Thank you.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

REV. ABBOTT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure to join debate on amendment A1 of Bill 208, the Fiscal Stability Fund Calculation Act. First of all, I would like to commend the Member for Lethbridge-East for bringing this bill forward, and secondly, I am downright puzzled as to why the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie would propose to amend this bill with a hoist motion. Now, I am going to support this amendment; however, I must first comment on my thoughts toward the bill itself to back up my position on the amendment.

Albertans appreciate the necessity of sound fiscal management, and that is why the Financial Management Commission was created by my government to investigate manageable, realistic solutions for growing funding pressures. The commission recommended that a sustainability or, if you will, stabilization fund be created to provide stable and predictable funding to general revenues. But a made-in-Alberta stability fund would only be one part of a bigger plan to soften the blow from volatile oil and gas prices. A stabilization fund could also help finance government programs when natural resource revenues are not so plentiful.

As the Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar I see the oil patch in action every day, Mr. Speaker. I see the ups and the downs. I'm sure that all members in this House are aware that oil prices and, therefore, oil revenues are unpredictable. This means that actual revenues often differ greatly from budget projections, which in the case of shortfalls requires fiscal adjustment or financing. It is believed that stabilization funds aim to solve the problem of unpredictable revenues. When revenues are high, money would be channeled from the budget to the stabilization fund. When revenues dip below the budget forecast, like we saw last year, the stabilization fund could finance the shortfall. This would stabilize budgetary revenue and thus budgetary expenditure.

Now, every member in this Assembly is aware of the importance that Albertans place on fiscal responsibility, a term that means different things to different people. In the early '90s fiscal responsibility meant balancing the government books, trimming the fat, and eliminating the provincial deficit. As the deficit was eliminated by my government, fiscal responsibility meant readdressing areas most affected by budget restraint while maintaining a commitment to pay down the provincial debt.

Now Albertans see the elimination of the provincial debt as an achievable goal, nine years ahead of the legislated debt schedule. Nine years. Right on. Once again the definition of fiscal responsibility must be altered with the changing financial picture that we face. While other governments are forced to run deficits, Alberta Finance forecasts Alberta's GDP to grow by 2.3 percent in 2002 and 3.5 percent in 2003. This success is due in large part to the government's efforts to create a responsible budget process.

The Department of Finance established the Financial Management Commission to assess the current fiscal climate and provide recommendations to ensure financial security in the future. This past September the Alberta government accepted most of the recommendations from the commission, all of which play an important role in improving financial management in Alberta. The commission proposed a sustainability fund to help reduce the impact of volatile resource revenues on the province's budget and to manage the orderly pay-down of existing debt as it comes due. The fund would also address the backlog of deferred capital projects in the short term. Finally, Alberta's sustainability fund would serve as a transition to the time when resource revenues decline.

Mr. Speaker, the Financial Management Commission was a success because they made sure to stay away from simply addressing issues of the day. Their review of how this government finances our programs built on the success of the current system and looked at effective strategies to sustain those programs in the future. The commission also made important recommendations that will improve long-term planning for government departments.

I strongly believe that all constructive ideas should be debated in this House. We must be careful to ensure that only the most effective and productive initiatives are implemented to ensure Alberta's financial stability. It has been stated often that Alberta does not have a problem with revenues; rather, our problem is with expenditures. This government, along with Albertans, has worked very hard to diversify the economy, yet this province still relies heavily on oil and gas revenue to finance social programs. We've learned that Alberta can enjoy the benefits of high oil and gas revenues as long as we are prepared for the prices to drop.

Now, the past decade has proven that the Alberta government will do what is necessary to improve our financial performance. This Assembly has supported some incredible legislation that has surpassed expectations. I think one of the brightest lights in the recent history of Alberta's financial diligence was the passing of the Fiscal Responsibility Act. That act required Alberta to pay down the province's debt over a 25-year period and included five-year milestones to ensure that the goal is being attained. Because of this act Alberta aggressively paid off a large part of the debt. This, in turn, allowed us to take advantage of the money saved from financing the debt, some $700 million to $800 million annually, and address critical health care and education issues.

I'm also proud of the Government Accountability Act, which made each department prepare a three-year business plan available for public review. This act ensured that Albertans could access the financial picture of any government department. The business planning and performance measurement processes also allow the government to continually identify core businesses of government, to prioritize the use of limited resources, and to make plans based on expected results.

The Financial Management Commission builds on the success of this legislation. Recommendation 13, for example, suggests that the current business planning process should be strengthened by requiring all government ministries, organizations and agencies to focus on measuring their decisions against strategic goals linked to the government's strategic [business] plan.

This recommendation is logical, and it's easy to implement. It will strengthen the long-range planning process.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 208 underestimates the work that this government has done to address the realities of Alberta's volatile economy, which is why I'm going to support this amendment. This government will remain on the right track and maintain a responsible approach to fiscal management. Again, that's why we had a Financial Management Commission in the first place. Over the past decade the Alberta government has been much more aggressive than other jurisdictions when it comes to fiscal management. Simply providing more money will never solve issues related to health, education, and the well-being of children. This government focuses on the long-term future and sustainability of Alberta, exercising fiscal restraint when oil prices are high, properly presenting issues to this House and to the public, and exploring conservative ways of preserving provincial funding in the often stormy oil and gas industries.

I believe that the Financial Management Commission provided important recommendations far above the traditional, problematic rainy day funds used in other jurisdictions. Fiscal stability funds are very popular in other countries and in the U.S.; however, Alberta has very few similarities to these jurisdictions, especially when it comes to the dynamics of its economy and this government's attitude toward public debt. While a rainy day fund has enjoyed success in some jurisdictions with moderate revenue fluctuations, we all know that Alberta experiences rapid and dramatic revenue peaks and valleys. Therefore, a stabilization fund would work in Alberta as long as it remained part of the larger plan rather than a stand-alone solution. That larger plan was written by the FMC and accepted by this government.

The stabilization fund proposed by the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East would therefore be redundant because of work done by the Financial Management Commission. This government has already accepted those recommendations to look at a new way of stabilizing and sustaining our revenues. Albertans have told us to find ways to ensure that government programs are sustainable while keeping the taxes the lowest in the land.

Now, another study, Mr. Speaker, a hypothetical study as suggested in Bill 208, will not help this government accomplish our goals. Therefore, I must support the amendment to Bill 208, and I hope that my colleagues will support it also.

Thank you.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford on the hoist motion.

MR. McCLELLAND: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. May I first commend the Member for Lethbridge-East for bringing Bill 208 forward, and may I also commend the wisdom of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie for hoisting the motion this afternoon. It's sometimes very, very difficult for the opposition to read the writing on the wall because we get into a mode and we see it through to the end.

The notion as brought forward by the member of the Legislature representing Lethbridge-East, the leader of the Liberal Party, in my opinion has considerable merit, and obviously the member was listening to Albertans, because Albertans felt that the notion had considerable merit as well. That was represented in the Future Summit, that took place this last year under the auspices of the Minister of Revenue. It was very clear at the Future Summit and, I'm sure, at many other summits, perhaps in kitchens around the province, when people wondered how it was that we could have unprecedented revenues one year and then have to haul in the reins the next year. I know that most members of the Legislature were approached by citizens in coffee shops, were approached by organizations here in our offices, all of whom had a common purpose, and that was: surely there is some way that we can bring stability to the economic affairs of the province, particularly when we make contractual arrangements and others with service providers. They need to have the certainty that comes with stability.

For instance, if the province has a long-term projection to build X number of roads or highways, then the private sector has to gear up so as to be able to continue or to do that work in a timely and orderly fashion. When financial circumstances are such that we don't have the ability to plan in a sustained and predictable manner, it's the people who have made their life decisions around our stability who are most hurt by this. It is not just a financial hurt. Many people centre their lives around the stability and certainty of what will come forward from government expenditures. Therefore, the notion of a sustainability fund as presented by the Member for Lethbridge-East has considerable merit.

Members will know, as well, that from the Future Summit came the Financial Management Commission. The notion of stability from fiscal year to fiscal year was a central point in the Financial Management Commission. I believe there were 25 recommendations by the Financial Management Commission, 22 of which were accepted. The centrepiece of those recommendations was, in my opinion, the capacity of the government to be predictable through a sustainability-type fund.

Now, the Member for Lethbridge-East in his bill suggests that at the end of each fiscal year, commencing with the fiscal year ending March 31, 2003 . . .

That's a year hence.

. . . the Minister of Finance shall prepare a report on how the financial affairs of the Government would have been affected if there was a Fiscal Stability Fund.

I'm trying to understand the logic behind bringing forward a bill about sustainability based on a study of what might have been in a certain circumstance.

Section 1(2) in this: "In preparing the report under subsection (1), the Minister of Finance shall assume that $1 000 000 000 was transferred to the Fiscal Stability Fund during the 2000-2001 fiscal year." Now, it doesn't say where that money would come from. It just says that it will be transferred into a fiscal stability fund. Perhaps it would be the heritage fund; that might be the source. As a matter of fact, the Minister of Revenue is currently seeking the advice of Albertans as to the future of the heritage fund. It's interesting to note that several members of the party represented by the Member for Lethbridge-East have had interesting comments as to whether or not the heritage fund should be used in any way, shape, or form as a stability fund.

Now, I wonder, then, why the leader of that party would have suggested that a billion dollars would be transferred to the fiscal stability fund but doesn't indicate where that billion dollars would come from. It would either come from increased taxation, reduced spending in key priority areas, which we might only guess at, perhaps health care, because to my knowledge, Mr. Speaker, there are very few areas in government expenditures that have anything like the resources from which a billion dollars could be transferred. Probably health care and education. There just isn't any other place that it could come from.

So if we didn't increase taxes to fund this, if we didn't take it from the heritage trust fund, where would that billion dollars come from? That's why the devil is in the details. But that does not negate the fact that the notion is worth merit. As a matter of fact, it's so meritorious that members opposite will probably see much of their notion coming forward as government legislation eventually. There is one of the frustrations of being in opposition. It's kind of like when you come home and you put the brochure for the new car on the table, and your spouse is a little upset with you. You say: "Well, why are you upset? It's just a brochure." She says: it's a brochure on the table today, and tomorrow it's going to be in the driveway. Well, that's a little like being in opposition. The idea today ends up in someone else's driveway tomorrow, and that is just the way it is.

As I started, I wanted to commend the Leader of the Opposition and member representing Lethbridge-East because his bill does speak to a notion that has had resonance throughout the province, and that was evidenced in the Future Summit and again in the Financial Management Commission and again has been considered through the Minister of Revenue's consultation on the heritage fund and again will probably – and I can only conjecture about this – see the light of day in future government legislation.

Bill 208 asks the government to study the implementation of a fiscal stability fund, and that is well under way. The bill does not set up the fund but asks the government to study what the outcomes would be by looking at the past and what might have been had the fund been in place over the previous year. Now, again, I'm really not quite sure what that would have accomplished. Perhaps I would have been more comfortable with this bill had the bill said that we will have a stabilization fund, that that fund will have X amount in it, that it will be used for this purpose or that purpose, that the resources will come from this order, and we will be held accountable for what our recommendations may or may not be.

At the Future Summit the idea of a stabilization fund was mentioned as a possible next step. Members across the way have discussed this, brought it to the table. [Mr. McClelland's speaking time expired]

MR. SNELGROVE: Mr. Speaker, it gives me a great deal of pleasure to encourage the support for this amendment, simply because we've been here nearly two years and it's just about the only thing they've put forward that looks ahead of the game instead of back. So I would encourage all members to support this amendment, and we would actually be doing the hon. Leader of the Opposition a favour, because pretty well all of Bill 208 looks back.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I would move that we call it 5:30.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: I believe the hon. member is calling for a motion to adjourn debate.

MR. SNELGROVE: That's right.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. STEVENS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that we call it 5:30 and adjourn until 8 o'clock this evening.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:25 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Monday, November 25, 2002 8:00 p.m.
 Date: 02/11/25
 [The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Please be seated or take your seats, as the case may be.

Travel Assurance Fund

508. Mr. Amery moved:
 Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to introduce legislation to establish a travel assurance fund to compensate airline consumers who do not receive travel services purchased from a registered travel agency due to the agency's bankruptcy or insolvency.

[Debate adjourned May 13: Mrs. O'Neill speaking]

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Thank you for the opportunity to finish my remarks from last spring with regard to Motion 508, the Travel Assurance Fund. It seems to me that it's the federal government – and it's the role of the federal government, not the province – who should be looking at this issue. We know that it is their jurisdiction. We also know that they are the ones who have the ability to make it an equitable opportunity for all of us across this country, and they should be the ones to bring forward real reform and, certainly, solutions to a situation that is not perfect for the consumer.

Mr. Speaker, I once again would like to stress that I appreciate the motive of the hon. Member for Calgary-East, and I do hope that he is able to respond to some of the concerns that I raised last spring. If he does, then I would be pleased to reconsider my support for Motion 508.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Our rules do call for up to five minutes for the mover of the motion to conclude debate. The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

MR. AMERY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you for allowing me the opportunity to offer my closing remarks with regard to Motion 508, the Travel Assurance Fund. As I was saying last spring . . .

AN HON. MEMBER: I remember.

MR. AMERY: I'm sure you remember that.

Since the events of September 11 the attitude we have toward travel in North America and around the world has changed. People are afraid, and air travel has dropped dramatically. Mr. Speaker, as a result, the last couple of years have been extremely tough on the airline industry, including many of Canada's air travel providers. In 2001 we witnessed companies like Canada 3000 and CanJet go out of business, leaving hundreds of air travelers, including countless Albertans, stranded around the world.

Currently, Mr. Speaker, Albertans can protect themselves by purchasing cancellation insurance; however, cancellation insurance does not protect them from the airline going bankrupt. Certain credit cards can also insure the purchases they make; however, many Albertans don't qualify for these cards, or as many people in my constituency do, they prefer to use cash.

AN HON. MEMBER: Why?

MR. AMERY: They have a lot of it.

Albertans are also protected when making Internet purchases from Alberta companies; however, many Albertans are still uncomfortable buying items over the Internet, especially purchases as expensive as airline tickets. At the present time, it seems to me, all that the majority of air travelers can do is follow the financial stability of the travel company they use in order to guarantee that they receive the flight they have paid for. I believe that Albertans and all Canadians deserve better protection than this.

Mr. Speaker, Motion 508 would provide Alberta consumers with an assurance that the plane ticket they purchased will take them to their desired destination. It is my hope that a travel assurance fund would also help foster confidence in the beleaguered air travel industry. Consumer confidence is a wonderful thing to have. A travel assurance fund as proposed in Motion 508 would be financed entirely by Alberta's registered travel agents, including any administration costs.

I want to make clear that the fund would not cost the taxpayers a single cent. The government of Alberta would not act as operator or financier. Mr. Speaker, I believe that this government has the responsibility to protect Albertans from events like the bankruptcy of Canada 3000. A travel assurance fund would ensure that the thousands of Albertans who use the airline industry would be able to travel in confidence and security.

Mr. Speaker, thank you very much for giving me the opportunity to close, and I would like to thank all the members who spoke for Motion 508 and urge all members to support this motion.

[Motion Other than Government Motion 508 lost]

Confined Feeding Operations

509. Mrs. Gordon moved:
 Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to work with the Alberta Agricultural Research Institute in researching the use of cost-effective technology to assist farming operations in alleviating nuisance-causing odours from barns used in conjunction with confined feeding operations or other related farming practices.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Stettler.

MRS. GORDON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Time is a wonderful thing. Fourteen months ago, after speaking with several of my producers in my constituency, I brought forward this motion. At that point in time, this was a very, very important motion.

Since that time, a lot has happened in dealing with confined feeding operations, and I thank this Assembly very much for what transpired here several months ago when we put into place legislation that would help those that were involved in what was known then as intensive livestock operations and are now considered confined feeding operations, where we moved the regulatory control beyond the municipal level to be dealt with in a different realm. It has worked for the most part to the good, although my producers tell me today that the waiting time on the applications is getting considerably more and more, and it's something that we're going to have to deal with.

But at that point in time, this motion resulted in the fact that one evening I sat and listened to a public hearing advertised and promoted by Lacombe county to deal with their applications to do with intensive livestock operations, and there were over 650 people present at that particular open house. One of the things that struck me that night is that most people concerned about confined feeding operations, intensive livestock operations, with the number of particularly hogs, because Lacombe county has a number of hog producers, was the fact that the smell from these operations was the number one concern of people, neighbours, various communities, various municipalities. That was their number one concern. This is the reason for this motion. This motion, in essence, encourages the government to focus funding and expertise through the already existing Alberta Agricultural Research Institute to develop cost-effective technologies to eliminate excess waste odour from Alberta's livestock farms.

Now, I know that this is easier said than done, but in today's world with everything we can do on the scientific end, on the medical end, we should be able to come to terms with odours, and this is something that my producers have long wrestled with. Way back, as I talked about earlier, when this whole intensive livestock or confined feeding operation issue came to a head, many of my producers told me that the first concern from the public was odour. Certainly, after odour there was environment; there was water; there were a whole lot of other things. But initially what you see is what you smell, or what you smell is what you see, and as a result people were very concerned about a hog operation being anywhere near them. So I thought that if we could work with what is already in place through the Alberta Agricultural Research Institute to try to come to terms with this, we would be better served. I understand that they are working somewhat to this end and hope that this motion would prompt them along, that we could rapidly move towards seeing something that would satisfy everyone.

Now, the hon. Member for St. Albert just told me a few minutes ago that she'd be glad to speak on this motion, but she has no hog producers, so she can't. I feel very badly about that.

One thing that we all can say in this Assembly is that what has happened over the last number of months if not years is that Canadian farms, Alberta farms are increasing in size, and urban centres are certainly expanding much more into what were previously known as rural areas, and the need for livestock waste management and odour management has certainly increased.

Confined feeding operations – we now call them CFOs – have become a prosperous business in Alberta, or they certainly were until what happened this summer with the drought, and they also have a great need for feed and hay. More and more applications are being submitted and approved for these operations each and every year. First and foremost, when you talk about a hog operation that is going to be near you or close to you, the first thing most people say is: what are we going to do about the odour? I had several producers during the discussion that took place prior to the legislation being passed – people just did not understand that the odour was part and parcel of the overall farming operation. As a result, most people want to right away say: we don't want it near us, by us, around us, or among us. However, if we are to continue to eat pork and other animal – no, by-products is not the word. I have to say pork because Lacombe county is the number one pork producer in all of Alberta, and it's not something I'm going to sit down and say, "Hey, this isn't good," because it's good.

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Hon. member, sorry to interrupt. We have a couple of ministers and one in particular who for the moment will not be named who seem to feel it's their right and their privilege to speak whenever they want, no matter how loud their voices: one in the middle bank and one at the far end. I would just . . . [interjection] Hon. member, if you don't stop interrupting and carrying on as if you're the only important person in this House, then we'll have to name you.

The hon. Member for Lacombe-Stettler.

MRS. GORDON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Would it be a pun if I said that those ministers are hamming it up?

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The problem with having too many children in here sometimes is that you can't keep them quiet. We might ask all hon. members to remember their obligation, and that is to allow the person who is recognized for speaking to speak without all of these interruptions, no matter how funny you may think you are.

MRS. GORDON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Currently there are certainly gaps in knowledge pertaining to understanding the difference between health concerns and nuisance-causing odours. I remember one young fellow, a producer of mine, that wanted to put in a new hog operation, and basically at that point in time, before the government stepped in and legislation was passed, he was told to put in biofilters, a technology that at that time was still unproven, and he requested repeatedly: how can you tell me if this is what I should be putting in? There was a tremendous cost to these biofilters, and nobody could tell him that this was the end-all, be-all.

So I guess this is actually the crux of what I'm coming to. I think that somebody along the line has to say: if you're going to put in a particular system, a certain technology, we have to ensure it's the best one that's available and will certainly help the odours and the nuisance-causing concerns of the neighbourhood and the neighbours. We also have to tell these producers what the cost is going to be so that they can figure this into their overall business plan when they are thinking that they are going to increase what they are doing or start initially.

There's presently no standardized method of measuring odour. However, there are several methods of odour-control science being developed worldwide. It's my understanding that although they've wrestled with a lot of problems over the last several years, many European countries have finally come to terms with this, and they do have some technology that they believe is state of the art and will stand the test of time. So what I'm saying is that I want the existing research facility that deals with Alberta agriculture to take a look at some of these and possibly say, "Yes, this is good," or "This isn't good," and let's move ahead that way.

We'll never alleviate livestock odours. I remember years ago traveling up highway 2. This was even before I was a rural person, because I used to live in Calgary, Alberta. Traveling up highway 2, it was the smell of money. Now it's just the smell, and that's unfortunate because it's still very important not only to the producer, not only to the community, but also to the Alberta economy.

So I ask you to support me in asking the Alberta Agricultural Research Institute to take a look at this and tell us: what is the best thing for our producers? What kind of technology can they put in their barns to alleviate odour as much as possible? We're not going to do away with it entirely, but at least it's a start, and some of my producers would really appreciate it.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to enter into the debate on Motion 509, nuisance-causing odours from intensive livestock operations. [interjection] Perhaps that member would like to say that just a little louder.

This is an issue that I have talked about for a long time, so of course I am happy to support the sponsor of this particular motion. We know that this motion is going to cost some money, but this is money well spent in terms of the long-term investment of this province, I believe. There are some remarkable things being done.

AN HON. MEMBER: Tax and spend.

MS CARLSON: Tax and spend. Well, it's one of your own colleagues who brought forward this particular motion which is going to cost money. There are some times when a dollar spent today saves you a lot of money and a lot of grief down the road, and I think this is one of those particular instances. If this province is going to continue to pursue intensive livestock operations, or CFOs as they're now called, they need to invest some money in ensuring that the people who are not directly involved in those industries can enjoy a lifestyle which we advertise as being supported here in Alberta. That means a lifestyle where you can smell the air and it smells fresh, a lifestyle where you can drive down the road and not hit a patch of road where the stench is so strong that you just want to turn around and turn in a different direction. As this member has stated, this is particularly a problem with hogs. There is no doubt that that is a smell that takes some getting used to, that neighbours to these operations should really never have to get used to in that degree.

So we do need to spend some time looking at those kinds of strategies. There are countries that have already done this. Holland, for instance, has the largest per capita investment in intensive livestock operations on the globe, the most densely populated areas combined with intensive livestock operations, and they don't have a smell problem. Why is that? Because they have invested in advanced technology. Their per capita operating costs for the operations are higher than in Alberta, and that is why we see so many people from that country wanting to come over here and spend their investment dollars in this province, because it's a low investment cost as compared to their own country of origin. But we've got to get with the program here and make sure that we make these facilities and the surrounding areas livable for workers and for people in the surrounding areas, not just because, Mr. Speaker, we don't like the smell but also because there are health risks associated with that kind of air contamination and we have to be concerned about this.

Dr. Rudy Zimmer in his article The Right to Farm, Not the Right to Harm in the September/October 2002 edition of Alberta Doctors' Digest points to air quality issues as a potential health risk. In his words, "There have been a few community-based studies suggesting health effects [on area residents] similar to that of workers, and reduced quality of life." So we have to talk about how we can start to eliminate those. We know already from air studies that have been done in the northern quadrant of this province that we have some associated health risks with air contamination, and I would suggest that this could be a problem with intensive livestock operations in the future too.

What we didn't really see from this member when she talked about her motion was the sort of technology that she had in mind. I know that I have seen some really great examples. In Europe they sell in-vessel systems which take the waste products immediately and put them in a contained unit, separate out the methane, so that's a salable product, potentially, back into the grid. It takes the water out of the rest of the product and has that as a by-product and then has a very dry by-product as a result of that, which is easily made into compost or other kinds of fertilizer. There is a company operating in Calgary right now that takes this waste product from both hogs and cattle, and it has a drying kind of format to it which reduces it to a pellet form as a fertilizer. It is completely odourless, Mr. Speaker. I think everyone in this Assembly would be very, very impressed with the product. In fact, I was so impressed with the product that I sent some samples of it to the minister of agriculture so that she, too, could take a look at what companies are doing on their own with very little support for research and development. We know that it's hard for these companies to keep going if they don't have some research support until they can get their product to market, so I heartily support that kind of investment in research and development.

There are many other ways that we have seen being tried and true. I know that in the Vegreville research centre this is a high priority for them. They're doing some excellent work out there, and we certainly support that. We have seen all kinds of processes where the open pits are capped or they're emptied quicker or other products are added to them to reduce the odour. We've seen a huge increase in composting over the years, which is a low-cost and very effective way to manage this product. I have spoken on the record before about being against spraying for a variety of reasons. Odour is one of them, but the concentration that we get now in heavy metals in areas that have been continuously sprayed over the years is a problem.

I see that our colleague who introduced this motion would agree with some of those statements. So those are the kinds of things we have to take a look at, not yesterday's technology and yesterday's treatments but tomorrow's and those for the next few decades. What is going to make us an industry leader? We don't just need to be the lowest cost producer. We need to be industry leaders when we talk about the management of the total system and its relation to the rest of the province and the people who live in this province.

So for all those really good reasons I'm very happy to support this motion and certainly hope it gets the support of the House. If it sounds like it's not going to, then we do expect to stand on this one, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Little Bow, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. McFARLAND: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to have the opportunity to also join in the debate on Motion 509, which, as the Member for Lacombe-Stettler indicated, urges the government to work through "the Alberta Agricultural Research Institute in researching the use of cost-effective technology to assist farming operations in alleviating nuisance-causing odours." I along with two other members of this Assembly today – the Minister of Transportation, past chair of the Alberta Agricultural Research Institute; myself as a past chair; and our current chair, the hon. Member for Dunvegan – am very proud of the proactive approach that the past and present board members of ARI have taken with many of the new technologies and research that they've prided themselves on looking at in terms of leading edge technology. I would also like to express my gratitude to the hon. Member for Lacombe-Stettler for bringing this motion forward, since it does address a very important topic that impacts the noses of many of us from time to time in Alberta.

Like so many other people of my generation, Mr. Speaker, I've seen a province transformed from a largely agricultural province to the modern, multifaceted, industrial powerhouse that it is today. However, we all know that agriculture is vital to this province. It's one of the four pillars that contributes to our economy, and it's a cornerstone of Alberta's history and culture. Just as our province and our country have evolved over the years, so has agriculture.

We often hear the term "agribusiness" these days. Farming is no longer just about the family farm with a few cattle, a few fields where you grew barley and oats, some wheat, or some canola. Quite to the contrary, we have entered into an era where many huge conglomerates own vast tracts of land, and today many farmers lease or rent their farmland. There are also instances where farmers enter into large co-operatives and have their crops marketed jointly. Here in Alberta we also have the intensive livestock operation, or confined feedlot operations, as they're now called. In Little Bow, for instance, we have the largest total number of CFOs, including Feedlot Alley, which many of you have heard about in the paper, which is located in the county of Lethbridge. In each of these cases, Mr. Speaker, we're dealing with farming on a very large scale. The family farm may still come to mind for a lot of people when they think of farming the way it was 50 years ago. However, that kind of family farm is slowly becoming a thing of the past. For farming to be successful, size does not matter, not because of desire as much as necessity.

In any event, as the size of individual farms and farming operations has grown, I think it's fair to talk about farming being on a bit of a collision course with the urban landscape. Our cities and towns are growing steadily. Both Calgary and Edmonton are quickly approaching the 1 million inhabitants mark. In addition to, shall we say, Alberta's natural birth rate, there's little doubt that the strength of our economy is attracting people from both near and far from outside this province. Our garden, the farm, has become smaller geographically, but our production output has increased greatly. With such growth, Mr. Speaker, it follows that there's also going to be an increased need for housing. People need somewhere to live.

AN HON. MEMBER: Our garden?

MR. McFARLAND: Yeah. Our garden, the place that grows all our food products, is shrinking. As a result, our towns and cities are gradually expanding into what were previously rural areas, or the garden, as one of the members asked. At the very least, they're getting closer and closer to these farms and to the rural areas. There's even a term for this phenomenon that we commonly call urban sprawl.

Mr. Speaker, as Alberta's rural landscape changes, many city residents are moving into areas traditionally dominated by agriculture. Many people moving into rural areas have not been exposed to farms before. Today they may be located within short distances of some very large animal facilities. Going back to the idea of the family farm, some people want farms to look nice, but they don't want to deal with the reality of farming, including some noise and some smell. Generally speaking, where there's a farm, there's going to be at certain times of the year certain amounts of smell. However, it would be wrong to think that it's just our new neighbours who have had a bit of a rude awakening. So have many of us who have spent a good portion of our lives on or near these farms. While we're quite used to the smells associated with farming, make no mistake about it. They are stronger and sometimes more plentiful than ever before, an example I'm sure many of you may have experienced yourselves as you drove the highways of Alberta shortly after harvest. How many here have driven by a crop – they may not have actually realized it, but it was a canola crop that had been swathed, combined, and you suddenly have this funny smell enter your vehicle? Well, actually it's the decay of the plant stem that's starting to rot. I've actually sat with people in a vehicle who thought it was animal by-product smells, and it actually came from a naturally occurring decay process within a plant, which many of us use to put in our fry pan in the morning when we're making pancakes or frying an egg.

Other people have a misconception about odour. I can relate it this way: the story of the fly who flew into a barn. He noticed this pungent aroma, and he saw a pitchfork standing in the middle of a pile of manure on the floor of the barn. Well, he thought: aha, here's supper. So he flew down from the pitchfork, and he gorged himself on this great feast, and he tried to get back up on the pitchfork, but he couldn't because he was too full. Well, the moral of this story is: don't fly off the handle when you're full of manure.

In the same context, maybe some people at times tend to think that there's nothing about odour that's good, that it's always bad, and maybe they should look for the root cause of it. Mr. Speaker, as far as I can tell, the reason for this has to do with what I mentioned a minute ago. The family small farm that makes us wax nostalgic doesn't exist to the same degree that it used to. Today farming is increasingly becoming a matter of large-scale operations. Farms are not the same as they were a half-century ago. For farmers their kids' shoes cost more, just like they do for everyone else. It costs more to go to movies and send kids to university, just like everyone else. But the prices that the farmers receive for their products historically – like meat, like milk, like grain – haven't kept up with inflation, and they've been forced into ever larger, ever bigger farms as a scale of economy just to keep the farm afloat.

New technologies have made it possible for farmers and ranchers to handle more animals on the same amount of land. These concentrated animal operations produce more manure, which means stronger odours. The little red barn and a subsistence number of livestock aren't nearly as common as they used to be. Farmers are not insensitive to these concerns. They're looking for ways to reduce agricultural odours cheaply and effectively. Many products on the market claim to reduce or eliminate odours by altering the microbial makeup in either the digestive system of the hogs or in the manure storage tanks, but as with so many other things this is an area where bogus or at the very least highly inflated claims abound.

There are a few reliable methods that are worthy of further exploration, and I think we're now going to get into some of the so-called details of the debate. Among them is soil injection. While not suitable for all soil types, this is a technique that's been used for decades. Instead of spraying manure directly on fields, a special tillage device incorporates the liquid manure underground and covers it so it never sits on top of the soil, and it disperses the odour.

Most everyone is familiar also with composting, at least on a small scale. In this process Mother Nature is in charge, letting micro-organisms break down the manure, and the finished product does not emit strong odours. However, the process of composting is often time consuming, so large-scale composting isn't always going to be feasible.

Another process called controlled anaerobic digestion, or biogas production, significantly decreases agricultural odours, although it requires machinery and technical knowledge. In biogas production manure is placed in a closed tank under manipulated environmental conditions. The organisms living in these conditions break down the manure, making it smell less offensive. This reduced-odour manure . . . [Mr. McFarland's speaking time expired] I'm out of time, and I'm sorry. We've got lots to go.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: I wonder if the Assembly would grant consent to briefly revert to Introduction of Guests.

head: Introduction of Guests

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

MR. CENAIKO: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of this Legislature a great friend of mine whom I've known for some eight years, having been a member of the Calgary health region board. Howard Waldner is the executive vice-president and chief operating officer for the Calgary health region. He's in the Legislative Assembly tonight on his first visit to the Assembly, so I'd like to recognize him and ask him to stand and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

head: Motions Other than Government Motions

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands. [some applause]

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, it's indeed a rare honour to be applauded by members on the other side of the House.

I must say that I have some research notes, but I left my reading glasses at home, so unfortunately I cannot see the facts clearly. Therefore, I have some sympathy for the members opposite tonight. So my comments will be necessarily, therefore, quite brief. [interjections] Well, Mr. Speaker, at least they're awake.

I want to indicate, first of all, that while I support this motion, I feel that some perspective on it is in order. This motion comes after a bill that was debated in the last session of this Assembly that took away the authority from local jurisdictions to cite these large industrial agricultural operations and basically gave the power to the government to approve them. So the government, in doing that, clearly set a course for the expansion of industrial style agriculture in this province. The Premier, of course, as I would never want to not point out, indicated that the number of hogs in this province should dramatically increase, I believe somewhere from 1 million or 2 million to around 8 million.

So the policy has been set. The expansion of this industry is already under way, and the hon. Member for Lacombe-Stettler, of course, was at the forefront of fighting for those changes. Now we have a motion to study the impact of what has already been done. So having approved and set a course, now we're going to study the effects. Now we're going to study how it is that we're going to actually clean up the mess.

So while I support this, Mr. Speaker, I have to indicate that I think that things are not being done in the right order. If people were concerned about the odour – and, certainly, we talked at great length about it, and I remember some of those debates – then this motion should've been passed first, and the studies should've been done before the government decided it was going to launch itself on the path of massive industrial hog operations in this province with their well-known impact on groundwater and on nuisance odours that affect people for miles around.

Now, one of the members has talked about changes in the countryside, and those are quite apparent for anyone that wants to see, but it's not just a matter of city folks who can't cut it in the country. It's a matter of a qualitative change that's taken place.

When I attended a meeting of people in Red Deer some months ago to talk about this issue, it was a mass meeting. There were hundreds of people in the room, and I found that many of them were, in fact, farmers. It was the farmers that were concerned about this development. They were concerned about the impact on their operations and on the quality of life of themselves and their families. So it's clearly something that is of significant concern to rural people, not just city people who might be driving down the highway and occasionally run into a wall of smell.

Mr. Speaker, I really want to just put on the record once again my concern with the overall direction of the province which necessitates this motion. That's really the issue, as far as I can see. Without proper research, without proper thought, without proper consideration for the quality of life of people in this province, the government, in my view, is recklessly headed down a path of massive industrial agricultural operations. There are jurisdictions in the United States and elsewhere where this path has been followed and has resulted in a significant deterioration of the natural environment and of the quality of life of people. So I think that that's really the source of the problem.

Mr. Speaker, I'll just conclude my remarks with that. I believe that the problem with this is that it's really trying to close the barn door after the smell has escaped, and I think that it's unfortunate that the government proceeds in a reverse order to what it ought to in solving some of these matters.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Before recognizing the next member, I would just remind the hon. member that these are private members' public motions, not government motions.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

MR. CAO: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure for me to rise this evening to join the debate on Motion 509, which urges the government to work through the Alberta Agricultural Research Institute in developing the use of cost-effective technology in alleviating nuisance-causing odours from farming related practices.

Yes, Mr. Speaker and hon. members, my constituency of Calgary-Fort borders on farmlands and is also the home of several animal product processing operations. I support this motion as I feel that Alberta's growing agricultural industry could benefit from developing technology which would allow livestock farms to be located in close proximity to residential development. As Alberta increases in population, we have become more concerned with the challenge of melding rural farming communities with sprawling urban suburbs, and as our cities grow, more rural land is being developed, placing people's homes closer to farms and other agricultural practices.

Alberta is an agricultural province in which the intensive livestock industry is becoming more prevalent through its known prosperity for farm operators. As a government we have developed regulations that these farming practices must abide by in order to maintain operating licences or gain eligibility to develop a confined feedlot operation. Many of these regulations are related to controlling the livestock conditions and impact on the environment around the farm. Though these regulations exist, there is currently little regulation regarding farming odour, particularly odours caused by livestock operations. Many farms practise what methods they can find to contain the livestock odours and ensure they are not presenting a hazard to the residents around them, but presently little is available in terms of cost-effective and well-researched options for farmers to alleviate the nuisance-causing odours of confined livestock waste.

I commend the hon. Member for Lacombe-Stettler for bringing forward Motion 509 in the hope of creating a consensus that odours caused by livestock operations are potential nuisances. Like all provinces in Canada we have standards and regulations about how close farms and livestock areas can be to the nearest neighbour, which has provided us with enough buffer room to enable both farming and residential growth to continue. However, as we continue to grow, these farms should not be jeopardized because they are encroaching on residential areas. The agricultural sector is an important part of our economy, and it should be able to grow simultaneously with our urban centres.

We have acknowledged that something must be done in order to help residential neighbours of farms enjoy the property and not be continually disturbed by farm odours. In 2001 the Agricultural Operation Practices Act was passed, legislating that farmers must turn manure nutrients into their soil within 48 hours of application and that animal waste is to be stored in a standardized container regulated by size and needs of farming practice. Such legislation is outstanding. This helped decrease the impact on neighbouring properties and enhanced courteous farming practices around the province. However, it doesn't alleviate future problems.

Confined feeding operations are growing in our province, and if we are going to plan for growth in this sector, we must look into developing appropriate methods of dealing with intensified odours coming from these operations because of the sheer volume of livestock. We are all aware that there are odour nuisances associated with farming practices. What we must also consider are the health and environmental concerns associated with farming practices coming into close proximity of residential homes. These are very real concerns, Mr. Speaker. If we look at how fast the population of southern Alberta is increasing and the residential land use expanding, I believe it is quite possible that we may reach a point of urgency in the near future. It would only seem logical if we were prepared before this happens as opposed to scrambling when we are faced with an emergency.

We are not certain how severe the health risks are related to such odours. However, we are aware that livestock operations do emit poisonous and noxious gases. Currently we have the luxury of separating these farms from residential communities. It would be a shame to cut short the economic growth taking place in the vibrant agricultural sector because we have no superior system available for farmers in Alberta to farm close to expanding neighbouring communities.

We must explore our options. European countries have much the same climate and farming operations as we do here in Alberta. By looking into other examples of odour-reducing systems, such as those used in Denmark, we could develop an appropriate system more specific to Alberta's needs, reducing farm odours and possible hazards associated with them. I believe research in this area is an important step for advancement and opportunity for Alberta's technological sector as well. Although our climate and farming practices are similar to those found in the countries that have managed to develop the technology, there are differences which would mandate the need to research a way to modify it to Alberta's specific needs.

There have been tremendous advances around the world in capturing the biogas produced by livestock farming and changing it into enough energy to sell into the energy grid. This would be a wonderful advancement for our future, Mr. Speaker. We would benefit from this technology by the investment of our Alberta resources and by modifying it to Canadian farming needs.

I support Motion 509. Mr. Speaker, I believe it would be a proactive step by this government toward our current nuisance farming odour as well as ensuring that our province has a system that would properly deal with the health issues caused by the poisonous and noxious gases created through livestock farming practices. It is imperative that we think of the future. We are expanding in our population. It would make real sense to develop the technology to ensure that the Alberta livestock farming sector is not jeopardized but growing and prospering in the future.

I again commend the Member for Lacombe-Stettler on this motion. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan.

MR. LOUGHEED: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to rise today and speak to Motion 509. This motion deals with the concerns of many people, both urban and rural, and it's a motion that I will be supporting. Motion 509 encourages the government to focus funding and expertise on the development of cost-effective technology to eliminate waste odour from Alberta's livestock farms.

As a Legislature we should be encouraging this focus in Alberta's research community for a number of reasons. Chief among them are the intensifying nature of livestock production and the increasing movement of people past the traditional boundaries of our cities and towns. One only has to look at the recent census numbers to confirm the movement of people into historically rural areas. Back in March the latest census data confirmed that between '96 and 2001 the Canadian population grew by about 4 percent. Alberta, in particular, saw an influx of people from other provinces, an increase in population of approximately 10.3 percent, more than double the national average.

The census was also revealing about where people were actually living in those different regions. Almost four out of every five Canadians are living in an urban area of 10,000 people or more. More relevant to us today, metropolitan Calgary had the highest growth rate of any major city, increasing almost 16 percent to about 950,000 people. Edmonton's population grew by an aggressive rate of about 8.7 percent, making the capital and Calgary among the five largest cities in Canada. All told, Alberta can boast eight of the 25 fastest growing communities in the country.

With such high population growth it's only natural that city limits will expand further into the frontiers of rural Alberta. Cochrane and Strathmore, for example, are the first and third fastest growing communities in Canada. In my own particular constituency of Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan we see the community of Sherwood Park growing rapidly and the surrounding area of Clover Bar expanding rapidly as well, with acreages being built up all the time. Full quarter sections and full half sections are being developed with dozens of houses and up to 40, 50, 60 houses per quarter section.

With this growth come problems, problems that go beyond infrastructure and the time it takes to commute to work. As people continue to move to these acreages, we see more and more conflict between the traditional rural farming practices. These farm communities, where about 70,000 primary producers live and work – in fact, those producers are leading the nation in innovation and in quality of their product. If we consider Alberta's situation, where we have only 10 percent of Canada's population, through our farming practices we contribute a greater proportion than that 10 percent of farm cash receipts. About 23 percent of farm receipts come from primary agriculture. That's the contribution of Alberta. We look at a total of $7.4 billion in farm cash receipts for the year 2000, and about 60 percent of that is from the sale of livestock and livestock products.

These figures translate, Mr. Speaker, into Alberta being the largest beef producing province in Canada. In fact, our province was leading the nation in cattle production as well as cattle and calf inventories, at one time 6 million head. With the recent drought and sell-off we're not sure what those numbers are currently but somewhat less than that now perhaps. We also produce over $176 million in the poultry and egg industry and over $318 million in dairy production.

These huge livestock industries contribute a great deal to our provincial economy and, in fact, to our way of life, but the problems come when the by-products of agriculture begin to conflict with that interface of the urbanization of the rural area. I'm sure that a number of our rural members have often heard from constituents complaining about some of those issues where conflict occurs. As our population increases, so too will the issues surrounding the tension between the right to farm and the changing nature of rural Alberta. We already see, through the Agricultural Operation Practices Act, how it was necessary to protect producers from unnecessary lawsuits due to perceived nuisances. If the government can take a proactive approach to not only protecting producers but also trying to diminish some of the irritants, I think we as legislators will have done our job in this matter.

Mr. Speaker, I think it's possible to reduce some of the nuisances of production. In November 2001 the Alberta Agricultural Research Institute presented a workshop on manure in co-operation with the Alberta livestock industry development fund and the Alberta crop development fund. The workshop gathered the group's expertise and knowledge on manure science, focusing on issues such as agronomics and manure management, odour, and treatment techniques. Nine research projects were proposed, showing that the research community can respond to the concerns of our times.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, the world agriculture community has been developing several methods of odour control to help producers. In Europe a trend has developed to convert agricultural waste into a source of energy and a better by-product which does not harm the environment and that fertilizes without pathogens and odour. Closer to home new digestion systems are being developed where micro-organisms convert waste products into methane, or biogas, in a controlled and regulated manner. The energy produced can be used for heat or electricity. Currently, there are about 25 of these digestion systems operating in the States. Pilot projects in Canada, however, for the most part show that they were not economically viable. However, recent significant advances in the technology have made today's systems more feasible. A number of systems are currently running in Canada, including one in Saskatchewan and another near Lethbridge.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to commend the people in my own constituency who have taken the initiative and done some research and have moved toward improved agricultural practices. I'd commend the Scotford colony for their hog operation and the new techniques that are being involved on the colony with the recent new operation.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: I hate to interrupt the hon. Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan, but the time limit for consideration of this item of business on this day has now concluded, and you'll get a chance next Monday.

head: Government Bills and Orders

Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2002 (No. 2)

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader on behalf of the hon. Minister of Finance.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Yes, indeed, Mr. Speaker. Thank you. On behalf of the hon. Minister of Finance I'd like to move second reading of Bill 36, the Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2002 (No. 2).

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Happy to have an opportunity to speak to appropriation Bill 36 this evening. It's always a cause for great concern when we see these requests for big dollars coming in in supplementary supply motions, and in fact what we have here this year is the second one for this particular year. So when you have to ask for so much money, this time $822.853 million, that's a lot of money. It's nearly a billion dollars.

This is the second request in a year, and where do we find the bulk of the dollars going to? This year the bulk of the dollars are going to pay for some different kinds of weather-related kinds of events, extreme weather-related events, be they forest fires or be they droughts – in fact, $641 million is being asked for to cover that – extreme weather events to be paid for by a government who does not support climate change. You have to ask yourself the question . . .

SOME HON. MEMBERS: No correlation.

MS CARLSON: "No correlation," we hear from all over the Assembly, yet I would refer the members in this Assembly to the comments made by Jeremy Leggett, who wrote The Carbon Wars and who talks about some other world leaders, Mr. Speaker, who have begun to recognize that, in fact, there is a correlation, going back as far as the late '80s and early '90s. He quotes a number of people, including someone who this government has long held up as a fiscal role model, and that would be the U.K. Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher, who when giving a speech to the Royal Society in London summarized her concerns when she stated that "we may have unwittingly begun a massive experiment with the system of the planet itself." Not one known for eco-doom-mongering but speaking directly in reference to massive extreme weather events that were costing her government money. One of these days this government will wake up and smell the coffee, but it in fact for the most part . . .

AN HON. MEMBER: Smell the burning forest.

MS CARLSON: They'll smell burning forest. That could be exactly what happens, Mr. Speaker.

But, in fact, what's happening is what I've been saying for a long time. Business is on the ball with this issue. They're in the game. It's governments who are lagging behind. In the epilogue to this particular book this author says that while governments stall, business attendees are making headway, that since Kyoto new and positive atmospheres have built up in negotiations, and that the atmosphere was more of business opportunity than legislative threat. Not if you listen to politicians, Mr. Speaker. That's where the legislative threat is heard. We hear that day in, day out in this Assembly and with the massive propaganda campaign that we see from the government. Industry is now saying: how do we do this?

Government says: why should we, because in fact it can't be factual.

So what will happen, Mr. Speaker, is that we are going to continue to see increased funding requests in supplementary estimates because this government has the blinkers on, and they cannot see the forest fire for the trees. They have blinkers on that just keep them looking in one path. What's happening is that they don't budget enough for disaster relief in this province and haven't for at least the past five years, Mr. Speaker.

Even though the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development in response to the Member for Edmonton-Riverview last Thursday talked about this government using five-year rolling averages to determine how much money they should be allocating to forest fires, when we take a look at the numbers and we do the math, which is not all that tricky, we find out that that isn't exactly accurate. In fact, for the last five years they have been coming back and asking for substantial dollars because when they actually go to fight the fires, they spend significantly more money than what was budgeted for. This year they've come back for money for the fires not once but twice. What can we anticipate happening next year, Mr. Speaker? Exactly the same thing.

In this particular budget $229.2 million, lots of extra money for fires. If I recall correctly, it was about the same as the request for the first supplementary estimates, and that is in addition to what they budgeted for. So what's the problem here? The government can't really divide by five and figure out how much it's going to cost them or they run three-month budgets rather than three-year budgets, as they try to tell us about, or they just choose to rely on supplementary supply as a part of their budgeting process so that they don't have to truly invest any time or energy in long-term planning. It's a poor way to manage a province, and it's a poor way to manage nearly $21 billion in revenue that this province takes in every year.

One of the members on the government side today said that this government doesn't have a revenue problem; it has a spending problem. That's exactly right. When you can't budget properly, you run bloated governments, inefficient, ineffective governments who say all the right things but don't practice what they preach. Mr. Speaker, that is really a shame because this truly is an outstanding province. This truly is a province that takes in more money than any other province per capita in this country. We are blessed by a largesse of riches which we see squandered every single year, and that's a shame not only for those of us living in this province at this time but for those who will come and for the children whom we are supposed to be leaving a legacy for. It doesn't happen in this particular province.

We see great examples of this when we take a look at supplementary estimates. Lots of money to the farm assistance program, the farm income disaster program, and the crop insurance. Our leader is on record repeatedly talking about how to better implement those programs and make them more efficient and effective, not the least of which is getting the money into the hands of the people who need it in a timely fashion, which, in fact, did not happen again this year. So not only do they have to come back for more money, but they can't manage it once they get it, and that's a problem. Our leader has talked about the Liberal farm cost of production insurance program for many years. That is an excellent option, and one that he and the minister of agriculture have talked about and that would have certainly got money into people's hands sooner when they needed it.

We see all kinds of ongoing problems come up on the farms. I haven't heard yet in this discussion of supplementary estimates any good projections for how some of these large outstanding issues are going to be dealt with next year in a manner that is more efficient and more timely than that one that we have seen so far. I am hoping that before we actually vote on this particular bill, we're going to see some of those answers come forward, Mr. Speaker, because it is a lot of money, nearly $1 billion, and doesn't seem to be well thought out in terms of how they have requested the money, how they have budgeted for it, or how in the world you could ever benchmark when you ask for these kinds of dollars every couple of months.

So hoping that we hear some outlines from perhaps the Minister of Finance tonight on how the entire government will start to deal with these budgets in a truly fiscally conservative manner with proper management and an effective way of putting forward a future debt payment program where we can start to see infrastructure paid for on the kind of basis that is sustainable rather than this feast and famine kind of approach we have now. For a government that likes business so much, I can never understand why they would fund infrastructure the way they do, because what happens is that when you take all the money out of infrastructure, out of maintenance and repair, and out of new buildings or new roads that are required in the province, people are out of jobs. Companies go bankrupt. Then when you dump a lot of cash back in, trying to catch up on what is now a systemic deficit in infrastructure, what happens is that we don't get the best quality possible at the best possible price because now you've oversaturated the market. People get into bidding wars and construction is delayed and then there are cost overruns, and that isn't an effective way to manage an economy.

Business asks from this government the same as municipal governments ask, and that is sustainable, dependable funding that actually runs on a three-year term, not a three-month term, so that they can do their planning and so that they can be effective and efficient in the way they spend and manage their money. We could only ask that our provincial government could show that kind of leadership, and I would heartily applaud any attempts they make to move in that direction. But so far, for the past 10 years, not so good and not much to cheer about.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The chair, before recognizing the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, would remind all members that under the new rules, Standing Order 29, the mover of the bill or motion and the second speaker are entitled to 20 minutes. Then following that, each speaker has 15 minutes with up to five minutes of question and answer. So just a reminder of that.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise to speak to the supplementary estimates, and I want to concentrate on the same question that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie raised. The provincial government is spending quite a bit of money, Mr. Speaker, to communicate, to use the term loosely, with Albertans on the question of climate change and the impact of the Kyoto accord on the economy of Alberta. Now, they have not researched in any detail these economic costs. The Pembina Institute has done I think one of the best studies so far on the economic costs of climate change and has found that at the most it would reduce the increase in the economic output of this province by 1 or 2 percent over a period of years.

So the question comes about the economic costs which are contained here. We are seeing, Mr. Speaker, the first inklings of the long-term economic cost to this province of not doing anything about climate change, and we're beginning to see increases on a regular basis for drought relief in this province and for the costs of fighting forest fires. It's my view, as well, that the water problem in this province will soon reach the point where it is a barrier to further economic development generally and specifically to further economic development in the agricultural sector. Quite simply, Mr. Speaker, it's obvious to anyone who has two eyes to see that this province is drying out. It is drying out. I think that that's increasingly obvious.

So here we have again in the supplementary estimates increased unbudgeted expenditures for things like drought relief and forest fires, and the government is not sharing a long-term view of the economic costs of not doing anything about climate change with Albertans. I believe that it's possible that potential economic losses related to the oil and gas industry in this province can be offset very, very successfully with technological developments. I think that technology can get us past many of the difficulties which may arise as a result of reducing our dependence on fossil fuels, but it will be only a matter of time before economic losses in the other sectors outstrip any potential losses in the petroleum industry.

I have here, Mr. Speaker, a letter dated October 22 to the Premier by a number of eminent scientists in Alberta led by David Schindler. It's signed by dozens – dozens – of scientists, professors emeritus, associate professors, assistant professors. There are actually attached to this letter four pages of signatures of eminent scientists in this province. I'd just like to read to members some of the contents of this letter because I think they bear very much on these expenditures that we're being asked to approve tonight.

Contrary to the views often portrayed by the press and industry spokespersons, there is little disagreement in the scientific community on climate warming. The Royal Society of Canada, the Royal Society of London, and the US National Academy of Sciences have all taken strong positions on the global warming issues. Virtually all scientific models agree that we are faced with 1-2° Celsius of additional warming by mid-century, and considerably more by the year 2100 . . . The current scientific consensus on global warming is now greater than, for example, the general consensus in the 1960s that humans could reach the moon, or the consensus in the early 1940s that we could create atomic weapons.

Temperature records show that in southern Canada, considerable warming has already taken place on the western prairies. Increases in temperature since the early 20th century have been from 1 to 3° Celsius at various prairie locations, including those where increased urbanization cannot be a confounding influence. The resulting increases in evaporation have without doubt aggravated the drought conditions that currently plague the western prairies. With further warming, desertification of these areas may occur.

Desertification. That means it turns into desert, Mr. Speaker.

There has been much publicity [generated] about alleged economic losses that will be suffered by the oil and gas industries if Kyoto is ratified and implemented. But losses that will be suffered by other resource sectors if climate continues to warm must also be considered.

The scientists go on to say, Mr. Speaker:

Of particular concern is the fate of agriculture on the western prairies, which contain 60% of Canada's agricultural land. Both historical records and paleoecological studies show that the western prairies have experienced prolonged droughts in the past, at frequencies of roughly 25 years. It is very likely that drought patterns will continue in the years ahead. But this is the first time that other factors will amplify the effects of drought. Climate warming is causing increased evaporation. We have populations of humans and livestock numbering several million in the western prairies, and a large irrigation program. We may already be seeing the combined effects of climate and evaporation on water supply. Predictions are that Canada will be importing, not exporting wheat this year.

Listen to that.

There is a shortage of food and water for livestock. The effects of climate warming on agriculture in western Canada will certainly cost tens of billions of dollars. Compensation payments and crop insurance payouts this year alone amount to over two billion dollars in Alberta and Saskatchewan. The federal government dispensed 22 billion dollars in farm relief between 1985 and 1991, mostly the result of the 1988 drought, according to Statistics Canada. Such costs can only increase with a warming climate. Recent analyses predict that by mid-century the arid and semi-arid areas of Alberta and Saskatchewan will increase by 50% if climate models are correct.

MR. LUKASZUK: And the sky will fall.

MR. MASON: Yes. Well, you know, he believes that all of these scientists are Chicken Little, and one day he and his constituents are going to be crushed by a giant piece of falling sky, and that's for sure.

Mr. Speaker, the scientists go on to talk about forestry.

In the late 1980s and 1990s, the incidence of forest fire doubled in Canada compared to the 1960s and 1970s, burning a area equal to 80% of the province of Alberta during this 20 year period. In the worst fire years of the 1990s, the CO₂ emitted by forest fires almost equaled that from burning fossil fuels in Canada. The area burned was enough to turn our boreal forests from a "sink" for atmospheric CO₂ before 1980 to a "source" of carbon to the atmosphere in the 1990s.

Now, Mr. Speaker, we talk about our forests as being a protection against the emission of CO₂, something that absorbs the CO₂, that is produced by animals and by industrial activity. But what the scientists are saying is that as the country dries out, the forests burn so quickly that they are actually putting more carbon into the air than they take out. That is of considerable concern if there are still huge amounts of carbon in the trees and forests of the Canadian boreal forest that would be released by increased forest fire. If climate continues to warm, there is a great potential for forest fire to amplify the effects of fossil fuel burning, resulting in warming that is beyond the predictions of climate models. Already, the costs of fighting forest fires in Canada average over 500 million dollars per year, with little effect on the amount of forest burned. The costs of fire suppression, lost revenues to the forest industry, evacuations of towns, and health impacts of smoke are likely to be extremely high. There will also be increased damage from disease and insect infestations, and direct effects on forests such as dieback due to warmer, dryer climate. Climate warming will increase the problem of freshwater for the prairies, and the water that remains will decline in quality. Already, wetlands are dry and many lakes have lost most of their water. Summer river flows are already flowing at 20-60% of historical values. Some communities have already lost their groundwater supplies, and have built or are proposing pipelines to our already overtaxed rivers.

It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that we'll be considering a bill dealing with that in this fall sitting.

These pipelines appear to cost on the order of thirty million dollars each. Costs of water treatment, water conservation, and watershed protection will also increase.

It goes on to say that it's just a few examples of the effects of climate warming and concludes that the scientific community is broadly of the opinion that this is a most serious issue to be dealt with by governments here at home and abroad.

Mr. Speaker, I just want to indicate that I believe that the expenditures contained here, these extraordinary expenditures, unbudgeted expenditures, represent just the tip of the iceberg for the expenditures which will be required, which will balloon, which will mushroom over time. We tend to think of nature in terms of equilibrium, that if something gets pushed over on one side, it gets stopped by something and then a new equilibrium is reached. That's not necessarily the case in the area of climate change.

The example of the forests is one. As things dry out, more fires release even more CO₂, so it has a tendency to accelerate rather than to bring it back into balance. Similarly with the melting of the polar ice caps and with the snow cap that exists in the world. That reflects an enormous amount of sunlight back into space, Mr. Speaker. As the amount of snow on the earth's surface decreases as the size of the polar icecaps shrinks, less of the radiation is returned to space, more is absorbed within the atmosphere. So you have a tendency for the effect of global warming to accelerate rather than to come back into balance, and it can in fact be a most dangerous situation.

The temperatures on Venus, which has an intense cloud cover, are in the order of 600 to 800 degrees Celsius. The effect is not caused by its closeness to the sun. [interjection] Well, if people want to laugh, they can laugh. Mr. Speaker, Venus has an extremely high temperature. The reason for that is because of its atmosphere, not its proximity to the sun, and it has experienced what's called a runaway greenhouse effect, which means that the effect rebounded upon itself many times. So Venus is, of course, uninhabitable, and it's possible . . . [interjection] How is it you don't know, hon. minister? It's 800 degrees.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Hon. members, this is not a back and forth operation; it's one member speaking at a time, other members listening or being quiet.

MR. MASON: Now, I know that talking about Venus is just a little bit too far out for some of the hon. members here tonight, Mr. Speaker. I only raise it to indicate that notions about equilibrium in matters of climate change are just assumptions and that there is such a thing as a runaway greenhouse effect, which many scientists have predicted is possible on the earth if the present trends continue for too long.

That's something that maybe is beyond what people want to really consider at this point, Mr. Speaker, but I do think that Dr. Schindler's report is, in fact, a serious one, and I'd be happy to entertain any questions.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: We have three or four people who have indicated to me that they are desirous of asking questions. That will mean that we'll be down to about 30 seconds for a question and about 30 seconds for an answer.

But before we go, may we have agreement to briefly revert to Introduction of Guests?

head: Introduction of Guests

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

MR. CENAIKO: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It again gives me a great deal of honour to introduce to you a number of young people that are here this evening sitting in the members' gallery who are with the PC Youth executive: Blake Robert, the president of the PC Youth executive as well as a constituent of mine, as well as Virginia Linkletter, Ashley Geis, Harrison Gallelli, William McBeth, and Dana Lea. If they'd like to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

head: Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The list is as follows: the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar will be followed by the hon. Member for Castle Downs, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford. In asking of questions, you'll have to be succinct and similarly the answers on this part of the budget debate.

REV. ABBOTT: Mr. Speaker, out of respect for all the other members that would like to ask a question, I will defer to them.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The next one on the list is Edmonton-Castle Downs.

MR. LUKASZUK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There are few gases in this world more noxious than those just emitted by the Member for Edmonton-Highlands. However, I would like to ask him: does he suggest that instead of helping out our farmers with the effects of weather disasters, we transfer the wealth from Alberta to Third World countries and tell them that this will help our farmers in the long run?

MR. MASON: Mr. Speaker, I quite frankly have no idea what the hon. member is talking about.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford. It's yours.

MR. McCLELLAND: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Member for Edmonton-Highlands brought the supplementary estimates over to the Kyoto accord and climate change, and I'm wondering if the Member for Edmonton-Highlands will advise the House: in his opinion, is the Kyoto accord primarily environmental or primarily wealth transfer?

MR. MASON: Mr. Speaker, I didn't speak about the Kyoto accord. I talked about the cost of not dealing with climate change and with CO₂ emissions. That's what I spoke about.

MR. McCLELLAND: On questions and comments, then, the Member for Edmonton-Highlands was not speaking to the Kyoto accord, was speaking to emissions which may or may not cause environmental catastrophes, which have a direct implication on the public purse. So my question again is: in the Member for Edmonton-Highland's opinion is the current environmental accord that is being considered by this Legislature as well as the national Legislature primarily concerning emissions, carbon dioxide, or wealth transfer?

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would submit that the Kyoto accord depends on the implementation formula. Those are all matters that need to be negotiated between the provinces and the federal government, and I believe that if the provincial government here takes an active and strong role in fighting for Alberta's interests within the context of those negotiations, the Kyoto accord implementation can be fair to all provinces and share the burden. Our position has always been that the penalties ought to be based on consumption of fossil fuels, not on production, and that formula would ensure that Alberta's industry is not unduly impacted relative to the rest of the country.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, as the time goes.

MR. McCLELLAND: Thank you very much to the member representing Edmonton-Highlands. At the Global Policy Forum representatives of the Heinrich Boell Foundation, which is affiliated with the German Green Party, made the case that the planet desperately needed resources for redistribution to Third World countries and the best, the most effective way to raise these resources was through a carbon tax or through the so-called Tobin tax.

MS CARLSON: A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: A point of order. Do you have a citation, Edmonton-Ellerslie?

Point of Order Relevance

MS CARLSON: I do, Mr. Speaker. I refer you to Erskine May, page 378, relevance. I'm wondering what this member's relevance is in the question he's asking with regard to the estimates, which were in second reading this evening.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: I think I'll hold that in reserve. I was wondering the same thing myself, hon. member, but that's primarily referring to questions in question period. This is a brand-new process that we're entering into; that is to say, allowing the free flow during debate of questions from members that are generated spontaneously. They don't know that that particular item is referenced in Erskine May, so I'll just take that under advisement and come back later for other things.

In the meantime, I think time has probably just about run out for the hon. member in any event.

MS CARLSON: Then I have a point of clarification on that.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: I'm sorry. I didn't hear. Was that a comment, a question?

MS CARLSON: Mr. Speaker, in terms of your comments on this point of order I have a clarification.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Okay. Clarify.

MS CARLSON: The reference I referred you to on page 378 of Erskine May deals particularly with relevance in debate, which I assumed this to be, not to other types of questions.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford on the point of order.

MR. McCLELLAND: Mr. Speaker, I would be happy to accept admonishment to be relevant, and then I'll take my place and conclude the question rapidly. So admonish me to be relevant.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: All right. I give up. I'll admonish you to please stay relevant to the debate, Edmonton-Rutherford.

Debate Continued

MR. McCLELLAND: The Member for Edmonton-Highlands would know, then, that the preceding comments before the interruption would lead directly to our capacity to make our estimates without a supplementary estimate. So would the Member for Edmonton-Highlands inform the House how after the application of a carbon tax Alberta's economy would be affected so as to be able to continue to make the payments to fund the carbon tax?

MR. MASON: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member would like me to stand here and say that I support a carbon tax, and I'm not going to do that.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Edmonton-Centre, now we're in the debate on the bill.

MS BLAKEMAN: I hope so.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Good. You have the floor.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much. There were three issues I wanted to raise in conjunction with this second reading of Bill 36, the appropriation act for supplementary supply. A number of people that have spoken before me have raised the point and have gone into much more detail – therefore I don't feel that I need to do that – but I think it's worth noting that we already had budgeted amounts for farm disaster relief, for fire fighting, and for flood disaster. Therefore, the appropriation amounts that we have before us in the sum of $652 million are additional expenses, supposedly unanticipated expenses, and I'm raising the issue of how these could be unanticipated.

I think that on one side of that debate is the issue of disastrous or calamitous weather events and climate change and on the other side is being able to properly budget for what should be expected during any given year. I've raised the issue of additional expenses coming through at supplementary supply for fire fighting in the past, and I would venture to say that if we looked back on the percentage of correct figures that have been in original budgets for fire fighting, at this point the department should have a better idea of how much it actually costs given the number of times they've had to approach this Assembly for supplementary supply for those areas. So whichever reasoning the government wishes to use, I wish it would pick one and stick to it.

But they do keep coming in front of us. I think that every fall and, in some cases, every spring and every fall we've had supplementary supply estimates brought before this Assembly, which I think is a very sad comment on the ability of this government to control its budget and to adequately anticipate what we'll need to expend figures on. That comment is certainly backed up by the Auditor General's comments on the difficulties that are created and the expectations that are created for departments and for staff when they know that they can come forward to their minister for supplementary supply every year and that in all likelihood they will be able to get that supplementary supply. It sets up a very poor precedent and an expectation that they'll always be able to get more money whether that should have been coming in the original budget or not.

I do note that the Member for Edmonton-Riverview had challenged a number of the ministers as to whether they recognized these calamitous weather events as having any connection to climate change, and the ministers were not willing to admit that. I think time will prove this side of the House right on that in the long run.

It is a significant amount of money when we're asked to do it, and I do have issues and complaints about the budgeting process of the government to be that far off. We're talking almost a billion dollars in total in supplementary supply requests in front of us. That's part of the second issue that I was raising: this habitual and accepted process of coming before the Assembly asking for additional funds. With all the resources this government has, we should be able to get closer to actual budgeted amounts.

The last set of issues. I did have a fairly good exchange with the Minister of Community Development around the $3.7 million for the transfer of the Western Heritage Centre. In response to our exchange I've had some contact from people in Cochrane who've raised some additional questions. I did send those questions over to the minister, and of course it can't be expected he would know the answer to these off the top of his head. I thought he might have some staff on that could quickly look some things up. He's aware of these questions. I'll just put them on the record. In fact, he has provided me with some responses already.

The situation we have with the Western Heritage Centre was that this was a huge white elephant. I think there's a strong argument that the centre really didn't have the support to be built in the first place or certainly not built to the size that it was built to, which has always been my feeling. I felt that the original museum was a more reasonable size for the amount of tourist activity that could be expected. Nonetheless, there was a huge banquet and convention facility that was built along with it, and frankly the tourist numbers have just not supported what was envisioned by the group that managed to talk both the provincial government and the federal government into money to build this larger facility.

So it has limped along for seven or eight years. It's been in trouble pretty much from day one. There were a number of attempts to come back to the government for bailout, and in fact they were successful a couple of times, I think. Finally, they got turned over to the friends-of organization in '98 or whenever that was, when most of the historical sites did assume responsibility through a friends-of society. That friends-of society, of course, was not able to keep the organization going. It's just far too big a facility for the actual numbers that were coming through.

So now the friends-of society just walked away from the facility in 2000, handed the keys over, I think, as of January 1, 2001. Now the government has got this facility back on their books that they don't really want. So there has been some lengthy consultation and a tendering process to accept proposals from the community and commercial interests as to what is the best use of this facility at this point, and there is a proposal from the town of Cochrane.

What's happening is that in Cochrane they've been led to believe that this facility would get turned over to the town of Cochrane for a very nominal fee, carrying with it no debt whatsoever. I've been trying to confirm that that, in fact, is what's going to happen with this facility. There has been debt attached to it in the past, and I've never been able to get what I felt was a straight answer coming out of the government as to exactly how that debt was either paid off or written off the books, or was it deducted from grants that were being sent out to the organization? It's never been really clear whether there's a debt attached to the facility or not attached to the facility, and I'm trying to determine that. In other words, I'm trying to confirm that when the province hands this over, does it retain any lingering debt that it, in fact, is absorbing that perhaps should be transferred to the town if the town is accepting this asset?

So the first question is: what liabilities, including debt, and what assets comprise the Western Heritage Centre as the government is ready to hand it over today? What are both sides of that balance sheet? What was the society's debt to the provincial government? Was there anything outstanding from the initial construction phase, and was there any debt left over from the nonprofit society's operation of the centre and the museum? Again, was that written off by the government? Was it clawed back from grants that were being issued to the organization, or is there still some sort of debt attached to the land? So is the government handing this asset of the Western Heritage Centre and the Cochrane Ranche over debt free with no liens or encumbrances on it? Has the province done a title search to determine whether there are any additional liens against the property?

Now, I did ask the minister, and he has responded that the town of Cochrane could apply for operating grants for the Stockmen's library, which is an integral part of this centre and a very important one, I think, to all Albertans but particularly to southern Alberta. It's really an outstanding collection of literary work from the stockmen and certainly around the early parts of our province. Could the town of Cochrane be applying for an operating grant for that library? Or if we want, call it a museum. The minister, of course, has responded that to apply as a museum, that really goes through the Alberta Museums Association, which is a PASO, a provincial arts service organization, which receives its money from the Alberta Foundation for the Arts or through Community Development's access to lottery funds, and then the Museums Association disperses the money. So that's really up to the Museums Association as to whether they think that facility qualifies appropriately for grant material. That minister has already given me that information.

Further, if we were trying to look at it as a library and whether it was eligible as a library, they would have to become part of the library system; in other words, a full operating public library through the town or whatever setup there was. They might be considered for funding then through library grants.

So we have a bit of a unique situation here where, in fact, it is a collection of literary material. It's not part of the public library system, so it's not considered a library and not eligible for library grants as such, and it would have to change the way it operates in order to be eligible. Although it's an antique collection of writing, it's not considered a museum either. So we have an interesting situation there with an asset that's been collected and donated to the citizens of Alberta that isn't really fitting comfortably into any category and appears not to be eligible for any kinds of grants under the current situation.

Those were the questions that I wanted to get on record. I understand that the minister will have his staff endeavour to get me answers to that. I will ask for expediency with that as the vote for the town of Cochrane, whether or not to proceed with this proposal, is next Monday, December 2. So if I could possibly get information that I could forward down to them before then, that would be very helpful.

I've been involved with this issue of the Western Heritage Centre for six years actually, since I got elected, and I have to say that on behalf of Albertans I'm glad that what's turned into a burden is no longer on the books of the government, and therefore it's not the responsibility of Albertans. On the other hand, certainly some parts of what's in that centre, not the building per se but the artifacts and the Stockmen's library and certainly the artwork, are an asset and were donated so that all Albertans could enjoy them, and we want to ensure that they will be looked after appropriately.

There's nothing special about the building itself. It's not an antique. It's not a historical site as such, but it houses certain artifacts that are important to us. So, you know, if the town of Cochrane accepts this, I hope they're well aware of what they're accepting, and I am trying to clarify that they're not accepting any kind of hidden debt. Conversely, if the government has now accepted debt that was incurred and it hasn't really showed up and it hasn't been answered accurately in response to the many questions I've asked about the debt issue around this particular centre, then shame on the government for hiding that one. I certainly asked the question a number of times, not to the current minister, to the previous minister.

So those are the issues that I wanted to raise during second reading of Bill 36, Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2002 (No. 2), and I will note that it is the second time we have a supplementary supply act in front of us in 2002. Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: If the hon. members will bear with me for a moment, we have a little bit of a problem in that the hon. Deputy Government House Leader, who also is Minister of Community Development, has been asked a series of questions which he might attempt to answer. However, the rules of the House, since he is the mover of this bill, are that when he stands to answer questions, that closes debate. So we can have that in order to close debate, or we would have to seek unanimous consent to allow the minister to answer the questions without triggering this other provision. [interjections] Okay. The debate.

Are there any questions? No questions. Any further debate? Well, now we do have it. The hon. Minister of Community Development to close debate, maybe answer the questions.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. There being no other persons wishing to speak at this particular time on this particular bill, I would like to acknowledge the questions that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre has provided. First of all, I don't think it's accurate to say that the Western Heritage Centre is in any way, shape, or form a building or a piece of property that the government doesn't want. This is not a question of trying to unload it. This is a question of the local committee, local citizens there wanting to try and somehow retain the centre for its original intended use, and this has come to light over the last year of meetings that I've had with them in this regard.

Now, in attempting to address what the community wanted by way of preserving the site for that original intention, it's actually the town of Cochrane who came to us and asked whether or not they might be able to put forward some kind of a solution. So it was not the case where we went to the town asking them. They came to us and said: hey, this is a centre that's valuable and important to us; it houses all the things it does; it provides the kinds of functions that it does. So they were trying to work out a community-based solution, and I agreed with that. I said: that would be wonderful if you could work out a community-based solution.

Obviously, the society that had the very good intentions of running the centre fell into financial hardship. It did not attract the numbers, which the member knows, that had been anticipated, so it became financially unviable for the society to continue operating it. As well intentioned as it was, it just didn't work out. So that having been said, they turned over the keys, as you know, which was also something we didn't ask for. Nonetheless, we inherited the keys, so we're the keeper of the keys.

I want to put to rest one other issue, and that's with respect to any debts that might be lingering or whatever. To the very best of my knowledge and from the recollections that I have – and I will, hon. member, get you more details on this, as I sent you in the note – there is no truth to any kind of a loan obligation that exists that we're aware of. Okay?

Now, I don't think there's anything there that hasn't been cleared up or cleared off or one way or another addressed, so the proposed deal, if you will, between the government of Alberta and the town of Cochrane, should it proceed, goes ahead free and clear. There is nothing there that anyone is hiding or holding back or whatever. So that's that question.

With respect to the library issue what I did indicate to the hon. member, Mr. Speaker, in response to her written note to me a few minutes ago – could the library on site there apply for funding? I believe I indicated that if they meet the criteria or whatever for public library funding and they apply through the municipality to join the local regional library system and they have the blessing of the municipality, then, by all means, they are welcome to apply and ask to be considered for the per capita rate, which at the moment is about $4.03, and the regional library also gets $3.07 or thereabouts over and above that. So that possibility may exist if they wish to proceed and if they meet specific criteria.

I think the member herself has accurately summed up the position of the question regarding the museum. That is entirely under the purview of the Alberta Museums Association. They have a membership list, and they have their own criteria. We provide a block grant to the AMA, the Alberta Museums Association, and then they in turn pass it out to their members on an individualized basis.

So I hope that addresses some of the concerns that the member had. There are some other specifics that I know she wants some detailed answers to, and I will endeavour to provide those to her in very, very short order.

Let me just close by saying that the town of Cochrane has recognized the value of the Western Heritage Centre as something that they want to build on, something they want to maintain, and something that they want to convert into a multi-use centre for many different citizens' uses, including a theatre. I think they also want to have a seniors' drop-in centre. In fact, they want to move their municipal business into that particular centre and do other things there as well, including maintaining as much of the original purpose and intent as is humanly possible. They're very dedicated to that purpose, and I do wish them well with it.

So I think, Mr. Speaker, that's probably enough for now, and I'll revert to the chair.

[Motion carried; Bill 36 read a second time]

Teachers' Pension Plans Amendment Act, 2002

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the hon. Minister of Learning it's my pleasure to move Bill 35, Teachers' Pension Plans Amendment Act, 2002, at second reading.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to have the opportunity to make a couple of comments about Bill 35. First of all, to thank the government for taking the substance of this bill out of the miscellaneous statutes act and presenting it to the Assembly as a stand-alone bill. I think that had it appeared in miscellaneous statutes, it would have set a precedent that we might live to regret. So I thank them for having it as a stand-alone bill.

It's a part of the faith agreement that was undertaken by the government, the Alberta School Boards Association, and the Alberta Teachers' Association that resolved the dispute and saw classrooms returning to normal in the province. It's a good piece of work, and we're delighted that it's here and are very happy in supporting it.

[Motion carried; Bill 35 read a second time]

Seniors Advisory Council for Alberta Amendment Act, 2002

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader on behalf of the hon. Minister of Seniors.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to move on behalf of the hon. Minister of Seniors Bill 34, Seniors Advisory Council for Alberta Amendment Act, 2002.

In doing so, I'd just like to make a couple of very brief comments, if I could, and that is that the essential purpose here is to allow for the extended time in the chair, if you will, beyond the current six-year maximum for the person to occupy that chair position. As members in the House will know, it is a position occupied by an MLA of this Assembly, someone who is doing a very good job, from Calgary-West.

I should also add that the Seniors Advisory Council has been a particularly effective council, Mr. Speaker, because they not only work very hard with seniors groups in different locales across the province, but they also provide a very valuable liaison directly with the government, which helps in the creation of policy directions and in the creation of services. It performs a valuable role in helping to monitor and provide a voice for the constituent group involved.

So I'm pleased to move it at second reading on behalf of the hon. Minister of Seniors.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to speak to Bill 34, the Seniors Advisory Council for Alberta Amendment Act, 2002, in second reading. As the minister mentioned, the purpose of this bill is singular. It's really amending the original act so that the chair of the council may serve as a member of the council for more than six consecutive years.

I listened intently to the minister's presenting remarks because I was hoping to get an explanation as to why it was felt that it would be a particularly good idea to have a chairperson in place for more than six years. I always find it very interesting that members of this government are very clear in their feelings that the federal government have been in place for far too long and are out of touch with people, et cetera, et cetera, and we're talking about an eight to a 10-year time frame there. So here we have them saying: no, no, no; we want longer than a six-year time frame when we're talking about the appointment of one of our own members. I've looked at the record of the individual that's being considered here, and although it's obviously not specific to that person, I think we can safely subtitle this particular bill as the Calgary-West memorial appointment bill because it is the Member for Calgary-West that would be able to take advantage of this extension.

Again, I listened carefully to the minister who moved this bill to see whether there was any anticipation of how long, how open-ended this would be. In fact, it is totally open-ended; there are no restrictions being put in place. So given this particular government's proclivity to get comfortable and stay in positions for an extended period of time, one presumes that this member would stay in this position as long as she was elected. I'd like to know the reasoning behind that.

Is there some advantage that's being anticipated by the government to having an individual stay in the position for an extended period of time? Is it the familiarity with the individuals on the council? Well, that can't be the case because all the other council members do have to abide by the two-term, no-more-than-six-year appointment. So having your chairperson there for an extended period of time doesn't get them any more familiar with the appointees to the board because, in fact, the board members are changing and turning over.

Does it give them any better understanding of the legislation? Well, there isn't a tremendous amount of very, very specific legislation in this Legislature pertaining specifically to seniors, so I don't know that you need an extended period beyond the six years to become very familiar with the legislation.

Now, I can be corrected on this, but my understanding is that with this appointment comes an additional salary amount. I look forward to having the specifics of that laid out, if I may put that question before the members here and perhaps have the minister or someone else respond to that. I do have to wonder: is this just to enhance the financial well-being of the one member who has the appointment? Should it not be shared about with some of the other backbenchers who would like the opportunity to talk about seniors' issues? Or is there some particular reason why this one individual would be the beneficiary of that?

Again, I'm not absolutely certain about this, so please correct me if I'm wrong. My memory was that there was a time with the Seniors Advisory Council when the chairperson was not an MLA; it was a member of the community. That's my memory from when I was with the Advisory Council on Women's Issues. They never had an MLA appointed as the chairperson for the women's advisory council. I'm pretty sure I remember a time when there wasn't an MLA that was appointed as head of the Seniors Advisory Council. So I'd be interested in getting clarification on that, please. If it did change from a nonelected person, a member appointed from the public at large, to an MLA, what was the reasoning at the time to be doing that? And I think a question about whether that reasoning is still relevant today.

So we have a very thin bill before us with one purpose, and that is to extend the ability of one person to serve as the chairperson of the Seniors Advisory Council for a period longer than six years, and there's no cap on that. Seemingly, they could sit in that position for as long as they were elected. I'm looking forward to the explanation from the government as to why they feel this is necessary, why they don't think that a turnover, a change, or having someone else in that position would be a good idea.

I'll tell you one of my concerns. As I've looked through the various proposals that the current chairperson of the council has brought forward, I noticed that certainly in the earlier days she seemed to have been more successful in having her motions and bills accepted by the House. As we get further along, we get things that are not being accepted by the rest of the House. The one that I'm thinking of in particular is from 2000, I think. Sorry; I'm just trying to refresh my memory here. She wanted the House to establish a committee that would look at establishing standards of care. So it wasn't even taking the more courageous step of asking the House to approve the creation of standards of care for seniors in institutions; it was simply to create a committee that would start to look at this. I don't think that motion passed, and I was very disappointed at the time that it didn't because it struck me as, you know, pretty reasonable and fairly innocuous.

Yeah, there it is, Bill 203, Residential Care Housing Committee Act, which was defeated in Committee of the Whole. That was in 2001. So, indeed, although there were some successful motions that came forward in '98, '99, 2000, 2001, when we actually look at the private member's bill in 2001, it did not gain the support of the government members, which really surprised me at the time and continues to surprise me. So I'm wondering if perhaps a change isn't warranted here to bring in some fresh blood or new enthusiasm or new insight, that would perhaps have resulted in a more successful bid to have this bill or a subsequent bill passed.

So in principle I don't object to the idea of the extension of this term, but I do have a number of questions that have not been answered about why the government considers this a good idea. I'm looking for far more explanation and support and rationale for this than certainly exists in the bill or we've heard from the sponsoring member. I did run this by the leaders in the seniors community. They were concerned that there was more to this bill than in fact there was. When I explained what it was, well, they didn't have a lot of comment, although they did wonder: why the extension? Why was that six years not enough? What was the rationale or the government reasoning behind wishing to extend that indefinitely?

So we're all asking the same question: what is the rationale behind that? What is being anticipated here? What's to be gained from having the same person serve in that position for an extended period of time? I mean, I notice that even on the front bench, we don't have ministers that serve in the same ministry for – I think six years would be a very long time for a minister to be in any given ministry. If that doesn't even happen on their front bench, why is this being anticipated for the chair of the advisory council on seniors issues?

As I say, in principle I don't necessarily object to this, but I would really like to hear some more explanation before I'm willing to support this bill or willing to urge my colleagues to support this bill. So I look forward to some explanation and perhaps some give-and-take while the bill is in Committee of the Whole.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Are you ready for the question? The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

REV. ABBOTT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question is: given that the hon. member earlier today said that she's been a part of this . . .

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. member is perfectly free to ask a question of the third speaker of the evening. The hon. member just referenced was the second speaker, and you're not allowed to ask them questions.

[Motion carried; Bill 34 read a second time]

Bill 33

North Red Deer Water Authorization Act

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

MRS. JABLONSKI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise and move Bill 33, the North Red Deer Water Authorization Act, for second reading.

Ensuring a healthy and sustainable water supply for all Albertans is a top priority for this government. Although Mark Twain said that whiskey is for drinking, and water is for fighting over, Albertans would not stand by and watch their neighbours go thirsty when they could provide a supply of safe drinking water. The communities of Blackfalds and Lacombe are in immediate need of water, and this is why this is a very important piece of legislation. Ponoka and the First Nations at Hobbema are also in need of a sustainable, safe municipal drinking water supply to meet existing and future demands. Bill 33 will ensure that these needs are met. Specifically, this act allows treated drinking water to be transferred from Red Deer to Blackfalds, Lacombe, Ponoka, and the First Nations at Hobbema.

This bill is driven by members of the community. The North Red Deer River Water Users Group, consisting of members from Blackfalds, Lacombe, Ponoka, the First Nations communities of Montana, Samson, Ermineskin, and Louis Bull, Ponoka county, and Lacombe county, is requesting a licence to allow for the transfer of treated drinking water to provide municipal water supplies to these communities.

The North Red Deer River Water Users Group held open houses in Red Deer, Drumheller, Lacombe, and Camrose during September 2002 to provide interested Albertans with information about the proposal and to solicit input. In addition, the water users group has worked closely with various stakeholders to ensure that all points of view have been recognized and addressed. Results from both the meetings and a questionnaire distributed at the meetings show that the majority of Albertans who participated in the consultation overwhelmingly support this project and are mainly satisfied that the environmental effects of diverting treated water are minimal.

Mr. Speaker, this is normally a very straightforward procedure that doesn't require an act of the Legislature; however, the Water Act specifies that water transfers between river basins must be approved by this House. The amount in this transfer is for the needs of these communities, and there is sufficient water in the Red Deer River to support this licence and future allocations. There's also enough water for existing licences for the natural ecosystem and to support our apportionment agreements with Saskatchewan and Montana. Also, while there are ecological risks associated with transferring raw water from one body to another, in this case the transferred water will be treated drinking water, not raw water, so there would be little risk of transfer of biological organisms between the two river basins.

Mr. Speaker, public consultations conducted by the North Red Deer River Water Users Group in Lacombe, Red Deer, Drumheller, and Camrose showed support for a licence that would provide an assured and safe drinking water supply for these communities. So, in short, this act allows us to meet a clearly defined need for a drinking water supply to these central Alberta communities in a safe, sustainable way and in a manner approved of by the people who will be affected.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I'd just like to say that we recognize that many small communities across Alberta are facing similar situations, and we need long-term solutions. The Department of Environment is currently leading the development of a provincial water strategy to ensure that we continue to have safe and sustainable drinking water supplies now and in the future.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 33 is community driven and makes economic and environmental sense. With the support of this House the people of Blackfalds, Lacombe, Ponoka, and the First Nations at Hobbema will rest easy knowing that they will not have to fight for this life-giving resource of water, and they will be grateful for the good sense of their neighbours and leaders. Mark Twain, you can keep your whiskey and fight for water, but this province of Alberta will ensure a healthy and sustainable water supply for all Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, I move to adjourn debate on Bill 33.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Another productive day, and therefore I would move that the Assembly do now stand adjourned until 1:30 tomorrow.

[Motion carried; at 10:18 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Tuesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Tuesday, November 26, 2002

1:30 p.m.

Date: 02/11/26

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

THE SPEAKER: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. Our Father, keep us mindful of the special and unique opportunity we have to work for our constituents and our province, and in that work give us strength and wisdom. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Visitors

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure today to stand and introduce to you and through you to members of the Legislature a Liberal member of the Saskatchewan Legislature. Jack Hillson was first elected to the Legislature in a by-election in 1996 and has served six years as an MLA for North Battleford. He is a lawyer and before becoming an MLA was the director of Legal Aid and served as a city councillor in North Battleford. He is here today to listen to the debate on the climate change bill. Please join me in welcoming Mr. Hillson to our Legislature. I think he's in the members' gallery.

head: Introduction of Guests

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly 47 grade 6 students and their teachers, Mrs. Val Ritter and Ms Shandell Switzer from Earl Buxton elementary school in my constituency of Edmonton-Whitemud. They're here today to observe and learn with keen interest about our government, and they're seated in the members' gallery. I'd ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the House.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

MR. BOUTILIER: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly three very special guests. First of all, we have Lieutenant Colonel LaPlante, the new commanding officer of the 408 tactical helicopter squadron; as well as Major Robert Bayes, the deputy commanding officer of the same squadron; and also the chief warrant officer, Robert Braybrook. Now, I might also say that the honorary colonel of the 408 tactical helicopter squadron, Bart West, is also joining them today. I'd ask these four distinguished gentlemen to rise and receive a very warm welcome for serving their country.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

MR. YANKOWSKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you the grades 5 and 6 classes from Overlanders elementary school, which is located in my constituency. These very energetic students are also very excited to see their Legislature Building, some for the first time, and to learn more about the legislative process. The students are accompanied by their teachers, Ms Laura Wenger, Mr. Jim Lovgren, also parents and helpers Mrs. Gloria Ames, Mrs. Kim Militsala, and Ms Krista Utas. They are seated in the public gallery, and I'd like them to stand at this time and receive the very warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure this afternoon to introduce to you and through you to all hon. Members of this Legislative Assembly Shirley Barg. Shirley Barg is a CAUS representative from the Athabasca University Students' Union, and she is in the public gallery, and I would now ask her to please rise and receive the warm and traditional welcome of this House.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two introductions today. Last May I rose in this House to introduce a remarkable woman, Ann Keane, who planned to become the first woman to run across Canada, raising money for charity and encouraging people to raise their eyes and open their hearts to the opportunities we all have to reach out and make this a better world. Today it is my great privilege to reintroduce Ann to this Assembly. She succeeded. She's the first woman to run across Canada. Would she please rise in the public gallery.

Ann began in Newfoundland in May and prevailed over snowstorms, rain, mountains, drought, lost toenails, and risks of kidney failure to dip her tired feet in the water of Tofino in August. Ann gained strength the whole way and eventually was running the equivalent of two marathons a day every day, week in and week out. Ann's spirit is an inspiration to us all. When we are tired or feel that we have given all we have or when we feel like quitting, we should remember Ann and the message of hope and compassion and courage she took to every province in this great land. Please give her a warm congratulatory welcome.

Mr. Speaker, Ann is the first to admit that she did not achieve her goal alone. She had various sponsors, including an RV company and a company that provided her with many new pairs of running shoes. She had a team of people who supported her all the way, taking donations, driving her vehicle, and stirring up publicity. Three of those people are here today. Would they please rise as I read their names: John Duke, Betty-Jean Duke, and Samsen Rohm. Ann also had her dog with her, who undoubtedly is the first dog to have run from Newfoundland to Vancouver Island, but protocol wouldn't let me introduce the dog here today. Would the House please join me in giving these four a fine welcome.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's with considerable pride and delight that I rise to introduce to you and to all members of this House 28 very special guests. They are members of the Canadian Diabetes Association marathon team, their trainers, and officials. These guests, ages 21 to 67, have joined other teammates across Canada as part of the Canadian contingent to raise funds in support of fighting diabetes. Thirty-six Albertans trained for and completed the challenge of a lifetime, the 42-kilometre Great Bermuda Walking Marathon in Hamilton, Bermuda, on November 17. I had the pleasure of meeting some of them on the plane on November 18 on my way back from Toronto. The team raised more than $200,000. Many of these participants are able to join us today, and they are seated in the public gallery as well as in the members' gallery. I would ask all of them to please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly two businessmen who live in St. Albert and Edmonton. They are seated in the members' gallery. They are Joe Evans and John Shyback, and they are both involved in technology and technology business among other things. I'm pleased to present them to the Assembly today, and I'd ask them to please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, it's my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly Mr. Darcy Craig, a resident of Calgary-Nose Creek, a young man who has taken a great interest in political life for the last 10 years. He's here to observe today's proceedings, and I'd ask that he rise and please receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

MR. HORNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of my colleague the MLA for Leduc it's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the House 28 visitors from Leduc's East elementary school. They are accompanied by teacher Mrs. Mary Ellen Whitworth and parent helper Mr. David Argent. I understand they're in the members' gallery, and I would ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the House.

head: Oral Question Period

Electricity Pricing

DR. NICOL: Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Premier said that the average rolling price of electricity for 2002 was 4 cents a kilowatt-hour, but when consumers call to request that rate, they are told it's not available to them. My question to the Premier: why did you promise Albertans a rate that's not available to them?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I'm quoting from the daily energy pricing report, and it's dated Monday, November 25, 2002. That was yesterday. I'd be glad to go through it. The average price for January of 2001 was 13.1; February, 11.7; March, 9.7; April, 11.5; May, 8.8; June, 6.4; July, 5.3; August, 5.2; September, 3; October, 4.4; November, 3.3; December, 3.4.

Now, 2002, the current year: January, 2.8; February, 2.2; March, 5.5; April, 4.5; May, 4; June, 4.6; July, 2.6; August, 3.2; September, 4.6; October, 4.4; and November, 6. We haven't yet reached December, so the average price to the end of November, which we're almost at, is 4 cents, according to the daily energy pricing report.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Premier: but that's not the price that shows up on the consumer's bill even under the generating charge; is it?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I'm not privy to every single electricity bill in this province, but I'll have the hon. minister supplement.

MR. SMITH: Mr. Speaker, since the inception of the Power Pool and starting last year, this price is published accurately in the Edmonton Journal and the Calgary Herald on a daily basis, and in fact the prices that are now available to customers in the marketplace are regulated rate options. In fact, the EPCOR rate for Edmonton is one that's approved by city council here in Edmonton. The Enmax rate is one that's approved by the Calgary city council. With the introduction of the Electric Utilities Act amendment in the spring of next year that will change, and those will come under the purview of the government of Alberta. Today the EUB, the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board, regulates the regulated rate option of EPCOR in the Aquila network and of ATCO in the rural network.

Now, Mr. Speaker, these are rates that under deregulation were given time for consumers all across Alberta to choose as new competition came into the retail marketplace. Frankly, that competition has been a little slower than what we would have liked to see appear, but I have been in discussions with people who are interested in entering this marketplace, and we're starting to see contract options being offered in the retail marketplace today.

DR. NICOL: Mr. Speaker, again to the Premier. And if he wants to, he can pass it off. Is it not true that what you're quoting here are wholesale prices, when in actual fact the consumer pays a retail price which shows the markup that the retailers put in place to discount for uncertainty, for risk, and for the aspects of dealing with the monthly changes in price?

MR. KLEIN: Yes, Mr. Speaker, and that's in accordance with the market and the philosophy that the market prevails. That would exist in a regulated or deregulated environment.

DR. NICOL: When this government undertook a policy of electricity deregulation, it promised Albertans that the price of electricity would be lower. Albertans thought that meant that their power bills would actually be lower. My question is to the Premier. Why hasn't that happened?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, the prices have actually come down, and, you know, it would be unfair to compare them to last year because there were significant rebates allotted to all Albertans. As a matter of fact, relative to my own electricity bill I didn't have one single bill last year for my condominium in Edmonton. I'm now getting bills that average about $24, $25 a month, which I feel to be a reasonable amount, Mr. Speaker. I have no complaints whatsoever.

DR. NICOL: To the Premier: why did you make rules that make it necessary for electricity providers to add on charges such as the fixed service charge, the municipal franchise fee, delivery consumption charges, regulated rate option shortfalls, deferral riders, and franchise fees? Why is it that they couldn't be there in a simplified form so that consumers can understand their bill?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I don't know if we've made the rules or if the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board made the rules, but whoever made the rules, the rules make a lot of sense. I can recall people complaining about their electricity bills and being charged a global service charge without a breakdown of those charges. Now, at least, the power companies and the retailers of power are compelled to provide a detailed breakdown as to those costs rather than a global figure. I'll have the hon. minister supplement.

MR. SMITH: Mr. Speaker, that combination of pricing structure was put into place after complete, careful, and extensive consultation with the Consumers' Association of Alberta, consumer groups, the providers of power – that would be EPCOR and Enmax – wholesalers into the marketplace. This program of deregulation that prevents taxpayer debt for new generation was an amalgam of good work done by everybody in this province involved in the electrical business. People asked for open and transparent pricing, and that's what they got. In fact, when we looked to the task force put together by the good Minister of Government Services and myself, it was found that we might have gone overboard in delivering total transparency on total unbundling of prices, but we would rather err on openness than anything else.

DR. NICOL: To the Premier: why do consumers in Alberta need a forensic auditor to understand their power bills?

MR. KLEIN: Oh, Mr. Speaker, nobody needs a forensic auditor to understand their power bill. I certainly don't. Perhaps the hon. leader of the Liberal opposition does, but my power bill is easy enough to read, and I can't understand why his isn't.

THE SPEAKER: Official Opposition third question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Energy under the directive of the Premier responded in early October to electricity billing problems, but everyone knows this policy was just to keep the Tory backbenchers from open, loud, noisy revolt. Last year the Alberta Power Pool reported many occasions when power producers withheld electricity production to raise the pool price by creating artificial shortages to make the price skyrocket even more. I don't know how anyone could describe that as open and transparent. My first question is to the Minister of Energy. Which producers used this strategy of price manipulation to increase their profits?

MR. SMITH: Well, the answer, very clearly, to that question, Mr. Speaker, is none. It is absolutely none. Of course, we would like to see these wild allegations that this member puts forward on a continual basis substantiated with even just a little, just a small bit of fact just to add to the debate. Really, there was an investigation done by the market survey administrator. They talked about gaming in the marketplace, and do you know what the results of that exhaustive study proved? That, yes, some people gamed in the marketplace and that it didn't work, that it didn't move power prices, that the Power Pool actually is, at the rate of some 3 and 4 cents over this summer, a good reflective marketplace of power exchanges in Alberta today.

MR. MacDONALD: Again, Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: how much did the price manipulation by these producers cost Alberta energy consumers? Tell us that.

MR. SMITH: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I have just stated, the investigation of the gaming in the marketplace proved that trying to artificially restrict and hold back power did not work in the marketplace. I can review the prices of the Power Pool, as the Premier did earlier, but I think that if you can look back to the period of the investigation, you can see that the power prices were at all-time lows and continuing to drive downwards. I think that as companies purchase power and deliver regulated rate options for the next year, they will examine these power prices and realize that perhaps, just maybe, in the next round of regulated rate options these prices can indeed even be lower than what they are today.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Premier: how can this government select and pick out EPCOR and blame them for electricity deregulation, and at the same time this government does not inform Alberta consumers of who was responsible for the price manipulation at the Power Pool? How can you do that?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, we didn't pick out EPCOR. Indeed, we don't have EPCOR in our crosshairs. I would like to allude to a previous question because someone – I believe it was the hon. member – alluded to a caucus revolt. Well, there was no caucus revolt, but I can tell you some caucus members were steaming mad, and most of those caucus members represent constituents in the EPCOR service area. These are anecdotal, but when you hear complaints of a customer waiting nine hours – nine hours – on the telephone to get service, when you see just absolutely insane discrepancies in billings, then, of course, the constituents phone the MLAs, and the MLAs bring these matters to caucus, and rightfully so. As it turned out, most, if not all, of these complaints came from MLAs whose constituents were in the EPCOR service area, particularly in the rural areas. So it's not a matter of picking on EPCOR; it's a matter of basically addressing the facts. The facts are that most of the complaints are coming from the EPCOR service area, and our MLAs legitimately are bringing these complaints to caucus to fix the problem.

Now, as a result of these complaints and the concern expressed by the MLAs on behalf of their constituents, action was taken by both the Minister of Energy and the Minister of Government Services to basically impose very serious penalties if billing practices are not properly undertaken and to submit to the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board, also, billing practices along with power rates and applications for increases.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party.

Electricity Billing

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In October of this year, just last month, a report on electricity billing issues was released by a task force co-chaired by the Minister of Energy and the Minister of Government Services. The task force made a number of recommendations for correcting billing errors, but none of them involved penalizing EPCOR or any other company. The task force even pointed to unbundling, a key feature of the government's own deregulation policy, as the culprit for the billing errors that have occurred. My questions are to the Minister of Energy. Why is the Minister of Energy singling out the people of Edmonton and fining one company only when his own report shows the errors are largely a by-product of deregulation and not the fault of EPCOR alone?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. SMITH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I know that this is kind of an unusual flip in this House, but we're actually standing up for consumer rights while the NDs are standing up for utility rights. We think that it's very important that consumers get accurate information. No marketplace can work correctly without accurate information. We have not had the same volume of complaints from areas of jurisdiction outside of the EPCOR/Aquila network. When asked to examine this by MLAs and consumers in the marketplace, we did that. We did that with a very good report that the member has alluded to, and we came up with this option.

This option doesn't single out any company starting with E. What it does say is that in this area the retail provider who administers the regulated rate option has a responsibility for correct meter-reading frequency and for correct meter-reading accuracy. We expect EPCOR and Aquila, who entertain commercial relationships, to be able to remedy these mechanical problems and deliver those solutions to the consumer, and if they don't, we have found the right mechanism that will help the marketplace function more effectively.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: has the minister sought advice regarding the legality of singling out one company for regulatory punishment particularly when that company is not responsible for errors it is being fined for? If so, will he table this information?

MR. SMITH: Well, I appreciate the New Democrats' right to stand up for big business, but, Mr. Speaker, the reality is that the consumer has delivered a great deal of many more complaints. I've received them from areas such as Barrhead-Westlock, and in those areas there are examples of incorrect meter reads. There are examples of meter reads that take place five and six months apart. There is an example reported in, of all papers, the Edmonton Journal, accurately, that stated a customer's bill for 162,000 kilowatt-hours. Now, a person who uses some hundred to two hundred dollars worth of power a month getting a bill for 162,000 kilowatt-hours tells me that the consumer knows what he's doing, and he wants a solution.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that EPCOR is the one that's being fined, will this Minister of Energy and the Member for Calgary-Varsity apologize to the people of Edmonton for scapegoating them to deflect their political embarrassment?

MR. SMITH: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, I will apologize to the consumers in rural Alberta who compose members and constituents of these people's ridings for the inability of commercial entities to move quickly on billing systems and meter irregularities, and I know they're going to work hard, and I know they're going to work diligently. Those companies, including the one named by the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, who represents the other university in Alberta that is in a major city with over a hundred thousand in population, embraced deregulation right from its start. It was involved in the consultation process from 1993 and knows exactly the remedies that have to take place.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Energy Industry

MS DeLONG: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta provides energy for the world. Our oil and gas is used to manufacture and transport goods around the world. Our energy keeps people in North America warm in the winter and cool in the summer. North Americans travel freely due to our inexpensive energy. A very small proportion of our energy is used to supply Alberta's own electrical power grid. Now, my first question is to the Minister of Energy. How many windmills would it take just to supply Alberta's electrical power grid or replace what currently supplies the grid?

MR. SMITH: Well, you know, Mr. Speaker, it's actually a pretty good question. It's actually a pretty good question. If you look at what was happening in renewable energy prior to deregulation, there were very few windmills in this province. Today this province boasts more windmills than any other province except for Quebec, and we will be passing Quebec with the Enmax/Vision Quest deal for McBride down in Livingstone-Macleod.

But, you know, one of the difficulties with wind power, Mr. Speaker, is that it doesn't blow at the same speed every day 365 days a year. In fact, it peaks and it valleys. So in a grid now in a province that has some 10,000 megawatts, you would actually need some 34,000 windmills to deliver a complete replacement to a grid now in Alberta that has about 60 percent of its power supplied by coal – coal-fired electrical generation – about 35 percent provided by natural gas electrical generation, and between 1 and 5 percent on hydro and on biomass and on windmills.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MS DeLONG: Thank you. Again to the Minister of Energy: what would Kyoto do to Alberta's production of nonrenewable resources?

MR. SMITH: No cash, no investment, no product, Mr. Speaker. Kyoto is one of the most visible examples of the federal government's woeful ineptitude – woeful ineptitude – on energy policy. There are many here who remember the national energy policy of 1980 and how it decimated an economy where people were working, how it, in fact, took some 60 billion plus dollars out of the economy. So the Kyoto protocol, if ratified in its present form, can shrink investment, can cost jobs, and, in fact, as Industry Canada has indicated, has a deleterious effect on Alberta's investment.

MS CARLSON: A point of order.

THE SPEAKER: The chair will recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie at the conclusion of the question period.

The hon. member.

MS DeLONG: Thank you. To the same minister: what portion of Alberta's oil and gas revenues go to the federal government?

MR. SMITH: Oil and gas revenues as expressed by royalties: not one penny goes to the federal government, nor should it, because this province irrevocably has an inalienable right to these resources and an ability to develop these resources, Mr. Speaker. In fact, when you do look at what does happen, this industry is Canada's largest investment product. In fact, on an annual basis some $15 billion worth of Canadian investment rolls into this province and creates a tremendous amount of jobs. The industry pays some 2 billion dollars in income tax, and in fact we see economic activity totaling some 50 billion dollars. This industry is the lifeblood of this province. This industry is the envy of countries throughout the world, and why a federal government would take active measures to decimate it is absolutely beyond my comprehension.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Security of Registry Offices

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Identity theft in post September 11 Alberta seems rampant. Criminals have broken into a string of registry offices in the last year, and last week alone thieves broke into the same Edmonton registry office twice, stealing almost a thousand blank drivers' licences to go with a computer, monitor, and photo printer. Police warned that if the same bandits are responsible for both crimes, they now have all the equipment needed to print fake drivers' licences. To the minister of Government Services: does the minister have any idea what the street value of high-quality, custom-printed fake drivers' licences is?

MR. COUTTS: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's an amazing thing. Every radio station and every television station has provided the input for that question here today over the last 24 hours. I must say that even though the hon. member opposite makes mention that there is probably a correlation between the two thefts, one happening last Tuesday and another one happening on Friday, there is absolutely no evidence that the two are related at this point in time. Even amongst the police service there is only speculation that they are related, and you talk to another police service and there is speculation that they aren't related. So to the question that the hon. member gives me: no; I can't say that any information that was given out actually can be correlated to the second theft. It is too bad that there were professionals that went in there and cleaned that place out in less than four minutes.

DR. TAFT: The minister is indeed right. All of Alberta is waiting for answers, and they're still waiting.

Why does this minister continue to downplay these security breaches when even the police are telling people to be vigilant about discarding documents containing personal information?

MR. COUTTS: Well, Mr. Speaker, let's first of all clarify one thing. The cards that were secured on Friday night: there was no information on them whatsoever. They are blank cards, and with the equipment that was stolen, there is no way for the individuals to gain access to our database to put anybody else's information on those blank cards. Absolutely no way.

Let me say, Mr. Speaker, that we are putting forward a request for proposals, as I mentioned in this House last Thursday, for a central issuance of drivers' licences that will stop this type of thing, but at the same time it will still ensure that Albertans out there will still get their registry agents' service from the 227 registry agents that are in this province. That service will be provided all across Alberta, but it will be safe and secure for a driver's licence issuance out of a central office.

DR. TAFT: Given that the minister recognizes that professional thieves were involved and given that the minister in Thursday's question period made public where the thieves who committed last Tuesday's break-in could find the special paper they were missing and that they went back two days later and stole the safe containing the information, will the minister finally admit that he has no handle whatsoever on this issue?

MR. COUTTS: Mr. Speaker, we have a very good handle on this issue, very, very good. That's truly just speculation by the member opposite. I took the opportunity to phone the president of the Alberta Registry Agents Association when the second break-in took place, and I asked him to do a survey of his members, to do something to alert them to the fact that there are unscrupulous people out there. We always have to be reminded of this. He had within five minutes of my phone call sent a communique to every one of his registry agents' offices to alert them to the fact that there are people out there looking at this equipment and to beef up their security measures. So that's the action that this government takes, that's the action that this department takes to make sure that everything is safe and secure for Albertans.

Funding for Police Services

MR. McCLELLAND: My question is first to the Solicitor General. The Edmonton Police Commission claims that the provincial government is not paying its fair share of the cost of providing police services directly attributable to the province's responsibilities, responsibilities such as document service, commercial vehicle inspection, parole apprehension. The release of patients with mental difficulties into the community often results in police involvement, as does the number of halfway houses and the increasing number of conditional sentences being served in the community. My question to the Solicitor General: is this true?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MRS. FORSYTH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On the question that the hon. member has brought out, we do have concerns about police funding across this province. We not only heard it from Edmonton but around the entire province. Municipalities are coming to us about police funding. Under the Police Act police officers are responsible to perform all duties necessary to carry out their functions as peace officers, including apprehending individuals and executing warrants. I am in the process of meeting with all of the police chiefs across this province. I'm interested in hearing their concerns and some of the ideas that they have to deal with this specific problem. I'd be pleased to meet with Mayor Smith, who brought this to our attention, and Chief Wasylshyn and will be meeting with the Alberta Association of Chiefs of Police in December.

MR. McCLELLAND: Thank you. My supplementary question is to the Minister of Municipal Affairs. Is it possible to identify funds transferred in support of policing responsibilities in the current block funding to municipalities?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. BOUTILIER: Yeah. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Many years ago the Municipal Affairs ministry used to transfer conditional grants, where we would tell municipalities where the money had to be spent, but we thought that, in partnership with them, they know best where the money can be spent. This past year almost $32 million, what we refer to now as unconditional grant money, has been allocated to municipalities from every corner of our province. Of that portion, $8.8 million went to the city of Edmonton. They determine the best priority where it can be used. Part of that, of course, is towards policing.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. McCLELLAND: Thank you. My final supplementary is to the Minister of Finance. The Edmonton Police Commission has suggested that because alcohol is an underlying factor in much of the expense related to policing, perhaps a portion of the income that the province gets as a result of the sale of alcohol should be returned directly to policing. Is that an idea that could be given consideration?

MRS. NELSON: Well, Mr. Speaker, the proceeds from the sale of liquor, along with all the other revenue basis that we have, such as royalties and income tax, et cetera, are pooled in what's called the general revenue fund. The general revenue fund supplies the revenue base for all of the core programs that we offer through our government. One of those core programs, of course, is dealing with funding for municipalities in the form of an unconditional grant. Those dollars do flow through to the unconditional grant that is given to municipalities to pay for services such as policing, fire, roads, et cetera, so in essence those dollars do flow through the general revenue fund to municipalities. Now, what municipalities do when they receive those unconditional funds is something they must determine based on the requirements of their own municipality. We don't get involved in telling them what to do with the dollars we've granted forward.

Swan Hills Treatment Centre

MR. BONNER: Mr. Speaker, the government's toxic waste plant in Swan Hills has cost taxpayers about $500 million since it opened for business, losing $9.5 million last year alone, making it the provincial equivalent of the federal Sea King helicopters. Rather than shutting down this environmental and economic liability, this government continues to throw good money after bad, and it's now negotiating a sweetheart deal with a subsidiary of the financially shaken Tyco industries. My first question is to the Minister of Infrastructure. What subsidies and profit guarantees using taxpayers' money will Earth Tech receive to operate this plant?

MR. LUND: Mr. Speaker, to move this plant out to the private sector, we went through a very extensive process of first calling for requests for qualifications and then going forward with a request for proposal to take over the operation of the plant. We are currently working with the company that won the RFP. Of course, the objective would be to not have to provide any assistance to the operation of this plant.

But I think the hon. member must remember what a tremendous asset that plant is to the province of Alberta. It has done a tremendous job. It has cleaned the province of PCBs. It is currently processing many very toxic materials that would have to be processed at some location. It's not a lot different than what we as government have done to protect the environment relative to the utilities, the garbage collection, the various programs that we have to keep the province clean. This is just another example. It's a utility that is very, very important to protect the environment here in Alberta.

MR. BONNER: To the same minister: will the minister table the cost-benefit analysis showing why it makes financial sense to keep this plant operating at great taxpayer expense rather than shutting it down?

MR. LUND: Mr. Speaker, I find it very interesting that the Liberal Party would suggest that protecting the environment is something that the government shouldn't be into. I find that extremely difficult to accept. The fact is that the industry that we have in Alberta does generate very toxic materials, and in order for those to be processed and for the environment to be protected, we need to have a facility similar to the Swan Hills plant.

It was extremely interesting as we went through this RFP. A multinational company was very interested in it, and some of the comments that they made about that plant I found extremely interesting. For example, they said that as far as they could see – and they're worldwide – there's no other plant like it in North America that can process PCBs, that can totally destroy those kinds of toxic materials. So, Mr. Speaker, for the hon. member to stand in this House and condemn that plant, I find it very disturbing.

MR. BONNER: Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: why did your government break their promise to Albertans that full public consultation would be done before toxic waste was imported from other jurisdictions?

MR. LUND: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has very, very selective memory. Perhaps, as some hon. members have suggested, he does not have a memory at all. The fact is that there was a period of time when the plant, it was said, would only process Alberta waste but that beyond that it could possibly import waste from other provinces. That is exactly what's happened. There was no breaking of any promise. This is exactly what was laid out at the time when the plant was first commissioned.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Low-income Review Report

MR. CAO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The report from our capable MLA committee that reviews low-income programs was released last May. I continue to hear from my constituents who are asking when they can expect to see changes in the province's income support programs. My question today is to the Minister of Human Resources and Employment. Why is it taking so long to implement the recommendations of the MLA committee?

MR. DUNFORD: Well, Mr. Speaker, we've talked about the low-income review report in the House on previous occasions, a very extensive report. There have been a number of recommendations from that report that have been implemented. One of the things, though, that we're currently waiting for is the final release of market basket measurements for, really, across Canada but specifically for the area here in Alberta, so then we'll have a better feel for what sorts of benefit levels we ought to be looking at here in the province. So I understand the concern on many people's part. In some cases it's actually led to some frustration. But we want to do it right, so we're going to take the time to make sure that it's done right.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. CAO: Thank you. My supplemental question is to the same minister. Mr. Minister, when will the talk become the walk in helping Albertans in need?

MR. DUNFORD: Hey, very good. That's the way. When I was a backbencher, that's what I did too; you bet.

I think I answered the question in the first part of my answer, Mr. Speaker.

MR. CAO: My second supplemental question is to the same minister. The low-income review proposed phasing in the market basket measurement as a benchmark against which to assess the benefit rates and also proposed increasing resources to clients whose income is less than the MBM. Mr. Minister, when will Albertans in need get an increase in their needed financial assistance?

MR. DUNFORD: Well, again, to go back to my first answer, we've been working with the federal government and other provincial jurisdictions on the market basket measurement. We think it's a better indicator of what is required in order to survive and to compete within a particular economy, and we think it'll be a better benchmark than what's been available to us. We'd expect that we should start receiving at least on a quarterly basis some firm statistics early in '03. Of course, as far as the benefit levels, that's all subjective, as the hon. member already knows, because he attends our standing policy committees. It's a matter now of getting ready for next year's budget.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

Labour Relations Code

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On Friday afternoon a settlement of the long and drawn-out strike at the Shaw Conference Centre was finally reached, after the workers at Shaw had pounded the pavement for six long months while their employer tried every trick in the books to break the union. While the cooks, dishwashers, waiters, and busboys suffered on the picket line, EDE was repeatedly found in violation of Alberta's labour code by the labour board. Despite this, the labour board was unable to impose any penalties on EDE because Alberta's labour laws are so inadequate and biased in favour of employers. To the Minister of Human Resources and Employment: why is there no penalty which the labour board can impose in cases like EDE and this strike, where they were found in violation of the labour code?

MR. DUNFORD: The labour code in Alberta, Mr. Speaker, contemplates that the government would play an active role but, you know, as a referee or some entity that would provide for a level playing field. I think that in Alberta we actually do that. When you look at some of the measurements that one is concerned about within labour relations, you'd want to look at the number of agreements that are settled without job action, you'd want to look at the productive time that's lost due to strikes. In both areas Alberta is actually leading the nation. So to characterize the Alberta Labour Relations Code as something that is in dire need of repair is certainly not representative of the actual fact. The code itself, of course, provides for penalties that are deemed to be necessary by the labour relations community here in the province.

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, then, will the minister tell the House: why is it that the government comes down like a ton of bricks on workers and their unions when they violate the labour code but twiddle their thumbs when an employer does the same thing?

MR. DUNFORD: Mr. Speaker, I think that that's an unfair characterization of the role that the government plays. Clearly, under the Labour Relations Code it is the responsibility of employers or employees to bring actions. Although the particular instance was not characterized by the hon. member, I think we all know the one that he's referring to, and if he has a concern about that, he ought to be talking, then, to the employer group and not the government.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member.

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the ministry has responsibility for ensuring that labour disputes are settled in a fair manner, will the minister bring forward amendments to the labour code which would give the labour board the teeth it needs to enforce the law when an intransigent employer deliberately violates it?

MR. DUNFORD: Mr. Speaker, we've just had a government MLA committee look into whether or not there should be a general review of the Labour Relations Code, and earlier today I actually received that report. Now, we've not had time to go through it and its various recommendations, but certainly that will be part of the responsibility that we'll have. We'll go through it and through every recommendation, and I believe we'll take responsible action, then, based on those recommendations, and I want to congratulate the government MLA team for the work that they did.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, then the hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

Water Management

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The scientific community has recognized that the status of our water resources will become the foremost ecological concern of the 21st century. Drought, contamination, and the commodification of our water supply threaten the livelihoods of all Albertans and the sustainability of their communities. To the Minister of Environment: how will the minister ensure a dependable supply of clean water to Albertans?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

DR. TAYLOR: Well, thank you. The member has actually put her finger on a very important issue for Alberta as we go forward, Mr. Speaker. I've always said that water will be the issue of the 21st century, and that's why we started late last year and continued into this year with the development of a water strategy. In fact, we held a forum in Red Deer – I think it was in May of this year – where we brought in people from all over this province and from all different viewpoints to have a discussion on water and the ways that we should deal with some of these significant water issues that we're facing in the province. Certainly, as we go forward, I've seen the first feedback from that meeting, the report, just last week. We're in the process as a department of just preparing those reports from those meetings, and then we'll bring recommendations forward to this House.

MS CARLSON: How does the minister expect to be able to manage the potential for contamination with water transfers?

DR. TAYLOR: Well, Mr. Speaker, I assume that she's referring to the Red Deer issue, where we have taken from the community an initiative. The number of communities around Red Deer is growing rapidly, as you know, and as a direct result of this they are having trouble with providing high-quality drinking water to the communities. So rather than trying to upgrade all those smaller communities to a certain level, the communities got together with Red Deer and said that we should, you know, upgrade Red Deer's plants and then pipe the water to these various communities: Penhold, Sylvan Lake, Lacombe, Blackfalds, and there may be several others.

As we do that, we're actually taking water from the Red Deer River basin, which is part of the South Saskatchewan River basin, and in some of the communities they put it back into the Battle River basin, which is part of the North Saskatchewan River system, Mr. Speaker. So you do have what under our legislation is considered an interbasin transfer, but the water that goes back into the Battle River is treated water.

MS CARLSON: Mr. Speaker, the question was a much larger issue. What is this government doing to ensure that water transfers in this province will never make water a commodity under the terms of the North American free trade agreement?

DR. TAYLOR: Well, certainly, we have investigated NAFTA as it refers to the one water transfer that we are doing, Mr. Speaker, and it has absolutely nothing to do with NAFTA. All the legal experts quite clearly point out that this type of basin transfer that we're doing, you know, has nothing to do with NAFTA.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

Age of Consent

MR. MAGNUS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In 1998 this Legislature passed a motion supporting raising the age of consent to 16 years of age from the current 14 years of age. A couple of weeks ago Canada's justice ministers met in Calgary, where the issue received much attention, but in the end the ministers decided to do nothing with respect to this issue. My questions today are to the Minister of Justice and Attorney General. Can the minister explain to Albertans why there is such reluctance by the justice ministers of Canada with raising the age of sexual consent?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. HANCOCK: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. An excellent question and one that does need some clarification. I would want to indicate to this House that, first of all, the hon. Solicitor General and myself as representatives of Alberta at the meeting advocated very strongly for a change to the law with respect to the age of consent. I should also indicate to this House that all justice ministers across this country believe that we need to do more to protect children from predators.

The issue with respect to the age of consent was a question of whether or not we could best do that by raising the age of consent from 14 to 16 – and, in my personal view, it should probably go up to 18 – or whether that should be accomplished by changing the law, the Criminal Code, with respect to how you determine who the predators are and how you deal with the predators. At the conclusion of the meeting we weren't able to get unanimous agreement among the provinces and, unfortunately, as a result of that, Mr. Speaker, the federal Attorney General indicated that he would not proceed with a change to the Criminal Code with respect to the age of consent law, but he did make a commitment to move with respect to changing the law with respect to predators.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MAGNUS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. How do our laws compare to those in other jurisdictions around the world?

MR. HANCOCK: Well, Mr. Speaker, the answer to that indicates that we lag behind other areas of the world when it comes to protecting our children in this area. Under Canadian law, of course, right now, as we know, the age of consent is 14, and there is really nothing you can do unless you can prove that somebody is in a position of authority under section 153 of the code to protect children from adult predators. Around the world it's a different story. In 49 states of the U.S., in England, in Austria, in Belgium, in Australia, in Luxembourg the age of consent is 16, and in France the age of consent is 15. Canada has a long way to go.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MAGNUS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: given the terrible impact that this nondecision has on the children and families who are the victims, is there any hope that the ministers responsible for justice in our country will see the wisdom and make changes that Albertans, Canadians, and, indeed, this Legislature have asked for?

MR. HANCOCK: Well, Mr. Speaker, I remain ever hopeful that we'll be able to convince all provincial governments to agree that we need to raise the age of consent. At each meeting that I've been to since I've been minister, the issue has been on the table, and it will be on the table at every meeting that I go to until we achieve success.

I should indicate, Mr. Speaker, that we have achieved some success. The federal Attorney General has agreed that in a bill that he's to introduce before Christmas he will bring in provisions, presumably to amend section 153, to increase the number of provisions dealing with those people who would be classified as predators, those people who can be prosecuted for engaging in sexual activity with persons under the age of 18. I hope and trust that in doing so he will go a long way to achieve the result that we've asked for from this Legislature over and over again.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, before calling on the first of four members today to participate in Members' Statements, might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

head: Introduction of Guests (reversion)

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

MR. HORNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I see that my group is filing out right now, but I did want to introduce to you and through you to all members of the House 63 visitors who have been visiting with us from J.J. Nearing school. J.J. Nearing is part of one of the fastest growing parts of St. Albert. They're great kids. They were accompanied by teachers Mrs. Christine Sowinski, Mrs. Teresa Belland, Mrs. Sonia Reid, and parent helpers Mrs. Lisa Hamilton, Mrs. Karen Wolansky, Mrs. Gerri Owen, Mrs. Linda Gull, Mr. Kevin Searcy, and Mrs. Carolyn Saccucci. I believe there are still a few of them left in the gallery. I'd ask them to stand and receive the warm welcome of the House.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm very fortunate to have about a dozen seniors' residences in my constituency of Edmonton-Centre, and one of the most active is Kiwanis Place. The seniors there are a very lively bunch. They like to get out and about, and they're certainly very politically aware. We have some of them joining us. A group of 13 are in the members' gallery today. I would ask the group to please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the Assembly Mr. David Cournoyer, a guest in the public gallery. David is a recent recipient of the Queen Elizabeth Golden Jubilee commemorative medal for his extensive volunteer work, and I know that he has a very bright future for he is also very active in the Alberta Liberal Party.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Members' Statements

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Kyoto Protocol

MR. CAO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Personally, I have lived and worked and traveled in many parts of the world. I love our homeland, Canada, with its treasures of blue skies, white snow, fresh water, and green woodland. Yes, we must continue protecting our environment. Yes, we must continue reducing our wasteful consumption. Yes, we must continue developing our first-class technology. We have been doing all of this very well long before and without the Kyoto protocol.

In my early childhood my mother told me an oriental fable. One day a group of toads jumped out of their burrow into an open field. It was their first time out, and they were all elated by the large expanse and in awe at the size of a bull munching leisurely by. One toad boasted that it could be as big as that bull. The others challenged and egged it on. It gulped in air, holding its breath, one after another, ballooning up bigger and bigger, still not big enough to be the size of the bull. Its friends cheered it on. Boom. It exploded. In terms of global climate change there are many big bulls out there, Canada definitely and proudly not one of them. Please do not try to be one, becoming like the blown-up toad in my mother's fable.

From the global perspective Canada is big in geographical size but small in the rest. Frankly, our Canada is not bull sized in the world, so to speak. Canada has only 30 million people, .5 percent of the world's 6 billion consumers. We are currently attributed with only 2 percent of the world's emissions, equivalent to the margin of error in any global and geological calculation. Canada's Kyoto protocol targets affect only within that 2 percent globally. Out of the remaining 98 percent of global emissions 65 percent are from countries that do not accept the Kyoto protocol. A well-known engineering professor told me that. For example, eight months from now China's accumulated emissions will be as much as Canada planned to remove in the next 10 years to meet the Kyoto target.

Globally speaking, the quality of our air, water, and land is the envy of the world. As we all care about our planet, Canada should snap out of its trance of environmental self-flagellation and start helping other countries to catch up to our current environmental quality.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Teachers' Compensation

MS KRYCZKA: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, I have been an employee in the public sector as a Calgary board of education guidance counselor and therefore a member of the ATA. I have also been employed in the private sector as a personnel administrator of a large law firm. I believe it is time for this government to seriously consider a new approach to compensating teachers.

I do believe that excellent teachers are highly valued in our society the same as excellent employees are valued in other industries or sectors. In fact, every student deserves the very best education possible just as every Albertan deserves the best in health care services, financial planning services, and so on. But teachers are compensated using an outdated 35-year-old grid approach that uses two basic criteria: years of education and years of experience.

What about additional, very important criteria such as recognition of workload or responsibilities beyond the basic expectations or attitude or specialized training or effective teaching skills or student improvement? Most employees in any given workplace know that there is a varying degree of excellence, hard work, and productivity between workers, and most employees would favour a compensation system that fairly and individually rewards performance. I know from experience how far 2 percent, for example, of any size of salary budget can go toward fair increases in compensation: from 1 percent through a range of 10 percent or more, where deserved.

Why are excellent teachers leaving the public system, and why are potentially excellent teachers choosing other careers? One obvious factor is the disincentive to superachieve or work very hard because one teacher is compensated on the same basis as every other teacher. Is this the compensation system that we really want for entrepreneurial Alberta?

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Class Sizes

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On November 5 voters in the state of Florida endorsed the constitutional amendment to reduce class size, this over the strenuous objections of Governor Jeb Bush and a coalition of advocates objecting to the costs of smaller classes. The half million dollar study conducted by the Learning department in Edmonton confirmed what has been learned time and time again elsewhere: one, children in smaller classes consistently outperform children in larger classes; two, by the end of third grade students in small classes outperform their large-class peers significantly in reading and in mathematics; three, children in small classes consistently outperform regular classes with aides; four, the gains achieved in early years by students are maintained in later grades; five, children in smaller classes are less likely to be held back a grade; and six, K to 3 to students in smaller classes participate more in subsequent grades.

We need to act so that another generation of Alberta children is not robbed of the gains possible in smaller classes. If the government can't or won't bring itself to believe the research on smaller classes and hides behind flexibility, then let's give the schools flexibility and class-size funds to test other strategies. Let's explore some of the promising preschool programs that last until a child reaches kindergarten. Let's try the early/late class arrangements where part of a class arrives earlier for school and part remains late so teachers may work with smaller groups. Let's try out the tutoring programs that hold the same promise as smaller classes. Then let's plan to incorporate these promising practices we find on a province-wide basis. If there's no money today, let's at least begin making plans for the future.

Through budget decisions the government has made certain that class sizes will not only fail to decrease but will increase this year. Maybe the only hope for Alberta children is a Florida-type referendum at the next election.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Family Violence Prevention Month

MRS. ADY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. November has been declared Family Violence Prevention Month in Alberta by the Minister of Children's Services. This is the 16th year Family Violence Prevention Month has been proclaimed in our province. This year's theme is Children Learn What They Live. This is a very simple statement but very profound because we know that children soak up what they see in their everyday existence. Indeed, what occurs in their earliest years affects them for the rest of their lives. The goal of Family Violence Prevention Month is to raise public awareness about family violence issues as well as the community prevention programs that are available.

The Children's Service ministry spends about $14 million annually on family violence prevention and supports. The ministry helps to fund 29 shelters, family violence prevention centres, and second-stage housing facilities across the province that provide programs to help victims of family violence rebuild their lives. These programs are delivered in the community by community-based organizations, and we're so proud to partner with them, and we're so proud of the work that they do. The province also works closely with the Alberta Council of Women's Shelters to enhance services for victims of family violence.

November is a time to reflect on the responsibility we all have to end family violence. We all have a responsibility to lend a helping hand, to take a stand that family violence will not be tolerated, and to help break the cycle of abuse. Only by working together can we continue to raise awareness of this serious social problem and create an environment where victims feel safe to come forward for help.

I urge Albertans to take part in Family Violence Prevention Month activities in their communities to help raise awareness of this very serious issue. If you are a victim of family violence, please call your local police, RCMP, or tribal police. Help is available. For information about local family violence services and programs call the child and family services authority in your area toll free at 310-0000.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Presenting Petitions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

MR. McCLELLAND: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my privilege to present a petition on behalf of 4,811 citizens . . .

MR. HUTTON: How many?

MR. McCLELLAND: Four thousand eight hundred and eleven, who signed a petition petitioning and requesting the government to reconsider its position on community lottery funds. This was presented last June, and this is the first opportunity that I've had to present it to the House.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

REV. ABBOTT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'm presenting a petition signed by 40 residents of Drayton Valley-Calmar, and later I will be tabling an additional 424 signatures on the same issue. This petition urges the government of Alberta to "remove abortion from the list of insured services that will be paid for through Alberta Health."

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan.

MR. LOUGHEED: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table a petition signed primarily by residents of Fort Saskatchewan. These constituents request that abortion be removed from the list of insured services provided by Alberta Health.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, did you have a petition you wanted to table?

MR. CAO: I have a report, sir.

THE SPEAKER: Well, we've missed that part in the Routine. It's normally under Presenting Reports by Standing and Special Committees. We'll move on.

head: Notices of Motions

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, today I wish to give notice of the following motion.

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly of Alberta, consistent with its commitment to protecting Alberta's environment, hereby endorses and accepts the following principles agreed to by all provinces and territories on October 28, 2002, to provide the basis for the development of a national climate change action plan.

- (1) All Canadians must have an opportunity for full and informed input into the development of the plan.
- (2) The plan must ensure that no region or jurisdiction shall be asked to bear an unreasonable share of the burden and no industry, sector, or region shall be treated unfairly. The costs and impacts on individuals, businesses, and industries must be clear, reasonable, achievable, and economically sustainable. The plan must incorporate appropriate federally funded mitigation of the adverse impacts of climate change initiatives.
- (3) The plan must respect provincial and territorial jurisdiction.
- (4) The plan must include recognition of real emission reductions that have been achieved since 1990 or will be achieved thereafter.
- (5) The plan must provide for bilateral or multilateral agreements between provinces and territories and with the federal government.
- (6) The plan must ensure that no province or territory bears the financial risk of federal climate change commitments.
- (7) The plan must recognize that benefits from assets such as forest and agricultural sinks must accrue to the province and territory which owns the assets.
- (8) The plan must support innovation and new technology.
- (9) The plan must maintain the economic competitiveness of Canadian business and industry.
- (10) Canada must continue to demand recognition of clean energy exports.
- (11) The plan must include incentives for all citizens, communities, businesses, and jurisdictions to make the shift to an economy based on renewable and other clean energy, lower emissions, and sustainable practices across sectors.
- (12) The implementation of any climate change plan must include an incentive and allocation system that supports lower carbon emission sources of energy such as hydroelectricity, wind power generation, ethanol, and renewable and other clean sources of energy.

Be it further resolved that this Assembly, in the absence of agreement on a national plan by provinces and territories, denounces any unilateral ratification by the federal government of the Kyoto protocol in violation of the principles of constitutional law, convention, federalism, and long-established practice whereby the federal government must adequately consult with and seek the consent of provinces prior to ratification of international treaties or agreements that affect matters of exclusive provincial jurisdiction or that require provincial actions or legislation to achieve implementation where implementation will result in significant harm to the economy of Alberta and of Canada.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

MS CARLSON: Mr. Speaker, in accordance with Standing Order 15

I hereby give notice to all members of this Assembly that I intend to raise a question of privilege in this House at the appropriate time.

head: Introduction of Bills

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Bill 230
Community School Partnerships Act

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce a bill being the Community School Partnerships Act.

This bill recognizes the unique position schools have in a community and their potential to be a central force in drawing together and strengthening a sense of community. I believe the bill could have a significant and positive impact on small schools, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 230 read a first time]

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

THE CLERK: Pursuant to Standing Order 37.1(2) I wish to advise the House that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk by hon. Mr. Stevens: pursuant to the Gaming and Liquor Act the Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission 2001-2002 annual report and pursuant to the Racing Corporation Act the Alberta Racing Corporation 2001 annual review.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

MR. BOUTILIER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to table in the Assembly today five copies, the requisite number, of annual reports for the Municipal Affairs delegated administrative organizations. The organizations included today are the Alberta Boilers Safety Association, the Alberta Elevating Devices and Amusement Rides Safety Association, the Petroleum Tank Management Association of Alberta, the Alberta Propane Vehicle Administration Organization, and a summary of the annual reports from the authorized accredited agencies.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

MR. DUNFORD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have six reports to table. The first is the Alberta Land Surveyors' Association report of proceedings of the 93rd annual general meeting of May 2 to 4, 2002; the Association of Professional Engineers, Geologists and Geophysicists of Alberta 2001-2002 annual report; the Certified General Accountants Association of Alberta 2002 annual report and annual general meeting and proxy information; the WCB-Alberta 2001 annual report; the Institute of Chartered Accountants of Alberta annual report 2002; and the College of Alberta Professional Foresters annual report 2001-2002.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish to table in the Legislature today the appropriate number of copies of a submission that was made to me last May with respect to the funding formula for grade 10 students.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Community Development.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, I rise today pursuant to section 22(4) of the Persons with Developmental Disabilities Community Governance Act to table the appropriate number of copies of the Persons with Developmental Disabilities 2001-2002 annual report, as provided courtesy of the PDD Alberta Provincial Board.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

MR. YANKOWSKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table a letter signed by 30 members of the Happy Homesteaders square dance club in Leduc, Alberta, requesting that square dancing be declared as the official dance of Alberta, and they give reasons why they would like to see this happen.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table the appropriate number of copies of a summary of an article from the very prestigious Journal of the American Medical Association from last week. The objective of the study was to determine whether a difference in mortality rates exists between for-profit and not-for-profit dialysis centres, and it found that six of the eight studies showed a statistically significant increase in mortality in for-profit centres.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With permission I'll file five copies of the November 5, 2002, general election results in Florida, specifically the amendment to reduce class sizes, which was passed.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings today. The first is a workbook from the city of Edmonton community services and Capital City Savings. It's the Edmonton Task Force on Community Services for Seniors, and I had the pleasure to be involved in developing some comments in regard to this workbook on Saturday, November 16, at the Southeast Edmonton Seniors Association.

My second tabling is a letter that was written by myself on behalf of the Official Opposition to the hon. Minister of Energy, and it is in regard to a request for an immediate and independent audit of the billing practices of electricity retailers in Alberta.

The third tabling I have today is the actual posted pool price for November 25, 2002, at the Power Pool in Alberta. It's scandalous, Mr. Speaker. Alberta consumers are now going to have to check the Power Pool web site in the future before they turn on their ovens at 6 o'clock in the evening, because the electricity wholesale price last night was . . .

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling five copies of a letter that I received from the executive director of the Calgary Women's Emergency Shelter, Ms Mary Ann Sanderson. The letter is dated November 12, 2002. In this letter Ms Sanderson expresses concerns about some fears that she has about the cuts to or cessation of the crucial funding sources coming from FCSS, and the effects that they would have would be primarily negative on the services that her shelter has been providing to hundreds and hundreds of families who are under stress.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling today five copies of an Edmonton residential power bill showing a dramatic increase in power rates due to this government's bungled deregulation scheme.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

REV. ABBOTT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As mentioned earlier, I am now tabling five copies of 424 signatures. It says, "We the undersigned residents of Drayton Valley and area petition the government of Alberta to deinsure abortion."

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

MR. CAO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With your permission I would like to table speaking notes about the Kyoto protocol from Professor David Wilson of the engineering faculty of the University of Alberta. Professor Wilson has been a concerned environmentalist for over 30 years and says in his notes, "I strongly oppose ratifying Kyoto for 3 reasons." The time frame for . . .

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first is a note from a constituent, Alvin Schrader, adding his voice of support for the timely passage of Bill 30.

The second tabling is from Tanya Coles, an e-mail of her disapproval of allowing any penned hunting.

Thank you very much.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, I'm pleased to table in the House today the 2001-2002 School at the Legislature annual report.

Now, before dealing with Orders of the Day, we have a purported point of order. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Point of Order Anticipation

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise under Standing Order 23(e), which provides that a member will be called to order by the Speaker if that member "anticipates, contrary to good parliamentary practice, any matter already on the Order Paper or on notice for consideration on that day." I am referencing the second question given by the Member for Calgary-Bow this afternoon, where she directly referenced Kyoto and subsequent implications. Not only on the Order Paper today but, as agreed to by House leaders in this Assembly, we will be spending the whole afternoon and the whole evening on Bill 32, the Climate Change and Emissions Management Act, which directly deals with this issue. In fact, the third whereas in the bill is a direct challenge to Kyoto.

I would refer the Speaker to former rulings that he had made. The last time we had an issue of this kind of importance in the Assembly, which caused protracted debate to occur, was back in April of 2000. Prior to that debate on the bill occurring, the Speaker gave a ruling on anticipation the day before the debate started and talked about how they will be called to account if this happens and then subsequently in that year of 2000 on April 4, April 6, April 13, and three times on April 19, ruled a question as anticipation prior to an answer being given. In this case an answer was given, so we would ask for a ruling on this, please.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader on this point

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As usual the hon. House leader opposite makes much ado about nothing. Kyoto is not on the Order Paper for today, although with the notice of motion for tomorrow Kyoto is definitely on the Order Paper for tomorrow. Today we're talking about Alberta's plan: climate change and emissions management. Climate change and emissions management is clearly not Kyoto. It has nothing to do with Kyoto. It is nowhere related to Kyoto. It's about prudent management of resources in this province. It's about an intelligent plan to deal with climate change. It has absolutely nothing to do with Kyoto. That hon. member, if she'd been listening lately, would know that.

THE SPEAKER: Well, hon. members, the chair thought that the question period was moving along very, very smoothly today and was going to congratulate all the members for such, but the point being made by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie is that in the second question raised by the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow, the hon. member raised the word "Kyoto." There was no intervention from the chair, and that's absolutely correct, as there was no intervention from the chair either when the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview added a preamble of some considerable length to his second question. The chair from time to time has indicated that the chair will bend over backwards to give an opportunity for all private members to in essence have the greatest amount of flexibility with respect to the subjects that they would want to raise with members of Executive Council. The chair thinks this is much to-do about nothing. This is not a point of order.

Now the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie on your notice of motion on a purported point of privilege.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today . . .

THE SPEAKER: Hon. member, first of all, just before the hon. member proceeds, the chair would like to just provide some guidance. Before allowing the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie to proceed, the chair would like to indicate to the Assembly that notice of this purported question of privilege was received in the Speaker's office just before 11 a.m. today. The chair notes that based on the member's notice and the letter sent earlier today, it appears that her question of privilege is against the Speaker. Before the member explains her question of privilege, the chair would like to make some preliminary comments about the procedure to be followed in such a situation.

The chair notes that Marleau and Montpetit state at page 266 of House of Commons Procedure and Practice that "actions of the Speaker are not to be criticized in debate or by any means except by way of a substantive motion." Notice of such motion would have to be brought by the member in the usual manner and as outlined in the parliamentary authorities. The member may wish to consult a recent precedent from the House of Commons where on March 13, 2000, the Speaker ruled that a motion dealing with the partiality of the chair required notice. The matter was the subject of a special debate held on March 16, 2000. The chair would also like to refer the member to the debates of this Assembly from November 25, 1981, where the conduct of the Speaker was the subject of a substantive motion, not a question of privilege.

I'll now invite the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie for a brief statement of her purported question of privilege, and it may very well be that the chair will intervene in a matter of two to three minutes to advise that this matter might best be dealt with by a substantive motion.

The hon. member.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Are you suggesting, then, that I withdraw the point of privilege and deal with this in another manner?

THE SPEAKER: Well, hon. member, the difficulty in dealing with this matter is that there's no clarification. The chair has absolutely no way of knowing what it is the hon. member wishes to draw to the attention of the House. This matter was reviewed by all table officers at a meeting at noon today, and the general conclusion was that we have no idea of what is coming. So in anticipation of what is coming, we will await.

Privilege Impartiality of the Speaker

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will certainly take your guidance on this matter after you've heard the opening comments.

My question of privilege is as a member of the Assembly and on behalf of my colleagues in the Official Opposition, and it does regard the issue of impartiality of the Speaker. The question arises out of two separate events that I've only recently become aware of and on which I will go into some detail.

The first instance deals with a letter which was sent out under the letterhead of the Speaker of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta. This letter was written to former MLAs of this Assembly and contained information with regard to the government, particularly Alberta Environment's media campaign and position against ratification of the Kyoto accord. Mr. Speaker, I have copies of that letter. This letter contains points only from the government perspective. No mention was given of the opposition's role or position. Only information on the positions of the governing party was included. Attached to the letter was a copy of a brochure put out by the government.

Now, it would be fair for the Speaker, we believe, to send out information on an issue if it included all parties that are represented in the Legislature and not just the party that's in government. The substance of the letter reflects the position of a government MLA as opposed to the Speaker of the Assembly, which we believe should be impartial in these dealings.

There is a precedent for the Speaker to explain such actions. On June 30, 1981, the then Speaker of the Ontario Legislature was called on a point of privilege after making a radio station announcement in favour of a government bill. The Speaker then read a statement which was intended to explain his actions to all members of the Assembly as well as to the general public.

Mr. Speaker, this morning it came to my attention that the Speaker had breached what we believe is another long-standing precedent of this Assembly. Beauchesne 168(2) clearly states that "the Speaker does not attend any party caucus nor take part in any outside partisan political activity." I have copies of an article which appeared this morning in two city newspapers. Now, I know that in this Assembly we don't like to always reference articles in the newspaper, but this is something that we believe we have to follow up on. It states in a quote from the Edmonton Journal on page A7: "A Tory health committee could not agree what to do with health regions even after rural political heavyweight [naming the Speaker] weighed in." Further, the article stated that "Kowalski argued to keep the number of health regions the way they are."

Mr. Speaker, this article indicates what we believe is a clear breach of Beauchesne 168 and of a long-standing tradition of this Assembly and of the British parliamentary system. The Speaker of this Assembly attended, in a partisan manner, a Conservative caucus health committee meeting and debated as part of that caucus. This caucus was not open to members of the Official Opposition, and this makes it a partisan committee and, therefore, what we see as a direct breach.

Additionally, we have just received unsubstantiated information that the Speaker occasionally attends caucus meetings while the Legislature is in session. We've been looking at other cases where the Speaker gets involved in caucus meetings. Mr. Speaker, in Saskatchewan their Speaker . . .

THE SPEAKER: Okay. Hon. member, please. The chair would like to ensure that the hon. member has ample opportunity to raise her case and probably would advise that the hon. member might want to consider dealing with a substantive motion which is a motion of confidence in the chair. The difficulty with this situation as we're now proceeding is that there's really no precedent for a point of privilege because it does violate all the rules of the past. On the other hand, the chair wants to bend over backwards to ensure that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie does have an opportunity to raise her concern.

What is missing in this process, of course, is an opportunity for the chair to explain. Perhaps by way of substantive motion, which would draw to attention, then, the purported allegations – a substantive motion of either confidence or nonconfidence in the chair might very much be in order, and the hon. member would have complete opportunity. The rules are very clear what the procedure is. The rules are also very clear what would then be entailed as a result of the motion. Perhaps the hon. member would like to proceed that way.

MS CARLSON: May I respond, Mr. Speaker? We do not wish to bring a motion of nonconfidence to the floor of the Assembly. Referring back to what happened in the Ontario case . . . [interjections] We don't. We don't. What we want . . . [interjections]

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, please.

MS CARLSON: What we will subsequently ask for, Mr. Speaker, if allowed to proceed, is exactly what happened in the Ontario Legislature when the Speaker was called on a point of privilege and then had an opportunity to read a statement which was intended to explain his actions to all members of the Assembly as well as to the general public. What we want is a clarification of the rules in terms of the roles and responsibilities of Speakers versus private MLAs and the correlation that happens between the party politics and what happens here in the Assembly. We are not looking for a motion of confidence with regard to the Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: Well, do I take it, then, that the hon. member might have chosen to proceed? None of what we're talking about here, hon. member, has occurred in this Assembly. This is not a part of the daily Routine of the Assembly, not part of the institution of the Assembly, not part of the actions of the chair within the Assembly. We have Standing Order 13(2), that "the Speaker shall explain the reasons for any decision upon the request of a member," but in this case no decision has been made. The chair is in a difficult position on how to deal with this, because he finds himself unable to explain anything, including so-called allegations from third parties.

Hon. member, I go back to you.

MS CARLSON: Mr. Speaker, are you saying, then, that this similar kind of situation in Ontario was not handled correctly?

THE SPEAKER: Madam Member, once again, you're making assumptions that are totally incorrect. The hon. member has no right to assume that another member is thinking a certain way, and that was most certainly not the way the chair was thinking with respect to this. If the hon. member has an allegation that she wants to make in this Assembly, there is a mechanism for it. We're dealing with the conduct of a chair who was elected by secret ballot in this Assembly, with all the members having no idea who voted for whom, and it had nothing to do with respect to, as the chair can understand it, the chair's conduct within the Assembly.

Now, if it's clarification that the hon. member would like to make in terms of a policy that the chair, who also happens to be a Member of the Legislative Assembly of the province of Alberta, conducts himself 365 days a year with respect to parliamentary activities, political activities, electoral activities, the chair would at some subsequent time in the future be happy to rise in the Assembly and lay out how he deals with all of this from a philosophical point of view. But the chair has made it very, very clear in the past that he would conduct himself in this Assembly with the greatest degree of impartiality.

MS CARLSON: Mr. Speaker, we would be very satisfied if you would stand and clarify those positions for us.

THE SPEAKER: Then, hon. member, I would be very pleased to do that at a subsequent date and also advise that in the past the chair has also advised former leaders of the Official Opposition that the chair would be happy to attend caucus meetings of that caucus as well.

Bill 32

Climate Change and Emissions Management Act

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Premier on behalf of the hon. Minister of Environment.

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, thank you very much. At the outset I would like to advise members of the Legislature that Bob Mills, the Member of Parliament for Red Deer, is now in his seventh hour in the House of Commons on the Kyoto protocol, the resolution that was introduced, and is doing, I might add, a very good job on behalf of his constituents and the citizens of this province.

Mr. Speaker, it is with great pleasure that I rise to move second reading of Bill 32, the Climate Change and Emissions Management Act.

For months, actually for years now the federal government has taken great effort to paint Alberta and anyone else who opposes their Kyoto protocol, the federal government Kyoto protocol, as being in favour of global warming, like we want to see the climate warm up and we want to see Alberta as a wasteland desert in 50 years. What utter, stupid nonsense. You know, the federal government has tried to position Kyoto as a simple environmental issue, even though it is now obvious that for the Chretien government Kyoto has become more about winning a political battle, about gaining stature and maintaining stature in the international community than about helping the environment.

The federal government has ignored the economic implications of ratifying the Kyoto protocol despite warning after warning from literally hundreds of groups in the country. It has ignored the unanimous voice of the provinces and territories, which have called for collaboration on a detailed implementation plan and cost analysis before ratification. The federal government has ignored the negligible environmental impact Canada's ratification of Kyoto would have on global warming.

Worst of all, Mr. Speaker, it has misled Canada about what Kyoto will achieve. Ottawa persists in portraying Kyoto as a tool to reduce smog, aided and abetted by the CBC. Every time they mention Kyoto, they have smoking, belching smokestacks as cover fill even though this is not what the protocol is designed to do. It's designed to deal with CO₂ primarily. Can't see it; we're exhaling it as we speak. Ottawa persists in representing Kyoto as an instrument to improve human health by cutting air pollution even though this isn't what the protocol is designed for either. Ottawa persists in claiming that ratifying Kyoto will make a big difference in the battle on global warming even though reductions made by Canada, a 2 percent contributor to global greenhouse gas emissions, will be more than eclipsed by increases from China, the United States, India, and many other countries that have no Kyoto reduction targets whatsoever.

Despite its determination to rush into Kyoto ratification even in the face of such opposition and misinformation, it appears that the federal government has no plan to meet the actual Kyoto targets. As a matter of fact, they have said, to quote the Prime Minister: well, we'll worry about that later; we will find a way. Why would Ottawa sign an agreement that it apparently has no intention of ever living up to? You know, that's one question. Why would it sign an agreement anyway? It makes no environmental sense. It makes no economic sense. Does it have something to do with ego and some undertakings that were made to the Chiracs and the Schroeders of the world and sacrificing the well-being of Canadians at the same time?

I don't know the answers to these questions except to observe that no matter how you look at it, the debate on ratifying the Kyoto protocol isn't really about the environment at all. It's about politics, Mr. Speaker. Alberta has tried to work with the federal government to come up with a better solution. We've tried to collaborate with Ottawa and the other provinces on a climate change plan that relies on intelligent Canadian innovation and know-how, a plan that won't create unnecessary economic hardship and job losses and a plan that actually works, but the federal government isn't really interested. The federal government isn't interested at all. They are not interested in working with others to come up with a better plan. In fact, all along Ottawa has said that the options are Kyoto or nothing, and the Ottawa government has refused to consider any other ideas.

The federal government talks about consultation. The Prime Minister has said: well, I've talked to the other Premiers. Mr. Anderson says: well, we've had full consultation. But nobody has talked to me. Nobody, I understand, has talked to the Minister of Energy or the Minister of Environment about the so-called federal government plan. Notwithstanding that, the federal government says that it has consulted extensively with the provinces to develop its climate change plan.

If you ask the provinces, they'll tell you that Ottawa hasn't talked to us at all, and certainly they haven't listened to us. The provinces have said unanimously as recently as yesterday, all the premiers and all the territorial leaders have said unanimously that they don't like the Ottawa plan and that they don't see the need to rush into ratifying Kyoto when so many questions remain unanswered. All of the premiers and territorial leaders said that they want to work together without the federal government if necessary to find a better way. To find a better way, Mr. Speaker.

I want to digress just for a moment before I come back to what the Canadian premiers say about this issue and what the ministers of energy and the ministers of environment say about the issue. I want to use a quote, and here's a quote on Kyoto.

The federal government has probably let Canadians down more than any other government I can think of over the last few years . . . The feds have really blown this, as far as we're concerned, as far as doing what's right for Canadians . . . The feds don't even listen when we talk to them about it.

I ask members to guess who might have made those remarks in a public discussion on Kyoto. Was it the Minister of Environment? No. Was it the Minister of Energy? No. Was it me? No. No, not this time, Mr. Speaker. Those remarks were made by the Leader of the Official Opposition only seven days ago. Only seven days ago those remarks were made by the Leader of the Official Opposition in a speech to the Athabasca rotary club, about a week ago. They were reported verbatim in the Athabasca Advocate, and, believe me, those small town newspapers report everything verbatim. [interjections] Seven days ago. These remarks were made by the same member who stood up in this Assembly last Thursday and again professed his party's full support for the Kyoto protocol.

You know, I find it puzzling why the opposition would say one thing in this House and something completely different out in Athabasca. Perhaps they think they don't have reporters out there. Could it be that when they face Albertans directly, such as in Athabasca, they are ashamed of their pro-Kyoto stance? What I can tell the House is that unlike the Liberals every member of this government is consistent when speaking about the Kyoto protocol and the federal government's approach to its implementation.

Mr. Speaker, if the Alberta Liberals are as concerned about the behaviour of the feds as their leader says they are, then why don't they stand in this Assembly and support the bill, the bill that we're here to discuss today and the approach of every single province in this country, who have all said that the federal plan is wrong and that the 12 principles for climate change must be addressed by the feds? Why don't they stand up and support both the resolution that will be introduced tomorrow and the bill that is here for second reading today? I ask them to do that in light of what the Leader of the Official Opposition said in Athabasca.

Politics aside, Mr. Speaker, Alberta will work with the other provinces to find a truly national, made-in-Canada climate change plan, and we're not going to wait for Ottawa. This province began taking action to address climate change a decade ago, long before the Kyoto protocol was ever conceived. Alberta will continue to take steps to address the challenge of global warming. Those steps that began so long ago have culminated in the bill that is now before this Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, the Climate Change and Emissions Management Act lays out a framework to support Alberta's action plan for reducing greenhouse gas emissions. Alberta wants to do and will do its fair share in the battle against global warming. This plan lays out how Albertans can make a difference without sacrificing the economic prosperity and the high standard of living they've worked so hard to achieve. And, believe me, we have worked so hard to achieve what we have today.

Mr. Speaker, that's what's so frustrating about this made-in-Ottawa, federal Liberal government, goofy protocol. That's what is so frustrating. We have worked so hard in this province to get where we are today, to have some ill-conceived scheme disrupt and threaten in a very significant way all of the sacrifices that we have made as a government, that the people of this province have made. It is so frustrating to go through the pain of eliminating the deficit, of putting in unique legislation to pay down the debt, to reorganize and to reform government, to create what we now call the Alberta advantage all to have it threatened and possibly destroyed by some goofily concocted scheme dreamt up by international theorists and especially when this government has gone further than any other government in Canada to show its commitment to respond to climate change yet has underscored that commitment with actions, not just words. With this bill Alberta stands poised to do what no other Legislature in this country has done. It will enshrine that commitment in legislation.

Alberta's climate change plan builds on the successes that Alberta businesses and organizations have already demonstrated in reducing greenhouse gas emissions. The federal government would have Canadians believe that an international agreement like Kyoto is the only way – the only way – to respond to the threat of climate change. In fact, the federal Environment minister said as much last week. He said that voluntary measures don't work. Voluntary measures don't work. Well, if Mr. Anderson had done his homework, he would know that a statement like that is simply not true. There are plenty of Alberta examples that prove exactly the opposite, that Alberta and Canadian companies have invested literally billions of dollars in environmental improvements and have seen incredible returns on those investments.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, the emissions intensity from synthetic oil production has dropped by about 35 percent since 1990. Trans-Canada dropped its emissions by 29 percent last year through improvements to pipeline technology. Some 93 percent of Alberta companies responsible for upstream oil and gas emissions are working on voluntary emission reduction programs. David Anderson's comments are an insult to these and other Alberta companies that are working hard and voluntarily to tackle climate change.

You know, I recently discovered a new book that David Anderson should read. It's a book he could learn a lot from. It's by Sydney Sharpe. She's a Calgary-based journalist who is known for her hard-hitting approach to issues. Her book A Patch of Green looks at the environmental record of Alberta energy companies, and it's based on an extensive and comprehensive body of research, and I think even Sydney was surprised by her findings. Far from uncovering the kind of negligence and irresponsibility that David Anderson would have you believe is rife in the energy sector, Sydney found instead an industry concerned about its neighbours and aboriginal communities and the environment surrounding its operations. The book also uncovers a business community committed to using the best research and technologies available to tackle environmental concerns. The conclusion Sydney comes to is that the environmental successes of Alberta's energy industry are indeed remarkable. The environmental successes of the federal government are far less impressive, Mr. Speaker, believe me.

Last week the federal government unveiled its so-called final plan to implement the Kyoto protocol, and while Ottawa pays lip service to consultation and working with the provinces and territories, what they presented was a plan crafted by federal bureaucrats behind closed doors. I understand, Mr. Speaker – this is totally anecdotal, just a rumour but a good one – that at least two senior policy advisers on this file have resigned in absolute frustration, you know, relative to trying to craft something, working overnight, behind closed doors with MPs and ministers and the PMO saying: well, you've got to change this; you've got to change that; maybe this will work; maybe we can satisfy this segment of society or that segment of society. That's a plan? That is typical Liberal planning, planning on the fly. That's what it's all about. Now they've introduced a motion in the House of Commons to ratify the Kyoto protocol based on this made-in-Ottawa plan on the fly that has been repudiated by all the provinces. I have no idea how Ottawa will implement its plan without the co-operation of the provinces, Mr. Speaker, but I will say this: if the feds want to commit Alberta to do more than we're committing to do in Bill 32, then it's up to them to do it, I guess, and up to them to pay for it. You know, that's going to be the attitude.

That leads me to the second purpose of Bill 32. In addition to reaffirming Alberta's commitment to take action on global warming, this bill will also help protect Albertans from the federal government's Kyoto agenda. This is the assurance we need to give industry in this province, that we are doing everything in our power to protect the Alberta advantage and to protect what is our responsibility under the Constitution and our jurisdiction under the Constitution. We will protect – we will protect – Albertans from the federal government's political agenda, and we will protect it by reinforcing the province's ownership and control over natural resources. I've said it before and I'll say it again in this House: this government will do whatever is necessary to protect the Alberta advantage.

In so many ways, Mr. Speaker, Alberta has been a leader in Canada. The people of this province have never been afraid to set their own direction and take their own path. The examples are endless. Alberta was the first province to come up with a balanced budget. You know, I've said so many times how un-Canadian it was at the time. You can't have governments without deficits. I mean, that's the way governments operate. And now all governments have either eliminated deficits or are trying very hard to eliminate their deficits. You can't put in a law that prohibits you from having a deficit and requires you to dedicate money to debt. I mean, that's un-Canadian too. All the kinds of things that we did, all the wonderful reforms that we've undertaken. We have been the first in so many instances, and we're being copied by all the provinces and, yes, the federal government.

I recall one federal budget speech by Mr. Martin, and it was almost as if he had taken our book and copied it, and then there were phrases that were word for word out of our budget speeches. We've pioneered a single-rate tax system and a provincewide high-speed Internet system. We set a new standard in investing, in research, in medicine and science and engineering, and we have the only legislation of its kind to shield people from soaring natural gas prices and to protect children involved in prostitution. These are groundbreaking, leading edge kinds of legislative practices.

Mr. Speaker, the list goes on and on. Alberta has been a leader in Canada on many, many fronts, and with the passage of Bill 32 Alberta will continue to be a leader on the issue of climate change.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Bill 32, the Climate Change and Emissions Management Act, brings forward an Alberta program to try to address the issues of global warming and climate change. The issues that come up as we deal with this have to look at kind of the whole process that we go through and that's been followed both by the world and by Canada in achieving this.

Yes, I stand by the statements that the Premier quoted from me in this House. The federal government has made a real mess of trying to implement this process. That doesn't mean that we don't believe we can comply with and enact the provisions of the agreement that was signed onto by about 168 countries now and counting, and in the sense that . . . [interjection]

THE SPEAKER: Hon. member, please, courtesy.

DR. NICOL: The process is a worldwide commitment to in effect do something in a staged process to reduce greenhouse gas emissions. We as Canadians chose to be included in the industrial group which will be making limits on our emissions in the first phase, and that, Mr. Speaker, in my mind is very acceptable for us as Canadians to do. The idea that we are going to commit to reducing our emissions to 6 percent below 1990 levels, in effect, makes a statement by Canadians that, yes, this is a critical issues; yes, we have the capability to make an adjustment; and, yes, we're willing to be a leader in the world.

The issue that comes up in the context of signing or initialing that agreement in 1996 and moving from 1996 to effectively late November 2002 is the fact that we don't know – and the federal government has not given us as Canadians or as provincial governments an indication of what they expect to happen – what they expect to be the process that we as Canadians take to comply with that agreement that they have in effect committed us to or initialed us to in 1996. If we're going to look at how we work forward on this, we have to make sure that we move in a progressive way.

Mr. Speaker, I separate out the issue of: should we ratify Kyoto and commit to the level and the worldwide process that was started many years ago, culminating with the agreement in 1996? I say yes. I say, yes, we can do that, and we can do it proudly as Canadians as long as we do it correctly when we get inside Canada. The whole idea is that once we're here, we have a broad spectrum of how we go about making choices, making changes in our policies, making commitments to each other about how we'll share both the responsibilities and the costs of complying with the Kyoto agreement.

The main thing is that as we go through this, we have to look at where we're at, and, you know, I in many ways support many of the things that the Premier said in his introductory comments on this bill in the sense that we don't know what the federal government is going to do in terms of changing its laws, setting regulations, setting standards. That has not been provided to us. So this is still part of the process that has to be debated and agreed to at the level of Canada and all Canadians, and, Mr. Speaker, I have called on the federal government on a number of occasions, including the occasion that was referenced by the Premier, to – let's start now; let's work with the provinces; let's work with industry; let's work with consumer groups; let's work with all individuals in Canada who are part of the emitters of greenhouse gases and come up with a viable solution that will allow us to in effect mitigate as much as possible the impact of the Kyoto agreement. If we're going to do this, we have to look at the very principles that were introduced into this House today and the motion for debate tomorrow and look at: how will we in effect implement a program that achieves a lot of those same principles?

You know, it's interesting, Mr. Speaker. As I reflect on those principles and I read the Alberta plan, I see some contradictions. I see places in that Alberta plan where those principles aren't really met. The thing that comes out here is that if we would in effect look at those principles – and I've summarized them for brevity in this debate into essentially five areas that I would like to see and that I use to judge comments on Kyoto and our actions to reduce greenhouse gas emissions.

First of all, they have to look at it from the point of view that any implementation cost or any implementation burden must be fairly shared by all emitters, Mr. Speaker, and that, in effect, means that we should not be putting caps on a geographic area of this province; we should not be putting caps on any sector. We should be making sure that all emitters participate equally and fairly in the requirements to reduce emissions.

The second that I look at is that implementation must not unduly affect our competitive position as a country. Now, this is where we have to look at how we as one of the industrialized nations fit in with the other industrialized nations, and I think we all agree that it is very unfortunate that the United States has chosen to follow the process that they are in dealing with it, because it doesn't put them at the same level of interaction or compliance with Kyoto as what we as Canadians will be.

Still, we have to recognize that many of the states – and a number that's been given to me is 17 of them; I can't confirm that – actually have emission standards that are more severe than what they would have to have met had the federal government in the United States acted to implement their Kyoto commitment. In effect, 17 states have said that they will actually cap – and I say cap because this is the way it's been presented to me – their emissions at a level even below what the U.S. government had originally agreed to in 1996 under the Kyoto agreement, Mr. Speaker. I would welcome anybody in the House that has the information that can show that the article I read didn't provide me with that kind of correct support.

The next thing that I look at in terms of judging it – and it again is a means of summarizing those 12 principles – is that all Canadians must share in any burden that we have to undertake to comply. The other one is that we have fair participation in the worldwide credit exchange; in other words, have a fair impact on any wealth redistribution. I know that this is something I will further talk about.

If we go through those five types of basic principles, they encompass all 12 of the ones that were introduced in our motion in the House earlier today. If we look at those principles and essentially look at the two developing or pseudo plans that we've got on the table right now, one being the federal proposal that was released last week and the other being the Alberta plan that was released in conjunction with the introduction of Bill 32, we see that really none of them tells us the kind of regulatory change or standards that will be set for the actual operational aspects of this compliance process, but we do have to look at that and see, first of all, how these two different plans fit within the principle categories that I've outlined. That basically is that if we look at the federal plan, I would guess that it doesn't really fit very many of those five principles or the 12 greater principles that we've talked about. It doesn't deal with the fairness issue in a way that I find satisfactory. It doesn't deal with the competitive position for Canada or our industries the way I think it could. It does limit growth of some of our sectors and the economy as a whole, but it also puts an unfair burden on capped sectors and geographic areas in our country because it implies limits on their emissions.

The provincial plan, on the other hand, is a little different. It probably doesn't affect our competitive position because it's tied to technology adoption and, in a sense, keeps us in line with technology adoption in any other jurisdiction whether they are capped or not because it, in effect, reflects the ability of the economy to adopt new technology. I would suggest that the issue that comes up in conjunction with how they measure that compliance doesn't meet what I would see as the fairness criteria in my summary of those 12 principles that the provinces and territories have outlined.

More specifically, though, the provincial plan, in my interpretation of it – and I would encourage anybody in the House to help me out if I'm interpreting this wrong. [interjection] I like the comment from the member saying that I'm interpreting wrong, and he hasn't even waited for me, to give me a chance to get my interpretation out. That's what we call objectivity. We sat and listened to the Premier talk and didn't interject, yet we're getting it when we start to talk. So, you know, this is part of the issue that we have to look at in terms of how debate goes on.

But that aside, Mr. Speaker, I want to also just continue my thought that it doesn't in my mind meet the growth-neutral criteria, and I say that because – and this is where I need some help – in reading the materials and discussing it with some of the people, they talk about the emission being tied to a share of GDP, and in Bill 32 they talk about the right to redefine GDP as well. But that's not an issue in terms of what I'm going to raise, because what I would like to say is that if we see a sector that is growing and has their emission standards set relative to GDP, then what we're going to see is, in effect, if we've got a sector that is vibrant with new technology, in a sense they will have two options: grow extremely well, because their technology is allowing them to stay below their limit on contribution to GDP or emission as a percentage of GDP. But if we're in a sector that is slower in technology growth – the technology is harder to develop – what we're going to see is that sector will not be allowed to contribute more to our economy because they, in effect, need to get a greater emission credit.

The other issue is that if we're going to see emerging industries or emerging sectors, how do they fit into that percentage of the GDP? How do they fit into their place in sharing the emission per unit of GDP? This also comes across on the other side, where we see if we've got a declining industry or a sunset industry that's starting to slow down or be replaced by a new technology or a new consumer product, then how does it, in effect, phase out? Because it's got lots of extra capacity. In this exchange will they be, in a sense, selling credits to the new sectors? If that's the case, what we're causing is sunset industries being given a wealth transfer to sustain them at the expense of the new innovation, the new economy sectors, because those are the sectors that are going to have to buy the rights to have emission from the phasing-out sectors that are no longer in our economy.

So the Alberta plan, to me, doesn't provide for neutral growth, neutral opportunity for industry coming into our province. We want our province to grow with the ability to have a vibrant economy, a vibrant approach to the Alberta opportunity for any industry to come, not only industries that are high-tech, high-innovation, low-emission, emission-improving types of activities. We want any industry to be able to come into our economy and grow without having to transfer to the sunset industries or the declining industries that are implied by this GDP.

From that perspective, I ask the government to more clearly indicate to Albertans and to other people evaluating this plan what they mean by that sector limit. We've got to make sure that, in effect, we do have a growth pattern here that is neutral. So I say that in my criteria the Alberta plan doesn't meet the growth-neutral condition. It also has little, if any, ability to deal with the capacity for sharing the burden.

You know, the credit exchange they talk about needs to be more clearly flushed out in terms of who would have credits to sell in it and who would be available to buy credits from it. But if we look at it from the perspective of how the international credit exchange falls into it, I guess in the federal plan there's not much of an indication there other than it's kind of a backstop or a last resort, but also in the Alberta plan – and I take this interpretation, Mr. Speaker, from a lot of the comments that have been made, not necessarily from things I can directly read into the bill – if we look at it from the perspective of what comments have come from the government in terms of the international credit exchange, I would suggest that the Alberta plan would have no role or, essentially, a minimal role for those credit exchanges to have any role in helping to mitigate the impact on Alberta. I guess the issue that I raise with respect to that, Mr. Speaker, is the fact that what we've got is a worldwide agreement here, an agreement by all countries in the world to participate. So we, in effect, should be looking, as Canadians, at how can we contribute to a reduction in greenhouse gas emissions in that world perspective, and just to eliminate or to ignore the opportunities for international credit exchanges limits some of the flexibility that we have.

Mr. Speaker, what I want to do is hypothesize with you and the House about if we were to sit down and try and bring together a program that would work both to reach Canada's international commitment of 6 percent below 1990 and meet the five criteria that I've talked about. Had the Premier gone on to further report on the things I said at that meeting in Athabasca and also at a number of other meetings around Alberta, as recently as last Friday with the Chamber of Commerce in Lethbridge and the week prior to that with the Chamber of Commerce executive in Calgary and with a number of the oil and gas industry companies that I've had a chance to present this to – none of them has said: that won't work; that's a plan we should dismiss. In fact, one of the executives from an oil company that I was talking to said – and I presented this plan to him briefly, and I must admit it was briefly – you know, if the federal government would adopt something like that, we could buy into it. This was one of the oil companies where the executives have been the most vocal in opposing the federal plan for greenhouse gas emissions.

Briefly, let me again put on the record the plan that I was talking about to these companies, to the chamber meetings, to these community groups that I've talked to, and that is the fact that we have to start off by creating – and this builds on both the Alberta plan and the federal plan – and building a Canadian emission credit exchange so that, in effect, we can allow for trades between individuals who have reached or exceeded some level of reduction and others that have not or are not able to reach that.

Mr. Speaker, one of the things that we've been throwing about – I think it will work based on some of the experiences I've had in previous lives – is that it would be easy for us to define a CO₂ equivalent and put this into some kind of a commodity exchange basis where people can buy and sell on a very open free market, even possibly have, you know, some futures trading in it so that people could plan their investments into the future and then have CO₂ emissions available to be bought at a future time when somebody else's investment was going to free up emissions that they could trade into it. So something very much like the Winnipeg Commodity Exchange, but it would have to be very specific to small unit sales because if we're going to have all emitters participate in it, we'd have to have it open so that even small savings could occur.

The second thing we would have to do to make this plan work is to create a greenhouse gas emission standard for each emission or emitter category on a unit output basis. I tie it to the unit output so that we can encourage growth and facilitate growth if any particular emitter wants to increase their output in terms of physical units of production. These standards, Mr. Speaker, can either be based on the current average of emitters in that category, or we can use some other standard that's based on most likely technologies, or reasonable technologies as opposed to most likely technologies. That way, we're not building our emission expectations on standards and technology that are going to come in the future. You know, this is one of the other issues that really raises some questions about the Alberta plan and the viability of that Alberta plan in the sense that they're projecting out into the future to 2050 possible technologies that will give us reductions.

You know, as a scientist, Mr. Speaker, I've had enough experience with research, both development and implementation, to know that if we deal with aggregates, yes, we can kind of project innovation and technology development over time, but we also don't have the option to truly predict with any degree of accuracy where those technologies are going to come, as much as we would like. Let's look at the number of dollars and the number of years that have been put into some of society's major technology searches: you know, cancer cures. We're taking incremental steps, but those incremental steps have taken years and years, decades and decades. So to be able to say, "Yes, in 20 years we'll have a solution to that" is not, I think, good public policy.

The other aspect, then, that we could look at is setting these emission standards on the basis of some kind of acceptable measure; for houses, let's say. The R-2000 standard for housing construction is a good option because that's basically an industry standard. It's a householder standard, and it's accepted. We could use that. So if your house is below that, you have to, in effect, buy credits. If you're above it, in effect, you have credits that you can put into the trade system.

Similarly, we can look at how we deal with other examples by targeting fuel efficiency for vehicles, and I want to elaborate on that just a little further as I talk about some other aspects of this, the general aspect of how we develop public policy for emission control. Then what we have is if an emitter wants to comply – this is assuming that the emitter is not in compliance – they can either adopt new technology that brings their process in line with the standard or go to the credit exchange and buy credits, which raise their standard. Mr. Speaker, this is the normal process that everybody talks about when they're talking about these credit exchanges.

The thing is that it gives you the flexibility if your physical plant is not fully depreciated out, not obsolete, still producing very effectively except for its emission criteria, which wasn't part of your planning when you built that plant. It allows you, in effect, to buy credits for a little while to operate that plant until it becomes feasible and economical to upgrade it, at which time then you comply, and you can resell those credits or keep them if you want to and, in conjunction with that plant, expand your output to allow for growth in the economy. So, in effect, being able to phase in your new technology, your new investments through the use of this credit exchange really helps significantly. The other aspect that we look at in terms of the supply is how to deal with this in terms of the process of anybody who is below or takes an extra special effort at bringing about reductions in emissions. They then can put them into that exchange.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the advantage of this process is that it really doesn't target any geographic area in Canada, nor does it target any sector and say that you must commit to a certain level of reduction. What it does is it has every emitter participating in a true marketplace where they each, in effect, make their decisions based on a cost per unit of emission. This is true production economics in the context that everybody deals with the same marginal cost of emissions, and you have to share equally among all the emitters. That way, we don't penalize any one emitter group more than another.

We also end up with the idea that we have to deal with that fairness, yet we all know that with the marketplace, if there gets to be more demand than there is supply, we end up seeing the price start to creep up. Well, Mr. Speaker, if that market starts to creep up, this is where we can have government participate in it, and I would like to suggest that that's when we bring in the international credit exchanges by bringing to Canada a supply of credits that can be released into that market in a way that doesn't create an undue burden on Canada in a competitive position with the international markets.

If we look at that, we can see that when we go internationally, we've got to make sure that we end up bringing back true credits in the context of the Kyoto interpretation by the countries that signed on to it. Here again I agree with those that say that we can't just throw our dollars into the international credit exchange and hope for the best. So what I'd like to suggest is that we never as a country, in effect, buy from a country that is not capped unless there's a technology-driven reduction within that country that we can capture and bring back to Canada. If the country isn't capped, then when their commitment to Kyoto comes about in phase 2 of the implementation, they'll start having sold us a bunch of credits which don't amount to anything. There was no commitment, no reduction. But if we end up going internationally and bringing back credits which are truly technologically driven, then that fits the spirit of the Kyoto agreement in the sense that we've made a commitment to reduce the world's level of greenhouse gas emissions. So we can make sure that when we're going international, we have that commitment.

The other option is if we go to countries that have experienced economic slowdowns because of the world's economic cycles. I don't think it would be right for us to buy credits that, in effect, are freed up by that economic slowdown. That's why I say that we have to make sure that any credit that we buy on the international market is only identified as being a technology-implementation identified credit. Now, one of the ways that we can do that – and I talked about that – is that the government can do it: bring it back and put it into the domestic credit exchange so that everybody has equal access to it on the basis of the price.

The other thing that we can do, as well, is if we have companies in Canada that operate internationally and they reduce their emissions in those other countries, they can bring those credits back. They can bring them into Canada, and they can become part of the Canadian supply of credits, which they can either use to grow their production in Canada or sell into the market to allow for Canadian entrepreneurship and Canadian sharing of the benefits of that. By making sure that those credits are technologically driven, that meets the fifth principle that I was talking about, looking at it in the sense that it gives a fair aspect of any wealth transfer.

If we're going to implement that in the international way to really, truly keep the integrity of these exchanges in place, one of the things that I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, is having some of our agencies that already deal with international activity and international economic development, international growth, become part of that in the sense that if we have federal or provincial agencies that provide assistance in an international context to change a process that results in a reduction of emissions, those credits then can be brought back as part of our international assistance. That, in effect, says that Canadian money that's already going into these international development projects brings back a benefit to Canada because we bring back to Canada those credit exchanges rather than just freeing them up in that country and allowing that country then to, in a sense, double up on our foreign aid by giving them an opportunity to sell those credits and create their own wealth.

But if we put into our development agreement that those credits come back to Canada, then we do get some direct benefit from our international development commitments. That way, I think we can make sure that, in effect, the international competitive position of our economy is kept in balance with the world businesses either in other complying countries or even in countries that aren't compliant. We can do that by regulating the cost of that credit exchange market in Canada by increasing the supply and reducing the price. That way, none of our businesses are faced with an unfair, if you want to call it that, position in the world because we as a country have agreed to look at mitigation.

One of the things that I brought out, Mr. Speaker, was the fact that neither the federal plan, especially the federal plan, nor the provincial plan really has the nuts and bolts about implementation. I want to raise one of the issues in terms of an example of how, as we go about dealing with the regulatory or legislative changes that are necessary for implementing either one of these plans, we've got to make sure that it focuses on how to deal with those same principles that I've talked about.

I mentioned before that I was going to talk further about fuel efficiency, and I do this not because I'm recommending that people who drive vehicles carry an undue burden, but we want them to carry a fair burden. If we're going to get them to reduce their emissions, the one approach you can use is, you know, price signals; in other words, raise the price of gas. This study was done and reported a couple months ago that in order to get a 20 percent reduction in fuel consumption, we'd have to have the price of gas somewhere around $1.10. Well, that has very serious implications for Canada's competitive position in a world market but also for the lifestyle that we as Canadians have come to enjoy; that is, you know, if we have to pay that much extra for our gas.

The other way to do it is to encourage vehicles that are more efficient. Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that almost everybody in this House over the next 10 years, which would be the compliance period for Kyoto, will trade a vehicle. Well, if we trade a vehicle that is more than 20 percent or 25 percent, whichever target we put on our vehicle efficiency or fuel consumption reduction, then we get those credits associated with buying that new vehicle. This can be facilitated very easily by having it done when we register our vehicles on a trade. You know, if you're trading in a vehicle and buying a new one that's 20 percent more efficient, you meet the standards. If you don't, then you have to buy credits to go with the expected lifetime consumption of that vehicle. Now, the unfairness there may be the fact that not everybody drives their vehicle the same number of kilometres per year, but it makes it a very easy way.

The really intriguing part of this proposal and this approach to fuel efficiency or fuel reduction is that if I have to pay more for my gas and I'm an employee, the first thing I'm going to do is go to my employer and say: "My cost of living went up. I need a raise." You know, the only thing that the employer can kind of say is: well, everybody's costs went up, so we're all the same. That doesn't usually work in the context of employee/employer negotiations. But if we use the second method of reducing fuel consumption, where we're encouraging people to drive vehicles that are more fuel efficient by giving them credits for the saved fuel, if I choose as an employee not to buy a more efficient vehicle but I still have to pay the same price for gas and I go to my employer and say, you know, "I had to buy a bunch of credits in order to register my vehicle," guess what the employer is going to tell me, Mr. Speaker? He's going to say: Ken, that was your choice. You, in effect, have to deal with that and make sure that you have that option.

The member behind made a comment about: well, what if you've got a big family? All we have to do – and, Mr. Speaker, I did this the other day when I was getting my car serviced. The salesman came along and said: Ken, when are you going to buy a new car? I said: well, you know, if I'm going to buy the same vehicle next time, I want you to make sure that this vehicle is available for me with better fuel efficiency in the motor. I said: you've probably got a year and a half or two years before I'm going to trade my vehicle in, so I expect you, if you want me to buy that same size and same style of vehicle, to have one that's got a better efficiency in it. That's what we have to start doing with our automobile association in the sense that we send signals today to our auto dealers, to our home builders, to all of our consumer products that we want our products produced so that they are more energy efficient in the future, and that's how we can do it. Yes, many people in this province require vehicles that have the same physical capacity of the vehicle that's there today, but by having messages sent to the manufacturers that we want them more fuel efficient, we can do it.

The other option, Mr. Speaker, is for us as consumers to start choosing the fuel. Ethanol-based fuels, in effect, give us a greenhouse gas emission reduction because they use energy in the context of the hydrogen cycle or the carbon cycle as opposed to bringing carbon out of a sink. If we can do it that way, we can make contributions to those reductions.

Mr. Speaker, I guess that the thing I wanted to emphasize as I was going along was the fact that we have to separate signing on to an international agreement, making the commitment that we as Canadians will reduce our emissions by a set amount in conjunction with the worldwide agreement, from the process of: how do we go about implementing it? That's where I stand on this issue. I truly support the idea that we as Canadians can sign on to our commitment of the level of reduction that was specified in the Kyoto protocol, but what we really need to do is be really innovative and real thinkers outside the box in terms of how we go about complying.

I'll close, Mr. Speaker, with the same comment that I started with in connection with: how do we implement Kyoto? The federal government hasn't given us the idea. They haven't given us any time frame, really, to properly plan for this. I stick with my comments to the Athabasca Rotary Club when I said: the federal government has really let us down. As a policy program for Canada they could have done a lot better, and every Canadian should be disappointed in them.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Before I recognize the hon. leader of the ND Party, may we briefly revert to Introduction of Guests?

head: Introduction of Guests
(reversion)

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Rocky View.

MS HALEY: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm very, very pleased to be able to introduce someone from my constituency who works for the Department of Transportation in transportation inspection services. He's a district supervisor from the Balzac area. Just before I ask him to stand up, I wanted to tell you that he's allowed me to go out to his station a couple of times and just observe the weighing and inspection of some of the bigger trucks on our roads. I can tell you that it was an incredible experience to see it firsthand and to realize what incredibly well-qualified people we have observing the vehicles on our roads, and I felt tremendous about that. The gentleman's name is Arlen Mason. I would ask him to please rise in the Assembly and receive the warm welcome.

Bill 32
Climate Change and Emissions Management Act

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I enter the debate on Bill 32, the Climate Change and Emissions Management Act, in second reading, I want to preface my remarks with some general comments on climate change and global warming. Global warming is a global problem that requires a global solution, not a patchwork of ineffective efforts which have no commitment to net reduction in greenhouse gas emissions in the foreseeable future. Moreover, global warming is already here. Failing to take meaningful action carries economic risks and costs at least as great and perhaps far greater than taking action. In other words, failure to meaningfully act against global warming risks not only Alberta's environmental future but also its economic future.

That's why, I think, 67 eminent Alberta scientists decided to send a letter to the Premier on October 22, 2002. All of these scientists teach at Alberta universities and either work with climate change or its effects. In that letter these eminent scientists expressed surprise that they had not been consulted by the Alberta government in the development of its so-called made-in-Alberta plan. Allow me to refer to some excerpts from this letter.

Contrary to the views often portrayed by the press and industry spokespersons, there is little disagreement in the scientific community on climate warming. The Royal Society of Canada, the Royal Society of London, and the US National Academy of Sciences have all taken strong positions on the global warming issues . . . The current scientific consensus on global warming is now greater than, for example, the general consensus in the 1960s that humans could reach the moon, or the consensus in the early 1940s that we could create atomic weapons.

The letter from the scientists continues:

Temperature records show that in southern Canada, considerable warming has already taken place on the western prairies. Increases in temperature since the early 20th century have been from 1 to 3° Celsius at various prairie locations . . . The resulting increases in evaporation have without doubt aggravated the drought conditions that currently plague the western prairies . . . Compensation payments and crop insurance payouts this year alone amount to over two billion dollars in Alberta and Saskatchewan . . . Such costs can only increase with a warming climate.

The scientists continue:

Another example is forestry. In the 1980s and 1990s, the incidence of forest fire doubled in Canada compared to the 1960s and 1970s, burning an area equal to 80 per cent of the province of Alberta during this 20 year period . . . Already, the costs of fighting forest fires in Canada average over 500 million dollars per year, with little effect on the amount of forest burned. The costs of fire suppression, lost revenues to the forest industry, evacuation of towns, and health impacts of smoke are likely to be extremely high.

To conclude quoting from this letter, let me use the last quote here.

Climate warming will increase the problem of freshwater for the prairies, and the water that remains will decline in quality. Already, wetlands are dry and many lakes have lost most of their water. Summer river flows are already flowing at 20 to 60 per cent of historical values.

Perhaps the most readily available proof that global warming is already here is the rapid melting back of the Rocky Mountain glaciers that feed Alberta's many river systems. Anyone who has taken the short walk from the Banff/Jasper highway to the foot of the Athabasca Glacier can see the hundreds of metres this glacier has melted back in the last half century. Medium and longer term glacier melt-back threatens the future availability of water. The problem of glacier melt-back is most severe in the Oldman River basin, which has the shallowest glaciers, the driest climate, and the highest water use, especially for irrigation.

I next want to touch on how Albertans have been let down by both their federal government and the provincial Tory government. The federal Liberals and Alberta Tories have both failed us when it comes to being proactive on climate change. Mr. Speaker, there is no question that the federal Liberal government has dropped the ball. The federal Liberals took something that should have united us as Canadians and have turned it into a source of division between different regions and different sectors. The federal government's new ad campaign is using the slogan: Together, We Can Do It. This is most ironic. It's ironic because the federal Liberal government's actions have done anything but bring Canadians together. First, after signing on to the Kyoto protocol in December 1997, the federal government chose to put the issue of ratification on the back burner until this past summer. Climate change was given such a low profile by the federal Liberals that it's no wonder many Albertans and Canadians think ratification has been sprung on them at the last minute.

Moreover, the federal Liberals also bear a large part of the blame for the poisoning of relations with the provinces. The federal government signs international treaties, but the provinces share jurisdictions over the environment. Without provincial co-operation meeting the Kyoto targets will be much, much more difficult. Far from showing responsible leadership and unifying Canadians to meet environmental challenges, the federal Liberals' mishandling of Kyoto ratification is dividing Canadians. The federal Liberals' failure of leadership is dividing provinces and is exacerbating regional tensions.

I want to briefly now turn my attention to our provincial government. The approach being taken by this Tory government can best be described as a multimillion dollar smear campaign against Kyoto. Never has so much misinformation, scare-mongering, and outright falsehoods been packed into such slick packaging, Mr. Speaker. By using overheated rhetoric, this Tory government has succeeded in instilling fear and creating an investment chill. This destructive approach reached a new low two weeks ago when the Premier said that he was going to go to New York to warn Americans about how Kyoto ratification will drive investment out of Alberta. Now, after being deservedly criticized from all quarters, the Premier appears to have backed away from bad-mouthing Alberta and Canada in front of a foreign audience. The very fact that the Premier would have considered this, however, speaks volumes about the lengths this government is prepared to go in its destructive opposition to Kyoto ratification.

The Premier also knows better when he claims that Kyoto has somehow been sprung upon the Alberta government at the last minute. In fact, until last May the Alberta government co-chaired the national climate change forum or study group or whatever, and the Minister of Environment of Alberta was the co-chair. Alberta has not only been fully consulted in the five years as a province since the federal government first signed on to the Kyoto protocol, but it fully participated in those consultations and discussions. Now it claims that it hasn't been consulted at all.

A fact often concealed by the Tory government in its destructive campaign is that addressing climate change has economic opportunities as well as costs. There's no better example of this than a September 1990 study commissioned by the energy efficiency office of the Energy department of this province, Mr. Speaker. This report did not propose raising gasoline prices or electricity prices. Instead the report set out in exhaustive detail a range of energy conservation and energy efficiency measures that would have resulted by the year 2005 in a 7.3 percent reduction in CO₂ emissions. The 1990 report found that a $6.7 billion investment in energy conservation measures would have yielded first-year savings of $2.2 billion. The average payback of an investment in energy conservation would have been 3.1 years. In other words, an annual return of about 30 percent per year if the recommendations had been implemented. Instead of implementing this report, the government under Premier Klein axed the energy efficiency office in 1994. We all know what has happened since. Instead of greenhouse gas emissions going down, they've actually gone up by almost 20 percent.

The government likes to pretend that Bill 32 is a real alternative to Kyoto. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that it's not. It's political posturing. Bill 32 is a licence for more pollution. The name says it all. Bill 32 is not about emission reductions; it is about emissions management.

The most flawed aspect of Bill 32 is its reliance on the concept of reducing emission intensity as opposed to absolute reductions in emissions. Bill 32 specifies that emissions will be reduced relative to GDP by "50% of 1990 levels" by the end of the year 2020. In other words, the faster our economy grows, the more emissions will be allowed to go up. An analysis of the Alberta plan by the Pembina Institute concludes that should Alberta's economic growth in the coming two decades be the same as it was in the past decade, greenhouse gas emissions might actually go up 83 percent compared to 1990. Clearly, this is not acceptable, Mr. Speaker.

Bill 32 also makes the preposterous claim that greenhouse gases released into the atmosphere are a natural resource to which the province claims ownership. Talk about getting it backwards, Mr. Speaker. If you release greenhouse gases into the atmosphere, they are pollutants. Instead of wasting money on useless court challenges and Supreme Court references, let's develop technologies to conserve energy and remove these pollutants from the atmosphere.

Next I'll make a few comments on the federal government's stated intention to ratify the Kyoto protocol before Christmas. The federal government's decision to ratify prior to having substantial agreement from most provinces and other shareholders is regrettable. As I said earlier, the federal Liberals have let Canadians down. The federal government has let Albertans down with this ham-fisted approach. Would it be desirable for there to be agreement of the provinces prior to Kyoto ratification by the federal government? Yes, it would. However, if the Tory government in this province were being honest with Albertans, it would tell them that their opposition to Kyoto ratification is not based on the absence of an implementation plan. The provincial Tories want to kill Kyoto, plain and simple.

The provincial Tories also know that the longer the federal government delays ratification, the more difficult it will be for Canada to meet its Kyoto emission reduction targets. The New Democrats would be in favour of delaying Kyoto ratification until early next year if we were convinced that this extra time would be used productively by the federal government and the provinces to agree on an implementation plan. However, given the Alberta government's stated goal of killing Kyoto ratification, the only thing that would be accomplished by a delay is to make it just that much more difficult for us as a nation to meet our Kyoto obligations. That's why the Premier's call for Kyoto to be delayed for 18 months or two years is really just a stalling tactic.

To conclude, the New Democrats support the ratification of Kyoto for both environmental and economic reasons, Mr. Speaker. The Conservative government is betraying future generations of Albertans in its mindless opposition to ratification. The negative impacts of global warming are already beginning to affect important industries like agriculture and forestry, as the scientists have reminded us. The time for action is now. Alberta needs to fight hard to get a fair deal on the implementation of the Kyoto protocol within Canada. Rather than fear mongering, the provincial government should be aggressively formulating an implementation position that best safeguards Alberta's interests.

Bill 32 is not the answer. It will allow harmful emissions to continue increasing for decades to come. It's a plan tailor-made for big oil and other powerful special interests opposed to real action to combat global warming. Like other global agreements to protect the environment, reducing greenhouse gas emissions will over time improve the underlying competitiveness of the Canadian and Alberta economies. Should the national community fail to ratify Kyoto, negotiating a new protocol would take many years. In the meantime, the well-being of our children and our grandchildren would be placed in increasing peril.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Under Standing Order 29 we have five minutes for any questions if any member wishes to ask. The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

MR. MAGNUS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In light of the member's previous comments about this bill, Bill 32, I'd like to ask him just a commonsense question. If you put 100 people in this room and gave everybody in the room a cigarette and asked them to light it and then asked two people to put theirs out, would it make a difference?

DR. PANNU: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to answer this question. Any positive steps taken in the direction of reducing either greenhouse gas emissions or cigarette smoke I think are worthy of our action, and we should accept that challenge. You have to provide some leadership. Leadership is the issue here, and that's where I think this government is failing.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

MR. KNIGHT: Yes, Mr. Speaker. With respect to the idea that the Alberta government's opposition to Kyoto is simply a way to put us in a position where we would not be able to comply, I have a question with respect to the protocol. Article 3 states that "each Party included in Annex I shall, by 2005, have made demonstrable progress in achieving its commitments under this Protocol." How would you propose that Canada is going to do that now? It's three years away.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a very good question. I would put the question back to the member by asking: if we delayed the ratification by another two years, how would we meet the commitments that are stated in that article? Clearly, the sooner we get down to business, the better. And the provisions for that particular article do not require us to have reduced the emissions by 2005 but only to have taken substantial actions which will lead us to achieve that objective by 2010 and 2012.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

MR. McCLELLAND: Thank you very much. I'd like to pursue the notion of emissions trading versus the efficiency of a carbon tax with the hon. member. James A. Paul, who is apparently a well-respected environmentalist, in a presentation that he gave to the global policy forum in March of this year indicated that an emissions trading regime is not nearly as effective or as fair as a carbon tax, which speaks to other presentations here today. I wonder if I could have the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona comment on that notion.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Not having direct access to what Mr. Paul had to say, it's very difficult to respond specifically to what he allegedly said and where and when. I think I would much rather be guided by two sources of information. Both are authoritative: 67 eminent Alberta scientists and their recommendations to this government and government's own energy efficiency group's report of 1990.

We don't have to worry about trading emissions if we are serious about taking action, and we should have taken this action early. In fact, Albertans were never told that such a report existed, and in fact it makes such sweeping and comprehensive recommendations which would have guaranteed us a return on our investment by the billions of dollars every year. That's where my disappointment lies, and that's why Albertans, I guess, are asking questions about the commitment of this government to doing something serious and substantial to address the problem of climate change.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

MR. HLADY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First and foremost today I would want to make something absolutely clear. The Alberta government understands and agrees with the need to take action to reduce greenhouse gas emissions and address the issue of climate change. But I stand here certainly in amazement listening to the comments of the Leader of the Official Opposition and the leader of the third party and their inability to understand the difference between a Kyoto and a national-based solution, which is what the provinces want from across this country.

Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Official Opposition was stating today, as he stated last week, that this is a vague plan and that there's lots of chance to change and move things along. Well, the plan that Kyoto is right now is actually very specific and has very specific targets that we would have to meet. We as a government with our people here have already analyzed that and seen the hits that it would take, and that's why we know that the national-based solution is the right direction to go, with all the provinces onside and understanding and meeting the 12 points that we've put forward here as well. Working on Bill 32 is something that allows us to make sure that we have the ability to have control here in this province and make sure that it's in the best interests of the economy of this province as well.

The Leader of the Official Opposition also spent a lot of time today, Mr. Speaker, speaking in regard to a commodity exchange. That concept you couldn't do under a Kyoto model. It doesn't work. That's not what they want. The federal government wants to take control of our resources in the province here by using a compliance tool of emissions trading that they would have control over, not to allow carbon sinks in the form of our forests, in the form of our agriculture. They want to control all of that, take it away from us as a province, as well as our oil and gas, and put a tax back on us on a reverse takeover, if you would say, on our oil and gas through a carbon tax. That sort of thing that the leader talked about in regard to a commodity exchange would only be possible under a national-based solution or a North American model potentially, as well, in the future, but it certainly couldn't be done under the Kyoto plan.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to spend a moment just talking about the position we're at. There are 168 countries that have signed on to Kyoto. There are 17 countries in Europe, in the European bubble that sits there today, that have signed on to this.

Japan has signed on to it, but what they've also done in Japan is they have determined that they are not going to hold industry's feet to the fire because industry explained to their federal government that their economy could not withstand the blow that Kyoto would put on their economy. So the Japanese are looking to meet their Kyoto commitments through emissions at the retail level, at the residential level. So either big taxes are going to come onto the individuals of Japan or they're going to find a way through new improved muffler systems for all of their vehicles in Japan, something along that line, but it has nothing to do with taking a big hit on their economy.

The European Union has 17 countries that are working inside a bubble, and they can trade amongst themselves for the amount of emissions that are going to work. So they can make that happen. However, there are countries inside the European Union right now that are saying that they don't think they can meet that as well.

There are only three other countries in the world that had targets that they had to meet: Australia, the United States, and Canada. Australia and the United States analyzed it and said: we can't do this; our economies cannot sustain the blows that this would do. Canada is the only country being sold down the river by its federal government, and it's a very sad state that we see today.

Mr. Speaker, a couple of stories that I think you might find very interesting. I was delivering a speech out in Okotoks to the Okotoks oilmen's association, about 120 folks that work in the service industry of the oil and gas industry in the southern part of the province with this particular group. The stories that you hear back from these folks that are seeing what is happening to our industry today based on the fear of ratification in this province is staggering. When you have $25 oil and you have $4 gas, there shouldn't be a service person in this province standing still. They should all be working double shifts to try to keep up with the drilling activity that has always gone on historically in this province. That's not true today. Today we're seeing a slowdown.

We have one of our colleagues who conveyed a story to me about his son who'd recently become a welder, gotten his ticket after apprenticing in welding, and had received a job here in the province. Whenever you get a job welding in this area, you're usually set until you retire with not a worry to be had. However, within a couple of weeks after receiving this job, he was laid off. He went to the welders' union and put his name on the list. He was 903 on the list, Mr. Speaker, of welders. Welders just aren't that unemployed in this province, not when you see the way the economy had been growing in the oil and gas area, with the prices of oil and the prices of gas that have been here for the last number of years.

So what we're seeing today, Mr. Speaker, is a serious slowdown. We've seen $16 billion taken off the table already in investment up in the oil sands. We have also seen some very well-known, prominent federal Liberals who are in the oil and gas industry in Calgary, and what they have done is they have come out and said to us: you can't trust this federal Liberal government because they're not doing what they said they were going to do even to their best supporters. It's amazing.

Mr. Speaker, as part of our commitment to take action, Alberta has met with the other provincial governments and with the federal government, and we've been trying to move towards getting something to happen. One, we've certainly tried to take part in a constructive consultation, to no avail, with the federal government. We've also asked the feds for a plan to see what they have got so that we can go forward with a review. We're starting to see something happening, but it's certainly not in regard to the implementation side. All we know is that they're looking to come forward in the spring with legislation, with no idea what that's going to mean and what it's going to entail, yet they're going to ratify before we have a chance to analyze and see what the legislation looks like, plus their implementation plan. They refuse to release that to us.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to speak to our plan for a moment. Earlier, within the last month, our Minister of Environment released the action plan Albertans and Climate Change: Taking Action. That is something that we saw as a very important step and was actually doing something about dealing with the emissions. The plan focuses on energy efficiency, enhancing technology to control industrial emissions, seeking out new environmentally friendly sources of energy, and better managing our emissions today and in the future. These actions, when combined, will improve our efficiency in the short term and lead to substantial reductions in emissions over time, but to be successful, we need all Albertans, both organizations and individuals, to go beyond business as usual as we do these changes.

I'd like to focus on emissions reduction here for a minute. Our targets are based on reducing emissions intensity, Mr. Speaker, rather than on absolute reduction. What this allows us to do: it allows our economy to continue to grow and have jobs for our children, as they continue to see things happen, and allows for the wealth that everyone enjoys here in this province. But the concept and the model of Kyoto today leads to a transfer of wealth rather than really fixing the problem, and it works at the two levels: it works at the international level and at the national level. We're very concerned about that because this is how the federal government looks to bring back NEP in the form of NEP 2 and calling it Kyoto, and that's a very sad thing. What we know is that we took the hit without the full happening of the NEP. We're seeing it again right now. If it is actually implemented, the loss of control of our resources, which are set out as a provincial jurisdiction, would happen in an amazing way. We would have very great trouble in regard to seeing our economy grow and attract investment in the future.

What we want to do with emissions intensity really strikes a balance between environmental and economic goals for all Albertans, and at the same time our approach sets us on a path towards substantial and permanent reductions in overall greenhouse gas emissions. Alberta is focused on real reductions in realistic time frames. We will cut emissions intensity in this province by 50 percent below 1990 levels by 2020.

Mr. Speaker, I would sense that you'd have a different situation and you would have had different numbers coming out if this model of Kyoto had been implemented by, say, the year 2000 or even '96, because you have a country in the form of Germany that was very fortunate around 1990 to have East Germany come back in to be part of the greater Germany. West Germany was able to take great advantage of the poor producing plants in East Germany, and by shutting those down, they get credit for that. So they've been allowing their economy to grow, making things happen, and taking advantage of the fact that they're shutting down these poor, inefficient plants and building new ones to replace them. That's been a very big advantage to them. If that hadn't happened at that particular time, you wouldn't have seen the advantage in Europe, and I would sense that if Germany was going to see a crush on their economy, this wouldn't have gone ahead in the European Union.

So 50 percent below the 1990 levels by 2020. That is the equivalent, Mr. Speaker, of a 60 million tonne reduction in greenhouse gas emissions. Ultimately, this strategy will make Alberta as good or better than anywhere else in the world. It would allow us to reduce our emissions from industrial and consumer activity without destroying our economy. To measure our progress, we have set an initial milestone of a 22 percent reduction in emissions intensity by 2010, that results in a reduction of 20 million tonnes. We recognize that more significant emissions reductions will be required over the longer term.

Mr. Speaker, one of the things that we're spending a lot of time on right now through AERI, through CERI, through Climate Change Central organizations – we have leading, cutting-edge technology being looked at – is looking at the concept of zero emission coal research that's going on. It's going on around the world, and we're working on that, and you can do that in a fundamentally positive way. We don't believe it can be done by 2010. The researchers don't believe they can have it by 2010, but by 2020 there's the potential to do that. By putting our money in and investing in research and helping the economy to grow, working in a proactive way rather than in a penalizing way, we think that we have a much better chance of making it work well here in Alberta.

In short, we are doing our part to reduce national and global emissions. We will train our economy at a steady pace to win the emissions reduction race in the long run. The Kyoto plan would have us sprint this first bit, transfer wealth out of this province, and really we wouldn't have a chance to get to the finish line. It's about a transfer of wealth. It's about a chance for other economies to try and gather from our wealth and not allow us to grow until they've caught up. It's not the right way. Kyoto is the wrong way to do this. Climate change is far too large an issue for any one company or industry or government to tackle alone, and it certainly needs to be on a global basis when we're dealing with emissions for this world.

The Alberta government will work with key sectors of the Alberta economy to ensure that our action plan on climate change achieves real and measurable results. This includes agreement with electricity, oil and gas, transportation, forestry, and other industries, plus municipalities. We will back up those sectoral agreements with strong legislation and regulations so that all organizations clearly understand our expectations for emissions reductions and will meet them. In fact, this is already under way, Mr. Speaker. We've already implemented a mandatory greenhouse gas emissions reporting program for large emission sources.

Technology and innovation are very important as well, Mr. Speaker. We will also work toward an effective use of the technology, and we'll continue to build on the strong international reputation that Alberta already has and work together with other governments around the world to make sure that we can see this technology implemented wherever it's in the best interests of the environment. Our plan will certainly allow for the technology to get up and running faster because we're investing back in that rather than just transferring wealth out of our province.

In regard to energy conservation, Mr. Speaker, we've been going ahead and making this a team effort through all Albertans. A major part of our plan involves working toward better energy conservation among all Albertans so that we can see the positive effects. I think that examples certainly include helping to create an Alberta office of energy efficiency along with Climate Change Central. We think that the municipal governments, as well, will be working very closely with us, and we see establishing audits of municipal buildings. That will, again, make sure that we know whether the emissions are being reduced as we go along.

This government has shown leadership all the way along this process, Mr. Speaker. What we've done over the past decade in our government is cut greenhouse gas emissions from its own operations by more than 20 percent below the 1990 levels, for example. This has certainly far exceeded the 14.1 percent that we'd set as a target, and we're not done. Based on our success, we have established a new target of 26 percent below 1990 levels by 2005, and I'm very confident that we will achieve that.

We've also been supporting programs for energy-conserving retrofits in government facilities. I know that the Minister of Infrastructure has been working hard on that. Mr. Speaker, I think we'll see other things, along with the concept of the vehicles that will be working inside government as well.

I'm sure we will be continuing to fight on every front in the future. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: Standing Order 29(2) kicks in now. Questions? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a question. Does this member support the concept of the government putting together a fund, either a loan fund or a grant program, for people to retrofit their homes to become more energy efficient?

MR. HLADY: Mr. Speaker, what we are doing is looking at everything we can do. There have been programs such as that in the past. At this time we are not looking at creating loans or grants, but those are things that certainly can come to the table and we can discuss to see what is the best way to create efficiencies in this province.

MS CARLSON: Mr. Speaker, why wouldn't this member support that kind of a program when it's been incredibly successful in other provinces, like Manitoba and the territories?

MR. HLADY: Mr. Speaker, this member seems to be quite happy to go and spend more money and so forth toward making that happen. But there's a lot of that happening right now in the private sector. Those are efficiencies that are happening. The marketplace is making it happen. People will be happier when they have triple-glazed windows on their house, if they add more insulation in the roofs or on the sidewalls of their homes. They can do all of that. They'll save lots of money in regard to their heating bills. This is all part of the private sector that makes it work. I think those things have to be taken into consideration before you just go and spend government money, which is the people's money.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

MR. KNIGHT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Member for Calgary-Mountain View: given that methane's global warming potential is 23 times that of CO₂, would you agree that our flaring and venting program that we have in Alberta, that you touched on briefly, demonstrates good environmental stewardship?

MR. HLADY: You know, today, Mr. Speaker, we are still at the discussion point in the positioning of CO₂ and methane as natural resources rather than, actually, as emissions. I mean, those are part of the science that's still out there and being debated on what is real and what isn't. I think of the fact that we have huge resources of methane sitting below the confines of this province as a potential resource for natural gas. Today 6 percent of the natural gas being produced in the United States is coal bed methane, and I think what we have is a great opportunity with that. I think the whole concept of why Kyoto doesn't work is simply because the science still hasn't been completed. The whole defining of what is product is still a big piece of that. So it's not concluded on what and how you would classify that.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Could the member tell me why he supports government grants for electricity costs when prices spike but doesn't support grants for consumer retrofits of older homes, which will leave those people significantly disadvantaged in this market?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. HLADY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The member is not quite accurate in regard to grants. In a regulated market as well as in a deregulated market, in two years that were joined to each other, we had an auction of property that belonged to the people of Alberta. What happened was that they received money back as a credit on their bill in regard to the property that they owned in the form of paying down the one time on their electricity bills.

THE SPEAKER: Conclusion, then, on Standing Order 29? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

MR. McCLELLAND: In debate, sir?

THE SPEAKER: No. I'll recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie first, I believe.
Proceed.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Speaking in second reading on Bill 32, the Climate Change and Emissions Management Act – second reading is the most important stage of a bill. It's the time when we speak to the whole principle that's at issue, when we're debating the topic under discussion, and the issue then is affirmed or denied by a vote in the House. It is particularly important to speak to the principle of what brought this bill into the Assembly, which is not policy. It is politics. Given that we won't see this bill come back after second reading stage . . .

AN HON. MEMBER: How do you know?

MS CARLSON: Let's trust the proceedings of the House to see that. I challenge the Government House Leader to bring this bill back in committee, and let's see if we get any serious debate on this. We are quite happy to stay here in the Assembly until this bill has passed through all the stages and is ready for royal assent. A lot of things will happen in this province before we see that happen with this bill, because this is an ability for this government to talk about politics, not, in fact, real policy or real principles. That is a real shame, because this is one of the most significant issues that we will be facing over the next year. No doubt it is this government's highest priority to be able, whenever possible, to pick a fight with someone other than their own performance so that we don't look too closely at that particular performance.

So when we look at what the government has done on this bill, when we go back to the 1990s and review what the Premier has said over the years on these kinds of issues, what we see is that for the past decade and more he has really been leading by looking at his toes when he should have been lifting up his sights and having them focused on the horizon, Mr. Speaker, so that we could see some true leadership that takes us into the next decade and the next wave of technology advance and use of fuel systems to push forward our industries, our consumer products, and our manufacturing. We don't see that, by far, with this bill. This is a bill that's targeted at setting up a constitutional battle with the federal government. It's a bill that's targeted at minimizing any kind of contribution Alberta would have regardless of the kind of progress that we have seen by industry in this province, and the progress on the industry side has in fact been significant.

This protectionist attitude that we see from the government doesn't help. It isn't a long-term, effective strategy. What we need is for this government to set up a framework where Alberta businesses can be best in class, not best in class in Edmonton or Fort Saskatchewan or Grande Prairie or Lethbridge but best in class in a global marketplace. So they need to be forward thinking. They need to be leaders in their fields. They need to be getting whatever kind of competitive advantage they can from support by the government in innovation and in technology and in looking at other kinds of options that they can be putting forward to meet the kinds of needs that we're seeing in the global market. That definitely talks about how we reduce CO₂ emissions, how companies diversify, and how we start to level off the demand for fossil fuels not just in this country but throughout the globe.

When we take a look historically at what the Premier is on the record saying, we find that he hasn't done very much. If we take a look at the preamble of this particular bill when it talks about the government of Alberta is committed to reducing emissions of carbon dioxide, what we see is that not only does this current plan that we have in front of us not reduce emissions; it lets them increase as long as the Alberta economy grows, which is a problem. We see that historically the Premier has talked the talk but not walked the walk.

I'll take you back to Hansard of April 24, 1990, when the Premier, then the Minister of Environment, talks about "the Canadian Council of Ministers of the Environment has recently assigned a protocol that calls for a significant reduction in automobile emissions by 1994." In fact, what did the Premier, then the minister, do? We haven't seen any kind of leadership from our government on that, so how can we trust them to then keep this commitment that's in the preamble of this bill? I think that's a question that needs to be answered as this bill progresses.

If we go to June 19, 1992, once again the same minister, now the Premier, "agreed to create a new air quality management system." That is, in fact, a direct quote from him. Have we seen that yet? No. What do we see? Complaints from him saying that the federal government hasn't ruled out the plan and because of that we can't do anything. In fact, he is on the record as committing to working forward on some of these issues back in these years, and now he is complaining that they don't know what to do, that there are no rules. The rules have been developed over a course of more than a decade, and he is trying to duck and hide on this particular issue now.

Once again what does the minister say on June 10, 1991, the minister of the day, now the Premier? He says that what the province needs to do is make a reasonable contribution to the reduction of those gases that contribute to not only the greenhouse effect . . .

So the greenhouse effect is no big surprise to him. On the record making a commitment from his ministry then.

. . . global warming, but depletion of ozone. In addition to that, there are national protocols that we have entered into relative to a decrease in automobile emissions by 50 percent by the year 1995.

Now the year has changed but still a commitment. "We have entered into protocols relative to the decrease in packaging and waste by 50 percent by the year 2000."

So as much as he committed to reducing waste, which has happened in this province, he also committed to global warming and the greenhouse effect and also the depletion of ozone.

What have we seen? We haven't seen the government roll out any comprehensive strategies that address this. Do we know that we have them, Mr. Speaker? We do. It was just last week that we saw a document come forward from the Minister of Energy's department that talked about how that department alone had figured out a way for us to meet the Kyoto protocol years ago. Not yesterday, not last month but years ago, before the five-year time period when this government actually sat at the table with the federal government and started to negotiate a system to implement the protocol. These people just don't keep their word and don't keep the commitments.

Here's another one. When we go back to 1990 again, the Premier talks about, "That's why we have identified the gases that contribute or are alleged to contribute to global warming, such as CO₂," and "whereby government can participate with the energy industry in this province," they commit to do so. Well, we don't see that happening, Mr. Speaker, and why is that? Why do we have to have this political fight, all this misinformation out there? And, I'll admit, misinformation on both sides. The feds have not been helpful in this regard, but misinformation from this province on the issue.

Let's talk about some of the misinformation that's gone out in all the propaganda, and that's the 450,000 job loss. What are we really talking about? The most extreme example that has come out has said that it could be up to 450,000 jobs that are not created in the time frame originally planned. What does that mean? Those jobs are delayed by a few months' time. What is a more realistic job loss when you just look at a flattening of the economy and the kind of implications that will roll out of this? We're talking somewhere between 60,000 and 120,000 jobs.

That is not taking into account the upside of this equation. Every single time that we have this kind of a situation happen – and this is not the only time this has happened. If we go back and take a look at history, CO₂, natural gas flaring – do you remember those days when we had the Turner Valley on fire in this province and the kind of outcry we had from industry when they suddenly had to sequester that gas and couldn't just flare it? What ended up happening down the road is that they sequestered that natural gas and it became a real revenue producer for this province. So it's a good thing they did that because we're reaping the benefits of that today. What did that action force? It forced innovation. It forced advanced technology, and it created a market. There are states now, not the least of which is Texas, who are actually selling CO₂ at this time.

So when we talk about a potential for 60,000 to 120,000 jobs postponed, not lost but postponed, what does that mean in the entire Canadian economy, not just the Alberta economy? That means that those new jobs won't be created for about six weeks. We're not talking about your neighbour losing their job or you losing your job. We're talking about that guy coming in from out of the province who is going to have to wait another six weeks before he gets a job in this province.

So when we talk about that, Mr. Speaker, we have to take a look at the other kinds of implications that we have. This minister and this Premier talk about in their opening statements the government of Alberta owning the natural resources in Alberta, and carbon dioxide and methane are natural resources, setting up a constitutional challenge to any program that comes out.

When we talk about that in terms of what the Premier has said in years past, it's interesting to see that in former times when it was convenient to do so he was very much in line with a national and a global strategy. March 19, 1992: what does he say? He recognizes and commits "to adopt a global approach in addressing the new environmental realities." Great words once again. Talking the talk but not walking the walk. This is 1992. He says that the new environmental reality is a global approach. But now he says: no, we want a constitutional fight. And we don't want to do that.

He's on the record again. There are many examples. I'm just picking out a few of the very interesting highlights in terms of what he said in those days. What he said in 1991 was that they're "trying to get handle on all these gases" and the greenhouse phenomena, and that they will "develop a position, and put in place what is right" for not only Alberta, Mr. Speaker, but what is right for Canada. That's not what we see roll out in this particular plan, and he could do it. They could be at the table.

DR. MASSEY: That was then and this is now.

MS CARLSON: That was then and this is now. How many times have we heard that in this particular Assembly? More than I can certainly count.

Are there good alternatives? Yes, there are, Mr. Speaker. Do we see them being rolled out in anything that the government has brought forward in this bill? They're famous for floating trial balloons on issues that they may want to pursue in the future, but we haven't seen some really good ones here. One of the ones that I'd like to talk about is in reference to the question that I had asked of the earlier speaker, and that is: why wouldn't Alberta, the richest province in the country, put forward . . . [some applause] Well, that's right. The richest province, and to stay the richest province, it has to start acting smart.

One of the very important things that we need to do is provide the ability to consumers in this province to be able to adapt to the new realities that are facing them in terms of energy prices and their own personal commitment to being environmentally friendly and reducing CO₂ emissions. A very, very easy way to do that is to develop a loan program where people can borrow money to retrofit houses to meet the new challenges we have that we're facing on a day-to-day basis. I am increasingly getting calls from constituents who are wondering why this isn't happening. As they search around on the Net to find out what else is out there, they realize that other provinces, less wealthy provinces, and the Territories have for years had a system in place where they have a small loan or grant program where if you have your home assessed for energy efficiency and decide to move forward with increasing the efficiency, you can submit an estimate of what the work is going to be, and you can borrow that money from the government at a zero interest rate and then pay it back.

You know what? There are lots of ways to pay that back. They could pay that out of their monthly energy savings. They could pay it at a prescribed rate, and that small investment of money, to be able to provide the kinds of dollars we're talking about in a revolving fund, would be way less than a million dollars. We're asking for way less than one-third of the advertising already spent by this government to promote their own agenda. It would be a smart investment to do this. They'd get the money back. They don't get any interest, so we all eat the cost of that, but I'll tell you: I'd rather have my tax dollars going to that than to see massive communication budgets and propaganda agendas put forward by this government on my tax dollar.

People are asking for that because do you know what energy retrofits cost? You can't do anything for less than $1,500, and really if you're taking a look at getting energy efficient appliances and windows, it's much more than that.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2) now kicks in for five minutes. Questions? The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm wondering if the hon. member would be able to tell us whether she thinks it's better for Alberta and for industries in Alberta to be able to attack the issues of climate change and the opportunities of jobs that might be created out of that opportunity if the economy is strong and if they are able to engage, as they are now, in very productive ways or whether they would be more able to do it if they were put out of business or severely curtailed in their business by arbitrary caps on their emissions.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I certainly welcome that particular question from the Government House Leader. He has made a number of assumptions that I haven't seen backed up by any kinds of facts, and in fact I do have some facts on how industry has adapted to the potential for climate change. The Government House Leader may not know it, but I did my master's thesis on climate change as a change management issue for Alberta industries. In fact, thank you for the question. Too bad I only have the rest of five minutes to answer it in.

What I did, Mr. Speaker, was I took a look at three different industries: one that is coal-fire based, one forestry industry, and one technology company to see how two directly affected industries and one who is affected peripherally were taking a look at this particular issue. What I took a look at was really what I feel were outstanding companies in this province to see who I felt had best practices and a best-in-class mandate and who were looking at global economies to see how they were addressing this issue.

In summary, what I found there was that regardless of what they felt about the science – I finished this paper in September of 1990, so that's when a great deal of the science debate about whether it was really going to happen or not was on. The conclusion all three companies came to was that, in fact, regardless of what anybody thought about the science, industry leaders, regardless of industry sector, throughout the globe were making progress on this issue. Why? Because they saw it as a global change management issue. What does change management mean? It means upcoming issues that you could or should deal with in the future that might impact your bottom line. Mr. Speaker, all of them decided that what they would do is take this situation seriously and that they would start to meet what they expected to be the probable protocols down the road and start to invest in technology and development and move forward on the issue.

So, Mr. Speaker, the only people acting like dinosaurs in this case are the government, not industry.

THE SPEAKER: Additional questions? The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

MR. MAGNUS: Not a question, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: We're still in the time frame for questions under Standing Order 29(2).

MR. GRIFFITHS: Mr. Speaker, I have my honours degree specializing in environmental ethics, and fortunately it doesn't take an honours degree in that to understand this issue. I'm wondering if I could ask the question: given that a few countries like Canada have to either reduce their emissions or buy credits from countries who have no emission targets and can increase pollution – sorry, it's not pollution since it's Kyoto – increase their CO₂ levels while also selling credits, how is that going to reduce the total emissions anywhere around the globe?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I thank the member for the question. First, before I address the question, I have to address one of the pieces of misinformation that was in his preamble, and that is that other countries don't have to meet the protocol. They don't in fact have to meet this phase of the protocol.

For instance, let's talk about China, which we hear quite a bit about in this Assembly. In fact, per capita right now China emits less than one unit per person. Alberta, on the other point, emits 78 units per person. When China – they're at about three-quarters of a unit per person right now – hits one unit per person, then the protocol kicks in for them as well.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

MR. MAGNUS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In view of the hour and in the interest of continuity of debate I'd move adjournment of the debate until 8 o'clock tonight.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that we adjourn until 8 this evening.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:19 p.m.]

Bill 32

Climate Change and Emissions Management Act

[Adjourned debate November 26: Mr. Magnus]

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

MR. MAGNUS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am grateful tonight for the opportunity to address Bill 32, the Kyoto question. First, allow me to place my personal opinion on the record simply and clearly. I believe the Kyoto protocol in Canada and around the world is an expensive, counterproductive waste of time, money, and political energy that could be better spent looking for solutions to human problems that are effective, realistic, and positive.

I know the heavy pendulum of scientific opinion is swinging slowly but surely against the Kyoto protocol. More and more scientists are publicly stating that countries like Canada do not produce enough CO₂ to impact the global climate and more and more concluding that cutting CO₂ will not measurably impact global climate change. More and more they're recognizing that the global climate change that is occurring now is likely little more than a natural, inevitable, historic fluctuation. Frankly, it is remarkable that it has taken so long for the scientific community to take sides on this issue and for the side of careful, sober review of the facts to emerge as a real voice in this issue, because, Mr. Speaker, even the United Nations has admitted for some time that the full implementation of the Kyoto accord will only reduce global warming at most by two-tenths of one degree by the end of this century and at the cost of retarding world economic growth.

If we slow global warming by two-tenths of one degree, Mr. Speaker, we may save a few lives around the world, but if we slow human development, if we slow the expansion of health care, if we slow the advancement of education, and if we slow the advancement of technology, then the human cost will be vastly higher than any theoretical cost from a marginal increase in global warming.

To briefly review what we know about global warming, while evidence suggests that the earth has warmed between .3 and .6 degrees Celsius since 1850, global satellite data, the most reliable of climate measurements, show little evidence of warming during the past 20 or so years. Even if the earth's temperature has increased slightly, the increase is well within the natural range of known temperature variations over the last 15,000 years. Indeed, the earth experienced greater warming between the 10th and the 15th centuries, a time when vineyards thrived in England, Vikings colonized Greenland and built settlements in Canada.

A Gallup poll found that only 17 percent of the members of the U.S. Meteorological Society and the American Geophysical Society think that the warming of the 20th century has been the result of greenhouse gas emissions, principally CO₂ from burning fossil fuels, and only 13 percent of scientists responding to a survey conducted by Greenpeace believe that catastrophic climate change will result from current patterns of energy use. While atmospheric carbon dioxide has increased by 28 percent over the past 150 years, human-generated carbon dioxide could have played only a small part in any warming since most of the warming occurred prior to 1940, before most cars could cause carbon dioxide emissions. The vast bulk of greenhouse gas is water vapour. Only a small percentage, 3 percent to 5 percent, is human-produced CO₂.

Robert Essenhigh, the E.G. Bailey professor of energy conservation in the Ohio State department of mechanical engineering, suggests that the world is simply at the peak of a natural warming point, which has resulted in more water vapour and hence more CO₂.

Indeed, Mr. Speaker, it seems that science is winning out over rhetoric. Despite that, the federal government is determined to push ahead with the ratification of the Kyoto accord, and I think at some point we have to ask ourselves: why are they so determined? This debate is less about science and global warming and more about securing the future of a Prime Minister who is about to retire. This is not a scientific debate. If it were, the federal government would be commissioning scientists instead of pollsters to help craft this legislation or, in fact, to determine its necessity. This is not an environmental debate. If it were, the federal government would be looking into the real causes of pollution like soot and other contaminants that we can see, feel, taste, and that contribute to smog and health problems. This is not about engaging Canadians in a genuine effort to make an international environmental difference. If it were, the federal government would be prolonging debate, consultation, cross-country panels, reports, and royal commissions. Instead, they're shutting the door on debate. The federal government is well aware that as the pendulum of scientific opinion swings further and further against Kyoto, the pendulum of public opinion will likewise shift. It is absolutely remarkable that there is a direct correlation among Canadians between their knowledge of the science of global warming and the Kyoto accord and their opposition to Kyoto.

When the federal government of the day, a Conservative government, I might add, made a commitment to pass a free trade deal with the United States, they embarked on a massive, long-term campaign to seek expert opinion, to consult and to educate Canadians, to take the discussion to every community in the country. They knew that the more Canadians knew about free trade, the more they would in fact support it.

The opposite is occurring today. The federal government knows that it must rush this deal through and they have to impose it on Canadians. They know that if there's any chance of keeping public opinion onside, they must hide the details of the accord, obscure the costs, and avoid at all cost the publication of a plan for enforcement of the terms of this accord. Despite the absence of scientific evidence, despite the absence of support from provinces, despite the potential detriment to an already lagging economy, the government is plowing ahead at breakneck speed. It's accusing its opponents of being anti-environment, attacking the motives of its opponents, like Alberta, rather than making a case for the effectiveness of Kyoto and laying out a plan for implementation.

Why is Ottawa hiding the facts, delaying the plan, downplaying the costs, and steamrolling over its opponents? Simple. This is the Liberal government that's brought us NEP, gun control, thrown our farmers in jail for giving away their grain, and not to mention, Y2K. Having utterly failed at creating a domestic legacy during a decade in office, the Prime Minister will do whatever it takes to carve out an international legacy so that he can strut on international stages and accept rounds of applause for being green.

In Canada there's a word that applies in both official languages, and it is simply: poseur. Having done little in his time as Prime Minister to earn his stripes as an environmentalist, with one quick vote in Ottawa he just might be able to pull the wool over the eyes of the international community. That's why the most interesting part of this Kyoto debate lately has not been about the science, the costs, the effect on industry, jobs, or our standard of living but on whether or not Paul Martin will take a position on the accord. The media understands that this isn't really a debate about the environment. It's a partisan ploy by a government and a Prime Minister that are old, tired, out of ideas, and out of gas, who need something that they can call an achievement.

It doesn't matter that the passage of Kyoto could come at the cost of hundreds of thousands of jobs across this country. It doesn't matter that Kyoto could result in a massive relocation of industry out of Canada to the U.S. and the developing world, and it doesn't matter that the Kyoto debate could fray even further the already fragile bonds of this federation that we call Canada. What matters is a perceived legacy for one man, and I have to say that this is a sad, cynical state of affairs, Mr. Speaker.

Let's imagine what could have been. Imagine that the federal government, instead of grabbing onto the flawed protocol called Kyoto, had come to Canadians, to the provinces, to industry, to unions, and to small business and said: let's work together to come up with a plan that grows our economy, helps spur development and higher standards of living internationally, cuts pollution, and makes the world a safer, healthier, and greener place. I'm willing to bet that there's not a single Canadian who would have been unwilling to consider that challenge.

In fact, the government of Alberta took that challenge upon itself and helped craft a made-in-Canada, made-in-Alberta solution to pollution, CO₂ emissions, and continued growth. We did because we believe there is a way to balance environmental protection with growth. This government believes that government can work together with industry, workers, and Canadians committed to the protection of the environment. This is not a zero-sum game. I think that if the federal government had simply come to Canadians and asked, "What will you do to cut pollution and still grow the economy?" there would have been 31 million takers to that challenge. I know that Albertans are up to that challenge because Albertans rise to challenges. We harness our collective entrepreneurial spirit to create solutions, to build, to progress, and to advance.

That's not the challenge that the federal government has put before us. Instead, they've put a hostile challenge to us. They have told us to get in line. They have told us that our opposition doesn't matter and that our plan won't be considered, that our jobs, our growth, and our future are less important than securing a place in international history for one retiring Prime Minister. Just as Albertans rise to positive challenges by building positive solutions, we are equally determined in our resistance to threats, to intimidation, and to ultimatums. Faced with this threat, this bullying challenge from the federal government, Albertans have to stand together and quietly, firmly, and resoundingly say no: no, Mr. Prime Minister, and no to Kyoto. Kyoto is not the solution. If the federal government insists on trying to impose this flawed deal, this killer of growth, this failure of environmental science, then Albertans will have to prepare themselves to go nose to nose with the federal government again. We've been there, we've done that, and we've bought the T-shirt.

After we win that wrestling match of common sense and provincial self-determination, then we'll get back to the drawing board and be leaders. We'll work with the other provinces, with industry, and with scientists and lead the environmental movement beyond ideology to a real made-in-Canada, made-in-Alberta solution. We'll make sure, Mr. Speaker, that our children benefit, we'll make sure that the world benefits, and when we do, the real legacy of success will belong to Albertans.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Yes. Mr. Speaker, I'm wondering if at this time the member would accept a question or two?

MR. MAGNUS: I believe that's now the course of events.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Actually, there is a five-minute period. So it isn't a matter of whether he will accept them; it's how he'll answer them. I think that's the question. So go ahead. If you wish to ask a question, then please do.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you. The hon. member was talking about bullying, that there was bullying going on, in his mind, from the federal government. Could the hon. member please explain how he would describe the firing of Dr. Swann if that wasn't a bullying tactic by this government?

MR. MAGNUS: Mr. Speaker, while the question from the hon. member of the opposition really has nothing whatsoever to do with this discussion, I'm kind of surprised to hear him do it, because he has got some degree of common sense in most of his questions. However, I'll put the same question to this hon. member that I put to the leader of the third party earlier today, and that is: if you put a hundred people in this room and had them all light a cigarette and you asked two of them to put it out, at the end of the day would it make any difference to your air quality? That's what we're being asked to look at. We have no concept whatsoever beyond. We're going to ratify this before Christmas from the federal government. How are we going to ratify? How are we actually going to implement what they want to do? That's my question back.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: I don't know that there's anything in the provisions of Standing Order 29(2) for the person who has just given a speech and received one or more questions to then ask a question back. It becomes, then, just rhetorical.

So do you have another question?

MR. MacDONALD: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I have another question for the hon. member, and it is this: in what year did the Progressive Conservative government in Ottawa first discuss having an accord similar to the Kyoto accord?

AN HON. MEMBER: This isn't Trivial Pursuit.

MR. MAGNUS: Well, as one of my colleagues has pointed out, this is not Trivial Pursuit, and frankly I don't know exactly the year that they came in with this, but I believe back in the early '90s. Did you say "Conservative government?" I'm sorry. I missed that part.

MR. MacDONALD: The Progressive Conservative government. That's right.

MR. MAGNUS: Nineteen-ninety.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Okay. Are there any further questions, or are you rising to speak?

MR. MacDONALD: I'm rising to speak, please, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: There being no further questions, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much. It's a pleasure to participate in the debate on Bill 32. Now, it certainly is an issue that is causing a lot of discussion not only in this province and not only in this country but around the world. It seems that the closer people are to sea level, the more concerned they seem to be about global warming. We look at the industrial nation of Japan, and they do not seem to have any problem with recognizing global warming and the fact that something has to be done to correct it.

Now, I for one am certainly not a scientist, but I accept the validity of the argument from many, many scientists that carbon dioxide emissions and the increase in emissions are certainly having an effect on the earth. It's increasing the temperature, and we have to do something about it. That's why I believe that Kyoto is an important first step towards a clean energy future.

Climate change is perhaps the most serious risk to our environment, and we all have a responsibility to take action today. At the risk of sounding Edwardian, with wealth comes duty and responsibility. This province has created a great deal of wealth as a result of the natural resources that lie under it. We are participants in the global economy, and we have to recognize that we are members of the global village. With our wealth comes duty and responsibility, and we have to show leadership by starting to lead the way in reducing greenhouse gas emissions on this planet.

On the way down here I was listening to a debate, ironically enough, on CBC Radio. Now, CBC Radio had a very balanced program. They heard both sides of the argument. One person stated that we have to start now, and the other person stated, "Oh, no, it's not a problem. We can put this off." But when we consider the search for better air quality and lower emissions, this search should be fueled by our desire to pass on a better, cleaner world for the next generation. I agree with and I endorse government policy which recognizes that enormous public debt should not be passed on to the next generation. However, we cannot pass on to the next generation an environmental debt, and that's exactly what we're doing whenever we've got our heads in the sand about Kyoto. A clean energy future is in everyone's long-term interests.

How can we talk about having drought relief for farmers? How can we talk about having an increase in budgets because of extreme fire seasons and not think to ourselves that perhaps this is being determined by global warming when we can spend millions and millions of dollars on those programs and at the same time say, "Oh, we can't ratify Kyoto because it's going to hurt us economically"? Our climate, our province is changing, and we can't be anti-Canadian and pro-pollution, and that's what I'm afraid is happening here.

We can meet our Kyoto targets. Alberta can meet its Kyoto targets while still supporting sustainable economic growth. We need programs, we need policies, we need regulations aimed at reducing overall energy use, and we need to reduce energy use at work and at home. Boosting energy efficiency not only reduces greenhouse gas emissions but lowers the cost of energy, and it makes our industry and it makes our province and it makes the country more competitive internationally.

Now, there are many good things happening in this province, but for the hon. members across the way they want to know how we are going to do this. Well, the Premier whenever he was Environment minister had lots of good ideas on this.

DR. TAFT: Who did?

MR. MacDONALD: The Premier whenever he was Environment minister.

Now, the Premier has a lot to say about global warming and that the science is sound.

AN HON. MEMBER: Which Premier are we talking about?

MR. MacDONALD: The Premier of Alberta.

MR. BONNER: The present Premier?

MR. MacDONALD: The present Premier of Alberta talked about greenhouse gases and how they were to be reduced.

Now, at the same time the Premier – it's almost like it was a past life, as if he was to say: that was then, and this is now. But when you look at the initiatives that the Environment minister in this province between 1989 and 1992 initiated, the Premier was on the leading edge of the debate on changing environmental plans so that greenhouse gases could be reduced and we could stop this period of global warming. Here's what the Premier had to say.

The way we do that is to go throughout the province, get as much solid evidence as we possibly can, develop a program, develop a position, and put it in place what is right for Alberta and what is right for Canada.

Now, that's the hon. Premier.

The hon. Premier goes on to say in June of 1991 again, Mr. Speaker:

This province needs to do [more] to make a reasonable contribution to the reduction of those gases that contribute to not only the greenhouse effect, global warming, but depletion of ozone. In addition to that, there are national protocols that we have entered into relative to a decrease in automobile emissions by 50 percent by the year 1995.

Fifty percent by the year 1995.

We have entered into protocols relative to the decrease in packaging and waste by 50 percent by the year 2000.

So the Premier was very anxious to reduce greenhouse gas emissions and see that Alberta was a leader internationally in regard to this. I don't know what has happened since. I don't know how the Premier has forgotten those words and those policies and those initiatives. Certainly now whenever this government makes the argument that they have a made-in-Canada or a made-in-Alberta solution, how can you rely on their word whenever you look at what was said between 1989 and 1992? How can you believe them now after these statements and "we're going to do a lot of good work"? I have to conclude that nothing has been done. Nothing has been followed through, Mr. Speaker, unfortunately. Absolutely nothing. That saddens me, and it distresses me.

Now, the Premier goes on to say again from Hansard: it's called a clean air strategy for the province of Alberta, and we'll be looking at carbon dioxide; we'll be looking at sulphur dioxide; we'll be looking at volatile organic compounds. It's unfortunate that we didn't start then finding a way to address this.

The government, in my view, has been negligent, but industry has not. Industry has quietly been working. Between 1988 and the end of 2000 Syncrude Canada cut CO₂ emissions per barrel of oil produced by 27 percent. Suncor did likewise. Now, Husky Energy in Lloydminster at a coal generation project at its site was successful in reducing greenhouse gas emissions by 168,000 tonnes per year. Petro-Canada, according to their latest annual report, have through continuing improvements in energy efficiency reduced greenhouse gas emissions. Since 1990 Petro-Canada has eliminated over 1.3 million tonnes of annual ongoing greenhouse gas emissions. In 2000 total gas emission levels were over 8 percent below 1990 levels despite a 34 percent growth in overall production. It can be done. It is being done. When you look at Altasteel here in Edmonton, since 1991 it has recorded an overall improvement in specific energy consumption of 8 percent. We look at the development of CASA, the clean air strategic alliance, and what they have done.

Now, light industry is certainly where we could stand to improve. Foothills Creamery retrofitted its Edmonton warehouse in 1998. The company replaced its existing fixtures with lamps and reflectors that use PCB-free single electronic ballasts. Drawing only 58 watts, the new fixtures save 67 percent on the electricity use by each light. The company's $20,000 investment in the retrofit has led to better lighting, reduced labour costs, and realized significant savings in electricity usage.

It is interesting to note that consumers and businesses often choose not to purchase highly cost-effective energy technology. The new electronic ballast installed by Foothills Creamery was clearly superior to the system it replaced. Electronic ballasts for lighting have been commercially available since 1976. They are a well-tested technology. However, it is interesting to note, Mr. Speaker, that by 1987 five American states, including New York and California, had prohibited the sale of standard ballasts, and I'm wondering if it's anything that this province has considered. We just resort to finger pointing and fear mongering instead of developing ways to be more energy efficient.

Now, there are many experts who have had the temerity to question the numbers used in this government's latest multimillion dollar propaganda campaign, and I would imagine there will be another one on health care, but we'll probably have to wait till next winter for that. Our hon. Premier was forced to admit that the numbers may have been less than factual and based on worst case scenarios. I think that rather than fighting Kyoto, like this province is doing, we must start investing now in technology and energy efficiency. The Alberta companies I mentioned earlier are doing something. Meanwhile, the provincial government has had no clear plan, with the exception of what was outlined by the Minister of Environment between the years 1989 and 1992.

Our future and that of our children and grandchildren includes a major global reduction in greenhouse gas emissions, so we must be prepared to deal with the new reality. With political will, government support, and private-sector innovation, Alberta could be a world leader in developing alternative energy technologies, like wind, solar, and biomass power generation. I see the time when the hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill is on the way to Banff, perhaps to ski, and the city that he proudly represents will be a place where the electricity is coming from the Morley flats, from farm after farm after farm of wind turbines.

The Germans: 12 percent of their power comes from wind turbines. But this is the new Alberta. This is what's going to happen after the carbon age. There will be routine sight-seeing adventures out the left-hand side of your car as you're going to Banff, and that's what you're going to see: row after row after row of wind turbines. Hopefully, they're not going to be imported from Denmark, but they're going to be imported from New Norway in Alberta. It will be a locally developed industry that will be part of the value-added manufacturing in this province.

I'm sorry that we only have 15 minutes.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Hon. member, you weren't sitting down in light of some of these comments that were flowing back and forth; were you?

MR. MacDONALD: No, Mr. Speaker. I thought I heard the bell ring.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Okay. That would be it; would it? Good.

So now for questions I have Grande Prairie-Smoky and then Edmonton-Rutherford.

MR. McCLELLAND: Questions and comments?

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Yes.

MR. McCLELLAND: The Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, if I'm correct, mentioned that the Husky upgrader in Lloydminster had reduced emissions by 100,000 tonnes or something of that nature, however many it was. Is the member aware of the fact that the province of Alberta at one time had a very substantial investment in that, probably at the time that the work was done to lower the emissions?

MR. MacDONALD: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is incorrect in that this was an industrial initiative that was a partnership with TransAlta as a cogeneration partner on that site. Since the development by the federal government and the provincial government of the Husky biprovincial upgrader, there has been a cogeneration plant situated there, and that is the reason, with improved engineering technologies, that greenhouse gas emissions have been substantially reduced. That amount, those 168,000 tonnes per year, is enough to meet that facility's annual reduction according to the Kyoto protocol.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill, followed by Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert and then Wainwright.

MR. MAGNUS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar asked me a question that, frankly, didn't have anything to do with the issue before us today, so I thought I'd repay the favour. The question for him is this: what year did the Conservative government of Canada bring in free trade? It makes just about as much sense as yours.

MR. MacDONALD: The Progressive Conservative government certainly introduced free trade, but in 1990 they also were very instrumental in bringing forward the first environmental package in this country. The federal Progressive Conservatives were forward thinkers. They were certainly invited and participated actively, as I understand it, in the Rio convention. Other hon. members of the government, I understand, go to Rio but not for environmental conferences. The Progressive Conservative government went there. They saw the Prime Minister himself of the time, Mr. Mulroney, I believe. He went to Rio and said: yes, there is a need to reduce greenhouse gas emissions. Your federal Progressive Conservative cousins are much more proactive on this issue than you are, hon. member.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The next one is the hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

MR. HORNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was intrigued by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar's statements with regard to the Husky upgrader and the emissions that they achieved. I'm wondering if he attributes that to Kyoto. Did they have some inside knowledge many years ago that the federal government was going to ratify this thing at some certain point, or would you say that that was more of a market-driven type of an arrangement that the market came up with on their own?

MR. MacDONALD: In reply to the hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert, Mr. Speaker, I would have to say that every forward-thinking corporation that is doing business in this province has known for the last decade that the Kyoto protocol and the idea of reducing greenhouse gas emissions is a reality, and they're dealing with it as an economic reality. There is not a corporation that is investing in the tar sands that doesn't go before the EUB with the reality that a substantial reduction in greenhouse gas emissions is part of their business plan.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Not to echo the comments, but one of the things when you turn around and address other people is that you stop your microphone, so it becomes increasingly hard to hear.

The hon. Member for Wainwright.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar indicated that the drought on the prairies this year and the forest fires on the prairies this year were caused by global warming and climate change from CO₂ emissions. I'm wondering if the hon. member could answer where the drought from the 1930s, which was before most of the man-made emissions were introduced into the atmosphere, and the drought that was declared on the prairies 150 years ago, when it was first being discovered, came from and where the CO₂ emissions from that came from.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Yes. Mr. Speaker, in regard to that question from the hon. Member for Wainwright . . .

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: One of the unfortunate limitations is that you can't extend the five minutes.

The Minister of Innovation and Science is next on the list for speaking.

MR. DOERKSEN: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. You have certainly, as is customary at second reading of a bill, permitted a wide-ranging debate. As a matter of fact, we are in second reading on Bill 32, and it's to that bill that I actually want to direct my comments this evening and to let the Assembly know some of the reasons why I support what is in this bill and why it is important to Albertans to support the bill.

Clearly, in the preamble what we are setting out is that the government of Alberta by its constitutional authority has the ownership of natural resources and the rights to manage the exploration, development, production of those resources for its own benefit. Further, we go on to assert the fact that we are also asserting our ownership position in the sinks. These are important considerations.

You'll also notice in the preamble to Bill 32 a number of statements which address the innovation and research agenda that we think is important with respect to Alberta's approach to climate change and one that we would hope could lead to a made-in-Canada solution, which unfortunately doesn't seem to be transpiring at the moment. The preamble sets out quite clearly that Alberta is already "recognized around the world for leading-edge innovation in environmentally sustainable technologies." It notes that we're committed to workable solutions to reduce emissions of carbon dioxide and specified gases and to work together with industries and research providers in developing new and innovative approaches to successfully address the climate change challenge. We also note, again in the preamble, that it recognizes that "carbon dioxide and methane are natural resources" and "are inextricably linked with the management of other renewable and non-renewable natural resources, including sinks."

Mr. Speaker, what I want to talk a little bit about tonight is what we are doing already and some of the goals that we have with respect to innovation and technology in this province. These objectives have been set through the good work of the Alberta Energy Research Institute, which is capably co-chaired by the Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake. We very much appreciate the work that they have done on behalf of all Albertans in setting forth the objectives that we want to reach with respect to innovation and research.

Mr. Speaker, I want to talk about one of their five key strategies right off and then move to the other ones. One of their strategies is – and we've heard a lot of discussion in the Assembly about this already tonight – alternative energy development, and in fact there is a desire to develop renewable energy related to hydrogen, fuel cells, bioenergy, solar and wind power. Nobody will dispute the fact that those are important elements, but it is equally important and, I would say, more important to recognize that there are many other things that we can currently do with fossil fuels. Here's where I'm going to give the federal government a little bit of credit because actually in their release they do talk about cleaner fossil fuels. That actually relates to some of the initiatives that we have been told by the Alberta Energy Research Institute to pursue. In fact, one of our goals is the goal of clean coal, and I will argue that clean coal technology, clean power, is green power. So it's not all just about the development of alternative replies. We have a vast resource in this province in our coal beds that we need to frankly find the technology to make use of. It's an important element of our research strategy.

Mr. Speaker, the government of Canada also in their Cleaner Fossil Fuels section talks about CO₂ capture and storage, and that fits right in with what the Alberta Energy Research Institute plan says as well. It's one of the goals in terms of carbon dioxide management, and there are a number of initiatives already under way with respect to CO₂ management. The Weyburn project has been mentioned in this House previously, and again it's referred to in the government of Canada submission. So they have recognized the fact that promoting technology, enhancing technology in the fossil fuel area is important.

Mr. Speaker, so far I've covered the alternative energy development in the plan. I've talked a little bit about the carbon dioxide management that is under the AERI plan, clean coal technology, using technology to develop our resources there. There are two other ones that we have been discussing. One has to do with increasing oil recovery. The use of carbon dioxide, or CO₂, into the geological structure where you find the oil is actually useful in enhancing and recovering a greater percentage of that resource, so we are doing research in that area.

The fifth element that we've talked about is also sustaining the oil sands development. Mr. Speaker, we announced some time ago a new recovery method known as vapex. Now, I'm not going to suggest that I understand how this technology works, but I understand that it will reduce or has the potential to reduce the CO₂ emissions by up to 85 percent in the heavy-oil extraction. AERI's contribution is 7 and a half million dollars, partnered with industry and other partners for a total project of $30 million.

Mr. Speaker, we are already investing money, have invested money over a large number of years to improve our technology. I think that what's important to me as we debate this subject is that we would not want, through actions of the federal government, to penalize a jurisdiction that has the technology, that has the expertise, that has the ability to discover, innovate, and deliver global solutions, because I frankly think that we have the expertise in this province.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, if you just go through some of the expertise areas that we have in the province, at the University of Calgary, for instance, they have expertise in biofuels, geomatics, informatics. They have expertise in the regulatory and economic policy in geophysics. At the University of Alberta, located in Edmonton here, they have expertise in clean coal, oil sands extraction and processing, carbon dioxide management, hydrogen production. At the University of Lethbridge they have expertise in water research, which also relates to this whole area. The Alberta Research Council . . .

AN HON. MEMBER: Hello?

MR. DOERKSEN: I'm coming. The fortunate part is that in Hansard you don't notice the pauses in the comments.

The Alberta Research Council, as I was saying, Mr. Speaker, has expertise development in clean energy, in greenhouse gases, in oil sands, in enhanced oil recovery.

Mr. Speaker, the point I'm trying to make tonight is the fact that we have the capability, we have the talent spread throughout not only our universities, our research institutes, industry itself. I believe that we can provide global solutions, and we will pursue that.

I also want to refer to one thing that I am concerned about, quite concerned about, with the federal government approach. They do talk in their recent document about cost-sharing strategic investments. Let me tell you what I think that lingo means from the federal government. When we established the National Institute for Nanotechnology here at the University of Alberta, it was the first national research institute that Alberta had. Every other province had had a national research centre or institute, and the federal government funded those institutes, those centres 100 percent, but when it came to Alberta to establish a national research centre, suddenly they said: oh, in your case, Alberta, we want you to match our funds. So, Mr. Speaker, this is where I have the concern with this cost-shared strategic investment. I can just imagine the federal government using taxpayer money that comes from Alberta, to give it back to Alberta and then saying: match what you've already sent us. It's like asking us to match our own dollars, so I do have concerns about that.

Mr. Speaker, we are going to and will continue to improve our technology. We'll work on the innovation front. We have a commitment to that. It is a big part of our plan. Our commitment to it is outlined in Bill 32. You can even see in the sectoral agreements under section 4 that we talk about looking at the implementation of technological changes, co-operation on technology development, demonstration, and deployment, on and on in the bill. You'll see even in section 9, where we talk about the climate change and emissions management fund, that we're going to target demonstration projects that use new technologies "in the discovery, recovery, processing, transportation" of Alberta's energy resources; in the "demonstration and use of new technologies that emphasize reductions in specified gas emissions"; in the "demonstration and use of specified gas capture, use and storage technology"; in the "development of opportunities for removal of specified gases from the atmosphere through sequestration by sinks."

Mr. Speaker, quite clearly, from Bill 32 the government of Alberta is committed to innovation, is committed to technological change, and frankly with the expertise in this province we will lead the country and, dare I say, we will lead the world in coming up with solutions.

With those comments, Mr. Speaker, I want to say that I am in support of the principle of Bill 32, what we are debating now, so that we can move forward and assert Alberta's critical position in the debate that is now going on in this country.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Questions and answers. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have a couple of questions for the hon. minister of science and technology, the hon. Member for Red Deer-South. The first is: the hon. minister mentioned Weyburn in his remarks in regard to carbon sequestration, and I'm wondering if the hon. member could please enlighten this member and other members in the House regarding the cost of the capture and compression of that CO₂ gas from the Dakotas. I don't know whether it's from North or South Dakota. Could the minister please tell us how much that costs per tonne?

MR. DOERKSEN: Mr. Speaker, what carbon management really talks about is capturing CO₂ emitted from certain activity, such as the coal- and gas-fired plants, and using this CO₂ and ultimately storing it in the ground. That's what the Weyburn project is all about. The Weyburn project, as I understand it currently, is $25 million of research over four years to evaluate and monitor the long-term reliability of CO₂ in geological formations. I also understand that as the CO₂ enters those formations, it, in fact, through some scientific procedure that I can't describe, actually allows the flow of oil outside to be able to flow and to recover a greater percentage than we're normally able to recover. So it actually has two benefits. One is that it stores the CO₂ in the formations, and secondly, it helps us enhance the recovery of the oil in the ground. So it looks like a double win to me.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Yes. Again to the hon. minister of science and technology. That's in Weyburn, Saskatchewan. Perhaps we'll move to Alberta here. The hon. minister mentioned the Canadian Energy Research Institute in his remarks. Could the hon. minister please tell me how much is estimated as the cost of CO₂ sequestration in this province? How much would that cost?

MR. DOERKSEN: Mr. Speaker, I don't know if I have the specific numbers for that particular question, but let me point out to the member some other things that we are doing with respect to what's called the SAGD technology. It's the steam-assisted gravity drainage technology developed between 1986 and 1998 between the government of Alberta and industry partners, and it allows for a more economic and environmentally friendly method for recovering bitumen from oil sands deposits not practical for surface mining. So there's another process that research has led us to. I've already mentioned the vapex method. Through AERI, the Alberta Energy Research Institute, and the Alberta Research Council, some of our research-granting agencies, we're currently investing upwards of $24 million per year, as we speak, into energy and energy-related research projects. Clearly our commitment is there.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: how much research has been conducted in this province on capturing and compressing blue-gas emissions from coal-fired generating stations and piping it to, as you say, empty oil or gas fields, and what is the cost of the capturing and compressing of that CO₂ gas per tonne? What sort of research have you done on this so far?

MR. DOERKSEN: Well, clearly, Mr. Speaker, I don't have access to all the specific data that the hon. member is requesting tonight, and I invite him to send me a memo and ask those specific questions, and I'll find out the information for him that we can deliver to him. I know that the hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake, who's with the Alberta Energy Research Institute, is vitally interested in this topic too, and although he is not permitted to answer the question, I know that he probably has more answers than I do.

Mr. Speaker, the point that I've been trying to make all evening is the importance of research and innovation, and I think that objective is shared by the members of the opposition.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Again I share with you the frustration of this deadline of five minutes on the mark.

The next speaker is the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my privilege to rise to speak to this bill tonight. This is an issue that's going to be with us as legislators and as human beings for the rest of our lives, I have no doubt.

We've covered a lot of territory. It's clear to me that we're not going to connect across the floor very well tonight. We've taken different perspectives on this issue based, I presume, on different values, but I for one want to get my position and my values on the record, and as time passes, I'm confident that that position will be justified.

I suppose that coming to a decision on this kind of a bill is a personal process for all of us. I know it has been for me, and it's been one that's grown over many years. I'm a lifelong Albertan, and I remember, for example, visiting the glaciers, visiting Athabasca Glacier at Saskatchewan River Crossing or visiting the glacier at Mount Edith Cavell and hiking into these locations and finding the markers on a trail showing where the glacier was in 1950, in 1960, in 1970, in 1980, and so on, and being startled at how dramatically the glaciers in Alberta have shrunk over the last 50 years. As an aside, I recently heard an account of the snowcap on Mount Kilimanjaro and how that snowcap has been there for tens of thousands of years. Within 15 years it will be gone. Things are changing.

I also reflect on my own experience with my family, my children and my father-in-law going fishing 10 years ago and pulling jackfish out of a lake one after the other and now listening to debates in this Assembly, realizing that to a very substantial extent the fish stocks in lakes across this province have collapsed. Again something is changing in this province.

This May I drove east and then south to Dinosaur park. Late May should be the greenest and lushest time of the year in this province. Instead, the dugouts were dry to the bottom; the fields were barren and dusty. On the drive back I stopped at a relative's farm, and he was hoping to begin seeding. We went for a drive around the farm, and I noticed the trails of white on the trails through the fields. He told me about how the alkali is destroying the soil on this prime central Alberta farm. He talked about how the land is changing and how the climate is changing, and he wasn't sure what was causing it, but clearly something was different.

I talked to hunters this fall, one who went to a large body of water, a lake south of Stettler, only to discover that the lake didn't exist anymore and to another who headed northeast in September, driving with his wife. His wife looked ahead and said: is that a snowstorm we're seeing? In fact, as they got closer, they realized it was alkali blowing in the wind.

We've seen in the news for months and months and months, indeed in some parts of this province now for four or five years, the cost of drought, the burden of drought. Just the other day we voted here in this Assembly on a supplemental estimates bill to spend an additional $650 million on drought relief, on forest fire fighting, and on flood control in southern Alberta, all of which are extreme weather events, all of which fit exactly – exactly – with the scenarios that the climate scientists are warning us about and exactly the kinds of warnings that are consistent with climate change.

Those kinds of personal messages, personal experiences speak strongly to me, and I think they should speak strongly to all of us. Something very fundamental is changing in our province and, indeed, in our world.

Earlier today the Premier referred to Bob Mills, the MP from Red Deer, who was at that point in his seventh hour of a filibuster in Ottawa, denouncing, as I understood it, or opposing the Kyoto accord. Earlier in the fall I actually obtained correspondence from Bob Mills and sat down with the climate scientists and went through the correspondence for it addressed his concerns with Kyoto. It was very clear to me after talking to the scientists that, in fact, this particular MP has the issue quite wrong. In fact, the science on this issue, despite some of the comments we're hearing tonight, is very clear, and it has been growing since the 1960s. The science on this issue tells us that in the last 50 years the climate is warming dramatically, and in the last 50 years the primary contributor to carbon dioxide and other greenhouse gases in the atmosphere is human activity.

I'd like to draw the attention of every member of this House to a paper prepared by the Department of Energy in 1990, a full 12 years ago. Even then this government, this government here, was accepting the need for action to reduce greenhouse gases. I'll just quote a couple of lines from this study. "There is growing concern that the increasing atmospheric concentration of greenhouse gases may be leading to global warming." This government was saying that 12 years ago. It went on to say, "Carbon dioxide is estimated to contribute about 49 per cent of the greenhouse effect." This very government was saying that 12 years ago. The science has become substantially clearer since then, and the science is, I believe, irrefutable. Human activity, fossil fuel burning, is contributing substantially to climate change.

We can also deal with the economics, and that seems to be the primary concern – sometimes it feels like the sole concern – of this government. The economics of adapting to climate change is an issue that this government has tried to raise great alarm over. In actual fact, if we go to the government's own document again – and I would encourage every MLA here to study this document, detailed analysis that took five person-years of work and was based on thousands of energy audits. What does it conclude in terms of the economics of adapting to climate change? Well, it does say that it will be costly. It makes no bones about it. The capital cost of adapting to climate change would be in 1990 the equivalent of a total of $6.7 billion.

But what would be the benefits? Well, the result: first-year savings of $2.2 billion and a further $2.2 billion every year thereafter. The average payback of the investment would be 3.1 years, a 30 percent return on investment, an amazing economic achievement. I see the Minister of Revenue is here. I'm sure he wishes the heritage fund had that sort of return on investment.

We should also note, Mr. Speaker, that a number of the world's largest energy companies have accepted the science and the economics of the Kyoto accord, and I can name two or three. Suncor, BP, and Shell, for example, have all accepted the science of Kyoto and have all benefited as a result.

Too little time in this Assembly, I feel, is spent on addressing the costs, the costs of global warming, the costs of climate change, not the costs of addressing the issues but the costs of doing too little or nothing. What are the costs to forestry? Our caucus met a few days ago with the Alberta Forest Products Association, and they were driving home their profound concerns over drought and fire in the forestry industry in this province.

What about the agriculture industry? How many farmers are on the brink of collapse because of drought? When independent climate scientists warn me, backed up with very extensive analysis, that there is a genuine threat that Alberta will be simply the northern edge of a great central desert by the middle of this century, I pay attention and I worry about the future of our farmers.

What about the health costs of climate change? They are profound. We have seen, for example, as I raised in this Assembly the other day, the spread of diseases, diseases that were never known in Canada before but diseases that are beginning to be carried here because of the warmer climate, diseases like the West Nile virus, potentially even malaria. Mr. Speaker, I think those are important issues that we need to be dwelling on more in this government and in this Assembly.

As to dealing with a handful of specific issues, we are told time and time again: "Gosh, China and India aren't doing anything. Why should we?" Well, if we follow the whole process addressing the issue of climate change, we can go back 40 years. The first concerns were raised over the possibilities of global warming in the 1960s. By 1988 there was a major international conference in Toronto called the Changing Atmosphere Conference. In the early '90s there was the largest international conference in history at Rio, which led directly to the '97 Kyoto accord. The next round in this process will in fact bring many developing countries into the global change protocol, countries like China and India. We should not kid ourselves by believing or imagining that Kyoto is the end of the line. It isn't. The next step will bring in those countries that today are left out.

Now, as for the bill itself, I'll address a handful of issues here. Under the preamble the bill says that "the Government of Alberta has a deep and well established commitment to protect Alberta's environment." I won't debate that, but I will ask the question: how does this particular bill protect Alberta's environment when it lets emissions rise without limits? The bill also says that "the Government of Alberta owns natural resources in Alberta" and that "carbon dioxide and methane are natural resources." Well, if we go back to the throne speech of 1992 and quote the Premier, he said among other things: "My government recognizes that air, soil, and water do not respect provincial or national boundaries." That is going to be a profound legal problem for this government. I don't think this bill has a snowball's chance on the top of Mount Kilimanjaro of surviving a court challenge. Of course, we could go on and on in that account.

As for the issue, "Well, Canada only produces 2 or 3 percent of the globe's carbon dioxide, so why should we bother?" - I'm startled with the irresponsibility of that attitude. How many of us here feel that's the way it should be with litterers? If I go down the street and, recognizing that I'm only one of 800,000 people in Edmonton, I litter and I don't care because it's only 1/800,000th of the problem, what sort of approach to a society is that? That is no way to build a society. That is no way for each of us as individuals to carry our burdens. We can't simply divide this problem into 50 little pieces of 2 percent and imagine it will go away. It will not. Our farmers, our foresters, people throughout this province will know that we have failed them.

Mr. Speaker, I've come to believe that climate change is the issue of our time, and as I said at the beginning, there is no avoiding it. It will be with all of us until long after we are dead. But I did like the comments of the Minister of Innovation and Science a few minutes ago, who said that we have the talent in Alberta to respond, that we have the talent to rise to this challenge. It seems to me that we must be confident in our ability to innovate and our ability to rise to the challenge. I would say to all of us here today: we must embrace change, we must accept our responsibility as stewards of our world, and we should get on with the business of adapting to climate change.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Questions and answers. The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

MR. HORNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I listened with interest to the member's statements and his very good speech on his views as to what he sees is happening in Alberta and across the country and, really, around the world, and I felt myself thinking: I am a Member of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta; I'm here to balance the environment and the interests of Alberta. When I look at Kyoto and I look at Bill 32, I say: Bill 32 is going to accomplish that; Kyoto is going to kill it. I'm wondering if the member is standing in favour of what his federal Liberal cousins are doing over what I see as a responsibility to protect Alberta's interests and do it right.

DR. TAFT: Mr. Speaker, I've made it clear here over and over that I feel that the time for questions and answers is in committee, not in second reading, so I don't respond to questions.

Thank you.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Mr. Speaker, this member has afforded me the opportunity, since he brought up the same topics as the other member did, to ask the same question. The member also indicated that our drought this year across the prairies, our forest fires across the prairies, the spread of disease throughout the world, I think he was claiming, were all caused by global warming, climate change, et cetera, from CO₂. I'm wondering if the Member for Edmonton-Riverview would comment about the drought in the '30s, which occurred before most of the CO₂ emissions were emitted by humankind, about the drought that was written about on the prairies 150 years ago, about diseases like the black plague, which killed one-third of Europe. Where did the CO₂ emissions come from that caused all of those events?

DR. TAFT: Mr. Speaker, I've made it clear that I will respond to that question when it's in committee. Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

MR. McCLELLAND: On debate?

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Question and answer. If there are no other questions or comments, then the debate. Yes, you are next.

MR. McCLELLAND: On debate? No one else is standing.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: If there are no further ones, yes, on the debate.

MR. McCLELLAND: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's important to speak to this debate because it is so important to Albertans and to Canadians but particularly to Albertans and particularly to Albertans who lived through the national energy program and don't want to see a repeat of it.

We're debating the bill of the Alberta government, but underlying that is the rationale of why we're here in the first place discussing this. In my opinion, we need to ask: will the Kyoto accord legislation achieve its stated objective? The stated objective is to save the planet by reducing carbon dioxide emissions, thereby slowing or stopping global warming. My contention, Mr. Speaker, is that the stated objective of the Kyoto accord is not really its real purpose, because it's a very inefficient manner of achieving its stated purpose.

I'd like to lay out what I think is the foundation for the Kyoto accord. If it had been presented by the federal government, in my opinion, honestly and straightforwardly, I don't think that Canadians, particularly Albertans, would have objected as much, and I think it would have been possible to achieve a made-in-Canada approach. Of course, in the federal government's document Climate Change Plan for Canada on page 9, Key Principles: "It must be a made-in-Canada approach that is based on collaboration, partnerships and respect for jurisdictions." I don't think that there was much chance of that.

If I may, I'm going to quote from Maurice Strong and his statement at a hearing of the United States Senate Committee on the Environment and Public Works and the Committee on Foreign Relations on July 24, 2002. Now, Maurice Strong, as members know, was the chairman of the Earth Summit. He's a Canadian. He's world-renowned for his interest in environmental concerns and in Third World poverty. To quote from this paper:

Thanks largely to the leadership of the United States the world community has made impressive progress in its understanding of environment issues and their inextricable relationship with the economic development processes to which they give since the first global conference on the human environment convened by the United Nations in Stockholm in 1972 put the environmental issue on the international agenda.

He goes on to say, and I'm excerpting from this.

At the United Nations Conference on the Human Environment held in Stockholm in 1972, the first global intergovernmental environmental conference, we lost our innocence. We recognized that much of what we had been doing in pursuit of our economic goals had, however inadvertently, been producing environmental damage and social dichotomies . . .

The Declaration and Plan of Action agreed following intense negotiations at Stockholm recognized in a number of important respects the need to create a positive synthesis between the environment and economic development.

He goes on to say:

Despite progress on many fronts, the environmental health of the earth which was first diagnosed at Stockholm has deteriorated overall since then while the forces driving it persist – increased population, primarily concentrated in developing countries, and even greater growth of the world economy. The benefits have been largely concentrated in industrialized countries, even as newly developing countries, notably China, are now accounting for an increasingly large share of the global economy . . .

One of the most disappointing trends since the Earth Summit in 1992 has been the lack of response by OECD countries to the needs of developing countries for the additional financial resources which all governments at Rio agreed were required to enable them to make their transition to a sustainable development pathway and to implement international agreements.

So this is Maurice Strong testifying to the U.S. Senate, trying to get them to change their mind and go to the Johannesburg conference last year, in which our Prime Minister put us on this course. He did so because the United States Senate by a vote of 95 to 0 had declined to ratify the Kyoto accord for two reasons: one, because it had no requirement of developing countries for any commitment; two, because to ratify an accord such as that without any idea of the cost of implementation was considered to be folly, even though up until that time the United States was the driving force behind the whole notion of the Rio Summit. Without the Rio Summit, without the United States' active participation, the strongest, largest economy in the world, it wasn't going to happen.

So, then, why did the United States back off? Well, I think that there is a clue to be found in information from a paper entitled Global Taxes for Global Priorities by James A. Paul and Katarina Wahlberg. James Paul is a very accomplished environmentalist and humanitarian who has an extensive background in humanitarian and Third World works. This paper was published by the Global Policy Forum, WEED, and the Heinrich Boll Foundation. Now, the Heinrich Boll Foundation, interestingly, which is associated with the Green Party of Germany is "a legally autonomous and intellectually open political foundation." They are "a federally organized national foundation with 16 state foundations in all parts of Germany." So the Heinrich Boll Foundation, which is the cornerstone of the Global Policy Forum, is associated with the German Green Party. The German Green Party, as members know, has tremendous influence in Germany, and Germany has tremendous influence on the European Union.

Let me read some selections from this paper entitled Global Taxes for Global Priorities, presented in New York, May 5, by the Global Policy Forum and the Heinrich Boll Foundation.

Many crises threaten the globalizing world, including international financial instability, growing worldwide poverty, global warming, and epidemic diseases that know no boundaries. Solutions require intense international cooperation and stronger global institutions. Progress will especially demand large new financial resources tens of billions of dollars to finance global public health, take steps towards environmental sustainability, and build programs to insure education and livelihoods for all.

Unprecedented wealth and productive capacity are available today, more than ever before in human history. Since 1950, gross world product has multiplied seven times and product per capita nearly three times, both in real terms. Yet the global economy organizes a vastly unequal division of the world's resources, promoting private consumption and accumulation over public well-being. Development aid funds have declined, urgent global projects have stalled for lack of money and worthy international organizations like the UN have fallen prey to budget caps and assessment shortfalls.

Bold and innovative steps are urgently needed to tap the world's wealth. Global taxes offer the most promising approach. International projects and organizations cannot depend solely on contributions from nation states, much less rely on private charity or business "partnerships." They must develop independent revenue sources to fund public purposes at the global level.

This is why I say: I don't think that the federal government has come clean and been honest with us. Had they come clean and been honest with us, we wouldn't be going down the Kyoto accord road, but we may be making decisions to help the world and the world's poor.

Taxes amounting to just 1% of world GDP would raise over $400 billion per year. Such a sum would meet many urgent needs while placing a very modest burden on the world's richest consumers.

Advocates have offered dozens of proposals for global taxes, but two have gained special attention: a tax on the carbon content of commercial fuels (often called a Carbon Tax) . . .

And make no mistake; this is a carbon tax.

. . . as a means to stop global warming, and a currency transaction tax (often referred to as a Tobin Tax), to reduce speculation and global economic instability.

Now, keep in mind that I'm reading from this paper presented at the Global Taxes for Global Priorities forum held May 5, 2001.

Some day, an international political authority will levy global taxes, but at present a robust authority of this kind, with sufficient accountability and enforcement powers, does not exist. So initially, national governments must levy such taxes as part of an international tax agreement. Part of the funds levied will go towards global purposes, while part will be kept in the national treasury. Transition towards truly global taxation will await strengthened and democratized global institutions, sometime in the future, but today we must make a start along the road.

That was the introduction to this paper. I see that I have about five minutes to conclude. Therefore, I'm going to have to skip a few pages of this, which I'm sure is going to make most of the people here very happy except, of course, the Liberals and New Democrats, who think this is probably nirvana. Perhaps not, and I shouldn't speculate on that.

Now, this paper makes the point that emissions trading is a seriously flawed concept, that gives advantages to the biggest polluter countries and the big energy companies.

At best it will have only a limited capacity to reduce worldwide greenhouse gas emissions.

"Worldwide", because it will simply shift the emissions somewhere else.

A carbon tax is a fairer, more efficient policy tool that would speed progress towards Kyoto and Rio goals.

Now, I'm going to switch over to the part that we all dread because we knew it was coming: Assembling Political Blocs and Advocacy Campaigns.

As global taxes come closer to political reality, advocates must begin to think about assembling political blocs or coalitions to press forward towards enactment. We already can see the outlines of such coalitions.

Now, pay attention, because I think that members will see exactly what has taken place over the last five years.

In the case of the carbon tax, the coalition includes environmental groups, small island states and other coastal nations threatened by rising ocean levels, advocates of the UN and global institutions, intellectuals, sustainable energy industries, and insurance companies. This forms already a very substantial alliance. The CTT has managed to attract broad publics with a concern about globalization and the ills of the global financial system. The CTT also appeals to trade unions, countries negatively affected by currency speculation, economists, UN advocates, and others . . .

As the process moves forward, we will see the earliest steps in a new global political process. Global citizenship will at last take form, not as a dream or ideal, but as a real process involving common political tasks across national borders, to create a common future . . .

Though the global tax movement has made great gains, its future is still not assured. We need bold leadership and an imaginative strategy to bring global taxes – and the better world they promise – finally to reality.

Now, the author of this is a man by the name of James A. Paul, the executive director of Global Policy Forum, and Katarina Wahlberg, a graduate student in political science at Stockholm University. Now, whether one agrees with what these people, well-meaning that they may be, are advocating or not, it doesn't change the fact that the Kyoto accord, which led to the bill that we're debating today and the situation that we have within our country, is really not the real issue. It is not about carbon taxes. It's about wealth transfer, and let's be honest about it.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Questions? Comments? If not, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It gives me a great deal of pleasure this evening to rise and speak to Bill 32, the Climate Change and Emissions Management Act, and certainly to make some comments that need to be said.

For more time than man has been on this earth, the earth has been heated through the day by the sun and cooled off at night, and the insulating effect that we have had is the earth's atmosphere. We all know that if it's cloudy at night, then certainly we don't get as great a dip in the cool temperatures at night as if we have a clear sky. For nearly millions of years, probably billions of years, the earth has done a pretty good job of balancing the effect of heating through the day and cooling at night. It has had its fluctuations in time, whether they be the ice age or periods of very warm weather. As well, we know that roughly 200 million years ago the landmass on the earth was one single piece that broke up and started to spread in different directions. That is why we see the appearance of fossilized forests up in the Arctic, because it wasn't always in that position. The Earth did a very good job, and over time, when man started relying on technology, we started to burn fossil fuels, to use fossil fuels, and we've continued to do so in an ever increasing way, and with the burning of those fossil fuels, we get the greenhouse gas emissions going into the atmosphere, the main culprits being carbon dioxide, methane, and nitrous oxide.

Of course, there is a tremendous abundance of carbon dioxide that we put into the atmosphere, and in 2001 the Canadian Energy Research Institute had determined the distribution of assessed carbon dioxide emissions by industry in Canada. Coal-fired generation accounted for 43 percent of those CO₂ emissions. Oil sands and mines accounted for 19 percent of those emissions. The petrochemical and fertilizer industries accounted for 10 percent. Refining and upgrading accounted for 7 percent; pulp mills, 5 percent; cement and lime productions, 1 percent; gas processing and pipelines accounted for 9 percent.

Now, then, the methane is also a very great contributor to the trapping of energy in the atmosphere, and it has the ability to trap that energy some 20 to 25 times greater than what carbon dioxide does, and the nitrous oxides that we are contributing to the atmosphere have somewhere in the neighbourhood of 250 to 300 times the capacity of trapping the greenhouse gas emissions. So as human beings on this earth, and particularly in the last 50 years, when these gases have been measured for their content in the atmosphere – that content has increased in percentages, and it certainly has had a great impact on the climate systems and the increased heating that's occurring on the earth.

Earlier the Member for Edmonton-Riverview talked about visiting the Columbia Icefield. Now, my father had the opportunity to visit the Columbia Icefield; 1928 was his first trip there. At that time, the present highway was in the same location, but the reason the highway was built on the east side of the valley was that the icefields extended all the way across the valley floor and that was the first spot they could come to where the glacier did not cover the valley floor and they could build a highway. We've seen that it has receded miles since that time, in less than a hundred years.

Now, then, as well, I happened to come across an article in The Scotsman, a paper from Edinburgh, and the title of this particular article is The First Global Warming Refugees. It talks about four homes that fell into the sea in the tiny village of Shishmaref on the northwest corner of Alaska. It goes on to say that this community, that has lived in that location for hundreds of years, is now, because of rising sea levels, going to lose that community. As well, at one time they had no problems with the permafrost. It was not an issue, but now the permafrost has melted.

MR. MacDONALD: It's affected the pipeline – right? – the Alaska pipeline.

MR. BONNER: Yes, it's definitely affecting the Alaska pipeline as well, certainly signs of global warming such as we have not seen before.

There was a news special here two nights ago on TV where the city of Venice is looking at spending $24 billion on flood control gates to protect that city. Now, Venice as a city is 700 to 800 years old and has not encountered rising seas in all of that time, yet they are seriously concerned about the future of that city because of rising seas.

As well, if we look at the temperature that we're going to have in Edmonton tomorrow, which is plus 12, that is 16 degrees above the average for that date in history.

Global warming cannot be ignored, and what we are doing is we are looking at what role man has played here. I don't think that anybody can refute the evidence, Mr. Speaker, that the speed of change and the amplitude of change because of global warming is significant, and it's probably more significant than at any other time in history.

Now, then, as well, Mr. Speaker, it is an issue that has been greatly studied. There are many views, but I'd like to take the point of view of Michael Porter, who is a director for the Institute for Strategy and Competitiveness at the Harvard Business School. He goes on to say:

Only those companies that innovate successfully will win. A truly competitive industry is more likely to take up a new standard as a challenge and respond to it with innovation. An uncompetitive industry, on the other hand, may not be oriented toward innovation and thus may be tempted to fight all regulation.

When the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar was speaking earlier, he talked about Alberta firms who have voluntarily made greenhouse gas reductions, and of course one was TransAlta. We have Enmax, ATCO, EPCOR, Husky Energy, Suncor, Syncrude, Talisman Energy.

DR. TAFT: That's quite a list.

MR. BONNER: Yes, quite a significant list and by some big players in this province.

If these people are supporting Kyoto, if these people realize that these controls will be put on them – they are investing $4 billion in some cases in industry in Fort McMurray. They have done it. They haven't only done it, Mr. Speaker; they've exceeded those limits that we have set, and their profits are increasing. So certainly innovation is something that industry is very capable of doing and do a much better job than government does.

It would be quite interesting as well, Mr. Speaker, if we ever printed in the papers in this province those companies that don't want to be compliant. Perhaps, then, consumers in this province could say: well, we will support those businesses or we won't. It would be quite an interesting situation.

Now, as well, when we look at global warming and what we contribute as a province to this, it's quite interesting that when we look at the tonnes of carbon dioxide per capita in the world – we look at Alberta – Alberta per capita produces 72 tonnes of carbon dioxide per person. The Canadian and Australian average is only 22 tonnes per person. In China emissions are 12 tonnes per person. India is at a two tonnes per person level. So, Mr. Speaker, if we live in a global community and we wish this problem to be shared equally, well, then, Albertans must be quite ready to share their emissions throughout the world. I can only see the great nightmare that we will have in this world if China or India says: Albertans produce 72 tonnes per person of carbon dioxide emissions per year; why can we not have that same advantage in trying to develop our economies, in trying to develop our country? They would have every right to do it if we are going to continue at those particular levels. So we do have to do something with these emissions. We do have to do something with this runaway climate change that's occurring, and we must stabilize those emissions.

Now, then, we talked also earlier about the impact of other industries here in the province, and certainly we have our oil and gas industry as being number 1, but we also have agriculture at number 2. We have forestry at number 3. These are also critical industries in this province. When the Alberta Forest Products Association was meeting with us, one of their great concerns was the millions of dollars that they put back into the forests each year with the planting of seedlings. If we have a prolonged drought, then their investment is wiped out, because those seedlings cannot grow without water. I think that it is time that we did look at innovative ways whereby we can comply with the Kyoto accord, and certainly we have seen examples here where many significant and major companies in this province have.

Now, as well, I was reading an article in the London Times, and this here is: green groups condemn plan to bury carbon dioxide at sea. Now, the green groups might, yet for literally millions of years we have been able to have methane, natural gas, stored underground in this province. I can't see any reason why those caverns that housed natural gas for all those millions of years could not be used to bury our carbon dioxide. So that is certainly another way that we can do it.

You know, when we look at innovation, one of the people that did talk about how they met their Kyoto agreements was John Browne, the chief executive for British Petroleum, and he goes on to say:

We set our own target – to reduce our own emissions of greenhouse gases by 10 per cent from a 1990 base line by the year 2010. . . . Now, five years on, I'm delighted to announce that we've delivered on that target. . . . It came through a reduction in the amount of energy we need to use. . . . And we avoided unnecessary emissions. . . . And by applying simple efficiency – stopping leaks. . . . In aggregate the net effect of all those actions is that we've met the target, seven years ahead of schedule. And we've met it at no net economic cost – because the savings from reduced energy inputs and increased efficiency have outweighed all the expenditure involved.

Now, then, Mr. Speaker, we as a province and as a people have always prided ourselves on being innovative, and the pioneers that came here came with that spirit, and I think that they have shown us over time that they were very capable of being innovative, of adjusting to the times. Certainly, as a government we have to look to the future with a positive outlook, and I think that by accepting the Kyoto accord, we will be doing that.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Questions? The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

MR. KNIGHT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was interested in the comments with respect to methane, and I understood you to say that methane has a global warming potential, or a GWP, between 20 and 25 times that of CO₂. Given that, could you tell me what percentage of atmospheric methane is attributable to natural release from decomposition, coal seams, and the breakup of suboceanic methane hydrates?

MR. BONNER: That certainly is a mouthful, Mr. Speaker, and I do thank the member for that question. What scientists have told us all along is that perhaps our greatest risk and threat of global warming is that in the oceans we will have a rise in temperature. If that occurs, then the incredible vast resources that are stored in a solid form in the ocean will be released, and they could play great havoc on the environment and on our way of lives, more so than any other factor. So I thank the member for that question.

MS DeLONG: A couple of comments. First of all, you were talking about the companies that have already reduced their emissions. These companies that have reduced their emissions are not going to somehow avoid any Kyoto penalties, so what they have done in terms of their emissions was certainly not because of Kyoto. There are two reasons why their emissions are reduced: one, because of Alberta's strong clean air legislation and, two, because of deregulation because they can make money cogenerating electricity.

The point that I really want to make is that I want to ask you this question. Man-made CO₂ makes up 20 percent of the CO₂ that's in the atmosphere. This is, by the way, a really optimistic calculation. Most people say that it's around 10 percent. But let's be really positive here and say that 20 percent of the CO₂ comes from man-made emissions. Okay? Of that, only 2 percent comes from Canada. With Kyoto we would be reducing that by 30 percent. Try multiplying those numbers. What you get is one in a thousand. That is the amount that we would be reducing our CO₂ in the world. If we follow Kyoto, Canada will be reducing the CO₂ by one one-thousandth. One one-thousandth. Is that really worth risking our economy?

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That was a very good question. I didn't realize 30 seconds was that long.

Yes, it is, because we in this province have always prided ourselves as being leaders, and certainly as leaders we have a responsibility to the global economy, to our neighbours in other countries in this world. Without a doubt this is certainly one area where we can take the initiative to reduce those. It also gives us absolutely incredible opportunities with our innovation that we can market to other areas.

In the short time that I have to answer this question, I don't know if I can answer as to what the competitive edge will be for Alberta to follow this. But by taking a lead in addressing environmental issues, governments position firms in their jurisdiction to be more efficient and competitive in future markets. That's one thing.

Governments can design policies in a manner that respects legitimate competitiveness concerns, and that certainly is not ignoring the problem and thinking that we can burn without any controls whatsoever. There are many more as well, Mr. Speaker. It's unfortunate that I don't have the time here to respond fully to that question.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Environment to close debate.

DR. TAYLOR: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to rise and close debate on Bill 32. I'd like to start by saying that the federal government and their henchmen on the other side here are trying to give the impression that the Alberta government and the people of Alberta don't care about the environment. They're trying to give the impression that Albertans want to destroy the environment. What they do in all the name calling and the table thumping is that they neglect the facts of the matter. They neglect the fact, Mr. Speaker, that the government of Alberta is today 22 percent below its 1990 targets. They neglect the fact that the government of Alberta is the only government in the country to receive three awards under the voluntary challenge and registry.

9:50

MR. RATHGEBER: How many awards?

DR. TAYLOR: Three, Mr. Speaker.

The Alberta government has been taking action and encouraging industry in this province to take action since 1990. The other provinces recognize Alberta as a leader in this whole area in regards to climate change. We are spending more money on research than any other province. We are spending more money on research than the federal government in this whole area of climate change, and we are the only government in Canada to do that.

You know, as we go forward with our action plan, Taking Action, it is a real plan. It's a plan that proves that you can reduce greenhouse gases. The henchmen opposite continually say that it doesn't make a difference. Well, they haven't read the plan, because if we go forward with a business-as-usual case, Alberta would be producing by 2020 280 million tonnes of greenhouse gases. Just Alberta, Mr. Speaker. Under the Alberta plan we will be producing someplace in the neighbourhood of about 210 million tonnes. That is a real reduction of millions and millions of tonnes of greenhouse gas that our plan will clearly guarantee.

Our plan includes realistic time lines and realistic targets. It recognizes that there is a very clear connection between a healthy economy and a healthy environment, Mr. Speaker. This is clearly recognized in any number of studies I could cite: the World Economic Forum, that these people across the way like, and the World Bank studies quite clearly show recently, in 2001 studies, that there's a clear connection, a high correlation between a healthy economy and a healthy environment.

The countries that have the healthiest environmental sustainability indexes, Mr. Speaker, are the countries that have the highest GDPs. Those are the countries in western Europe. Those are the countries in North America: the U.S. and Canada. The highest GDPs, the highest environmental sustainability indexes. These are not Alberta government figures. These are World Economic Forum figures. Countries that have the lowest GDPs – Haiti, Eritrea, Ethiopia, other countries in Africa – guess what? They have the lowest environmental sustainability indexes. It's quite clear. There's a very clear connection. You can look at a country like Russia or the developing east bloc countries, and they're somewhere in the middle. Their economies are improving, and as their economies improve, their environmental sustainability index improves as well. So there's a clear connection between a healthy economy and a healthy environment. It's a balance, Mr. Speaker, and we must be constantly aware of that balance.

Alberta's approach represents a holistic approach to action on climate change. It involves a number of actions, Mr. Speaker. What the federal government and their henchmen opposite fail to recognize is that consumers in this country produce 60 percent – 60 percent – of greenhouse gases. Now, you hear the Prime Minister saying that there will be no impact on consumers. How can you have a group that's producing 60 percent and not have any impact on them? The federal government needs to have the guts, if they want to make a difference, to stand up and say to consumers in this country: "You're responsible for 60 percent. You are going to have to change." But they don't. The Prime Minister said just last week . . .

MR. MacDONALD: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar is rising on a point of order. Do you have the citation, please?

MR. MacDONALD: Yes, certainly, Mr. Speaker, 23(j).

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Okay. Yes.

Point of Order
Parliamentary Language

MR. MacDONALD: Mr. Speaker, the hon. minister has on three occasions described members on this side of the House as henchmen. Certainly, I consider that to be abusive or insulting language of a nature likely to create disorder. Now, when we look at the definition of "henchmen" in the dictionary that has been provided, it is: one prepared to engage in crime or dishonest practices. I consider that to be unparliamentary, and I would ask now for the hon. minister to withdraw those descriptive remarks that he's used on three occasions in this debate.

DR. TAYLOR: Well, Mr. Speaker, the definition makes my point exactly.

MR. MacDONALD: Mr. Speaker, I find that completely unacceptable, and again I ask the hon. minister, in light of that description – and this is a quote directly from the dictionary: a political supporter, especially one prepared to engage in crime or dishonest practices. If that sort of language is allowed to be tolerated in this Assembly tonight, to allow it to go on any further, it is a practice that simply cannot be accepted in this Assembly.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The chair has on occasion admonished hon. members in the House who use language that is demeaning, unbecoming, noncomplimentary, derogatory. I think that the hon. minister might do the right thing, and then we could move forward. It really doesn't add to debate. It detracts from the whole House. It may be to some a laughing matter, but it does reflect badly on all members, even though they haven't participated in that form of name-calling.

The hon. minister.

DR. TAYLOR: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will, then, continue with my speech and not use that word any longer. It seems that it has offended the people. I will not use it any further.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: You will not use the language any further and . . .

DR. TAYLOR: I won't use it any further. Well, let's put it this way, Mr. Speaker: I regret that they took offence from the truth.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: I would hope that you will not repeat the offending words or similar kinds of words and that you now regret it, so the honourable thing is . . .

DR. TAYLOR: Yes. I regret it, Mr. Speaker, and won't use them any further.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: I've heard that.

DR. TAYLOR: What do you wish me to say, Mr. Speaker?

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: I just thought you would do the honourable thing and withdraw the demeaning remarks.

DR. TAYLOR: Oh, certainly, Mr. Speaker. More than prepared to do that.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: To do what?

DR. TAYLOR: I'm supposed to sit down, I guess, when you're standing.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: That's right.

DR. TAYLOR: I'd like to withdraw the offending comments. I'm more than prepared to withdraw the offending comments. Can I stand now?

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: If you haven't heard, hopefully Hansard has recorded that you've withdrawn the offending remarks. Further, you've indicated to the House that you wouldn't use any more of those kinds of remarks.

DR. TAYLOR: That's correct, Mr. Speaker. I won't use "henchman" anymore.

Debate Continued

DR. TAYLOR: So anyway, Mr. Speaker, in continuing with my speech, if I might, clearly our plan outlines a number of actions that we can take. As I was pointing out, the consumers are responsible for a large percentage of greenhouse gases across the country, 60 percent on average. In Alberta, because of the nature of our industry, it's only about 35 percent, so we have a little different balance in Alberta, and the consumers aren't responsible for as much as they are across the country. The Prime Minister will not stand up and say to the consumers of this country, "You have to change your behaviour," but Alberta's plan clearly identifies that consumers must change.

We have other aspects in the plan as well, Mr. Speaker. We have an emphasis on investing in research and technology, and the Minister of Infrastructure quite clearly elaborated on that, so I don't need to go into those details. Oh, I see some colleagues looking up the word "henchman" for me.

So, clearly, we don't need to go into those details. However, the minister did not mention the idea of sectoral agreements, and one of the major planks of the Alberta platform is to go forward with sectoral agreements, to have industry commit.

Now, once again, one of the falsehoods that is being portrayed by the people opposite is quite clear. They have said that there's no force to be brought in Alberta's agreement. Mr. Speaker, that's simply not true. We have stated very clearly in our legislation: there will be regulations, there will be legislation, and there will be penalties. So when those people opposite stand up and say that there is no force, they simply are not telling the truth, and they continue to not tell the truth.

I've just been informed, Mr. Speaker, that the definition of henchman is also: faithful supporter.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Yes. I'm sure we could go on about that. I thought that you withdrew the remark. Now you're bringing it back, hon. member.

DR. TAYLOR: Okay. Well, I will not refer to faithful supporters any longer, Mr. Speaker.

As we go forward, Mr. Speaker, our plan is an activeness plan, and quite clearly it proves two things. One, Alberta is clearly and firmly committed to taking action on climate change. Clearly and firmly committed, the only province that has a plan. The federal government doesn't even have a plan. Second, there are very serious and clear alternatives to Kyoto. It's not Kyoto or nothing. Alberta has never said: Kyoto or nothing. Alberta has always said: "Climate change is an important issue. Let's find a meaningful way to deal with it, one that does not harm our economy and still protects the environment."

Our plan is a clear signal for action, Mr. Speaker. It gives people tools to act, it inspires them to act, and Alberta's plan can serve as part of a made-in-Canada solution. In fact, one of the issues that we've dealt with other provinces on is: what is your plan for climate change? In Quebec I've spent considerable time talking to Andre Boisclair, the minister from Quebec, and they have a plan. Manitoba has a plan. B.C. has a plan. All of these plans are unique to the provinces because they have unique economies. What the faithful servants opposite fail to recognize is that Alberta was never asked to go below the 6 percent. It was a commitment made on behalf of the country. Manitoba is saying that it can get to 12 or 15 percent. Quebec is saying that it can get below 22 percent.

So for the members opposite to stand up and say, you know, "Alberta's got to get to 6 percent below 1990" – it was quite correctly recognized by the member opposite that it would be between 30 and 35 percent below today, not 6 percent – is not in the cards for Alberta. Yet with these various plans we can put together a made-in-Canada approach, because, as I said, each economy is different. You can manipulate your greenhouse gases in an economy like British Columbia or Quebec, that has much more forested area than Alberta does, in a different way than we do in Alberta.

This, Mr. Speaker, really is a bottom-up approach. It's not the top-down approach that's driven at the provinces by the federal government. What is particularly interesting is that all 10 provinces – that includes two Liberal governments. That includes two NDP governments. That includes a separatist government, not Alberta, in Quebec and includes some Conservative governments. All 10 provinces and three territories have thrown out the federal plan. None of them, none of us find that federal plan acceptable. All 10 provinces and three territories have signed on to 12 points. These 12 points recognize a made-in-Canada solution. We all agree. Do we all agree on ratification? No. Quebec and Manitoba think the protocol should be ratified. But by the same token, they sign on and respect the 12 points that the provinces have agreed on and want to develop a made-in-Canada plan on.

Ministers of environment and energy were there with me that night. We met in Halifax I think from 6 o'clock till 1 o'clock the next morning, and we hammered out these 12 points. It wasn't easy, Mr. Speaker. Quebec had to give something. Alberta had to give something. B.C. had to give something. But we came together as provinces with 12 points we all agree on, and as a result of that, the federal government will not listen to us. The federal government has not responded in an adequate way. What they've done with the 12 points is they've rejected three of the most critical, they've rewritten seven, and they've rewritten the preamble and sent it back to us like we can't read and said: here are your 12 points. They've rewritten the preamble, seven principles, and rejected three. They say that's discussion with the province. They say that's accepting the province. Well, it's not, and all 10 provinces and three territories recognize that.

We can develop a made-in-Canada plan, a made-in-Canada plan that will reduce greenhouse gases and not send hundreds of millions of dollars into the Soviet Union to buy emission credits. How many Soviet mafia do these people want driving around in new Mercedes with personalized licence plates saying, "Thank you, Alberta"? I say: we don't want one on this side of the House, Mr. Speaker.

You know, another example of where Alberta is a leader is that last week the Minister of Infrastructure put out a request for a proposal. He put out a request for a proposal to secure at least 25 percent – 25 percent – of Alberta government power to be green power. No other jurisdiction in the country has done this, Mr. Speaker. Twenty-five percent green power for the Alberta government. Where is the federal government in this? They're not doing it. Where are the other provinces that even want ratification? They're not doing it. Alberta is once again quite clearly a leader. So I'm pleased to see that Infrastructure has requested this. In our plan the Alberta government only asked for 15 percent. We're going to get to 15 percent. Infrastructure has gone one better: 25 percent. So as we go forward, the Alberta plan is a good one.

I heard the member opposite talking about family. Well, I have children and grandchildren who live in this province. I have four daughters, four granddaughters, and one grandson. He's seven years old, and he lives in Sherwood Park. He's the best and smartest grandson in the world – he takes after his mother – and I want Alexander to have a healthy environment, you know, when he's 25, when he's 30. He's going to be educated. His parents are both very well educated. But you know what, Mr. Speaker? I want Alex to have a job in Alberta too, and that's the balance: healthy environment, healthy economy. And in spite of what the members opposite say, I care about my grandchildren.

[Motion carried; Bill 32 read a second time]

head: Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Tannas in the chair]

THE CHAIR: I'd like to call Committee of the Whole to order.

Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2002 (No. 2)

THE CHAIR: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. At this time I certainly have a few comments regarding Bill 36. When we look at this bill, it's a reflection of the planning practices of this current government.

AN HON. MEMBER: You're right; I should have planned for that drought.

MR. MacDONALD: An hon. member opposite thought they should have planned for the drought. Unfortunately, the severity of that drought is still being openly questioned by members opposite.

When you look at the continuous parade of appropriation bills, the size of them, and you look at the total budget of the government, you have to understand that one would have, certainly, concern about the budgeting process by this government. Now, we go through this department by department, Mr. Chairman. We've got Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development. The majority of this is certainly for Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. We've got Community Development. We've got Infrastructure. We have Learning. Consider the fact that there are in public schools in this city budget deficits, it's reported, in the range of between $15 million and $18 million; it certainly is significant. We have Municipal Affairs. We've got Sustainable Resource Development with, oh, roughly 25 percent of this appropriation, and we've got Transportation. You look at how we're going to account for all this money.

The hon. Minister of Environment spoke earlier about the World Bank and, recognizing that it was on the Kyoto Bill, spoke about the World Bank. The World Bank certainly has concern about governments and how they spend money, and I was surprised as chairperson of Public Accounts. Certainly, as chairperson of Public Accounts in this Legislative Assembly one has to seek ways to improve the auditing and the accounting of all government expenditures, including what's in this Bill 36, Mr. Chairman.

Now, how could we make the system better? Well, the World Bank sent this hon. member a letter in the middle of the summer this year and asked a series of questions. We need to improve all accounting and auditing systems, and I think that if we do, we won't have these large sums to debate every time. We will have better planning, and we will have better budgeting from this government, because certainly this government practises three-month, not three-year budgeting. We just have to look at the budget from last spring. The ink was hardly dry on it in this Legislative Assembly and it had to be changed.

So how could we make things better? Well, I think we could make things better by organizing and giving the Standing Committee on Public Accounts of this Legislative Assembly more authority. Certainly, I think that the Public Accounts Committee should look at how other jurisdictions operate, other jurisdictions in the British Commonwealth. It is amazing that the committee here cannot entertain questions relating to government policy or program delivery and, in my view, simply meets for the sake of meeting. It cannot be said that our committee in this province is a role model for public accounts committees in other developed or developing Commonwealth countries.

Now, if we met more often, if we increased the frequency and timeliness of meetings and reports, would it be necessary to be presented with Bill 36, to spend an additional $822 million? If we were to consider that the Standing Committee on Public Accounts meets currently for one and a half hours each week when this House is in session and each meeting is dedicated to the review of the public accounts of a particular ministry or the annual report of the Auditor General of Alberta, in 2001, Mr. Chairman, the House was in session for eight calendar weeks, which allowed the committee to meet eight times. Thus, the committee met for only approximately 12 hours in the entire calendar year. Some of the portfolios that are mentioned in Bill 36, I would hazard a guess, certainly did not appear before the Public Accounts Committee to have their budget scrutinized, yet they're in here looking for more money. They're looking for more money here in Bill 36.

Now, this 12 hours contrasts, Mr. Chairman, with the thousands of hours of deliberations of the federal Public Accounts Committee and the hundreds of hours of deliberations at provincial public accounts committees both within and without the sessions of their respective Houses. This committee in this Assembly has, to my knowledge, never presented a substantive report to the Legislative Assembly of Alberta. This compares to 16 reports and numerous press releases that the federal Public Accounts Committee has presented to the House of Commons in the current federal Parliament.

Now, if this committee had more authority, perhaps these appropriation amounts would not nearly be as large and we wouldn't be playing sort of budget roulette: oops; we need more money. The easiest thing to do is ask for more money. The difficult thing is to plan properly. Perhaps if the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenarry had the authorization, I guess I could say – I hate to use that word “authorization” – to be on standing policy committees and could scrutinize this budget process, if there were opposition members on standing policy committees, then perhaps this system here would not be necessary, or certainly we wouldn't be talking about close to a billion dollars in appropriations. There would be, within the budgetary framework, questions asked by the members of the opposition, if they were allowed on those committees, to perhaps make the system a little bit more efficient.

If not only the standing policy committee but the Public Accounts Committee could expand the scope of the nature of issues that it could investigate, this would be better for democracy, better for budgets in this province, and certainly better for the taxpayers. This committee, Public Accounts, in this province is restricted to reviewing the public accounts of the government of Alberta in each of its ministries. The committee cannot entertain any questions relating to the public policies or programs of the government, and this contrasts to the wide-ranging nature of issues investigated by the federal and various provincial public accounts committees.

Now, one would also have to look at the diligence and the skill of committee investigators. Currently, the committee enjoys the administrative services of one clerk. This is an able clerk, but the clerk is responsible for such things as booking meeting rooms, circulating agendas, taking minutes, and responding to surveys, such as this survey that I responded to at the World Bank. But unlike the federal or various provincial public accounts committees, the committee does not have a budget to hire researchers or investigative staff. Perhaps at some time Public Accounts Committee researchers or forensic auditors can have a look at how we're quickly going to spend this 800-plus million dollars. Perhaps they could uncover some deficiencies in the budgeting process and fix them up so that it doesn't happen again. Again, the Public Accounts Committee does not have the mandate, the budget, or time to analyze any matters of public importance in a substantive manner. I'm sure that if they did, we wouldn't have such large sums as we have before us tonight in Bill 36.

Now, we need to certainly look at improving how we do business in this Assembly, and that is one way that we could do it. How do we do it? We have to change the Standing Orders. It is unfortunate that this committee meets only when the House is in session. We have to change that. We have to change the fact that it's supported by only one clerk. We have to change the fact that it does not have a budget or authority to meet when the House is not in session, nor does it enjoy a budget to employ the services of an investigator or support staff. I realize that the committee draws its authority from Standing Order 50, which reads: "Public accounts, when tabled, stand referred to the Public Accounts Committee." Standing Order 50 does not provide much guidance to the committee on what its exact mandate is. For example, if the committee were to find a deficiency in the public accounts of the government, the standing order does not instruct the committee to report its observations on the matter and its recommendations on how to correct the deficiency.

For instance, if at some time, Mr. Chairman, under the diligent scrutiny of the Public Accounts Committee the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow was to determine that all the money that went to Agriculture, Food and Rural Development for drought relief actually didn't go to areas where needed and the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow was to ask the question: how come so many farmers in southern Alberta who raised their crops with irrigated water are getting drought relief when this government has no money to increase AISH or SFI benefits? Let's just say that the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow asked that question, Mr. Chairman, and it's a good question. Why are we providing in this $400 million drought-relief program – it's a blanket approach – some money for farmers who use irrigation systems, yet we have no money for the hungry, for the homeless, for the unemployed, for children who are going to school hungry. I won't add overcrowded classrooms, but I think that in retrospect I will: hungry children going to school in overcrowded classrooms. This is the reality of some of these programs. With a revamped Public Accounts Committee, if we're to spend a few dollars, I think we would save millions and millions of dollars, Mr. Chairman.

In practice the committee invites ministers of the Crown to appear before it, and sometimes I think this is a waste of time of the hon. ministers of the Crown. I think it's a waste of time for them to be appearing on a regular basis at the Public Accounts Committee. I think that we should take the advice of the Auditor General from 10 years back and invite the ministers and deputy ministers, and on occasion we could invite the ministers of the Crown. Certainly it's my experience in the past that some of them have been reluctant to appear and have made every effort not to attend, but they have come. If they're that busy, I think that we should just say: leave them over in their offices and send the deputy ministers and the assistant deputy ministers and the officials that are running the programs in the department. Perhaps we could save everyone a little bit of trouble. Now, when the minister of the Crown does appear and gives a 15-minute overview of his or her department, it is interesting, but certainly it's something the deputy ministers or the assistant deputy ministers could do.

For those who don't have the privilege of sitting on the Public Accounts Committee at the moment, the committee members have the opportunity to ask questions of the minister relating to his or her statement and the public accounts of the ministry in question. I have never understood the exact process or where the committee draws its authority to do so. As this is not mentioned in the Standing Orders, it's unclear about the role of the Auditor General of Alberta. We could work with the hon. Government House Leader and change Standing Orders, Standing Order 50 to be precise, and improve the Public Accounts Committee so that we wouldn't be faced with such a large bill tonight as Bill 36. It is unfortunate.

Perhaps we can change this so the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow can write a report, can issue an opinion, an observation, a deliberation, or a recommendation from the Public Accounts Committee on this policy of giving farmers that are irrigating their crops drought relief while neglecting the hungry, the homeless, and the unemployed and forgetting about overcrowded classroom conditions in this province. The hon. member would perhaps like to use the avenue of Public Accounts to address this.

In conclusion regarding the Public Accounts Committee, if one were to contrast the authority and practices of the committee in Alberta with the sister organization at the federal House of Commons or a sister organization in a similarly-sized Legislative Assembly, one would find that the committee in Alberta does not enjoy any substantive authority, nor does it play any substantive role in reviewing the financial statements and public policies of the government, nor does it have any authority to recommend changes to public policy, public finances, or program delivery. If it did, I am quite confident that this bill, Bill 36, yet another appropriation bill, would not be nearly so large.

Mr. Chairman, when we look at this government, it's an urban myth that it knows how to budget, because when you see this, you know they don't. It is a significant amount of money. It is probably 4 percent of the entire provincial budget. It's a little better than 4 percent, I suppose, but we will say that it's 4 percent. When we look at seeking legislative authority to put moneys from the general revenue fund towards expenses, operating expenses and capital investment that have not yet been granted, we're actually providing the government permission to spend over $822 million in more than eight departments than was budgeted at the beginning of the year.

Unfortunately, my time has expired. I know that the hon. Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development and Deputy Premier was anxious for me to continue, but I'll take my seat and cede the floor to another colleague.

[The clauses of Bill 36 agreed to]

10:30

THE CHAIR: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE CHAIR: Opposed? Carried.

MR. HANCOCK: Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee rise and report Bill 36.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

MR. LOUGHEED: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration and reports Bill 36.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Does the Assembly concur in this report?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Opposed? So ordered.

The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd move that we adjourn until 1:30 p.m. tomorrow.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 10:32 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Wednesday, November 27, 2002 1:30 p.m.
 Date: 02/11/27
 [The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

THE SPEAKER: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. Our Father, we thank You for Your abundant blessings to our province and ourselves. We ask You to ensure to us Your guidance and the will to follow it. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Visitors

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you a person with a lengthy record of public service to the people of Alberta. He was first elected to the Alberta Legislature in 1982 as the MLA for Edmonton-Norwood and as the New Democrats Leader of the Official Opposition from 1984 to 1993. Mr. Martin served the Alberta New Democratic Party as a member of the executive for over 15 years. His public service record continues today, as he is currently the public school trustee in ward D. He is seated in your gallery, and I ask him to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to also introduce to you and through you Ms Lynn Odynski. As a former community health nurse Ms Odynski completed her graduate work on school councils at the University of Alberta. She then served as chair of the Edmonton School Council, an area council of the Alberta Home and School Councils' Association. As chair she promoted the need for parents to be active and legitimate partners in their children's education. She continues to believe strongly in this partnership and is currently a public school trustee in ward C in the city of Edmonton. She is seated in your gallery, and I'd ask her to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

head: Introduction of Guests

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, before I call on the first individual to do introductions, I do believe that this is the first time in the history of the Legislative Assembly of the province of Alberta that all of the pages today are women.

The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly 32 grade 6 students and their teachers, Mrs. Natalie Gago-Esteves and Ms Laurie Ewald, from Brander Gardens elementary school in my constituency of Edmonton-Whitemud. They, of course, are here today to observe and learn about the Legislature and about government, and they're seated in the members' gallery. I'd ask that they rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

REV. ABBOTT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all the Members of the Legislative Assembly 47 visitors from Calmar school. They are led today by two teachers, Mrs. Sue Biddell and the mother of one of our pages – that's Natalie Wilson's mother – Mrs. Jeanette Wilson.

They also have with them today some parent helpers: Mrs. Buehner, Mrs. Hughes, Mrs. Robinson, Mrs. Snider, and Mrs. Stepanko. They are seated behind me in the public gallery, and I would ask them all to please rise and receive a hearty welcome from this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Leduc.

MR. KLAPSTEIN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm delighted to introduce to you and through you to Members of the Legislative Assembly visitors from Covenant Christian school, just south of Leduc in our constituency. They are accompanied by teachers Mrs. Colette Hayes, Mrs. Mary Geiger and parents and helpers Mrs. Ineke Van Beek, Mrs. Melanie Samuelson, Mrs. Linda Cameron, Mrs. Lore-Lee Wagner, Mrs. Monique Tolsma, Mrs. Jenny Ruysch, Mrs. Susan Schuurman, Mrs. Nynke Miedema, Mrs. Debbie Pequin, Mrs. Elly McGowan, Miss Trish Rudiger, Mrs. Karen Gengler, Mrs. Lauren Van Raamsdonk, Mrs. Carol Klooster, and Mrs. Leah Schmidt. I'd ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Redwater.

MR. BRODA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's certainly my pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly 21 guests. They're from Newbrook school, first time ever in this Assembly since I was elected in '97, and they are accompanied by teachers Wayne Crosswell, Mrs. Shirley Frederickson, parent helpers Tony Kwasny, Mrs. Val Ferguson, and bus driver Mr. Nick Kuzyk. They're seated in both the members' and the public galleries, and I'd ask them to please rise and receive this warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

MR. STELMACH: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. This afternoon I have the pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly visitors from the constituency of Vegreville-Viking. They are here seated in the members' gallery. They're a number of families of home schoolers that have visited our office this afternoon. They're led by Mr. Barter, and they're from the Chipman and Lamont area, and I would ask them all to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

MR. HLADY: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a great honour for me to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly Mr. Peter MacKay, the MP for Pictou-Antigonish-Guysborough and also the Progressive Conservative Party House leader. Mr. MacKay is out here finding out and learning what Albertans believe is the right way to bring together two federal parties and make things happen and create a very strong opposition to the Liberals in Ottawa. Along with Peter is his assistant, Maureen Murphy-Makin, and I'd ask them to please both stand and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly three guests who are in the public gallery. They are Mrs. Arati Jaiswal and her husband, Colonel (Retired) V.K. Jaiswal, who are visiting from Nagpur, India. They are visiting their daughter Madhvi Russell, who is the executive manager with the John Humphrey Centre for Peace and Human Rights. They're also accompanied by my husband, Jack. They're seated in the public gallery, and I'd ask them to please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

MR. LUKASZUK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. They say that in politics friends come and go, but enemies only accumulate. In the public gallery I have three friends that haven't gone yet, and it's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you Mr. Christopher Sowa, Mrs. Irene Sowa, and Mr. Eugeniusz Gergont. I would like them to rise and accept the warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and to all my colleagues in the Assembly a very, very energetic young man who's a recent graduate of the University of Calgary with a master's degree in environmental sciences and management. His name is Jan Triska. Jan is the project co-ordinator for ARK, Albertans for Ratifying Kyoto. Mr. Triska splits his time between Edmonton and Calgary and works tirelessly to get the right information out to Albertans on the issue of ratifying Kyoto. He is here to observe the Alberta Legislature in action today and is seated in the public gallery. I'll ask Jan to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to all Members of the Legislative Assembly nine residents of the Beverly Senior Citizens Lodge. I have been honoured to represent the Beverly lodge for many years at two levels of government, and I'm pleased that they have come to see their government in action, including the tabling of a petition on health care that was circulated in the Beverly lodge. It is always a particular pleasure to introduce the people who have helped build Alberta, Edmonton, and the Beverly area. Visiting us today are – and if they'd please rise when I call their names – Bill Boratynek, Rose Taje, Emily Credgeur, Olga Myshyniuk, Peter Myshyniuk, Clarice Stephens, Ann Kuny, Nancy Mozak, and Edith Brown. I'd also like to extend my congratulations to Olga and Peter, who celebrated their 58th wedding anniversary this past Saturday and who have rescheduled their celebration in order to be with us today. So I'd ask them all to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Legislative Assembly.

head: Oral Question Period

Health Care Spending

DR. NICOL: Mr. Speaker, this spring we asked the Minister of Health and Wellness for a cost-benefit analysis on services provided at the Holy Cross hospital. The minister's response: "to date, no analysis has been conducted or sponsored comparing the relative costs and benefits of health services provided in specific facilities in Alberta." In other words, no evidence that contracting out saves money or improves our services. My question to the Minister of Health and Wellness: how can the minister justify expanding private health care delivery in Alberta when he has no evidence that this is more cost-effective or improves service?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, our eyes are clearly on the future and not on the past. We have undertaken an enormous undertaking with the Mazankowski report. We have asked a number of extremely qualified individuals to provide us with some guidance on the direction to go. Across this country, with the exception of Mr. Romanow, I might add, the idea that there is a role for private-sector providers of publicly delivered and paid-for health services seems to have gained some support in virtually every province and territory of this country. We do see evidence of it in British Columbia, in Ontario, in Quebec, right here in Alberta, where services are being provided. Take, for example, MRIs. But for the involvement of the private sector we would not have the capacity to do the MRIs that we do as we do now. We have invested, of course, in our own MRIs. We invested in a number of MRIs publicly, and we were able to significantly increase our capacity within the public system.

Mr. Speaker, the fact of the matter is that there is an important role for the private sector to play in the delivery of health care services. I would suggest that an individual who is ill will go into a facility, and the only operative questions in their mind will be: does this place have the resources, the people, the skills, and the equipment to diagnose me and treat me so I get better? They do not ask: who owns this place?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. But as manager of the public purse he should be making sure it's done at a low cost.

Given that the recent report from the Canadian Institute for Health Information provides that health care spending in Alberta is sustainable, why does this minister continue to deny that evidence and claim it is not so?

MR. MAR: Well, Mr. Speaker, I have great respect for the Canadian Institute for Health Information. However, I would suggest that definitions of sustainability may differ from time to time and from place to place. When people talk about sustainability being expressed as a percentage of the gross domestic product and somehow suggest that that means that it's sustainable, well, that is not a particularly meaningful measure. Looking at gross domestic product as the denominator and expressing health care expenditures as a percentage of that denominator is not valuable. Let's say that Kyoto goes ahead and our gross domestic product drops dramatically and our health care expenditures as a percentage of GDP go from 4 and a half percent to 15 percent. Does that make it more sustainable? I don't think so.

DR. NICOL: To the minister: why is the minister so reluctant to table any evidence in this House to support his changes to the health care system? Is there no evidence?

MR. MAR: Well, Mr. Speaker, the facts speak for themselves, and I refer the hon. member to the historical fiscal summary of the province of Alberta where we can clearly demonstrate that the expenditures on health care have clearly risen since 1992-93 expressed as a percentage of the overall spending of the provincial government. We started off in 1993-94 somewhere in the range of roughly something in the magnitude of 24 or 25 percent of every dollar in this province being spent on health care. Now, in our current year, we're in the range of about 36 percent, and it's rising. The reason why it's rising is because of drugs, an aging population, new procedures that we're able to do, and new technology that's available.

So, again, taking a look at what it appears that the hon. Leader of the Opposition and Mr. Romanow both have associated themselves with is the idea that we should just spend more on the status quo, that we want the status quo system that will be more expensive. Well, we think that there's a better way of doing this, that we need to look instead at what the outcomes are that we want and to drive our direction in the way of getting to the outcome of having an affordable, sustainable, accessible, high-quality, publicly paid for, publicly administered health care system.

DR. NICOL: Mr. Speaker, they still refuse to put standards down so we can judge their performance.

Rural Health Services

DR. NICOL: The new meaning of two-tiered health care in Alberta is better quality urban and a lower quality rural tier. Perhaps this government's plan for rural health care is superboards in urban centres managing 1-800 health lines for rural Alberta. My question again to the Minister of Health and Wellness: how much money does the minister expect to save by creating a handful of superboards and superregions to deliver health in Alberta?

MR. MAR: Well, Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition has got more baloney to sell than Oscar Meyer. It does not matter whether you are in rural Alberta or in urban Alberta. People have reasonable expectations with respect to the delivery of health care. Now, that doesn't mean that you will have exactly the same system operating in rural Alberta as urban Alberta, and in fact in urban Alberta there are also concerns with respect to accessing the health care system. Urban people are suggesting that there are enormous issues with respect to unacceptable wait lists in various areas, and there has been a general view that there should be a decentralization of the delivery of services.

On the subject of the number of regional health authorities again this is an issue that for most Albertans is completely invisible. People are not concerned about the number of regional health authorities. People are concerned that there is a system that is there when they need it, and that is the more important issue, Mr. Speaker. Let us not get caught up in this business of who administers this particular facility. Let's only concern ourselves with: is health care delivery of a service there when we need it?

DR. NICOL: To the minister: would the minister table in this Legislature any cost-benefit analysis that you have done creating this handful of superboards or superregions to deliver our health care?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, we are moving forward with our goal that I've stated earlier in this House, and that is with respect to the delivery of health care. The administration of health care is far below in terms of the priorities in the minds of Albertans than is the delivery of health care, and that's our focus.

DR. NICOL: Again to the minister: why has the minister not allowed rural Albertans any say in how their health care services will be delivered? Where was the consultation?

MR. MAR: That's patently untrue, Mr. Speaker. The fact of the matter is that our members, who make up . . .

MS CARLSON: Ask your backbenchers if they agree with you.

MR. MAR: Well, okay. Let's see. How many rural members does the Liberal opposition have? Mr. Speaker, if rural Albertans are concerned about their level of health care, they have certainly taken opportunity to express it to members of the government that represent rural Alberta.

Romanow Report

THE SPEAKER: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview. I hope, hon. member, that your question will be heard. There seems to be a lot of chattering from your neighbours.

DR. TAFT: I'll do my best, Mr. Speaker. Thank you.

Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Health and Wellness has arrogantly rejected the Romanow report before even seeing it as if he had nothing more to learn. [interjections] My questions are to the Minister of Health and Wellness.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. member, I'm going to give you another chance to begin, but I'm going to apply the same rule to the other hon. members in the Assembly.

Please proceed.

DR. TAFT: My questions are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Why does the minister so irresponsibly dismiss the Romanow recommendations as being "drafted on the back of a cocktail napkin" when he hasn't even seen the report?

MR. MAR: I regret referring to the report as being drafted on the back of a cocktail napkin. I meant a postage stamp, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Romanow has really disclosed virtually all of his report in speeches that he has given to Harvard University, to Memorial University, to people in Washington in the United States. So, Mr. Speaker, it has been much like the dance of a thousand veils: he has revealed all the veils except for the last three. So there isn't anything that we should expect out of Mr. Romanow's report that he hasn't already disclosed.

I think the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview has a pretty good idea and would be able to put together the key recommendations of the Romanow report based on what he has seen in the newspaper and accounts of what Mr. Romanow has had to say in the media. I don't think that there will be any surprises coming to him either.

DR. TAFT: Given that the Romanow commission was publicly open and accountable while the Mazankowski commission was chaired by a paid lobbyist, why has the minister rejected the Romanow report before it has even been made public?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, we've said all along that if - if - something came out of the Romanow report that would be constructive and helpful to us moving forward on the goal that I stated about a publicly paid for, administered, accessible, high-quality health care system that's sustainable, then we, of course, would be the first ones to embrace that idea and adopt it and employ it in this province to move forward on the yardsticks towards that goal.

Mr. Speaker, Mr. Mazankowski has prepared an outstanding set of recommendations that this government's moving forward on. It is of great interest to Canadians that Mr. Mazankowski's report contains a number of recommendations that are consistent with Senator Kirby, a Liberal Senator, I might add, who has come to similar conclusions, and that suggests to me that both Mr. Mazankowski and Senator Kirby were really thinking about health care delivery and were not locked up in ideology.

DR. TAFT: Well, given that the minister has not only marginalized himself with his comments but marginalized this government, how does he justify throwing away Alberta's voice on this important national dialogue?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, let us examine what has happened across this country. Let's look at the Fyke commission report. Let's look at the Claire report. Let's look at Senator Kirby's report. Let's look at work that has been done by Mr. Mazankowski. All of them have come to the conclusion – whether they come from the background of economists, health care professionals, academics, individuals who work within the system, patients that work with the system – that the status quo is not an option. So we are taking steps forward in moving on this goal of improving what is already a good health care system.

Either the Leader of the Opposition or the Member for Edmonton-Riverview talked about CIHI earlier. Let us look at the data in CIHI. Let us see, for example, the results after having a heart attack. The five best places in all of Canada to have a heart attack are right here in the province of Alberta, where you'll get the best treatment anywhere, Mr. Speaker. We're looking to improve on that.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Health Care Services

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When the former Premier of Saskatchewan, Mr. Romanow, began his extensive public consultations 18 months ago, he issued a challenge to advocates of private, for-profit health care. Romanow said: show me evidence that for-profit health care saves money or delivers better health outcomes. Well, the privatization advocates have failed to deliver, Mr. Speaker. The emperor has no clothes. My questions are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. What evidence, if any, did the government provide to the Romanow commission that private, for-profit health care saves money or improves health outcomes, and will the minister table that evidence in this Assembly?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, that is really avoiding the question. The question is really about the delivery of health care, not its manner. Whether it's Senator Kirby or Mr. Mazankowski or whether it is the Premier of Newfoundland or the Premier of Ontario or the Premier of British Columbia or the Premier of Alberta, we have all come to the conclusion that we should focus on the delivery of health care and its outcomes, and the issue of whether it is delivered in a not-for-profit or by private provider or by the public system is a secondary issue. People only care that the service is there when they need it.

DR. PANNU: Since the minister of the government has no evidence to present, when will the government take off its blinkers and acknowledge that Albertans would get more services with less money through public health care than they will through privatization, delisting, and user fees, that this minister is proposing to do?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, if having blinkers means that you have an unflinching direction and a vision of where you are going, I am guilty as charged, but that is much better than closing your eyes and shutting your ears to all other possible options.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. If this minister doesn't have a secret plan to delist services, why is the government's promise made to the Alberta Council on Aging that there won't be cuts in seniors' prescription drug coverage only good until the end of next year? Why did you make that promise?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, we have the most accountable, up-front, transparent business plans and results reporting of any province in this country. We're proud of it. We expect that Albertans should hold this government accountable for the results that we achieve with the money that they give to us through taxes, so the suggestion that there's some secret plan – I mean, we've had press releases about this allegedly secret plan. I fail to understand how the hon. member can characterize our plans to look at the types of services that we should provide in a rational and in a reasonable way . . . [interjections]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister will continue. He does have the floor, and I'm going to ask my two hon. colleagues to just button it. The hon. minister.

MR. MAR: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We are looking at how we can sustain our health care system, and we are again focused on results. We want to make sure that our health care system provides the kinds of services that help people get better, and if it means that we have to take a look at all of our services and ask what criteria should be applied to them to ensure that people get what they need when they need it, we're not afraid to do that.

Mr. Speaker, with respect to drugs, drugs are an area of great concern. It is estimated that there can be a prescription error rate of something in the magnitude of 20 to 30 percent. Now, that is anecdotal. I do not have something that I could table before this hon. member, but suffice it to say that when it comes to drugs, we want to make sure that we don't stand in the way of somebody who has a condition that can be alleviated by a prescription drug. On the other hand, we must also be cautious that we don't prescribe things that don't help people or, in fact, even worse, can harm people.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Provision of Abortion Services

MR. MARZ: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Many of my constituents are very disappointed to hear that recently the Expert Advisory Panel to Review Publicly Funded Health Services has advised the minister of health that they have singled out one medical procedure and will exclude it from their final recommendations. That one procedure is abortion. My question to the Minister of Health is: what justification can the minister offer that one medical service can be determined by a single doctor as medically necessary and paid for and all other medical services require the review and advice of an expert panel?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, this is a very, very difficult question to answer, but medically necessary abortion services will continue to be paid for by the Alberta public system. As is the case with any insured service, the government must rely upon professional judgment of physicians to determine which procedures are medically necessary. Now, the expert panel indicated that there would be some difficulty with respect to jurisdiction and legal issues if they were to deal with this particular service. I agree that that is true. Nonetheless, I will say that medically necessary abortions will continue to be paid for by our system.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MARZ: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, given that the College of Physicians and Surgeons has not defined medically necessary in their guidelines and the expert panel refused to do so, how is the minister going to deal with this issue of medically necessary?

MR. MAR: Well, Mr. Speaker, I can tell you that it would not be incumbent upon the judgment of the Minister of Health and Wellness to determine what is medically necessary. We do rely on the College of Physicians and Surgeons to establish clinical practice guidelines that help physicians guide their decisions about what is medically necessary. These physicians do follow these guidelines when making decisions about abortions for their patients. If a physician deems an abortion to be medically necessary, our system will provide it as required under the Canada Health Act.

MR. MARZ: Well, given that in a recent survey 72 percent of Albertans stated that they do not wish to fund non medically necessary abortions, will the minister, then, appoint a committee that's responsible and willing to take on this task of defining medically necessary, consult with Albertans, and resolve this issue once and for all?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, I'm not aware of this statistic nor the methodology that was used to derive it, so I won't comment on the particular numbers, but I will say that this is a very, very emotional issue for many Albertans. There are two very distinctive views on what the resolution should be, and there appears to me to be no common ground that will satisfy both at the same time. We have to try and distance ourselves from the emotion of the issue and deal only with the facts which are before us.

First of all, the Canada Health Act requires us to provide medically necessary services through the public health system. Physicians determine medical necessity using clinical practice guidelines. A review by any committee, whether the expert panel led by Dr. Westbury or others, would not change the facts on which we base our decision to fund abortions. Finally, if a physician deems an abortion to be medically necessary, Alberta's publicly funded health care system will provide the procedure as required under the Canada Health Act.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Drivers' Licences

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you. Canada's new antiterrorism legislation could force all Albertans to retake their driver's test and prove citizenship in order to receive a new driver's licence in light of the insecurity of the current system. The holes in Alberta's privatized registry system were proven yet again by two break-ins at the same Edmonton registry office last week. It is very distressing to consider that with a fake Alberta driver's licence a terrorist could obtain any number of false documents including a passport and birth certificate. My first question is to the Minister of Government Services. How can this government guarantee the authenticity of any proof of citizenship when issuing new drivers' licences given that the security of drivers' licences has been compromised?

MR. COUTTS: Mr. Speaker, that's a very good question. We have a protocol in place for registry agents' offices to follow when it comes to citizenship papers, the primary citizenship papers and secondary citizenship papers to be presented in front of a registry agent. As well, we also have the documentation of drivers' licences in our database, and that particular process is part of our policy that the registry agents use in identifying legitimate people coming up and looking for not only a proper identification but a proper driver's licence in the province of Alberta.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you. Again to the same minister: are the recent thefts of driver's licence making equipment as good an excuse as any for this government to revive its plan to make all Albertans carry smart cards?

MR. COUTTS: Mr. Speaker, what we're looking at is an improvement to our driver's licence manufacturing facility by going to a central manufacturing facility that is safe and secure. It is not our intention at this time to look at any other cards. This is strictly a driver's licence proposal that has been put forward.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you. Again to the same minister: if all Albertans were to retake their driver's exam and get new drivers' licences, how on earth does this government propose to avert the utter chaos that would occur from that?

MR. COUTTS: Well, Mr. Speaker, that is strictly speculation, and as much as I respect the individual who brought that forward and made that public yesterday and as much as I respect the question that has come from the hon. member opposite, we've taken the initiative within our department this morning to take a look at the federal security bill and the regulations and the legislation around that. We'll be doing a thorough analysis to see if it's actually true that every Albertan would have to take a new test and get a new driver's licence. We'll do our thorough investigation of that and confirm that with Albertans as time goes on.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-West, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Long-term Care Facilities

MS KRYCZKA: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, the impact of an aging population is already being realized in Alberta, especially so with residents in our long-term care centres. Many have complex health needs that require a much higher level of care. The Calgary health region, for example, while working to balance its budget, has been decreasing staff and, thus, the hours of care the residents receive in their long-term care facilities, and many upset residents and families have written me and my colleagues over these changes. My question is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. What assurances can the minister offer to senior and disabled residents of their long-term care facilities that they will not suffer as a result of the reduction in care hours?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, I have looked into this particular matter on behalf of the hon. member, and I can assure her that for the Calgary health region and other health regions throughout the province the well-being and comfort of their patients is an issue that they take seriously.

The change that's being referred to by the hon. member in Calgary is a minimal one. It will amount to a reduction of five and a half minutes of care per patient per day, which in a 24-hour day is not a particularly large change, but it will save the region $2.5 million. Now, I am being assured, Mr. Speaker, by the regional health authority that that $2.5 million will be reinvested in improving their facilities and in the care of their residents. This is in addition to the Calgary health region adding $4.6 million to long-term care funding, including the addition of 47 beds this year and an additional 50 long-term care beds each year – each year – over the next five years.

MS KRYCZKA: Mr. Speaker, my next question is also to the same minister. Many residents of long-term care facilities were already concerned about living conditions prior to these latest changes. What is the minister doing to improve the living conditions in Alberta's long-term care facilities?

MR. MAR: Well, first of all, Mr. Speaker, over the last five years we have provided $280 million in capital for funding and upgrading of long-term care beds, but the recent findings of a long-term care review told us that many facilities are out of date with the contemporary needs of residents that are there, and we need to listen to these recommendations. We are implementing nine different strategies to improve continuing care in Alberta. One of those strategies is the regeneration of our long-term care centres. We want to create better environments for residents and improve care for clients with complex needs. Three- and four-bed wards will be phased out by the year 2006, and we are enhancing the skills and increasing the supply of workers that can provide assistance in this particular area.

Seniors' Benefits

MS BLAKEMAN: Mr. Speaker, for several months seniors across this province heard that the government would be cutting them off from Alberta Blue Cross coverage. An information bulletin was sent from the department of health to Tory MLAs saying that coverage was not in danger of being cut, but no one would or could deny that a committee had been struck to examine age-related benefits. My first question is to the minister of health. Are there any other plans to have Alberta seniors pay more for services that they used to get for free?

MR. MAR: No plans at this time, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you. My next question is to the Minister of Seniors. Can the minister tell us: what are the criteria and time line for the age-related benefits committee?

MR. WOLOSHYN: That, Mr. Speaker, is not my committee, so I can't give her an answer.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you. Then as the Minister of Seniors could I ask you to please find out about this committee and get some information through to me?

MR. WOLOSHYN: For my own edification I'll be pleased to do so, and I'll share the information with the hon. member.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Automobile Equipment Infractions

MR. YANKOWSKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When I drive down the streets, I'm seeing all kinds of automobile equipment infractions. I'm seeing blue and green headlights, red and blue turn lights in the front of vehicles, blue turn lights on the rear of vehicles, and other various modifications. On a ride-along with police they point out these infractions but don't do anything about them because they say that the Alberta statutes are either unenforceable or the fines are so small that ticketing is not worth the effort. Also, for $200 curbers can get any patched-up, written-off car back on the streets, and percentages of mechanically unsafe cars on our streets are much too high. My questions are all to the Minister of Transportation. Could the Minister of Transportation tell this Assembly why digression from established regulations regarding automobile equipment is given such low priority in Alberta and enforcement is very rare?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. STELMACH: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. All Canadian jurisdictions, including the province of Alberta, place top priority on equipment legislation. There are certain penalties and regulations under the Traffic Safety Act that, of course, monitor and help enforce some of these various modifications to equipment that the hon. member has mentioned. We are currently reviewing fines in some of the areas that the hon. member has brought forward, and these will come in force, of course, once discussions have been completed with Alberta Justice, and then we go through a process through standing policy. We're looking forward to implementation sometime in mid-May of this year.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. YANKOWSKY: Thank you. Since any digression from established regulations for colours of lights and vehicle design pose a safety hazard, why are you not doing something immediately to curb these modifications?

MR. STELMACH: Under our current legislation any modifications, as mentioned by the member, are against the law, and police do enforce these violations. However, as the hon. member had brought forward in the past, some of the fines for these modifications, so to speak, are less than the cost of repair, et cetera. As a result, we are reviewing that whole policy, coming forward with changes. I know that I will be getting support for this legislation.

MR. YANKOWSKY: Will the minister consider bringing in some form of enforceable auto inspection program to get mechanically unsafe vehicles off our roads and streets?

MR. STELMACH: Mr. Speaker, we're not going to make mandatory inspections. At least, we're not entertaining that at the moment. However, we are working very diligently with the Minister of Environment in terms of working out a plan to ensure that any modifications to muffler systems are such that do not increase not only the noise level but also the amount of emissions. With the co-operation of the Minister of Environment we will be bringing the policy forward in this House soon.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Day Care Review

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Serious staffing problems confront Alberta day cares. In April 2001 the Minister of Children's Services told the House that the Clelland day care report was not yet ready to be tabled. Seven months later, in November, we were again told that the report was not ready, and 11 months after that, in March of this year, we were told that the report was still not ready for the House. My questions are to the Minister of Children's Services. After 19 months is the Clelland report ready to be tabled?

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, I think it's fair to say that the Clelland report was part of a number of reports that have been done not only on the basis of day care worker thoughts and observations and recommendations but on work that we have done further to the Clelland report to look at a system of providing early child development within centres in Alberta that will make meaningful and effective differences in the lives of the people who subscribe to day cares.

Let's come back to the basic tenet of providing day care service in Alberta. It is to provide supports to families who are the number one providers of services to children. Our system of providing subsidies to families who have low incomes so that they can make proper choices in day care has been the premise of being able to provide quality day care and quality assurance in day cares in Alberta.

One of our findings at the outset through our work on the Clelland report pointed out something that's been a very difficult hurdle in overcoming how we would do anything different in providing supports for families taking their children to day care. That was the fact, Mr. Speaker, regrettable as it may seem, that some day cares charge the province more – in other words, through the subsidies of the family – than they would charge families who did not require subsidies. It was that discovery through the implementation of a process of learning about day cares and through the Clelland report that created a great difficulty.

Mr. Speaker, if we were to examine the books of every day care to follow through to make sure that this wasn't a common practice – and I don't believe it's a common practice – we would have some difficulty in equalizing the supports. What we will come out with before Christmas of this year is a report that has been approved that I think will satisfy many of the issues of day care parents or parents subscribing to services in day care and will be met favourably by day cares and workers throughout this province.

DR. MASSEY: My question is to the same minister. Why won't the minister share this publicly paid for Clelland report with Albertans?

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, I think that would be sharing only part of the information. At the time we release our report and discuss the recommendations with Albertans, we will provide some background information relative not only to the findings in the Clelland report but the findings of other studies that we have done on this subject.

DR. MASSEY: To the same minister: when can we expect to see the Clelland report?

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, you can expect – and I said it in my answer to the first question – that before Christmas we will provide assurances to Albertans that they have been listened to, reports relative to all our findings on the day care issue, that we would bring them forward at that time.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Balancing Pool Shortfall

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In the government's desperation to keep a lid on electricity bills just before the last provincial election, so many rebates were paid out of the Balancing Pool that it was left with a $345 million deficit. Three guesses as to who is going to make up that deficit. The Balancing Pool's annual report says: "It is expected that a charge to consumers will be levied in the future to collect the anticipated short-fall." My question is to the Minister of Energy. Will the minister level with this Assembly and with all Albertans and tell us by how much electricity prices will have to rise when the $345 million Balancing Pool shortfall is added to customer bills?

MR. SMITH: Mr. Speaker, the Balancing Pool has announced that there will be no charge or credit to consumers in 2003. I think that's the first important fact.

Secondly, the deferral account changes each year, Mr. Speaker, based on the results of the Balancing Pool operations and on electricity prices from now to 2020. In a marketplace that is in excess of $5 billion between now and 20 years from now there will be fluctuations, positive and negative, and the Balancing Pool, which is an appropriately skilled group, will advise the government and will advise consumers appropriately on how much credit and how much deficit sits in the Balancing Pool. The original decision to dispose of the assets that were held in the Balancing Pool was one that got consumers their very own money back as quickly as possible. It was paid out in a 12-month period. It was a prudent decision.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, given that the assurance has been made that this will not be added to bills in 2003 and, further, given the minister's assumption that bills would be coming down in 2003 and 2004, can he tell us approximately how big the deficit is expected to be in 2004 and how much that will translate into in terms of an increase in people's power bills in the year 2004?

THE SPEAKER: Well, that's a lot of detail, hon. member.

MR. SMITH: That's correct, Mr. Speaker; it is a lot of detail.

THE SPEAKER: Well, there is a provision for detailed information. It's called Written Questions.

The hon. member.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister please tell us: given that the black hole in the Balancing Pool deferral account is not going to get considerably bigger as a result of this year's sales of the Clover Bar, Sheerness, and Genesee power contracts, what effect will that have on bills?

MR. SMITH: Well, again, Mr. Speaker, that is substantial detail. We would be more than pleased to entertain a written question or a return.

I can say that the Balancing Pool has announced successful sales of certain tranches of 100-megawatt levels from the Balancing Pool into the private sector, and that will be added to the balance sheet, the income statement of the Balancing Pool, and on a regular basis and under generally accepted accounting principles the Balancing Pool comes forward and tells the government and all Albertans exactly what the status of their account is.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister wants to supplement?

MR. NORRIS: Yes, I would, Mr. Speaker. The member opposite has continued after the Energy minister for several days now, talking about energy deregulation and its negative effects. I'd like to actually offer some information to him that I think he'll find very interesting.

Since 2000, when deregulation started, the number of total immigrants into the province is up over 35,000, the number of international skilled workers . . .

THE SPEAKER: Hon. minister, please. [interjection] No, no, no, no. Sit down.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Infrastructure Funding

MR. CAO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that our Alberta government emphasizes partnerships – I call it the G3 partnership – among three levels of government in developing community infrastructure and given that the infrastructure plays a vital role in the development of the economy and the life of Alberta and also given that a few projects in my constituency are applying for such funding, my question today is to the hon. Minister of Transportation. In the G3 partnership what were the past year's ICAP funding and achievements?

MR. STELMACH: Mr. Speaker, Alberta has a very strong relationship, of course, with its municipalities, and in co-operation and consultation with those municipalities it was agreed that the primary priority of ICAP, the infrastructure Canada/Alberta program, is water and wastewater, followed by efficiency upgrades to municipal buildings. These are energy-efficiency upgrades. Then a second priority would be roads and bridges. I'm proud to say that all those applications that have come forward were centered around upgrades to water and wastewater.

Now, the whole ICAP is broken down into three areas. The first area is, of course, the entitlement that comes to every municipality based primarily on a per capita funding. Second, of course, is rural municipal green. Third is projects that are nominated by both the federal and provincial governments. On the provincial side most of the nominated projects are again related to water and wastewater. As a result, we have greatly caught up with the badly needed projects in the province of Alberta with respect to the green side, water and wastewater. To date the total program is about $169 million or so. One point some million is administration; the rest all went into the projects.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. CAO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To me the ICAP program is quite a successful partnership, so what I'd like to ask the same minister is: what about the P3 approach, that is the private/public partnership, in your areas of responsibility?

MR. STELMACH: There are, of course, further discussions with Transportation, Infrastructure, and Finance with respect to moving P3 projects for road construction and possibly vertical infrastructure, buildings. To date we have had good success with private/public partnerships. A new bridge was opened just recently, 50 percent of the cost borne by the private sector. It's a bridge over the Brazeau River. Of course, relationships with the Department of Transportation in terms of private/public: we've outsourced to the private sector all of the engineering project design and maintenance. That has saved anywhere from 28 to 35 percent in all of those categories.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Unemployment Rates

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. An unemployment rate of 5.8 percent is not good news for all Albertans. My questions are to the Minister of Economic Development. What is this minister's department doing to increase the employability and decrease the deplorable rate of unemployment for aboriginals in Alberta, since 17 percent of aboriginals, on average, and a whopping 27 percent of those on reserves are unemployed?

THE SPEAKER: Now, hon. minister.

MR. NORRIS: If I may, Mr. Speaker?

THE SPEAKER: Please.

MR. NORRIS: Thank you. The basic premise that 5.8 percent unemployment is troubling is not correct. In actual fact, most economists will tell you that a 5 percent unemployment rate is relatively low by anybody's standards. In fact, there's a skilled labour shortage in Alberta, upwards of 30,000 people, due to a white hot economy, so if people don't have jobs, it's not for lack of trying.

There were a number of questions in the member's comments. Referring specifically to aboriginal people, I have worked very closely with the minister of aboriginal affairs, and she may want to supplement. We have a number of programs ongoing with companies such as Syncrude and Suncor to look at ways of getting aboriginals to not drop out of school and to get into apprentice training courses. I'd be happy to provide the hon. member with the information on those courses in due course.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When the minister says that if people don't have jobs, it's not for lack of trying, how does he relate that to the average duration of unemployment for Albertan workers 45 years or older, which is 24 weeks long, compared to 13 weeks for the labour force as a whole? Those people are trying to get jobs.

MR. NORRIS: Well, clearly, Mr. Speaker, I would never indicate that anybody who is trying to get a job isn't trying in sincerity. Not being in my mid-40s, I can't relate to the hon. member's question as well as she might be able to, but I have no way of knowing what happens on those job interviews or what they do in the course of their employment search, so how can I comment on that? I just can't.

MS CARLSON: Well, perhaps the smart-aleck minister can relate to this one: what measures are being taken to narrow the gap between the youth unemployment rate of a staggering 11.2 percent when the provincial average is 5.8?

MR. NORRIS: Well, Mr. Speaker, you know, last year it was rookie and softball and weakest link. Now at least there's "smart" in the title, so I feel like I'm improving a bit.

I have every belief in the Alberta economy. In fact, I know full well that in the Minister of Learning's department there are programs which accelerate people who don't want to necessarily go to university to get into trades. We're doing as much as we can through SAIT and NAIT, Mount Royal, and Grant MacEwan, which are some of the best institutions in all of Canada, and we will continue to provide opportunities. But, in actual fact, the best way to provide job opportunities is to provide a low tax base, continue to provide solid government, which we do, and have the best economy in all of Canada, which we do. So jobs are plentiful.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development to supplement.

MS CALAHASEN: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think it's really important to be able to address the concern that the hon. member has brought forward. She is right in terms of looking at the unemployment rate of aboriginal people, but in this province we're doing a number of things which are really important when talking about skill development and education. As a few examples, we've got the Calgary Urban Aboriginal Initiative Committee, which is collaborating with the Metis Nation of Alberta and Treaty 7 in development and implementation of a skills training program. That's one example. HR and E and petroleum land administrator training, Stoney tribal administration, Suncor, Olympia Energy, and UtiliCorp. HR and E, Treaty 7, and Metis Nation of Alberta zone 3 labour market development units project involving SAIT and Bow Valley College. First Nations resource training project involving four nations with industry, federal government, HR and E, and Petroleum Industry Training Service. Gift Lake employment training project working with PITS and Edge Petroleum. Petroleum Project 2000, Northern Lakes College, are training aboriginal workers in the High Level area for employment in the oil and gas industry. In fact, Alberta Learning has been involved with the Metis Nation of Alberta. We've granted 44 native education projects for school jurisdictions.

Mr. Speaker, I can go on with some of the really great projects that have been going on, but I think it's really important to address that issue.

THE SPEAKER: Well, hon. minister, thank you very much for that supplementary answer. There is a provision in the Routine, of course, for ministerial statements, that the hon. minister might want to take advantage of.

Hon. members, before we proceed, might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests

(reversion)

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

MR. MASKELL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly 54 talented students from Afton school. Afton is an arts alternative elementary school, and I'm certainly looking forward to attending their Christmas production in a couple of weeks. Unfortunately, they've just left the Assembly. Accompanying the students today are their teachers, Miss Erin Wilkes, Miss Brienne McBride, Mrs. Sherri Larson-Ashworth, and teacher aide Ms Lisa-Marie Szyron. I'm also pleased to introduce parents Mrs. Sarah Schwartz, Ms Teri Urquhart, Ms Elaine Daly, Ms Monica Velt, and Mr. Brian Noorman.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and to members of the Assembly Anand Sharma. Anand is the chair of the Council of Alberta University Students and is in the public gallery. With your permission I would ask Anand to stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

MR. HUTTON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure for me to rise today and introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly a fine exchange student from Germany. Felix Wilke is a 17 year old from Minden, Germany, and he is staying with a wonderful family in my constituency, the Gordons, which includes one of our pages, Maya Gordon. It is a pleasure for me to introduce him, and if he would please stand and receive the warm welcome from this Assembly.

head: Recognitions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

St. Albert Children's Theatre

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today in this Assembly to acknowledge the incredibly spirited creativity and demonstrated artistic talents displayed by the adults and children in St. Albert Children's Theatre. Boasting 20-plus years in growth, St. Albert Children's Theatre is a program that is unique in concept. It teaches a wide spectrum of artistic facets including dramatics, vocals, and dance. This program is educational and beneficial to youth, giving them the opportunity to acquire a variety of skills that will last them a lifetime.

Opening on the 29th of November is their current production called Footloose, which is the story of a free-spirited kid who reminds a local minister that it's no sin to be young.

So I would like to acknowledge all those who are involved in St. Albert Children's Theatre.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Cerebral Palsy Association Bikeathon

MR. RATHGEBER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure to stand and recognize and congratulate members of the Alberta Cerebral Palsy Association who very recently conducted a very successful stationary bikeathon. Specifically, in the members' gallery today are Ronda Blasco, Carolyn Brown, and Ralph Leibo from the Alberta Cerebral Palsy Association.

Several members of this Assembly had the opportunity to participate in the stationary bikeathon. I was one of the participants in this fun-filled event, and Ralph, who suffers from cerebral palsy, was also a willing participant. The team that I was on was the celebrity team, and I might add that the Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs and also the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona participated. The entire event raised in excess of $3,000 dollars for the Cerebral Palsy Association, and a good time was had by all.

I'd ask all members of this Assembly to recognize the Alberta

Cerebral Palsy Association for their fine dedication to finding a cure for this disease.

Thank you.

St. Mary & St. Mark Coptic Orthodox Church

MS CARLSON: Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to congratulate St. Mary & St. Mark Coptic Orthodox Church, located in Edmonton-Ellerslie, and their congregation on celebrating two milestones in their history in Edmonton. This year marks the 25th anniversary of the church and the launching of their Canadian Coptic community centre project.

The mission of the centre is to serve the community by promoting the spiritual, physical, and emotional well-being of all through love, caring, and compassion. The CCCC is committed to building a healthy and safe community by promoting, supporting, and strengthening family values and spirit. As a multifaceted wellness centre the aims are to provide advice, counseling, and programs on a variety of issues to satisfy spiritual, social, health, educational, and recreational needs. The centre will provide a community focal point and gathering place in a safe and supervised barrier-free environment. They will facilitate events and activities through partnerships and co-operation with other nonprofit organizations.

We wish them every success in the years to come.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Redwater.

Redwater Area Forest Fire

MR. BRODA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In May of this year we had a large forest fire near Redwater which threatened homes and possible life. Today they're still putting out peat moss hot spots.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to recognize the great service our volunteer firefighters provided to our community. They not only came from Redwater but from the whole of Sturgeon county and surrounding municipalities. I'd like to recognize the excellent leadership provided by Sturgeon county fire chief, Bart Clark, and Redwater's chief, Andy Makowsky, the numerous community groups and individuals for their assistance in preparing meals and providing security. Also, special thanks to the Edmonton garrison military personnel for providing relief for those volunteer firefighters who worked 10 to 12 hours, many of them high school students.

Please join me in saluting all firefighters in this province for a job well done.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

2:40 Northeast Alberta PDD Regional Conference

MR. DANYLUK: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The fourth annual northeast Alberta PDD regional conference was recently held in St. Paul and attended by people from all over Alberta. This year's theme, Building Community Capacity for Individuals with Developmental Disabilities: Opening Our Hearts, Our Minds, and Our Doors, clearly reinforced and recognized the importance of community support, co-operation, and innovative ideas.

The conference also provided a unique opportunity and experience for our students from the regional high school to translate the board's business plan into a multimedia art project inspired by Inuit story quilts. Congratulations to organizers Donna Desjardins, Don Schultz, Glen Christensen, the regional high school art students, and all of the other community partners for a job well done and another phenomenal success.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Dunvegan.

Edward and Stella Pimm

MR. GOUDREAU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to recognize the 2002 Alberta 4-H Hall of Fame inductees, Edward and Stella Pimm of Berwyn. Induction into the Alberta 4-H Hall of Fame is the highest honour that 4-H leaders can receive. Edward and Stella Pimm joined the ranks of 55 volunteers inducted into the 4-H Hall of Fame since it began in 1971. The 4-H Hall of Fame recognizes men and women who have made significant contributions to the 4-H program, agriculture, and rural life. Their leadership exemplifies the 4-H motto of learn to do by doing. They live out the 4-H pledge of service through their commitment to their club, community, and country through all activities and levels of the organization.

Mr. Speaker, Edward and Stella Pimm have made volunteering in the 4-H program a way of life for themselves and their family. In addition to their significant work with 4-H, they were honoured individually as Berwyn's citizen of the year. In 1989 the Pimm family's contributions to agriculture and rural community life earned them the Alberta farm family of the year award.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Dr. Chuck Chamberlin

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and recognize Dr. Chuck Chamberlin, an exceptional educator and environmentalist and a person of extraordinary commitment and passion for community service and common good. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods and I had the privilege of working with Chuck for many years at the University of Alberta.

Chuck Chamberlin came to this province in 1969 from the University of Minnesota and joined the Faculty of Education, where he retired as a professor of education in 1995. During his tenure at the U of A he published an impressive number of articles in scholarly and professional journals for teachers. After retirement from teaching, Chuck immersed himself in a cause most near and dear to his heart, the protection of the environment. He has served the Sierra Club for many years as a member and leader and served over the years as issue leader for Sierra Club's urban sprawl campaign and encouraged municipalities to embrace the concept of smart growth.

As well, Chuck Chamberlin has worked as a volunteer for many years both with my constituency office and my office at the Legislature. His contribution has been a godsend. He has continued this extraordinary commitment until a few months ago, in spite of the fact that he has been battling cancer for many years.

As I pay tribute to Chuck, I invite my colleagues in the Assembly to join with me in honouring this dedicated educator, passionate environmentalist, and model citizen.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Statement by the Speaker

Calendar of Special Events

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, as we're closing the month of November and as we do have the process of Recognitions in the House, the chair would just like to advise that November, this week and other weeks, will also be covered. What invariably happens is that when recognition is given to some types of weeks and recognition is not given to others, my office does receive inquiries why such is the case.

November is also Crohn's and Colitis Awareness Month, Diabetes Awareness Month, Family Violence Prevention Month, National Community Safety and Crime Prevention Month, Osteoporosis Month, Pancreatic Cancer Awareness Month. September to December is part of the United Way fund-raising campaign. October/November is our time for the March of Dimes campaign. October to December is the Christmas Seal campaign. The time frame October 21 to December 15 is the missing children calendar campaign. November 1 to December 15 are Girl Guides mint cookie weeks. November 24 to 30 is National Home Fire Safety Week. November 24 to December 1 is National AIDS Awareness Week. November 25 to December 6 is White Ribbon Week. Hanukkah will begin on November 29 and go through December 7. November 28 to December 4 will be the time frame for the Toys for Tots campaign, and November 28 to December 24 will be the Christmas kettles appeal. November 30 will be St. Andrew's Day.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

MR. JACOBS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With your permission I would like to present two petitions today, one on behalf of the Member for Livingstone-Macleod, who has received a petition from 73 Albertans living in his constituency petitioning the Legislative Assembly of Alberta to urge the government of Alberta to deinsure abortion.

My other petition is on behalf of 20 Albertans from the constituency of Cardston-Taber-Warner, again petitioning the Legislative Assembly of Alberta to urge the government of Alberta to deinsure abortion.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan.

MR. LOUGHEED: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to present a petition signed by several members of the Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan constituency. These constituents request that abortion be removed from the list of insured services as provided by Alberta Health.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish to present the petition signed by 20 residents of St. Albert and area urging the Legislative Assembly to "remove abortion from the list of insured services that will be paid for through Alberta Health."

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm presenting today a petition signed by 83 Edmontonians, primarily residents of the Beverly Senior Citizens Lodge, petitioning the Legislative Assembly to urge the government to "not delist services, raise health care premiums, introduce user fees or further privatize health care."

head: Introduction of Bills

Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act, 2002 (No. 2)

MRS. NELSON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Minister of Justice I'd like to beg leave to introduce Bill 38, the Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act, 2002 (No. 2).

Mr. Speaker, the elements of this bill have been reviewed by the members opposite, and we request that it proceed in the normal fashion.

[Motion carried; Bill 38 read a first time]

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, I wish to table five copies of the communique released by Canada's provincial and territorial ministers of energy and environment at their joint ministers' meeting in Halifax on October 28, 2002. The communique lists the 12 principles agreed to by the provinces and territories as being the necessary basis of a national plan to address climate change.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Innovation and Science.

MR. DOERKSEN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings this afternoon. I'd like to table copies of the 2001-2002 ICORE annual report. ICORE, of course, stands for informatics circle of research excellence.

The second tabling would be a copy of the 2001-2002 Alberta ingenuity fund annual report.

The third tabling is copies of the Alberta Heritage Foundation for Medical Research triennial report for 1999-2002 in the form of a 2003 calendar as well as the financial statements for 2001-2002 in this session of the Legislative Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, copies of all these reports have been previously sent to MLA offices, and I encourage them to read them because these highlight some of the very successful things the province has done in the areas of research and medicine, science, and information communications technology.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

MR. DUNFORD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have six tablings today. First, the College of Chiropractors of Alberta annual report for the year ended June 30, 2002; the Alberta Veterinary Medical Association radiation protection program 2001 annual report; the College of Physicians and Surgeons of Alberta radiation health administrative organizational annual report for the period of April 1, 2001, to March 31, 2002; University of Alberta authorized radiation health administrative organization annual report, 2001-2002; University of Calgary authorized radiation health administration organization annual report for the period April 1, 2001, to March 31, 2002; Alberta Dental Association and College 2001 radiation health and safety program annual report, January 1, 2001, to December 31, 2001.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

MR. LORD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today in the Assembly to table the requisite number of copies of the review of school construction and operating cost committee's interim report and preliminary findings which highlights innovative ways in which significant savings might be realized when building new schools in our province.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

MR. MARZ: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table five copies of the policy of the College of Physicians and Surgeons of Alberta on the termination of pregnancy.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings today. The first is a carefully handwritten letter from constituent Mike Wolfer in which he notes that at the present stage his AISH payment is $855 a month while his rent has just gone up to $475, and he can't afford to pay for other things like fresh fruit.

My second tabling is also on AISH from Richard Gagne, and he is noting that "with the cost of living constantly going up and the AISH amount is not, people just can't afford to get the [most] basic needs met."

Finally, a letter from the office manager of the Spina Bifida and Hydrocephalus Association of Northern Alberta noting that on behalf of adult members of their association that are receiving AISH she would ask that we "appeal to our provincial government to see the need for an increase in benefits."

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have one tabling today. It's appropriate copies of a letter dated November 8. It's from Ms Patricia Brownlee of Calgary and is addressed to the Minister of Environment, copied to me. She expresses in this letter deep concern about the Alberta government's opposition to the ratification of the Kyoto protocol and its general failure to protect the environment of this province.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have a number of tablings today. First I am tabling five copies of a speech delivered by Senator Douglas Roche, formerly a distinguished Member of Parliament for the Progressive Conservative Party, entitled Demanding Conservative Government Action for the Homeless, addressing the Edmonton housing and homelessness conference. Senator Roche pointed out that "the poor and homeless in Canada have been forgotten" by governments more interested in "appeasing big business than social justice" and that "persistence of poverty in Alberta . . . is outrageous." He believes that it's time that political leaders responded to the voices of marginalized people, calling for social reinvestment and a building of a more inclusive society.

I have some other tablings, Mr. Speaker. The first one is copies of an electricity bill from some individuals who own a recreational property at Square Lake, and they have only been there since Labour Day three times, but the charge for one month for their bill even though they're using almost no power is $160.

Secondly, I have another electricity bill sent to me by a seniors couple in Edmonton. They are paying $63 for a small condominium and live on a fixed income. They write, "We could not have made it last year without the rebates and wonder how we will survive this year."

My fourth tabling is also an electricity bill for a three-bedroom house in Wetaskiwin. The charge there, including all of the administration fees, is 8.18 cents per kilowatt-hour. They have sent me several bills that show their electricity has gone up from $105 in July of 1999 to $500 in the year 2002.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I have an electricity bill from a farm near Westlock. The bill was $535 three years ago when there were two families and a significant amount of livestock on the farm, including 80 cows and 60 horses. It is now $600 to $900 per month, even though most of the livestock has now been sold.

Speaker's Ruling Tabling Documents

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, before recognizing the next member under this part of the Routine, the chair wishes to advise the Assembly that the sheer volume of the tabling by the Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, roughly some 6,700 postcards, requires a slight relaxation of the rules concerning tablings. To meet the requirements of Standing Order 37(3) would mean that there would have to be a minimum of 10,000 pages to provide an additional four copies, which would consume significant resources.

Members may recall that the chair relaxed the rule on December 8, 1997, with respect to a great number of cards presented during the national unity debate. In keeping with the 1997 ruling, the original postcards will be kept in the Clerk's office for the historical records of the Legislative Assembly of the province of Alberta, but for this occasion, the library and the opposition will receive a copy of the first page with a notation that the original can be viewed at the Clerk's office.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

MR. YANKOWSKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table 6,126 postcards which I have received on behalf of the Minister of Seniors at the National Housing Day of Action vigil on November 22, 2002. These cards, signed by concerned individuals in a concerted campaign, urge the provincial government to provide funding to construct necessary, affordable housing as quickly as possible and continue to fund emergency and supportive housing needs. Our thanks to all those who co-ordinated the campaign and to those who signed the cards.

Climate Change Action Plan

33. Mr. Jonson moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly of Alberta, consistent with its commitment to protecting Alberta's environment, hereby endorses and accepts the following principles agreed to by all provinces and territories on October 28, 2002, to provide the basis for the development of a national climate change action plan.

- (1) All Canadians must have an opportunity for full and informed input into the development of the plan.
- (2) The plan must ensure that no region or jurisdiction shall be asked to bear an unreasonable share of the burden and no industry, sector, or region shall be treated unfairly. The costs and impacts on individuals, businesses, and industries must be clear, reasonable, achievable, and economically sustainable. The plan must incorporate appropriate federally funded mitigation of the adverse impacts of climate change initiatives.
- (3) The plan must respect provincial and territorial jurisdiction.

- (4) The plan must include recognition of real emission reductions that have been achieved since 1990 or will be achieved thereafter.
- (5) The plan must provide for bilateral or multilateral agreements between provinces and territories and with the federal government.
- (6) The plan must ensure that no province or territory bears the financial risk of federal climate change commitments.
- (7) The plan must recognize that benefits from assets such as forest and agricultural sinks must accrue to the province and territory which owns the assets.
- (8) The plan must support innovation and new technology.
- (9) The plan must maintain the economic competitiveness of Canadian business and industry.
- (10) Canada must continue to demand recognition of clean energy exports.
- (11) The plan must include incentives for all citizens, communities, businesses, and jurisdictions to make the shift to an economy based on renewable and other clean energy, lower emissions, and sustainable practices across sectors.
- (12) The implementation of any climate change plan must include an incentive and allocation system that supports lower carbon emission sources of energy such as hydroelectricity, wind power generation, ethanol, and renewable and other clean sources of energy.

And be it further resolved that this Assembly, in the absence of agreement on a national plan by provinces and territories, denounces any unilateral ratification by the federal government of the Kyoto protocol in violation of the principles of constitutional law, convention, federalism, and long-established practice whereby the federal government must adequately consult with and seek the consent of provinces prior to ratification of international treaties or agreements that affect matters of exclusive provincial jurisdiction or that require provincial actions or legislation to achieve implementation where implementation will result in significant harm to the economy of Alberta and of Canada.

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, the resolution that is before the Assembly this afternoon represents a strong statement from Alberta in support of the 12 principles that all provinces and territories agreed must be respected in any national plan on climate change. These principles were developed at a joint meeting of environment and energy ministers in Halifax on October 28, 2002, and they signify that all provinces and territories stand behind a made-in-Canada approach to climate change.

The 12 principles, Mr. Speaker, are not vague or ambiguous. They are clear statements that will protect Canadians' interests. They ensure greenhouse gas emissions are reduced across the country without sacrificing the economic prosperity of Canada. The fact that all provinces and territories, without exception, agreed to the principles speaks to the tremendous will across this country to tackle the issue of climate change in a way that makes sense for Canada and accommodates the unique needs of each province. Rarely is there such unanimous agreement among all provinces and territories.

But despite the provincial unity and agreement on this issue, the federal government still intends to ratify Kyoto by the end of the year and released its own Kyoto implementation plan on November 21, 2002. Mr. Speaker, this plan was not shown to the provinces prior to being released and provinces were not consulted about its content.

Even more troublesome, Mr. Speaker, the plan does not adequately address the 12 principles agreed to by the provinces. In particular, it totally disregards three of the principles that are of great importance to the provinces, those being principles 2, 6, and 7. These three principles ensure no region or jurisdiction bears an unreasonable share of the climate change burden. They emphasize that the federal government has an obligation to financially back its climate change objectives and not simply leave these costs to the provinces. They also recognize that benefit from assets such as agricultural and forestry sinks must go to the provinces. However, the federal government plan also fails to answer the question of how the Kyoto targets will be met and at what cost, questions that provinces and Canadians have been saying must be clearly answered before a decision regarding Kyoto ratification is made.

Mr. Speaker, it is unfortunate that the federal government has opted to act unilaterally on this matter, but it is certainly not uncharacteristic, particularly on the issue of Kyoto. The federal government has ignored the concerns of the provinces from day one. Ottawa has not undertaken any meaningful consultation with the provinces about Kyoto, the issue of whether or not to ratify it, on the nature of ratification, and how it will be implemented. Provinces called for a first ministers' meeting on climate change, but Ottawa refused. Then in September the Prime Minister took the astonishing step of announcing his intention to have Kyoto ratified before the end of the year despite the fact that meaningful consultations with provinces had not occurred.

Mr. Speaker, some say that it is not possible for governments to co-operate on this issue because the federal position is so different from the position of most provinces. However, I believe a co-operative relationship on change is possible. There are certain examples where the federal government and provinces have worked well together. The development of a health care dispute mechanism was done successfully, and we've worked co-operatively on the softwood lumber dispute. The G-8 conference held in Kananaskis, in southern Alberta, was a success. I can attest personally to the fact that federal officials and ourselves and the two governments generally worked together to make that an overall success. All governments can work together on a made-in-Canada climate change plan that makes sense for Canada and the provinces. We can provide a framework represented by these 12 principles for that co-operation to begin.

Alberta is certainly willing to tackle the issue of climate change. In fact, we are the only government in Canada to put our words into action. Not only have we released a detailed plan on how we will reduce greenhouse gas emissions in Alberta, but we have backed that plan up with legislation which is currently before this Assembly. Mr. Speaker, Alberta's approach will bring substantial but more gradual reductions in emissions. It involves actions aimed at reducing emissions, investing in research and technology, providing leadership, and adapting to change. It is based on partnership and working with industry, consumers, and all Albertans to address climate change. The plan is designed to be cost-effective while achieving meaningful long-term emission reductions, unlike Kyoto, which will simply move the creation of emissions to other parts of the world.

Mr. Speaker, the fact that Alberta is the first government in Canada to release such a detailed plan is not surprising. Alberta has shown leadership on climate change for many years. We led the way by establishing Climate Change Central, a unique public/private sector organization that has been working since 1999 to reduce greenhouse gas emissions in Alberta through research, education, and conservation measures.

We have also taken major steps to improve the energy efficiency of Alberta government facilities. In other words, Mr. Speaker, Alberta has moved beyond the rhetoric and beyond the good intentions to meaningful action. We have said time and time again that we are willing to work with other provinces and the federal government on a broader Canadian plan to address climate change. However, the federal government's response has been: it is Kyoto or nothing. The Prime Minister and his Environment minister have been clear that they plan to ratify Kyoto before the end of the year despite the fact that many reports show that implementing Kyoto will result in significant harm to the economy of Alberta and Canada.

At this point we are hopeful that the Prime Minister will reconsider his position, but if he does not reconsider, Alberta has other avenues to explore within the legal and constitutional realm. The province's legal position will depend on how the federal government intends to implement Kyoto, and we do not yet have a clear enough implementation plan from them, even though two federal plans have been released. Mr. Speaker, under the Constitution the federal government cannot legislate within areas of exclusive provincial jurisdiction. The development, management, and conservation of nonrenewable resources is exclusive provincial jurisdiction. Therefore, Alberta can challenge the federal government if its implementation plan intrudes into Alberta's jurisdiction.

There are also constitutional questions surrounding the ratification of Kyoto. Mr. Speaker, there is clear precedent in Canada that the federal government must undertake meaningful consultation with provinces and obtain their consent before ratifying a treaty that impacts the areas of exclusive provincial jurisdiction or where implementation requires provincial action. The federal government has done this in the case of many international trade agreements and many human rights conventions, but it has not happened with Kyoto. Alberta's Kyoto External Advisory Committee, chaired by former Premier Peter Lougheed, is looking at these legal and constitutional areas and will be providing advice to the Alberta government on how best to proceed. In the meantime, this resolution is one more step that Alberta can take to call on the federal government to stop its unilateral approach and work with the provinces and territories towards resolution of this particular matter.

Mr. Speaker, I understand that there are somewhere in the neighbourhood of nine major conferences that have been held on this particular topic since the initial concept of the Kyoto accord was developed about, I believe, eight or nine years ago. The activity in Canada, of course, I think is indicative of our priority that we put on the environment, but we certainly have to develop a plan which will work and which will fulfill the needs of Alberta and protect its economy. It has to provide for the needs of the whole nation and protect our economy as well.

One cannot help but wonder why at this particular point in time our neighbour to the south, that has certainly been examining the accord over the years, has chosen to not stop protecting the environment but, in fact, is moving forward with their own particular plan adjusted to their particular needs. Likewise, our Commonwealth sister country of Australia has been involved for a great time and has with due consideration decided not to become part of the accord, although again, as I understand it, they are developing many environmental measures that will be designed to protect their climate overall.

It raises the question, Mr. Speaker, as to the viability of the Kyoto accord, and it emphasizes, I think, and underlines the importance of us as Albertans being part of a Canadian program which is going to be sure to provide the reductions in emissions that are sought but, at the same time, not damage our economy and allows the country of Canada to continue to grow and prosper and to be able to serve its people as well as the many countries that we are associated with.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to have an opportunity to speak to Motion 33, which is the government's own 12-step program, as they see it, on climate change. As with any of these programs they are very, very good in theory, and the principles as outlined here sound excellent and, certainly, very motherhood and apple pie, but as with any of those programs the problems really come with the application and the interpretation. Unfortunately, I have absolutely no hope that this government will interpret these principles as I see them. However, I still don't have much hope that they will interpret them in a manner that most Albertans would find to be . . .

MS CARLSON: Yes, to them and acceptable to their families. So we go forward with this motion cautiously and take a look at what's been said so far and what we hope will be said in the remainder of the afternoon.

The minister didn't do very much to eliminate my concerns in terms of explaining the principles one by one and going into some detail on them. The way these principles are styled in the motion makes it very difficult to object to most of them in principle, and in practice it will be quite easy to manipulate them into the interpretations we've seen and in the way the government perceives things. For instance, when the government talks about protecting the environment, what they really mean is mitigating damage by industrial activity. I see protecting the environment as ensuring that we have a sustainable environment for generations to come. Same sentence, quite different interpretations, and that is the basic problem with these principles as they are laid out.

If we take a look at the background on this particular document, we see that at the joint meeting of energy and environment ministers in Halifax on October 28, 2002, a document entitled Provincial and Territorial Statement on Climate Change Policy was released at that time. The purpose was to establish principles agreed to by all of the provinces and territories that would guide the development of a national climate change plan. These are the same ones as we see before us now, but not all of the 12 principles in the motion have received federal approval. There are reservations about three of them. As the province has said, acceptance of or willingness to negotiate on the principles as a prerequisite to co-operation with the federal government – there's been little co-operation between this province and the federal government or other provinces at this point in time. So it becomes, then, very difficult to negotiate when you won't sit down at the table or when, as we saw the Minister of Environment do, you rudely get up and leave.

If we take a look at the 12 principles and we take a look at the end of the motion where it talks about "in the absence of agreement on a national plan," which is primarily denouncing any unilateral ratification, and then goes on to talk about how that plays out, what it's really calling for is for the federal government to consult with the provinces. But there's an inherent contradiction in this, Mr. Speaker, in that this province is demanding consultation from the federal government when they refuse to go to the table themselves. So how do they see this being resolved in a timely fashion? They don't. In fact, what they want is a fight. They are hoping that the advice they're going to get – and I must say that I did see that huge troop of senior lawyers from the Justice department coming into the Assembly yesterday after 5:30. I know that this province will go well armed to that particular discussion and hope that they will get a constitutional challenge ability, but that isn't the right answer for Canada, and it isn't the right answer for us as participants in a global community. So I really raise some cautions and some concerns about that and hope that this provincial government truly has a good-faith intent to negotiate, because so far it doesn't look like that's happening.

I'd like to take the principles as laid out here one by one and talk about them a little bit. The first one talks about: "All Canadians must have an opportunity for full and informed input into the development of the plan." Well, that's an excellent principle, and we ask for that kind of principle to be applied to all of the major decisions this provincial government makes. But how do we see them actually interpret that? Time after time we see who they consult as being, for the most part, special-interest groups or consultation done through a process that is not open, that is not transparent, and that is not verifiable. So we would hope that when they take a look at this principle in this regard, they don't hold the federal government up to a standard quite different from the one they apply to themselves.

I'd like to see the bar raised for everybody. Let's know what the consultation process is. Let's know that it's open to whomever wishes to participate. Let's know that it's going to be open in a manner that is accessible to all people, that it is completely transparent, and that the information they get is verifiable. So nothing less in this particular case than something equivalent to forensic audits would be satisfactory, in my opinion. Then let them use that framework as a model for all future consultations in this province on key issues.

The second principle talks about the plan ensuring that "no region or jurisdiction shall be asked to bear an unreasonable share of the burden and no industry, sector, or region shall be treated unfairly," and so on. Also sounds very good when you first take a look at it, but we don't have any definitions. What do the terms "unreasonable" and "unfairly" mean? I know for sure, having listened to this government for 10 years, that their interpretation of those terms is quite different than mine, and how they apply to sectors and individuals and consumers and the environment is also quite different than mine. So I'm hoping this afternoon that we'll get someone who will stand up and define them, but it's how these get applied that really matters the most.

This government, the Alberta government, has said before that the determination of undue burden can only be made by the jurisdiction accepting the burden. Well, this just sets up everybody for a huge fall. The principle likely applies to the terms "unreasonable" and "unfairly" as well. If this is the case, then it's likely that each region will claim that it has been assigned an unreasonable burden and that each has been dealt with unfairly. So, then, if each region, sector, and industry has exclusive rights to determine the reasonability and fairness of its treatment and no other authority, who can claim otherwise? So what happens then is that you get a huge deterioration into a situation where no meaningful plan could ever be implemented.

What we need is some sort of ability to, first of all, define those and then someone who can interpret whether or not that, in fact, has happened. If everybody just takes their toys and goes to their corner and says, "It doesn't work for me because it's unfair," we never get any agreement. So definitely we need some definition here, and there needs to be someone who can do the arbitration when people and industries and sectors and governments don't agree. I don't see any provision for that here, and that would've shown some leadership on behalf of this government if they'd have done that. You know, if they'd just give us a cursory definition of those two terms and then propose some sort of an arbitration method, I would be prepared to support this principle.

The third one talks about: "The plan must respect provincial and territorial jurisdiction." This is going to be one, I imagine, that is going to be quite controversial as time goes on because it hasn't been determined yet, Mr. Speaker, whether or not the federal government tackling environmental issues in our province does or does not exceed their jurisdiction or interfere with Alberta's. There have been ongoing disputes, there have been all kinds of discussions about this in the past, but we don't have, I don't think, any clear answer on this. Environmental issues are not exclusively the jurisdiction of the federal government and, I would say, are also not the exclusive jurisdiction of the province, so let's get some definition there too.

We take a look at the fourth principle. It talks about including the "recognition of real emission reductions that have been achieved since 1990 or will be achieved thereafter." Well, this is one that I really like. I think that this is excellent to have in there. I would be very dismayed if it wasn't in the federal plan when they roll it out. Certainly those organizations, companies, industries, governments who have taken action since that date, 1990, should have acknowledgment for the work that they have done, and there should be some way to measure that work and to give them credit for it. This to me should have been the first principle. It's really a fundamental building block of any kind of plan being able to go forward and be achievable. So this one is good, and let's hope we see it at the federal level and that we don't need to take too much time discussing it.

The fifth one talks about "bilateral and multilateral agreements between provinces and territories and with the federal government." Well, of course, to do that, you've got to go to the table. So if they're not prepared to go to the table at this stage, what exactly does this particular principle mean? I think it means they just get together and discuss it, but it could also mean: do you want subsidiary agreements between the provinces? So we would need to know then: what would those agreements look like? What would be in them? How would they expect to roll those agreements out? What would be any of the triggers for breaking the agreements? Those kinds of things we need to know, just more information. It just isn't here, and we need to see that.

The sixth principle talks about ensuring "that no province or territory bears the financial risk of federal climate change commitments." Well, this is an interesting principle. Does this also mean that no province or territory will bear the financial gain of federal climate change commitments, because, Mr. Speaker, there will also be some gains. We don't see any talk about that. So I would suggest that you can't have it both ways. If you won't take the risk, then you can't have the gain. So some of that discussion should be had. [interjection] Exactly. That's exactly right.

So do they really mean here that no one province should bear the entire or majority of financial risk or that none of the provinces or territories bear any financial risk? Not laid out here and left wide enough open that it could be interpreted any way the provincial government wants to. Certainly, we think that not one province should bear all the risk, but there is some burden to be shared here. As consumers we will bear some of the cost and some of the risk and we will also benefit from those gains.

As we see technological changes and innovations, we as consumers benefit from that. If we are sloppy consumers and overuse resources, then we will pay the price for that. That's just normal market conditions. I'm not sure why a free market government would be so concerned about looking at this kind of protectionism for their own risks, because they for sure are the first at the trough when there's money to be had. So I have some concerns about that one.

Principle 7: "The plan must recognize that benefits from assets such as forest and agricultural sinks must accrue to the province and territory which owns the assets." Also, this is one that I heartily agree with and wish it had been closer to the top of the list. It's very reasonable, and for me it goes without saying that this is the way that this should happen and just makes good sense. It's reasonable. It provides an incentive for provinces to maintain or develop the carbon sinks that will come under their jurisdiction and to sustain their own industries in the manner that they have in the past, so I think this is excellent.

Principle 8 says that "the plan must support innovation and new technology." In some ways this is a good principle. I like it too, and in some ways the province is moving forward on this. But, you know, we don't have a definition of "support" here. Once again, is this province asking the federal government to do something that they are not prepared to do? While we see money going into research and development and while we see the province looking at doing retrofits for their own buildings, we heard yesterday in debate a number of people in this Assembly who did not support dollars or funding or grants or loans for consumer retrofits.

So, on the one hand, the feds are expected to support innovation and new technology. Does that just mean that they're going to support it on the business side too? What about the consumer side? This province is clearly on the record as not wishing to do that. I hope they change their mind. I hope that what we see is a full definition of innovation and new technology which includes financial support at both the federal and the provincial levels as we move through this transition time and that it truly reflects a real need being faced on the front lines by consumers today; that is, some sort of access to funding for retrofits. Retrofits are not cheap; they are expensive. If we expect all of us to move forward carrying our share of the need for technology upgrades, there's got to be some sort of provision in there. So let's see what they do on this.

Principle 9: "The plan must maintain the economic competitiveness of Canadian business and industry." What does this mean? The way I interpret it, it looks completely unrealistic, because I don't see in here any differentiation between rewarding businesses who are best in class and rewarding businesses who do nothing. Could we see some definitions in here? As it stands, I don't like it all.

Principle 10: "Canada must continue to demand recognition of clean energy exports." Once again, what do they mean? What does "recognition" mean? Does it mean global recognition? Does it mean money? Does it mean credits? There are no definitions in here. So let's get some information so that we can know what it is that we're supposed to be debating in this particular principle.

The 11th principle:

The plan must include incentives for all citizens, communities, businesses, and jurisdictions to make the shift to an economy based on renewable and other clean energy, lower emissions, and sustainable practices across sectors.

It's ironic that the government plan, as we've seen it, doesn't include any of these provisions, Mr. Speaker, but they certainly expect the feds to ante up.

Let's talk about who should provide that kind of support. We all know that the most effective support comes when it's closest to the source. Do you want the federal government, who are very removed from the people, to develop these kinds of plans, or should that support come at the most direct level? What I would like to see are municipal funding grants to look at consumer incentives because that's the level of government that's closest to the people. It can provide often the most effective and efficient kind of service. So this government could show some leadership by taking a look at that. At the very least, they should look at doing it themselves. Hopefully, they'll do this.

It's my belief that on a global level what we see is that plans or laws that desire to meet non status quo targets have incorporated into them incentives. This government is quite happy to talk about that, particularly the Minister of Environment, who is on record as saying that. They see incentives for businesses and jurisdictions in the form of penalties, like fines and imprisonment and so on. So what does this government mean with this application when they talk about incentives? Do they want negative ones? Do they want positive ones? Are they willing to participate? Are they willing to look at delivering incentives to the most direct level of availability and adaptability, which I believe is municipal government? It doesn't talk about that here.

The 12th principle talks about: "The implementation of any climate change plan must include an incentive and allocation system that supports lower carbon emission." This one looks like it's alluding to an emission credit trading system. I hope they read the Leader of the Official Opposition's speech yesterday, because he talked extensively about how this could be put in place and be operable and move us forward on this. So, of course, this is a principle we support because it is very consistent with the Official Opposition's proposals. If they need more information or detail on that, I know for a fact that the Leader of the Official Opposition would be willing to participate in that discussion.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

MS DeLONG: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you for giving me the opportunity to speak to this resolution this afternoon. I wanted to speak to this resolution because it touches on the best way to protect Alberta's economy and environment, but it also shows a deep understanding of how federalism should work in this country.

I emphasize the word "should" because the resolution stands in stark contrast to the debate going on right now in Ottawa. Well, we can't really call it a debate; can we? What's going on there is a Prime Minister unilaterally steamrolling any opposition. It's one individual on an extended retirement tour who has disregarded the concerns of the provincial governments that would be forced to implement the Kyoto protocol at the ground level.

But in the resolution before us today we see a difference. We see governments of all political stripes from all regions of the country and on different sides of the Kyoto debate who are able to agree on 12 common principles centred around one common theme: that the essence of federalism should be fairness so that no jurisdiction suffers for the benefit of the other and that no laws are passed without a healthy, honest discussion between all governments concerned. All provinces have agreed to the principles enshrined in this resolution. That should count for something. In my mind, it shows that the provinces have at least said: let's ground this discussion in reality. Given reality, Mr. Speaker, it will be clear why I don't want to see a Kyoto plan; I want to see a Canadian plan tailored to Canadian realities.

Today I want to highlight those Canadian realities so that we can all get a sense of what it is we're really talking about. Canadian reality number one: Canada produces only 2 percent of the world's man-made greenhouse gases. Two percent; that's it.

AN HON. MEMBER: What percent?

MS DeLONG: Two percent, and by the way, it's only 1/10,000 of a percent of the total worldwide Kyoto gases that they want to reduce in Kyoto. As it should be, Kyoto cheerleaders say: what does it matter? Well, it matters quite a bit when the United States, which produces about a quarter of the world's man-made greenhouse gases, isn't even a party to Kyoto. It matters when China and India, two of the world's largest producers, have no reduction targets under Kyoto. It matters a whole lot when we consider that roughly half of the world's countries – half of them – who have less stringent pollution laws than Canada, are not party to Kyoto.

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

There is no incentive for nonsignatory nations to reduce their output of greenhouse gases. Given that many of them won't sign on to Kyoto because they have no intention of reducing their output, what is the point of forcing industry to comply with an impossible time line meaning losses to their bottom line and our economy when not so much as a dent will be made in the overall amount of global greenhouse gas emissions?

Canadian reality number two: we're the only North American country with targets to meet under Kyoto. The President and Senate of the United States had the wisdom not to ratify this accord, and because of this, while one of our major exports is clean energy to the United States, we would get no credit for those exports under Kyoto. It's as though the protocol envisions a world in which the only countries that exist are those that have signed on. Further, southern Ontario is flooded with smog from the northeast United States, so while we force automakers to either shut down or reduce manufacturing levels, all in the name of ostensibly reducing pollution, more than enough pollution will come sailing over the border.

This leads me to wonder: just how does Canada benefit by crippling our manufacturing industry if we'll see no real improvements in the air quality? What do we say to the plant technician who will lose his job because a narrow-minded federal government failed to work with the provinces or industry to get a deal done that works in the best interests of all involved? It's time for the federal government to stop and take a breath and not ratify this flawed protocol.

Canadian reality number three: we have no European bubble. It's been speculated that countries in the European Union will not have to make any reductions whatsoever to meet the targets set by the Kyoto protocol. This is because they have signed on as a bloc of countries rather than individually. So what we've got there is a mixture of robust economies like Germany, stagnant former eastern European economies, traditionally low polluters like Norway and other Scandinavian nations, and other countries which do not have a heavy reliance on manufacturing or resource development. This mixture allows the European nations to assess their strengths and weaknesses and make deals which at minimal cost result in minimal actual change in their emission levels.

Essentially, these countries trade off with one another in order to strengthen the overall economy of the European Union. For them Kyoto is about economics, not the environment. It makes them money while it breaks our back. All of this has drastic implications for the Canadian economy. While the other signatories to Kyoto are either European countries that have something to gain by signing the protocol or developing countries that have no targets, Canada is the only country that will pay a heavy price, and of all the provinces it is ours that will bear the lion's share of that price.

Let's talk about our province, and let's talk about some Alberta realities. In doing so, let's refute the critics on the front steps of the Legislature who say that we've done nothing to protect our environment. Alberta reality number one: in 1990 we started provincial cleanup air strategy consultations so that all provinces could become involved in Canada's effort to reduce greenhouse gases. Like the resolution before us today, that's federalism at its finest. I'd argue that the federal Liberals could learn a thing or two.

Reality number two: since 1999 the amount of electricity generated from wind energy in Alberta has doubled. We've worked with industry to develop new, cleaner ways of producing petroleum and natural gas. Flaring has been reduced dramatically. We're working on new technology for clean-burning coal.

Alberta reality number three: the Alberta plan, which has recently been developed by the Minister of Environment, provides a comprehensive framework for reasonable, well-thought-out actions to reduce greenhouse gas emissions. We're protecting the environment, and we're ensuring that our economy does not take a hit that it cannot withstand. We want to ensure that our economy can not only withstand environmental action but can actually thrive underneath new legislation. We need to work with the people who are most affected by it.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, Alberta reality number four: Kyoto will mean economic ruin in this province. Some Albertans believe that Kyoto will only hurt the energy sector. Nothing could be further from the truth. Kyoto will affect all parts of the Alberta advantage, right down to the family-owned corner store. If we allow Kyoto to drive business from Alberta, it means fewer jobs. It means less money in the pockets of Albertans.

There is a better way, Mr. Speaker. Let's work with the environmental groups and industry. As today's resolution suggests, let's keep getting together with other provinces to design a Canadian plan to accommodate Canadian realities. Let's work with our researchers in our universities who are on the cutting edge of designing clean technologies for Alberta's industry sector. Let's have an open discussion with industry and work to set time lines and tough emission standards that, unlike Kyoto, they're actually capable of meeting.

These are the initiatives we are focusing on. This is what other provinces are talking about. We're talking about a plan that achieves real results, one that actually improves the environment, one that does not unfairly penalize the average Albertan for working hard in a successful province. This can be done, Mr. Speaker, and this is what this resolution is all about.

I therefore support this resolution and call upon all the members of this House to do so as well. Thank you.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Under Standing Order 29(2) we have five minutes allocated for questions to the hon. member. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Would the member please tell us whether or not she would support a provincially supported retrofit consumer program, like Manitoba has had for many years or like the territories has had for many years, where there would be a fund available, either through a loan or granting program, for consumers to do retrofits on their homes?

MS DeLONG: That's something that the private sector could handle very well. Thank you.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to ask the hon. member if she can tell us how much actual CO₂ has been reduced in the province since 1990 as a result of the steps that she claims the government took at that time.

MS DeLONG: I'm not sure how much greenhouse gases have been reduced, but I am very aware of the pollution that has been reduced in Alberta since 1990. Our flaring program has been extremely successful working with industry, and we have by far exceeded our targets when it comes to pollution.

MR. SMITH: I'd like to ask the member a question, Mr. Speaker: if she would compare or care to comment on the efficacy or the efficiency of having Albertans reduce their electrical consumption during the peak time from 4 to 8 and using market price signals. Would that be a more effective way of doing it than offering direct cash incentives to the marketplace, thereby distorting the marketplace?

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

MS DeLONG: Thank you very much. I think that's an excellent idea. That's something that we would be able to institute without paying to either consumers or industry, and it would result in less pollution.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's clear that the member didn't understand the question that I asked earlier. The point is not whether or not the private sector can provide services. The point is: can consumers afford to retrofit their homes? The answer is in large part no. Does she support a program, a loan or a grant, where consumers would have access to money for retrofits?

MS DeLONG: I personally am replacing my two-pane windows with three-pane windows, and, yes, the payout is going to be over several years. It is something that you can actually save money on in terms of retrofitting your home. Some of the easier things that save a tremendous amount of energy and reduce pollution have to do with just going around and finding the places in your home where air is escaping or where the cold air is coming in. There's a tremendous amount that you can do to reduce your bills and reduce pollution that way.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Is the hon. member aware of the comments made by the Minister of Environment, who clearly says that CO₂ is not a pollutant, that global warming and air pollution are two different things, and is she also aware that while flaring has been reduced in Alberta, the venting of natural gas – and that means a lot of methane, which is a more aggressive greenhouse gas than CO₂ – has actually increased dramatically? Is she further aware that since 1990 the amount of CO₂ that has been emitted in Alberta has increased by over 30 percent?

MS DeLONG: Yes, I am very aware of the difference between pollution and greenhouse gases. Greenhouse gases are what we are breathing out right now, CO₂. It's nontoxic. It's naturally occurring.

In fact, plants cannot exist without CO₂. It's something that is required in our environment, and it's totally different from pollution. It's pollution that we need to concentrate on much more than so-called greenhouse gases.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Hon. member, are you rising to speak?

MS CARLSON: No. A question. Has the time expired?

THE ACTING SPEAKER: I believe the time has now left us.

Before I recognize the next speaker, may we briefly revert to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests
(reversion)

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development.

MS CALAHASEN: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Today I have the great pleasure of introducing two wonderful ladies who are seated in our members' gallery. One is from my constituency originally, who has now moved to Edmonton. Her name is Kim Thibeault Caudron, and she hails from Jossard, Alberta, where the fair usually is held. With her is a good friend of hers, Yasmine Shaheem, who is from South Australia, visiting Kim in Canada, so she's been touring Alberta the last month to see what it's like. I think we should give them a warm welcome from the Legislative Assembly.

head: Government Motions

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to make just a couple of comments on the information that's been put forward in this motion. First, I would like to note that my constituents in Edmonton-Centre support the ratification of Kyoto.

AN HON. MEMBER: Not all of them.

MS BLAKEMAN: Well, the ones that live there and vote, as compared to the many MLAs that I'm delighted to have actually live in the constituency who maybe vote somewhere else, are very supportive of Kyoto. I want to put that on the record because they've made it very clear to me that they expect me to do that.

Further to that, Motion 33 is not to be seen as an either/or situation. If it is in conjunction with the ratification of Kyoto, then we're all for it. If it's an either/or situation, there is not the support in the constituency of Edmonton-Centre for that.

The next thing I would like to say is: I'm not a federal Liberal. I don't think there's been a cheque that's been cashed in my name to join that party. I want to make that clear, because I know that members of this House are very fond of constantly pitching back on us and attempting to have the provincial Liberals accept responsibility for what's happening on the federal level. I don't think my colleagues here on the Conservative side are any happier with the poor performance of their federal cousins than I am with my federal cousins. So let's just get that on the record.

It also seems to me that to a certain extent part of this debate is about the battle of the scientists, and I will also put it very clearly on the record that I believe in the science of Kyoto. I believe in the work that's been done by the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change. I believe that that's a fair system. The scientists do gather and review published material, and thus far the scientists that have been brought forward by the other side in this House have either not published anything that I can find or, in fact, their work has not been reviewed by the IPCC. So I will take the IPCC science anytime.

Now, when I look at the 12 points here – and I think my colleague for Edmonton-Ellerslie has been quite clear that many of these are pretty self-evident points and hard to disagree with at face value. The trick here is always in the implementation of it and in the interpretation of it. I've now been elected long enough to go through the debates on electrical deregulation and on the privatization of health care, otherwise known as Bill 11 in this House, and know how important it is to get that all written down, because, boy, does the land ever shift underneath your feet once the bill is passed and the government decides to put a different interpretation on things. So nailing down exactly what the interpretation is and what the implementation is is very important, and I'm not hearing that kind of detail coming forward, so I would like to hear it. I hope that in this debate we would have that kind of very detailed information brought forward.

Now, the first point is about consultation. I'm a big proponent of consultation, but I also have to say: just a minute here. This particular issue of climate change has been on the world agenda for a significant period of time. I believe that the first time the scientists met on this was in 1973. Now, that may have not hit the world newspapers at that time, but certainly we can start counting from 1988. Most definitely we can count from 1992, which was the Rio summit, which resulted in the beginning of what we know as the Kyoto protocol.

So, you know, frankly, unless you've been living somewhere without access to any kind of mass communication, I see no reason why people would not have had an ample opportunity to read and consider or to watch and consider or to listen and consider what's being brought forward in this debate. I don't know how much more consultation is being anticipated by this point 1, and perhaps the minister can fill in the gap there. There have been, as I pointed out, at least 10 years of world discussion on this. How many more years does he want to see happen? All Kyoto does is agree on a target. We can keep talking for some time about how we wish to implement it, but let's be realistic. That's what Kyoto does: it agrees on a target. We can continue to talk, if you like, on the implementation of it.

The second point is asking about the mitigation. Just let me get the exact wording here.

The plan must ensure that no region or jurisdiction shall be asked to bear an unreasonable share of the burden and no industry, sector, or region should be treated unfairly. The costs and impacts . . . must be clear, reasonable, achievable, and economically sustainable. The plan must incorporate appropriate federally funded mitigation of the adverse impacts of climate change initiatives.

This is where I start to sense the differences that are applied between how this government wants to be treated and how this government treats others. Certainly, I don't know how realistic it is to be insisting that there be federally funded mitigation and, at the same time, to be insisting that all these natural resources are ours. That strikes me as a schism in thought here and a gap in logic. It seems to me that we're more than happy to take the wealth of the bonanza that's left under our feet, but there is no wish to be responsible for the by-products of that wealth. This doesn't stop us from making money from oil, but I think we have to recognize the responsibility for what that product of oil does and to accept that. If we want to own and benefit from this, then we're going to have to shoulder some of the responsibilities for the damages of it.

Section 3 is talking about respecting provincial and territorial jurisdiction. Well, supposedly, or on the surface of it, an obvious point. But, again, I have no reason to trust, and based on two extensive debates in this Assembly on electrical deregulation and the privatization of health care, I have triple no reason to trust this government on blank statements like that on blank cheques. So I would like to know exactly what they are anticipating by that.

When we look at principle 4, the plan includes "recognition of real emission reductions that have been achieved." Of course, an obvious point. If people have done the work, they should get credit for it.

Principle 5: providing for "bilateral or multilateral agreements between provinces and territories and with the federal government." Fine.

Now, principle 6. "The plan must ensure that no province or territory bears the financial risk of federal climate change commitments." This is a very interesting one. I think that when we in Alberta have had the advantage of being able to emit and take up much more of the atmospheric ability to recover from greenhouse gas emissions, we have to take that proportionate share of the costs for it. I am interested in knowing if that is what is anticipated and is what is accepted by the government on this particular point. I think that if the government is saying, "Well, we want all the advantage of being able to continue to do whatever we're doing without shouldering the appropriate economic and whatever else is involved proportionate to what we are emitting," I think there's a problem here. I'm perfectly willing to say: it all has to be fair and equitable. Indeed it does have to be fair and equitable. I think the risk is greater of not doing anything and of being left behind. In this struggle against ratifying Kyoto, my concern as an Albertan is that this government resists so strongly, digs their heels in so strongly, that, in fact, we could be left behind, and I think that's a greater economic disadvantage than what's being considered here.

Principle 7. The government plan recognizes "benefits from assets such as forest and agricultural sinks." This one, I think, is a very good one, because while we in Alberta have the accidental bonanza of oil and gas under our feet, those provinces that have taken steps to preserve or expand their carbon sinks through their forestry management or their agricultural management policies should definitely be given credit for doing that. Conversely, in Alberta if there's been any evidence that we have put forward policies that took away from or reduced our forest or agricultural sinks, then we have to pay the appropriate price that goes with that.

Points 8, 9, 10, 11, and 12 are, you know, evident: yes, sure, fine, wonderful, delightful, excellent. But when we get to the section "Be it further resolved," where it's talking about denouncing "any unilateral ratification by the federal government of the Kyoto protocol in violation of the principles of constitutional law," et cetera, this is where I and my constituents come to a full stop in being able to support the government. As I said when I started, this is not an either/or debate for us. We very clearly stand for ratification of Kyoto, and let me be clear here. I have not had one letter, e-mail, phone call, or in-person encounter with a constituent who was not in favour of ratifying Kyoto. I have had e-mails, letters, phone calls, and in-person encounters with constituents who very clearly have asked me to support Kyoto. So I want to be very clear that that's where my constituents are coming from.

What I see involved in this "Be it further resolved" paragraph that is at the end is a form of provincial NIMBYism, and I question whether the province has any intention of moving forward on this seeing as we have a government that is still disputing the science of this, that is still saying: no, we'll bring our own scientists forward. Again I say that we have 2,000 of the world's best scientists that have put their heads together. They've done reviews, and they've come to a consensus on the statements they put forward on the science of this, and we still have the government going: well, we don't believe them. I'm sorry, but I'll bet those 2,000 scientists against the 74 members of the Conservative caucus any day. If we're going to talk about the science of this, that's where I'm going to go, with the IPCC.

Let me give you an analogy. If we had a neighbour in our community who was growing noxious weeds or sorting manure or something particularly unpleasant in their backyard, as a society we look to the local authority to come in and say: clean that up, or we're going to do it for you. If they don't clean it up, then, in fact, the local authority does clean it up and bills them for it, and we are partly in that situation or could move into that situation with Alberta. So I would hope that Alberta would move forward and would work with the federal government in this ratification.

I think that in this instance I'm glad I live in a federation. I'm glad that there is another authority that can speak for me and that can speak for my constituents. We do end up with instances and different issues in this federation that have arisen from time to time where a province may take a point of view that in fact does not fit with the rest of the country, and I see that happening here on this issue of climate change and the ratification of Kyoto. I'm with the ratification of it.

So I just wanted to give that input into this debate, and I appreciate the opportunity for having been able to speak to it. Thank you.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Under Standing Order 29(2) we have five minutes for questions to the hon. member. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I welcome this opportunity to ask the Member for Edmonton-Centre a question. Of those constituents to whom you have talked to about this issue, could you share with us what their thoughts are on how the Alberta government has handled their communication plan in regard to both the content and the cost?

MS BLAKEMAN: If I have to synthesize what I heard, putting it all together, then it would be people's concern that they were being given a massive propaganda rollout. Again, they were looking for the science of it. What people have talked to me about is going to town halls that have been sponsored on Kyoto, reading up on as much as they could get, phoning in to radio stations, and participating in debates that way. Their level of understanding of the issue was much higher than I had expected, frankly, and in a number of cases they had a better grasp than I did at the time. So they were . . .

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Hon. member, this opportunity is to exchange very brief questions and answers. It's five minutes to be allocated with different members.

MS BLAKEMAN: Okay. I'm still just trying to answer the question.

MS CARLSON: Point of order, Mr. Speaker, under Standing Order 13(2).

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie on a point of order.

Point of Order

Explanation of Speaker's Ruling

MS CARLSON: Could you explain that ruling in a little more detail? We have had a series of questions asked in this Assembly where both the question and the answer were of greater duration than the one we just heard.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Hon. member, are you rising on a point of order or a point of clarification?

MS CARLSON: Well, it's a point of order under Standing Order 13(2), which asks the Speaker to further clarify his comments.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Anybody else on the point of order?

Standing Order 29(2) allows five minutes for questions and answers, back and forth. This is an opportunity for at least three or four or five members to ask questions, and if it's going to be a four- or five-member inclusion, it has to be succinct. Therefore, more people can ask questions and receive answers. That has been the tradition of the five minutes that has been allocated until now, and I believe that we would like to continue in that light.

The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

MR. KNIGHT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to ask a question of the member opposite with respect to the resolution before us or, at least, the motion that speaks to the resolution. I don't see anything in that resolution that says federal. What it says is "a national plan." A national plan indicates a plan that would be a partnership. It's a national plan; it's not a federal-against-provincial resolution. So my question is: given that this is a national plan, would we expect that the risks and rewards should be shared?

MS BLAKEMAN: In responding to the first part of the question on why I had referenced "federal" rather than "national," I'm reacting to the words that are used in the document. Section 5: "The plan must provide for bilateral or multilateral agreements between provinces and territories and with the federal government." Principle 6: "The plan must ensure that no province or territory bears the financial risk of federal climate change commitments." Under "Be it further resolved," about four lines in: "denounces any unilateral ratification," et cetera, et cetera, "constitutional law, convention, federalism." So I was referring to the federal government and federalism because it is referenced, as you can see, a number of times in the document.

Thank you.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Could the Member for Edmonton-Centre tell us if her constituents want the government to spend any more money on an information campaign other than the $3 million plus they've already spent?

MS BLAKEMAN: No, they don't. As I mentioned, they're very concerned with what they see as very one-sided propaganda and again referencing other attempts by this government in the recent past with Bill 11 and the electricity deregulation, both of which had massive government propaganda rollouts. The figure, my constituents are saying, is $5 million, not $3 million, including the costs of agency fees for development of television ads and the payment of those ads and the radio ads.

Thank you.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky, did you want to rise on a question?

MR. KNIGHT: No. Thank you.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Hon. Member for Red Deer-North, are you rising on a question?

MRS. JABLONSKI: Yes. I just wonder if the Member for Edmonton-Centre knows what percentage of her constituents are oil field workers?

MS BLAKEMAN: Most of my constituents, a lot of them, work in the service industry and retail sector. There are not many oil field workers; it's a fairly small percentage. Most of my constituents are retail and service workers and then in a professional strata – dentists, lawyers, doctors, accountants – plus 13 percent are retired people. For oil field workers I don't have a definitive number for you, but I don't think it's a high number.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Before I recognize the next speaker, may we briefly revert to Introduction of Guests?

head: Introduction of Guests

(reversion)

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

MR. DUNFORD: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In the members' gallery this afternoon are a couple of people I have the honour to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Legislature. Nychcole Penny is a young woman from Lethbridge that happens to work in the Lethbridge-West constituency office. She's accompanied today by Ace Northcott and also accompanied by my executive assistant, Shelby MacLeod. Please provide them a warm welcome.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

MRS. JABLONSKI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What is Canada? Canada is a country made up of ordinary people living ordinary lives. Canada is a country made up of ordinary people who stick to their guns or, more politically correct, who stick to their principles. Principles are fundamental truths. They are primary elements. Without principles we are like driftwood floating on the sea: going somewhere but going nowhere at the same time.

Before us today we have a resolution introduced by the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations that upholds 12 principles. Like the 12 days of Christmas these principles bring us a gift of reason that will protect all Canadians from those who are without reason. Mr. Speaker, everyone here today will agree that the environment is a priority and we must take action to protect it, but taking action that does more harm to this country than good is incomprehensible. I find these principles to be straightforward and sensible, principles that every Canadian can easily understand. There is nothing hidden or secret, as my opposition colleagues have alluded to.

The first principle: "All Canadians must have an opportunity for full and informed input into the development of the plan." Are there any Canadians who would oppose this? The first principle of the national climate change action plan is not up for debate. Canadians want to be informed, and they want input.

The second principle:

The plan must ensure that no region or jurisdiction shall be asked to bear an unreasonable share of the burden and no industry, sector, or region shall be treated unfairly. The costs and impacts on individuals, businesses, and industries must be clear, reasonable, achievable, and economically sustainable. The plan must incorporate appropriate federally funded mitigation of the adverse impacts of climate change initiatives.

No region shall "bear an unreasonable share of the burden." Since all regions are required to share through federal transfer payments by giving or receiving, this burden, too, should be shared for no region of Canada is more equal than another.

"No industry, sector, or region shall be treated unfairly." Do Canadians believe in the universal golden rule, "Do unto others as you would have them do unto you"? You bet they do. This country is made up of a majority of people who use this as their guiding principle. We are just asking to extend that principle to industries, sectors, and regions.

"The costs and impacts on individuals, businesses, and industries must be clear, reasonable, achievable, and economically sustainable." Tell me how much it costs. Can I afford it? Will I be able to make the payments? Every Canadian asks these questions. These are principles we use every day in our lives. These principles need to speak to Albertans and to all Canadians, for even the scientific elite have not yet reached a consensus.

In the final clause of the second principle it asks that the plan "incorporate appropriate federally funded mitigation of the adverse impacts of climate change initiatives." This principle is one that has not been accepted by the federal government, but it shouldn't be too difficult, because I heard the federal Minister of the Environment say that they ran the numbers over and over and over and all they could determine is that the costs will increase by 3 cents a barrel. If the federal Minister of the Environment truly believes his own words, then he should have no problem accepting this principle.

The third principle asks that the plan "respect provincial and territorial jurisdiction." No Canadian would expect this line to be crossed. We pay our taxes through an honour system, and that system works. That's because Canadians live by their principles, and principle 3 is one principle of one truth that holds this regionalized federation together. This principle is ignored at the peril of our Canadian federation.

The fourth principle states that "the plan must include recognition of real emission reductions that have been achieved since 1990 or will be achieved thereafter." All the work and effort that has been developed since 1990 or thereafter cannot be ignored. This is a simple principle. We have taken positive action to protect our environment up to now, and this should be recognized. Do you think that those who live in the mountains, by the rivers and forests love and appreciate their environment less than those who live in the brown air of Burlington or the smog of Toronto? We know how beautiful and precious our environment is. We congregate every weekend to pay homage to the beauty of the rivers, the lakes, and the wilderness. We see the belching smokestacks of Sarnia, Ontario, in CBC presentations on Kyoto. We know we don't want that for our environment, and we have worked hard to prevent that from becoming part of our landscape. Recognizing the emissions reductions that we have painstakingly achieved since 1990 is the right thing to do.

The fifth principle states that “the plan must provide for bilateral or multilateral agreements between provinces and territories and with the federal government.” Is there anything new here? Is this not how Confederation has succeeded for the last 135 years? Mr. Speaker, this principle is what makes Canada great. It’s what keeps Canada together.

The sixth principle states that “the plan must ensure that no province or territory bears the financial risk of federal climate change commitments.” The Prime Minister and the federal Minister of the Environment have told us that the effects of the Kyoto protocol implementation plan will be minimal. They should have no problem accepting principle 6.

The seventh principle states that “the plan must recognize that benefits from assets such as forest and agricultural sinks must accrue to the province and territory which owns the assets.” Mr. Speaker, when I invest in RRSPs and I earn interest, I keep the benefits of my assets minus the income tax, of course. This principle, like others, is simply common sense. This one has not been agreed to yet, which I don’t understand. Why argue over this principle if the impact of the Kyoto protocol will be barely noticeable, as stated by federal officials?

The eighth principle states that “the plan must support innovation and new technology.”

MRS. JABLONSKI: Now, I know that my colleague from Red Deer-South, the Minister of Innovation and Science, is pleased with this principle. So are all Canadians. Innovation and new technology are the lifelines to the future. This, Mr. Speaker, is as fundamental as the other principles.

The ninth principle states that “the plan must maintain the economic competitiveness of Canadian business and industry.” Mr. Speaker, I heard the Prime Minister say himself that he would not tear down what he has helped to build. Would the federal government destroy its provinces? Would the federal government execute a power play that will end up in penalties that will throw Alberta and other provinces out of the game?

Principle 10: “Canada must continue to demand recognition of clean energy exports.” Our clean energy exports must be recognized by the international climate cops. An agreement that does not recognize these clean energy exports is one-sided, unequal, and punitive.

Principle 11: Provide “incentives for all citizens, communities, businesses, and jurisdictions to make the shift to an economy based on renewable and other clean energy, lower emissions, and sustainable practices across sectors.” Provide incentives. What a brilliant idea. The entire capitalist system is based on incentives, and besides we pay enough taxes now to provide incentives for good clean energy. If we would only shift payment from unnecessary projects and questionable printing jobs to clean energy incentives.

Principle 12: In implementing a climate change plan we must include an incentive and allocation system that supports lower carbon emission sources of energy such as hydroelectricity, wind power generation, ethanol, and renewable and other clean sources of energy.

We encourage development and design. Once again this 12th principle is fundamental to change.

Mr. Speaker, this land is your land. This land is my land. It is ours to work with, to play with, and to keep safe. The federal government knows that without the power to unilaterally implement Kyoto, their treaty promises will only be effective to the extent that the provinces agree to implement the plan. We know that the Canadian Constitution gives the federal government the authority to ratify an international treaty such as the Kyoto protocol, but implementation depends on the agreement and co-operation of the provinces.

Mr. Speaker, it is in the best interests of Canada that the federal government accept these 12 principles agreed to by all provinces and territories on October 28 of this year to provide the basis for the development of a national climate change action plan.

The Prime Minister of Canada needs to accept these principles. The Prime Minister does not want a black legacy. The Prime Minister does not want to push westerners to the breaking point. Even the supporters of the Kyoto protocol do not believe that the protocol would in itself reduce the planet’s temperatures. Is this dispute all about power?

Mr. Speaker, for the good of Canada, for the good of the people of Canada – the farmers, the mechanics, the auto workers, the steel workers, the labourers, and all Canadians – I respectfully demand that the government of Canada accept these 12 principles for the development of a national climate change action plan. For what is Canada if not a democracy of the people who stick to their principles?

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Under Standing Order 29(2) five minutes for questions. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. At one point the hon. member referred to something which I heard her to say was “questionable printing jobs.” Now, did she have in mind the questionnaire on the future of the heritage trust fund that the Minister of Revenue has distributed?

MRS. JABLONSKI: Thank you for the question. Mr. Speaker, I was more referring to the printing jobs that were paid for by the federal government that didn’t get done, that didn’t get completed, that were more than one, and that were given to people that I’m not sure deserved to have the job appointed to them.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am quite happy to ask a question with a very short preamble. This government supports royalty holidays and royalty reductions and tax incentives and tax reductions and all kinds of things of that nature on the business side, so it’s a surprise to me that they are not prepared to support a retrofit program for consumers. Does this member support some sort of a loan program or a grant program for consumers to do retrofits on their homes? Something that provides an incentive for us to move forward on this issue.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

MRS. JABLONSKI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I certainly support doing retrofits to our homes. For example, we can all do simple things like replacing the light bulbs with the energy-efficient light bulbs. We can make sure that we don’t have those drafts going through our homes. I think that because this is an initiative of the federal government and it’s the federal government that’s insisting that we go through with this at their rate of timing, then the federal government should step up to the plate and have some of these grants issued to all people in Canada.

DR. PANNU: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the hon. member. I heard her supporting these 12 principles. It seems to me that these 12 principles really would provide a very good framework for implementing Kyoto, not ratifying Kyoto. Is my understanding, therefore, right, that the hon. member's support for all these principles is, in fact, a support for ratifying Kyoto and the moving on to implementation?

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

MRS. JABLONSKI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I do not support the ratification of the Kyoto protocol. I think it's the wrong thing to do; however, I've also been informed time after time that the federal government is going to ratify. So instead of pouting or sitting back and saying, "I'm not going to play with you anymore," then I think that we're doing the right thing by saying, "If we have to go through with this, if you're going to do this, then at least recognize what all of your provinces and all of your territories" – and, you know, every single Canadian lives in a province or territory – "have said and what they've agreed to, and at least let us have that much input to something we don't agree with."

MR. HUTTON: I'd like to ask the hon. Member for Red Deer-North if her constituents have been contacting her with regard to the Kyoto protocol and if they are supportive of it at all?

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

MRS. JABLONSKI: Thank you. I have been contacted by a number of my constituents, and the majority of my constituents are not in favour of the Kyoto protocol. As you know, the MP from the Red Deer area is Bob Mills – is he still standing? – and he is breaking records in the House of Commons to let the people of Canada know what the people in Red Deer and central Alberta think of the Kyoto agreement.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, are you rising with a question?

MR. LORD: No.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: There being no further questions, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands has been . . .

MR. MASON: I have a question if there's still time, Mr. Speaker.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Yes.

MR. MASON: To the hon. Member for Red Deer-North: does that mean that the hon. member supports filibusters by the opposition when they feel that something is seriously wrong with what the government is proposing?

MRS. JABLONSKI: Mr. Speaker, when it becomes necessary to repeat over and over and over again to people who have a hearing problem, I would agree with a filibuster.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The chair now recognizes the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to speak to this particular resolution. I must indicate that I really had hoped to ask that question of a minister, because the great glee with which members opposite are following the filibuster in the House of Commons fills me with hope that we may, in fact, at some point be able to match the performance of the hon. member. [interjections] One can always try; can't one? That certainly gives us something to shoot towards, and we'll see how the government likes it.

Mr. Speaker, I want to begin by talking a little bit about the path not chosen by Alberta about 12 years ago. There's a report that has been circulated and tabled in the House called A Discussion Paper on the Potential For Reducing CO₂ Emissions In Alberta, 1988-2005. It was produced by the energy efficiency branch of the Alberta Department of Energy in September of 1990. That energy efficiency branch was one of the first victims of the cuts by the Klein government in the early and middle 1990s.

AN HON. MEMBER: Whose government, Brian?

MR. MASON: That was the Klein government.

MS HALEY: You referred to people by their names here instead of their ridings.

MR. MASON: Then I apologize, Mr. Speaker. The current regime.

There are a couple of points, Mr. Speaker, that are interesting. The summary of results from this report indicated that retrofit energy conservation measures in 1998 could achieve a savings of 250 PJ of fossil fuels and 21,639 gigawatts of electrical energy. The capital cost of doing so would be $6.7 billion and would result in a first-year saving of $2.2 billion per year. The average payback of the investment would be 3.1 years.

It goes on to say that adding future energy savings potential, the province's 2005 total fossil fuel use would grow by 11 percent of the 1988 level, down from an estimated growth of 38 percent with no energy conservation measures. I might add, Mr. Speaker, that that was a fairly accurate prediction because, in fact, there were no serious energy conservation measures adopted when this report was produced. Electrical use would decrease by 48 percent of 1988 levels by 2005. The overall result would be a net decrease in Alberta's energy use.

So we see, Mr. Speaker, that, in fact, the government's own report 12 years ago showed that Kyoto targets could easily have been met with a substantial saving to the Alberta government. It leaves us wondering why the government is trying to create the impression among Albertans that implementing Kyoto now would have a devastating effect on Alberta's economy. This is the road that the government chose not to take and thereby, by following the other fork in the road, have landed us in the position that we now find ourselves.

The second point I want to make, Mr. Speaker, is that the federal government also chose the easy road at the time. Even though the federal government participated in a series of discussions internationally and ultimately in negotiation of the Kyoto accord, they have failed since that time to take any significant efforts either. With these efforts that Alberta could have taken, the results would have been magnified tenfold by the federal government had they also taken action at that time.

The federal government has also failed to engage the entire country, including the provinces, in a serious negotiation and discussion about the future of the country under climate change. The federal government bears, in our view, a very significant responsibility for the current serious situation that has arisen around Kyoto. Only at the last minute did they start doing any advertising or communication about the accord. Now, Mr. Speaker, it's not good enough on an issue of this much seriousness to wait until the Grey Cup to start talking to Canadians about the effect of climate change. So we certainly think that the federal government is as culpable in this situation as this provincial government.

Now, I certainly think that we should be working co-operatively, in a co-operative federal manner, and I will say one thing in the federal government's defence, and that is that the provincial government of Alberta has waged guerrilla warfare against the Kyoto accord. They claim to want a made-in-Canada solution, but what they really want, Mr. Speaker, is just to kill the Kyoto accord. That's always what they've wanted, and they don't want to hear how it could be implemented in a way that would not damage the economy of this province. They simply want to kill it. So you have to ask yourself who they're acting on behalf of, whether or not they're actually acting for the people of Alberta or whether they are acting on behalf of oil companies based in Texas.

The government strategy of guerilla warfare has involved resigning from federal bodies that are charged with assessing economic impacts of Kyoto long before the federal government indicated that it was prepared to unilaterally ratify the treaty. It has involved things as crude as portraying chance meetings in hotel lobbies with federal ministers as international snubs designed to destroy relationships with the province of Alberta.

Now, I want to deal with Bill 32 for just a minute, Mr. Speaker. I find that it's very curious that this bill, which would have had to pass through committee stage and would have allowed extended opportunities such as those that have been grasped by the federal member for Red Deer – it has been now indicated that they're going to let this supposedly flagship piece of legislation die on the Order Paper. Why is that? They introduced this bill as if it was the centrepiece of Alberta strategy to fight the implementation of Kyoto, and now they're just going to quietly let it die after second reading, and instead they brought forward this particular resolution.

Well, I think the first thing is that there would have been an opportunity for the opposition to present amendments and to debate it at some length, and the government doesn't want that to happen. But I also think that it is such a flimsy piece of legislation that it would have been laughed out of the courts. For example, the whereas clause:

Whereas carbon dioxide and methane are natural resources, are not toxic under atmospheric conditions and are inextricably linked with the management of other renewable and non-renewable natural resources, including sinks, and then corresponding clauses in the legislation claim that as these are so-called natural resources, the government of Alberta therefore owns them. That this is going to provide the basis of a constitutional challenge is, quite frankly, Mr. Speaker, a complete joke. If you want to use carbon dioxide in an industrial process, you might be able to make the case, but of course 99 percent of CO₂ is going to continue to be released into the atmosphere as a nontoxic waste product, and no court, not even one in Alberta appointed by this government, would accept such a ludicrous proposition. So I think the government saw that the bill that they had indicated was their key and paramount piece of legislation in their strategy for dealing with Kyoto was laughable, and as a result they're going to let it die.

But suppose I'm wrong, Mr. Speaker. Suppose it is, in fact, a really important piece of Alberta strategy. Then why would the government let this particular piece of legislation die if it's so critical to the future of this province at this very, very critical juncture for Alberta and for the country?

I want to indicate, Mr. Speaker, that the resolution before us is a substitute for the first failed attempt of the government to launch a pro-Kyoto strategy. It served, I suppose, rather well as a forum for the Premier to stand in this Assembly and make attacks on the opposition and on the federal government and to encourage Albertans to be dissatisfied with the federal government. I think that the government's actions in this regard have been irresponsible and have stirred up a lot of anti-Canadian sentiment in this province completely unnecessarily.

Now, there are 12 principles contained in the resolution, and it may surprise some members opposite to know that we've gone through them in our caucus, and we are of the view that we can support these 12 principles. There are some that are harder to swallow than others, and there are some that are quite excellent as a statement, as we see it, of all of the Premiers and all of the governments of this country. They talk about how the provinces need to be taken into account, in our view, in a plan to implement the Kyoto accord. So if we just took these 12 principles alone, it would indicate, in our view, support for a rational and fair approach to ratifying Kyoto. But the government, of course, doesn't want that, Mr. Speaker, so they have added a 13th principle.

That 13th principle is contained in the "be it resolved" clause where it says: unilateral ratification of Kyoto "in violation of the principles of constitutional law" and so on and so on "that affect matters of exclusive provincial jurisdiction," which they now are calling CO₂, or that require actions by provinces that could be harmful to the economy of Alberta and so on. So they've added a principle. This is not one that the other provinces have agreed to. This is something that they've added as a "be it resolved" clause.

So, Mr. Speaker, I would like to introduce an amendment to this resolution on behalf of my colleague the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona. I have copies here. It's to amend Government Motion 33. The motion is amended by striking out the final paragraph, beginning "and be it further resolved that this Assembly . . ." I will provide the requisite copies of this particular amendment, which can be distributed now.

Mr. Speaker, would you like to wait while this is being distributed and resume my time at that point?

THE SPEAKER: Well, hon. member, as I understand it, the amendment the member will be circulating essentially says to delete the paragraph contained in Motion 33.

MR. MASON: That is correct.

THE SPEAKER: Well, then, on that basis, you continue with the understanding that nothing can come to a conclusion until all hon. members have a chance to see and study it. Continue.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, I believe that this 13th principle that the government has slipped into the 12 principles that they actually got agreement from the other Premiers on needs to be deleted, and then we can have a straight-up vote on the 12 principles that the government has suggested we're doing. I believe that my amendment ought to be supported by all hon. members so that we can have a clean and fair vote on whether or not we support the 12 principles that have been provided to us that have been agreed to by the other provinces. Certainly, what the implication of the "be it resolved" clause is is that the provincial government of Alberta would have a veto on any federal treaties and the implementation based on spurious principles that CO₂ is somehow a natural resource and therefore is subject to Alberta's rights under the Constitution.

So, Mr. Speaker, I think the government has been quite underhanded in how they've drafted this resolution. First, they introduce this big bill, which is used only as a bully pulpit by the Premier to attack people that don't agree with him. Then they let it slide off the Order Paper after second reading, not even to be dealt with in this sitting, and this is supposed to be their flagship piece of legislation. Then they introduce this one supporting the 12 principles, but they add their own language that essentially would give the province a veto.

Mr. Speaker, I urge all hon. members to support this amendment. Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader on the amendment.

MR. HANCOCK: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I will be very brief on the amendment. What the hon. member is doing by proposing this amendment is suggesting that we can support the 12 principles that all provinces and territories in this country have agreed to unanimously, have stressed must be part of a national plan, but that if the federal government doesn't agree and goes ahead to endorse Kyoto and ignores the 12 principles, we should do nothing about it. It goes without saying that we endorse the principles, and we call on the federal government to incorporate those principles into any ratification process or any national plan with respect to dealing with greenhouse gases and climate change.

By not dealing with those principles, Mr. Speaker, it again goes without saying, because it's one of the constitutional principles that's time honoured in this country, that when you enter into an international agreement that deals with issues that fall within provincial jurisdiction, you consult with the provinces. Obviously if they do not agree with those principles, we cannot agree with any plan that they put forward.

So it makes sense to ask. It's not underhanded at all, but rather it's logical to add the second "be it resolved," that if they do not seek the consent of the provinces, if they do not consult with the provinces, and if they do not accept the 12 principles that have been unanimously agreed to by the provinces and territories of this country, of course we would denounce the unilateral action of the federal government, and I would urge all members to soundly defeat the amendment.

THE SPEAKER: Under our provisions we have debate now on the amendment, and Standing Order 29(2) still applies, so there can be questions to the hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Is this under the question side?

MR. MASON: Certainly, Mr. Speaker. Yes. It certainly is.

THE SPEAKER: Proceed.

MR. MASON: Can the minister point out to us anywhere in the 12 principles that provides for an individual province on its own to essentially veto a federal treaty?

MR. HANCOCK: Well, Mr. Speaker, it has nothing to do with an individual province vetoing a federal treaty. It's a number of provinces, in fact all of the provinces and the territories, who have agreed that all of these principles ought to be included in any national plan. The federal government has not accepted to date that all 12 principles ought to be included. Therefore, it's a unilateral plan that they have, and they ought to be denounced as they are being denounced, as I understand it, on an ongoing basis by the Member for Red Deer, who's still on his feet debating this issue in the federal Parliament of Canada and bringing to the attention of the federal Parliament of Canada that they ought to take into account these 12 principles.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Can the Justice minister and Government House Leader interpret for us the resolves that are being proposed to be deleted and whether or not it would give the province of Alberta the authority on its own to veto federal treaties, a power that Alberta does not even have for constitutional changes?

MR. HANCOCK: Well, Mr. Speaker, that's not the interpretation of the clause at all. The clause says: "in the absence of agreement on a national plan by provinces and territories" – the straight, clear wording of the clause – "denounces any unilateral ratification by the federal government of the Kyoto protocol in violation of the principles of constitutional law." It couldn't be clearer on the face of it that we're not talking about a veto power. What we're talking about is the federal government, before it ratifies any international treaty dealing with greenhouse gases and climate change, agreeing with the provinces and adhering to the 12 principles that are there and, if they don't agree with those 12 principles, at least consulting with the provinces, which is their constitutional duty.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister, then, define for the Assembly what an agreement on a national plan is? How many provinces need to have bought into it before it's an agreement?

MR. HANCOCK: Well, Mr. Speaker, this one is easy. All of the provinces and territories have agreed to the 12 principles that need to be included in a national plan. So the only one that needs to come to the table now is the federal government, and they ought to come to the table very quickly because all the rest of the provinces and territories are in agreement with what needs to be in the plan.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With respect, the minister didn't answer the question. It says, "In the absence of agreement on a national plan." Is he saying that if the federal government agrees to these 12 points, then we have a national agreement?

MR. HANCOCK: That would be obvious, Mr. Speaker. All of the provinces and territories have agreed to these 12 principles being the basis of a national plan. If the federal government agreed, I guess we'd have a national plan.

MR. MASON: Okay. That's simple.

THE SPEAKER: Continuing, then, on the debate on the amendment. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to speak to the amendment. The motion before us is clearly a two-part motion. The justification for the amendment and speaking in support of the amendment requires me to talk about both parts because they are related. Certainly they are part of the motion before us.

The first part of the motion, of course, asked the Legislative Assembly to endorse the 12 principles agreed to by the provinces and territories on October 28 “to provide the basis for the development of a national climate change action plan.” Since October 28, whenever I have been asked, I have said that I support these 12 principles as a basis for a national climate change plan. In fact, many of the 12 principles mirror the positions taken by the New Democrat opposition in the Kyoto position paper that we released this last September.

For example, principle 1 says that “Canadians must have an opportunity for full and informed input into the development” of a climate change plan. We agree. We state that in our position paper. In fact, in my speech on Bill 32 yesterday afternoon I tore a strip off the federal government. It’s been five years since the federal government signed on to the Kyoto protocol, which is the global community response to the threat posed by human-induced climate change. Yet it is only in the past few weeks that the federal government began communicating with Canadians on the importance of taking meaningful action to reduce greenhouse gas emissions, which are contributing to global warming. To be blunt, the federal Liberals have blown it when it comes to exercising responsible leadership on the climate change issue, Mr. Speaker.

The New Democrats strongly support principle 2, which requires that “no region or jurisdiction shall be asked to bear an unreasonable burden,” and they should be treated fairly. We agree, and we have been saying this from day 1. Instead of mindless opposition and scare mongering, we have urged the provincial Tories to defend Alberta’s interests when it comes to the implementation of the Kyoto protocol.

Principle 3, Mr. Speaker, says that “the plan must respect provincial and territorial jurisdiction.” Again, we agree absolutely. At the same time, we have been critical of the Tories’ attempt through Bill 32 to claim provincial ownership of environmental pollutants.

Principle 4 says that any plan must recognize “real emission reductions” achieved by forward-looking companies since 1990. We agree. We believe that companies like Suncor and BP should not be penalized for being proactive in reducing emissions compared to companies like Talisman and Imperial Oil, that have been dragging their heels.

Principles 5, 6 and 7 deal with federal and provincial matters when it comes to intergovernmental agreements, bearing financial risks, and benefits of agricultural and forest carbon sinks. One positive win for Canada in the negotiations of the Kyoto protocol and mechanisms was the recognition that our agricultural and forest lands capture carbon and, therefore, contribute to fighting climate change. In fact, the recognition of carbon sinks will take us 10 percent or more on the path to meeting our Kyoto targets.

Principles 8 and 9 say that any climate change plan must support innovation, new technology, and improving economic competitiveness. Couldn’t agree more, Mr. Speaker, with this principle. The Alberta-based Pembina Institute has published an excellent study detailing how meeting greenhouse reduction targets will spur innovation, development of new technology, and thereby improve the underlying competitiveness of the Canadian and Alberta economies. The Pembina Institute study also points out that when previous environmental agreements were being negotiated – such as the ban on leaded gasoline, the ban on CFCs to protect the ozone layer, and the UN/Canada acid rain treaty – powerful vested interests predicted economic doom. What actually happened is that the costs of meeting those targets set out in the above treaties were way lower than the critics said they would be. More importantly, these treaties not only reduced pollution; they spurred innovation and improved our economic competitiveness.

We do not oppose principle 10, which urges the federal government to “demand [the] recognition of clean energy exports.” However, I must point out that it would be much easier for Canada to achieve the recognition if the Bush administration reversed its position and ratified Kyoto. That’s because most of our clean energy exports go to the U.S.

Finally, principles 11 and 12 advocate using sort of incentives to achieve greenhouse gas reductions, not penalties. We also agree that it’s much better to use a carrot than a stick.

The New Democrats support the first “be it resolved” that endorses the 12 principles, but unfortunately this Tory government couldn’t leave these things well alone. They had to go further. The upshot of the second “be it further resolved” is to prevent the federal government from ratifying the Kyoto protocol unless all of the provinces consent. Even this might be acceptable if the Alberta government were willing, Mr. Speaker, at the end of a successful conclusion of this process to support going forward with Kyoto ratification. But we all know that this is not the case.

The Tory government’s agenda is not to develop an acceptable Kyoto implementation. The Tory government’s agenda is to kill Kyoto, not to enter into negotiations to seek its ratification on terms that would be acceptable to Alberta. That is why this second “be it further resolved” is a cynical ploy. I should remind members that had such a provision been in place during the free trade debate, that particular agreement would never have been signed. More than one province was opposed to the free trade agreement, yet the Mulroney government moved forward with it. The same thing applies to the UN convention on the rights of the child, which the Alberta government opposed prior to its federal ratification. We can’t support the second “be it further resolved”. It’s that simple, Mr. Speaker.

That is why I speak in support of the amendment that was moved on my behalf by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, and I urge all members to support it.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The provisions of Standing Order 29(2) now kick in, and we will recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands in the question portion.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Does the leader of the third party and the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona – I believe that the 12 principles are a framework for a discussion of the ratification of the Kyoto accord. Could the Kyoto accord be approved consistent with these 12 principles, in your view?

DR. PANNU: Mr. Speaker, there are 10 provinces and two territories which are partners to this draft of 12 principles. I’m assuming that the government of Quebec and the government of Manitoba, which support ratification of the Kyoto agreement, have signed on to these 12 principles on the assumption that these 12 principles will ultimately provide a reasonable framework not only for ratification but moving beyond that to implementation.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands again.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to thank the hon. leader of the third party for that most illuminating and outstanding answer to my question. You don't often get an answer like that in this place.

Now, my second question to the hon. member has to do with whether or not he believes that the Alberta government has ever been serious about the Kyoto accord or climate change, for that matter.

THE SPEAKER: I will recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona to respond, but if that would have been a question in question period, in all likelihood it would have been ruled out because the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands is seeking an opinion.

DR. PANNU: Mr. Speaker, before I answer the question, I want to thank the Member for Edmonton-Highlands for the compliments that he was so generous to offer in response to my first answer.

I think the question that my hon. colleague has asked is a very important one. I think Albertans need to know what the Alberta government's position has been on this issue, starting in Rio. This government sent its contingent of ministers there to oppose any steps being taken by the international community in Rio, then it packed up two members to Kyoto to again do the same: to oppose the conclusion by the international community of an agreement, of an accord which we now know as the Kyoto protocol.

This government had never any intention – quite the contrary, it had every intention to oppose and defeat any action taken globally by the international community to deal with global warming, which indeed, Mr. Speaker, is a global problem. I regret to mention this: the behaviour of this government on this issue has been anything but honest and honourable.

Thank you.

MS DeLONG: I would like to ask the hon. member whether he thinks it's more important to pay lip service to the environment or to clean up the environment. The Alberta government has been exemplary in cleaning up our air and cleaning up our water, and we have actually done it as opposed to what's happening with Kyoto, where it's all a bunch of hot air and CO₂.

THE SPEAKER: The question is to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona. We still have 38 seconds.

DR. PANNU: Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member's question is rhetorical. I think we are talking about greenhouse gas emissions. The issue of greenhouse gas emissions is one on which there is powerful scientific evidence and advice, and that is that greenhouse gas emissions stand in and by themselves as a serious threat to economic well-being, to our environmental well-being, and the scientific warrant for making that statement is so powerful, so overwhelming that there's no room for any questions on this. So I say to the member that the GEs are a serious issue, and the government of Alberta is afraid to do anything about it.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: We're back to the debate on the amendment to the motion. Well, the question is being called. Then we'll now proceed to the debate with respect to this. We are now on an amendment to Motion 33, an amendment moved by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands on behalf of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

[Motion on amendment lost]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

MR. LORD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my great pleasure to rise today to speak to one of the many and perhaps more controversial issues of our time: the worldwide climate change debate surrounding the Kyoto protocol and how it relates to the 12 climate change principles that are before us today.

Mr. Speaker, I have heard a lot of discussion and debate on this issue. The facts of this or any other matter are that no one – no one – ever has a monopoly on the truth: not us, not them. But unfortunately, as is often the case, sometimes some think they do, and this makes it much more difficult for us as a society to find the best way to proceed in a focused and united manner. In cases like this I am mindful of a quote attributed to Vaclav Havel which states, "Follow those who seek the truth but flee from those who have found it."

Having heard much of this debate and, beyond that, having had quite a bit of background history dealing with these issues personally, Mr. Speaker, I have reached the conclusion that it would be far better for the federal government to not ratify the Kyoto protocol at this time or, at the very least, until such time as Canadians coast to coast have had a chance to start developing some sort of informed national consensus on how it is to be handled and until such time as the investor and consumer uncertainties which have been created by this argument have been alleviated and confidence in our economy and in our abilities to meet this challenge restored. Federal government acceptance of the 12 principles before us today would go a long way towards doing exactly that.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I know there are many who are disappointed with our government's position and worry that Canada might even end up getting blamed by the entire world for cratering Kyoto, since apparently our vote is a very critical one. Not surprisingly, we have seen a lot of emotional, angry opposition to our position; however, I have observed that this opposition mostly tends to start with an assumption that we Alberta politicians on this side of the House are neither intelligent nor competent, that we haven't done our homework on this issue, and that somehow we need to be educated on the facts. Well, nothing could be further from the truth. Any person who attempts to influence a government starting with an assumption that we lack intelligence because we do not share their point of view is making a serious error in judgment, in my opinion. I believe that there's not one single person in this entire Assembly – and I'll graciously include all members of the opposition parties in that – who is not blessed with exceptional intelligence. They simply would never have been elected otherwise. Besides, starting with a position of respect for everyone is always more effective than not, in my view.

We as a government have reached our conclusions about Kyoto not out of a base of ignorance but rather out of a base of experience, of knowledge, and of a caring viewpoint that encompasses a wide rather than a narrow range of stakeholder concerns. Of course, having said that, I realize that federal government politicians may well want to give us the same advice about them but perhaps I should add: there are always exceptions to every rule.

Mr. Speaker, I decided that it might be helpful in my comments today to put forward a few of the best points on both sides of this argument to demonstrate that we have reached our conclusions in a thoughtful and balanced manner. After all, I agree that anyone who cannot argue both sides of an issue equally well probably does not fully understand the issue and may have lost some perspective, and that is a dangerous thing. In fact, the first test of anyone you suspect of being a zealot is to first ask them if they can argue the other side of the issue, to see if they can do that. Almost always they cannot.

That's to prove that this government has in fact carefully looked at both sides of the argument and to let zealots know that we really don't need any new lectures from them.

Here are some of the main Kyoto arguments for and against that I think are pertinent. To start with, it has been put forward by Kyoto advocates that over 100 Nobel laureates and, beyond them, a huge body of literally thousands of scientists worldwide warn us that climate change is real and the earth is warming, and there's no doubt that many perceive, whether it be true or not, that the weather is being a little weird. It, in fact, is reported here in Alberta that the measurable water flow of the Peace River is apparently down 35 percent from its long-term average, the South Saskatchewan down 53 percent, and the North Saskatchewan down 62 percent. It's reported that weird weather has already cost us about $16 billion across Canada in the last 10 years. Of course we're concerned about these sorts of reports, and of course we realize that, you know, there are a number of other observations by serious scientists with serious credentials who make a strong case that the earth is warming and it could have significant impacts on all life.

All that may well be true, but there are a number of other possible explanations for that other than just greenhouse gases. For example – and I'll just give one of the many examples – there's a new geothermal theory that has just been put forward by experts on the subject postulating that at the centre of the earth, rather than just molten silica, iron, and nickel, there may be, in fact, a 5-mile-wide ball of uranium drawn there by its heavier weight, which in its density may now be fissioning in a nuclear manner similar to what the sun does, only slower. Clearly, such a process would generate tremendous heat and greatly vary in temperature; thus, eventually the surface of the planet would vary greatly as well.

This theory also explains a number of other mysteries that have remained unsolved by the greenhouse gas theory. While this theory may not be generally accepted yet nor even heard of by most and, frankly, may not be correct, it does prove that there are plausible alternative explanations for global warming. It may well be the case that mankind is expending enormous time, money, and energy fighting the wrong battle entirely, which may in itself have disastrous consequences.

Furthermore, it doesn't take a lot of research into past history to find cases of where large bodies of credible scientists turned out to be very wrong, almost so much so, in fact, that some consider it the norm. For contrarians, which I admit to being, the moment we sense that there's a bit of a bandwagon going on, a bit of herd thinking acting up, well, I can't help but suspect that the truth may well lie in the opposite direction. History and the stock market provide lots of evidence of cases where this was true. So this is not a sufficient reason to blindly support Kyoto, the fact that there are large numbers of scientists that think it explains the mysteries of global warming, if it exists.

Next, it has been argued by Kyoto proponents that the Kyoto protocol does not contain any penalties, that we can unilaterally withdraw without penalty, et cetera. In other words: what are we afraid of? Well, it may be true that the Kyoto protocol isn't really much more than international puffery from a legal standpoint, and this is even understandable given the near impossibility of trying to get hundreds of sovereign nations to reach consensus on anything. But we must also remember that Canada's reputation and credibility are at stake here, and signing on with absolutely no intention of doing anything just because we couldn't be forced to legally is basically dishonest. It risks earning us worldwide scorn and further loss of credibility, maybe even more than what not signing might likely earn us. Thus, we should not ratify if our only expectation is to just withdraw at a later date. We may get European boycotts in that case. We may get them either way. It's just not a sufficient reason to ratify Kyoto.

Thirdly, our government has been criticized for fear mongering, for saying that the Kyoto protocol is driven by a desire to see massive transfers of wealth to Third World countries, for example. Well, it doesn't actually rule that out, and it is true, we will admit, that the emission-trading idea was basically forwarded not as a penalty but rather as an incentive to inspire nations to try and exceed their Kyoto targets. In fact, it's also true that many Third World countries actually vigorously opposed the emission trading credit idea on the basis that they thought rich countries would just use the program to easily buy their way out of their commitments and not actually have to do anything. While it even may be true that there have been a number of voices calling for heavy penalties, calling for massive international wealth transfers, calling for international enforcement and Kyoto cops, et cetera, well, those voices did not carry the day of the initial agreement and are in the minority and likely will not convince the majority at any time in the future.

I can understand why some might say: well, you're fear mongering. The reality is: how else do we as Canadians fight this? Can we actually afford to sit back, do nothing, and gamble? Or more importantly, will consumers and investors gamble on how the federal government may interpret and implement this document within Canada? Will investors invest not knowing what an outgoing Prime Minister might do in terms of international wealth transfers, putting future Canadians' good names on the line for commitments that he will not actually have to be around to honour? Even if despite his dismal past track record in environmental issues to the point of reportedly even punishing backbenchers who promoted green issues in the past and even if we believed his intentions are honourable, we must still remember that investment capital is the world's greatest coward. It trusts almost no one. It always runs at the first sign of trouble, and trouble and lack of trust within Canada is what the federal government has wrought here and failed to address or even recognize even after five years.

Fourthly – and I could actually go on for hours with this debate, but we're only allowed 15 minutes – we have been accused of doing little or nothing, of not knowing of the benefits that would accrue from Kyoto. Actually, Alberta leads the nation on a number of energy conservation fronts, and those projects were started before Kyoto ever came along. Soon we'll also lead the nation in alternative energy generation in windmills. We have lots to celebrate here, even brag about, not apologize for, and not surprisingly either, considering that Albertans have been turning obstacles into opportunities better than almost anybody for almost a century now. Entrepreneurs in Alberta are among the best of the best if not the best anywhere, but they don't need any extra burdens. They are heavily burdened already.

As to comments about our government being influenced only by big oil or big coal, well, anyone can quickly see that our made-in-Canada proposal contains strong penalties, strong enforcement, strong regulations, none of which the Kyoto plan does. In fact, by bringing this subject up in such a vigorous manner, one could well observe that it actually has not helped big oil or big coal companies' share prices at all. So if this is big oil's plan, I could hardly say that it has been successful for them. In fact, quite the opposite, and they may well have preferred the federal government's mystery plan to what the strong regulations we are proposing would have in store for them instead. Clearly, that argument doesn't stand up to much scrutiny either. Besides, the world's two largest oil companies are already exceeding the Kyoto commitments, so why would they care or be trying to influence us?

To conclude, Mr. Speaker, we do know this argument well, and we have made our conclusions accordingly. The fate of this issue now rests in the hands of one individual. Let us pray he makes the correct decision for all.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, Standing Order 29(2) now kicks in. 5:10

MR. OUELLETTE: Mr. Speaker, it is indeed a pleasure for me to rise today and speak to this present motion. The Kyoto protocol and the implications of its ratification are certainly issues that concern the majority of Albertans and a great many Canadians, and I am very glad to be able to offer my thoughts on the debate.

It is important to note at the outset of this debate that no one in the provincial government is questioning the merits of taking action on reducing greenhouse gas emissions. For the past 10 years the government of Alberta has proven itself to be a leader on this issue. No one in this nation can deny the leadership role that this province has taken in addressing this issue with more than just words and promises. In fact, I am very proud to be a part of Climate Change Central, a key government initiative that has been in operation since 1999 and that continues to bring together environmentalists, researchers, academics, industry and government representatives to address the problems of climate change. All of us are focused on reducing greenhouse gas emissions in Alberta through public education and outreach, policy advice, and demonstration products.

Alberta continues to prove itself as a leader on the issue of climate change. The present debate on the merits of the Kyoto protocol is in large part driven by Alberta's belief that the Kyoto protocol is wrong: wrong for this province, wrong for this nation, and wrong for the environment. But rather than listen to the concerns of Alberta and work with the government on a constructive solution, the federal government has simply closed its ears and mind to any contrary thought on this issue and has gone on to ignore the concrete actions that this government has undertaken to establish its roles and responsibilities in addressing greenhouse gas emissions. This is the fundamental problem that this motion works to address, 12 principles that call on the federal government to sincerely engage the provinces on the legitimate concerns they have on the Kyoto protocol.

Mr. Speaker, one can clearly differentiate between the reaction from other provincial governments and that of the federal government in this matter. From our fellow provincial governments the Alberta government has received support and encouragement, even from those governments who support the eventual ratification of the Kyoto protocol. That support and respect for the right to hold our position can be seen in the 12 principles that we are debating here today. These principles speak to the basic tenets of Confederation and our Constitution, principles that clearly state that no region should bear an unreasonable share of the burden of a federal government policy, that Ottawa must respect provincial and territorial jurisdiction, that agreements between the provinces and territories must be recognized by Ottawa. These principles agreed to by all provinces and territories are the result of negotiation and a healthy dose of respect for the different positions and unique considerations that each province must deal with. I must stress again that these principles were unanimously agreed to by all provinces and territories regardless of policy position on Kyoto.

What is the federal government's reaction to our position on Kyoto and the 12 principles we are debating today here in this motion? Mr. Speaker, at best it is an all-consuming arrogance that seems to pervade the entire federal cabinet. At worst it is a dangerous attitude of indifference which threatens the ties of Confederation. It is unacceptable for the federal government to blatantly ignore the real and meaningful objections that many Canadians hold regarding this treaty. It is unacceptable for the federal government to promise a meaningful national dialogue and turn around and disdainfully order Parliament to support ratification. It is totally unacceptable for the federal government, which holds the fundamental responsibility to act on behalf of all Canadians, to ignore and vilify a particular province out of sheer political considerations.

Well, Mr. Speaker, Alberta's concerns with respect to the Kyoto protocol are legitimate, and we will not back down in protecting this province. The 12 principles that we are debating here today work toward addressing the legitimate concerns that we hold. For instance, for some nations the average emissions reduction requirement of 5.2 percent under Kyoto has already been accomplished. Russia's greenhouse gases, or then known as the Soviet Union, peaked in 1990. As a result of the collapse of the Soviet Union and its economy, greenhouse gas emissions have steadily fallen since that time, and Russia will not have to actually cut emissions to achieve its Kyoto targets.

Under Kyoto Russia and other such nations will be able to benefit significantly from the sale of hot air allowances; in essence, selling credits to other industrialized nations like Canada that are significantly above their Kyoto requirements. Also, because the European nations signed on to the Kyoto accord as a bloc of nations, it is expected that Canada's European industrialized competitors, such as the United Kingdom, France, and Germany, will benefit from the inclusion of eastern European nations with excess hot air allowances, such as Poland, the Czech Republic, and Hungary. These nations will not have to restructure their economies to the point that Canada and Alberta would be required to do under Kyoto. Mr. Speaker, is the federal government answering these concerns?

As well, Albertans know that not all nations are constrained by the Kyoto protocol. In fact, the countries constrained by Kyoto represent only about 30 percent of the world's greenhouse gas emissions. Since none of the highest emissions growth countries, including China and India, would be subject to Kyoto constraints, before long that 30 percent could fall as low as 25 percent or less. As Gwynn Morgan, one of Alberta's pre-eminent business leaders, has pointed out, the countries making commitments under Kyoto are economies with the lowest population growths and are already relatively efficient producers or users of energy. By signing Kyoto, these nations like Canada take on cost burdens which hinder growth and competitiveness while new growth investments are transferred to countries not constrained by Kyoto. Once again, Mr. Speaker, how is the federal government answering these concerns?

The benefits that Canada and the world might achieve under Kyoto are also being questioned by the scientific community. A model by Tom Wigley, one of the main authors of the report of the United Nations climate change panel, shows how an expected temperature increase of 2.1 degrees Celsius in the year 2100 would be diminished by the Kyoto protocol to an increase of 1.9 degrees Celsius instead. Or put another way, the global temperature increase that the planet would have experienced in 2094 would be postponed to 2100—six years, Mr. Speaker, at the cost of billions of dollars that could be directed at other environmental initiatives. Yet on this and so many other problems one has to wonder: where is the federal government in answering these concerns? Unfortunately, these issues are ignored and relegated to being concerns of a provincial government only worried with the bottom line.

That is why these 12 principles are so important. They simply try to force the federal government into doing its job: working towards a better Canada and respecting the concerns of all regions and all provinces. As Canadians we should expect no less from our national government. It is a sad commentary on the state of the nation that it takes a motion such as this, that endorses 12 basic principles, to try and force the federal government to listen to its own people. But, Mr. Speaker, if a motion is needed, then so be it.

I would encourage all members of this Assembly to vote in support of this motion and send a signal to the federal government that it is time for it to listen to the concerns of Canadians. Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora, I take it you're now participating under Standing Order 29(2)?

MR. HUTTON: I am, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: Please proceed.

MR. HUTTON: Thank you. Obviously, the Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake has spoken eloquently opposing Kyoto, and I'm wondering if he has heard from a number of his constituents with regard to this protocol.

MR. OUELLETTE: You know, I've heard from a number of my constituents. I have a number of constituents that work in the oil patch, and they're saying things like: "We've had $25 to $30 a barrel of oil all year, we've spiked at $6 in gas, and we have less than 25 percent of our rigs working. What's going on?" We've already affected our economy like this. Let's get on with the show here.

MR. HUTTON: And have you heard from any of your constituents that are supporting the protocol, hon. member, through the Speaker?

MR. OUELLETTE: Everyone is supporting us not ratifying.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

MR. HANCOCK: Yes. Mr. Speaker, I'm wondering if I might ask the hon. member, given that he's had such a rousing speech and aroused our enthusiasm, whether he might consider moving adjournment of debate.

MR. OUELLETTE: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to adjourn debate.

THE SPEAKER: Well, I'm afraid, hon. member, that that is just physically impossible under our rules. Under Standing Order 29(2) the hon. member had the debate, and we're now participating under the question-and-answer segment. We'll deal with that, and then we'll recognize another member who can then deal with the adjournment.

Additional questions under 29(2)?

MS HALEY: Mr. Speaker, if there are no more questions under 29(2), I would move that we adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would move that we adjourn until 8 this evening.

[Motion carried; the Assembly adjourned at 5:24 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Wednesday, November 27, 2002

Climate Change Action Plan

33. Mr. Jonson moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly of Alberta, consistent with its commitment to protecting Alberta's environment, hereby endorses and accepts the following principles agreed to by all provinces and territories on October 28, 2002, to provide the basis for the development of a national climate change action plan.

- (1) All Canadians must have an opportunity for full and informed input into the development of the plan.
- (2) The plan must ensure that no region or jurisdiction shall be asked to bear an unreasonable share of the burden and no industry, sector, or region shall be treated unfairly. The costs and impacts on individuals, businesses, and industries must be clear, reasonable, achievable, and economically sustainable. The plan must incorporate appropriate federally funded mitigation of the adverse impacts of climate change initiatives.
- (3) The plan must respect provincial and territorial jurisdiction.
- (4) The plan must include recognition of real emission reductions that have been achieved since 1990 or will be achieved thereafter.
- (5) The plan must provide for bilateral or multilateral agreements between provinces and territories and with the federal government.
- (6) The plan must ensure that no province or territory bears the financial risk of federal climate change commitments.
- (7) The plan must recognize that benefits from assets such as forest and agricultural sinks must accrue to the province and territory which owns the assets.
- (8) The plan must support innovation and new technology.
- (9) The plan must maintain the economic competitiveness of Canadian business and industry.
- (10) Canada must continue to demand recognition of clean energy exports.
- (11) The plan must include incentives for all citizens, communities, businesses, and jurisdictions to make the shift to an economy based on renewable and other clean energy, lower emissions, and sustainable practices across sectors.
- (12) The implementation of any climate change plan must include an incentive and allocation system that supports lower carbon emission sources of energy such as hydro-electricity, wind power generation, ethanol, and renewable and other clean sources of energy.

And be it further resolved that this Assembly, in the absence of agreement on a national plan by provinces and territories, denounces any unilateral ratification by the federal government of the Kyoto protocol in violation of the principles of constitutional law, convention, federalism, and long-established practice whereby the federal government must adequately consult with and seek the consent of provinces prior to ratification of international treaties or agreements that affect matters of exclusive provincial jurisdiction or that require provincial actions or legislation to achieve implementation where implementation will result in significant harm to the economy of Alberta and of Canada.

[Adjourned debate November 27: Ms Haley]

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

MR. BOUTILIER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I stand today representing the oil sands capital of the world, the small community of Fort McMurray. In fact, it hails as the largest mining project in the world. It's not often you can say "the world," but it's indeed a pleasure to be able to say that. I might also say that Fort McMurray and the Wood Buffalo region represent people that come from all parts of the world in terms of contributing to the development of the oil sands. In fact, I might also add that the hon. Minister of Seniors' son is one of the youngest superintendents at one of those oil sands plants, and I'm very proud of that. The youngest. It's not a surprise because their slogan in Fort McMurray is: "we have the energy," and that's youthful energy on top of natural resource energy.

In fact, it brings back a memory of mine when I was a mayor back in 1997, the youngest mayor in Canada at the time. It was a wonderful example of three levels of government working together, dealing with the environment, energy, and it was the fiscal regime on oil sands development. The hon. Minister of Finance at the time was the Minister of Energy, along with the federal Natural Resources minister, the Hon. Anne McLellan, as well as a representative, and I happened to be the mayor. They came in, and they demonstrated that by working together, it can help all Canadians. The oil sands project is a living example of the fact that there is a mere $50 billion being invested today.

Now, I'm also very pleased to say that I'm here to talk about the response relative to the issue and the principles surrounding Kyoto and the issue of the principles that have been of course agreed to unanimously by all provinces. We have 360 municipalities in this province, and in fact I have received letters from almost all of them regarding their response to the issue of how the federal government is dealing with the issue of Kyoto. I want to say that I'm very pleased by the response, where Alberta cities, Alberta towns, Alberta counties, Alberta's municipal districts, Alberta's summer villages, Alberta's special areas clearly . . .

MR. DOERKSEN: Don't forget Red Deer.

MR. BOUTILIER: Red Deer was included in that preamble – of their undivided and overwhelming support of the position of the Alberta government relative to those 12 principles.

I might also say, just as a new piece of information – and I know the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands would be familiar. He was a part of this area, the Federation of Canadian Municipalities, the FCM. A very noble group. Now, originally they put forward a resolution representing 25 million Canadians. The president, of course, of the FCM comes, in fact, from Calgary, the hon. John Schmal, an alderman with the city council in Calgary. He is the president. Representing 25 million Canadians, they originally stated to the federal government that they conditionally supported the position on Kyoto; however, there were principles that had to be followed. What is really interesting today – I am so pleased in my discussion with the president – is now they are going to be indicating to the Federation of Canadian Municipalities that because of the fact the conditions they outlined and the principles that have been agreed to by all the provinces have not been followed, they are not going to be able to support the position of Kyoto, and I think that's very significant in light of the fact that it represents 25 million Canadians.

So with that, I think that it's an important note that Alberta municipalities are supportive relative to the fact that we support the environment, but at the same time we support economic development. We think they're not mutually exclusive. They can be both achieved, and I think there is, it's fair to say, good evidence of that.

I travel, and I look to when I first came to Alberta as a young man of 17 years old back in the '70s.

AN HON. MEMBER: How old?

MR. BOUTILIER: Seventeen years old.

In actual fact, Syncrude Canada had just been opened by the hon. Premier of the day, the hon. Premier Loughheed. Twenty-five years later I see bison roaming, 150 bison on reclaimed land because of the reclamation and the environmental protection and enhancement that these oil sands companies have demonstrated and continue to demonstrate, and it truly is a model to every other company in Canada in terms of what they are doing not by their talk but by their actions.

I also want to say that I compliment the leaders within the oil sands industry, people like Eric Newell, people like Rick George, people like Tim Faithfull, who are out there supporting each and every day the balance between economic development and also that of environmental enhancement.

Now, this is a very important issue for all of us, not just for the provincial government but for all Albertans, especially for my constituents but as well as for municipalities across Alberta. We understand the need to take action on climate change, but we must make changes without crippling the price tag of implementing Kyoto. The plan the federal government released November 21 gives no indication of what the true costs of the Kyoto pipe dream will be to Canadians. I think that what's most important is the accountability. The ultimate sense of government is to be accountable. In fact, I'm just reading a book by Rudolph Giuliani, and in the book he talks about the accountability of police forces and fire departments. And you know what? The accountability of a federal government and a provincial government and municipal government are equally as important.

I'd like to say that that is, perhaps, something that we need to explore more in dealing with the way Kyoto has been able to come to where it is. I don't believe in autocratic types of systems. I believe in a consultative approach in something that we're encouraging the federal government to support. The fact that 10 provinces and three territories can come together unanimously is quite something to be able to do that, and now we're saying to the federal government: follow the principles that these provinces and territories have agreed to.

You know, if the protocol is ratified by Canada, it will cost Alberta literally estimated conservatively about $8 billion and thousands of jobs per year. But what I'd like to do is talk about the fact, rather than saying "450,000 jobs," of what it means to that person. It may mean a job to that steel manufacturer in Hamilton, Ontario. It may mean a job to that auto plant worker down in Windsor, Ontario, or over in Ottawa, or the manufacturer in Kitchener-Waterloo. It really does have quite a negative impact on people in Ontario. Now, we know that in the oil and gas industry we'll also have a negative impact, but the reality of it is it will impact all Canadians, not just one particular sector, and that's why we believe that the principle that no one region will be unduly burdened by the protocol is something that needs to be adhered to.

It was interesting. While visiting with some people from the European Union, they made a comment that: we certainly hope that the Russians will not sell their carbon credits at the same time to three or four nations. It really speaks to the fact of a transfer of wealth. This is really more about a transfer of wealth, and I could give the example of how the European nations have in their capital replacement where they've been and where they are today. It certainly advantages them as opposed to the good work we've done in Canada and other parts of North America. And my point I'm trying to make here is simply this: over the past few years countries in the European Union have been simply saying, "We're going to be able to meet our targets because of the fact we've closed down all of our plants in East Germany." Well, the reality of it is: is that environmental enhancement, or is that something that should have been done very much long ago because of the fact that the technology they're using has been back from the '40s and '30s?

What I find remarkable is the technology we're using today. Did you know that the price of a barrel of oil at the companies in the oil sands industry was over 30 bucks a barrel back in the '70s? Today they produce it for under $15. The reason is simply because of technology. The hon. member here, the minister of science and technology and innovation, clearly knows the importance of technology, which I think is the key component for the recipe of success.

Now, when I happened to be working in the oil industry back then when it was 38 bucks a barrel, that clearly reflected the new innovation that was taking place, but they stuck with it, and today it truly is a Canadian success story, the jobs that it created in terms of economic development to all parts of Canada. I think we never want to forget that part of the economic equation. But what I want to say is: when people come to visit my community in Fort McMurray, they go out and visit the reclaimed area at the bison ranch, where it was actually land that was mined, where thousands and thousands of barrels of oil were mined, and then ultimately the land was reclaimed, and now we have bison roaming on it, grazing on it.

AN HON. MEMBER: Baby buffalo.

MR. BOUTILIER: Baby buffalo. Now, baby buffalo is something that's quite dear to my heart. It is. I've never had the opportunity to ride a baby buffalo. I had the pleasure, though, of riding a bull.

I can say that I do appreciate the honourable notes I've received from the Minister of Energy on this invaluable data that I'm sharing with you tonight. But what's even more important is this: why would an industry locate in Alberta or Canada when it could be located across the border and not have to worry about extra costs? Let's examine that theory for a moment. When I talked about that auto plant in Windsor, Ontario, when I talked about that plant in Kitchener-Waterloo or in Ottawa, the real issue is that the competitive disadvantage that this has potentially created for Canada is substantial both in Alberta, Ontario, and other parts of the country. So what we want to be able to do is make a plan that makes good sense.

The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake before we adjourned made comments about Climate Change Central. In actual fact, that was first commenced, the discussion of it, back in 1997, and I recall when the Premier had called and asked if I would sit as a director of Climate Change Central, both a public- and private-sector initiative. It really was the first of its kind in Canada and still is to this day. It's located in Calgary. Representatives from Edmonton sit on there as well as people from all across Alberta, and I think it really speaks well of the important partnership. Because what a partnership is, "What can I do for you that you can't do?" as well as "What can you do for me that I can't do?" Ultimately, this partnership is about environmental enhancement, about municipalities working together collectively.

I actually have an inventory list that I intend to table in this House at the appropriate time relative to the green initiatives that municipalities, the 360 of them, are initiating regarding energy efficiency. What we call it is: it simply makes good sense. And I spell the word “sense” s-e-n-s-e and c-e-n-t-s. It makes good sense in terms of what it is that it’s doing.

Now, I want to be able to say that the oil and gas sector – the investment in Alberta, of course, in 2001 that the Minister of Energy shared with me was about $20 billion, which is substantial. So a 15 percent reduction, which is being forecasted, would mean about a $3 billion loss. Now, if you factor in an average salary of about $50,000 or $60,000 or $70,000 as an annual income for $3 billion dollars, that is a lot of jobs.

I want to say today that Alberta truly is driving the economy of not only this province but other parts of Canada because of the natural resources we actually have. But I think today what’s most important is as we go forward – I want to conclude by simply saying this: we want to have a plan that makes sense and that is best for Canada. Not made in Canada but best for Canada, because as the Minister of Energy at one point said: if I thought for a moment that by signing the Kyoto protocol this would help one asthmatic young girl or boy, you know, in terms of the air they breathe, then I know that we’d be recommending to sign it. But it will not. This is about a transfer of wealth and a loss of jobs in Canada.

So let me conclude by simply making my remarks in this way, and I say this to all of Canada: Albertans view sustainable development as more than just a bunch of bureaucrats and diplomats getting together on an international stage to come up with some artificial targets without foundation. To Alberta: Albertans believe that sustainable development – and they’ve proven it day in and day out – is truly a way of life.

Thank you very much.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Before we go to the question and answer portion, I wonder if you might grant unanimous consent to revert to Introduction of Guests.

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I’m pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 10 guests from Big Sisters and Big Brothers. Big Sisters and Big Brothers matches children and youth aged six to 18 with mentors who provide guidance, support, and friendship. They know that one person can really make a difference. Tonight they’re here to see the democratic process in action. I’d like to ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Legislative Assembly.

MR. MASON: Mr. Speaker, I did have a question for the minister under 29(2).

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Okay. We had two or three people, but you were in fact first up. So we’ll have the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs: could he please clarify for the Assembly precisely what has occurred in the Federation of Canadian Municipalities with respect to any change in its position? This position was adopted by, of course, the membership at a conference. There are usually between 1,000 and 2,000 delegates from across the country that adopt the position, and then, of course, there’s a board of directors, and then there is an executive, and there’s a president. At what level was this decision made, how was it communicated, and when did it take place?

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. BOUTILIER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I also want to welcome the folks. They had the pleasure of visiting my office earlier, and they had some very good questions from the Boys and Girls Club. I want to say that it was a pleasure to see them here because they really represent the youthful energy in terms of the jobs for tomorrow.

In actual fact, I spoke to the president of the FCM. To the hon. member: the president of the board of directors of the FCM, the Federation of Canadian Municipalities, of course is John Schmal, an alderman from Calgary. I met with Mr. Schmal and had a lengthy conversation with him at the Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties last week, which was hosted here in Edmonton. In our discussion he indicated the fact that the federal government had not agreed to follow the conditions that they had listed. Ultimately, he indicated to me that he was taking to the board of directors next week in Ottawa – and I would ask the hon. member to follow closely, as will I – the fact that the conditions have not been followed, and they are bringing it to the board of directors, where they’re having a discussion in terms of what their next point will be.

But my comment and discussion with the president of the FCM were quite simply this: they are not following the conditions that they had given conditional support to. The bottom line is: they said that they will not support Kyoto if those principles are not followed. They are not being followed, and ultimately the board of directors are now looking at their next steps in terms of dealing with the federal government on this commitment. So, obviously, you’ll have to wait for the meeting that takes place with the board of directors. The meeting will be taking place next week in Ottawa, but they had indicated that at this point, since the federal government had indicated that they do not intend to follow the principles, obviously this is a breach in terms of what conditions were set out by the FCM.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

MR. HUTTON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I’d like to thank the minister for letting us know what impact this will have on his constituency. My question is with regard to that. Has the Member for Fort McMurray heard, through phone calls or letters or any form of communication to you or your office, from the fine working folks in Fort McMurray, the pipe fitters, the union people in McMurray, the fear or concern with regard to the signing of the ratification?

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Mr. Minister.

MR. BOUTILIER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps the best example I could give is that the Chamber of Commerce invited me to speak about two weeks ago in Fort McMurray at 7 o’clock in the morning. Now, first of all, to listen to me speak at 7 o'clock in the morning is sometimes even difficult for my wife, but the fact was we thought there would be 30 or 40 people there. There were over 300 people there – it really speaks of their interest – with some very good questions. So I'm pleased with the question that was asked because, clearly, not only in Fort McMurray but in other parts of Canada – I'm really encouraged by the response we've received in information I sent to the mayors across Alberta, the fact that overwhelming support has come back regarding this government's position relative to Kyoto and why we do not support it. I'm very pleased by that as well.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Further questions? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, a question.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much. A comment and another question, Mr. Speaker. I understand from the minister's response to my first question that in fact the FCM has not changed or modified its position although it may, and I will follow that with interest.

The second question I have has to do with Suncor. The leader of our party, the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, was in Fort McMurray a couple of weeks ago and had a tour of the Suncor plant and had an opportunity to discuss Suncor's position with respect to this. Is it not the case that Suncor is already Kyoto-compliant?

MR. BOUTILIER: I want to be able to say this: I'm uncertain if they are or not. But just let me say about their leadership quite simply this: in terms of emission intensity the oil sands companies in the largest mining project in the world, in Fort McMurray, have reduced their intensity per barrel by something over 35 percent, as much as they are expanding the actual unit, as you're aware.

I want to thank the hon. member for the question and the fact that the leader did come to Fort McMurray and met with people. In fact, he was on a live radio show there, and when he offered me the invitation to join his party, I had to of course decline. But I do want to say that I was very interested in his comments, in his interest.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: We're now ready for the next speaker on the motion. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Appreciate the opportunity to make a few comments about Motion 33. As I've listened today, it's sometimes difficult to distinguish between the debate on Motion 33, the 12 principles for a national climate change plan, and Bill 32, the Climate Change and Emissions Management Act. So if I seem to incur on both, it's only because I see that my colleagues have taken the same liberty.

I sat in a restaurant earlier this week and overheard three gentlemen at a dinner table responding to the Alberta ads on TV. The ad came on and talked about the Alberta government and their concerns, and at the end of the ad one of the gentlemen turned to the other two and said: "I just don't understand what the issue is. Is this an economic issue? Is this a political issue? Is this an environmental issue? Just what is it?" He said, "I have to admit that I'm being completely confused by the rhetoric." His colleagues joined in the conversation, and I suspect that they are not alone, Mr. Speaker, in not having a clear understanding in terms of what the issues are. I think that because there isn't a clear understanding, the kinds of decisions that a citizenry might make are not being made.

I think we could start off with: what are some of the underlying assumptions that are imbedded in Motion 33? If you look through the 12 items in the bill – and I'm going to confine myself to those 12 items because I believe, as the Member for Edmonton-Highlands does and did try to make clear earlier in the day with his amendment, that the addition of the "whereas" or the clause at the end of the motion is really quite unfortunate. Without that, I think we have the stand-alone 12 principles that the Premiers and the representatives from the territories have agreed upon.

But if you look through the 12 items in the motion and try to look at the underlying assumptions, the first one seems to be political. Again, the aim is a political aim that's being accomplished: the notion that all Canadians have to have the opportunity to be fully informed, a political perspective in terms of the responsibilities and the rights of citizens in the country to have a say in terms of public policy that's going to affect them, their lives, and the lives of their children.

The second item is almost purely economics, and if you look through the 12 items, the economic sections far outnumber any others. There are seven of them that make economic arguments, three that I've classified as political, and two that you might label somehow or other as science or concerns with the environment. I think that it does reflect the government's approach to the problem and the government's approach to Bill 32 as being one that's overwhelmingly economic, and, you know, that's a judgment call, Mr. Speaker, that a government has to make.

But I wonder, in the rush to make those economic arguments, if some other very important matters haven't been overlooked. What I feel is missing from the debate and what I don't believe I've heard is the human face, those concerns that are not just with ourselves as Albertans and as Canadians but for all humanity. I think that's been lacking. I hear the comments about China and the guffawing that goes on in the House when that country is raised and the disparaging remarks about Russia, and it seems to me that for an environmental problem, one that is supposed to involve all humanity and all of us, that's unfortunate, Mr. Speaker. As much as I say I respect the decision to make the arguments primarily those of economics, I do think there are others.

There are some moral questions. If you look at the motion, it raises some questions. It raises the question of the integrity and the dignity of the nonhuman life on the planet. It raises moral and it raises religious views on the meaning of nature and our place in the scheme of things. I think we've had little if any consideration of those values and those underlying assumptions. I think we could ask a number of questions. Do we have the right to place in jeopardy the health of future generations? You know, do we have that right? Can we make judgments now that may have implications down the road for those who will follow us that will not be in their best interests health-wise?

I think we can ask about – and, you know, here again the economic aspects of the problem raise their head – do we have the right to compromise or make impossible the economic well-being of future generations? You could say that that's the argument the government is making, that the Kyoto protocol will really hamper economic development and hurt this province and the people who are here. But it can also be looked at from another perspective. If we fail to take action, will we equally impede or make impossible the economic development of future generations? I think you can look at the economics of Kyoto from at least two perspectives.

I guess that in all of this there's a question that has really puzzled me and one that I haven't heard addressed to any great extent. We held a town hall sponsored by the Member for Edmonton-Riverview and several other Edmonton constituencies. At the town hall there were scientists who presented a great deal of information from a scientific perspective on water and air and environmental concerns, but the issue that really struck me and continues to haunt me is the notion that at some point we may trigger a calamity, that all our projections in terms of what's going to happen to the environment may be wrong. Even if they are right, the gradual increase in pollutants may sometime trigger a calamity. That's something that I've read little about and have heard little about, and again, as I said, it's something that haunts me and it's something that I think is worthy of further consideration. So you can look into the underlying assumptions of the motion and the clauses in that motion. We have to, I think, look at the values that underlie the bill.

A third area is: whose interests are being served? We've heard a wide range of interests from speakers on the motion, but primarily we've heard of economic interests and primarily those from the petroleum industry. I wonder, as important and crucial as the petroleum industry interests are to this province, if we aren't then blinded to other interests that we might be mindful of. I think economic interests are part of it and, as I said, the petroleum industry part of it, but it's not the whole story. There's more to this province than that.

I can't help but think of companies like BP, who now are operating some of their service stations in Europe without the use of petroleum, their own service stations. They're using solar power and other power to operate their stations and proudly talk of being beyond petroleum as being their future. It makes me wonder about putting all of our eggs in one basket.

So with those comments, Mr. Speaker, I'll conclude with, again, the concern about the narrowness of the debate, and I'm not sure that it serves us well to have confined it and defined it so narrowly. Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Any questions or comments to be offered with respect to this speech? Edmonton-Highlands, you're rising. You've already spoken on this motion. [interjection]

Would the Assembly agree to revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests

(reversion)

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It gives me pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the House someone who probably needs very little introduction to many members. This individual was a member of Edmonton city council and is a leading environmental advocate. He also went on to run in actually quite a strong campaign for mayor of Toronto. He's worked for Greenpeace, and he's been an environmental activist ever since I've known him. I'd like to ask Tooker Gomberg to rise and receive the warm welcome of the House.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Okay. There being no questions, we're ready for the next speaker. Grande Prairie-Smoky, are you ready to go?

MR. KNIGHT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. While my esteemed colleagues are eminently more qualified than I am to address this particular issue, I feel obligated to rise this evening in the Assembly to add my comments to the many voices that have addressed the resolution before us. Unfortunately, while many of these individuals were toiling in the sweatshops of the University of Alberta, the U of C, and some of the technical institutes that we have in the province, I had the relative good luck and good fortune of working on the floor of the Guthrie McLaren rig No. 2 in Swan Hills. As much as I don't perhaps have a really good handle on the academic end of this particular topic, I think I do have something to add with respect to what happens on the ground in the province of Alberta.

This resolution and certainly the act with which it is associated are absolutely critical to this province and to all Albertans. These actions clearly establish that Alberta is confirming its constitutional right to, firstly, ownership and, secondly, the management, exploration, development, and production of renewable and nonrenewable resources in Alberta for the benefit of not only our citizens but also the Confederation to which we belong. No jurisdiction, Mr. Speaker, can undertake this most important work with more confidence or technical expertise than the resource sector, both public and private, in this province. Alberta has unquestionably some of the most highly educated and trained personnel engaged in these industries across Canada and, indeed, North America.

Climate change is real. However, the scientific community both in our province and around the globe is not joined in a unified voice or even a consensus on the cause or causes of this natural phenomenon. A determination of the effects of human activity on this natural process is not at hand, and in the face of all the uncertainty our federal government is railroading – yes, Mr. Speaker, railroading – Canadians into an international pact that has no chance of making any meaningful difference to the level of greenhouse gas emissions globally or, for that matter, any meaningful change in the atmospheric or surface temperature of this planet.

A group of 27 international climate scientists, including 12 Canadians, has signed a letter recently delivered to our Prime Minister asking to have ratification of Kyoto delayed until consultation can be completed regarding global warming.

AN HON. MEMBER: What did he say?

MR. KNIGHT: He said: not today.

The expected benefit is extremely tiny, immeasurable, say members of this particular group.

The Kyoto accord isn't, Mr. Speaker. An accord is by definition an agreement between governments, a formal agreement between governments. This is anything but. It may more accurately be described as the Kyoto accordion, and everyone you hear is playing a different tune on it.

First and foremost, I think it must be clarified, Mr. Speaker, that it is not what we know about Kyoto that is important; it's what we don't know. Many Canadians do not understand that Kyoto is not about cleaner air. There may be side benefits that could reduce airborne pollutants produced when fossil fuels are consumed, but what will happen with cleaner, more efficient internal combustion engines, clean-burn coal technology, fuel cell development, and the move to hydrogen fuel generally in the next two decades without Kyoto or any other UN-sponsored protocol? Carbon dioxide is not a pollutant. The world as we know it would not exist without CO₂.

What we're talking about here is the balance or lack of balance in the global carbon cycle. CO₂ is a major part of this cycle, and perceived excess atmospheric CO₂ is the target of the UN-sponsored disagreement. There is almost no doubt that atmospheric levels of CO₂ have been much higher and also somewhat marginally lower in the last few million years, a blink in our planet's lifetime. Us human beings are beginning to take ourselves way too seriously if we think for a moment that our activity on this planet is the major contributing factor to global warming or a host of other natural calamities, for that matter. Mother Nature, if you like, has us beat hands down on this one.

So we need to address mankind's contribution to the carbon cycle. To the best of my knowledge, Mr. Speaker, there is no accurate way to measure how much CO₂ produced by any hydrocarbon oxidation is actually released into the atmosphere to join the host of gases that constitute our blanket. Formulas indicating mass into an equation equal mass out just don't do it. There are too many variables. Humidity, temperature, the amount of green biomass in the vicinity, or snow cover all could affect the actual CO₂ released. How do we buy credits for something we can't measure? A coal-fired generation station in the boreal forest may be vastly more green friendly than one in Arizona. Who knows?

Move away from the numbers. They are very confusing, and honestly at the end of the day those numbers about jobs, economy, competitive disadvantages, et cetera, et cetera, are only accordion tunes composed and played for the benefit of one maestro or another. The numbers can bore you to tears, but let me plant a thought in your mind with one important number. A scientist has estimated that the cost of Kyoto over the first compliance period of '08 to '12 will be in the neighbourhood of $200 billion U.S. dollars.

AN HON. MEMBER: How many?

MR. KNIGHT: Two hundred billion U.S. dollars in the first compliance period. He contends, Mr. Speaker, that this is sufficient to produce sanitation and safe potable water for most of our planet's population. Where would you spend your money?

I want to stress that the Alberta government understands and agrees with the need to take action on climate change. We are committed to addressing this issue and share Albertans' and Canadians' concerns.

However, as the Premier has stated, Kyoto is not the only option for reducing greenhouse gases. The U.S. has adopted its own plan, and like the new U.S. climate change strategy our made-in-Canada alternative calls for cutting emissions intensity. Emissions intensity refers, of course, to the ratio of emissions per unit of economic output. Mr. Speaker, a policy based on emissions intensity allows you to keep growing your company, to keep opening plants, to keep driving your economy forward as long as your activities grow steadily more efficiently. Our reduction targets will be met through sectoral agreements with industry, energy efficiency and conservation by consumers, and technological investment all backed up by legislation.

Alberta's plan focuses on real reduction in a realistic time frame. By 2020 Alberta will cut emissions intensity in the province by 50 percent below 1990 levels, or the equivalent of an overall reduction of 60 million tonnes of greenhouse gas emissions. In the interim, Mr. Speaker, we will cut 22 percent of emissions intensity by 2010, a reduction of 20 million tonnes.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta's plans would see substantial reduction in emissions over a more realistic time frame than Kyoto through a combination of investment in technology and energy conservation measures. Alberta's plan is a long-term strategy with a strong focus on partnerships and leveraged funding for emission reduction initiatives. For example, we propose that the Alberta government will provide $1 for every $2 contributed by others, such as the federal government or the private sector, in funding such initiatives. Of course, our largest trading partner, the U.S., has rejected the Kyoto plan. The U.S. plan for the greenhouse gas issue is centered on safeguarding their economic growth, and our plan should address this also.

Alberta companies, institutions, and governments have adopted a host of greenhouse gas reduction measures currently. Methane, by the way, Mr. Speaker, is a good, clean fuel, and CBM is more good, clean methane. We are increasing sulphur recovery rates at gas plants, we're dramatically reducing flaring at oil and gas wells, and we have toughened emission standards on new coal-fired electricity plants. Oil sands operators, as has been stated, are reducing their emissions intensities, and Alberta is part of a dramatic North American research effort into cleaner coal technology with the ambitious goal of reaching zero-emissions electricity. We did all these things the Alberta way: in partnership with Albertans, the industries that employ them, and voluntary organizations.

Perhaps most important, we want to work towards more effective use of technology and innovation in meeting our greenhouse gas reduction goals. For example, through our proposed national institute for energy and environmental policy the Alberta government will support and encourage new technologies that emphasize cleaner environmental performance and the development, process, and transport of energy resources. It will become an integrated centre of excellence for energy research where all players can focus and co-ordinate their efforts.

A key focus area of Alberta's plan is carbon management, capturing and using carbon dioxide for resource development, plus storing it in geological formations. In Alberta CO₂ from oil sands upgrading, oil refining, or power generation could be captured and used to increase production from mature oil reservoirs and coal-bed methane and could be stored in geological formations. Currently, technical conditions and infrastructure do not encourage widespread commercial use of CO₂ in these or other applications. The economics of capturing a pure stream of CO₂ are at present marginal. However, with oil and natural gas prices at current levels, there is interest in exploring the options available. The Alberta government is working in co-operation with the industry and the federal government, I might add, to develop solutions for the capture, transport, and storage of CO₂.

AN HON. MEMBER: Again, co-operation.

MR. KNIGHT: Again, co-operation.

What Alberta is proposing is to keep money here in Canada, using it to develop cutting-edge technology and getting those technologies into countries where emissions are much higher than they are here so that those emissions may be reduced. The fact is that Alberta is saying: let's not go the Kyoto route; let's take on global climate change in proven ways, ways that protect the jobs of Canadians and the future economic growth of every region of this country.

Mr. Speaker, the 60-plus pages of this international mumbo jumbo can be supplanted by the 13 pages of Bill 32, and it will at the end of the day result in more positive action on the serious question of climate change.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands on questions and comments.

MR. MASON: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, where to start?

The hon. member has indicated that he does not believe that human activity is primarily the cause of CO₂ emissions and the greenhouse effect. Can he tell us, please, how he then responds to this list of scientists at the University of Alberta who say otherwise. We've got Dr. Schindler; Dr. Sharp, a professor from the Department of Earth and Atmospheric Sciences; James Byrne, director of the Water Resources Institute at the University of Lethbridge; John Spence, professor and chair, Department of Renewal Resources at the University of Alberta. It goes on and on, page after page. What special insight does this member have that allows him to stand there and to contradict the expert advice of about four dozen top experts from Alberta?

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

MR. KNIGHT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will respond to the question that the hon. member has raised. Firstly, I'll respond by saying that it's unfortunate that perhaps his hearing device doesn't work quite as well as the one that I've been provided with, because I did not say what he repeated. What we say is that our activity on this planet is not the major contributing factor to global warming.

However, to go on to answer his question a little more fully, I believe that in the preamble to my comments with respect to this whole issue I did say that I had not been labouring in the universities and in the sweat mills in Alberta and in other places in Canada and around the world availing myself of further education, but I do say that I think that as a person that's been on the ground in the industry we are speaking mainly about for the last 40 years, I feel like I have an objective view that I could espouse and respond to him with respect to global warming and the issues concerning the release of emissions, not only carbon dioxide but certainly methane, sulphur compounds, and other compounds that are released through that particular industry.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Hon. minister, did you have a question?

MR. SMITH: Yes, actually, I did.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: As soon as Edmonton-Highlands has his opportunity.

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The question I have next for the hon. member has to do with the concept of emissions intensity which is contained in the bill, that apparently is not even going to be passed in this session. I believe I heard the member say that it would allow people to continue to increase their economic activity and it reduces the amount of CO₂ per unit of production or per unit of energy. Is it not the objective of the government to increase overall economic output as much as possible? Therefore, would it not be possible for the actual total, absolute amount of CO₂ emitted in Alberta to continue to grow notwithstanding that the intensity per unit of energy or production was slightly less?

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. KNIGHT: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I guess I would have to reply by saying: is it the case that the hon. member is suggesting that as global activity increases both with respect to population increases and certainly the commercialization in other parts of the globe – is it his suggestion that globally we are going to see a decrease in the level of any types of greenhouse gas emissions? I would suggest that that is not going to happen.

Also, Mr. Speaker, when we talk about the contribution of Canada, generally speaking, and Alberta specifically, our contribution with respect to the greenhouse gases emitted globally, certainly it's such a minor amount as to be almost not worth speaking about.

The second thing is that I would suggest, then, that perhaps . . . Thank you very much.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Unfortunately, we haven't had the opportunity to complete the answer nor to hear questions and possible responses from the minister. Five minutes is an absolute on this one.

So we're ready for our next speaker on this topic, and if not, then we're ready for the question. The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

MR. CAO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure for me to rise today to speak on this resolution, the resolution of the 12 points. Let me say first and foremost that I believe strongly in conserving our energy consumption to protect Canada's natural resources and our environment globally and locally. I strongly support the 12 principles that provide the basis for the development of a national climate change plan. I believe that there is a far better alternative than the Kyoto accord, that Albertans and all Canadians are being forced to accept.

Mr. Speaker, the accord is unreasonable, unfair, and ineffective. Each developed country has a different target, and some have not even signed, while the European Union and Japan have ratified the accord with their own qualifications. The United States of America have refused to do so. Australia also refused. Kyoto simply does not work within the North American context. The resolution that we see today provides an opportunity for dialogue that would result in a made-in-Canada solution. It does not make sense for Canada to adopt a foreign-concocted plan like Kyoto.

Mr. Speaker, with my limited knowledge of Japanese history "Kyo" means capital and "to" means city. It's a beautiful word to indicate the ancient capital of Japan, but – and this is a big "but," very important – unfortunately, our current Canadian federal government leader has changed its meaning for Canadians. In Canada Kyoto – K-y-o-t-o – has become: kill your opportunity to outperform. And I will tell you why. Studies show that if Kyoto is signed, up to $8 billion per year could be lost in Alberta economic activity. It is roughly 2 or 3 percent of our annual economy. Also, if Kyoto is ratified, jobs will be lost. Studies show that there could be between 40,000 and 70,000 Alberta jobs lost or not realized.

Further, Mr. Speaker, Kyoto will affect Canada's ability to compete in global markets. For instance, 80 percent of Canadian exports go to the U.S., who are not signing on to the protocol. Certainly this will affect our relative competitiveness. Kyoto could also result in higher costs for consumers. It is possible that taxes could rise along with gasoline prices, utility prices, and heating costs.

Mr. Speaker, Canadians are prepared to change their lifestyle to accommodate and protect our environment. We are all committed to this. However, Kyoto would impose restrictions beyond our control. For instance, consider the huge emission sources of personal automobile exhaust.

For an example, say that five years ago, Mr. Speaker, on behalf of this group here I simply signed a broad agreement with other countries or other groups out there and came back and told the group here that now we have an obligation within 15 years to reduce our driving distance by a hundred thousand kilometres from our annual level of seven years previously, and then five years have gone by and no one has yet put together any detailed plan to implement my agreement.

Now, there are a few minor issues. You see, Mr. Speaker, now there are more people in our group; hence, more total driving mileage relative to 12 years ago, and in the next 10 years there will even be more and more people driving. How do I allocate my committed driving reduction to individuals in my group? How do I further stop the increase in the number of people in my group and their traveling? I also fail to realize that individuals in my group drive for different reasons, for different purposes. How do I ask the transport truck drivers to drive less? How do I ask the taxi drivers to drive less? How do I ask doctors, nurses, and teachers to drive less? Especially, how do I ask our farmers to drive even less? There are many unanswered questions. Further, there are people in my group who make wheels and vehicles, and there are children who will be learning how to drive in the coming years. Since I have no answer, you know what I did? I will try to do everything and adopt innovation which is already being done; for instance, new types of automobile engines, new types of fuels, hope for the future of research and technology, and I even talk about retraining people for jobs that require less driving and making driving or traveling cost prohibitive with higher fees and taxes. But the question still remains: who shares that 100,000 kilometre reduction that I committed to? Who shares that reduction? I argue that it's careless to sign the accord without any quantification, any detail. The fact of the matter is that ratifying the Kyoto protocol could impose unreasonable and harmful CO₂ reduction targets globally. On the whole, it is a very ineffective solution for CO₂ reduction.

Mr. Speaker, Kyoto proposes buying emission credits as a possible solution, but this money will leave Canada without doing anything or actually helping the environment globally. All in all, trading emissions will have very little impact on the global CO₂ level because it only covers 30 percent of man-made emissions, and the large polluters like the United States, China, India will not even ratify the Kyoto protocol. Ultimately, Kyoto will merely transfer wealth among countries rather than measure the real impact of CO₂ reduction. Kyoto will drain dollars, investment, and jobs from Canada and transfer them to the non-Kyoto countries with virtually no impact on global emissions.

The burden that Kyoto would have on Canada is huge, Mr. Speaker. Ratifying the Kyoto protocol would harm Canada more than any other country. This is probably due to the fact that Canada will not receive credit for our previous efforts of reducing CO₂ or for clean energy export, and as it hits home to us, consider the serious impact that Kyoto would have on the oil sands development in northern Alberta. Before Kyoto oil sands volumes are projected to account for more than 50 percent of Canada's oil production by 2010. Kyoto's effect on Alberta oil sands is important for all of Canada to realize. Without major oil sands development Canada would become a net importer of oil. This would have significant consequences for our national economy, energy, security, and even your safety.

In closing, I strongly support the resolution before us, and I support the move toward an alternative made-in-Canada approach that would better address climate change. Rather than Kyoto there are ways to focus CO₂ reduction efforts on energy efficiency instead of meeting rigid targets at the expense of our economy. Rather than conforming to Kyoto's time line, we should consider a realistic, reasonable time frame for CO₂ reductions unique to Canada's situation.

Before we do the question, I have something here to say to our Prime Minister en français. Au mieux, l'arrangement Kyoto du gouvernement fédéral canadien est un cas exemplaire d'un cœur gentil et une tête de folie. Tenons notre cœur et purifions notre tête.

What I'm saying here in English is that at best the Kyoto scheme of the federal government is an exemplary case of a gentle heart and folly head, so keep our heart and clear our head.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands on comments and questions.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member parlays considerably better than the Prime Minister, I believe. I congratulate him on that.

I want to clarify some numbers that he used, and I believe some other hon. members have also used numbers about the number of jobs lost. I thought he said, perhaps, that it was 40,000 to 70,000 jobs lost and $8 billion. Can he first of all correct my numbers and make sure I've got them right, and then, secondly, can he please cite the source of this economic information so that we can all have a look at it?

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

MR. CAO: Thank you. Thank you. That's a very good question. In fact, if you look at the brochure circled around Canada, now you have the federal government talking about hundreds of thousands, you've got 400,000 from the manufacturing association of Canada – okay? – and then you have a lot of ranges. They even talk about temperature variety. So the number that you are talking about here is still within that limit. That's a large range. I just focused on a particular smaller number for you to worry about.

[Government Motion 33 carried]

head: Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Tannas in the chair]

THE CHAIR: We'll call the Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 30-2 Adult Interdependent Relationships Act

THE CHAIR: Are there any questions, comments, or amendments to be made with respect to this bill? The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It is my pleasure to rise tonight to speak to Bill 30-2 in committee and in particular to propose an amendment, which I understand the table has been provided with the necessary copies. The amendment basically deals with three connected issues relative to the act.

I spoke to Bill 30-2 in second reading, and I won't repeat the issues that were raised at that point in time, but I'd just like to put on the record for the House that in dealing with the bill, I have had the occasion to meet with members of the Canadian Bar Association, wills and estates subsection, both in Edmonton and in Calgary and have been in attendance at a meeting of the family law section of the Canadian Bar Association in Edmonton. In the meetings of those subsections some issues and concerns have been raised by members present about the bill from the perspective that the bill doesn't go far enough, in their viewpoint, to provide the certainty that they would like to see with respect to matters of defining who is actually in a relationship.

Now, Mr. Chair, I should be clear that I don't necessarily agree with those assertions. I've been dealing with this bill for close to a year now, perhaps more than a year now, and in terms of coming to a definition of an adult interdependent partner which makes sense, which people can see and can understand who's in that type of a relationship and what types of factors go into determining that type of relationship, I think we have in this bill achieved a pretty good standard and one which the courts would recognize and interpret as being a relationship which would be similar to the type of relationship that one might have normally called a common-law relationship. Of course, the courts have dealt with common-law relationships over the years and have extended certain obligations of the law and access to the law to people in common-law relationships. So I think the definition in the act very clearly attempts to establish that issue with respect to people who are in a relationship outside of marriage as being similar to what we would normally have called a common-law relationship.

However, the issue that has been raised by members of the bar relates to the so-called platonic relationships that might be included in the definition of adult interdependent partner. Because this is probably the first time in at least a Canadian jurisdiction that the law has actually preceded the court in terms of defining the relationship, there's concern about there being a lack of a body of law to interpret it and some issues around that. So in looking at that issue, I invited members of the bar to make suggestions as to what might be done from their view to make the definition that's in the act and make the interpretation of the act more certain.

The first portion of the amendment, which is titled in the amendment, which is being handed out, as A, refers to section 3 being struck out and the following being substituted. Then the substituted section which is being proposed basically repeats all of what used to be section 3 in the bill but then adds a subsection (2) which reads:

Persons who are related to each other by blood or adoption may only become adult interdependent partners of each other by entering into an adult interdependent partner agreement under section 7.

So what this portion of the amendment does, Mr. Chair, is to indicate that where people are related by blood or adoption, the question of being taken into an adult interdependent relationship by what is called ascription – in other words, they haven't actually signed a contract – would be prohibited, and they would actually have to take the formal step of signing a contract.

Now, why does this make sense, Mr. Chairman? Well, it makes some sense because most of the issues that people have raised with respect to a platonic relationship circle around the area of a family member taking care of a family member, and that relationship of care, which one normally assumes to be a normal family responsibility or an issue of one family member taking on what would be considered to be a family obligation with respect to another family member, ought not to by virtue only of that relationship be interpreted as an adult interdependent partnership.

It may well be prudent, and we have taken the step of agreeing with some members of the Bar Association that we ought to put forward a resolution which would then make it certain that those people who are members of families who are related by blood or adoption could only be in an adult interdependent relationship if they actually took the proactive step of entering into a contract in that respect. So it somewhat narrows the number of people that might be involved, but it gives those other people who would want to be involved the opportunity to contract in, so to speak.

Section B adds "and costs" after "loss" in sections 8(2) and 8(3) of Bill 30-2, and that is relevant when we look at amendment C. Amendment C adds a section 8.1 after section 8, and it suggests that a person who alleges an adult interdependent relationship knowing that the relationship does not exist is liable in damages to compensate any person for pecuniary loss and costs incurred in reliance on the existence of the alleged adult interdependent relationship.

Again, the concern that was raised by members of the bar was that there would be a flood to the courts of cases in this area of people alleging an adult interdependent relationship where there's not a conjugal relationship in place – it's just a platonic relationship – and it may be difficult to prove one way or the other. I don't necessarily agree with the concern that's been raised. In fact, I do not believe that the courts would be flooded in this manner, but I think it is always prudent to discourage unnecessary litigation and discourage people from challenging the law just because they might have an opportunity of success. So I did agree with the Bar Association that putting the clause in here makes it clear that one ought not to go to the court unless there actually was an adult interdependent relationship. Alleging one for the purposes of trying to change the way an estate might be distributed, that type of claim, ought to be discouraged. Therefore, one should only take those cases to court if they clearly fall within the definition of an AIP. So that section 8.1, again, is a section based on a representation made to myself in discussions that I've had over the course of the last two weeks with members of the wills and estates section of the Canadian Bar Association and is responsive to the request that they raised.

I go back to section B, then, and say that because we've added costs in with the new 8.1, it's prudent to add costs into the provisions of section 8, which also deal with compensation issues.

The section D, as outlined there, deals with onus of proof, and while it ought to be clearly understood at law that the onus of proving that a relationship existed would be on the person who was alleging the existence of the relationship, section 9.1 puts it right into the act so it's clear for all to see and there's no ambiguity about it at all. The burden of proof is on the person who alleges that a relationship exists. Somebody doesn't have to disprove the relationship; the person alleging it has to prove the relationship.

With these amendments, Mr. Chairman, we're attempting to be responsive to concerns that have been raised. It has always been our intention that the relationships that are captured under Bill 30-2 are clearly those personal intense relationships which we normally at this point in time would consider to be common-law relationships but extended to include conjugal relationships and platonic relationships but, clearly, those relationships of such an intense personal nature that the parties have an obligation to each other, and when the relationship breaks down, there's a dependency that's been created and those parties have the obligation to deal with the dependency.

So I hope, Mr. Chairman, that clarifies to a certain extent why the amendments are being brought forward at this stage, the concern that they're being raised to satisfy. I think the bill, with these amendments, is still a landmark bill that deals with the issues and concerns about who has access to the law and for what purposes in order to deal with issues of relationship breakdowns, and they're consistent with the philosophy of the bill. I would be happy to answer any questions that the members of the House might have relative to these amendments or to the bill itself, but I would encourage the adoption of the amendments.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre on amendment A1.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Well, indeed, there's much to be said for clarity. I think there's even a series of commercials that is out these days extolling the virtues of clarity in life.

I have seen this amendment in advance, and I thank the minister for the courtesy of that. I don't take particular issue with any of the sections that are being suggested for amendment here. I actually think that 3(2), where is probably a good idea and will help alleviate some of the concerns that I've had raised with me about a number of the scenarios that have been raised where family members are residing together, and because they've been together for longer than three years, this adult interdependent partnership now exists, and that that would alter some of the other arrangements that had been made; in other words, the relatives wouldn't necessarily understand that they'd been captured by this new legislation. This now sets out that they would have to knowingly and with forethought enter into this agreement, so there could be no misunderstanding, that they didn't understand that it applied to them or that it caught them by surprise.

I am not so sure why we need the additions of the kind of legal-beagle stuff about having to prove it in court and not going to court to use these relationships as a way to get out of something or get into something that they really are not entitled to. But if that's what the recommendation is from the Canadian Bar Association, I'm willing to believe that that's a reasonable group of people and that they know what they're doing, and I will accept the suggestions that they've made.

I guess one of the issues that I do want to bring up and get on the record and get a response from the minister on is: will this amendment alleviate a situation that's described in a document from the Canadian Bar Association wills and estates subsection for northern Alberta, which outlines an anecdotal situation where we have a mother and adult son that are living together. The mother decides she wants to reward the son by leaving him more of the estate. I'm sorry; the actual example is that if the mother wanted to leave her estate to all of her children equally but that she was now deemed to be in an adult interdependent relationship, she would not have the ability to do that. The legislation would now essentially force the estate to give precedence to the son that was her adult interdependent relationship. I'm assuming that that is going to be addressed in this and that the mother and the son would have to knowingly enter this relationship. One presumes that the rest of the siblings would then be aware of what the arrangement is and would know this was the case, and that could be argued out in advance of the mother's demise then. So I'll just double-check with the minister that, in fact, I am reading that correctly and have him respond to me. That seemed to be the concern that was being raised there.

The other issue I've had raised with me around this – and I don't think it's being addressed by this amendment, and I'll probably bring it up again later – is that people may not be aware that if they had a will in place, the existing law is that if you get married, that will is null and void. With the passage of Bill 30-2, the Adult Interdependent Relationships Act, the same thing would now apply to these types of relationships. Any will that was in place once the people enter into or qualify for this relationship would render any pre-existing wills null and void. People need to know that and need to know that they should go in and write a new will. That I don't think is covered under the amendment that has been brought forward by the minister.

So, as I say, having had an opportunity to look at this amendment in advance, discuss it with a few people, review some of the information that has come my way from various divisions of the Canadian Bar Association and others who've contacted me, I do see this as an attempt by the minister to address some of the concerns that are brought forward by members of the legal profession regarding this legislation. I hope that it will bring clarity to the process. I don't have a problem with what I'm seeing as far as I understand it.

With that, I'm hoping the minister can answer my questions, and I'm willing to support the passage of this amendment. Thank you.

THE CHAIR: Any further comments, questions?

MR. MARZ: Just a few comments, Mr. Chairman, on this and perhaps some clarifications on some of the clauses in the amendment. I received a call from a constituent over the supper hour. The constituent was a lawyer, and he expressed some concerns about this in addition to some of the other concerns that the minister talked about that he'd received from the Bar Association as well, and they were quite similar. I did talk to him at length about what would be satisfactory to ease his concerns, because apparently he's dealing with constituents and clients of his that are in estate planning, and they've expressed concerns about how this is going to affect their estate planning. It appears that one of the amendments that the minister introduced here, the one that persons who are related to each other by blood or adoption may only become adult interdependent partners of each other by entering into an adult interdependent partner agreement under section 7

apparently he felt would go a long way to alleviating a lot of the problems that he's encountering in dealing with this particular bill.

There are some other problems that have been expressed to me over the last number of days, though, and one deals with the potential alleged interdependent relationship that may result from a caregiving situation. I see the Minister of Seniors in here tonight, and as we are increasing the baby boomer bulge, becoming retirees, that group of people is getting larger and larger, and we are encouraging as a government these people to stay in their homes as long as possible. Staying in their homes as long as possible is going to require care, and probably a lot of that care in the future is going to be provided by the private sector. There's nothing wrong with that, but the problem arises where there is a substantial estate and a caregiver, although only a caregiver, claims to have established an interdependent relationship at some time during that caregiving period with an individual and thereby is seeking to inherit a substantial part if not all of the estate.

I was wondering if the minister could provide some clarification of this particular situation. There may be a strong temptation for such an individual to claim that even though I see that in amendment 8(1) there are potential penalties for doing that by having court costs assessed and that sort of thing, but perhaps the size of the estate may provide temptation far beyond that. So I was wondering if the minister could provide some insight into these situations. We can't determine for certain what the courts are going to decide in these cases.

In talking to this lawyer at noon today, I spoke to him of a common-law relationship, having to have three years living together or a child to establish a common-law relationship. He said that that's not always the case. There are other instances where the courts have determined that a common-law relationship did exist, so perhaps the minister could enlighten me a little bit on that. If that is the case, could that not be the same in this particular thing, that the courts could decide that even though it says three years, even though it says that in less than three years a child would have to be a product of that union? Are there other instances where the courts may decide this could happen? It would be quite disastrous to those families if the courts made this determination based on this legislation. If this isn't ironclad, we certainly wouldn't want to be experimenting with families and their estates. Perhaps the minister could comment on some of these.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Just to deal with the concerns from the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills first. It should be clear that there are two things which are being proposed: one that's already in the bill and one which is in the amendments, which should deal with the concerns raised by the hon. member relative to a caregiver being found to be an adult interdependent partner. In the amendment we're making it clear that if you're related by blood or adoption, you cannot be an adult interdependent partner unless you've entered into an agreement, therefore a conscious act between the two parties, to find the status of an adult interdependent partner. That takes care of the situation where it's a family member who's the caregiver who's moving in, and that was one of the concerns that people had. As I say, I think the definition that was in the bill was broad enough to stop that from happening, but out of an abundance of caution because of a concern that has been raised, we proceeded to bring that amendment forward to clarify that and to make it certain.

The other thing that I'd like to bring his attention to is section 4(2) of the bill, which provides that a relationship of interdependence does not exist between 2 persons where one of the persons provides the other with domestic support and personal care for a fee or other consideration or on behalf of another person or organization, including a government.

So if you have a nonrelated caregiver who's resident and they're providing care for a fee or other compensation, they, by definition, cannot be an adult interdependent partner.

Now, relationships might always progress from that of being a paid caregiver into an actual relationship. If that happened, that would be a normal situation that people might find themselves in. But the fact of the matter is that if a person is actually a paid caregiver or somebody who's receiving consideration for providing the care, they cannot be in an adult interdependent relationship. I think I can safely say to the hon. member that for people in that position the issue with respect to a person's estate will not be aggravated by this bill.

I have had other discussions, of course, with the hon. member. I mean, there are situations in this world where people take advantage of older people or where they move in. You know, relationships are established. That happens, but again one shouldn't just assume that because people have entered into a relationship, even if it is an actual relationship that would be defined as a relationship under this bill or without this bill – those situations happen, and those situations are the subject of cases before the courts even now. This bill doesn't change that in any way, shape, or form.

I want to assure the member that we have dealt completely with the issue that he's concerned about, and that is a caregiver taking advantage of the person that they're taking care of and going for more than the fee that they were to be entitled to have. I think that deals with that situation.

Now, the other situation that he's raised is the question of whether the definition of three years or one year with a child is a firm definition. Actually, Bill 30-2 goes a long way to create certainty in that area as well, because at law in Alberta we have definitions of common-law relationships that range anywhere from one year or just people moving in together to five years in certain statutes, so we have it defined in a broad spectrum of ways in different definitions for different acts. This clearly makes one definition for all of the laws that we have relative to who fits into that relationship, and by having that clear definition and a public purpose so that people can have some certainty as to when those relationships exist, we can be,

I think, satisfied that the courts now will know what at law constitutes an adult interpersonal partnership, or formerly a common-law relationship. It's a common definition now, which is something we have not had before in Alberta.

I would just emphasize, although it doesn't need emphasizing, that, again, by virtue of this bill we're clarifying what "marriage" and "spouse" mean in all of the laws that we have and then what the common-law relationship, now the adult interpersonal partnership relationship, is in all of those laws. We're not confusing those two definitions, which we also have done in various statutes and laws in this province in the past. So I hope that deals with the hon. member's concerns relative to the issues that he raised.

The Member for Edmonton-Centre raised issues with respect to some letters received from various members of the Bar Association and one in particular, and I don't know whether she referred to the particular member that raised it or not. In any event, I'll just deal with it generically. First of all, some members of the Bar Association have been writing with concerns about us interfering with the ability of people to make their own wills and to devolve their own property. Clearly, we are not attempting in any way, shape, or form to take away the right of an individual that they have in this province to write a will and to determine who their property goes to.

Now, it has to be understood, of course, that the law in this province does still require that people take care of their dependants. So while adult children have no right to their parents' estate in Alberta, a parent can leave their property to anybody they wish in their will. They can leave it to the SPCA if they wish. They can leave it to a favourite charity. They have no obligation to leave it to their family, but people do have an obligation to take care of their dependants, and if they do not take care of their dependants in an appropriate manner and they leave somebody in a position where they don't have appropriate resources to live, people can make application under the Family Relief Act for relief.

In those circumstances, at law now, without this bill, the courts can determine that a person has not appropriately provided for a dependant and can give the family relief, and that would not change under Bill 30-2. Bill 30-2 still provides that an individual in this province can write a will, leave their estate to whomever they wish as long as they appropriately provide for dependants, and if they haven't appropriately provided for their dependants, the dependants would have access to the Dependants Relief Act, as I think we're changing the name to in this bill. So I think that deals with the question of the wills variation that was raised or how we might be interfering with the question of the person's ability to leave their estate.

In the example that was used specifically, of course, again, by virtue of the amendments that are being brought forward tonight, we're saying that you cannot be an adult interdependent partner if you're related by blood or adoption unless you've entered into an agreement. Therefore, the adult child living with the parent would not have the benefit of that relationship to take forward into their dependant relief application. Now, if they were truly dependent, they would have whatever application they have at law now, and that won't change.

So, clearly, Bill 30-2 does not do what people are concerned about with respect to interfering with the ability of a person to leave their estate to whomever they wish, and the concern that has been raised relative to family situations is very definitely dealt with now by virtue of the amendments that are being proposed tonight.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands on amendment A1.

MR. MASON: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to ask the minister just some questions, and these I think bear on the basic content of the bill. Here's what I'm trying to figure out. If you are unrelated and you don't have a conjugal relationship – you might be roommates, for example, for an extended period of time, and one person might choose to make a greater financial contribution than the other, and then after three years all of a sudden the person who's making the greater financial contribution is required to make that greater financial contribution on an indefinite basis. But if you happen to be brother and sister or sister and sister or whatever, you don't. Now, I don't understand that. This is the problem I'm having with the basic concept of the bill, but it's embodied in this amendment, so it's a great chance to ask it, I think.

Why, if you are roommates and one provides a greater degree of financial support to the other, does the person receiving the financial support by mutual agreement have a right to enforce a continuation of that support in the courts? This is something I do not understand, Mr. Chairman.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Indeed, I would commend to the hon. member the Canadian Law Reform Commission's report Beyond Conjuality. It's a very good report, and it clearly outlines the issue.

Sometimes governments are accused of having to be dragged kicking and screaming into making amendments to the law. Now, when this government has reviewed completely the philosophy which underlies why we have this type of law, it then says: it ought to be extended to all of those people who are in a relationship of interdependency, who have created the emotional bond and the financial bond and have created that dependency. When the relationship breaks down, they ought to have access to it. Then people say: well, you're going way too far; you should wait for the courts to tell you to do that. Well, I think not. I think we ought to look at the philosophy of why we have the law and who should have access to the law.

We've said that that isn't limited to people who have sex, has nothing to do with people who have sex. It has to do with the type of personal emotional relationship that people have, and by coming together and having that type of relationship and intermingling their property and being co-dependent on each other both emotionally and financially – that's the type of relationship which historically we knew as marriage and more recently has included common-law people and more recently than that or perhaps forever has included other types of couples. Essentially, those are the types of relationships that the courts have said ought to have access to the same laws because they have the same problems. When relationships break down, property has to be separated and dependencies have to be dealt with.

So it makes sense to include those people who are in a platonic relationship of that type of personal emotional commitment and intensity, and we should be, again, very clear in what we're talking about here. We are not talking about two college roommates who lived together for three years, regardless of who pays the bills. One of them pays all the bills and the other pays none of the bills. It doesn't make it the type of relationship that you would say: those two people are holding themselves out as a couple in the community, they go to events together, they're known to be a couple, they're known to be together, and regardless of whether they're having sexual relationships or not, that's immaterial. The question is: do they have the type of relationship where if they ought to have gotten married or they could have gotten married, they should have got married, as some would put it. That's what you're talking about in this situation.

It's not about casual, platonic relationships. It's not about two college roommates. It's about those people who have engaged in a close, intense, personal relationship that we now know as marriage or as a common-law relationship and also ought to include other relationships, because it's not up to us to determine what type of relationship you live in. It's only for us to make sure that you have access to the law when it's necessary, when the relationship breaks down either by virtue of disagreement or by death and you need to then sort out the issues which come out of those relationships. Now, why differentiate between family members and non family members? Well, quite frankly, personally, I would prefer not to. I think it makes sense if we're going to be philosophically pure not to do that.

However, I do understand that sometimes you have to move slowly in these areas. The area where there could be the biggest misunderstanding would be the situation where an adult child moves in with mom or dad and the rest of the family is concerned that the adult son moving in with mom or dad might be doing so to lay a larger claim on the estate or to somehow get an advantage.

So perhaps it's prudent. I've acquiesced in the view that it may be prudent to take this one step at a time and to say that in those situations where there's the potential for abuse and where people are concerned that they're going to be abused, we say that you have to take a positive, proactive step to enter into the agreement so that there could be clarity around that relationship. That's a prudent step, and we do need to take these steps slowly so that people can understand, a body of law can be built up around this, and we can be assured that it's not being applied inappropriately.

So I would ask that the House do support the amendment for those reasons.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I want to just follow this up because I really want to understand this clearly. The act is saying in the Interpretation section that "relationship of interdependence" means a relationship outside marriage in which any 2 persons

- (i) share one another's lives,
- (ii) are emotionally committed to one another, and
- (iii) function as an economic and domestic unit.

Now, is there jurisprudence on this matter? Have the courts interpreted this adequately that it's going to make some sense?

Then the second question has to do with the amendment with respect to people who are related by blood or adoption. The question I would ask, then, is: if two brothers or two sisters have lived together in an interdependent relationship for an extended period of time, why would they have less protection than two people who are unrelated by blood? I can see the point about the freeloading offspring coming back into the nest. I can see that point, but I would suspect that there are a number of relationships where siblings have lived together in an interdependent relationship, and this amendment takes away their rights or reduces their rights to a level which is lower than people who are totally unrelated. Why is that?

THE CHAIR: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. First of all, with respect to the question of jurisprudence I would address the hon. member's attention to section 2(a) to (i), which are the factors which are to be taken into account in determining whether a relationship exists. In fact, those are the factors which have come out of the case law over the years with respect to the determinations that courts have made in finding common-law relationships. These aren't invented or pulled out of the air. This comes from the body of law which has developed over time as the courts have developed this issue that relationships exist outside of marriage which have to be taken into account.

So I would say that there's a considerable amount of jurisprudence which will be helpful in guiding a court if any issues of this nature come up, because the courts, in fact, have been involved in determining those factors and applying those factors and determining what weight those factors might have in any given fact circumstance. Sometimes I've had the question: how many of these do you have to have? What weight do you give them? Well, those are subjective tests that a court has to apply having heard the evidence and having heard the people involved in the case. They've done a good job of that in the past, quite frankly, and those factors come from that area.

The second question that the member raises is a little bit more difficult because inherently it does look to be unfair to say that if you're related by blood or adoption, you have to have an agreement, but if you're not related at all, you don't have to have an agreement. The member makes a good point that if two sisters are living together, as was the example used in the Beyond Conjugalities report, that I referred to, they ought to have access to the law in the same manner. I don't inherently disagree with the member, and that's why this amendment was not included as part of the bill in the first place. But I have been swayed by the argument that we should proceed cautiously, that if we're going to expand into this area, there ought to be an opportunity for people to understand what this means and how it might affect them.

The single area that has been pointed out as being the most likely area of abuse, if there is an area of abuse, is the situation with close family relationships. Unfortunately – I wish it were not so – most estate litigation deals with families and family members and disagreements after death of a parent and those sorts of situations. So that is the place where the greatest anticipation of concern comes from. In looking at this and saying, "How do you best deal with it?" there's no easy way to codify this in a manner which would just isolate those people who are codependent children or parents or those sorts of things. You really have to take the whole bundle of family relationships.

I think it ought to be clear that there's a balance involved here, and the balance is one of trying to find the best place to create more certainty in the law, which is what the people planning the law would like to always have, but also providing the greatest access. So family members, if it's clear – and we make it clear to people that you can have this type of relationship, the adult interdependent relationship. By entering into an agreement, they're not precluded from having that type of relationship where it's appropriate to have it. They just don't get it by ascription. So we believe that that was a prudent place to start with this to see how it might develop at law, to see if there were the problems that come up that people are suggesting. I don't believe we'll see that, but that's a good place to start.

MR. MASON: Mr. Chairman, why not be very prudent and require everybody to sign the agreement?

MR. HANCOCK: Mr. Chairman, that would be the preference of many people. In fact, we used to call that marriage. That's the contract that people make, the intense personal contract that people make, and that's what our society built its property laws around. It's a very good concept. I agree with the member: that's the concept we ought to probably use. However, we can't go back. The courts have determined that there are relationships outside of marriage where people need to have access to the law, and in all fairness the law is about property and about division of property after relationship breakdown. So people outside of marriage have those problems and have to have access to the law.

The courts have taken us there and perhaps appropriately so. We've just not built that consistently into our law. As I said before in answer to an earlier question, we have numerous definitions of common law. We have numerous definitions of spouse. The need is to provide clarity, so we now have a clear definition of spouse. We have now a clear definition of how we term those people who are in relationships outside of that contract which is called marriage and apply the law to those people in a fair and appropriate manner. The law, in my view, would not stand up if we said to everybody: in order to have this type of relationship, you have to register.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre on amendment A1.

MS BLAKEMAN: Yes. Thanks very much. There have been two issues now raised. I'm glad to see that they have been raised, and hopefully we will all achieve clarity on this issue as a result of the discussion. In response to the issue raised by Edmonton-Highlands and answered by the Minister of Justice, it is true, and that's what happens when you start putting amendments into a bill that was already thought out as a package. You do start in some ways moving backwards. The point of this and one of the reasons that I was supportive of this bill was that it did capture people that fit the description. It did not require people to go somewhere and make some sort of overt act in order to be covered under the legislation. What the courts have very clearly said is that you cannot exclude somebody from a remedy or a benefit that they are entitled to because they didn't do something: because they didn't sign a piece of paper, because they didn't go to a particular place and say something. You cannot deny them a remedy or a benefit under the law because they didn't do that thing.

That's why the original definition that was under this act is one I thought was a very good one, and it was one, frankly, that I worked very hard to make sure was there. So, yes, I have problems with an amendment that starts to erode that, and that is what's in here. What we are trying to do now is to establish whether that erosion against that definition – in other words, the section that says: "Okay. If you're related by blood or by adoption, you are going to have to make an overt act in order to be captured by this legislation. You are going to have to sign something, do the written agreement in order to be recognized as being in" – is balanced against the fears and concerns of people that we would be capturing people who (a) did not want to be captured and (b) did not know they would be captured.

That leads me to my second point. What mechanisms are in place for the results of the passage of this legislation to be publicized to Albertans? This is new law. This is something new we are creating. People do not know about it. I've even spoken to the minister about the fact that there's been very little coverage of this in the paper. I'm hearing very little about it out in the community. So how do we now let people know that this now exists, that we have in fact captured them or captured a large number of people under this legislation? I would like to hear that discussion from the minister because I think it's something that we are going to have to do very deliberately. If the minister doesn't have specific plans in place, then I think the minister needs to get specific plans in place in order to let people know that this, in fact, has happened.

So while I appreciate the question from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands because it brought the issue up, I vehemently disagree with what I would see as taking a step backward and requiring all people to sign a written agreement in order to be captured under this legislation. That flies in the face of what the courts have given us. It flies in the face of human nature. Human beings don't do what they're supposed to do. If they did, we would not need an Intestate Succession Act, because everybody would run out and do wills exactly when they're supposed to do them. The day they turn 18, they would do exactly what they're supposed to do. But people don't. They do not do those things they are supposed to do, and we need to be providing legislation that understands that. There's no point in us writing a series of laws that then won't work for people because they don't do it. Then we just have a huge enforcement problem and start having to get into police officers or enforcement officers of some kind running around thumping on people because they didn't do something. You reach ridiculous extremes in that case.

Once again to the legislation. I'm looking to the minister for a very clear explanation of how this law, once passed, is going to be publicized so that people know that it exists and they've been captured by it. Two, I'm supportive of the legislation, but I am even more uneasy now than I was a half hour ago about eroding that original definition by requiring people that are related by blood or adoption to now sign the written agreement to enter into it, that to be recognized under this legislation as an adult interdependent relationship or adult interdependent partners, they have to sign a written agreement, because it does require an overt act from them. I understand that this was in response to concerns from the legal profession and other members of the community that were concerned that there would be not a wholesale attempt to defraud the system but that it increased the likelihood that that could happen and might be found enticing by some individuals.

So having said that, I will look forward to hearing the minister speak about how we are going to get information out about this, which may help address the issue that's also been raised by the Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Minister of Justice.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Just to clarify, I think it is important that Albertans be made aware of this. In fact, I think that's one of the essential elements of having this bill come forward. Right now people are becoming subject to obligations that they never knew they had as we march from one court case to the next. Right now before the courts there's a challenge against the Dower Act, for example. If the courts determined that the Dower Act was not constitutional because it's limited to people who are married – and this is a situation, I believe, where it's a common-law relationship which is the subject of the challenge – all of a sudden people could find that there are dower rights on their property that they never knew existed.

That's the type of thing which happens, and it's probably an exaggerated example. But I use that as an example of the fact that people are in relationships across this province as we speak, and every time there's a court challenge relative to the definition of "spouse" and how it gets applied, more people become subject to obligations which they didn't knowingly enter into. That's why it's completely necessary to redefine "spouse" to mean spouse, to have the adult interdependent partnership definition clearly there, and to have people understand that when they enter into these types of relationships, they carry with them obligations and burdens that they need to be cognizant of.

It's very necessary that we get the message out to Albertans when this bill is passed, which I hope will be passed, that we advertise to Albertans that there is an act in place – I can't identify for the hon. member tonight the nature and extent of an ad campaign – and speak to the amendment, which deals with the question of people related by blood or adoption having to enter into an agreement. This type of information has to be circulated. It has to be circulated through the bar; it has to be circulated through the organizations in our province which provide advice on a gratuitous basis to people who need it. It needs to be provided through our libraries so that people understand that entering into a relationship is serious business. They ought to pay attention. They ought to take the time to take care of their own affairs, write their own will or have somebody write a will for them, deal with their property issues, because if they don't, then they could be subject to a law which they didn't understand, and passing Bill 30-2 doesn't give them those rights and obligations. Those rights and obligations are out there. The courts are applying them on a daily basis to different people in different relationships.

So people ought to be aware of that, and the hon. member is absolutely right. We ought to make sure that it's well advertised, not necessarily by buying space in the media but, certainly, by encouraging the media to advertise, encouraging stakeholder groups and nongovernmental organizations and those people who are dealing with issues of relationships so that there's a good understanding of what the law is about and how it applies to them.

[Motion on amendment A1 carried]

THE CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thanks. I'm glad to have the opportunity in Committee of the Whole to just examine some of the different aspects that are being raised through this bill without the confines of a particular amendment.

I want to do just a couple of things, and the first one is to walk through the acts that are being included here. So essentially what we have is that the state is insisting on hanging onto the original definition of "spouse." Spouse now means most particularly a heterosexual marriage. Then there is an additional relationship which is called an adult interdependent relationship, or two people being adult interdependent partners, which is covering a number of other relationships including committed platonic, what we would have called common-law, and same sex.

So some of what we have being captured by this are some definitions that are different, and there are about four of them. One is the Alberta Personal Income Tax Act. What we have here is a definition of common-law partners. Now, one of the things that I want to question the minister on tonight is: what specifically is that definition? In attempting to have one definition under this act, we have had to have some exemptions and/or exceptions or differences. What exactly is the definition that's been accepted by the courts under common-law partners? If I could get that definition from the minister. Is that defined as being conjugal? Is it left totally undefined so it would mean and is accepted by the courts as meaning two people who set themselves forward as what we would now call an adult interdependent partnership? I want to know who would be captured under the Alberta Personal Income Tax Act.

Now, the employment pensions act we've seen before, and they have a definition called "pension partners," which has no further definition on it. Basically, anyone that you assign as your pension partner is your pension partner, so there's a lot of freedom there.

The MLA pension act has also been included recently, and it has that same definition of pension partner, which is self-determined, so no problems there.

The Assured Income for the Severely Handicapped Act has a definition that talks about cohabitating partners. Again I'm looking to see whether there's a specific definition set up or whether that is self-determined.

Now, there are a couple of acts that I just want to highlight and clarify that what's going to happen is what I think is going to happen. We've got the Alberta Evidence Act. I don't have questions about that, but with the Alberta Health Care Insurance Act I'm looking for what is now possible as our new definition of "AIRs" or "AIPs" gets included in that.

Also, further on down the list I notice that there's the Health Insurance Premiums Act. Now, I am just trying to make sure that this now means that companies like Starbucks that offer to pay health benefits for same-sex couples, for example, who have until now had their cheques returned because Blue Cross and health care premiums would not recognize those same-sex partnerships – so they would get a cheque from Starbucks saying that this is for person A and their partner, person B, and Alberta health care went: we don't recognize that kind of relationship, and therefore we're shipping the cheque back to you; start over again.

So those companies, and some of them international companies, were very frustrated in that they weren't able to offer the benefits equally to all of their employees depending on which province they were in and even which country they were in, and they were being precluded from offering a benefit here in Alberta that they could offer somewhere else. I actually had on my desk at one point three examples of that. One I know was Starbucks, and there were a couple of other large companies in the same situation there. I'm trying to make sure, then, that we can have, for example, a same-sex couple that can be covered under a family membership which would cover two people under the health care insurance premiums. So I'm looking for a confirmation on that, please.

The Election Act. I'm just double-checking what's being anticipated under that or what in particular opens up there. The other ones were the Income Support Recovery Act and the Interpretation Act.

Now, the Maintenance Enforcement Act. This is interesting. Will this now require that there's a maintenance order that is issued against one of the adult interdependent partners? Just because you have a relationship that breaks up, say, six months down the road, you don't automatically have a maintenance agreement there. You still have to go through court and have a court order issued the same way that a common-law couple or a married couple would have had to today, before this act is passed. So again can I double-check that that's what's going to be required here? There's nothing automatic that falls into place. They're going to require the same court order that anybody else requires. You know, that's not right, because you can self-register under . . . No. I'm looking for clarification there, because I think you can self-register under the Maintenance Enforcement Act. Is that what's possible and anticipated here?

Now, the Partnership Act is also included in the list, but in another place it's listed that it doesn't mean partners as in a legal partnership or a law firm or something.

The Protection for Persons in Care Act. I'm looking for some discussion of what's anticipated there, what's being granted there, any changes that we'd be expecting.

The other one was the one about having to testify against a partner in court. That's the other one that I've seen raised in the community as being of some concern, and perhaps that's appropriate. I mean, it's been in place previously that a married couple could not be required by the courts to testify against one another. Would that now apply to adult interdependent partners? Those are the specific questions that I have there.

Once again I'll bring up the issue of the wills being null and void, which is one of the reasons I'm so concerned that there be a very strong campaign to inform and educate members of the Alberta public that this is now coming into place, because if with the passage of this bill we have wills that are null and void for those people that qualify immediately under an adult interdependent relationship, then they need to know that so they get their wills rewritten or updated in some way so that they are valid under this new relationship. That is a matter of expediency, so I am concerned here that we don't have some long time lag where, you know, the government comes out with some sort of ad campaign or a leaflet or something next September, because I think that would cause us some problems in the interim. I agree with the minister about informing the various divisions of the Canadian Bar Association in Alberta about these changes – fine; great idea – but there's a whole bunch of other people out there that are not going to know what's happening.

We also have a number of acts that do not appear here in which the word "relative" is undefined, and I take it – and I'm looking for clarification here – that now includes these adult interdependent relationships under that undefined phrasing or undefined category of relative. I'm just making sure that they will be included in that and we don't have problems with, you know, people standing in hospitals not being allowed to see someone because they are not determined to be a relative. In fact, the Hospitals Act is one of the ones that's being covered here, but I really am looking to make sure that where the word "relative" appears in other acts, these adult interdependent relationships will be deemed to be part of that, even though they're not specifically spelled out.

Now, it's been noted by the minister and by myself a number of times that there are three acts that are not included here, that we need to be very alive to the fact that they're not. One is the Dower Act, which the minister just spoke of; again, there's currently before the courts a challenge on that one. The Widows' Pension Act is also not in here, I suspect because the government is looking to repeal the act and it would just disappear, so no point in putting it in this legislation. That leads to a whole other discussion.

Finally, the Matrimonial Property Act. It is much more of a concern to me that that one is not included in this act. Now, I know that it's not in here because, again, it's being challenged currently in front of the courts, but I think this is a much larger issue that we don't have this in the act. Is the minister anticipating bringing forward a miscellaneous statutes, for example, in order to add in matrimonial property once this particular case that's before the courts clears? Even given all these other acts that are being added in, matrimonial property is a huge part of a relationship that falls apart, and I think that to not have that included in this package is problematic.

I've talked about the wills being null and void, if I understand that properly. I asked something else before that I haven't had answered yet, and this certainly exists. If we have a couple who are a couple, who are an adult interdependent relationship – they hold themselves out to the community as such, they commingle assets, they are a financial and emotional support for one another, but they do not live in the same residence – can they sign the written agreement that says "We are adult interdependent partners" and have everything applied to them even if they don't actually live in the same place? They could in fact have a conjugal relationship but may not live in the same house. That is not as rare as we would think. There are lots of people that are very deeply committed to one another. They just don't want to share the same tube of toothpaste in the morning and therefore keep separate residences, often in the same apartment building – for example, down the hall or one floor up from each other – or next door, across the street in a house on the same block. So what about those people? Will they be captured under this act? I would think, in my reading of it, that if they signed the written agreement that says, “Yes, we acknowledge and we put ourselves out as adult interdependent partners,” in fact all other things then apply to them even though they do not physically reside in the same residence.

Okay. Clarify roommates. I don't think it should be an amendment, but what other reassurance can be given to the community that the spectre of the college roommates that is constantly being brought before us as an example of where things can go wrong, where people could use this act to take advantage of other people – what other reassurance is there in the act for people that, you know, college roommates will not be captured under this? Is it enough to say that the courts have already given us all this criteria which has been tested and that's enough, that we don't have to worry about it? When people say this to me, I go: yeah, there's going to be a certain amount of testing it in court. Do I think it's going to be wholesale testing? No, I don't, because it costs money, and if you want to be able to test certain parts of this act and try and make it apply to you, you're going to have to hire a lawyer and go to court.

Now, I don't know how many people really want to go through all of that just so that they might make an extra couple of bucks off somebody. Nonetheless, I think we are going to have to test the act in some ways, and that will inevitably happen, but I do not think that there's going to be a wholesale rush on the courts while all of these various relatives or arm's-length relatives or roommates or, you know, best friends or spinster aunts try and take advantage of one another. I just don't see it, but I am concerned that the clear information of what this act is intended to do does get out to people in a timely manner.

So those are the things I'm still looking for clarification on. Are the wills being nullified by the passage of this for anyone that has them and immediately qualifies as an adult interdependent relationship? What other clarification can be offered through the legislation about the whole roommate thing, and what does the minister plan to do or anticipate to do about bringing the Matrimonial Property Act under this as soon as possible, assuming that the court's decisions don't preclude that?

Okay. Thank you very much for the opportunity to go line by line.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. The hon. member has provided a litany of issues relative to the line-by-line analysis. I'm not going to go through each one of them with an answer. I think it's fair enough to answer most of them by saying that where the term “spouse” is used in our statutes in Alberta, we're now replacing that with “spouse or an adult interdependent partner.” Therefore, she can assume that where that has been done in all of the statutes that she's referred to, there is no difference in the application of the law; it's just a question of making sure who's included in that application.

To use the example she used with respect to maintenance enforcement, of course you'd have to get the court order before you registered it, whether you're getting a divorce or whether you're leaving an interdependent relationship. The law doesn't change; the application of the law doesn't change. It's just that we now have a clearer understanding of who has access to the law.

Now, there are some differences that the member has pointed out; for example, with respect to pensions. Clearly, we have passed orders in council under government pension plans to use the term “pension partner.” I've mentioned in the House before, I believe, that that's been used because for pension plans you have to adhere to the federal definitions, those that are allowable under the Income Tax Act, in order for a pension plan to be registerable and applicable, and therefore the pension partner has a different definition. That's defined in the act, I believe, and in the regulations, but it's a slightly different definition, and that's the reason for the different definition.

With respect to the applicability of this to various plans and benefit programs and that sort of thing, of course the answer is yes. As I mentioned before, where it used to say spouse, now it will say spouse or adult interdependent partner, and the plans will be applicable. Regulations may have to be written under various of those acts, and that will happen in due course if the Legislature agrees to pass the bill. So I think that deals primarily with the issues.

There are some issues that have been left out. The member referred to the Matrimonial Property Act, and I had this discussion with her outside the House, that the Matrimonial Property Act and the Dower Act have consciously not been included in this bill. Matrimonial property is before the Supreme Court of Canada. We felt that it was prudent to await the decision, which is expected sometime in December. We are dealing with family law in the spring, and if it's appropriate, we may deal with it in that context or may deal with it separately, but we're going to wait for the decision of the Supreme Court of Canada to see what that says before we take steps. It's the prudent thing to do.

With respect to the Dower Act, the Dower Act has a specific purpose and a specific language, and it's a difficult act to deal with in the context of this type of expansion because you need to have some registerable relationship in order to effectively use an act like the Dower Act. We really need to look at the Dower Act in its entirety to determine whether it is still necessary in the modern context, whether the need for the Dower Act has been supplanted by matrimonial property law and other laws. So we've left it out from that perspective, because it needs to be looked at in its own right.

In terms of the definition of “relative,” well, that includes people who are relatives. In some places that's defined; in other places it's not. One would assume that the courts will use the definitions that are in the various acts and use them consistently, but where it has not been defined, we didn't feel it was necessary to open that particular thing and put a definition in.

The member does raise a good question with respect to people who are in a relationship but who are living separate and apart. Of course, sometimes in the past we've seen situations – and it still occurs today, I guess – with seniors where one person is in need of care and needs to move into a seniors' residence or an extended care facility of some sort and is no longer living physically at home. One would not consider them to be living separate and apart simply because by virtue of the necessity of medical treatment or particular issues of care they're no longer living at home. I think we understand that at law, and the body of law around that is, I think, evident enough to deal with those situations. It could be a situation that we may have to watch and see whether there needs to be a tinkering with the act to make sure that that's clear, but I think there's a good understanding of who lives together and who doesn't live together. You know, the student who goes away to university is not considered to have left home, necessarily. I think the law is clear enough on those particular parts.

So, Mr. Chair, I'll take my seat.

AN HON. MEMBER: Question.

THE CHAIR: The question is called. However, we have a member standing, and the hon. member is entitled to stand and speak. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I have an amendment. [interjections] In fact, if this carries on, I have several.

THE CHAIR: Hon. member, then we can hand that out. [interjections] A1 was passed, yes. We're on the main bill. Now you're wishing to make an amendment.

MR. MASON: Mr. Chairman, if the amendment could be distributed, if it hasn't already been. I'm moving this on behalf of the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona. This is an amendment to the preamble of the bill which strikes out the preamble. It strikes out the preamble and substitutes the following:

Whereas there are Albertans in interdependent relationships that encompass the economic, social, and emotional aspects of marriage, while being outside marriage; and

Whereas it is appropriate to define a legal context for the nature of those interdependent relationships and to set out the applicability of Alberta laws to them.

So it would remove, essentially, the first three whereas and would modify the fourth "whereas" to be more appropriate for this particular act.

There are a number of reasons for this. First and foremost, this bill is about adult interdependent relationships. It is not about marriage, and a definition of marriage at the beginning is gratuitous and unnecessary and irrelevant to the act. I believe that the whereases that are proposed to be deleted are one-sided and do not represent the broad consensus within the province of Alberta. It is certainly true that marriage is an institution which does have traditional religious, social, and cultural meanings for many Albertans. The suggestion that "it is recognized in Alberta as a fundamental principle that marriage is a union between a man and a woman to the exclusion of all others" is debatable. That is certainly this government's definition of a fundamental principle, but there are many, many Albertans who would disagree and who in fact might find this assertion in the preamble to be offensive. The sensitivity of that point is, I think, inadequate.

The suggestion that the Legislature "affirms that a spouse is a person who is married" leaves out a growing and very significant number of people who are involved in common-law relationships and who believe they are, in fact, spouses. This would turn the clock back and define marriage very, very narrowly and certainly not in the direction that society is taking.

Mr. Chairman, I believe that the preamble is a political statement that represents only part of the views of Albertans or, rather, the views of a part of Alberta and is not broad and inclusive in nature, which it should be in dealing with a bill like this. Secondly, it is, as mentioned earlier, superfluous to the contents of the bill as a whole, which is meant to define adult interdependent relationships in the way that the minister has so eloquently described in answer to my questions and to questions of Edmonton-Centre as well.

So it's unnecessary. It's unnecessarily divisive, and it's unnecessarily narrow. The bill could easily prosper and enjoy wider support if these contentious definitions in the preamble were dispensed with.

With that, I would urge members of the Assembly to support this amendment.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre on amendment A2.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. I'm very happy to rise in support of this amendment. I'm pleased to see that the Member for Edmonton-Highlands has brought this forward on behalf of his colleague the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, because if he hadn't, I would have. I agree absolutely with this. I do know why that preamble is in here. I just disagree with why the preamble is in here. I think that preamble sets up a "na, na, na, na, na, we're better than you, but we're forced to do this" scenario, which, I think, demeans the rest of what is being intended by this bill, which, I think, is a noble purpose. I would prefer to see no preamble.

If what we're trying to do here is to define this new definition and bring it under the laws of Alberta, then let's just get to it. Why do we have to set out some two-tiered scenario right off the top in the bill, which is exactly what the "whereas" as presented in the bill does. I think it quite clearly sets it up that something else is more special and wonderful, but we have to do this other thing, so regrettably we do it. There's just a tone of puritanism, and it's not in following with what the reality of Alberta is. I spoke about this in second reading of this bill, and I spoke about how my constituents and others had approached me with their feelings that it was demeaning, that it was hurtful, that it was a slap in the face, that it was just grinding it into them that they weren't as good. They say: why do you have to do that? If what we're trying to talk about here is inclusion and bringing people under the law to be able to achieve the same remedies and benefits and obligations and responsibilities, then fine. Let's do that. Why do you have to grind somebody's nose in it? It's just mean-spirited.

Now, I know that there's a political expedience behind this. I accept that there's a political expedience behind it. I'm even willing to go along with it in order to achieve the rest of what's in this act, but I sure don't like doing it. I would speak very strongly in favour of the passage of this amendment because it does take that tone and that two-tiered status out of the "whereas" to this bill, and I would far prefer to see us go forward with legislation that can hold its head up all the way through.

Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman.

[Motion on amendment A2 lost]

[The clauses of Bill 30-2 as amended agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

THE CHAIR: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

SOME HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE CHAIR: Opposed?

SOME HON. MEMBERS: No.

THE CHAIR: Carried.

The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: I'd move that the committee rise and report.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

MR. LOUGHEED: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration and reports Bill 30-2 with some amendments. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Does the Assembly concur in this report?

HON. MEMBERS: Concurred.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Opposed? So ordered.

Third Reading

Bill 36

Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2002 (No. 2)

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Finance.

MRS. NELSON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to move third reading of Bill 36, Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2002 (No. 2).

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: I just briefly wanted to speak in third reading on Bill 36, Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2002 (No. 2). I see that the Member for Edmonton-Calder is still alive and kicking, and I look forward to what he has to contribute on the record as compared to sitting back and heckling constantly. We look forward to his extensive debate on this. I'm being warned to be careful what I ask for lest he does in fact rise to debate.

To the effect of the bill, Mr. Speaker, which is what we are debating in third reading. I feel it's necessary to reiterate once again the uniqueness of what we see in front of us or rather that it is not a unique situation, that we have some $652 million of additional money required above and beyond what's already budgeted for and passed in the budget, a request for an additional $652 million that is connected directly to extreme weather conditions. Yet there is no recognition and there was a refusal to recognize, as a matter of fact, during debate that this has anything to do with climate change. I find that an astonishing set of affairs. Nonetheless, there it is. But I do want to put that on the record and to recognize that once again.

We have a total of $822,853,000 that's being requested in the second supplementary supply appropriation act in this Assembly in this fiscal year. So we have a situation where an original budget is passed and this is now the second time that the Treasurer has come before us asking for additional money to be put into the budget. Now, I think that says something or certainly raises questions about the ability of this government to budget adequately in the first place, and I suppose it could be argued with some of these particular categories that, in fact, they were unanticipated. But, again, I challenge by saying: how unanticipated were they when we're talking about drought relief, flood relief, disaster relief, and fire relief? I think that I'll leave that with you for some thought.

I am not and I'm on record previously as not being in favour of these constant supplementary supply bills. I think we need to do a better job of the budgets in the first place but understand that this money is much-needed, and in fact some of it is simply a paper exchange, which is the case with the Western Heritage Centre, which I've spoken about a fair amount in earlier readings of this bill and in Committee of the Whole.

So I just wanted to get those few more points on the record in the last opportunity to debate this bill and thank you for the opportunity.

[Motion carried; Bill 36 read a third time]

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that we adjourn until 1:30 p.m. tomorrow.

[Motion carried; at 10:40 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Thursday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Thursday, November 28, 2002

1:30 p.m.

Date: 02/11/28

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

THE SPEAKER: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. Our divine Father, as we conclude for this week our work in this Assembly, we renew our thanks and ask that we may continue our work under Your guidance. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Visitors

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, it's my pleasure today to introduce to you Mr. Giuseppe Filippo Imbalzano. Mr. Imbalzano is currently posted at the Italian embassy in Prague in the Czech Republic, and he's in charge of consular affairs. He was formerly the Italian vice-consul in Alberta from 1991 to 1995. Mr. Imbalzano is a commander of the Italian navy in the reserves and was recently elected president of the Interallied Confederation of Reserve Officers within NATO. Our country, Canada, is also a member of this confederation. During his visit to Alberta Mr. Imbalzano will also attend the celebrations for the 10th anniversary of the founding of the Alberta branch of the Italian Naval Association, of which he is the honorary president. Mr. Imbalzano is accompanied by Mr. Vito Spadavecchia, a longtime Edmonton resident. Mr. Spadavecchia is the president of the Alberta branch of the Italian Naval Association. They're seated in the Speaker's gallery today, and I would ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome. Welcome back to Alberta.

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly Mr. Yeh Fung-jee, director of the Heilongjiang Department of Personnel, and Ms Shing Rong-hwa, also a division director of the Heilongjiang Department of Personnel. Together they are leading two delegations totaling 58 senior public- and private-sector officials from Heilongjiang, China. They are taking executive management training at the University of Alberta, and this is a partnership between the Heilongjiang government, the Alberta government, and the University of Alberta School of Business. The partnership is a key initiative under Alberta's 22-year-old sister province relationship with Heilongjiang. Participants in the program complete six months of training at the University of Alberta and a four-week practicum in various Alberta government ministries. We are pleased that these officials have come to Alberta to study western management and business practices. I would ask that our honoured guests seated in the members' gallery please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Peace River.

MR. FRIEDEL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce two groups of guests who are in the Assembly today. First of all, I'd like to introduce to you and to the members of the Assembly the members of the Northern Alberta Development Council who are here today following a day and a half of meetings. Unfortunately, some of the members had to leave early and are on their way home. They're seated in your gallery, and I would ask them to stand as I call out their names and to remain standing. First is Mr. Art Avery of Fort McMurray, Berkley Ferguson from Boyle, Michael Procter from Peace River, Al Toews from Fort Vermilion.

Some of the staff members are Allen Geary; Corinne Huberdeau; Jan Mazurik; Rita Phillips; Gladys Gammon, my legislative assistant; and Emily Dye, my constituency assistant. I would like our members to afford them the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

The second group of guests is 29 people from Peace River, from Peace River high school to be exact. They're a group of high school students accompanied by teacher Mrs. Hill and parents Ms DeWit and Mr. Ross. There are actually two classes. One is an English 10 class, and the other is a French immersion class. They tell me that they were very impressed with their meeting with you earlier today. I'll give you some of the more intimate comments in private later on. They're seated in the members' gallery, Mr. Speaker. I would ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Finance.

MRS. NELSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am very pleased to introduce a very special guest who is visiting us from the agriculture community of New Brigiden. She's very young, and she lives on a farm in New Brigiden with her horse Sweetie and her dog Mojo. She's a very special young lady who is the granddaughter of the Deputy Premier. Her name is Shelby T. Cox, and I'd like her to stand and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, we're just sliding right into the second portion of the Routine.

The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a real pleasure today to stand and introduce to you and through you to the members of the House Rebecca Holgate. Rebecca is in Edmonton today with the constituency workers' meetings, but she serves in my office in Lethbridge-East. She began with us in September of 2001 after completing a degree from the University of Lethbridge in political science. She works part-time in our office, and in the rest of her time she's now considering joining the army reserves. She'll be able to keep me in line, I guess, a little more if she learns some of the things that go on there. I'd ask Rebecca to stand and receive the warm welcome from the House.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, I'll be introducing all of the constituency assistants later on as most of them are not coming in until a little later.

The Minister of Learning.

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you today 59 visitors from Strathmore. They are from Wheatland elementary school and consist of 44 grade 6 students and 15 teachers, parents, and bus drivers. They've made the long trek from Strathmore here today. This is the first time that I've had the opportunity to introduce a school group from Strathmore in this Assembly, so I'd now ask that the Wheatland elementary school grade 6 students and their parent helpers and the teachers please stand and receive the greetings from the Legislative Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations, do you have an additional introduction?

MR. JONSON: No.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have the pleasure of introducing one of my constituents to the House today and to you. This constituent responded to an open invitation from me to my constituents to call my office if they would like to come here and observe the proceedings of the House. Mr. Houlihan is the first of the three who responded by e-mail to us. He is seated either in the public gallery or the members' gallery; I'm not sure. I would certainly ask him to now please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

MS KRYCZKA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am really pleased today to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly two very wonderful gentlemen from Calgary. Neil Hamilton is a constituent of mine in Calgary-West but most important, to this Assembly, Neil is a true Alberta and Canadian hero. His wonderful autobiography, Wings of Courage: A Lifetime of Triumph over Adversity, is a wonderfully moving story about a World War II bomb aimer and his amazing and challenging journey through life. Neil's personal motto has always been: "Quit? Never." His son Robert Hamilton, a great admirer of Neil's and, I would say, certainly an exemplary caregiver, also has, I've heard, many of his father's fine qualities. I would ask my two special guests to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you.

MR. McFARLAND: Mr. Speaker, when we come up to Edmonton quite often we see a sign that says: the city of champions. But I'm really honoured to introduce to you and to members of this Assembly somebody that doesn't get the recognition so often deserved. She's a numerous provincial/national power lifting master record holder. She's a master provincial/national Pan-American world weight lifting record holder. She's the first Canadian female to be inducted into the Canadian masters Weight Lifting Hall of Fame. She's a six-time gold medalist at the national and provincial masters weight lifting championships, a five-time gold medalist at the Pan-Am Masters weight lifting championships. She's competed in world masters competitions in Scotland, Poland, Canada, Greece, U.S.A., Australia, winning three gold and three silver and just recently and finally returned from the World Masters Games in Melbourne, Australia, where she won the gold again in her age and weight category for the sport of weight lifting. Right here from Edmonton, personally trained by herself along with her friend, personal trainer, weight lifter, and coach, I'd like to introduce to you somebody that's quite well known, Wendy Rogers. Would you please rise.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm excited and delighted today to introduce to members of this Assembly and ask them to acknowledge the visit of 40 grade 6 students and their teachers, Mr. Dale Mandryk and Ms Colleen Reeder, teacher aide Mrs. Olga Miranda, parent helpers Mrs. Ann Baker, Mrs. Stephanie Tempest, Mrs. Connie Connery, and Mrs. Laurel Laing from the George P. Nicholson elementary school, the first brand-new school of the 21st century built by the Edmonton public school board. It's located in the constituency of Edmonton-Whitemud. The community of Twin Brooks celebrated the grand opening of this school this past Saturday. They sang the George P. Nicholson song, which says:

Learning values to love and share makes our school fine.

Inspired by parents and teachers who care,

I know the future is mine.

This is our song about our school, and we sing it loud.

We come together to do great things and make our community proud.

The former Minister of Infrastructure, the MLA for Vegreville-Viking, did great work with the Edmonton public school board to resolve issues around formulas and boundaries to make sure that this school could be built. This is the first class from that school who is attending the Legislature. They will be coming into the members' gallery at 2 p.m. and departing before question period ends, but I'd like the Members of this Legislative Assembly to give their warm welcome to this class, which celebrates the future of our community.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to rise and introduce to you and through you two distinguished guests to our province from the country of Thailand. Dr. Nongluk Chintanadilok is from the Mahidol University in Bangkok. She is in residence at the university Faculty of Nursing studying qualitative research. Professor Omjit Wongwanich from the Srinakharin Wirat University in Thailand is as well in residence at the university Faculty of Nursing studying pediatric nursing. Joining them today is my wife, Dr. Karin Olson, who's the associate professor at the Faculty of Nursing. I would ask them all to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, may I also introduce you to the hon. Member for Leduc, who's having a birthday today.

Romanow Report

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, this morning I spoke with Mr. Roy Romanow and ministers of health federally, provincially, and territorially, and I conveyed to Mr. Romanow my thanks to him for an enormous amount of work that has been done. I want to add that I wanted to congratulate Mr. Romanow on some of his conclusions. He agrees that the health system needs to change. He agrees that the time to change is now. He agrees that we need to look at how we deliver and how we are accountable to taxpayers for health services. He proposes some initiatives on which Alberta is already acting. He speaks eloquently and often on shared Canadian values, and these values are equally important to Albertans. However, we disagree with how Mr. Romanow proposes to implement change and how to act on these values.

We agree that some of the solutions are national, but we disagree that the only solutions are national. Canada already has a body to achieve national solutions and accountability where it is appropriate. That body is called the Council of Ministers of Health. It is made up of elected people who report back to their constituents. In recent years our relationship has strengthened, as seen in our recent agreement on a national drug program.

Absent in Mr. Romanow's report, this September all provinces and territories issued the country's first nationally comparable health results. That first report offered reliable information on in-hospital survival rates for heart attack and stroke and years of life lost to cancer. We use this information to save lives and to improve our services and our results.

Mr. Romanow proposes a national health system in which provinces and territories answer to a nonelected body on which all of western Canada – British Columbia, Alberta, Saskatchewan, and Manitoba – share one representative. He proposes that reporting be included in the Canada Health Act so that the federal government has yet another reason to withhold money and yet another means to impose its will. In return we share in billions of dollars, all of which have strings attached. Mr. Romanow, Alberta's responsibilities for health care to Albertans are not for sale.

To say that I am disappointed in this part of the Romanow report is an understatement. I expected a former Premier of this country to understand that health care is a provincial and territorial responsibility. From his consultation I expect him to appreciate our uniquely Canadian approach, that our diversity is reflected in our different medical services and models. I expected him to understand that collectively we are accountable to Canadians for their health care, not to an unelected council.

Mr. Speaker, I also anticipate that many other provinces and territories will share Alberta's disappointment. It seems that Mr. Romanow gives little credit to work that is already being done, to previous reports that are already being acted upon, or to the long and productive partnerships that already exist among our federal, provincial, and territorial governments. I will be interested to see how the federal government chooses to react to this report.

The additional federal money Mr. Romanow proposes sounds impressive until you realize he's expanding public health care to include a host of new responsibilities and services. This does little to help sustain the services that we are already struggling to maintain. When we are struggling to pay our bills, we don't go out to spend more.

Mr. Speaker, the one thing as valuable as more funding is more flexibility. Alberta, like many provinces, wanted the Canada Health Act to be open to create that flexibility. Mr. Romanow instead seeks to make it more restrictive by incorporating provincial reporting to a national body and by adding a range of services, conditions, and costs. One area where flexibility is paramount is service delivery. Since Mr. Romanow acknowledges access as a priority for Canadians, I'm disappointed that he rejects alternative delivery systems.

In Alberta access to insured systems has only one entry, through the public health system, and only one payer; that is, the public. Private providers only offer insured services within our public health system. Money has not, does not, and will not determine access to insured health services in Alberta no matter who the provider is.

Mr. Speaker, if we are serious about sustaining medicare, we must be open to all options that provide the access that Canadians value when and where it is needed and without financial consideration. We need to encourage innovation, not stifle it. Innovation is at work here in this province.

Alberta agrees with Mr. Romanow that access is a big issue. So are wait lists, palliative care, and home care. Alberta is acting on those priorities. Mr. Romanow holds up Edmonton as a model for palliative care. As part of our own health reform agenda we are developing a wait list registry, centralized provincewide booking, and access targets for selected services. A provincewide electronic health record will be implemented in another 16 months. Alberta covers the cost of catastrophic drugs under our Blue Cross benefit plans, and we welcome improvements to drug coverage. Regions already deliver home care services with provincial funding. We already have extensive accountability reporting, including our three-year business plans, annual results reports, and quarterly wait list reports.

Alberta believes prevention is important. Staying healthy is the first theme of our health reform agenda. We are implementing a tobacco reduction agenda. We are developing 10-year health objectives and targets to reduce disease.

I am looking forward to exploring where the options and recommendations in the Romanow report can support our own health reform efforts in Alberta, but to be clear, Mr. Speaker, we will look at the Romanow report in the light and through the lens of the Mazankowski recommendations, not the other way around. I will work with my colleagues in Alberta and across the country to make use of innovative and practical solutions that do not diminish our responsibilities to the citizens of Alberta or our flexibility in meeting them.

Thank you.

DR. TAFT: Mr. Speaker, today Albertans and all Canadians were handed a vision for an end to the feeling of crisis in health care in the form of the Romanow report. This report confirms what experts across this country have long been saying. It says with perfect clarity that a public health care system is sustainable and, more than that, that a public health care system is the best way to deliver the health care that Canadians want and deserve. This report also makes it clear that by any reliable measure spending on health care is in no way out of control. In fact, the report confirms that we are spending less of our wealth on health care today than we did a decade ago and that it is time to make well-considered reinvestments.

Mr. Romanow has served as a Premier during very difficult times, and despite claims we hear in this House, he made Saskatchewan, not Alberta, the first province with a balanced budget in the 1990s. He knows the importance of both leadership and vision. What does he say we need? First and foremost, to save medicare, strong leadership, and improved governance. So let us apply the questions of strong leadership and good governance to Alberta's health care system.

In the past 10 years there have been eight deputy ministers of health. No one can lead in those circumstances, and there is no possibility of good governance. In the past 10 years Alberta's health care funding has swung wildly, crashing down and cranking up more dramatically than any other province. Instability, demoralization, and waste have been the results. In the past 10 years we have seen thousands of staff laid off, then, to counter the ensuing staff shortages, huge wage settlements. In the past 10 years we have seen regional health authorities hurriedly created and suddenly disbanded, and for months now we have watched a paralyzing debate over their boundaries. For the past 10 years we have seen the process for establishing health authority budgets and business plans simply break down. This year not a single health authority – not one – had its budget approved on time. I could go on, Mr. Speaker, and on and on.

The sense of crisis in Alberta's health care system is not the fault of the people who use the system nor the people who work in it. It is the fault of failed leadership, but there is now a way out. We urge this government to set aside its plans to create yet another round of upheaval in Alberta's health care system. It is unneeded and unwanted. Albertans are tired of the bickering. They are tired of the confusion. The Romanow report is clear, constructive, and workable. We urge the government of Alberta to adopt it.

Thank you.

head: Oral Question Period

Federal Health Care Funding

DR. NICOL: The Romanow report outlines a national framework for delivering all Canadians with a comprehensive, borderless health care system. One of the recommendations is for new federal funds to be specifically targeted for health care initiatives. My question is to the minister of health. Will the minister accept federal fund transfers if they are targeted for specific health initiatives?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, this is an area that will have to be discussed among not just ministers of health across Canada but also first ministers when they meet in January to discuss health care. It will depend on what those areas are targeted to. I've said in this House and I've said in public that it is difficult for some provinces to have dollars that are targeted to certain areas that are new areas when they have difficulty and struggle with the existing areas that they already cover.

Now, as I indicated, there are some elements of the Romanow report that may be valuable and things that we have as a province already embarked upon. We agree that there is a need for a rural health strategy. We agree that there is a need to improve access. We agree that there is a need for primary health care reform. We are already acting on those areas. If the federal government chooses to implement those portions of the Romanow report that are consistent with the priorities the provinces have already established, then, yes, we will be happy to go down that road, but if the federal government insists that there are new programs that are created that are not consistent with the priorities of provinces and territories, we cannot.

DR. NICOL: Given that the Canadian Medical Association recently reported that federal funds for medical equipment were either misspent or misused by provinces, what sort of accountability is the government willing to provide for new federal funds?

MR. MAR: Well, Mr. Speaker, I can assure the Leader of the Opposition that money that was allocated for medical technology in the province of Alberta by the federal government was used for medical technology. That's the first point. But that there were provinces that may not have spent their moneys on medical technology is at the very heart of the problem. There were provinces that did not spend it on medical technology, and the reason for it is because they did not have sufficient moneys to match the federal government's moneys, which was a requirement under this program. They had difficulties matching the program dollars put up by the federal government, and they couldn't afford the operational dollars for that equipment. That's exactly the reason why this idea of matching federal dollars, that is inconsistent with provincial priorities, is the heart of the problem.

DR. NICOL: Again to the minister: will the minister use funds provided through the new diagnostic services fund recommended by Romanow to improve access to publicly delivered diagnostic services, or would they be used to prop up private facilities?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, we are going to be focused on access. This is something that we agree with with Mr. Romanow. We are not, however, prisoners of ideology to suggest that you cannot use the private sector in the delivery of publicly paid for services. We have invested an enormous amount of money in buying new diagnostic equipment. We have increased dramatically our publicly owned MRIs, as an example, in this province such that the number of MRIs which were done three years ago was roughly 20,000. This year it will be almost quadruple that, nearly 75,000 MRI scans. Now, that is done partly through the public system but also through private delivery of MRI scans in this province.

Private Health Care Services

DR. NICOL: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Health and Wellness admits that he has no evidence that contracting out in Alberta has saved money. Today the Romanow report concluded there's no clear evidence that contracting out is more efficient or less costly. To the Minister of Health and Wellness: given that no evidence exists, how can the minister claim he's following evidence-based decision-making when he pushes for greater privatization?

2:00

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Institute for Health Information clearly says that when institutions, when facilities do a large volume of a narrow group of services, they get better at it. It makes perfectly good sense that if a regional health authority can provide greater access to a service by use of a private surgical facility and that service is paid for by the public system and if it doesn't cost any more and it does improve the volume of activity that can be generated, then it is a prudent move. It's not just about dollars and cents. It's also about being able to improve access and reduce queues and wait lists.

DR. NICOL: Again to the minister: since the minister has no evidence for contracting out, why has he disregarded his own legislation requiring him to consider cost-effectiveness before approving any contracts?

MR. MAR: Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member knows that cost-effectiveness is not the only criterion that is to be considered. It is quite clear that in our tendering process, which is available to any who wish to see it – and any of the contracts that have been approved under our legislation are available for the hon. member to see – cost-effectiveness is but one of a number of different criteria. It also has to include the quality being maintained and the access to the service being improved.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you. Mr. Minister, are you prepared to table in this House the calculations for each one of the conditions on a contracting out that are listed in the legislation?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, that sounds like an entirely appropriate question to be done through a written question request.

Romanow Report

DR. TAFT: A research budget of over $2 million, 40 discussion papers, three major research projects, eight roundtable discussions, six televised policy forums, 12 dialogue sessions with randomly selected Canadians, numerous in-depth interviews with various policy experts: that, Mr. Speaker, is the Romanow commission, which the Minister of Health and Wellness so arrogantly dismissed before even seeing its final report. To the Minister of Health and Wellness: given the multitude of research that has gone into the Romanow report, we ask again why the minister has decided to callously disregard so many of its findings.

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, unless the hon. member has been sitting in a cave somewhere for the last several weeks, he would be aware that there have been many reports in various media outlets, electronic and newspaper, about what would be contained in the Romanow report. Mr. Romanow has made no secret about trying to outleak himself through speeches that he's made at Harvard University, speeches that he's made at Memorial University, speeches that he's made in Washington, D.C. So for anybody to suggest that there are any surprises coming out of today's official release of the Romanow report – I'm astonished that the hon. member had no idea of what was coming down the pike.

So, Mr. Speaker, I have indicated, and not in a callous way, that there are elements of the Romanow report that we find consistency with, but at the end of the day we are moving forward on the recommendations set out by Mr. Mazankowski. Anything that can be contained in the Romanow report that can improve on what we are already doing, we are happy to entertain, but we must stand up for what is right in the province of Alberta.

DR. TAFT: Wouldn't it be nice if they did stand up for what is right once?

Will the minister admit that the real reason he won't embrace the Romanow report is because it doesn't support the government's position of rapidly expanding privatization, which Mr. Mazankowski would like?

Thank you.

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, he has completely missed the point on what the issue in health care is. The issue is improving access and maintaining the quality of the health care system. I have used this example on many occasions; I'll use it again. When an individual is ill and goes into a facility, the questions that they will ask: does this place have the people and the equipment and the skills to diagnose me and treat me so I get better? People don't ask: is this a public or a private facility? That is an irrelevant question.

DR. TAFT: To the Premier: can the Premier tell us when his government's position changed from listening to the experts and became one of either firing them, like they did with Dr. Swann, or ignoring them, like they are with Mr. Romanow?

MR. KLEIN: First of all, Mr. Speaker, it is not true, to say the least – and there's another word for not true – to say that this government fired Dr. Swann. This government had absolutely nothing to do with Dr. Swann's dismissal or his rehiring. Absolutely nothing. If the hon. member were truly honourable, he will stand up and apologize for that very misleading, to say the least, allegation. But if he's honourable.

Mr. Speaker, we listen to the experts, and indeed we're listening to Mr. Romanow. We agree entirely with Mr. Romanow that there is a need for more federal funding, that the feds need to step up to the plate and pay their fair share. We don't agree, considering that health is exclusively a matter of provincial responsibility under the Constitution, that there should be strings tied to that money unless, of course, those strings allude to programs that we already have in place or are contemplating and are deemed to be our priorities. We certainly don't agree – maybe the Liberals do, because they like the socialist, centralist kind of control; maybe they agree – that there needs to be a national council, a new bureaucracy, formed to act as a watchdog over health care spending.

Mr. Speaker, when we went through the last round with the federal government in the year 2000, when they increased somewhat funding through the Canada health and social transfer, I said that I would sign my name in blood that that money would go to the delivery of health care, and I'm sure the other Premiers would be willing to make an absolute commitment. As the hon. minister pointed out, there's already a council in place, and that is the ministers of health, people who are duly elected to deliver health care programs in their provinces according to their constitutional authority.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Roy Romanow has done all Canadians a great service by laying out a detailed blueprint for modernizing, strengthening, and sustaining medicare. By contrast, the health care agenda of this Tory government can be summed up in three simple words: privatization, delisting, and user fees. The Tory government's approach is ideologically driven and so simple that it can be written on the back of one napkin and with lots of space to spare. My question to the Minister of Health and Wellness: other than blind ideology and a need to reward Tory-friendly investors, why does the Tory government ignore the facts and continue to push a for-profit health care delivery agenda, that costs more and delivers less?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, when I saw the sign go up, I thought I might have been across the hall from Stockwell Day.

The fact is, Mr. Speaker, that we are not bound by an ideology. We are bound by an unfailing focus on improving the delivery, the access, maintaining or improving the quality of a health care system that Canadians, that Albertans treasure. These are common values between what Mr. Romanow has espoused and what we as an Alberta government have espoused. We believe that the system should be sustainable, that it should be affordable, that it should be accessible, that it should be of high quality, and those are the commitments that we have. If that's an ideology, then we're guilty of following that ideology.

Mr. Speaker, there needs to be an examination of alternative ways of delivery. We know, for example, that long-term care has in this province long been served by a not-for-profit sector, by a for-profit sector, by the public sector, and this idea of having a blend of all of these things to deliver a high-quality, affordable service is what we want in our health care system.

DR. PANNU: To the same minister, Mr. Speaker: why is the government so hell-bent on delisting necessary health services in direct opposition to the Romanow report's call that medically necessary diagnostic and home care services be brought inside the medicare umbrella?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, what Mr. Romanow has done is he has gone well beyond anything that Tommy Douglas had ever contemplated when medicare was first introduced in the Saskatchewan Legislature in 1961. I have referred to Mr. Douglas's speeches from 1961 in the Saskatchewan Legislature where he talks about the fact that he felt that it was important that individuals make a contribution for the use of the health care system. What was originally contemplated was ensuring that Saskatchewan people and, ultimately, Canadians would be protected from catastrophic financial loss as a result of catastrophic health consequences, and what was really talked about was doctors and hospitals, not all of this other stuff. So we have gone well beyond what the original contemplation of medicare was originally viewed to be as the scope of a social program, but what we seek in this Legislature and with this government is more flexibility, not less flexibility, which is what Mr. Romanow is contemplating.

DR. PANNU: To the same minister, Mr. Speaker: why is the government on the verge of introducing MSA-style accounts that will force sick and injured Albertans and their families to pay deductibles in direct opposition to the Romanow report's conclusion that these approaches don't save money, only serve to shift costs onto the shoulders of patients and their families?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, there is no such plan, and I will not answer a question that is based on speculation, innuendo, and conjecture.

Electricity Deregulation

MR. McCLELLAND: Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Energy. When private companies use electricity generated by public utilities, utilities subsidized by the tax base, are they in contravention of the North American free trade agreement?

MR. SMITH: Mr. Speaker, it's my understanding that it would be extremely difficult to argue that electricity companies in the United States are harmed by electricity imported from Canada. For example, the majority of generators in the Pacific Northwest are still regulated, and they would not be harmed as they would be guaranteed the rate of return, which is the fundamental side for putting a restrictive trade practice against NAFTA. Now, for example, if a company were to take the federal government to a NAFTA trade panel for imposing the Kyoto protocol, there might indeed be a restraint of trade hearing held, but I'm only speculating on that.

Mr. Speaker, 70 percent of the power generated in Canada is hydro power. It's generated by utilities that have encountered some one hundred billion dollars' worth of taxpayer-supported debt. They export power to the United States to the tune of $2 billion to $3 billion a year, and there has not been any NAFTA claim on them.

MR. McCLELLAND: To the same minister: given the minister's answer then, in backing away from the deregulation of electricity, has the government of Ontario put its economy in the future in jeopardy?

THE SPEAKER: Hon. minister, this is the Legislative Assembly of the province of Alberta, and we're not going to comment on what's going on in Ontario.

Hon. member, your third question.

MR. McCLELLAND: All right. To the same minister: by embracing the deregulation process advocated by the government, has EPCOR not contributed to the long-term competitive advantage of Alberta, to the Alberta advantage?

MR. SMITH: Mr. Speaker, in evaluating an individual corporation's performance, those determinants are usually the function of, one, the perception by consumers in the marketplace and, secondly, by those investors and shareholders that organize the capital that's necessary to make that company run.

For the effects of having a generator such as EPCOR in Alberta and what has happened to this marketplace with respect to EPCOR's involvement, I would turn to the Minister of Economic Development to talk about what EPCOR has done with respect to the competitive advantage of Alberta as well as deregulation.

MR. NORRIS: I appreciate my hon. colleague deferring to me on this point. Obviously, deregulation has had remarkable success in Alberta. As you know, the province of Alberta requires about 7,800 megawatts of power. With new power coming on-line, we anticipate having about 8,500. We may actually become a net exporter like the provinces of Quebec and British Columbia, which is a whole new industry to Alberta. New power is up from deregulation, but it's done something very interesting as well, Mr. Speaker. It has allowed companies to see the market opportunities, invest in new forms of power such as wind power in the beautiful Crownsnest Pass, experiment in clean coal exports, and deregulation of power from clean coal. Overall, it shows that the Alberta government is ideologically welcoming new challenges and changes from deregulation and willing to embrace them, so it's been a remarkable success.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Electricity Deferral Accounts

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. EPCOR in its third-quarter report announced that about $312 million was yet to be collected on electricity charges for the year 2000 and 2001, that this government would not allow them to collect leading up to and during the provincial election. This is not a remarkable success story. There is no end in sight for these extra charges on Albertans' power bills, because sooner or later we are going to have to pay for Balancing Pool deferral accounts as well. The exact amount of the Balancing Pool deferral account is a mystery that will continue to haunt Alberta consumers in the form of high electricity bills for years into the future. My first question is to the Premier. Can the Premier please confirm that the Balancing Pool stands to lose substantial amounts due to its commitments to the owners of the electricity production?

MR. KLEIN: Well, Mr. Speaker, no, I can't confirm that that, indeed, will happen or that it won't happen. Hopefully, it won't happen. All I can say is that consistently power rates generally have been going down. They have stabilized considerably. There are some problems with the delivery of electricity, in the billing practices relative to electricity in some areas, not all areas. It's anticipated that the Balancing Pool will have some electricity to sell. It's anticipated that profits will be made. It's also anticipated that because of our sound management of this very difficult issue, we will not have to go into another subsidy program and that power rates will remain stable.

The hon. member is making all kinds of assumptions; in other words, everything that he is basing his assumptions on goes back to the year 2001 and is purely and absolutely hypothetical. [interjection] Back to 2000, yes.

MR. SMITH: Can I just add a very short point? In his preamble the member referred to the $312 million in the run-up before the election of 2001. That was the year 2000, Mr. Speaker. This province was under a regulated model during that period of time. He knows it, and I think he's just maybe fudging a little bit for the House.

MR. MacDONALD: Mr. Speaker, this isn't conjecture. This is information from the Balancing Pool's annual report.

Again to the Premier: given that you stated that the average rolling price of electricity is 4 cents per kilowatt-hour, which, by the way, is not available to consumers anywhere in this province, can the Premier please confirm that the deferral account could increase by $100 million this year because the Balancing Pool's commitment to the owners of the electricity production is 5 cents per kilowatt-hour for fixed and variable costs?

MR. KLEIN: No, I can't confirm that, Mr. Speaker. Relative to the daily energy pricing report this is, I take it, the Power Pool price. The average to the 25th of November was about 4 cents a kilowatt-hour. That document is available; it's published on a daily basis, and that is the report to noon, Monday, November 25. I doubt that it's changed very much since then.

Relative to the question I can confirm absolutely nothing other than that the hon. member is speculating and he's putting forward a hypothetical case, Mr. Speaker.

With regard to the hon. member's preamble we announced deferral of rate riders so that people wouldn't have to pay the riders when prices were so high. Indeed, prices were high. As I pointed out, in January of 2001 it was 13.1 cents a kilowatt-hour. By the time it reached the consumer and the costs were added on, the retail price was even much higher than that, so we introduced rebates. The deferral was not connected to the election, and we make absolutely no apologies for doing what was absolutely right at the time; that was, protecting consumers.

We feel that the situation has stabilized. There are some bumps that have to be flattened out, certainly, relative to billing practices, and we'll deal with that.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: what is the total amount of interest Alberta consumers must pay on these secret deferral accounts because you want to hide those additional charges from them until after the next provincial election?

THE SPEAKER: We have to move on here. Questions are supposed to be about government policy, not about all kinds of other things.

The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Softwood Lumber Trade Dispute

REV. ABBOTT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Forestry industry jobs and jobs in secondary industries associated with the forestry industry are important to the Drayton Valley-Calmar constituency. Earlier this fall, in light of the ongoing softwood lumber dispute, the federal government announced a $246 million assistance package for workers and communities dealing with this issue. Yesterday in Ottawa the four opposition parties held a rare joint press conference to demand more. My question is to the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations. Can you please tell the Assembly how this package will help Alberta?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member and other members of the Assembly know, we've been working closely with the forest industry in Alberta throughout this very lengthy dispute. With respect to the recently announced support package from the federal government we are working with the industry, particularly, though, with the communities that are impacted by this development, and we are advising them on the formulas that should be applied in terms of assistance to communities across, actually, all parts of Alberta that are impacted by this particular issue.

Mr. Speaker, we're very much involved with the program. We're suggesting that the federal government should be prepared to have money available not only in the current fiscal year but in the year ahead because we cannot guarantee that the dispute will be resolved in a prompt way. So I think we're certainly fulfilling our responsibility in terms of representing and working with industry in this regard.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

REV. ABBOTT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My next question is also to the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations. What is your ministry doing to work with the forest industry in Alberta to help deal with this ongoing dispute?

MR. JONSON: Well, throughout the dispute, as I just mentioned, we have met regularly with the Forest Products Association. We have provided both legal and strategic advice. We continue to support the challenges that have been made to NAFTA and to the World Trade Organization. Mr. Speaker, I think most important right now, we are awaiting and urging as we can the American government to consider coming back to the table with respect to negotiations. There is something that has developed in the United States known through the Department of Commerce as a possibility of opening some discussions about changed circumstances; that is, there'll be an opportunity perhaps to work out agreements on a province-by-province basis, although that was not our preference, in the coming year. So it is, I know, an issue which we wish could be resolved quickly and satisfactorily, but that is the nature of what are very complex matters that involve negotiations with the United States.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Wainwright.

Rent Supplement Program

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first question is to the Minister of Seniors. Could the minister please tell us what the status is of the private landlord rent supplement program?

MR. WOLOSHYN: The private landlord rent supplement program is still on an ongoing basis. We have taken the initiative to ensure that people with emergency situations are being housed. We are having significant budget pressures on the program simply because the rents are rising beyond our ability to meet them and that of the housing that's in the private sector.

MS BLAKEMAN: This is the private landlord supplement, and when I contacted the Capital Region Housing Corporation, Red Deer Housing Authority, Calgary Housing Authority, and Lethbridge Housing Authority, they all say that the program is on hold and has been since October of '01 due to lack of funding from the province. Why is the minister saying that it's okay?

MR. WOLOSHYN: I can't comment on the conversations you may have had with these authorities. Like I said earlier, the program is still there; it is still going. We're under a severe financial crunch, and we're meeting the emergency needs of the people in these various communities that you listed.

MS BLAKEMAN: What additional programming, then, is the minister looking at to increase the number of rental housing accommodation that's subsidized and available to people?

MR. WOLOSHYN: Mr. Speaker, this province has thousands of supportive housing programs for the seniors through the lodge program, thousands there through our support for people in social housing. We have thousands of units that we support there through the various housing foundations. We also have the rent supplement program, resources for which, I readily admit, are being stretched to the limit because of the escalating rents. We are also currently working with the federal government on the affordable housing program, which, when it is implemented, I'm sure will have a very positive effect on transitional housing, and putting people who are in the workforce in these very same communities to give them some availability of units. Also, I might add that through the initiatives of this government and with the support of other levels of government, we have added hundreds of homeless spaces and are working on that problem also.

We must remember, Mr. Speaker, that the solution to the housing crisis is not solely the responsibility of any single government. It's a responsibility that is taken on by the communities and municipalities involved in conjunction and partnership with the private sector, with the provincial government, and indeed with the federal government.

2:30

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Wainwright, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Federal Report on Implications of Kyoto Accord

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Industry Canada produced a report that describes devastating effects to key sectors of Alberta's and Canada's economies under the Kyoto protocol. Can the Minister of Economic Development tell us what is being done to address the report and the alarming projections it makes?

MR. NORRIS: Well, at the outset, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to thank the member for the excellent question. Clearly, the member understands the significance of the Kyoto report, and at the very least this report not being shared with us is a travesty on so many different levels that I don't know where to begin. But the Department of Industry Canada does have in its hands a report that outlines the effects of the Kyoto accord and its implications on Alberta. It talks about the loss of tens of thousands of jobs, billions of dollars worth of investment, and dried-up investment in years to come, and they know this. It is not an Alberta government report. It's done by the government of Canada, and they refused to share it with us.

What we have done as a course of action is written a very sternly worded letter to the Minister of Industry telling him that it is his responsibility to share that with us and to let the rest of Canada know the devastating effects that this accord is going to have on not only Alberta but all of Canada, Mr. Speaker.

MR. GRIFFITHS: My first supplementary question is to the Minister of Energy. Can the Minister of Energy tell us how his department is responding to the details of the report?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister . . . There is some confusion. One minister says the report's not public. How can another minister know what it is? Please, some clarification here or consistency, if nothing else.

MR. SMITH: Mr. Speaker, I'd be pleased to provide the clarification in that the report has been released by Industry Canada, but it cannot be found by Industry Canada officials. Therefore, what happens is that this information, like ink from a squid, leaks out of Ottawa in a purported business relationship with a province where none of this information is available. So what we have to work on are some difficult details, but when you see in pages of a report that there is expected to be a 48 percent decline in investment in the coal industry – the coal industry not only being the backbone of Edson-Yellowhead; it also represents some 5,700 megawatts of a 10,000-megawatt grid in this province – that means that over half that investment would be gone.

Secondly, Mr. Speaker, in the crude petroleum and natural gas sectors, that natural gas that heats up 70 percent of Ontario's homes, that estimated decline is 33 percent, 33 percent of a present $20 billion investment in Alberta. That's $6 billion down the drain. It also talks about a 55 percent decline in refined petroleum. Shell Scotford, Petro-Canada: their upgrading facility from the oil sands will provide Edmonton with the backbone of refining for the next 70 years.

So, Mr. Speaker, in a short summary, the council of Manufacturers and Exporters, the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, the council of business executives, the Alberta Building Trades Council, the C.D. Howe Institute, and David Dodge, the governor of the Bank of Canada, have all said that Kyoto is bad for Canada. When will they listen?

MR. GRIFFITHS: To the Minister of Environment: what response has your ministry received from the federal government about the contents of this report?

DR. TAYLOR: Mr. Speaker, like other departments we haven't received a lot, and Canadians are now starting largely to recognize that the federal government has some conflict within itself in terms of the information it's willing to put out. In fact, even the environmental movement is starting to recognize that. I might quote from Patrick Moore, the founder of Greenpeace. He says that this country's push to implement the Kyoto protocol is politically motivated and unrealistic. He goes on to say that Canada is risking a "political civil war" for an accord that isn't likely to have a significant environmental impact and could severely damage the nation's economy. He further says that climate change is nowhere near the crisis it's being made out to be: "Where are the bodies? Where is the so-called climate disaster they keep talking about? I don't see people falling over from heat-prostration by the millions."

THE SPEAKER: Thank you, hon. minister. You will be prepared to table the required document a little later.

Bighorn Wildland Recreation Area

MS CARLSON: Mr. Speaker, for 26 years the Alberta government has respected and protected the environmentally sensitive terrain and resources of the Bighorn wildland recreation area. [some applause] They're clapping too soon, because last year the provincial government went back on its promise to protect this fragile and beautiful land. It took the Bighorn wildland off its maps, sold gas leases within the area, and initiated an access management planning process that will allow access into areas where policy explicitly prohibits off-road vehicles and industrial development. And let the record show that the Minister of Energy clapped for this. To the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development: what is it that has convinced you that Alberta's most fragile ecosystems and beautiful parklands are no longer worth protecting?

MR. CARDINAL: Mr. Speaker, in fact this is just the opposite. We are protecting, of course. If the socialists across the way had their way, they'd do nothing, like they always do. Wait on the sidelines and criticize, that's all they do. What we are doing there – there are 5,000 square kilometres between Banff and Jasper.

AN HON. MEMBER: How many?

MR. CARDINAL: Five thousand square kilometres of area, Mr. Speaker. The area was recommended as a special places project. The committee reviewed it, and the committee agreed at the time that the best process for that area is to develop an access management plan. Our government, of course, was asked to do that. We put in a committee of six government departments and also 15 multi-use users to develop a plan. The plan was developed. It went through the process, got approved; it's in place. We have a monitoring committee now in place that will continue to do ongoing monitoring and recommending changes in the area, and that is just the first step. Developing the plan is just the first step. From here on is where the work starts.

In addition to that, the way the system is set up now – and this is very, very important to Albertans – there are recreation users in the area, and there always have been. There's commercial use in the area; there always has been. And there's environmental protection in the area, Mr. Speaker. That will continue. The problem with that whole region, the whole 5,000 square kilometres . . .

AN HON. MEMBER: How many?

MR. CARDINAL: Five thousand square kilometres. We never had any regulations to be able to enforce usage in that area. This plan does that exactly.

MS CARLSON: Mr. Speaker, if the plan and the consultation process worked so well, then why are so many of those environmental groups, who spent hours and months and years working on putting in input, now withdrawing from ever doing anything with this government again because they're not consulted and they are never a part of the plan?

MR. CARDINAL: Mr. Speaker, this plan was developed over a long period of time. Again I'll stress the fact that it was recommended to be part of the special places program. The area committee did not agree with that, and that involves people from the environmental side. They did not agree with that. They agreed with a multi-use access management plan. That is exactly what we have developed, keeping the balance between environmental management and economic development. It's trying to protect the environment. It is a top priority, but the worst thing for our environment is poverty, and that is why you have to develop new resources in a balanced way to ensure that proper developments take place in Alberta.

MS CARLSON: Mr. Speaker, unfortunately this government doesn't understand balance, only economic development. How does this minister justify the destruction of such an integral component of an international effort to preserve the biological diversity, natural processes, and recreational activity of the Rocky Mountain corridor as the Bighorn wildland?

MR. CARDINAL: Mr. Speaker, this member needs a good education on what is out there and what has happened and what we are doing, but I'm not sure she can learn. I'll give you an example of the recreational users presently out there before the plan was in place: there are 700 kilometres of trails used by hikers, by snowmobilers, by trail riders, by mountain bikers, but the problem with that was we didn't have regulations to be able to monitor and manage that. That is exactly what this plan does.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

MR. MASON: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. The Romanow commission was exhaustive in its efforts to hear from the public. It held 21 days of public hearings, conducted nine opinion polls, and received over 18,000 on-line surveys. It also produced 40 research papers, held international roundtables and 12 televised policy dialogues. Conversely, when this government decided to examine health care, they held no public meetings, conducted no opinion polls or surveys, or at least none that they would share with the public, and listened only to their own friends and insiders. My question to the minister of health is this: will the minister admit that the only way he can foist private health care on this province is to do it behind closed doors and without the full participation of the Alberta public? I don't know which minister wants to answer the question. Maybe the Deputy Premier.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll undertake the question for advisement and referral to the minister of health at the appropriate time. However, I do take some exception to the allegations in the member's question about how he so freely and inappropriately uses the term "privatization of health care." It's true that there are private providers involved in the delivery of health care, but they are subsidized through that process with public funding. That is what the minister of health and others here have indicated time and time again, that it's important that those facilities, including doctors' offices and certain clinics, provide those services.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, then, to the hon. Deputy Government House Leader, who's answering the questions: why are decisions to delist medically necessary services being made behind closed doors? Why is the public excluded?

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Mr. Speaker, again I'll undertake that question for advisement to the hon. minister of health. What's important is that health services be provided for through publicly funded abilities, and that's what we're doing, and that has been a very open and accountable process.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Why doesn't this government have the guts to admit that the reason it wants to delist services, privatize, and cut health care is so that the government's corporate friends can add billions of dollars of public health care money to their bottom line?

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, I think that clearly the health minister covered a number of these areas earlier in question period today. The one thing that he did make clear in answering those questions is that we're not really interested in dealing with conjecture, innuendo, what might happen, what could happen, and what-ifs. What this government has done is reformed a health system that delivers a system that is number one in Canada. In fact, the Capital region, in which we are sitting right now, for two years running has been named as the top delivery system of health services in Canada. I would suggest to the hon. member that he perhaps pay just a little bit of attention to what is happening in this region, to the access to the most dedicated professionals anywhere in the country who are right here delivering health services.

The health minister also noted very clearly earlier today that the Canada Health Act is about doctors and hospitals, and that is not what we are about in delivering services. We deliver a wide range of services far beyond the Canada Health Act, which, in fact, if you want to take the time to read it, hon. member, is nothing more than a funding mechanism.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Small Business

MR. LORD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Poverty and issues surrounding poverty continue to be of concern. There are calls for increases in minimum wage rates, and often it is cited as one solution. However, capacity to pay higher wages by small business owners does not appear to be a subject which has received the same degree of attention or study. My questions are to the Minister of Economic Development. If the Department of Economic Development has done any extensive studies of poverty rates among small business owners, what were the highlights of those studies?

MR. NORRIS: Well, I'd like to thank the hon. member for his question. As a former small business owner, Mr. Speaker, I think it's a vital one to the future of Alberta. As many people in this House know, small business is clearly the backbone of our economy and continues to drive our economy. There is an assumption that all businesses are profitable, that all businesses are a gravy train. The studies that we have undertaken and the information we have tell us a remarkably different story. In fact, many times small business owners are working for the better part of nothing, when all the dust settles, only to say that they are their own bosses.

Exact studies show, Mr. Speaker, that on average the annual household income of employers of self-employed businesses is $12,000 less than the Canadian average. In the small business category about 75 percent of those firms reported losing money or breaking even at best. I should also note that in that study 80 percent of the same small business owners report that they always – always – work 60 hours a week or more, compared with only 14 percent of their employees who said that.

The member raises a great question that needs more research. There is a theory that small business is a licence to print money, Mr. Speaker. The evidence is that it's the hard work and determination of those people that keeps them going rather than the money that's involved.

MR. LORD: My second question, Mr. Speaker: if the Department of Economic Development has done any extensive studies of the numbers or percentages of small business failure rates as a percentage of small business start-ups, what were the highlights of those studies?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. NORRIS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes, we actually have. As I said at the outset, as a former business owner I understand this issue implicitly, and having had many colleagues who have struggled and not succeeded, the evidence is overwhelming. Unfortunately, it points out that of most businesses that start up, within the first five years 75 percent do not make it. They don't make it, which flies in the face of common wisdom of the members opposite that all small businesspeople and businesspeople in general are taking a free ride in this economy.

It also reported, Mr. Speaker, that about 4,000 businesses started up in Calgary, and about 75 percent of those did not survive. The same number is available in Edmonton and around the province. Again, I relate it back to the same premise. We as Economic Development understand that small business and business in general drives this economy. We want to make sure we can do everything possible, which is a low tax regime and a fair set of rules, and we will continue to work with small business, who, I sincerely believe, drive this Alberta economy to be one of the greatest in Canada.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. LORD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My third question is: if the Department of Economic Development has done any studies of the effects or impacts of raising the minimum wage payable by small business owners in an effort to alleviate poverty among their employees, what would those results indicate?

MR. NORRIS: Well, this is probably the most important point of the series the hon. member raises, Mr. Speaker. When most small businesses are at a break-even point at best, they're doing their best to provide jobs and employment to other people in society. I'd like to reiterate the point: governments do not create jobs or wealth. They never can, never will. The people who create jobs and wealth are the small businesspeople who risk their own hard-earned capital and build something with it. It is fairly obvious to all concerned who have run a small business that there are many more things than minimum wage that keep people happy: things such as loyalty, job satisfaction, recognition of a job well done, a team spirit that seems to thrive in a small business enterprise.

The overwhelming studies show, Mr. Speaker, that a minimum wage raise will do nothing but kill jobs. The first response as a small businessman is to pay his suppliers, his rent, and keep his doors open. Then he has to deal with whatever government intervention there is, and I'm glad to say that in Alberta there's very little. A raise in the minimum wage or a significant increase in that will do nothing more than kill jobs and drive our economy into a slowdown, which is not what we're attempting to do.

What I'd really like to point out, Mr. Speaker, that I found fascinating in Alberta – and you can drive in any neighbourhood, whether it's Calgary-McCall or Calgary-Egmont or Edmonton-Meadowlark. You'll see signs: part-time work, $7, $8, $9 an hour. Those jobs aren't being filled because of a white-hot economy. This government believes that the economy, being strong enough, will drive that minimum wage up naturally and let businesspeople do what they have to do to survive.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, before I call on the first of several to participate today in Members' Statements, might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

2:50

head: Introduction of Guests

(reversion)

THE SPEAKER: Well, hon. members, I want to take this opportunity to recognize a group of individuals in the galleries today who play a key role in the democratic process in the province of Alberta. These are the men and the women who work for members of this Assembly in their constituency offices. Each year the service and the contributions of these individuals are celebrated with an employee recognition dinner, which I'll be hosting a little later this evening along with the Deputy Speaker. Today over 50 constituency office staff members are with us, and 18 will be recognized with five or more years of service, two with 10 or more years of service, two with 15 or more years of service. One constituency staffer, Ms Jeanette Weatherill, has served the constituents of Wainwright for over 20 years. Now, that means that her current member had reached the great age of 10 when she started working.

I would ask that Ms Weatherill and the rest of the constituency staff contingent in the public gallery this afternoon please rise and receive the warm recognition of members of this House.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I gather we were a little bit out of sync previously, so with your kind permission I will repeat my introduction from the beginning of this afternoon.

Mr. Speaker, I'm very pleased to rise and introduce to you and through you two distinguished guests to our province from Thailand: Dr. Nongluk Chintanadilok from Mahidol University in Bangkok, who is in residence at the university Faculty of Nursing studying qualitative research, and Professor Omjit Wongwanich from Srinakharin Wirat University in Thailand. She is, as well, in residence at the university Faculty of Nursing and studying pediatric nursing. Joining them today is my wife, Dr. Karin Olson, associate professor at the Faculty of Nursing. I would ask all three to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Scott Winder, who is a constituent of Edmonton-Centre and has joined us in the public gallery today to watch us in question period and in Routine of the day. I would ask Scott to please rise and accept the warm welcome of the Assembly.

head: Members' Statements

THE SPEAKER: Let me now call on the hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood.

Sprucewood Library

MR. MASYK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to take the opportunity to rise and speak today on an issue very dear to me and my constituents. Last week the city of Edmonton announced the possibility of a library closing in the city. One of four potential branches considered for closing is in my constituency. The Sprucewood library is a source of learning, information, inspiration to my constituents. It's a shame that city hall has not seen fit to prioritize the minds of our young children over other items in their budgets. The closing of a library will take away more opportunity for the underprivileged in my constituency to break the cycle of poverty that surrounds them. Libraries are institutions of equality that provide a resource of self-improvement. To close a library in a neighbourhood like Edmonton-Norwood, that already is disadvantaged, will only perpetuate poverty.

Mr. Speaker, libraries are an important parenting tool. They're a place where children can be taken and learn and expand their imagination. The minds of youth should not be sacrificed for a mere $220,000. I strongly urge – actually, no; I don't urge at all. I demand that they keep this library open, because the youth have to be educated on such things as the Kyoto accord. They can go and find out for themselves, as shareholders of a power company generated by coal, what it really means to them, what it means to their family, what it's going to be at the end of the day. I cannot understand why anybody would close such facilities.

Thank you very much.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Health Care Services

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today Canadians were handed a vision and a plan to strengthen our public health care system. At the same time, the Alberta government was meeting behind closed doors, cutting the heart out of rural Alberta. This government is disbanding health care regions without ever having done a review of whether regionalization works or not. Where's the proof? Where's the proof that this decision is the most efficient way possible to deliver health care services to all Albertans? Where's the proof that this decision won't result in reduced access to health care services in rural Alberta? There isn't any. This government feels that it doesn't have to base its health care decisions on evidence.

The bottom line is that without a thorough evaluation of regionalization the government can't be sure whether one or nine or 16 health regions is the right number. It's pretty clear that no one in the government really knows what it's doing on this issue. Given this government's lack of evidence that amalgamation won't mean less service, Albertans, especially rural Albertans, should be concerned. We need a plan with a long-term vision that's based on the real needs of communities, not directives by a minister bent on implementing a flawed strategy. Now that we have Romanow, it's time to set Mazankowski aside and get on with the business of building a stronger public health care system for Albertans.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Neil Hamilton

MS KRYCZKA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Neil Hamilton was born in 1920 in Regina, Saskatchewan, was raised on a farm nearby, graduated from Regina Luther College, was an outstanding athlete, was employed by the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool as an accountant, and in 1941 was drafted into the RCAF, where he graduated as an observer/navigator and flew with the Wellington bomber squadron posted in England and Tunisia. He completed 37 – yes, 37 – successful bombing missions over Germany, Sicily, and Italy and near the end of World War II was flying as an instructor on a training flight when in an instant his eyes hemorrhaged, and he was left with only 10 percent of his sight. Neil returned to Canada, only to be struck with tuberculosis at 25 years old. He recovered but only after six years of lying nearly motionless in a half-body cast. Soon after his release Neil lost part of his hearing.

Throughout all his trials Neil's personal motto, "Quit? Never!" became his prescription for life and for survival. Neil's training with the CNIB helped him to rise to an executive position with that organization and to live life to the fullest. Neil also worked tirelessly with local Lions clubs to develop and implement innovative programs that still benefit the visually impaired and blind, especially the young, in Alberta and across Canada. Through Lions Club enrichment programs Neil excelled in golf, bowling, and curling, and – get this – becoming a true role model, he holds the world record for the highest bowling score for a visually impaired person and consistently shot below 100 in golf.

Like many executives, Neil balanced a demanding career with a rich family life, with June and their three children. In his 50s Neil suffered a heart attack, lost much of his hearing, and overcame a crippling condition. At age 80 he launched his autobiography, Wings of Courage: A Lifetime of Triumph over Adversity, which tells an amazing story to inspire all of us.

Through it all Neil never quit, and he continues today to find laughter, friendship, and new opportunities wherever he goes. He is a real true Albertan hero, and our young people should have more opportunities to learn from the very best like him.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Romanow Report

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today is a defining moment for the future of health care in Canada. We've been presented with an historic opportunity. This opportunity involves making a choice. One choice is for a more comprehensive, adequately funded, and accountable public health care system. This is the choice of the Romanow commission, made after exhaustive consultation with Canadians. The other choice is for a public health care system that's steadily weakened through privatization, delisting, and user fees. This is the choice of the Mazankowski report and the handpicked government committees devoted to its implementation.

Before the Romanow report was even released, it was under attack by this Tory government. The reason is that the Romanow report threatens the provincial Tory agenda, an agenda that will inevitably lead to a two-tier, American-style health care system. Roy Romanow spent 18 months challenging the advocates of for-profit health care to prove that their approach would save money and improve health outcomes. The privatization advocates failed to provide such evidence; they had none. Romanow calls on the government to stop wasting public dollars to subsidize private facilities. Unfortunately, what Albertans are instead getting are private, for-profit hospitals that line the pockets of Tory-friendly investors.

Romanow rejects schemes like medical savings accounts, which far from constraining health care costs contribute to their escalation. Yet the Tories in this province with their ideological blinkers firmly in place seem all hell-bent on pursuing such failed schemes. Romanow recommends that medicare cover more health care services, starting with diagnostic services and home care, with prescription drug coverage added down the road. By contrast, the provincial Tories' handpicked panel has been told to delist and shift costs onto patients. The choice is clear, Mr. Speaker. We must make medicare more comprehensive, not less. We must reject the Tory government's scheme of privatization, delisting, and user fees.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Presenting Reports by Standing and Special Committees

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

MR. RATHGEBER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As chair of the Select Special Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act Review Committee I rise to table the committee's final report, dated November 2002. I'd like to take this opportunity to thank all members of this committee from all parties for all the hard work and dedication they put into the final draft of this report.

Thank you.

head: Presenting Petitions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Medicine Hat.

MR. RENNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Today I would like to present two petitions on behalf of the Member for Lethbridge-West. The first petition is signed by five residents of the city of Lethbridge urging the government to "remove abortion from the list of insured services that will be paid through Alberta Health."

Mr. Speaker, the second petition is signed by approximately 180 residents of the cities of Medicine Hat and Lethbridge and the towns of Whitecourt and Coaldale. These individuals are urging the government to "ensure that the Children's Advocate should become an officer of the Legislative Assembly and report directly to the Assembly."

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table a petition signed by 200 Albertans urging the government of Alberta to provide health care coverage for medical supplies for diabetic children under the Alberta Health Care Plan and provide financial assistance to parents to enable them to meet their children's necessary dietary requirements and cover costs incurred in traveling to Diabetes Education and Treatment Centres outside their own communities in Alberta.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Redwater.

MR. BRODA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to present a petition signed by 26 of my constituents urging the government to deinsure abortion that's not medically necessary.

Thank you, sir.

head: Notices of Motions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Community Development.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the House knows, normally at this time I'd be moving a motion that written questions and motions for returns stand and retain their places, but there are none on the Order Paper, but I thought I'd better at least make mention of it in the event that the House was not aware of that.

Thank you.

DR. NICOL: Mr. Speaker, I rise today to give notice that after the completion of the daily Routine I plan to make a motion under Standing Order 30.

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I rise to table five copies of the audited financial statements and other financial information of the Alberta Law Foundation. The Law Foundation receives the interest that banks, credit unions, trust companies, and Treasury Branches must pay on clients' funds held in lawyers' general trust accounts. Interest is then made available to organizations engaged in activities considered to be in keeping with the foundation's objects, two of which are conducting research into and recommending the reform of law and the administration of justice and contributing to the legal education and knowledge of people in Alberta and providing programs and facilities for those purposes.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

MS KRYCZKA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise today to table in the Assembly the five requisite number of copies of the Seniors Advisory Council for Alberta annual report for the previous year.

Thank you very much.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table a letter addressed to the Edmonton Symphony Orchestra, to Mark Gunderson, their volunteer chair, and to Elaine Calder, the CEO, congratulating them this weekend on their 50th anniversary of providing outstanding music to our city and to our province.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. With your permission I would like to table the appropriate number of copies of a letter I received from a constituent, Ms Amber Pikula. She goes on in this letter to say:

I fully support the Kyoto Protocol, and believe that Alberta and Canada should get behind it immediately. It's a great problem when people, especially our present provincial government, value money over health.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first is five copies of a paper prepared by Dawna Haslam on women and public policy.

The second tabling is a description of the contents of the convention on the elimination of all forms of discrimination against women. This protocol and an alternate protocol were signed by the federal government on October 18, 2002, this year, in commemoration of Persons Day.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table the appropriate number of copies of information released on March 15, 1990, by the then Minister of Environment in conjunction with the then Minister of Energy – of course, the then Minister of Environment is now our Premier – where they actually committed back in 1990 to respond to the impact of energy-related emissions on global warming on behalf of this province.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings this afternoon. The first one is a letter that I received from the hon. Energy minister on August 19, 2002, and this is a letter regarding information on matters related to the Balancing Pool.

The second tabling this afternoon is also a letter that I received on September 4, 2002, from the hon. Minister of Energy, and this letter is in regard to the government of Alberta and its proposals or discussions on joining the Regional Transmission Organization West.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've got two tablings today. My first tabling is a letter that I received from Ms Helene Paquin from Medicine Hat, director region 8, Alberta Council on Aging. Ms Paquin has heard reports of the discontinuation of Blue Cross coverage for seniors' programs. She writes: should this happen, seniors who have difficulty in paying for their medication may well do without it or try to space medication out to make it last; in either case the results could be disastrous.

The second tabling is a letter addressed to me accompanied by a document prepared by the Interfaith Coalition on Health Care, Edmonton chapter. This is a study on the health care system in Alberta and Canada. This study supports the strengthening of a publicly operated health care system based on the values of compassion and concern for all.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am tabling five copies of an ATCO Electric bill from a consumer in the town of Blackfoot, near Wainwright. The bill indicates that the consumers are being charged 4.9 cents per kilowatt-hour for the electricity actually used and an additional 4.62 cents per kilowatt-hour for delivery charges for a total cost to these consumers of 9.52 cents per kilowatt-hour.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Economic Development.

MR. NORRIS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. Earlier in question period I referred to a letter that I had sent to the Hon. Allan Rock. I would like to table the appropriate number of copies of that letter.

I have another tabling, Mr. Speaker, which is our department report on the international offices' performance in the year 2001-2002. Most notably, Alberta businesses had an 87 and a half percent approval rating of their experiences with those offices. I have the appropriate number of copies here.

head: Projected Government Business

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Official Opposition House Leader.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would now ask that the government share with us their projected government business for next week.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes, indeed, we'd be pleased to do that. On Monday afternoon we will of course begin with private members' business – Written Questions, Motions for Returns – followed by Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders. Then I assume we will possibly be recessing for the lighting of the lights. Maybe not. I'm not sure what the latest status on that is, but we'll find out. In the evening we'll be dealing with Motions Other than Government Motions, and at 9:00 p.m. we'll be doing Government Bills and Orders, probably proceeding with second reading of Bill 38, the Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act, 2002; then onward to Committee of the Whole, as may be necessary, for Bill 31, the Security Management Statutes Amendment Act, 2002; Bill 33, the North Red Deer Water Authorization Act; Bill 37, the Occupational Health and Safety Amendment Act, 2002; Bill 34, the Seniors Advisory Council for Alberta Amendment Act, 2002; Bill 35, the Teachers' Pension Plans Amendment Act, 2002; and Bill 38, the Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act, 2002 (No. 2).

On Tuesday afternoon under Government Bills and Orders we hope to be doing third reading for Bill 30-2 and Bill 31. On Tuesday evening, December 3, we will be continuing with Government Bills and Orders under Committee of the Whole bills 33, 37, 34, 35, as may or may not be necessary, and third reading of bills 25, 30-2, 31, 33, 37, 34, 35, and 38, again as may be necessary.

On Wednesday, December 4, under Government Bills and Orders for third reading bills 25, 30-2, 31, 33, 37, 34, and otherwise as ordered on the Order Paper. That evening, Wednesday, December 4, under Government Bills and Orders, as necessary, Committee of the Whole bills 33, 37, 34, 35 and third reading of bills 30-2, 31, 33, 37, and otherwise as per the Order Paper.

On Thursday, December 5, in the afternoon under Government Bills and Orders for third reading bills 30-2, 31, 33, and 37, again dependent on how progress goes earlier in the week.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, there is some business arising from earlier in the Routine. First of all, I presume it's the Deputy Government House Leader on behalf of the hon. Government House Leader on a point of order.

Point of Order Exhibits

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was listening with some intent to the questions during question period, and I believe that the hon. leader of the ND opposition did contravene a standing practice of this House, which I think this Speaker has ruled on in the past, and that's with respect to the use of exhibits or props or things of that nature. I think that sort of falls under the generic issue of 23(h), (i), and (j), but more specifically to the point that falls under Beauchesne 501, and I'd just like to briefly read two or three sentences from this because it's germane to the point of order. It reads:

Speakers have consistently ruled that it is improper to produce exhibits of any sort in the Chamber. Thus during the flag debate of 1964, the display of competing designs was prohibited. At other times boxes of cereal, detergent and milk powder have been ruled out of order.

In this case, when the hon. leader of the ND opposition rose with his prop, being certain language on a serviette, I believe he contravened the general practice of this House and also the standing rule under Beauchesne, and in that respect I would ask him to recant his actions and await the ruling of the chair in that regard.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. third party House leader.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, the hon. Deputy Government House Leader has quoted under section 501 of Beauchesne, which says that exhibits are not allowed. He neglected, I might add, under 503 to mention that potatoes were also included in the list of things that have been ruled upon. But if I can quote generally from Documents Cited, which is 495, it deals quite extensively in a number of points about the right of members to quote from documents and from notes. I would submit that the document in question here, although it is written on yellow paper, is part of the notes of the speaker and is not, in fact, an exhibit, but it's a document with writing on it and it's made of paper, and it can hardly be considered an exhibit.

THE SPEAKER: Do hon. members want to participate in this very important point of order? The hon. Opposition House Leader.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would refer you to your own ruling on May 6, 1999, page 1535, where you allow that the then member's minibanners did not offend the rules of the Assembly in accordance with the notes that you have given us regarding exhibits.

THE SPEAKER: Do no members want to participate? It is Thursday afternoon. Hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, at the point in time that your hon. colleague was raising his question, there was a lot of movement in the galleries, and the Speaker's eyes were vigilantly searching as to what might or might not be happening. During the question that did arise, there were three simple words:

privatization, delisting, and user fees. Then when the eyes of the chair came back to the floor, the chair saw a yellow sheet being moved, and at that point in time the hon. Government House Leader then did rise on a point of order.

Now, is the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands suggesting that the eye ability of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona is such that he needs larger than normal lettering that has to be provided on a particular piece of paper which forms the point of notes for the hon. member and that it would not be the whole text of the hon. member's question that would require this exaggerated heightening of the words but only certain words? Perhaps in the future the hon. member might then be guided by having all of his speaking notes in similar size printed before him so that there would not be an opportunity for other members to suggest that there was a prop being used, which clearly would violate all the rules of the Assembly and would be completely out of order and would cause great retribution to be handed to the hon. member.

So perhaps the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands might be governed by these words of guidance this afternoon, consult with his colleague about this use of this particular speaking note or prop in the view of others, and perhaps not return unless everything is consistent. Would that conclude this point of order?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie on a purported point of order.

MS CARLSON: Mr. Speaker, the first point of order will be handled by the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Point of Order Explanation of Speaker's Ruling

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise on a point of order this afternoon, and I quote Beauchesne 410(5) and (6) and Standing Order 13(2). Beauchesne states in 410(5): "The primary purpose of the Question Period is the seeking of information and calling the Government to account." Section 6: "The greatest possible freedom should be given to Members consistent with the other rules and practices." Standing Order 13(2) of our own Assembly: "The Speaker shall explain the reasons for any decision upon the request of a member."

In light of the fact that I was questioning the Premier earlier this afternoon on the Balancing Pool, which is made to comply with all applicable laws and regulations specifically adhering to the deregulation principles that are outlined in the Electric Utilities Act, I would appreciate an explanation as to why my third question was ruled out of order. And particularly, to the Speaker, I respect the fact that the Speaker was absent on Monday, November 25, 2002, and the Deputy Speaker was in the chair. There was a similar question asked, and it was not ruled out of order. I would like to clarify that; the Speaker that was in the chair on November 25, 2002. [interjections]

THE SPEAKER: The member has the floor.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to withdraw the previous reference to the absence of the Speaker in the chair and note that in Hansard on page 1482 on November 25 I asked a very similar question, and it was not ruled out of order.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. member, advice was provided to the chair that this would be a point of order. Now, recognizing the hon. member on a point of order, the hon. member now wants to get an explanation? Please identify what it is we're after here.

MR. MacDONALD: That is correct. In 13(2), “The Speaker shall explain the reasons for any decision upon the request of a member.”

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: May the chair refer all members, please, to Beauchesne section 409. We’re now dealing with the third question in a series of questions that occurred in the question period this afternoon. In the third series of questions – by the way, even with the abbreviated version and the lack of response to the third question it lasted 6.5 minutes. The first series of questions was four minutes in length; the second series of questions, between the Leader of the Official Opposition and the minister of health, was two and a half minutes; the third one was 6.5; the fourth one was five; the fifth series, four; the sixth series, 6.5; the seventh series, 2.5; the eighth series, 3.5; the ninth series, .5; the 10th series, 10.5; the 11th series, four minutes; and the last one, five minutes plus.

Now, we refer to Beauchesne 409, and I would like to read:

A brief question seeking information about an important matter of some urgency which falls within the administrative responsibility of the government or of the specific Minister to whom it is addressed, is in order.

But be guided by:

- (1) It must be a question, not an expression of an opinion, representation, argumentation, nor debate.
- (2) The question must be brief. A preamble need not exceed one carefully drawn sentence. A long preamble on a long question takes an unfair share of time and provokes the same sort of reply. A supplementary question should need no preamble.
- (3) The question ought to seek information and, therefore, cannot be based upon a hypothesis, cannot seek an opinion, either legal or otherwise, and must not suggest its own answer, be argumentative or make representations.
- (4) It ought to be on an important matter, and not be frivolous.
- (5) The matter ought to be of some urgency. There must be some present value in seeking the information . . . rather than through the Order Paper or through correspondence.
- (6) A question must be within the administrative competence of the Government.

And there are further additional things in there.

- (7) A question must adhere to the proprieties of the House, in terms of inferences, imputing motives or casting aspersions upon persons within the House or out of it.
- (8) A question that has previously been answered ought not to be asked again.
- (9) A question cannot deal with a matter that is before a court.
- (10) A question ought not to refer to a statement made outside the House by a Minister.
- (11) A question which seeks an opinion about government policy is probably out of order in that it asks for an opinion and not information.

There are additional things that go on with respect to that.

That is just part of the explanation, hon. member, including the one that if a question has already been asked, it’s not going to be asked again.

So this afternoon, then, to specifically respond to the request being made for explanation, which I’m very, very happy to give in any and all circumstances and occasions, this was the third series of questions, and I do believe that the previous two probably violated all the rules I just talked about. But then the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar:

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier. What is the total amount of interest Alberta consumers must pay on these secret deferral accounts because you want to hide those additional charges from them until after the next provincial election?

Now, if the hon. member is in a position to tell me that some of the words used in this question clearly do not violate at least all 10 of the clauses just read by the Speaker with respect to this, then the Speaker would be very, very happy to meet with the member in the Speaker’s office to kindly go through the words and the meanings of the words.

In this case, six and a half minutes had already transpired with respect to this. The purpose of question period is to afford all members in this Assembly, as many of them as possible, an opportunity to have questions and answers. The question was not ruled out of order by the chair. The advice was just provided to the person to whom the question was addressed that it was not one that need be answered, which is quite different than ruling the question out of order.

All in all, that was only section 409 that was used in providing an explanation for the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold-Bar. There are a number of other books here that the chair could use if there’s any difficulty with respect to this, but I suspect that probably it answered the question.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie on a point of order.

Point of Order Oral Question Period Practices

MS CARLSON: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I refer to Standing Order 13(2), where I would ask for reasons for your decision in the question from the Member for Wainwright to not intervene in the questions and then the subsequent answers. As I heard the question, it clearly contravened Beauchesne 410(12): “Questions should not be hypothetical.”

In light of the ruling you just gave with reference to the most recent point of order, Beauchesne 410, specifically 410(12), and some of the other points as well, what we had was a question from the Member for Wainwright to three ministers asking about a report that all three ministers said they had not seen, even though they had heard of its existence, so really were not in a position to comment on in terms of any factual reference to the implications within their departments.

I was very surprised not to see you intervene in that case and would like some explanation.

THE SPEAKER: Well, quite frankly, the hon. Opposition House Leader is wrong. The chair did rise. The chair did rise, and there’s no doubt about that whatsoever. The questions appeared to be quite a bit in order after the hon. Minister of Energy started responding to the question. Whether or not two members of Executive Council speak from the same song sheet with respect to a particular document or knowledge of a particular document is secondary to the chair.

Ministers have agreed and disagreed in this House in responding to various questions. This afternoon was a case where the impression of the chair was that one minister basically said that such a document did not exist. It does not necessarily mean that the other minister was not aware that the document did exist.

Thirdly, within the time frame allocated to the questions and answers there were four minutes and about 50 seconds that were used on this. It was not an abuse of the time of the session. It may have been in one hon. member’s view questions and responses that would have been on the line, but I think virtually every question would be ruled out for that test.

I think that covers that.

head: Request for Emergency Debate

THE SPEAKER: Now we have the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition on a Standing Order 30 application.

Romanow Report

DR. NICOL: Mr. Speaker, I rise today under Standing Order 30 to request an emergency debate, the timing of which is very urgent for this Assembly. Today the Romanow report was released. As you know, this report itself and the recommendations contained therein are of great importance to the future of health care not only for our province but for our country. The question may be asked: why are we raising this debate now? The answer is simply that we have not had the full report from Romanow until today. The debate over these recommendations that will affect our province is, of course, necessary and is very urgent for several reasons.

First, health care is not on the government's agenda for this session. There has been no health legislation introduced this fall. As a result, there will be no opportunity to talk about the Romanow report and its effect on our health care until plans are already on the way to implement it. Mr. Speaker, this will be the last opportunity for this Assembly to discuss this matter before the Premiers' meeting in January, less than two months away. This meeting would signal the beginning of closed-door meetings, the contents of which probably will not be available for public consumption until an implementation plan is reached. That's too late.

It has also come to light that the provincial, territorial, and federal health ministers will be meeting in eight days to begin planning the broad strokes of health care renewal for Canada. The need for this debate therefore becomes even more urgent than before.

Mr. Speaker, this government is on the verge of implementing changes to our health care system in this province. We know that there are discussions on regional health boundaries with the news released today. It is imperative and urgent that we have this debate now to see how the Romanow report will affect those changes, many of which will be expected soon.

Why, Mr. Speaker? Because it has been made clear that the goals of the Romanow report and the goals of this government are at odds. We need to discuss how the two will integrate. This is our last chance before potentially wide-sweeping changes are made to our health care system behind closed doors and past the scrutiny of the majority of elected officials in this province and this country. The Romanow report will have lasting changes on our province. I ask you in this Assembly to allow this debate, the window for which is almost closed.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

3:30

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, I would just rise to remind all members of the House, including our colleague from across the way here, that under Standing Order 30(7) the essence of what constitutes Motion 30 is explained, and it reads:

(7) A motion under this Standing Order is subject to the following conditions:

(a) the matter proposed for discussion must relate to a genuine emergency, calling for immediate and urgent consideration.

And it goes on.

Now, while I would agree that there's great importance attached to these reports, including the one previous, which Senator Kirby had released, and the one before that, which Hon. Don Mazankowski had released – so, too, I'm sure, is the Romanow report of some importance – I don't think it comes to us as a case of urgency because it was only released today, and it's been 18 months in the preparation. Clearly, if it was urgent, it would have been dealt with in that way by the federal government, who, in fact, are the ones that commissioned it. But it wasn't dealt with in that way. It was given 18 months to be written, and I expect that there will probably be a significant portion of time allotted to its debate to get some feedback, to allow the ministers of health a chance to really study it in great detail as well as first ministers, our Premiers to do the same.

So this decision by the federal government is pending. I don't think they've given any indication yet in response to the Romanow report as to whether or not they're going to accept any of the report recommendations, all of the report recommendations, or just some of the elements of that report. They will need a chance to respond to that, as will we and as will other provincial and territorial governments. So I fail to see why we would recess the House for an urgent debate on something that has not yet been accepted or officially responded to by the federal government. I don't believe that was the precedent set with respect to the release of other reports such as the Kirby one or the Mazankowski one as referenced earlier, nor would it be done this time.

What's important here, though, Mr. Speaker, is that this Romanow report, which, as I say, has been waited upon by Canadians for many, many months, is now a public document. It contains, I understand, about 400 pages or thereabouts. I don't think that any members of this House have yet had a chance to read every single section of that report in great detail, although our Minister of Health has had an opportunity to look at most of it by now, and he's doing more of it as we speak. But I don't think it's fair to impose a debate on members of this House in an urgent fashion (a) where no urgency exists and (b) where all hon. members haven't had a chance yet to even really consider what that document really contains in any great detail.

I am aware, Mr. Speaker, that ministers of health did talk earlier today, and they confirmed their intentions to meet next week, so there will be an opportunity for them to discuss the content of that report with the federal Minister of Health. The federal government has confirmed that the first ministers' meeting will be held early in January, and I think this will be key to determining what the position is that they come forward with regarding the Romanow report. So we'll be taking some time to review the report in greater detail, and I know that there will be discussions amongst federal health counterparts and amongst Premiers. At the same time, I know that health ministers are going to continue to be saying and to be doing whatever they find is necessary to continue on with finding the solution to a truly sustainable health care system that is there for all Canadians regardless of where they live when and how they might choose to need it.

So in that respect, I would suggest that one of the important factors referenced in the report is the need for the federal government to step up to the plate with additional funding. I know they will need some time to consider how to do that and what the source of that funding will be.

As a result, Mr. Speaker, and in conclusion, I would suggest to the hon. member and to others here that there is no case for urgency at this time for this Standing Order to proceed.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

DR. NICOL: Thanks for the promotion.

MS CARLSON: That's okay. I won't take that promotion, thank you very much.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Opposition House Leader has the floor.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With regard to the urgency I speak primarily to the fact that we don't have any opportunity to debate this particular issue prior to the meetings that the Deputy Government House Leader just alluded to. In fact, we have a few question periods left in this particular session. Question period is question period, not question and answer period, so there is no ability to debate within the rules of that particular structure. We do not have anything left on the Order Paper that could even remotely be considered to relate to this kind of a health debate so that we could have an open discussion.

It's very important that a public document like this be debated publicly in an open and transparent manner so that all Albertans who may or may not agree with the proposed government position have an opportunity to have their comments heard on the floor of the Assembly and then assimilated into the message that the Minister of Health will go forward with and the Premier will go forward with in the future. It is urgent that this happen sooner rather than later so that their thoughts are actually considered when the decisions are made as early as next week on December 6, when these proposed meetings start.

We will not have an opportunity to debate this particular issue before those decisions are made before we come back in the spring because the spring session will not start until some time in February, at which time most of the major decisions will have been made.

AN HON. MEMBER: Question.

THE SPEAKER: No. There's already been input there, hon. member.

That's the conclusion, then, with respect to this input with respect to the Standing Order 30 application? Hon. members, the chair is prepared to rule on this leave for a motion to proceed under Standing Order 30. First of all, the Leader of the Official Opposition has given the chair proper notice of his intention to seek permission to present this motion under Standing Order 30. The chair confirms that notice was received by the Speaker's office yesterday at 10:44 a.m., so the requirements under Standing Order 30(1) have been met.

Before the question as to whether this motion should proceed to be put to the Assembly, the chair must rule whether the motion meets the requirements under Standing Order 30 as to whether the matter is of "urgent public importance" that calls for immediate and urgent consideration by this Assembly. Needless to say, one has listened attentively to the arguments put forward in considering whether the proposed debate on the Romanow report is of such an important, urgent nature that it warrants the postponement of the business schedule for this afternoon in this Assembly.

The chair has also earlier today reviewed the parliamentary authorities in this matter, specifically Beauchesne's paragraphs 387 and 390 and the House of Commons Procedure and Practice's pages 586 and 589. The chair would like to point out as well the two important factors that are relevant in considering whether or not a motion is in order. First, in determining the issue of urgency of the debate, the chair must consider whether there is another opportunity for the members of the Assembly to discuss the matter. Secondly, the chair must also consider whether or not it is the general wish of the House to have the debate.

Upon reviewing the Order Paper, the chair is of the view that there does not appear to be another opportunity in this fall sitting for this issue to come forward to debate. There are no motions or bills that are relevant to the matter, nor does there appear to be an opportunity afforded by other types of debate such as the throne speech or consideration of the estimates, which were options available earlier in the session. Having heard earlier the report from the Deputy Government House Leader with respect to the agenda identified for next week and the subsequent week's activities, there was no notification given that this matter might be on the agenda as well.

The chair would also like to point out via page 589 of House of Commons Procedure and Practice that Speakers have periodically allowed for an emergency debate on an issue which was not necessarily urgent or a genuine emergency, but the issue was one that prevented members from participating as a result of the parliamentary timetable for discussion on such a matter. What we have here today is a report that was released just this morning in which, although in itself it does not constitute a genuine emergency, the subject matter appears to be of great interest, and there does not appear to be another time that this matter will be brought forward during the fall sitting for debate by this Assembly.

Accordingly, the chair finds that the request for leave to adjourn the ordinary business of this Assembly is in order, and before putting the matter to a vote pursuant to Standing Order 30(3), the chair would remind members that the debate under this Standing Order does not entail any decision of the Assembly. The chair will now put the question. Shall the debate on the urgent matter proceed?

SOME HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

SOME HON. MEMBERS: No.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, you have to know the rules if you want to play the game. Okay? You've got to know what the rules are if you want to play the game. I don't have to explain the rules if you want to play the game. I put the question forward.

MS CARLSON: And we said yes.

THE SPEAKER: You've got to rise under the rules.

The question was: should the debate on the urgent matter proceed?

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 3:42 p.m.]

[Ten minutes having elapsed, the Assembly divided]

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, what we have now before the Assembly is a division with respect to a motion that was put forward by the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition. Because there tends to be some degree of confusion with respect to this Standing Order and there tends to be maybe even some misinterpretation by some or lack of understanding by some with respect to the ruling given by the chair with respect to this, members should know that the chair has indicated at this point in time that the motion put forward by the hon. Leader of the Opposition met the tests that would be used today in evaluating the question. It has to be made very, very clear once again that even though our Standing Orders talk about a genuine emergency, there are also recognitions and leverages given to the chair by other precedents in terms of the timetable that might be available to all members in order to deal with a particular issue.

After looking at and hearing the timetable that's been laid out in this particular Assembly for the subsequent week and the week thereafter, it appeared quite clearly that this would be probably the only opportunity that members might even have to make a comment with respect to the question put forward by the Leader of the Official Opposition. On that basis, the chair ruled that the test had been met with respect to this matter, and the chair did put the question before the hon. members so the debate on the urgent matter could proceed.

The chair might have also asked those members at that time to rise. It was just inherent in chair that the members would rise immediately.

So now what we have is a division before us on the question: shall the debate on the urgent matter proceed? And this is what will happen depending on how hon. members would deal with this, and members might be further confused by what the chair will say about the decision of the vote. If less than 15 members vote in favour of the question "Shall the debate on the urgent matter proceed?" then there is no procedure with respect to the debate. It ends there. If more than 15 say yes but a greater number say no, the matter will still proceed because our Standing Orders say that you must have at least 15. So the question will now be put. The Standing Orders, remember, are the Standing Orders of the Assembly. What you have here is an interpretation of the Standing Orders that are written by the members.

So, for all clarity, the question was: shall the debate on the urgent matter proceed?

Second Reading

Bill 33
North Red Deer Water Authorization Act

[Debate adjourned November 25: Mrs. Jablonski]

MRS. JABLONSKI: Mr. Speaker, I spoke on this bill and adjourned the debate, so I have no further comments except that I encourage everyone to support this bill because of the need for drinking water in Blackfalds, Lacombe, Ponoka, and Hobbema.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am happy to rise and speak to this particular bill in second reading. I listened intently to the comments from the member who introduced the bill the other day and was encouraged that those comments were what I thought the interpretation of this bill was. In brief, it's a water basin transfer from the South Saskatchewan River basin to the North Saskatchewan River basin, and it's required by the communities, as she said again, of Blackfalds, Ponoka, Lacombe, along with several First Nations bands, for drinking water. The actual object of the bill is to issue a licence under the Water Act that will provide for the transfer of water between these basins in an amount not to exceed 13,391 cubic decametres annually.

We know that these communities have been experiencing problems in both the quality and the quantity of available water supplies. This solution that has been devised takes the water from the Red Deer River and pipes it into the communities, Mr. Speaker. The problem is that Lacombe and Ponoka are both located in the North Saskatchewan River basin, and the transfer of water is, therefore, technically an interbasin transfer because the water would be returned to the North Saskatchewan River rather than the Red Deer River.

Any interbasin water transfer requires an act of the Legislature under the terms of the Water Act. We are very supportive of that requirement that it require an act of the Legislature under the terms of the Water Act. While we are happy to take a look at any of these transfers on an individual basis, we have very, very large concerns about this becoming a situation that occurs with any frequency, not even more frequently, and we certainly would be opposed to large interbasin water transfers, and we certainly would have a few more concerns if this one didn't actually end up back in the same basin eventually. The good news for this particular transfer is that an environmental impact study was commissioned, and it concluded that there are no biological issues and that the proposal would have minimal effect on the volume of flow in the Red Deer River, the two key issues for us when it comes to water basin transfers.

We, in fact, have a bill coming up – looks like it was on the Order Paper; it wouldn't come up for debate this time; we'll reintroduce it again next year – that says: just say no to interbasin transfers unless there are some really strict conditions being met. So, then, very, very strong fences built around the ability to do that. This interbasin transfer appears to meet all of those conditions. Normally I would be opposed in principle to any kind of an interbasin water transfer and then perhaps vote for a bill subsequently in committee in third reading, but in this particular instance I'm not even opposed in principle because it is very minor in nature. There are a few red flags that we like to raise at times like this, though, because there are some real potentials for problems down the road.

As we see the increasing changes in weather conditions around us, we see that the potential for interbasin transfers could significantly increase. The demand in southern Alberta for clean water is only going to grow. It is exacerbated by weather conditions, by changing weather patterns, by rising temperatures generally, and regardless of whether you believe that those conditions are caused by global warming, they are at the very least a weather pattern that we are in for some time, not just for a year or two. It looks like we could be in a cycle that could last anywhere from three to 10 to 15 years if not longer, and at least I don't think anyone can challenge the science of that.

So this is going to become an increasing problem in particularly southern Alberta, although northern Alberta has many water issues too. People think that we have lots up there and that it's all clean, but in fact that isn't the case. Water will definitely be, I think, the crisis of the coming decades and a subject that we increasingly hear debated in this Legislature and other Legislatures who have similar kinds of weather patterns.

The general policy of our party and the Official Opposition is against interbasin water transfers because they are potentially very environmentally damaging and are expensive in nature. We believe that we need to start looking at where we have communities located where there are severe strains on the existing water flows and particularly in those areas where we have some control over development, so particularly in terms of industrial development, and I include intensive livestock operations within that framework. We need to ensure that we are not adding an additional burden to water flows in regions that are already under some stress or even that we project to be under some stress in the next three to five years. I'm not saying for the next 50 years, but at least in the short term we need to look at those areas and ensure that we are going to be minimizing the impact on the environment and the stress on the water flows before we make any decisions.

We really need an integrated strategy to assess the effect of water transfers on the landscape, and this is the only way that we can ensure that we really have sustainable development in this province that includes the needs of people, industry, agriculture, the landscape, the flora and fauna. That is a definition of sustainable development that we need to talk about, not just how we progress through supporting industry's needs for growth. It's a way bigger issue, and it needs to be addressed.

Another red flag we would like to raise on this particular issue is the discussion about water becoming a commodity. We hear that being talked about occasionally by the Minister of Environment particularly, and that does raise some ramifications for us in the long term. I asked a question earlier this week that the Minister of Environment was not prepared to answer, and I will be bringing that question back in this House, and we do expect an answer from him. Does he believe that water is a commodity? Does he believe that we are well enough protected to be able to keep control of our own water in upcoming considerations?

If people think that the fight about trees and softwood lumber is a big deal now between Canada and the United States, it is nothing compared to the fight we will have about water if water becomes a commodity as defined under NAFTA. That is something that this government should be addressing at this stage. It is something that they should be making public and having a general debate on, I believe. So we would like them to definitely progress in that particular area.

I hope we never see a time in this Legislature where the government brings forward any positions to eliminate the need to have this kind of a debate in the Legislature when we talk about interbasin transfers. There is and has been for many, many years a plan that this government instituted in the very early years of their takeover from the Social Credit which talked about serious interbasin transfers from the north of the province to the south of the province. It would require another dam. It was a plan that was built with canals and pipelines to facilitate this transfer. I really hope that that thing is buried under a tonne of dust and never sees the light of day, because that would be hugely controversial in this province and a real detriment, I think, to the challenges we see before us.

Essentially, that's all I have to say in principle to this bill at this time. When we get into committee, I will be introducing an amendment on behalf of the Leader of the Official Opposition which just puts a little bit stronger fence around this particular bill in terms of who has distribution of the water rights in the future. I hope that it will be seriously considered and debated, if not passed, by members from the government. Until that time, Mr. Speaker, I will take my seat.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise this afternoon and participate in the debate on Bill 33, the North Red Deer Water Authorization Act. It's quite interesting that this legislation would be before the Assembly at the same time that we're having this national discussion on the Kyoto protocol. Certainly, when we consider water quality, not only, again, in the area of central Alberta but throughout the province and throughout the country, I for one believe that it is an issue that is of concern not only to the citizens of Blackfalds and Ponoka and Lacombe and many of the smaller communities surrounding those towns, but also it certainly is an issue of concern for citizens in Walkerton in Ontario and North Battleford in Saskatchewan.

When we consider that we now must transfer water from one basin to another, in this case from the South Saskatchewan River basin to the North Saskatchewan River basin – and it is required; it is necessary for those towns to have, I guess we could just simply call this, potable water – this indicates to this hon. member that we'd better have a good look at the entire water supply in the rest of the province. Maybe this bill is a wake-up call.

There are certainly many resources in this province. Water is perhaps one of the most precious resources, but also, in my view, one of the most precious resources of this province would be Dr. Schindler from the University of Alberta. The knowledge that this professor has accumulated on this particular issue is respected around the world, and I'm certainly curious as to what an individual with the academic background and the stature that Dr. Schindler has would have to say regarding Bill 33.

Whenever you think of the communities of Blackfalds, Lacombe, and Ponoka along with several of the First Nations peoples and when you consider the problems they are experiencing in both the quality and the quantity of available water supplies, a solution certainly had to be devised, and this looks like for them the right solution. However, when we look at this – and all members across the way can be silent on this – I think this is also related to the debate on Kyoto.

AN HON. MEMBER: How so?

MR. MacDONALD: "How so?" one of the backbench hon. members questions. I would have to say that there's no doubt that the drought conditions that exist, the recent dry years that have existed in this province, are not only a result of a natural weather pattern or a natural weather cycle; they are also affected and unfortunately there is an increase in drought conditions because of global warming. It was in the paper today – I believe it was in the Globe and Mail – that there's going to be a significant reduction not only in the area but in the thickness of the Arctic ice cap over the next number of centuries, and we cannot argue that global warming is not affecting this. Mount Logan, I believe it was – scientists from the University of Calgary had conducted some extensive studies regarding the snowpack on Mount Logan and concluded that global warming was affecting their climate.

Now, we have that issue to deal with whenever we look at the present situation that is, unfortunately, upon Blackfalds, Lacombe, Ponoka, and their surrounding areas. Perhaps the Minister of Environment, in the normal practice of participation in debate in this Assembly, can answer this question in due time, Mr. Speaker, and that is what effect oil and gas activity has had on the water supply and the water table surrounding Blackfalds, Lacombe, and Ponoka.

I note in here in an information package that was provided that the town of Blackfalds has three wells. Two wells have high levels of H₂S and fluoride. I would have to wonder why. Is this a natural occurrence? Have these levels increased? Is the water table decreasing, Mr. Speaker? Now, Lacombe has seven active wells. Ponoka has eight wells. When you consider that we now use water for enhanced oil recovery, large volumes of water, perhaps it's time to reconsider this practice or perhaps it's a time to look at alternate sources of obtaining this water for enhanced oil recovery. This bill is an ideal opportunity from which to perhaps discuss some of these issues.

Now, perhaps we could quit using water altogether in this province for enhanced oil recovery and start using CO₂.

MR. BONNER: I thought you were going to compare it to no breathing.

MR. MacDONALD: Well, the no breathing policy or the heavy breathing policy is obviously not going to work. You know, the only thing it's going to do to the hon. members across the way is perhaps increase risk of oxygen deprivation. It's certainly not going to work.

I would certainly encourage the members opposite to consider this; that is, to replace the water that's used in enhanced oil recovery, save it for those communities and those surrounding industries, and use CO₂. CO₂ has certainly been used in Weyburn, Saskatchewan, for enhanced oil recovery. As a matter of fact, as I recall, pure CO₂ is coming from Joffre, the industrial complex. Pure CO₂, Mr. Speaker, is a by-product of that industrial process, and that's being used to sweep a formation east of Red Deer, east of some of these very towns, for enhanced oil recovery. So why could we not expand that? Why do we have blinders on about Kyoto? Why don't we see CO₂ as a resource, as a resource perhaps to be utilized so that we can take another precious resource, water, and correct our rather haphazard practices regarding the use of that water? Certainly, we could take the coal-fired plants and experiment with compression. [A cell phone rang] Dr. Schindler, I assume.

Mr. Speaker, I think we should look at compressing the flue gases and piping them from the coal-fired plants to some of those areas in central Alberta where we're currently using water for enhanced oil recovery. We should have a serious look at this and take our water and recognize that it is a precious resource that is not endless. The water supply in this province is not endless.

Now, I'm sure the hon. Member for Peace River – there are certainly vast amounts of water in northern Alberta. Are we going to look at a policy in the future perhaps with northern development – and I believe that hon. member is the chair of a committee – of moving development and people to the water instead of moving the water to more arid areas where, unfortunately, there is less water than what is currently needed.

So we can look at this bill and we can say that this is just a minor transfer from one basin to the other, or we can look at this bill as the start of a public debate not only on how we can use Kyoto as a means of economic activity in this province but also as a warning that water is not endless and it is precious. Perhaps this bill is that warning, and perhaps we're going to look at how we use water.

I for one have had the pleasure of working down in the Clearwater River basin. Many times I have worked there. The water is racing out of the mountains; the flow rates are aggressive. I was startled to learn that a lot of that water is taken out and used by resource companies. Some of the farmers in that neighbourhood – and this is in the Rocky Mountain House region – are frustrated with the use of that water. They're frustrated to the point that they're willing to speak out on national TV.

I watch the CBC. I'm guilty of watching the CBC, and I enjoy the CBC. I think it's terrific. The CBC had quite a story with residents of the Sundre area and their concerns about water allocation. I realize that water problems are a provincial issue, and they're certainly not just limited to the north Red Deer River or any of the surrounding communities.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would urge all hon. members of this Assembly to consider replacing water that's used currently for enhanced oil recovery with CO₂. This doesn't have to be done overnight. We could gradually work this into the plan so that industry could get a handle on this without it costing them enormous sums of money. I think it can be done. We can look at a long-term strategy so that there's going to be plenty of water for everyone and for every purpose in this province, regardless of where they choose to live.

Thank you.

4:20

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Under Standing Order 29 we have five minutes for questions. The hon. member for Edmonton-Glenora.

MR. HUTTON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was just curious. The member mentioned that he's an avid watcher of CBC television. I was just wondering what his favourite program was.

MR. MacDONALD: The National, and my second favourite program, Mr. Speaker, would be This Hour has 22 Minutes, because it portrays this government as what it really is.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Stettler.

MRS. GORDON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would be remiss if I didn't stand up and actually thank each and every one of you that has debated this bill thus far, Bill 33, the North Red Deer Water Authorization Act.

A little history and background. The town of Lacombe and the town of Blackfalds have a severe water shortage and have had a problem for quite some time, so their need is immediate. The four First Nations bands at Hobbema and Ponoka have also identified that their need is growing, and they're being very, very courageous to sit down, all four of them, to work through this to find a solution.

What I would like to do today is thank all those municipal people that have spent considerable time. First off, I would like to thank the mayor of Lacombe, His Worship Bill McQuesten. Bill has probably spent in the last year probably about 55 to 60 percent of his time on this particular act and what was needed here. He is the chairman of what they now call the Regional Water Committee. It does my heart good, because it's a number of communities working together in a very proactive fashion, and I think that they are to be congratulated. They really have taken a regional approach to this since they have started and have come this far. They have had other municipalities in the area phone them and want to sit down and talk about their need for water, and I think this is the beginning of something that's going to work and work very well.

I also would be remiss if I didn't thank the Minister of Environment. He has done an exceptional job of listening to and acting upon what he's heard from these various communities. As well, several discussions have been held with the Minister of Transportation, and he, too, has been willing to listen and respond to a need. As such, I would thank each and every one of you because you've also listened. I know that when we get to the final point and the last vote on this particular bill, it sounds to me like we will have your okay for it to go ahead. Water, as my hon. colleague from Red Deer-North said, is a top priority of this government, but water is a top priority of every municipal government in this province as well. It's very, very detrimental to your community when you know that your aquifer is no longer there, yet you have a growing population and you have a need for water. Something that I think we must do – and it's been talked about with other pieces of legislation that have come before this Assembly. I think that we have to be very proactive as we move ahead and try to educate the electorate, try to educate the people on water use, because each and every one of us in our own houses in our own communities, I think, could really take a hard look at how much water on a given day we waste, that totally goes down the drain. I think that we need to be very proactive in that. With new housing construction starts there are a number of new plumbing fixtures that can certainly reduce the amount of water that's used. I think that if we are going to have to look at this, which in time I know we are throughout the whole province, we need to be proactive here and in municipalities and try to work very much to educate the general public.

So I'm not going to go over what has been said here. I again want to thank all those from those various communities that worked very hard. They have done an environmental impact study. They spent considerable days and hours on public consultation, asked for written submissions. I just want to say thank you to them for working together and then bringing forward what they found and the compromise and the solution that they thought would best serve them. Hopefully, we're able to accommodate them through this Legislature.

Thank you.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Standing Order 29(2), five minutes. There being none, the chair recognizes Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure to rise this afternoon and talk to Bill 33, the North Red Deer Water Authorization Act. I think that when we look at the purpose for this bill, we have to realize that this is the first legislation of its kind in Alberta, but it won't be our last. It certainly is an effect of global warming, of climate change, and because of that I think it is incumbent upon this body here to certainly pass legislation which not only transfers water but looks at our future requirements for water and where we're going to allow communities to build in the future and where we're going to allow industry to locate.

Now, then, this water transfer is unique. It is interbasin, but because of the way the water flows, they will join up down the line, so in some sense this is a very special type of interbasin water transfer. It's one that is desperately required. It's desperately required by the communities of Lacombe, Ponoka, Blackfalds, and the First Nations' Samson, Ermineskin, Montana, and Louis Bull communities. It is critical. This is one of the basics of life, and it's certainly incumbent upon us to provide water to those communities who are lacking water, because it is one of the essentials.

So when we do consider the cost of $23.5 million to build a 66-kilometre pipeline to fulfill the requirements of these communities for water, I don't think as a Legislature we have any other choice, but I also think it brings to light what can happen when we start these types of transfers and where they go. I certainly think that if we are not careful with the way we transfer water, particularly interbasin water, there is enormous potential for adverse ecological impacts.

All we have to do is look at the program that Russia undertook a number of years ago where they tried to transfer and reverse the flow of water from the north to the south. The ecological damage that has occurred in Russia as a result of that is widespread. It's not only widespread, but it is irreversible. It is not only irreversible, Mr.

Speaker, but it is also irreparable. So, again, I think that what we are seeing with this piece of legislation is simply the tip of the iceberg, that the impact on Alberta has only just begun.

The Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar referred to Dr. Schindler earlier. Certainly, I've enjoyed many of his talks when it does come to Alberta's stake in regards to water, and I think we have many living examples in the province that are strong indicators that we must take some action. I think of the Bonnyville area, where we have Muriel Lake. Muriel Lake is a mere slough compared to the beautiful lake it was some 25 years ago when I was looking at buying a lot on that lake. I think that when we look at the wetlands not only in Alberta but across western Canada, they are virtually dry. I look at statistics that have been compiled on the Peace River. We all think that northern Alberta does have this enormous supply of fresh water, yet the Peace River is flowing at 30 percent less of the volume that it did a hundred years ago.

In our discussions yesterday and the previous day about Kyoto we heard of how the Columbia Icefield was an enormous glacier and is receding rapidly. We also have many other examples of that around the world. So if it's happening at Mount Kilimanjaro, if it's happening at Mount Logan, if it's happening at the Athabasca Glacier, then it is certainly something we have to make the appropriate plans on now, because we are going to have to address a shortage of water in the future.

I think it's also important at this time, Mr. Speaker, that we do look at an overview of public comments as conducted by the department. For most Albertans who provided comments on the discussion paper, their first comment was that there was a negative impact on river ecosystems if we have a huge transfer of water. So as the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie had indicated, there were studies done which indicated that we would not have a great negative impact if this amount of water was transferred. We also have to realize, Mr. Speaker, that ecosystems are extremely sensitive. History has shown, as I mentioned earlier, that when these ecosystems are put under stress, the changes that occur are irreversible and the damage is irreparable.

As well, in the public consultations to the discussion papers there were many that felt that in special circumstances – and I would think that this is one of those cases when we do have a special circumstance – the interbasin transfers were acceptable but only for short periods of time. I think that what we're going to see in Alberta, particularly because of climate change and because climate change is one of those things that does not turn around quickly – they felt that interbasin transfers of water should only be for a short period of time and not a long period, but I think we will see that. I think that we're going to see more and more communities in this province requiring some type of assistance in the way of a pipeline to deliver water.

Certainly, members of this caucus strongly believe that this is a good bill in the fact that it will address the shortage of water in those particular communities. We would like to see that only for urgent needs would we see bills like this come before the Legislature, and I would certainly urge all members of the Assembly to support this bill.

Thank you very much.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Standing Order 29. Any questions for the hon. member? The hon. Member for Medicine Hat.

MR. RENNER: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I just wonder if the member might consider for a moment this whole issue of interbasin transfer in light of the fact that my understanding is that at the end of the day all of the waters that are referred to in this bill eventually feed together and end up in Hudson's Bay. The member spent a good deal of his time during his speech referring to the calamities that can happen in the case of interbasin transfer. Is the member aware that at the end of the day, no matter whether or not this bill is passed, water from these communities will end up mixing at some point in time anyway?

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Yes. I thank the member for that question. I think if he'll go back and check the Blues, he will certainly see that that was exactly the point I made very early in the debate: that these waters will join up farther down. What makes this a good bill is the fact that they will join up farther down. So I thank him for that question.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, did you want to speak on the bill?

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciated the comments from the Member for Lacombe-Stettler thanking us for participating in the debate here. It's clearly an issue of profound importance for her constituency and for many other residents of central Alberta. Indeed, I have family and friends who will be directly affected at both ends of the pipeline that's being proposed here. I agree: I think it's the consensus here that this is a serious problem for those communities and that we really have no choice but to proceed. I appreciate the way the bill is structured. I think that from the people I've spoken to, it doesn't trigger any considerations or worries under NAFTA. It seems to be carefully thought out and well written, so I, like other members of this Assembly, will be supporting this bill.

But I do need to raise my concerns that we are here treating a symptom. We're treating a symptom of a much more profound problem, and that's the problem of Alberta basically drying out. It's a problem that I think we're all aware of as we've gone around this province. My colleague from Edmonton-Glengarry I think put it extremely well; I don't need to repeat those points. But there is a sense that this is a band-aid to a much bigger disease. I do worry about farmers, for example, in the areas of Ponoka, Lacombe, Blackfalds, and the other communities involved who are tapping into those same aquifers that may be drying out. What does the future hold for them? Do they have any opportunity to participate in this water supply? I assume not. Then what happens to the economic viability of those farms and the agricultural basis of that area? I think that's something we need to attend to. Again, we may reach a point in this province where it's simply not practical to be piping water all over the place. Historically we've been able to rely on natural sources. If the natural sources are gone and we can't pipe water everywhere, what's our choice? What are we going to be doing?

One option to this problem – and I assume that the communities involved are looking at this very aggressively – is conservation. As I go through my background documentation, the information I have is that the residents of the communities involved use an average of about 80 gallons of water per person per day. It's a stunning amount of water. I imagine that all of us are equally guilty, and we don't even realize it. Every time we flush the toilet or turn on the dishwasher or have a shower, we're using a tremendous amount of water. It may well be that in areas across this province we're going to have to change our lifestyles, and it may be that the leading communities that can teach all the rest of us how to do that will be the communities of Lacombe, Ponoka, Blackfalds, and the other communities covered under this bill. Let's hope so, because we are all going to be, I think, needing to learn these lessons, and we're all going to need teachers to teach us how to live by using less water.

So it would be great if there was some program, some extension of this legislation, or some extension of other government activities to improve our water conservation efforts. Maybe that will come through building codes. Maybe that will come through other provisions. I'd love to have more information on it if the Member for Lacombe-Stettler or elsewhere has any information on how that conservation will be achieved.

Another issue may be, ultimately, some kind of limit to growth. I mean, maybe it's the fact that central Alberta can't sustain a city the size of, say, Saskatoon or Edmonton or Calgary. At some point we may actually have to start designating limits to how big communities can get. I don't know the answer to that, but I think that's an issue that needs to be on the table. How do we get there? How do we achieve that? Do we do that simply by some kind of regulation or planning, or do we do that just through letting the market sort it out and at some point the cost of water just becomes prohibitive and people stop locating there? I don't know which way is the best way to go, but I think we will be quite possibly encountering limits to growth in this area of Alberta and indeed other parts of Alberta and Canada.

So with those comments – an encouragement to these communities and to all Albertans to look at conserving energy, concern about the rural base in this area and their access to these rapidly declining aquifers, and a general concern that we are here treating a symptom and not the disease – I say to the government: a job well done on drafting a clean, simple, straightforward, effective bill that addresses a concrete kind of problem. I'll be there supporting it.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Standing Order 29. Any questions? The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

MR. LORD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll just ask one brief question. The hon. member opposite is promoting energy conservation, a very worthwhile goal, and water conservation, which is often promoted as a worthwhile goal too. But it seems to me that when someone, whether it be an individual or an entire city, baths in water, they don't destroy it. All that happens to it is that it comes out of the river, gets cleaned. They bath in it. It goes down the drain back into the river dirty. So I'm wondering why the hon. member opposite would promote the idea that we are somehow annihilating or destroying water by using it to bath in or using 80 gallons a day, as he has mentioned, and whether or not he's ever realized that it doesn't actually get destroyed.

DR. TAFT: Mr. Speaker, sticking with my own personal policy, I'll respond to that in committee, which is the time, in my view, for question and answer.

Thank you.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North to close debate.

MRS. JABLONSKI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Ensuring a healthy and sustainable water supply for all Albertans is a top priority of this government. Bill 33 will help us to do that for these central Alberta communities.

One of the concerns raised in the debate was concern for our farmers. We have considered that if we pipe treated drinking water into all residential areas in Blackfalds, Lacombe, and area, there will be more water in the aquifers for the farmers to use. Members in the House have also repeatedly raised the concern that we need a long-term solution for water concerns in Alberta. The Department of Environment is currently leading the development of a provincial water strategy to ensure that we have safe and sustainable drinking water supplies now and in the future.

Mr. Speaker, I ask that all members support Bill 33 so that our friends, neighbours, and family members in the central Alberta towns that we've mentioned here will have safe drinking water.

[Motion carried; Bill 33 read a second time]

Bill 37

Occupational Health and Safety Amendment Act, 2002

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

REV. ABBOTT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise today to move second reading of Bill 37, Occupational Health and Safety Amendment Act, 2002.

The act proposes five major amendments to the Occupational Health and Safety Act. Firstly, Bill 37 increases the maximum fine for a first offence under the act from $150,000 to $500,000. The maximum fine has not been changed since 1988, and stakeholders have told us that $150,000 is not a sufficient deterrent for a large corporation. This change will give the courts the ability to ensure that fines match the severity of an offence. Second and subsequent offences – and we trust there will never be any with these new amendments, Mr. Speaker, but if so – will increase from a maximum of $300,000 to $1 million.

Bill 37 also introduces penalties other than fines or incarceration for OHS offences, such as introducing safety programs or education programs. We believe that compelling a negligent employer to speak to their peers or their community about what they did wrong will act as a deterrent and increase awareness of the importance of workplace safety. It turns a negative into a positive, Mr. Speaker. It brings good out of bad.

Thirdly, Bill 37 streamlines the process for updating workplace health and safety rules by allowing the creation of an occupational health and safety code to govern the codes of practice for work site safety. This will include the requirement that government must consult with stakeholders before changing the code. By creating a code, Mr. Speaker, our technical safety standards for work sites can be updated without having to reopen the legislation or regulations. This will ensure that our safety standards keep pace with our rapidly changing work environment.

Now, number four: Bill 37 will allow for the use of administrative fines similar to those awarded for traffic violations. The introduction of these fines will depend upon the results of our current review of such fines in other jurisdictions to determine their effectiveness. While there is stakeholder support for introducing administrative fines, government will not do so until we are sure of the effect they would have in Alberta. Ontario has similar legislation that allows officers to give, quote, tickets, unquote, for noncompliance of specific safety regulations only at a construction work site. The penalty amount is typically small, between $100 and $200. The administrative fines or tickets are mostly applied to workers who refuse to follow safety procedures; for example, not wearing a hard hat. The system is well received by employers as a means to promote safety compliance among workers at a work site. The Ontario Ministry of Labour issued 90 fines out of 300,000 workers in the construction industry. So this regulation will create a partnership of safety between employers and employees; in other words, shared responsibility, Mr. Speaker.

Finally, the fifth amendment: Bill 37 also allows for the publication of the names of employers with the best and worst safety performance in the province. Now, as in the case of alternative sentencing, we believe that this will work as an effective deterrent for employers with poor safety records. Mr. Speaker, Alberta employers generally have a good record on workplace health and safety, but in my time as the chair of the Council on Workplace Safety I have spoken to a number of Alberta employers who believe that we can do better. Albertans are number one in terms of economy and productivity, and now we want to be number one in safety too.

In the past 20 months I've also spoken to the families of dead workers, Mr. Speaker, and I've heard how their lives have been shattered by these workplace incidents. When a person is killed on the job, it does more than reduce the workforce by one. All of us grieve their lost potential. We can never really know what we have lost because we do not know what these people would have contributed to our society had they lived. Tragedies like these occur on Alberta work sites 118 times a year, and it is time to say that enough is enough.

In May of this year the hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment assembled 150 representatives of industry, labour, and safety associations and asked them to help develop a government and industry plan to reduce workplace injuries in Alberta by 40 percent by the end of 2004. Now, this is an aggressive plan, Mr. Speaker, but we believe these amendments will help to achieve this. Workplace safety 2.0 is intended to be both a journey and a destination. There is no question that we need to make workplace safety part of the way we do business. Only by challenging ourselves can we make a difference. The time has come to change the way we work, the way we teach workplace safety, and the way we regulate workplace safety. Bill 37 sets the wheels in motion and represents an important step forward.

Mr. Speaker, I encourage all of my colleagues to join me in support of Bill 37 and look forward to hearing their comments during the debate. We must make safety our new bottom line.

Thank you.

4:50

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to participate in the debate this afternoon on Bill 37, the Occupational Health and Safety Amendment Act, 2002. At this time I would like to express my gratitude not only to the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar for the work that he has done on this legislation but also for the commitment that has been shown by the Minister of Human Resources and Employment in increasing the safety and with that safety the productivity of Alberta work sites.

I certainly have noticed that there has been a significant change in direction towards workplace health and safety by this government in recent times, and I think it is a tribute to the leadership of the hon. minister and his recognition that we cannot have accidents like we had a couple of summers ago when a person under the age of 16 was unfortunately killed on a luxury condominium construction site in this province, in this city as a matter of fact. The minister over the last number of years while the department has been under his stewardship has certainly made an effort. It is unfortunate that the day this bill was announced there was yet another series of accidents on work sites in this province. Unfortunately, and unnecessarily I believe, three Albertans in the window of 48 hours lost their lives as a result of workplace accidents. That is unfortunate and it is sobering.

I think all hon. members of this Assembly should pay close attention to Bill 37. It is going to affect how Albertans work for the next number of years. I see this bill as an admittance that voluntary compliance did not work. Voluntary compliance was introduced and supported by past ministers in charge of this occupational health and safety legislation, but I believe I can say that this minister does not support this notion that voluntary compliance is the answer to everything.

There are certainly going to be some changes in the occupational health and safety laws that I think are an improvement. Certainly, whenever we look at the statistics and we look at the double-digit increases in WCB premiums, hopefully we won't see that in the future because of this legislation. I think that we can work safely in this province and we can work productively. I think one goes with the other. Certainly, education is needed, and I think this is something, also, that is recognized by this minister, but, Mr. Speaker, whenever we look at Alberta's prosperity and the staggering price that workers have paid for that through injury and loss of life, it is important that we recognize the significance of this legislation. The number of workers covered by the WCB increased by only 4.8 percent in 2000 compared to 1999, but the number of new claims reported to the WCB jumped by over 18 percent in 2000 compared to 1999.

The minister and the hon. member are on the right track with this bill, I believe. The number of lost-time claims reported to the WCB rose by 10 percent in 2000 compared to 1999, and the number of work site trauma fatalities escalated by a shocking 35 percent in 2000 compared to 1999. When you look at the government's fiscal plan released on April 24, 2001, it shows that the WCB's provisional rates were forecast to be $1.25 per hundred of gross payroll, and that is currently the lowest among the provinces. As a result of accident rates we know what happened with the double-digit increases, and these rates cannot be sustained. I don't know how much more business can pay, but it's in the economic interests of businesses to have safe and productive work sites. It makes good economic sense.

Now, in recognition to the minister the Department of Human Resources and Employment has also recently stepped up efforts to prevent injuries and fatalities. I understand that they have hired six more work site inspectors and a new workplace safety call centre. We've discussed this in this Assembly before, and I'm told that there will be more occupational health and safety officers hired in the future. I for one believe that vigilant enforcement of occupational health and safety laws and regulations will work.

Just the other day I learned where we're going to spend $9 million from the WCB to support work site safety through the occupational health and safety department. That is a small price to pay for safe work sites that are productive and also a small price to pay because I think we can reverse this trend of premiums of the WCB unfortunately increasing on an annual basis at a double-digit rate. I think this is a step in the right direction.

Now, with the bill itself, Mr. Speaker, one has to be very cautious with some of the initiatives. This idea that we can simply take proposals to allow for the implementation of administrative fines – and I realize that may work well in Ontario, but I'm not so sure that we need to go this route. There are many people here, including the hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster – I'm sure that on a work site that hon. member was on, if a worker was not working safely as instructed, as per the occupational health and safety law and its regulations, then they would be terminated. You're getting one chance. If you're not working safely, get rid of them and hire someone else. It's that simple, and that sends a strong message to everyone else on the site. I think this is the route that should be taken.

I think we should be cautious about this idea that occupational health and safety inspectors may show up and start ticketing people. We should be very, very cautious about that approach. I think the occupational health and safety officers have enough to do. Certainly, whenever we look at the accident rates in this province and we look at the number of fatality claims accepted, it's way too high. It ranges from 120 victims in 1997, unfortunately, to 118 in 2001. That's over two per week, and consider that occupational health and safety officers have to investigate these accidents and write a report.

If hon. members across the way have any doubt about this legislation and how it may improve the work sites, I would advise them to go to the minister's department, Human Resources and Employment, just up the hill here, and go to their local library. It's almost like you're looking at a coffin. There's a long steel filing cabinet there, and it has the accident reports that have been written by the occupational health and safety officers on each case. You open that, and you can go through there from years back. The steel is cold on that filing cabinet, to say the least. It's an uncomfortable feeling to go through those files. There are photographs of the sites; there are written reports. Sometimes I would like these reports to be in greater detail, but unfortunately they're not. But my point is that the occupational health and safety inspectors have enough work to do without running around with a ticket book.

Then there's also the appeals process, which I have questions about. How do I appeal? For instance, let's say that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands was moonlighting as a construction worker, and someone gave him a ticket for working on scaffolding that was unsafe. The ticket was for $75, and he was to go to another site, Mr. Speaker, and he wanted to appeal that. What sort of process is there for an appeal? I don't know. Perhaps in the debate we will get to that.

But when we look at occupational health and safety, we have to remember those that have lost their lives and we have to reverse this trend of over two Albertans a week dying on the job or in job-related activities. The reversal of this trend is not going to be done through an administrative penalty, in my view. How are we going to do this?

I read with a great deal of interest the hon. minister's speech, I believe, that was presented to the Australian occupational health and safety authorities, I assume this summer. I saw it on the Internet. The minister mentioned many things in that speech, but the thing that caught my eye was that 1 percent of Alberta employers are responsible for 26 percent of the accidents. I want this minister and the officials in that department to name names, and I'm going to get to that a little later, but there are other work sites in this province that are very safe and very productive at the same time, Mr. Speaker. As you may be aware, union construction sites in this province are the safest in Alberta with millions of hours worked on some of the largest construction projects in Canada, and they're done without lost time. The workers are trained, they're safety conscious, and if they don't work safely, they're run off. It's that simple. They don't have a job tomorrow. Now, I can't say that about the rest of the province.

I would encourage all members of this Assembly to have a look at the records that are available, and certainly there are two sets of accident records in the construction industry. It's noteworthy to compare. Now, where would these inspectors, if they're going to do administrative fines, start? Hopefully, they will start in the areas that the minister was describing to the Australians, and those are the 1 percent of outfits that are responsible for 26 percent of the accidents. That's a shocking figure. That's why this is good legislation, and I think we can make it better, Mr. Speaker. We're going to get at this in committee at some time. The minister shall – not may but shall – name names. That would be one amendment that I would like to see.

Another way to make this bill better, I think, Mr. Speaker, would be to also increase the amount of time that occupational health and safety inspectors have to investigate an accident. I know there are plans to hire more, but whenever you look at this accident rate of more than two fatalities a week, occupational health and safety inspectors under this legislation and the work load they have – they must be getting a lot of overtime, because certainly they're going to be working very, very diligently. I would like to see the amount of time that they have to investigate accidents and present their results of their investigations to the Crown prosecutor increased from one year to two years. I think this is a good idea. Certainly, in the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act there is a two-year period from which you can lay charges from the date of the release or whatever. I think the same should apply to the Occupational Health and Safety Act.

This caught my eye whenever I was investigating the Hub Oil explosion, the tragic explosion at Hub Oil that left two individuals dead. I saw all the media reports. Since then, I've had the opportunity to meet some of the family members of the victims, and if there's one thing we can do, it's ensure that this sort of explosion does not happen again. There was a great deal of work done in the one-year time period. Charges were laid under the Occupational Health and Safety Act for the explosion at Hub Oil, and then almost two years to the calendar there were charges laid under the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act. These charges somehow were dropped in the first week of January this year.

AN HON. MEMBER: What?

MR. MacDONALD: Those charges were dropped the first week of January this year, much to my dismay. There have been criminal charges laid in this matter, but the charges in regard to the Occupational Health and Safety Act and the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act were dropped, and I still consider that, Mr. Speaker, to be clouded in mystery. How this occurred – I think it was January 4, before a justice of the peace in Calgary. How that occurred after all the effort that went in by occupational health and safety inspectors and I don't know who else – but I can imagine the amount of time that went into these files. For that to occur, to me, is a justice not done.

I certainly hope this doesn't happen again. I'll be watching for it. But when I see that, I can't help but think that this is a way, again, to improve matters for all Albertans on job sites, and that's to increase the time period from one to two years from which an investigation and, potentially, charges may or may not be laid. I think this is a very good start.

Mr. Speaker, in conclusion, I would like to say that I think the object of this bill, to reduce workplace accidents and put in place penalties that act as a deterrent, is a good start. We are looking at amendments to current legislation, and I'm looking at the consultation process that has gone on in regard to this bill, and it seems to be adequate, to say the least. There seems to be a great deal of interest in this. Many people from across the province, particularly in the construction industry, as I understand, have had input into this legislation. But there are some concerns expressed by the Canadian Federation of Independent Business. These concerns, I think, are valid. When you consider that there are close to 9,000 members in Alberta, one has to take their concerns to heart. Everyone is affected by this, not only the workers and the supervisors but the business owners as well. Again, a safe work site is also a productive work site, and when you think that a safe and productive work site is going to, I believe, reduce the WCB premiums that these individual companies are going to pay, I would encourage those businesses to phone the minister's office directly and ask about the certificate of recognition programs and the partners in injury reduction programs. It astounds me that there's such a low participation rate in those programs. I would encourage the businesses to do that: phone the minister directly.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to have an opportunity to speak to Bill 37, the Occupational Health and Safety Amendment Act, 2002. [interjection] No. If you understand the rules, the person who speaks first to the bill gets 20 minutes without questions.

This is a bill that in principle is a good bill, but it also in principle gives us an opportunity to raise many concerns about how health and safety has been handled in the past in this province. Given that, all of my colleagues in this Assembly wish to speak to it in principle. In reviewing the time and the good work that we've done this week, though, Mr. Speaker, I would now ask to adjourn debate.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you Mr. Speaker. Once again, a very productive week, and that being the case, I move that we now call it 5:30 and adjourn until 1:30 p.m. on Monday, December 2.

[Motion carried; at 5:13 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Monday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Monday, December 2, 2002

1:30 p.m.

Date: 02/12/02

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

THE SPEAKER: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. As Canadians and as Albertans we give thanks for the precious gifts of freedom and peace which we enjoy. As Members of this Legislative Assembly we rededicate ourselves to the valued traditions of parliamentary democracy as a means of serving our province and our country. Amen.

Hon. members, would you please remain standing as we now participate in the singing of our national anthem, and please participate in the language of your choice. We will be led by Mr. Paul Lorieau.

HON. MEMBERS:

O Canada, our home and native land!
True patriot love in all thy sons command.
With glowing hearts we see thee rise,
The True North strong and free!
From far and wide, O Canada,
We stand on guard for thee.
God keep our land glorious and free!
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.
O Canada, we stand on guard for thee.

THE SPEAKER: Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Guests

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne.

MR. VANDERBURG: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly special visitors in the members' gallery, our Grasmere school: teacher Mrs. Sharon Hansen; teacher's aide Mrs. Sandra Hoffman; parents Mrs. Carol Suvanto, Mrs. Cookie Farnsworth, Mrs. Wendy Scott, Mr. Brian Lichty, and Mrs. Lois Burletoff; and bus driver, Mrs. Aidan Thibault. I'd like to ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

MR. DUCHARME: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed a pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to all the members of the Assembly 60 very enthusiastic and bright students from Assumption junior/senior high school in Cold Lake, Alberta's newest city. They are accompanied today by teachers Ms Lynne Lefebvre and Mr. Shawn Belsher, parent helpers Ms Mary-Jo Avery, Mrs. Valerie Brousseau, and Mrs. Joy Smith. They are seated in the public gallery, and I'd ask that they please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've got four different introductions today. Let me start with the first one. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and to all my colleagues in this House two of my constituents. Both of them are here to observe the Assembly in session and develop an understanding of how the democratic processes work and how effectively we as their representatives are servicing the interests of all Albertans. These two guests are Ms Aimee Caster and Ms Patricia Szastkiw. They are both seated in the public gallery. I would now ask them to please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

My second introduction, Mr. Speaker, is of an organization whose representatives are here today. I'm pleased to introduce them here. They are a group of extraordinary women. As I name them, I would ask them to please rise and keep standing: Janice Williamson; her younger daughter Bao Williamson, I think, if she's here; Patti Hartnagel; Linda Winski; Nancy Brine; Barbara Sykes; Carol McDonald; Valerie Ali; Lindsay McWhirter; and Gail Sidonie Smith. They are members of an international network of women who share a common philosophy of opposition to militarism, violence, and racism. The Edmonton Women in Black, formed in the fall of 2001, stand in silent demonstration for a world without violence. I would now ask the Assembly to give these valiant women a warm, warm welcome.

Mr. Speaker, my third introduction is of a prominent Edmonton lawyer, Ms Marie Gordon. Marie Gordon is a partner in the law firm of Cochard Gordon. She's here today to observe the proceedings of the House. She's also seated in the public gallery, and I ask her now to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

My last but not the least introduction, Mr. Speaker. In this I have the honour of introducing to you and to all members of the House today Mr. Scott Winder. He is the co-ordinator of the Council of Alberta University Students, an organization known as CAUS, C-A-U-S. He, along with all the members of CAUS, close to 100,000 students, is trying to convince the government to reduce tuition fees. He is also among those students who are wondering why the government, on the one hand, is letting tuition fees go up while the government is actively engaged in cutting corporate tax in this province. I would ask Mr. Winder now to please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Oral Question Period

Allegations of Interference in Justice System

DR. NICOL: Mr. Speaker, the Attorney General is looking into allegations that the Solicitor General may have intervened in her son's assault case trial. The Premier said that he stands behind his Solicitor General while this investigation continues and that he will not ask for her resignation, but since the Solicitor General's grasp of the justice system has come into question, the legal community agrees that the minister should step down until the issue is resolved. My question to the Premier: what information does the Premier have, information that is evidently not available to the public, that leads him to pre-empt, influence, or ignore the Attorney General's investigation?

Speaker's Ruling

Referral of Matter to Ethics Commissioner

THE SPEAKER: Hon. Premier, just a second, please.

Hon. members, we have to be guided by the Legislative Assembly Act and the Conflicts of Interest Act, and I will provide for great leeway here, but there are a couple of clarifications that must be made.

Under Section 24 of the Conflicts of Interest Act there is a section called Investigations into Breaches: Requests for investigation. Section 24(6) indicates, "Where a matter has been referred to the Ethics Commissioner under subsection (1), (3) or (4), neither the Legislative Assembly nor a committee of the Assembly shall inquire into the matter.” It is my understanding that the matter has been referred to the Ethics Commissioner by a member of the hon. leader’s caucus. Now, if that is so, then we should guide ourselves appropriately by the legislation that we do govern ourselves by. Questions with respect to policy of the government are certainly appropriate, but perhaps someone, including the hon. member who has asked the Ethics Commissioner to investigate such, might want to verify that in fact such a request has been made.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you. I’ve been notified by the Ethics Commissioner’s office that the Ethics Commissioner is away and will not be returning to the office and is unable to look into this until after December 10.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. member, the clause says, “Where a matter has been referred to the Ethics Commissioner under subsection (1), (3) or (4), neither the Legislative Assembly nor a committee of the Assembly shall inquire into the matter.” So I provide this as guidance to all Members of the Legislative Assembly. The matter has been referred. This is the law of the province of Alberta, approved by this Assembly and written by this Assembly, and the Conflicts of Interest Act is very, very clear in what it says.

So, hon. leader, let’s deal with this matter. If it’s dealing with policy, perhaps so, but it appears to me in the reading of this that these questions may be very, very close to being offside.

Now, please proceed.

1:40 Allegations of Interference in Justice System

MR. KLEIN: Did you want me to answer the question?

DR. NICOL: I’ll go to the second question.

Mr. Speaker, the second part of that question deals particularly with policy. In the judicial and policing system it is accepted practice to have a person removed from their position when any investigation concerning their action is undertaken. Is that not the policy of this government, Mr. Premier?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I’ll have the hon. Attorney General and Justice minister respond relative to the policy because I’m not clear as to what the policy is. I do understand that the Justice department is not – not, underlined – conducting an investigation. It is simply gathering information. There’s a big difference.

I’ll have the hon. minister respond.

MR. HANCOCK: Mr. Speaker, I confirm exactly what the Premier has just indicated to the House, that allegations have been made. They came to light on Thursday of last week. On Friday and since we have sought the copy of the transcript that was referred to in those allegations. The department has reviewed the transcript, and we’re seeking further information from New Brunswick officials that might have been involved. This is not an investigation at this time. We’re attempting to find information to determine whether or not this need go any further.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Attorney General then. In the context of this allegation is it not true that when an individual is under any kind of question in the public eye or any kind of review, it is normal practice to have them step down from their position?

MR. HANCOCK: Well, Mr. Speaker, allegations are made fast and furious in the course of politics and public life. One doesn’t step aside every time an allegation is made. This is a serious situation. A serious allegation has been made, and when we have pursued the information and have the information at hand to determine whether or not there’s any basis for an investigation, then I will so advise the members of the House and the public. If we get to that point where there’s a necessity to deal with an investigation, that would be a different circumstance.

Expropriation of Property

DR. NICOL: On Friday the Alberta Court of Appeal ruled that Alberta taxpayers are on the hook for more than $10 million in damages because the government expropriated the land of an Albertan without providing adequate compensation. The written judgment found that the cabinet and Crown officials foresaw that damage would occur from their actions, yet the government proceeded with them. My question is to the Premier. Why, if this government foresaw problems with the expropriation in question, are Albertans still on the hook for millions of dollars in damages?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I have to plead ignorance. I’m not aware of any court decision or any judgment relative to an expropriation case. Perhaps the Minister of Municipal Affairs or the Minister of Infrastructure can shed some light on it. Whatever. Whoever.

MR. LUND: Mr. Speaker, it is accurate that there was a ruling on Friday, and we are currently studying that ruling.

DR. NICOL: Then to the Minister of Infrastructure: since the Department of Infrastructure’s annual report shows 48 outstanding legal claims totaling $232 million with 18 additional claims of unspecified amounts, exactly how much more is government incompetence going to cost Alberta taxpayers?

MR. LUND: Well, Mr. Speaker, I take great exception to the hon. leader’s comment about government incompetence, because quite frankly it often happens that there is a disagreement, particularly when it comes to the purchasing of land. To some folks and to most folks land is a very precious commodity, and it’s something that people aren’t anxious to part with in many cases. So we end up in cases where there is a disagreement, and of course if there’s some kind of litigation, we have to record it as just that, the possibility of a litigation. We resolve most.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the direct involvement of Alberta government officials, how can other landowners be assured that they will be treated fairly by the government? Or will they, too, have to endure a lengthy and costly court battle to get fair value for their land?

MR. LUND: Well, Mr. Speaker, there’s clearly a process for purchasing land. If there is a disagreement and, as a last resort, there’s expropriation, there is a process for that. Also, there is then a process for determining the value of that property. So I don’t know why it wouldn’t be something that would be acceptable to most Albertans. We have a third party that determines those values if, in fact, there’s a disagreement among the staff that is going out to purchase the land, an agent that is trying to purchase the property, and the landowner.

Asbestos Removal at Holy Cross Hospital

DR. TAFT: Mr. Speaker, last year there was a serious mishandling of asbestos removal at the Holy Cross hospital in Calgary, endangering the health of workers. The incident also poses a health threat to the long-term care residents and staff at the Holy Cross who have been living and working in a building that a Calgary health region report describes as loaded with asbestos. To the Minister of Health and Wellness: is the minister aware of this incident? If so, does he believe that construction workers, staff, residents, and their families were adequately informed of the incident?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, I'll be happy to take this question under advisement.

DR. TAFT: All right. Then to the Minister of Human Resources and Employment: given that he is responsible for the Occupational Health and Safety Act, is this minister aware of any investigations by his department into serious and dangerous violations of proper asbestos removal procedures at the Holy Cross hospital?

MR. DUNFORD: Yes, Mr. Speaker, we did have our investigators on the scene. There were some results coming out of that investigation that were forwarded to the owners, and we sought compliance on the handling of that asbestos.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Premier: given that last May the Premier acknowledged having met with the owners of the Holy Cross hospital and that he has also acknowledged that asbestos was a concern, has the Premier been made aware of any incidents concerning asbestos removal at the Holy Cross hospital?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, no, I hadn't been made aware of it. You know, I find it strange, ironic. The Liberal opposition are standing up, or at least they were last session, complaining about the sale of the Holy Cross hospital by the Calgary regional health authority, and I assumed from that that they wanted that hospital to remain open. Now they're saying that the hospital is unsafe and that it's full of bad asbestos. There's that old adage about sucking and blowing, and they seem to be able to do it quite well.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party.

Cataract Surgery

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In response to a question last Thursday the Minister of Health and Wellness justified privatizing surgeries by saying: "It's not just about dollars and cents. It's also about being able to improve access and reduce queues and wait lists." Well, the figures from the minister's own department directly contradict this statement. To the Minister of Health and Wellness: if contracting out reduces waiting lists, why are wait times for contract eye surgery almost three times longer in Calgary, where a hundred percent of the surgeries are done in private clinics, than they are in Edmonton, where most surgeries are done in a public hospital?

MR. MAR: Well, Mr. Speaker, the more appropriate comparison would be to look right at the Capital region itself, where they do these procedures both in the public and in nonhospital surgical facilities. The wait times in both cases are relatively similar: in the public system a 49-day mean wait time; in nonhospital surgical facilities 51 days. So no significant difference there. With respect to the median times within the Capital region: within the public facilities it is 43 days median average; and in the Capital region nonhospital surgical facilities, 47 days.

DR. PANNU: Well, Mr. Speaker, the minister needs to look at his own numbers on his own web site.

My second question to him: how can the minister keep claiming that contracting out surgeries reduces wait lists when the evidence from the minister's own department on its own web site puts a lie to this claim?

MR. MAR: Well, Mr. Speaker, I just shared with the hon. member stats that appear and, I think, would appear to most reasonable people to be comparable ones. This is information from standards and measures, Alberta Health and Wellness, dated October 9, 2002, comparing public facilities in the Capital region with private surgical facilities. Again, in the Capital region not much appreciable difference between the wait times, either median or mean times in both cases.

DR. PANNU: Mr. Speaker, I'm talking about cataract surgeries, in particular, and the minister hasn't commented on that. So the last question to him so that he can clarify, have another chance: how can the minister justify using public dollars to subsidize private, for-profit health facilities when all of the available evidence, including that available from his own department, on cataract surgeries shows that private, for-profit costs more and delivers less?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, he asked the question three times. I've provided him with the answer twice now, and I'm happy to do it a third time. Looking at wait times for cataract surgery performed in 2002 for the reporting period from April through June, I can say that throughout the province it varies dramatically, but the best apples-to-apples comparison is looking at these two numbers. The wait times for doing cataract surgery within the public system and within the private surgical facility system, both within the Capital health region, are roughly the same.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Kyoto Accord

MR. CENAIKO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This morning in today's newspapers there was a front-page article about a survey conducted by the Investment Dealers of Canada that warned the Prime Minister that his plans to ratify the Kyoto accord will harm the Canadian economy by scaring away investors. My question is to the Minister of Energy. What can you tell this Assembly about this report and the possible implications it might have on Alberta's energy industry?

THE SPEAKER: Hon. member and hon. members, we all know that one of the violations of the rule is to refer to newspaper articles, asking for their veracity or authenticity. If that's what the hon. member is doing, then the question is not in order.

Proceed with your second one.

MR. CENAIKO: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question would be to the same minister, the Minister of Energy. With so much uncertainty created as a result Kyoto, what is the province doing to alleviate investor concerns?

MR. SMITH: Well, I think, Mr. Speaker, that the member has got the very essence of the question and why it's important. It's: what are we fighting over?

Mr. Speaker, today I'd like table a brochure that was put together by the Department of Energy, and it shows in this brochure that this province has over 80 percent – 80 percent – of the proven developable oil reserves in North America. That 80 percent is some 179 billion barrels, which has an estimated U.S. value of $4 trillion – 4 trillion U.S. dollars.

Now, Mr. Speaker, these reserves cannot be developed without investment from the United States, without the investment that is greater than what Canada can sustain. So each time the federal government puts a collar around investment, puts a Kyoto chill throughout Canada, not only are they harming mutual funds that are placed in the savings and the retirement plans of all Canadians, which have gone down in value substantially since the Kyoto debate has started – there's no question that ministers Anderson, Dhaliwal, and the Prime Minister are hurting Canadian investments today – but this report also highlights what is happening as the world starts to look at the Kyoto protocol in respect to U.S. investment into Canada, and the story is not healthy.

THE SPEAKER: The page will return the documents back to the Minister of Energy. The appropriate time for tablings comes under the Routine known as Tabling Returns and Reports.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Manhattan Resources Ltd.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the Ardrossan area a company by the name of Manhattan Resources is proposing to drill six sour gas wells in the vicinity of four schools and a few thousand residents. My first questions are to the Minister of Energy. How can the EUB even allow a company to put forward such a proposal in such a densely populated area? Is the minister not concerned about public safety and public health?

Thank you.

MR. SMITH: I'm as much concerned about public health and public safety, Mr. Speaker, as I am concerned about this member politicizing the work of a quasi-judicial board that has operated in the public interests of Albertans for 40 years. They have been out there. The board has been out there. They've held hearings; they've spoken with lawyers, representatives of the individuals out there. They have sat during the hearings till 9 to 10 o'clock in a constructive, meaningful relationship. It's only the meddling and the trouble-starting by this member that continues to create the controversy. This is in front of the board, and I shall not comment upon it until the board has commented on it.

MR. MacDONALD: Again, Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: given that 30 percent – 30 percent – of Manhattan's wells and facilities were deemed noncompliant by EUB inspectors in the past five years, how can a company with such a poor compliance record be allowed to even propose six sour gas wells in such a densely populated area?

MR. SMITH: Mr. Speaker, I shall not comment on this issue until after the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board has ruled on it.

MR. MacDONALD: Again, to the same minister – or no. Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, to the Premier: given that the Premier said earlier that this government had to get its pound of flesh as far as oil and gas royalties are concerned, how can this government allow a company like this to operate in this province when they do not calibrate their gas nor their hydrocarbon meters on a yearly basis, as is dictated by the EUB? Where are the royalties going that we are losing?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, the EUB has an international reputation of being the model of regulatory authority and has done an outstanding job in determining if in fact oil and gas wells should be drilled, to consider all of the things that the hon. member has mentioned: the wells' proximity to residences, schools, and so forth.

If I were to phone or the minister were to phone the chair of the AEUB and say: "Don't allow this application to proceed," the Liberal opposition would be the first on their feet screaming and yelling that the minister is interfering with a quasi-judicial, arm's-length agency of government. Will they promise to never, ever, ever say anything about anyone if they ever phone the AEUB? I doubt it very much, Mr. Speaker.

All I ask of the Liberal opposition is: be consistent. We know that it's improper to give direction, to phone in any way, shape, or form any member of the EUB, Mr. Speaker, and provide direction to that board, because it is a quasi-judicial body. It does an outstanding job, and it renders a fair, independent, unbiased adjudication on all cases.

EPCOR/Aquila Billing Errors

REV. ABBOTT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Now for an intelligent, consistent question to the Minister of Energy. Today is an important day for the people of Drayton Valley-Calmar and thousands of other Albertans because I understand that today is the day that the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board will start receiving complaints from electricity consumers in the EPCOR/Aquila territory, and if the consumers' complaints remain unresolved, they may potentially see a $75 credit on their bill. My question is to the Minister of Energy. Can you tell me which of my constituents are eligible for this AEUB complaint process?

MR. SMITH: Mr. Speaker, I can comment on this issue because the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board has made a decision, and they have implemented their decision. What they have implemented is a complaint process that will include residential, farm, irrigation, and small commercial customers on the regulated rate option with EPCOR in the EPCOR/Aquila service area. Now, customers who reasonably feel that the consumption on their bill issued on or after December 2 is inaccurate can register a complaint with the EUB. EPCOR is required to settle the dispute within 60 days. If the EUB finds that the bill is incorrect or if EPCOR cannot provide an actual meter read to support the disputed bill, the constituent or customer of EPCOR, the regulated rate provider, may be entitled to a credit of $75. The member's constituent must, one, be an EPCOR regulated rate option customer in the Aquila service area; second, have an electricity bill issued on or after December 2, 2002; and thirdly, feel that the consumption on their bill does not accurately reflect the amount of electricity they have used.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

REV. ABBOTT: Well, thank you. My first supplemental is to the Minister of Energy. For some of my constituents that have been having problems on their bills for three or four months, do they also qualify for this process?

MR. SMITH: Mr. Speaker, the EUB will consider billing errors on bills issued on or after December 2, 2002. Now, if a constituent began having problems in October and the problem is still appearing on their bill, that issue will be considered by the EUB under this regulation. Constituents with billing errors that occurred before December 2 and are not appearing on bills issued after December 2 are encouraged to deal directly with their regulated rate option provider or, if they have already done so, to contact the EUB's Edmonton call centre, which routinely handles utility complaints. That number, if I may, is 427-4903. Full details of this program, this important program, are available on the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board web site: www.eub.gov.ab.ca.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

REV. ABBOTT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second supplemental, also to the Minister of Energy: what should my constituents have ready when they call the EUB, and how long are they going to be on hold?

MR. SMITH: Mr. Speaker, the constituent will need a couple of things. One, they must be sure that the electricity bill was issued on or after December 2 and, secondly, that they are served by EPCOR.

Now, I appreciate that there are no rural members over there in that small group of six . . . [interjections] But they act like six.

They should also have the bill, Mr. Speaker, in front of them to answer these questions. Consumers should have a meter reading ready when they call. The fact sheet on our customer choice web site has information for consumers on how to do this. Again, they can call the EUB's call centre toll free at 1-866-215-1181, extended hours Monday to Friday, open on Saturday.

We hope that there is a speedy resolution of this issue, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Shared Public/Catholic High School Facilities

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In Fort McMurray the promise of a shared high school between the public and Catholic school boards ended in acrimony and in lawsuits. In Edmonton, in an effort to fulfill an election promise to provide a high school in Castle Downs, a community is being split with a nonsensical, shared high school proposition. My first question is to the Minister of Finance. Given that the public school board has not requested, cannot justify, nor has future plans for a high school in Castle Downs, how fiscally responsible is it for the government to force them into building a school with the Catholic school board?

MRS. NELSON: Well, Mr. Speaker, I'd ask that the Minister of Learning respond to the question.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Roughly two months ago the Minister of Infrastructure and myself sat down with the four bishops and got their views on the whole idea of joint facilities. They felt that there was a large issue about the Catholicity of the school environment, and it was their belief that they could not properly have the Catholicity that they felt they needed. They said that they could not change on that view. They said that it was something that was very serious to them. Indeed, there have been a lot of groups around the province that have since that time expressed the fear of the loss of their Catholic religion when it comes to putting the two schools together.

I would ask, Mr. Speaker, that the Minister of Infrastructure also be allowed to speak on this as he can tell you the potential savings that are there, the direction that we're moving from the Infrastructure point of view.

THE SPEAKER: We'll move on with the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods. Perhaps there'll be time for additional supplementals.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you. My second question is to the Minister of Infrastructure. Given that the Catholic school board in Edmonton alone meets the requirements for a high school, why are they being threatened into a forced marriage with the public board?

MR. LUND: Mr. Speaker, there are a number of allegations in the hon. member's comments that are just simply not true. The fact is that nobody is forcing anybody to do anything.

The other thing that I want to comment on is the fact that currently the Catholic board has requested a high school in the Castle Downs area. Currently, though, the utilization in that broader area doesn't warrant a high school. However, we do know that it's their number one priority, so it's kept on the list as a priority since it's the Catholic board's number one priority. What we have said is that if the public board deems that they need a high school in that particular area as well – and looking at their utilization, we know that unless they close a high school that's very close there, they wouldn't meet the criteria for one, but they perhaps would if, in fact, the one school is closed – then because of all of the savings that are achieved through a joint school, we may look at it. In fact, if you're serving a larger population of students and giving the students more opportunity at the same dollar as just building a single, then it would rise in its priority because then you're serving more people at the same dollars and giving more opportunity for students.

DR. MASSEY: How does closing a school and building a new one save money?

My question is again to the Minister of Infrastructure. Will the approval of the Catholic high school be contingent on participation with the public school board?

MR. LUND: Mr. Speaker, I don't know if I went through that too quickly or what the problem is. The fact is that I made it very clear that it's the number one priority of the board. It remains as a high priority as far as the government is concerned. But if the public board were to come aboard and want to build a high school in the area, then of course you're serving more students, giving more students an opportunity at the same dollars, and the priority would rise as far as the competition as we look at the whole provincial picture. You've got to remember that we have a lot of requests throughout the province, so we have to prioritize on a provincial basis. I can tell you that if it was a joint facility, serving more students at the same dollars, then of course the priority would come up.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Infrastructure Funding

MR. CAO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the great growth of population in Calgary and that our Alberta government emphasizes the partnerships with municipal government in the development of public infrastructure and given that the transportation infrastructure plays a vital role in the economic development and quality of life of Albertans, a few months ago the hon. Minister of Transportation participated in the ground breaking of the major interchange construction at 18th Street and Glenmore Trail in my constituency. Recently this major project has been completed before schedule and under budget, thanks to the great dedication and professionalism of Albertans involved in the project. My question today is to the hon. Minister of Transportation. What were the past year's total provincial funding amounts and specific projects for transportation infrastructure in Calgary?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. STELMACH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The city of Calgary participates in the city transportation fund grant. We calculate the grant both to the city of Edmonton and the city of Calgary based on 5 cents a litre of fuel consumed in those two jurisdictions. When it comes to Calgary, we also participate and pay full cost of the maintenance and rejuvenation of the Deerfoot Trail through the city of Calgary.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. CAO: Thank you. To the same minister: as the population of Calgary is about one-third of the province, a question from my Calgaryian constituent is that the city should receive one-third of the provincial funding. Could the minister explain the government policy on this topic?

MR. STELMACH: Mr. Speaker, the 5 cents a litre computes to about $85 million for the city of Calgary in terms of a grant plus $25 million that's invested annually on not only the maintenance of the Deerfoot but also the completion of the additional road work, especially interchanges. If you look at the population census of Calgary, it's about 30 percent of the total population of the province; 27 percent is the $85 million of our total budget in the municipal grants going to Calgary, with an additional $25 million. So I think that we more than offset the 30 percent population.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. CAO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister. I heard a lot about the P3, public/private partnership. Could the minister see anything involving this partnership to meet the demand of growth in Calgary and in Alberta in general?

MR. STELMACH: Mr. Speaker, there are certainly possibilities to pursue in terms of the P3, public/private partnership. I had the pleasure of announcing in the House a few days ago one that's successfully completed, and that's a bridge over the Brazeau River which was a 50-50 split between the private sector and the government.

With respect to P3 partnerships we want to make sure that there is an economic benefit to the province of Alberta as a whole, that at the end of the day we can accommodate the P3 partnership, whatever agreement we have with the private sector to do a specific project on an Alberta roadway, within our three-year plan targets, and also that it won't offset other badly needed priorities in the province.

Charitable Gaming Licences

MS BLAKEMAN: Mr. Speaker, one of the ways in which nonprofit groups in Alberta raise money for their activities is to hold casinos or bingos. The Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission, the AGLC, has a policy that sports teams are not eligible for casino or bingo licences. However, exceptions have been made for children, the disabled, and seniors. The only group left which hasn't been exempted is adults. My questions are to the Minister of Gaming. Given that this government has recognized sports as an activity that contributes to the healthy lifestyle of children, seniors, and persons with disabilities, why is the government not using the same logic for adults?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. STEVENS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. At this point in time the charitable gaming model as it relates to licences, whether it be for casinos, bingos, or pool tickets, is based on a combination of the Criminal Code and on common law. That body of law defines what is charitable, and at this point in time the advice that we have received within Gaming is that adult sports groups do not qualify. Having said that, we recognize that this is an area that had not received review for some time, and as such there is a committee chaired by the hon. Member for Calgary-Cross and staffed with personnel from the AGLC reviewing the entire issue of eligibility and use of proceeds with respect to the charitable gaming model.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you. Well, given that the AGLC grants casino and bingo licences for recreational organizations which promote adult activity, why won't they license sports organizations whose role is for the same physical benefit of adult Albertans?

MR. STEVENS: Mr. Speaker, I don't have any quarrel at all with the value that any sports organization provides to their members. I think that it provides a situation where an opportunity is given to increase their activity and thereby increase their health and well-being. That's not the issue.

At this point in time, Mr. Speaker, as I indicated in the first answer, we have a body of law which has received an opinion that gives us the position we're in, which is that that group does not qualify. Part of what we are doing through this committee is revisiting the rules, looking at what they do in other jurisdictions, revisiting the opinion of the lawyers who provide us opinions on these matters, and a report will come out. But one of the issues clearly is the eligibility of adult sports teams to qualify for charitable licences. That is without a doubt an issue.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thanks very much. Well, Mr. Speaker, again to the same minister: what's the big deal? This is not about giving away taxpayers' money or lottery money through grants; it's just about a group's eligibility to get a licence to hold a casino. So why are we picking on the sports groups? What's the big deal?

MR. STEVENS: Mr. Speaker, one more time I'll answer that. It's about the law. The law in Canada is established through the Criminal Code and through common law, and we have an opinion from the Justice ministry indicating that there are restrictions as a result of that. One of the restrictions happens to apply to the eligibility of adult sports groups for charitable licences. That is the law.

Now, having said that, Mr. Speaker, as I indicated in both of my previous answers, that is one of the issues that's being looked at by the hon. Member for Calgary-Cross. It is an issue that will be addressed when that report comes out. It will be an issue that my colleagues will be able to take a look at as we go forward and determine whether there is a possibility of expanding the eligibility for licences to adult sports groups.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

Federal Health Care Funding

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Last Thursday health care commissioner Roy Romanow recommended earmarking $15 billion over three years to improve home care, prescription drug coverage, rural health care, primary health care reform, and to purchase high-end diagnostic equipment. Instead of welcoming this additional money, the health minister said that these were boutique programs and that the province might turn down the federal dollars. To the Minister of Health and Wellness: why is the minister prepared to turn his back on increased federal funding earmarked for prescription drug costs, thereby hurting Albertans living with AIDS who face severe financial hardship in buying their needed medications?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, I've had much criticism of the Romanow report over the last week. I've indicated that those areas of priorities that have been established by Mr. Romanow are nothing new. In fact, a former deputy minister of health from the province of Saskatchewan the other day noted that much of the improvement and innovation in the health care system has really been because of the efforts of the provinces and territories over the last 10 years and that the federal government did have a responsibility to fund those priorities established by the provinces and territories. That's the reason why the Romanow report was not particularly illuminating in terms of disclosing new areas. When Mr. Romanow talks about the importance of primary health care reform, we agree. When he talks about issues of improving access to services and diagnostics, we agree. We've already done that.

What is not correct, Mr. Speaker, is for the federal government, if they so choose, to accept the Romanow recommendation that would make one level of government responsible to another one in terms of its accountability. That would be wrong. We're not afraid of being responsible and accountable, but who we should be accountable to is Canadians and Albertans, the people who pay the taxes, not another layer of government.

So, Mr. Speaker, I feel that it's important for Albertans to know that there are priorities that this provincial government has in health care. Again, the big goal is this: we want an affordable, accessible, high-quality, publicly paid for, publicly administered health care system. But we could not accept that all the priorities across Canada in health care would be the same. I've said from time to time that the priorities that may exist in Petitcodiac, New Brunswick, would differ dramatically from those here in Red Deer, Alberta.

We accept and agree with Mr. Romanow's basic notion that the federal government has to put up more money. We agree with that, Mr. Speaker. Right now the provincial government of this province puts up 86 percent of the spending, the federal government only 14. So we agree that there should be more money. What it should not be, though, is conditional, and it should not require that one level of government be accountable to another.

MR. MASON: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the minister's little speech would satisfy the people living with AIDS.

Why is the minister turning his back on cancer patients who would benefit from Roy Romanow's recommendations for federal funding of palliative care home costs?

MR. MAR: Well, Mr. Speaker, the fact of the matter is that we believe that these areas are important. But again the essential response to the hon. member's question is that we have priorities here in Alberta, and we should not be stuck with a federal government that wishes to put money into its priorities, which it thinks are the same across Canada. They are not.

One of the weaknesses of the Romanow report is that Mr. Romanow is of the view that you can look at the Canadian health care system as a single system. It is not, Mr. Speaker. It is made up of 13 different provinces and territories, each with its own health care system, each with its own priorities. We agree as provinces and territories that we need to better co-ordinate our services across Canada. We agree with that, but what we don't agree to is that we should accept a lower standard rather than a higher standard that we establish here in this province.

Mr. Speaker, I should note that I did take notice of what the hon. member asked about last Thursday with respect to the Romanow report and comparing it to the Mazankowski report. I should say that I want to dissuade him of any assumption that the Mazankowski committee did not look at many, many different sources of information for its advice. If one looks at the appendices, there are hundreds of . . .

THE SPEAKER: Thank you. We've now gone six-plus minutes and only two questions.

Hon. member, quickly. There are other members as well.

MR. MASON: Thank you, indeed, Mr. Speaker. Why is the minister once again showing a lack of concern for rural Albertans by saying that a federal program that would put billions into improving health care in rural and remote communities is a boutique program?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, we have a rural physician action plan in this province that is second to none. I certainly would not want to see us move to a lower standard rather than the high standard that we maintain. We do have outstanding rural health care delivery. We make every effort to maintain the kinds of services that are reasonable expectations of people, whether they live in Hairy Hill or Two Hills or Fort McMurray or Fort Macleod or Pincher Creek or Red Earth Creek. That's true throughout this province.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Firefighters' WCB Cancer Claims

MR. MAGNUS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Firefighters are among the bravest, toughest, most physically fit people of almost any profession. They also get six different types of cancer at a much higher rate than the general population as a result of the toxic smoke that they're exposed to. Currently when a firefighter gets one of these cancers, they must apply to the WCB, prove their case, appeal their case, and fight the system for coverage. My questions are all to the minister of human resources. Can the minister explain why the WCB has not provided presumptive coverage of firefighters up to this point, and will the minister work with the WCB to ensure that cancer claims from firefighters are acknowledged as work related?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

MR. DUNFORD: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would certainly agree with the member in terms of the stature that firefighters have earned within our society. I mean, the service that they provide to our communities is just tremendous.

Regarding the issue that is of concern here with the question, the WCB, as I understand the administration of the program, has recognized that firefighters are susceptible to – I think he mentioned six cancers in his preamble, and I understand that that would be consistent with the way the WCB looks at the matter. I'm informed, however, that they prefer to view the situation on an evidentiary basis and then make their judgments on individual claims.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MAGNUS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that 23 states and, I believe, one province have now moved to this presumptive legislation, can the minister advise under our current system in Alberta how many of these claims have actually been accepted by the WCB other than the one last week?

MR. DUNFORD: I think it's an excellent question. I met with firefighter representatives on this particular matter, and this was one of the issues that they came to the table with. Of course, their issue is that if the WCB says that, yes, they look and recognize the certain cancers and, yes, they look at a particular case and deal with it on an evidentiary basis, well, why haven't there been more claims, then, that have been adjudicated? I think that's an excellent question. My commitment to the firefighters that I met with was to ask that question of the WCB and continue to investigate.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MAGNUS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The final question also to the Minister of Human Resources and Employment: will the minister support legislation that is presumptive in nature; in other words, a legislative move to make WCB coverage automatic when firefighters get one of what they call the six firefighter cancers?

MR. DUNFORD: Well, it's a direct question, and I'm hesitant to get into a yes or no situation on it. We do need to have more information on presumptive clauses in other legislation.

One of the things, Mr. Speaker, that I'm concerned about is that within the Manitoba legislation, again, as I've been briefed on it, there's actually a space of time in which a firefighter must have worked in order to even qualify, then, for the investigation; for an example, I believe it's 20 years for kidney cancer. I'm not sure that that's a kind of system that I want to get into. I mean, what is the difference between 19 and a half years, a firefighter having kidney cancer, and 20 years plus one day? I think there's more examination of this issue that has to go on, and I'm of course prepared to take on that further examination.

Century Farm and Ranch Award

MR. VANDERBURG: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to share with you one of the highlights of my summer. Our province is not yet a hundred years old, but we already have farm and ranch families that have continuously farmed the same 160 acres for at least a century. William and Mary Turnbull journeyed from England to Canada in 1902 and established a homestead in the Onoway area.

Three generations later Brian Turnbull and his family continue to represent the deep spirit of Alberta pioneers who worked long and hard to establish homes for themselves and their families. At the same time, these people initiated schools, churches, and communities that were followed by industries and cities.

On August 4, 2002, I had the privilege of attending the Turnbull centennial homestead celebration near Onoway. It was humbling to think of the sweat, tears, and pride that had gone into the very ground I was standing on. As the MLA for the Turnbull family it was an honour to represent the Hon. Shirley McClellan, Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development, to present the Alberta century farm award to the Turnbull family on behalf of the province of Alberta. As MLA for Whitecourt-St. Anne I sincerely hope that all my colleagues have the opportunity and experience to present this award to people in their constituency.

Edmonton Outlaws Lacrosse Team

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to congratulate the Edmonton Outlaws amateur lacrosse team, who, on August 25, 2002, won the gold medal and brought home to Edmonton the President's Cup in the Senior B national lacrosse championship. For the first time in 27 years and only the second time in 100 years Edmonton has been successful in reaching this goal.

The Outlaws won the provincial playoffs against the Calgary Mountaineers in July. In the President's Cup they lost only one game in the round-robin playoffs to the team that they met in the gold medal round, where the final score was 12 to 4 in the Outlaws' favour.

This local team is made up of volunteer players, several of whom came from the Gold Bar Miners. Hard work, hours of practice, years of friendship, team spirit, and the love of the game helped the Edmonton Outlaws become the champions that they are today. Edmonton can now proudly add the Edmonton Outlaws lacrosse team to its legacy as the City of Champions. Congratulations on behalf of all members to the Outlaws.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood.

Duncan Leung

MR. MASYK: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I would like to take this opportunity to recognize a fine young gentleman. His name is Duncan Leung. This summer he was the STEP student at the constituency office. He did an exceptional job. He went out into the community. He went door-to-door putting pamphlets in mailboxes. Coming back in, he wanted to know more about the political process and about the different parties, so I explained to him how they all worked, what their fundamental values were, and he ran to buy a PC membership.

Mr. Speaker, also, he's in his second year as a media student at U of A, and I would really highly recommend him in anybody's employment.

Thank you very much.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Edmonton Friends of the North

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to recognize the Edmonton Friends of the North Environmental Society for their dedication and commitment in raising issues of importance to all Albertans. Today I will present a petition with the first 1,500 signatures urging the government of Alberta to “introduce legislation declaring a moratorium on any future expansion of Confined Feeding Operations.” They ask for this moratorium due to adverse health effects on CFO workers and nearby residents; environmental degradation including water, soil, and air contamination – water both ground and surface; substantial overuse of antibiotics; negative impacts on rural communities and family farms; inhumane conditions for animals during production and transportation.

We support their concerns, Mr. Speaker. Those concerns also carry over into related types of industries that are supplying the CFOs with services, like trucking operations. We would like to add our concern about water and water use in this province.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Brown Bagging for Calgary Street Kids Society

MR. LORD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I’m pleased to rise today to recognize the big accomplishments of a little charity organization in Calgary known as Brown Baggin’ It. It started in 1990 by the World Job and Food Bank. People such as Joe Edison, Frances Ramberg, Joyce Shaw, Martha Canales, and many other dedicated volunteers including myself struggled to keep it going through those first of many difficult years. Frances remains today as the longest serving volunteer.

The concept was to offer a free brown-bag lunch to hungry street kids as an enticement to get them to come into counseling agencies such as Exit and the Calgary Urban Project Society. By drawing the kids in instead of wasting time looking for them, this program has been of immeasurable help to counselors in being able to focus on helping to get these kids off the streets.

This year the Brown Baggin’ It program is marking the delivery of over one million brown bag lunches to hungry street kids in downtown Calgary since 1990. Congratulations to program director Ed Weibe, fund-raiser and administrator Kimberly Wolroth, and the dozens of unsung hero volunteers such as Agnes Horne who have been so tirelessly preparing these meals each morning since 1990. Keep up the good work, everyone.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

Bertha Kennedy

MRS. O’NEILL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today it’s my honour to recognize a long-term resident of St. Albert, Mrs. Bertha Kennedy. Bertha, who is in her 90s and visually impaired, lives independently in her own home in the old mission area of our community. As a former teacher who has guided many young children in the classroom over the years, Mrs. Kennedy is a delightful musician who still plays the organ weekdays at the small mission chapel. She is also an astute political observer.

Today I wish to recognize the numerous contributions Bertha Kennedy has made to the quality of education and community values in St. Albert.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Wetaskiwin Masonic Lodge No. 15

MR. JOHNSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to recognize and congratulate an organization that has been in the Wetaskiwin area longer than Alberta has been a province. This year marks the 100th anniversary of the Wetaskiwin Masonic Lodge No. 15. The Masons of Wetaskiwin have done marvelous work helping to build our city. They have contributed to many charities and have also helped to fund different organizations and groups around the community.

One of the many community focus programs that the Wetaskiwin Masons contribute to is the Alberta-wide higher education bursary fund. The students that benefit from the scholarship are those who face financial barriers to postsecondary schooling. Each individual Mason contributes to the fund, and last year alone over $125,000 in scholarships were distributed to 100 students around Alberta. The Wetaskiwin Masons have had a very successful 100 years, and they have played a significant part in the building of this province.

I ask that all members of the Legislature join me in congratulating the Wetaskiwin Masons on a very productive 100 years. Thank you.

head: Presenting Petitions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you Mr. Speaker. I would like to present a petition today calling for a provincewide moratorium on confined feeding operations. It is signed by about 1,500 people from throughout the province.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table a petition from a number of constituents expressing concerns over abortion as an insurable medical service.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table yet another petition signed by many Albertans requesting this Legislative Assembly to urge the government to “not delist services, raise health care premiums, introduce user fees or further privatize health care.”

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I’m rising to present still another petition signed by 76 Edmontonians, mostly seniors, petitioning the Legislative Assembly to urge the government to “not delist services, raise health care premiums, introduce user fees or further privatize health care.”

I have a second petition, Mr. Speaker, signed by 210 Albertans petitioning the Legislative Assembly to urge the government of Alberta to provide health care coverage for medical supplies for diabetic children under the Alberta Health Care Plan and provide financial assistance to parents to enable them to meet their children’s necessary dietary requirements and cover costs incurred in traveling to Diabetes Education and Treatment Centres outside their own communities in Alberta.

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Government Services.

MR. COUTTS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to present to the Legislature the seventh annual report on the operations of the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act for the year 2001-2002.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Community Development.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have one tabling today, so I rise to table it and the appropriate number of copies of it, which constitutes the response to Written Question 8 as amended.

MR. SMITH: Mr. Speaker, in the excitement of me trying to get such good news about Alberta out as quickly as possible, I talked about tabling the 2001 North American Oil Reserves report and brochure, as subsequently done by Alberta Energy and by the Energy and Utilities Board. I would like to now table this document showing that Alberta has some 177 billion barrels of crude oil available for development and that it's put in great jeopardy with the nonsense that the federal government is undertaking at this time with respect to the Kyoto protocol.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

MR. DANYLUK: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I wish to table five copies of a petition with over 1,800 signatures from Elk Point and area residents regarding their concerns with cuts in health services in the Elk Point hospital and other Lakeland regional authority facilities.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I have four sets of tablings. The first is with regard to cutbacks taking place within the department for persons with developmental disabilities, letters from Mrs. Lois Zadler, Shauna-Lee Williamson, and Tatjana Schenk.

The second set of tablings is from people with concerns about cervid harvests. Some of them are supporting cervid harvests. They would be Dale Braun, Todd Loewen, and Len Jubinville on behalf of the farmers organizing on diversification. Against, from Roxanne Hastings.

My third tabling is from the Canadian Federation of University Women Edmonton chapter, with concerns about the McLennan Lake wetland decision.

My fourth tabling, Mr. Speaker, is all people who have concerns about education funding in this province, and they are Lori Goble, Kathy Galvin, Henry D. Johns, Charlotte Wentland, Chris Werstiuk, Berkley Beingessner, N. Blais, Bruce McKinnon, and Bill and Colleen Musselman.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have four tablings this afternoon, three of which are on behalf of the constituents of Edmonton-Gold Bar. The first tabling is a letter directed to the constituency office of Edmonton-Gold Bar complaining about the cuts in the grant intended for Dramawork Alberta, and that is signed by Freda Rankin.

The second tabling is from another constituent of Edmonton-Gold Bar, Azhar Hussain. This gentleman is writing to the constituency office, and he is describing his concern about the government's promise to protect the critically important wilderness area of the Bighorn wildland recreational area.

The third tabling is a letter to the constituency office, again, from Mr. Bob Smith of Edmonton-Gold Bar, and he is expressing his feelings about the current forest management review of the Bow-Crow forest reserve.

The last tabling this afternoon, Mr. Speaker, is an editorial from yesterday's New York Times, dated Sunday, December 1, 2002, and it is entitled Shrinking Glaciers. It is an encouragement by the New York Times to the President of the United States to reconsider the government's proposals on global warming, and I would urge the Premier to read it before he goes to New York City on Friday.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings today, all concerning cuts to the Persons with Developmental Disabilities program. The first is from Kerry Kleinbergen, who wants to express concerns over drastic funding cuts to individualized funding under PDD.

The second is from Eleanor Jerram, who herself receives services and feels that these cuts will seriously impact her life.

The third is from Leanne Weidman, writing to "strongly protest the way that PDD plans on balancing their budget."

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and table an important document. It's entitled Cataract Surgery: Volumes, Wait Lists, and Wait Times 2002-2003, Quarter 1, April 1 to June 30, 2002. This is drawn from standards and measures, Alberta Health and Wellness, October 9, 2002. The document shows that waiting times for contract surgery performed in private facilities in Calgary is three times longer than in public hospitals in Edmonton. It's a recommended reading for every member of this House.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling a letter from Ms Maureen Harper of Hinton dated November 22, 2002, addressed to the Premier. She's urging the Premier not to be shortsighted and to show "statesmanship, maturity, wisdom and courage" by supporting the Kyoto accord.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

MR. CENAIKO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to table the appropriate number of copies of letters supporting Bill 212, the Traffic Safety (Seizure of Vehicles in Prostitution Related Offences) Amendment Act, 2002, from each of the following: 22 letters from the Community Action Project; 20 letters from the staff in Parkdale school; 19 letters from the Prostitution Awareness and Action Foundation of Edmonton; the principal of Norwood school; the Metis Child and Family Services Society; Action for Healthy Communities; the Alberta Avenue Community League; the Knights of Columbus St. Nicholas Council No. 8314; the Jasper East Village Steering Committee; the Parkdale-Cromdale Community League; the Victoria Crossing board of directors; as well as members from the public. All of these dedicated, hardworking, and passionate Albertans agree that Bill 212 would help restore communities ruined by the effects of street prostitution.

Thank you.

Bill 207

Alberta Wheat and Barley Test Market Act

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

MR. HLADY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a great privilege for me to rise today and begin debate on Bill 207 in third reading. It was also very humbling to be in Lethbridge a few weeks ago and see the passion and conviction of our Alberta farmers and their families as they went to jail fighting for what they believed in.

Mr. Speaker, this past fall, in response to increased American efforts to force change in the Canadian wheat and barley market, the chairman of the Canadian Wheat Board, Mr. Ken Ritter, said quite emphatically that only Canadian farmers will dictate how their grain is marketed. I can only assume that Mr. Ritter was also referring to the 15 Alberta farmers who had the gall to take their own grain across the border into Montana in 1996 to sell to a local Montana 4-H club. One of those farmers is, in fact, a director of the Canadian Wheat Board. What did these producers get for their efforts to dictate how their grain was to be marketed? Each producer received a fine in the thousands of dollars and, for some, countless court appearances to explain their actions. What happened to those producers who refused to pay the fines, who were driven to action by a set of principles that all Albertans would be able to identify with? Last month each farmer received jail time for daring to defy the Canadian Wheat Board.

Mr. Speaker, while our farmers were put in jail, farmers in eastern Canada were able to drive across the border to sell their grain as they wished. It is also believed but can't be proven, because you can't get any information out of the Canadian Wheat Board, that eastern farmers sell their grain across the border for their best price and then turn around and buy western grain at bargain prices to feed their own livestock, another example of the west subsidizing the east.

Clearly, our producers are, in the words of one of those jailed farmers, guilty of taking our own property and selling it to the highest bidder, just like absolutely everyone else in the free world is able to.

Sorry, Mr. Speaker. Did I forget to say that I'd like to move third reading of Bill 207? No?

THE SPEAKER: You're still on your feet, hon. member.

MR. HLADY: Thank you.

Mr. Speaker, it is time for this Legislature to send a signal to Ottawa that this is not only unacceptable in this province but is also abhorrent to the very core principles that we as Albertans hold dear. This is not just a rural issue. This is an Alberta issue, one that every citizen of this great province, regardless of locality, should be deeply concerned about. This is one issue attacking freedom of choice, just like Kyoto, choosing an elected Senate, gun control, trying to control health care funding as it is a provincial responsibility. This is the same.

Mr. Speaker, there are many examples of the implicit unfairness of the system that Bill 207 and most Albertans are trying to change. It seems to me that there is a problem when we have a system that stifles and chokes out innovation and productivity rather than encouraging it. It seems to me that there is a problem when the federal government's own agriculture standing committee recommends a free market for the sale of wheat and barley on a trial basis and all the Canadian Wheat Board can do for a response is to say how they know better than everyone else. It seems to me that there is a problem when the very same people that this board is trying to serve are being imprisoned for exercising the fundamental rights inherent in the ownership of property. If this current federal Liberal government won't respect our farmers, I look forward to a change of that government so I can request an absolute discharge or a full pardon of these charges for our farmers.

Many hon. members have carefully laid out the multitude of reasons to proceed with Bill 207, Mr. Speaker, oftentimes speaking with passion about their own personal experiences, and I sincerely thank all of them for speaking to this. I hope that all members have come to the same conclusion: that it is time for us to act. It is time for this province to stand with producers and provide them with the freedom of choice that they are entitled to. Quite simply, in the words of one of our national papers: it is time for this province to help set western farmers free.

While Bill 207 will not create an open market immediately, it does represent another step in the fight to restore the inherent rights of Alberta producers to have control over their own product. I would hope that all members of this Assembly would support this process and vote for Bill 207.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

2:50

MR. MacDONALD: Yes. At this time, Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the hon. member, please.

THE SPEAKER: Standing Order 29(2) does not apply at third reading of private members' bills. Does the hon. member want to participate in the debate?

MR. MacDONALD: No. Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

MR. MARZ: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure for me to rise today and add some final comments in third reading on Bill 207, the Alberta Wheat and Barley Test Market Act. This bill calls for a 10-year test market giving Alberta producers the ability to engage in unrestricted trade of their product. Currently, of course, the product categories and sale of wheat and barley are managed and restricted by a monopolistic entity, the Canadian Wheat Board.

The Canadian Wheat Board came into existence in 1919, born out of World War I conditions. Mr. Speaker, it goes without saying that the agricultural economy of today is vastly different than it was back in 1919. The economy of today demands increased openness, competitiveness, and innovation, none of which the Canadian Wheat Board facilitates. Today I'll go beyond suggesting that the Wheat Board is irrelevant, and I'll go beyond showing how the Wheat Board does more harm than good for Alberta farmers. We've heard these discussed by other hon. members. Instead, I'd like to talk about how the case against the Canadian Wheat Board monopoly has been made time and time again by our own federal government. For decades Canada has hailed the virtues of free trade and stood in opposition to its obstruction. I'll argue that in doing so, the federal government proves its own case against the Canadian Wheat Board's continued existence.

Looking at the big picture, it seems ridiculous to defend the Canadian Wheat Board, yet the federal government persists despite mountains of evidence showing that the free marketing of tradable products is more efficient, increases quality, and ultimately benefits consumers. Internationally Canada has long been an advocate of eliminating barriers to trade. Indeed, we've entered into many unilateral agreements protecting and encouraging free trade. The General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, the establishment of the World Trade Organization, and the North American free trade agreement are only a few of the significant international trade agreements aimed at fostering an atmosphere for fair and free trade.

Without fail, Canada's aim was, as prescribed in the 1947 text of GATT, the substantial reduction of barriers to trade and the elimination of discriminatory treatment in international commerce. Given Canada's support of free trade, I argue that it's hypocritical and wrong to defend and continue the Canadian Wheat Board's clearly restrictive and monopolistic practices.

Let me take a moment to describe specifically what our federal government stands for. On January 1, 1995, Canada became a founding member of the WTO, or World Trade Organization. This new organization effectively replaced the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, or GATT, and was born out of the 1986 to 1994 Uruguay round of negotiations. Along with the commitment to reduce tariffs, the round's agreements included greatly expanding export opportunities for agricultural products by limiting restrictions to trade such as quotas, subsidies, and other obstructive domestic policies and regulations. The Uruguay round called for consistent standards across all member countries. Specifically, the round produced agriculture agreements with the objective of reforming trade by making policies more market oriented. This, it was agreed, would improve predictability and security for importing and exporting countries alike.

It's important to stress, Mr. Speaker, that the round also brought about new rules and commitments applying to market access and domestic support, including eliminating programs that raise or guarantee farm gate prices and farmers' incomes. Of course, to the 144 member countries of the WTO the Canadian Wheat Board claims that it does none of these. Western farmers, however, get a very different story. The Canadian Wheat Board assures farmers: "Farmers get an initial or partial payment upon delivery of their grain and the Canadian government guarantees this payment." Of course, that's only a partial payment. Farmers have to wait over a year to find out what the final price is going to be, and whether that's the best price or not is totally up for speculation.

Mr. Speaker, Canada's commitment to the WTO's founding principles has been questioned numerous times. Foreign producers understand that the Canadian Wheat Board operates contrary to fundamental free trade principles. Why, then, doesn't our own federal government understand? The Canadian Wheat Board has been challenged and examined for years by government bodies, independent auditors, and international panels. Of course, as monopolies do, the secrets of the Wheat Board's operation are kept under lock and key. This makes proving these charges or any charges very difficult. The federal government's response to these international complaints, which I'll discuss a little later, is proof that the Canadian Wheat Board is unnecessary, irrelevant, and nothing but harmful to Alberta farmers.

I'd like to offer a second case. On October 23, 2000, the office of the United States Trade Representative initiated a 16-month investigation of the marketing practices of the Canadian Wheat Board. It was concluded that the Canadian Wheat Board subsidizes and isolates its domestic markets. The report concluded, and I quote: the Canadian Wheat Board undermines the integrity of a competitive trading system. Alberta farmers are upset with these same abuses. Frankly, it shocks and disturbs me to know that our farmers' interests are being better supported by a foreign agency than by our own federal government.

Further, the United States Department of Commerce announced on October 24 that it will proceed with an investigation in response to antidumping and countervailing duty petitions filed by the North Dakota Wheat Commission on September 13 of this year. According to Canadian Wheat Board estimates this latest U.S. trade challenge will cost western Canadian farmers an additional $8 million to $10 million just to defend it. While the farming community is dealing with the huge financial strain of drought conditions, I argue that spending millions of dollars defending an indefensible institution is reckless behaviour.

Since 1990 there have been at least nine different high-level investigations into the Wheat Board's unfair business practices. In addition, there have been countless formal complaints. So, Mr. Speaker, the federal government is facing continued and ongoing pressure from the international community claiming that the Wheat Board engages in unfair trading practices. The federal government is also facing pressure from its own western farmers claiming that the Wheat Board hurts their product and their competitiveness.

In responding to international charges, the federal government continues to argue that the Canadian Wheat Board does not give unfair advantages to Canadian farmers. The Wheat Board, they claim, simply does not influence the price or quality of Canadian wheat and barley. So, Mr. Speaker, my question is a simple one. If the Wheat Board does not give unfair advantage to Canadian farmers, then why aren't Canadian farmers allowed to choose whether they participate in the Wheat Board or not? It seems obvious that the Wheat Board infringes on our farmers' freedom of market exploration. Our farmers' hands are tied, and for what gain? According to the federal government the Wheat Board does not manipulate price or quality of wheat and barley sales. The market's hand, we are told, is free to decide both. However, the Wheat Board claims on their web site:

Instead of competing against one another for sales, Western Canada's 85,000 wheat and barley farmers sell as one through the [Wheat Board] and can therefore command a higher return for their grain.

So if the Wheat Board does not affect prices, restrict or dump the product in the U.S., this is absolutely impossible. It's clear that the Wheat Board is speaking out of both sides of its mouth.

Mr. Speaker, our farmers are not asking for unreasonable changes to be made. Simply, our farmers want the ability to sell into whichever markets they choose and to establish their own prices and product specifications. In fact, Alberta farmers are only asking for fair provincial treatment. You see, Ontario and Quebec are not bound by the Canadian Wheat Board constraints. This is another example of favoritism amongst provinces.

Bill 207 aims to eliminate any special treatment. Bill 207 would establish a 10-year test market to study the effects of individually marketed wheat alongside the existing Canadian Wheat Board. I'd like to urge all the members to stand up for the Alberta farmers and to stand up for fair treatment along with the provinces and to stand up for the free trade market principles Canadians have championed again and again and for the success Alberta's farmers have shown in marketing their non Wheat Board grains, such as feed grains, peas, and canola, and they've been very successful at that.

So, again, I'd urge everyone in this House to support this bill, and thank you for the opportunity to speak on it.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

MR. HORNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to rise and speak today on Bill 207, the Alberta Wheat and Barley Test Market Act. I would like to begin this afternoon by thanking the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View for bringing forward this bill and for his continued efforts to see change brought to the Alberta wheat and barley industry.

The era of globalization is now in full swing and will only increase in the years to come. As a member of NAFTA, the WTO, and the upcoming FTAA Canada has become a leader in pushing for trade liberalization. However, Alberta's wheat and barley producers have been held back in this global phenomenon. The federal government's maintenance of the Canadian Wheat Board as the only marketing agency for western producers has severely restricted the great entrepreneurial spirit of Alberta's wheat and barley producers. Bill 207 would give the wheat and barley farmers of this province professional choice. It's my belief that farmers should have the right to choose what they can bring to market and determine their own price. Currently, these choices are not available to them under the Canadian Wheat Board, options which I believe are essential for a fully functioning, competitive, and efficient marketplace.

Bill 207 would allow a free and flexible test market to be established in Alberta. The results of this would be closely monitored and certain stipulations maintained for a period of 10 years. Carefully monitored developments under a free system would allow enough time for prosperous growth to occur, and a realistic picture of what Alberta can do in a free market system could be determined. Bill 207 would allow Alberta's farmers to keep pace with global buyers' demands for specialty crops which exist for organic grains, hull-less barley, waxy barley, and specialty wheats. Various contract arrangements are emerging that require direct dealing between grower and end-user.

It cannot be overstated that wheat and barley are the only two crops made to follow such repressive marketing rules. Crops which leave the farmers free to choose marketing practices have steadily increased in production and processing while growth for wheat and barley controlled by the CWB has been stagnant. The domestic processing of oats has increased 12-fold since it was removed from the Canadian Wheat Board in 1989. During the same period domestic crush of canola has increased 125 percent and, as a percentage of annual production, from 25 percent in 1989 to 35 percent last year. Canola oil and meal shipments have doubled over the five-year period from '93-94 to '97-98.

Bill 207 would also have the result of increasing the processing capacity in the province. By eliminating the middleman, processors would see the incentives of setting up local industries where they would be closer to their producers. It's sad to see that even though western Canada produces 95 percent of Canada's wheat, it only has 31 percent of the flour milling capacity. Eastern Canada does the vast majority of wheat processing. We can also directly compare Alberta and Ontario manufacturing shipments for grain and oilseed milling. In 1999 alone Canada had total grain and oilseed milling manufacturing shipments of over $5 billion. Of that, Alberta constituted approximately $863 million. Ontario, on the other hand, represented nearly $3 billion of those shipments.

Compared to our American competitors, the processing numbers are equally depressing. There are two to three times more wheat milled in the northern tier U.S. states compared to the Canadian prairies. The volume of durum processed in the U.S. northern tier is also higher than here on the prairies. Canada's share of world flour production has decreased by 9 percent over the last 10 years. Over the same period the quantity of U.S. wheat milled has increased approximately 30 percent. One has to wonder why the United States processed more than twice as much malt barley as Canada, yet they have only about half the barley production relative to Canada.

It is clear that Alberta is losing out due to the restrictive regulations of the Canadian Wheat Board. When, Mr. Speaker, will we unshackle the repressive federal chains which hold back the entrepreneurial and innovative spirit of our agriculture industry? The Canadian Wheat Board only includes wheat and barley producers from Manitoba, Saskatchewan, and Alberta. Why are farmers from Ontario and the rest of eastern Canada free from the board's control? The answer the federal government would give is that western Canada is the breadbasket of the country, and the Canadian Wheat Board was created to maintain stable prices in times of crisis.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

The reality is that the times of crisis, the Great Depression and World War II, in which the Canadian Wheat Board was created are half a century behind us. It seems that the main function of the Canadian Wheat Board today is to remind westerners that the federal government is in control of their livelihoods. The Canadian Wheat Board is one main factor creating sentiments of western alienation among rural Albertans. When one farmer cannot sell his crop to his neighbour without going through a federal agency, you know that something is seriously wrong with the system. Currently, the only thing the Canadian Wheat Board seems to be providing Alberta farmers is additional costs. In fact, the Canadian Wheat Board's general and administration expenses have increased by 45 percent over the last five years and have doubled over the last 10, while export numbers have fallen.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta wheat and barley farmers need a more efficient mechanism to market, transport, and manage their product. The time has come for alternative methods of getting grain to domestic and international markets. Clearly, the Canadian Wheat Board can no longer provide Alberta farmers with a cost-efficient and competitive solution to achieve this goal.

In recent years western farmers have begun to voice their concerns about the Canadian Wheat Board. Bill 207 reflects the desires of Alberta's farmers. In a poll conducted in 2000 and released by the Alberta Barley Commission, almost 11,000 prairie farmers were surveyed and 75 percent indicated that they wanted the ability to sell their grain to any buyer, including the Canadian Wheat Board, in domestic and export markets. In Alberta, Mr. Speaker, 81 percent wanted that choice.

Alberta's farmers are also seeking change by working within the Canadian Wheat Board system. Jim Chatney, a well-known advocate of a free market economy for farmers, serves as Alberta's voice on the board of directors of the Canadian Wheat Board. He has been elected twice in district 2, which stretches from south of Edmonton to the U.S. border. In the last election he got 69.5 percent of the vote, which is the highest margin of victory any elected board member has received. It is clear that Alberta's farmers want a choice in how they market their products.

If Alberta's farmers are going to see their desire for freedom of choice, people like Jim are going to need our help. The antimonopoly sentiment is so strong in Alberta that Alberta's farmers are willing to go to jail for the cause. On October 31 of this year, as was mentioned, 13 Alberta farmers were jailed for selling their grain independently. My heart goes out to each of these farmers and their families, and my support is fully behind them for their fight to change the system.

Mr. Speaker, the time has come to allow Alberta wheat and barley producers to enter the global era of free trade. Bill 207 does not call to abolish the Canadian Wheat Board but simply allows alternatives to operate next to it. Value-added industries will naturally increase in Alberta because of competition introduced into the marketing process. Bill 207 will reward the entrepreneurial and innovative qualities of Alberta's wheat and barley farmers, and it's time we provide Alberta farmers with the freedom necessary to effectively deliver their products to the world markets so that their industries can prosper.

I strongly support Bill 207, and I urge all of my colleagues, especially my rural colleagues on both sides of this House, to support this important piece of legislation as well. Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

MR. DANYLUK: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am very pleased to have the opportunity to join my colleagues in support of Bill 207, the Alberta Wheat and Barley Test Market Act. I'd also like to stress that this is not a southern Alberta issue. This is an Alberta issue in its completeness because it affects northern Alberta as it does southern Alberta.

I believe that the bill is extremely important for our province and our wheat and barley farmers, who have waited a long time to see some changes in the way that their products are being marketed. The issue at hand, Mr. Speaker, is the Canadian Wheat Board, which for decades has enjoyed the status of being the only body allowed to market wheat and barley grown in western Canada. Over the past decade the issue of whether the Canadian Wheat Board has outlived its purpose has been debated over and over. It is a topic which deeply concerns all Albertans – and I stress again: all Albertans – and especially the farmers who live with the current marketing arrangements outlined in the federal Canadian Wheat Board Act.

As mentioned previously by my colleagues, the events that took place in late October of this year, when the 13 Alberta farmers were incarcerated for choosing to bypass the Canadian Wheat Board and marketing their products on their own, just illustrated how unpopular and unjust the board's rules and regulations really are. Those Albertans were fighting for fairness, equality, and marketing freedom. They ended up with prison sentences and records to show their commitment and devotion to what they believe is right and fair.

The event of October 31 clearly illustrated that there is something seriously wrong with current wheat and barley marketing and that it is time for some change. Change is precisely what Bill 207 is designed to bring. The bill will give wheat and barley farmers exactly what they have been fighting for: marketing their products independently of the Canadian Wheat Board. For the first time since 1943 Alberta farmers would have the opportunity to take the initiative to develop markets and seek out customers on their own. This bill will finally enable western producers to enjoy the same opportunities that their counterparts in eastern Canada and the United States have enjoyed for years. It gives our farmers various marketing alternatives, which also include the option of staying with the Canadian Wheat Board.

In simple terms, Mr. Speaker, this bill gives Alberta farmers choice. Presently, the farmers do not have choice. The Canadian Wheat Board Act forces farmers from western Canada to sell their wheat and barley only to the Canadian Wheat Board. They have no power over how and to whom their grain is sold. The Canadian Wheat Board acts as the sole price setter, the marketer, the transporter of all wheat and barley. Wheat and barley farmers complain that this lack of control over their product – and I stress: their product – is costing them thousands if not tens of thousands of dollars in potential profits.

Producers point out that the Canadian Wheat Board's grain price is routinely lower than the value for the same product south of the border, and as an example they cite that in 1996 the board was offering farmers $3.40 a bushel for wheat while the price of wheat in the United States was $8.50. That means that if farmers were allowed to market their wheat independently of the Canadian Wheat Board, they could have earned $5.10 per bushel more. This, Mr. Speaker, is just one of the many examples of disadvantages that our farmers face when they deal with the Canadian Wheat Board.

I believe that this is unfair. Farmers should not have to forfeit potential profit while farmers in other parts of North America can sell their products freely on the market and get the best possible price. The Canadian Wheat Board's inability and unwillingness to adapt to modern times has not only shortchanged western wheat and barley farmers but also the economics of western Canada. The board's outdated rules and regulations have continuously discouraged individuals from investing in the value-added grain processing sector of the Alberta economy.

According to a 2002 study prepared by the George Morris Centre, the biggest problem that the potential investors face is the Canadian Wheat Board's monopolistic stranglehold over the wheat and barley market. The study indicates that the Canadian Wheat Board charges the various domestic processors an inflated premium price for unprocessed wheat and barley. This unfortunately creates a disincentive for individuals looking to invest into the value-added sector due to the fact that high prices of unprocessed wheat and barley compromise potential profits. The same study argues that if the individual farmers were free to sell their product directly to processors, the price of their product would depreciate, as it would represent the real market value of their grain. This, in turn, would create greater incentives for individuals to invest into value-added sectors of the Alberta economy.

The reason why I'm mentioning this, Mr. Speaker, is because had western Canada's value-added industry grown at the same rate as Ontario's during the 1990s, it could have been a difference of between $300 million and $1 billion to the economy of this country.

AN HON. MEMBER: How much?

MR. DANYLUK: Between $300 million and a billion.

Currently, Mr. Speaker, the only way the western Canadian farmers can market wheat and barley on their own is to sell it first to the Canadian Wheat Board and, I stress, at a lower price specified by the Canadian Wheat Board and then buy it back from the board at a higher price. This scheme not only prevents our farmers from independent marketing, but it also prevents them from being able to compete with the rest of North American wheat and barley farmers. While our producers must accept the Canadian Wheat Board prices, their counterparts in other regions are free to obtain the best possible price for their product.

Mr. Speaker, wheat and barley farmers in eastern Canada are not bound by the same rules as the farmers in western Canada. As I've stated before, unlike their counterparts in the west, Ontario producers have the opportunity to market their products freely. Granted they still have to acquire export permits for their wheat from the Canadian Wheat Board, but they have the choice of selling their grain to any purchaser of their choice, including the Ontario Wheat Producers' Marketing Board. While the OWPMB performs a similar function as the Canadian Wheat Board, it serves as an optimal marketing body, not as a mandatory one. So why is it that the farmers in the east have alternatives and the farmers in the west do not?

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Little Bow.

MR. McFARLAND: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise again to make a few additional comments at third reading, after I had the pleasure of speaking at second reading. I want to start off, first, by again thanking on behalf of a lot of my constituents the Member for Calgary-Mountain View, who's brought forward Bill 207. I wanted to thank the Premier and the Deputy Premier for taking part in showing support for the farmers who were incarcerated on October 31.

I wanted to ask a question that many of the farmers in our area especially have asked me over a number of years, and maybe it's obvious: why is the federal minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board the same federal minister who's been responsible for the wheat board through many federal cabinet shuffles? How does that federal minister in this day and age go back to his home riding in Saskatchewan and continue to support without question a Canadian Wheat Board that basically has not changed at all since farmers sent a message loud and clear on October 31?

Many of the farmers that I've also had the pleasure to represent have wanted to know: why is it that the Canadian millers seem so supportive of the Canadian Wheat Board? Is it because of the special deal that they receive in terms of freight rates that they pay for the importation of their durum from the Canadian Wheat Board? As I recall the comments that I'd made at second reading, I tried to outline what it would cost the average farmer in our constituency to freight grain out to Vancouver. I believe the number at that time that I quoted for durum wheat was $24.91 a tonne. How was it that we had to pay that freight for grain that never went to Vancouver but in fact went down to a milling plant in Lethbridge and could have been done for $8 a tonne compared to $24.91? The farmers then said: well, if that's what we're paying, how much are the millers paying to bring back the grain, that we as farmers could have sent to the mill, hypothetically, from Vancouver, when they know darn well that a lot of it came in for the same $8 a tonne trucking charge? Although I can't pin down a number, it would appear that perhaps the millers have had special favour with the Canadian Wheat Board, because it may appear that they, in fact, only pay $12, on paper, for the same grain that comes back from Vancouver that I paid $24.91 for.

I want to move ahead to those that I have a great deal of respect for, those 13 farmers who voluntarily chose not to pay a fine, which, again, is another question, Mr. Speaker, that I don't truly understand. How is it that these farmers weren't charged for not having a federal export licence for grain but in fact were charged under a customs regulation for improper removal of a vehicle? Three of the 13 were from our constituency. Two of these young farmers had children at home, still had crops out in the field, still had cattle out on their pastures, and chose to make a very strong statement and serve some time. I'm especially pleased with the response that neighbours and farmers showed to particularly two of my constituents who spent considerable amounts of time in jail. As a matter of fact, I went down to the jail to visit one of these fellows the weekend after they had been incarcerated. Really, what an experience. To see somebody sitting in a jail alongside somebody who's actually committed something that may have been quite a serious crime is not something, I think, that a lot of people could imagine.

I guess in terms of a retail businessperson, can you imagine if you had a clothing store, Mr. Speaker, and that same small business in eastern Canada could sell at their own whim, at their own discretion, at their own markup? Can you imagine what you would feel like if you had that men's clothing store, a ladies' clothing store, and you were told that you could only sell a portion of your clothes during this time of the year because there's only a quota available and that you maybe, in fact, could only sell it at a certain price? Now, if you didn't comply with that, you would go to jail. Would you be very happy? I don't think so.

To those people who don't really want to stand up and debate the merit of this bill but would rather hide in the corner and say: "Well, they broke the law. What do they expect?" I would say, "Well, if you really feel that way, why do you not support some change?" The majority of farmers at least in Alberta and I'm quite sure throughout western Canada right now have indicated that they want to see change enacted. To those of you who would only argue that the individuals deserve what they got, that they broke the law, I'd like to finish, Mr. Speaker, by quoting from a fellow by the name of Martin Luther King Jr. It came from a constituent who summed up his feelings by saying:

An individual who breaks the law that conscience tells him is unjust and who willingly accepts the penalty of imprisonment in order to arouse the conscience of the community over its injustice is in reality expressing the highest respect for the law.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I do appreciate the opportunity to stand up and make a few more comments about this bill. Once again, thank you to the sponsor from Calgary-Mountain View and especially to the farmers who had the jam to do what they did.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

REV. ABBOTT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Picking up where the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul left off and in the light of his intelligent comments, one must ask the question: why is it that the farmers in the east can have alternatives and the farmers in the west cannot?

The federal minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board, Minister Goodale, would have us believe that the western farmers do not oppose but actually endorse the current CWB regulations. He recently stated that according to a plebiscite held a few years ago, the board received support from about two-thirds or 75 percent of farmers, yet according to a survey conducted by the Alberta Barley Commission in November of 2000, 75 percent of prairie farmers supported voluntary marketing. The same survey indicated that 81.2 percent of Alberta farmers, 75.8 percent of Saskatchewan farmers, and 69.25 percent of Manitoba farmers voted for the establishment of a voluntary grain marketing system. These numbers represent clear evidence of growing dissatisfaction among prairie farmers with the current CWB regulations.

One can also cite the CWB's own statistics, which indicate that farmers in Alberta are increasingly choosing not to obtain Wheat Board permits and are, instead, pursuing other crops such as canola and dry peas, which are not regulated by the CWB. As a result, in 1990-91 the board had about 44,230 permit holders. However, in '99-2000 this number fell to 27,066 holders. That is a 48 percent loss in the number of permit holders. Such figures only underline the unpopularity of the CWB and indicate that prairie farmers are ready for change, Mr. Speaker.

Bill 207 symbolizes this change, and it also serves to remedy the injustice that the farmers of western Canada have had to endure for over half a century. Yes, Mr. Speaker, there was a time when the Canadian Wheat Board served a purpose, but that was over 50 years ago. The present regulations are hopelessly out of touch with reality. The board was created in 1918 as a result of the Great War, a conflict which did much damage to the economies of the western world. The board was quickly disbanded in 1920 as the Canadian government decided that it served no purpose during times of peace and economic stability. The CWB was brought back in 1929, the year when the Great Depression hit. The CWB played an important function during the Second World War. At the time, the board played a leading role in keeping inflation down and preventing grain prices from rising too high.

However, Mr. Speaker, the days of extreme economic hardship and devastating global conflicts are long gone. Since then our country and the vast majority of the world have embraced market economy and free trade. In 1994 Canada signed a free trade agreement with our neighbour and our biggest trading partner, the United States of America. Our wheat and barley farmers have been left out of this agreement and continue to be at the mercy of the CWB. Clearly, we must allow them to become a part of the modern free trade system so they can enjoy the fruits of their labour as much as thousands of other Canadians have.

Mr. Speaker, I believe it is time to give our farmers the tools that they need in order to succeed in the modern world. Bill 207 gives our farmers these tools, and this is why I hope all of the members of the Legislature will join me today in voting in support of Bill 207.

Thank you very much.

3:30

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Rocky View.

MS HALEY: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm very, very grateful to have this opportunity to just make a couple of concluding comments about this bill and how incredibly proud I am of my colleague the Member for Calgary-Mountain View for having done all of this work and brought this forward. It's incredible not just for the fact that I've worked with him for a long time but that he's an urban MLA, as well, who clearly understands our issues in rural Alberta. I'm just incredibly proud of him for all the work that he's done on this.

I was given a news clip, Mr. Speaker, that was a letter that was written to the Calgary Herald by the owner of Big Rock Brewery, Mr. Ed McNally. It's a two-page letter, and I just want to read two little paragraphs to quote from this, from his perspective as somebody who had been a farmer and a rancher, later on went on to a different business, using barley in a whole other way. He said that the Wheat Board from his perspective – we just heard the history on when it was established, unestablished, re-established – when it was re-established again in about 1933, was intended to help prairie farmers market, store, and transport their grain.

It was established only for farmers who wanted or needed help, most of whom were based in the remote northern areas of Alberta and Saskatchewan, and it was voluntary, not compulsory. Producers had a choice and in normal years, most could do better selling into the free market, which was really a cash market that operated through the elevator companies, the major railways and the Winnipeg Grain Exchange.

Indeed, it was not until the Second World War, under the War Measures Act, that the federal government brought an end to “dual marketing,” which is to say marketing either through the Canadian Wheat Board or on the open market. The same legislation [at that time] closed the Winnipeg Grain Exchange, created price controls, and effectively put a lid on the rising price of grains.

The really dirty part of this move did not appear until after the war was won. Then, it became [apparent] that the effects of the federal government's action had been to cap the price of postwar grain shipments because it had entered into a long-term contract with the [United Kingdom] at a price well below the market.

Mr. Speaker, I want to say to you that my involvement through the Wheat Board over the last 30 years has been that they consistently and repeatedly entered into contracts with Russia or China or other countries around the world and never had to disclose the price. We've never been able to see into their financial affairs. It was my belief and it still is today that the federal government has used the Wheat Board as their tool for foreign relations. It had very little to do with selling or marketing our grain, and it had everything to do with their foreign policy. What always has offended me so greatly about this is that you can't even find out how much they sold us out as taxpayers, as Canadians, how many billions of dollars have never, ever been recaptured from countries that chose not to pay those bills, how many of them were written off over the years because that was the foreign policy of that day. Kyoto in another form. We live with this endlessly. If they want to give away all of our resources, maybe they could just tell us what they're doing once in awhile. Then as Canadians we could make our minds whether or not we supported it. Don't play games. The Wheat Board is one game; Kyoto is another. I know that it must seem like a reach to tie them together, but in my mind just about everything with the federal government is bad, you know, and it just goes downhill from there.

My experience when we were trying to establish our own grain company in this province is that we had nothing but support from our provincial government. They encouraged us always to continue to look at new and viable ways to help our farmers that wanted an alternative, and our farmers responded so incredibly well on wanting to try to grow a niche crop rather than just the standard Wheat Board crops. We tried to provide a full service to our clients, so we spent four years, Mr. Speaker, trying to get a permit so that we could handle Wheat Board grains, four years, a gazillion trips to Winnipeg so that you could do enough ring kissing in order to, you know, make them believe that it was possible that you might actually be able to handle the board grain for them.

The real one we were trying to deal with was oats, and they didn't even want to sell oats. They had control of it; they didn't care about it. We had a market in Venezuela for 50-pound bags or 100-pound bags of oats for all of the racehorse industry down there, but they weren't mechanized, and they couldn't handle huge shipments at a time. They needed something that an unmechanized society could handle and deal with, but they wanted the world's best oats, and those are the ones grown right here in Alberta. It took us four years. Finally, years later they delisted it because everybody in Alberta had pretty much quit growing oats by then. They drove us into the ground because they wouldn't market it. Now we've got oats again, Mr. Speaker, and it just shows that wherever the Wheat Board is, you end up with people pulling back, pulling out of the traditional markets. If we're such a great breadbasket, you know, why can't we sell our own wheat? Why are we growing so much canola? Why are we growing lentils and peas and mustard? We're growing canary seed now. We're doing all of these things in any effort at all to try and raise revenues on farms and get away from the Wheat Board, who consistently never tells you what your product is really going to be worth or as a taxpayer, on the other hand, how much money you are going to lose because we're subsidizing some other country on the other side of the world without everybody even knowing what we've done.

Mr. Speaker, like I say, I'm incredibly proud of my colleague for bringing this forward. I'm incredibly proud that my colleagues are going to support this bill, and I just hope that as we go through this and into next spring, we can make a difference and give our farmers the right to make the choice on which system they want to market their own produce in and that never again will one of our farmers go to jail for something as ludicrous as giving a bushel of grain over to a 4-H club on the other side of the border.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: May I have the opportunity to speak, Mr. Speaker, on the bill?

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: If you wish to speak on Bill 207.

DR. PANNU: On Bill 207, Mr. Speaker. Thank you for recognizing me. I want to take this opportunity – I've spoken on this bill a few times, Bill 207, the Alberta Wheat and Barley Test Market Act. This bill is raising all kinds of questions in the minds of Albertans, and I thought it would be useful to share with the hon. members of this Assembly a letter that I received from a concerned Albertan, Billy Dobson of Paradise Valley. He has a point, I think, in what he says, so I thought I'd share it with the House. I start right away, time being limited, to make sure that Mr. Dobson's points get recorded. The letter is addressed to the Premier. Mr. Dobson says:

I sure am relieved to see you gettin' involved in this here Canadian Wheat Board stuff. You've just opened up a whole new world of possibilities for me now that you are onside.

I got my first brainwave the other night at the hockey game. I went up to the counter to get myself a beer. I know you don't drink those real beers any more but I'm sure that you still remember how good one seems to taste at those Oilers and Flames games. I looked at the price and I couldn't believe my eyes – $6.50 for a beer. I figured no problem. I'll just go down the hall and get a cheaper one. Be darned if the next place was $6.50 too. Then I realized the same outfit was sellin' all the beer. This was when I figured out that I was dealin' with one of those single desk sellers I've been hearin' so much about. They were chargin' way too much for that beer and there was only one place to get the darn stuff.

That's when it came to me a real perfect plan. I'm just goin' to sell some beer of my own at the next hockey game. I got a $50 ticket and a truckload of beer bought so I figure I'm pretty well in business. I'm a bit of a marketer myself so I calculated that if I sell the beer for $3.00 a glass I'll still be doublin' my money. I'm sure that I'll sell lots because it's way cheaper than those hoodlums are chargin'. I reckon I should be able to sell about 5000 glasses pretty easy at a profit of $1.50 per glass, $7500 for an easy night's work.

Now some people are tellin' me that I could have some trouble with the law over this but I'm not too worried 'cause I know you'll be there for me Ralph. Other people in Canada are sellin' beer for $3.00 a glass so I should be able to also.

REV. ABBOTT: Isn't this a breach of FOIP? He's reading somebody else's letter.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Hon. member, the point of order should be on you. You've interrupted a number of times. You had your opportunity to speak. This hon. member did not interrupt you. So why don't we let him in the minute or so that he has left.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the advice for the member.

If the cops confuskate my beer, I'll just take it back 'cause I know that's okay too. You'll help with those court costs won't you?

I'm really lookin' forward to workin' with ya [Mr. Premier].

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Hon. member, I hesitate to interrupt you, but under our Standing Orders the time for discussion on this item has now reached the point where we call upon the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View to close debate.

MR. HLADY: After hearing the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, it's nice to know that we on the Conservative side are still very safe and probably the only ones in this House who understand the market principles.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I wanted to let the Legislature understand that I will send an open letter to Minister Goodale in regard to asking him that he do the right thing and listen to his own committee, which said that we should have a test market, and also respond to our legislation that we're passing here today in this Legislature asking for that free open test market in Alberta. If they will not, then I believe our government will explore all options in regard to a constitutional challenge and use whatever means necessary to get freedom for our farmers.

Mr. Speaker, I'm glad to have been able to move third reading of Bill 207 today, and I'd like to call the question.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion for third reading carried]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 3:43 p.m.]

Bill 208

Fiscal Stability Fund Calculation Act

Ms Carlson moved that Bill 208, Fiscal Stability Fund Calculation Act, be not now read a second time but that it be read a second time this day six months hence.

[Adjourned debate November 25: Mr. Snelgrove]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

MR. SNELGROVE: Mr. Speaker, thank you. I'll be very brief. As I mentioned before, the hoist amendment, I think, is appropriate because it does reflect the fact that the bill at this time is not needed. It's not a forward-thinking bill. It's more of a rear view of what would be accomplished by guessing what might have happened. Coulda-, shoulda-, woulda-kind of politics doesn't work very well. I would just encourage us to support the positive move by the hon. member to hoist this bill.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar on the amendment.

MR. MacDONALD: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When we look at the bill and certainly the amendment to hoist it, it is important at this time, after the brief remarks from the hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster, that we consider just what exactly the Fiscal Stability Fund Calculation Act could have done for this province when you consider that so much of the government's revenue comes from nonrenewable natural resource revenue. The value of that is determined by North American commodity markets. Sometimes you see dramatic increases in price, and royalty rates increase with price increases. As prices decrease for those commodities, well, then, so do the royalties to this province.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

So the whole idea of Bill 208 is sound. When you consider that the objective of this bill is to encourage the provincial government to create a fiscal stability fund by calculating the positive impact a fiscal stability fund would have on Alberta's financial affairs, that is reason enough for individuals to certainly take notice.

Now, many people besides this political party have over the years been advocating for a fiscal stability fund. This whole idea, Mr. Speaker, will not end with this amendment. Certainly, there have been other proposals. When you look at how the government in Alaska is dealing with their resource revenue, what portion is directly allocated to the citizens and which portion is set aside, it brings one to think of the rainy day fund. That is what it was originally called in this province. The Alberta heritage savings trust fund was the rainy day fund.

When we look at the recent changes in this province, we look at – for instance, let's go back to the first of this month, when the government party had a policy convention. Now, Mr. Speaker, there was an important message to constituency presidents, as we debate this bill, delivered to Progressive Conservative constituencies by a former MLA of this Assembly. When we're discussing this amendment, we also have to take heed and take caution from that former hon. member's words, certainly whenever we look at the fiscal stability fund.

It is noted by this former hon. member, Mr. Moore, who represented the Lacombe constituency between 1982 and 1993, that "there was evidence of a drastic change" and that the government, unfortunately, is moving "completely away from the policies implemented by [the Premier] upon his election in 1993 – policies which Albertans overwhelmingly endorsed then" and up to the election of 1997. Now, I think that we need to consider that former hon. member's view when we look at hoisting this bill. "Up to that point," this message goes on to say, "our government had the respect and support of the general public for their statesman-like administration of our affairs and tax dollars. From that point on their popularity has gradually but steadily" been declining. "The fact that [the Premier's] presence is there has kept it from reaching" the previous government's.

When we look at Bill 208, the Fiscal Stability Fund Calculation Act, would that stop or halt the deterioration that began, it is said here, "with unnecessary and irresponsible decisions"? They go on to say what these unnecessary and irresponsible decisions that led to this financial decline are, and they start out like this, Mr. Speaker:

- Increasing the number of unjustified portfolios, thereby spiralling the costs of administration and nullifying one of [the Premier's] key promises, made when elected leader, that he would cut the number of portfolios to 16.

And then:

- increasing their MLA salaries by a much greater percentage than increases paid to civil service and service unions.

Another issue of accountability that Bill 208 could perhaps address because of the dramatic increases and decreases in resource revenue is the education and health care sectors and their budgets and what affects those budgets under intense lobbying.

Now, certainly, with a fund as proposed here, it would be much easier to budget in the bad times as well as the good times. When you consider this notion that there has been a failure, a failure to rein in the runaway spending, Mr. Speaker, and you consider that Albertans do not know what the future of the heritage trust fund is, one has to be very cautious. If we allowed the heritage trust fund to be changed, what would this mean to the fiscal stability fund?

That's a question for this Assembly, I believe, to deal with, because the heritage savings trust fund was set up for the children of those who are singing in the rotunda this afternoon and their grandchildren. We do not have the right to take this fund and spend it on a giant birthday party for the province in the year 2005. We certainly don't have that right, and when you consider what might happen, the heritage savings trust fund could become a legacy fund for the current Premier, and I don't think that is the direction we should be going in. I think we should take a good look at the proposal from the hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, and we should realize that it provides a solution to the instability in program funding Albertans face because of our dependence on North American oil and gas markets and, as I said earlier, the revenue that is generated.

Now, if we were to prepare a study similar to the one that the state of Alaska has done and not look out a window that's opened for three years into the future, Mr. Speaker, but look out a window that is opened for 10 years – if the fine people in Alaska and the people who are running their government have the capability of 10-year forecasting for oil and gas revenue, then certainly I think this province can too.

With those remarks, Mr. Speaker, I shall take my seat and cede the floor to another hon. member. Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

MR. HORNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to have the opportunity to speak to Bill 208, the Fiscal Stability Fund Calculation Act, in second reading. I will support the hoist amendment that has been introduced by the hon. Leader of the Opposition. It was like music to my ears. This amendment would defer debate on Bill 208 for six months. As we know, the government is currently in the process of establishing a framework to address Alberta's historically volatile revenue streams.

Mr. Speaker, this issue is an important one for all Albertans, and it's important that we engage in debate on how best to shield Alberta from revenue instabilities. However, the government is concerned with having a useful debate on the issue. Given the nature of Bill 208 and how similar it is to the stabilization framework currently being developed, it makes sense that we not debate this legislation at this time.

As for Bill 208 as it stands now, Mr. Speaker, I have some serious concerns. One of the biggest is that this is nothing more than a hypothetical exercise. In itself it's not worthy of support. The bill calls for a full study to report on the effects on Alberta's financing supposing there had been $1 billion allocated to a fiscal stability fund in 2000-2001. I am sure that Albertans across the province are questioning this hypothetical study when there's real business at hand. Indeed, this government is currently developing a framework to address revenue instability. I can assure you that there is nothing hypothetical about this government's objectives. I agree that studies can be worth while. A government certainly should not entertain changes to its revenue management without first studying the effects. Regarding such significant legislative changes, I'm interested in studying the effects of what would happen, not the effects of what might have happened.

In reading Bill 208's wording carefully, Mr. Speaker, I notice that it not once mentions the future benefits of their proposal. In fact, the bill's wording seems to very carefully avoid discussing how their fund would help Albertans. What does this tell us? It tells me that their fund is so scantily defined that it's impossible to talk about it realistically. Like blinders on. Ultimately, I am concerned that Bill 208 can only exist in a hypothetical world.

Second, the study that Bill 208 proposes is not well thought out, and it does not necessarily address the issue of revenue fluctuation head-on. The bill is not only built on a hypothetical premise; it represents a band-aid solution to problems that won't go away unless we deal with them head-on. The hypothetical fund in Bill 208 suggests no mechanism to flag overspending or inefficiencies, whereas consolidated budgeting, benchmarking, and multiyear reporting do. This fund offers no way to ensure that individual departments, let alone government as a whole, spend their allocation in the most effective manner. By introducing a system of interdepartmental competition over the fund, any incentive to reduce spending or make better spending decisions is lost.

Our government is committed to making prudent, educated predictions and managing our province's finances in an accountable manner. Our concern is to best target spending in priority areas, and we are now in the midst of introducing a framework that will help smooth revenue streams. Bill 208 offers an overly simple solution to a very complex problem. It also makes a very dangerous assumption. The bill assumes that government spending can be fully protected simply by setting up this mysterious fund. The bill would have us believe that we only need to put money in one year and take it out the next. To assume a zero-sum transaction like this is far too simplistic and, I argue, reckless management of Albertans' money.

The fact of the matter is, Mr. Speaker, that international oil prices don't shift around a constant average. Cycles exist but not over a predictable period of time. Energy markets don't rise and fall like the sun. They are heavily influenced by circumstantial events such as Middle East uncertainty or political decisions such as OPEC supply control. The point is: no one should assume that an oil and gas surplus will negate an oil and gas deficit over any given period of time. In talking about a stability fund, we need to take these realities into consideration. The bill's fund as is runs contrary to this government's established record. For years this government has worked hard to balance the books and aggressively manage and pay down our debt. This has given us the highest credit rating among the provinces and the strongest economy in Canada. Any discussion of revenue stabilization must work alongside these achievements and not undermine them.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, while I stand against preparing a hypothetical report that does nothing to examine the realistic issues facing Alberta, I believe that this government is on the right track to address revenue instability. Therefore, I urge my colleagues to support the hoist of Bill 208. There is no need to legislate a study or a hypothetical fantasy akin to: what will we do when we win the lottery? We have already examined this issue and will take all required steps to ensure the continued strength of Alberta's financial position.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to speak to the hoist amendment that's before us. The subject of a stabilization fund is one that has long been with our party. I think it first appeared in this Legislature in 1994, and it was an idea that was fostered by the late Laurence Decore, the leader at the time. I think we all recall that Laurence had a long history of sound financial management as a mayor of this city and saw it on the road to debt freedom, and he brought that strong fiscal management to ideas for the Liberal opposition.

This bill has been before the Legislature in a number of different forms. Laurence believed, as I said, in sound fiscal management, and he had been able to apply his thoughts to the finances of this city to the benefit of ratepayers and all citizens. What we have in Bill 208 is a modification of Laurence's ideas, and they really fall into three parts. There's been some refinement over the last decade, and it falls into three parts. The first, of course, is the fiscal stability fund, the second is an infrastructure enhancement fund, and the third is a process in terms of being able to arrive at amounts of money that should be captured in those funds and how withdrawals and replenishment of the fund should take place, so a plan with three important aspects but, again, based on the original stability fund. It is interesting and somewhat gratifying that the government is now looking at presenting to this Legislature or to Albertans a form of the stability fund. It may differ in details, but there's no doubt that the genesis of the idea originated with our party before the 1993 election.

The whole history of boom-and-bust spending is one that's troubled all Albertans, and the kind of agony that we went through in the early '90s, '93, '94, '95, really should have taught us a lesson then that we needed a stability fund. If you look at the cuts that were made to education, the kinds of decisions that were taken were just decisions that in retrospect were almost incredible: the cutting of kindergartens, the huge amounts that were cut out of university budgets, 21 percent, some of the largest cuts, and those institutions are still recovering from it. So the notion of boom-and-bust financing and the kinds of hurt that that imposes on Albertans should be one that we remember from the '90s for a long time into the future. Not having stability hurts Albertans, and this proposal before us, I think, is one that would make that possibility of hurt happening much less.

It's a notion that I said is being expanded into an infrastructure fund. The Auditor General has not been asking for that particular fund, but he has been warning the government in report after report of the need for planning for infrastructure and putting away money for infrastructure. I think the first warning came in the budget with respect to advanced education at that time. He made the point that a certain percentage of dollars should be set aside each year to ensure that moneys that were needed for capital projects and modernization were available. I think the figure that he used was 2 percent.

In the last Auditor General's report the recommendation on page 191 says:

We again recommend that the Department of Learning improve its systems to ensure that long-term capital planning for school facilities is consistent with plans for the delivery of education.

So, again, the Auditor General is pointing out the need for what we find in the bill that is being hoisted, the need for an infrastructure enhancement fund. I think I heard a member make some rather derogatory comments about the way the money would be put into that fund or taken out, but the fact is that it would put in place over a period of time the kinds of dollars that would assure Albertans that the huge, huge investment that they have in infrastructure in this province is maintained and that new investments are undertaken in a timely fashion.

The government is going to come forward with a stabilization plan. I assume it will if I look at the information coming out of the government's committee. Stabilization is a really important consideration, and the details of the government's plan will be forthcoming. So it's with that kind of information, Mr. Speaker, that I, too, will support the hoist amendment, and I do that recognizing that this is an idea whose time has come. I guess that in the final analysis it doesn't matter where ideas originate. If they're sound ideas and they are a benefit to all Albertans, then they deserve our support.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I do welcome the opportunity to stand this afternoon and speak to Bill 208, the Fiscal Stability Fund Calculation Act, and particularly to the amendment, and I, also, support this amendment.

I think that we have to look at the history of what's happened in this province. This goes back many, many years, to the infancy of our petroleum industry here in the province, certainly one that we're very, very fortunate to have. Many places in the world would love to have the problems we have or have not the problems but the assets we have in our oil and gas industry. But, as well, we know, Mr. Speaker, that we also have the boom and bust, the peaks and the valleys, when we look at revenues that flow into this province. Even our neighbour next door, Saskatchewan, has a stability fund, and just last week, I believe it was, they announced that they're going to use $100 million out of their stability fund to balance the books.

Now, as well, we know, Mr. Speaker, that the AAMD and C constantly ask at every convention for predictable, stable, equitable funding. At their convention a year ago there were many speakers that got up and asked members of the front bench how they expect them to have three- to five-year business plans when they have a budget that only lasts three to five days. Certainly, if people at the AAMD and C can recognize that there's a huge problem here, then also we should.

Probably what highlighted this more than anything in that particular year was the fact that we had the second highest revenues this province has ever had, yet all of a sudden we had cuts. We had cuts to many, many programs, and it impacted many Albertans even though we had the second highest revenues that we'd ever had in this province. Of course, anybody that's building budgets certainly knows that you have to have flex in that budget. You have to be able to account for unexpected expenditures, whether that be forest fires, whether that be huge droughts because of global warming, and as well we have to expect increased revenues if for any reason the price of oil soars.

We look at this, and we certainly see that in that particular year we had $600 million cut from the budget, from the Heavy Road Builders Association here in the province. Now, there was a huge reaction on their part, because they do make their three- to five-year business plans. They certainly know the impact of what a $600 million cut would be to their programs here in the province in that they would certainly lose a lot of very skilled workers in that particular industry. As well, they have set their business plans on not only the purchasing of inventory, inventory that's very, very costly, but as well they have to pay for that. They certainly plan to pay for it over time, and they plan to pay for it with moneys that this government has indicated will be there.

So when I hear hon. members say in this House that the fiscal record of this government is good, we have to question that. We have to question that. And when we see that the government miscalculates revenues by $6 billion – $6 billion – that's incredible. It's a beautiful problem to have, but it is not very good budgeting.

We look, for example, as was announced here today by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, at how Manhattan meters their wells. These should be calibrated every year, yet some of these wells have not been calibrated for up to five years. Now, then, what is happening to our royalties in this particular case? Again, when we look at revenues, Mr. Speaker, it is very, very important that we take this into consideration.

We also have in this province legislation which does not allow a deficit at the end of the year, yet we don't get the expenses that we run up in the fourth quarter until well after the end of our business year. So certainly it creates a situation where government has to keep extra money on hand just for unforeseen expenses and whatever. So, again, not a good situation where we can set a budget.

Now, then, as well, when we look at a stability fund, it certainly would avoid the infrastructure deficit that now occurs in this province, and this, Mr. Speaker, is growing. It continues to grow because that is one of the first areas that is cut when moneys get tough. But more importantly here are our social programs. These are the people and the programs – as one senior put it to me, just because I'm not productive anymore, the government doesn't consider my needs.

So we have people on AISH that haven't seen an increase in their benefits for a number of years. We have in this province, which has all these revenues from oil and gas, the lowest minimum wage of any province in Canada. We have people on supports for independence that haven't seen any break in their rates. I look at some of the comments made by Senator Roche in his address to the housing commission in dealing with the homelessness issue here in the province, and what is happening to homeless people in this province and what is happening with child poverty is unforgivable in a province where we like to say that there is an Alberta advantage. Well, it certainly isn't for these people.

Now, this Bill 208, the Fiscal Stability Fund Calculation Act, would certainly bring stability to the process of budgeting. It would allow for moneys that would keep our social programs, keep any programs such as road construction, infrastructure going whether or not the times in Alberta were good or bad. We have a great need for this particular type of bill.

As well, Mr. Speaker, we had the Financial Review Commission, which certainly did their calculations. It's unfortunate that none of us have been able to see what their calculations are, but they estimate that the fiscal stability fund in this province would have to be in the neighbourhood of $3.5 billion. Unfortunately, one of their solutions was to use the heritage fund as part of this stability fund, and it was certainly never intended to be such. A stability fund certainly should be totally separate from the heritage savings trust fund. Albertans have long said that the Alberta heritage savings trust fund was a fund that they wished to be kept. It is certainly easy to understand why, when we had oil at $10 a barrel back in the '80s, we could not contribute to that particular fund. But here in the last decade we've had an incredible good run of luck with the price of oil in the world, yet we have not done anything to increase the value of that heritage savings trust fund. We have not inflation proofed it.

There is a great need for this bill, and I thank you for the opportunity to speak to it, Mr. Speaker.

Bill 209
Electoral Fairness Commission Act

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a great pleasure for me to rise and kick off the debate on Bill 209, the Electoral Fairness Commission Act, at second reading. May I note that circumstances that attend on the beginning of the debate on Bill 209 couldn't be more propitious. We have angels singing outside, and for that I thank the University of Alberta Mixed Chorus.

Recently there has been considerable attention paid to what has come to be known as democratic deficits in both the federal Parliament and in this provincial Legislature. For example, Mr. Speaker, attention has been drawn to the lack of all-party standing policy committees in the Alberta Legislature. This Legislature is the only one in Canada where standing policy committees are made up solely of members of the government caucus while excluding opposition members.

Most of the public discussion about the democratic deficit has focused on making more democratic the internal workings of parliaments and legislatures. Surely there's a great deal of room for debate to happen on the internal workings of parliaments and legislatures, but there's also another important aspect of an electoral democracy, which is to have serious debate on reforming the voting system on which all electoral democracies, representative democracies, depend.

That's exactly the purpose behind Bill 209. The purpose of Bill 209 is to establish a voting system that would ensure that each political party's representation is proportionate to its share of the provincewide popular vote. However, Bill 209 does not itself seek to make changes in the voting system. Instead, it establishes a process to consult Albertans on this important question. Bill 209 establishes a broadly based commission to widely consult with Albertans on the reform of the voting system. The membership of the commission would mirror that of the Electoral Boundaries Commission. It would be chaired by a judge, a retired judge, the president of a public postsecondary institution, or someone of similar credentials, qualifications, and stature. One member would be appointed on the recommendations of the Official Opposition, one member would be nominated by other opposition parties represented in the Legislature, and, finally, two members would be nominated by the Executive Council.

The Electoral Fairness Commission would engage Albertans in a wide-ranging examination of our voting system. The commission would engage Albertans in considering alternatives to the existing first-past-the-post voting system. Based on the input received, the commission would prepare an interim report outlining proposals for how proportional representation could be adopted in Alberta to complement the present electoral system and to comply with the unique circumstances and conditions of Alberta.

Among the considerations that could be covered by the commission would be the following. To maintain a link between elected members and geographically based constituencies: many proportional representation systems around the world continue to be based on constituency representation on either a single-member basis or regional basis. Second, to ensure stable and responsive government: contrary to the perceptions of some, most voting systems based on proportional representation result in governments every bit as stable as those based on first past the post and certainly more democratic. The commission would also examine extending voter choice by eliminating strategic voting and ensuring that every vote counts and has the same value.

Finally, Bill 209 would ensure that in any alternative voting system recommended by the commission, the total number of seats in the Legislature will be no greater than the 83 at present. We have plenty of politicians per square mile in this Legislature, Mr. Speaker, and this provision would put to rest any concern that an alternative voting system would result in a greater number of seats in the Legislature. It will not.

Furthermore, the PR system would be a means to achieve these objectives. To achieve these objectives the commission will seek expert advice, research voting systems in use around the world that already incorporate some form of proportional representation, and hold extensive public hearings throughout the province. After the commission has made public its proposals and alternatives in an interim report, a second round of public hearings would be held to enable the public to make further representations to the commission on the interim report. After this second round of hearings the commission will then prepare a final report, Mr. Speaker, and make recommendations to the Legislative Assembly. Any subsequent legislation passed by the Legislative Assembly incorporating a voting system based on proportional representation would need to be approved by a majority vote in a provincewide referendum prior to proclamation.

I want to conclude by making some general comments about why this Legislature should approve Bill 209, which would initiate a wide-ranging public debate on the voting system. Under the existing system of first past the post, citizens do not get what they voted for in terms of composition of this Assembly, Mr. Speaker. Political parties that are elected with a minority of votes routinely receive a majority of seats in this Legislative Assembly. How many Albertans are aware that in two of the past four provincial elections the Progressive Conservatives failed to secure even 45 percent of the provincewide vote? Yet in those 1989 and 1993 elections the Conservatives ended up with large majorities in this Assembly. Even in this most recent election almost 40 percent of Albertans voted for parties other than the governing Conservative Party. Yet the distortions caused by the first-past-the-post system resulted in the opposition parties winning only nine of 83 seats in the Legislature. In other words, a vote for a government MLA carried almost four times the electoral weight as a vote for an opposition member did.

Proportional representation is an idea whose time has come, Mr. Speaker. Doubters should take notice. Albertans will demand that our electoral system be made more democratic, more representative of their will. More and more democratic countries are using some form of proportional representation to elect their parliaments and legislatures. Canada and the United States are the only two remaining holdouts. New Zealand now uses a proportional representation voting system for its federal parliament. Britain uses PR for its regional assemblies in Scotland and Wales. Australia uses PR for its Senate elections. Every single country in western Europe uses some form of PR, as does the European Parliament.

The bill aims to retain the benefits of constituency-based representation, Mr. Speaker. Some countries, like Sweden and Ireland, elect members from multimember constituencies using a single transferable vote to achieve proportionality. In fact, until the mid-1950s MLAs from Edmonton and Calgary were elected to this Legislature using exactly this voting system. The system was changed by the then ruling Social Credit government because it feared losing the next election if a PR voting system for Alberta's two largest cities was retained.

Other countries, like Germany and New Zealand, use a voting system called mixed member proportional. Under . . . [Mr. Pannu's speaking time expired]

Mr. Speaker, I understand I have 10 minutes according to Standing Order 29. I'd like you to check that for me.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Yes, hon. member, that's right, and you've had the 10 minutes.

Before we proceed to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, I wonder if we might receive consent to briefly revert to Introduction of Guests.

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests

(reversion)

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity for me to introduce some very special guests this afternoon. They are here to observe the debate on Bill 209, the Electoral Fairness Commission Act. They're all members of Fair Vote Canada. They're very actively engaged in starting a public debate on how to change our electoral system in order to make it more reflective of the political will of each and every voter in this province and this country. So I have the pleasure of introducing to this House Professor Paul Johnston. He is from the Department of Political Science and is an expert on voting behaviour and electoral systems in the province. The second person is Ms Helene Narayana, a prominent constituent of my Edmonton-Strathcona riding, a well-known broadcaster in the past, and now a political volunteer and social activist. The third person present in the gallery who's active in Fair Vote Canada is Mr. Douglas Bailie, a historian from the University of Alberta who has been actively engaged in the activities of Fair Vote Canada. I'd ask these three guests to please rise and receive the recognition and the welcome of the Assembly.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

MR. McCLELLAND: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to speak to Bill 209, as proposed by my friend representing Edmonton-Strathcona, the leader of the New Democratic Party and leader of the New Democratic Party in opposition.

Proportional representation is an issue that pops up from time to time as many parties in many Legislatures around the world seem intent on exploring the subject. The idea itself is an interesting one and is not entirely without merit. Several countries around the world employ one form of proportional representation or another to varying degrees of success. As well, if the intent of voting is to provide an outcome directly proportional to all votes cast in the province, proportional representation would indeed seem to be the way to accomplish it. Finally, the introduction of the bill highlights the fact that our first-past-the-post system is not satisfactory in cases where a particular candidate comes out on the losing end.

DR. PANNU: Point of order.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Hon. member.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona on a point of order. Your citation, please?

Point of Order Speaking Time

DR. PANNU: Mr. Speaker, it's Standing Order 29, and these are the rules effective from February 26, 2002. This is the most recent and current version. I would like to draw your attention to 29(1)(b), which states that on a private member's bill the mover of the bill will have 20 minutes of speaking time.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. member is perfectly correct; 29(1) and (2) would substantiate what you are attempting to say. However, this is motions and bills other than government motions and bills, so if you go to 29(3), on the second page you will see that "the mover in debate of a resolution or a Bill shall be limited to 10 minutes' speaking time and 5 minutes to close debate." That's because we're on motions and bills other than government motions. That is what we're guided by, not the former. Those are for the other motions. So the point of order is not upheld as you can clearly see by the Standing Orders that we have.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford to continue.

Debate Continued

MR. McCLELLAND: The bill as presented by the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona proposes that the commission must

- (a) review alternatives to the first-past-the-post electoral system, and
- (b) make proposals to the Legislative Assembly on what form of proportional representation should be adopted to complement the present electoral system.

So we're being asked to put forward a commission that will review alternatives but report on what form of proportional representation would be most desirable. I certainly can't support that because I don't think proportional representation is going to add to the democracy that the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona would like to achieve, and I will try to make my point and the reasons clear. For the record, I would propose that an alternative system, if we're going to move to that, would be the French system, which would be a runoff election.

In any event, as to speaking to the bill as presented by the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, I'd like to centre on two key issues. First, it's my belief that proportional representation schemes concentrate more power in the hands of party executives and leaders. This concentration takes away from the amount of real democratic participation that citizens can exercise. Second, the introduction of proportional representation invites the creation of single- or narrow-interest parties which are often partisan and divisive. In contrast, the first-past-the-post system encourages political parties to build on a broad base that has the capacity to aggregate interests in the public good. If we change the rules of our electoral system so that a system which places little emphasis on the aggregation of social interest takes effect, we will, despite the best intentions of Bill 209, have done democracy a disservice.

On my first point, none of us sitting here today in the Assembly should forget why we're here. We're here by the good graces of the citizens in each of our ridings, because either as individuals or as members of a party we advance values, priorities, and a way of doing things that Albertans either trust or admire. This is true of all members, regardless of which side of the House they sit on. We're not here because we're chosen by a party executive. There is, of course, an element of party politics that determines whether we will be here or not, and this is the nomination process. However, once we're nominated, it's our job to sell ourselves, our parties, our ideas, and leadership to Albertans at the constituency level.

Now, I understand that individual election is dependent upon, ranking from first to last, in my view, party leadership, because we become very leadership oriented; the political party which we belong to and represent; and the individual candidate. So make no mistake: it's because of the leadership issues, because of the concentration of media, that we've become very leader-oriented, especially through the direct election of leaders in one person, one vote. However, that being said, at the end it's often in an individual constituency that 10 percent that an individual candidate can bring to the table that will either make it or break it.

This is a marked improvement over the type of proportional representation that Bill 209 calls for, and I quote from section 6(1) of the proposed bill.

In reviewing alternatives to the first-past-the-post electoral system the Commission shall consider a mixed member proportional electoral system where each voter has 1 vote for a political party and 1 vote for an individual candidate in the voter's electoral division.

A mixed member proportional representation system is one in which some MLAs are voted in by their constituents and others are chosen by the party from a list. The question we have to ask ourselves is: who's choosing the nonelected members?

Now, I'm sure this process could differ in each political party, but there's a catch. It's not the public and the constituency that's making the choice, and that has the potential to be problematic. It becomes a problem because under the system advocated by Bill 209, the public has a reduced say in who their representative in the Assembly will be. While the public's influence is reduced, the power of the party executive becomes greater as candidates vie to be placed on a list of appointed members.

If I may, I'd like to again draw a comparison to our current system. When, at the constituency association level, an individual presents himself to his party to be selected as the party's candidate, that constituency association must take into account the effectiveness of the individual in building a consensus among a range of voters with diverse policy interests. They must ask themselves, in addition to whether the candidate will represent the party well: will that candidate represent the public well?

Now, under the system favoured by Bill 209, this consideration is, in the case of the appointed members, moot. It's not essential for an appointed member to be a good representative of the public. Rather, he will most likely be there to do the bidding of his party's interests or his party's leader. Sounds kind of like an appointed Senate, and this, of course, raises a larger question: just how do you get on that list? Who is that MLA accountable to if it isn't the public?

On my second point, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to mention that in most countries where a proportional representation system exists, there aren't just two or three parties but 10, 20, or even more. The reason for this is that single-interest parties attempt to gain enough of a share of the vote in order to secure a seat or two in their Assembly and then form coalitions based not on consensus but on vote trading. Essentially, they're left with tit-for-tat legislation that appeals not to the common interest but to the specific interest of each party. Again, public input is denied in favour of personal interest, and interests are not aggregated in the common interest.

The first-past-the-post system, on the other hand, rewards parties who build consensus before they enter the House. It compels parties to appeal to a broader cross section of citizens and to have ideas designated to benefit the common good, ideas that the majority of citizens can get behind and support. The difference is clear: parties that attempt to appeal on all matters to members of the public or parties that exist to advance a single issue and give precious little care to any other pressing interest of the day.

Now, in the midst of this, I don't want to be mistaken for someone who would deny the right of anyone or any group of persons to set up or start a party. Indeed, the more voices there are in the political sphere the better democracy. However, that doesn't mean that we should make it any easier for smaller or fringe parties to make it into the House or to hold greater power in the Assembly. The rules we have in place at the moment demand that any party wishing to hold a degree of legislative power ought to have done their homework and put together a reputation for being trustworthy as well as a solid policy platform that resonates with a cross section of Albertans. The system we have now demands that this be done before any electoral success.

So I thank the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona for raising the important issue of considering alternatives to the present system, and it does speak to a necessary question that should be considered but not proportional representation, in my opinion.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to have the opportunity to speak in favour of Bill 209, the Electoral Fairness Commission Act, and the intent of the bill before us. The arguments in terms of the kind of electoral system that would best serve our needs have gone on and, I assume, will continue to go on, but I think what we have before us is a proposal for a telling re-examination of the way we do things. The proposal doesn't place before us a particular form of representation by population to endorse but puts it in the hands of an independent commission to look at the differences in systems, the advantages and disadvantages, and then to come forward with recommendations. It seems to me that this sort of hands-off approach would be in the public interest in terms of the kind of debate that it would spark and the ultimate outcomes that might result from a very serious look at the way we elect provincial representatives at the present time.

So, as I said, I will support it. I guess, if I have a reservation – it's not really a reservation. If I would have had my way, it would have been a much broader bill because for at least 10 years we have been advocating a look at democracy in the province that includes some form of representation by population but also includes another series of proposals that it would have been interesting to have this particular commission look at at the same time as it was considering representation by population.

One of those proposals was that there would be fixed sitting dates for the Legislature. There are some problems around that in terms of being able to handle nonconfidence votes, but it's a process that we use at the municipal level to elect our city councils and our school boards without much difficulty. It's a proposal that I note has just recently been adopted in British Columbia. British Columbians know the date of their next provincial election, and they knew that the date that they elected their current government. So I think that an examination of the merits or downside of fixed sittings for the Legislature would be in everyone's interests. I think that the kind of guessing and trying to arrange your schedules around the way the sittings are now determined does not serve citizens well.

Another proposal that we had put forward was the recall of members. It's, again, being used elsewhere. There have been some criticisms of it in terms of its misuse by special-interest groups, but it would give citizens recourse at some time during the four-year or five-year period that the representatives are elected if they were sorely upset or disappointed by their representative's action. It would give them an opportunity to recall that member and to have someone more appropriately serve them. Again, it was something that would have been interesting for this commission to look at.

The whole notion of referendums is also an issue that we would like to see examined. There have been issues in this province where a referendum would have been very useful in the last number of years. It would have been interesting to have a referendum on the privatization of health care in the province just to see to what extent the move to private hospitals and private medical care is supported by citizens at large. It would also, in just the last week or so, have been interesting to have had a referendum on Kyoto and whether or not the government should support that move. Opinion polls are one thing, but I think that a referendum is something else. We would have included in the package some consideration of referendums.

I guess what is more important in terms of what happens today in this House would be to look at a package of legislative reforms, and it would start, I think, with, as the member has already mentioned, the standing policy committees, which are government committees, not all-party committees, and would also look at committees like the committee on Law and Regulations, a standing committee of the House that in other legislatures is charged with looking at laws when they're passed and the regulations that are being formulated to put the law into effect. That committee has members appointed to it by this Legislature and doesn't meet. I've been in the Legislature for 10 years, and that committee, as far as I understand it, has never met, never considered a law or the regulations that surround a law. So it's something that could be reformed within this legislation that, I think, would help democracy.

I guess that another area, when we look at our own activity, is our Standing Order 21(1), the Standing Order that looks at the debate limitations. All parties are a part of putting together the Standing Orders, but the government, of course, has the hammer as far as those procedures are concerned. I think it is rather ironic that we saw applauded in this House the representative from Red Deer standing up in the House of Commons and debating, filibustering the Kyoto bill at the federal level, yet that same filibustering is impossible in this Legislature now since the institution of Standing Order 21(1), where should the opposition attempt a filibuster, the government has only to stand up and make a motion that limits the debate. A filibuster could never get going or be sustained under those rules.

So I think it's a good bill. It's a start, Mr. Speaker. I think there are some other things that are crucial and critical to our democratic system in the province that need examination, and the examination was long overdue. I've mentioned a few of them. I think this is a good start. Of the hundreds of electoral systems around the world, I think it would be good for us to pause and to look at what we do in our own backyards.

Thank you very much.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Dunvegan.

MR. GOUDREAU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to have the opportunity to rise and speak to Bill 209, the Electoral Fairness Commission Act, introduced by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Mr. Speaker, in 1852 Benjamin Disraeli, the Conservative Chancellor of the Exchequer and future Prime Minister of Great Britain, declared famously that "England does not love coalitions." His remark rallied those opposed to tinkering with Britain's first-past-the-post system, which by its very nature magnifies now, as it did then, the electorate's intentions. If you want to see strong majority governments, the first-past-the-post system is the right ticket. Britain is, of course, not the only nation where the public votes in accordance with the first-past-the-post system. We need not look further than our own country to see a shining example of this system at work. Our good neighbours to the south use this system, and so do many other countries which, like Canada, are former British colonies.

Mr. Speaker, with all due respect for the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, his bill is filled with assumptions. For instance, the preamble to Bill 209 states that the existing first-past-the-post voting system leads to distortions such as lopsided majorities, strategic voting and wasted votes which result in lower voter turnout and increased cynicism.

In particular, I take issue with the charges that our current system would promote lower voter turnout and increased cynicism. I'm not aware of a cause-and-effect relationship between our current first-past-the-post system and cynicism. I will grant the hon. member that there is some cynicism in our society today, but is it really increasing? If it is, I would like to see some science data to support such an assertion. Moreover, to say that our existing voting system contributes to an increase in cynicism is, I think, a bit of a stretch. The only way we could substantiate that claim would be if we were to introduce another voting system and see if it made people less cynical, although I'm not certain in what manner we would quantify this.

Mr. Speaker, if voters are cynical today, I think it has more to do with the calibre and qualifications of those who hold public office as well as with the candidates the public has to choose amongst at election time. If those who run for office fail to connect with the electorate, how appealing will it be to cast votes for them? If those who run for office do not speak to the issues that matter to the voters, what incentives do they have to vote? As well, part of the onus rests with the electorate. If the electorate does not take an interest in the elections nor in those who run for office, there is little that candidates can do beyond campaigning.

One of the most sacred rights we have in a democracy like Canada is the right to vote freely for the candidates and issues of our choice. In fact, the right to vote may be more sacred than any other democratic right we have. However, the right to vote must by definition also imply the right not to vote. I find it regrettable, of course, that not everyone chooses to take advantage of his or her right to vote, but that is a right all of us have: the right to abstain from voting.

The reasons why people choose not to vote run the gamut from a lack of interest to a lack of appeal, from personal illness to climatic conditions at election time, or whether it's harvest time or not, Mr.

Speaker. If we wish to increase voter turnout at the ballot box, I think the answer lies not in a new voting system but in nominating candidates who speak to the issues that matter to voters. That proportional representation does not automatically ensure increased voter participation is borne out by the following examples.

Consider the case of Switzerland, a country that, like our own, is often considered amongst the world's foremost democracies. Switzerland adopted proportional representation in 1919. It would be another 52 years, however, until Swiss women were granted the right to vote. That year, 1971, voter participation in Switzerland was 97.3 percent. The Swiss vote every four years, and since 1975 voter participation peaked at 43.6 percent and has been in a steady decline ever since. In 1999 34.9 percent of voters turned out. Mr. Speaker, it is true that Europeans exercise the right to vote more frequently than we do, but it has been conclusively proven that proportional representation attracts more voters, thereby enhancing the exercise of democratic rights. I am not so sure. I would suggest that history has a greater role than does any specific voting system.

That Canada is a democracy is something I think all of us can and will agree on regardless of party affiliation. Here in Canada 54 and 68 percent of Canadians have opted to cast their ballots in our four most recent federal elections. As I said earlier, I wish that everyone would take the time to vote, that everyone would exercise the privilege and the right to vote whenever an election rolls around, but you will recall that I also said that the right to vote must imply the right to abstain from voting, whatever the reason, whatever the cause. That, too, is part of living in a democracy. We can't make people vote if they don't want to. That would not be our democratic system. In some countries voting is mandatory. If you don't vote, you get penalized in one way or another. To me that's another instance of an undemocratic process, and I am certain that no Canadian and certainly no Albertan would be favourably disposed towards such a law.

Now, to get back to the proportional representation voting system, Mr. Speaker, I'd also like to address some of the problems inherent in that system. One of the foremost problems with the system is that it is promoting instability in parliament. It does so by allowing minor parties and candidates with narrow issues and limited appeal to win seats. As a result, the balance of power can be held by a number of members elected by a small minority of the electorate. Italy is a case in point. Quite frankly, the Prime Minister's office in Rome seems to have had a revolving door since the end of World War II. Since then, Italian Prime Ministers have been in office for an average of about 10 months. The 59th Prime Minister, Silvio Berlusconi, took office in April 2001. The Christian Democratic Party and the Italian Communist Party, which were active during the Cold War, both split apart.

As a result, there are now more than 40 political parties in Italy. Of the more than 6,000 bills they submitted to the lower House in 1996, only 61 were enacted into law. This is what can happen under proportional representation. Do we really want this here? I really don't think so. In addition, the proportional representation voting system is not an easy system to administer. To the contrary, it is a highly complex system that's complicated, costly, and time-consuming to administer.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta is a large province. Those of us who have the honour to represent our fellow Albertans come from all walks of life. We come from big cities and small hamlets. Our backgrounds are in industry, agriculture, education, and a wide range of other areas. Some of us are young; some of us are younger still. Philosophically we are not a homogenous group. To the contrary, within the government caucus we see a great deal of diversity of views and values represented. It would be naive, I think, to expect all of us to think exactly alike just because we belong to the same party. Likewise, our constituents bring different values with them to the ballot box when they cast their votes. The diversity you see in our caucus is therefore a reflection of our constituents and all of their values. My point is that as a government we have managed and we continue to manage to be inclusive. Ours is also a government that is effective without being strong and having a bully approach. Albertans are an outspoken bunch. If they didn't like what they saw, they'd tell us, and I know of no particular desire to overhaul our voting system.

Earlier I mentioned that Benjamin Disraeli stated that England does not love coalitions. Neither does Canada. If anything, it would seem that we positively loathe them here. In the last 135 years, Mr. Speaker, that have passed since Confederation, our nation has seen only one coalition government. In retrospect, it would seem that the prevailing circumstances at the time really warranted it, and that was during the Great War, World War I. There's no such crisis looming at the present time. Sure enough, there is greater uncertainty in the world now than in a long time, but we face no constitutional crisis in Canada.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to participate in the debate this afternoon on Bill 209, the Electoral Fairness Commission Act, as presented to the Assembly by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona. This is an ideal time for not only members of this Assembly but for Albertans to have a look at how we are electing representatives and perhaps look at doing things differently. Certainly, in the past in this province there was the use of the single transferrable vote from the 1920s through to the 1950s, and it was a different approach than we are currently using. One only has to look at the current parties that are represented in this Assembly – the Progressive Conservatives, the Liberals, and the New Democrats – to consider that there were inequalities in the system.

For instance, if we look at the 1944 election, Mr. Speaker, the results show that in order for the CCF to win one seat they needed to get 35,000 votes. The independents needed roughly 5,900 votes to win a seat, and the Social Credit only needed 2,870 votes to win a seat. Now, in the election of 1944 the Social Credit wound up with a total of 51 seats, the CCF two, and the independents eight. So even if there were different political parties represented in the Assembly, the problems that are trying to be addressed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona certainly have persisted in this province's and in this Assembly's history.

Now, earlier this afternoon there was discussion on a previous piece of legislation, Bill 207, and I believe it was the hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View who was talking about freedom of choice and about electing a Senate and why people had to support Bill 207. Well, the same, Mr. Speaker, applies for this legislation. If we're going to be presenting the argument of having freedom of choice and the election of a Senate, that's fine, but why don't we start electing standing policy committees in this Assembly? We could certainly start that. I was honoured to present a motion to this Assembly where we could get at this with a change to the Standing Orders, but unfortunately it was defeated.

Now, we can talk about democracy all we want, but I think all hon. members of this Assembly should have the option, should have the vote to elect the standing policy committee chairpersons and other committee members of this Assembly. I think it's the honourable thing to do. If we're going to talk about election reform, let's clean up our own house, so to speak, first, Mr. Speaker.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford was afraid that if this bill became law – and I think we have to make this bill law, because the commission that is proposed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona has to be appointed by New Year's Eve of this year. So we don't have much time, and I really think that we should get at this and support this initiative and see what the electoral fairness commission comes up with as far as proposed changes.

In regard to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford and his concern that “oh, this would put the power in the hands of the party members, and they might not be able to deal with it,” well, who is making the decision now on the chairs of the standing policy committees in this House? Is it the Conservative caucus, is it the Premier's office, or is it someone at PC headquarters? If an hon. member could answer that question. Certainly, power is not in the hands of members of this side of the House in regard to the election of those chairpersons.

Now, there was a question raised of who would choose these nonelected members. Well, I have to again direct the question: who's selecting the standing policy committee chairs? I just pick up a government press release, and, voila, there it is, who is going to be there, and no choice in the matter whatsoever. The fact that I can't even sit in the committees is disappointing enough. Certainly, I think that if we were going to be sincere about democratic reform, we would start in this House and opposition members would sit on standing policy committees as well as government members, and many jurisdictions have that. I'm sorry; I think we need to look at that in this Assembly. I again, Mr. Speaker, find it quite unusual that we talk about reform elsewhere, but we just do not feel that it applies to us.

I have discussed this whole issue of democratic reform in this province many times, and people are amazed. People are amazed. They do not pay attention to the proceedings here, and they're amazed when I tell them. One only has to look at the previous point of order, Mr. Speaker, and our speaking times and the reduction of speaking times in this Assembly in the brief time that I've been in this Assembly. I don't think that is in the best interests of democracy. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona was very anxious to present his case regarding Bill 209 to all members of this Assembly, and his initial remarks have been reduced to 10 minutes.

MS HALEY: That's right.

MR. MacDONALD: The hon. government whip there says, “That's right.”

I think it is a further erosion of the democratic principles in this province by the current government. The changes to these Standing Orders have been draconian, and as session proceeds, Mr. Speaker, we get more and more opportunity just to see how limited democracy is in this province and in this Assembly.

It's not a one-person show, and the first thing that mature democracies realize is that every voice matters and every voice should be heard. If there are citizens who feel that we should look at discussing alternative ways of selecting Assemblies, then we should certainly take their concerns and not only have the proper time to discuss them but have a serious look at changing our system, and these are certainly changes that this member would endorse.

When we think of voter turnout rates – and I can look around, and I can see, for instance, the constituency of, let's pick, Calgary-Fort or Calgary-Montrose or Calgary-East, and we have voter participation rates of less than 39 percent. We look at the hon. Minister of Transportation. His constituency has the largest voter turnout rate in the province. Edmonton-Riverview, Mr. Speaker, is another constituency. Edmonton-Gold Bar is another constituency with a high voter turnout.

DR. PANNU: And Edmonton-Strathcona.

MR. MacDONALD: And Edmonton-Strathcona.

I think that if we could change the system and increase voter participation in the elections and get rid of voter apathy, then we would be doing democracy a good turn. You look at the constituencies that I mentioned – Calgary-Montrose, Calgary-Fort, Calgary-East – and the voter participation rate. These are areas of the province which have the most to gain or the most to lose from good or bad public policy, yet Edmonton-Norwood is going to be eliminated, unfortunately.

I for one am going to fight that. I don't think that's sound. I don't think it's sound that Edmonton loses seats in this Electoral Boundaries Commission. I think we should be gaining a seat, Mr. Speaker, to reflect population growth and economic growth, but I just can't go there. There was another motion that was not addressed in this Assembly that I thought should have been, and that was the interim report.

Mr. Speaker, on this bill I would urge, in conclusion, all members to take a serious look at the legislative proposal by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona and please vote for it. Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

MR. LORD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to speak to Bill 209, the Electoral Fairness Commission Act, in second reading. Today if I have time I'll outline seven reasons why Alberta's current first-past-the-post voting method is the best system for Albertans. In doing so, I'll show how Bill 209's proposed proportional representation voting method is inherently flawed, not suited to Alberta's population distribution, and could lead to some very bad electoral results.

Mr. Speaker, before getting too far into my thoughts on this matter and the specifics of why I question proportional representation, let me just observe that the bottom line to me on proportional representation is that it seems to be a concept that is promoted almost exclusively by political parties that have lost the election or failed to win an election regardless – and I will say “regardless” – of political ideology. I have had members from the left and the right – members of the Alliance, members of the federal PCs – promote to me proportional representation, and it seems to me it's promoted when people have not won an election or can't seem to win one. Thus, on the surface it appears to be just another attempt to change the definition, to deny the outcome of the reality of the democratic process. Thus, people really just seem to want to reverse the election results because they didn't get the results they wanted, blaming the system for their own inability to appeal to a successful number of voters and win the election.

Now, here, Mr. Speaker, are seven reasons why I suggest we do not support this bill. First, the current first-past-the-post method gives the best determination of a constituency's preferences. The system allows each constituency to vote directly for their own representative. Each vote is equal. The measurement is simple: the candidate with the most votes wins. This means the elected official that received the most votes from anyone else who ran wins the election. End of story. Alberta has a unique population distribution, and our current voting method appreciates that. Alberta consists of booming, heavily populated urban business centres alongside rural areas with unscathed environment and a sparse population. It's important that all areas of Alberta are represented locally. Alberta's diversity requires local representation to voice their local issues.

Second, our current method allows voters to choose between people rather than just between parties. In addition, voters can assess the performance of individual candidates. Under the bill's proposed proportional representation, voters would only have a say on a general list of candidates represented by a party with exclusive emphasis on party platforms and no ability for people to vote on individuals who may have exceptional talent or abilities which are recognized in our current system. I think it's important, Mr. Speaker, that our current method allows for popular, independent candidates to be elected.

Third, our first-past-the-post method facilitates broadly based, inclusive political parties, whereas proportional representation discourages it. Allowing competition based on individuals specific to regions brings many different viewpoints together.

Fourth, our current method provides a clear choice for voters along a political spectrum. Currently, Mr. Speaker, political parties are encouraged to clearly outline their stance on certain issues.

Under the system we see parties necessarily gravitate towards the popular left/right scale. As such, political debate is clear and focused. Please note that fringe parties do have a chance to win just as many seats, but unless the minority party support is actually representative of a large percentage of the population, it's difficult for them to gain seats.

Fifth, the influx of fringe or one-party ideas that Bill 209 would usher in would lead to a dangerously unstable provincial government. Mr. Speaker, an unstable government would undermine the public's confidence in their government's ability, and that's key to Alberta's security and prosperity. As well, the flip side of an established governing party is that the opposition is also given enough seats to perform a critical checking role and present itself as a realistic alternative to the government of the day, but it doesn't get to become the pure obstructionist party that can stop any new legislation.

Sixth, in encouraging legislation . . .

Confined Feeding Operations

509. Mrs. Gordon moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to work with the Alberta Agricultural Research Institute in researching the use of cost-effective technology to assist farming operations in alleviating nuisance-causing odours from barns used in conjunction with confined feeding operations or other related farming practices.

[Debate adjourned November 25: Mr. Lougheed speaking]

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

MR. MARZ: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure for me to rise this evening to speak in favour of Motion 509, the Alberta Agricultural Research Institute focus on alleviating farm odours, which was moved, by the way, by the Member for Lacombe-Stettler. Motion 509 encourages the government to focus funding and expertise through the Alberta Agricultural Research Institute to develop cost-effective technologies to eliminate excess waste odour from Alberta's livestock farms.

As Canadian farms increase in size and urban centres expand into previously rural areas, the need for livestock waste and odour management has increased. Confined feedlot operations, or CFOs as we've come to know them, have become a prosperous business in Alberta, and more applications are submitted and approved for these operations every year. These farms produce a large amount of livestock waste, some of which can be used by farms as fertilizer for feed crops and some of which may need to be transported to other farms if regulations do not permit a certain volume of waste to remain in one area. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of Motion 509 is to ensure that the Alberta government is actively seeking alternatives for waste management options and utilizing technology from around the world to enhance farming practices while protecting the quality of life in communities that surround these operations.

The Alberta Agricultural Research Institute is the primary agency in Alberta for funding, co-ordinating, and promoting strategic agriculture research initiatives and technology transfer in the agriculture and food sectors. AARI was established by the Alberta Science and Research Authority Act and funds numerous projects each year that play a significant role in advancing Alberta's position as a global player in the agriculture and food sectors. AARI's mission is to enhance the economic contributions of the Alberta agriculture and food industry through support for research and technology transfer with strategic emphasis on life sciences.

In November of 2001 the Alberta Agricultural Research Institute presented a workshop in co-operation with the Alberta livestock industry development fund and the Alberta crop development fund on manure. The Alberta research funders' manure research focus workshop gathered their expertise and knowledge on manure science, specifically focusing on three key issues of agronomics and manure management, odour, and treatment of manure. Agriculture research in Alberta has supported many research projects dedicated to livestock waste management. However, with the growing numbers of large farms and CFOs Alberta may have to look at enhancing their efforts to find an efficient and effective method of controlling nuisance odours.

As Alberta's population grows and communities are expanding into rural areas, investment into methods of controlling livestock waste odour are necessary to ensure that private property values are not affected, that environmental integrity is preserved, and that the quality of life of all Albertans is maintained. I don't want to leave the impression, Mr. Speaker, that this is strictly an urban/rural issue. It's also a rural/rural issue involving intensive light agriculture, or CFOs, and residential homes regardless of whether they're country residential or extensive farming residential, meaning to say non-CFO residential.

As you know, CFOs are a very cost-effective, efficient method of livestock production. However, with that comes an array of other problems, not the least of which is nuisance odours, which is a very divisive issue in rural communities. In my previous life as a municipal councillor as well as in my current life as an MLA I can tell you that I have received hundreds of complaints concerning CFOs. Most common amongst those complaints is odours and how that affects the quality and enjoyment of life. Previous measures to address this issue by municipalities include mandatory direct injection of liquid manure, filling lagoons from the bottom, which doesn't disturb the surface and also limits odours. These were initiatives that were imposed upon the industry by municipalities, and they deserve credit for that. New guidelines developed by the NRCB, which is now responsible for permitting, should further help in alleviating odours and nuisances in that industry.

I should also point out, Mr. Speaker, that individual farmers should also receive credit for their innovation and research on their own farms for limiting nuisances generated by their own operations. The Member for Lacombe-Stettler acknowledges that because she lives in an area where there are many of them, as I do. Farmers that I've talked to in the central Alberta area are quick to embrace new technologies as they become available. Some of you may have heard of Olds College. [interjections] Everybody has heard of Olds College, and if you've heard of Olds College, you've heard of the research and innovative work they've done in composting as well as their digester, that they've had on campus right in the middle of town for many years, which digests the manure and turns the methane gas produced by that into electricity. The University of Alberta is also known for some research projects on composting as well.

The technology to assist farming operations in alleviating livestock manure odours is presently in development, and large-scale waste management operations are currently in use in many European jurisdictions. Since our climate and seasons are similar, there is a possibility that these technologies from European countries could be adapted to our needs as well. The process by which odour is alleviated can also add value to animal waste by-products. For example, composting not only alleviates livestock waste odour but results in a nutrient-rich soil which can be sold as fertilizer. If economically viable technologies are developed, that would allow farmers to harness the energy from livestock waste products and, as I stated before, possibly to be used as a source of power, which could be sold through the Alberta Power Pool.

Motion 509, in the alleviation of livestock odours, would make the presence of confined feeding operations more palatable to nearby towns and villages and to their neighbours in the country. This, in turn, may allow larger operations to exist closer to communities, providing for more efficient use of Alberta's nutrient-rich farmland.

Mr. Speaker, with that, I'd like to urge all my colleagues to vote in favour of this motion. Thank you.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Stettler to close debate.

MRS. GORDON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just wish to thank all the members that have leaped to their feet tonight and last week as well to support this motion. I know that over the last week a number of my producers have actually phoned me and were well aware that this motion was before this Assembly, and they are very, very pleased that we are supporting their endeavours. We're all trying to work for the good of agriculture, the good of the product, and the good of the people.

With that, I would just encourage each and every one of you to vote yes in favour of Motion 509.

[Motion Other than Government Motion 509 carried]

Efficiency Targets for Measurable Outcomes and Goals

510. Mr. Cao moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to require that the measurable outcomes and goals for government departments and government-funded agencies include targets for improvements in efficiency in their measurable outcomes and goals to free up resources for all high-priority areas.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

MR. CAO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to rise this evening and begin debate on Motion 510, measurable outcomes for efficiency. The purpose of Motion 510 is to urge the government to strengthen its commitment to fiscal responsibility.

When this government was elected in 1993, it set out to change the way the government works in this province. The plan contained four basic commitments: to balance the budget, to create a climate for private-sector job growth, to eliminate waste in the public sector, and to listen to Albertans. The goal of this government was not just to reduce our spending but to restructure the government as a whole so that Albertans could receive essential services at an affordable price. The goal was to increase openness and accountability, eliminate waste and duplication, improve cost-effectiveness of programs, encourage innovation and creativity, and establish new partnerships.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that this government has stuck to that goal. I believe that it has come very close to achieving everything it has set out to accomplish. I believe that this government is moving this province towards a future that will be unsurpassed by any other in North America because it has kept its promises to Albertans. Motion 510 attempts to give this government an extra tool so that we can continue to keep our promise to Albertans, that promise being improved cost efficiency and effectiveness of government spending. This motion urges the government to develop better goals and stricter targets in their business plans so that we can better measure the improvement of various government departments. This is not to say that the system we have in place right now is inadequate. This is definitely not the case, but I believe we can never stop looking for improvement.

Mr. Speaker, this government needs to put more emphasis on effectiveness and accountability of business plans of the government-funded agencies, boards, and regional authorities. We need to look at the targets and standards these groups have developed and use them to improve the delivery of services at the highest level.

Allow me to give you an example of what I would like to see this motion achieve. The government could establish performance indicators to measure efficiency and effectiveness of programs. These indicators could be such things as improvement suggestions, the awareness of cost per unit of service, per activity, per unit of procurement, and so on. This could then create targets and indicators that would determine what resources could be better reallocated to other high-priority areas or used for new initiatives. This, in turn, would lead to the government being even more watchful of where and how the money is being spent.

Imagine that targets were developed and show how resources were being spent for a certain area in the initiatives. As part of the targets are met or found to be lacking, we could use this data to provide us with an idea of where the program is achieving its purposes and where it is not. If we see in one part that resources are more than what is needed, we know that we can take those extra resources and reallocate them to other sections where the resources are unsatisfactory. This way, through the measures we can tell where the program is operating properly or where it is not. It is important to note that government departments and agencies would have to continually examine their operation, including gathering input from the frontline staff, to improve cost efficiency. I believe this is the most important benefit of Motion 510. We as a government need to include the input of our frontline workers into the decision-making more often. They are the ones who understand the operations, and they can be used to better their work environment. Cost-cutting decisions seem to be made by bureaucrats who are frequently unfamiliar with what is being eliminated.

Mr. Speaker, continuous improvement is something this government strives for every single day. We look for opportunities to eliminate inefficiencies that hold us back. Motion 510 would ensure that all business plans, not just ministry business plans but all business plans of government-funded entities, include continuous improvement measures in their efficiency. Those which hinder this government's progress can be recognized, reorganized, and resolved at every level of government and bureaucracy. Newly developed measures would encourage all government departments and organizations to work together with administration managers and frontline staff to solve inefficiencies, to look within their own operation to create more co-operative interdepartmental programs.

Mr. Speaker, co-operation is a key in this motion. This is not something that is foreign to government. For instance, our government departments worked together in creation of the Alberta Corporate Service Centre. ACSC improved government's efficiency and the cost-effectiveness of administrative services through a shared service model. The ACSC is committed to providing high-quality services in a cost-effective manner through innovation and the best use of resources. This source of ingenuity is what all government departments, agencies, authorities, and boards must show. If we could have all levels of government co-operate better in the development of targets and goals, I feel that we would be better able to cut off the fat that naturally occurs when you do business.

Motion 510 is designed to improve the way the government works in this province. It gives the government and all agencies an opportunity to re-examine their priorities, performance measures, and goals to determine more cost-efficient procedures. In the process of government evolving to better serving Alberta, I think that Motion 510 is the next step to help this government continue the progress forward.

Mr. Speaker, Motion 510 recognizes the fact that whatever gets measured gets done. This is very important. When a department or organization sticks to its performance measures, efficiency will be accomplished. We should not have business plans that provide us with performance measures and targets that change from year to year. We need to develop targets that will improve our efficiency and that can be measured from year to year. Being efficient, effective, and economical is what this motion is all about. I believe that this motion gives government an opportunity to be a model in other publicly funded organizations. It gives the government of Alberta another great opportunity to lead the rest of the country toward a greater government.

The last benefit of Motion 510 is that it would promote greater program transparency and departmental accountability through increased monitoring. With better performance measures, targets, and goals Albertans will have increased knowledge of what departments and programs accomplish and how resources are allocated to priority areas. The more Albertans know about the government and its operations, the better able the government of Alberta can be.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that Motion 510 will benefit all the people in this province and will definitely benefit this government and its operation. The focus of this motion is triple E, like my hon. colleagues just said. Its aim is simply to drive at continuous improvement to be effective, efficient, and economical in deploying public taxpayers' dollars. I urge all members of the Assembly to consider the benefit of this motion, and I urge you to vote for it favourably.

Thank you.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure, again, to participate in the debate this evening on the motion as presented by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, the government targets for improvements in efficiency, Motion 510.

The hon. member mentioned the Auditor General's report, and I will get to that in my remarks in a minute or two, but certainly Alberta was the first provincial government in Canada to adopt performance measures. Alberta began publishing performance measures six years ago, and that's about the time I was elected. It amazes me that this is a government that removes performance measures whenever it doesn't suit their purpose. You see the budget tabled every winter. You're looking to examine one performance measure and how it might relate to a previous one, and sometimes it can be very difficult, Mr. Speaker, because, well, the one previous was simply removed.

But the performance measures in Alberta, I believe, are based on three principles: firstly, to measure the right stuff; secondly, to find the most accurate measures and use them consistently; and, finally, to report the results. Performance measures can certainly be used by a department in a variety of ways, including to track trends, finding the results of programs and services over the long term, measuring progress, developing goals, and evaluating performance.

Since the implementation of the performance measures in Alberta the Auditor General has been very critical of the province's implementation plan. The Auditor General's criticisms centre around three main points. Firstly, most departments do not use the same performance measure from year to year, making it difficult, as I said before, to measure progress. Secondly, some departments have developed performance measures where the measured results are unverifiable, making the true measure of progress next to impossible. Thirdly, the performance some departments or portfolios have established is not directly relevant to the goals of the department or the specific portfolio.

Now, the wording of this motion suffers, in my view, from a certain lack of clarity. It can be taken in a number of different ways, Mr. Speaker. Firstly, it can be taken to mean that when performance measures are not met, departments must set efficiency targets to establish when and how they're going to meet performance measures. Secondly, this motion can also be interpreted to mean that efficiency targets should be established to allow for the reallocation of resources. An efficiency target would likely measure how successful a given department is in producing the desired result with the minimum wasted effort.

In principle efficiency targets could serve as an effective performance measure. However, there are several cautions that must be taken into consideration when considering efficiency targets. Firstly, efficiency targets are more practical for some departments than for others. The Executive Council is not an example of a department that could and probably should strive for efficiency. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview may take a different view on that, but it's hard to say. Certainly, the Executive Council could strive to find ways to complete the same task using fewer resources than they are now. However, for the department of health the same principles may not apply. Striving for efficiency may have detrimental effects on other, more important goals like quality of service. For example, reducing the number of health authorities may be more efficient, but it may also decrease access to health services for rural Albertans.

Now, secondly, Mr. Speaker, efficiency targets are only valid performance measures for a finite period of time. There will come a time for every department when maximum efficiency has been reached. At this time striving for further improvements in energy efficiency will come at a cost of other goals a department may have.

Thirdly, in general efficiency measures are not good for the social services. The nature of social services often means that efficiency would be sacrificed to meet some other, more important goals. Perhaps the best example of this occurs in the Department of Learning. Efficiency targets, if defined as the ration of useful work to total energy input, would support the use of larger classes. However, small class sizes, although less efficient to some, are preferable because they afford a higher quality of education for the students.

This motion indicates that the funds that become available through efficiency savings should go towards priority areas. The wording implies that the author of the motion has taken the fact that the efficiency targets are suitable in all areas. Instead, efficiency targets can be seen as a way to reallocate resources according to priorities.

There are areas in all departments that are suitable for efficiency targets. For example, travel costs, ministry size, salaries, office supply costs, and communication costs are all areas that could stand to benefit from efficiency targets. For instance, last week in the Department of Energy, which was before the Public Accounts Committee, there was a substantial increase in the communications budget. I recall, without having the advantage of having the annual report from the Department of Energy here before me, that the communications budget had doubled. It was like the electricity bills of Albertans. It had increased a great deal, but to what purpose? Obviously, I think the communications budget of that department was overspent trying to do some damage control on those spectacularly high electricity bills because of the failure of electricity deregulation. That would be one example of a suitable efficiency target, certainly, for communications costs.

Now, Mr. Speaker, efficiency can't be the only criteria that this government measures their success against. The government's overarching goal is to provide services and programs for Albertans that meet the needs of Albertans. While Albertans are concerned about the amount of taxes that they have to pay, Albertans are arguably more concerned about emergency room waiting times, and certainly there's a lot of work to be done there to provide public health care to Albertans.

Now, in the government's 2001-2002 annual report in the Measuring Up section one out of 19 performance measures deals with efficiency. The performance measure in question is number 11, and it states: "Albertans will have effective and efficient infrastructure." It is measured by infrastructure capacity, and over the past year the target was achieved. Now, how could we work with this motion? When used appropriately, efficiency targets as performance measures could help to significantly improve this government's performance. Efficiency targets, if used properly, could reallocate resources so that priority areas like education, health, and Children's Services had access to more funding.

This government currently employs a number of performance measures that measure things that are not a direct result of the government's actions. For example, agriculture output is a result of the weather more so than anything the department of agriculture can do. Therefore, the government must ensure that the efficiency targets it implements measure things that the department actually does.

Efficiency targets would be a valuable contribution to the performance measures of this government as they would help to improve the value of the services and programs this government provides. Albertans will undoubtedly be happy if their taxes are lower and they can receive quality health care programs. I would also like to add the word "public" to that phrase: if their taxes are lower and they can receive quality public health care programs.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, if the motion can be interpreted to mean the efficiency targets should be applied to help government meet their performance measures, this is a positive. This government is notorious for not meeting its performance measures, and anything that can be done to help this government . . . [Mr. MacDonald's speaking time expired]

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

MR. LORD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm delighted to have this opportunity today to join the debate on Motion 510, which urges the government to require and review benchmarking and best practices performance measures in government departments and government funded agencies in order to find efficiencies which might free up resources for other high priority areas.

Mr. Speaker, when this government was first elected nearly 10 years ago, it had a four-prong plan to guide it through those first few years. Among those four prongs was the commitment to eliminate waste in the public sector, and part of the government's approach to accomplish this goal was the establishment of a wide range of performance measures. Having performance measures in place has many benefits. You establish benchmarks and targets as a departmental goal, targets that must be reached in order to establish minimum levels of acceptable performance. Additionally, you give your customers, in this case Alberta citizens, valuable insight on how the government is doing its job and how well it is managing taxpayers' money, especially as compared to other jurisdictions and/or past trends.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I'd also like to take the opportunity to speak for a few moments about the importance of vision in all of this. The overall objective of this government when it was first elected in '93 was to restructure government in order that Albertans could receive services of the highest quality at the lowest cost. Such long-range planning requires vision. Having vision doesn't have to mean some mystic talent or lofty, nearly unattainable goals. To the contrary, having vision is simply a matter of being able to think on several levels at the same time and being able to foresee the consequences of one's actions before they become reality.

One way to think about vision, then, is that it is the difference between doing things right and doing the right things. Doing things right refers to the process, focusing on the right process as opposed to the outcome, and is a common mistake of many bureaucratic organizations that get stuck in a rut of doing things the way they have always been done, just trying to do them slightly better each year. Doing the right things, on the other hand, refers to getting the desired results, period, even if you end up getting there in a very inefficient manner or in a new way.

Now, since doing the right thing sometimes involves not following an old process, perhaps because it isn't working anymore, of necessity it involves innovation, which often causes or results in inefficiency. We've all heard about necessity being the mother of invention. At the very least, doing the right thing is often viewed as an incorrect process. Efficiency and effectiveness, in fact, are two very different and maybe even opposite or at least competing goals and, unfortunately, are often confused as being the same thing when it comes to designing benchmarks and performance measurement. But these two concepts do not have to be mutually exclusive. I believe, in fact, it's possible to do the right things the right way, but you do have to have exceptional planning and you have to have good vision.

The challenge for any organization, then, is to be both efficient and effective at the same time. So how do we know when we are doing both? Well, what the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort is proposing in his motion, Mr. Speaker, is a review of our current set of standards to see if they meet this test and potentially setting a new set of standards for the government on how best to spend its resources, meaning the taxpayers' money.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort has proposed a very important initiative which I strongly support. However, I would like to take this opportunity to suggest we even take it one step further. Using the hon. member's initiative as a stepping stone, I propose that we strive provincially for independent ISO 14000 certification, the world's premier benchmark business process system. What, you might ask, is ISO 14000 certification? Allow me a few moments to broadly outline what this new-style benchmark is all about.

Mr. Speaker, the ISO 14000 series is a project of the International Standards Organization, building on work that was actually a Canadian invention started some 50 years ago. In Canada many of us are familiar with the benefits of knowing that our electrical devices are all CSA approved, meaning that as long as they are CSA approved, we don't have to carefully inspect every single electrical device for faults or have buyer-beware policies in terms of safety and quality. Also, if they are CSA approved, we know that they are standardized across the country and will work wherever we travel in Canada.

Well, Europeans have taken the standardization idea of ours considerably further. They took this great idea of developing recognized and accepted standards of quality and consistency and started applying it to entire business organizations and the output of their product and services. This is now the number one most recognized benchmark in the world, the ISO 9000 series of certification, which tells customers what they can expect from that company and what they will get every single time with absolute consistency. It also gives the company a business process road map to follow to ensure that they can actually deliver every single time the level of quality and consistency they said they would deliver.

ISO 14000 adds to the business process for engineering standards of ISO 9000 by adding the world's premier environmental management system into the mix. In other words, not only are we consistently the best in our delivery of products and services, but at the same time we are creating those products and services in the most technologically advanced, environmentally friendly manner known. ISO 14000, then, is a very dynamic road map for benchmarking and re-engineering your business processes to create efficiency and effectiveness, to be able to walk the talk and to be able to prove it as well as continually improve it. That is why I would hope that we as a government would consider adopting this standard as one of our main benchmarks for each department.

Mr. Speaker, we encounter standards each and every day as we go through life. For example, all fire hydrants in North America have the same size of outlets and hose fittings as a result of a complicated set of fire prevention standards. More recently Canada and the United States have begun talks on how to unify customs procedures in order to facilitate the movement of people, goods, and services between our two countries. The word that's commonly used to describe the desired outcome of these talks is harmonization of customs procedures, but it would be equally appropriate to say that what is being advocated is the standardization of Canadian and U.S. customs regulations.

Standards, Mr. Speaker, are closely associated with trade. Agreements on formal standardization are making life much easier for buyers and sellers of goods and services around the world. Market pressures are calling for a better understanding of the environmental costs and benefits of products and services. Environmental credibility, in other words, is becoming a factor in national and international competitiveness. More and more people are factoring in environmental credibility in their purchases. They do this because the environment is quickly becoming as important a concern to consumers as more traditional concerns like price, durability, quality, and serviceability.

Implementation of the ISO 14000 series and our attendant certification could help us increase our Alberta competitiveness through measurement and innovation, leading to increased profit, more efficient processes, reduced costs, and a more credible image worldwide. Seeking ISO 14000 certification is becoming more and more commonplace in the private sector. Here at home, Shell Canada became the first major integrated oil and gas company in Canada to achieve ISO 14001 registration for all its key operating facilities. They did that in October 2001, and it's one of the main reasons they're actually ahead of the Kyoto curve. Why did Shell Canada take this step? Because doing so was consistent with their commitment to integrate economic, environmental, and social dimensions into everyday business conduct.

We have other examples. The first municipality in the world to achieve ISO 9000 certification was actually Canadian: St. Augustine, Quebec. It not only recovered all costs within two years from identified savings through this process; it saw citizen approval ratings soar to over 90 percent and saw a nearly 50 percent reduction in customer complaints. Similarly, the city of Calgary is now, among only a handful of cities in the world, working towards this same goal. As a Calgary alderman I am proud to have brought the motion to have Calgary embark upon this major process to strive for ISO 14000 certification across all city departments. I'm pleased to be able to report that now in its fourth year the city is achieving great success in this undertaking and hopes to have all 10 major operating departments, all policy and administrative business units, and the overall corporation registered to the ISO 14001 standard by August of 2003. In doing this, Calgary is the first major municipality of its size in Canada and, again, one of only a handful of cities in the entire world to implement this internationally recognized benchmark standard, which is rapidly becoming a prerequisite for doing business internationally.

Mr. Speaker, our government has always stressed that it is open to new and innovative ideas with regard to development and programs. I think that Motion 510 makes an already existing practice even better by encouraging the government to look even more diligently for ways to control and reduce spending. By implementing the ideas outlined in Motion 510, this government would become a model for other publicly funded organizations to institute performance measures to improve their cost efficiency and effectiveness. As I have suggested, it would enable us to lay the groundwork for ISO 14000.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to make just a few comments about Motion 510. I think the previous speaker made an important point when he pointed out that there's a vast difference between effectiveness and efficiency and that the values that are supported by effectiveness versus those that are supported by efficiency can be dramatically different. I think you can use some examples that come readily to mind. For instance, if you value efficiency, then it may lead you to support top-down management. Certainly, if you want things done quickly, in a hurry, and what some would call efficiently, then you'd organize the management teams into a top-down configuration, and that is one way of gaining efficiency. But if you value human input and if you value a team effort and if you value the individuals in an organization, then effectiveness may predominate, and it leads you to quite a different style of management decision-making. So I think, as the previous speaker pointed out, it's important to examine the underlying values and not to take efficiency and effectiveness as part and parcel of the same concept.

I'd like to leave efficiency and effectiveness aside for the moment because as I have read the Auditor General's reports over the last number of years, and as I listen to the public, it seems to me that what is missing and what is badly needed much more than a consideration of effectiveness and efficiency is a consideration of validity. How can we make an effort to assure the public that what is being measured, the targets that are set, are really valid targets?

The business plans of the government are filled with measures, many of them quite meaningless. In Learning, for instance, if you ask any number of adults if they're satisfied with their local school, you can be guaranteed that you'll get 90 percent plus support for the local school in that kind of a general question. If you change the question, for instance, and start asking about some specifics – "Are you satisfied with class sizes in your local school?" – then the responses change quite dramatically and you don't get that overwhelming support. If you were to go further and to ask them, "Are you satisfied with the resource allocations for textbooks and for computers?" you would get, again, quite a different response than the 90 percent plus support for the local school. If we were to start asking university students if tuition rates were within their means to pay, we would again get a different view of the government's programs and business plans than what we are presented with each budget time, Mr. Speaker.

I think that efficiency and effectiveness are valid concerns, but getting to the core of the matter, I think you have to start and look at validity. Are we measuring the things that we should be measuring in terms of their meaningfulness to citizens?

Thanks very much.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

MRS. ADY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to join the debate on Motion 510. I'd like to begin this evening by thanking the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort for bringing forward this motion and for his continued efforts to strengthen the government's commitment to fiscal responsibility. The purpose of Motion 510 is to strengthen the government's commitment to fiscal responsibility by encouraging the development of performance indicators, targets, and goals that measure continuous improvement in the business plan of departments, publicly funded government agencies, boards, and regional authorities.

Mr. Speaker, I fully support Motion 510, and I believe it will add to Alberta's position as the country's leading fiscally responsible government. Since 1993 Alberta has changed the way the government does business in the province. Many are aware of the fiscal wonders that this government has performed over the last decade. Alberta is well known throughout Canada for balancing its budget and creating a business friendly environment which has made this province the fastest growing economy in the country, and I think most of them are moving into my constituency.

The other side of this revolution that may not be as well known is the restructuring of the public sector. Trimming the fat off the bulky bureaucracy was the first order of business. The second order of business, and equally important, was creating a more effective, efficient, and responsible public sector. The introduction of the Government Accountability Act in 1995 was a key factor in reforming the public sector. The act called for consolidated fiscal plans that included targets for each subsequent fiscal year, consolidated business plans that included core business goals, measures, and targets, consolidated annual reports detailing results achieved, and quarterly reports on government's fiscal plan.

The Government Accountability Act also gave ministries a vehicle to be accountable for their budget and program choices. This was necessary as the new way of doing government business shifted significant control and responsibility from central agencies and Treasury Board to ministers and their executives. The Government Accountability Act has had a very positive impact on public-sector reform. However, Mr. Speaker, it is time to take government accountability to the next progressive level.

Motion 510 has two components. One component is the development of tracking and reporting systems to assist decision-makers in the reallocation of resources. The second component is the development of systems that track and report on the efficiency of government processes. These two aspects will infuse accountability into the everyday activities of government departments, publicly funded government agencies, boards, and regional authorities.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to talk about the meaning of accountability and how it's related to government. In its simplest terms accountability is reporting. The basic ingredients of accountability are as follows: set measurable goals and responsibilities, plan what needs to be done to achieve goals, do the work and monitor progress, report on results, evaluate results, and provide feedback including target improvements. If all government-funded agencies and boards had to follow these guidelines and provide performance indicators to measure efficiencies and effectiveness of programs, for example, they could provide improvement suggestions or the cost of services provided per activity and per unit of procurement. Government transparency would be greatly increased. This newfound transparency would breed opportunity. Government agencies, departments, and boards would know exactly what they're spending their money on. They would know where to reallocate money within their departments and what programs were most cost-effective.

An example of this increased accountability that would be a result of Motion 510 is in the area of, say, regional authorities. The child and family services authorities, or the CFSAs, for example, could break down their spending to cost per unit of service and then develop targets and indicators that would determine what resources could be better diverted to other high-priority areas or used for new initiatives. This would lead to greater self-awareness of government agencies, which in turn leads to government being even more accountable to the public that it serves.

Through Motion 510 the government would increase our already stellar efficiency and transparency, which is the mandate of more government accountability that Albertans have given us. Government accountability and fiscal responsibility are top priorities of this government, and our track record in this area is excellent. Many provinces have followed our lead as they have restructured. Motion 510 is another tool to keep Alberta as a leader in responsibility and accountable government.

I strongly support Motion 510 and hope that my colleagues in the Legislature will also vote for this progressive addition to our commitment of government accountability in this great province. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

REV. ABBOTT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Good evening. I appreciate the opportunity to speak to Motion 510, measurable outcomes for efficiency. I would like to talk briefly about the merits of the motion before we call for the question at 8:58 p.m.

Mr. Speaker, since 1993 this government has committed itself to becoming more efficient. This has been done fiscally by reducing Alberta's debt and bureaucratically by increasing accountability. Motion 510 aims to encourage efficiencies across all government agencies, boards, and authorities through performance indicators, targets, and goals. In doing so, Motion 510 would free up resources for higher priority areas. Continual improvement like that proposed by Motion 510 is at the core of this government's success.

Of course, Mr. Speaker, our government does currently employ performance targeting in its operations and public documents. In fact, in 1995 the government introduced Measuring Performance, a set of performance measures and targets aimed at accurately evaluating government programs. This commitment to openness is reflected in the Government Accountability Act. Motion 510 would build on this commitment by requiring that targets for continuous improvements and efficiency be included in measurable outcome goals across Alberta's public sector. It's important to note that performance measurement has become a widely used management tool in both the public and private sectors. In the public sector, Mr. Speaker, governments have created various methods of gauging the performance of their programs and services.

One of the first major policy shifts relating to improved public efficiency came in 1949, when the United States Hoover commission recommended performance budgeting. The commission recommended the allocation of budget resources according to the direct outputs or activities of government. That commission represents one of the first high-level government efforts to improve the efficiency and effectiveness of government.

In private industry performance measurement has become a finely tuned science responsible for some of the most important technological advancements in the past 50 years. Over time, Mr. Speaker, government has adopted certain practices from the private sector, including benchmarking and continual improvement. I strongly believe that including specific targets for efficiency to our government's measurable outcomes will be a very beneficial next step.

I'd like to take a few minutes, Mr. Speaker, to talk about some of the specific benefits of Motion 510. First and most important, it's hoped that efficiency targets will improve public services. They will help strategic planning and goal setting throughout the entire public sector. An important part of increasing efficiency is improving the ability to detect and correct problems in policies, processes, or methods. An effective government, one that is doing its job, must recognize that problems exist and work towards addressing them. Motion 510 does just that. Further, enhanced performance measures across government departments and agencies can be valuable in a quality control sense. Ongoing monitoring is the only way to ensure that services are being provided to the public's expectations.

Second, performance measures provide a tool for government to communicate and drive forward their agenda. For instance, Mr. Speaker, performance measures require departments to consider their own objectives in light of the government-stated priorities. Further, if funding distribution is considered next to efficiency targets, then spending inefficiencies could be caught. Once changes are made, this would free up resources for higher priority areas like roads and schools.

Third, extending targets for efficiency to performance measures will lead to better government decision-making and less waste. The people of Drayton Valley-Calmar hate waste, Mr. Speaker. [some applause] Thank you. The key to making good decisions is having good information. Consistent, widespread measurable outcomes would provide elected officials and managers with an important source of useful information. Subsequently, Motion 510's recommendations would all help identify effective working practices across all government departments and agencies. Client-focused measures would help departments to improve responsiveness to their clients – that is, the public – and specific interdepartmental measures would help ensure that departments and agencies are co-operatively moving forward in line with their priorities.

Fourth, Mr. Speaker, performance measures and efficiency targets can also be a useful motivator for employees. If used correctly, performance targets can link the individual employee with government's broader goals. Having everyone working towards the same end and motivated to reach the same expressed targets could increase job productivity and satisfaction dramatically. Just think about it. How important is it to know how your specific job fits into the overall government business plan and how exactly your job is measuring up in a very specific way? On the whole, though, it is important that our performance measurement is fair, consistent, and clear, as the hon. members across the way have noted. This will ensure that the information taken from it is valid, reliable, and usable.

Fifth and similarly, tracking and clearly communicating government's performance will lead to increased public accountability. Voters demand the highest level of public services and expect that their tax dollars are used wisely in providing those services. As a result, Mr. Speaker, government has an important responsibility to ensure that programs are meeting their objectives in a cost-effective manner. Measuring program efficiency in the way Motion 510 recommends can play an important role in judging cost-effectiveness. Improved public confidence would follow as a result of demonstrating bureaucratic efficiencies and accomplishments.

Mr. Speaker, financial accountability is just as important to Albertans as public accountability. A government is financially accountable only when it demonstrates what the public is getting from the use of tax dollars in terms of products and services, how these expenditures benefit their lives, and how efficiently and effectively the funds are used. This type of accountability holds the government responsible not only for its actions but also for the results of its actions.

A sixth benefit of Motion 510, Mr. Speaker, is that performance measures allow citizens to more easily understand and monitor how their tax dollars are being spent. Citizens can also assess the quality and timeliness of the services being provided by government. Performance measurements focus on the result or outcome of government operations and not solely on how results are attained. This system takes a customer-oriented approach by emphasizing the impact government services has on citizens and by fostering increased public awareness and involvement. From this, Motion 510 could encourage increased public participation in the political process. Clear reporting of performance measures could stimulate the public to take a greater interest in how well the government is working. By opening up government in this way, individuals become more able to examine their government's performance and then more prepared to hold their government to account by getting involved. This is crucial. In this way, reporting of extensive performance measures represents another opportunity for valuable communication with the public.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, an improved system of continuous performance measurement would cause the government to reassess how it operates in light of its priorities and on the basis of objective information. The evaluation of public performance today goes beyond simply examining the dollar value of the costs and benefits of government programs. Valuable performance measurement cuts to the core of public confidence in their elected officials. In the words of John F. Kennedy, "The basis of effective government is public confidence." My hon. colleague from Calgary-Fort, who sits beside me in this Assembly, always talks about the three Es: efficient, effective, and economical. This motion supports and promotes these important concepts, and for these important reasons I urge my colleagues to support Motion 510.

Thank you.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort to close debate.

MR. CAO: I'll call for the question to close the debate.

Security Management Statutes Amendment Act, 2002

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I rise today to express great ambivalence about this bill. I find it somewhat ironic, I guess, that – well, it's not ironic at all, in fact. I'm standing here expressing my great concern about big government getting bigger and more intrusive and more powerful in the face of a government that is claiming to favour small government. While I understand the general rationale for strengthening our security management statutes, I nonetheless feel that we need to exercise great caution in our society as we give government more and more power to legislate and in many cases under this bill to regulate aspects of people's lives and to intrude further into people's lives. The effect of this bill I think is to substantially increase the powers of government to do exactly that, and it makes me uneasy. If I was confident that this was the end of the line in this trend, I wouldn't be nearly so concerned, but I am not confident of that at all. I think this may well be just one in a very large number of steps we see in the future that increase the power of government to do all kinds of things under all kinds of circumstances.

We are seeing this played out right now in the United States, where there is a move towards total information access, I think is what they're calling it, TIA, where individuals will have all kinds of personal information collected and compiled on them and provided to government officials. That really worries me greatly. I'm not sure how a free and civil society can continue to function if we go too far down that road.

I could go on in detail on that. I don't want to wander too widely away from the specifics of this statute, but I do want to express my very great caution that we need to keep the abilities of government to intrude into people's lives to a bare minimum. I do worry when I watch this government and listen to some of the discussions, for example, on health information or on emergency measures or on other aspects of government activity that they are not respecting people's rights to privacy.

One of the insidious effects of this, actually, is to affect the way that people think about themselves. I think that we can all identify with the sense we have when we're under observation. If we're in front of a crowd of people or if we're under the watchful eye of a camera, we end up modifying our own behaviour to suit the expectations of whoever is behind the camera or whoever is in the crowd. There's a sort of subtle censorship and a subtle shift in self-identity that's occurring there, and I'm concerned that we force people into narrower and narrower patterns of behaviour and in the process restrict their freedoms by observing them too closely.

So I think that we need to keep surveillance to a minimum. We need to keep the powers of the government to intrude into people's individual lives to a minimum, and I'm concerned that what we're seeing here in Bill 31 may only be, as I said earlier, the first step into a much larger intrusion into people's privacy. To the extent that Bill 31 complements the federal legislation, which is heading even further in the same direction, I am concerned about that as well. In fact, in many ways I think the federal legislation is more worrisome than what we're seeing here.

With those very general comments I will watch and listen to see where further debate goes and to see if any members on the government side express any similar concerns.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Bill 31, the Security Management Statutes Amendment Act, 2002, is a very important bill because it modifies our freedoms as citizens. I think that in the aftermath of September 11 we have become inoculated, if you will, to changes in our freedoms, and I think it's with alarm that a number of Americans are reflecting on those changes and asking the question: what is happening to basic freedoms? In the attempt to strike some balance between the ability of the government to deal with terrorists and an attempt to maintain individual freedoms, it seems that the individual freedoms, individual liberties are being sacrificed, or at least it seems that way to many commentators south of the border, and Bill 31 raises the same issue for those of us in this province.

One of the concerns, of course, with Bill 31 is that it leaves a great deal up to regulation and to subordinate legislation, and when privacy is a concern I think that that's unfortunate. How can we be assured that the regulations are measured, that the regulations are appropriate, and that those regulations don't unnecessarily intrude into the lives of Albertans? I think the lack of assurance that that's going to happen is what worries many of us who examine Bill 31.

I think that at least for me the most contentious parts of the bill are those sections dealing with freedom of information. It's in this part of the act that citizens are denied access to information, and it's done in a way that would seem I suppose acceptable to some, but I think it's very, very questionable. If you read the present clause, it says, "The head of a public body may refuse to disclose information to an applicant if the disclosure could reasonably be expected to . . ." and then there's already a list of three items. Then added to it is striking out (b), "or harm the detection, prevention or suppression of espionage, sabotage or terrorism." Then the next section it has added: "disclose activities suspected of constituting threats to the security of Canada within the meaning of the Canadian Security Intelligence Service Act (Canada)." The question is: how is it determined that a terrorist threat is present? I think that is a crucial question that has to be asked when we look at this particular section of the bill, and it's one that causes great concern.

The sharing of information with other authorities is another concern with the bill, and particularly

A minister may share with

- (a) the government of a foreign jurisdiction, the Government of Canada or the government of any province or territory, or a department, agency, board or commission of such a government.

Those are broad, sweeping powers for a minister to take private information that they may have about Canadians and their lives, Albertans in particular, and then to share that with any agency.

I guess that the most distressing part is section (c) of 9.1(1), and that's that they may share that information with "a police service in or outside Canada." That is a rather huge responsibility to hand to a minister in terms of private information about the lives of Canadians. You can think of all kinds of scenarios – and it makes you shudder – where private information is shared with some police forces in the world regardless of a reason for doing so.

The section of the bill that attempts to counter those concerns is subsection (3). It says: ". . . may use the information only for the purposes for which it was provided and may not release any of that information without the consent of the appropriate Minister." Again, the question is raised: how do you ensure that? Once you start sharing information with other police forces, with departments elsewhere, how do you ever in the world track it and make sure that the information is adequately protected and only used for the purposes for which it was originally intended and given to another agency?

I'd just like to conclude with one final concern, and that's section 66.1. That starts off with, "No action for damages may be commenced against . . ." and then it's got a whole list of people, individuals, starting with the minister and ending with "a teacher, a person in charge of an institution or a medical director of a facility." You can't commence action against them "for anything done or not done by that person in good faith while carrying out duties or exercising powers under this or any other enactment." Mr. Chairman, I think that relieves those agents of a great deal of responsibility and might cause them to act in a less careful manner than if they could be held accountable for their actions. So I think it's an unfortunate piece of legislation. I understand why it's there, but again I think it's unnecessary.

So there are a number of aspects of the bill that are questionable. I think that when we look at the danger of government officials overstepping or taking unnecessary action or reacting in an inappropriate manner to threats or supposed threats, the possibilities that Bill 31 allows, I think, are unfortunate.

I guess the other thing is that there's no assurance that should this bill pass, it's going to be the kind of tool that's useful in ferreting out terrorists or terrorist organizations here or abroad. There was no assurance given at the introduction of the bill that that would happen. So the burden to prove that the bill will do what is intended I think rests on the government and rested there when it was introduced. Like much of the American legislation at the present time, again, there's no proof that many of the new powers do anything to increase safety. It may give a feeling of increased safety to some, but for anyone serious about individual freedoms and the erosion of those freedoms, for anyone really concerned about their privacy, I think Bill 31 could be an alarming piece of legislation, and actually the measures in the bill may be more of a threat to citizens than any external threat to our country.

So with those concerns and reservations I'd conclude, Mr. Chairman.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I, too, have reservations about this legislation. Earlier, in second reading, I expressed concern and caution about when this act will be reviewed, and I have not received a satisfactory answer. That's one reason why I cannot support this legislation. Again, is there a sunset clause because of, in my view, the broad, sweeping powers that this legislation is going to have?

Certainly in light of what has occurred internationally, security measures have to be increased, but there are far too many unanswered questions in regard to this bill for me to endorse it or to support it. When we look at the federal legislation and the outcry that there was from Canadians in regard to Bill C-17 – I think it's the Public Safety Act – there's authorization for not only the RCMP but CSIS to collect passenger information from all domestic and international flights and to keep it for at least seven days. Now, one would think that it is reasonable to use such files to detect the movement of suspected terrorists, but at the same time the review of that legislation and the manner and the time in which it is going to be reviewed are still up in the air. It's still to be questioned. The same applies here with Bill 31, the Security Management Statutes Amendment Act, and until those questions are adequately dealt with in debate in this Assembly, I will not support this legislation.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I have raised a number of concerns at second reading with this bill, and I'd like to elaborate a little bit on them now.

One of the concerns, I think, that is the strongest that I have deals with the ability of ministers to provide information to a wide range of foreign governments, foreign police agencies, and so on and to do so without any reference points. There is no requirement in this legislation to have a minister ensure that information that is provided is, in fact, appropriate and that the minister is providing information to appropriate bodies. There's no requirement, for example, that the Minister of Infrastructure is providing information to agencies on the same basis as the Minister of Children's Services or the minister of sustainable resources or the Minister of Gaming. The Minister of Justice may provide information on a different basis and to different agencies who may not be working to common purposes, and the Solicitor General may be providing information to an entirely different set of agencies and so on. The question of whether or not individual ministers on their own initiative ought to be making decisions about providing information related to so-called terrorist activity without any guidance is a great concern, Mr. Chairman.

So the bill is very loose. It defines terrorist activity in reference to the Criminal Code of Canada, and that's fine, but it doesn't define, for example, which foreign jurisdictions information can be shared with. Does that mean that a minister could, for example, share information with the government of Iraq if the government of Iraq claimed to be chasing terrorists and that they'd operated, for example, for a period of time within Alberta and, therefore, there was information relevant and a particular minister all on their own could make decisions with respect to what information could be provided to that government? Another minister, for example, could be providing information to the government of Israel or to police agencies of Israel about their concern about terrorist activities.

Now, I happened to hear on the radio this evening an interview with someone from the Civil Liberties Association operating out of London, and this person was responsible for the file on Iraq. She indicated that their information had been taken and had been used by the British government and the American government in order to make a propaganda case against Iraq in order to prepare the populations here and there for war. She pointed out that this information was widely known, that they had been campaigning on the abuses of human rights that were taking place in Iraq for a number of years, and nobody had paid them any attention. The government of Britain and the government of the United States had not acted on the purely human rights related information, but when they are prepared to go to war, then, of course, they take all the information and they want to make use of it as the basis for – and these are her words – propaganda for war.

So she was lamenting the fact that the governments were not taking human rights violations seriously in countries like Iraq. What was interesting is that she pointed out that there are many people who have fled Iraq that are now part of the opposition against Iraq that, in her view, should be detained and brought to trial for human rights abuses. These are people who are now forming part of the opposition to the current regime in Iraq. So the question arises: if these people are, in fact, guilty of human rights abuses inside Iraq and have now fled the country and are forming part of a government in exile and they have allegedly been involved in human rights abuses and perhaps terrorism, then wouldn't it be possible for the government of Iraq to approach ministers within Alberta and say: these people are guilty of a campaign of terrorist acts against our country, and we want information within your files so that we can pursue their terrorist acts?

One person's terrorist act is another person's act of fighting for freedom. So the question is: who decides? Who decides on that question? In this act any minister could make that decision. Any minister can make a decision for his ministry or her ministry and say: I'm going to give information to this foreign government. There's no requirement for the minister to actually report that to the Premier, to the Executive Council offices, or share it with their colleagues. There's nothing in the act that requires that. So I have to ask why that is. Why is it that our personal information as Albertans can be shared at the discretion of a minister, with no accountability, with any foreign government that that minister deems appropriate? So there's a serious hole in this entire legislation, Mr. Chairman, and I think that we ought to do something about it.

With that in mind, Mr. Chairman, I would propose an amendment to the bill, which I will distribute.

9:30

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: Hon. member, the chair will require the original signed by Parliamentary Counsel.

MR. MASON: I believe that's what that is, Mr. Chairman.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: Okay. We shall refer to this amendment as amendment A1. You may proceed.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I will move that Bill 31, the Security Management Statutes Amendment Act, 2002, be amended in section 8(2) in the proposed section 9.1(a) in subsection (2)(a) by striking out “the government of a foreign jurisdiction,” (b) in subsection (2)(c) by striking out “or outside,” and (c) by adding the following under subsection (3): “(4) A Minister may only share or release information under this section in accordance with regulations made by the Lieutenant Governor in Council for that purpose.”

Mr. Chairman, just to speak to this amendment, members will see that the first clause of the amendment strikes out “the government of a foreign jurisdiction.” That is because it’s entirely inappropriate for provincial ministers on their own to share information about Albertans with a government of a foreign jurisdiction. This is not something that ought to be considered appropriate for a provincial minister or a provincial jurisdiction, for that matter. I’m strongly of the opinion that it is the federal government’s role and federal security agencies’ role, whether it be CSIS or the RCMP or military intelligence, for that matter, to make the determination about which intelligence information ought to be shared with which foreign government.

I don’t think that it’s up to the Minister of Sustainable Resources, for example, or the Minister of Gaming, the Minister of Agriculture, the Minister of Learning to make these decisions. I think it’s entirely inappropriate that this government ought to be giving information about Albertans to foreign governments. Why? Why should we consider that that is in any way appropriate, Mr. Chairman, particularly when there’s no requirement that it be an allied foreign government? There are no rules around this at all. There are absolutely no fences around the unfettered jurisdiction of individual ministers to make their own calls with respect to that, and I don’t think the provincial cabinet ministers ought to be conducting foreign policy on their own. That’s exactly what this bill gives them the power to do. We’re going to have – I forget how many cabinet ministers we’ve got now. Lots.

MR. MacDONALD: Twenty-four.

MR. MASON: Twenty-four.

MR. MacDONALD: Well, we might have 23.

MR. MASON: Yes. There are quite a few. Twenty-four. Twenty-four different foreign policies being conducted by this government according to this bill. So you’ve got the foreign policy of the Ministry of Infrastructure, and you’ve got the foreign policy of the Minister of Children’s Services, and none of them, Mr. Chairman, have a licence to practise foreign policy. That’s something that ought to be reserved for the federal government, and that’s something that ought to be reserved for the Minister of Foreign Affairs. I shudder to think of the foreign policy of the Minister of Environment. I can just imagine what kinds of foreign policy – in fact, what wars – he might get us involved in if he’s able to conduct his own foreign policy against countries, for example, that have endorsed the Kyoto accord.

Can you imagine the kinds of things that could go on. You know, it just boggles the mind. It boggles the mind to think of 24 different ministers each conducting their own foreign policy in their own department and handing out information about Albertans without any kinds of checks and balances in place whatsoever. This is serious. I make a bit of a joke about the Minister of Environment, but quite frankly it’s a very serious matter that individual ministers can hand out information to foreign governments about Albertans. They can collect information about Albertans. Then they can turn it over to any foreign government they want, any foreign police agency they want. They don’t have to report it to the cabinet. They don’t have to report it to their colleagues. They don’t have to report it to this Assembly. You could drive a Mack truck through the loopholes of this bill. It’s one of the most poorly thought-out pieces of legislation that I’ve had to deal with in the two short years that I’ve been in this place, and that’s going something. So that’s the first clause of the amendment.

Now, the second one says to strike out “or outside,” and that amends subsection (2)(c), which now says, “a police service in or outside Canada.” So it strikes out “or outside.” That means that the minister is now within his or her authority to share information with any police service inside Canada, but not outside. Once again, Mr. Chairman, what are the checks and the balances about sharing information with a police force outside of Canada? Why should a minister be sharing information with police services that may represent undemocratic states or states that are engaged in all kinds of international shenanigans? There are a number that do that. I don’t know whether or not this particular clause would cover the Mossad, for example.

AN HON. MEMBER: The Mossad?

MR. MASON: The Mossad, which is the Israeli secret service. It’s a foreign service. Now, their reputation for hunting down enemies of their country around the world is legendary, and they have made use of Canadian passports for their agents. They’ve kidnapped people. They’ve performed all kinds of activities. I saw a piece on the television – I think it was the Discovery Channel, Mr. Chairman – just this past week about the individual, Dr. Vanunu, who revealed the existence of Israeli military secrets, and he was kidnapped on an airline flight which was diverted through the use of secret agents entirely in violation of national laws of the countries he was involved in.

It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that information could be provided in order to support these kinds of activities, which are clearly illegal by the laws of this country, by any minister who sits across from us. So I have rather more comfort if the information is provided first to a Canadian police force, and then the Canadian police force can make whatever decisions they want to make relative to whom it’s safe and appropriate to share information with by way of other police forces in other countries. This is not the kind of decision that should be taken by individual cabinet ministers in this government. So that’s the second clause, Mr. Chairman.

Now, the third part I think is not going as far as I would like, Mr. Chairman, but in the interests of trying to get some consensus here and get support from government members for this most necessary amendment, I’ve gone considerably less far than I would prefer to do. It says in (4), “A Minister may only share or release information under this section in accordance with regulations made by the Lieutenant Governor in Council for that purpose.” Now, this gives the government an opportunity to put some fences around the unfettered discretion of individual ministers. What it does is say that the government can make regulations to govern how ministers provide information and to whom they provide that information.

Right now there’s no regulation, no control, no fences whatsoever. Each minister can make their own decision, and the decisions can contradict one another, and there’s no co-ordination at all. This would imply that the government is responsible to sit down and say: “All right. Here’s how we’re going to give the information. Here’s what kind of information we’re going to give. Here’s who we’re going to give it to.” They decide as a government, and then they have a set of rules which are passed as part of an order in council that governs how each minister needs to operate.

This is a minimum. This is an absolute minimum, as far as I’m concerned, before this bill can be made acceptable. I don’t know why – and I’d really hoped that somebody on the government side would stand up and say why – this is not a good idea if that’s what they think, because it really strikes me as a critical piece. It doesn’t take away power from the government, but it gives the government some responsibility to go with that power. It says that you need to determine the criteria under which information is shared. It means you have to determine who you share it with and who you don’t share it with. I think that’s very important indeed. I think it will prevent inadvertent contradictions in government information policy, and it will prevent contradictions between ministries in terms of providing information to foreign governments, and I think that it’s absolutely essential.

So, Mr. Chairman, I would hope that all members would support this amendment because I think that it’s a bare minimum to correcting the gaping holes in this legislation that put Albertans’ information at risk, which give any minister the power to share information with any government or any police service anywhere in the world with no checks, no balances, no supervision, or no oversight, and nobody knows about it. That’s the other thing: nobody will know. If their information has been shared with a foreign government, a foreign intelligence agency the people won’t know that this has, in fact, happened.

In fact, the Premier won’t know. If one cabinet minister wants to give the information, the Premier doesn’t even know that it’s gone on. Nobody else in the government knows it’s gone on, and certainly nobody in the opposition knows it’s gone on. Nobody in the population as a whole knows it’s gone on. I just think that that’s a totally unacceptable situation for us to be in. This amendment will plug one of the gaping holes in this piece of legislation, Mr. Chairman, and I would urge all members to support it.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

MR. LORD: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I rise to speak against the amendments which the hon. member opposite has put to Bill 31, the Security Management Statutes Amendment Act, 2002. I certainly understand some of the concerns the hon. member opposite has brought forward. I appreciate that he has brought these concerns forward, and I do not doubt his sincerity in being concerned about these issues that might affect Albertans and Canadians. However, I still rise to speak against his proposed amendments.

Mr. Chairman, the hon. member opposite talks about how the federal government, in his opinion, should have exclusive jurisdiction in negotiations, discussions, and policy regarding foreign governments, and then goes on to complain that this government has been too proactive in getting involved in discussions with foreign governments. I guess I would first point out that, in fact, discussions with foreign governments can be a very positive thing. It is not something that this government has done to excess. In fact, cities across the nation have twin city arrangements, which could be called discussions with foreign governments. Other provinces have certainly been involved in discussions with foreign governments. It’s not an area of exclusive jurisdiction or something that should be zealously guarded by the federal government, as the hon. member opposite implies. He goes on and talks about federal military intelligence – and, of course, we all laugh about what an oxymoron that one is – and says that we should leave these issues up to the federal government exclusively.

Mr. Chairman, the one thing that I’m noticing in his argument in favour of his amendment is that he’s assuming that this is a one-way flow of privileged and private and confidential information about Albertans or about Canadians that we are giving over to some foreign government over which we have little control. I think the hon. member opposite should be aware that, in fact, the information flow might be in the other direction. It may well be a foreign government that is giving us information about a potential terrorist or other dangerous person who has arrived in our province. In fact, if we are not talking to them and sharing information with these foreign governments, they will not be sharing information with us which might be vital to our own safety and security here within the province. So I would say that these amendments would virtually prohibit us from receiving information from foreign governments that might be vital to our own self-interests. So that’s one area that, I think, the hon. member opposite may have missed.

As far as putting fences around what we can and cannot do in terms of policy and what we cannot do in terms of red tape and prior approvals, Mr. Chairman, I guess the concern I have is that we are operating in a somewhat different environment since September 11 of last year. I do understand the concerns that he is bringing forward, and it may well be that this is something that needs to be reviewed and looked at in the future, but one thing I do know also is that terrorists do not operate by known regulations. They don’t wait for proper approvals. They move fast if discovered. They don’t respect red tape, et cetera, and while we are dithering about with the red tape and looking for approvals and trying to get all this process in place, they may well have come here, done their damage, and be long gone. So in this new environment, Mr. Chairman, we may be required to move quickly, do things that we maybe didn’t contemplate and haven’t developed policies or process around.

For that reason, I don’t think we should support the amendments before us. I think we may have to adapt in the future. We may have to adapt these amendments if problems do arise, but let’s not tie our hands ahead of time and prevent Albertans from maximizing information flow to and from foreign governments that may be very important for our own security and for our own safety here in the province.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It’s a pleasure to speak to amendment A1 as proposed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, and I certainly listened to his remarks with a great deal of interest. When one considers the role of the federal government – and I spoke about this earlier in debate – and the issue around Bill C-17, I think this is a very good amendment.

When you consider that it was only last Monday that the American President, George W. Bush, signed a bill to create the massive Department of Homeland Security, which will house the Customs Service, Immigration and Naturalization, the Secret Service, the Coast Guard, and 18 other government agencies – the aim is to share information in the pursuit of terrorists. I think this is better done by the federal government, and we will leave it up to the federal government. Certainly, I know there are many people disappointed in the Kyoto accord, and there’s the S word, the separatist word, floating around Alberta. I don’t think we need to go there in this province at this time.

Certainly, we had security arrangements, which the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre talked about in the last two sessions of this Legislature, regarding the Kananaskis summit. It would be my view that these summits should be canceled entirely and the money spent on programs to aid Third World countries with water systems and perhaps our own homeless and hungry. We could use vast sums – I think it was in the area of $400 million – to reduce child poverty. Let's let these world leaders meet in secret locations if these conferences are more than photo ops.

However, in regard to amendment A1, now that the Americans have created this sort of superagency, they can share the information with our federal government. At the same time, the Pentagon – and I'm getting my information from today's edition of the Globe and Mail – is working on its total information awareness program, a database that will house information indiscriminately gleaned from passports, work permits, airline tickets, car rentals, and the like. The guiding theory is that if the system knows all it can about as many people as it can, whoever these people may be, it can detect subversive patterns. The records will also be available to the Homeland Security Department's Directorate for Information Analysis and Infrastructure Protection.

Now, I don't think that any minister or this government is planning on sharing with those organizations any sort of detail on Albertans, but this amendment would certainly, in my view, put a stop to it if it were.

I find this interesting. In the Globe and Mail today it also states:

When asked to justify the considerable crimp in civil liberties from this random information-gathering and retention, the authorities offer much the same response: Would you rather have a police officer watching you or a terrorist? Assistant U.S. attorney-general . . . delivered an Orwellian variation: "It is not a balance between security and liberty. It is a liberty rooted in security.

Hmm.

The government and the bureaucracy excuse their overzealous collection on the assumption that any use they make of the information will be benign.

And we heard this in the previous speaker's remarks.

This is, as Oscar Wilde said of second marriages, the triumph of hope over experience. Consider the grudges pursued by former Federal Bureau of Investigation head J. Edgar Hoover, whose files brimmed with material the FBI had no business collecting, except to give him leverage over those who might mess with him.

The same thing could apply here. I believe the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands might be on to something here. What if, for instance, some authority in Alberta started to collect information on this hon. member just the same as J. Edgar Hoover did? This is an extreme example, Mr. Chairman, but it could happen, and we always have to be very, very careful about what we do with information.

In conclusion, I would also like to bring to the attention of hon. members of this House another item from the Globe and Mail. They have this to add.

And who will head the Total Information Awareness Program?

We discussed that earlier. The answer to that is none other than John Poindexter, who, in his previous incarnation as national security adviser to then-President Ronald Reagan, failed to tell Congress about covert American support of the Contra seeking to overthrow the government of Nicaragua. His explanation: "I simply did not want any outside interference."

If that is not reason enough to support the hon. member's amendment A1, I don't know what else I can say.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: All right. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Actually, I'd be interested in some questions to the minister responsible for this legislation based on the amendment that comes up. I think the Member for Edmonton-Highlands has raised some interesting issues around the relations between Alberta as a province and other international jurisdictions. Of course, there are constitutional questions here, but really my questions to the minister are mostly administrative ones. I'm wondering if the minister has considered any administrative structure for handling this kind of information exchange. What policies, if any, would there be around a minister of this government contacting an international government? What might the costs be?

This amendment raises various questions around the relations between Alberta as a province and other countries. I think it raises important questions, and I'd be interested in the minister's response, if he has any. Is there any administrative structure for this section of the act? Are there policies going to be put in place, and what are the costs?

Then I have some other questions for him if he's prepared to respond. If he's not prepared to respond, then I'm jumping back to my feet. Do you want to respond, Mr. Minister?

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, are you rising to speak on the amendment again?

DR. TAFT: Yes, I am.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The chair recognizes you.

DR. TAFT: Given that the amendment raises questions and issues around Alberta as a province sharing information with international governments, I'm wondering if the minister has any information to give us on how that information sharing might be administered. Are there any costs considered to that, and are there any policies considered to guide ministers on how that information might be shared, which governments might be suitable, and which aren't? Has any thought been given to implementing that section of this legislation? Do you want to respond?

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: Hon. member, there's no compulsion in this House for any member to speak.

DR. TAFT: No. I understand that.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: You can raise a question, but there's no compulsion on any member to respond.

DR. TAFT: If you want to respond, I'll sit down. If you don't, I'll carry on.

AN HON. MEMBER: Carry on.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The chair recognizes the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview. You are requested to speak through the chair. That's the common courtesy.

DR. TAFT: All right. Thank you, Mr. Chairman, for reminding me of that. I appreciate that.

I also notice under this same section and under this debate on relations between the provincial government of Alberta and international governments that there are provisions here that a government, department, agency, board, commission or police service that receives information referred to in subsection (2) may use the information only for the purposes for which it was provided and may not release any of that information without the consent of the appropriate Minister.

That's a quote from the bill. Now, the amendment would greatly narrow the scope of that list of governments, departments, agencies, and so on, that would get information. If we do not accept this amendment and let the bill stand as is, I'm wondering how the government might act to control or enforce this. If we provide information to France or Japan or the U.S. or India or anywhere else, do we have any way of enforcing this law? Again, if the minister has any comments, I'd be very interested in them.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

10:00

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: Okay. Hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, are you rising to speak again?

MR. MASON: Yes, Mr. Chairman, I am.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The chair recognizes you.

MR. MASON: I just want to stress that I did share these amendments – and I have a number more – with the Government House Leader, and he did take a look at them. I think it's fair to say that he was unable to get a consensus on dealing with them.

But, Mr. Chairman, I just want to indicate that we have seriously looked at this bill. We don't deny the importance of legislation to govern information relating to security. We don't deny that the government may wish from time to time to both give and receive information, but we find that it has not been thoughtful enough in placing safeguards in the legislation about the information, and the amendment is intended to make sure that appropriate information is shared with appropriate governments and agencies and that there is a plan for the government so that all the government ministers are operating within a framework that they share and they are not freelancing and they are not making individual decisions with no accountability.

So we are putting forward this amendment, Mr. Chairman, with a great deal of seriousness. This is not an amendment to just simply make a political point; it is a serious attempt to try and close what we believe are some significant loopholes in the legislation. The government, I would hope, will support that. If they won't support it, hopefully they will have some other amendments of their own to offer so that we can pass the legislation with a clear confidence that the information of Albertans is not going to be indiscriminately or casually shared with people that shouldn't really have it. That's really the question.

I'd urge all members to support this amendment. Thank you.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. I'm wondering if I can ask a question of the Member for Edmonton-Highlands. Does he have any information that this sort of information sharing may already have occurred between Alberta and other governments? Has this happened in the past, do you know?

MR. MASON: Mr. Chairman, that's a good question, but I think he's asking the wrong person.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, I would prefer that members in this Assembly speak through the chair.

MR. MASON: Thank you. I was saying that the hon. member is asking the wrong person and that he ought – and using the word

“he,” I think, clearly implies that I'm not speaking directly to that hon. member but going through you, Mr. Chairman.

I think, Mr. Chairman, that he's asking the wrong person, that if, in fact, this sort of thing has gone on, then one of the main points I'm trying to make is that no one will know, least of all the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

[Motion on amendment A1 lost]

SOME HON. MEMBERS: Question.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: Question? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I have several more amendments. If I can get some assistance with this one.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: Hon. members, the chair has recognized the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, who is bringing forward an amendment, and we shall refer to this amendment as amendment A2.

MR. MASON: Will you please check and see if that amendment is just exactly the same as the one I just moved?

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: No, it's not the same one as you've just talked on.

MR. MASON: All right. Then will you bring me a copy of it? Could I have one, please?

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: Hon. members, the amendment that is being circulated I believe is being moved on behalf of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona. Is that correct?

MR. MASON: No. I'm moving it. I changed the name and signed it because I didn't have the signature of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: You may proceed, hon. member.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Has everyone got it now?

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The chair has recognized the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands to proceed with the amendment that he has just moved.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. This amendment will change section 6(2) of the act, and it adds to subsection 2 “subject to approval by the Lieutenant Governor in Council” after “The Power Pool Council may.” What this simply does is to require that the plans and the measures that are put in place by the Power Pool Council so that they can carry out their powers and duties under this act in a manner that's secure against the threat of terrorist activity are subject to approval by the Lieutenant Governor in Council. In other words, they don't make the decisions with no reference to anyone else. Their security measures and the steps that they take must be approved by the government. I, you know, don't imagine that an amendment that gives more power to the government will be totally and completely objectionable, but I think that this simply makes it . . .

REV. ABBOTT: Point of order.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar is rising on a point of order.

Point of Order Clarification

REV. ABBOTT: I'm sorry, Mr. Chairman, but I have to bring up a point of order. This amendment that I was just handed says, "Dr. Pannu to move that Bill 31" blah-blah-blah, and then it's signed by Brian Mason.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: You require a citation.

REV. ABBOTT: Standing Order 20. It says, "Dr. Pannu," and then it's signed by Brian Mason. I'm just wondering who is making this amendment, Mr. Chairman.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: Hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar, the chair just draws to your attention that at the time the amendment was being circulated, the chair sought clarification as to on whose behalf this amendment is being moved. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands did correct the amendment that he is moving and not the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, so the chair has recognized that this amendment has been moved by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar has a way to go before he's the Stanley Knowles of this House. It could be a grueling journey.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: Hon. members, the chair also wishes to just clarify that the point of order that was raised on Standing Order 20 had the wrong citation, so it really wasn't even an appropriate point of order.

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, you may proceed with the debate.

Debate Continued

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. The amendment simply says that Alberta Energy and Utilities Board steps that are taken in order to provide security for the energy supply for this province need to be ratified by the government, and I think that that's an appropriate step to take. I think the government needs to have overall supervision and oversight of security arrangements in respect to this very important matter. It's not something that the government should be washing its hands of, and I think that this ensures that there's government responsibility and accountability for the security measures, and I think that it's entirely appropriate.

The intention of the section is that there will be plans and implementation measures to ensure that the Power Pool is able to carry out its powers and duties under the act in a manner that's secure against the threat of terrorist activity. I would say that it's important that we have some government responsibility. I might add, Mr. Chairman, that this is consistent with changes to the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board Act, and again I think that there's some consistency here between pieces of legislation that has not been attended to in the drafting of this act. So I would urge the government to take a look at that and, in fact, make sure that all of the acts dealing with this subject are consistent with one another.

So it's a pretty simple amendment, and I would urge all members to support it, Mr. Chairman, and at this point I will take my seat.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie on the amendment.

MR. LORD: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I rise to speak to the amendment again proposed by the hon. member opposite raising some issues and concerns regarding Bill 31. In this one he is proposing, apparently, that the Power Pool Council may be proposing security measures and that those measures should be brought before the government for full discussion and that we should perhaps put rules, regulations, et cetera, around those security measures according to past rules and recognized procedures.

I am reminded of a quote, and I can't remember it exactly, but it has basically the message of fighting the last war. In reference to, you know, looking forward into future threats and future problems, are we fighting the last war with requirements for procedures and regulations and red tape, and is that what this would require? I have to say, Mr. Chairman, that the idea that security measures taken by these private companies, by utility companies, by the regulatory authorities must be approved by the government first – well, I'm sure that they would design those procedures in accordance with federal government statutes, criminal codes, and so on. I'm wondering – perhaps I could ask the question of the hon. member opposite – if he's actually proposing that we have a full public discussion and full public disclosure of all the security measures being taken by these companies before we allow them to take those security measures and if he thinks that's an advisable course of action.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much. Mr. Chairman, I think the hon. member raises an interesting point. The question is: does this amendment mean that all of the security arrangements with respect to the Power Pool would be subject to public disclosure and be out there for anyone? I would answer quite simply: the answer is no. It requires the government – that is, the cabinet, which can meet behind closed doors – to consider and approve the arrangements that have been made, and they can do that simply. They don't have to disclose those arrangements in order to approve them, so I think it would be no risk whatsoever to public security, provided that you trust your cabinet.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. The Member for Edmonton-Highlands raises another interesting point with this act. The way the relevant paragraph reads right now is:

The Power Pool Council may develop plans and implement measures for the purposes of ensuring that the Power Pool Council and the persons referred to in section 9(1)(b) and (c) are able to carry out their powers and duties under this Act in a manner that is secure against the threat of terrorist activity.

Now, it strikes me as a fairly vague statement, and it could include all kinds of terrorism, although it does in the preceding section refer specifically to the definition of terrorist activity in the Criminal Code. So I take some reassurance from that.

But I do feel some concern as I consider the arguments I've heard that we may be delegating too much power to groups like the Power Pool Council. If we allow them to not only develop plans but implement measures relating to security without the supervision of the government, or the Lieutenant Governor in Council, I'm starting to wonder if we aren't empowering a group like the Power Pool

Council to establish a kind of private security or even paramilitary force to protect power stations and power lines. It could be quite a far-reaching force, and it's not clear to me at all that in the way the bill is drafted right now those people would be accountable to a public sector or to the government.

So I do express some concerns. I'm not a fan at all of private paramilitary forces, and if this could lead in that direction, I'd be quite alarmed. I'm sure it's not intended that way now, but it's not hard to imagine that if there were a threatened attack on a power plant or on a power line, we would see the Power Pool Council rapidly ramp up its security forces and begin implementing plans that could in some sense be a threat to civil society. So I could well understand why the Member for Edmonton-Highlands is suggesting that the activities, the plans, and the implementation of those plans by the Power Pool Council be subject to approval by the Lieutenant Governor in Council.

I am convinced by what I've heard from the Member for Edmonton-Highlands, and I wish that the other members tonight were paying more attention to this debate. If there is any member here tonight who wishes to venture a thought on the legality of delegating this sort of power to the Power Pool Council, I'd be interested in any of those thoughts, but I'm not expecting anybody to respond. It doesn't look like anybody will respond.

Those are my comments. I think this is a sensible amendment. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

[Motion on amendment A2 lost]

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.
10:20

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I have another amendment here, which I will provide to the pages.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The amendment again is indicating that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona is moving it. Are you moving this on his behalf, or are you going to move it yourself?

MR. MASON: I am moving it myself, Mr. Chairman.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: We shall adjust that accordingly.
The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I will move that Bill 31, the Security Management Statutes Amendment Act, 2002, be amended as follows. Section 1(2) is amended in the proposed section 30 by adding the following after subsection(4): "(5) A regulation made pursuant to subsection(2)(c) shall not be in force for more than 30 days."

Mr. Chairman, just to speak to that, this is one of the key parts of the Security Management Statutes Amendment Act, and it changes the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board Act. It defines terrorist activity as being within the meaning of the Criminal Code, and it allows the board to make regulations "for the purposes of addressing security in respect of terrorist activity or the threat of terrorist activity." These regulations are

- (a) respecting the shutting down of a well, facility, pipeline, hydro development, power plant, transmission line or electric distribution system;
- (b) respecting security measures to be taken [relative to] a well, facility, pipeline, hydro development, power plant, transmission line or electric distribution system;
- (c) respecting access to information filed with the Board in respect of a well, facility . . .

and so on and so on. The same things.

Now, this does have the benefit of requiring it to be approved by the Lieutenant Governor in Council, so the cabinet has to approve this. Here's something that's a concern, Mr. Chairman. This particular section of the act will exempt these regulations, anything covered by these regulations from the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act. So it allows the EUB to override the FOIP Act by a regulation. Now, that's interesting. You have an act of the Legislature which can now be overridden by the regulation passed by a nonelected regulatory body. That's a curious situation. That's a curious situation, indeed, and something that's quite a concern. In fact, I think it's a very, very serious concern. Here we have a provincial Legislature of duly elected people who pass a law that provides for privacy protection and provides for freedom of access to information, you have that act, that very seminal piece of legislation, which can be overwritten by an appointed body of unelected people, and I think there's something seriously wrong with that.

Now, the board with cabinet approval can also shut down by regulation any well or facility. It could be a gas plant, I would assume, any pipeline, hydro development, power plant, transmission line, or an entire electric distribution system if they believe it's under threat of terrorist activity. Again, there is some oversight on this by the cabinet. I think that that's important to keep in mind, because I think that's actually a positive element of this particular section.

But the question that really comes into play, Mr. Chairman, is: how long are we expecting a terrorist threat to last? So these regulations can be made, but how long do they need to be in place? What this amendment does is add subsection (5), which says that "a regulation made pursuant to subsection (2)(c) shall not be in force for more than 30 days." It puts a sunset clause on it. It says: yes, EUB, you can make a regulation, you can shut anything down, but you can't go more than 30 days without revisiting it. If, in fact, it's a sustained threat, then it could of course be renewed, and this amendment would not preclude renewing it.

So, Mr. Chairman, just to summarize, I think that it may be necessary and, in fact, the EUB with government oversight may be the appropriate body to determine whether or not security measures for a power plant or a pipeline or some other similar facility are appropriate or to shut it down in serious circumstances. I think that that's appropriate. I think it's also appropriate that the cabinet is required to approve these regulations. I think that's entirely appropriate. But I don't think that we should be having this kind of ongoing power with no review for an extended period of time, and the amendment is an attempt to address that. It's an attempt to say: you know, after a month has gone by, it's time we had another look at this. In fact, I think that that's a reasonable step to take, and I would certainly hope that other members will support this and will speak to it because I think that it really adds to the legislation. It strengthens the legislation.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: Hon. members, just for the record, this amendment shall be dealt with as amendment A3.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. Well, I have to say that I think the Member for Edmonton-Highlands has done a lot of the work that I was expecting the government to do. This, in fact, answers one of the questions that I raised when I was looking at this bill in second reading, which was my concern that there was no end point that had been written into the legislation. I reiterate that it always makes people very uneasy when they see sweeping powers of enforcement and revocation of people's personal freedoms with no time limits on it, with no fettering of that.

So what's being proposed here – and it's specific to the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board, but it does allow for, I think, a bit more security for those that are operating in that sector to know that whatever is brought forward has a 30-day renewal period on it and gives them some ability to hopefully plan or at least understand when they could expect a change or to have whatever limitations have been placed upon them lifted or whatever expectations are there, what could be expected of them for what period of time.

Indeed, I think this has been a very careful reading of this bill by the Member for Edmonton-Highlands, and I applaud his thoroughness. I think this is an excellent amendment, and I urge the government to consider accepting it.

Thank you, very much.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

MR. LORD: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Again I rise to make a few points on the amendment that's before us because, frankly, it suffers from the same problems as the previous amendments. They simply do not seem to fully comprehend or understand the seriousness of the situation before us and the different situation we have before us than maybe what we've experienced in the past.

Mr. Chairman, the hon. member opposite has suggested in this amendment that any regulations "made pursuant to subsection (2)(c) shall not be in force for more than 30 days." Well, if it is known and on the public record that any regulation made is only good for 30 days, well, what happens on day 32? Kaboom? You know, obviously, if we're aware of it, the public is aware of it, everyone is aware of it, it will clearly factor into a potential terrorist's plans to take advantage of that being on the record. The hon. member opposite is certainly bringing forward a sincere concern. I share those concerns. I understand that in studying history, it hasn't been confidence inspiring to give these kinds of powers to authorities and then take them back in the future, but we simply do not have a lot of choice in this case. We are faced with a very different situation.

The hon. member opposite discussed having these regulations approved by the Lieutenant Governor in Council. Of course, that would put it on the public record – wouldn't it? – and make it available to anyone who may wish to use it for their own purposes. Of course, if you did something like that, then you would have to deal with the fact that we do have some forward-looking freedom of information and protection of privacy regulations, which were put in place at a point in time and for very good reasons that gave people a great deal of comfort with their government. Of course, that was prior to 9-11. Perhaps some people feel differently about the situation or somewhat differently, and certainly we have to be cognizant of the reality that we simply cannot have security regulations, security plans, people's ideas of how to protect themselves on a public record and available for the bad guys to be studying and planning accordingly.

Again, Mr. Chairman, I guess I share many of the concerns of the hon. member opposite. I'm sure we all do. But we did not bring this situation on. We did not cause it. I have to say that we are all suffering as a result of the actions of the terrorists on September 11. This is part of the price all of society in the world is having to pay. But when it comes to amendments like this, I do have to say that common sense, which we all know is not so common, would dictate that we have to turn down this amendment for the reasons that I have outlined. Perhaps the hon. member opposite may have some good points that perhaps some of our members could take into account, but I would urge us to defeat this amendment.

Thank you, Mr. Chair.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Well, I appreciate the comments of the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, and I appreciate the fact that he's actually prepared to engage in debate in this place, which is what this place was made for. Having said that, I would point out that the hon. member perhaps needs to read the amendment and the bill a little more carefully.

The main argument that he has put forward against my amendment is that by passing these regulations by order in council, it would place it on the public record. Now, I don't accept that that would be the case, but if he reads carefully, it is not my amendment that would require these regulations to be approved by order in council. My amendment simply says that they are only good for 30 days and then they would need to be renewed. It's the government's bill that says that these regulations need to be approved by order in council. If that's his concern and the reason for voting against my amendment, then I would fully expect that he would be voting against the government's bill as well, because this is, in fact, precisely the reason he's given for voting against the amendment, erroneously so. But if he believes it's a valid reason, then it's a valid reason to vote against the entire bill. This is not a fault of my amendment but a fault of the government legislation. So I look forward with interest to his vote on third reading of this bill.

[Motion on amendment A3 lost]

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Well, undaunted, I will press on. I'll distribute this amendment.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: Okay. I've just received the amendment as it's been proposed. We shall refer to this amendment as amendment A4. Once again, for the purpose of recording this correctly, I presume that this amendment is being moved by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands and not by the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, as indicated on the amendment.

MR. MASON: That is correct, Mr. Chairman. Thank you.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: Okay. We shall make the adjustment.

MR. MASON: Mr. Chairman, I move that Bill 31, Security Management Statutes Amendment Act, 2002, be amended as follows. Section 12(10) is struck out, and the following is substituted: 12(10) Section 53 is amended (a) in subsection (4) by adding the following after clause (a).

(a.1) to any person with the written consent of the Minister, where the Minister believes on reasonable grounds that the disclosure will avert or minimize an imminent danger to the health and safety of any person.

And (b) in subsection (5) by adding the following after clause (a):

(a.1) to any person with the written consent of the Minister, where the Minister believes on reasonable grounds that the disclosure will avert or minimize an imminent danger to the health and safety of any person.

Now, Mr. Chairman, this is an interesting section of the act. The existing proposed act basically allows the chief medical officer, regional health authority, employee, or agent who "believes on reasonable grounds that the disclosure will avert or minimize an imminent danger to the health or safety of any person” to disclose the information. Similarly, the next clause as well. This is, I might say, the most personal information. This is information respecting the medical history of individuals, which is normally given the highest degree of protection in our society. Personal information of a medical nature is considered to be the most privileged, I think, of just about anything, and we believe that the clause in the bill allows far too much leeway to nonelected medical and administrative staff.

We believe as well that the final responsibility and the accountability for the release of this information ought to lie with the government and not with, again, people. Starting with the chief medical officer, virtually any employee of a health authority will have the authority to disclose personal health information if they believe – and they may well honestly believe – that it would avert or minimize an imminent danger to the health and safety of any person. This is a huge lowering of the barriers that have been set up to protect our personal privacy in this province, Mr. Chairman. Any employee can release any information on any person if they believe on reasonable grounds that the disclosure will avert or minimize an imminent danger to the health or safety of any person. So the potential for abuse of this particular section is enormous. It’s absolutely a serious matter which I would hope that members of this Assembly would pay close attention to.

I can imagine any number of scenarios where employees of a hospital might believe that somebody was taking an incorrect decision with respect to a transfusion, with respect to abortion, with respect to any number of matters that might place their health in danger, and that person would be authorized by this section to disclose personal health information to any person in order to deal with the situation as they perceive it. No check, no balance, no safeguards. Once again this act is tearing gaping holes in people’s right to privacy in this province.

This is another very serious one, Mr. Chairman, and I would certainly hope that the government would be prepared to address this while we’re having the debate on the amendment instead of just sitting there and hoping that the opposition will go away. Well, we won’t, but the government has an opportunity to actually address some of these serious concerns if they respect the legislative process and if, in fact, they care about people’s personal privacy in this legislation. Their silence will condemn them on both counts.

Thank you.

MS CARLSON: Mr. Chairman, in speaking to the amendment, I wonder if the Member for Edmonton-Highlands could define for us what he sees as reasonable grounds.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: Are you ready for the question on the amendment?

MS CARLSON: I asked a question of the Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, you may ask any questions that you want, but there’s no compulsion on any member to answer them. Since nobody is rising . . .

MS CARLSON: He didn’t hear it, Mr. Chairman. I’m going to repeat the question. It’s a little too noisy in here.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The chair will recognize the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you. To the Member for Edmonton-Highlands: could you define what you see as reasonable grounds for us?

MR. MASON: Well, I think that’s a good question, and that’s a question I would certainly have for the people who have drafted this legislation. The proposed act says that if any “employee or agent believes on reasonable grounds that the disclosure will avert or minimize an imminent danger to the health or safety of any person,” then they can disclose that information. Now, I understand that reasonable grounds are something that would probably ultimately be defined by the courts, that if there was any court action, there would be some definition. There may, in fact, be some jurisprudence around that now. But if someone felt that their personal information had been unjustifiably released, they could, I assume, take court action, and the court would render a decision. I think that’s an awkward, cumbersome, and expensive way to deal with it. I think it would be a lot better if we simply held the government accountable for this kind of decision, and that’s what the amendment would in fact do.

Thank you for the question.

MS CARLSON: Mr. Chairman, I have one more question for the member, who seems to be the only person able to answer questions this evening on this amendment and this bill. What would this member see as a remedy for malicious intent of anyone who might go forward and say that they had reasonable grounds but who didn’t really?

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. To the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, unless it’s precluded in some section of the act that I’ve missed, the only recourse would be through the courts. I certainly think that that is not an entirely acceptable way to deal with this.

The problem really is that this act is any employee. Any employee of any health authority has the right to use their own judgment in this matter and release personal health information. Now, unless I’m wrong – and I could be – and the government is willing to address this question, then I think that’s an appalling breach of the principles that have been established to date in Alberta about personal privacy and especially as it respects personal health information. So this is a really serious breach. I mean, even if it were the chief medical officer, my amendment says it’s got to be approved by the government. But even if it were limited to the chief medical officer, it would be a substantial improvement. But as I read it – and again I’m begging to be corrected by the minister over there – any nurse, clerk, orderly, or janitor of the health authority could release health information of an individual if they thought that it was justified to protect anybody’s health or safety.

[Motion on amendment A4 lost]

MR. MASON: Mr. Chairman, I’m advised by the Parliamentary Counsel that my last amendment is similar enough to my first amendment that it would probably be ruled out of order. So, alas, I’ve run out of amendments.

[The clauses of Bill 31 agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

SOME HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: Opposed?

SOME HON. MEMBERS: Opposed.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: Carried.

Bill 37

Occupational Health and Safety Amendment Act, 2002

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It's with a great deal of interest and anticipation that I rise to participate in the debate on Bill 37 at committee. Certainly, as I said before, at second reading one cannot overlook the commitment not only of the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar but, certainly, of the minister. The Minister of Human Resources and Employment has made a commitment to improve the work sites of this province.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I think one has to look at this legislation. Certainly, you're not always going to get everything that you want. In light of the statistics that have been discussed earlier, this will be an improvement, and we're just going to have to give it time and see if it works out. I think it will.

I do have some questions and I have some amendments to this legislation, but before we get to that, Mr. Chairman, I would like it if at some time members from across the way could assure this member that small business can feel comfortable with this legislation. If the smaller companies unfortunately do have an accident, how will the recording or the reporting of those accident records be dealt with by the government? Certainly, we have to create a safety culture with the business interests of this province. Small businesses have to feel comfortable phoning the call centre that was designed and implemented by the current Minister of Human Resources and Employment. I hope that small business owners are not fearful that if they do call the call centre, somehow an inspector would be knocking on their door the following day to check out their operation.

I am seeking assurance from the other side of the House that this is not going to happen. I don't think it would or it will. I don't know how the phone calls are monitored, but I gather it to be an information-only basis, and it wouldn't be a means for inspectors to be seeking out employers. I didn't get that impression whenever I had the privilege of a tour of that place, but if that's a practice that's going on, I think people are going to lose confidence very quickly in that call centre. I don't think it is a practice that's going on, but in the course of debate hopefully we can get to the bottom of that.

Now, we look at the number of accidents and the fact that the minister – and I referred to this earlier – talked about this in a speech that was given, I believe, in Australia, where 1 percent of the employers are responsible for 26 percent of the accidents. I'm looking at section 28.1 and the publication of information about employers.

Mr. Chairman, at this time I have an amendment if I could leave this for the pages to deliver to the table. I think we're going to have to shame some of those employers into a better safety record. I have to encourage all members of this Assembly to have a look at this, and this is the amendment. The amendment would be to have the minister name names, not be left with the option that they may name names. I think that I would be much more comfortable with "The Minister shall," in order to enhance the protection of workers and the prevention of work site injuries by encouraging good and discouraging bad work site records, and it goes on to list. I would be much more comfortable if the minister were obligated to name names, point out not only to employees but other employers in the field – the competitors, so to speak, in the field – the track record of some of these outfits that have dismal records, and this would be one way to do it.

The idea behind the amendment that I'm proposing this evening to section 28.1 is that the minister would be obligated to name names. At the same time, I would caution the government to consider, again, having a ceiling on this: I have to have so many accidents, or I have to have so many employees. That's to protect small business because in a company with, say, four workers, if two of them got injured, well, that's 50 percent of your workforce; right? I don't think that is appropriate.

Mr. Chairman, I believe the amendment has been circulated.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The amendment has been circulated, and we shall refer to this amendment as amendment A1.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. In that regard, amendment A1 would take good legislation and, I believe, make an improvement to it. At this time, now that the amendment has been circulated, I would cede the floor to other hon. members of this House.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

REV. ABBOTT: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I just want to respond to the one question brought up by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar in speaking to amendment A1. In fact, amendment A1 would do exactly what the minister has asked us not to do, and that is to obligate small business to be a part of this best and worst performance list. The way that the bill currently reads is that the publishing of the best and worst is optional, so because it's optional, that leaves it to the minister's discretion. I like it that way because if it is a small business that, as the hon. member pointed out, only has four employees, and if they happen to have a bad year and two of them get injured – you know, it looks like they have a 50 percent injury rate – the minister at his discretion would say: well, this is an anomaly; therefore, they're not going to be a part of the worst performers.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I would propose to my colleagues that we do not support this first amendment and that we do leave it discretionary for the minister so that he can have that opportunity for fairness and to treat each individual case as per its merits and as per its history, et cetera, with the specific notion to help small business and to make sure that no small business is unfairly treated but, at the same time, to try to help improve the safety performance of the larger corporations or even of the small businesses that are repeated, repeated offenders.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I find this an interesting debate. I listened to the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, and he made sense. I listened to the Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar . . .

MS BLAKEMAN: And he didn't.

DR. TAFT: No, he made some sense, too. It's good to see that the Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar has such respect from his colleagues.

But as I read this, I'm wondering what I see here in the example that the Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar gave, a small business with four employees. Maybe there's a car accident and two of them are injured. It looks like they have a terrible injury rate. I think that's a good example, a compelling example even. But it seems to me that under section 28.1(a) the minister may "establish indices and measurements of work site injury prevention" and so on and under (b) "maintain a register." The minister would have the full capacity to establish measurements and regulations and indices that would accept or accommodate for that sort of an anomaly. He may have one set of standards for small businesses and another set for large employers, or it may be something that's measured over several years. So I think that while the Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar gives a very good example, this section would allow the minister to develop indices and measurements that would accommodate those problems.

So then I return to the amendment, which would change "may" to "shall," and I think to myself: if we really are serious – and I believe we are serious in this province about improving workplace safety – then we should make certain demands, unequivocal demands. I like the sense that the proposed amendment would strengthen 28.1 and make it absolutely clear yet at the same time, I suspect, give the minister enough leeway to define indices and measures that account for the problems raised by Drayton Valley-Calmar. So I go back and forth and end up coming back to support the amendment.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. minister of human resources.

MR. DUNFORD: Yes. Just to speak to the amendment, I want to reaffirm my colleague from Drayton Valley-Calmar's position. We're trying to provide some discretion as we move forward in a new venture in terms of publishing these names, so we don't want to get locked into a situation. We're trying to provide, then, as much discretion as we can.

I'm rising, though, also to address the questions that the mover made regarding the call centre. I can assure this member and all members of the House that we do not use the call centre as some sort of retribution mechanism. If an employer calls seeking bona fide information, then we provide that information as best we can. There are some reasons, though, when a call to a call centre might create an investigation or an inspection, and that is that we do accept anonymous calls to that particular call centre. We know that sometimes there's a hesitancy on the part of a worker or perhaps even a member of a worker's family that believes that Workplace Health and Safety should be made aware of a particular situation, but they choose to do it anonymously. We will accept that call, and we will seek that information. But the assurance that the member is looking for, as I understood it, was that because an employer called in for bona fide information, that would not make that employer a target.

[Motion on amendment A1 lost]

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton Gold-Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Now, the importance of this bill cannot be overlooked. On the day that it was introduced or around the period of time it was introduced, there were, unfortunately, accidents across this province that cost three workers their lives just in a short period of time. One cannot underestimate the importance or the significance of this bill, and I certainly hope that we will see in the future an improved safety record by all in this province.

However, when you look at this legislation, before we proceed any further in committee, Mr. Chairman, one has to consider the use of penalties, the administrative penalties. I at this time have to certainly question allowing the use of administrative penalties similar to those used for traffic violations. The introduction of these fines, as I understand it, will depend upon a review of these fines in other jurisdictions to determine their effectiveness.

Well, Mr. Chairman, these administrative fines have been used in other jurisdictions, and the Canadian Federation of Independent Business is strongly opposed to any system of administrative fines. Now, from documents that I have received from the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, they have had quite a discussion regarding this. They state here that they are encouraged that the joint industry and government strategy on workplace safety is proposing to study the experience elsewhere, and the Canadian Federation of Independent Business has challenged them to provide solid information that shows that administrative fines actually reduce the incidence of workplace injury before moving forward in Alberta.

The members do not believe that administrative fines will contribute significantly to reducing workplace injury. Instead, the Canadian Federation of Independent Business fears – and I share that fear – that the use of administrative fines may become a core revenue source for Workplace Health and Safety, and there is a danger that the use of administrative fines may be abused by officers, which will come at an extreme cost to employers. It should also be noted that Alberta employers found guilty of serious workplace health and safety violations may face prosecution, with a maximum fine of half a million dollars under this proposed legislation.

Now, the Canadian Federation of Independent Business recommends against the introduction of administrative fines as the government will be increasing its ability to punish employers who do not meet their obligations under the act. Also, employees who may be in an industry, the construction industry, where this is used in Ontario, may find this difficult to appeal.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, in regard to the administrative penalties it should be noted that few jurisdictions in Canada utilize administrative fines. British Columbia is currently reviewing their utilization, Ontario limits the use of administrative fines to the construction industry, and while Manitoba recently passed a system of administrative fines for situations of noncompliance with safety orders, there were a number of changes made that limit the scope and authority of safety officers to hand out tickets. It is important to note in the Canadian Federation of Independent Business presentation that Saskatchewan has resisted the use of administrative fines, despite attempts by unions to have them introduced.

Now, I will wait and certainly see what the review of these fines in other jurisdictions does here in this province, but I, too, share that concern. If we can have another attempt at making this legislation better, Mr. Chairman, it certainly would be an amendment which I sent to the table earlier, and I await your instructions in regard to this proposed amendment.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: We shall refer to this amendment as amendment A2.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Now,

I would at this time like to amend section 17 of the Occupational Health and Safety Amendment Act, 2002. Section 17 is amended by adding the following clause after clause (c), and it's (d), by striking out subsection (4) and substituting the following: "A prosecution under this Act may be commenced within 2 years after the commission of the alleged offence, but not afterwards." This amendment would allow the hon. minister and his staff and occupational health and safety officers two years in which to conduct an investigation regarding an accident, a fatality. They would have two years instead of one year in which to prosecute.

Now, I think that in light of the accident rates and in light of the fact that, unfortunately, we have over two persons killed a week in this province, occupational health and safety officers, in my view, do not have enough time to perhaps as thoroughly investigate this as they would like. That's why I would like to see this increased from one year to two. It shouldn't be much of a change when you consider, for instance, that the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act has a two-year limit, and you look at the Hub Oil explosion, where charges were laid almost to the hour a year after the explosion that killed two Albertans.

So when we have a look at the fatality claims accepted, if hon. members of this Assembly would be kind and gracious enough to support this amendment, I think we can have better legislation. If they have any concerns about increasing this limit from one to two years, I would encourage them to go to the minister's library on the second floor, the old Alberta Labour library, and just open those files on the fatalities that have occurred in this province, just go through them. For the sake of a year, to increase rigorous enforcement of this act, I would encourage all members to have a good look at amendment A2.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

REV. ABBOTT: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Speaking to amendment A2, I certainly see this as a friendly amendment, and I would suggest that my colleagues support this amendment by the hon. member across the way. In fact, I'm going to speak to it for a moment.

This amendment would extend the statute of limitations for prosecutions to two years from the current one-year limit. I know that the Crown prosecutors' office supports this amendment on the basis that the gathering of evidence often takes longer than one year. In fact, a two-year statute of limitations would make the Occupational Health and Safety Act consistent with most other provincial statutes, as the member mentioned; for example, the Alberta Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act. This makes it easier for the Crown prosecutors' office to co-ordinate the laying of charges in cases where more than one statute has been violated. So I do see this as a friendly amendment.

I also want to make a comment with respect to the member's comments about the use of administrative fines. While I do have the greatest respect for the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, I do want to remind the member that his own words in his speech on second reading were that "voluntary compliance did not work." That's the reason for this whole bill. The reason we have brought in these administrative fines, Mr. Chairman, is because Alberta has had a history of compliance problems with certain industry sectors; for example, roofing, where workers and supervisors would knowingly ignore the Occupational Health and Safety law. Prosecutions are not an effective use of the resources under such situations because of the minor fines. An administrative fine or fixed-fine system would be an efficient way of achieving the necessary deterrent effects to improve workplace health and safety.

So, Mr. Chairman, as I look at this, I do want to recommend that my colleagues support amendment A2. I do want to remind the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar of a few of his quotes from his speech in second reading where he said that he thinks that these amendments "are an improvement." He said this on page 1634 of Hansard. He said, "The minister and the hon. member are on the right track with this bill, I believe." He said, "I for one believe that vigilant enforcement of occupational health and safety laws and regulations will work." These are the words of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

He also said on 1635 of Hansard, "This is good legislation, and I think we can make it better." Certainly this amendment will help us to do that. Therefore, we support this amendment, and I urge my colleagues to support it as well.

Thank you.

[Motion on amendment A2 carried]

[The clauses of Bill 37 as amended agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: Opposed? Carried.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would move that the committee now rise and report.

[Motion carried]

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

MR. JOHNSON: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following: Bill 35, Bill 38, Bill 33, Bill 34, and Bill 31. The committee reports Bill 37 with some amendments. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Does the Assembly concur in the report?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Opposed? So ordered.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In view of the excellent progress on both sides of the House this evening I would move that we now stand adjourned until 1:30 tomorrow afternoon.

[Motion carried; at 11:18 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Tuesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Tuesday, December 3, 2002

1:30 p.m.

Date: 02/12/03

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

head: Prayers

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Let us pray. Our Father, we confidently ask for Your strength and encouragement in our service of You through our service of others. We ask for Your gift of wisdom to guide us in making good laws and good decisions for the present and the future of Alberta. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Visitors

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Lethbridge-East, Leader of Her Majesty's Official Opposition.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to introduce to you and through you a former Member of this Legislative Assembly. Nick Taylor served the province of Alberta from 1986 to 1994, first as an MLA for the constituency of Westlock-Sturgeon and then the constituency of Redwater. Nick was leader of the Alberta Liberal Party from 1974 to 1988. Then he served all Canadians as a Senator from Alberta and now faces retirement. Why are you back here, Nick? Looking for another job? Nick has been very involved in the oil and gas exploration industry with a reputation that is worldwide. Please join me in giving Nick Taylor a warm welcome back to the House.

MR. OUELLETTE: Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through to all members of the Assembly a man that is no stranger to this House. He represented the great people of Innisfail-Sylvan Lake as their MLA from 1989 to 2001. He served on numerous committees and did a great job for all Albertans. He is still very active in government. He's also very active in the Innisfail-Sylvan Lake constituency keeping the new MLA in that constituency on track, and everyone knows how tough a job that is. He is seated in your gallery, Mr. Speaker, and at this time I would like Gary Severtson to rise and have a warm welcome from the House.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

MR. DUCHARME: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is with great pleasure that I introduce to you and through you to the Members of the Legislative Assembly Mr. Scott Sutton, the Ombudsman for the province of Alberta. Mr. Sutton is seated in your gallery, Mr. Speaker, and I'd ask that he please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

head: Introduction of Guests

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development, Deputy Premier.

MRS. McCLELLAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a very accomplished young woman, Lauren Chykalsky. Lauren is from Peace River. She is with us today in your gallery, Mr. Speaker. Lauren is the 2002 Premier's 4-H award recipient, the highest honour the 4-H program bestows on a member. The Premier's 4-H award winner recognizes that youth demonstrate strong project management, leadership skills, dedication to service. They exemplify the 4-H motto of Learn to Do by Doing. Lauren's parents, Walter and Jeanne, and sister Tara are accompanying her today, and I would invite Lauren and her family to rise and receive the very warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Community Development.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed a great pleasure and an honour to introduce to you two groups visiting here today. First of all, some very special guests who are here from Velma E. Baker elementary school. These are grade 6 students. Among other things they are touring the Legislature, and they're also taking part in the mock Legislature session. Could I ask all the students from Velma E. Baker school, Reva Robillard, the parents and helpers who are here with them to please rise and receive the very warm welcome of our Assembly.

Secondly, Mr. Speaker, it is an additional honour for me to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly some very special guests who are seated in the members' gallery. They are board members, both current and past, of the Premier's Council on the Status of Persons with Disabilities. I would ask each of them to give us a wave or a nod or, if possible, to rise as I announce them: Shirley Dupmeier and her Seeing Eye dog, Willie, from Medicine Hat; Judy Hellevang from Calgary; Gerald Gordey from Edmonton; Jim Killick from Morinville; Helen MacHugh, the personal care attendant for Jim; Margaret Conquest from Edmonton, who also chaired today's international day in recognition of disabled persons at city hall; past members Anne Belehorec from Sherwood Park, Ruth Petersen from Edmonton, and George Schmidt from High Level; and a council staffer, Pheona Churn; and others who are in their entourage. Please join me in giving them a very rousing and a very warm welcome on this very special day.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Transportation.

MR. STELMACH: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'm truly honoured to introduce to you and through you to the Members of this Legislative Assembly three gentlemen seated in the members' gallery. The first gentleman is Mr. Jim Morrison of Reid-Built Homes. Second, is Mr. Bob Carwell, who is the chairperson of the Edmonton transportation cluster group, from a company called Logistix, and another person who is quite familiar to many in this Assembly, Mr. Bob Rosen from City Lumber. All three are very instrumental in setting the transportation cluster group's plan for Edmonton transportation needs well into the future. I see that they've risen in the gallery. Please offer them a very warm welcome.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

MR. McCLELLAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today it is my very great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of the Legislature 28 students and four teacher's helpers. They are students at the St. Stanislaus school here in Edmonton in the constituency of Edmonton-Rutherford. It is a bilingual French immersion school. The students are accompanied by M. Jean-Francois Bugeaud, M. Guy Bussiere, Mrs. Nicole Plamondon, and Mrs. Elaina Anselmi. I would ask all members to please give these students and their teachers the traditional warm welcome of the Legislature.

MR. LORD: Mr. Speaker, it is my great pleasure today to rise to introduce to you and through you to all members of this Assembly a number of the people who are making it happen at CKUA Radio, which is celebrating its 75th anniversary this year. I would ask that the following, who are seated in the public gallery behind me, rise as I call their names and be recognized: Ken Regan, general manager, CKUA Radio Network; Bud Steen, chairman, CKUA Radio Foundation board of directors; Henry Scheil, treasurer; Ian Nicol, secretary; Sharon McMullan-Baron, officer with the board; Ralph Henderson, officer with the board; Jack Hagerman, host and producer of The Old-Disc Jockey and former general manager.

I might add that an important note in Alberta history is that Jack did the first radio broadcast of a question period of any Assembly in the British Commonwealth, the entire British Commonwealth. He did that right here in this Assembly. So a very important piece of Alberta history there.

We also have Wes Denison, volunteer and president with the Edmonton chapter; David Ward, host and producer of Alberta Morning and the Bluegrass State of Mind show; Kristine Britt, executive assistant; Danielle Scheil; and finally Maureen Workman, who is the volunteer co-ordinator of CKUA Radio Network. I would ask that we all please give these people the warm traditional welcome of the Assembly.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan.

1:40

MR. LOUGHEED: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased today to rise and introduce to you and the members assembled Oliver Cardinal, a member of the Alberta Disability Forum. I'd ask that Oliver please wave from the members' gallery and be acknowledged by the House.

head: Oral Question Period

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The Leader of Her Majesty's Official Opposition.

Class Sizes

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week the Minister of Learning claimed that teachers support raising class sizes in order to fund their salary settlements. My questions are to the Minister of Learning. Has the minister talked to a single teacher in Alberta who wants larger class sizes?

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. When you take a look at class sizes around the province, first of all, on the study that we did last year from kindergarten to grade 6, the average class size was 23. When you take a look at all the data that is out there at the moment, what they say is that, basically, the solution to class size is more flexibility. I think everyone in this Assembly knows that a class, for example, that has 12 students where three or four of them have learning disabilities is completely different than a class of 30 students where everyone is a top-notch student. So the answer to that is flexibility. I believe that the majority of studies out now are backing me on flexibility, and hopefully that's the direction we'll go.

DR. NICOL: Again to the Minister of Learning. Why has the minister misrepresented the position of the ATA in last spring's arbitration?

DR. OBERG: Mr. Speaker, I would be more than happy to submit to this Assembly the arbitration ruling where the arbitrator stated exactly what the ATA had said.

DR. NICOL: Will the minister permit school boards to increase revenues if the alternative is to increase class sizes?

DR. OBERG: Mr. Speaker, again, I find this line of questioning about the public education system increasing revenues completely shocking and against what has been said in the past. There are specific lines, specific directions as to how they can raise revenues. I do not believe that they need to fund-raise more, if that's what the hon. Leader of the Opposition is getting at. Our teachers are now paid probably anywhere from 7 to 15 percent higher than any other teacher in the country.

DR. NICOL: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Learning has frequently said that when it comes to class sizes, school boards should have the flexibility to set whatever class sizes are appropriate. While parents complain of class sizes numbering 38 children, is the minister satisfied that his policy of flexibility is working?

DR. OBERG: Mr. Speaker, there are a lot of different reasons as to why there are class sizes of 38. For example, last night I heard from the Member for Medicine Hat about a class size in his school that was actually 39 students. When asking the principal of that school, he said it basically turned out to be a scheduling issue, and they decided to put those students together.

Mr. Speaker, the key is that they decided on what to do. That's something that we feel very strongly about. The Alberta School Boards Association has continually made representations to me about giving them more flexibility on how to spend their money, more flexibility on making these decisions, and quite frankly that's something I agree with.

DR. NICOL: Again to the minister: what use is it for parents to plead with school boards that clearly do not have the flexibility to maintain appropriate class sizes?

DR. OBERG: Well, Mr. Speaker, I believe that they are elected every three years. The parents have the ability to make representation to any school board that I've ever seen. If there is any school board that is not allowing parents to make representation to them, I certainly would like to hear about it, and I will certainly look into it. They are quite capable of doing that.

DR. NICOL: Again to the minister: how can the minister maintain the myth of flexibility when school district after school district is being forced to increase class size to pay for the government-ordered arbitration settlement?

DR. OBERG: Mr. Speaker, if you remember, back in the spring of this year, Larry Booi, the president of the ATA, went to our Premier's office and asked that there be compulsory arbitration, asked that the teachers' strike be ended that way. This was not government-ordered arbitration; this was a request from both parties to end a very drastic strike. The opposition could have quite easily allowed these people to stay out, but we wanted the students back in the classroom; the ATA wanted to get back into the classroom; the School Boards Association wanted to get back into the classroom so that the students can learn because that's what they're there for.

Victims of Violence

MS BLAKEMAN: Mr. Speaker, in an excerpt from an April 2002 news release the Solicitor General is quoted as saying, "The provincial government is following through on its commitment . . . to ensure a more meaningful voice in the justice system for victims." In the 2001-2002 Solicitor General annual report it states, "My ministry continues to make strides in ensuring that victims of crime play a significant role in the justice system, and are treated with the dignity and respect they deserve." My first question is to the Premier. Has this government's policy towards victims of abuse changed in the past weeks, and what is this government doing to ensure that victims of abuse are not denied their day in court?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, our policy hasn't changed at all. This pertains to the Criminal Code, and as I understand it, law enforcement agencies in this province treat abuse as a very serious situation. If they find evidence or if they deem that there's enough evidence that abuse has taken place, then charges will be laid, as they should be.

MS BLAKEMAN: My next question is to the Solicitor General. What specifically will the Solicitor General do in terms of new policy and programs to ensure that victims of violence get a more meaningful voice in the justice system?

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Solicitor General.

MRS. FORSYTH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What the Solicitor General will do is continue to listen to Albertans on what they want and the police and the policing community.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you. Again to the Premier: what is this government prepared to do to offer restitution to victims of domestic violence who have lost their day in court due to interference by a third party?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, that question is not only cruel, insensitive, and stupid, but it bears no relationship to anything that is happening relative to government policy.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Rate Riders

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Today the New Democrat opposition announced proposals to eliminate rate riders from Albertans' power bills. Recognizing rate riders for what they are, a cynical ploy to lower power bills before the last election only to raise them again once the government was safely re-elected, the New Democrats are calling for their immediate elimination. This proposal will save power consumers $260 million in unfair and discriminatory power costs. My question is to the Minister of Energy. Will the minister support the New Democrat opposition's proposal to eliminate the 2003 rate riders?

MR. SMITH: Mr. Speaker, first this party supports big business – the big business of a utility company – and now this party wants us to pay $260 million to that big business? What kind of guys are you really?

MR. MASON: Mr. Speaker, given . . . [interjections]

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Hon. members, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands has the floor.

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the minister knows full well that those rate riders are not paid by the power companies but are in fact paid for by consumers, how can he justify spending $2 billion in expenditures to reduce power bills before the last election but turn up his nose at a modest proposal to actually give some real relief to power consumers that's not just before an election?

MR. SMITH: Well, Mr. Speaker, repaying $260 million to his favourite – I don't know; possibly – donor would be, I think, not in the best interests of Albertans. The $2 billion that was repaid to Albertans in the 2001 period was paid to the individual Albertan via the Balancing Pool. They are the proceeds that were delivered as a result of these auctions that took place of the power purchase agreements in the year 2001. It was determined that these funds should be returned to Albertans as quickly as possible, as transparently as possible, and as efficiently as possible. If we were to follow down the line of zany reasoning that the hon. member has suggested – for example, in 2001 ATCO, which has a rate of 4.9 cents a kilowatt-hour, very, very close if not lower than the rate offered prior to regulation, if they then refunded a rate rider, we would have to actually go back and collect the rate rider from them.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Why does this minister continue to try and pull the wool over the eyes of Albertans by trying to pretend that it is EPCOR that has to pay the rate riders when he knows perfectly well that it's people all over Alberta, not just in the EPCOR service area, that are paying rate riders, which are merely paying back the power companies for giving the government cheap power before the election?

MR. SMITH: Well, Mr. Speaker, in answering this question, first let me recognize how nice it is to see you in the chair in such an important period in the House.

Secondly, Mr. Speaker, the only wool that's being used right now is the woolly reasoning employed by the hon. member of the ND, who have long had a tradition of milking taxpayers and then giving them their own money back. In fact, if you look at ND, New Democrat, electricity policy across this country, you will see that they have generated some $100 billion in taxpayer debt that the taxpayers of future generations are going to have to pay back simply because they didn't have the guts to put real electricity policy out-front in today's marketplace.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Allegations of Interference in Justice System

MRS. ADY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When a person becomes a public servant, they never really know the extent to which their life may be the focus of attention or come under scrutiny. Certainly, it is difficult for those looking on and in the absence of full information to distinguish between fact and fiction or, say, the actions of a concerned mother for her child versus something else. Over the last few days there have been allegations made and a great deal of speculation about the process involved in determining whether an investigation is warranted into the allegations concerning the Solicitor General. My question today is for the Attorney General. Could the Attorney General advise the House as to exactly what process he's undertaken to review this matter?

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

MR. HANCOCK: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. All members of the House will know that under the British parliamentary tradition the Attorney General is not only a minister of the Crown and a member of the House but also stands alone in terms of being responsible for matters of public prosecution. The short answer to the member's question is that the matter referred to will be handled in exactly the same manner as we handle all allegations that are made to the office of the Attorney General.

That process is that if an allegation is made to our office, it is referred to the prosecution service to obtain information and to review that information to determine whether the allegations warrant any further investigation. The decision as to whether or not an investigation should be undertaken is made by the prosecutor's office. Indeed, any determination made by the Crown with respect to any file brought to the prosecutor's office is made by that office without any direction or interference from a political office, including the office of the Attorney General.

In the case of any real or perceived conflict, it is our practice to seek an outside independent opinion. Specifically, we ask another jurisdiction to do an independent assessment of the file. When we ask for an outside assessment, we do not advise the outside party of what our opinion is or in any other way bias their view. We give them the information we have, we ask them to determine what other information they might need, and we ask them for their advice and direction with respect to what ought to be done.

In regard to the allegations concerning the Solicitor General, I can advise that we have asked the department to gather information. We have now approached the government of New Brunswick and the Crown prosecutor's office in New Brunswick to assess the information and to advise us as to whether there should be anything further undertaken. Let me be very clear. There is no investigation at this time. We have simply asked New Brunswick to do an independent assessment of the information available to determine whether any further action is warranted.

Asbestos Removal at Holy Cross Hospital

DR. TAFT: Mr. Speaker, stop-work orders are issued for significant workplace safety violations, and it is clear from the government's own regulations as well as its staff that stop-work orders are intended to be public. Despite this, repeated requests for copies of the stop-work order issued as a result of the asbestos release at the Holy Cross hospital have been denied both to our staff and to legal counsel. To the Minister of Human Resources and Employment: can the minister explain why the file concerning the asbestos release at the Holy Cross appears to have been covered up even when regulations and the minister's own staff say it should be public? Why the stone wall?

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

MR. DUNFORD: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. On the particular question there has been an investigation. As I understand it, there have been concerns about the cleanup of the asbestos. The latest information that I have is that there are actually discussions going on now between our staff and the Minister of Justice surrounding the area, and this may, then, have led to some of the problems that he might be having in terms of gaining access to material. There's certainly nothing that has come from me as the minister, from the minister's office, in terms of restricting any information from anybody here in the public.

DR. TAFT: Mr. Speaker, stop-work orders by regulation are public or at least are intended to be. So will the minister commit to immediately releasing not only the stop-work order but also all supporting documents that go with it?

MR. DUNFORD: No, I won't make that commitment. As I stated in my first answer to the question, in my view there's an ongoing investigation under way. We have provided material to the Minister of Justice's office, and we're waiting for direction. I'm not going to, for the sake of a question in question period, do anything or say anything at this point in time that might hinder an ongoing investigation.

DR. TAFT: Given the obvious secrecy over this incident, what assurances can the minister give this House that all affected parties – workers, staff, and residents – have been properly informed of their exposure to asbestos at the Holy Cross site?

MR. DUNFORD: Well, you know, the tone of the question is as if some sort of conspiracy is at play here. I want to assure the hon. member that as much as he likes to play politics over workplace health and safety – and we've had indication of that in the House here previously – we have policies and procedures in place. An investigation is under way, and there's currently information that's been provided to the Minister of Justice to see whether or not we need to proceed with any further court hearings.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

Agricultural Assistance

MR. SNELGROVE: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's been a difficult year for those in the agriculture business, and I would like to mention on behalf of the farmers and ranchers of Alberta that we do appreciate the hard work the minister and, in fact, her entire department have done for everyone. Thanks very much.

In an effort to stay current and provide new programs that better reflect the reality of agribusiness today, the various ag departments are developing pilot projects throughout Alberta. To the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development: could you please explain who is ultimately responsible for the development and implementation of these projects, and can you assure the participating farmers and ranchers that they will not be put at any extreme disadvantage by participating in these pilot programs?

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, first of all, it has been a difficult year for agriculture in its entirety, and my thanks go out to all of my colleagues in this Legislature who have had a part in trying to alleviate that difficulty over this year.

The issue of programs and pilot programs in Ag Financial Services is one that our caucus has spent a great deal of time on. We try very hard to have insurance programs in place that respond to the various regions of this province because agricultural conditions are not the same across the province. Hence, when we design a new program, we tend to run it purposely in a pilot area rather than putting it provincewide because you may find some anomalies in that program.

One of the programs that I know the hon. member has great interest in is the cereal silage program. That was run this year in a small part of the province as a pilot, and sure enough we found some anomalies in that program. However, the information that we have gained and the learning process of applying something that is theoretical into practice, I believe, will allow us to take those anomalies out of the program and have a very good, strong program that we can extend to a greater part if not all of the province for next year.

MR. SNELGROVE: My first supplemental is to the same minister. Farmers and ranchers in the Gem area north of Brooks and the Rivercourse area south of Lloydminster believe they have been treated unfairly because of glitches in the pilot program due to the lack of or accuracy of information being shared between the different departments. Because these were jointly developed programs, the regular crop insurance appeal process does not apply to them. Could the minister explain the process that these producers could appeal to for an independent or unbiased hearing so that they can be assured of fair compensation?

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MRS. McCLELLAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, first of all, I can assure you that the MLAs in both of those areas have been very aggressively pursuing this issue with the minister and with Ag Financial Services, who are the operators of the program.

First of all, Mr. Speaker, the first thing that we try to do is pull together all the information that we had on the program, look at the information as to how it applies to the guidelines of that program, and make sure that the information that we had was applied fairly in the program. This comes to one of the anomalies that we have in those programs, where the program worked for 90 percent of the area but because of some very unusual circumstances, which nobody would doubt happened this year across the province, did not work for 10 percent.

What we have agreed to do is completely review that to ascertain whether we can take any information that is available to us to answer the concerns in the 10 percent. Nobody is disputing the fact that there are some unusual circumstances in those areas. However, because it is an insurance program and because we do have a responsibility under the contract of that program, we have to take the time – we being the Ag Financial Services Corporation, who administer that program – to see if any information that they've been able to garner will help to alleviate those concerns in that 10 percent.

MR. SNELGROVE: With the bleak outlook in regard to the current moisture levels in Alberta what, if any, new programs are you planning to bring forward to help with this potential problem and to ensure the long-term viability of agriculture in Alberta?

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, no question: the insurance programs are critical to the ability of our producers to insure as much as possible against production loss. One of the things that I think is the strength of the program is producer input. Last year we had a group of my colleagues who visited and had focus meetings with farmers from across the province to try to deal with some changes in crop insurance that were important. This year three of my colleagues took the time – somebody from north, central, and south – to talk with producers across the province on the pasture program, the hay program, 4-H programs, cereal and silage programs. It is my expectation, with that knowledge that they have brought back, that we will be able to adjust those programs, to, I hope, offer them provincewide, and in that way allow producers to take advantage of the risk management tools that are available to them so that this government does not have to react in an ad hoc manner. Producers don't like ad hoc programs; governments don't like ad hoc programs.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Electricity Deregulation

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is the yearly anniversary of Enron's spectacular bankruptcy filing in America. Enron's spectacular failure is very similar to what has happened in this province with our electricity deregulation scheme as promoted by this government. Enron was a billion-dollar fiasco in America; electricity deregulation is a billion-dollar fiasco in this province. It is the greatest Tory blunder of all time. My first question is to the Minister of Energy. What role did Enron play in promoting and implementing electricity deregulation in this province?

MR. SMITH: Mr. Speaker, the member is sitting dangerously close to the third party.

We will say that at the period of deregulation, when it started January 1, 2001, in Alberta, I was not the minister of this portfolio and, therefore, would not be able to accurately comment.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that this minister is dangerously close to rejoining the backbenches, again to the same minister: given that there are 38,000 documents, costing over $15,000 to the Official Opposition, indicating a major role between the government of Alberta and Enron in electricity deregulation, will that minister commit in this House this afternoon to tabling those 38,000 documents for the benefit of not only this member but also Alberta consumers, who are footing the bill for this expensive deregulation scheme?

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Energy.

MR. SMITH: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The member, as he has demonstrated in the past, is very cognizant and aware of the methods used in the freedom of information policy guidelines. The policy is open for everyone. There is absolutely unfettered and open access of this government like there's never been of any other government in the dominion of Canada, including the federal government. We would simply ask the member to use the appropriate means that are available to him or, of course, entertain yet another motion for openness and transparency, and that's written questions.

MR. MacDONALD: Again, Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: given that the only thing higher than Alberta power bills these days are FOIP request estimates to the Official Opposition, will the minister, then, commit to waiving the fees entirely to the Official Opposition and surrendering the 38,000 documents which indicate that Enron has been involved in government deregulation?

MR. SMITH: Mr. Speaker, we have an outstanding public service, who work diligently and hard each day. They're here contributing to a better Alberta. Those activities of those individuals are for the future; they're certainly not for the past. There is, of course, the freedom of information mechanism, that the individual can use. He can use letters and correspondence to me, as the other member has today. We look forward to specific and succinct information requests from the member and would entertain them in the most open fashion, as this government has become known for.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Little Bow.

EPCOR Billing Practices

MR. McFARLAND: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week we heard the NDs tell us that EPCOR wasn't to blame for anything, that it was simply the cost of power that was to blame. On Friday, this past Friday, I was informed by one of my constituents, that had just lost her husband and moved from a farm into a nearby community, that after having over 30 years of business with Calgary Power, TransAlta, Aquila, and now EPCOR, she would have to pay them $140 to do a credit check in order to set up a new account. Clearly not a government direction. Mr. Minister of Energy, I would like an explanation for this House why EPCOR can get away with charging that kind of money for a long-standing customer who changed simply because of her marital status.

MR. SMITH: Mr. Speaker, I think that it's very important, because there are cases – and if I can just relate personally. In the marriage situation we've ensured that my wife carries a credit card so that in case anything did happen to me, she would be able to get credit on an easily available basis. I think this is one of those instances where that could prove the case.

We have checked with EPCOR, and EPCOR, as any commercial entity would do, undertakes to check a consumer's credit history. They then require only a credit deposit from customers with a poor credit history or no established credit history. So a customer who has an exemplary or good credit history with EPCOR would not be assessed as charged. If a deposit, though, is needed, the deposit is held for the first 12 months of service, and if the customer has paid all the bills on time, the deposit is returned to the customer. Now, Mr. Speaker, if the customer closes their account which is in good standing during these 12 months, the $150 deposit would pay for any power used since the most recently paid bill, and the balance then is returned to the customer.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Little Bow.

MR. McFARLAND: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second question, from a second constituent. EPCOR has substantially overcharged this customer to the tune of $1,500 for a home in a small community, demanded and received payment, and subsequently has a large credit. When the customer asked to have it refunded – who wants to have $1,200 sitting in somebody else's account? – they were told that it would remain as a credit. To the minister: why can EPCOR hang on to the money? The customer isn't asking for interest. They simply want the money back.

MR. SMITH: Well, Mr. Speaker, that policy, which is a policy established by EPCOR, is to credit the account, but if the customer insists and phones or contacts EPCOR, then it's my understanding that the company, EPCOR, will in fact send them a cheque.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Little Bow.

MR. McFARLAND: Thank you. My second and final supplemental is to the same minister. With respect to EPCOR's applications to the EUB for the year 2003 under the regulated rate option, are you aware if EPCOR has in fact applied for any new rate riders?

MR. SMITH: Mr. Speaker, that is a very good question. Work is being done at the board level, as I understand it, right now, because the 2003 regulated rate option should be coming available to all consumers, whether they be in the ATCO service area, the Aquila service area, the Enmax service area, or the EPCOR service area. Unfortunately, those services by Enmax and the EPCOR city area will not be under the purview of the Energy and Utilities Board until next year. But it's my understanding and, again, the information that I have is that EPCOR has not applied for any new rate riders for the EPCOR/Aquila service region in 2003. The 2000 and 2001 rate riders will continue to show up in 2003 in accordance with the previous EUB decisions. Both of these rate riders will expire on December 31, 2003. Aquila has also applied to the Energy and Utilities Board to establish new rates for distribution costs, and that EUB decision is expected by the end of February.

Proposed Blairmore-Bellevue Water Pipeline

MR. BONNER: Mr. Speaker, the Crowsnest Pass Ratepayers Association has expressed many allegations to this government with regard to the proposed Blairmore-Bellevue water pipeline. These concerns deal with the municipality's handling of taxpayer dollars in implementing a project. My questions are to the Minister of Municipal Affairs. Has the minister met with the municipality with regard to this issue?

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

MR. BOUTILIER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The short answer is: no, I haven't, but I'm aware of the situation. I understand that we are going to be meeting with them on that very topic.

MR. BONNER: To the same minister, Mr. Speaker: is the minister going to conduct an inspection under the provisions allowed in the Municipal Government Act?

MR. BOUTILIER: Mr. Speaker, we will follow what is in the law of Alberta, but I want to again assure the member that we'll certainly update this House relative to our meeting, relative to this very important issue that is in front of us. We're dealing with it and investigating it.

MR. BONNER: To the same minister, Mr. Speaker: what is this minister prepared to do to address this very serious issue?

MR. BOUTILIER: Mr. Speaker, the same answer as to question 1 to the hon. member.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Tuition Fees

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. University student tuition has more than tripled in the last 10 years in this province. This is a rate 500 to 600 percent more than the rate of inflation. Now, on top of another 6.4 percent tuition increase for all students the University of Alberta is proposing differential tuition fees, that could see tuition in the faculties of Medicine, Law, or Business go up as much as $50,000 for a four-year degree. My questions are to the Minister of Learning. Why is the minister allowing universities to proceed with differential tuition fee schemes when he knows or he should know that this will put careers in law, medicine, and business beyond the reach of most if not all students from low- and middle-income families in this province?

DR. OBERG: Because quite simply, Mr. Speaker, that is the law of this land, that was passed in this Legislature, that allows them to do that.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I thought the minister knew the law or should have better knowledge of the law. The law doesn't allow the university to increase tuition fees by 500 percent.

My second question to the minister: exactly how much debt does the minister think an aspiring doctor or lawyer can incur before students from modest backgrounds decide that entering these professions is just not worth the financial risk that it entails?

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Learning.

DR. OBERG: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will comment upon an ad that appeared in the newspaper probably about a week or two ago. What it had, quite simply, was that it would cost Emma, who was going through to become a doctor, about $112,000 over her lifetime for her education over the eight years that were required. The interesting part is that the first year that person that graduated from school as an ophthalmologist, because she was going to cure blindness, would make between $700,000 and $800,000 per year.

Mr. Speaker, the other issue that I will say – and I will be tabling this today, actually, in a direct response to one of the written questions, but I'll comment on it if I may – was that the average student debt level of students who received assistance from the Students Finance Board in '95-96, which was five or six years ago, was $11,604. In 2000-2001 it was $12,620, an increase of $1,000.

If I may, I'll just also comment on what it was in British Columbia, where tuition has been frozen for over five years. It was 33 percent more at 16 and a half thousand dollars.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Mr. Speaker, my second supplementary to the minister: would the minister explain why his differential tuition fee scheme would not scare students out of their minds to financially risk $50,000 more in tuition fees alone to get a degree in law or medicine when the cost of this degree may well be more than their family's annual income?

DR. OBERG: Mr. Speaker, I'm absolutely delighted that the hon. member asked me that because I get the ability to expound on the virtues of our great student loan program. We have increased our student loan program by over 50 percent in the last three years. That enables students who can't afford to go to school to utilize our student loan program. On a four-year degree they can claim up to 10 and a half thousand dollars per year, of which they pay back $5,000 and receive $5,500 free. The key thing to remember in all of this discussion is that ordinary Albertans – the taxi drivers, the truck drivers, the people in this Assembly – pay over 75 percent of a student's education.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

Refugee Claim

MR. MAGNUS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions today are for the Minister of Children's Services. We have learned about the case of a mother and her four daughters who have applied for refugee status in Canada, but their claim has been denied. If this Nigerian family is sent back to their homeland, it is likely that these girls will suffer FGM, feminine genital mutilation. They are now taking refuge in a Calgary church. Can the minister tell us whether her department will get involved in this case to ensure the safety and security of these children?

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

MS EVANS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have been impressed by the number of overtures to my office on behalf of children and a mother that people perceive some very dreadful consequences would arise for should they return to Nigeria. The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill asks me: what do we do? I should tell you that frequently children who are immigrants come to places like Calgary, come to Alberta, and Children's Services will intervene if we believe there are child protection issues, things that we can help with. I spoke this morning with a social worker in consultation about this particular issue, and she advised me that they were going to look into it, but we recognize and I should identify that immigration is a federal matter.

Our jurisdiction can be really questioned where federal issues are concerned, and my understanding is that this particular applicant may be back in court in December later, about December 10. So all I would say is that at this time we can look into the situation and see if there are child protection issues that relate to the four young women in question, and I understand that we're looking into those issues as we speak.

MR. MAGNUS: To the same minister, Mr. Speaker: can the minister tell us what other options her department has at their disposal in relation to this case?

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, on such an investigation we can find out if the children's basic needs are attended to, whether they need counseling, provision of food, other amenities to assure their safety. Now, in this case the mother is obviously a strong advocate for her children, but if she wishes to request that private guardianship be considered, she can look at some other options. It is as individual as the individual case. Although we're very concerned about the best interests of the children, it would appear to me as Children's Services minister that unless the mother is willing to relinquish the authority by which she looks after her own children to some government agency or somebody else, she is perfectly entitled to look after those children as she is so doing. But we are engaging in a review of the situation to just find out if there are child protection issues that exist.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

MR. MAGNUS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second supplement-

tary will go to the minister responsible for immigration in Alberta, and it is the same as the second question to the Minister of Children's Services. Can that minister tell us what options his department may have at his disposal in relation to this case?

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Learning.

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Cases such as these are a federal matter. From a provincial point of view, we are not there to get actively involved in the case, but I will say that I have complete faith in the immigration minister, and for me to say that about a federal minister – I don't say that about many. But I will say that I have complete faith in the ministry of immigration, the minister of immigration, and I do feel that they will get to the bottom of this and ultimately do the right thing.

Alberta Productivity

MS CARLSON: Mr. Speaker, Alberta has a unique and volatile economy when compared to other jurisdictions. Employment variability is 4.8 times greater than in other provinces, relative income trends have dropped 10 percent over the last decade, and productivity is almost 25 percent lower when compared to the United States. My questions are to the Minister of Economic Development. What is the minister doing to enhance Alberta's productivity?

MR. NORRIS: Well, clearly, Mr. Speaker, productivity in Alberta outweighs any other province in Canada, so the question would have to be taken on a different tack. I think that where we would examine it is in our federal taxation system, which punishes people who want to earn more money and rewards people who want to stay in the middle levels, which has driven down productivity throughout the nation. For us to address that issue on a province-by-province basis seems not only counter-productive but not necessary in Alberta, where we have the highest level of income per capita in all of Canada.

MS CARLSON: Mr. Speaker, he is still not the brightest cookie in the jar, because the right answer is education. Why isn't the minister working aggressively to increase investment in both postsecondary and K to 12 education? That's where the solutions will come from.

MR. NORRIS: With all due respect, Mr. Speaker, all I heard was something about a cookie jar, and I'm not sure how that relates to Economic Development. Could the hon. member ask the question again?

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll put the next two questions together. Why aren't you aggressively pursuing investment in both postsecondary and K to 12 education? That's where the solutions arise. And when will you start to work on continuous professional development and certification in this province? Those are the serious problems that are causing our productivity problems.

MR. NORRIS: Well, I would like to thank the hon. member for the question because I think we agree 100 percent on what you're talking about, if I understand it correctly. Indeed, the Alberta government has done that, and through the Department of Learning we have increased spaces to postsecondary education in SAIT and NAIT, some 2,200 students. We now have programs that bypass the apprenticeship program for high school students who want to go directly into an apprenticeship program and directly to trades. Certainly, with my colleague in the department of aboriginal affairs we have addressed that issue through the high school which used to be the municipal airport to encourage aboriginal youth to continue with their studies.

So I think it should be abundantly clear to the member that although government doesn't have all the answers to the problems in every economy, we certainly are addressing them not only with extra positions but with extra money and extra commitment, Mr. Speaker.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

Tourism Industry

MR. HORNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Tourism is one of the pillars of the Alberta economy, worth almost $4.8 billion to the provincial GDP last year. It is critical to the economic development of every community in this province from our mountain parks to our large urban centres and every rural municipality. The government has said that it wants to grow tourism into a $6 billion industry by 2005, yet Alberta continues to lose market share due to Alberta's diminished marketing efforts and increased competition from other jurisdictions. My questions are to the hon. Minister of Economic Development. Some time ago an MLA committee was established to look at how we could grow this industry. That committee reported to you almost a year ago. Can the minister tell the House the status of this report?

MR. NORRIS: Well, I'd like to thank the hon. member for the question. At the very outset I want to thank the member for his question and for his involvement on that committee.

AN HON. MEMBER: What's the answer?

MR. NORRIS: Oh, I'll get to the answer, but it's such a wonderful topic, I could go on all afternoon, hon. member. I would be delighted . . . [interjections]

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Hon. members, please respond through the chair.

MR. NORRIS: Mr. Speaker, I was attempting to, but they seemed so enthralled with my answer.

Clearly, tourism is vital to the province. We have been blessed with an abundance of glorious tourism opportunities, and under my department and in conjunction with the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development we've been looking at ways to tie in tourism to all methods of economic development. This is clearly a vital one. In Alberta right now the tourism industry employs over a hundred thousand people, generates about 4 and a half billion dollars in revenues, and kicks back about $600 million in taxes to this government. So we are focusing on it as a vital industry. Mr. Hutton, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora, chaired the committee, among others.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Hon. member, there is a tradition in this Assembly not to refer to members by their names. They are referred to by the constituency they serve. Please be guided by that practice.

The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

MR. HORNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm not sure that I got the answer to my first question, but we'll plow on.

Can the minister confirm that one of the key recommendations of the report is to link the hotel tax to tourism marketing and development activities?

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Economic Development.

MR. NORRIS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. May I also echo my learned colleague the Minister of Energy and say what a delight it is to see your smiling face in the chair today, and I take your advice to heart.

The answer to your question is yes. One of the key recommendations, made by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora, was that we look at having long-term and sustainable funding for the tourism industry, and that was deemed to be best done through linking it to the hotel tax, which generates about $45 million. Ironically, Mr. Speaker, that's about the amount of money that our nearest and best competitor, British Columbia, spends, so it would put us right back into competition with them and regain those lost tourism dollars.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

MR. HORNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question to the same minister is: will the minister be moving on this recommendation soon, and if so, when?

MR. NORRIS: The answer to the hon. member's question is that through our process of government, which is an outstanding one, Mr. Speaker, it has gone through all levels of debate. It has been rigorously debated at every step of the way and has been refined to be what I think is one of the finest programs in all of Canada, if not North America, if implemented. At this point it is waiting for final approval at the last level of our government, which is made up of hon. members of the Treasury Board. When and if I get an answer, I will be delighted to give it to the House and to the hon. member.

75th Anniversary of CKUA

MR. LORD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I rise to offer my congratulations to the staff and supporters of CKUA Radio on the occasion of their 75th birthday this year. This is an amazing but true Alberta and Canadian success story: the incredible little radio station that could and did, the station that has and continues to confound critics and skeptics, outlived almost all its peers, the oldest and the first listener-supported broadcasting station in Canada, older even than the CBC, and Canada's first educational broadcaster as well.

Mr. Speaker, I wanted to mention some things people may not know about CKUA beyond its tumultuous recent history. For example, CKUA has put more than 500 audio features about Alberta history free on-line for our children as well as contributed hundreds of hours of its award-winning environmental program EcoFile. CKUA is virtually the only public broadcaster in North America that actually is entirely self-sustaining. CKUA does not seek handouts; instead, they raise more than $2 million annually through the voluntary – and, I might add, enthusiastic – contributions of its listeners. This is unprecedented in broadcasting in this nation.

CKUA is also host broadcaster for Alberta's emergency public warning system and the recently announced Amber Alert system. CKUA engineers designed, installed, and maintain the many transmitters of this internationally acclaimed and important public safety system.

Speaking of international acclaim, I should mention that CKUA is now going to be broadcasting worldwide, spreading goodwill from Alberta all day, every day through the technology of the Internet.

To sum up, Mr. Speaker, for 75 years CKUA has been a companion, a teacher, a mentor, a broadcaster, a cultural icon, and an example of what intelligent, quality broadcasting can be like in this country. We should all be extremely proud of CKUA's contributions and its remarkable and illustrious history in this province.

International Day of Disabled Persons

MR. LOUGHEED: Mr. Speaker, I rise to recognize the International Day of Disabled Persons, December 3, which was proclaimed by the General Assembly of the United Nations in 1992. This day aims to increase awareness and understanding of persons with disabilities and the issues that impact their lives with an additional goal of getting support for practical action at all levels by, with, and for persons with disabilities.

In Alberta we are recognizing this day in a number of ways. This morning the Premier's Council on the Status of Persons with Disabilities, which I have the privilege to chair, released our Alberta disability strategy. This independent report makes suggestions to the provincial government on ways we can support the full and equal participation of the half million Albertans with disabilities.

At noon today the council partnered with the Alberta Disabilities Forum and the city of Edmonton to stage a recognition event at city hall. An information bulletin was issued to create awareness of the day.

The Alberta government currently spends, Mr. Speaker, about $1.7 billion annually on programs and services for the disabled community across 11 ministries. Examples include the persons with developmental disabilities program in Community Development, the disability-related employment supports program in Human Resources, the resources to the children with disabilities program in Children's Services, and the programs for schoolchildren with special needs offered by Learning.

The Alberta government is committed to providing supports to persons with disabilities so that they can live, earn, work, and participate in our communities. On this special day I encourage all Albertans to think about ways they can include and support persons with disabilities in the life of this province.

Thank you.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

International Volunteer Day

MRS. JABLONSKI: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, Mahatma Gandhi said that "the best way to find yourself is to lose yourself in the service of others." On December 5 we will recognize International Volunteer Day. On this day each year the world pauses to reflect on the work that volunteers do. From teaching a child to read to bringing meals to the elderly, volunteers touch many lives every day.

This week our Premier along with the Minister of Community Development and the Wild Rose Foundation will honour six outstanding Alberta volunteers with a stars of the millennium volunteer achievement award in the category of youth, adult, or senior. They will also be inducted into Alberta's own volunteer wall of fame that was created as a tribute to volunteers and as a lasting legacy to the International Year of Volunteers in 2001.

Each one of us knows a volunteer. In fact, we probably know many. These are good people doing great things. About 70 percent of adult Albertans volunteer for an average of 15 hours per month donating their time, skills, or talents to help others. Please let them know how much their service means to your community. Can you imagine a community without a hockey, ringette, or soccer coach, a community without a Festival of Trees, a community without a July 1 or a New Year's Eve celebration, a community without Boy Scouts or Girl Guides, or a community without mentors?

The work that volunteers do is invaluable. Volunteers are the backbone of our communities and valued partners who contribute so much. I ask all members of this Assembly to recognize our Alberta volunteers and to show them our deep appreciation whenever and wherever we can.

Thank you.

2:40 Allegations of Interference in Justice System

MS BLAKEMAN: In the fall of 1999 charges of assault causing bodily harm were dropped against the son of the current Solicitor General. The court transcripts from a later court martial on the same incident indicate that the then MLA for Calgary-Fish Creek attempted to compel a key witness, the victim, not to testify against her son. To put the timing in context, this contact took place after six months of almost daily media coverage of another member of cabinet, the former Treasurer, for involving himself in the process of justice, and that ended up costing Alberta taxpayers over $800,000 for that member's inability to understand that he is not above the law. The current Solicitor General could not have been unaware of the consequences of such behaviour.

A number of issues arise from this. The Solicitor General must offer her resignation immediately, and the Premier must accept it. If the allegations are true, it is totally unacceptable that an individual who shows such a limited grasp of the process of justice should be one of the top two people responsible for the access to and administration of justice in this province. [interjections]

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Hon. members, this is the time for Members' Statements. The chair has recognized the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: To believe it is acceptable to interfere with a witness subverts the entire process the Solicitor General is supposed to uphold. Stakeholders such as the RCMP, police chiefs, and lawyers have spoken on the record, stating their deep concern over the Solicitor General's actions and their belief that the minister should resign.

I have lost faith in this government's ability to recognize the seriousness of this situation. Instead of the "we're looking into it" brush-off, I think we now need to bring in an investigator from outside of the province. This gets us around the difficulty of which cop in Alberta could investigate the top cop, especially when they're still in charge. You see, justice must not only be done; it must be seen to be done.

head: Presenting Petitions

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, did you have a petition?

DR. TAFT: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table a petition that I tabled incorrectly yesterday. It's now in order, and it expresses concern over abortion as an insured service.

Thank you.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've got two petitions for tabling today. The first petition is signed by 45 small businessmen and -women. They are owners of bed-and-breakfast places or restaurants, and they are urging the government of Alberta to repeal the amendment to the Public Health Act regulation approved by Executive Council on June 25, 2002; and . . . undertake thorough consultation with small business, the food industry and consumers before imposing any fee or tax to pay for health inspections.

My second petition, Mr. Speaker, that I want to table is signed by 74 Albertans, and it requests the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government of Alberta "to support the establishment of Bighorn Country as a legislated protected area."

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two petitions today. First of all, I'm presenting a petition signed by 50 small businesspeople urging the government of Alberta to repeal the amendment to the Public Health Act regulation approved by Executive Council on June 25, 2002; and . . . undertake thorough consultation with small business, the food industry and consumers before imposing any fee or tax to pay for health inspections.

The second petition, Mr. Speaker, is signed by 69 Albertans, and it petitions the Legislative Assembly to urge the government of Alberta "to support the establishment of Bighorn Country as a legislated protected area."

head: Notices of Motions

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to provide oral notice today of the following motion.

Be it resolved that when the Assembly adjourns to recess the fall sitting of the Second Session of the 25th Legislature, it shall stand adjourned until a time and date as determined by the Speaker after consultation with the Lieutenant Governor in Council.

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

THE CLERK: Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 37.1(2) I wish to advise the House that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk. By hon. Mr. Mar responses to questions raised to the hon. Mr. Mar, the Minister of Health and Wellness, during Oral Question Period on November 28, 2002, by Mr. Mason, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands; by the hon. Dr. Oberg pursuant to the Teaching Profession Act the Alberta Teachers' Association 2001 annual report; pursuant to the Apprenticeship and Industry Training Act the Alberta Apprenticeship and Industry Training Board 2001-2002 annual report; pursuant to the Advanced Education Foundations Act, the University of Alberta 1991 Foundation financial statements for the period ended November 7, 2000; Public Colleges Foundation of Alberta financial statements, March 31, 1999; Non-profit Private Colleges Foundation financial statements, March 31, 1997; the Arctic Institute of North America financial statements, March 31, 2001; Olympic Oval/Anneau Olympique statements, March 31, 1999; Olympic Oval/Anneau Olympique statements, March 31, 2000; Olympic Oval/Anneau Olympique financial statements, March 31, 2001.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Learning.

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise today for two tablings. The first tabling is in direct representation from what was stated in question period, and it is a 2002 interest arbitration between Edmonton public school board No. 7 and the Alberta Teachers' Association, which states:

(q) School boards can accommodate higher salaries and benefits by adjusting instructional hours or class sizes . . . Accordingly, there can be no argument about their ability to pay for the increases being sought by the ATA.

In summary, the ATA is seeking end rate grid adjustments of between 18% and 20%.

That's the ATA's submission.

AN HON. MEMBER: Who said that?

DR. OBERG: It's the ATA's submission.

The second tabling, Mr. Speaker, is the answer to Written Question 7, which shows that the debt load of postsecondary students who receive assistance from the Students Finance Board was $12,620 in the year 2000-2001.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

MR. YANKOWSKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table 156 names of residents of the constituency that I am honoured to represent, the constituency of Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview. The signatories are requesting the government to remove abortion from the list of insured services that are being paid for through Alberta Health. They express concern that Alberta pays for 10,000 abortions per year, the majority of which are done for convenience sake, many followed by serious physical and mental consequences costing the government even more.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a series of tablings. The first is from James Sexsmith, who is very concerned about where the Premier is going on his policy decisions to, as he says it, "deprive senior citizens of comfortable and worry free living."

Also, I have one from Rhonda Tanton, the executive director of Skate Canada, who is expressing her concern with the proposed revisions to the Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission's eligibility for gaming licences and use of gaming proceeds policies.

Sherry Banack is very concerned about the funding cap for grade 10 students.

D. Simmons wrote a letter in support of Kyoto.

The Bell family are very concerned about education funding.

Dennis Turner is very concerned about the use of cell phones in cars.

Dave Majeau is very concerned about the spring closure for fishing season.

The Alberta chapter of the Wildlife Society is looking at the field of wildlife management that's been removed from the provincial wildlife management division, and it has concerns about those.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

2:50

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Manning.

MR. VANDERMEER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table five copies of a petition signed by members of my constituency, Edmonton-Manning, urging the government to deinsure funding for abortions.

Thank you.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Little Bow.

MR. McFARLAND: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table petitions bearing 323 names mostly from constituents in Vulcan, Champion, Arrowwood, Milo, Lomond, Picture Butte, Carmangay, and Barons. These people say they are clients of the Headwaters health authority and ask that the boundaries remain the same.

MR. LOUGHEED: Mr. Speaker, it's my pleasure on behalf of the hon. Minister of Community Development to table the appropriate number of copies of the information bulletin he released earlier today recognizing the International Day of Disabled Persons.

I'm also pleased to table as chair of the Premier's Council on the Status of Persons with Disabilities five copies of the Alberta Disability Strategy. The strategy has two parts: a summary document and a second, companion document to provide supplementary information.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am tabling the appropriate number of a set of questions, which is a letter from the Minister of Seniors to myself stating that the private landlord rent supplement program is in operation – in fact, it had an increase in funding – and a report accompanying it from me stating that I've contacted the Calgary Housing Company, Capital Region Housing, Lethbridge Housing, and Red Deer Housing, and they state that the program has been on hold due to lack of funding since October 2001.

Thank you.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've got two tablings today, two letters that I received, the first one from my own constituents. They are the seniors who are residents of Pleasantview Place seniors' lodge. These low-income seniors are very concerned and want me to express their concern to the Assembly and to the government with respect to the $40 increase in their monthly rental charges and also additional service charges that have since been increased. These increases are effective January 1, 2003, and they are asking the provincial government to assist them in covering those increases.

The second letter, Mr. Speaker, is a letter that I received from the Canadian Mental Health Association. It is dated November 7. It's a letter from Bob Campbell, president and chair of the Alberta division of the Canadian Mental Health Association. The association is requesting that suicide prevention services be integrated under the regional health authorities.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have a number of tablings this afternoon. The first is a letter and power bill from a rural Albertan. Doreen Loney* writes: "We can't afford $500 for electricity. This last bill we received last week. We are trying to pay it off at approx. $250/month. Needless to say Christmas is spoiled. You are scared to put on Xmas lights."

The second one is a letter faxed to us by a Mr. Lee* in Edmonton, who says: we have certainly not noticed a reduction in our electricity bill.

The next tabling, Mr. Speaker, is a letter and power bills from a Bonnyville business owner. He writes a letter that states in part that "deregulation was the most stupid thing our politicians ever concocted."

The next tabling, Mr. Speaker, is a bill from Wandering River with a letter attached to his MLA for Athabasca-Wabasca. This writer indicates how "discouraging and financially frustrating this is for our family."

The next one, Mr. Speaker, is a bill from Sherwood Park. This particular letter asks a number of questions about why their power bill is so high. They raise five separate questions in this one, and they've attached their utility bill from Enmax.

This next tabling, Mr. Speaker, is a letter and bills from a town councillor in Athabasca stating that the town's power bills have increased over 170 K, and this means "cutting back on services to seniors, youth, recreation . . ."

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Hon. member, this is a time for tabling, not reading.

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I understand that we're allowed to extract a few comments.

This is a fax that we've received, Mr. Speaker, which I'm now tabling, dealing with a copy of an EPCOR bill. The person writing claims, "We are being robbed."

The next tabling, Mr. Speaker, is some bills from Spruce Grove, and it includes a letter which states: "Absolutely nothing has changed from last year . . . in the way of additional occupants or appliances . . . My belief is that we are plain and simply being totally ripped off."

The next tabling, Mr. Speaker, is a letter to the government strongly urging the Alberta government to abandon the deregulation of utilities.

The next one, Mr. Speaker, is a fax to the New Democratic Party from Lamont outlining their concerns with power.

The next tabling, Mr. Speaker, is from Wes and Amy Bogdane, and they say that their bill has doubled in one month, "This is outrageous," and thanking the New Democrats for speaking for the people.

The next one, Mr. Speaker, is a letter from a pensioner living on a fixed income who wonders how she can budget with the increase.

The next one, Mr. Speaker, is a letter from a single mother who says, "I cannot afford to pay it."

The next tabling . . .

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Hon. member, how many more tablings do you have?

MR. MASON: I'm about halfway through, Mr. Speaker.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Are these all pertaining to electric bills?

MR. MASON: Yes, sir.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: They could be tabled to the Assembly, and for members who wish to read them, they can be circulated to them, if they are for the same subject.

MR. MASON: With respect, Mr. Speaker, each person has taken individual time to write to us, so if I can continue.

Mr. Speaker, this one is from St. Albert.

REV. ABBOTT: Point of order, Mr. Speaker. These are exhibits. This is supposed to be . . .

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar, you are not being recognized. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands has the floor.

MR. MASON: Mr. Speaker, we have made five copies of each one, and we'll be tabling them as per the rules of the Assembly.

This is a letter with some bills attached from St. Albert which says: "If you can figure it out please let me know. If power deregulation works this way I am not impressed."

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, I just want to caution you that tabling is appropriate. However, it has to follow with a very, very brief statement.

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll endeavour to keep it to one sentence.

This is a letter from someone in Edmonton who asks why consumers will have to pick up another shortfall and: can someone stop hiding these shortfalls in our bills?

Mr. Speaker, this is from the village of Lougheed, and this is a comment that says that for 16 years the annual billing was $566.09. Now from January to November their bills totaled $1,212.63.

The next tabling, Mr. Speaker, is an EPCOR bill which shows . . .

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Hon. member, I have just been advised that the brief statement you make should reflect on the subject matter and that quoting from the letter is not appropriate. Please be guided by that advice.

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This is indeed a new departure for tablings.

This EPCOR bill shows a 66 percent increase from 1999.

This bill has a graph that shows an increase from $92.34 to $134.27 over four years.

This is a letter from someone in Vimy, Alberta, and this person is protesting his billing.

Here is a letter and a bill from someone in St. Albert. Their power bill has doubled.

Here's another one. I believe this is from Edmonton. This bill is for a one-bedroom apartment, and the person is concerned about why the bills are so high.

3:00

Mr. Speaker, here's another tabling, and this is from a senior in Fort Saskatchewan. The bills here have gone from $35 to $45 to $105 and $101 and have more than doubled.

Mr. Speaker, this is a bill from someone in Edmonton who has no comment other than to say that their bill is now $257.52.

This is a bill and a letter from a couple in Wetaskiwin, and they have attached bills here from EPCOR, from TransAlta, and from

*These spellings could not be verified at the time of publication.

UtiliCorp. They are very concerned that the amount they're paying is steadily increasing.

Mr. Speaker, here's a bill from Edmonton for $190.88. The shortfall charges are $15.95, the deferral rider is $9.13, and the local access fee is $4.17.

I'd like to rise to table this bill, which is from rural Edmonton, and it is $136 for one month.

DR. OBERG: Where is rural Edmonton?

MR. MASON: I used to represent it, hon. minister. There's a large portion of Edmonton that is actually rural. I represented on city council more farmland than many rural MLAs, and I did it well, I might add.

Mr. Speaker, here is an EPCOR bill for $251.05.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Hon. member, if all those tablings that you have reflect energy bills, the chair requests you to table them together as X number of copies or X number of letters on a subject matter that you are presenting to the Assembly.

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will defer these and many others for tomorrow's sitting.

Thank you.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I only have two tablings today. One is the appropriate number of copies of a letter I delivered earlier this afternoon to the Minister of Human Resources and Employment requesting the release of the stop-work order on the Holy Cross asbestos incident.

The other is an article explaining in dramatic detail a number of problems with the Australian parallel private health care system.

Thank you.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With permission I would table five copies of a petition from 253 people protesting overcrowded classes at Summitview school in Grande Cache. Currently, the grade 6 classes have 35 students, and the grade 8 classes have 38.

I'd also table a letter from Shauna-Lee Williamson protesting the cutbacks made to services for developmentally disabled adults.

I'd also table five copies of a letter from Pamela Head, with enclosed statements of water and power charges, protesting the high cost of deregulation.

I'd table five copies of a letter from Jon Head, with an enclosed article from the Edmonton Journal, expressing outrage at the high cost of electricity deregulation.

I'd table five copies of a petition from 98 Albertans requesting a change to the motor vehicles act so that registries can no longer charge for changing a client's address.

Thank you.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Hon. members, pursuant to section 28(1) of the Ombudsman Act I am pleased to table with the Assembly the 35th annual report of the office of the Ombudsman for the period April 1, 2001, to March 31, 2002, and the financial statements of the office of the Ombudsman for the period April 1, 2001, to March 31, 2002.

MR. MARZ: I have one tabling today, Mr. Speaker. It's 17 letters and the appropriate number of copies of each letter from the communities of Acme, Elnora, and Linden, and they're all expressing their objections to tax-funded abortions.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Hon. members, may we briefly revert to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests

(reversion)

MR. OUELLETTE: Mr. Speaker, it's with great honour that I rise here to introduce a large group of students from Fox Run school in Sylvan Lake. I see now that they have left. They couldn't wait, with the great number of tablings we had. Anyway, there were 105 students in the gallery, and they were brought together with 21 parents, helpers, teachers, and student teachers. The teachers and student teachers were Mrs. Karen Adair, Ms Robin Irvine, Mr. John Fielder, Mr. Justin Bander, Mrs. Connie Kwantes, Miss Jenny Fletcher, Miss Amanda Cunningham, Mrs. Jill Shipton, and Mrs. Edith Denning. The parents and helpers were Mrs. Duffy, Mrs. Campbell, Mrs. Anderson, Mrs. Wonenberg, Mrs. Engle, Mr. Breit, Mr. Lapointe, Mrs. Mays, Mrs. Braitenback, Mrs. Carreau, Mrs. Mattson, and Mrs. Ferguson. They belong to a school that's a shared facility. It's a brand-new facility that just opened two to three years ago, just a superb facility, and it's a shared one.

Thank you.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Hon. members, the hon. Member for Highwood, our Deputy Speaker, has a special presentation to make today.

Page Recognition

MR. TANNAS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. All hon. members each day of the session are served by the tireless efforts of our pages. It is my honour and pleasure on behalf of all the members of this Assembly to give each page a small Christmas gift to say thank you and to wish each and every one a Merry Christmas. I'd ask our head page, Nicholas Fowler, to distribute these gifts for us. On behalf of the members we wish you all a Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: We have some points of order.

The first point of order is from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Point of Order Relevance

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In his question to the Minister of Energy the hon. Member for Little Bow raised in his preamble positions and comments related to the New Democrat opposition, and in Beauchesne 409, in particular, it is clear that questions must be with respect to government policy. While I appreciate him asking the minister about the policy of Alberta's New Democrats on energy, it is not in order.

MR. HANCOCK: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's quite normal, albeit sometimes improper, for members to raise lengthy preambles with respect to questions that they raise in the House. Often members of the opposition, including members of the third party, including the member who raises this particular objection, in their preamble to the question set the context of the question by, in their case, inappropriately paraphrasing what their version of government policy is. I listened intently to the question that was asked by the hon. Member for Little Bow, and he was clearly putting an appropriate context around his question and, in doing so, referred to policies raised in the House by other members of the House in framing his question. If anything, he was more polite and more accurate than preambles that have been raised by the opposition in the context of their questions.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The chair has just referred to the Blues. The hon. Member for Little Bow began by saying, "Last week we heard the NDs tell us that EPCOR wasn't to blame for anything," and then proceeded with the rest of the question. The chair just wishes to caution everyone that the purpose of Oral Question Period is to ask questions of government policy and not of other parties' policies. That's the intent of question period. I hope that clarifies this position.

Point of Order

Explanation of Speaker's Ruling

MR. MASON: Mr. Speaker, I have a second point of order, and that is consistent with Standing Order 13(2), which says, "The Speaker shall explain the reasons for any decision upon the request of a member." I would respectfully request that the ruling that was made that one may not quote from documents being tabled – I would appreciate it if citations could be provided for that or if that ruling could be explained.

Thank you.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. member has a valid citation. The chair received advice from table officers, and I certainly will request that a statement be made with appropriate references to that matter. Thank you.

The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

MR. HANCOCK: No, Mr. Speaker. I waive that point of order.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Point of Order

Abusive Language

REV. ABBOTT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two points of order today. First of all, the first one that I stood up on was Standing Order 23(j), abusive or insulting language. I think that if you look at the videotape and listen to the recording of the proceedings today, you'll hear the hon. leader of the third party tell me to shut up. He was sitting there, and he said it. I'll tell you something. We try to teach our kids not to use this word, and I'm very offended, because my kids could have been sitting at home watching this on TV. They could have heard him say that. I want an apology for that. That's my first point of order.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: We'll deal with one point of order at a time.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands on the point of order.

MR. MASON: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I was sitting right next to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona. I did not hear him say that, but I will have an opportunity to discuss it with him. I'm sure that if the hon. member did in fact say that, he will have no hesitation about apologizing.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The chair hasn't had the opportunity to look at the Blues. The chair requests the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands to please review the Blues, and if such a comment was made, as the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands said, it will be withdrawn. We shall deal with that matter once we have had a chance to look at the Blues.

The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar on another point of order.

REV. ABBOTT: Thank you for that ruling, Mr. Speaker. I do have a lot of respect for the hon. leader of the third party, and I wouldn't want anything to cause me to lose that respect.

Point of Order

Exhibits

REV. ABBOTT: My second point of order is on the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands. It's Beauchesne 501 to 504. It says that exhibits are not allowed. He was clearly using these EPCOR power bills as exhibits. He was not using them as tablings. Mr. Speaker, I think they should all be ruled out of order, and they should not be submitted to the annals of the Legislature.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands on the point of order.

MR. MASON: Well, Mr. Speaker, if you look at the sections in Beauchesne under Exhibits, section 501 refers to things like boxes of cereal, detergent, and milk powder. It refers to potatoes. It refers to things which are not documents.

Now, we are entitled by the rules of this House to table documents. That's what the section in our Order Paper is, and I would submit to you, Mr. Speaker, that tabling documents, including perhaps large numbers of documents, is a tradition that goes back in parliamentary democracy in this country many, many years. I would submit that the hon. member has absolutely no point of order whatsoever and would ask that you would so rule.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The chair was looking attentively at the Member for Edmonton-Highlands at the time those tablings were made, and the chair did not, in the chair's opinion, feel that they were being used as exhibits. They were documents that the hon. member was presenting, and he was referring to them as he was making his presentation. So clearly I do not see a point of order.

head: Orders of the Day

head: Government Bills and Orders
Third Reading

Bill 25

Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment Act, 2002

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Revenue.

MR. MELCHIN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to move third reading of Bill 25, the Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment Act, 2002.

As we've discussed, this bill will enact the second phase of the reduction of the corporate income tax rates in Alberta and will parallel recent changes made in the federal tax act. These changes are necessary to ensure that businesses in Alberta continue to operate in a tax environment that allows for increased economic activity, growth, and employment opportunities so that they might increase for everybody.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the final reading of this bill we continue to have some concerns. This is a province where the government prides itself on bringing down the tax rates, but at the same time they significantly increase user fees and reduce other kinds of social benefits for people in need. This particular government has a problem keeping its promises, including this one to lower taxes, because the tax rates are being lowered less than what they had committed to. So we will continue to watch and monitor how the government proceeds in these matters, but we believe that it is time for them to clearly put a focus on quality-of-life issues rather than the race to the bottom.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

[Motion carried; Bill 25 read a third time]

Bill 38

Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act, 2002 (No. 2)

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to move Bill 38, Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act, 2002 (No. 2).

As has previously been mentioned, I'm sure, at previous stages, the miscellaneous statutes is an act which allows the introduction of various amendments to various acts where corrections needed to be made or where changes are being made that are not of a significant policy nature and are only included in the bill if opposition parties agree.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We have an agreement in this House not to speak to miscellaneous statutes because the arrangements are supposed to have been made beforehand in terms of ironing out any concerns that people have. However, it was brought to my attention by the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar that, in fact, he hadn't been in contact with three of the ministries that were involved with changes to miscellaneous statutes in this particular bill. So I would ask that in the future when these bills come before us, in fact ministers do try to contact the critic for the area so that this can be a smooth process.

Thank you.

3:20

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

MR. HANCOCK: Yes, and an unusual opportunity to close debate, Mr. Speaker. It should be readily known by members of the House that the process with respect to miscellaneous statutes acts is that the Government House Leader sends a copy of the proposed miscellaneous statutes act to both opposition parties well before it's introduced in the House and gets the agreement from the parties on that package before it's introduced in the House. So I am given a bit of pause by the comments made today on the record, and I just wanted to clarify for the record that the usual process of the Government House Leader to the opposition House leaders was followed in this case.

Bill 35

Teachers' Pension Plans Amendment Act, 2002

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Learning.

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to move third reading of Bill 35.

This is a bill that allows for the onetime only payment of $35 million in recognition of the good-faith agreement that was signed with the Alberta Teachers' Association this spring. This bill will allow the $35 million to be paid as the first installment of this, and there will be a further $25 million paid as the second installment.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We're delighted to support it, and we are willing to support the government in their efforts to resolve the disputes with teachers. Hopefully, this will be part of a better future in terms of relationships between the government and the teachers, so we're happy to support it.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise to speak to third reading of Bill 35, the Teachers' Pension Plans Amendment Act. I want to recognize the long and difficult struggle of the teachers in the strike that we had. Notwithstanding that in some cases the government did not always treat the teachers as the teachers would have liked to have been treated, this represents a significant step towards healing that dispute and, quite frankly, represents a significant victory for the teachers with respect to that struggle.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Learning to close debate.

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Quite simply, I'll rise to close debate. This bill allows for $60 million, roughly a little under $2,000 per teacher, to be paid to them as per our good-faith agreement of this spring.

[Motion carried; Bill 35 read a third time]

Bill 33

North Red Deer Water Authorization Act

DR. TAYLOR: I'm very pleased to move third reading of Bill 33.

This is a bill that was necessary because of the requests of various communities in central Alberta, and I think as we go forward, people will see that it has been a worthwhile activity to have this bill passed in the House.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm happy to support Bill 33 at third reading. This bill passed through committee so quickly that I didn't have an opportunity to make some of the closing remarks that I wished to at that time, so I will make them now.

The Member for Lacombe-Stettler asked me if I had received submissions from the towns, the Samson Cree Nation, and various directly affected communities with regard to this bill. We did, Mr. Speaker, and we received those submissions in a timely fashion. So I thank her for recommending to the various locales that we should be included in this particular discussion. It certainly helped in clarifying the issue for us and identifying the user groups and who, in fact, would be directly affected and how they would be directly affected. So the letters of support came from the new group, the North Red Deer River Water Users Group, being the town of Blackfalds, the town of Ponoka, Ponoka county, Samson Cree Nation, Louis Bull Cree Nation, town of Lacombe, Lacombe county, Montana First Nation, and Ermineskin Cree Nation. We thank them for that. It does, I believe, always make the process a lot more streamlined in here when there is co-operation with information from all sides, and that certainly happened.

We had anticipated bringing forward an amendment in committee, Mr. Speaker, that never got brought forward to address the concern we had, which was strengthening the fences around this particular legislation, so I am going to put the wording of that on the floor just for information. I won't be tabling it or anything else. We had asked that after section 1 the licence to be issued under section 1 of this act be issued exclusively to the city of Red Deer, which is responsible for providing water to other parties under the licence. That was not to exclude other communities but to control the management of the process a little more, as we expect that over time this issue will occur more frequently and, perhaps, not with the same kind of good co-operation and with a greater effect on the waterways.

So we want to just be on the record that we will continue to monitor these kinds of situations very closely, Mr. Speaker, but certainly in this particular instance we fully support Bill 33.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, I also will rise on third reading to speak to the North Red Deer Water Authorization Act, Bill 33. We have raised concerns and continue to have ongoing concerns about anything that might seem to be a transfer of water between the basins of two rivers. In this particular case . . .

MRS. McCLELLAN: Why?

MR. MASON: Well, the hon. member wants to know why. There are two reasons. First of all, the ecological reason, and I'm not saying that it applies in this case, because she didn't let me finish. There are real risks that the actual ecosystem – the actual plant, animal, fish life in rivers – is different between one basin and another. It can have the effect of disrupting the ecological balance in a river basin when you introduce water as well as all of the life-forms that exist in that water into a different basin. That's the first reason.

The second reason is that we're very, very concerned about the long-term temptation and pressure on the government to approve the transfer of water to not only meet drought, which, if it's in Alberta, is one thing, but particularly we're concerned about the long-term political potential for transferring significant parts of Alberta's fresh water to the United States. That's something that we are unalterably opposed to, Mr. Speaker, for a variety of reasons, which I won't get into here.

In this particular case I think it's clear that what we're talking about is drawing water from one basin which is connected to another, passing it through a wastewater treatment plant and then into a different basin, and this is being done in order to provide necessary water to a number of communities. As such, while we certainly would not accept this as a precedent, we will support it because of that and because it meets the needs of Albertans and because it is not transferring the water directly. It's just simply that the drinking water comes out of one river basin, and the wastewater after treatment goes into a different one. That is something that under the circumstances we're prepared to support, Mr. Speaker, so we'll support this bill.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Environment to close debate.

DR. TAYLOR: Yes, to close debate. Thank you. I'd like to thank the members opposite for their support of this bill. This is the first interbasin transfer bill that we've ever had in this province, and I appreciate their support on this interbasin transfer bill, that we will shortly conclude. As we go forward, I look forward to their support on other community-driven bills that may be looking at interbasin transfer as well; mind you, driven by the communities that are involved. I look forward to their future support.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 3 read a third time]

Bill 34
Seniors Advisory Council for Alberta
Amendment Act, 2002

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader on behalf of the hon. Minister of Seniors.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to move Bill 34, Seniors Advisory Council for Alberta Amendment Act, 2002, for third reading.

The bill is very straightforward, requires no further explanation. It simply allows for the extension of the term of the chair of the Seniors Advisory Council.

MS CARLSON: Mr. Speaker, in spite of our questions at second reading and in committee, we still haven't got the answers as to why this was a necessary bill, why now all of a sudden the length of term served by the chair of the Seniors Advisory Council, which is currently held by the Member for Calgary-West, needs to be extended beyond the six-year, or two-term, maximum. We haven't seen any justification for that in this Assembly, so the question arises: is it just a job creation program? That question hangs out there because it hasn't been answered. So in the absence of any answers I will not be supporting this bill.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. We're doing Bill 30-2; right?

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Bill 34 is the one that I have.

MR. MASON: Oh. Well, Mr. Speaker, I can speak on that one too.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: On Bill 34?

MR. MASON: Mr. Speaker, on Bill 34. We think it's a good idea to consult with seniors, and we're supporting the bill. Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 34 read a third time]

Bill 30-2
Adult Interdependent Relationships Act

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to move for third reading Bill 30-2, Adult Interdependent Relationships Act.

In so moving, Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank members from all sides of the House for the good work that has been put into developing an act which, I think, is forward looking, which reflects the values of Albertans, which clearly retains for many Albertans their desire to have the institution of marriage recognized for what it is, as a very important institution for our society, while still balancing that with the necessity to allow people in relationships of their making to have access to the law.

[The Speaker in the chair]

Bill 30-2 is a bill which has taken a lot of work by members of the Assembly over the course of the past year in making sure that all of our issues and concerns, our values and our structures have been addressed. I think it has achieved that in a very comprehensive and appropriate way. I would like to thank the members of the opposition for the co-operation they've given in pointing out concerns and raising issues as I would members of the government caucus in very carefully and very thoroughly looking at the issues being raised and assisting with responses to those issues and concerns in order that we might have an act which will I believe in its entirety do Alberta proud.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We will be supporting this bill, and I would like to be on record as stating that I certainly support it. It perhaps doesn't go quite as far as what we could have wished for, but it certainly makes some progress. We certainly see this particular bill having been strengthened by the amendment that came forward and that amendment certainly addressed many of the concerns that we were hearing in the community. So we look forward to this particular bill being proclaimed.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

MR. McCLELLAND: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. At third reading of Bill 30-2 I wish to put on record my support and admiration for the Attorney General and Minister of Justice, who, in my view, very skillfully put this piece of legislation together. I would like to thank members of caucus, many of whom had to search into their consciences to support this bill. In my view – and this has been a very long quest for me – it required a certain amount of giving on both sides, and I respect and acknowledge that and thank them very much. In particular, as I've said, I do wish to recognize the particular skill and effort of the Attorney General and Minister of Justice.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Mr. Speaker, thank you for the opportunity to make some comments on third reading of Bill 30-2, which we understand is going to be the last hyphenated bill ever considered by this Assembly. I want to indicate at the outset that the New Democrat opposition is going to support the bill at third and final reading. However, I must indicate that we are supporting the bill with some very serious reservations. There are some serious flaws in this legislation which may come back to haunt this Legislature down the road.

We're supporting Bill 30-2 because at long last people in same-sex relationships will have equal access to the laws of this province. These laws impose obligations as well as confer rights. Whether we're talking about employment benefits, pensions, or family law, same-sex couples will at long last have the same rights and obligations as opposite-sex couples.

It's been over three and a half years since the Supreme Court in M versus H ordered governments to end discrimination against those in same-sex relationships. This province is one of the very last in Canada to take this long overdue step of ending this discrimination. So I do commend the Minister of Justice for taking this long overdue step. Approval of Bill 30-2 by this Assembly will mean that people in relationships that are not traditional will no longer be required to fight expensive battles in the courts and through the Human Rights Commission to have equal access to the law.

Having said this, however, I continue to be concerned that the compromises the Minister of Justice had to make to gain the support of his own caucus for this bill may come back to haunt Albertans down the road. The preamble, in particular, Mr. Speaker, is unnecessarily narrow and excludes many Albertans, and to suggest that it is a representation of the views of all Albertans is not correct. It might well represent a concession made within the government caucus in order to gain support for the rest of the bill, but it continues to marginalize, sideline, and isolate many Albertans.

I think it's well established in constitutional law that the federal government is paramount in matters dealing with marriage and divorce. This is the second time in the past few years that this Conservative government has chosen to intrude on the federal government's jurisdiction over who may enter into marriage or marriage-like relationships. Several years ago Bill 202 was passed in this Legislature, that purported to define marriage as between a man and a woman, clearly intruding into the federal government jurisdiction over who may marry. Even the Minister of Justice at that time commented that Bill 202 could well be found unconstitutional if it were ever to be challenged in the courts. It is for good reason that the framers of our Constitution decided to give the federal Parliament the power to establish legal relationships such as marriage. If every province had this authority, we could well end up with a patchwork quilt of such relationships across the provinces.

I fear that we may well be going down the same road with this attempt to create a new category of relationship called adult interdependent partners, or AIP for short. Edmonton Journal columnist Paula Simons commented that this government appears to want to turn this province into the planet of the apes.

Now, I am aware that the Minister of Justice genuinely believes that it is appropriate to provide legal recognition to relationships other than conjugal relationships. There may well be merit in doing so, Mr. Speaker, but this does not entitle the Minister of Justice to legislate in an area that is properly the constitutional responsibility of the federal government.

I have noted and others may have noticed as well that the government is rather sensitive about any intrusions by the federal government into provincial jurisdiction, whether it's in the area of health care or control over natural resources or control over CO₂. This government went so far in Bill 32 as to complain that pollutants being released into the atmosphere were natural resources over which the provincial government was claiming ownership. You would think, Mr. Speaker, that this Tory government would be more careful about intruding into federal jurisdiction, yet whether it has to do with wheat marketing or purporting to define adult relationships, this government seems only too eager to wander into areas that are properly the responsibility of the federal government when it suits them. All this government had to do to provide legal equality to Albertans in various relationships was to use a definition such as common-law partners. Instead, it took something that was simple and made it complicated by creating a brand-new category of relationship.

So we may in the end regret some of the things in this bill, Mr. Speaker, but in the end it does in a roundabout way what could have been done more simply and which the courts have ordered and which only human decency and respect for other people requires us to do, and as a result the third party, the New Democrats, will support this bill at third reading.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to have the opportunity in third reading to speak to Bill 30-2, the Adult Interdependent Relationships Act. This is new law, and I'll certainly grant to the Attorney General that it's difficult to make new law. It's very hard to look forward and anticipate what may not be workable, and I think credit is due to him for trying to come forward with a piece of legislation that (a) passes this Assembly and (b) was implementable and (c) is Charter-proof, and I know he tried hard to do that. Now, we don't know whether he will have been successful.

As I have mentioned a number of times before in speaking to this bill, I was pleased with part of the definition, the inclusive part, but still have reservations about going beyond what was absolutely necessary and opening it up to the committed platonic relationships. It has caused such issue in the community about whether, in fact, the law will be capturing people that are not committed but are certainly in platonic relationships and the concern that has been caused there that people would be in fact captured under a law and responsible under a law that they didn't know they were falling under. I think that causes its own set of problems.

There continues to be discussion in all communities, I think, about what the appropriate path to follow is. Some people would feel very strongly that marriage should be left as it currently is, between a man and a woman, and as constituted by the federal government, but even that is up for change. Certainly, the federal government is looking at whether it would step aside from the responsibility of defining who gets married, opening that up and setting it to the churches or perhaps even back to the provinces.

I'm certainly aware of the point the Member for Edmonton-Highlands was making that something was made complicated that should have been simple. I will agree that people have spoken to me: why can't we just open up the definition of marriage and have everyone be able to be married? But not everyone agrees with that, frankly, and I'm not going to take sides one way or another.

My concern with this legislation was that we be able to make sure that common-law couples were able to access the remedies, benefits, obligations, and responsibilities that existed under law for married couples. That, for the most part, had already happened as a result of a number of court challenges and Charter challenges over the years. Of course, given my constituency and a very long association with enshrining gay and lesbian rights in legislation, my concern around this definition was that it would adequately and positively capture same-sex couples underneath this legislation.

I will note again here my extreme unease with the preamble as it exists. In fact, I supported the amendment that was brought forward by the Member for Edmonton-Highlands to change that preamble. I think it didn't need to be there at all, and it's taking a bat and beating a group of people over the head, which is I feel really unnecessary.

Nonetheless, am I willing to reject the entire legislation and what it can bring to a significant number of my constituents because of the preamble and because of some of the problems that are caused by these uncommitted or casual platonic relationships? No, I'm not. I will support this legislation. It is the culmination for me of many years of work to make sure that that definition does include same-sex couples. It is enshrined under law that they do have protection, that there are ways for couples if they break up to be able to look to one another for support, that upon death if they die intestate there is a reasonable distribution of property, and for a number of administrative legal details as they go through life: change of name, Public Trustee, the banking, a number of other technicalities that will affirm their chosen family.

I think it's also important to note here that with the inclusion of the number of pieces of legislation we've included in this definition, we will also get away from some of the truly silly situations we had where, for example, with the conflict of interest legislation the one group of people who were not subject to it were, in fact, those couples living in a same-sex relationship. Everybody else it applied to; not to them. Also, the situation that I raised in a previous debate around health care insurance premiums where employers were willing and interested and, in fact, tried to pay family health care insurance premiums on behalf of employees, and the cheque was sent back and refused by Alberta health care because they wouldn't recognize the relationship. I think this government often talks about having strong partnerships between the corporate sector and the public sector, and here was one that was trying very hard to work and was being in fact stopped by current legislation.

So, on the balance of things, I encourage all members of the Assembly to support this legislation. It will move Alberta forward amongst our colleagues in the other provinces across Canada and in the federal government.

I will admit to one hesitation, and I hope that it doesn't cause us trouble. I still query the amendment that was brought forward while we were in Committee of the Whole. It seems to have alleviated a number of people's concerns, and for that I think there is a great deal of merit that can be put on it, but it almost instantly started to raise other questions. That was the amendment that stated that those related by blood or adoption would not be considered adult interdependent partners unless they signed a written agreement. Right there you've already created a differential. You have a group of people who by all appearances should be captured by it who now are not. Now, how do you get the word out there that these people will be covered if they cohabit for three years or for less if there is a child by birth or adoption or they sign a written agreement? Now you have a group of people that must sign a written agreement, and the three years does not pertain. So I hope that that one does not come back on us. I hope it remains as part of the package and helps us Charter-proof this.

Thank you for the opportunity to speak repeatedly to this legislation, to the minister for having been so willing to meet with me – I can't count the number of times over the last year – and to listen to my concerns and to be willing to, in fact, address some of my concerns in the legislation. I think we should be proud of this. We're certainly making history here.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, Standing Order 29 kicks in, but none of the members want to exercise it today.

[Motion carried; Bill 30-2 read a third time]

3:50

Bill 31

Security Management Statutes Amendment Act, 2002

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations on behalf of the hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

MR. JONSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would just like to speak at third reading to Bill 31, and I think that I would first like to point out that the bill is designed to prepare Alberta for various types of threats and emergencies but particularly terrorist threats. Members of the Assembly will have noted that it covers numerous pieces of legislation and many areas of Alberta government responsibility including drivers' licences, public lands, transportation, and fundraising. It is a reality in our current situation in this country, in this province, and in this world that we do have to take measures, put in precautions to protect our population and our infrastructure and resources but most importantly the millions of individuals that live within this country and in this province.

The bill is a result of a comprehensive review undertaken by the Ministerial Task Force on Security, of which I happen to be the chair. I would like to just note very quickly that in the formation of the bill a number of steps were taken to strengthen security provisions across the province. We reviewed security at key energy and utility sites in co-operation with oil, gas, and utility industry officials. We improved links with the RCMP, the Canadian Security Intelligence Service, other provinces, and industry. The Alberta Emergency Preparedness Partnership was reconvened. For those of you who might not be familiar with this group, it is made up of a number of groups and organizations including federal, provincial, and municipal government representatives, industry and utility representatives, as well as fire, police, military, and intelligence officials, and that overall umbrella organization has been very instrumental and very much a part of our overall security effort.

There have been some additional resources put into the whole security effort in the province, Mr. Speaker. Particularly, significant equipment is being provided to the major cities to help detect chemical, biological, radiological, and nuclear threats. Registry procedures in terms of identification have been changed to prevent the creation of fraudulent identification such as drivers' licences and birth certificates. Alberta Health has been co-chairing a national health sector review to strengthen existing strategies on bioterrorism. A new crisis management process was created that outlines the responsibilities of governments and organizations in the event of a terrorist attack and puts the province on even more secure footing. We've held conferences which have brought together all of the stakeholders in the security initiative. One of the most successful was just held last month in the city of Calgary.

We have connected communicationwise with nearby provinces and U.S. states, and we found, perhaps just being a bit presumptuous, that we have some of the best emergency response plans and procedures in North America. The federal government, Mr. Speaker, has acknowledged this as well by stating that Alberta is very well prepared and well ahead of other jurisdictions. This legislation makes us even better prepared to deal with the possible terrorist threats and other dangers.

Mr. Speaker, one of the main comments that I wanted to make, though, in conclusion of my speech on the third reading of this bill is that I know that there are concerns expressed about the violation of civil liberties or the possible intrusion upon reasonable privacy for individuals. But I would like to note that in the legislation there are a number of safeguards, and the main one, I think, is that there is the frequent reference in the legislation through its various clauses to the fact that we are taking action on terrorist activity as defined by the Criminal Code of Canada. We are not creating a new set of laws by which people will be judged should terrorist acts occur.

Secondly, with respect to the health area we are, again, not taking any measures that are not provided for in natural disasters and that sort of event that we've had to cope with in the past. We do have to recognize that the method by which, for instance, biological agents might be spread throughout the population – and I guess the best known of those substances is anthrax. We must be changing our procedures and our approach to make sure that we can react very quickly and very comprehensively to, let us say, an anthrax attack in our province. Anthrax, of course, has been around for a long time. It is not a new substance. But in this province and all across Canada we are used to dealing with it as a spore or substance which is typically associated with the raising of cattle and the pollution, you might say, of the soil. If we did not know before the tragedy in New York at the World Trade Center, we know now that anthrax can be used in a much more deadly way on a much broader basis.

So I appreciate that there needs to be a watch always maintained by governments on behalf of their populations that the measures that are being taken are not too extreme. We feel that in this particular piece of legislation, Bill 31, Mr. Speaker, we have provided for the right balance. We have to recognize that there is a reality now that Canada and Alberta are potential sites for terrorist action, and we can only be vigilant.

It's our responsibility as a government to make sure that to the greatest extent possible we have provided for the protection of the people of Alberta and those who visit Alberta and to provide for this protection in a reasonable manner, but most importantly, Mr. Speaker, it also has to be in an effective manner that will protect the lives of the people in this province.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to thank the minister for his comments in third reading on Bill 31. It certainly does clarify some of my concerns, and we certainly do support the need to tighten up in several areas for the security of the people of Alberta.

We still have some concerns, though, about the power that's been given to the ministers and the areas that have been changed. While the minister has explained the reasons behind those changes and we support those changes, the problem for us is still that a great deal is being left up to regulation and subordinate legislation then. So that always raises some concerns for us.

Privacy is still a concern in several of the sections. I haven't adequately had the question answered: where's the oversight for the preparation of the regulations? Can we ultimately be sure, Mr. Speaker, that the steps are measured, appropriate, and not unnecessarily intrusive? There could be situations where it's very necessary to be completely intrusive, but the part about doing this behind closed door with the regulations is still a concern for us.

Nick Taylor, who joined us today, has a saying for opposition members, and that is: when in doubt, vote against. So, Mr. Speaker, while we support the intent, we are not sure about the application, and I personally will be voting against this bill.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm rising to speak against Bill 31 at third reading. Many of the concerns which have just been briefly touched on by the minister at third reading were raised in considerable detail during the debate at second reading and at committee stage and during the discussion of a number of amendments that were put forward by myself. I do not believe that the rather brief and general response now in third reading is satisfactory.

There remain a number of loopholes in this bill that put people's civil liberties at risk and create the potential for considerable confusion with respect to who's making policy within the government. There are quite a number of those. The two most serious ones, in our view, are the ability of ministers, independently and without any sort of accountability to their colleagues, to make independent decisions about sharing information under the control of their ministry with foreign governments, foreign police services, and indeed any other government within Canada. We would have been far more comfortable had our amendment or an equivalent one from the government side been adopted in committee, which would have required government departments to have a consistent policy and to refrain from on their own authority sharing information with whichever foreign government or foreign intelligence agency or police force they choose. That's the first one, Mr. Speaker.

The second one is the sections in the bill that allow any employee of a health authority to share personal and confidential information about any individual with anyone they deem necessary if they have reason to believe that any person may be put at risk, and that just rips a gaping hole in the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act. We believe that it is poorly thought out and does not meet the test of a reasonable balance between people's personal information and the general public good.

So with those comments, Mr. Speaker, I just want to indicate that we're not going to support the bill. We think that it is poorly crafted and doesn't take into account many of the rights of people that have been established previously by this Assembly.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 31 read a third time]

Bill 37

Occupational Health and Safety Amendment Act, 2002

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

REV. ABBOTT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to move third reading of Bill 37, the Occupational Health and Safety Amendment Act, 2002.

Bill 37 is part of government's commitment to Workplace Safety 2.0, a comprehensive government and industry strategy to reduce the injury rate on Alberta work sites by 40 percent by the year 2004. The actions proposed in this bill include increasing the maximum fine for Occupational Health and Safety Act violations from $150,000 to $500,000; introducing penalties other than fines or incarcerations for OHS offences, such as providing safety programs or education programs; streamlining the process for updating OHS rules by allowing the creation of an occupational health and safety code to govern the codes of practice for work site safety; allowing the use of administrative fines similar to those used for traffic violations – the introduction of these fines will depend upon a review of these fines in other jurisdictions to determine their effectiveness – and finally, publishing the names of employers with the best and worst safety performance in the province.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We certainly support the intent of Bill 37, the Occupational Health and Safety Amendment Act, 2002, and we would like to thank the government for the support of the amendment from Edmonton-Gold Bar last evening. We think it strengthens the bill, and we like to see that this government has taken a stance in endeavouring to further promote workers and their safety. Definitely, workers should be given better odds of staying alive when they're working for a living than perhaps they had in the past, and hopefully this bill will help strengthen that.

We raised a number of concerns, heard a number of amendments come forward, but at the end of the day this is a pretty good bill, Mr. Speaker, and we're happy to support it.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

MR. DUNFORD: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to begin by saying thank you to the Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar for carrying this bill forward for us, also to the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar for the amendment that we viewed as friendly and were able to accept last evening but also to all members here in the House that support workplace health and safety.

I thought the Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar made an excellent synopsis of the provisions of the bill, but I just want to assure everyone that there's far more to workplace health and safety and to meeting the goal of a 40 percent reduction by the year 2004 than just the enforcement side. Of course, legislation is there to provide, then, the framework for enforcement, but what goes far beyond this is a renewed commitment on the part of employee representatives, employer representatives, the Workers' Compensation Board, and the workplace investment division of our department in dealing with what has become a more political and a more politicized situation here in Canada, not only in Alberta.

The idea that governments would stand back and watch carnage in the workplace: those days are over. There is a new time now in Canada and especially a new time in the province of Alberta when we're going to work very actively and, I might say, even intrusively in the workplace in making for better and safer workplaces here in this province. This bill goes toward that, and I look forward to all members supporting this bill here at third reading.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise at third reading and indicate our support for Bill 37, the Occupational Health and Safety Amendment Act, 2002. For quite a number of years now I've attended either as an MLA or before that as a city councillor ceremonies marking the Day of Mourning, which is a day set aside by the labour movement to mark workplace health and safety. Year after year we've heard speeches, we've heard poems and presentations, we've seen videos, we've heard from the families of people who have been killed or badly injured at the workplace, and always there has been an undertaking by government to fix the situation. Yet year after year a hundred or more people are killed in this province at the workplace. Nobody goes to work expecting not to come home. They expect and their families expect that they're going to go to work, that they're going to work safely, and when their shift is over, they're going to come home, and they're going to have dinner with their family. For too many people for too many years that hasn't happened.

Mr. Speaker, I want to say that this is the first indication that I've seen in all of those years of attending those ceremonies marking the Day of Mourning that there's an actual will on the part of the government to change the situation. The situation, as the minister has indicated, is completely unacceptable. It has become politicized. Workers have driven home the message that they're not prepared to allow this state of affairs to continue and to have dozens and dozens and dozens of people killed at the workplace. So this bill, in my view, marks a very good step, a first real step towards correcting that situation, and I commend the minister for it. I believe that he's the first minister with the intestinal fortitude to actually put his foot down and say: enough is enough.

Now, whether or not this bill is sufficient or whether or not additional steps need to be taken remains to be seen, Mr. Speaker. I believe that there will have to be additional steps taken if we're going to actually deal with this issue, because in the end there should be zero tolerance for workplace death and injury. The objective should be to eliminate workplace death and injuries completely and utterly.

Just in closing, Mr. Speaker, I'd also like to commend the Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar for his work on this bill. He's done a good job, in my view, of explaining the bill and assisting with its passage through the Assembly, so I extend to him my congratulations.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Good afternoon, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to rise this afternoon and participate in Bill 37 at third reading.

DR. PANNU: Take a deep breath.

MR. MacDONALD: I am quite concerned about greenhouse gas emissions and deep breathing. But in light of the importance of Bill 37 and workplace health and safety, I heard from the Annex the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands speak, and I was compelled to come over and join the debate at third reading.

In conclusion, for a long period of time the minister consulted publicly with unions, with business, with various groups across the province. This legislation is the result of that consultation. One cannot take lightly this legislation when one considers that on the day it was introduced, unfortunately two more Albertans were killed on the job, and the following day another individual didn't come home from work. So when we consider that and the initiatives that have been proposed here, it is very important, I believe, that we support the minister and his department and the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar for the work that they have put into this, and we have to hope, Mr. Speaker, that these legislative changes will make a reduction in the number of fatalities that were discussed earlier by the Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Now, we all know that there seem to be two different statistical stories in this province. There is one for the union sector and one, unfortunately, for the non-union sector. The union sector has a remarkable safety record, and that is the bar that I think all . . .

AN HON. MEMBER: Nobody moves; nobody gets hurt.

MR. MacDONALD: Now, someone said that on union jobs no one works, no one gets hurt. But the productivity on those jobs is second to none, and I would only ask the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs and the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder that perhaps they should go for a day or two and see if they can keep up with those unionized workers in their line of duty, just see if they can keep up.

Mr. Speaker, if we look at the oil sands downstream development at Albion, 6 million person-hours were worked without lost-time injury; at the MRC project in Fort McMurray, 4 million person-hours worked without lost-time injury. Overall, union construction sites are well below the 2.0 rate and into the zero range on rates. This is why I say that it is a bar or it is a target for all work sites in this province.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I believe I'm going to say that I'm the first speaker in this Assembly that has been breathless from his own words. I am going to take my seat and wish the minister, his department, his staff, and the hon. member the very best, and hopefully, with cautious optimism, there will be an improvement in the occupational health and safety record of work sites in this province.

Thank you.

SOME HON. MEMBERS: Question.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar to conclude? The question has been called, then.

[Motion carried; Bill 37 read a third time]

Speaker's Ruling Tabling Documents

THE SPEAKER: Hon. Government House Leader, just before recognizing you, just a comment that I want to make with respect to an event this afternoon in the Assembly.

It had to do with tablings. There seemed to be a situation that developed, so I think perhaps it's in order just to make a few comments regarding the rules governing tablings in this Assembly. One of the fascinating things about the various parliaments that exist in the world is that even in one of the key documents we use – it's just one of a number of documents we use – Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules & Forms, if one went into the table of contents and tried to find the word "tabling," you would not find it. It simply does not exist. As an example, in Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules & Forms there is one section, just one innocuous section in the documents, section 347. It just basically talks about "two methods by which the government may table documents in the House."

We've had these discussions in this Assembly before. Our Assembly is probably one of the most permissive parliaments to be found anywhere that follows the British parliamentary form of governance. In most parliaments the only individuals who provide documents and participate in the tablings of documents are members of Executive Council or parliamentary secretaries, essentially, and they're tabling documents that are official publications of the government.

In our Assembly we've had a situation in our Routine that allows for tabling returns and reports, and people sometimes do go beyond what would normally be the prescribed methodology that most members would deal with. However, we have allowed such tablings of documents to be made in the Assembly, and members from time to time have basically been rather imaginative with respect to what they have done. It strikes the chair, anyway, that one of the reasons the three House leaders agreed to move this section of the Routine to another spot in the Routine is to make sure that whatever time was afforded for television coverage of the question period would not simply be all eaten up in the tabling of documents. However, some members will stand and table a document and say that there are 1,800 names in a document and not read the 1,800 names. That's the appropriate way of tabling a document, one would suspect, because one of the key things has to deal with the length, and there's no provision, basically, for editorial comments, ministerial statements, or lengthy quotations. Brevity is the key.

The Acting Speaker cautioned the members today more than once I understand, and although it is the practice we have to provide considerable latitude, it's also the role of the chair to ensure that the business of the Assembly is conducted in an orderly fashion. All members, including the Member for Edmonton-Highlands, may wish to consult previous rulings from April 15, 1999, December 2, 1999, and August 14, 1996, on this particular topic.

Hon. members, might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests

(reversion)

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much. Timing is everything. I would like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a constituent and her guest. Joining us in the public gallery is Diane Oxenford, who is a very dedicated community member and was very active working on the ConCerv project to decommission the Rosedale power plant. With her is a foreign exchange student, Daniel Gomes. He's from Brazil, and he is currently attending St. Francis Xavier high school. Diane has been taking Daniel around to many of the fun things to do in Edmonton during the winter. I would ask them to both rise, please, and accept the warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In light of the fact that the only remaining item of government business on the Order Paper is Bill 32 and we previously indicated our intention to table Bill 32 for public discussion, perhaps with a view of bringing back it or some other version in the spring, I believe it would be in order to move that we adjourn until 1:30 p.m. tomorrow rather than the usual adjournment motion to 8 this evening.

[Motion carried; at 4:25 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Wednesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Wednesday, December 4, 2002

1:30 p.m.

Date: 02/12/04

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

THE SPEAKER: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. O Lord, we give thanks for the bounty of our province: our land, our resources, and our people. We pledge ourselves to act as good stewards on behalf of all Albertans. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Visitors

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly Mr. Defay, the consul general of France. He is accompanied today by his wife, Mrs. Defay. France is a significant trade and investment partner for Alberta with two-way trade totaling more than $300 million last year. We co-operate in many different areas such as culture, education, and tourism. Alberta is home to a vibrant and active French community consisting of more than 300,000 people of French descent. I would ask that our honoured guests please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Bienvenue.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, I'd like to introduce today three guests from Capital City Savings & Credit Union. Capital City Savings is a community sponsor of the School at the Legislature program, which gives grade 6 teachers from across the province an opportunity to relocate their classroom to the Alberta Legislature for an entire week. In the fiscal year 2001-2002, 500 students and 145 teachers and parent volunteers participated, and for this current year the program has been filled once again. Capital City has been an integral part of the program's success, and we're very grateful for their support. Seated in the Speaker's gallery today are Mr. Harry Buddle, chief executive officer; Mr. Peter Galloway, chairman of the board of directors; and Mrs. Jacqueline Broverman, community investment adviser. I would ask that they rise and receive the warm welcome of the House.

head: Introduction of Guests

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Finance.

MRS. NELSON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Today we have with us a group of 12 very dedicated people from the Department of Finance. They are here to observe question period in addition to having a tour of the Legislature Building. They are seated in the public gallery, and we have with us Rod Matheson, the executive director; Lowell Epp; John Forst; Frank Hanus; Mavis Harke; David Hinman; Chris Hoogewoonink; Sue Kitson; Mike Neuman; Dave Parker; and Marie Perpeluk. I would ask that they now rise and receive the very warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Highwood.

MR. TANNAS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased today to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly Miss Lindsay Paulsen from Stavely, Alberta, which is in my constituency. Lindsay currently attends the University of Alberta and is working on a degree in science. She's also a member of the soccer team and the rugby team and intends to work in the agricultural industry on her graduation. I would ask that Lindsay Paulsen, who is seated in the members' gallery, rise and receive the warm traditional welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Redwater.

MR. BRODA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly 33 very bright young individuals from a school in Thorhild. They're grade 6 students. They're accompanied by their teachers Mr. Mike Popowicz and Mr. Larry Hryciw; also, parent helpers Peter Kochmarski, Mrs. Brenda Danbrook, and Mrs. Leslie Kwasny. I would ask them to please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Mountain View.

MR. HLADY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to rise and introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly 31 visitors from Rosedale school. With them is their teacher, Mrs. Kate Blackburn, and parents Ms Anne Wallis, Mr. Cliff Courtice, and Ms Betty-Lynn Morrice. Recently on their unit of Canadian studies they averaged 86 percent in the class. After an hour and a half of discussion and debate on Kyoto in their classroom, I'd like to just say that I think it was, actually, a higher quality than I've heard from some of our opposition. [interjections] Sorry. I'd ask them to please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 14 people joining us from NorQuest College. We have 12 students, and it says here that they're from Wetaskiwin and Stony Plain. They're accompanied today by their instructors Mrs. Pat McQueen and Mr. Bruce Huebener. I believe that they're seated in the members' gallery. I would ask them to now please rise and accept the warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

REV. ABBOTT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my great pleasure to introduce to you and through you 18 visitors from Thorsby high school. These students visited our Provincial Museum this morning and later will tour these historic hallways with their principal, Mr. Al Bratland. I would ask them all to rise and please receive the warm welcome of the House.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan.

MR. LOUGHEED: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Two introductions today. First of all, I'm pleased to introduce to you and to the members assembled two people from Fort Saskatchewan, Stu Hennig and his son Scott. Stu and Scott are the grandson and great-grandson of Rudolph Hennig, who was the MLA for the newly constituted constituency of Clover Bar from 1930 to 1935. Scott manages my Fort Saskatchewan constituency office. I'd ask them to please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Also, Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to introduce Dr. Gary McPherson. Gary was the chair of the Premier's council for the first 10 years, and he's a leader in our community, an advocate for disability issues. I'd ask that the Assembly please welcome Dr. McPherson.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

MR. VANDERBURG: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you four guests today in the members' gallery. They're representatives of Alberta's nonenergy mineral industry. Visiting us today are Larry Kryska, president of New Blue Ribbon Resources; Mike Dufresne, president of APEX Geoscience Ltd; Brooke Clements, the vice-president of Ashton Mining of Canada; and, most important, from Whitecourt-Ste. Anne, my number one gold prospector and diamond prospector, Brian Testo from Grizzly Gold. I'd ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

MR. MAGNUS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today it's a pleasure and a privilege for me to rise in my place and introduce to you and through you to Members of this Legislative Assembly a number of very, very special people to all of us. I mentioned these people last week in the Assembly. Let me say that they are the bravest, toughest, most physically fit profession in the entire world. It's also said that they're the only people crazy enough to run into a burning building. There are four representatives with us today, and I'd ask them to rise as I call their names – I don't see them in the members' gallery, so I assume they're behind me in the public gallery – Alex Forrest, who is the president of the United Firefighters of Winnipeg; Ken Block, the president of the Edmonton Firefighters Union; Gord Colwell, the president of the Alberta Fire Fighters Association; and Sean McManus, the former Canadian director of the International Association of Firefighters. No pun intended, but I'd like you to give them a very warm welcome.

MR. SNELGROVE: Mr. Speaker, I would like to introduce to you and through you to the members a friend of mine from the city of Lloydminster. This gentleman is currently working with the Onion Lake First Nations in the capacity of economic development and is one of the many Albertans who believe that the future of the First Nations lies in the partnerships that we can develop with them and with business. I would like you to extend a warm Legislative welcome to Mr. Glenn Soloy, who is in the members' gallery.

Thank you.

1:40

THE SPEAKER: Are there additional members who have introductions?

DR. PANNU: Mr. Speaker, I have some introductions of guests.

THE SPEAKER: Okay. Please continue.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've got two introductions today. I would like to introduce to you and to all members of the House an individual who's attempting through his work with the Edmonton Coalition on Housing and Homelessness to put a safe, warm, and affordable roof over the heads of about 2,000 homeless in the city. While most would rather ignore this fact, he and the coalition are highlighting this problem and finding solutions. The name of this guest is Jim Gurnett. I trust many of the members of the House either know him or know of him. So I will now ask Mr. Gurnett to please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, my second introduction is a very special one. I'm thrilled to rise today to introduce to you and through you to the Assembly my very dear grandniece who is visiting with us from India. Dr. Rupeet Sandhu is here to write some exams that will enable her to go into graduate studies in the area of dentistry in either Canada or the U.S. She lives with her family in the capital city of Punjab, Chandigarh, and she's leaving tomorrow for a short visit to Vancouver before she returns to India. She's accompanied by my significant other, that is, my wife, Swinder Pannu, who is sitting with her in the public gallery. So I would now ask both of them to please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure today to rise and introduce to you and to all members of the Assembly a group of people who are with us in both the members' and the public galleries today who support the work that we do day in, day out, long days, so that we can serve the people of Alberta: staff from ministerial offices, ministerial assistants, special assistants, legislative assistants, the research branch for caucus, even members from the party offices, people who work very, very hard to make sure that the work is done for the people of Alberta so that we can do our jobs. There are too many to name individually, but I'd ask them all to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the House.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Solicitor General.

MRS. FORSYTH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure to introduce through you and to you Dan McClelland, who is the president of AUPE. Dan is in the public gallery. We had a nice lunch of turkey sandwiches and pumpkin pie, and Dan tells me that's only the second time he's ever had pumpkin pie. I ask you to give him a warm welcome.

THE SPEAKER: Well, the section of the Routine known as Ministerial Statements hasn't been called, but before proceeding, hon. members, would the hon. members consider today just deviating from the Routine as normal to allow the leader of the third party and the leader of the government party to participate in this segment of the Routine?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Ministerial Statements

Premier's 10th Anniversary as Leader

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, I rise today to speak of an event that is very significant to this Legislature and to Alberta. Tomorrow, December 5, will mark the 10th anniversary of the selection by the Progressive Conservative Party of Alberta of its new leader and Alberta's 12th Premier, the hon. Member for Calgary-Elbow.

Mr. Speaker, when the party chose its new leader on that wintery day, very much like today, I don't know if its members fully realized that they were launching Alberta on a historic path, a path that is still being charted today, some 10 years later. This path has been one of prosperity, and it's been built with leadership. So far during the Premier's term Alberta has been a leader in eliminating its deficit and making deficits illegal under the law. It has been a leader in launching a debt elimination program and delivering on that program. It has been a leader in reducing personal and corporate taxes. It has been a leader in charting a course of health care reform to keep the health system sustainable.

The list of achievements of the Alberta government with our Premier is a long one, and it includes Alberta leading the nation in every significant economic category for most of the Premier's first 10 years in office. In fact, these achievements have been noted nationally, Mr. Speaker, and have led to the Premier receiving several national awards for political and fiscal leadership. Just last month, for example, he was the recipient of the Fraser Institute's T. Patrick Boyle award, presented for his work in improving the performance of the Alberta economy.

Throughout his term the Premier has also shown a strong awareness that in and of themselves economic achievements are of limited value. He has always stressed that the truest measure of prosperity is how a government deals with its people. In that area, too, our Premier has excelled. Alberta has developed the most comprehensive set of seniors' support programs in Canada. Its schools have produced students who rank number one in the entire world in scholastic achievement. It has produced more new jobs per capita than any province in Canada, and it has the best educated workforce in the country. With the Premier at the helm Alberta has worked hard to build strong, safe communities where diversity overcomes intolerance. It has designed effective programs to keep children safe and to reach children in need. It has taken an aggressive approach in fighting crime and to building a strong social safety net for those who need help. Common to all of these achievements is one factor: the leadership, the skills, the determination, and the compassion of our hon. Premier.

Over the last 10 years, Mr. Speaker, our Premier has rewritten the rules for political leaders in Canada. He has bucked conventional wisdom and chosen instead to listen to the voices of Albertans. He has removed political baffle from the dictionary in Alberta and chosen instead to always speak plainly and openly to Albertans no matter how difficult or how sensitive the issue. He has said no to the strictures of the old ways of doing things and chosen instead to try new ideas and new approaches when they hold promise. Like all good leaders the Premier has not tried to do everything by himself. He has always relied on the support and the guidance of his caucus and on the direction that Albertans have given him.

I should also note that members of the opposition parties both past and current have been part of the province's achievements over the last 10 years. I know the Premier would be the first to acknowledge that their input, their criticisms, and their dedication have made a very real contribution to the growth of this province.

Of course, when speaking of those who have given the Premier support over his first decade in office, the contributions of his family and especially his wife, Colleen, are foremost. Colleen is a true life partner for the Premier. All government members know that she is a constant source of inspiration and wisdom and love to him. She has also been a great help to all MLAs and their spouses, offering support and encouragement with great kindness and openness.

The accomplishments of the Alberta government over the past decade have been of a historic nature. Just as important, I know that there are more accomplishments to come under the leadership of this remarkable man. Our Premier realizes the job is never done. There are still issues to face, improvements to be made, and goals to be achieved.

Mr. Speaker, as I travel the province and talk to Albertans, I firmly sense that the people's faith in this Premier is stronger than it has ever been. Under this Premier Albertans feel confident about their personal futures and the future of this province. They feel secure, knowing that the issues that matter most to them are being handled properly. Most of all, they feel respect for this Premier, who has delivered on his promises.

Serving under this Premier has been one of the greatest honours of my life. He has given me the opportunity to serve this province in the best way that I can. For that I wish to extend my personal thanks as an MLA. As an Albertan, however, my thanks are far more profound. I want to express my thanks to him for what he has done and is doing to build a better Alberta. He has helped keep Alberta the best place in the world to live, and he has helped create a province that I will be proud to bequeath to my grandchildren. I know my gratitude mirrors the feelings of my colleagues in government and all Albertans in all regions of this province. Therefore, on behalf of members of caucus both past and present I extend our very warmest congratulations to the Premier on the occasion of his 10th anniversary in office.

May there be many more years of accomplishments, Mr. Premier. Finally, Mr. Premier, may you always know that your leadership has meant so very, very much to the people of our great province. Happy anniversary.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Official and Loyal Opposition.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to have the opportunity to respond to the Deputy Premier on behalf of the Official Opposition. Pausing today to recognize the years of public service the Premier has given seems most appropriate on this the 10th anniversary of his becoming Premier of our province.

You, Mr. Premier, know more than most the demands of public life, the loss of privacy, the unending schedules, the family compromises, and the difficulties of keeping members of a political party headed in the same direction. Anyone who has made those sacrifices and that commitment to public service deserves recognition.

Mr. Premier, my party and I would pursue much different public policy directions from those you have followed in the past 10 years. Those differences aside, there has never been any doubt in our minds that you have worked hard and continue to put into practice those ideas that you feel will benefit Albertans, and it is for that effort that we join in marking today's anniversary.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's not often that we get an opportunity to roast a sitting Premier on the floor of this House, so I want to thank members for the opportunity to get in on this barbecue. Love him or hate him, there's one thing you can say for his 10 years in the Premier's chair: never a dull moment. When historians close the book on our current Premier, I suspect they will find his record of political accomplishments decidedly mixed. However, one thing they will all agree on: the current Premier will certainly go down as one of the most colourful Premiers in this province's history.

"What are the secrets of this Premier's political success?" one might ask. Dumb luck has got to be one of them; that is for sure. It seems that no sooner did the Premier take office that oil and gas prices started going up. This guy really does have the horseshoes in his pants, Mr. Speaker. Another secret is controlling spin. One of the Premier's first acts upon taking office was to centralize the communications functions of government in his own office. He is the Premier who closed three public hospitals in the city of Calgary and was rewarded for it by taking Calgary seats away from the Liberal opponents in the 1997 election. Go figure. He is the Premier whose government made a total mess of electricity deregulation and covered it up with billions in rebates from the windfall energy revenues, thereby paving the way for an even bigger victory in the 2001 election.

He is the Premier in charge of the wealthiest province in Canada, yet Alberta has Canada's lowest minimum wage and a growing homelessness problem. Here is the Premier whose government brought in a flat tax that dramatically shifted the tax load onto middle-income Albertans and gave huge tax breaks to the wealthiest 1 percent. To top it off, the government then turned around and hiked health care premiums 30 percent, which hits middle-income seniors particularly hard. Unfortunately, the so-called Alberta advantage has not worked for everyone, and this, too, will be part of this Premier's legacy.

One lesson I have learned is to never underestimate the sitting Premier. I might add that some former Liberals of the Assembly learned this lesson the hard way. Under that affable and aw-shucks exterior beats the heart of a hard-nosed politician with a steely resolve to always want to come out on the winning side of every issue. Mr. Speaker, you might vouch for that as well.

In my judgment the Premier has been on the wrong side of many key policy issues. This includes issues of expanding the role of private, for-profit health care, the Tories' erroneous tuition fee policies, and the current debate over the Kyoto protocol. Yet despite our disagreement over policy, the Premier fights hard and honourably for his vision of what he thinks is best for Albertans.

I wish the Premier well, though not too well, in his remaining time in politics. In fact, I'm pleased to offer the Premier my utmost cooperation and assistance in any efforts to ensure his speedy retirement from politics. Being an elected politician is not an easy life, Mr. Speaker, especially the constant demands on one's time and the invasion of one's privacy.

Let me conclude by extending my sincere best wishes to the Premier and his wife, Colleen, as we enter the holiday season.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. the Premier.

MR. KLEIN: Well, Mr. Speaker, thank you so much for allowing me to respond today. I want to begin by thanking the Deputy Premier and the other speakers today. After hearing the hon. leader of the ND opposition, my resolve to stay on is much greater than it ever was. You know, it's better to be lucky than to be sitting where he is. But I am deeply moved by the kind words and the display of support from all hon. members.

Needless to say, Mr. Speaker, the last 10 years have been very meaningful to me. I've been blessed with the opportunity to hold the best job one could ever hold in Canadian politics, and there has never been a day in my life that I have not felt thankful and extremely lucky, by the way, to be in this position.

It's certainly true that the last decade has been a very good one for Alberta. However, there were some tough periods for us amidst those successes, and indeed I allude to them very, very often, especially going back to '93 and '94, when I say that our days weren't complete without a protest. I must acknowledge the tremendous wisdom and support of this caucus and those members who served in previous mandates throughout those difficult times.

Like any successful team the achievements of this government over the last 10 years were made possible by a vision, and it was a vision shared by all of us and a commitment to achieving that vision. It wasn't a complicated vision; it was a commonsense vision. It was a vision of not spending more than you earn. Pretty simple. It was a vision of planning a program for the orderly pay-down of the debt, much like all householders in this province do, Mr. Speaker, and it was a vision of really sticking to the core businesses of government.

You know, I often used to say and I still say today that there was a time when this government owned everything. We had barber-shops and restaurants and airlines and telephone companies and oil companies. You name it; we had it. When you look at the fundamental responsibility of government, it's to look after the core and key businesses of government: health and education and good infrastructure and safe communities, all those things that people expect of government.

Throughout the years I've been so very, very proud of the men and women of this caucus. They bring thoughtfulness to all they do, and they bring talent to all their work, so I thank them for all that they have done to help the team.

I also want to thank, as the hon. Deputy Premier did, the opposition parties and their members today for the work that they have done over the past 10 years. You'll never hear me say these words outside the Chamber, but Alberta's opposition members have helped shape the direction of the province in important and productive ways. Their diligence in keeping us on our toes has made good programs better and has brought distinction to them and to the democratic process. Mr. Speaker, if there's something I've always understood and, I believe, all of us in this caucus, it's that opposition, really dissent, is the essence of democracy. It is the fundamental underpinning of democracy.

Allow me as well to acknowledge and thank my wife, Colleen. You know, it's not easy to be a political spouse, but her personal support, encouragement over the last 10 years – well, actually over the past 22 years. She has been a constant source of inspiration to me, and I'm a better Premier and a better person because of her, believe me.

Above all, Mr. Speaker, I want to take this opportunity to thank Albertans for their hard work and contributions over the years. All of the successes of the past decade have been due primarily to Albertans themselves. They are very, very special people. They act with common sense. They demand no less of their leaders. They work tirelessly for their families, their communities, and their province, and here, as well, they demand no less of their leaders. I've never been more proud to represent a people who, to me, give off a sense of pride and a sense of community. It is a very, very proud community, a province indeed. Above all, Albertans know that the future of this province is exceptionally promising as long as they focus on what's important and continue to make the sacrifices that are occasionally necessary to keep Alberta strong. Being Premier of this province with its kind of people is for me a reward beyond measure. It really is.

I enjoy nothing more, as the Deputy Premier said, than traveling this province and meeting people and going into the local cafe and, well, still going into the local bar, although I have to have near-beer now. I've often said that the best part of my job is the opportunities I have to travel and to talk with ordinary Albertans. You know, it's a wonderful thing to do, and I know you've heard me say this before, but it cures you of dome disease. I've often said that the more time you spend under the dome here in the Legislature, the more susceptible you become to that disease, dome disease, and you start to think that unless it's happening here, it's not happening at all. It's when you get out and about and talk to Albertans that you find that concerns are different and that what concerns us here isn't exactly what concerns them out there.

So it's from these kinds of opportunities that I learn the most about what is going on in Alberta, what is really going on in Alberta, and what is on people's minds. If I have been able to bring some of that wisdom and sound input to the government planning table, then

I think I will have done the most important part of my job, and that is to listen to people and bring what ordinary people have to say back to the cabinet table and to the caucus table. I encourage all my caucus colleagues to do the same thing.

Finally, I want to thank members of the Legislature. I want to thank my staff and my constituency association. I want to thank especially the public service. It is a very fine public service indeed. I want to thank the many, many Albertans who have supported me both politically and personally over the years. On many occasions this support has made all the difference between success and failure. I will always remember the kindness people have shown me, and I'll always remember and appreciate so greatly the words that were said back in '93-94 that are still being said today. Those words were: don't blink; we know it's tough; stay on track; you're on the right road; stay the rails. Those kinds of phrases were so very, very encouraging.

On Friday I begin my second decade as Premier of Alberta. I believe that the challenges this province faces today are as demanding as those of 10 years ago. They're different challenges, but they are, indeed, very interesting challenges. We have the challenge of Kyoto and how we're going to deal with that. We have the challenge of health care. We have the challenge of achieving sustainability in education. We have the challenge of finding new and imaginative, innovative ways of doing our accounting in our finances to support these services. We have the challenge of maintaining a sustaining infrastructure. These are tremendous, worthwhile challenges, and I'm sure all of us will be so very, very proud to have as our epitaph nothing more or nothing less than: we provided good government. Nothing more or nothing less. So, Mr. Speaker, we have challenges. I also believe that Albertans' resolve to face those challenges has never been stronger.

So with great pride and gratitude I look forward to working together with this Assembly and with all Albertans as we continue to build a strong and prosperous Alberta. I want to thank you again for all your kind words today. This is a day, Mr. Speaker, I will never forget.

Thank you.

head: Oral Question Period

Private Member's Statement

DR. NICOL: Mr. Speaker, after all the celebrations I turn to what I consider to be a very grave question. Freedom of speech is the essence of democracy. When a member of this House is silenced, all those Albertans represented are also silenced. The very basis of democracy is that an elected member has the freedom to be heard. Yesterday the principles of democracy were removed from this House when the Member for Edmonton-Centre was denied her right of free speech. My question is to the Premier. Will the Premier apologize immediately and unequivocally for the actions of the government caucus yesterday?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I recall the question, and I recall my answer to the question as being one of saying that the question was insensitive, was irresponsible, and was stupid. I don't recall an unusual outburst of response from members of my caucus. I recall some outrage at the insensitivity of the question, but the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre was allowed to ask her question. As I recall, my answer was quite clear. I really don't recall what happened after that because I didn't give the question much thought, but I do recall hearing some comments of outrage that such an insensitive question should be asked in the first place.

DR. NICOL: Mr. Speaker, it was a private member's statement. The decorum of the House says that everybody should have a chance to speak. In that private member's statement I ask the Premier: will this Premier apologize immediately and unequivocally for the actions of the MLAs in this caucus, for their actions in this House yesterday?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I know that you require decorum in this Legislature, but that applies to both sides. When a question is posed in such a way that it elicits a response of outrage, then that can be expected, and I apologize for none of my colleagues in caucus who were outraged, legitimately outraged, by the question.

DR. NICOL: Mr. Speaker, it's obvious this government does not believe in freedom of speech and that it should be carried on in this House. I refuse to participate in the rest of this session. [The Liberal opposition members left the Chamber]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party.

Health Effects of Sour Gas

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Serious questions are being raised about an October 2002 Health and Wellness study into the health effects of short-term exposure to sour gas. The report concludes that there are no harmful effects of exposure to low levels of hydrogen sulfide gas for healthy people and animals. The principal author of this health ministry study is a toxicology consultant with extensive links to the energy industry, including dozens of appearances in support of oil and gas companies at EUB hearings. The same consultant is currently representing Manhattan Resources in their controversial application to drill sour gas wells in the Ardrossan area near country residential subdivisions. My questions are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Why did the Ministry of Health and Wellness contract a scientist who has worked extensively as a hired gun for oil and gas companies to author a study on the health effects of sour gas?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, the report's primary author, Dr. Donald Davies, is one of the most respected consulting scientists in the province of Alberta today in the area of toxicology. He is one of the few people who hold a certification from the American Board of Toxicology, which is, again, a rare distinction in Canada. He has done a considerable amount of work for both the government and the private sector, both for national and international agencies. The result is that he has an impeccable record of scientific expertise and integrity. He holds a postgraduate degree from the University of Guelph. He has served on national and international technical committees concerned with environmental risks. His committee work has included the Natural Sciences and Engineering Research Council of Canada and the Organization of Economic Co-operation and Development, OECD. We're pleased that a scientific expert with the credentials and the background and experience of Dr. Davies and people of his calibre and experience have agreed to perform this review, whose results will ultimately help better protect the health of Albertans.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's not the qualifications of the expert in question; it's the judgment of the government.

To the same minister: by the same logic, Mr. Speaker, if the government was doing research into the health effects of tobacco, would the minister hire someone who has worked extensively as a paid expert for the tobacco industry?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, I think that I've answered the questions about Dr. Davies' qualifications, and if the hon. member wishes to challenge any of the qualifications that I've indicated, I wish he would rise and please indicate that.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My last question to the same minister: why were peer-reviewed studies – I'll be tabling one of them later on in the House – including one recently published in the Southern Medical Journal, ignored in the ministry's report if not because they contained findings that contradicted the views of the author of the minister's study?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, I can't answer that question because I don't know which report he is referring to, but I can say that Alberta Health and Wellness drew from a distinguished panel of recognized experts to ensure that all of the reviews met exacting criteria for scientific accuracy and validity. Those included Dr. Brent Friesen, medical officer of health, Calgary health region; Dr. Paul Hasselback, medical officer of health, Chinook health region; Dr. Ingrid Vicas, medical toxicologist from Alberta's Poison and Drug Information Service; Dr. Randy Angle from Alberta Environment; Dr. Stephan Gabos from Alberta Health and Wellness; and Geoff Granville, a scientist from Shell Canada.

Federal Gun Registry

MRS. JABLONSKI: Mr. Speaker, I can think of many ways to spend $1 billion instead of using it on an unaccountable, ineffective gun registry. There's health care, education, seniors, housing, day care, lower income taxes. Why does the federal government have a program that turns law-abiding citizens into criminals, like the farmers who carried a bushel of wheat across the border to a 4-H club who were arrested, charged, and thrown into jail? Will the federal government now throw a farmer into jail because he used a .22 rifle to shoot a gopher? Gun control laws in Canada have been very effective, as is education in gun handling and hunter training. A gun registry, however, has no hope of preventing . . .

THE SPEAKER: Hon. member, please. This does not fall within the jurisprudence of this Legislative Assembly.

The hon. Member for Wainwright.

Seniors' Housing

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As the representative of a constituency with one of the largest ratios of seniors to nonseniors, I understand that seniors' housing is a growing concern within the province. My first question is to the hon. Minister of Seniors. What does the minister have in place or propose in the near future that will help our communities to provide adequate seniors' housing facilities so that seniors can age in place and in grace?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. WOLOSCHYN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to point out that the Ministry of Seniors currently provides support to well over 24,000 seniors in some 8,000 lodge units. Another 14,000 seniors are in self-contained apartments that are supported by the ministry. The support we provide, I might point out, reaches all four corners of the province, with over half of these units outside the seven major urban areas.

In recent years, however, in keeping with the member's point, the government has identified a need for additional supportive housing units for seniors who wish to live longer on their own and, as you indicated, in grace. We had two programs: the senior supportive housing initiative program as well as the healthy aging partnership initiative, in which about $50 million was invested in capital grants over the past three years. These grants helped leverage an additional $112 million, the end result being some 1,650 additional supportive housing units directed towards low-cost housing for seniors with low income.

So, Mr. Speaker, I think that what we're doing is quite significant, and I might point out to the member that I continue to request to my colleagues the reinstatement of both SSHIP and HAPI so that we may continue with this fiscal condition permanently.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental is to the same minister. Realizing that the provincial government has limited funds and realizing that the provincial government cannot be responsible for every need that our communities have, the community of Castor in my constituency provided your department a plan to go out on their own and borrow money to build facilities to meet the desperate seniors' housing needs in that community but were advised by your department against doing such.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. member, please. Brief, to the point.

MR. GRIFFITHS: Can the minister explain why a community with initiative was stopped by your department from meeting the needs of its community members?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. WOLOSCHYN: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I might point out that the housing provided by that particular housing body is directed to low-income seniors, which means that the amount of rent that can be charged is limited. They intended to borrow 100 percent of the cost. In the mind of this minister that could have made the project unsustainable, and if they wish to proceed with it, I'd have to get written assurances from the participating municipalities that they would in fact underwrite this particular project.

MR. GRIFFITHS: My second supplemental is to the same minister. Can the Minister of Seniors indicate if he foresees any options or potential solutions that may diminish the growing problems and conflicts that are arising between seniors, communities, and your department?

MR. WOLOSCHYN: I think, Mr. Speaker, that what we have been doing up to this point has been very effective. What we will continue to do, hopefully, is work in partnership with the lodge authorities, with the municipalities, with nonprofit groups, with for-profit operators to ensure that seniors of all income levels have appropriate choices with respect to their lodgings.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Family and Community Support Services Funding

MS DeLONG: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that our Alberta government emphasizes helping children and families in need and in partnership with local municipal governments, also given that there is a great growth in population in Calgary, my question today is to the hon. Minister of Children's Services. Particularly on FCSS funding in partnership with the municipal authorities what was the past year's total provincial funding amount and projects specifically for Calgary?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MS EVANS: Thank you. Last year we increased to full funding all of the FCSS, family and community support services, across Alberta. In its 35-year history we have never before fully funded at the request of the municipalities the preventive nature of this 80-20 split; in other words, 80 percent from the province, 20 percent from the local. Mr. Speaker, $57 million have gone out to municipalities, and in Calgary that was an increase. They now receive some $17 million for their family and community support services.

Mr. Speaker, this has been a good-news story in Calgary, because many of the projects that will help them deal with issues like family violence, children's needs, keeping the community safer will result because of the additional funding from Children's Services supported by this government.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MS DeLONG: Thank you. My supplemental question is also for the Minister of Children's Services. Recently, questions from my Calgary constituents have been raised about a reduction in FCSS funding. Would the minister please shed some light on this concern?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MS EVANS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In fact, there has been a 55 percent increase over the past three years in the funding in Calgary, but I would suggest that perhaps because of some of the discussion in the media about possibilities in reduction of funding for social services needs by the city, it resulted in some confusion about what was in actual fact going on. We have been very happy to work with the city, and most recent reports are that not only the mayor but the city council have been very supportive of retaining this funding. It is an increase over the past three years.

Mr. Speaker, I think it's really important that we focus on the opportunity to build community capacity so that children at risk will have other places to go: Boys and Girls Clubs, Catholic Social Services. An absolutely stalwart assistant of Children's Services is the Salvation Army in the city of Calgary, who has done a great deal to build the capacity in communities and help the families help themselves. All the churches have been of great support. This type of preventive funding that we have got in Calgary has made a difference for the people of Calgary and is showing some results, particularly in some of the areas.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MS DeLONG: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The new Alberta Response model strives to provide supports to children through their immediate family and extended families. What role will FCSS play in the new Alberta Response model?

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, the question from the Member for Calgary-Bow is very insightful and actually right on target as to what is the crux of the challenge for social workers and community members alike, and that is to make sure that we don't simply scoop up children and try and take them into child protection but that we, in fact, help the community help itself so that children and families at risk get that support.

The biggest role to help us with the Alberta Response model will be to network between those that care for children in crisis situations and the people that are working on the so-called soft side of the agenda in the city of Calgary and look for ways and means of supporting them in their work. I'll give you an example. Social services workers today work with the city of Calgary police on a pilot project in northeast Calgary to go out and make sure they measure the degree of crisis before either party acts. We have many teams that are building with the United Way and with the Calgary health authority to find ways of working in communities to make sure that we defuse gang relations so that we, in fact, enhance the capacity of families to seek help. I think Calgary is on the leading edge with the work that's being done through the Minister of Justice on HomeFront, working to build the capacity so that families who have perpetrators of violence within them are getting support almost immediately.

So to the hon. member opposite: I truly believe that if we keep working with Children's Services' networks through family and community support services, both being funded by this province through Children's Services, hand in hand we'll get a better support network so that we won't be taking kids into care without giving communities and families the chance to show their sense of responsibility in addressing children and family needs. I thank the hon. member for an excellent question.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, I have 11 members who still want to participate today, so we're going to accelerate this with shorter questions, briefer answers.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake, then the hon. Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan, then the hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

Seniors' Programs

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Among the hardest hit Albertans by this government's inaction on high power bills are seniors. The New Democrats have heard many stories from seniors on fixed incomes struggling to pay power bills that have skyrocketed since deregulation. One senior from Fort Saskatchewan, whose letter we tabled yesterday, tells us that the power bills have gone from $35 per month to over a hundred dollars all because of deregulation. To the Minister of Seniors: can the minister tell this House and advise seniors already struggling to cope with the rent increases at nursing lodges, health care premium hikes, and rising drug costs, not to mention the many other ways the government nickel and dimes them, how they can cope with huge increases in power bills?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. WOLOSZYN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I want to clarify a couple of things. Our programs are directed to low- and moderate-income seniors. With respect to the premium increases there are some additional 8,000 seniors who were put on the protected list, if you will, so they would only pay a partial or no premium at all. With respect to lodge accommodation increases, the rent increases there, the power bills would have absolutely no effect on those people. Additionally, we increased the supplement to the folks on seniors' benefits in the long-term care facilities to ensure that they weren't adversely affected.

With respect to the others, yes, it is a concern of this minister and of this government with respect to the impact of all rising costs including electricity prices. Although we do not have a program specific to electricity, there are some areas of this province where the rates are higher, some where they're lower, so it's not a universal impact. So we have to be focused as to where we're going. I would say, Mr. Speaker, that any seniors who are for whatever reasons under extreme financial stress have the opportunity to apply for assistance through our special-needs assistance program.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question again to the same minister: when will the Premier do his job and sell seniors' priorities to government instead of trying to sell government priorities to seniors?

MR. WOLOSCHYN: I can only say this much: that is one of the most ridiculous statements I have heard in this House. This is the only province in the country, the only area, that has a ministry dedicated to seniors. The priorities of this government are focused on seniors as well as all other residents of this province, and I think that that statement wasn't even a question. It was just, I guess, Mr. Speaker, an indication that you've let the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona have too many questions.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Let me ask the same minister my last question. Given that we are hearing from seniors who are complaining about seeing their bills increase by 60 percent, can the minister tell us what he is doing to bring the bills of these seniors down?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. WOLOSCHYN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I do apologize to the member for my last comment in that retort. It was inappropriate. I do apologize.

However, with respect to what we are doing, I must stress to the hon. member that we are working with seniors who are under financial stress. Programs are income tested, and quite frankly whatever we can do to help them, we will do. We are reluctant to start focusing on any particular area. I might point out that special needs looks after the low-income seniors' dental, optical, home repairs, appliance support, as well as any things that we can't even sometimes think of that they require for their day-to-day comforts. Again, I must stress that if there are seniors who are in this area of, you know, not being able to pay their bills, we do want to hear from them.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake, followed by the hon. Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan.

Chronic Wasting Disease

MR. DUCHARME: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Elk and deer producers in Alberta continue to focus on establishing a fresh venison meat industry. In order to process the meat for human consumption, all harvested animals must be tested for chronic wasting disease, or CWD. Producers are complaining that the CWD testing process takes too long, and this delay may cause them to lose contracts with butcher shops requesting fresh venison carcasses. My questions are to the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. Can the minister explain to me the CWD testing process?

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, it does take about seven to 10 working days for this testing process. The average is about eight days. It takes about five days to actually perform the test. If a head comes in frozen, that lengthens the test by a couple of days. There is no question that we have been short of people in this area, and we have staffed up as much as we can get the expertise to do this. It is an issue for the industry. We've talked about how we can change that and hopefully get it down to five to six days, particularly in the cases where they do have these markets at butcher shops, in particular, for fresh-slaughtered meat. So we'll continue to work with the industry and try and get that time down to a reasonable amount.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. DUCHARME: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: is the minister aware that an American scientist has developed a testing program for chronic wasting disease that is performed on live animals?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MRS. McCLELLAN: Yes, Mr. Speaker. This is actually very exciting news for the industry. I'm sure that all members know that today in order to do a test on an animal, the animal has to be dead because you do the test on its brain, and it's not too popular with the elk to be alive while they do that. This test has great promise. The difficulty is that it hasn't been approved yet by the USDA and/or Canada. So there will be some fairly rigorous testing. I think this is one of the opportunities that we might broach to our American colleagues that we do a joint testing. I certainly will be talking to the Canadian government responsible in this area and saying: because it's such a critical test for the industry, could we possibly do some of these protocols together and save some time and get a test, if it proves out, for the live animals?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. DUCHARME: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. During the cervid harvesting preserve public debate, elk and deer producers often heard that their animals were domesticated animals. Can the minister tell me when these cervids will be recognized and treated as domesticated animals in government laws and regulations?

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, I don't want to dash anybody's hopes in this Legislature, and the minister responsible for sustainable development may want to supplement, but I just have to be honest with producers. I do not see making them a domestic animal an option, not when wild elk and deer live outside those fences. I think it would be extremely difficult to do this, and I certainly would not hold it out as a hope for the industry right now.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, I now have a list of 13 hon. members who want to participate in question period today, so could we go back to brevity for everybody: brevity of question, brevity of answer.

The hon. Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan, followed by the hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Energy and Utilities Board

MR. LOUGHEED: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Currently in the rural area of Strathcona county there's a great deal of concern being expressed by residents about natural gas exploration and pipeline activity. Residents wonder why the government allows such activity near their homes and why their MLA or the minister does not intervene and instruct the EUB to stop the drilling and the pipeline activity. Could the minister responsible clarify the relationship between his department and the EUB and explain how the current regulations were formulated?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. SMITH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This organization, which has been around for well over 50 years, is a quasi-judicial board. It operates independently of government. Its appointments are made by OC, but it has over the period of 50 years developed an independent history of making regulations, of interpreting government policy, and then once they make these decisions, those decisions come into force and come into effect. They work under two fundamental principles: a no harm test and working in the broader public interest of all Albertans.

MR. LOUGHEED: Mr. Speaker, if the residents are dissatisfied with the process or with the ruling of the EUB, to whom do they appeal?

MR. SMITH: Mr. Speaker, once an Energy and Utilities Board decision is rendered, there are two methods of appeal. One, you can go to the Alberta Court of Appeal, but first you must obtain leave to appeal from a court justice to confirm the seriousness of your application. Secondly, you can appeal to the Energy and Utilities Board itself by applying either for a review or a rehearing. If there was an error in law or fact, if new evidence becomes available, then a formal review would take place. The board may uphold, vary, or rescind its decision at the end of a review. They are doing something rather novel as well. They have an appropriate dispute resolution mechanism that does use an independent mediator that can be selected by two parties.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. LOUGHEED: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister consider a review of regulations such as notification distances, especially as they impact landowners and adjacent residents?

MR. SMITH: Mr. Speaker, I would be more than pleased to entertain that suggestion, as it is clear evidence of an MLA who's in touch with his constituents. They have brought up some issues that can be important to how an organization interprets its policy, interprets its regulations. It is a government's responsibility to establish policy, and I certainly will take that advice.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall.

Nonfuel Mineral Resource Industry

MR. VANDERBURG: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's well known that Alberta relies heavily on oil and gas development. However, the province has an excellent potential for the development of a nonenergy mineral resource. It seems the discovery of a commercial mineral deposit, whether it be diamonds, gold, base metals, or uranium, in northern Alberta, and in Whitecourt-Ste. Anne possibly, is very likely. My questions are for the Minister of Energy. Would the minister consider assisting this industry in developing a strategy to attract investment in Alberta's nonenergy mineral industry?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. SMITH: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. In short and clearly the answer is yes to that question. In fact, diamonds may indeed, as I've said before, be a province's best friend. We have also looked in areas where the economic benefit to all Albertans can be enhanced by developing a nonfuel mineral strategy that, one, streamlines our administration – we've worked on that – two, improves geological information on minerals, and establish a cross-government team to establish strategies to meet these commitments. So we do have a mineral development strategy. This is the first step.

MR. VANDERBURG: The minister talked about the economic impact. Do you have any idea, Mr. Minister, of the economic impact that an active mine would have in this province?

MR. SMITH: Mr. Speaker, very quickly, the full evidence of economic impact of nonfuel mineral development is unknown but needs to be brought forward with further exploration, further delineation of where these products can be found, where these minerals can be found. I'm seated next to an individual who has the presence of kimberlites in her constituency, in the constituency of Lesser Slave Lake, and in that area. We need more exploration. We need to find more ways. Just to the north of us there are diamond mines being developed that will replace Australia by Canada as one of the four largest diamond producers in the world.

MR. VANDERBURG: Mr. Speaker, new investment is key to this industry. Would the minister support the availability of flow-through funds for mineral exploration?

MR. SMITH: Mr. Speaker, I would be more than pleased to support mechanisms that I can bring to this government through the standing policy committee system for consideration by cabinet and caucus, anything that would help enhance and further the exploration and development of the diamond industry and the nonfuel mineral industries of this province. That would include products such as tax credits, a generic royalty process similar to what we have in the oil sands, and other mechanisms that could be put together by good meetings, constructive relationships with the Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne and his advisory committee.

Provincial Nominee Program

MR. SHARIFF: Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Minister of Health and Wellness announced that up to 75 foreign health care professionals would be recruited to immigrate to Alberta under the provincial nominee program. My question is to the hon. Minister of Economic Development. Can the minister tell us if the provincial nominee program, otherwise referred to as PNP, has proven itself effective to date as a way to help address the shortage of skilled workers in Alberta's economy?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. NORRIS: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The short answer to the member's question is yes.

MR. SHARIFF: Mr. Speaker, could the minister advise if this program is being used by Alberta employers outside of the major cities?

MR. NORRIS: Again a very simple answer would be yes. To date, Mr. Speaker, we've had under the program a number of applications, in excess of a hundred from various different employers. Most, if not all, are outside of Edmonton and Calgary, 70 percent of those being small businesses with 50 employees or less, and it is addressing the chronic skill shortage in Alberta caused by a white-hot economy.

MR. SHARIFF: Mr. Speaker, my final supplement is also to the same minister. If this is a pilot program, when will a decision be made about the long-term effectiveness and the strategy of this program?

MR. NORRIS: Well, Mr. Speaker, that's an excellent question, and I would like to take a few more minutes to answer that. The PNP allows the provincial government the ability to speed up immigration in conjunction with the federal government, as everyone knows, and the program has been very, very successful. It was a two-year pilot program. We had the ability to approve up to 400 people a year with an open end on the contract with the federal government if it was going well. The hon. Minister of Learning and I work on this jointly, and our initial response to the program has been so strong in finding people from as varied backgrounds as bread making to iron pipe laying to Shumka dancing that we will be continuing this program when it expires in two years' time.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview, followed by the hon. Member for Medicine Hat.

Trucking Regulations

MR. YANKOWSKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As railroads are closed, goods are being moved more and more by trucks which are beginning to dominate our highways. It seems that as our roads deteriorate, we continue to allow trucks that are bigger and heavier than are allowed in the United States. A trucker tells me that B trains are only allowed a short distance into the States and have to unload onto rail cars and turn back. Railways maintain their own roads, whereas huge trucks break up our public roads and continue to contribute little to their repair. Also, I continue to hear concerns about mechanical safety of trucks on our roads. My questions are all to the Minister of Transportation. Would the minister tell this Assembly why he allows such huge, heavily loaded trucks on Alberta roads?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. STELMACH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There, of course, are a number of really good reasons why we do allow heavier trucks on our provincial highways. One is the larger the truck the more weight they can carry and the smaller the unit cost of transporting those goods, which allows, of course, for better competition in terms of selling those goods and services.

2:50

Secondly, Mr. Speaker, this gives another meaning to bigger is better. If you look at all other modes of transportation, they are following the same strategy, following the same economies of scale: longer trains, larger planes hauling freight in the province. So the bottom line is we're doing whatever we can to ensure that we're still competitive in the world markets.

MR. YANKOWSKY: To the same minister: have you given any consideration to imposing a road maintenance tax on trucks to help pay for damage caused by trucks on our public roads?

MR. STELMACH: Actually, this question with respect to if there's fairness, by the time you calculate the amount of fuel burned in the large trucks, the fees that they've paid – the licence fees, the permits – they more than offset the use of the highway. In fact, I would say that about 40 percent of revenues that come to Transportation in terms of fuel and that come from the large trucking industry. So, quite frankly, they do more than cover the cost of using our Alberta highways.

MR. YANKOWSKY: Would the minister inform this Assembly regarding the roadworthiness of transport trucks on Alberta highways? Can Albertans feel safe sharing our roads with large trucks?

MR. STELMACH: Mr. Speaker, I believe the question was with respect to safety. Undoubtedly, the large trucks have the best safety record compared to any other vehicles on Alberta highways. Given the kind of competitive climate, insurance costs, et cetera, most carriers ensure that their drivers are properly trained and do go through a more strenuous protocol before they do obtain a class 1 driver's licence to operate these big trucks.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Medicine Hat, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Train Derailment

MR. RENNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions today are for the Minister of Environment. I'm advised that during the night last night a train derailment occurred just southwest of Medicine Hat on the CPR main line through the Crowsnest Pass, and in conjunction with that derailment I understand that there was a fire. My question to the minister is: can the minister advise this House if toxic fumes, poisonous fumes, resulted from that fire?

DR. TAYLOR: The member is quite correct, Mr. Speaker, and I do have a special interest in that because it's in my constituency of course. We had people on-site with handheld monitors shortly after the accident had happened, and, no, there were no toxic fumes.

MR. RENNER: Could the minister advise if any residents or livestock in the area were at risk at any time during that fire?

DR. TAYLOR: Because of the quick action, in fact, Mr. Speaker, four farmhouses were evacuated. I'm not sure of the total number of residents, but four farmhouses were evacuated, and the folks from those houses will be back in their houses probably by now.

MR. RENNER: Finally, Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: what will be done to ensure that there's adequate cleanup of the environment so that the residents need not worry about future concerns regarding the spill?

DR. TAYLOR: Certainly, Mr. Speaker, Alberta Environment will be making sure that the cleanup is adequate. We have rules around the way things have to be cleaned up. We've had two people on the site already, and we will continue to monitor that site.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, followed by the hon. Member for West Yellowhead, and then I'm going to call on the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Equalization Payments

MR. McCLELLAND: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question is to the Minister of Finance. Regarding the Kyoto protocol it would appear that two of the provinces most aligned with the federal government are Quebec and Manitoba, both provinces who stand to gain significantly under the accord due to their hydro potential and both of whom benefit significantly from government equalization. My question: why are Quebec's and Manitoba's hydro resources not considered in the same manner as Alberta's hydrocarbon resources in determining the equalization formula?

MRS. NELSON: Mr. Speaker, that's a very good question. In Quebec and Manitoba their hydro corporations are Crown corporations and, therefore, don't contribute to the overall tax mix of the country. In fact, in both cases they're highly in debt, I believe, as the Minister of Energy is reminding me. So they don't contribute to the tax framework of the country or the tax contributions that are made to the federal government by the corporate entities. In Alberta we enter into lease agreements with oil and gas companies who, in fact, are taxed on profit as a corporation. So they contribute, but one Crown does not tax another Crown.

MR. McCLELLAND: To the same minister: is this fair?

THE SPEAKER: Sorry. This is really not for opinions.

MR. McCLELLAND: Okay.

To the same minister: why does Alberta transfer so much more to Ottawa than we get back, an amount that equals, by 2000 figures, about $2,400 per Albertan?

MRS. NELSON: Well, Alberta has always been a contributor to Canada, and we have never held back from being a player that has considered Canada as a country and as a family. This last year our contributions net to Canada will exceed $9 billion.

We did a little look back, Mr. Speaker, to see what that meant to the average Albertan, and lo and behold we again discovered that Alberta contributes more per capita than any other jurisdiction in the country. In fact, this last year Albertans have contributed $2,890 more than they received back in transfers to the federal government. That's a very large contribution to a federal government that is bent on trying to destroy the economy of the province that actually contributes to the well-being of this country.

So I think Albertans have to be very much aware that they are, in fact, the economic drivers of this country, and to put that in jeopardy by outrageous policies such as Kyoto is unbelievable, to ruin the economic well-being of not only Alberta but this entire country.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Alberta Supernet

MR. STRANG: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My questions today are all to the Minister of Innovation and Science. I've been questioned by numerous people in Alberta wondering what the progress is of our Alberta Supernet.

MR. DOERKSEN: Well, Mr. Speaker, that is a very important question, because the Alberta Supernet project is one of the most critical projects that we have undertaken for a long time in this province to extend rural development. That point was brought home to me in a recent visit to a small manufacturing company who designs circuit boards on their computer. They get that circuit board manufactured in Calgary, but they want to send it via the Internet and currently can only do it through a dial-up connection. Their request to me was that that harms their productivity to an enormous degree. They have to dial up at nighttime, send that circuit diagram down the slow speed. It takes it all night. With high-speed broadband they can send that in probably a minute or less.

Mr. Speaker, the progress on Supernet is continuing. There are two aspects. The base network, which combines the major centres of Alberta, is progressing very nicely. There is dark fibre being purchased and bought as per our agreement. In the extended network, which will be more of an impact to the rural community, there are some delays in the project, but we fully anticipate that the entire project will be completed mid-2004.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. STRANG: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental question is to the same minister. Are municipalities included in building the Supernet?

MR. DOERKSEN: Mr. Speaker, we have heard from municipalities over the course of a few years about their wanting to be involved and connected via the Supernet. When we initially negotiated the contract, we made sure that they were included with respect to having the same rates that we would guarantee to the government of Alberta operators. However, the connection charge from the Supernet point of presence to their door has been an agreement reached between the two contracting parties, either Bell West or Axia, at a very reasonable rate.

3:00

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. STRANG: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second supplemental question is to the same minister. Can the minister tell me when the schools of West Yellowhead are going to be hooked up to the Supernet?

MR. DOERKSEN: Well, Mr. Speaker, the Member for West Yellowhead is one of the most ardent supporters of this project, and I can't tell him today specifically when the connections will be at the West Yellowhead schools, but in view of my earlier answer, there have been some delays, but the contract provisions to have the entire network built by 2004 will still be met.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Homelessness

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We're making a bit of history here today.

The most recent homelessness survey has indicated that over 1,900 Edmontonians are homeless. My questions are to the hon.

Minister of Seniors. Why has the government left 67 million federal housing dollars lying on the table for over six months now all because the minister doesn't have a heft in cabinet to match those dollars and announce a program to immediately build new, safe, and affordable housing units?

MR. WOLOSZYN: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to point out that the Alberta/Canada affordable housing agreement is directed at low-income working people for their housing. Yes, we would like to get the program going. We are currently working with all seven municipalities plus remote housing areas of northern Alberta, and as soon as the money is available through this government, which I hope will be fairly soon, we will be moving.

But I must point out that in announcing a program, having the dollars announced means nothing until you have the plan in place and you're prepared to implement the plan. We're currently working on the plan. When it is ready to go, the program will proceed.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When will the minister announce these concrete plans to build new affordable housing units, that are so badly needed in this province? When will it happen?

MR. WOLOSZYN: Mr. Speaker, I think I have just announced that we are working with all the municipalities plus northern Alberta communities to try to get moving. Now, this is not short term. This is a four-year plan, and we have to ensure that not only do we have our money in place, the federal government's contribution, but, indeed, participation from non-profit organizations, municipalities, and the private sector to maximize our investment.

DR. PANNU: My final supplemental to the minister, Mr. Speaker: will the minister commit to providing funding that fully matches the $67 million federal commitment, and if so, within what time frame?

MR. WOLOSZYN: Mr. Speaker, when I signed the agreement in June of this year with the minister responsible, there was a commitment for matching funds. I've just indicated that this is a four-year program, and it will be varied across those four years depending upon needs and fiscal availability.

I'd also like to point out that, yes, we do have a serious concern for the homeless both in Edmonton and Calgary, but in addition I'd like to say that for the past three years this government has been taking the lead in combating that issue. We've put in about $3 million a year directed strictly at the homelessness problem, which has leveraged some $73 million from the federal government and non-profit organizations. That has translated into some thousand spaces already plus another 800 planned, so in three years we've got 1,800 spaces. Quite frankly, it's virtually impossible to predict the number of homeless from year to year.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, although it seems that we've reached certainly the largest number of questions and answers we've had in this particular fall session, 15 members, I do want to apologize to the following members for not being able to get them into the question period today: the hon. Member for Red Deer-North, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs, the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul, the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner, the hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw. If memory's in place, I'll certainly be recognizing you tomorrow with respect to this.

Before going on to the next item on the Routine, might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests

(reversion)

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, we've been joined by a guest in the members' gallery, Mr. Arthur Kroeger. Arthur Kroeger has a long and distinguished career with the federal government. He's probably most famously known in this Legislature for two reasons. The first one would be the Kroeger-Estey report, which we regret was not implemented fully, Mr. Kroeger. Secondly, one other distinction that I'm most proud of: he is the brother of my predecessor, the hon. Henry Kroeger, who served in this Legislature for many years. Could we ask Arthur to please stand and receive the very warm welcome of this House.

head: Recognitions

Trochu Meat Processors Ltd.

MR. MARZ: I rise today to recognize the 2002 recipient of the Agriculture and Agri-Food Canada award of excellence in agri-food export, Trochu Meat Processors, and its president, Mr. Ray Price from Trochu. This national award for excellence recognizes achievement in areas that are key to the success and growth of agriculture across the country. Award winners exemplify the direction and leadership that governments and industry are taking to make Canada a world leader in agriculture.

Trochu Meat Processors is a role model of success for the agri-food sector in the province. Mr. Price and Trochu Meat Processors have pioneered vertically-integrated hog production from gate to plate. Since 1994 Trochu Meats has custom produced hogs for processing and export to Japan. Their export sales achieved $24 million in 2001. This is a company that started out in the '60s, and I pounded some nails in the first hog barn that they ever built.

Would you please join me in congratulating Trochu Meat Processors and Mr. Ray Price on their achievements in the agri-food export industry.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Lindsay Thurber Raiders Volleyball Team

MRS. JABLONSKI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am standing in the House today to recognize the outstanding efforts of Red Deer's Lindsay Thurber Raiders senior high school volleyball team on winning the provincial championships. Ranking as the number one team in the province and defending their provincial title from last season, this team of 12 young ladies demonstrated their talent and tenacity on the court. Facing the very talented Harry Ainlay Titans of Edmonton in a rematch of last year's final, the Lindsay Thurber Raiders concentrated on returning to Red Deer once again with the provincial championship trophy. A special congratulation to their coach, Kirsten DeZutter, who played a major role in taking this team to the top.

Please join me in congratulating these provincial champions: Justine Barthel, Saralyn Raugust, Jen Atkinson, Julie Young, Amanda Steen, Raelene Purnell, Taryn Holmes, Azadeh Boroumand, Sarah vanDoesburg, Krista Hennigar, Ashley Fleming, and Cailey Gray. Congratulations, girls.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan.

Dr. Gary McPherson

MR. LOUGHEED: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to recognize and acknowledge the contribution of a good friend of all Albertans, Dr. Gary McPherson. Dr. McPherson was the first chair of the Premier's Council on the Status of Persons with Disabilities. As the current chair of the Premier's council I am pleased that Gary has agreed to lend his name to a new award that will recognize outstanding leadership or achievement by individuals, public, private, and not-for-profit organizations for enhancing and enriching the lives of persons with disabilities. The council is also pleased that Gary has agreed to serve as honorary chair of the committee and will provide his insight and vision in the creation of this recognition of excellence.

From the inception of the Premier's Council on the Status of Persons with Disabilities in 1988 until his departure in 1998 Gary as the chair of the council encouraged the involvement of all Albertans in the process leading to the inclusion of persons with disabilities into all aspects of community life. Gary's leadership and his vision of full citizenship are grounded by many of the universal values that are at the very heart of community and private life.

Thank you, Gary, for your vision and leadership.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party.

Edmonton Coalition on Housing and Homelessness

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the context of well over 1,900 Edmontonians homeless, 130 of them children, with over 2,000 families on waiting lists two to three months long for low-cost housing, I stand in this Assembly today to recognize a coalition of people doing real work towards alleviating this desperate situation. The Edmonton Coalition on Housing and Homelessness in its campaign called Home Sweet Home is calling for funding in the form of a 1 percent solution, a small part of the government surplus from both the federal and the provincial governments, to eliminate the shameful fact that in the richest province of the country there are people living on the streets of our cities.

For six months this government has dithered and delayed, failing to announce an affordable housing program despite the offer of $67 million in matching funds from the federal government. As Senator Roche has noted, shelter is a basic human right, and governments have a duty to ensure this right. I would urge the government to immediately move forward with a program to build new safe and affordable housing.

My thanks to the Edmonton Coalition on Housing and Homelessness for the hard work in highlighting this provincial disaster and for putting forth workable solutions to end it.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

3:10

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Alberta Summer Games

MR. JOHNSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I rise to recognize an outstanding sporting event, the Alberta games, as well as the city of Camrose, who hosted the Alberta Summer Games this past August. The Alberta Summer Games is Alberta's largest multisport event and is held every two years. It showcases Alberta's top young athletes who range in age from 12 to 17. In August of 2002, the city of Camrose did a marvelous job in hosting approximately 2,800 athletes, coaches, and officials participating in 17 different sports.

Hosting the Summer Games is nothing new for the city of Camrose. Since the inception of the Alberta games Camrose has hosted three Seniors Games, one Winter Games, and now the Summer Games. The success of the games in Camrose can be attributed to the hundreds of dedicated volunteers and staff and to the tireless work of Dale Toogood, who did a marvelous job as chairman of the winter games and now the August Summer Games.

I'd like to ask all members to join me in congratulating both the Alberta games for its continued success and the city of Camrose for its continued support of the games and Alberta's athletes. Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-East.

Ramadan

MR. AMERY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today marks the last day of the holy month of Ramadan. Ramadan is a very important event for the 600,000 Muslims in Canada and some 1.2 billion Muslims living worldwide. It is the month in the Islamic lunar calendar during which Muslims have an opportunity to reflect upon themselves, pursue their devotion to God, and exercise self-control.

Ramadan is a month of fasting. Muslims are expected to abstain from food, drink, smoking, and other pleasures from the break of dawn to sunset. Fasting is a way of developing sympathy for the less fortunate and learning to be thankful and appreciative for the gifts that we receive. Fasting is also beneficial to the health and provides a break in the cycle of rigid habits or overindulgence. It can be said that Muslims think of it as a kind of tune-up for their spiritual and physical lives.

The holiday is a time of intensive worship, reading of the Koran, charity, compassion, and purification of one's behaviour and deeds. It is also a time when people of other faiths can learn more about the faith of Islam and the Canadian Muslim community. At the end of Ramadan comes the most important of the Muslim holidays, Eid-al-Fitr, the festival of fast-breaking.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to close by wishing Alberta's 75,000 Muslims an Eid Mobarik and a Salaam Aleichem. Peace be with you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

The Hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek

MR. HUTTON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to recognize a very fine colleague of mine, the hon. Member for Calgary-Fish Creek, who has demonstrated depth of character and hard work and continues to be an outstanding Solicitor General. Although there has been a huge media and opposition storm of late, she continues to represent her constituency well and works hard on her government duties with poise and grace. I would ask all members from the government to recognize the Solicitor General.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Calendar of Special Events

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, as we are now into December, let me also remind members of the following events. December 5 is the International Volunteer Day for Economic and Social Development; December 6 is the National Day of Remembrance and Action on Violence Against Women; December 7 is International Civil Aviation Day; December 7 is also the Santa Shuffle, that's the fun run for the Salvation Army between Edmonton and Calgary; December 1-7 is National Safe Driving Week; December 10 is Human Rights Day; December 15 to December 31 is a Holiday Fire Safety Campaign; December 18 is the International Migrants Day; December 22 is the Festival of Carols Day; and for the Minister of Economic Development, December 25 is Christmas Day and December 26 is Boxing Day; and December 29 is the International Day for Biological Diversity.

head: Presenting Petitions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood.

MR. MASYK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a petition signed by 197 Alberta residents. It's requesting that the Legislative Assembly "leave the Edmonton Norwood riding with its present boundaries."
Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

REV. ABBOTT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the hon. Member for Cypress-Medicine Hat, the hon. Minister of Environment, I am pleased to present a petition that urges the government of Alberta to "remove abortion from the list of insured services that will be paid for through Alberta Health."

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

MRS. JABLONSKI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I'm presenting a petition with 271 signatures asking the Legislative Assembly to urge the government to "remove abortion from the list of insured services that will be paid for through Alberta Health."

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to present a petition signed by 52 Edmontonians petitioning the Legislative Assembly to urge the provincial government to "reinstatement the Community Lottery Board Grant Program, its Boards and annual funding of at least $53.3 million."

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

THE CLERK: Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 37.1(2) I wish to advise the House that the following documents were deposited with the office of the Clerk on behalf of the hon. Mr. Mar: response to questions raised during Oral Question Period on December 2, 2002, by Dr. Taft, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, and the Alberta Cancer Board annual report 2001-2002. Pursuant to the Regional Health Authorities Act, Chinook health region annual report 2001-2002, Palliser health region annual report 2001-2002, Headwaters health authority annual report 2001-2002, Calgary health region annual report 2001-2002, David Thompson health region annual report 2001-2002, East Central health annual report 2001-2002, WestView regional health authority annual report 2001-2002, Crossroads regional health authority annual report 2001-2002, Aspen regional health authority No. 11 annual report 2001-2002, Lakeland regional health authority annual report 2001-2002, Peace health region annual report 2001-2002, Keeweenok Lakes regional health authority No. 15 annual report 2001-2002, Northern Lights regional health services annual report 2001-2002, Northwestern health services region annual report 2001-2002, and the Alberta Mental Health Board annual report 2001-2002.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Community Development.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Three quick tablings today. First, a news release that I issued earlier today entitled: A call to Albertans to remember victims of violence: Observing the National Day of Remembrance and Action on Violence Against Women. The day occurs on December 6. Speaking out and taking action against violence is something we must all do.

Secondly, Mr. Speaker, a letter of congratulations that I have sent today to the 2002 world ringette champions, that being, of course, Team Canada, an event that I was pleased to participate in at the opening ceremonies, and I know our Deputy Premier also had the pleasure of attending one of the games and enjoying it.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, a letter I've sent to a constituent, Elisabeth Trudell, who was recently named the grade 5 light music champion by the Alberta Society of Pipers and Drummers. Her family is very proud, especially her dad, Bernie, and so am I.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Seniors.

MR. WOLOSHYN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first one is with respect to question period on November 27 regarding a question from Edmonton-Centre about an age-related benefits committee. Unfortunately, no matter how we researched it, we couldn't find what was being referred to as an age-related benefits in Alberta committee.

The other tabling, Mr. Speaker, is also with respect to a tabling done yesterday by the Member for Edmonton-Centre where she inferred that the rent supplement program is on hold. I might restate clearly that the rent supplement program is alive and well.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

MR. McCLELLAND: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to table today on behalf of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Whitemud the required number of copies of three letters from Colin Andrichuk, Ruth Mryglod, and Weslyn Mather regarding the protection of the Bighorn wilderness area.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings today. The first one is appropriate copies of the scientific paper that I referred to in my question to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Its title is: Exposure to Reduced Sulfur Gases Impairs Neurobehavioral Function. This paper is written by Dr. Kaye Kilburn, MD, Los Angeles, California. Just to draw attention to the significance, the office says that "the most surprising finding was that even moderate occupational exposure and insidious downwind environmental exposure to H₂S can cause permanent impairment." So that's one.

3:20

The second tabling, Mr. Speaker, is a letter from Mr. and Mrs. Hugh and Margie Jones of Ponoka, dated November 26, 2002, addressed to the Minister of Infrastructure. These members of a nonprofit group called the Central Alberta Women's Outreach Society are concerned with the huge increase they are required to pay to the Department of Infrastructure for renting a storage room at Michener Centre.

The third tabling, Mr. Speaker, is a letter from parent council president for Sherwood school in Edmonton, Ms Lisa McNutt, dated November 23, addressed to the Minister of Learning. She's expressing her frustration and disapproval at the way the government is ruining the education of thousands of Albertan children through underfunding.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Point of Order
Abusive Language

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, business arising out of the House yesterday had to do with at least one outstanding aspect. The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar rose on an alleged point of order. The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar cited Standing Order 23(j) in alleging that the leader of the third party had directed an unparliamentary phrase at him.

Review has been undertaken of the Blues yesterday and Hansard, and we've been unable to find any proof of such a statement. All members know that the rules of order and decorum as published by – at least one of the rules we use in terms of the Canadian House of Commons Procedure and Practice states that if the chair has not heard the offensive word or phrase, and if the offensive language has not been recorded into debates of the Hansard in this case, the chair cannot be expected to rule where there is no record.

head: Orders of the Day

head: Royal Assent

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor will now attend upon the Assembly.

[Mrs. McClellan and the Sergeant-at-Arms left the Chamber to attend the Lieutenant Governor]

[The Mace was draped]

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, while we await the return of the hon. Deputy Premier and Her Honour, might I take this opportunity to extend to all hon. members the very best for the upcoming season. Make it safe; make it happy; make it enjoyable; be kind to those you love; and particularly be kind to your children.

Might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests

(reversion)

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

MR. SNELGROVE: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and a Merry Christmas to you too, sir.

I would like to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly a small group of students and their teacher and supervisor from Tulliby Lake, which proves that numbers don't matter; it's quality that counts. Their teacher today is Mrs. Sandra Lawson, and they're accompanied by Mr. Allan Belsheim. These young children have been given a fantastic tour of the facilities. As I ask them to rise and accept the warm welcome of the Assembly, I want to also thank the staff you have in the Assembly for the terrific job they do of escorting the many, many students and people through the facility. Thank you very much. Would you please rise.

[The Sergeant-at-Arms knocked on the main doors of the Chamber three times. The Assistant Sergeant-at-Arms opened the doors, and the Sergeant-at-Arms entered]

THE SERGEANT-AT-ARMS: All rise, please. Mr. Speaker, Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor awaits.

THE SPEAKER: Sergeant-at-Arms, admit Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor.

THE SERGEANT-AT-ARMS: Order!

[Preceded by the Sergeant-at-Arms, Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor of Alberta, Lois E. Hole, CM, and Mrs. McClellan entered the Chamber. Her Honour took her place upon the throne]

HER HONOUR: Would everyone please be seated.

THE SPEAKER: May it please Your Honour, the Legislative Assembly has at its present sittings passed certain bills to which and in the name of the Legislative Assembly I respectfully request Your Honour's assent.

THE CLERK: Your Honour, the following are the titles of the bills to which Your Honour's assent is prayed.

- | | |
|------|--|
| 25 | Alberta Corporate Tax Amendment Act, 2002 |
| 30-2 | Adult Interdependent Relationships Act |
| 31 | Security Management Statutes Amendment Act, 2002 |
| 33 | North Red Deer Water Authorization Act |
| 34 | Seniors Advisory Council for Alberta Amendment Act, 2002 |
| 35 | Teachers' Pension Plans Amendment Act, 2002 |
| 36 | Appropriation (Supplementary Supply) Act, 2002 (No.2) |
| 37 | Occupational Health and Safety Amendment Act, 2002 |
| 38 | Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act, 2002 (No.2) |
| 207 | Alberta Wheat and Barley Test Market Act |

[The Lieutenant Governor indicated her assent]

THE CLERK: In Her Majesty's name Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor doth assent to these bills.

HER HONOUR: I just wanted to take this opportunity to thank you all, to wish you the best of the season, and to say how much I have enjoyed being the Lieutenant Governor of this province. You've all made it very nice for me. You make it a joyous position, let me say, and I can't thank you all enough for the kindness you have all extended to me and the way you treat me. I'm the luckiest Lieutenant Governor in Canada. So to all of you, may I thank you very much, and I wish you a very good season.

3:30

May I just say to you, just so you know, that my husband is not well. You should know that he is having a very difficult time, and we know that the time is fast approaching. However, I know that you all feel for me. I know that, and I thank you for it. And life goes on. I have to say that years ago I had a friend who was 33 years old who died of cancer and left three small children. That to me is a tragedy. Losing my husband will be very difficult, but he lived into his early 70s. He saw his boys grow up, accomplish things. They graduated from university; they took over the business and did better at it than Ted and I. So that in itself has got to be great. I know that

Ted has received many accolades for it even though now he doesn't even remember that he had a farm or any part of it. He still knows me and knows the boys, but that's about it.

I wanted you all to know personally, and I thank you again because you have made me feel like I am the luckiest person in the world. Thank you. [applause]

THE SPEAKER: Your Honour, go knowing full well that all the prayers of all of the members of the Assembly are with both Ted and yourself. God bless.

HER HONOUR: Thank you. I'd love to give you all a hug.

THE SERGEANT-AT-ARMS: All rise, please.

[Preceded by the Sergeant-at-Arms, the Lieutenant Governor and Mrs. McClellan left the Chamber]

[The Mace was uncovered]

THE SPEAKER: Please be seated.

Hon. members, in the ensuing days it would also probably be helpful for hon. members to just tidy up their desks a little. We will have a number of youth parliaments in here in the next period of time, so your office and systems and the like. These young people that do come in and use the Chamber do not open desks or anything like that, but just your own thought process with respect to it would be helpful.

Hon. members, it may very well be that the hon. Deputy Premier is having tea with the Honourable Lieutenant Governor, so perhaps I'll call on the hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. After this afternoon and the visit of the Lieutenant Governor nothing more need be said.

head: Government Motions

Adjournment of Session

34. Mr. Hancock moved:

Be it resolved that when the Assembly adjourns to recess the fall sitting of the Second Session of the 25th Legislature, it shall stand adjourned until a time and date as determined by the Speaker after consultation with the Lieutenant Governor in Council.

[Government Motion 34 carried]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Pursuant to Government Motion 34, just passed by this Assembly, I move that the Assembly stand adjourned.

[Motion carried; pursuant to Government Motion 34 the Assembly adjourned at 3:38 p.m.]
