speech in debate, it states that I may say what I think, "however offensive it may be to the feelings, or injurious to the character, of individuals." So I would state that, in fact, there is no point of order here, and he is simply venting given the late hour.

THE CHAIR: The chair would observe that an important point has been made, whether it's a full point of order or not, and that is that spending the time in committee, where you're supposed to be dealing with various aspects of the bill, and instead reflecting on why other people aren't entering into debate seems to me to at least bring question to the hon. member and her point. So I wonder if you could return to the bill or if you've completed your comments.

Hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, you want to speak on the point of order?

MR. MASON: No, but if the hon. member is finished, I would like to speak.

THE CHAIR: No, she's just sitting down so that the chair may amble on.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie on the bill.

MS CARLSON: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I take your guidance on this. Certainly we had a visitor in the gallery earlier this evening who, on her way out of the public gallery, asked me how it was that particular members weren't speaking to this bill. I think that it's very important as a part of the outreach to people in the community and bringing back stakeholders' interests – and this particular person was a teacher – that we bring up issues that they have addressed, and one of the issues that was addressed was those who did not speak to debate. Well, in fact, the Government House Leader is trying to limit what I am saying on the bill.

When we are in committee we have a far-ranging debate. We know that there has always been a great deal of latitude given by the speakers and chairmen in debate, and I expect that to continue. I am nearly at the end of those particular comments.

AN HON. MEMBER: Good.

MS CARLSON: Well, they make the members uncomfortable, and that's good, because that was the intent. Certainly I am not going to be the only one asking those particular questions as people in the community review what was said in Hansard and who did and who did not participate in the debate, Mr. Chairman.

Debate Continued

MS CARLSON: I have many, many, many tablings that I would like to put on the record, but given the very short period of time – and I know that there are more amendments that are being put forward tonight, albeit we don't have an opportunity to fully debate them because of the time constraints and closure brought in by the government. [interjection] No. You know what? That's not good enough. In fact, we need more time than just the mover of an amendment to be able to come in here and give a very short summary. We need to be able to fully debate those. We need full participation by both sides of the Assembly.

MR. HANCOCK: So get one on the table, and let's get on with it.

MS CARLSON: We will, and if you were to stop harassing me like this, we would get to it a lot sooner.

In fact, because of the kind of feedback that we've had from government members here tonight, we're not going to get to all of the amendments we have. Certainly we will be seeing some of those come up in third reading, I am sure, as many as are applicable. I'm sure that those that are not applicable in third reading will be tabled tomorrow, and all of that because this government chooses to bring in closure on a bill that has been debated for less than five or six hours in this Assembly.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I would like to move on behalf of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona an amendment, that Bill 12, the Education Services Settlement Act, be amended in section 6 by striking out subsection (2).

THE CHAIR: When we receive it, this will be called amendment A4.

MR. MASON: And the clock will restart?

THE CHAIR: Hon. members, usually we give just a moment so that someone . . .

MR. MASON: Is the clock running while this is happening?

THE CHAIR: Yes, it is.

MR. MASON: Then I think I'd better talk, Mr. Chairman. The time is running out, and I have three amendments, and I'm feeling a little bit squeezed here between the government's imposition of closure and other members wishing to dwell at length on certain matters.

I will get right to the point, Mr. Chairman. This will eliminate the section of the bill that says that the arbitration tribunal must be satisfied that an award can be implemented without an employer incurring a deficit, or if the employer already has a deficit, without incurring any greater deficit, over the period during which the collective agreement has effect.

This is clearly another attempt to load the deck against teachers.

You know, there is all kinds of hocus-pocus on the other side about how this kind of thing actually works. The suggestion was actually made by some members that, well, you know, teachers must have been responsible for deficits going back to the beginning of school boards, because until the government put 4 and 2 in the budget, it obviously had to come out of classroom costs or it had to have come at the expense of a budget. But it's absolute nonsense. The fact of the matter is that school boards always had reserves that were put in place in order to pay the costs of collective agreements, and if in fact those reserves were not sufficient, then they would actually go to the government and say in their next budget that they needed to have a certain amount, and the government always had to respond to the changes in the cost structure of schools and of education. The government always had to respond to those, and they're not just driven strictly by labour costs.

What the government is doing here is effectively saying that unless it's in the budget, the arbitration board can't give it to the teachers, and of course what's going to be in the budget of the school boards is exactly the line item that was given to the school boards by this government in its ill-considered budget of a year ago. So what the government is doing is playing on the public's response, the public's concern about deficit budgets, which rose to their heights under the Conservative government of this province under Mr. Getty. That's where the deficits were. There was no intervening period when there was some kind of socialist or Liberal government that ran up the deficits. It was this party that drove up the deficits in this province.

Naturally the public is very concerned about deficits, Mr. Chairman. So what are they doing? They are taking advantage of that and saying, "Oh, we can't give the teachers what they want because it would mean a deficit." What it does is it just gets the government completely off the hook financially for any further contribution to education in this province, and that is exactly where the government wants to be: off the hook for education. Well, I'm sorry; they're not off the hook for education because we're here to keep them on the hook.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Minister of Learning.

AN HON. MEMBER: You're not off the hook.

DR. OBERG: Yeah, but at least I'm not a hooker.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I'll rise to speak to this, and I'll take the Assembly back two and a half years. At that time, in August of 1999, this government, these people that are here, spent $151 million to bail out the school boards' deficits, $151 million. We will not allow that to happen again. We will not allow any arbitrator to put in any settlement that will cause the school boards to run a deficit again. That is completely unconscionable to the Alberta public. After that $151 million – correct me if I'm wrong. I do believe there was an election after 1999, and what were the results of that election? I think we won.

This is a very important part of this bill. What this does very simply, Mr. Chairman, is put into this bill that any arbitrated settlement cannot exceed the school boards' ability to pay. We have allocated numerous dollars to the school boards, an increase of $245 million this year alone, an increase of 8.4 percent to the school boards this year alone as opposed to 9.8 percent the year before. This is very important, because these school boards cannot be allowed to go into deficit again so we bail them out to the tune of $151 million like we did the last time. Those are moneys that could be spent for other things. They could be spent in the classroom. They could be spent for more teachers. They could be spent for a lot of different things. That's the whole reason it's here.

Ask the people of Alberta if they think school boards should run a deficit to pay the teachers' salaries. Mr. Chairman, all I would say to the hon. opposition party is: take a look; listen to what people are saying. Maybe they're different people where they live. Listen to what the people are saying. The people that I talk to, the people that this government talks to do not want the school boards to run another deficit like they did. That is why this is in here. It's an extremely important part of this act, and I would urge all members of the Assembly to vote this amendment down.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands on amendment A4.

MR. MASON: Just to briefly respond, the minister is attempting to portray what is essentially a clause to keep teachers' settlements within the range previously set by the government as some kind of deficit prevention mechanism. Nothing could be further from the truth. Obviously, if a deficit is run, the government has a responsibility to provide the school boards with that cost so that there's not an additional deficit. I would contrast the minister's statement of the generosity towards bailing out school boards with corporate bail-outs such as Bovar and others, that made the bail-out of the school boards that he's referred to look like peanuts.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Minister of Learning.

DR. OBERG: Thank you again, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to reiterate that I do not feel that $151 million is by any stretch of the imagination peanuts. It is taxpayers' dollars. It is people in this room who have paid those dollars; $151 million is an awful lot of money.

Quite simply, what this section of the act does is limit the responsibility. It allows the school boards to be accountable. It allows for the sustainability of education funding through these arbitrated settlements. I don't think anyone would agree that an arbitrator should go to a school board and say, for example, "Well, we think that teachers should be paid 50 percent more; we think that the teachers should be paid 80 percent more." It has to be affordable. It has to be within the school board's budget, and quite simply that is what section 6(2) does. I will read it.

The arbitration tribunal must be satisfied that an award can be implemented without an employer incurring a deficit, or if the employer already has a deficit, without incurring any greater deficit, over the period during which the collective agreement has effect.

Mr. Chairman, there is one school board in the province that presently has a deficit, but they are in the midst of paying this deficit back. It has been extremely difficult for this school board, but they are doing an excellent job of paying back this deficit.

When I came in August of 1999 and we gave the school boards the moneys to pay off their deficit, that was the start of a new day for the school boards, and since that time they have not looked back. I think it would be a grave mistake for this Assembly to allow school boards to incur another deficit purely because of an arbitrator's settlement. Quite simply, that is what section 6(2) is saying. It is saying that it must be affordable, that it must be sustainable.

Mr. Chairman, the school boards are accountable to their electorate. They are democratically elected, and they're responsible to their electorate. Each and every one of us is democratically elected as well.

AN HON. MEMBER: They are taxpayers.

DR. OBERG: They are taxpayers; absolutely right. They are taxpayers, and they must be accountable.

THE CHAIR: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Minister of Learning, but pursuant to Government Motion 16, agreed to March 12, 2002, which states that after one hour of debate all questions must be decided to conclude debate on Bill 12, Education Services Settlement Act, in Committee of the Whole, I must now put the following questions to conclude debate.

First the amendment as moved by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands on behalf of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, known as amendment A4.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Wednesday, March 13, 2002

1:30 p.m.

Date: 02/03/13

[The Speaker in the chair]

THE SPEAKER: Good afternoon and welcome.

Let us pray. O Lord, we give thanks for the bounty of our province: our land, our resources, and our people. We pledge ourselves to act as good stewards on behalf of all Albertans. Amen. Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Guests

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to Members of the Legislative Assembly Mr. Tom Williams. Tom was my neighbour when we were growing up in Tuxedo Park in Calgary, and he's now a retired businessman who is a foster parent and devotes between 40 and 50 volunteer hours a week to the St. Francis Centre in Stony Plain. I would ask Tom to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

MR. DANYLUK: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly a group of constituents visiting us today from F. G. Miller junior senior high school. F. G. Miller junior senior high, located in the town of Elk Point, is not only where I attended school but also where my children were educated. F. G. Miller has had the distinction of being nominated two years in a row by the Fraser Institute for the W. Garfield Weston outstanding principals award. Student averages have increased dramatically and consistently over the last five years to the point where they are above provincial average for the standard of excellence in nine out of 11 diploma results. Today we are honoured to have the grade 9 class visit us with teachers Mike O'Neill and Rachel Germain. They are seated in the members' gallery, and I would ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

MR. JACOBS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's certainly my pleasure today to rise to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly the grade 6 class from St. Mary's school in Taber, Alberta. They are accompanied today by their teachers Randy Spenrath, Patrick Pyne, and by parents Mr. Jim Bettcher, Mrs. Jane Bettcher, Mrs. Karen Capner, Mr. Bob Miller, Mrs. Leslie Oudman, Mr. Bernie Sekura, Mrs. Marianne Sekura, Mr. Fred Williams, and Mrs. Angela Haid. These kids and their leaders have traveled a long way under some adversity to be here today. I would ask that they rise in the public gallery and receive the warm greetings of this Assembly.

MR. OUELLETTE: Mr. Speaker, it's an honour to rise before you today and introduce to you and through you to the House two constituents of mine from Innisfail, Alberta, that worked very hard on my campaign. Also, Marg does a lot of work for the arts in Alberta. Would Mr. and Mrs. Marg Hallett please stand.

MS KRYCZKA: Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased today to introduce to you and through you to the members of this House Nola Bietz, who is a constituent of mine in Calgary-West and I know has at one time worked for the hon. Jim Dinning when he was in government. Nola is the executive director of the Canadian Association of Petroleum Producers in Calgary. She's in the members' gallery, and I'd like to see the members of the Assembly give her our traditional warm welcome.

Thank you.

MR. JACOBS: Mr. Speaker, may I also rise again to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly Mr. Delbert Beazer, councillor for the town of Cardston, who has joined us today in the members' gallery. I would invite Delbert to rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

head: Oral Question Period

THE SPEAKER: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Closure of Acute Care Beds

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The government likes to use closure to limit debate in this Assembly. Now the government is using closure to limit access to hospitals in rural Alberta. My questions are to the Premier. Will you confirm that there will be acute care bed closures in rural Alberta in the coming year?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I can't confirm or deny that happening. I have no knowledge of any closures or potential closures in rural Alberta or anywhere else for that matter.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. How does the Premier justify the closure of badly needed beds at a time when Alberta's population is soaring so badly?

MR. KLEIN: Well, Mr. Speaker, if the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition could be more specific, that would be very much appreciated, because I have no idea of what beds he's talking about. [interjection] I'm being told to be careful?

If the hon. member can indicate to me where these beds allegedly are being closed, I'll have someone look into it, the minister of health in particular, or maybe the Minister of Health and Wellness can shed some light on the situation.

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, regional health authorities throughout the province are being given information with respect to budgets, and we're having those discussions now. Of course, the actual budget numbers will come out Tuesday next. Regional health authorities are doing their very best to try and meet the needs of the people that live in their respective areas. There are challenges, of course. There are many acute care facilities that are in rural Alberta, and I can give perhaps a couple of examples.

In the area of Lakeland earlier today myself and members of my department met with people from Lakeland regional health authority. They advised me that they serve about 90,000 people. There are 11 acute care facilities serving 90,000 people in that area. It is, of course, a very wide geographic area. In areas like East Central, Mr. Speaker, there are, again, roughly 90,000 people that are served by that regional health authority. There are 14 acute care facilities that serve that.

Mr. Speaker, the hon. Member for Redwater, of course, is intimately familiar with issues of the needs for long-term care facilities, and he's raised the question, I think legitimately, as to whether or not the needs of people in certain parts of the province could be better met through better long-term care facilities as opposed to acute care regions.

So the discussion continues, Mr. Speaker, but to suggest that there are any acute care facilities being shut down is a completely premature speculation.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Premier: do you support this kind of cutback in rural health care that the minister is talking about?

MR. KLEIN: Well, Mr. Speaker, the question is indeed perplexing, because as the hon. Minister of Health and Wellness pointed out, it's premature to speculate on the closure of any acute care beds in the rural areas or anywhere else in the province.

THE SPEAKER: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Leak of Budget Information

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Parliamentary tradition holds that budget information is to remain confidential in order to prevent profiteering by the select few. Last month there was a leak indicating that the upcoming budget would include specific cigarette tax increases. This contradicts parliamentary tradition. My question is to the Premier. Why is this government leaking sensitive and privileged information that enables a select few to profit?

MR. KLEIN: Well, Mr. Speaker, we haven't leaked special or select information relative to a proposed tax on cigarettes, but relative to the specifics of the budget – and I'm sure the hon. minister can't be that specific – I will have her supplement.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MRS. NELSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have to be careful of what I say because the budget is next week. There has been lots of speculation, and there always tends to be before a budget document comes out. To the specifics of what the hon. Leader of the Opposition was referring to, sometimes news stories tend to be wrong. Sometimes those that write those stories tend to be a little embarrassed when the actual real things do come forward. It's amazing. Until the documents actually come to this House, I would caution people from speculating as to what the numbers might be or not be, because I won't release those numbers ahead of time even though there's been lots of suggestion that I might clarify this or that. I just don't do that. So they won't be coming forward.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you. Again to the Premier. The minister says that it didn't come from her office. Where did this information come from? It's floating around Alberta, and people are going to profit from it.

MR. KLEIN: Well, Mr. Speaker, certainly there has been speculation vis-a-vis an increase in tax on cigarettes, and I would suggest that where the information came from initially is the Mazankowski report. Certainly recommendation 1 in the report alludes to wellness and alludes very specifically to smoking and suggests, I believe, that there should be an additional cost associated with people who smoke.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Specific numbers were not in that report.

To the Premier: if there are any further budget leaks before the budget comes out, will the Premier assure this House that he'll fire the minister?

MR. KLEIN: No, I won't give any such assurances, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Health Care Premiums

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week the Minister of Health and Wellness refused to describe health care premiums as a tax on the basis that he is not "a tax lawyer." My question to the Minister of Health and Wellness: will the minister reclassify premiums as a tax when a recognized tax lawyer produces an opinion that premiums are indeed a tax?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview well knows that the purpose of question period is not to elicit opinions of individuals. My opinion on this matter is not the subject matter of question period.

DR. TAFT: Mr. Speaker, if you listened carefully, I didn't ask for his opinion.

Will the minister reclassify premiums as a tax when two tax lawyers produce opinions that premiums are indeed a tax?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. TAFT: How many tax lawyers does it take to convince the minister that premiums are a tax?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Teachers' Arbitration Process

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the Premier whined about New Democrats using strong language to describe the government's attack on Alberta teachers. In fact, the whole Tory caucus got into the act, leaving us wondering if the PC in PC caucus now stands for politically correct. So today we are leaving aside the strong language and asking the Premier some straight questions in the hope of getting some straight answers. To the Premier: if the original arbitration process contained in the back-to-work order which was quashed by the courts was acceptable before the ATA won in court, why is it not acceptable today?

MR. KLEIN: Well, indeed, parts of it are acceptable today, Mr. Speaker, and I'll have the hon. minister supplement.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The key component behind the PET is that we were in a situation where there were some 20,000 teachers that were out on strike. We had to use the PET to put these teachers back in school so that the students could get back into the classroom, where they learn. That's the key component with this. With the PET the rules of arbitration are different than what we put in. When we put in a law, obviously, these are things that are strict, they're things that are controlled, things that are very specific. With the PET process it is outlined in the labour code as to how it must proceed.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: given that this government withdrew their offer to cover teachers' pension liability because teachers dared to go on strike, why shouldn't Albertans see this biased and one-sided arbitration process now being forced on teachers as simply punishment for daring to beat the government in court?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I take strong exception to the words of the hon. member, that it is biased. An arbitration process is, indeed, not biased at all. As a matter of fact, the ATA is allowed to choose the arbitrator of its choice. The Alberta School Boards Association is allowed to choose an arbitrator, and the government of Alberta is allowed to choose an arbitrator. Nothing could be fairer relative to this process.

MR. MASON: Mr. Speaker, why won't the Premier honestly admit to Albertans that the government's tactics in this dispute are really all about power, about showing the teachers who's the boss?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, that was a comment and an opinion, albeit false, on the part of the hon. member. This isn't about power. This is about students and looking after the welfare of students. That's what it's about.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Economic Outlook

MR. RATHGEBER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Finally some good news: Alberta is booming. Statistics released this week by Census Canada indicate that Alberta's population has grown by more than 10 percent over the last five years. This translates into a net migration of 140,000 people who have come to our fine province. My question is to the Minister of Economic Development. If the population is growing by 10 percent and if the economy is growing by 2.5 percent, which is still admirable, are we going to be able to continue to find jobs for these new Albertans?

MR. NORRIS: Well, at the outset, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to say that not only do I want to answer the question, but I'm honoured to answer the question. As the hon. member pointed out – this isn't good news; this is absolutely great news for Alberta. Because of the decision of our Premier and the class of '93 to signal to the world that we were going to be deficit free and debt free, Alberta has become the business centre of Canada and North America. As a result, the decision that was made in '93 has paid off in spades. Over the last 10 years we've had an average growth of 4.5 percent in our GDP. As the hon. member alluded, we have created over 300,000 new jobs, but they are sustainable long-term jobs, and this has caused a small problem but a problem that we're very, very pleased to have.

As the census shows, in answer to the hon. member's question, a large number of these employees are coming from other provinces. Our minister recognized that we needed to do something about this and last year in his budget freed up space for 2,000 additional skilled workers, Mr. Speaker. Recently he and I along with the federal government signed a protocol, which we refer to as the PNP, the provincial nominee program, which allows the Alberta government to take a far greater role in immigration.

I want to finish answering the hon. member's question by saying that in light of the current economic situation around the world, this is an absolutely phenomenal problem that Alberta is very, very blessed to have, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. RATHGEBER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental is to the same minister. If the federal Liberal government carries out its incomprehensible plan to ratify the Kyoto accord, does the minister share my concern that the effect on the Alberta economy may be comparable to the same Liberal government's 1980 national energy program?

MR. NORRIS: Well, that's a very interesting question, Mr. Speaker, and I guess I would probably not couch my language so much. I think this protocol has the ability of devastating the Alberta economy. Personally, as a Rotarian I find that there is zero fairness in this, and I'm appalled at the circumstances that have led us into this situation. We believe that if this protocol goes ahead as it is, it will have a similar effect as the NEP and could quite possibly devastate the increase in the boom we're speaking of.

My hon. colleague the Minister of Environment and my hon. colleague the Minister of Energy have both referred to it, and as Albertans we feel that we want to be part of the process. Alberta companies, as you know, Mr. Speaker, are some of the best in the world at dealing with environmental concerns, and this protocol going ahead the way it is does not address any of that. Our largest trading partner, the United States, as well as China and India are not signatories, and it puts Alberta at an extreme disadvantage. So I share my hon. colleague's concern and would answer him by saying that this protocol has the ability of devastating Alberta not only for this generation but for our kids and their kids, and we'll do everything to stop it.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. RATHGEBER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final supplemental is to the hon. Minister of Finance. As we have 140,000 new Albertans who have come here because of our strong fiscal position and advantageous taxation policy, is the government firmly committed to maintaining the advantageousness of Alberta's taxation policy, notwithstanding opposition calls to defer corporate tax credits?

MRS. NELSON: Mr. Speaker, what's critically important is the Alberta advantage. A number of the components have been alluded to today, some of them being the ability to attract capital, some of them being the ability to have a framework in place in this province that is conducive to business development and economic development. Very important is the taxation framework that we have in the province of Alberta. We have prided ourselves on having the lowest overall tax framework in Canada, both personal and corporate, and we will continue to maintain that framework. What is key, though, is to make sure that we not only have the best framework in Canada but that we have one that can compete with our neighbours to the south because that's where the competition is. So our corporate and personal taxes have to be competitive with that stateside. We will continue to move in that direction, and we will continue to be the only province in this country without a sales tax.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

Fort McMurray Teachers' Negotiations

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. New teachers in Fort McMurray can look forward to boarding with the principal or some other community member. Living costs rule out any consideration of their affording places of their own. My questions are to the Minister of Learning. Given that government employees were given a special living allowance, will teachers now receive the same consideration?

DR. OBERG: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to announce in this House today that the Fort McMurray Catholic teachers reached a tentative agreement last evening, and included in that agreement was an increase in their northern living allowance, quite a substantial increase.

DR. MASSEY: My second question is: how will the minister's so-called arbitrators provide any relief without putting school boards in debt?

DR. OBERG: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think we just saw an example of this last night when the board and the local ATA in a community like Fort McMurray got together and reached an agreement. I believe that potential is there for the arbitrators as well to go on an individual, case-by-case basis and get these agreements that are specific to local economic conditions. One of the main reasons we put in the arbitrators' parameters the local economic conditions was to deal with situations such as Fort McMurray.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you. To the same minister: will there then be new money should the arbitrator decide that in Fort McMurray such is needed?

DR. OBERG: Again, as I stated, last night a very good agreement was signed by the Fort McMurray Catholic schoolteachers, which both the local ATA and the local school board agreed to, Mr. Speaker. There were some very significant raises in it. There were very significant increases to the northern allowance, so obviously the money is there for that. It did not put the board into deficit. It did not put the board into debt in achieving that settlement.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Equalized Assessment Policy

MRS. ADY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have only one question, and it's for the Minister of Municipal Affairs. Can the minister assure both the city of Calgary officials and Calgarians that the government does not intend to remove a municipality's right to appeal their equalized assessment?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. BOUTILIER: Thank you very much. Not only do I want to assure the folks in Calgary but certainly members of this House and all municipalities that we have no intention of removing a municipality's right to appeal their equalized assessment, first and foremost. If I could, though, just for a moment, indicate that I spoke with Mayor Bronconnier yesterday afternoon, and I'm very pleased to read this morning how pleased he was with the manner in which the province is working in partnership with them. As I look around this Assembly, Mr. Speaker, there are over 26 MLAs here today that have served on municipal councils either as aldermen, as councillors, as Reeves, and for that matter, even as mayors. In fact, I see a former president of the AUMA here. Not only that, but in the free world we happen to have a Premier who used to be a mayor as well.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Public Safety

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The government wants to make prisoners pay for room and board as a way to be tough on crime, yet low-risk parolees will be seeing their supervisors less often, and now we hear that it's being contemplated that sex offenders will also be excused from meeting with their parole officers as frequently. My question is to the Solicitor General. Can the Solicitor General confirm that her department has plans to reduce the reporting requirements of sex offender parolees?

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MRS. FORSYTH: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to answer this question, and I'm pleased to get the facts out. I met with the community corrections people. Our priority is to make sure that Albertans are safe. No, we are not letting sex offenders out early. They still will be considered a high-risk offender, number one. The probation officers determine what they will do and where they will go. So it's important to understand that the information the hon. member has is wrong.

MS BLAKEMAN: I'm asking about the frequency of reporting. Will there be a change in the frequency of reporting for sexual offender parolees?

MRS. FORSYTH: No.

MS BLAKEMAN: I'm wondering what other cuts in programs the Solicitor General is contemplating that could affect public safety.

MRS. FORSYTH: None.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Drought Assistance

MR. MARZ: Yes. Mr. Speaker, last year Alberta farmers suffered through a devastating drought, and in June of last year the government responded by putting in place the Alberta farm water program. This was designed to help farmers develop long-term water supplies on their farm as something very important to maintain their farming operations. However, the deadline for these projects ends at the end of this month, March 31. Many of the projects farmers wanted to construct have to wait until the spring thaw, and with this deadline they'll be unable to complete these projects. So my question today is to the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. Is the minister going to extend this project deadline?

MRS. McCLELLAN: I have reviewed the program most recently, and I can tell the hon. member and other members that as of March 8 we had approximately 3,570 applications. About 1,600 of those applications have been paid out, and we're receiving an average of about 30 applications a day. We do expect that to increase significantly as this deadline approaches.

Mr. Speaker, we are reviewing the program, as I said, on an ongoing basis and will look at the activity level. It is an excellent program. We have seen innovation from producers, from people in water co-ops, new ways of ensuring that we have long-term solutions to these. Without question, our government feels that it's been a very worthwhile program, and we'll continue to work with producers on the March 31 deadline.

MR. MARZ: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In light of the fact that experts from Environment Canada, Alberta Environment, and your own department of Alberta Agriculture have all indicated that there's going to be another drought in 2002, could the same minister tell me whether there'll be any other programs to help farmers deal with this drought?

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, we're certainly encouraged with the snowfall that we've experienced over the last two weeks. Whenever you have more moisture, it's indicative of perhaps and we hope more to come and that this cycle might be changing. However, we do know that in Alberta we will always have some drought on a regional basis. It is a fact of life in this province. So we've been working with Alberta Environment, the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Administration, and of course our department to develop a long-term drought plan for the province. This plan would look at efforts that can be made to mitigate drought on an ongoing basis. We've co-operated with the federal government in putting more money into groundwater mapping and drought monitoring and exploration for water sources. We've made some improvements to our crop insurance program. We've provided a great deal of information to producers through Ropin' the Web, our web site, as to how you can sort of drought-proof your operation. We're aware that another dry year would be very difficult for producers, so we'll continue to work with them.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MARZ: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The minister mentioned changes to the crop insurance program. Could she outline what exactly those changes are and how they will help farmers deal with this impending drought?

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, some of the changes that we have made certainly came as recommendations from producer focus groups that have looked at the crop insurance program. We've made some changes in the protein coverage for durum and red spring wheat. We've separated the coverages for Argentine and Polish canola. We've introduced the provincial lack of moisture native pasture program, which uses actual precipitation as the trigger point. We've expanded the satellite imagery pasture program. We think that these programs are incredibly important, actually, to livestock producers as well as crop producers in this province.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Disabled Persons' Access to the Legislature Building

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government has forgotten about the homeless, the poor, the teachers, the children, the disabled, and the handicapped. My first question is to the Solicitor General. How are the needs of the disabled being taken into account in accessing this Legislative Assembly?

Thank you.

MRS. FORSYTH: Well, Mr. Speaker, that's a difficult question for me to answer, because I've had no complaints from the disabled to my department. As far as I'm concerned, their needs are being taken care of.

MR. MacDONALD: Again to the Solicitor General: given that perhaps there are no complaints because no one from the disabled community can get access to this building, why is there restricted access at the east wing of the building for the disabled who want to visit their Assembly?

Thank you.

MRS. FORSYTH: Mr. Speaker, as far as I know, there is, at the loading door, and we have provided a security person at that particular door for the disabled. I want to repeat: since we've put security measures into this Legislature, I have not had one complaint from the disabled. I know many of them, and I know they would call me.

I'll refer it to the Community Development minister.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to supplement as minister responsible for the Premier's Council on the Status of Persons with Disabilities and in general for people who have an unfortunate disability. As all members who were present in the House yesterday know, we had a former colleague who was here introduced, and I don't believe that he had any trouble getting into the building. If he did, then please let us know, and we'll look into it. Otherwise, as you well know, there are ramps. There are elevators. If there are some other suggestions for improvements you have, I'll be very happy to undertake them. We do have a Premier's council that looks after these types of issues and provides us with advice. We'd welcome and be receptive to receiving any positive comments in that regard that you might have. But there are no restrictions to that access.

MR. MacDONALD: Again, Mr. Speaker, to the Solicitor General: how is it that at the only handicapped entrance, at the east wing of this building, handicapped people must justify their disability or their handicap over an almost inaudible intercom and video camera? How is this not discrimination against Albertans?

Thank you.

MRS. FORSYTH: Mr. Speaker, you know, I don't know if this is politically correct, but he's blowing smoke. The Premier's council for the disabled meets here. We have wheelchairs. We have people with dogs. We have motorized wheelchairs. In fact, I ran into a couple of them yesterday, and they never complained.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Debate on Bill 12

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Before all the amendments could be debated last night in this House, the heavy hand of closure came down on a piece of legislation that clearly takes away the collective bargaining rights of teachers. The use of closure complements the nature of this heavy-handed legislation itself. Both of them take away people's rights. My questions are to the Premier. How can the Premier justify taking away our rights as elected representatives to fully debate and make amendments to important legislation?

MR. KLEIN: Well, first of all, Mr. Speaker, it's important that this bill pass quickly so that the arbitration process can begin. It would serve absolutely no one's interest to delay this bill, particularly the students'. As it has been explained to me, every member of the Legislature will have the opportunity, if they haven't already had the opportunity, to speak to this bill. I'm surprised that the ND opposition would be opposed to the use of time allocation. They want to see this resolved as much as anyone. It's better than closure. It's time allocation, which provides ample time to debate an issue. There's only so much that can be said, and what the opposition tends to do, unfortunately, from time to time is to say the same things over and over and over again. You know, make the point, sit down, and make a meaningful contribution. Surprisingly enough, they will find that it's time to take a vote.

DR. PANNU: Mr. Speaker, I want to repeat the question to the Premier. How can the Premier justify making a travesty . . .

Speaker's Ruling Reflections on a Decision of the Assembly

THE SPEAKER: Sorry, hon. member. Please take your chair.

I must point out to the hon. member the traditions of a parliament. I must quote from Erskine May, 22nd edition, page 380.

Objections to any reflection upon a previous vote of the House have been considered to be more significant, unless made for the purpose of justifying a motion that the vote be rescinded. Such reflections have been held to be irregular, because the Member is himself included in, and bound by, a vote agreed to by a majority. Reflections on the action taken by the Speaker, the Chairman of Ways and Means and the House upon a closure motion are not permitted.

The second citation is from the House of Commons Procedure and Practice, page 525: "Members may not speak against or reflect upon any decision of the House . . . Such reflections are not in order because the Member is bound by a vote agreed to by a majority."

I only interjected when the member said that he would raise a similar question again. The citations are from the history of parliaments and our parliamentary democracy. We're bound by the rules that we make for ourselves, hon. member. The subject of your question must be altered.

DR. PANNU: Mr. Speaker, my question to the Premier: does the Premier think it's acceptable that four of our seven amendments were not debated in the House last night?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, relative to the amendments and the manner in which those amendments were introduced, I think that the hon. Justice minister and Attorney General and Government House Leader will have some interesting comments to make on that matter.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Members of the opposition and both opposition House leaders were fully aware of the schedule for debate yesterday and were fully aware, I believe, about the rules in Committee of the Whole and what Committee of the Whole is about. Committee of the Whole is for a section-by-section analysis of a bill. Often in this House we see that members of the opposition particularly and sometimes members of the government as well use Committee of the Whole for continuing discussion on the principle. Last night, notwithstanding that members of the opposition had amendments to put on the table and knew that we were spending a limited amount of time but a sufficient amount of time to debate the issue in committee, they proceeded to debate on the principle of the bill rather than putting their amendments on the table. I can't be held accountable for the way in which the opposition conducts their business.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Why is the Premier complicit in rushing this extremely important bill through the House, a bill which will have far-reaching consequences for the future of the public system in this province?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, as I explained before, this government is interested in acting in the interests of the students. Again, if the debate is reasonable and if it's to the point and if it's succinct, because the bill is very clear in its contents, then this debate will be over very, very quickly, without time allocation. Again, it's important to pass this bill quickly so that the arbitration process can begin and we can see a resolution to this particular impasse. That's what it's all about.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Acquired Brain Injuries

MRS. JABLONSKI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In 2001 the Alberta Centre for Injury Control & Research published a summary of head injury and spinal cord injury in Alberta. In one year alone, 1997, there were more than 14,500 head injuries in this province, and many of those injured were left with an irreversible brain injury. Since disability due to acquired brain injury is not covered under the definition of persons with developmental disability, this is a special category of Albertans with needs. My question is for the Minister of Community Development. What has government done to serve the needs of Albertans with acquired brain injury?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Let me begin by just saying for the record our collective thanks to the Alberta Centre for Injury Control & Research in this important area. They do a lot of very good work to help reduce brain injuries and work on the prevention piece.

Now, in specific response to the member's question, there are a number of things that have been done since this recommendation was put forward by this minister a couple of years ago. To begin with, we conducted a public consultation on this matter. We held a brain injury forum. We did prepare a summary report of recommendations from the brain injury survivor community, their families, and care service providers. A short while ago I also appointed an interim advisory committee to provide additional information and consultation in this regard. We've put in place a provincial training framework, and at the moment we are contracting with some agencies and co-ordinators on a regional basis to address these long-standing needs of acquired brain injury survivors. So we've done quite a lot. I realize there's more to go, but at least we're on the right track.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MRS. JABLONSKI: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, can the Minister of Community Development tell us how soon services for persons with acquired brain injury will be available?

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Well, Mr. Speaker, we are in fact putting a network of supports together right now. I've contracted now five agencies to work with 12 co-ordinators in various locations in the province, and we'll be starting that program more aggressively in a few weeks' time. We're well aware that there are some gaps, some fragmentations in this area. Alberta Health and Wellness has done a good job filling as much of that as they can, but there is a select group out there, adults in this case, who have an acquired brain injury that stems from an accident or a fall or perhaps a sports injury or a stroke or something of that nature, and they do need supports after they have accessed immediate health care assistance. They need support when they move back into their communities, and that is the part we're working on and will continue to work on very aggressively during this year. We'll also be putting in place a survivor's manual, and we'll be completing an inventory of community resources to assist the brain injury community.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MRS. JABLONSKI: Thank you. My final question is for the same minister. What is the role of the interim advisory council on brain injury?

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Mr. Speaker, this is a very important advisory council that was put in place by me last year. It's comprised of individuals who have a great deal of knowledge, a lot of expertise in this area, people who've been working in this area of brain injury for several years. Their primary role, of course, is to provide advice to the minister on brain injury initiatives. However, they're also helping guide the strategic implementation of some of those specific recommendations. In short, our plan here, through the advisory council and through our own resources, is to put in place a system that will assist brain injury survivors to live and enjoy our Alberta in their communities to the maximum of their abilities possible.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Chinchaga Wildlife Park

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions today are to the Minister of Community Development, including parks and protected areas. Now that Grande Alberta Paper is out of the picture, will the minister reopen discussions on protection of the Chinchaga?

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Well, Mr. Speaker, the Chinchaga is a very beautiful area of the province that was looked at as part of the special places program. We did conclude that program very successfully with the nomination of five final sites. I might tell you that in terms of special protected areas, Alberta now ranks either number one or right near the top. The five spaces that concluded it last year unfortunately did not include all of what the member is asking about, so if she has a specific point to follow up on it, I'd be glad to do that. We do have local advisory committees that provide advice in this regard, and we follow those to the best of our abilities.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister to supplement.

MR. SMITH: Mr. Speaker, may I just add that the Chinchaga has been a very prolific gas and oil producing area for the province of Alberta over these last 30 years since wildcat work has been done up there. This particular area has contributed measurably to the well-being of Alberta in the production of oil and gas, and it has been done in an environmentally responsible manner.

MS CARLSON: Mr. Speaker, back to the same minister: how can this minister and that minister claim that this area is protected when there seems to be absolutely no limit to the oil, gas, and forestry development that the government is permitting to take place?

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Well, Mr. Speaker, we can't designate the whole province. We've done an outstanding job, in my view, to take into consideration that balance that is necessary between honouring dispositions, contracts, and lease agreements that were in place and the concerns of local municipalities, local residents, and environmentalists and, of course, economic drivers for this province. So that balance has resulted now in about 12.5 percent – 12.5 percent – of the total landmass of this province being designated for some form of protection. We're very proud of that, and I know that international agencies have contacted us and thanked us for that protection.

MS CARLSON: Not good enough, Mr. Speaker.

As little spots of green separated by gas wells do not constitute a park system, will the minister establish a public process to develop a land use plan for the Chinchaga area of northwest Alberta?

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Not at this time, Mr. Speaker. Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

ATCO Gas Rebates

MR. LUKASZUK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. [some applause] There's a Morse code of applause. My question is for the hon. Minister of Energy. Many consumers in northern Alberta will soon be receiving payments from ATCO. Although I'm an urban MLA, I must ask the minister: when are the cheques coming for southern Alberta consumers of ATCO?

MR. SMITH: Well, this has been a process that has been in play for a number of years with ATCO. This Viking-Kinsella gas field has a rich, rich history, Mr. Speaker. I believe it goes as far back as 1922 that that particular field was supplying natural gas to Edmonton, the second-largest city in Alberta. As the consumers and the utility companies moved towards full deregulation of natural gas and natural gas sales in Alberta, the sale of this particular field was an important turning point for deregulation to be achieved. In fact, the sale was put through the Energy and Utilities Board, and the commitment for ATCO to have specific cheques available for people from the city of Red Deer north has been approved by the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board. They are now in the process of being mailed. I understand that the first piece, tranche, will be a credit on the bill with a cheque for the residual forthcoming, and I would direct not only the hon. member and his constituents but also others interested in getting their cheques to contact ATCO, the gas utility.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. LUKASZUK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A supplemental to the same minister: how was the sale of the Viking field approved?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. SMITH: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. It's an important question because it does take into account the role of the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board. This board, that has done a very, very responsible job of developing Alberta's oil and gas interests over the last 50 years, operated both to ensure a supply of natural gas to customers in northern Alberta through the judicious use of this field but then also to evaluate this field.

The first agreement for sale was between ATCO and Burlington Resources, and it was for some $450 million, Mr. Speaker. That was then tendered to the Energy and Utilities Board to see if that was a number that would offer sufficient benefit to the consumer. In fact, the EUB ruled that that was not a high enough number and directed the parties to return to the negotiating table. That activity resulted in a renegotiated sales price of $100 million more, to the tune of $550 million, for the benefit of ATCO consumers north of Red Deer.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. LUKASZUK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My last supplemental to the same minister. ATCO gas northern consumers have benefited from much lower gas bill prices in the past. Now, how will this sale affect those bills?

MR. SMITH: Well, that's a good question, Mr. Speaker. For those communities from and including the city of Red Deer and moving northward for the balance of the province, they will purchase gas now in the same way as ATCO sells gas in the south part of the province. In fact, with this, along with a couple of other decisions from the EUB about a cost allocation, soon Albertans will, as they can now in some cases, choose to buy gas from other retailers. So this has set the stage for ATCO, EPCOR, Enmax, and perhaps other companies who wish to enter this marketplace to be able to buy their gas from them. So ATCO north customers will receive a onetime payment, and then they will be on a level playing field with the balance of Alberta for the future purchase of gas.

Prescription Drugs

MS DeLONG: Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. One of the most important cost drivers in health care is the increasing bill for prescription drugs. One of the ideas that has been proposed is joint or bulk purchasing of drugs by the provinces. Can the minister inform the House if this idea is being pursued by his department?

MR. MAR: Well, Mr. Speaker, I can say that this is a subject matter of some discussion among ministers of health when we gather from across the country, and the concept of joint purchasing among and between other provinces has been looked at and has been rejected by provinces. What a study of the situation demonstrates is that there would be no further effective savings achieved by bulk purchasing because most provinces, if not all of them, already participate in some form of a bulk purchasing arrangement. Expanding that type of arrangement across a number of provinces would not yield any further cost savings.

MS DeLONG: Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: what efforts are being made to deal with the rising costs of prescription drugs?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, there are really two strategies that we're looking at. The first one is to reduce drug costs by reducing drug waste. The second strategy is to always employ the least cost alternative that is effective for an individual. Both within the province and among and between provinces we are working on these particular strategies for reducing overall drug costs.

We're working with other provinces and the federal government to establish common drug assessment processes and look for ways to get faster approval of generic drugs to be purchased. These measures will help us have better information on the effectiveness of drugs to ensure that people only get drugs that will in fact work for them and will also support efforts to employ the least cost alternative. In Alberta we already have a least cost alternative pricing policy for generic drugs.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, in this province we have a prescription checkpoint program, which allows individuals to be prescribed a small trial size of a prescription. If at the end of the trial period they find that the drug is either conflicting with some other medication or is not effective for them, that will help us not buy drugs that actually don't work for an individual. They cannot continue to get the larger size and can just simply discontinue the trial size.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MS DeLONG: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The minister has answered my final question.

head: Recognitions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Highwood.

Hon. Tommy Douglas

MR. TANNAS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I wish to recognize the founder of medicare in Canada, the Hon. Tommy Douglas, by quoting from his concluding speech on medicare in the Saskatchewan Legislature in October of 1961.

I want to say that I think there is a value in having every family and every individual make some individual contribution. I think it has psychological value. I think it keeps the public aware of the cost and gives the people a sense of personal responsibility. I would say to the members of this House that even if we could finance the plan without a per capita tax, I personally would strongly advise against it. I would like to see the per capita tax so low that it is merely a nominal tax, but I think there is a psychological value in people paying something for their cards. It is something which they have bought; it entitles them to certain services. We should have the constant realization that if those services are abused and costs get out of hand, then of course the cost of the medical care is bound to go up.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that if this medical care insurance program is successful, and I think it will be, it will prove to be the forerunner of a national medical care insurance plan.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Smoky.

Joanne Myrol

MR. KNIGHT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to rise today to give recognition to a young lady from Sunset House in northwestern Alberta. Joanne Myrol is the recent recipient of a best new recording artist award, and she recently wrote home and indicated that she was on the beginning of a world tour with respect to her musical talents and abilities. I give her credit. The export products from Alberta are certainly more than meets the eye.

In Norway Joanne is working with Star-Music International. She has a gig on a cruise ship there and subsequently an opportunity with Universal Records. She indicates to us that they like the music and they've booked her for a summer in Norway. She is then off to Australia for quite a time, three months I believe. She writes back to her constituency and her friends and family in the Valleyview area:

I pray that this letter finds you and your loved ones in good health and good spirits. I miss you and think about you. Take care . . . and God Bless.

Love Joanne.

Thank you.

Mill Woods Cultural and Recreational Facility Authority

MS CARLSON: I rise today to recognize the Mill Woods Cultural and Recreational Facility Authority, better known in the community as MCARFA. MCARFA is celebrating 25 years of service to the community this year. This is another good-news story for Mill Woods. The MCARFA board are tireless volunteers and have an amazing list of accomplishments to their credit. Their projects have included the arenas at the Mill Woods Recreation Centre, construction and operation of the Mill Woods Golf Course, development of the outdoor track behind Holy Trinity and J. Percy Page high schools, and the Jackie Parker Park Pavilion. They have managed and raised funds for these projects in triparty agreements with the province and the city. On behalf of all of us who have benefited from their outstanding facilities and organizational abilities, we thank them for their commitment to our community and to our province.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Catholic Conference 2002

MR. YANKOWSKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to give recognition to the organizers, presenters, and delegates that attended the Catholic Conference held March 8 to 10, 2002, at the Edmonton Shaw Conference Centre, sponsored by the Alberta Catholic School Trustees' Association and Alberta Conference of Catholic Bishops. The theme was Witnesses to Love. The conference was opened by Archbishop Thomas Collins, Edmonton archdiocese, and concluded by Bishop Frederick Henry, Calgary archdiocese. John 13:34 exhorts us: love one another as I have loved you. Thus the community gathered in witness to our love of God, our love of each other, and to present Christ to the young as He really is.

Some 749 adult and 620 youth delegates heard a wide variety of speakers expound on love, life, and family and joined in the sacramental celebrations as they gathered around the table of the Lord to share in the Eucharistic meal.

Sincere thanks to the Reverend Fathers, sponsors, and organizers of a memorable conference.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan.

Paralympic Games

MR. LOUGHEED: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As chair of the Premier's Council on the Status of Persons with Disabilities I'm pleased to rise today to recognize some of Canada's finest and most dedicated athletes who are competing in the 2002 Paralympic Games in Salt Lake City. The 2002 Winter Olympics are a tough act to follow, but for these Canadians the Paralympic Games are their chance to make their athletic dreams come true.

Most importantly, the games promote understanding and respect for people with disabilities. These are strong athletes who have worked very hard to earn a spot on Canada's Paralympic team. They are proud to represent their country, and they look forward to wearing a gold medal around their neck.

I am proud to say that there are seven Albertans competing this year. Two of them are already coming home with medals. Brian McKeever of Canmore won a gold in cross-country skiing, and Karolina Wisniewska of Calgary won a bronze in standing downhill skiing. These Canadian athletes have chosen to lead by example and not let their disabilities stand in the way of their dreams. They are focusing on their abilities, not their disabilities.

I'd ask all members of this Assembly to join me and our Minister of Community Development in wishing the very best to these Alberta athletes and to all of our country's athletes competing in the 2002 Paralympic Games.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Mike Hudema and Anand Sharma

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to recognize two fine young students from the University of Alberta that I'm privileged to know, Mr. Mike Hudema and Mr. Anand Sharma. Mr. Hudema recently won the support of his peers and was elected to the position of president of the students' union council at the University of Alberta. Mr. Sharma, who worked with our caucus this past summer, won the position of vice-president external. Both of these young men campaigned on a policy of tuition rollbacks and a stronger political stance by Alberta students. The University of Alberta Students' Union will indeed benefit from the skills, passion, and dedication that Mr. Hudema and Mr. Sharma will bring to the executive. I applaud their commitment to serve their fellow peers and congratulate them on their success.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Norwood.

Tony Yusak

MR. MASYK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's with great pleasure that I rise in the House today to recognize a great man and a longtime resident of the constituency of Edmonton-Norwood. Mr. Tony Yusak recently celebrated his 83rd birthday, on March 3, and he carries with him a long and distinguished record of community involvement and volunteer service.

Mr. Yusak has been a volunteer with the Balwin community hall for over 40 years, where he's a lifetime member. He spent the last nine years at the Balwin community centre running the crib social. I have not heard any comments concerning Mr. Yusak's retirement, and I must say that I do admire a man who displays this kind of dedication and longevity. Mr. Yusak is a lifelong member of the Edmonton-Norwood community league as well as a lifetime member of the Spartans men's club, which further displays his commitment to the community.

I would ask the members of this Assembly to join me in thanking this outstanding member of Edmonton's community and citizen of our province in celebration of his 83rd birthday. We can all take inspiration from your dedication, Mr. Yusak. I wish you many more happy years.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table five different documents. These tablings include appropriate copies of the New Democrat opposition amendments to Bill 12 that were denied debate in the Assembly due to the antidemocratic actions taken by this government; in other words, the use of closure.

The first tabling is an amendment which would amend section 4 by not allowing the Minister of Human Resources and Employment to revoke the appointment of a tribunal member. The second tabling is an amendment to amend section 8 ensuring that an award of a majority of the tribunal was an award of the tribunal. The third tabling is an amendment to section 18 requiring the Crown in right of Alberta to pay the remuneration of all members of the tribunal. The fourth tabling, Mr. Speaker, would have amended section 19 by not allowing the Executive Council and others to refuse a provision of information to the tribunal. The last one would have amended section 28 by removing the punitive clause against the Alberta Teachers' Association.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings today. My first tabling is a letter from Dan Huot addressed to the "Dictatorial Government of Czar Ralph" indicating that Bill 12 is a "mockery of democracy" and that it was shameful for the Conservative government "to stoop so far down."

The second tabling is a letter from Gerald Dumontier to his Calgary-Montrose MLA calling Bill 12 a farce.

The third tabling is a letter from Carolynne Bouey-Shank suggesting that the government agenda is simply to destroy the public education system.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings this afternoon. The first one is a statistical analysis provided by Alberta Education, Alberta Learning, and Statistics Canada regarding the basic instructional grant and the comparison with the Alberta consumer price index between the years 1994-95 and 2001-2002.

The second tabling I have this afternoon, Mr. Speaker, is a letter dated March 4 that I received from the office of the Information and Privacy Commissioner in regards to Bill 11, the Energy Information Statutes Amendment Act, 2002.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With permission I would like to table the required number of copies of a petition from approximately 420 teachers in Fort McMurray who are calling on the government to remedy the problems caused by the high cost of living in that city.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I have four tablings. They're all with regard to the teaching conditions in this province right now. The first is from Karen Marciniuk, who has some concerns she shares with us.

The second is from L. Clarke-Lesiuk, who is very concerned about how teachers have been treated in this province.

The third is from Craig Mathieson, who is a teacher south of Calgary in a rural school district who is very frustrated and worried about the disrespect that our current government has shown towards teachers and education.

The fourth is from Gail Fournier, who is very concerned about inadequate support for Alberta's most precious natural resource, which is its children.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to stand on behalf of 300 individuals from southern Alberta and table what is, effectively, a letter that they've written to the government asking for more support for persons with developmental disabilities, especially adults with these kinds of disabilities. They feel that the cuts that have been imposed in the last six or eight months have really hindered their ability to deal both with their own disability or with disabilities in their families.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Third Reading

Bill 12 Education Services Settlement Act

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Learning.

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's certainly a pleasure to be able to rise today, after a very long debate last night, for third reading on Bill 12, the Education Services Settlement Act. As I indicated yesterday I believe in second reading, my preference would be not to be here with this act as I do feel that it represents a failure in the collective bargaining process.

However, that being said, I think that this act does some very important things. Namely, it will ensure that our children are back in the classroom, and it will ensure that our education system will go through a period of stability now. Indeed, the Alberta School Boards Association today put out a press release praising the government for putting a period of stability into the education system. We're going through a tremendous number of changes in education right now, Mr. Speaker, and to add the trauma of collective bargaining, to add the trauma of potential strikes, having that looming on the horizon is certainly not something that is positive for our students.

So, Mr. Speaker, what this bill does, as I'm sure you know and as I'm sure everyone here is well aware, is put in place a binding arbitration process. It will lead to a contract. It also talks about a very important issue, which is the whole issue of a review of the learning system, the education system, where we can sit down and honestly and objectively take a look at what is happening in the education system, and perhaps we can get a better system out of it.

I think it's time we looked to the future. I think it's time we looked towards where we're going, recognizing that we want and do have and will continue to have and will always have the best public education system in the world, which is extremely important. The education system is only the best in the world because of several very important components, and it's when those components work very well together as a very finely tuned machine that we get the best system in the world. Mr. Speaker, obviously I'm talking about the teachers, obviously I'm talking about the students, and obviously I'm talking about my department through curriculum development. Those are three critical areas. There are a lot of other players involved in the education system, but those are three extremely critical areas, and I hope that this binding arbitration, that has been asked for by the parties involved, will lead to once again having a working relationship where we can sit down and objectively talk about the issues that are facing education with the view that we will be moving towards an even better education system than we already have.

There are a lot of things in here. There are a lot of things that have been said. There are a lot of misperceptions out there; there's a lot of negativity out there right now. I guess one of the reasons that I'm standing here today is to appeal to the sense of moving on together. We are going to have a contract. It is going to be a contract that is brought down by a binding arbitration method that will involve three arbitrators: one picked by the ATA, one picked by the ASBA, and one picked by the government of Alberta. These three arbitrators will attempt to come up with as fair an agreement as possible for the teachers. We will have a larger discussion about such incredibly important things as class size, PTRs, hours of instruction, as well as numerous other things such as special education: inclusion or not. All of these things will be discussed, Mr. Speaker, and hopefully we will have a report out by the time the next contract rolls around so that we can do what is right for education.

Mr. Speaker, we all like to put down reasons and rationale as to where we are. I can truly say that without education I would not be in this Assembly; I would not be in the position that I'm in today. I believe very strongly in the public education system. I feel very strongly that education is going to be the way of the future. When and if our natural resources run out, education will always be there, and it's something that this government feels extremely strongly about.

Mr. Speaker, that is what is going to happen. We're going to have a full review of the education system. Through that review, because of this bill, we will have relative labour peace. We will be able to talk objectively, as it said on the ATA web site, about some of the very difficult issues that are in the education system, and we will be able to come up with solutions for this through, I'm sure, the learned minds around the province.

So with that, Mr. Speaker, I think we've had a good debate on this bill. Everyone here, everyone in this Assembly, knows the rationale behind putting this bill in. I truly, truly look forward to working together again with all of our educational partners for better education, for a better system in the future for our students.

Mr. Speaker, with that, it does give me great pleasure today to move third reading of Bill 12, the Education Services Settlement Act.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think the remarks we just heard from the minister are so very, very telling and really, really make it abundantly clear why the school system has reached the kind of dispute it did, which resulted in strikes. There is such a serious disconnect between what the minister says and what the minister does. I can't quite believe that the minister believes that this is going to bring stability to the school system. Anything but. All the minister has to do is to read his own e-mails, and he would know that that's not the case. How do you ram through a bill, a bill that does everything but strip a professional organization of their basic rights and does that for a two-year period, and expect that those people are going to turn around and provide you with the kind of stable service that you want? It's just incredible that that's the expectation.

The minister talked about components working well together. This is a minister that didn't even pick up the phone and talk to the association's president when things got to an impasse and there were strikes across the province. Where was the co-operation then? Where has the co-operation been since last April, when the government started the whole dispute by putting 4 and 2 as line items in the budget?

So to stand up today, after having engineered Bill 12, and to say that we're in this together and that co-operation is the word of the day I think is, as I said previously, quite incredible and I think speaks to why we're having the present difficulties and are going to continue to have difficulties in the school system. To appeal to people to now set this aside, forget about it – "We did what we did to you, we're going to now pick up, we're going to go on very peacefully now, and everything is going to be all right because I'm appealing for you to move on together" – is incredible, Mr. Speaker. As I said, it really points to why we are in the difficulties we are today.

The minister may have won the day with the bill, but he's lost the day in the schools of this province. The unfortunate part about it is that the very people that he keeps indicating he's working for, the children of this province, are going to be the ones that ultimately pay the price for his inept handling of the situation and this legislation.

At third reading of the bill, Mr. Speaker, we're supposed to look at some of the principles, at some of the assumptions, at some of the values, whose interests are served by the bill, and what are the kinds of gains and losses, to try to total that up and to bring things together. It seems that one of the very faulty assumptions under the bill – and we heard it again from the minister – is that arriving at contracts by any means is going to bring stability to the system. I think that assumption is blatantly unsupportable.

The process in Bill 12 that has been put in place is unfair. The process is biased. We've heard from arbitrators who are saying: lookit; you're going to be lucky to find arbitrators who will take on the task given the kinds of constraints that are being put on them by Bill 12. Any arbitrator going into a situation expects some flexibility, and this bill takes away any kind of flexibility by dictating the kinds of conditions by which the rulings, the judgments will be arrived at and the kinds of judgments themselves. You don't have to be a rocket scientist to know what the awards are going to be given the constraints under Bill 12. So that whole assumption that arriving at contracts through Bill 12 is somehow or other going to bring stability to the system is anything but true.

I think one of the other assumptions that is built into this – and I'm surprised at the School Boards Association's applause for Bill 12, if that's what it was – is that local bargaining is ineffective, that boards are not capable of arriving at contracts with the teaching force, and that because they are ineffectual and incompetent, the government has to step in with a piece of legislation like Bill 12 and put in tribunals and take over, virtually, the bargaining process from school boards. Having once been a trustee, Mr. Speaker, I would have been more than incensed if this kind of legislation had been introduced at that time, and I think it's a sad day for local bargaining and it's a sad day for local control when Bill 12 becomes the law of the province. It says that school boards can't be trusted: they can't be trusted to come to agreements with their teachers; they can't be trusted to use their resources in a way that will arrive at agreements. I think that's blatantly untrue, and they're assumptions that just don't wash.

I think one of the assumptions is that you have to bias the outcomes of the arbitration panels in the government's favour, that you've got to build that kind of bias into it, and again you could ask why. Why is the government so fearful of the process, of the negotiating process in the first place and then the arbitration process in the second place? Why did they back away from an arbitration panel that did have support from teachers to a highly constricted process that barely deserves the name of arbitration?

I guess one of the other assumptions that the government has built into this bill is that somehow or other teachers have become the enemy and that they have to be punished and that their concerns about class size and their concerns about special-needs children and their concerns about classrooms can be washed away, that they aren't legitimate, that they're only really interested in money, that they have to be put in their place, and that they're working against the interests of children and the people of the province. I think that assumption has been behind a lot of the government's actions, and it's blatantly unfair, and I think it's blatantly untrue.

There are a number of other assumptions under the bill, Mr. Speaker, but I think some of those are the ones that are most troubling.

What are some of the values that the bill seems to support? Well, certainly expediency: let's get this through, let's get it done, let's not be concerned about what happens to the individuals involved, let's not be concerned about teachers, let's not be concerned about school boards, let's not be concerned by the huge number of parents who are concerned with what's happened, but let's get on, let's get this through, let's use every kind of legislative mechanism that we can to make sure that there's no time for the public to react to the bill, let's get it through fast, and let's make sure that it doesn't result in the same kind of protests around this building that were evident when we considered Bill 11, an equally poor piece of legislation. So expediency seems to have been a value that is imbedded in this kind of bill.

We heard the minister yesterday claim that one of the values that the bill supported was fairness. There's still no evidence. We've been through committee, and there's still been no evidence by the government or anyone that has talked to the bill that this can claim to be a fair bill. That is a shallow claim, if it is made, and it's certainly without substance. There's nothing fair about what has happened. The negotiating process has been interrupted, the rights of board members and teachers have been trampled on, and the result is what we have before us today. Fairness: is that a value built into the bill? No. And I think that there are going to be a huge number of Albertans who are going to be outraged at the unfairness of the provisions in Bill 12.

One of the questions at third reading is to look back and consider whose interests are served by the bill, and you can ask just exactly whose interests are being served. Is it the government's interest? Evidently it is because of the way they've pushed it through. They seem to assume that this has somehow or other solved the problem, that alienating the teachers is something that they can deal with, and that, in being able to do what they have done, their interests as a government are better served. I think that that's a question that maybe they will have to come back to in the future and reconsider.

Are teachers' interests served by this policy? Well, certainly not.

Anything but. The kind of outrage they feel, the kind of betrayal they feel, the kind of hurt they feel, and the lack of trust they feel in this government – the depths of that are quite amazing, Mr. Speaker, if the phone calls and the e-mails and the letters that our office is getting are to be believed. Even in Bill 11 there was never the kind of outrage that this bill has generated. At least it was never expressed to our office.

Parents. Are their interests served? Well, in youngsters being back in schools, I guess in some ways, yes, their short-term interests might be served. But are their interests served in the long run? I think not, Mr. Speaker. The kind of poisoned atmosphere that this has created and will continue to create in schools is not one that is going to be parent-friendly. The kind of hard work that parents and teachers and principals have done to create strong parent councils, to create school climates where the consideration of children and their interests is paramount has been destroyed by this bill, and I think you only had to hear the chairman of the public school board and the kinds of concerns that he expressed with the introduction of Bill 12 and his concern about what that was going to do to school climate and particularly what this bill is going to do between board and teachers and the kinds of relations that have developed there.

Are children's interests served? Again, certainly not. Of the kinds of things that this dispute was all about – class size, the number of resources available in the classroom, the kinds of personnel and resources that are available to work with children with special needs and children of varying abilities – are any of those things resolved? Not by this bill. I think the putting in of a commission as part of a preamble, not even part of the bill, shows the kind of weight that the government places on that kind of an investigation, and the narrowness of the commission, as far as it can be determined from the preamble of the bill, just points to the fact that the underlying issues of the dispute are still out there. Not only are they still out there, but they are now accentuated, and if they weren't clear in the public's mind before Bill 12, they're certainly there now. I do think that if you're looking at whose interests are served by this, then it's certainly not the interests of children and students.

Are school boards' interests served? Well, I know that there were colleagues of mine when I was on the board that would've been very happy with this kind of legislation, colleagues that did not believe in negotiating, that were much more comfortable with someone else taking the problem and solving it for them. But I think, Mr. Speaker, that those are rare among school board members, and most of them, a very, very overwhelming majority, are more than willing to take on the task of marshaling resources and putting in place programs and working with teachers to make schools the good places that they must be for children. So have the school boards' interests been served? I think not, and certainly in the long run it's going to be very interesting for the government to try to convert to local negotiations after all of Bill 12 has run its course. It's going to be a rather interesting exercise when they try to do that, because what this has done is destroy local bargaining.

As you look through at third reading – and we're looking at the principles and the impact of the bill and the gains and the losses and who benefits and for whom the bill works – I think that the balance column is pretty clear. For the government certainly there's the momentary gain. They've had their day in the Legislature, and they've done what they wanted to teachers. Some of them may consider that a gain, and that is, I think, very, very unfortunate.

For their losses, I think the losses that the government has suffered through this exercise are immeasurable, the loss of goodwill. You contrast the words in the throne speech, the empty rhetoric about goodwill on all sides, and the loss of that goodwill is going to be felt in many ways, tangible and intangible. It's going to be felt, I think, immediately in the operations of the department itself, and it's going to be felt in the kinds of activities that the department tries to promote. It's going to be felt in schools, and it's going to be felt by parents, who have been very vocal about the inappropriateness of the kinds of things that this bill contains.

The benefits for the government. Well, I guess it gets teachers back in the classroom, and they have put the problem aside. It gets them out of a situation that they obviously couldn't handle. So I suspect that they'll consider that a benefit.

The big losers, of course, are teachers. The very kinds of things that they worked so hard for and over a 10-year period of underfunding have tried to cope with and that they brought to public attention through their strikes and through considerable financial loss through those strikes, those issues – they walk back into classrooms, and nothing has changed. Not a thing will have changed. There won't be fewer children in their classes. There won't be more help for special-needs children. There won't be more help for children of varying abilities. There won't be more computers. There won't be those textbooks that they need. Nothing will have changed since the day this dispute started, and that makes the teachers the big losers, along with children, Mr. Speaker.

In terms of the boards, again, some of them, as I indicated, may think that getting a contract this way is a gain, but the big loss is the loss of local control. It's a further erosion of the authority of boards to deal with local situations and to carry out the kind of mandate that historically has been the mandate of school boards in our province.

Again, for children the gains are minimal and the losses are many. Having their teachers unhappy, having teachers looking at every activity with respect to how much it is valued by this government is not going to be in the best interests of children and students, so they do lose.

With those comments, Mr. Speaker, I'd conclude. Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I've said before often in this Assembly – I'd like to say it again – I don't believe that the sky is falling, and in particular I don't believe that the sky is falling on our school system. I believe that good things are happening in our schools. I know that good things are happening in our schools.

With reference to third reading of Bill 12, I'd like to recall for a moment for everyone here some of the dialogue that I'm sure they have had with their constituents over the past several weeks, the past several months. I've had the good fortune to be in communication with a number of my constituents on this particular topic. I've also had the good fortune, Mr. Speaker, in my past life to have been a teacher. It's an occupation, a vocation that I truly enjoyed. There is nothing more exciting than knowing that you can contribute to a child's, a student's, a young adult's opportunity to seize life and to enjoy it with all their strengths and their imagination and their mental capability.

I've also had the opportunity to be a school trustee. This was an opportunity for me to be involved with the other members on my board in the governance of a particular school district that used to be called St. Albert school district No. 3. It has now expanded and includes Thibault school district from Morinville and is now called Greater St. Albert school division No. 29.

So, if you will, I would point out that I have been on both sides of the negotiating table. I have sat there and worked on behalf of negotiations for salaries, working conditions, and benefits for teachers. I have also been there on behalf of the board in working for the betterment of the delivery of education in our school division. Both of these opportunities gave me the ability to assess a situation from two perspectives. Each time I was engaged in the process, I realized that good things are happening in our school districts, in particular in the school districts in which I worked and was a school trustee.

However, what I would like to say is that since the days when I was in the classroom and since the days when I was at the board table, much has changed in education. Much has changed in the way in which school boards deal with their budgets. The fact that they can no longer have local requisition and levy tax dollars for the betterment of their school district, of course, is a change. But I can also say that I was with those who advocated and worked very long and hard for an equity formula in funding for children around the province.

What I wanted to say is that the classroom is different today, the governing of school districts is different today, but that's not to say that the school boards and the teachers' unions have not worked hard to evolve us into a situation where we have in this province the outcomes of incredible student performance: international, sterling, high-quality student performance around this globe. However, over the past weeks we have also had the intensity of discussions that speak to the need for our schools, for our classrooms to have a further look at how we deliver education. How do we fund education? How do we look at education? How do we deliver individual programs to students with special needs? How do we tailor the curriculum to individuals' needs? How do we provide teachers with the opportunity to cover the curriculum that is beneficial for all, themselves and for the students?

So that has prompted what I believe is probably one of the key factors that my constituents, certainly the teachers in my community have told me that they want to see, and that is contained in the first line of the preamble: "Whereas the Government has made a commitment to examine the learning system in Alberta." The second paragraph speaks as to what that examination will include, but it is not limited by what is identified here in the preamble. That's an examination, a study, a project, a task force, a summit, whatever the modality is in which we will discuss education as we want it to be collectively in the future in this province, and is something that I look forward to. It's also something that all of the teachers who have spoken to me recently and indeed all of the parents and others who are nonparents but interested citizens watching their tax dollars being used very effectively and judiciously want to see: that the system is even further maximized with its potential.

So that, I feel, is the key part indeed to this bill, but there are a couple of other parts to the bill that I would like to just point out. Bill 12 seeks to find a path through an impasse. It is not something that is a bill that will be forever on the books. It is not a piece of legislation that looks to long-term legislation in order to tell school boards and teachers how to negotiate forever and anon. What it is: it's intended to establish the means by which we can create that path through the impasse that we have all identified as existing right now. Bill 12 does establish an arbitration panel, and it gives it terms of reference. This obviously is the way in which one approaches a difficult situation, an uneasy situation, a situation that has to be resolved. You attempt to find a way in which you can arbitrate, a way in which you can have parties agree to the outcome of the arbitration, and a way in which you can work through the circumstances that have been identified as what constitutes the impasse in order to look to the future to resolve it.

I'd like to point out that there is a window of operation, as I call it, identified in this bill. It speaks about the time frame between August 31 of 2001 and August 31 of 2003. We are talking about a two-year period – many of our teachers are working right now without a contract; they are in negotiations – that when the arbitrated resolution comes, it will reach back to September 1 of 2001. But it does give us a framework or a window of operation where we can encourage both school boards and the local ATA bargaining unit to work with the arbitrator in order to resolve the situation in a way which is best for the students and, I would also say, which is best for the teachers, not all in the manner in which they would like to see it resolved immediately but a way in which they can have their salary negotiations dealt with and they can indeed play a part in.

The intent of Bill 12 is to, as I see it, bring clarity to a situation and also a uniform process for resolving the differences on the matter in each school division's salary negotiations. There are 47 school districts, divisions, school boards that are mentioned as part of the schedule attached to Bill 12. These are the school districts that we are speaking about. The other school districts, two of which in fact I have in my constituency, have been able to come together through the hard work of both the teachers' bargaining unit and the school boards' efforts, and they have resolved it by forming a memorandum of agreement that was ratified not once, not twice, but three times by both parties in my constituency. That is the solution to the circumstances as we find ourselves. I wish to applaud both the ATA local of St. Albert Protestant schools and St. Albert Protestant school board of trustees, who negotiated that agreement.

However, Bill 12 does not speak to that specific school division. It speaks to the other 47 to find a resolution as to how we can best serve the students, who have the right to be educated, and the teachers, who want the opportunity to teach in the classrooms, and I have no doubt of what they told me. They are interested in being in the classroom, in teaching and delivering the curriculum and all that that includes to the children who are entrusted to them. It also provides an opportunity for those who are on the school boards to work with an arbitrator to inform them of what that respective board's financial capacity is and to deal with the situation accordingly so that there is not a disadvantage in the future for their governance decisions.

I do not feel that this bill is in any way stripping away basic rights of teachers. It speaks to a circumstance that we all know is there. When parties have agreed to and signed off on a collective agreement, then there is not the occasion for strike action. So while the details here in this bill identify that those are the circumstances surrounding the agreements that will be binding by the arbitrated panel's decision, it does not in any way remove the teachers' right to strike. I would like to repeat that as often as I can because the members of the opposition and those opposed to this bill continually inject that comment into their discussions. It is not true. We have not removed the teachers' right to strike. What we have done is identified the circumstances under which Bill 12 will be operative.

I would also like to say that I feel in respect to the bill that its value is in the immediate resolution capability of the bill. It will bring a solution to an immediate concern that the teachers and others in my constituency have identified for me, but it will also bring a vision and the possibility that we will examine education and the delivery of education around this province in a very, very effective way. This is what the teachers have been telling me: we need to look at what the requirements are in the classroom these days; we need to look at why we spend so much time filling out forms; we need to look at how I can find the time and the opportunity and have the teaching environment to assist me in delivering the special-needs and the individual programs for children.

So I would say that I'm concerned that those who are opposing this bill are creating a very negative climate, that could be carried into the classroom by those who are calling it all manner of names without really realizing what is the proper way in which one can resolve a situation as best one can.

In conclusion, I'd like to say that having spoken with a number of the teachers in my community, spoken with a number of the ratepayers in my community, I have heard suggestions and have been told that I should follow paths that each one of them feel would be the best way to resolve this problem. I have listened to them. I have come away from those discussions with a deeper understanding of the differences of the classroom of today and the classroom of the days when I was a teacher. I have an appreciation of the challenges that are before teachers right now, but I also can appreciate the fact that school boards and the local ATA negotiators need to find a way to resolve the situation so that we can get on with the business of looking at a future examination of how we fund, how we deliver, what we deliver, and who delivers education in our communities. I look forward to that, and when we do pass this bill, I'm hoping then that we will be able to deal with the circumstances that are present. The arbitration panel will look at the specifics of each individual board or division and the requests and the contract that is before the ATA local at that time.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise on third reading of Bill 12. The very first point I must make is to react with at least confusion to some of the comments of the hon. Member for St. Albert, who I think indicated that Bill 12 does not remove the right to strike from teachers. Is that right? I guess she's not listening. You said that it does not remove the right to strike. Okay.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Well, perhaps something was changed in debate last night. I'm reading right here part 25(7): "The ATA must not cause a strike and no person acting on behalf of employees or the ATA may cause a strike," among other things. So I guess I am reading the bill in a different manner, and my sense is very much that it looks to me like a bill in practice that removes the right to strike for teachers, at least until the end of the time frame covered by the bill. I think that's, of course, one of the most contentious and heavy-handed aspects of this bill.

This bill is still only in third reading and we can already begin to anticipate what the effects of it might be from some of the reactions that certainly we're getting and I imagine many members here are getting, a reaction that comes from constituents. Our e-mail system and phone lines have been extremely busy with calls. Undoubtedly many are from teachers themselves, some from parents, some from citizens in general who are opposed to what Bill 12 will be doing. They are supporting the teachers, and they are supporting their view of the public education system.

Indeed, this continues a pattern that's been evident in my office and I think perhaps in many MLAs' offices, a pattern of reaction that began from the very beginning of this dispute many weeks ago in which the calls supporting the teachers' interests have far outnumbered the calls opposing them and that, in fact, public opinion to a remarkable extent has stayed with the teachers. So that's one of the reactions I'm certainly getting in my constituency office.

I also think it's worth reflecting on what Bill 12 is likely to affect when we look at the reaction in the media in the last day or so to Bill 12. I think it's well worth spending a moment on some of that reaction. An article from the Calgary Herald says: anger simmers over arbitration. It begins: anger continues to swirl around binding arbitration designed to settle the most disruptive teachers' strike in Alberta's history as provincial lawmakers debated legislation that has infuriated educators.

Another article from yesterday's Calgary Herald: bleak classroom life seen with frustrated teachers. This one actually quotes Alberta Learning and officials at the university, education professors, saying among other things that so many of the things that create and sustain the quality of the school system come by teachers working outside the narrow definitions of their jobs, and if they are upset and stick strictly to the wording of the law, the quality of the whole experience for kids will go down. I think that's going to be one of the effects of this bill.

Another headline in the Edmonton Journal, "It's your own fault, gov't tells teachers," as if nobody else had any responsibility for what has happened here, as if it were entirely the fault of the teachers. Again the Edmonton Journal yesterday: "Angry teachers feel 'bullied, betrayed' by province." Then we even move into a broader range of opinion here: "Arbitration breeds mistrust, experts say." I think it's important to quote this particular labour relations specialist here:

The government is saying, "Not only will we not tolerate the withdrawal of services by certain employees, we'll determine and set the terms of the contract." It really reduces bargaining to a fairly hollow exercise.

I could go on and on with reactions from the media, which coincide very much with the reactions I've been hearing from constituents. They are not sympathetic to the provincial government's position, and indeed perhaps the most dramatic case of that is a column written by somebody who's normally very sympathetic, Lorne Gunter. He, in fact, condemns the government's moves and says among other things: "I can't escape the thought that the government is making up its labour relations on the fly."

Then, of course, Mr. Speaker, we need to consider the reaction of the teachers. All of us know that certainly a very large majority of teachers are angry and outraged at Bill 12, not only the content of the bill but the manner in which the bill is being pushed through this Legislature, a manner which doesn't even allow us as opposition an hour's time to consider amendments or not even overnight to consult with interested parties, a process which has forced this bill into law within two days and a process, regardless of what legislation was in question, that is disrespectful of the democratic values that most of us are expected to cherish. But beyond that, of course, the teachers are angry at the contents of Bill 12. We've all gone through those at some length.

I guess one of the manifestations or one of the things that this bill represents is that this government is still prepared to pick winners and losers. It's a government that has said it was going to get out of that, yet it has waded into an area that involved teachers and schools and school boards and has interfered in the normal collective bargaining process to pick winners and to condemn certain parties to be losers. Clearly, the losers in this process immediately are the teachers, but I'm concerned that the losers will also be the students. Ultimately the losers could be all of us, because I think we are at a point here, a turning point in the history of Alberta's public education system. We may well end up with an education system that is permanently weakened by the events of the last few weeks and undoubtedly the events of the next several months. So one of the losers here, I think, ultimately may be society itself in Alberta.

But this is a government that hasn't lost its enthusiasm for picking winners, and I think the winners it chooses are indicative of the values that this government is slipping into. I think, for example, of a recent announcement that a half million dollars in taxpayer money is going to go to research coal as a fuel for power companies while at the same time these are hugely profitable power companies. Why are we subsidizing those hugely profitable corporations when we cannot settle with teachers? Why are we subsidizing the horse racing industry? Why are we picking that as a winner when we cannot settle with teachers? Why are we bringing forward very massive corporate tax cuts when we are not settling with teachers? Who are the winners here? Who are the losers? I think the values of this government are coming through loud and clear.

I think the values of this government are even more exposed by the intransigence of the position that they have taken from the very beginning, from almost a year ago: the 4 and 2, the line item in the budget, and the fact that there hasn't been any flexibility in that position. So, as a result, we have an eruption of anger, an eruption of hard feelings in the education system, and Bill 12 is simply going to enact those into law and guarantee that they continue simmering and indeed boiling over.

I have two children myself in public schools in Alberta, and one of them came home from school yesterday and said: Dad, boy, the teachers were angry at school. Then he said: "They weren't angry at me," as if he thought I might believe that he had done something wrong; "they're angry at the system." I think it's a shame that schoolchildren are going to their schools by the thousands in this province today and as a result of Bill 12 they are feeling and sensing the sense of anger that teachers are expressing. The teachers aren't going to take it out directly on the class. The teachers know full well that this is not the students' fault. But I think we can expect this special atmosphere, the sense of caring and community, and the commitment to going the extra mile, the going above and beyond the call of duty that has made Alberta's schools so special — we're going to see that diminished. It's a result, I guess, of the insult that Bill 12 represents to the teachers of this province and the people who believe in a fair arbitration process in a reasonable labour relations system. You can only insult people for so long before they will react, and we are going to see a reaction because of Bill 12.

If we look down the road 18 months from now, what are we going to see when this bill expires? Well, we'll see, I hope, a report from the commission that the bill establishes. Let's hope it's a constructive and well-thought-out and well-presented report. But beyond that, that report is going to be brought into a system in which the memories of teachers of Bill 12, of the days in which we're standing this week in the Legislature, will go back to these moments, and they will say: "We've been betrayed. We have lost trust; we have lost confidence. We don't want to co-operate. We don't feel we can co-operate with any sense of integrity with a government that is so off-kilter, so heavy-handed, so intransigent, so inflexible as this one." So what we're doing through Bill 12 is extending the confrontation, extending the anger, and ensuring that rather than calming it down and returning the schools to a healthy sense of community, they will continue to be hotbeds of discontent for months and years to come.

The central focus of schools must be children and their learning. We need to organize our schools so that teachers can concentrate on children's learning. We don't want teachers distracted by their concerns over labour relations processes, their concerns over whether they are treated fairly, whether they are respected. We need them to focus on children's learning.

I think we need to turn away from the view that seems so prevalent in our society today that schools are simply instruments or tools for churning out economically productive units. I think we need to cherish the sense that schools teach people not simply skills but attitudes, abilities, capabilities to fulfill their lives and to act as democratic citizens as effectively as possible. I think we're losing that sort of spirit in the schools and that we will see as a result of Bill 12 a retracting by teachers into a teaching mode that simply cranks out children as if they were widgets in a system rather than treating them as cherished members of an educational community. We will all be poorer because of that. The next generation of citizens of our province and of our country may not have the same wealth of experience or the same depth of principles on which to draw as a result of Bill 12.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: I believe that there were one or more people who indicated a willingness to make comments or questions.

MR. MASON: Well, as the hon. member has indicated that he does not wish to take questions as a result of the changes to the Standing Orders, Mr. Speaker, I'll just make a comment and say that I appreciate the thoughtful remarks of the hon. member and agree with him. I also have been asked by my son about the teachers being upset at the government and am trying to sort out with him the difference between the government, the Legislative Assembly, and the opposition, that they're not all the same thing. But it is clear that already some programs have suffered as a result of this dispute, some of the intramural programs and so on, and the lion's share of the responsibility goes to the government.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

MR. McCLELLAND: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Since the member doesn't want to respond to questions, it does give members an opportunity to voice an opinion and make a comment, and the comment is that we've got to put the money issues aside and behind us to get at the real issues that underlie the problems that we've had that have been brewing for years. These problems are going to be addressed in the education review. You can't have both of them on the table at the same time because they get intermixed. So this is a very constructive, positive way to put this behind us.

It's almost as if we were to say, "All right; you and you get into that room and sort out that problem," and that problem is the money issue. It's not limited to 6 percent. The 6 percent is the floor. "You, you, and you get into that room, and you start sorting out the other issues that are behind the strike, the real issues in education that have been brewing for many years." Get both of them on the table, finish off the money issue, and then we'll solve the big problem.

DR. TAFT: I will respond because the Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, I understand, was the one who encouraged the introduction of 29(2).

I'd like to make an observation and encouragement that the kind of debate that occurs now could occur at any time in committee, yet last night the moment we broke into committee, it was like a party in here. There was no attention paid to debate at all. I wish we could have done it then.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands now wishes to make a comment?

MR. MASON: A further comment? Yes, if there's still time, Mr. Speaker, I do.

I want to indicate that I agree to a point with the hon. member that in fact there is a great opportunity for debate. I happen to enjoy the question and comment session. At the time, we denounced it as a nefarious government plot, but, Mr. Speaker, I have to say that as nefarious government plots go, it's one of the most fun.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford unless Edmonton-Riverview wants to respond.

MR. McCLELLAND: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Questions and comments does give us an opportunity to engage in debate that otherwise may or may not be engaged in, and we can use it positively or negatively. Now, positively, we all have a responsibility – that's the royal "we" – to education and to educators in our province. We've got to somehow clear the air so as to be able to work together positively with educators, with the Alberta Teachers' Association, with their representatives, and this is the best method.

MR. LOUGHEED: I'd like to make a comment. It appears perhaps the public skepticism of the Member for Edmonton-Highlands has in fact been shredded.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Now being out of time, we move right to the next speaker, the next speaker being the hon. Minister for Community Development.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity this afternoon to rise and speak to Bill 12, the Education Services Settlement Act. Like all members in this House, I too have received a number of calls from teachers, from parents, a few from students and other members of the community. I should say that in almost every one of those calls there was something very helpful, as well as critical on occasion, but helpful by way of suggestions to address some of the difficulties that are before us, and I will get into some of those shortly.

However, I want to say at the very outset that I have great respect for teachers and for the teaching profession. [applause] Thank you for that applause, hon. members. It is a profession that I was a member of for many years. It's one that I enjoyed enormously and one I poured my heart into. Having said that, I also want to say that colleagues in government also have a very high regard, a high respect, and a very high value that we all place on teachers. We understand the importance of teaching, we understand the importance of our educators, and we're delighted by some of the results, in fact almost all of the results that we are getting.

Students are a number one priority. They are our future, and I have said in this House on many occasions that the children of this province are indeed our number one and most precious resource. Education goes hand and hand with that.

However, I also recognize that teaching today is infinitely different, Mr. Speaker, than when I or when you were in the classroom I'm sure. Having met with many teachers over the several years that I've had the privilege of serving in this Assembly, as well as with principals and others, I know that the stresses on teachers today, the expectations on teachers today, the conditions that teachers face today are infinitely different from a societal point of view as well as from a classroom point of view. We do not have the same, shall I use the word, homogenous types of classes that we once had because we are trying very hard to work with blended classrooms, to use integrated models that would have all individuals be seen and treated as equals with other classmates. That has resulted in some interesting challenges, but I think we are overcoming them.

As we look at Bill 12, I think it's important, Mr. Speaker, to separate, therefore, what I will generically call classroom conditions from specifically wage issues in relation to our educators. Bill 12 in fact specifically outlines a process that will help school boards and their local ATAs reach these much-needed settlements so that we can all get on with the important part of the education system, from the point of view of students.

In bringing in Bill 12 and in establishing an arbitration tribunal, I think we'll do a couple of very important things in an umbrella fashion. First of all, we will do the separation of the two issues I just mentioned. The arbitration tribunal will specifically, on a case by case basis, have the ability to look at matters that relate to salaries and benefits, to look at local economic conditions within the particular area in question, and also to look at the school board's financial situation and ensure that no deficits result from the decisions of that tribunal. There are many other factors that likely will impact this area, and in the end I sincerely hope that the arbitration tribunal will come up with what will be fair and acceptable to all parties.

We have to remember that as important as teachers are, they are not the only part of the situation. We have also the concerns of local school boards, who want to maintain some flexibility with respect to local jurisdiction and decision-making. We of course have government as an important part of this as well. That three-person tribunal I know will do their best to come up with something that is amicable and acceptable to all. In the end, I hope that we can continue to boast that Alberta teachers, with whatever the settlements come out to be, will continue to be the highest paid instructors on average right across the country.

I think that speaks well to two issues that people have called me about. One is with respect to retention, and the other is with respect to recruitment. It's very, very important that we set a very positive atmosphere to encourage new people to come into this wonderful profession of teaching, and it's very important that we send the proper message to teachers who are there today that we want them to stay for as long as they are able.

The other part of Bill 12, which is alluded to very graphically in the preamble, talks about:

Whereas the Government has made a commitment to examine the learning system in Alberta; and

Whereas that examination will include, but not be limited to, a study of the number of students in a class, pupil-to-teacher ratios and the maximum time a teacher may be required to instruct students enrolled in Kindergarten to Grade 12, and therefore these items should not be the subject of further negotiation or included in a collective agreement between the employers subject to this Act and The Alberta Teachers' Association.

Whereas we have those two clauses in there, we have the ability to address some issues that have been bubbling for quite some time, Mr. Speaker, and it is high time we got on with addressing those issues in a very formal, a very effective, a very all-encompassing, and visionary way. Once we can get the wages part settled over here, we can get on with a blue-ribbon panel, or whatever it's going to be, to address that commitment that Bill 12 specifically enunciates.

We know that in different parts of this province we have some class sizes that are larger than one would like to have. We know that we have pupil/teacher ratios that are different in different parts of the province. It's time that we got all of those kinds of issues, as well as what are the essentials or the so-called basics of education, more clearly and more sharply defined. I think it's time we address squarely what it is that parent groups and local school councils can and cannot fund-raise for, and the list goes on and on.

My point in referencing those in relation to Bill 12, Mr. Speaker, is to simply state that those are not easily solved issues. They will take some time, but I am very confident that we as a government through our minister and with all of us contributing, including comments, helpful ones, that have been made from opposition members, will address those, but they will take some time. In the meantime we have to get on with settling what it is that will keep our teachers in the classroom, and that's what Bill 12 is all about.

I should say that over the past while, Mr. Speaker, I'm very pleased that we were able to increase the education budgets and to maintain flexibility with those budgets at the local level. This year the province will invest about $3.7 billion on the K to 12 system. I know that support for public and separate schools grew by about $245 million this year over last year. I know that we've provided a basic grant increase to the local school boards of about 3.5 percent, which translates into about $115 million. And I know that in general our budget for education in the current year, which will end in a couple of weeks, has been in the neighbourhood of about 8.4 percent. Last year I think it was over 9 percent. We recognize that there are gross pressures, and we recognize that more investment is needed. By the way, Mr. Speaker, that doesn't include over $1 billion that came out of the Infrastructure budget that was committed to the building of new schools. So we have addressed, within the fiscal capabilities possible, many of those issues, and I know there will be more.

I also want to comment very briefly on the importance of having separated the two issues and the ability for us to take the proper time needed to address the other so-called classroom issues. Some of those, obviously, will include looking at what other jurisdictions are doing. I'll just very quickly put a couple of things on the record for the preamble part of Bill 12.

I had a teacher who's a constituent of mine phone me and talk to me about his experiences as a teacher in Germany, where they actually have two different categories, if you will, of teachers. One group has a certain type of agreement where they're allowed to go on strike, and another category is not allowed to go on strike. Now, those are his explanations. There's more to it, but in simple terms there are different incentives for whichever category you might wish to go into. Another important point he mentioned to me was that apparently, according to the German model, a portion of a teacher's home is able to be written off as a tax expense because, as we all know, some marking, preparation, and so on takes place in the home. Certainly when I was a teacher, Mr. Speaker, I did probably more work at home than I did in the six hours of classroom time, and I don't think any teacher here would argue differently.

One other point that he mentioned with respect to the German model was with respect to personal purchases that teachers make. I know that when I taught English, French, Ukrainian, music, drama, and so on, it was frequently the case that I bought stuff out of my own pocket, not because I had to but because it suited my teaching style or it was something that I felt my class needed or because I had a special-needs student or whatever the case was. I didn't keep track of that. I never submitted any expenses. It was just something that I did, and I know teachers are doing that today in some cases. But in Germany they're allowed to claim that as a tax deduction. Now, that's an interesting concept. I'm not saying that we have to rush to either of those couple of doors as we do what the preamble of Bill 12 suggests, but it shows you that there are other models, that there are other issues out there in other jurisdictions that do require at least looking at.

I visit schools very regularly still. I hope to continue doing that. I'm well aware that teacher time does not start at 8:30 in the morning and shut off at 3:30. I know teachers spend a great deal of time doing lesson plans to stay current. I know they spend a lot of time tutoring after hours. I know they spend a lot of time coaching and helping out with the year plays and otherwise assisting students with their learning. I would say that it's high time that we as a society took a longer range view of this and perhaps dispelled some of the myths that exist among certain members of society where they perhaps don't understand the teaching profession as well as some of us who were privileged enough to have served in it. I know that my day never started at 8:30 and it never ended at 3:30, and it wasn't exclusive to Monday through Friday.

So I'm pleased that once Bill 12 is all said and done with, we will see those issues addressed in a very long-range way. Nobody likes to see students out of the classroom when they're supposed to be in it. Nobody likes to see teachers striking. Nobody likes to see interruptions to the most important part of a young person's future. We need and we want good and excellent teachers in this province. We need to have encouragement for them. I just hope that they will have some faith in this process that separates the two issues, along with the guarantee, which is now going to be carved in stone, that the commitment we are giving as a government to look at all the other issues will also be addressed, and we will get that done.

Mr. Speaker, the collective bargaining process is a very important process. I was there; I was part of it for a number of years. I didn't like having even the thought of going on strike, and I perhaps today dislike it more than I did even then. Nonetheless, we don't want to interfere with local boards' autonomy and flexibility with respect to how they address their local budget needs.

There are some school boards in this province who, as we know, will run surpluses, perhaps year after year. There are others who are running deficits. There are some who are very comfortable with the size of their classes and so are their teachers, but there are others that are not. We cannot for example legislate a maximum classroom size, such as they have done in other jurisdictions and have said, for example, that the maximum number of students in grade 1, let's say, should be 18. What do you do with the 19th and the 20th and the 21st student? Well, I'll tell you what's happened in some cases, Mr. Speaker. They have not had the flexibility because of a legislated cap on class size. They have not had the flexibility they would like. So some of those students, unfortunately, could not attend that school and had to go to schools down the road, and that is true.

I do hope that we will sort this out, because I have great respect for teachers in this province. I want them fairly compensated, and I want the students fairly looked after as well.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands. Pardon me? You're asking a question, I take it.

MR. MASON: I am indeed. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The hon. minister has said that it's important to set a positive atmosphere for teachers in order to retain and recruit teachers to the profession. I would like to ask: how does the present schemozzle do that – and I include more than the bill; I include the whole process we've gone through in the last few months – and how do you think the government has contributed to that?

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think by guaranteeing a minimum – a minimum – of 6 percent plus giving school boards greater flexibility at the local level to augment that minimum 6 percent is a very positive thing. It took away a lot of the guesswork when that decision was taken, and at the same time it still allowed for an approach at the local level to come to an agreement. What is unfortunate, however, is when you get a situation such as we read about in Medicine Hat and for a time in St. Albert, where unfortunately the teachers and the board made a decision and the people upstairs in the ATA couldn't bless it. That is unfortunate.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The dictates of time.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

MR. McCLELLAND: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think the minister opposite encompassed what Bill 12 is really all about in saying that the future of education is in the preamble and the past is in Bill 12, getting the issue of salaries out of the way so that we can get on to the future. As the minister responsible for persons with developmental disabilities in Alberta, the minister has an integral role to play in the forthcoming review. Could the minister advise us what his intentions are in that regard?

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The fine details of this kind of questioning have yet to be pushed at the corners of the envelope, and one wonders whether or not you can ask the minister a question that normally would be asked at question period. But anyway, hon. minister, if you'd care to answer that.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Well, it's a very good question because it talks about the blended classrooms and the attempt at full integration that we've experienced over the last several years, which in theory and in concept is a very good thing. But there needs to be some additional emphasis put on teacher aides, for example, and funding that would go with that, because a lot of the students in the category of the disabled require one-on-one attention. So I'm glad that we were able to increase funding to that special-needs area over the last year or two.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Thank you.

Further questions or comments? The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

MS KRYCZKA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciated the hon. minister's comments also and have been listening with interest. With reference to class size, I would just wonder what his thoughts are on individual teaching skills and consideration of class size. Different teachers can manage better different numbers of students in their classes is what I'm saying. I know the universities have dealt with that challenge.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Again the hon minister.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you. Well, I think the hon. member has indeed hit a very important point, and I think it talks a little bit about the homogeneity of classrooms, which were so different back when I was a teacher as compared with today. But it's true that some teachers feel more comfortable in a smaller atmosphere than do others. By the time you get to university, you could be lecturing 400 people. My concern in that regard would be directed more so at the primary grade levels, where I think it's important that we look at some kind of an acceptable average.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Thank you.

We do have time, I think. The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

MR. BOUTILIER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question is directed to the hon. minister. My question would be this. About a year and a half ago the minister of human resource development recognized the tremendous costs that are being faced in the unprecedented growth area of Fort McMurray, my constituency, where $50 billion is being spent. It's the GDP of a small country. Relative to that, provincial employees in Fort McMurray get an extra $400, and the question is: for teachers, doctors, and nurses, you know, what consideration can be given to that kind of pressure?

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The question has managed to squeak in in the total amount of time, which means we don't have any time for the answer.

We will now recognize the hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise this afternoon just to make comments at third reading on Bill 12. I think that as we look back on the process of what happened, as we deal with the final vote on this bill today, we have to kind of question whether or not the best interests of education, the best interests of children, the best interests of the province have really been served by the whole process. You know, we've spent a lot of time talking about the signals that have been sent and the commitments that have been made. I think it would be more appropriate to look at, in effect, what is going to happen now with the results of Bill 12 and what kind of a future we can look forward to in the context of dealing with education, dealing with learning, dealing with any kind of public service.

We had in place a process where local school boards had an opportunity to deal with their needs in the context of learning. They had a chance to negotiate with their teachers for a fair pay package to serve the model that the local school board had in place to deal with the delivery of learning, and then what we ended up with because of the funding model that was in place for that was a lot of discrepancies around the province. In the period of '93 to '95 the government intervened to try and provide some standardization or some equalization of that through the way they changed the funding of education, creating the education endowment fund and the per pupil grant for the school boards to deal with.

What in effect happened was that we pre-empted a lot of the freedom that school boards had to deal with their delivery models, to deal with the kinds of conditions that we hear talked about constantly as being part of what will be the end result of this commission that gets put in place. So what we had was kind of a process that started in '93, '94, '95, when we went to that equalized funding, that wasn't fully reflective of the geographic needs and the community needs of learning across this province. We want to make sure that the local communities, the school boards, the local ATA, and the parents through what used to be their parent/teacher councils and what are now the school councils effectively have a choice and have the freedom to develop a quality education system for the students in their community.

Well, as we went through this process, then, problems began to arise with the funding models. Problems began to arise because the integrity of that local process was being affected by a provincewide decision-making process of, you know, one per pupil grant to each of the schools. Granted, there were some different dollars out there for transportation or sparsity, but they were not adequate in the context of a funding formula. What we should have been doing as we moved from that '95 period up to today was looking at how adequately those formulas were working, making changes in how those formulas worked so that the dollars in the community were truly the number of dollars that were necessary to deliver quality education based on that community's input, so that we can in fact then have an operational system that doesn't have the sense of a top-down dictatorial process.

As we look at that, we ended up last year with a situation where other public service bodies were asking for changes in their pay packages, changes in their work conditions, and because of circumstance and timeliness some of them were looking for their contracts at a time when the government had lots of money. Others such as the teachers are now looking to have their worth recognized, and the government says that there is no more money. Mr. Speaker, I think the thing we have to look at is that this, in effect, is compounding the problems that we started to develop in the process after the equalized funding program, because even though it did create more equity in the education system, it also created a lot of problems. Those problems were associated with the inability of the local community to deal with their own issues as they needed to.

So the government in its, I guess, blinded wisdom introduced into the budget last spring what in effect was a 4 and 2 wage settlement for teachers. They keep telling everybody that this was a minimum. But if they'd look at the fact that when they deal with the other 3 or 3 and a half percent that went out to the school boards over and above that, those dollars were committed to the other expenses of the school boards, and very few of those dollars could be put into a teacher salary settlement unless they had to make adjustments further in the delivery model.

Mr. Speaker, if there's anything I've been hearing as I've traveled the province in the last year, it is that we have to do something about class size, we have to do something about support systems for children with special needs as they enter the classroom, and we have to do something about the process of making sure that there is a local ability to determine how this learning model is developed. So what happened, then, was effectively the teachers were in a position where they couldn't truly negotiate the way they should have been able to.

What we then heard was: discussions went on, negotiations went on, offers were made, offers were rejected, and in the end we had a series of strikes across the province, co-ordinated at the provincial level by the ATA. In the end the government again stepped in. They've now stepped in with Bill 12, which, in effect, further confronts the impossible situation of how we deal with local control, local decision-making and provide the local school boards and the local of the ATA with the accountability that they need to the children and the parents in their community.

We keep hearing comments about this blue-ribbon study or this commission that's going to be put in place to deal with the future of our education system. Mr. Speaker, we have that. It's the school boards. It's the parents in the community. It's the school councils. It's input from the teachers. It's input from the students. That can be developed at the community level. All we have to do is to have the flexibility at this level. When they come up with a model that fits their needs, fits a provincial objective in the context of the importance and the relevance of learning, then we need to make sure that there is a process in place to fund that. If that means changing the funding formulas so that we can make sure that the geographic differences, the delivery differences, the demographic differences, all of the other differences that are associated with these communities get reflected at that local level, that's what we should be doing.

We shouldn't be forcing a public discussion on education at the provincial level, because we already have in place at the local level the means to deal with that kind of discussion. After all, we've given those school boards the authority and the mandate to be the decision-makers for their communities on what is appropriate education delivery, what are the resources that are necessary, what is the community involvement. These are the kinds of things that we give to them through the School Act, and we have to make sure that they have a chance to truly exercise that authority that we've given them. We're going to be taking that away from them when we start now imposing on them some kind of a provincial study that's going to look at how they deal with the concepts of class size or how they deal with the concepts of delivering education. That should be done at the local level, Mr. Speaker.

We've got to make sure that what we have is a thorough commitment to that process, and by passing Bill 12, what we're basically saying is that no pay package can be negotiated at a local level that doesn't meet the provincial objects, doesn't meet provincial approval. By instituting some kind of blue-ribbon panel or commission, what we're saying is that the local communities don't understand their own education system, aren't capable of dealing with the issues that are important to their education system, and we're going to pre-empt the authority we give them. I don't think that's the kind of thing that we really want to have happen, because all we end up with is dealing with it.

Mr. Speaker, on a number of occasions we've asked for a provincial review of education funding, some kind of a commission at the provincial level that looks at: how do we deal with funding of education, how do we deal with the decision-making in education? That's a whole different thing than what we're talking about and what we're hearing the government talking about here. That, in effect, provides for a much better discussion about some of the issues that I've been raising, you know. Do we need to change the power of local school boards? Should they be given revenue-raising authority? Should they be given some kind of option to go beyond the per pupil grant? That's the kind of thing that we need to talk about, not whether or not we should at a provincial level impose standards that we have delegated to those local school boards.

This is the kind of environment that we're creating if we vote in favour of Bill 12. I don't think it's the kind of thing that we want to see, because what it does is it puts in place a precedent for every other kind of public service negotiation. Does this mean that the next time any other public servant group comes up and says, "We want to enter our negotiations," we're going to separate working conditions from the pay package in their negotiations? That's what this bill does. It basically says that teachers and school boards cannot talk about working conditions and the pay package in one and the same negotiation because the arbitrator can't deal with working conditions.

Does that mean that next year, the year after, when the nurses come up, when the public servants come up, nothing can be dealt with in the context of working conditions? Is that what we're going to be saying? We're setting a precedent here, Mr. Speaker, that to me is really critical in the context of how we look at the relationship between employees and the public. We have to be careful that we don't undertake in this process now approving something that in effect will become a fallback position any time a government decides that it wants to deal heavy-handedly with individuals in a particular work group.

We're doing it now in the context of teachers in this province. Mr. Speaker, it's not right. We shouldn't support this bill. What we should have done was supported a much more inclusive discussion at the local level in the context of how we finance properly the local school boards, how we encourage teachers to do the job they've done so well for our students in the province, how we encourage the communities to be active in participating in seeking solutions and dealing with developing the kind of education system that's important.

Mr. Speaker, I see this bill already causing ripples in our province that I don't want to see happen. The e-mails that have been coming into my office, the phone calls that I've been getting are really very concerned about what's going to happen with this bill, what's going to be the aftermath of this bill. I'm getting calls from teachers saying: gee, I don't know if I want to be a teacher any longer. I had a communication with a student at university this morning basically saying that if this bill passed, in the next semester they had left before graduation they in effect were going to make sure that they were going to take courses that would give them the flexibility to seek employment outside the profession rather than become teachers in this province. That's the kind of thing that really bothers me in the sense that we're sending the wrong signals to the people of our province.

AN HON. MEMBER: Too bad they're fear mongering.

DR. NICOL: I hear the member across there saying that I'm fear mongering. But I'm not doing it; it's the messages that are coming from Albertans. If we in this Legislature don't have the right to stand up and communicate on behalf of our constituents, then I think we've really got a problem in this Legislature. I truly stand behind the fact that any member of this Legislature should be able to get up and say on behalf of their constituents whatever that constituent wants put into the record. I don't consider that fear mongering. I consider that being a true representative of my community, expressing the concerns that I've heard. In this Legislature I express the view of my constituency and I vote the way my constituency wants me to. Mr. Speaker, there is no question that the input from my community says: vote no on this bill. That's the message that I'm trying to put on the floor here today. I don't consider it fear mongering; I consider it doing what I was elected to do.

You know, Mr. Speaker, I hope that individual that made the comment a few minutes ago gives me a chance in the last five minutes of my speech, when you can stand and ask a question and we can deal with that kind of an issue. It is important that we basically do have the ability to raise the concerns, provide the observations that are being provided to us from our constituents, and deal with this in the context of what's best for Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, I was just about finished when that comment was made. I had another breath of air. What in effect I want to say is that this bill is setting a precedent in Alberta that I think is wrong. This bill is setting a precedent in Alberta that I think is going to lead us down a totalitarian, a heavy-handed type of government road. I don't think that's where we should be going. I think we should be promoting open discussion, open negotiation, and flexible solutions at the local level when we deal with all of the public servants. This bill, that's affecting our teachers in this province, is setting a precedent I think everybody should vote against.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: We have a number of people who indicated that they wish to speak. The first one is the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, then the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona and the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul, and, if there's time, the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

MR. McCLELLAND: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Would the hon. Leader of the Opposition agree that the climate to settle the issues underlying the dispute would be better addressed with the money issues off the table?

DR. NICOL: No. This has to be done as a package. We can't deal with only one facet of what constitutes proper teaching conditions, proper learning conditions, and the relationship between a classroom and a teacher, between that classroom and the school, and between that school and the community. It has to be dealt with as a package, Mr. Speaker. We can't separate them out, because we have to create good working environments.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona. Question, comment.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question to the hon. member and the Leader of the Official Opposition is this. In his closing remarks he characterized this bill as totalitarian, in essence. I wonder if he would like to say why.

DR. NICOL: Mr. Speaker, I see it as being basically heavy-handed and top-down decision-making, forcing a process that nobody wanted. Nobody wanted arbitration that didn't include all of the aspects of how we provide our education, our learning in the school environment. Effectively what's happened is that the government has gone out, talked on a broad base, narrowed the base, and tried to create a solution. That to me is not open government. That's not good government. It in effect doesn't create good working relationships with the teachers in this province, and it sends signals through all of this province that we are not willing to work with individuals, that we're willing to impose on them, that we're dedicated to imposing on them, that we're not going to allow them to basically deal with any kind of a solution that is jointly put together, and that's what we have to have.

I think I went a little over my 30 seconds.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Considerably. However, we were having a timing difficulty.

MR. DANYLUK: I believe that teaching is a very credible, honourable, and prestigious profession. I have a lot of teachers in my family, and I really take offence at how, in my view, the hon. Leader of the Opposition makes the profession sound like a terrible profession. Students who have the passion for teaching should be encouraged, not discouraged and discriminated against as you do.

DR. NICOL: Mr. Speaker, what can you say to that? It's so wrong. It's so off topic to what I talked about. It's almost impossible to get that kind of question out of the comments that I put on the record today. I'm sorry; I don't even see where it came from.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

REV. ABBOTT: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Official Opposition mentioned the worth of teachers in his speech. My question: when the teachers of Alberta become the highest paid on average in Canada, which they will when this bill is passed, when this happens by August 31, 2002, will the leader of the Liberals and his party finally admit that this government recognizes the worth of teachers?

DR. NICOL: No, Mr. Speaker. What I will recognize is that they have basically corrupted everything that you teach in a course on labour relations that deals with how you set fair remuneration for an individual. There's more than dollars in the context of recognition of worth, and when we're dealing with it in this context, we have to deal with the classroom conditions and the teaching conditions. The true pay of a teacher determines whether or not they're willing to stay in the profession and whether they're willing to enter the profession, not any kind of a measure compared to someplace else in this country.

MS KRYCZKA: I heard the member talking about consideration of financing and concerns with local school boards. When salaries are about up to 80 percent of an operational budget, would you agree with supporting a discussion on an HR philosophy of hiring a mix of levels of teachers, which is certainly more economical and can save a substantial amount of money than hiring the most senior teachers and no other variance?

DR. NICOL: Mr. Speaker, that's up to the school board. That's why we give them the authority to deal with it, and that's the kind of process that we have to put in place so that we have equitable solutions in this whole debate.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Okay. Thank you.

Several people have indicated that they wish to speak. The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw has been missed a couple times, and following her the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, then the hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

MRS. ADY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wouldn't want to be missed. I felt very strongly that I needed to rise and speak today on this particular issue. I've only been an MLA for just a year and, I think, one day. I'm no longer a rookie.

AN HON. MEMBER: You're a pro now.

MRS. ADY: I'm a pro.

I felt that this was one issue that I did want to stand and speak about, because it's one that comes very close to the heart for me. I am the mother of four boys who are in the public education system in this province and have spent many years observing their schooling and aiding and assisting and watching them as they developed through that system. I'd like to begin today by praising those teachers that have spent time with my boys, because I know as a mother how difficult they have been at times. I've seen great patience, great dedication, people that sincerely cared and were there for my boys at times when I didn't want to be there for them. So I want to start there, saying that I do admire teachers and the job that they have done, in particular with my own family.

One of the things that's been disturbing to me is that much of the media focus and discussion around the teachers' dispute and Bill 12 has been around and centered on the disagreement and the challenges that are faced by the parties involved. I believe that like all things in life there are challenges to meet, but our learning system is still a very good one. I'm confident that we can work towards resolving these challenges. We do have a system that is collaborative, and if we start to work together, we can continue to create even greater learning opportunities for the kids that attend our systems.

That said, the current teachers' negotiations were clearly at an impasse, and we needed to find a solution so that we could move on to face these challenges. Bill 12, the Education Services Settlement Act, is an important piece of legislation that hopefully will allow us to do that. As you know, all parties agree that binding arbitration is needed to bring about a resolution, and I think this arbitration process is a sensible one. It allows all parties to present their cases and allow for fair compensation to teachers while maintaining accountability and flexibility of school board management.

We must also remember that the reason we have teachers and school boards is to deliver education to Alberta's students. Our first priority and our goal here must be that we ensure that students' education is not further compromised by contract disputes. Our government is committed to helping to resolve these disputes. Bill 12 ensures that teachers will remain in the classroom, and I think that's an important element.

This legislation will provide stability for students so that they can focus on their studies and successfully complete their school year. I know that Albertans value education and do not want further interruptions of this current school year. I heard from grade 12 constituents as they called me during the strike, as they talked about their frustration, their worry, and their anxiety over having their education interrupted. I've heard comments about heavy-handedness and how somebody didn't want this, but I'm here to tell you that students didn't want their education interrupted.

It reminds me of when I was in university. I was attending Brigham Young University at the time, and they were coming up with a new accreditation process for the university so that it would have a stronger accreditation across the nation. They brought in an independent board that wrote all final exams for all courses that we were taking that year. Now, this independent board didn't teach the course, didn't really know the course, but wrote a final exam. I took one of those exams and flunked it, and I remember at the time . . .

AN HON. MEMBER: Oh, not you.

MRS. ADY: Yes.

. . . just being dismayed that in a class that I was getting an A in, all of a sudden I flunked a final exam. So I went back to the teacher and I said: "What? I didn't even recognize the exam. It didn't seem to relate to the course. It didn't seem to be anything that we had studied that semester." He commiserated with me. The next week that question was asked of the president of the university, and he said to us at that time that the new accreditation process was like when the pioneers came across the plains: a few had to be sacrificed for the good of all. Now, I remember thinking: well, great; the university rises in its accreditation, but I just got sacrificed. My grades, my future, my GPA just got sacrificed for that. I did not understand that at that time. In fact, I kind of chewed on that one for a long time because it was very personal to me. Yes, it did improve the accreditation of that university, but I felt like a victim in the piece.

I'd like to tell you that kids whose education has been interrupted feel that way also. They do want us to make sense of this, they do want us to move on, and they don't want their year interrupted. So when people say that it's a minimal thing or a short-term solution, I'm telling you that getting those kids back into the classroom was I think an important thing, important to them and their future. So I'm glad that we were able to come up with a process.

As you know, there are other aspects to education delivery that are not addressed by the Education Services Settlement Act, and I believe this is also completely appropriate. I do believe they need to be separated and that you cannot handle in an arbitration process things that are bigger than an arbitration process. Any decisions such as classroom conditions that have long-term implications need to be examined thoroughly and cautiously. It is important that policy decisions bring us closer to our goals of educational delivery.

I think of the California model which I alluded to last night, where it was legislated that a class would be a certain size. Overnight they were scrambling to try and find enough relocatables to put on schools because suddenly they didn't have enough classrooms. They didn't have enough teachers in order to handle this particular piece of legislation. They were hiring first-year university students to come and teach in those classrooms. So sometimes when you launch something that you might want to call a working condition and create legislation, you create ramifications that you can't see forward on yet. It needs cautious, reasoned approach. I think this bill allows that, and that's why I support it.

The government's commitment to review is included in the preamble of Bill 12. It allows for an exploration of the challenges that we face and provides opportunity to find real, effective solutions together. Now, I've been hearing some of the hon. members on the opposite side say that the preamble isn't that important and that it should be in the bill or that it's lesser. I'd like to read it just one more time.

Whereas the Government has made a commitment . . .
And that's a word that I honour, commitment.

. . . to examine the learning system in Alberta; and

Whereas that examination will include, but not be limited to, a study of the number of students in a class, pupil-to-teacher ratios and the maximum time a teacher may be required to instruct students enrolled in Kindergarten to Grade 12.

It says here that it "will include" but "not be limited to." I'm happy to hear that, Mr. Speaker. A broad-style review proposed by Bill 12 will give our learning stakeholders and Albertans ample opportunity to provide input into how they would like to see our learning system improved.

As I said earlier, I have four boys. Two of those boys were able to successfully navigate through the public system with no difficulty, but two of my sons have learning disabilities. They are coded mild to moderate learning-disabled students, and there have been at times difficulties for them in the classroom. We've tried very hard, with the help of teachers, to be flexible and to meet those needs, but sometimes I felt like inclusion was the thing that was the most difficult barrier for me to overcome in trying to get them the help they needed. So I am happy to see this review, and I am happy to see us have at least some flexibility as we look at these educational issues. I do think it is of the utmost importance.

Our students will consistently achieve high results compared to other jurisdictions and worldwide. One of the keys to our success is that the Alberta learning system is both collaborative and flexible. The review included in Bill 12 further demonstrates this goal of working together for the benefit of students. I wholeheartedly support the passing of this if it will bring us to the next point and help us get on so that Albertans recognize the value of this legislation and embrace it as an important step in moving forward. Our learning system has an even brighter future ahead, but we cannot do this quickly. It must be done thoughtfully and in a considered way that will be better for the students of Alberta.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Any questions or comments to be offered in this respect? No?

The hon. leader of the ND opposition.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I take this opportunity to speak on Bill 12, Education Services Settlement Act, 2002. This number reminds me of another bill that became very controversial in this province and continues to cause a huge amount of concern to lots of Albertans. I mean Bill 11. So I wonder if there is some relationship between the numbering of the bill that was and the bill that's before us today, which will become law, if this government has its way, in the next couple of hours if not sooner.

I'm going to speak against this bill, Mr. Speaker, and it will become clear in my speech as to the reasons why. This bill is one of the most coercive pieces of legislation that I've seen around. Coercion is a form of violence. What this bill does is institutionalize and legalize violence against teachers, who the members opposite can't stop praising for some reason, on the one hand, and then are ready to hit with a two-by-four on the head, all of them, in the same breath.

Bill 12 in section after section systematically strips away collective bargaining rights from teachers, rights that have been responsibly exercised by teachers for generations. It is also so unnecessary, Mr. Speaker. As recently as one week ago Alberta was on the verge of avoiding the kinds of bitter and prolonged disputes that have poisoned labour relations in provinces like Ontario and British Columbia. In B.C., for example, teachers have been on a prolonged work-to-rule campaign which has seen students in that province denied the opportunity to participate in extracurricular activities such as school sports, field trips, and so on. Unfortunately, as a result of Bill 12 this Conservative government is taking Alberta's public education system down the same sorry and unnecessary road.

Allow me, Mr. Speaker, to briefly review the events of the past week that have brought us to this very sorry day. On February 22 the cabinet passed an order which declared a public emergency and ordered teachers in 22 school jurisdictions back to work. The ATA immediately instructed its members to comply with the back-to-work order. Teachers were in fact back in their classrooms the following day, and so were the students. Instead, the ATA chose to test the legality of the cabinet order in the Court of Queen's Bench. On March 1, Chief Justice Allan Wachowich threw out the government's back-to-work order.

I wish to read into the record a brief excerpt from Justice Wachowich's judgment. In paragraph 40 of his judgment Justice Wachowich says:

I accept the ATA's submission that the Order in Council's repercussions go to the very heart of the teachers' livelihood and negate the teachers' ability to utilize one of the only economic levers they have in labour disputes in Alberta. In that context it is appropriate, in my view, to require the government to strictly adhere to the statutory requirements in the exercise of its authority through the Lieutenant Governor in Council.

I believe that members of this Assembly should reflect very carefully on Justice Wachowich's words. The hon. justice, both in the above paragraph and in other paragraphs of his judgment, is saying that withholding one's labour is one of the only economic levers that teachers or other workers have. Withholding one's labour in a legal strike is not something that should be taken away lightly.

However, taking away this fundamental right of teachers, which teachers have in the past used sparingly and responsibly, is exactly what Bill 12 is all about. It's shameful, Mr. Speaker, and I wonder how members on the government side can say that this bill provides a reasonable process for settling those disputes between teachers and the school boards.

Earlier today the Premier had the audacity to claim that Bill 12 was about students. All I can say in response to this, Mr. Speaker, is that that's a crock. What an absolute crock. Teachers are professionals. As professionals their relationship with their students is a relationship of trust. It's a fiduciary relationship. They must take responsibility for speaking out on conditions that in their judgment will do harm to students if not attended to. That's what the teachers have been doing both individually and collectively in this province, and that's why they're being punished. That's why they're the object of the vindictive legislative action that the government has taken against them.

If the government were truly interested in the well-being of students, they would have accepted the olive branch extended to them by teachers last week. All that teachers asked was for a fair and impartial arbitration process. The ATA has simply asked the government to cut the terms of reference out of the back-to-work order and paste them into the legislative bill. They voluntarily agree to be bound by the decisions of an independent arbitrator. They even said that the choice of the arbitrator in the back-to-work order would be acceptable to them. Yet all of this goodwill was spurned by this government. Instead of choosing reconciliation, the government, through Bill 12, has chosen confrontation. Should Bill 12 be rammed through this Legislature, as it will be, it's clear to me now that students will be hurt. It's students' interests that will be jeopardized. They are being risked by this bill, by the decision of this government.

Another point, Mr. Speaker: one cannot make specious distinctions between the interests of teachers and the interests of students as if they are opposite to each other. The ability of teachers, the quality of teachers, the commitment of teachers is fundamental to protecting the interests of students, and it is those very abilities, those very rights of teachers that are jeopardized and attacked and being taken away by this bill. So as the rights of teachers are being taken away, it's not only the interests of teachers that are under attack; it's the interests of their students that are in fact under attack.

Let's just look at a single example of how Bill 12 will hurt this province's students. The ATA has said publicly that should Bill 12 be imposed on them, they will withdraw from all co-operative relations with the Minister of Learning. This includes the grading of diploma exams and other exams for students in grades 3, 6, 9, and 12. The ATA has the legal right to stop grading diploma exams for the Ministry of Learning. They are not in a contractual relationship with this ministry. How is this in the best interests of students or in the best interests of education in this province?

There's so much that's offensive and reprehensible about Bill 12 that it really is difficult to know where to begin. Let's look at the biased arbitration side of the bill. Bill 12 by its very nature makes a total travesty of anything that can reasonably be called fair and impartial arbitration. Normally in arbitration the two parties each appoint an arbitrator and then jointly appoint a third member, who often serves as chair. Occasionally, if the two parties to the dispute cannot agree on the choice of the third member, that appointment is made by an organization that is not a party to the dispute. Is this arbitration process followed in Bill 12? Absolutely not. Under Bill 12 the party that has the most at stake in the outcome of binding arbitration, namely the provincial government, gets to pick the chair of the arbitration tribunal. What a travesty.

Finally, section 4 of the bill allows the Minister of Human Resources and Employment to revoke the appointment of a member of the arbitration tribunal if the minister believes that the proceedings are being unduly or unnecessarily delayed. The minister can then appoint another person in that member's place. The result: an arbitration process, already stacked 2 to 1 against teachers, could become an arbitration process stacked 3 to 0 against teachers.

Let's look at the part of the bill that restricts the tribunal to salaries. Section 23 of Bill 12 says that any collective bargaining agreement in the 48 affected school jurisdictions cannot contain provision that establishes or in any way or manner deals with class size, student/teacher ratios, and hours of instruction. Yesterday the Premier admitted during his daily media availability that section 23 indeed strips out the collective agreements in at least three major school jurisdictions, including the two largest jurisdictions in the province; that is, Calgary public and Edmonton public. In some cases provisions covering such matters as student/teacher ratios have been in those contracts for close to 30 years. In one fell swoop of a government bill, that will likely be passed into law today, provisions previously bargained for and entrenched in collective agreements are being erased, and the Premier dares to claim that Bill 12 isn't punitive or vindictive. This is reprehensible, and this is wrong, Mr. Speaker.

Bill 12 also requires:

The arbitration tribunal must be satisfied that an award can be implemented without an employer incurring a deficit, or if the employer already has a deficit, without incurring any greater deficit.

This section of the bill is wrong for several reasons, Mr. Speaker. It's the continuation of the government's imposition of wage controls on teachers, in particular the writing in of a salary item specifying a 6 percent raise for teachers over two years. This is a rather transparent attempt to implement a 4 plus 2 wage control solution through what's supposed to pass for an arbitration process. This section conveniently ignores the fact that the financial positions of school boards are a direct result of government funding or underfunding, more appropriately. In other words, teachers' salary settlements are being made subject to something over which they have absolutely no control and the school boards have absolutely no control. Talk about catch-22.

Finally, this section will inevitably lead to a patchwork quilt of arbitrated settlements across the province, depending upon the financial position of a particular school board in question. Teachers working for boards like Edmonton public, which has no surplus, or Calgary public, which has a $20 million deficit, may be awarded significantly less than teachers in the Battle River school division, which has a $5 million-plus surplus. Instead of a single, province-wide pay scale for teachers with increments based on experience and years in the profession and local conditions, we could end up with up to 48 pay scales across the province. How ludicrous and how arbitrary, Mr. Speaker.

Let me turn to the executive privilege section of the bill now. Section 19 of the act shows that Tricky Dick Nixon and his Watergate co-conspirators had nothing on the Alberta Tory government when it comes to invoking executive privilege. Section 19 says that not only are cabinet ministers able to claim executive privilege and not turn over the documents that might undermine the government's case, but deputy ministers or other officers are similarly entitled to refuse to produce documents on the grounds that they are privileged. The question must be asked: what exactly does the government have to hide that would require such a vast expansion of what's considered privileged information? In other words, the government is not required to provide evidence that could support the ATA's positions; for example, copies of memos, financial analyses, et cetera, that might tend to show that Alberta teachers are not the highest paid in Canada. These documents will be kept in a government safe somewhere, someplace, far from the prying eyes of an arbitration tribunal. Meanwhile, the ATA is not provided with similar protection if they have information that supports the government's or the school board's case. How typically stacked and one-sided, Mr. Speaker.

Punitive sections against the ATA are another prime feature of this bill. In addition to general offences and penalties set out in section 33 of the act with its $1,000 fines on the ATA and $10,000 fines for its officers, there's another section in the act which singles out the ATA and officers for punishment. Section 28(2) says:

Neither the ATA nor an officer of the ATA . . . or any other person acting on the ATA's behalf is to discipline, threaten to discipline or attempt to discipline an employee, directly or indirectly, because the employee is or was complying with or attempting to comply with obligations under this Act.

Isn't it interesting that this subsection only applies to the ATA and not to other parties, including the Alberta School Boards Association?

Mr. Speaker, turning to the education commission, so-called, the preamble to Bill 12 commits the government to an examination of the learning system in Alberta. From public statements made by the government, this examination is supposed to be completed by August 2003. I think a few things are mentioned there in that preamble. It seemed like a good excuse, then, to impose on teachers those conditions that are in section 23. In my view, this doesn't give me any assurance that the government is really seriously concerned about the concerns of Albertans widely to ask them what they think needs to be done in order to improve the education system.

I want to conclude, Mr. Speaker, by quoting briefly from an editorial by Licia Corbella that appeared in today's Calgary Sun. I want to emphasize that these are not my words but hers:

The provincial government can call an imposed settlement on teachers arbitration all they want. But naming it so does not make it so . . . Rammed through dictatorial legislation and an imposed settlement on Alberta teachers is still dictatorial legislation and an imposed settlement regardless of what Learning Minister Lyle Oberg and Premier Ralph Klein call it . . . Arbitration? Settlement? Negotiation? Resolution? In Klein's Alberta, that's doublespeak for To Hell With You.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Questions? We have the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

REV. ABBOTT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The leader of the third party has spoken against this bill. I'm just wondering: how would you answer the many constituents of mine who have written, e-mailed, and called in support of our actions on Bill 12? Are the NDs saying that the voters are ignorant or that they don't count?

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm willing to answer the question from the 74th member of the first party here. Will he have the integrity to table those letters so that I could see them before I can respond to them?

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-North Hill.

MR. MAGNUS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to ask the leader of the third party a very simple question. Can he name a number of professional groups who get to pick the terms and conditions of their own contracts and their own workplace? I'd like him to name a couple of professional groups that do that.

DR. PANNU: Mr. Speaker, collective bargaining is a way by which those terms and conditions are determined, negotiated, and arrived at between parties in negotiation at the negotiating table. I ask the hon. member to give me one example of where this kind of totalitarian arbitration method has been used to settle disputes.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, are you asking a question, or are you wishing to speak?

MS CARLSON: I'm asking a question, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Go ahead.

MS CARLSON: I would like to thank the member for his comments and ask him to comment on what we've heard some people in the communities say, that the education commission has been dismissed as an absolute farce. Could he comment on his opinion of that?

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When you look at the preamble and the language in it, the first three sentences in that preamble draw attention to a few of the matters that will be examined by the task force, but then quickly those very three sentences are used to justify why all matters except salary are to be taken away from the table in the arbitration process. That clearly indicates the intent behind the preamble.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Hon. Government House Leader, a question?

MR. HANCOCK: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I'm wondering if the hon. member could tell us, notwithstanding that he dislikes the bill and the legislated arbitration process for settling wage disputes, if he does not think it would be more progressive and positive and moving forward to be positive about a commission on education reviewing all of the outstanding issues than to dismiss it as a farce.

DR. PANNU: The need for an education commission is obvious. There's no disputing that fact. But the preamble has very little to do with the recognition of that need and to establish the terms of reference for that commission, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands on a question.

MR. MASON: Yes, please. I would like to commend the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, the leader of the third party, for his excellent speech, Mr. Speaker, and I wonder if he could expand upon his comments about the importance of education in our society.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. leader on that tough question.

DR. PANNU: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to oblige my hon. colleague. Although I would much rather sit down and listen to some other speakers, I'm certainly happy to do this.

Mr. Speaker, education in a democratic society must have as a basic principle democratic experience for its students. This standard imposition of a totalitarian, dictatorial settlement on teachers sends a very wrong message to our students about the importance of democracy and their own obligations or rights as democratic citizens.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Do we have time for more? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie has tried several times unsuccessfully to get up.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would ask the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona if he would give his opinion on how this piece of legislation works in with the concept of free collective bargaining?

DR. PANNU: Mr. Speaker, to mention this bill and free collective bargaining in the same breath causes me some concern. This bill has absolutely nothing to do with free and fair collective bargaining. It has everything to do with the destruction of the principles of collective bargaining in a free and open society.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: I think the time for the questions and comments and answers has concluded.

The next speaker on the list is the hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

MR. JOHNSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the opportunity to speak to Bill 12, the Education Services Settlement Act. This bill responds to a unique collective bargaining problem that involves three entities: the Alberta Teachers' Association, the Alberta School Boards Association, and the government of Alberta. The government is the source of dollars, of course, for the operation of the education system, and therefore it's involved in that way. It has generally been agreed upon by the partners that it is time to use the arbitration process to settle the dispute as it relates to salaries, and that is what Bill 12 proposes to do.

I am satisfied that it was necessary under the circumstances to go the route of arbitration as it relates to salaries. While the issue of teachers' salaries is very important, the preamble of the bill deals with what I conclude to be much more important. These issues – classroom size, student/teacher ratios, instruction time, and other issues of great importance that I might add such as integration of special-needs students into the regular classroom, the changing role of the school board, and the funding formula for education – must be addressed, as the ATA, school boards, parents, and teachers have been telling us. These issues must be given much more time than what an arbitration tribunal would be able to adequately consider in just a short period of time. Therefore, it makes sense to me that issues other than those dealing with dollars should be handled in this way. Mr. Speaker, this is what was proposed or suggested through the Future Summit just a short few weeks ago, and I know that the ATA was involved in that recommendation as well.

The government in this bill is making a commitment to examine the learning system of Alberta. Mr. Speaker, I think that is good news. I hope that that opens the door for input from all stakeholders: the ATA, the Alberta School Boards Association, parents, students, business, MLAs, whoever. We will be building from a position of strength. Our record in education is very, very strong.

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Sorry to interrupt the hon. member. It's becoming somewhat difficult to hear the hon. member because there appear to be other communications going on at the same time, which must drive Hansard a little bit to distraction. I wonder if we could carry on those conversations outside.

The hon. Government House Leader.

Point of Order Member's Apology

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On a point of order under section 23(h), (i), and (j). I'd like to apologize to the Speaker and the House for my interruption. I unfortunately had the need to respond to the Opposition House Leader, who was making comments about time allocation and bringing it in on our own members instead of just theirs. I was just advising her that time allocation applies to all members in the House and that last night she was lecturing members of this side of the House for not speaking and that her comments were entirely inappropriate. I do apologize for making that interruption.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: While the chair didn't direct the comments to the individuals involved, I'll accept your apology.

MS CARLSON: Mr. Speaker, if he had a chance to speak, then I get to respond.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Well, in that in his apology he did refer to a conversation that he was having with you, do you wish, then, also to apologize for having this conversation?

MS CARLSON: Absolutely. Mr. Speaker, in responding to the Government House Leader's point of order, I certainly feel that it's important that I also respond, seeing as he named me in the point of order. Of course I will apologize for carrying on a side conversation while another member was legitimately participating in the debate.

It is very important to, I think, have an opportunity to clarify that point of order, as the Government House Leader did. It is very interesting to see that today we do have government members and supporters of the government position speak out on this bill, but it's interesting to also . . .

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Hon. member, that's really not to the point of order. That's continuing a debate. I think we'll now take Wetaskiwin-Camrose. Thank you, hon. member.

MR. JOHNSON: Mr. Speaker, my last point was that the commission that is referred to in the preamble of this bill will be working from a position of strength. We have a very strong education system in this province. Public education is strong, but of course it can be made better. Considering the government's commitment to examine the learning system of Alberta, which I consider to be the most important part of this bill along with the content of Bill 12 to settle teachers' salaries, this course of action is reasonable in settling the immediate dispute and visionary in charting a bright future for what is already a very good system of education with outstanding teachers and outstanding leaders.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Yes. A question for the hon. member. If this indeed is outstanding leadership, how can the hon. member explain the very, very high level of voting for strike action and the very high level of discontent of Alberta teachers in light of this legislation?

MR. JOHNSON: Mr. Speaker, I was referring to the leadership in terms of our teachers. I was not referring to the Alberta Teachers' Association. I was referring to the leadership of this government, and I stand behind my words in terms of strong leadership.

Mr. Speaker, I had the opportunity a couple of years ago to spend some time in some European countries examining the education systems over there. When I came back home, I was very, very proud to say that I was very, very proud of our education system, and I've remained that way.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will put the same question to this member that I did to the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona. How does he think that this piece of legislation fits in with the whole concept of free collective bargaining?

MR. JOHNSON: Occasionally in the free collective bargaining process impasses are reached, and I guess the solution when this occurs is either mediation or arbitration. That just is a fact of life, and that is what has happened in this particular case. I think the action that is taken is the right action.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. An additional question: how would this member respond to comments that we have been hearing from the public that, with regard to this bill, the education commission has been dismissed as an absolute farce?

MR. JOHNSON: Well, the education commission has not been formed. It has not been announced in terms of who might be serving on this commission and what might be involved, so to say that it's a farce is totally premature, I think.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar to ask a question to the hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

REV. ABBOTT: Yes. Actually, Mr. Speaker, I have heard exactly the opposite from my public. What they're saying is that this commission could be the most important thing that this government does during this session. So I guess I would like the hon. member to expand on what he feels should be included in the commission.

MR. JOHNSON: Mr. Speaker, the last commission, as I recall, was the Worth commission of 1972, and that dealt with a lot of issues, including philosophical issues as well. I suppose that that could be the case here, that we could deal with philosophical issues, but I think more important are the issues that I just mentioned in my speech, including classroom size. I think the whole issue of integration of our special-needs students into the classroom is a huge issue, and I'd sort of like to see that issue dealt with. The role of school boards is another very important issue, and I could go on and on.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Earlier this member referred to the commission as being unformed and undecided in its nature. Then my question to him is: if there haven't been any parameters set for the commission, how can he feel comfortable voting for it in this particular bill?

MR. JOHNSON: I can feel comfortable because I feel there's a need for it.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands on a question.

MR. MASON: Yes, please. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the hon. member why he feels the government did not address the issue of education and the problems that exist through the creation of a commission some years ago when these problems were already being brought to light by teachers, parents, and the opposition.

MR. JOHNSON: Well, I guess what I would say in that respect is that everything that is done has its time, and it happens to be the time that that ought to be done. I think with all of the problems that have come forward at this time, it makes sense that there be a commission.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan.

MR. LOUGHEED: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to speak to Bill 12 at this time and address some comments about how important I believe it is that the students are back in class. I'd also like to address a few different issues, a few roles of different components of the education system. As an instructor in physics 30 I certainly recognized the comments coming forward from many constituents that are currently in grade 12 and some grade 11s, in fact, taking 30-level courses, and they were concerned about being able to complete the program, being adequately prepared for their postsecondary programs. For those students I thought it was really important that they be back in class. The three weeks that the students in my constituency were out were pretty well the limit, as far as I was concerned, for many of those diploma courses. Some perhaps could have been extended a little bit longer but not many of them. It was expected by the public that the students be back in class and that they stay in class for the rest of this semester as well.

Now, all the goals aren't going to be achieved that may be issues in education with the bringing forward of the arbitrator's report, whenever that happens, but this bill does lead towards some other solutions and towards the commission that's been talked about several times this afternoon.

I'd like to look at the current situation from a few different perspectives. One of the things that's been talked about a great deal is funding. A few of the constituents who phoned and talked to me about the situation over the past month volunteered their concerns about funding and talked about being willing to increase their property tax, perhaps, or income tax if that was the mechanism. They felt that there would be some increase that they would be willing to support. Generally speaking, people are not in favour of tax increases, and that was the majority of the kind of input I received.

When talking about property tax, if that was the mechanism to increase, we talked in terms of property taxes being about a third of the support for public education, and if they thought a 10 percent increase was appropriate for an increase in education funding, that would result in about a 30 percent property tax increase. When they evaluated, in some cases, what they were asking for in terms of funding increases and what it would cost in terms of property tax increases, if that was the mechanism, many people replied that perhaps the funding was adequate, and they didn't think that they were willing to increase their taxes at all.

It's interesting, in the kinds of numbers for expenditures, that in the public system there are about $3.6 billion expended and around 600,000 students, and that works out roughly to about $6,000 for every student. When I go and talk to students, I often use the example of the costs for the funding of government. With about 3 million people in the province and about a $21 billion budget, the $6,000 per person really strikes home to these kids and the adults that you sometimes have in the classroom. That's a huge cost for program expenditure per person – man, woman, and child – in our province.

Of course, the same works for the other numbers: with health care, where we're spending around $6 billion with 3 million people, a couple of thousand dollars each for health care expenditures every year. Sometimes we're criticized that we're spending too much or too little, but I noted with interest the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie yesterday talking about the $21 billion being about an appropriate amount of expenditure and that she wouldn't see more being expended.

Some constituents would like to see some rearrangement of the dollars. Those are certainly points for discussion. I note with interest over the past few months in reading the ATA newspaper that they focused 18 months ago exclusively on health care issues, and perhaps it's no wonder that health care received as much attention in budgeting over the past while. We found criticism at that time about legislation that was being brought forward, legislation and policies that are currently being adopted throughout Canada, and the discussion topics for all sorts of commissions like the Romanow commission.

I'm certainly looking forward to a study also to ascertain the legitimacy of a lot of different claims. For example, about three or four years ago it was commented that fund-raising per student on average in Elk Island public schools was about $400, and the minister of education at that time refuted that claim and gave the example that those were dollars spent in the cafeteria and on grad fees and all sorts of other things. In fact, just the other day I received a letter from a constituent saying that in Elk Island public schools the fund-raising was something like $285 per student. The same kind of rumours still persist. They're false, they're flawed, and they're completely misleading.

Another one would be the funding that exists, something like Alberta is 58th in I don't know how many jurisdictions in North America, 60 or something like that. I'm not sure what the extent was of the numbers, whether it included the Territories and things like that. But talking about converting Canadian dollars into American dollars, right away our expenditure per student would be less. The issue of capital debenture interest not being included in our education funding: it's misleading to talk in those terms, and the public doesn't appreciate it. That was obvious in their rejection of those kinds of claims in both the '97 and the 2001 elections. With respect to STR and PTR, sometimes it's not even appropriate to mention that. What's more important is the classroom experience that exists.

I was a little skeptical at one time, I will admit, that these settlements that could occur in Alberta would give us the highest salary in Canada for our teachers. So I got a whole bunch of contracts from Ontario and looked through them. In fact, when I look at the settlement for Medicine Hat, where the top salary for a classroom teacher would be $71,000 plus, that's almost exactly the same, a little bit more in most cases, as most of the Ontario contracts that I was able to look at for this current school year. So although I was thinking that maybe that statement on the government's part wasn't correct, upon investigation it was found to be so. So those are the kinds of things we need to find out and resolve that skepticism.

Another area is the role of classroom composition. One letter from a person just recently complained that the government put special-needs students into classes to save dollars, and I don't think that's a correct recollection of how this happened. Inclusion trends certainly exist, and we're not likely to reverse inclusion unless there are better alternatives for those students. Those things have to be discussed and investigated.

I think, too, that we have to look at the role of the teacher. I think that teachers have assumed far too much responsibility, and it has been placed upon them by the public. An example of a letter to the editor in my local paper said something like: the teachers are the guardians of my children's future. I don't believe that to be the case; I thought it was the parents' responsibility first. The teachers certainly are part of the picture, but they aren't solely responsible.

Another person wrote a letter saying that your success or anybody's success as a businessperson or a pipe fitter or even a politician was a result of teachers. I think that's taking too much responsibility, because it also would speak to their responsibility in the event of failures of individuals in our society. The idea about a whole village raising a child certainly comes to mind here.

I've received calls also about graduation or commencement exercises, depending what they're called in the different places. I wonder how much of the school's resources should go to planning and programming and getting ready for this. I am certainly aware that in one school the time spent by the planner for this was taken out of the classroom time, and students were unable to get help because of all the time that was wrapped up in the graduation planning. Perhaps an event co-ordinator would be a more appropriate person to be taking on that role rather than a highly paid professional who is taken out of the classroom and given release time to do that kind of job. Some activities are complementary to classroom activities, and some are outside of the needs of the classroom.

Another concern I have is this competition that exists for students. It seems to me that it is valuable to raise the school's profile and prestige and the self-image, and that may have some value. But in doing this competition, we have a vast smorgasbord of courses. They're far too broad, and that results in great size discrepancies. Your academic classes can have 35, but then some of these options that are there to attract a few students and raise the profile of your school may only have a handful of students in them. That's inefficient, and it takes a huge amount of time to set this up and go through the process.

One thing that has to be realized: there are no more students. In spite of all the competition there are only so many students, and in fact there's no profit attached to having more students. If you bring more students into your school, you have equivalent costs, and the only thing that happens is extra time spent in trying to promote those different programs. In fact, when I was programming in '97 before the election, I had about as many different kinds of courses as I had students because of all the different modules that existed for the CTS courses. There were something in the order of 500 or 600 different courses that were offered. It was unmanageable in many ways.

I think, too, that we have to look at the role of the community. I think that the attitude towards schooling that society has is critical. I'll give you some examples of things that have concerned me in the past and, I think, things that continue to concern teachers. Attitudes like: it doesn't really hurt to miss a day or two of classes. That nothing much happens in there anyway seems to be the attitude. So if they miss and get behind, no big deal; they'll just catch up. That isn't the experience of the teacher that's trying to move students through at a uniform kind of pace.

Another attitude about options: they're not important, things that can be learned by students like woodworking and so on. Those are important. If they're offered, they should be considered important, or we should do away with them and reduce the exposure of the students to the school time. In fact, we could reduce the number of teachers at the same time if those aren't important. Either we have to make them so or eliminate them.

Other societal attitudes. "Girls don't do science": it's very discouraging that there'd be a low expectation for girls in the science classes. Or "You shouldn't get into the trades," not recognizing that those are the great entrepreneurial activities that exist. It's miseducation in many ways.

We did a survey, and 70 percent of the students in grade 10 thought they were going to go to university. So they took all these courses leading to university, but in the end only 30 percent of them went to university, and they ended up having in their course repertoire courses that weren't really valuable for the things they ended up doing.

Something along the line of "I was unable to do math, therefore

I don't expect my child to be able to accomplish those kinds of things" is an issue that has to be considered when the commission starts to examine it.

But, most important, I think we have to consider the role of the students themselves. There are many, many factors that determine academic success. I think the primary factor is the student. I think the teacher is really important. There are also all sorts of environmental factors that exist, whether it's the kind of atmosphere the student is growing up in, the kinds of expectations of parents, all of those kinds of things.

For me the naming of our department, the Ministry of Learning, is an important way to designate it. To me learning is an active process. It's not something that the teacher is responsible to shovel into a student, but rather it's the student's own responsibility to learn. It's the student and the family that are paramount in the process of education. Learning is what we want to achieve or the student is going to have to work towards. I do believe that that attitude is most critical. I think it's something that we can try to modify and work towards, and I look forward to this commission.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: I take it we have questions. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by Drayton Valley-Calmar.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first question for the Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan is on his comments on a statement made by the Minister of Learning with regard to this particular bill, where the Minister of Learning is quoted as saying that the teachers got what they asked for.

MR. LOUGHEED: I didn't understand. Did you say that I commented that way or that the minister did?

MS CARLSON: The Minister of Learning did, and your feedback on that with regard to this bill.

MR. LOUGHEED: On the comments attributed to the minister, I guess in question period tomorrow you could ask him what he suggested. The teachers will go through the process and negotiations, and I expect that we'll have a satisfactory result in the end here.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar, followed by Edmonton-Highlands.

REV. ABBOTT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to thank the hon. member for his excellent speech and just was very glad to see how he outlined the value and the worth of teachers in his speech as well as just some of the solutions that we're going to work towards as we proceed. My question is this. The member talked about his research on the Medicine Hat contract, I believe it was, and how they will now be the highest paid in Canada. I'm just wondering if he feels that that's at least one way that this government is recognizing the worth of teachers.

MR. LOUGHEED: I used the Medicine Hat collective agreement that was settled just as one of many. The Red Deer agreement and the St. Albert agreement I think will all fall in that $71,000 range. But certainly there are many ways to recognize the teachers' accomplishments. Monetary is one of them. There are many other things that go towards that. All of society's attitude towards the respect that should accrue to teachers is important.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, followed by Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

MR. MASON: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to ask the hon. member if he would stand in his place and assure the House that the teachers in his constituency support what the government is doing.

MR. LOUGHEED: I've received at this point, since Bill 12 was introduced, perhaps something in the order of 10, maybe 12 notes from teachers that would be resident in the constituency of Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan. Most of them were opposed, but by the same token I've received at least as many, or probably more, from other constituents who are really in favour of this bill.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

MR. HORNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I thought it was an excellent speech by the hon. Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan. I would like to ask, based on his experiences in his past life as an educator, his views on the review of integration and special needs that we need to undertake and where in that context the review might go.

MR. LOUGHEED: I wanted to in my comments point out that this is an area that really has to be considered. It seems to be the focal point for much of the concern of teachers about the progress and, I should comment, the concern of parents of other than special-needs students, the concern about the progress of the whole class and those students within the class. I think we have to look at inclusion and we have to look at some other models as well, things like segregation within a school and then inclusion in other activities.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In his comments this member indicated that an events co-ordinator is not a professional. Could he tell us how much he thinks such a person should be paid and how he would classify them?

MR. LOUGHEED: Well, in fact, one individual that I know spent a lot of time planning grads. When she retired, she became an events co-ordinator, a grad planner among other things. Because commencement exercises are something that are usually fully supported by the students through their grad fees, I think it would be appropriate that rather than taking funding for such things out of the school budget, that person could be paid out of the grad fees that are assigned to students that take part in the exercises.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: It being 5:30, Standing Order 4(3) indicates that the Speaker leave the chair until 8 p.m.

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Wednesday, March 13, 2002

8:00 p.m.

Date: 2002/03/13

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Please be seated.

head: Government Bills and Orders
Third Reading

Bill 12
Education Services Settlement Act

[Debate adjourned March 13]

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to rise to oppose once again on third reading this travesty of a bill, Bill 12. This is a sad day for democracy in Alberta. This is a time, I think, when the Legislature stands on the cusp of making a mistake, a serious error that may well affect children, teachers, families, and labour relations in this province for many years to come. The fallout from this bill may extend over years and years and affect people in ways that the government doesn't even imagine.

The government has now brought forward Bill 11, and we know what that contained. Now we've got Bill 12. We can only shudder to think what Bill 13 will be in a year or two. The ability of this government to tear at the social fabric of this province is only limited by their ability to count. Let us hope that they cannot count past 13 or 14. Mr. Speaker, we have heard time and time again – 12, 13, 14. Each time the damage is greater.

I've listened with interest to government ministers and the Premier as they fall into their message box when they're challenged on this bill, when they've been challenged on their handling of the teachers' dispute from the beginning, going back a year ago to the budget where the 4 and 2, commonly referred to by the government as 6 because they can add but not that well, set the stage for this confrontation. But the government has gone into its message box time and time again in other ways.

The big message now that is repeated over and over by this government is that the government is doing this for the students, that the students come first. Oh, in fact, I believe that many hon. members opposite actually believe it, because it has been repeated so many times. But is that really going to be the case, Mr. Speaker? Is it really for the students? If it were for the students, then this government would not have cut 10 years ago so dramatically and deeply into our education system, to the point where we're still trying to fix the problem today. If it were really for the students, the government would have resolved issues relative to education long ago and not waited until they are forced to do so by a strike and then set up another committee to deal with it.

If the government were serious about students, they would have provided more funding for teachers and worked through the process that exists to resolve these disputes without letting it get to a teachers' strike which was unprecedented in its scale and its scope in this history of this province. Mr. Speaker, there has never been a provincewide teachers' strike of the nature that we have seen in this province. If the government were serious about students, they would have resolved these issues long ago as they went along. [interjection] There's one less. Perhaps if we keep going, we'll have a majority on this side.

Mr. Speaker, the government's message box is false. It's a false box. It's a logic box, not a message box. The other message box that this government is talking about – and we've heard this repeatedly from the minister and from the Premier in answer to questions – is that we are only doing what the ATA wants, what the ATA asked us to do. Well now, Mr. Speaker, I happened to pull up the web site of the Alberta Teachers' Association right here, and I have some interesting quotes from the president of the ATA.

One week ago teachers offered the premier a positive solution to the crisis facing public education . . . We did not seek any guarantees or set any preconditions. All we asked for was a fair, open and independent arbitration process based on the model established by the government in the February 21 back-to-work orders. Instead, the government has colluded with the Alberta School Boards' Association to bring forward Bill 12.

The Alberta Teachers' Association has clearly refuted the claims of the Premier and the minister and other members of the government and the government caucus that the teachers are simply getting what they asked for.

Now, another message box that this government has been defending and falling into is that issues other than wages will be considered in the education review. Mr. Speaker, you have to ask why it took the teachers' strike for the government to finally decide that they want to create some sort of blue-ribbon commission, some sort of panel in order to study the problems facing education.

I was first elected in the by-election in the year 2000, and at that time the issues around education were very, very pronounced in that debate. As I went door-to-door, Mr. Speaker, people were telling me and they were saying to the Conservative candidate and to the Liberal candidate as well that their children were not receiving the kind of education they felt they deserved. You had many classrooms where you mixed students who had special needs, yet the supports weren't there for the teachers. There was disruption that affected all of the children in the classroom, not because of integration of special-needs students but because the staff support simply wasn't there.

I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, as a father paying some attention to my son's homework in grade 9, that when I ask him to bring home textbooks, for the majority of courses they do not have their own textbook. They have a limited number of textbooks that must stay in the classroom. When I attended school and, I'm sure, when most members attended school, that was not the case in junior high. Every student was issued their own textbook that they could take home.

So there's a clear deterioration, Mr. Speaker, and we've heard as well the minister say in the past that nobody has to do fund-raising for essentials. We know from our own people that we talk to, our own constituents, that that's not so. The question remains, though, why parents have to do fund-raising at all for their education, why they have to do it at all. That's a question that I think needs to be raised: why parents are working bingos, why they're working casinos at all in order to pay for their education and to make up for the neglect of this government.

Now, we believe that this bill represents a clear abuse of the government's power. The provisions of the bill establish a biased arbitration tribunal. It restricts the arbitration to salaries only. It limits the salaries that can be paid to what the school boards can afford, thereby getting the government off the hook for any further financing. It suspends teachers' right to strike. It prohibits slow-downs. It affects 48 school boards, although only 22 were struck by job action. The government has short-circuited debate at every stage by imposing or threatening to impose closure. It imposes a B.C.-style contract that strips the rights that were previously bargained for. It imposes punitive sanctions against the ATA. The government has misrepresented the ATA position. It protects the government from having to present evidence as to the facts and reports that were taken into account in making decisions. And it gives the Labour Relations Board potential clout over the collection of dues.

Mr. Speaker, in every respect this is a punitive and unacceptable bill and one which New Democrats strongly oppose and will continue to oppose. We support the action of the teachers against the bill and of the public against the bill, Mr. Speaker, and we oppose this bill. We believe that this marks a severe deterioration not just in labour relations but a severe downturn in the democratic process in this province.

Mr. Speaker, this government has had too much power for too long to remain modest, to remain restrained in its use of power, to remain in touch with the people. The government is arrogant, too powerful, and it is misusing its power to take away the rights of our citizens. It's not just a question of the government's neglect of education. It is as well an attack on what we consider to be basic civil rights of individuals, and that is the right to bargain collectively in our society, which we believe on this side and in our party to be every bit as fundamental a civil right as some members on the other side consider the right to property to be. That is why our party has taken such a strong exception to this bill. This bill cuts at the very core of our values, and we will continue to fight against this kind of very, very unacceptable intrusion into the rights of people that we represent.

Mr. Speaker, I want to give the House the benefit of a few more quotes from wise people, and I know that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs will be careful before he again confuses the words of the Holy Father with Joseph Stalin. I want to start with a well-known quote by Wendell Phillips: "Eternal vigilance is the price of liberty." Mohandas Gandhi said: "Civil disobedience is the assertion of a right which law should give but which it denies." I also want to quote from Eugene Debs, a very famous labour leader in the United States in the late 1800s. He said:

The strike is the weapon of the oppressed, of men capable of appreciating justice and having the courage to resist wrong and contend for principle. The nation had for its cornerstone a strike, and while arrogant injustice throws down the gauntlet and challenges the right to conflict, strikes will come, come by virtue of irrevocable laws, destined to have a wider sweep and greater power as men advance in intelligence and independence.

Mr. Speaker, one of my very favourite quotes is from the Reverend Martin Niemoller, who was imprisoned in Germany during the Second World War. Before I finish with that quote, I was looking also on the web about the history of Martin Niemoller. When he was arrested, he was brought into jail – and he was a pastor, a Lutheran pastor – and there was another pastor, the prison chaplain, who met him there. He knew that this person was a stooge for the Nazis. This person asked him: Reverend Niemoller, what are you doing in prison? And what he said in response was: what are you doing out of prison?

Mr. Speaker, the famous quote.

First they came for the Communists, but I was not a Communist so I did not speak out. Then they came for the Socialists and the Trade Unionists, but I was neither, so I did not speak out. Then they came for the Jews, but I was not a Jew so I did not speak out. And when they came for me, there was no one left to speak out for me.

Mr. Speaker, we stand with the teachers. We stand with the children of this province against the arbitrary enforcement of unjust laws in this province by this government that's been in power too long.

Thank you.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Hon. members, Standing Order 29: five minutes for questions and comments.

We'll resume debate. The hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont.

MR. HERARD: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's indeed a pleasure to stand and speak to Bill 12 in third reading. I think that it's probably good to start with a small recap of why we're here at all with respect to this bill. We have to remember that not so very long ago we had well over 300,000 children that were not receiving their education and 21,000-plus teachers who were not teaching. From that point, of course, there was an attempt to declare an emergency, which was not successful. Then an agreement was discussed with respect to the meeting that took place between the ATA's Mr. Booi and the Premier as well as the Minister of Learning and the Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

I think it's important to probably go back and look at some of the things that were said at that time, because I believe that the comments of Mr. Booi are instructional.

We never thought that this year's contract would resolve the really difficult situations that have driven 21,000 teachers to strike. We know it's going to take a good hard look at the problems, and if we have a good close look at the problems we'll probably start to see some of the solutions down the road.

Mr. Speaker, that's exactly what the preamble in this bill essentially does. It provides hope to in fact identify and solve some of these long-standing difficulties. That quote was, by the way, from the Edmonton Journal on March 5.

The other side of this issue, and there always is another side, is that we have a union and we have an employer. In this case we have an association called the ASBA, that represents all of the employers. The ASBA specifically requested that classroom conditions not be included in the binding arbitration. Now, why do we suppose the ASBA didn't want those conditions to be in the terms of reference for binding arbitration? Well, because they know that this is not really about class size. It's really about the ability to manage and the control that a contract can have with respect to their ability to manage and do the best for the children, which they're elected to do.

The school boards are elected to manage; the ATA is not. School boards are responsible to their electorate; the ATA is not. I think that when you look at section 23 of this bill, you see that the exclusions from all of this are number of students, pupil/teacher ratios, and maximum time in a classroom. Those are exactly the conditions that, in my opinion, have led the board that I certainly understand and am closest to with respect to having done a fair bit of work with them over the last eight or nine years – and that's Calgary public. Calgary public is the only board that has a structural deficit. I say "structural" because I don't believe that with those kinds of contract laws as are in their contract, they would ever get out from under a deficit.

The result of in fact bringing all of these working conditions into contracts would be to have all of the other boards have structural deficits because they no longer have the prerogative to manage their staff. I'll give you an example. What organization can operate if the union tells them, number one, how many people they must hire; number two, where they can use them; how many they can transfer where they're needed in a given year; and the number of hours of work? If your client is going to be there 25 hours, but you decide that you're going to work 23, how does that work in real life? Well, what it means is that you have to hire one and one-eighth teacher per classroom in order to just cover the time that your client is there. So what does that do to costs?

I don't know how or when the ATA decided that all targeted funding is projects. Now, that's an important thing to realize. I don't know who elected the ATA to make this policy decision that says that all targeted funding is projects, because what that means in reality is that AC funding, English as a Second Language funding, and special-needs funding all become projects that are not to be included in PTR. So what does that do to your costs? Well, in the case of Calgary public, by their own numbers it adds $23 million to $25 million a year to their costs. What could they do to class size if they could use that, if they had the freedom to manage their operation instead of intrusive clauses?

MS CARLSON: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie on a point of order.

Point of Order Relevance

MS CARLSON: Yes, Mr. Speaker, and I quote "Relevance," page 378 of Erskine May. As I read this bill, it is an Education Services Settlement Act. If we take a look at page 5, "Establishment of arbitration tribunal," it specifically excludes any discussions with the exception of the negotiation of wages. I believe this hon. member is not relevant in his discussion.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont on the point of order.

MR. HERARD: Yes. I believe, Mr. Speaker, that it's entirely relevant because it speaks to the underlying reasons why the employer, the ASBA in this case, did not want to have those clauses included. In respect to the hon. member, she's quite right: they are no longer included. But I think it's relevant to know why, because the public debate that's going on out there is in fact misrepresenting the reasons. So I think it's important to have that on the record.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: On the point of order, hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, I hope that the explanation given by the hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont clarifies. As all hon. members know, the chair has been fairly lenient and allowed a wide latitude for members to contribute in this debate. So the chair does not see this as a point of order.

MR. HERARD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll continue.

I think it's extremely unfortunate that we are stuck in a system of collective bargaining that essentially creates confrontation. When you look at the collective bargaining process, is it ever in the public interest to be involved in a collective bargaining process where labour always has the hammer? I want to explain that, because it's extremely important in the context of what is happening here. When you have a private-sector strike, then the people have the ability to buy their products and services from a competitor. But when you have a monopoly public-sector provider, then there is no opportunity to get those services from other providers. Therefore, all that a public-sector union has to do is essentially withdraw their services long enough to cause the electorate to kick in the ace in the hole, which is the voter, and the voter always wins. We've had that happen in this province a number of times. We can look at some of the recent strikes in health care if we want examples.

So is it ever in the public interest for a government to be in a position where that is the kind of structure that they operate under?

In my view, that's one of the issues that really has to be examined for the future. We have 40 some odd years of experience south of the border with these kinds of issues. I think it's pretty clear that the literature would say that it doesn't work, and I think that we have a very good example here as well. When you get to that stage, facts don't matter anymore, because the wild card is the voter, and when the voter says, "Fix it," the voter wins.

Mr. Speaker, as a result of Bill 12, there is going to be a substantial process held, whether it be a summit or some other process, on issues like classroom conditions, that are very complex and deserving of a full review, where expertise from all sides can provide good counsel and arrive at some good solutions. I think that that's certainly preferable to simply accepting the opinion of a vested interest, the opinion of a union who has obvious vested interests. We have to look at this in a broader context. We simply can't accept one view of where the expertise lies with respect to class sizes and some of these other issues. I don't know why it is that the ATA thinks that they are the final word or the expertise with respect to all of these issues. They are a strong vested interest. They are an interest group, and I think they need to be recognized as such.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the most gut-wrenching part of all of this is the notion that somehow the people who were elected to this Chamber do not in fact respect teachers and their profession. I had the opportunity last summer of speaking to the ATA assembly in Banff – I think it was in July or August – where I dealt with this issue. I began by telling these people that in nine years of being in this Chamber, I can honestly say that I have never, ever heard a colleague bad-mouth a teacher or the profession. I can't say the same thing for the organization that represents them. One of the challenges that I gave with respect to why it is that teachers feel undervalued and not respected is that I asked the ATA to look at a scenario where essentially you reap what you sow in this life. I challenged them to look at everything that they publish in a 12-month period and show how much of that deals with the professional side of the organization and how much of that lifts the esteem of the public with respect to teachers instead of always dealing with the union side of the equation. [some applause] It was interesting enough, because the same thing happened there. That's probably the only place that they applauded in my speech.

I believe that you must celebrate – celebrate – the successes that our teachers are having in this province. You look at some of the things that are being done in this province with respect to the good things. You know, any kind of a summit has to look at what's good with the system too, not just what's bad, and there are so many good things to celebrate. I had the honour of attending the AISI conference, which showcased a hundred of the best AISI projects: phenomenal stories of wonderful things going on in education throughout the province. We never hear about that. We need to celebrate that. Why isn't the teachers' union doing that?

So, Mr. Speaker, in talking with respect to how the profession is in fact seen by others in this province, I think it's very instructive to look at what happens when a member of the College of Physicians and Surgeons speaks or publishes anything. It is always invariably going to be something that will enhance the view of a physician in our eyes. I can't say the same thing – and I don't want to pick on them, but when the AMA speaks, it's always, you know, underfunding and queues and all sorts of operational things. Well, I think that's probably a good reason . . . [Mr. Herard's speaking time expired]

Thank you very much.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: As per Standing Order 29 we have five minutes for questions and comments. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm interested that the hon. member asked the question: why do you never hear any good things about the education system from the Alberta Teachers' Association? I just happen to have their web site on the computer. It encourages high schools to feature a public education theme at graduations, asks school-based administrators to spread the message about public education at school councils in their communities. They want the teachers to join the Chamber of Commerce. Why doesn't the member actually look at what they're saying?

MR. HERARD: Well, thank you. Thank you so much for pointing that out. I guess it might have done some good. Back in July I don't know that you could have found those things, but certainly I appreciate any good word that the ATA does publish with respect to the profession, because to have an association that counsels kids not to go into education as a career I think is absolutely damning.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar with a question.

MR. MacDONALD: Yes, please, Mr. Speaker. To the hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont. In the speech that I just heard, there was an indication from the hon. member that we are stuck in a system that creates confrontation, and that is our labour relations system as we know it in this province today. Could the hon. member please tell me which province in Canada has the lowest number of days lost to job action of any in the country?

MR. HERARD: I'm going to take a guess. Because in Alberta everything seems to be a little bit better than anywhere else, I would suspect that Alberta is probably the place. Yes, I do believe that we are stuck in a system that breeds adversarial relations, where you have to be 100 percent on the side of the saints or you're 100 percent on the side of the devils. That's exactly what's going on with respect to this debate in terms of education.

MR. MASON: Mr. Speaker, just a comment to add to the list of things that the ATA is doing. They're inviting teachers to host a special dinner for MLAs, a free family swim, to set up a booth to promote public education, a forum on the theme of how we can improve public education in Alberta, special activities in support of public education to take place on World Teachers' Day, the Caught You Caring program in schools such that teachers can nominate other teachers who have gone the extra mile.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont to respond.

MR. HERARD: Thank you very much. Web sites are wonderful things. The fact of the matter is that I'm sure if you were to go to the Alberta Learning web site, you'd find all sorts of wonderful things as well. But you know what? It's the actions and it's what gets published in all of the daily and weekly newspapers that affect how people feel about their careers with respect to education, and it's not the niceties of the web site.

DR. PANNU: I wonder if the hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont would retract the statements he made about the ATA now that he knows what the ATA says about public education on its web site.

MR. HERARD: I'm just really pleased that it's starting to make a difference.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The debate resumes. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre had sent me a note.

MS BLAKEMAN: Okay. Yes. I was expecting to be in line after the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, but I'm happy to go now if my colleague will allow that.

MR. MacDONALD: Sure.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you. I'm pleased to have the opportunity to rise in third reading on Bill 12, the Education Services Settlement Act, and speak on the effect of this bill. In third reading we are speaking to the anticipated effect of the bill. There are a couple of areas I'd like to cover. One is around the effect on students or the concern for students, the effect on the stability, the effect on the education commission and the expected outcome of that. Then at the end I'd like to talk a little bit about the anticipated effect on democracy.

I think one of the things that's been clear, certainly from the correspondence that I've been receiving and that I've been reading from people across the province, and this isn't restricted merely to teachers, is that they feel there is a poisoned atmosphere – a strained atmosphere is another word I've heard – that's been put in place in this province as a result of the government's choices around how Bill 12 was brought in, the accompanying parliamentary processes that have been evoked in order to put this legislation through very quickly, that that has led to a very poisoned atmosphere not only for teachers and for education but also for others in the province. I think part of this is intended to put a chill on any other unions or members of unions who were considering bringing forward any kind of protest or action or saying to the government in any way: you know, we think there need to be improvements in this system, and we're willing to stand up and ask for those improvements. I think what we've seen with the heavy-handedness here is that it is intended to put a chill on any kind of democratic discussion from members of the public or from members of other unions.

I've been interested in the number of times both on and off the record that members of the Conservatives have talked about how this is really for the students. It seems to be that the only time I hear students talked about is as a sort of defence when they find themselves being accused of being dictatorial or heavy-handed around this: well, it's for the students. When I'm looking forward and casting forward to the effect that I think can be anticipated from the passing of Bill 12, I think this government has put in place something that is not going to be a lot of fun for students. Certainly we've got a very strict reckoning of what's expected from teachers. We have even a definition that they are to perform exactly certain responsibilities, although it doesn't list the responsibilities. I think that in the long run what we're going to get is a withdrawal of the free and voluntary services that were available for students, and that didn't have to happen. Certainly the teachers are well within their rights to do that, and I think they've been forced into a position of doing it by the government.

Now, the Member for Calgary-Egmont had spoken about the adversarial nature of this process, but truly I think people become entrenched in their corners, partly by the behaviour of the other party, and given what this government has done to teachers, I don't blame them at all for saying: "That's it. I'm not going to be spending any more of my time evenings and weekends doing this."

So I think the effect on students can be fewer opportunities after school, in the evenings, and on the weekends for athletics, sports teams, gymnastic teams, track and field, that sort of thing, and also in the arts for drama or the drama club or plays or choral concerts, things like working on the school newspaper or the school yearbook. I think all of the services for those could be withdrawn if they are in fact voluntary services from the teachers. Now, that all has an effect on the students. So the great concern that's expressed about students here: I don't know that it's been totally thought through what that effect will be.

I think if we really wanted to see a concern for students, then some time ago when we started to have people coming forward from the community with concerns about what was happening in our schools, what was happening to our students, we would have seen a more positive reaction from the government instead of this immediate entrenchment, backed into their corner, fighting away. I remember bringing forward tens of thousands of names on petitions from parents all over the province asking for the government to adequately fund new technology, expenses from curriculum changes, aging buildings, and textbooks, I think. I said it so many times in the prayer for the petition that you'd think it would just come out automatically. In fact, that was some two years ago that those concerns started to be brought forward into this Chamber. Did we see a positive reaction to that? No, we didn't, yet these were parents that had put together this petition and had taken it around the province. So if we were really concerned about students, I would think that we would have looked more at what could be done around infrastructure and maintenance.

Where are we with technology? I saw one teacher that was talking about how many computers they actually did have in their school for the children, and there was no way that the kids were going to be able to accomplish the mandate and curriculum in computer technology with the number of computers that they actually had in the school. I think they were given a budget of $42 per student a year to come up with computer technology, and it was just impossible for them to provide the number of computers they would need.

One of the issues that I have raised consistently in the House that I'm not seeing addressed, if we're going to talk about concern for students here, is the Supernet project. Again, that runs the Supernet to the outside of the building, so if schools in other areas in rural Alberta or in small centres are going to receive the Supernet, it's going to run to the outside of their building, and the school is still going to have to come up with the money to run the wiring through the walls and up and down the hallways and into the classrooms and hook them up to the computers that can in fact take the technology that's being brought in through the Supernet. So that's a whole new series of computers there, plus the software that is needed to interpret that and to run with it. That's a whole series of funding that has not been addressed. The government is very quick to talk about how wonderful the Supernet is, but frankly it's not wonderful at all if it stops at the outside wall and never makes it into the school and there are not enough resources to actually implement it and make it happen. If we're going to talk about concern for students, I think that would be part of what we'd be looking for. So I've talked about infrastructure, and I've talked about technology.

Curriculum change costs. We at one time had some discussion in this Assembly about the costs of curriculum changes, and every time there was a curriculum change, teachers had to be sent out to an in-service. The school had to pay for a supply teacher to come in to replace the teacher who was out for an in-service on how to teach this new curriculum. Then there were all the changes in the resource material, the textbooks and software for computers and audiovisual aids, that were needed to teach a particular new subject. Those are also I think a priority and a cost, and that's a part of what we need to serve our students, but I don't see that being talked about right now.

We've also heard quite a bit from parents about fund-raising and about textbooks. I know I had a letter from one teacher, that I tabled in this House, who was working with textbooks from 1962, I think.

AN HON. MEMBER: The year of the Cuban missile crisis.

MS BLAKEMAN: The year of the Cuban missile crisis.

That's all she had, and she couldn't get better resources than that. When we talk about the effect on students, I think there's a lot of other things that we could be putting a priority on here besides trying to hammer their teachers.

Now, I noticed that the minister this afternoon, when he was introducing this bill for third reading, said that he thinks Bill 12 represents a failure in the collective bargaining process. Well, I think this is what happens when the government tries to union-bash and when, in fact, they make a concerted effort to pervert the collective bargaining process. If there's a failure in the collective bargaining process, it lies firmly and right in front of the feet of the government, who were quite determined to make this process fail.

More interesting than that, I noticed the minister talking about stability, that he thought Bill 12 was going to create stability, which I find an amazing statement. I think that what we've had from the government action and certainly the public attitude and expressions made public by members of the government to the teachers and schools about education generally has created instability. Lots of others have talked about teachers withdrawing voluntary services; that certainly creates instability. So I think one of the effects of Bill 12 will be instability.

One of the other things that's been mentioned a number of times is that we won't be talking about anything else in Bill 12 except for legislating the arbitration process and getting the teachers back to work and that everything else will be discussed by this education commission. I think this is an attempt to sideline and downplay all of the other issues, some of which I have discussed earlier. I think it's not too hard for me to drag out my crystal ball and give it a dust off and put on my scarf and all of my bracelets and gaze into that crystal ball. What I should be seeing is that this would be something good. It's something that many different parties have called for. It's something the Liberals have been calling for for some time, something that the Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods has called for. It should be an opportunity to bring all those sectors together and to address a number of changes and a number of circumstances that have given rise to a need to bring changes into the education system.

When I look back at the government's ability to pervert a consultative process, I don't have to look very far. I can look at stacking participants like was done in the health roundtables in the early '90s, where people who had particular expertise in the field were specifically excluded from participating. I can look at the priority order that was given to public members who were brought into the growth summit. That order was reversed entirely. We had very near the top of the list, in the top five I think, people desiring a reinvestment in education and in health. Cutting taxes was about 62 out of 100, I think, on their priority list. And what did we get first? We had the tax cuts. Did we get the reinvestment in education and health care? I think some people would argue that they're still waiting for that.

I think the other thing that we can say will be an effect of Bill 12 has been a real shake-up of democracy in Alberta. The government's need to put through a bill like this in such an extraordinarily short period of time – when they have 73 votes in this Chamber, they're going to be able to vote this through. Why do they need to bring in a variety of new parliamentary processes that they want to put in place so they can hang over our heads like a scimitar, a guillotine of time on seven Liberals and two NDs? We must be truly mighty in the opposition to frighten the government that badly that they have to call all of that parliamentary process into play to protect themselves. I think it will shake democracy. I hope it does. I hope other people take a look at what's happening in this House, take a look at the bully that this government has become.

Thank you for the opportunity.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Under Standing Order 29 the chair will entertain questions and comments for the next five minutes. The hon. Member for Redwater.

MR. BRODA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've been listening to this Member for Edmonton-Centre here this evening. I have a question. I think we have to give our teachers more credit than has been given here this evening. I think my teachers in my constituency work very hard, but I heard the hon. member across using the word "students" five or six times. What is her opinion of students? I think students are very important. So are our teachers. I'd like to know whether she values our students.

MS BLAKEMAN: You know, I have questioned the purpose and the value of this Standing Order 29(2), and it's questions like that that really make me question the point of this. That's a ridiculous rhetorical question. He doesn't intend that that be answered. He's merely using it to try and make some bizarre point.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to ask the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre what she thinks we could do at this point in the debate to salvage the situation.

MS BLAKEMAN: I don't have an immediate answer to that question. I think there's been a lot of damage done. I think there's been a lot of instability created, as I said. I think it would need demonstrated acts of very good faith by this government. I do not think that Bill 12 should go through. I think a starter in this whole process would be to withdraw Bill 12 and start over again in this process.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: There being nobody else wanting to ask a question, we shall resume debate. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is with disappointment that I rise this evening. My disappointment is centred around this bill because Bill 12 is really an example of a government that is out of control. As I said last night, it is a government that just a year ago, a year and a day ago now, received this massive majority, and one cannot argue with democracy. The citizens spoke, but if this government were a runaway freight train, democracy was the brakeperson, and they jumped off.

Now we have this piece of legislation which in effect has not only taken away the democratic rights of teachers that were identified in the reasons for judgment of the Hon. Chief Justice Allan Wachowich in the Court of Queen's Bench for the 20 school districts, but there are many, many more school districts. There are over 20; 25 to be precise, Mr. Speaker. We need to think about this and think about the repercussions of what exactly this bill means with its decision to take away teachers' right to strike, take away teachers' right to strike in all those school divisions in the schedule at the back of the bill.

Mr. Speaker, the bill is really setting the stage to have unsettled labour relations in this province probably for the rest of this legislative term. Whenever you order any group of citizens around, whether it's 30 or 300 or 32,000, in a manner such as this and you use closure to run this bill through the Assembly, you are setting the stage, unfortunately, for very, very turbulent relations. The ATA and the provincial government and the respective school boards have had a very, very good relationship. Contrary to what some hon. members seem to suggest, we are stuck in a system that creates confrontation. Well, certainly we are in a system that creates confrontation whenever we do things such as put a 4 percent increase as a line item in the budget for fiscal year 2001-2002 and an additional 2 percent in 2002-2003. That is confrontational. That's getting directly involved in labour negotiations. It's fine and dandy in one sentence to say, "Well, we're going to stay out of labour negotiations," but you have to mean it. When this government got involved, things went downhill, and they went downhill very, very quickly.

Now, we know what happened: the court action. It's been called certainly a bad move. It was certainly a bad move by the government. Their claims were quickly and decisively dismissed by Chief Justice Wachowich, and now we see the other side of the coin: well, we're going to get even with these teachers, and we're going to have a bill, Bill 12 here. That is beyond belief. I said last night that it was beyond punitive; it was vindictive. And we were assured in this House, Mr. Speaker, that there would be no punitive actions against the teachers. I believe the hon. Premier and the hon. Minister of Learning both assured the House, not only this member but other members as well, that there would be no punitive action. We look at the section dealing with offences and penalties, part 4, and certainly those measures are punitive.

Now, Mr. Speaker, when this happens, certainly parents are going to be worried, and pupils perhaps are not going to receive over the next couple of years a good, sound public education system because of the confrontation that has been set up by this government. Teachers want respect. First and foremost they want respect, and they're not getting it.

When we think of just how important this is and what happened, we have to look at the public education system and the number of collective agreements. Now, in the education sector, Mr. Speaker, only 5 percent of collective agreements were to expire between October 1 of last year and the end of March this year. This is the problem that the government ran into. This massive majority seems to have gone to their head.

MR. MASON: Say it's not so.

MR. MacDONALD: I'm afraid it is so. This massive majority has been reduced by one, but it certainly needs to be reduced very quickly by many others. If they're not satisfied with what has gone on in Bill 12, they can join the Liberal Party. They can certainly join the Liberal Party if they're not satisfied with the direction of this government. I see the hon. minister frowning, but it's true. They're welcome.

Now, Mr. Speaker, 54 percent of agreements covering almost 35,000 employees that expired before October 1, 2001, are in this schedule at the back of Bill 12. The majority of these employees are teachers. Now, there's certainly support staff that eventually will be affected by all this, because they can no longer trust the entire system of collective bargaining in this province. Not only are we jeopardizing our relationship with teachers, but we are jeopardizing the relationship with a lot of other individuals whose workplace is governed by contract negotiations and, in the end result, a collective agreement.

Now, there's no doubt that Alberta teachers entered this round of bargaining seeking substantial wage increases. The Premier promised that since teachers shared in the pain, they were going to share in the prosperity as well. Teachers worked very hard and under some rather difficult circumstances in the last decade in this province. School conditions certainly were not the best. Not only were a lot of classrooms overcrowded, but the mechanical condition of the schools could certainly use repairs. Without the diligence of the teachers and the fact that many parents were quite willing to work to raise funds for the basics – by “basics” I mean library books and just the basic materials that students need on a daily basis in the classroom, and parents were fund-raising for this. Parents stepped in, but the teachers certainly did their part.

When the round of bargaining began last May, Alberta's economy looked strong. I would remind all hon. members of this Assembly that this fiscal year that is ending in the next couple of weeks is the second largest on record in the amount of revenue that this provincial government is going to collect. Other factors influencing the position taken by the teachers include compensation and increases for ourselves, the MLAs of this Assembly. We certainly last summer received a double-digit wage increase.

SOME HON. MEMBERS: Did you?

MR. MacDONALD: Yes, I did. Physicians, nurses, and even workers in the construction industry: everyone received a double-digit wage increase, everyone.

Now, what about the teachers? How fair is that, after we received our double-digit wage increase, for teachers to be locked into this line item of 4 percent and 2 percent? The reverse of that is the two-by-four, and that's what this bill is. It's a legislative two-by-four. [interjection] An hon. member said that it's a subtle means of wage control. Now, everyone knew that this round of negotiations could be and would be challenging, but there was no need for this, Mr. Speaker, these stop/start negotiations: “Well, maybe this is on the table; maybe it's not on the table. We're going to make a contribution to the pension liability.” This is a contentious issue with the ATA and its members. “Well, I said this; I said that. Well, I'm not negotiating; it's up to the school boards. Well, maybe I am negotiating.” It led to confusion.

The real public emergency, Mr. Speaker, before the government decided to use an order in council and order the teachers back to work, was not with the teachers. Unfortunately, it was the leadership shown by this government.

MS CARLSON: That is the public emergency; no doubt about it.

MR. MacDONALD: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie is stating that there is no doubt that it is a public emergency, and that's the leadership, not only the leadership issue in regards to public education and issues surrounding that, but certainly in health care, in electricity, and many other issues that affect Albertans today.

We have been told that the government does not directly participate in education bargaining, but we see the result when the government does get involved. It's a complete collapse of negotiations. It has led to this imposed arbitration, the Education Services Settlement Act. That's what I call it. Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, you have 60 agreements between Alberta school boards and the Alberta Teachers' Association covering 32,000 teachers, and 51 of these agreements involving approximately 27,000 teachers are involved in this bill. The teachers have had their rights for no good reason stripped away. Now, the three largest school boards – the Calgary public, the Edmonton public, and the Calgary separate – are among those that are in this bill. When we think of what has been excluded here, Mr. Speaker – this is just a bill about wages. We must talk about what is excluded, and that is the number of students in a class, the pupil/teacher ratios, or student/teacher ratios, and the maximum time a teacher may be required to instruct a class.

Unfortunately for the members across, Mr. Speaker, I would like to inform them that there's a great deal of sympathy and support in the general public for teachers and their causes and for their diligence in standing up and protecting public education: reduced class sizes, the issue of underfunding in public education. The support for teachers is strong because of the well-publicized effects public education cuts have had on the working conditions of teachers throughout this province.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Standing Order 29, five minutes for questions and comments. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thanks very much. My question under Standing Order 29(2). I noticed that the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar was cut off in the last point that he was making, and I'm wondering if he could complete that point.

Thank you.

MR. MacDONALD: To the Member for Edmonton-Centre, Mr. Speaker. Not only do teachers enjoy the public's empathy, but they are generally perceived as being more credible than their government. Furthermore, it is a commonly held belief that this legislation, Bill 12, takes away the legal ability to strike, and this is unfair and is unduly compromising the bargaining position of the teachers in this province. This government has demonstrated an unwillingness to negotiate.

Thank you.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. To the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar: what are the consequences of the government taking away the right to strike of Alberta's teachers?

MR. MacDONALD: To the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands. Unfortunately, I regret to tell him that I'm afraid it's going to mean a period of very unstable labour relations in this province. I just cannot understand why the government does not show more respect for the teachers and all members of the teaching profession.

Thank you.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: There being no further questions, we shall resume debate. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you. It's unfortunate that we have third reading of Bill 12, the Education Services Settlement Act, happening so quickly after the introduction of the bill, but I do have to say that I'm beginning to understand, Mr. Speaker, why the government is giving this bill what certainly is the bum's rush through the legislative process. We see a bill that was drafted over a weekend, presented to their caucus on a Thursday, given notice on a Friday, introduced on the following Monday, closure motions brought in to be available to use at their discretion in second reading, in committee, and in third reading, as they felt necessary. At the same time as they brought in a time allocation motion, they also brought in Standing Order 73(1) and (2), which allows them to do three separate readings on a particular day if they chose to.

So here we were, Mr. Speaker, debating the bill, completing debate in second reading, and completing debate in committee. And what did we have for a bill? A photocopy. It wasn't even until tonight, after we have nearly completed third reading of this bill, that we actually received the proper copy of Bill 12. So you talk about the bum's rush. Here we are nearly finished voting on the bill before we get the actual bill in our hands in this Legislature.

So I have to say to you: what do we have? We have one hour of debate in committee before closure is brought in. We get one more hour after that. We don't even get all of the amendments up. People don't have an opportunity to fully develop their concerns. Why did they do this? What is the big rush about this bill? The Government House Leader told me initially that the reason they had to bring in the three readings at one stage, a possibility, is because they needed to move quickly on the bill if the teachers went back out on strike. Well, the teachers in this process, I would put to the government, Mr. Speaker, have acted in good faith. They said they wouldn't go back out on strike, and they haven't done so, so there was no reason.

I see a member in the back row here chirping away about there having been five hours of debate so far on this particular piece of legislation in a day and a half – in a day and a half. When you talk about a substantive bill that makes substantive changes to the way things are done here – and anybody in this particular Legislature who thinks that strike-breaking or contract stripping is not substantive lives on the wrong planet. These are substantive issues, and they need to have not only extensive debate, but they need to have an opportunity to go out to the affected stakeholders, and there is no way in a day and a half that that can happen and that we can get any kind of effective and rational feedback. Why is it important to have that? Well, I'll talk about that a little bit later on.

What I do want to talk about at this particular stage, which is third reading, which is to be a review of the bill in the final form – so that's taking us through the process of what got us to the debate of the bill, what happened in second, what happened in committee and the effects of that – are the kinds of questions that are still out there and haven't been answered in terms of addressing this bill. The good news here tonight is that after talking for a short period of time yesterday in committee about the number of former teachers in this Legislature who had not taken the opportunity to speak to this bill, we have seen quite a few of them jump to their feet this afternoon and this evening to put their 2 cents' worth in. I applaud them for that, even if I haven't agreed with hardly a word they've said in this Legislature. I'm pretty sure that a great many of their teaching colleagues also don't agree with it. I would point out that . . .

MS BLAKEMAN: It was nice to get them on the record.

MS CARLSON: It was nice to get them on the record, but there are still a few of them out there, Mr. Speaker, who haven't stepped up to the plate yet.

MS BLAKEMAN: Who?

MS CARLSON: Edmonton-Meadowlark. That would be one of the ones who hasn't spoken yet.

MS BLAKEMAN: Why wouldn't he want to be on the record?

MS CARLSON: I don't know, and I'm sure that he has some good reasons to be on the record. I know that he still has a great many colleagues that are still friends at this stage. I don't think it's because he wants to take the time or show me up at all. I don't think that's at all what he is saying here. I think that it'll be interesting to see what his comments are on the record, comments that he can share with his friends in the profession.

MR. LUKASZUK: It's better to be silent and have people think that you're stupid than actually stand up and . . .

MS CARLSON: No, he doesn't have to be silent. He gets paid to do a job, and he gets paid to represent his constituents, and he gets paid to do it here on the floor of the Assembly, and we expect him to do that.

Yes, Mr. Speaker, I know that I should be speaking through you, and I apologize for reacting to the tittle-tattle that we hear from this side of the Legislature, but they're very provoking.

AN HON. MEMBER: Tittle-tattle?

MS CARLSON: Well, maybe that's what it is. I can see now that everybody's awake in here. There are any number of members who would like to speak, and you'll have your opportunity to do so here pretty quick. I hear lots of chirping out there now but not too many people rising to their feet in debate.

We've got a few other former teachers who haven't spoken . . .

MR. TANNAS: No.

MS CARLSON: Yes, we do, and wouldn't you know? The Member for Highwood. Hmm. That's very interesting, that he hasn't spoken yet. That may be all. I can't think offhand other than those two that I've mentioned, although we do have actually Edmonton-Castle Downs. [interjection] Yes, he spoke yesterday, and I remember listening to him. I remember that and the Member for St. Albert today. There were a few others that actually came up to scratch and some who weren't teachers, who support the government position. Fort Saskatchewan did speak this afternoon and answered some questions, so that was very nice to see that, although I have to say that of all the people who spoke in here, I disagreed the most with his comments. I'd like to put that on the record.

But there are still a number of outstanding issues that haven't been addressed here, and I would like to go back for a moment, if I may, Mr. Speaker, to an issue that was addressed yesterday in an amendment brought forward from my colleague from Edmonton-Mill Woods that was defeated, that really didn't get proper discussion because of the limited time that we had to debate the issue. I did not at that time have an opportunity to put my comments on the record, and I just wanted to make one quick point on that. He was asking to have deleted the section that begins on page 3 of the bill under interpretation, and that was 1(1)(f)(iii) that says: "a concerted activity by 2 or more employees to refuse to comply with responsibilities assigned by their principal or their employer."

We heard a few examples yesterday of how that could be interpreted. For instance, a principal could direct some teachers to organize a concert and the teachers decide they won't do it. If the teachers who decide that they won't do it constitutes more than one teacher, that could also constitute a strike. We heard from the Government House Leader yesterday to begin with when he first heard the comments about this, prior to the amendment being brought in, that this was an overly aggressive interpretation, and that's a direct quote from what he said, Mr. Speaker.

Then, later on, when the amendment was introduced, he said: No, no, no. That's a misinterpretation. So my question, Mr. Speaker, before we pass this bill this evening is: which is it? Is it a misinterpretation? An overly aggressive interpretation? This is the kind of problem we get into when we see legislation brought into this House in such a hurry. We have seen time and time again that this government hastily crafts legislation, hastily crafting poor legislation as a result and then having to change it later on. So that's certainly an issue.

Some of the questions that haven't been addressed here so far, that are still outstanding, that need to be addressed are some of the things that we've heard in the media and what we've seen in tablings. I still have a whole stack of tablings, Mr. Speaker, that I was expecting to get to yesterday in committee and was unable to because of the closure having been brought in. There are some questions that need to be answered before we have a final vote on this bill, and some of them are just the activities of ministers with regard to this bill.

We have quoted here in recent newspaper articles that there are at least two ministers of this government who are saying that teachers brought this legislation on themselves, and I think that those ministers should stand up, own up to their comments, and explain themselves. We have also seen many people who have a great deal of knowledge in this area say that the whole concept of this legislation destroys the concept of free collective bargaining, so that's something that's interesting.

We saw the Premier say that this government is interested in acting in the interests of the students, yet they have deliberately excluded from this arbitration issues like class size and pupil to teacher ratios and other outstanding issues. We need to know: why did the Premier assure teachers that they would be rewarded for their fiscal sacrifice and helping the government balance their books earlier in this decade? They took the rollback; the Premier promised to give it back to them. We saw other kinds of big settlements happening here, but teachers don't get their money. Why is that?

Why did the Minister of Learning insist that teachers negotiate with school boards and then wade into the discussion with the 3 percent pension offer in the middle of the negotiations, effectively neutering school boards? I think that's a question that needs to be answered. Why has the government shown such a blatant disrespect for teachers? Another good question. How does the government justify clawing back promised dollars to education? The $54 million that was asked about in a question the other day makes a difference to teaching grants and to what they can do in this fiscal year, and they won't do that. Oh, Lesser Slave Lake is a former teacher, Mr. Speaker, and she hasn't spoken yet, and we want to know why that is. Another question: what is the role of trustees in this province now, as the government has made their roles irrelevant?

So I'll stop there, Mr. Speaker. I've got a whole bunch more to say, but I'll stop there on that part because I want to introduce an amendment. So I would ask that the clock stop now while the amendment is being distributed to members.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Hon. member, you may proceed now.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. While we were waiting for the amendment to be distributed, the Member for Edmonton-Calder wanted to know if this amendment was hastily drafted, and I said to him: not nearly as hastily as this poor government legislation was drafted.

What we have before us is an amendment moving that the motion for third reading of Bill 12, Education Services Settlement Act, be amended by striking out all the words after "that" and substituting the following: "Bill 12, Education Services Settlement Act, be not now read a third time but that it be read a third time this day six months hence."

Mr. Speaker, this is commonly known as a hoist amendment, and we feel that it is very important to be brought in at this particular time on this particular piece of legislation for two equally important reasons. The first is that this gives both government and opposition members time to solicit feedback from stakeholder groups around the province – I'll expand on that in a minute – and the second is that it gives teachers time to see if the government is acting in good faith with the education commission in dealing with the outstanding issues of class size, student population ratios, funding for basic supplies, evergreening of electronic equipment, and issues arising out of integration.

There is no doubt that this government has not built very much goodwill in terms of how they have walked through this process, and their education commission is being dismissed as an absolute farce by many groups in this province. Let's see if they're really going to follow through with their review this time and whether, in fact, they're actually going to implement anything. It hasn't been the case in the past. We need feedback from stakeholder groups in the province, Mr. Speaker, on this particular piece of legislation.

We have found time and time again that when this government hastily drafts poor legislation, there's something significantly wrong with it, not the least of which is that clause that we tried to amend out yesterday. We have seen examples – and I'll use Bill 15, I think it was, from two years ago, which was an environmental bill which this government swore up and down was good legislation. We managed to postpone that legislation from the spring session to the fall session, and they actually did their work then. They went out to stakeholder groups in the province. They talked about the legislation, found out that it was faulty, and came back and improved it. That's what we need here.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: This is a hoist amendment. Hon. members may be able to speak to the amendment now. The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

MR. CAO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Before I get into the detailed discussion of Bill 12 and its amendment, I want to talk about education and teachers. I have no doubt that all of my colleagues in the House here, particularly on the government side, have high regard for the teaching profession, the teachers and educators, and we put great social value in education for our children and society in general. In fact, a large number of our colleagues here were teachers. Personally, I myself did teaching at colleges.

Mr. Speaker, let me cast my view worldwide and through the history of mankind a bit. If you ask me about the famous and valuable persons from Greece, the names of Socrates and Plato and Aristotle come first to my mind, long before the powerful king Alexander the Great or the wealthy Midas. If you ask me about the well-known and valued persons in China, the names of Lao-tzu, Mencius, and Confucius come first to my mind, long before any other contemporary of theirs. Why? Because they were teachers, albeit 2,500 years ago, and they still are.

So let me draw closer to my home, to me, within my family circle. Teachers have the highest respect. In fact, my father was an educator. My father-in-law was a principal. Many of my relatives were, are, and will be educators. In the cultural environment I was brought up. . .

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Hon. member, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie on a point of order.

Point of Order Relevance

MS CARLSON: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Relevance. I'm citing Erskine May, page 378. We are on a hoist amendment. Not a word coming out of his mouth so far has had to do with that particular amendment.

MR. STEVENS: Mr. Speaker, I've listened for the last couple of days to the opposition indicate that it's difficult to define relevance, and clearly, in listening to them for the last two days, that is true. What is also said by the opposition, which I fully agree with, is that one must be given an opportunity to develop a foundation in which you can then lead into the relevance of a debate, and I have no doubt that my colleague the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort has every intention of doing that.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, we do have before us an amendment that has been moved by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, and the chair assumes that the arguments that are being put forward will lead to discussions towards this amendment.

MR. CAO: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. In fact, like an hon. colleague of mine just mentioned, I'm laying a foundation for the debate. You can only debate when you have a strong foundation. So bear with me. I would like to carry on.

This is about teachers, the value of teachers, and that leads to the amendment and the reasons for this bill that we are bringing forward. Once again, I want to tell you my personal story. I have counted the number of teachers and professors that I have had in my life. It's spread over three continents and over 25 years. I feel grateful and have fond memories of those years with my teachers. Without them I'm sure I could not have been the person I am today. Like the hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw talking about her children, we have three boys. They have grown up in Calgary. They are the quality products of public education in Calgary. As parents we put the highest value on education, and we have high regards for their teachers. I can say that. I still remember a particular Mr. Hehr, who was a teacher of our children over 20 years ago and who is now working with the Teachers' Association in Calgary.

Now, let me focus on the specific topic of the present moment, Mr. Speaker. May I quote several correspondences that I have just received from my constituents. From one teacher: "My day started at 7:15 am in planning and making contact with students."

MS CARLSON: Point of order.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie on a point of order.

Point of Order Relevance

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Once again on relevance. I have diligently listened to every word the member has spoken for the last two minutes, and while he says that he is laying the foundation for talking about the amendment, let me give him a little hint: all he has to do is say that in speaking to the hoist amendment, he needs to tell his story. If you just say that, you'll be relevant, and we'll be happy.

MR. HANCOCK: Well, Mr. Speaker, notwithstanding that it takes so little to make the hon. member happy, it's obvious that the speaker is dealing directly with the question of why it's necessary to pass the bill now as opposed to not passing it for six months. His reason in his argument has been very clear to me and I think to other members of the House. In his argument the reasons why it's urgent now are very apparent. He's speaking about the e-mails that he's getting from his constituents and the issues that are important to his constituents in education. So it's very relevant. Notwithstanding that, if it'll make her happy, I would urge him to say: I'm speaking to the hoist amendment.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre on the point of order.

MS BLAKEMAN: Yes. I agree, and I will join in urging the member to consider relevance in the presentation that he's making. The closest I can hear is that he's talking about a teacher that his children had 20 years ago. So if we are going to be relevant and we're going to be talking about why this bill should be hoisted for six months, I encourage him to direct his attention to the hoist amendment.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands on the point of order.

MR. MASON: Mr. Speaker, on the point of order. I know that the hon. member is certainly talking about education as he understands it, and certainly I'm enjoying it. Certainly it's helping us to pass the time. That, to me, is an important thing in the present state of affairs, at least as far as the opposition is concerned. I'm a little perplexed about the points of order, because I think we should allow the member to continue to speak for his full 15 minutes, and I have many questions for him.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort on the point of order.

MR. CAO: Well, I was getting to the specific point. On the point of the amendment, I need to build some examples as a foundation.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The chair has listened intently to everyone's comments and feedback, and I would like to give the benefit of doubt to the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort that his intent is to discuss the amendment that's before us.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

MR. CAO: Thank you. I want to make it clear right now that what I'm doing here is talking about the amendment and building up the foundation for the conclusion.

As I said, I received correspondence recently, in fact yesterday, from a number of my constituents. From one teacher:

My day started at 7:15 am in planning and making contact with students. I taught classes from 8:50 to 11:45, then supervised the school's fitness centre through my lunch hour. I continued to teach with no break for the remainder of the school day. I spent 45 minutes working one to one with a few students, then went home for an hour. I returned to work at the Jack Singer Concert Hall to supervise the backstage area for a concert involving at least 350 students from our school and feeder Junior High schools. I left the hall at approximately 10:30 pm.

So that's from one teacher.

From another one:

I don't feel cared about or important anymore. I spend my whole day with children and nobody with the power to help cares to listen to my opinions about what those kids need. Think of it this way: one day one of my students might be your boss. She or he might be Prime Minister . . . do you want that person to be educated?

From another teacher:

I am a teacher with the Calgary Public Board. During my 20 year career as a teacher my focus has been to meet the diverse learning needs of children in my care. When resources were not available, like my other colleagues I found resources and paid for them with my own money. I have spent countless hours with fund raising activities such as helping with Casinos.

May I quote from another teacher?

I spend many hours supervising extra curricular activities such as intramural sports, drama productions, writing workshops and leadership clubs to name a few. I believe that as a teacher these extra hours are important learning opportunities for children as these activities provide lifelong skills.

My last quote is from a parent.

We would appreciate it if you guys in the government would get involved with this situation. Forget about the ego from both sides and settle this as quickly as possible. Our kids' education is in trouble. Thank you very much. I don't know how much more I can express my concern. But please, for the kids' sake, do something. Please . . . please . . . please.

For these reasons I support the two-pronged approach that was agreed to by the stakeholders; namely, the ATA, teachers' unions, and the Alberta School Boards Association. This two-pronged approach includes, one, a quick and onetime legislated binding arbitration to resolve the current contract salary impasse, and two, a comprehensive review of our education system in total and for a longer term to address the valid concerns that the teachers have voiced to me.

Now, my support for this two-pronged approach is also based on a publication from the ATA web page. Let me quote from the ATA web page.

March 1: Chief Justice Allan Wachowich overturns the back-to-work orders, ruling that the government failed to demonstrate that the strike was causing a public emergency in each of the 22 jurisdictions. The association asks teachers to remain in their classrooms. Premier Ralph Klein agrees to meet with ATA President Larry Booi.

AN HON. MEMBER: Who said that again?

MR. CAO: The ATA president.

March 4: ATA President Larry Booi meets with Premier Ralph Klein and subsequently with Minister of Learning Dr. Lyle Oberg and Minister of Human Resources and Employment Clint Dunford. The Premier agrees to bring to caucus and cabinet for discussion two potential approaches to resolving the disputes; (1) initiating an arbitration process and (2) establishing a commission to investigate teaching and learning conditions.

Yes, Mr. Speaker, Bill 12 is to help implement this new onetime process of legislated binding arbitration that was agreed to for this labour contract term. I'm told that for those unsettled and on-strike situations, the teachers' union locals and the local school boards can reopen their own normal negotiations anytime.

I am so pleased to agree with Mr. Larry Booi's quote in the Edmonton Journal on March 5 after his meeting with Premier Klein.

We never thought that this year's contract would resolve the really difficult situations that have driven 21,000 teachers to strike. We know it's going to take a good hard look at the problems, and if we have a good close look at the problems we'll probably start to see some of the solutions down the road.

Mr. Speaker, last February I attended the teachers' convention in Calgary. I spoke with a number of teachers about their excellent initiative and innovation. I shared their visions and some frustrations. I saw a range of products and services developed for teaching and learning. Certainly teachers and learners of today are far different from those in the days of Plato or Confucius. Certainly it is different from the days when I was in school or even when our children were in school. Societal changes along with the fast technical changes do require us to have a good close look at the problems, to make changes to our attitudes, and to update the ways of doing things. We urgently need to have a new vision of education that caters to the needs of the learners, the teachers, and the parents. So let's help the two parties settle the salary dispute quickly so that we can move on to the new and exciting phase of working together in the new review of the education system.

Mr. Speaker, for that matter, I conclude that we should not accept this amendment. Also, I just want to leave you with this. Confucius said 2,500 years ago: to make society prosperous, educate the people. May I conclude by saying: to make Alberta prosperous, let us focus together on Albertans' education.

Thank you.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Under Standing Order 29, five minutes for questions and comments.

MR. MASON: Well, Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the hon. member and, first of all, congratulate him on building a 50-storey foundation and a one-storey argument. He indicated that the teachers had agreed to this. I'm looking at the teachers' web site, and they certainly don't seem to agree. I'm wondering where he gets the information that they've agreed.

MR. CAO: Well, I can provide to the hon. member the web page address exactly, but those messages I quoted exactly from the text on the web page.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, did you have a question? Okay.

There being no further questions, we'll resume debate. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to rise in favour of the hoist amendment proposed by the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, and I would urge all other members of the Assembly to vote in favour of this hoist amendment. Now, this hoist amendment is about time and two sides of that. We're asking for the hoist to gain time to allow a resolution to all of the issues that have been thrown up by this disruption and, as the Member for Calgary-Egmont put it, the adversarial nature of what has gone on in the last few months. Secondly, we're asking for the hoist because of time, and that is the short time lines that have been forced into place, that have been shoehorned in by this government. It doesn't allow for a review by stakeholders, a review by constituents and Albertans of what is being proposed in this legislation. So the hoist is definitely about time, because we have not had enough time and because we need time for everyone to have a look at this.

When I look at why we haven't had enough time, well, on March 2 there was a court judgment that said that the previous proposal, restriction put in place by the government was not acceptable. Then there was a great deal of speculation but no real understanding of how the government would proceed midweek. We had oral notice given in the House on Thursday the 7th that there would be legislation forthcoming – again no indication of what the legislation would be. It was obviously drafted over the weekend. We had a first reading notice on Monday, and at the same time we had a notice of five government motions.

“Pursuant to Standing Order 73(2) Bill 12, Education Services Settlement Act, may be advanced two or more stages in one day.” Now, the purpose of that is to give the government the power to ram a bill through in one day, essentially, because generally we would not be able to have more than one stage of the bill in a given day.

In fact, when we look at the rules that are set out for the nongovernment bills, it's quite clear that they allow for up to eight days between the second reading and Committee of the Whole for a bill and a further four days between the end of Committee of the Whole and the bill being called forward for third reading. So there's a total of 12 days there in between when those stages of the bill have been complete, and I think that is in there exactly so there can be contemplation by stakeholders and members of the public outside of this Chamber and even additional contemplation by members of the Chamber itself. So there's a reason why that time factor is built into that. When we look at what the government generally does with bills, they're more or less following that same time line that's set out for the private members' bills. They don't have to stick to it, obviously, because it's government bills, but generally that's what they're following. So to have the government bring forward a motion that's going to basically try and force through the bill in one day I think gives rise to the need for a hoist amendment in itself.

At the same time we also had four other motions where oral notice was given for them. Essentially they were bringing in that time guillotine motion that's new to Standing Orders. Government Motion 14 was that once “an adjourned debate on Government Motion 13 is resumed, not more than one hour shall be allotted to any further consideration.” That was the guillotine on the motion previous to it. Motion 14 was putting a guillotine of one hour on any debate on Government Motion 13. Government Motion 13 was to have the stages of the bill all read in one day. So even in that, the government was not allowing any discussion of the draconian measures that it was taking to put this bill through. Then we have three more motions that are putting that time guillotine forward on each stage of the bill, so in second reading, Committee of the Whole, and third reading.

Now, as we know, yesterday these time guillotine motions were only used once, in Committee of the Whole, but certainly the government had inoculated itself to be able to use it by bringing forward the oral notice of these. Again that's an issue of time, the short amount of time that was allowed for consideration and all of the processes that were put in place by this government to make sure that they could control this legislation and make it go through in a very short period of time. I think a big part of this is to make sure that there's no feedback from the public on this, that the general public doesn't have time to find out what's going on and to start turning up at the front of the Legislature as they did with something like Bill 11 once they had caught on to what was going on there and they wanted to express their displeasure.

Another part of that is people's ability to send e-mails, phone calls, and letters in to their Members of the Legislative Assembly and get a response back from them. Now, the Member for Calgary-Fort did read out some of the e-mails or letters that he has received, and I think that time is necessary for others to read and comprehend what the public is telling them and what the teachers and what the parents are telling them about the need for some rational thought on this and a little less of the hysteria that we've seen from the government, which sort of flails away putting stops in place at any possible opportunity for anyone else to express an opinion or to try and argue with what the government is doing.

I think another reason for the hoist motion giving us an additional six months on this issue would be to get this proposed education commission up and running . . .

MR. MacDONALD: The Massey commission.

MS BLAKEMAN: The Massey commission, yes.

. . . and perhaps even, in the best-case scenario, be able to report back so we would have the information on what's been proposed or debated and contemplated by that commission in front of the Assembly when we are considering whether or not it would be appropriate to pass Bill 12. I think that a lot has been put onto that education commission through this bill and through what the minister and the Premier have been saying in context around Bill 12. There's a lot of weight being placed on this Massey commission, this education commission, and it is not being given an opportunity to be included in the discussion with what's in front of us. As a matter of fact, it's specifically excluded, and I think that's a mistake. I don't think you can look at these two things in seclusion.

So the time that is being brought forward to us through this hoist amendment is important to allow that commission to function and perhaps even report back. It can be looking at things like the issues around infrastructure. We've had schools that have closed across Alberta. Kids are now being bused to other schools because their schools have been closed, part of it due to infrastructure problems, part of it due to – what was that awful thing called? That ratio about use of space?

MR. MacDONALD: The utilization formula.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you. The utilization formula. That's very good.

I think that's part of what should be discussed by that education commission, because I think the government was finally starting to understand that that was not a useful measurement of how we were using schools and space in schools. So I think that should be added into what that education commission could look at.

On a lighter note I've noticed that a number of members in the Assembly took an opportunity during their debates on Bill 12 to reach back into their memories and reminisce about their early childhood teachers, and certainly I'm sure we would have more members up and reminiscing about the value that the teachers have had in their lives, given enough time to remember that. Indeed, we had the same thing brought forward by the Member for Calgary-Fort as he reminisced about his children's teachers.

I think we need the time that's given to us through the hoist amendment to look at the issue of funding for school boards. A big reason that we're in the mess we're in here is that the provincial government saw in its wisdom – well, it's not wisdom; it must be the opposite of wisdom – to take away the ability of school boards to requisition funds. That was done in '94-95, I think. So we have a situation here where we're supposed to have the teachers' union negotiating with the school boards for wage settlements and for improvements in working conditions, but in fact the school boards don't have the ability to say whether or not they've got the funds to pay that. That purse is held by the government, and the government had already said that it was going to do 4 and 2, 4 percent this year and 2 percent next year, which isn't a position of negotiation. I think we need that six months to seriously go back and see whether there is room to put some requisitioning ability back into the hands of the school boards. I don't think it has to be a hundred percent. Certainly what some trustees that have talked to me have talked about was that even 3 percent would give them enough room to be able to react to local circumstances there, and I think that's a big part of what we're struggling with around this whole issue of settlements and negotiations and a collective bargaining process today.

You know, no matter how many times the government said that they weren't involved in this debate, that it was between the school boards and the teachers, it couldn't be between the school boards and the teachers because the school board didn't have the authority to come up with the funds to actually bargain into this process. So we certainly need the hoist amendment to be able to give us the time to resolve that.

I appreciate the effort that was put into bringing forward a hoist amendment by the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie. The teachers have given us the room to be able to work with this. They made it very clear that they were not going to go back out of the classrooms again. They certainly could've, but they didn't. They said: no; we'll stay in the classrooms; we'll keep going with what we're doing; we need time for cool heads to prevail and for us to give a reasonable amount of thought and consideration to this. So we have the time for them to be able to coolly consider this, and the government insisting on trying to put it through is punitive. An ugly situation has been created here in Alberta, and it's been created by this government's determination that they are going to be right and they are going to force their opinion on everyone whether they like it or not. I don't think that's good governance. So we need this hoist amendment, and we need this time to think carefully and coolly about how we can resolve the situation and fix the damage that's been done here on all parts.

I appreciate the opportunity to speak in favour of the hoist amendment, and I urge all other members to support it. Thank you very much.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Standing Order 29, questions and comments. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: I wonder, Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member could elaborate on the whole question of the space allocation formula and why that is so significant to this debate?

MS BLAKEMAN: This was a significant issue that seems to have taken a step into the background, but it was because of the way the school board was requiring that space be determined in the schools. It was basically taking every square inch of the school square footage and then dividing it by the number of pupils, but it wasn't done in a reasonable way. As a result of this utilization formula, a number of schools had to be closed, and that, I think, should be corrected.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar with a question.

MR. MacDONALD: No, Mr. Speaker, but I would like to continue debate.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands has a question.

MR. MASON: Just a comment. I appreciate the hon. member raising that question, because it is a serious problem. Schools are not allowed to include things like computer rooms, staff space, libraries, and so on in the allocation. The result has been that many schools in older communities are considered to be underutilized and are under pressure of being closed. It's just clearly another example of how the government just doesn't have it right.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Anybody else rising with a question or comment? The hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

MR. HORNER: Mostly a comment, Mr. Speaker. I think that a lot of the comments which the hon. member has alluded to certainly talk about taking a lot more time to come to some sort of settlement, and that's not what we've been asked to do. We've been asked to take some action. We've been asked to get involved in a review of education. The longer we delay this, the longer we delay the review of education.

I see that as a positive move, that we should all work together and pass this bill tonight.

MS BLAKEMAN: I don't think that it can be said that the teachers in Alberta feel that they needed the government to move quickly and to put forward a piece of legislation like Bill 12 and shove it down their throats. I don't think that's the kind of time that teachers were talking about at all.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Okay. We'll resume debate now. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

MR. LUKASZUK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The members of the opposition are really eager to hear from teachers, so they will have the opportunity to hear from me a second time. This hoist amendment is proof in the pudding that what the Liberal and ND oppositions are really after is to score some cheap political points on the backs of teachers and students.

MS BLAKEMAN: Point of order.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre on a point of order.

Point of Order Imputing Motives

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you. Standing Order 23(h), (i), and (j), imputing motives. I don't think that the Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs is correct in this Assembly in imputing motives to either the Liberal or ND members about why a hoist has been brought forward, and I would ask the Speaker to rule on that point of order, please.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands on this point of order.

MR. MASON: Yes, please, Mr. Speaker. Standing Order 23(i) is the specific one that I think deserves your attention: "imputes false or unavowed motives to another member." Now, the member has just accused our party in this House of trying to score cheap political points at the expense of the students. I don't know about the motives of the other party, but they can speak for themselves. I can certainly say that from our point of view that is completely false. We are on principle very, very opposed to this bill and are doing everything we can to oppose it, but it is for the reasons that we have stated in this Assembly.

Thank you.

MR. LUKASZUK: Two points, Mr. Speaker. First of all, my comments were clearly not directed at any particular member in this Chamber but rather at a political party. The sections that the members have quoted pertain to members as individuals and not to groups of members.

Second of all, if the members indeed find the statement offensive, I will withdraw my statement and replace it with "making political gains."

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs has withdrawn his remarks. However, I'll caution every hon. member that all elected members are honourable members. We abide by a Standing Order that we have all agreed upon, and I caution everyone to please respect every other hon. member of this Assembly.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs to proceed.

MR. LUKASZUK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. If indeed the well-being of our students and if indeed the work stability and the well-being of our teachers were the primary motives of the arguments posed by the members across, it would stand to reason that they would not introduce a bill hoisting this matter for six months but rather would urge the government to address the matters as fast as possible so that there is some form of resolution to the labour dispute with the teachers and the ATA and so that there is some form of stability among the student body in Alberta. That clearly is not indicative of this. What this hoist amendment would result in is allowing the members across to dispute this matter for six more months, hoping to have more comments recorded in Hansard, without any attainable outcome whatsoever.

Mr. Speaker, in this province we have top-notch teachers. I personally had the pleasure of handing out the excellence in teaching awards on a number of occasions, and many of my colleagues, other teachers, are recipients of this particular prestigious award. Even those who haven't had a chance to be recognized by this award, by this government and the employers, the school boards, are of no lesser standard. I know for certain that the majority of teachers, if not all, find that teaching is their main priority. Indeed, they do deserve fair compensation for the marvelous work that they do, but fair arbitration will arrive at that. After all, the arbitrators – there'll be three of them. They will be appointed by teachers, they will be appointed by the ATA, and the chair will be appointed by government, which is impartial in this process.

Mr. Speaker, teachers do deserve a fair settlement, and by this process they will receive it. However, it is important to resolve this particular matter of the labour dispute so that we can address the real issues, which some of the members have identified. If indeed the members opposite find classroom sizes, student/teacher ratios, to be problematic, why not allow the labour dispute to be settled and then focus on those issues by way of some form of committee, which this government has already undertaken to strike. Then they will have a meaningful forum in which they can contribute their comments and/or criticisms.

Mr. Speaker, these are delay tactics, and they are not aiming at achieving anything but placing more speeches, futile speeches, shall I add, into Hansard. I would urge all members of this Assembly to vote against this amendment. Bring back stability to the teachers' employment, and reassure our students that, indeed, their learning is our and teachers' utmost priority.

Thank you.

MR. MASON: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has suggested that the speeches that are being made in this place are futile. I wonder why he says they are futile and if he believes that his speeches are futile as well.

10:10

MR. LUKASZUK: Mr. Speaker, if my speeches were containing quotes of Popes and past Presidents of the United States, if they were containing allusions to frogs and other fowl, I would indeed consider them to be futile, but that was not the case.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: We will resume debate. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak on the amendment as proposed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie. Just for the record this amendment reads: "Bill 12, Education Services Settlement Act, be not now read a third time but that it be read a third time this day six months hence." I think it is a very suitable amendment because we don't need to be using a massive majority like the one that was received by the current government a year and a day ago to ram legislation such as this through this Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, there is only one way to describe this, and it is this. We have taken away from thousands and thousands of teachers their right to strike until the end of August 2003. We have used measures that, to say the least, are vindictive if they're not punitive. This is not decisive action with this bill. This is divisive. This is a very divisive action, and this is why I would encourage all hon. members to support the amendment as proposed by my colleague from Edmonton-Ellerslie. This is not the answer to the problems with public education and the negotiations that are going on between the school districts, the elected school trustees. In fact, Mr. Speaker, I believe I can safely say that 100 percent of the visitors who are currently in the public gallery are elected school trustees. I can quite safely say that.

We need to set in place a process – there's no doubt about that – where the teachers and the school districts and their government, the provincial government in this case, can settle their differences, where they can settle their differences not only regarding wages but also class sizes and the underfunding in the public education system that has gone on. Mr. Speaker, these items are all related. The arbitration process that is to be set up – and the hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment certainly has had a fair amount of experience in dealing with these processes, and I'm sure that the hon. minister has some concern about this. There have been other processes that have been discussed, but I don't know how this one will work. I'm afraid that if we do not accept this hoist amendment, we are going to sour labour relations in this province for an extended period of time and there are going to be no winners. There will be no winners in this.

Now, we have this restriction. We're going to have this arbitration on the collective agreement for teachers, and it is going to be restricted to salaries and salaries only, no other conditions. I consider that totally unfair. As I said before, we do not include class sizes. Let's, for instance, take the school in the constituency of Edmonton-Gold Bar which I visited during reading week. I visited two classes. This was an elementary school. Both classes had class sizes of over 30. [interjection] There were not, unfortunately, two teachers. No, there were not. Arrangements were made after the first four weeks of the school year to have some additional aide time. That arrangement was appreciated, certainly, by many of the parents, but the parents are not satisfied with that class size. If we do not get a better way than this proposal, we are going to have long-term problems, whether it's the pupils, whether it's the parents, whether it's the teachers, or whether it's the school trustees, or all hon. members of this Assembly. There are still going to be very serious problems with our public education system.

Now, I heard other hon. members of this Assembly talk about this hoist amendment, and they stated that this government and they themselves had high regards for the teaching profession. This bill, in my view, does not demonstrate that. To move this bill with such speed through this Assembly – I'm sorry; I have to question the desire to state that this is best for the public education system in this province. I cannot accept that, Mr. Speaker, this approach of having confrontation and no negotiation with such an esteemed organization as the Alberta Teachers' Association, which has a long, long history in this province. If we're talking about the political history of this province, we should consider the role that the schoolteachers – and they're affectionately just called the schoolteachers – have had in the affairs of this province. Now, I understood yesterday from the Premier that 20 of the government members are associated with or are members of the teaching profession. When you add in the opposition members that have been involved with the teaching profession, well, that means that 25 percent or better of this Assembly, of the composition of the members of this Assembly, are teachers.

Now, perhaps after the teachers of this province see exactly what this bill is doing to their rights, they are going to take a more active interest in provincial issues, just like they did in the '30s and in the '40s, Mr. Speaker, and perhaps that is a good thing that will come from a bad bill.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would urge that all members of this Assembly support this amendment, because the focus of children must be channeled in school by teachers who are not only satisfied to participate in the profession but feel wanted and feel respected.

AN HON. MEMBER: Why don't you give them a hug?

MR. MacDONALD: Mr. Speaker, an hon. member said that perhaps the government should give them a hug. Well, I think if the government were to provide stable, fair, and impartial labour relations, that would be sufficient. If the government was to genuinely be interested in addressing the issues of class size and the chronic underfunding that's been going on – and I know hon. members are going to state that there has been over $300 million recently reinstated in the budgets of classrooms across this province, and that's correct. In fact, I have the precise figure here: program spending would increase by nearly 20 percent, or $854 million, over the next three years. The additional enrollments would be .3 percent. Now, that's a lot of money. It certainly is, but we have to be assured that this money is going where it is needed.

Mr. Speaker, there has to be money available to fix the mistakes of the past. We have to go back, whenever we're looking at this issue, to the reckless cuts that were made to public education. The money that has now been reinvested, I believe the term is, in public education is warranted. After what's happened, it's going to take good planning to stabilize the system, and this bill is not good planning. This bill is, quite frankly, destabilizing the system. By imposing these rigid rules through until the 31st of August 2003, it's going to just make a bad situation worse. That's why I would urge all members of this Assembly to support the hoist amendment as proposed by the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Questions and comments? The hon. Member for Redwater.

MR. BRODA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In 30 seconds I'd like the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar to give me an answer as to: what will change in six months by delaying this bill?

MR. MacDONALD: Mr. Speaker, in response to the hon. Member for Redwater's question, this is not the way to have fair and impartial labour relations, by imposing this bill on over 30,000 teachers in this province and over 40 school districts. This is not the way to do it.

Thank you.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, you have a question?

MR. MASON: I wish to speak, Mr. Speaker, to the amendment.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

MR. DUCHARME: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Unfortunately, I cannot support the hoist amendment.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: This is the questions and comments section.

MR. DUCHARME: I'd like to speak to the amendment.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: There being no questions or comments, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands had risen before, so I'll recognize him.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to rise in favour of the amendment to the bill to postpone consideration of third reading for six months. Why might that be? It is because we believe that this bill is of fundamental importance and will negatively affect the rights of employees in this province and also students. We believe that it has been cooked up in a very short time. We also believe that the government members do not yet realize the full consequences of the bill.

What we want is some more time for reflection on the part of the government and of the government members before the bill is pushed through. Any delay would be satisfactory. Six months is a long time. We'd settle for a few weeks. We'd settle for a normal course of legislative debate on this bill instead of the fast-track, two-day, closure enforced process that has been selected for this bill. So on that basis alone we think that it ought to be postponed. We have some confidence that members opposite, if given a chance to reflect, may in fact one day actually change their minds on something, and that would be good.

Mr. Speaker, if you'll allow me to build the foundation for my argument a little bit . . .

MS CARLSON: Fifty storeys?

MR. MASON: No. It's only going to be a couple of storeys, hon. member.

I have a letter here which I would like to read.

AN HON. MEMBER: From the Pope?

MR. MASON: No, it's not the Pope, but I would advise the hon. member not to guess, because he can get himself in a lot of trouble.

To Whom It May Concern,

Today I decided to walk away from a degrading relationship, a situation in which I have been shamelessly devalued and abused. For the past year and a half of my young life I have put in much more than my share of time, emotion, and creativity to try and make this relationship work. Nothing improved. Instead, I have listened as my efforts were insulted publicly by my partner. I have had necessary funds withheld from myself and from the children under my care. My confidence and ambition have been eroded to the point that I have trouble remembering why I began this relationship in the first place.

Nearly every sinew and fiber in my body tells me that I should leave. I know that I am intelligent, educated, inventive and bold enough to succeed without this abuse. I know that my health, both physical and emotional, will improve greatly when I sever ties with my partner . . . but I'm going to stay for three more months.

What could make me stay in this situation even a second longer? Why, the children of course. I have dozens of them, and I care about each one because I am a teacher. The abusive situation I find myself in is with a government that refuses to acknowledge the value of my students, the value of my consuming and difficult work, or the value of a properly funded and supported public education system.

I've heard some people say that my relationship as a teacher under this government will improve because my salary may increase a bit this year. They are wrong. Do teachers deserve more money? From the inside I can tell you that they absolutely do. However, I do not think that money alone will be enough to make me suffer through another year as difficult as these first two have been. If it is only money that is intended to attract me back to this profession in September then my days as a teacher are over.

I respect myself enough to know that I deserve an employer that does not force me to work without a contract, one in which my workload (read: classroom size and desperately needed support for students with special needs) is not too much for one very hard-working person. I deserve a job that is not singled out by my own government for ridicule, abuse, and insultingly discriminatory legislation.

It pains me to admit that, come June, I need to walk away from teaching in my own province. Maybe it will not matter to the majority government that one lone teacher has decided not to martyr herself for them again next year. The thing is, I don't believe that I am the only caring, exhausted, abused teacher ready to leave. Had the Progressive Conservatives chosen to address all the problems that have been festering in our public education system in the past ten years, I would have been willing to consider returning this September. But to come back to this educational system in the state it is now? You could not pay me enough.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to address the whole question a little bit more of this commission on education. Once again, the government is coming up with a commission at the same time as they're imposing a contract on the teachers, and this is something, I think, that members should consider in the six-month interim: that the issues facing education in this province are not new. What is new is that the government has suddenly decided that they've got to have a commission to deal with it. Why are they doing it now? Because they're not going to give the teachers the right to collectively bargain a fair contract. They're not going to give the teachers a fair deal. So in order to have something else to divert everybody's attention, they're all of a sudden going to set up this commission and take however long it's going to take to finally come and deal with the issues that they have known about for years. The timing is highly, highly suspicious, Mr. Speaker. Extremely suspicious. It is nothing but a shell game. Oh, you want to deal with class sizes? Well, okay. Let's talk about teachers' salaries. No, teachers' salaries are off the table. We're going to have this process, and now we're going to talk about it. So the government keeps switching back and forth, and they never really address the issue.

Mr. Speaker, I have no faith that this commission is going to actually deal with the questions facing teachers in the classroom. I think that it is simply a diversionary tactic to try and get the teachers to go along with what's happening to them in this bill. So I think that it is very appropriate that we take some time to think this through because I'm sure that if we do think it through, some members opposite may reconsider the hot-headed decision to instruct the Premier to override his deal and his agreement with the Alberta Teachers' Association, which I think would have resolved things very satisfactorily in the long run. It might have cost the government a bit more money, but the children would have been a lot better off, and the Progressive Conservative Party would have been a lot better off in the next election.

MR. LUKASZUK: Thank you for your advice.

MR. MASON: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to provide advice to the Progressive Conservative Party because I do think that the 74 seats they managed to win in the last election have provided a certain sense of invulnerability, a bit like a teenage boy driving a speeding car. They think that they're invulnerable, that they'll live forever, and it's just not so. I think this government is probably in more trouble now than it has been in since the days of Premier Getty. Even their own supporters in the media are turning against them. We saw that with Mr. Gunter's column today.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I think that we should pass the hoist motion. I would like to say that the government is hoisted on its own petard, except I'm really not quite sure what a petard actually is. I think that hoisting this bill and giving it sober second thought is exactly what we need to do in the circumstances. So with that, with considerable time left, I will take my seat.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Questions or comments? We'll resume debate. The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

MR. DUCHARME: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Unfortunately, I cannot support the hoist amendment motion on Bill 12, the Education Services Settlement Act, as moved by the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie. To further delay this unfortunate labour salary dispute serves no purpose other than to allow emotions to continue to fester and to create further unhappy feelings between teachers, legislators, trustees, parents, students, and the public.

Having been educated in Alberta's public system, I wish to thank my past teachers for the role that they played in my development. Without their devotion and passion for teaching it's likely that I would not today be representing the constituents of Bonnyville-Cold Lake. Mr. Speaker, as a former school trustee and a parent of two children who graduated from our public system, I have the utmost respect and admiration for Alberta's educators.

Mr. Speaker, this labour dispute has gone on far too long. As I receive calls and e-mails, I soon see that this labour situation has turned rather emotional and very political. It's: "He said this. No, he said that. The comments were unfair. The comments were taken out of context." All that is being achieved at this point in time is that the level of anger continues to grow, and that is not a useful purpose.

Let's allow the salary arbitration process to proceed. Let's move on to the next step, the education commission, where Albertans working together can address all the other education concerns facing our teachers and our students. Together we can continue to provide the best education for our children, our future, our prosperity.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Any questions or comments? There being none, we shall resume debate. The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was going to speak to Bill 12 just briefly, but the hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake said exactly what I was going to say. I would like to identify his remarks and not prolong the debate by repeating them, other than to say that I think that there's an exciting opportunity here for Albertans, for teachers, for students, for all of us who are concerned about education in this province, and that opportunity is in the preamble to the bill.

The bill itself deals with the wage dispute. The issues that are really important – not that wages aren't important, because they are; and not that teachers don't deserve decent wages, because they do. They work long and they work hard. I come from a family of teachers, and I know that from personal experience. But the big issues that really concern most of the teachers that I speak to are the class size issues, the issues around the amount of time and effort that goes into it, the changes in education over the last 10 years with integration and inclusion in classrooms, with technology in classrooms, and those other issues which have really changed the nature of the workplace, changed the nature of education.

We've learned so much over the last 10 years about learning and about the styles of learning and about what it takes to teach and what types of learning there are. We need the commission on education which has been promised to examine learning in detail. Those are not issues that can be dealt with in a collective bargaining process. That's why we need this bill now: to get the wage issue off the table so we can get on with talking about education in a meaningful, broad-based way so that we can have the best possible education system so that our children can be the best they can be and go out into the world.

Mr. Speaker, I think we've come close to the end of this debate. I would ask for the unanimous consent of the House for waiver of the 10-minute bell rule so that we could have one-minute bells, because I'm sure that we will have a few divisions yet tonight.

DR. PANNU: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to briefly speak in support of the motion before the House.

MR. MASON: I have questions for the minister.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: I am sorry. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands with a question.

MR. MASON: Yes. I would like to ask the minister why the government has taken so long to decide to create a commission on the future of education and why the timing has been chosen to coincide with this bill.

MR. HANCOCK: Well, I think that's a very important question and well answered by Wetaskiwin-Camrose, I believe earlier today, when he said that all ideas have their time and their place. There has been discussion of a commission on education or something of that sort since early last year, in fact, coming out of the election, when so many people last year told us on the doorsteps that they were concerned about resources in the classroom and they were concerned about classroom size, those issues.

The Future Summit very clearly put forward discussion about the need for a commission on education, and the labour issue that we're going through right now has very clearly brought it to a head. The president of the ATA made it a suggestion and a very good one.

MR. MASON: Since the other minister who I'd like to ask the question of has not subjected himself to these questions, I'll ask this minister how long he thinks this commission on education is going to take to come up with its recommendations to the government.

MR. HANCOCK: Well, that would be asking for an opinion, but I'm happy to give him my opinion. The commission should take as long as necessary to thoroughly analyze the data, to look at all the issues very carefully, dispassionately, and nonpolitically and come to some conclusions and recommendations, which probably should be completed before the next contract is up so that it does not become an issue in the next collective bargaining process.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Any questions or comments? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands again.

MR. MASON: For the minister. I take from the minister's statement that it could be up to a year and a half, two years before this happens. Will the government in the meantime continue its policy of underfunding education?

MR. HANCOCK: Well, the hon. member would have to ask the responsible minister who will be presenting a budget next Tuesday as to what funds will be going to education, but I wouldn't agree with the premise that education is underfunded. I think we very clearly need to look at the way the resources are allocated and how we resource education and what changes have happened in education over the last 10 years, which will require a very thorough look. The contract should expire by August of 2003, as I understand it, under Bill 12, and therefore the commission should have its report in prior to that date so that we can get on with those issues.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands again with a question.

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to ask the minister if this commission is going to have the same depth and breadth of public consultation as the Mazankowski commission did.

MR. HANCOCK: The commission hasn't been established yet, so we don't know its form as yet, but I would expect the minister of education would appreciate any advice that he might get as to how the commission should be formed, who should participate in it, and what issues it should discuss.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: We'll resume the debate. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona has been recognized.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to speak in support of the motion to hoist this bill and that it be brought back to this House six months from today. I want to just speak on a few points that I think are important to clarify.

First, this whole talk about the commission, a task force, perhaps a summit is all so fuzzy at the moment. It's a bit of a red herring when talking about and debating Bill 12. Let's talk about Bill 12 and why it is necessary to hoist it tonight and debate it six months from now. In the meantime, have some negotiations with the Minister of Learning and have some negotiations with the Alberta school trustees and have some contact with the ATA to resolve the issues. To simply ram this bill through tonight will solve absolutely nothing.

Two other points that I want to make. I was listening to the minister when he introduced third reading of the bill this afternoon, and I was quite taken by one particular comment the minister made. He talked about the fact that he wanted to remove the possibility of the trauma that collective bargaining is likely to cause in this province to parents, to teachers, to the public system. Trauma is a very medical term appropriately used by the minister, who has some knowledge of these issues. He didn't use this term three weeks ago, when he recommended to the Minister of Human Resources and Employment – at that time he called it public emergency. He got his hand slapped a bit by Chief Justice Allan Wachowich when he said that there is no such thing as a public emergency caused by the legal right to take job action by teachers in this province. So he has switched his language but obviously not his thinking about the matter. He hasn't learned anything from the decision of the court and the verdict of the court, so he now begins to use the word "trauma." The trauma that's going to come, Mr. Speaker, is going to be the result of the mad rush with which this bill is being put through this House tonight.

So I certainly would ask all members to reflect on this matter and give favourable consideration to the motion before us to postpone that day on which to make those decisions and in the meantime try to seek negotiations, consultations, and improve this bill. In that respect, we tried last night to do our best to take out the most odious parts of the bill and improve them by way of making amendments. Only three of our eight amendments were given the time, and then the guillotine was dropped and the debate stopped.

Debate needs to continue, and this motion before us will allow this kind of debate to happen, not only based on the specific proposal that the New Democrats made by way of our amendments, but lots of Albertans – members of school boards, teachers, parents, school council members – and everyone in this House will have the opportunity to engage in this debate and this discussion which is so necessary if they're going to fix the problems their system faces.

A comment was made this evening, Mr. Speaker, by the hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont. He expressed grave concerns about the problems that collective bargaining, when the right is exercised by teachers, creates for the system, for particularly our students and families and everyone else. I think he is out of touch. If he thinks that all members and all school boards are opposed to collective bargaining, he's absolutely out of touch. He's not correct in taking that position.

Thus today Don Fleming, the chairman of the Edmonton public school board, stated publicly that insofar as his experience in the public school board is concerned, there have been exceedingly cordial, collaborative, and constructive relationships between teachers, on the one hand, as employees of the school board and the school board members as elected employers of those teachers. This has happened because there has been decent recognition of the right for collective bargaining and the right for teachers to exercise their legal right to strike. So the collective bargaining arrangements that are in place in this province have in fact worked, worked to the advantage of our students, worked to the advantage of school boards and teachers in being able to negotiate agreements that are acceptable, that have been constructive, that have been helpful to all parties, and that have best served the interests that the school system is supposed to address and serve.

Let's not proceed with this mad rush and turn this Legislative Assembly into an Assembly that issues decrees. I think this bill, if passed and rammed through tonight, will certainly be seen by a very large number of Albertans and almost all teachers in this province as a decree, not carefully thought out legislation that received the due debate that it deserves.

If this amendment were to be passed, it would also give time to the 16 members of the Tory caucus that the Premier continues to refer to as teachers, teachers in support of this bill. I'm not entirely sure how happy those 16 members of the Conservative caucus are who have in the past in one capacity or another served as teachers or in some capacity in the school system. I think they deserve an opportunity to reflect without being pressured by their colleagues and by their heavy-handed minister to buy into this rush for passing this ill-considered piece of legislation. MLAs who are represented in the caucus of the Tory party who claim to be teachers I think need to go back to the teachers, to their colleagues, to their peers and talk to them and come back and give some advice to the minister and to the caucus. Maybe based on that advice, we can improve this bill by the time it's ready to come back in six months.

So for these reasons that I've given, Mr. Speaker, I think it's important that all members support the motion before the House. Thank you.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Any questions or comments for the hon. member? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Yes. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have a question, please, for the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona. My question is this: in light of your remarks, do you think it's important that part of the solution to this problem is a recognition that class size is important and the pupil/teacher ratio is important?

DR. PANNU: Mr. Speaker, this bill is about contract stripping. This bill is about stripping contracts that have been negotiated with teachers earlier, and that is wrong. So surely any contract that's been negotiated, that's been arbitrated should include all the matters that concern parties at the table, which is teachers on one side and school boards on the other, and not be excluded.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: There being no further questions, we shall resume debate.

SOME HON. MEMBERS: Question.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Okay. You're ready for the question.

Title: Thursday, March 14, 2002

1:30 p.m.

Date: 02/03/14

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

THE SPEAKER: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. Our Father, keep us mindful of the special and unique opportunity we have to work for our constituents and our province, and in that work give us strength and wisdom. Amen.

Please be seated.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly two constituents of mine from Edmonton-Whitemud. With us today in the members' gallery is Colin Minor and his daughter Tess Minor. Tess is a grade 6 student from Earl Buxton elementary school, located in Edmonton-Whitemud. I had the great pleasure of meeting with Colin and Tess just prior to question period today. Tess is a wonderful student and is very excited about having the opportunity to come to the Legislature today and learn about government. I might advise the House that during a brief respite from school in February, Tess had the opportunity to attend the Salt Lake 2002 Olympic Games and watch the Canadian hockey team play. I'd ask Colin and Tess to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, I have the pleasure of introducing to you and through you to members of the Assembly 18 grades 5 and 6 students from Amisk school. Amisk is a beautiful little farming and ranching community on the east side of our province, known to many as the home of Blaine Pederson, world champion steer wrestler. These students came to my office. We had a great little visit with their teacher and parents, who are teacher Mrs. Hilary Gray, parents Carol Anholt, Wendy Stankieveh, Gail Barnes, and Shelley Walters. I would ask that these bright and eager students and their guests rise and receive the very warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

MRS. ADY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you a school group from Trinity Christian school, which is nestled in the heart of my constituency in Midnapore. They are accompanied by their teacher, Mr. George Graffunder, and by parent helpers Mrs. Judy Kolk, Wendy Burnside, Joyce Verhoeff, Kirk Beacom, Donna Horton, and Art Ziegler. They are located in the members' gallery, and I'd ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour today to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly 24 students from Sir George Simpson junior high school in St. Albert. They are seated in the public gallery, and they are accompanied today by their teacher, Carolyn Harrison, and accompanied by some parents as well: Margot Konowalchuk, Kim Kisko, Mrs. Thompson, and Mrs. Fenton. I would ask them all to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

REV. ABBOTT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all the members of this House 22 very bright students from Thorsby high school. Now, the town of Thorsby is known as the best of both worlds because you have the safety and beauty of a rural area but you're close to the amenities of the city. While here in the city today these students visited our excellent Sixties exhibit at the Provincial Museum, and now they're here to visit our House. They are accompanied by their teacher, Mr. Al Bratland, and they're seated in the public gallery. I'd ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of the House.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's with pleasure that I introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly Janet Laddish. Janet is the provincial vice-president of the Alberta Teachers' Association. She's here for question period. With permission I'd ask Janet to stand and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

head: Oral Question Period

THE SPEAKER: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Public Safety

MS BLAKEMAN: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. My questions are to the Solicitor General. Why has the Solicitor General refused to hire 22 more parole officers to adequately supervise parolees and keep Albertans safe?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MRS. FORSYTH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to answer the hon. member's question. Albertans are safe, and the Solicitor General and our government will keep Albertans safe.

I'd like to let the hon. member know that I met with probation officers from the community corrections committee a few weeks ago and had several issues on the table. Noon hour office closures they wanted: agreed with that. Probation officer workload reductions: agreed with that by instituting case aides to deal with the lowest of minimum security. Enhanced training: looked at that but some of the enhanced training we will all co-ordinate through the province at the staff college. Establish a provincial judiciary corrections joint committee: moved ahead with that. Their formats standard: moved with that. We moved ahead. On the 22 correctional officers: with the case aides, Mr. Speaker, that will reduce their workloads.

MS BLAKEMAN: Again to the Solicitor General: did the Solicitor General discuss at this meeting with parole officers two weeks ago changes that would drop dangerous criminals, including sex offenders, into groups that check in less frequently?

MRS. FORSYTH: No, Mr. Speaker, I didn't. I'd like to refer to a letter that was dated March 1, 2002, to all probation officers. "On a limited pilot basis in selected locations, we will be exploring the amendment of supervision standards for offenders on probation who have not been identified as high risk or high profile."

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you. Again my question is to the Solicitor General. Does the Solicitor General believe that women and children in Alberta will sleep better knowing that sexual predators are going virtually unsupervised?

MRS. FORSYTH: You know, Mr. Speaker, I have to say something as a member of this Legislature who worked very hard on bringing child prostitution legislation into the Assembly, the first in Canada. Secondly, as a member who attended the federal/provincial/territorial meeting and had the federal Solicitor General, your federal Solicitor General, who refused to move on a national sex offender registry move forward – you should talk to them. No, I'm not jeopardizing children or any Albertan in this province.

THE SPEAKER: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again my questions are all to the Solicitor General. Is the only criterion the minister considered in this pilot project that was discussed the cost-saving benefits instead of the safety of women and children in Alberta?

MRS. FORSYTH: Mr. Speaker, I'm going to speak very slowly. The recommendations that you are asking about came from committee members, including union representatives. It's what they wanted. No, the Solicitor General is not jeopardizing children or Albertans in this province.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you. What other criminals with a history of violence – wife beaters, armed robbers – will no longer be considered high-risk offenders and will be reporting in less frequently?

MRS. FORSYTH: The Solicitor General does not make the criteria for the probation officers. The probation officers are the professionals. They're the ones that determine the high-risk, high-profile offenders. They are the people that determine the reporting requirements, when they are required to report to the probation officers.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you. Given that not only are parolees checking in less often but they will be reporting to a less qualified case aide, what guarantees does this minister have that these less qualified workers will not just rubber-stamp the files?

MRS. FORSYTH: Well, you know what, Mr. Speaker? There we go. I know where the confusion is coming from now. Parolees are a federal responsibility. We deal with probation officers; the feds deal with parole and parolees.

MS CARLSON: Mr. Speaker, my questions are to the Solicitor General. Why in the Legislature yesterday did the Solicitor General state that there would be no changes to the frequency of reporting for sex offenders when today she confirmed that this is in fact happening?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MRS. FORSYTH: Okay, Mr. Speaker. I will table this letter dated March 1, 2002, to all of the probation officers. "On a limited pilot basis in selected locations we will be exploring the amendment of supervision standards for offenders on probation who have not" – not – "been identified as high risk or high profile." I'd be pleased to table the letter later.

MS CARLSON: Mr. Speaker, as the sex offenders are now considered to be low risk and there is a pilot project in place, in fact she did mislead this House yesterday. Is the Solicitor General aware of her obligations as a minister and the penalties associated with breaking the public trust and not actually telling the truth on this floor?

MR. HANCOCK: Point of order.

MRS. FORSYTH: Mr. Speaker, I guess the member isn't understanding what I'm saying. First of all, most of the sex offenders in this province that are on probation, not parole, are considered high-risk or high-profile offenders. That categorization has not changed. Minimum categories, if she's talking about minimum categories, that probation officers determine could be as simple as shoplifting.

MS CARLSON: The facts still stay the same. Yesterday she said one thing; today she says another thing. Given that the record clearly shows that this minister denied what she knows to be true, will she apologize or will she take the proper steps and not be found in contempt by actually resigning?

MRS. FORSYTH: Mr. Speaker, this minister is responsible for the safety of Albertans, and I will not jeopardize that safety. The sex offenders designated as high risk or high profile will be reporting with the same standards as they always have. Let me repeat that it's the probation officers that make that determination, not the Solicitor General.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan.

Teachers' Arbitration Legislation

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last night under cover of darkness the Tory government rammed Bill 12 through the Legislature. This infamous bill contains many provisions similar to the ones that have already been ruled illegal in a November 2000 ruling, CUPE versus Minister of Labour, by the Ontario Court of Appeal. Given that the government's case regarding the back-to-work order was virtually laughed out of court, Albertans have ample cause for concern that Bill 12 may be in legal trouble before the ink is even dry. My question to the Minister of Justice and Attorney General: did the Justice minister review the Ontario Court of Appeal's decision striking down the Harris government's arbitration process for their province's hospital workers?

MR. HANCOCK: Not personally, Mr. Speaker.

DR. PANNU: Oh, surprise, surprise. I wonder why the minister didn't know about the Ontario Court of Appeal decision.

My question to him: can the minister explain his failure to inform the House that the Ontario government's significant financial interest in the arbitration outcome was a factor in the court striking down the legislation?

MR. HANCOCK: Well, first of all, Mr. Speaker, the preamble to the supplementary, which isn't supposed to be there, is wrong. I didn't say that I didn't know about the decision. He asked me if I'd personally reviewed it. I hadn't personally reviewed it, so I answered him honestly. We do have lawyers in the department who do that sort of thing. I can't possibly read every case that comes out. If the hon. member had thought that that case was relevant to the debate – and I'm not sure that it was – he had just as much obligation as anyone else to bring it to the floor of the Legislature during the debate.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister tell the House why, after his case to support the back-to-work order was virtually laughed out of court, Albertans should have any confidence that Bill 12 will stand up in court?

MR. HANCOCK: Well, Albertans should have confidence that Bill 12 will stand up in court because the Legislature has not only the right but the obligation to make legislation on behalf of Albertans and does that in the context of the jurisdiction which is granted by the people.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

MR. LOUGHEED: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Some concerns have been expressed by a few teachers and perhaps the ATA and some others, concerns with respect to the arbitration legislation, that it will take away the right of teachers to assemble or talk about their labour situation. It may be somewhat imaginative, but some of these suggestions go along with things like they'll be unable to go out for lunch together, assemble in the staff room, go to a movie, or that even spouses, both of whom may teach, wouldn't be able to talk about the labour situation. My question to the Minister of Learning: can you advise whether or not the teachers' right to assemble has been limited under this legislation?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

DR. OBERG: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've got a couple of points that I want to answer this with. First of all and right from the outset I want to say that there's absolutely nothing in this legislation that limits a teacher's right to assemble in any fashion at all.

The other thing that I do want to say, though, is that I commend those teachers for putting forward the initiative to ask for more information about this bill. I think it's absolutely great to give us a chance to clarify some of the myths and misperceptions that are out in the public.

If I may, Mr. Speaker, I'll just read the phrase from the bill that has some controversy associated with it. What it says is: "a concerted activity by 2 or more employees to refuse to comply with responsibilities assigned by their principal or their employer." Under section 18 of the School Act a teacher's responsibilities include anything that is assigned to them by their principal or the school board, which in this case is the employer. This component of Bill 12 is taken directly from the School Act and the labour act when it applies to the definition of a strike. It in no way – in no way, in no way – states that teachers cannot assemble.

MR. LOUGHEED: Again, Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: can the teachers participate in any type of job action such as limiting voluntary services or perhaps not working with student teachers?

DR. OBERG: Mr. Speaker, this Bill 12 is about the importance of educating the students in the classroom. There is no right that is taken away from the teachers to withdraw their extracurricular activities. They can do that. I certainly hope that they don't. I think that extracurricular activities are a very important part of the scholastic environment. However, this bill deals with the teachers and the learning environment of the classroom. There is one exception to this rule, which is Calgary Catholic, which has a clause specifically outlining the extracurricular activities. So apart from that, it would be extremely unfortunate if the teachers decided to work to rule, to limit their extracurricular activities, but there's nothing in this bill that prohibits it.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. LOUGHEED: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Beyond that, I'm wondering if as the Minister of Learning there are any concerns about any other forms of protest.

DR. OBERG: Well, I can answer that in a couple of ways. First of all, it's any Albertan's right in this society to protest. That is something that this government honours and something that this society honours. So there certainly is the right to protest, and in no way has this taken away from it, nor would have I ever put forward a bill that would take away that right. Mr. Speaker, we do hope, though, that the teachers' activities are spent in the classrooms, that the teachers go back to the classrooms with the same ability and the same authority and the same good work that they've been doing for the last 50 years in Alberta classrooms. It's extremely important. We're talking about the future. We're talking about education. We're talking about our kids. As someone who has kids in the education system, to me as Minister of Learning there is nothing that is more important than that.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, followed by the hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

Closure of Acute Care Beds

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the government confirmed that it is looking at closing or converting acute care beds in rural Alberta. My questions are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Will the government commit now that no public rural health care facility will be sold to for-profit corporations?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, I'll give no such assurance. Of course, hospital facilities like the Holy Cross in the city of Calgary were in fact sold to private interests but are not operating as hospitals. So if the hon. member is seeking assurance that we will not allow private hospitals to operate anywhere in the province, I can give him that assurance, but I will not give him the assurance that such properties could not be sold to private interests for use in some other area.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Can the government guarantee rural Albertans that for every acute care bed closed, a long-term care bed will be opened?

MR. MAR: Well, we do rely upon regional health authorities, Mr. Speaker, to make decisions about the appropriate types of services that will be provided in regional health authorities throughout the province. In many cases regional health authorities have already made decisions to convert acute care facilities into long-term care facilities, which is a much more cost-effective way of dealing with the real needs of the people that they actually serve. Regional health authorities are charged with this responsibility. We encourage, of course, that regional health authorities do take into account the real needs of the people that live in their areas and make choices about what sorts of services to provide.

DR. TAFT: Why are rural Albertans being hit with a double whammy by closing acute care beds at the same time that other RHAs, like the Calgary health region, are limiting access for rural patients?

MR. MAR: Well, Mr. Speaker, there is not a limiting of access by centres like the Calgary regional health authority or Capital. The fact is that there is, of course, a large number of people that are seeking access to such facilities right now. It's the flu season, it's winter, it is busy, and those people who have acute or urgent needs are dealt with immediately. It matters not whether they're from the city of Calgary or whether they're from some other part of the province of Alberta.

With respect to the utilization of some of these facilities in rural Alberta, there are many such facilities. The utilization rate of them as acute care facilities – I think it's a legitimate question to be asking: should RHAs be considering looking at the utilization rate of certain types of acute care facilities and perhaps considering changing them over to reflect the real needs of the community?

MR. HORNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. After many discussions with educators and trustees in my area who have been following the debate on the Education Services Settlement Act, I understand that there is considerable concern and confusion about section 39(1), where it would seem to preclude these boards from negotiating other items, which they may want to do. My understanding is that the boards and the local bargaining units can negotiate side agreements on any area they choose. Could the Minister of Learning please clarify this point?

DR. OBERG: Yes. Quite simply, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is absolutely correct. For example, on pupil/teacher ratio, hours of instruction, or classroom size, which have been specifically taken out of these collective agreements and prohibited from the arbitrator looking at them, if they wish to do that in a sidebar agreement or a letter of understanding, a memorandum of understanding, they are quite capable, and it is very easily done. From a union point of view, these letters of understanding are grievable.

Mr. Speaker, while I have the floor and speaking about negotiations, I just want to inform the Assembly that this morning we had another two school boards who have tentatively signed agreements with their teachers.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. HORNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My supplemental is to the same minister. Does the Education Services Settlement Act restrict in any way the boards which are not listed in the act?

DR. OBERG: Mr. Speaker, that's an excellent question. The boards that are not listed in the act and the boards that I just talked about as having settled are not restricted by this act at all. There was, I believe, nine boards who had a contract in place until September of 2002. There are another four or five boards that have already settled and ratified. The restrictions for the arbitration that are in here in no way apply to these boards.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. HORNER: No more, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-East.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Government actions in recent days and months have deeply affected and outraged teachers. To say that morale is at a new low in the profession is an understatement. My questions are to the Minister of Learning. Yesterday the minister indicated that we have the best system because teachers, students, and the department worked so well together. Does the minister believe he can still depend on the co-operation of the teachers?

DR. OBERG: Mr. Speaker, the best way to answer that is that I believe teachers are professionals. I believe they want what's in the best interests of the students. I believe it is in the best interests of all Albertans for us to have an excellent education system, and I strongly, strongly feel and agree that the combination of the collaboration that occurs between the department, the school boards, the teachers, the students, and the parents is extremely important: one of the reasons why we have the best system in the world.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you. To the same minister, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the minister told the House that the school system will enter "a period of stability" in education. Does he really believe that the government's actions in the last weeks have led to stability?

DR. OBERG: Mr. Speaker, the press release from the Alberta School Boards Association stressed that there would be a period of stability here from a labour point of view, and I think that when we're talking about contracts, when we're talking about contracts being settled, we will have a period of stability.

I think there's a more important issue here, and that is the issue that was alluded to in the first question that the hon. member asked. That's the whole idea of working together, of coming forward for Alberta students. I trust that teachers are professional. I trust that they want the best for students, as this department does, as this government does, as this minister does. I hope that we continue to work together and do programs such as the Alberta initiative for school improvement, such as Safe and Caring Schools, all of these initiatives where we work together. I hope that that continues.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you. To the same minister, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the minister indicated that we will have labour peace because of Bill 12. Does he really believe that we will have peaceful labour relations in this province?

DR. OBERG: Well, Mr. Speaker, the teachers have been without a contract since September of 2001. Over that time frame there was lots of time for negotiation, lots of time for mediation. The Alberta Teachers' Association came to the Premier and subsequently to me and asked for binding arbitration in legislation. The Alberta School Boards Association came to the Premier and subsequently to me and asked for the same thing this one time only. They felt that negotiations were at an impasse. We cannot have the teachers going on without a contract ad infinitum. The labour situation will settle down, and contracts will be settled.

Mr. Speaker, the Premier would like to make some comments as well.

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, basically, the comment relates to the question, but it's a question to answer the question. What would the Liberals do? You know, it's an interesting question. Would they simply say, "Oh, they've asked for 20 percent; here's 20 percent"? That's the indication I'm getting, that the Liberals would say, "Oh, they want 20 percent; we will just give them 20 percent," not knowing the pressures on infrastructure, not knowing the pressures on health, not knowing the pressures on transportation, on children's services. They keep saying, "This is underfunded, that's underfunded, and something else is underfunded," and then in the same breath they say, "Oh, you're spending too much money." I would love to know what their solution is, not that I would ever want them in the position to make a decision – and they never will be – but I would like to know. I'm very curious.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-East, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Immigration of Skilled Workers

MR. AMERY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question today is to the hon. Minister of Learning. At a recent meeting with the Calgary Home Builders' Association concerns have been raised by the association members about the length of time that it's taking them to build a house due to the shortage of skilled workers. The newly proposed immigration regulations by the federal government for skilled workers are very restrictive and will hinder potential skilled immigrant workers from coming to Canada. Could the minister outline the Alberta position to Albertans in regards to the newly proposed selection criteria for skilled workers and how it's going to affect the province and its industries?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

DR. OBERG: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That's an excellent question. Bringing people into Alberta, especially skilled workers, is a priority of this government. We have to have more workers. We have to have people that are working in, as the hon. member said, the home building industry. We have really had – and I really hesitate to say this because it is so unlike me – a good relationship with Canada immigration services. The two ministers that I have dealt with have been extremely good. If there are issues where we need the skilled workers, what we have done is recently signed an agreement called the provincial nominees program. We are piloting this and will be bringing this forward. If I may, that program will be included under the Minister of Economic Development, so I would ask him to supplement my answer.

MR. NORRIS: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As I said yesterday in the House, this is a wonderful problem to have. In order to address it, we have listened to business concerns and we've embarked on the PNP, which stands for the provincial nominees program, which my hon. colleague related. What that does is allows the Alberta government in conjunction with the federal government to target specific areas and skill sets, to go out and speed up immigration. The federal government will still be responsible for the criminal and health checks, but then the file is passed to us. With our contacts throughout the world we know what areas are in a bit of an economic slump, and we can target them and bring skilled workers into Alberta quicker, addressing the needs of a white-hot economy.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. AMERY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Since the two hon. ministers have answered my second question, I'll ask my third question. Given that the province of Quebec has been managing its immigration policy for a long time and has direct control over who comes in and how many people come in, would the province of Alberta consider doing the same?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

DR. OBERG: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and that's an excellent question. We have not considered doing the same for a couple of very important reasons. First of all, it would be extremely expensive for us to set up our own immigration policies. Second of all, we would have to have offices all over the world in order to screen these people, and that is something that – again I find myself in a position I'm unaccustomed to – I will say that the federal government does a very good job at. We will help the federal government in whatever we can. They have been very good to work with on this particular portfolio, and I look forward to continuing to have that working relationship with the federal government on immigration, because as the Minister of Economic Development has stated, it is a very, very important issue for the workers of this province.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Gaming and Liquor Commission Employees

MR. BONNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The gaming industry in Alberta is an important source of revenue for this government, a gold mine to fill the coffers. This government has invested a lot of resources to protect it. My questions today are to the Minister of Gaming. Can the minister confirm if workers employed by the Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission in the installation and servicing of the VLTs and slot machines are now designated as inspectors under the Gaming and Liquor Act?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. STEVENS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The current situation with respect to inspectors is that we have about 40 of them. In addition, we have about 21 people who do investigations, and then we have a group who does the servicing of the electronic devices that the question dealt with.

MR. BONNER: Also to the same minister, Mr. Speaker: if these field technicians are working on behalf of the Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission but as direct employees of a slot machine supplier, can the minister still say that he has control of industry inspection through these inspectors?

MR. STEVENS: Mr. Speaker, the answer to the first question I thought would have dealt with the second question, but to deal with the question more directly and specifically so that the hon. member understands the point, the employees who service the machines are not inspectors, they are not investigators, but they are employees of AGLC.

MR. BONNER: To the same minister: are these VLT repair technicians and inspectors classified as essential service workers?

MR. STEVENS: The contract with the employees of the AGLC contains provisions with respect to their ability to strike, and my recollection is, Mr. Speaker, that under the terms of that contract they do not have the ability to strike.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Prior Access to Budget Information

MR. MASON: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Parliamentary tradition dictates that the contents of the provincial budget are not to be released prior to the Minister of Finance getting up in the Assembly to begin her budget speech. The only exception is for the news media and opposition members. However, the New Democrats have learned that a handpicked group of government friends and insiders are being given prior preferential access to next Tuesday's provincial budget. So to the Premier: does the Premier think it is acceptable that a handpicked group of Tory friends and insiders is being given preferential access to the detailed contents of next week's budget while those who may be critics of the government's policies are denied similar access?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I don't know that to be true, and I don't believe it to be true. Undoubtedly, on budget day groups are brought in – and I believe the opposition is brought in as well – on an embargoed basis to review the budget. I know that the media are brought in to review the budget and certainly are given a technical briefing on an embargoed basis, but that occurs on budget day.

Relative to the minister having this so-called or alleged hand-picked group of people, I don't believe that to be true, but I'll have her comment.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MRS. NELSON: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Premier has basically covered the answer to the question. I'm surprised that this has been raised by the members opposite, because there is a very detailed, embargoed technical briefing that is normally done on budget day. Members of the opposition parties are invited to have some technical briefing prior to the budget, and groups that are affected do come in and hear about their little particular areas, but they're embargoed. The overall budget presentation, though, is made within this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Could the minister, then, tell the Assembly whether or not organizations like the Taxpayers Federation, the Association of Petroleum Producers, or other similar organizations are given a briefing in advance of the release of the budget?

MRS. NELSON: Well, Mr. Speaker, I know that there have been requests from a number of groups to be a part of the technical briefing that does take place with the media and to be joining it, but that is a group that is carefully embargoed, and we have not enlarged the group. We've kept it as a media briefing, as to our tradition. So we wouldn't be doing that.

MR. MASON: Well, Mr. Speaker, you'd have to be around here a little while to actually understand that the answer was yes.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the minister if other groups, including people who may disagree with government policies such as antipoverty groups, housing organizations, trade unions, and so on, will be given similar access?

MRS. NELSON: Well, Mr. Speaker, I thought I made it clear. Hello? Wake up. We won't be doing that.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

National Infrastructure Program

MR. McCLELLAND: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question is to the Minister of Transportation. As the minister is aware, the federal government has announced a $2 billion national infrastructure program, some of which may be dedicated to transportation. My question is: what is the government doing to ensure that Alberta receives its fair share of this $2 billion national program?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. STELMACH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Upon hearing of the announcement made by the federal Finance minister, the Hon. Paul Martin, we had consultations on two levels: one with the deputy, who had traveled to Ottawa and worked with other deputies from other provinces, and with the federal government to try and build criteria as to what this fund should actually support. Upon his return, Hon. Dave Collenette, on passing through the city of Edmonton a week and a half ago, graciously invited this minister for just a quick lunch, and we had the opportunity to discuss some of his ideas with respect to this particular fund. At that time, he indicated to us that there is a project that may be contemplated for support in Quebec – it's a freeway project – and one in Ontario. Although the criteria haven't been cemented in place, they are looking at possibly including infrastructure like convention centres, for which, you know, there is some interest in the province of Alberta in terms of advancing those for support. He had also advised us that he will continue to consult municipalities and provinces, although this program is not the same as the infrastructure Canada/Alberta program, ICAP, which dictated that the province supports a third and the municipality or a third party supports a third. This would be supported by the feds with possible participation from the private sector.

We indicated to the minister that we have our own freeway projects that we feel are integral. We're also interested in building those strategic economic corridors, especially to the last frontier, northern Alberta, for extracting resources. We also raised the issue about the roads through our national parks and that many of them require maintenance. We left it on the basis that we will certainly talk further to each other.

Our next step is to write a letter to the hon. Deputy Prime Minister and also to our friend here in Alberta, Hon. Anne McLellan. I also would ask for the hon. member's tremendous experience, coming from Ottawa, and also ask for his help in meeting with the two ministers as well as the capital city caucus chairman.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora.

Disabled Persons' Access to the Legislature Building

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you. Regardless of why they were made, the Solicitor General's security changes here at the Legislature do pose challenges. Now, I know that you, Mr. Speaker, are the responsible authority for the Legislature, but my concerns are with the security arrangements brought about by the Solicitor General, so my questions are to the hon. minister this afternoon. Why did the Solicitor General make the loading dock at the centre of this building the handicapped entrance when the corresponding parking is way over at the end of the east wing?

Thank you.

MRS. FORSYTH: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I explained to the Assembly yesterday, I have had no complaints from the disabled. But I would like to tell the hon. member from his question to me yesterday that one of the things we're looking at for the disabled is putting in clearly marked signs and looking at possible other access. So all we need to know in this government, if there is a problem for the disabled people, is to bring it to our attention. I can also tell the member that the Premier's Council on the Status of Persons with Disabilities meets here all the time, and we have never had a complaint from them about the security in this building. The security people that are in this building do a very good job.

MR. MacDONALD: Mr. Speaker, again to the same minister: given that public policy that's complaint driven is bad policy, why did the Solicitor General make the loading dock, with its very, very steep ramp, the handicapped entrance when the east-wing entrance has such a gradual, gentle decline?

Thank you.

MRS. FORSYTH: You know what, Mr. Speaker? I have to say that I have not had one complaint about this issue. I explained earlier that there are many disabled people that access this building. The chair for the disabled has not brought it forward in regards to all of the meetings he's had here. If there's a complaint, please, hon. member, let us know.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you. Again to the same minister, Mr. Speaker: how much was spent? How much of the tax dollars of this province was spent on the security so-called improvements that created these problems of inaccessible access for the handicapped to their own public building, this Legislature?

Thank you.

MRS. FORSYTH: Again, Mr. Speaker, I have had no complaints from the disabled. I again want to emphasize the fact that if there is a concern from a disabled person in this province, have them call me. I have spoken to the security people around here, made them aware of the questions that came from the hon. member yesterday and the complaint about the box. They're checking that, and we will look into it.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora, followed by the hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne.

Programs for Abused Seniors

MR. HUTTON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I was doing some Liberal research this morning – I read the Edmonton Journal – and I did get concerned about an article I read that there's a shelter for abused seniors operated by the Society for the Retired and Semi-Retired in the city of Edmonton that is in jeopardy because of a lack of funding. The provincial government has turned down a request for funding to keep these shelters open. My question is to the Minister of Seniors. Where are these seniors who are suffering abuse supposed to turn if you won't provide funding to keep these shelters open?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. WOLOSHYN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I must point out that the Ministry of Seniors has considerable interaction with the society, and I might state that, to the best of my knowledge, for this particular project there has not been a request to the ministry or to the government for funding before the project was initiated nor now. I've got the information through the media. There are other projects that we've had under discussion with them. However, I would like to point out that it implies that we're not concerned about abuse, and that's certainly not true. We have a variety of departments in government which do deal with people in crisis. For example, Alberta Human Resources and Employment I believe funds some $13 million for the homeless, providing some 1,300 beds and 400 and some odd mats for them. Alberta Children's Services supplies well over $12 million for various shelters also, and we have AADAC and Justice all involved in it. The issue of seniors' abuse is a very serious one, and as I'd indicated before, if there is a solution that's required there, we'll sit down and work with any other interested bodies.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. HUTTON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My supplemental question is to the same minister. Are you aware if charges are being pursued against alleged abusers, and if they are not, is the minister going to pursue them?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. WOLOSHYN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That particular point is a very, very valid one, of concern to me specifically. When we do have people who are subjected to abuse, this implies that there is some criminal intent happening. If that is in fact the case, I personally would like to meet with the proper authorities to see if charges have been laid and if not why not. In the future when we have these people who've been subjected to very, very unfair treatment, if it is in the least way of a criminal nature, I personally, and I hope with the support of my colleagues, would be pursuing some sort of criminal action against the perpetrators.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne, followed by the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

Softwood Lumber Trade Dispute

MR. VANDERBURG: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In my constituency of Whitecourt-St. Anne the forestry industry is the major employer. Recent events in the ongoing softwood lumber dispute seem to be heating up. I understand that provincial ministers met with their federal counterparts in Ottawa yesterday. Today the Prime Minister is meeting with the President of the United States on a wide range of issues including the softwood dispute. My first question is directed to the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations. Would the minister please update the Assembly and all Albertans on the status of the discussions. Is there an end in sight?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, in the last few weeks we have had considerable discussion with the United States' representatives, both in conjunction with other provinces and with the federal government, but particularly with respect to the file, as it's referred to, as it applies to Alberta. We feel that greater understanding of the issues has been reached and that we have made progress in coming together in a direction towards an agreement.

Two of the goals that we have, which are very, very important to the province because they're very, very important to the industry within the province, are that we want to ensure that there is guaranteed access to the American market once the clauses of an agreement have been agreed to, and secondly, we want to set in place an agreement which will have some length and some certainty to it so that we are not going to be faced with challenges within a short period of time, be that six months, a year, or somewhere down the road.

I think at this point in time, Mr. Speaker, all parties remain committed to reaching a settlement and cautiously optimistic about deliberations over the next few weeks. Of course, with the Prime Minister meeting with the President of the United States today, we understand that it will certainly not be the only issue discussed, but it will be one of the issues discussed, and we look forward with interest to the results of those deliberations.

MR. VANDERBURG: Again, Mr. Speaker, to the same minister. I understand that there's a deadline and that deadline is coming up as soon as next week. What is the significance of that date? Why the deadline?

MR. JONSON: Well, the United States Department of Commerce, Mr. Speaker, has set the 21st of March as the date upon which they will make a determination or a judgment as to whether or not our current forest practices in some way – we don't agree – constitute an unfair or unreasonable subsidy or assistance to our forestry industry.

Mr. Speaker, the second point is that we intend to continue with our negotiations. We would ideally like to see an agreement before March 21, but if not, we are still committed to going forward with negotiations. The important thing here is that March 21 is the date on which the Department of Commerce will make their judgment. What can follow from that, of course, is the announcement of what they feel the level of damage, as they call it, would be or what the charge would be that might be levied against our industry as a result of their determination. We would like, as I said, to conclude negotiations before then, but we are not going to sacrifice a good agreement for a short-term solution.

MR. VANDERBURG: My last question, Mr. Speaker, is to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. Since our industry is so impacted by these discussions, can the minister tell us what involvement Alberta industry has played in these recent developments?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. CARDINAL: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Of course, this industry is very important to Albertans. Over 50,000 people are employed in the industry. A lot of our constituencies, in fact, in this House would have people that are impacted by this industry. Over 50 communities in Alberta are dependent on the forestry sector as their main source of revenue and job creation. We managed to develop this industry to the level it's at by partnering with private industry, and therefore private industry is very, very important in participating in any negotiations we do with the federal government and, of course, with the U.S.

Last fall, I believe in September or October, the Alberta Forest Products Association, which represents about 80 or 90 percent of the forestry industries, set up the Softwood Lumber Trade Council, which has representatives from a number of industries and who worked with us throughout all the meetings. In fact, in yesterday's meeting with the federal trade minister the industry representatives from across Canada, including the Alberta industry representatives, participated by doing their presentations to the federal trade minister, Mr. Speaker, which I feel is very, very important.

THE SPEAKER: Well, hon. members, we've now arrived within the question period at the 16th hon. member today to have an opportunity to raise a question, and I'm just absolutely delighted to call on the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul and to allow him to have the time that he needs. There are no additional members.

MR. DANYLUK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Some of my constituents have expressed a concern following the recent reports that Alberta Health and Wellness will be closing some rural hospital beds. My question is to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Can the minister confirm where these bed closures will be and how many there will be?

MR. MAR: Well, this is a matter of great sensitivity to all Albertans, and there has been some considerable misunderstanding with respect to it. To be very clear, I want to say, first of all, that it is much too early to talk about whether there will be any bed closures or conversions in any rural facilities in the province.

Mr. Speaker, not wanting to pre-empt the budget, which of course will be delivered next Tuesday, I can say that historically regional health authorities have received some 16 percent increase in their funding over the last three years, last year being $3.6 billion. It will be the decision of regional health authorities how best to meet the needs of people that live in those areas. They will be responsible for making decisions about how to administer health care, and that of course includes decisions about how to allocate bed space within hospitals and other health care facilities.

MR. DANYLUK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second question to the same minister: given that there are no details yet whether there will be any bed closures or conversions, can the minister tell us what criteria regional health authorities will use to make those decisions?

MR. MAR: I should say that regional health authorities will have their business plans due for the Department of Alberta Health and Wellness on the 17th of April. We have established criteria, Mr. Speaker, that each authority will use to determine bed allocation. It will depend on the particular demands of the region, and there are, of course, some considerations that would be general to all regions. For example, regions consider what is the most appropriate and efficient utilization for their patients. They'll also have to consider what is the best and most efficient use of the region's available beds. Health authorities will also consider their health workforce plans, which take into account both financial and human resources.

MR. DANYLUK: To the same minister, please, my final question: can the minister tell us whether his department is working with the regional health authorities to find other alternatives to bed conversions?

MR. MAR: We do work frequently with regional health authorities. We of course want to help regional health authorities make the best available use of all their available resources. In my view, Mr. Speaker, there are some resources that are being underutilized. There are some acute care facilities in this province where the utilization rate is recorded to be somewhere in the 20 percent range.

This ability and desire to work with regional health authorities to make the best available use of resources is one of the key recommendations set out in the report of the Premier's Advisory Council on Health and certainly encourages regional health authorities to work together to collaborate, to co-ordinate, to take advantage of working in concert with one another. As examples, Mr. Speaker, there are regional health authorities that are doing a good job in this area by contracting jointly for some services.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, I will call on the hon. Member for Calgary-East in just a moment. Prior to that, some hon. members may be surprised by the number I will use in this next statement, but 47 years ago the hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake entered the world.

Nokia Brier

MR. AMERY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a real pleasure to rise today to inform the Assembly of something that may very well shock you. In Calgary at this very moment grown men are throwing stones at buttons in houses. I'm of course speaking of the Nokia Brier, which is taking place in Calgary this week. The Brier dates to 1927, when eight teams gathered at the Granite Club in Toronto to crown the first Canadian curling champ. Now 75 years later the Nokia Brier features 12 teams representing all the provinces and territories of Canada.

Of course, Canada is recognized internationally as a dominant curling power. Thirteen of the last 20 Brier champions have gone on to win the world curling championship. Curling is a sport that is steeped in Canadian tradition, and most towns big enough to support a hockey team or a golf course will most certainly have a curling league alongside. Curling is a sport that is accessible to all ages and all skill levels and can accomplish a great deal in keeping people active, excited about competition, and involved in their community. Curling adds so much to so many Albertans' lives, and I am certainly glad to see that the Nokia Brier in Calgary is such a huge success.

Mr. Speaker, I'm especially glad to see that Alberta's own Randy Ferbey is leading the field in round robin play and will surely give the Russ Howard rink from New Brunswick a run for its money in the playdowns with their precision shooting and unmatched strategic skill.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I would like to cheer on all the competitors and hope that the Calgary Nokia Brier concludes with all the excitement and suspense that the sport of curling is known for.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Teachers' Labour Dispute

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Government actions in recent days and months has deeply affected teachers. I want to share with you the feelings of one teacher, Robin Kinasevich:

I write to you tonight in total despair! I am a teacher and I have taught for 15 years. I have found the job increasingly difficult over the years and feel that the recent treatment by this government has been the last straw for me. I am (or was) an excellent teacher. I was energetic and I put everything into my job. I did whatever I believed was best for kids, dedicating hours of my time and money for the extras that made the difference. I was passionate about the profession and held high expectations for my colleagues, students, student teachers, and myself. I was a perfectionist who put my job above all else. Somewhere and somehow, all this began to disappear.

I don't know what I am supposed to do any more. After years of being told by the government and the public that teachers are worthless, not valued members of society, lazy, not true professionals, not intelligent, overpaid, I am beginning to wonder whether there is some truth to it and whether the hours and dedication are worth it. I would guess that I am not the only teacher who feels this way. All incentive or will to be altruistic and hardworking has gone. We now have demoralized, tired teachers teaching our youth and we should be very worried. Teachers are leaving the profession in droves and I am now seriously considering it too.

If the province loses teachers like Robin, then the price we pay for a minister to claim he has won this dispute will never match the losses for our children and our schools.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Teachers' Labour Dispute

MR. LORD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak today on the labour troubles in education. I have seen the media comments, as we all have. I have talked to a number of often emotional teachers, parents, young people, various stakeholders, and of course I have been privy to discussions here in the Assembly on the subject of education costs. It has been the top priority lately, at the top of a very long list of top priorities. Hopefully our new process, which appeared, at one point at least, to have had the full support of all major stakeholders, will help to settle things down a bit. I think it's safe to say that everyone involved in this issue wishes to see things settle down a bit, to see an end to any emotional rhetoric, an end to any accusations or allegations or anger, that unfortunately is often the hallmark, indeed the blueprint of any major labour dispute.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to commend all my colleagues here today for their admirable conduct in the face of these challenges, for their levelheaded, professional, and caring comments, invariably praising teachers both publicly and privately, obviously recognizing the vital role that educators play in our society, and urging calm as we struggled to maintain stable classrooms. It isn't easy to always have to bite your tongue when you're being accused of doing things you didn't do. It isn't easy at all. In situations like this you always wonder if there isn't a better way, and you always wonder why the fact is that no strike ever seems to have had a happy ending. At best it seems it's always short-term gain but long-term pain and often it is just all pain, no gain. Well, you have to wonder why such things seem to happen.

I hope at this point that people will step back, take a deep breath, and reflect on the positives and on the good news. There is a lot that educators can be pleased about. For example, in the future all full-time retiring educators will have a secure pension that should be approaching as much as a million dollars in ultimate value, something that certainly no MLA elected since 1993 can look forward to. As for the taxpayers we all have to answer to, which includes teachers too, they can also breathe a little easier at this point since it appears that initial demands, which may have required tax increases of roughly $6,000 to $8,000 per household over the life of a typical mortgage . . .

THE SPEAKER: Thank you, hon. member, but it is two minutes.
The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Public Health Care System

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A common perception is that Alberta's public health care system and indeed all of Canada's traces its roots to the efforts of Tommy Douglas and his government in Saskatchewan. Further, many people feel that Alberta was among the last provinces to embrace public health care. Actually, Alberta's history of public health care, including public hospitals, goes back well before Tommy Douglas, and much of that history unfolded in rural Alberta.

From Cardston to Lamont, from central Alberta to the Peace River district people in rural Alberta developed their own public, not-for-profit hospitals and health care systems. A large portion of this province's health care system now directly reflects that heritage. Times have changed, medical care has changed, transportation systems have changed, but the importance of rural communities remains. The people of Alberta's rural communities deserve to have their health care provided in their own communities as much as possible. They pay the same taxes and premiums as everyone else, and they should not be treated like second-class citizens when it comes to health care.

Rural hospitals are the heart and soul of many rural communities in this province. They stand ready when people need serious treatment; they are a lifesaving resource in times of emergency. They provide good-quality jobs and stand as symbols to the vitality of the community past, present, and future. Alberta's health care system like Alberta's society is evolving and changes will occur, but if our rural health care system is weakened, we risk weakening the very foundations on which our public, not-for-profit health care system is built. We must ensure that changes to rural health care are not driven by the need to balance budgets but by the passion to provide rural Albertans with the health care they and all of us deserve.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Solicitor General.

MRS. FORSYTH: Yes. Mr. Speaker, I rise to table the five copies that I promised during question period.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Yes, Mr. Speaker. With your permission today I'm tabling a package of various newspaper articles reacting to the government's passage of Bill 12, the Education Services Settlement Act. Calgary Sun editor Licia Corbella calls the bill "the kind of diabolical government double-speak befitting George Orwell's novel, 1984." Roy Clancy of the Calgary Sun writes that the government's "heavyhanded approach demonstrated little but contempt" for teachers. Rick Bell of the Calgary Sun calls arbitration "arbitration in name only." Paula Simons of the Edmonton Journal writes: "It will be next to impossible for ethical arbitrators to come up with a just settlement." The Calgary Herald editorial board calls the Conservative government "a government that's losing its way." Even Edmonton Journal reporter Lorne Gunter disagrees with the bullying of teachers and points out that inconsistent negotiations with the public sector "will breed labour unrest."

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first is from a constituent, Heather Zwicker, who has given me a copy of an e-mail she sent to Premier Klein and Minister Oberg. As a professor and as a citizen she believes that "the teachers' strike registered concerns that were of vital importance to everybody in Alberta."

The second tabling I have, with the appropriate number of copies, is from Kathie Tourangeau, and she notes that "class size, working conditions and salary are all justifiable concerns of teachers. Bully tactics, such as Bill 12 is no way to address concerns or to solve education problems."

Thank you very much.

THE SPEAKER: Additional tablings?

Hon. members, I'm going to table now with the House copies of a news release that I issued earlier today announcing appointments to the Electoral Boundaries Commission. Upon the nomination by the President of Executive Council I've appointed Mr. Doug Graham, and upon the nomination by the President of Executive Council I've appointed Mr. Glen Clegg. Upon the nomination by the Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition I appointed Mr. Ernie Patterson, and upon the nomination by the Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition I appointed Ms Bauni Mackay. Earlier in the week the Lieutenant Governor in Council appointed Robert C. Clark as the chair of the commission.

head: Projected Government Business

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thank you. Yes, it's with great pleasure that I rise to ask: would the Government House Leader please share with the Assembly the projected government business for next week?

MR. HANCOCK: Mr. Speaker, I'd be delighted. On Monday, March 18, 2002, in the afternoon, because of the day and the wishes of the Assembly, at 1:30 p.m. we hope, after Government Motion 18 this afternoon and if it's the pleasure of the Assembly, that Prince Michael of Kent will address the Assembly. Then at 5:15 p.m. pursuant to Standing Orders and procedures of the House the throne speech would be engrossed and presented to Her Honour. At 9 p.m. under Government Motions I believe we'll have a government motion with respect to the spring and Easter break. Then under Government Bills and Orders for third reading Bill 17, Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2002. Actually, that would be in committee by then, I believe. This paper is difficult to follow.

On Tuesday, March 19, in the afternoon under Government Bills and Orders for second reading bills 14, 16, and 18. We would anticipate asking the House to recess at approximately 3:30 p.m. in preparation for the Budget Address at 4 p.m. under Government Motions. Then resuming at 8 p.m. under Government Bills and Orders the motion on the Budget Address, anticipating the response of the Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition; a third reading thereafter of Bill 17, committee for bills 3, 6, 7, 9, 13, and as per the Order Paper.

Wednesday, March 20, under Government Bills and Orders, Committee of Supply, the Legislative Assembly estimates, day 1 of 24, the Department of Seniors and as per the Order Paper. At 8 p.m. under Government Bills and Orders, Committee of Supply, day 2 of 24, the Department of Transportation and as per the Order Paper.

Thursday, March 21, in the afternoon under Government Bills and Orders, Committee of Supply, day 3 of 24, Government Services and as per the Order Paper.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, earlier this afternoon the hon. Government House Leader advised of a point of order. The hon. Government House Leader.

Point of Order Allegations Against a Member

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rose during a question in question period being raised by the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie. I don't have access as yet to the Blues, so I don't have the exact wording of the preamble and the question that was placed, but the exchange related to an exchange with the hon. the Solicitor General. I'm rising under 23(h), where members cannot make "allegations against another member"; 23(j), using "abusive or insulting language"; and House of Commons Procedure and Practice, which, Mr. Speaker, you were so kind to provide to House leaders when it came out and admonished us to read on a Saturday morning. I would refer to page 525, chapter 13, of that book and Beauchesne 485 and subsequent with respect to unparliamentary language.

Mr. Speaker, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie suggested in this House, used language to the effect that the hon. Solicitor General had misled the House or had lied to the House. That is a very unparliamentary statement to make in a question period or at any other time in the House.

Mr. Speaker, I'm reading from page 525 of the Rules of Order and Decorum in House of Commons Procedure and Practice, and it says:

The proceedings of the House are based on a long-standing tradition of respect for the integrity of all Members. Thus, the use of offensive, provocative or threatening language in the House is strictly forbidden. Personal attacks, insults [et cetera] are not in order. A direct charge or accusation against a Member may be made only by way of a substantive motion for which notice is required.

Accusing an hon. member and accusing a minister of lying to the House or misleading the House is a very, very offensive statement. It's a statement which should only be made if the member has proof positive, and then it should be made on notice to the House of intention to bring a question of privilege.

Now, I was here yesterday when the hon. Solicitor General was answering questions, I've had the benefit of reading Hansard, and I heard what was said in the questions and answers yesterday. I don't have the Blues, as I mentioned earlier, but I was here today for the exchange. In my humble opinion, the answers today were entirely consistent with the answers yesterday. The hon. member indicated yesterday in answer to a similar question exactly what she indicated today in the letter which she tabled just prior to this point in the proceedings.

Mr. Speaker, unless the member opposite has proof positive of a minister in this government and a member of this House lying in this Legislature or misleading this Legislature, that accusation ought not to be made. If they do have that proof, that accusation ought to be made at the appropriate time and place and in the appropriate manner. So I would ask that the hon. member withdraw those offensive remarks.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Traditionally, when I have used the term "mislead" in this Assembly, I have been quite prepared to withdraw that particular statement. However, this time it is with regret that I am unable to do that. If we take a look at the situation that has occurred here between yesterday and today, yesterday in this Assembly in answer to a question from Edmonton-Centre that sex offenders will be excused from meeting with their officers as frequently as in the past, the Solicitor General answered specifically no to that question. Today she clearly stated that there was a pilot project in place doing exactly this.

So our position, Mr. Speaker, is that this constitutes a contempt of the Legislative Assembly as outlined in the 22nd edition of Erskine May, chapter 8. Specifically, I would refer members to page 111, under Misconduct of Members or Officers: Members Deliberately Misleading the House, where it states:

The Commons may treat the making of a deliberately misleading statement as a contempt. In 1963 the House resolved that in making a personal statement which contained words which he later admitted not to be true, a former Member has been guilty of a grave contempt.

It was in this context that I used the term "mislead."

Once this point of order has been dealt with, I would ask for your direction in proceeding with the charge of contempt against the Solicitor General. I believe that what we do is give a notice and request for an investigation into the facts between yesterday's statements and today's, but I look for your direction in that regard once this point has been dealt with.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Solicitor General.

MRS. FORSYTH: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I feel that since the accusations are at me, I would like to clarify a few things.

I have the Hansard from yesterday, and in regard to the question from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, she said:

The government wants to make prisoners pay for room and board as a way to be tough on crime, yet low-risk parolees . . .

Now, parolees, first of all, are a federal issue.

. . . will be seeing their supervisors less often, and now we hear that it's being contemplated that sex offenders will also be excused from meeting with their parole officers as frequently. My question is to the Solicitor General. Can the Solicitor General confirm that her department has plans to reduce the reporting requirements of sex offender parolees . . .

Mrs. Forsyth: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to answer this question, and I'm pleased to get the facts out. I met with the community corrections people. Our priority is to make sure that Albertans are safe. No, we are not letting sex offenders out early. They still will be considered a high-risk offender, number one.

Then I refer to the letter that I tabled in the Legislature, and I have said in the letter:

On a limited . . . basis in selected locations, we will be exploring the amendment of supervision standards for offenders on probation who have not been identified as high risk or high profile.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, the chair does have the Blues, and this is what was said by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie:

Mr. Speaker, as the sex offenders are now considered to be low-risk and there is a pilot project in place, in fact she did mislead this House yesterday. Is the Solicitor General aware of her obligations as a minister and the penalties associated with breaking the public trust and not actually telling the truth on this floor?

The hon. Government House Leader raised a point of order, and I think a reading of the Blues clearly indicates that there is a point of order. Members should use language that is consistent with our rules of order and decorum and be respectful of the institution of parliament and all members. Any reference to misleading the House, not telling the truth, or lying is clearly offensive and has been ruled out of order on many occasions. All members are aware of the statement with respect to unparliamentary language that I circulated to all members at an earlier date and certainly referred to in Beauchesne 489. I do believe that there is a point of order, and I do believe that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie should withdraw her statements.

I also want to point out the following. It's been correctly identified by the Government House Leader that in House of Commons Procedure and Practice, at page 525 of the book that House leaders have, "personal attacks . . . are not in order." However, if "a direct charge or accusation against a Member" is to be made, it must be made "by way of a substantive motion." The appropriate way, should the Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie or any other member choose to raise a question of substantive accusation against another member, would be by way of, again, substantive motion; in other words, a question of privilege. But that is something that may or may not occur in the future.

What we have now with us is a point of order that was raised today. Arguments have been heard. I believe that it is a point of order, and I am going to ask the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie to withdraw her statements.

MS CARLSON: Mr. Speaker, I am quite happy to follow your advice and would respectfully withdraw the comments that were offensive to the member.

THE SPEAKER: Now the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands on another matter.

Privilege

Appointments to Electoral Boundaries Commission

MR. MASON: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of privilege. We have just had distributed a news release naming the members to the Electoral Boundaries Commission, including two persons nominated by the Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition. In the Electoral Boundaries Commission Act, section 2(1)(b), it says:

2 persons, who are not members of the Legislative Assembly, appointed by the Speaker of the Legislative Assembly on the nomination of the Leader of Her Majesty's loyal opposition in consultation with the leaders of the other opposition parties represented in the Legislative Assembly.

To the best of my knowledge and after consulting with the leader of the third party and with staff, the third party has not been consulted, as the act requires, in the appointment of the members of the Electoral Boundaries Commission. I must state that I am not certain how to proceed on this matter, Mr. Speaker, and would like your advice.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: Well, hon. member, the chair is actually not in a position to provide advice to hon. members in this kind of a context in terms of what they may choose to do or not choose to do. However, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands is correct about his interpretation of the act with respect to the nominees. The act clearly states that two members of the Electoral Boundaries Commission be nominated by the President of Executive Council and appointed by the Speaker. That's happened. It also correctly points out that the Leader of the Official Opposition is to consult with the leaders of other parties in the House. Just to make sure that that in fact happens, the chair, in this case the Speaker, did notify the President of Executive Council midweek asking for the nominees and also sent a memo to the Leader of the Official Opposition asking for the nominees, and included in the letter to the Leader of the Official Opposition was notification of the need to consult with other members. So the chair is in a position of having to believe that there was a consultation.

Now, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands stands in the House today and says that there wasn't any consultation. So the matter should be dealt with, then, in this way. It's now Thursday afternoon. The hon. member and his leader should avail themselves of a discussion with the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition to ascertain if a consultation did occur. If no consultation did occur and if what the hon. member is saying today in the House is correct, then I think that the hon. member on Monday should arrive here with a statement of privilege, and we'll have to determine how the Assembly and the chair would want to deal with this. In order to provide notice for a statement of privilege, my office would have to be notified at least two hours before the opening at 1:30.

I will ask the hon. member to have his leader consult with the Leader of the Official Opposition to be actually sure that no consultation occurred. If consultation occurred, well, of course, then there isn't a point. If there wasn't any consultation, then that's another matter that we'll have to look forward to.

His Royal Highness Prince Michael of Kent, KCVO

18. Mr. Hancock moved:

Be it resolved that in this Her Majesty the Queen of Canada's golden jubilee year, this Assembly invite His Royal Highness Prince Michael of Kent, KCVO, to the floor of this Chamber to address the Legislative Assembly on Monday, March 18, 2002, and that this address be the first order of business after the national anthem is sung. The ordinary business of the Assembly will resume upon the conclusion of His Royal Highness's address and the singing of God Save The Queen.

Be it further resolved that His Royal Highness's address become part of the permanent record of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You raised this potential with the Government House Leader and opposition House leaders early in February, as I recall, when the opportunity for this occasion arose, and asked whether we would give consent for this unusual and historic opportunity to occur. Each House leader consulted with their caucus, I believe – at least I consulted with our caucus; I assume that they consulted with their caucuses – and responded in the affirmative, that it would be an occasion where a member of the royal family, as I understand it, the only member of the royal family operating in that capacity that we might expect to be in attendance in the capital of our province during the jubilee year, might attend on this House, and as I understand it, all parties have agreed.

I think it is a great opportunity for us to again remind ourselves and all Albertans of the 50 years of reign of Her Majesty the Queen of Canada and the benefits of a constitutional monarchy. Mr. Speaker, I would commend this resolution to the House that all members might have the opportunity to have, again, a historic occasion, one which happens very rarely. I believe the last occasion was when Rick Hansen attended before the bar of the Assembly to address the House. It's a rare occasion but one which is entirely appropriate to celebrate the Queen's jubilee.

[Government Motion 18 carried]

THE SPEAKER: Just by way of addendum now that this matter has been concluded by the House, what would happen is that His Royal Highness would be invited to attend at this House after the prayer and after the singing of O Canada. He would be escorted up here, and the chair would move aside and allow him to speak for approximately five to seven minutes, and then he would depart.

head: Government Bills and Orders
Second Reading

Bill 17
Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2002

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Finance.

MRS. NELSON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to move second reading of Bill 17, the Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2002.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak to Bill 17 this afternoon. This year the total amount of interim supply being requested is approximately $4 billion. I would remind all hon. members of this Assembly that this is the second year in a row that this government has used this mechanism as a budgetary tool. Last year interim supply requests totaled $7.3 billion, or roughly 36 percent of the budgeted expense for 2001-2002.

Now, this government's reliance on this mechanism is further proof that this government cannot budget properly. It's doing its best, but it just cannot seem to get it right, unfortunately, Mr. Speaker. Instead, it spends and then slashes and then spends some more. When you think that this year it's $4 billion and last year it was $7 billion, well, last year was an election year, and perhaps that is the reason for the $7 billion total and the $4 billion total this year.

Certainly, Mr. Speaker, the objective of Bill 17 is certainly to seek legislative authority for the granting of interim supply for the expenses – and this includes operating expenses, some capital investment – and nonbudgetary disbursements which take place within the general revenue fund and of course the lottery fund. Now, if we were to break down the total amount of interim supply that is being requested, it would be broken down as follows: over $13.2 million in operating expense and capital investment for the Legislative Assembly; $3.8 million in operating expense and capital investment for government ministries; $42.4 million in nonbudgetary disbursements; and $234.7 million in payments through the lottery fund.

Interim supply is required to allow the government to operate until the passage of the 2002 budget by the end of May. I can understand some of the comments that are coming from the benches opposite,

Mr. Speaker, but while we on this side, the Alberta Liberals, do not want to hold up this legislation, we have serious concerns regarding the need to resort to this type of budgeting mechanism again this year. Last year's utilization of interim supply was due to the spring election. Now, what is the excuse this year? Once again, there is a distinct lack of explanation of how this new spending will contribute to meeting the defined outcomes and the performance criteria in the government business plans, such as those to help sustain the public health care system, solve the problems in public education, maintain our infrastructure programs, and prevent further tragedies involving our young people under provincial care.

Although we recognize that funding is required in the areas of public health care, public education, municipal infrastructure, and certainly Children's Services, we have serious concerns about the lack of planning this government continues to demonstrate with its now seemingly habitual use of interim supply. The lack of budget management has already been illustrated by the amount of unbudgeted spending brought in through supplementary supply over the past two years.

If the hon. Minister of Finance doesn't have reasonable controls over the amount of unbudgeted spending, how can we trust this government when it states to all audiences, large and small, that it has no more money? Is that now, yesterday, or tomorrow that they have no more money? I would again remind all hon. members of this Assembly that this is the second-largest amount of revenue that is to be collected in the history of this province in this fiscal year, that, as the hon. Minister of Justice has stated, is ending in the next couple of weeks. Now, Mr. Speaker, this government may not have any more money today, but their use of interim and supplementary supply in place of formal budgeting suggests that they certainly get money if and when they want it to spend on who knows what purposes.

There was certainly a reluctance to spend any money to resolve the dispute between the government themselves and the teaching profession, represented by the ATA, for the last six months. I can understand that there may be some extraordinary items that the public may not be aware about that are looming on the horizon for this government. One could certainly consider drought relief as a possible purpose. We certainly know that conditions are dry. It is snowing outside this Assembly this afternoon, and I certainly hope it continues to snow, because the entire province is in need of moisture. Whether it's in rain or in the form of a snowflake, it doesn't bother this member, but we certainly need precipitation. If the government has got a nest egg somewhere for drought relief, I think they should tell the teachers. Or if they need money because of the forest fire season, which is, I understand, going to unfortunately start a month earlier than usual, then please let the citizens know.

One of the main problems with this government has been their mismanagement of the budget. They've proven over their reign that they are incapable of managing cutbacks in any sort of intelligent manner. A percentage across the board is hardly innovative or prudent. They've also proven recently that they're incapable of thoughtful reinvestment. They increase spending by $2 billion; then they slash it again by 1 percent only months later. Instead, Mr. Speaker, this government put the province and its citizens on a roller-coaster ride of spend and slash, binge and sin, filling in the gapping holes with supplementary supply and interim supply. That is no way to run a $20 billion budget and no way to run the economy of a province such as Alberta.

There certainly has been robust growth. I attended the EDE luncheon today, Mr. Speaker. I think the speaker, Mr. Scott, indicated that there was $65 billion worth of economic development or projects going to be either built or in the planning stages in northern Alberta. This is certainly a positive thing, but I think we can manage things better.

Now, as it is, Mr. Speaker, it's as if Albertans have been driven around by a student driver in a manual transmission car. Everybody gets slammed back because the car jumps off the line, then we are thrown forward as it gets slammed into reverse, and then we're thrown back again, only to have the brakes put on moments later. This government doesn't know whether it's coming or going with its budgets. It doesn't know if it's in reverse or whether it's in park or whether it's in first gear. That is why they prefer to use this budget process. It's up; it's down. I would caution this government, with its habit of relying on supplementary and interim supply, to do the real funding allocations.

Now, the worst thing of all is that this government has refused to even consider better management practices in light of the well-known volatility in natural resource revenue. Yes, hon. members, I am going to get to the fiscal stabilization fund, the Nicol fund, because it is a worthwhile policy and it should be adopted by this government. If you look after 5 cents, the dollars will take care of themselves. That's exactly what the Nicol fund is, the fiscal stabilization fund.

Now, Mr. Speaker, prudent financial management and fiscal responsibility require the establishment of mechanisms within the budgeting process that not only protect the fiscal bottom line but sustain investments in our society that contribute to a healthy fiscal and social balance. I cannot understand why this government can't figure it out and implement better budgeting practices than merely spending and slashing on the fly. It's recognized on this side of the House that we need fundamental changes to the budget management process in Alberta to create certainty, predictability, stability, and sustainability for our local authorities.

Over the years Alberta Liberals have proposed a number of elements to improve the credibility and stability of the budget planning process, sustain our core programs in health care and education, and ensure that there is a fiscal and human balance in both good times and bad. These elements include amendments to require the government to table monthly budget updates so Albertans know where they stand on a regular basis, an independent assessment of provincial revenues by an independent source such as DRI, McGraw-Hill, or the WEFA Group, for example, in comparing these forecasts with those of Alberta Treasury. These forecasts will be tabled in the Assembly and subsequent monthly budget updates as well. We should establish a ministry performance measure and benchmark for variance between budgeted and actual revenues similar to what has been done in the State of Minnesota Finance Department.

We also should require in the budget the preparation of a fiscal strategy report with 10-year trends for major fiscal and economic indicators. I know the other day I was looking, Mr. Speaker, at a budget from two years ago, and I saw a 10-year forecast in natural gas prices, but I didn't see it for other matters.

Now, the establishment of a fiscal stability fund would ensure that strategic investments undertaken in our health care and education systems are sustainable over the long term, not relying on the volatility of our economy and revenues to guide budgetary decisions or priorities, particularly on the program side of the ledger. The fiscal stability fund would introduce greater stability and certainty in the budget process in Alberta and allow us to sustain our core social programs, which are the backbones of our competitiveness as a society.

I would like at this time to remind all hon. members of this Assembly that the province of Saskatchewan has a stability fund, and in their budgeting plans they had natural gas revenues that didn't meet expectations this fiscal year. I understand that they were hoping to use only $200 million out of their stabilization fund, and I believe they had to use close to $400 million or better to keep their budget and keep public health care funding that is needed, public education funding, and various government programs. They used that stability fund so that they could level out the ups and downs that this government is so affected by with international commodity prices for our valuable natural resources, which, unfortunately, are diminishing. I remind all hon. members of this Assembly that the western Canadian sedimentary basin is a mature gas basin, and we're going to have to work hard to keep up with current production levels.

Now, the issue of sustainability and stability is key to effective spending and tax policy. That is why the Alberta Liberals have been calling for the establishment of a fiscal stability fund within the budget planning process in this province for years, and the Nicol plan is the way that we all should go. A fiscal stability fund would allow spending and revenue commitments to be sustained over the course of the fiscal plan, not just for three months, Mr. Speaker.

Now, we all know that there are serious concerns with the precedent this government is setting with its continued use of interim supply. [interjection] Yes, everyone knows that. Why do we not question the need for new expenditures? What we question is a Minister of Finance who doesn't have the mind-set let alone the budget management and planning systems in place to craft a meaningful budget. Making two numbers at the bottom of the balance sheet is not brilliant fiscal management.

Mr. Speaker, this interim supply gives no indication that this practice will change. I'm not convinced of this, and furthermore the need for interim supply this year is highly questionable. Now, a cynic might be tempted to think that this government delayed the budget on purpose to avoid having to demonstrate that there is, indeed, money for the public education system that could've been put towards settling the teachers' strike. This plea of poverty or this vow of poverty that suddenly the Premier has taken after an election with a massive majority of 73, which has been diminished to 72 seats . . .

MR. GRAYDON: Seventy four.

MR. MacDONALD: Pardon me; 74 seats reduced to 73. Yes, I stand corrected.

Now, even more worrisome is the possibility that the delay was caused by a government that is confused, directionless, and incapable at this time of setting priorities anymore for Albertans. It's an old, tired government. Yes. The government may try, Mr. Speaker, to blame the unfortunate events of September 11 in New York City again for their inability to prepare for the coming year. How long will this government continue to blame this tragic event for their financial or fiscal mismanagement?

Normally, special warrants for spending occur only after spring elections. This government's use of interim supply this year suggests that it is well on its way to becoming an annual tool to push through massive spending plans without formally detailing what the money will be spent on until the budget is finally brought down. Some would say that this government is lazy. Others would say that this government is confused. With world events used as an excuse, I don't think that those events in the case of this province can be used as an excuse. We need to allocate, Mr. Speaker, proper taxpayer money. We need to allocate taxpayer money in a transparent and timely fashion, and the process that has evolved with this current government I do not believe is transparent, nor is it in a timely fashion.

Now, Mr. Speaker, in responding to interim supply, there are three major points and two technical points which emerge as part of Bill 17. The first point is that this government is using interim supply again this year for no apparent reason. Here we are requesting $4 billion in interim supply. This could be as much as 20 percent – 20 percent – of the total that will be budgeted for the entire fiscal year 2002-2003. I'm curious: what is the rationale for using interim supply this year? Is it political expediency? The second point is that this government continues to ignore budgets, yes, instead choosing to spend and slash on the fly. This is no way to run a railway, and it's no way to run a province.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. member, I must advise that the time allocation has now left us.

The hon. Member for Airdrie-Rocky View.

MS HALEY: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I won't take very long, but there were a couple of things I wanted to make a point on. When I hear the opposition member, you know – and I respect that he has a right to have his opinion, but I'm a little confused on some of his points. One of them is on the idea that it's not a transparent process. I guess I would like to say that in 1993 we brought in a process where the budget was open and actually transparent, the most transparent system probably anywhere in the world. I really would defy anybody to find a place that does even quarterly reporting let alone monthly as was suggested by the hon. member.

We have everything out there for people. It's on-line. It's published. It's in libraries. It's wherever you want to get it. People have access to this information. You know, we do a quarterly update, and we admit: okay, if oil has dropped off, we have to re-evaluate our budget. In an economy like Alberta's, the most volatile economy in North America, we have 15 percent jumps and spikes in highs and lows in oil and . . .

MR. MacDONALD: That's why we need the stabilization fund.

MS HALEY: Well, you know what? I did not even argue with you about that particular fund. It may well be a good idea. Perhaps it's something that the Treasurer will consider looking at when she does the review, and I think that's awesome.

But to stand there and say after that that somehow it's not an open and transparent process just absolutely staggers my imagination. Please tell me what other Legislature anywhere in the world does that on a quarterly basis let alone on an annual basis. You know, why are we doing an interim supply? We have a fiscal year-end, March 31. Well, holy cow. Did somebody just invent that? No, actually it's been hanging out there for decades now. Why do we have an interim supply? Because the budget won't be completed by March 31.

AN HON. MEMBER: Why not?

MS HALEY: Well, why not indeed, hon. member. Let's go back. Let's think here for just a minute. What happened? No, it doesn't matter about historical events. We don't have to worry about that. You know, it doesn't matter what happened on September 11. That was then and this is now. You betcha. Something happened on September 11 that had never happened before. You know, back in July the Provincial Treasurer indicated to Albertans that things weren't maybe going quite as well, that maybe the surplus had dropped about $400 million by that point and that what we were projecting wasn't actually happening because oil and gas was actually still not at $16. Even though we budgeted it way down at $3.65, it wasn't making it anymore.

Our revenues were in fact dropping off. [interjection] No, Hugh. You had your chance; it's my turn now. We went through a process between July, August, and September where we watched what we had projected as an $800 million surplus go away, all the way down to around $12 million. Then September 11 occurred, and a world that was already teetering on the brink of a recession escalated the cycle. The downward cycle that some people had anticipated would take 18 to 24 months to actually complete happened within the space of weeks. This government, one of the few governments in North America, reacted to that. We went back, we readjusted our budgets, and we tried, without causing too much pain to anybody, to control the loss of revenue. Without wiping anybody out, we reduced the rates of increases. We actually went in, we hurt transportation and we hurt infrastructure, and we did that to protect health care and education.

If anybody isn't aware of what happened, yes, good news now: maybe we're starting to come out of this. The good news is that we'll probably come out of it as fast as we went into it, and maybe things will stabilize again. But this is Alberta, and we have always had problems with rising and falling revenues. We are no longer 40 or 50 percent dependent on oil and gas revenues in this province – and thank God for that – but 15 to 20 percent of our budget is still dependent on those two sources. We've managed to help with hard, tremendous work by Albertans to diversify this economy to the point where we are not totally getting wiped out when oil and gas tanks on us like it just did. But, you know, to think that somehow we're doing something wrong by bringing in an interim supply is absolutely ludicrous.

You know, Mr. Speaker, really all I wanted to say was that I think we've got an open and honest process that is transparent. Everybody in Alberta has access to this information, and the innuendo that somehow it's not is offensive to me.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: Standing Order 29 kicks in. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: No. I was going to speak, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: Well, we first of all have to deal with Standing Order 29.

No questions then? Hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, you have a question? Proceed.

MR. MacDONALD: Yes, Mr. Speaker. To the hon. Member for Airdrie-Rocky View: has the hon. member had an opportunity to have a look at retail sales for Albertans since September 11, and has there been a significant decline in retail sales?

MS HALEY: Mr. Speaker, I don't have that kind of data in front of me, but my belief would be that retail sales have actually done very well. Albertans are fortunate, and I believe I mentioned that and that we are, of all the provinces and of all of the U.S. states, I believe in a better position than anybody else to withstand what went on. But it doesn't take anything away from the fact that oil and gas dropped, and we still rely on that huge important sector to bring stability to this province.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the hon. member: is the hon. member satisfied with the amount of royalties that are collected by the government in relation to natural gas liquids and specifically ethane?

Thank you.

MS HALEY: This is the ethane question. We tried this one the other day, and you know what? We brought in a great new generic formula for oil royalties that I think was absolutely brilliant. [interjection] Well, you know, you ask a question. I get to answer it my way. The generic formula was brilliant, and within 20 years the people of Alberta will not be able to believe how much money they get in royalties. Natural gas? Yes, I think it's totally fair. Ethane? Talk to your National Energy Board, appointed by the federal Liberals, as to why they didn't stop any of the liquids from being kept in Alberta.

THE SPEAKER: Is that enough, hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar?

MR. MacDONALD: Mr. Speaker, the bell rang; didn't it? That's fine.

THE SPEAKER: Okay. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glen-garry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I welcome the opportunity to make some comments on Bill 17, the Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2002. I would think that many of the comments that we've heard and will hear are comments that were spoken in this House before, and they were spoken at a time back in the '80s when again our oil and gas revenues plummeted because of changes in the world market and the world demand.

3:30

At that time, we didn't handle things very well, and I think that all members in the House today would certainly say that the debt that we are now continually trying to pay off was created because of a very poor budget management process here in the province. That certainly highlighted, Mr. Speaker, the fact that we do have a roller-coaster economy. It also highlighted the fact that we are tied very closely to what is happening in the rest of the world, particularly when we look at the prices of natural gas and oil.

So we have had the experience and quite recently, in the last two decades, of periods in our history where we have been extremely fortunate to have high natural gas and oil prices, and that is in relation to provincial revenues. But we've also had the occasion – and I think back to the Getty days – when oil and gas prices plummeted further than we could ever, ever have expected, and these prices plummeted worldwide, Mr. Speaker. It was not something that was created here in Canada. When the facts are known, we as Canadian producers certainly do struggle or don't struggle, but we are a small part of this whole process when we think of the amount of oil that is being produced, particularly in the Persian Gulf region and other countries that we have in the past relied heavily on for their oil.

Having said all that, yes, certainly we do require some changes, and the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar did outline some of those. Some of these fundamental changes to the budget management process here in the province are the things that we require in order to establish predictable, stable, sustainable revenues for our local authorities. It is something, Mr. Speaker, that has been asked for by our municipalities. It is something that has been asked for by our heavy road construction industry. It is something that our health authorities have asked for. It is something that our school boards have asked for. If we would have had long-term, predictable, stable, sustainable funding to these different organizations, we certainly wouldn't have just experienced the biggest strike in Alberta's history.

But what are some of these fundamental changes that could occur in the budgetary process where we would not be coming here to the Assembly roughly three weeks before the end of our fiscal year and asking for $4 billion? Certainly the first thing is, Mr. Speaker, that when we start the spring sitting of the Legislature on February 26, I would hope and all Albertans would hope that we would not rush through a budget in those two weeks and get it passed so that we do not have to go to something like the interim supply. I would also expect that having known year to year to year that we do require a budget in place, we would not be starting to sit in this Legislature at such a late date as we have this year. We could have started this whole process much earlier in the year, perhaps even the second or third week in January, and we could have had everything we need in place.

Now, we certainly aren't overburdened, Mr. Speaker, when we look at the number of days that we sit in this Legislature as compared to other Legislatures. I know in conversations with many of our federal MPs that they would love a work schedule where they only sit for 37 days in the House of Commons. They would love that. That's both from the governing party and from the opposition parties.

What can we do here when we're looking at the interim supply, and what are some of these changes we could make? Well, certainly we have said on many occasions that we do have a proposal for the fiscal stability fund. What this requires is planning. It's also putting into practice the knowledge that we have gained with this boom and bust economy, that we cannot in periods of good times be spending all our money. When we have to start tightening the belt, the revenues are not there, and we, as a result, see what's happening in the whole process this particular year. In fact, I think the majority of departments were asked to cut back 1 percent. Now, this is even before September 11. This is at a time less than six months away from when we announced the largest single surplus in the province's history. This, Mr. Speaker, is at a time when we are experiencing probably the second greatest amount of revenue that this province has ever experienced. Yet we are asking for cutbacks that quickly. It really does indicate that our budgetary process needs some changing.

Certainly one of those changes that I think would be welcome is amendments to require the government to table monthly budget updates so that Albertans know where they stand on a regular basis. Let's take the road builders association of Alberta. These are people that have tremendous amounts of inventory. They have tremendous long-term commitments in paying for some of this machinery, which is very, very expensive, as we all know. So what that would do is it would certainly give them a little indicator that perhaps things were going to improve. It would certainly give them some indicator that our revenues were going to decrease. Something like this would certainly help them a lot more in making their plans as to where they're going. Presently, Mr. Speaker, they weren't given much of a warning. They went on the onetime spending model, on what we hope to have. As a result, the industry is going to be cut back.

I don't want to guess too much or try to anticipate what the budget is going to provide for these people, but their best estimate today, Mr. Speaker, is that they are going to have a drop of $700 million in provisions for new construction and for maintaining our roads here in this province. That's a huge, huge impact on that industry. As a result, what we also expect is that many jobs are going to be lost this summer. Not only that, some businesses that require stable funding, predictable funding, sustainable funding are certainly going to go out of business.

We know that this might be short-term for us as a province, but for those people that go out of business, for those people that lose jobs as a result of these cutbacks, they're going to move on and find something else. So when the whole economy turns around, when our revenues get back up to where they were, then of course we're going to be strapped for that type of experienced worker; we're going to be strapped for those types of companies that can provide the services that we as a province wish for. So definitely we do need a better process.

As well, Mr. Speaker, when we look at the interim supply estimates, we see a one-line item, for example, to support the Legislative Assembly, we have a one-line item for the office of the Auditor General, and we can continue down the list here. We look, for example, under Government. Agriculture, Food and Rural Development requires $102 million. Now, if we took this business plan into any financial institution in this province, we would not be approved for a loan. We would not be approved for a loan.

I talked to a young man here just a couple of days ago that went into the bank, one of our larger chartered banks in the country, as a young fellow just starting out as a mechanic. He wanted to buy himself a toolbox and many tools, and the total bill was going to come to somewhere in the neighbourhood of $2,800. So he went into the bank to borrow $2,800 so he could purchase the tools he required to work in his field as a mechanic, and the bank told him no. He did not qualify for a line of credit. They don't give loans for under $5,000. So this young man was turned down by the bank. He was quite shocked.

If we had to go to a financial institution ourselves, we would be turned down. Yet here we are, responsible for somewhere in the neighbourhood of $20 billion of taxpayers' money, and we're coming to say: well, we didn't get our homework done, we didn't get the budget put in place in time, so advance us $4 billion. Probably I am thinking ahead here about what the budget might have as a total figure, but if we look at $20 billion again, then we are looking at 20 percent of our entire budget for next year that we are asking to be advanced because we didn't get the job done. There has to be a better way, and it's something that we can't continually do year after year after year.

I would hope, Mr. Speaker, that in this province we never have to get back to $10 per barrel for oil. I would hope that our revenues from natural gas never dip much lower.

DR. TAFT: They're going up now. Twenty-four bucks.

MR. BONNER: Well, good, because we require these revenues. We cannot in this province, Mr. Speaker, make more cuts to essential services like health care, education, funding for our municipalities, for children's services. We cannot continue to make cuts in our human services programs because of a poor budgetary process.

So, Mr. Speaker, the reality of the situation is that all of these departments require this money to operate. Will I be voting against this bill? No. But thank you for this opportunity to make a few comments.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: No questions? Then the hon. Government House Leader on the debate.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I just wanted to make a few comments, because I've been sitting here listening intently to debate this afternoon and I, for the most part, didn't really believe we were talking about interim supply. Interim supply is voting supply so that government can pay its bills, so that we can pay the people who work for the public of Alberta in April and in May while we're doing the fullness of debate and the fullness of discussion in Committee of Supply on the budget. We have a calendar of 24 days, as we count them, of Committee of Supply. That's a mechanism which, quite frankly, the opposition over the years has requested, and we've been happy this year to acquiesce in amendments to the rules so that the Committee of Supply comes back into the full House, so there are no more A, B, C, and D subcommittees, so that Committee of Supply gets a proper examination of every department on a department-by-department basis through the fullness of time, over a full month almost, of this House. And it's quite appropriate that we spend that kind of time to examine department by department the spending estimates of government before we vote supply for the full year, but during that process of course the bills still have to be paid. The people who work for the people of Alberta, the civil servants, would like to feed their families and pay their mortgages. That's just a reality of life.

Now, if we don't pass interim supply, if we don't bring forward interim supply, then those bills don't get paid after March 31. That is simple fact. So, Mr. Speaker, when members are speaking to this bill and we're in second reading, this is based on the principle of the bill. The principle of the bill is that we should continue to pay the people who work for us as we move forward and while we're looking at the full supply, which is coming in, as you know, on Tuesday.

The first point I wanted to make. The Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar went on at some length about bringing in interim supply and this being a tool that the government was beginning to use more and more and how that exhibited bad planning. Well, quite frankly, Mr. Speaker, it's good planning. It's good planning to be able to pay your bills when they fall due. It's good planning to be in a place to give paycheques to people who work for you when they earn them. That is good planning, and that's planning that we should do.

Now, should we rush through a budget in order to be able to do that? Should we abrogate the normal examination of accounts? No, we should not. Should we advance a budget date artificially so that we bring in a budget before we're absolutely ready to do it and have dealt with all the issues that are extant, have dealt with all the issues about revenue and expenditure, and have looked carefully at all the needs? Should government table a budget before the budget is ready? No. That's why there's a tool available to parliaments to vote interim supply, and that's what we're talking about, interim supply.

The Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar talked about: no apparent reason. Those were the words he used. Well, the apparent reason is that we should pay our bills as they fall due as we expect everybody else to do, and we should not rush the process of looking at estimates in order to do that. We should take the full amount of time that's necessary to examine the expenditures of government because there cannot be, in my humble opinion, any more important obligation and duty of legislators than to examine the estimates of government and make sure that government is held accountable to the Legislature for its spending.

Then the question comes up that voting interim supply – I think the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry said that if you went to the bank to get a loan, you wouldn't get the money. Well, I don't know any bank that doesn't loan on guarantee. The bottom line is that we have approximately $20 billion worth of revenue. We'll find out what the actual projections for next year are going to be – if "actual projections" isn't an oxymoron – next Tuesday. But we know with a great deal of certainty that there's going to be a minimum of $15 billion worth of revenue even if everything goes bad, and last year there was $21 billion or so of revenue. So to borrow $4 billion worth of revenue against that is not really a bad loan on behalf of a bank. I can't imagine why the hon. member's bank would be turning him down or the hon. member's bank would be turning government down. The bottom line is that you're talking about a modest apportion of the spending of government to be voted in interim supply so that the bills could be paid, but we do a thorough and complete examination.

Discussion of other issues such as a stabilization fund is an interesting discussion opportunity but not relevant to voting interim supply. I'm sure that in the fullness of time in the discussion when we talk about the full budget, the budget for the year and what we should be doing, discussions of fiscal stability funds and those sorts of things might well come up.

Mr. Speaker, I only rose to try and make it extremely clear and apparent to members opposite that when we're talking about interim supply and they say that there's no apparent reason, I think they'll find that there are many, many people who work for Albertans who would like to be paid, who want to feed their families, who want to pay the mortgages on their house, who want to pay their bills when they fall due. They have that expectation, they're entitled to that expectation, and to suggest that we shouldn't be bringing interim supply to meet that because for some reason the Legislature should've been called earlier, in somebody's humble viewpoint, or because we should've rushed a budget through earlier, in somebody's humble viewpoint, is totally inappropriate. Interim supply is a time-honoured practice of parliaments and should be voted, and I'd encourage all members to vote for this bill.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry with a question.

MR. BONNER: Yes. I would like to pose to the hon. minister: does he think that 20 percent of our provincial budget, which is $4 billion, is only modest?

MR. HANCOCK: Is only what?

MR. BONNER: The question was: why does the minister think that 20 percent of our budget for 2002-2003, which amounts to $4 billion, is only modest?

MR. HANCOCK: Well, everything is relative, Mr. Speaker. If it were my money, $4 billion would not be modest, but $4 billion in the context of a $20 billion or $18 billion or $16 billion budget is modest. It's modest because . . .

MR. HUTTON: Context.

MR. HANCOCK: . . . you know that in the context of what we're speaking – thank you, Edmonton-Glenora – it's a modest portion of the total amount. And when you're talking about the time periods and the fact that we're going to go through the process, one knows relatively handily that we're going to be spending more than that in this fiscal year.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Okay. Second question, then, hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. If we go back to the 7th of January and we exclude Family Day and we exclude spring break, which is coming next week, that gives us a total of 43 days that we could've had a budget presented in this House. We could've debated that budget. We could've passed it. Is the minister saying that this is not adequate time?

MR. HANCOCK: Not at all, Mr. Speaker. I'm only saying that the fact that there are 31 days in any given month and 30 in another given month is not relevant to the calendar or operation of a government. What's relevant to the calendar in the operation of government is when you've got a proposed legislative schedule ready to go to the Legislature, when you've got a budget ready to go to the Legislature, when you have dealt with issues sufficiently to bring them forward to the Legislature for approval, and if you're going through processes, they take time and you should do them in the fullness of time. Over the course of the last six months there has been a considerable examination of processes, and we go to the Legislature when we're ready to go to the Legislature to do the business of the people of Alberta.

MR. KNIGHT: Mr. Speaker, there seems to be some concern with respect to the $4 billion and the fact that we may have to borrow this money. I'd like a little clarification. Perhaps you could help me out. The hon. minister might be able to help me here. Which Canadian political jurisdiction has the highest bond rating?

MR. HANCOCK: Well, Mr. Speaker, I would be delighted to answer that. I'm sure that Alberta has the highest bond rating, but I wouldn't want to leave any illusions as to the concept that Alberta would have to borrow to pay its bills. Alberta is in the best financial position of any government in this country and, quite frankly, I think any government in North America. This province is on a stable and sound footing and doesn't have to borrow to pay its bills. The allusion to borrowing was only to deal with the hon. member opposite, who felt that a place that's in the best fiscal condition of any place in North America couldn't get money from a bank if it wanted to.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: We still have time for another question, if there is one. If not, we'll continue the debate. On the debate, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: On the debate, Mr. Speaker. Thank you. Yes, like my colleagues I also rise to raise some issues and concerns about Bill 17. I was struck by the comments of the Government House Leader and amused and a bit bemused as well, but we'll get to that in a minute.

The size of this bill certainly begs comment, and I hope all Members of this Legislative Assembly will partake in the discussion here. I mean, after all, this is a $4 billion bill. Now, in the opinion of the Government House Leader, that's just a modest sum, but to all of us and to all Albertans that's a substantial amount of money. Even in terms of what's relative or not, that is, after all, 20 percent of the provincial budget, so surely we all have an opinion on how 20 percent of the budget should be spent.

Just to put some numbers on the record here: Agriculture, Food and Rural Development, $102 million in this bill; Children's Services, certainly an area of great concern, $122 million; Community Development, $125 million. Then the real whopper here:

Health and Wellness, $1,530,000,000. That's – I'm going to speculate – close to 25 percent of what's likely to be the Department of Health and Wellness budget. Maybe the hon. Treasurer could correct me. Human Resources and Employment is $318 million. Infrastructure is $280 million. Learning is $588 million, and I don't know if that includes the 6 percent, or the 4 and 2, or not. Sustainable Resource Development is $102 million. Transportation is $139 million. This is a significant bill with a lot of significant sums of money included in it.

I think the fundamental concern and the fundamental dispute I would have with the view of the Government House Leader is with the process here. I think ultimately we will support this bill because we do acknowledge that civil servants need to be paid, that people on PDD need their benefits, that the health care system needs to continue to operate. But what's happened under this government is that the budget process has become almost a sham. It's become so porous as to resemble Swiss cheese, and I think we might want to slice it up as if it were Swiss cheese. It used to be that the budget process was a really firm, tough process. It used to be that budgets were approved before the beginning of the fiscal year. Now, there's a novel idea. How about approving budgets before the beginning of the fiscal year?

We had earlier today the Minister of Health and Wellness indicate that he was expecting business plans from the regional health authorities, due April 17. Now, the business plans of the regional health authorities are due April 17. When does their fiscal year begin? It begins April 1. Those plans will come to his department on the 17th of April, 17 days after the fiscal year has begun. Then his department will take weeks and possibly months to go through the business plans. It may well be that the first quarter will be over before the business plans are approved. In many ways it's like letting the horse out of the barn and then closing the barn door.

No wonder we've seen situations like we saw last year in which the health care budget is changed and changed and changed again, having to be refined over and over. Why not begin the budgeting process earlier, as my hon. colleague for Edmonton-Glenarry suggested? Why not have this Legislature sit in January – and I'm sure the Treasurer will be paying careful attention to my comments here – and introduce the budget in January so that we can have a full debate and a proper vote on the budget before the fiscal year begins? This is not a way to manage the provincial fiscal situation. The budget should be a foundation for stability. Government managers, MLAs, and members of the public should know in advance how their money is going to be spent. Instead, under this government the budget has become a source of instability.

Last year, my first year as an MLA, we voted on the budget and approved the budget as an Assembly on I think it was something like May 29. Somebody can correct me. On July 7, a mere six weeks after voting on the budget, the Department of Health and Wellness came forward and indicated that there were substantial changes. I'm trying to remember the figure, but it was $200 million in changes a mere six weeks after we'd approved the budget. Then in late August two major regional health authorities came forward with a combined total of over $70 million in deficits. Then in October the budget was rearranged. What sort of planning is that? What sort of discipline is that?

I think we all need to be concerned about improving our budgeting process. I think that the budget should be pulled together well in advance of the beginning of the fiscal year and should be presented to us to go through, as the Government House Leader has said, department by department, day by day, and then to approve in advance of the beginning of the fiscal year.

We could go through some of the technical aspects of the budget reporting mechanisms. However, I think the crucial point, the fundamental point, is that we will end up approving a budget that is already 20 percent spent, and we are as a result forced to vote on this bill, for which we will have no meaningful detail. Again, I'm open to correction, but I believe that we end up making ultimately a single vote in which both operating and capital expenses are combined. So we have no idea – no idea – in voting $4 billion, whether 10 percent or 20 percent or 40 percent or whatever percent is going to capital as opposed to operating. That's a significant problem, and I'm sure the Government House Leader would agree. [interjection] Pardon me? [interjection] I will repeat one more time.

The problem with the process right now is that our debates in the Committee of Supply will be occurring into the fiscal year under consideration. I think that proper planning almost by definition means that you prepare and you do things in advance. You think through in advance what you're doing. I think we run the risk here – we're not running a risk; it is an actuality that we are budgeting as we go. That's simply not adequate. So having obtained the full attention of the Treasurer and the Government House Leader . . .

MR. BONNER: Would IBM run that way or Microsoft?

DR. TAFT: No, I would hope not.

I do want to note a couple of other concerns. Both the Auditor General and the Alberta Financial Review Commission have recommended a clear separation of operating expenses and capital investments so that we can strengthen accountability and evaluate the effectiveness of programs. Once again, unfortunately, we're seeing both of those collapsed into a single vote. I guess in the interests of ensuring openness, accountability, and transparency and imposing a rigorous fiscal discipline, that has, frankly, slipped through the fingers of this government, we will have to be putting the ministers one by one on the hot seat during Committee of Supply. Unfortunately, that will be well into the beginning of the fiscal year.

My final comment. I make this plea eye to eye with the Treasurer: next year let's bring the budget in on time so that we can actually approve it before the beginning of the fiscal year.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Questions? The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Yes. Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member were to answer any questions, I would be asking him if he actually and fundamentally believed that any of the department estimates that are set out in Bill 17 for expenditure, if he actually believed that there's any remote possibility that we would not be paying the people who work for this government for the first two months of the year, that we would not be buying the supplies, turning on the heat, and doing those things, if he thought there was any remote possibility that we wouldn't use those moneys in an appropriate way and that any of the budgeting issues that might come up could certainly be dealt with thoroughly in Committee of Supply. But I know he wouldn't answer that question anyway.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenarry to ask a question.

MR. BONNER: Yes. I would like to take this opportunity, as well, Mr. Speaker, to make some comments on just what was said here. All hon. members in this House realize the importance of paying the bills. We realize the importance of paying our workers. We realize more so than the government that we have financial commitments to meet and that they have not done that in an orderly, proper fashion. Time after time we come back for interim supply, when they could move their budget process up and have it done before the end of the fiscal year.

Third Reading

Bill 1

Queen Elizabeth II Golden Jubilee Recognition Act

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Learning.

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed an honour for me to move third reading of Bill 1, Queen Elizabeth II Golden Jubilee Recognition Act.

Mr. Speaker, there has been good debate on Bill 1. It is a very good bill. What it does is establish three different scholarships and medals. The first one, of course, is the Queen's Golden Jubilee Citizenship Medal, the second one is the Queen's golden jubilee scholarship for the visual and performing arts, and the third one is the Premier's citizenship award in recognition of the Queen's golden jubilee. Considering that on Monday Prince Michael of Kent will be attending this Assembly, I do not see any more fitting recognition of the Queen than Bill 1. I believe that if we can pass this today in third reading and if we can communicate this to the prince when he comes on Monday, he will be able to take this back directly to the Queen and show her that we in Alberta are extremely proud of her, that we in Alberta want to recognize her golden jubilee, and that we have put her recognition towards the most important thing possible, which is scholarships for our students.

So, Mr. Speaker, I would urge everyone in the Assembly to support Bill 1, to vote for Bill 1, and if at all possible, with the will of the Assembly pass Bill 1 today so that we can tell Prince Michael of Kent on Monday what we have done so that he can take it back to the Queen.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise and certainly would like to support this legislation. I've been convinced by the Minister of Learning that certainly this is worth while. Now, the three scholarships that have been outlined here are going to be very, very important in the future of this province. I can certainly see that well into the future families will look back with pride when one of their members is perhaps lucky enough to be the recipient of one of these scholarships.

However, in light of this bill and my support of it, I would like to caution this House that if we have a look through it, we'll recognize that there is another side to this issue, and that's the high cost of tuition in this province. Tuition fees have gone nowhere but up, and we have to recognize this. When someone receives a scholarship, certainly the money that's involved can be used to pay for tuition, but we also have to consider the road that these students travel to qualify for the granting of awards and scholarships. The majority of those students are going to be coming from the public education system, and the public education system in this province has gone through some recent turbulent times. There's no doubt about that.

In the last six months certainly there has been significant attention paid to our public education system and those who work inside it to provide the very sound foundation for all Alberta students who are enrolled in the public school system, whether it's in the separate or what we know as the public system in this city.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, we must not forget that the recipients of these scholarships are going to have to have a sound base for their education. In the granting of awards and scholarships under this bill, I would encourage all government members in particular to please recognize the role of the public education system and those teachers who work very, very hard in that system to ensure that people will make the grade, so to speak, so that they can be eligible for either the Queen's Golden Jubilee Citizenship Medal, the Queen's golden jubilee scholarship for the visual and performing arts, or the Premier's citizenship award in recognition of the Queen's golden jubilee. Let's use this bill as a commitment to public education in this province.

Thank you very much.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, also, have just a few short comments on Bill 1, Queen Elizabeth II Golden Jubilee Recognition Act. I would echo the hon. Learning minister's comments of how proud we all are that Prince Michael of Kent will be taking back the information to the Queen that we have named these most honourable awards in her name. Certainly, as the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar has indicated, our students today need every break they can get, even our best students. I think it is a particularly excellent time to remember that the achievement of these students to qualify for these has been brought around and brought to that level by the exceptionally top-notch public education system that we have in this province. Without a doubt, I know that all members of this House would say that the primary reason for that is the dedication, the hard work, and the excellence and professionalism displayed by our teachers regardless of the circumstances they are put under.

So we are in favour of this particular bill, Mr. Speaker, and I know that all members of this House are going to support it. I would certainly urge any that are even questioning supporting it to support it. Just as a little example of the need for these types of scholarships: my oldest daughter, who graduated from the faculty of agriculture. [interjection] Yes, the faculty of agriculture. Quite a different line that you have to take to become a registered dietician in this province, but that's what she did. In the course of her attending university for four years to get that degree, her tuition fees doubled. So the need is definitely here. We need not only these scholarships for our students, but we have to provide much more financial assistance to them or at least stabilize the cost of their tuition in university.

So with those comments, Mr. Speaker, I will take my seat. Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Lacombe-Stettler.

MRS. GORDON: Mr. Speaker, I just want to go on record as thanking the Premier and those responsible for allowing this to be Bill 1. I think that this provides a further opportunity for all the students that reside in the Lacombe-Stettler constituency, and I would go further than the last couple of speakers have gone. This will go for all students regardless of whether they are part of the public system or attend independent private schools or through the home system.

I think that we are very, very lucky in Alberta. I know that an educator told me two or three weeks ago that there are more scholarships available for Alberta students than any other jurisdiction in Canada, and that not only goes from the government's perspective, but it also goes to the private sector, who very much work to ensure that the students graduating from high school are able to go on to postsecondary education, often with the help of scholarships. I can't think right off the top of my head, but I'm sure someone can help me out here. If you qualify for all three years of the Rutherford scholarships . . .

AN HON. MEMBER: It's $1,500.

MRS. GORDON: It's $1,500. Thank you, hon. member. What a great start for a student as they leave high school. Now we can add this, as well, to commemorate Queen Elizabeth, and I think it is only fitting that we pass this bill today so that we can pass along what has happened here and it can go back to the Queen.

So I just want to say on behalf of my students and their parents: thank you once again for helping those that are willing to work hard and compete for these scholarships. If the will is there, we have found a way, and I want to thank the corporate people, the private companies that also make sure that scholarships are available.

Thank you.

THE CHAIR: I'd like to call the Committee of the Whole to order.

Bill 5 Interjurisdictional Support Orders Act

THE CHAIR: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this act? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It's with interest that I join in the debate at committee on Bill 5, the Interjurisdictional Support Orders Act, as sponsored by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder. Certainly if we look at the bill, as we walk through it, it appears to be based on legislation developed by various jurisdictions and, as I understand it, has been passed in the Assembly in Manitoba. Similar legislation has also been introduced in Ontario and also in the Yukon.

Now, hopefully the intent of this legislation will work, and that is to improve the way support orders may be obtained or varied where the claimant and the respondent are living in separate jurisdictions. The legislation replaces Alberta's current Reciprocal Enforcement of Maintenance Orders Act, and I think this is certainly going to be an improvement, Mr. Chairman.

The improvement in the process for obtaining and varying support orders where the claimant and, as I said earlier, the respondent live in separate or different provinces: the new legislation will also deal with how support orders made outside of Alberta can be registered and enforced in Alberta. Now, in part 1, the claims for support where no previous order exists and the claimant resides in Alberta, this applies only where there's no support order in effect for the claimant or for the children that are involved.

We need to have a look here and see what the support applications are. We can go through them, and there are documents, including sworn evidence. Of course, this is forwarded to the respondent's jurisdiction for a court hearing, and additional evidence can be requested from Alberta. I think that is fair. The hearing decision from the reciprocating jurisdiction is communicated to the Alberta court, and the court communicates with the claimant. Perhaps the hon. member can explain to the House how quickly this will happen. I think it will be a decrease in the time – I certainly hope so – to resolve this issue. But we need to go further, Mr. Chairman, and have a look at the information that the court must consider and all evidence and the documents that should be supplied.

Now, the court must direct designated authorities to any further documents or evidence needed, and that's again fair. The court can adjourn a hearing and make an interim support order if it deems appropriate, and if additional information is not forthcoming within a time frame – it's a year and a half here – the court may dismiss the support application and terminate an interim support order.

It's important that people be notified of these proceedings, Mr. Chairman. Naturally, respondents living in Alberta, as I understand it, will be notified of court hearing, and if respondents are not residing in this province and the court knows their whereabouts, the support application is forwarded to the jurisdiction. If the respondent's whereabouts are unknown, then the application is returned to the submitting jurisdiction.

Before, as I understand it, there was no required process, and I don't know how different this is from the Ontario legislation. In the process of discussion here at committee perhaps that can be clarified for not only this member but other members of the House. I would have to ask the question: why isn't the process the same as that for the restoration and enforcement of orders made outside of Alberta at this time?

Mr. Chairman, we have to have a look at part 2 here and the definitions, the difference between extraprovincial orders and foreign orders. Now, it's fine to talk about, you know, one province to another, but if we look at foreign orders, am I correct in concluding that they are defined as support orders, interim support orders, or support variations made in only the reciprocating jurisdictions outside Canada but do not include any provisional orders?

Now, I haven't had a case in the constituency. Certainly I've had cases or files dealing with other provinces, and they can become very frustrating for all parties. But foreign orders are something that I am not familiar with, and if it could be clarified how this would work or if it does work. I understand that foreign orders are registered when received but can be subject to a 30-day waiting period in which a party can apply to have the order set aside.

Mr. Chairman, at this point in committee those are the comments that I have. Again, it appears that this will certainly improve the process for obtaining and varying support orders across jurisdictions, developed as a patchwork of legislation. Now, I would like to at this point say that I will support this legislation, again.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I believe that this new legislation should make it easier for claimants to obtain an initial support order within the framework of reciprocating jurisdictions. I have questions, but I think that in due time they will be answered. Certainly the streamlining of court proceedings should result in a more efficient processing of applications and thus improve services to all Albertans.

It is extremely important that the legislation be consistent with that of other jurisdictions. As I said before, Ontario, Manitoba, and the Yukon are appropriate models.

I would at this time urge all members of this Assembly to support Bill 5. I look forward to the comments or the points in the debate from other hon. members of this Assembly, and I am at this point in time, Mr. Chairman, going to cede the floor to another hon. member of this Assembly. Thank you very much.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much. I don't need a lot of time today because I know that the sponsor of the bill is going to answer some of the questions that I put forward in second reading. A lot of what I'm interested in for full-hearted support of the bill will depend on what the member's answers to the questions are.

There's just one little bit I wanted to talk about in conjunction with this before I turn it over to the Member for Edmonton-Calder to answer those questions. It's my ongoing conversation with the minister responsible for maintenance enforcement around adequate technology systems, staffing, and space to support this. We're now looking at a more streamlined process here and, one would assume, more of a computerized process once we're able to implement this. I'm looking to the minister for reassurance that we have a computer system in place that's going to be able to handle this.

I know that in the past there were a number of different competing computer systems that were being used in the maintenance enforcement program. Some of them didn't even speak to one another, and they weren't even on the same software programs. In the maintenance enforcement review done very well by the Member for Calgary-Lougheed, there were very specific recommendations that technology, the computers in other words, be updated and be enmeshed so that they worked properly together. I know that in the Public Accounts meeting earlier this week I was questioning the minister on the technology and space and staffing requirements, but of course we were discussing a past year, and I'm looking for the reassurance that in fact that technology is in place to support what would be coming through this bill.

Another part of that, of course – and they are still lingering recommendations from the MLA review of maintenance enforcement – was a full staff contingent. We had an awful lot of staff people who were out on stress leave, that were leaving, that were having to take various kinds of disability, that were out on workers' compensation claims, so they didn't have their full contingent of staff. They needed more staff assigned to the program, and there was also a problem with space. They were working in the same space they were in before, and in fact the department had increased in size many times. So that's a another question that I'll put out there to the minister, and I'm sure he can give me a few updates on where we're at in March of 2002 on those questions.

I am looking forward to the responses from the Member for Edmonton-Calder. I do very much appreciate his assistance to me today and his patience while I got my files in order. Thank you very much.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

MR. RATHGEBER: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It is indeed an honour to rise during Committee of the Whole to answer the good questions that were posed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre at second reading of this bill and the couple of supplementary questions that she posed moments ago and also the questions posed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

I'm very happy that the opposition is supporting this bill in principle. I'm pleased that they agree that streamlining the mechanism for enforcing support orders from one province to another, from one jurisdiction to another, is good for claimants and it's good for respondents. So I'm happy and I'm pleased that they see the merits of this bill and that they voted in favour of it at second reading. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre has raised some good technical questions in second reading, and I will endeavour to answer each and every one of those in the order in which they were posed.

From my responses, Mr. Chairman, I hope that it will be understood that the procedures under the Interjurisdictional Support Orders Act, or what I will refer to as the ISO Act, will be carried out in an efficient manner so that support applications are processed and resolved quickly when another jurisdiction is involved. Parents and children who are entitled to support will therefore be able to receive the amounts they deserve in a more timely manner. Similarly, individuals whose financial situation indicates that they should be paying a lower amount will be in a position to have their payments decreased sooner or enforcement reduced more expeditiously.

Mr. Chairman, many of the questions posed by the Member for Edmonton-Centre arose in her review of Ontario's version of the ISO Act. It is important to recognize that the ISO Act is intended to be uniform legislation across each and every Canadian jurisdiction. A Federal/Provincial/Territorial Family Law Committee spent a number of years developing and agreeing on a uniform act to be adopted by all provinces and territories. Alberta Legislative Counsel took the lead in drafting that uniform act. All provinces and territories are encouraged to make as few changes as possible to the uniform legislation so that the procedures are comparable across the country and across all jurisdictions.

If the Member for Edmonton-Centre has had an opportunity to review the ISO acts of Manitoba and Yukon, she will have encountered legislation that very closely reflects the uniform act that was agreed upon. She will also have noted that Alberta's proposed act is very similar to those of Manitoba and Yukon, as Alberta's drafters did not deviate markedly from the model act either. Ontario's act, however, contains a number of stylistic and other differences from the model ISO Act, Mr. Chairman. Many of the dissimilarities between Ontario's ISO Act and Bill 5 that were noted by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre are due to decisions by the Ontario drafters to deviate from the uniform act.

Let me now directly address the questions raised by the hon. member. Firstly, she posed a question regarding the designated authority that would be appointed under the act. Bill 5 allows the Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Alberta to designate one or more persons to act as the designated authority in Alberta. Mr. Chairman, the duties of the designated authority under the Reciprocal Enforcement of Maintenance Orders Act are currently being shared by the director of maintenance enforcement, the clerk of the court, and an agent of the Attorney General of Alberta. This will not change under the ISO legislation. Who the designated authority is for a particular function under the ISO Act will depend on that function. It will generally be the same person who is currently carrying out a comparable duty under the existing Reciprocal Enforcement of Maintenance Orders Act, or the REMO Act, as it is more frequently known. That act, of course, will be replaced if and when the ISO Act is adopted by this Legislature.

For example, the designated authority for the purpose of notifying a party in Alberta that a foreign order involving them has been registered in Alberta and they have 30 days to apply to set aside the registration would be the maintenance enforcement program, or MEP. At the same time that MEP sends the order to the court for registration, it would also advise the party in Alberta of that registration. In other circumstances the clerk of the court would be the designated authority for the purpose of receiving support applications or support variation applications from Albertans. An agent for the Attorney General of Alberta would be the designated authority that would receive applications from other jurisdictions, forwarding those applications to the Alberta court nearest to the respondent.

Mr. Chairman, the Member for Edmonton-Centre had a specific question about who would notify Albertans when an individual in another jurisdiction has commenced a support application or support variation application against them by serving them with notice of a hearing date. Again Bill 5 indicates that this would be the “designated authority.” In its analogous provision the Legislature of Ontario chose to clearly state that this would be the clerk of the court. This specific provision, as the hon. member has noted, is a change from the model ISO Act. However, I can advise this House that this would also be the clerk of the court in Alberta.

Mr. Chairman, Bill 5 follows the model ISO Act by not stipulating exactly who the designated authority would be for each function under the ISO legislation. Instead, the Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Alberta would decide who the most appropriate person would be, bearing in mind how procedures are already being carried out. By not expressly indicating who each designated authority is, Bill 5 maintains the possibility of improving processes at a later date if it is determined that a different person should be carrying out a particular duty. This is to ensure that procedures are as efficient as possible when individuals are trying to obtain, vary, or enforce a support order that involves a party in another jurisdiction.

Previously, Mr. Chairman, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre asked how and when support applications would be forwarded to the Alberta court and how service would be effected on Albertans when they are respondents to a support application. As I have tried to explain, support applications from other jurisdictions would be forwarded to the agent for the Attorney General of Alberta, who would then forward the application to the Alberta court closest to the respondent. The Alberta court would then serve the respondent with a notice requiring him or her to appear at a hearing. Inversely, it is intended that applications commenced by Albertans would be sent to the appropriate authority in the reciprocating jurisdiction through the assistant of the agent for the Attorney General. The authority in the reciprocating jurisdiction would then serve the respondent there with a notice of a hearing. The process will essentially work the same whether the application is coming into Alberta or leaving Alberta.

Bill 5 requires applications to be forwarded “as soon as practicable” rather than “promptly” because this language is what had been agreed to in the uniform ISO Act. The time it takes to forward an application may depend on factors such as the number of other applications in the hopper and whether staff are waiting for additional information from the applicant or the applicant’s lawyer to complete the application. Accordingly, it is submitted that the words “as soon as practicable” are more appropriate than “promptly.” Bill 5 provides a reasonable expectation of the amount of time it might take to process and forward support applications. Still, the procedures under the ISO Act will be significantly streamlined, so applications may be processed and heard as quickly as possible.

Mr. Chairman, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre has also asked about the 18-month time frame in which claimants or applicants are required to provide any additional information requested by the Alberta court. This 18-month period was agreed upon by all of Canada’s provinces and territories at the meeting of the Federal/Provincial/Territorial Family Law Committee. Eighteen months was considered a reasonable time period for the request for information to be sent to the other jurisdiction, for the party there to collect and provide the necessary information, and for the other jurisdiction to forward the information back to Alberta. As the hon. member has correctly noted, there is currently no deadline in the REMO Act for additional information, so provision for a deadline in the ISO Act, it is submitted, is a considerable improvement. If the requested information is not received from the applicant within 18 months, the Alberta court may dismiss his or her application. In keeping with other streamlined procedures in the Interjurisdictional Support Orders Act, this is so that applications are resolved in a timely manner and that they do not go on indefinitely.

Mr. Chairman, Bill 5 does not define “child” because the model ISO Act did not include this definition. The definition of “child” would be the same that would apply under whatever Alberta legislation the support application or support variation application is being brought; for example, if the application is brought under the Domestic Relations Act or the Parentage and Maintenance Act or the Maintenance Order Act. It is my understanding that the Ontario Legislature chose to define “child” very readily because they have only one family law statute under which support applications are brought. Our own Minister of Justice and Attorney General is currently leading the family law reform project, which is aimed at reviewing and consolidating Alberta’s family law statutes. For the time being, however, it was determined that a definition of “child” in the ISO Act was not appropriate, as it is defined elsewhere.

Mr. Chairman, Bill 5 requires certain information in a support application to be contained in a sworn document. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre questioned why the word “affidavit” was not used: because this is what all jurisdictions agreed to in the model act. This ensures, for example, that information sworn in a declaration or statement would be accepted. That the information is sworn and therefore reliable is more important than the type of document that the information is found in. If the formal requirements are too stringent, one risks that certain applications would be refused.

If I could just add, Mr. Chairman, that not all jurisdictions use the term “affidavit,” so the term “sworn document” is much broader and is much better known to all courts, to all lawyers, and to all jurisdictions. Terms such as “certified” and “clerk” and “regulations” were not defined because it was believed that these terms are readily understandable. When the Federal/Provincial/Territorial Family Law Committee finalized the model Interjurisdictional Support Orders Act to be used as a template for each jurisdiction’s particular version, they did not choose to define these terms. It is the Ontario Legislature that departed from the model ISO Act for its own particular reasons.

Alberta’s legislative drafters very closely followed the suggested uniform act but chose to make a few minor amendments. For instance, the Member for Edmonton-Centre noted that Bill 5 allows the Alberta court to impute income to the respondent for the purposes of determining the amount of support to be paid. Mr. Chairman, a main objective of the ISO Act is to improve the parties’ ability to obtain and vary support orders. It has been noted that some respondents currently manage to delay or thwart provisional applications by not appearing in court or by not providing financial information. Bill 5 expressly mentions the ability to impute income because some judges have been reluctant in the past to impute income when making provisional orders under the Reciprocal Enforcement of Maintenance Orders Act. Bill 5, the ISO Act, makes it clear to our judges that they may and in fact are encouraged to determine an income amount when the respondent fails to appear or refuses to disclose his or her financial information.

Mr. Chairman, the Member for Edmonton-Centre also asked why, unlike an Ontario court, an Alberta court refusing to make a support order would not be required to provide written reasons for its decision and deliver those reasons to the appropriate authority. The model ISO Act does not require reasons to be given in writing. Neither Manitoba nor the Yukon added the requirement for reasons to be given in writing. Our own legislative drafters did not hesitate to follow the uniform act in this regard, partly because the need to provide written reasons can sometimes delay a judge's determination of a support matter. In any event, it is possible for parties to obtain a transcript of the oral reasons provided should they wish to have a copy and have something in writing.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre was wondering why Bill 5 does not include a provision stipulating that the Crown is not relieved of liability in certain situations for acts performed under the Interjurisdictional Support Orders Act. Mr. Chairman, Bill 5 indicates that the designated authority and its employees will not be liable for acts carried out under the ISO Act in good faith. Bill 5's limitation of liability clause is substantially similar to those used in other Alberta statutes such as the Human Rights, Citizenship and Multiculturalism Act. As in that act, Alberta's drafters chose not to make any exception in Bill 5 to the general principle that the Crown and its employees should not be liable for tasks which are carried out in good faith. I can advise that Alberta's act for proceedings against the Crown still makes the Crown liable for particular torts. Ontario's ISO Act appears to say that even if a Crown employee would not be liable for a tort committed in good faith, the Crown could still be liable. Alberta's legislative drafters did not feel the need to make such a distinction in Bill 5, as neither the Crown nor an employee of the Crown should be liable for acts performed under the ISO if those acts are performed in good faith.

As regards information that would be included in a support application or in a court order, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre expressed concerns about maintaining an individual's privacy and security, particularly in relation to home addresses and financial information. I can advise, Mr. Chairman, that application forms under the ISO Act, the relevant sworn documents, and any resulting court order would all be part of the court record and therefore available to any party. As with all court matters, however, an individual who has a concern for their safety or privacy may decide not to disclose certain personal information. For instance, they may use a different address for service, such as one in care of another person, rather than their own home or mailing address.

Usually, Mr. Chairman, parties to a support application must disclose basic financial information. Clearly, the court needs to have enough information before it to make an informed and fair decision. However, this financial information normally relates more generally to the amount of a party's income and the nature of their assets rather than the name of their financial institution, how many bank accounts they have, or what cheques they have written, for example. The Member for Edmonton-Centre had a particular concern that claimants, who are usually women, could be tracked down using their financial information. As with most court proceedings an individual may decline to provide certain personal or financial information required by the ISO, explaining their decision in their application or at the time of their hearing.

The Member for Edmonton-Centre has encouraged the government to continue to work on setting up reciprocal agreements with other countries. The maintenance enforcement program regularly discusses the possibility of reciprocal agreements with representatives from other countries. For example, I am advised that agreements have recently been concluded with the republic of Poland, the Czech republic, and the republic of Slovakia. An agreement has also been reached with the United States of America at the federal level, which includes all 50 states rather than only the current 42.

Mr. Chairman, Bill 5 allows the Lieutenant Governor in Council to declare a jurisdiction to be a reciprocating jurisdiction if she is satisfied that it has substantially similar laws respecting the reciprocal enforcement of support orders. If Bill 5 is passed by this honourable Legislature, jurisdictions with a reciprocating agreement with Alberta will be listed in a new regulation declaring all of Alberta's reciprocating jurisdictions. The fact that Alberta is increasing the number of reciprocal agreements it has with other jurisdictions and that most of Alberta's reciprocating jurisdictions have already moved to a single-hearing process are some of the very reasons why the Interjurisdictional Support Orders Act is being contemplated, introduced, and hopefully passed. As the Member for Edmonton-Centre explained on second reading on March 5, people are moving far more often between provinces, territories, and countries. It is becoming increasingly more important for individuals to have resources available to them when they wish to obtain, vary, or enforce a support order and their former partner lives in a different jurisdiction.

Mr. Chairman, the Interjurisdictional Support Orders Act would make it easier for parties to commence support applications and support variation applications because they would only need to complete a paper application rather than attend a hearing. Still, all of their sworn evidence would be considered at a court hearing in the respondent's jurisdiction along with the respondent's evidence. Both parties would still have their point of view heard, but there would only be one court hearing. This will save time, effort, resources, and money in matters of support that involve reciprocating jurisdictions. The reciprocal enforcement of support orders would also be improved under the ISO Act.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I hope that I've responded to the questions posed by the hon. members for Edmonton-Centre and Edmonton-Gold Bar, and I encourage all members to support the ISO legislation in Committee of the Whole.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thanks very much. I'd like to point out to the Assembly what a thorough job the Member for Edmonton-Calder has done, and I hope his colleagues take note of that very thorough and nicely presented job. I wish more of the bills came with that kind of information and follow-through.

I did follow along, and in fact the Member for Edmonton-Calder has answered every one of the questions that I asked in the debate on March 5. I understand and I was not expecting the member to resolve the issues around personal safety and disclosure of information. I take his explanation that an individual could decide not to disclose or could give a mailing address in care of another person. I don't think the courts would be too pleased to see this, and I think we still have an issue to resolve there. As I was saying before, it's only fair that both parties would give the financial information or the personal information, but we still have an issue there that we have not been able to successfully resolve. I wasn't expecting the member to resolve it. I think I'm just urging the government to continue to be vigilant on this and to continue to move it forward.

I am willing to give my support to Committee of the Whole for Bill 5. Thank you very much.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Yes, Mr. Chairman. Just briefly. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre reminded me that I hadn't answered her questions, and I had meant to do so. As I recall the questions, they were basically around technology support for the Interjurisdictional Support Orders Act and relating it to maintenance enforcement. I would just remind the hon. member that those are actually two different things, and of course when maintenance enforcements are actually in place, they will hopefully be registered with maintenance enforcement and then supported through the maintenance enforcement system. Of course, the technology in the system will be there to deal with those issues, as it is with respect to all the other issues in maintenance enforcement. We are continuing, as she well knows, to improve the technology support in maintenance enforcement, albeit not quite as quickly as either she or I would like.

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE CHAIR: Opposed? Carried.

Bill 4 Public Health Amendment Act, 2002

THE CHAIR: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Yes. Mr. Chairman, I rise, as I've indicated earlier, to speak in favour of this bill, and I will keep my comments relatively brief here. We have continued to do work and investigation and research on this bill. I would note that it coincides very nicely with one of the recommendations in our own health care discussion paper which reads, "The Alberta government should act quickly to ensure that all health care professionals can fully utilize their training and expertise." Certainly this bill will help. It's a step in that direction, and that's of course why we're supporting it.

We're not convinced as an opposition that the best possible use is yet being made of medical professionals in Alberta, and this of course isn't a concern that's simply limited to nurses, but it also extends to, for example, pharmacists, various kinds of therapists, and others who right now don't have the opportunity to put all of their knowledge and abilities to work. We can strengthen Alberta's health care system in various ways by allowing all health professionals to fully use their skills. We can offset the very heavy burden on MDs. We can bring a much wider range of knowledge to bear on a particular issue. We can co-ordinate services, and we can fully utilize the remarkable skills and abilities, for example, of physiotherapists or dieticians, and so on. So by expanding the role of RNs, it's definitely a step in the right direction, and we'll be looking for ways to see the same kind of thing extended for other health professions.

Now, we have consulted with the Alberta Association of Registered Nurses on this, and we are aware that they have worked closely with the government. I commend the minister for those efforts and for taking that input from the AARN into consideration in drafting this legislation.

I think it's just worth a brief moment to read into the record some of the achievements that a nurse-practitioner can bring to Alberta's health care system, so far largely in remote communities but hopefully more and more, as a result of this legislation, into communities in every corner of this province including, for example, inner-city communities in Calgary and Edmonton. Experience in some pilot projects tells us that the nurse-practitioner is in fact able to meet the primary health care needs of unique communities, even when those needs vary quite widely. Nurse-practitioners can serve as advocates for clients and patients, and as they work in a community, they can become particularly knowledgeable about the history and the particular experience of each of their clients and, indeed, the conditions that affect the health of that community.

There has been at least one pilot project in an urban area, the Calgary Urban Project Society, and in fact I was in Calgary a week ago and met with a particular member of this project. They work very hard with inner-city residents. They have had remarkable success in improving the housing situation of these residents and have found that by improving the housing of many hard-to-house inner-city residents, their health has also improved. So we are seeing a very innovative role being filled there by nurse-practitioners.

This legislation will encourage more and more organizations to employ nurse-practitioners in all kinds of roles, and I think that's a step in the right direction. So we will be as a caucus endorsing this bill, supporting this bill.

With those comments, I'll take my seat, Mr. Chair.

THE ACTING CHAIR: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

MR. MAR: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I thank all hon. members for their comments and their thoughts and support for this particular bill.

[Title and preamble agreed to]

THE ACTING CHAIR: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE ACTING CHAIR: It's carried.

Bill 11 Energy Information Statutes Amendment Act, 2002

THE ACTING CHAIR: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

MR. STRANG: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I just briefly want to go over a few items on this bill. First and foremost, I guess I'd like to talk about the aspect of the description of paramountcy at this time. With the Coal Conservation Act, Bill 11 would make confidentiality provisions contained in regulations made under the Coal Conservation Act paramount over FOIP. The coal conservation regulations currently provide for confidentiality for information related to exploration holes – those are holes drilled into the coal seams – for a specific time by the EUB on application. The period can be shortened by the EUB. The regulations also currently provide for confidentiality for information related to novel or unconventional mining methods or a facility for five years after commencement of commercial use of the methods or a facility. Duration of paramountcy is not time limited because confidentiality isn't really time limited.

Now, if we talk about the Electric Utilities Act, Bill 11 would make the confidentiality provision in section 70 of the Electric Utilities Act paramount over FOIP for information submitted to the EUB by parties to electrical rate negotiated settlements. This provision amends an amendment to the Electric Utilities Act, is very limited in scope, and has no effect on other information related to the EUA or the electrical industry in Alberta. The confidentiality provision in section 70 of the EUA for information submitted in connection with negotiated settlements will only be paramount over FOIP until 10 years after all aspects of the settlement expire. The portion of the EUA to except confidential information in respect of a negotiated settlement is not new. The 10-year time frame simply provides direction to the EUB on how long FOIP does not apply to the information. Ten years was chosen to ensure that a sufficient period of time has passed before an application for release of the confidential information can be made so that a party is not harmed or disadvantaged by the release of this information.

What is the negotiated settlement, and who might be involved? Negotiated settlements provide parties such as consumers, electrical generators, and other providers affected by an issue the opportunity to reach agreement on an issue rather than go through an EUB regulatory process to decide the issue. Information is included in a negotiated settlement that is confidential in nature. Information that the parties may provide and that may be confidential include the forecast of costs and data used to forecast costs. Examples are interest rates, inflation rates, or other indexes. An arrangement can be made with suppliers to procure goods and services.

Now, why do parties require confidentiality? Parties ask that information be kept confidential to avoid being harmed or disadvantaged in future EUB processes and/or business transactions; for example, a supplier to a utility would not want his cost arrangements disclosed as this may affect other business transactions.

When we go to the Mines and Minerals Act, Bill 11 would make the confidentiality provision in section 50 of the Mines and Minerals Act paramount over FOIP only in relation to royalty information, including royalty forecast information, geological and geophysical information, and exploration information. These sensitive portions of royalty information can be expected to relate to the costs of recovery, processing, and transportation of minerals and prices obtained for the sales of the minerals. Royalty forecast information can be expected to include proposed development plans. The confidentiality provided by section 50 of the MMA for any particular royalty information would only be paramount over FOIP five years after the information was related.

The most sensitive portion of the geological and geophysical information can be expected to relate to opinions and conclusions reached by professional and expert analysis of geophysical and geological data. The confidentiality provided by section 50 of the MMA for any particular analysis information of this type will only be paramount over FOIP 15 years after the information is provided. Exploration information also consists of raw geological and geophysical data. Under section 111 of the MMA the confidentiality ceases one year after the licensee ceases to carry on business in Alberta, so it was not necessary to put in a time limitation on the paramountcy.

So you see, Mr. Chairman, what we're looking at is bringing all these acts – the Natural Gas Marketing Act, the Oil and Gas Conservation Act, and the Oil Sands Conservation Act – under one act and putting the time limits in there.

I guess the other points I have been questioned on are regarding the information on the Oil Sands Conservation Act from the aspect of all the megaprojects that are going on in our province right now. What they're saying is that they felt that five years wasn't long enough. But we still have the five-year window, and if they have a hearing and they can display to FOIP after the five years that they've got the right information, FOIP can still overrule that after the five years if they feel that it's going to harm the industry by disclosing that information.

With that, Mr. Chairman, I move the reading on this. Thank you.

THE ACTING CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much. At this point in committee, Mr. Chairman, I have some remarks to make regarding Bill 11 if the chair permits. I of course was listening with interest to the hon. Member for West Yellowhead. I would like to formally express my gratitude to the hon. member and the members of his staff who were kind enough to give me and the Liberal researcher a bit of a briefing yesterday on this proposed legislation.

Now, I still have some outstanding questions regarding this legislation, and I certainly still have, Mr. Chairman, some significant concerns. I can understand the hon. member whenever he discusses the fact that we need to have a formal process to ensure that there is a system of confidentiality, whether it be trade secrets, whether it be information regarding specific costs. For instance, let's choose electricity generation. I can understand that. I can also understand that if an individual corporation in this province pays, say, $1.2 million for a seismic survey in the Peace country, that is their money. If they spend it that way, that's fine, and that information is theirs, the results of that seismic survey. I can understand that, but when we look at what has occurred with the electricity generation distribution system in this province, I don't agree with this bill in regards to the changes to the Electric Utilities Act, and specifically it is section 70. It's going to be renumbered.

One is almost obligated to remind all members of this House, Mr. Chairman, that a negotiated settlement, as I understand it in its description in this bill, can be and is the rates charged to consumers for electricity. That could be an example of a negotiated settlement, and I don't think the process that's involved in determining the electricity rates should be exempt. It should be available, and I think it can be made available in the FOIP Act itself.

This hearing process that the hon. member discussed, as I understand it, can be secret for up to a period of 10 years. Now, in the time I have at this stage of the bill, I have certainly many issues, but that would be one of them. I think there has to be a transparency, Mr. Chairman, in all aspects of electricity distribution and generation in this province, and I'm not sure that we're going to get that transparency with this bill.

Now, I have a letter with me that I tabled earlier in the week, Mr. Chairman. It's a letter dated March 4, 2002. It's addressed to myself, and it's from the office of the Information and Privacy Commissioner. The office of the Information and Privacy Commissioner has certainly provided this hon. member with some information and some opinion in regards to Bill 11, and he writes:

There are several different kinds of information at issue in Bill 11. There may be a case for removing some of it, such as geophysical and geological information from the possibility of access than there is for removing other information, for example, royalty information. If I had to assign some sort of priority to these kinds of information, I would say that royalty information is the kind of information which most certainly should be subject to the FOIP act. After all, royalties are what Albertans receive in exchange for the mining of non-renewable resources. Seen in that light, Albertans have a right to know what royalties are being paid, how the royalties are being collected, what royalties might be . . . forgiven and so on.

The philosophy of the FOIP Act is that accessibility and transparency bring about accountability and accountability makes for better government. It is with this in mind that I hold royalty information to be at the top of the list of priorities in terms of accessibility.

The Privacy Commissioner also states:

We have never been aware of any compelling arguments that harm would be so obvious and so constant that this kind of information should be entirely and permanently removed from the FOIP Act.

This is in regards to Bill 11.

Now, I think we have to think that with the appropriate section – and it's section 16 of the FOIP Act. If this information was made available through FOIP to the public, the information that's going to be in the Mines and Minerals Act, the Natural Gas Marketing Act, et cetera . . . In Bill 11, if this information was deemed confidential or sensitive or if it was of a proprietary nature after considerable expense through research and development by a corporation, that information, section 16 of the act – and I'm going to quote again, Mr. Chairman, from the letter that I have received from the commissioner regarding this matter:

I believe that the FOIP Act is structured in such a way as to be able to deal with the accessibility and to allow a case to be made to remove information from being accessible when certain harms could result. In this case, an oil company which felt that the disclosure of information which is subject to the act could object to the disclosure on the basis that disclosure would harm their business interests under section 16 of the act.

I tabled this document, I mentioned previously, this week in the Assembly, and this letter is from Frank Work, Acting Information and Privacy Commissioner. In discussions regarding this bill, I would encourage all hon. members to familiarize themselves with that specific letter.

Now, why we would want to make royalty information or forecasting royalty information exempt is beyond me when royalties are such an important part of provincial revenues. We have this Alberta royalty tax credit, which is forecast, I believe, to be $124 million this year. One has to consider that. That's a significant amount of money, the $3.7 billion or greater than that, that we're going to get in royalty revenue. We have to be able to examine that process, and Albertans have every right to know that information.

There are so many ways to consider accessibility and accountability, but we can't put the interests of the financial impact on producers in regards to this information ahead of the financial impact on the government. Whenever we talk about the government, we're also talking about all the citizens of Alberta who own those resources. Those resources and the return on those resources have to be for the maximum benefit of all Albertans.

There are many, many different royalty structures, and I was discussing this earlier. There's the natural gas royalty reduction. There's the petroleum royalty. There are royalties . . .

THE CHAIR: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, but under Standing Order 60 the committee must report prior to the normal hour of adjournment. So we have to first of all move that we report this bill, progress thereon, and then rise, et cetera.

The hon. Government House Leader to report Bill 11.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Chair. I would move that the committee rise and report bills 5 and 4 and report progress on Bill 11.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

MR. KLAPSTEIN: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole has had under consideration certain bills. The committee reports the following: bills 4 and 5. The committee reports progress on Bill 11.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Does the Assembly concur in this report?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Opposed? So ordered.

[Preceded by the Sergeant-at-Arms, His Royal Highness Prince Michael of Kent and his party entered the Chamber. His Royal Highness took his place upon the throne]

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, please be seated.

Your Royal Highness, we are both pleased and honoured to have you address this Assembly in Her Majesty's golden jubilee year. Would you please convey to Her Majesty on behalf of the members here assembled and of all Albertans our congratulations on the occasion of her 50 years of selfless service as Queen of Canada and head of the Commonwealth.

Sir, I would now invite you to give your remarks.

His Royal Highness Prince Michael of Kent, KCVO

Address to the Assembly

HIS ROYAL HIGHNESS: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to thank you and the Members of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta for your kind invitation to address you today. I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that I will convey to Her Majesty the loyal message of good wishes which you've expressed on behalf of the Assembly.

I have the fondest memories of my last visit to this province nearly 10 years ago, when I came to Edmonton for the Canadian Finals Rodeo and subsequently visited Calgary. I'm delighted to tell you that I was presented with my black hat before my white one. This time my stay will be brief, but I'm happy to be meeting such a variety of Albertans. Yesterday in Calgary I reviewed a joint services jubilee parade of hundreds of cadets. They, along with youth leaders from Edmonton area high schools whom I met at lunch today, promise a future for Alberta no less impressive than its past.

First thing this morning I visited the Salvation Army headquarters and then spent time with volunteers and veterans at the Colonel Mewburn Pavilion, and later on I will be fortunate to join your Lieutenant Governor in honouring bravery and dedication at a Lifesaving Canada awards ceremony.

The common element of each of these stops on my tour is service. Standing here at the heart of democratic institutions within Alberta, a province named after Princess Louise Caroline Alberta, the fourth daughter of the Mother of Confederation, Queen Victoria, I am especially pleased to be addressing you in the year when a second Queen of Canada celebrates her golden jubilee. Her Majesty the Queen is herself a great exemplar of service to others, and one of the themes of jubilee celebration throughout the Commonwealth this year centres on honouring our Sovereign. The unnumbered acts of kindness of the gift of volunteer hours may not be the stuff of headlines, but they're surely the basis of civil society and of the peace of mind and heart that so characterizes this Maple Kingdom.

By happy coincidence Canadians also celebrate this year the 50th anniversary of the appointment of Canadian Governors General. The first such representative of Her Majesty, The Rt. Hon. Vincent Massey, wrote that it is to the Crown we look "to encourage the spirit of nationhood and to warn against its neglect." The distinct evolution of the Canadian Crown points to the capacity of the constitutional monarchy to be a system of government that is infinitely adaptable.

In this federal system the Crown is actually an 11-fold diadem, assuring the provinces that they are as fully sovereign in their areas of jurisdiction as is the national government in its own compass of responsibility. The golden jubilee is not only a time to pay tribute to the Queen, to whom you and I are proud to give our allegiance; it also offers an opportunity for everyone to learn more about the way nation and province are governed and so to bolster patriotic sentiment with a grounded knowledge of the basis of Canadian parliamentary democracy, institutions, and symbols.

With identity rooted in knowledge and heartened by the beauty of mountains, prairies, and lakes, Fortis et Liber, strong and free, as the Alberta motto reads, will surely continue to be the proud and true boast of this energetic and loyal province.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. [applause]

THE SPEAKER: Your Royal Highness, on behalf of all Members of this Legislative Assembly I thank you for your kind and thoughtful words. We wish you well on your tour of Canada.

THE SERGEANT-AT-ARMS: All rise, please.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, would you please join in the singing of God Save The Queen, led by Mr. Paul Lorieau.

HON. MEMBERS:

God save our gracious Queen,
long live our noble Queen,
God save The Queen!
Send her victorious,
happy and glorious,
long to reign over us:
God save The Queen!

THE SERGEANT-AT-ARMS: Order!

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, please be seated.

head: Introduction of Visitors

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Grande Prairie-Wapiti.

MR. GRAYDON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today and introduce to you and through you Diana Knight. Diana is the wife of the MLA for Grande Prairie-Smoky. She joins us today because of her deep respect and love for the monarchy and the special anniversary that we are celebrating today. So I would ask you to recognize Diana Knight, please.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

MR. VANDERBURG: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure this afternoon to introduce Mr. Bob Jackson, chair of the Aspen regional health authority; Mr. Bob Cable, chief executive officer; and Ms Debbie Pall with the Aspen regional health authority. Aspen health reaches into the constituencies of Whitecourt-Ste. Anne, Redwater, Athabasca-Wabasca, Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert, and of course your constituency, sir, Barrhead-Westlock. Aspen is one of the most progressive rural health authorities in Alberta. They are seated in your gallery this afternoon, and I'd ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Thank you, sir.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Finance.

MRS. NELSON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to introduce a young lady from Calgary who is visiting the Legislature for her first time today. She works part-time in the constituency office of Calgary-Foothills and attends the University of Calgary to become a teacher. I'd ask Michelle McCann to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, I'm very pleased to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly four special guests today. First is Joanne McDonald of St. Albert and her son and daughter, Brett and Jillian. They're accompanied by Joanne's mother, Brett and Jillian's grandmother and, incidentally, my aunt, Esther McDonald. I would ask that they all rise and receive the very warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly employees from Alberta Justice and from the Alberta Solicitor General's strategic management services. These individuals are here on the public service orientation tour, which I understand is being promoted and carried out by the Leg. Assembly Office and by your good office. These four people who are with us today should have not only the thanks but the sympathy of the House because they have to provide strategic management services not only to one department, the Department of Justice, but also to the Department of the Solicitor General, and to deal with two departments requires that much extra effort and perseverance. I'd ask Ms Leslie Noel, Mr. Walter Garcia, Mr. Steve Sinclair, and Mrs. Bobbi Lynn Schmidt to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome and the sincere thanks of this House.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

MR. DUCHARME: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I have the pleasure of introducing four special guests, who are seated in the members' gallery. They are executive members of the French Canadian Association of Alberta: the president of the association, Mr. Ernest Chauvet, and the vice-presidents, Mr. Denis Lord and Mr. Ernest LeFebvre. The fourth person is the president of the Franco-Albertan Seniors Federation, Mme Therese Conway. These people are my guests today as a follow-up to the special celebration that was held this morning in the rotunda to mark the fourth edition of les Rendez-vous de la Francophonie, an International Francophone Day coming up on the 20th of March. Also seated with these guests is Mr. Denis Tardif, the director of the Francophone Secretariat. As I mentioned earlier, they are seated in the members' gallery, and I'd ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On this day after the glorious 17th it gives me great pleasure to stand here and introduce to you and to all members of this House 25 students who are visiting the Legislature from St. Albert. They attend Leo Nickerson school, and they are accompanied by their teacher, Mr. David Power, and a parent, Mrs. Cheuk Ng. They are seated in one of the galleries because they're going to be seated in the other gallery tomorrow, and I would like them to please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Dunvegan.

MR. GOUDREAU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to the members of this Assembly two very special ladies. The first one is Edna St. Andre. Edna used to reside in my constituency in Dunvegan. She's from Girouxville. Edna has been a very, very strong advocate of people with developmental disabilities and has worked on that for well over 20 years. The second lady is my right-hand lady. She is my wife of over 28 years. They are in the public gallery, and I'd ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

MS EVANS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to introduce to you and through you to the rest of the Assembly 80 students and their teachers and chaperones that are with them. They represent Mills Haven school, a wonderful elementary school in Sherwood Park. They are accompanied by Thelma Beatch, Irene Kolomijchuk, Colleen Alpern, Sigrid Brodeur, and Amanda Lechelt as teachers. Parent helpers are Brad Garneau, Jane Ternes, Chris Foster, Susan Hutton, Mrs. Gravel, Mrs. Elsey, Mrs. Townsend, and Mrs. Sinn. I would ask now that our delegation from Mills Haven school and those that are accompanying them please rise for the warm applause of our Assembly. They are seated, I believe, in both galleries.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It gives me a great deal of pleasure to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly a constituent of Edmonton-Glengarry, Jimmy Ragsdale. Jimmy has a keen interest in politics, and he is here to visit us once again. So with your permission I'd ask Jimmy to rise and receive the traditional warm reception of the Assembly. Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two introductions today. First, I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of the House Lawrence Rockton, the founder and director of AISH & CPP in Action, a nonprofit group. Many of the members of that group and Mr. Rockton have been on the steps of the Legislature this morning to express their concerns to all of us. With the AISH rates being extremely low, they are experiencing poverty, loss of dignity and independence. Lawrence and many of his members are asking the government to increase their AISH benefits and index their benefits to the annual cost-of-living increases. I'll ask Mr. Rockton to please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

Mr. Speaker, my second introduction. I'm very pleased to introduce to you and through you to all members of the House a teacher who's been educating our children for the last 23 years. Michael O'Neill teaches in Elk Point. Like thousands of other teachers in Alberta this teacher feels betrayed by Bill 12. He has taken a personal day off without pay today to register his protest with the government policies. I'll now ask Michael O'Neill to please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

head: Oral Question Period

THE SPEAKER: The first Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Public Safety

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On Friday, March 15, the Solicitor General insisted that all sex offenders should be classified as high risk and that if this was not the case, then probation officers were to blame, but a 1997 memo from Alberta's correctional services division clearly lays out conditions under which a sex offender could be classified as medium risk. In fact, an offender, now on probation, who committed several sex offences against young boys is rated as medium risk. My questions are to the Premier. Is this soft-on-crime policy driven by public safety needs or budget restraint?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, the details of the question I'll take under advisement and under notice and discuss the question with the hon. minister, but in no way, shape, or form is this government's program intended to be soft on crime.

Basically, what we're trying to do and what the Solicitor General is trying to do is find ways to ease pressure on senior probation officers who deal with high-risk offenders and put some of the less serious cases – and I mean far less serious cases – to so-called caseworkers. Mr. Speaker, I understand that that will be the subject of two pilot projects, one in Stony Plain and one here in Edmonton, I believe. I would ask the hon. leader of the Liberal opposition to wait and see how these pilot projects work out.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Premier: has this soft-on-crime policy, allowing sex offenders out with minimum supervision, been approved by the Premier and cabinet?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, there is no such thing as a soft-on-crime policy. You have to keep in mind that this Legislature and the laws of this Legislature deal with matters of summary conviction only and do not deal with matters of indictable offences, which are under the Criminal Code. So if the hon. member is talking about crimes as serious as murder or robbery or rape or other serious crimes of fraud, and so on, he's talking about an entirely other jurisdiction, namely the federal government.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: is it acceptable for the Premier's minister to blame probation officers when her policy is questioned?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, the hon. Solicitor General is not blaming probation officers. As a matter of fact, she's trying to assist probation officers in the performance of their duties, and that's why she has established two pilot projects: to see if there are, indeed, more effective and more efficient ways of delivering programs and at the same time provide an adequate level of service for both serious offenders and those who are considered to be not so serious.

THE SPEAKER: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Ministerial Responsibility

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When the Premier added four new ministries to his government a year ago, he assured us that quality control would be improved, yet last week the Solicitor General repeatedly gave the Legislature and Albertans inaccurate and contradictory information while blaming her staff for policy decisions. My question is to the Premier. Is this an acceptable level of performance under this mandate of improved quality control?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, that question is subjective in nature. The hon. leader of the Liberal opposition has made a statement which I find not to be true. As I understand it, the question relates to a matter which, I further understand, is a matter of privilege in this House raised by another member of the Liberal opposition, and I would wait to hear the Speaker's adjudication on that particular application.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: will the Premier confirm that ministers of his cabinet hold ultimate responsibility for policy decisions?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, ministers of this cabinet hold responsibility for undertaking and delivering the policies, but policy development is far more complex than the ministers simply bringing forward a ministerial order. We have a system that is very democratic in our caucus, where things are first vetted through agenda and priorities, then to the standing policy committees, then on to cabinet, and then to caucus for a full discussion. Once the policy has been developed, it's up to the minister to make sure that that policy is carried through.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: what is the Premier going to do about this minister that's out of control and blaming her staff?

2:00

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, she's not out of control, not by any stretch of the imagination. The minister, with all due respect, is a wonderful individual, deeply concerned about matters of community safety. I would remind the hon. member, the leader of the Liberal opposition, that it was this minister who, I know, firsthand took it upon herself to travel with the Calgary Police Service, perhaps with the Edmonton Police Service as well, long before she was the Solicitor General, to get a firsthand look at criminal activity in both major urban centres. It was this minister who had the compassion to see the plight of young children who were being used – and I mean used and abused – by pimps and johns and to bring in very meaningful legislation, the Protection of Children Involved in Prostitution Act, Mr. Speaker. So he's talking about a minister who has tremendous compassion and, I would suggest, a great deal of respect and admiration for the principles and the letter of the law.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Bill 12 Protest

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Premier took comfort last week in noting that no one was protesting the passage of Bill 12. Last night 3,000 citizens held a vigil for the bill on the steps of this Legislature, and today teachers have withdrawn all voluntary services. My questions are to the Premier. Has the Premier taken any action to address parent concerns with Bill 12?

MR. KLEIN: Yes, Mr. Speaker, as a matter of fact we have. But to address the preamble, I'm not saying that there haven't been protests. Indeed, I get hundreds of letters, primarily from teachers, complaining mostly about teachers' salaries and, more recently, about classroom conditions and other matters associated with education. What are we doing about it? Well, relative to the salary issue, certainly some school boards have negotiated salaries that are deemed to be satisfactory to the teachers and the teachers' union, because settlements have been reached. Relative to those where it seems that there's an impossible impasse, those matters have been sent to arbitration. It's an arbitration that was agreed to by the ATA and agreed to by the Alberta School Boards Association.

Relative to the other issues, Mr. Speaker, the issues that are fundamental to the questions of education delivery, that will be considered by a blue-ribbon panel or commission or a summit or a combination of the two, but what we will do is give this whole matter a thorough and complete examination.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you. Again to the Premier, Mr. Speaker. Parents are concerned with the punitive sections of Bill 12. Have you taken any action to address those concerns?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, there are no punitive sections to Bill 12. There are sections in virtually every bill that we pass, because when we pass a bill, it becomes the law – the law – of the province. When you break the law, there are consequences, so the bill speaks to what may happen if you break the law. If you live within the law, there is absolutely nothing punitive about the legislation.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you. Again to the Premier, Mr. Speaker: how many citizens must demonstrate and how many classrooms in this province have to be disrupted before the government abandons those clauses in Bill 12?

MR. KLEIN: Well, first of all, "before the government abandons those clauses in Bill 12?" What clauses? We have no intention of abandoning any clause in Bill 12, Mr. Speaker, because the law is quite good in its intentions, very good in its intentions, and really achieves, in my mind and in the minds of most who had the opportunity of meeting with Mr. Booi and meeting with the president of the Alberta School Boards Association, precisely what they wanted it to achieve.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

Education Services Settlement Act

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The chickens are coming home to roost on the government's decision to give teachers the legislative shaft through Bill 12. Earlier today the ATA announced that it is asking teachers to withdraw all services provided to the Ministry of Learning, including the marking of diploma and achievement exams. Students will suffer, and it's the government's fault. To the Premier: why did the government expand the definition of an illegal strike in section 1 of Bill 12 if not to punish teachers who withdraw voluntary services?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, there is nothing in the bill that prevents teachers from so-called working to rule or withdrawing voluntary services. Absolutely nothing in the bill. There is nothing in the bill, by the way – and it's absolutely astounding how these things are picked up and are printed and broadcast as fact: it's a statement of fact that teachers no longer have the right to assemble. You know, I have read this with absolute amazement, and I'm astounded. Quite frankly, you know, I wonder if I did that when I was a journalist. Well, I found that very, very strange. When I arrived at High River the other night to speak at a constituency function, there were about 20 teachers outside who stampeded after me with placards waving and all kinds of nasty things written on them. That seemed to me to be a bit of an assembly. I said: you know, it's your right to protest.

The hon. leader of the Liberal opposition, or maybe it was the leader of the third party, alluded to 3,000 people, many of whom were teachers, assembling in front of the Legislature. Well, that was obviously an assembly. So it astounds me. Where are these people who say in one breath that it's against the law or that the government is prohibiting us from assembling, yet they take pictures of these assemblies? You know, go figure.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Why did the government put an extremely punitive provision in Bill 12 which empowers the Labour Relations Board to override the ATA's authority to collect dues from its members if not to punish teachers who withdraw or threaten to withdraw nothing but voluntary services?

MR. KLEIN: I'm sorry, Mr. Speaker. I don't have the legislation in front of me, and I don't know to what section the hon. member alludes. Perhaps the hon. minister can shed some light on it.

DR. OBERG: Sure. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Included in this legislation are some penalty clauses, but I will say at the outset that these penalty clauses have been directly lifted from the Labour Relations Code, which the Alberta teachers do operate under as well. So they are identical to what is in the Labour Relations Code.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Even at this very late hour why doesn't the Premier choose the path of labour peace by putting his punitive Bill 12 on hold and instead sit down with teachers to establish a fair and impartial arbitration process?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, the arbitration process is fair. It is fair. I would remind the hon. leader of the third party that this is precisely what the union president asked for. This is precisely what the president of the Alberta School Boards Association asked for. The fundamentals are precisely what they asked for, and that is the truth. It amazes me that the hon. leader of the third party can't get that through his head.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS DeLONG: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have received calls from some of my constituents regarding the Education Services Settlement Act. They're concerned that this legislation infringes on their teachers' basic right to strike. My question is to the Minister of Human Resources and Employment. Can you please clarify this?

MR. DUNFORD: Well, Mr. Speaker, the Education Services Settlement Act doesn't infringe on the teachers' right to strike. What is contemplated here under agreement by the parties is that there would be a binding arbitration process put into place. Anyone that has any experience, of course, with the Labour Relations Code would know and understand that when there's a binding arbitration in place, then it removes, for the instance that we're dealing with here, that particular right to strike. So job action cannot take place, then, while this binding arbitration is in place. The binding arbitration is going to lead to a collective agreement, and of course strikes are illegal when there's a collective agreement in force. So the basic right to strike is still there. A binding arbitration was asked for. A binding arbitration is in place. You can't have the ability to strike and a binding arbitration at one and the same time.

MS DeLONG: To the Minister of Human Resources and Employment: is it true that teachers cannot speak to each other about their current labour situation without risking a possible fine?

MR. DUNFORD: Well, as we've just heard recently, nothing could be further from the truth. There is nothing in the legislation that prevents the teachers' ability to assemble, and the Premier talked about some occasions where it's already occurring. Let me assure the member and all the members here in the House and the Alberta public that's watching that teachers are free to talk about their current labour situation or any other topic.

MS DeLONG: To the same minister: whose responsibility is it to determine whether strike activity is occurring?

MR. DUNFORD: Well, in the unlikely event that job action might be taken, it would really be up to the school board as the employer to determine if they felt that concerted job action was taking place. They would then, of course, have to make an application to the Labour Relations Board, again, indicating that they believe that an illegal strike is taking place. It would be up to the Labour Relations Board to make that determination, and of course that's part of their responsibilities. It's traditional within this province. It's part of something the Labour Relations Board does on a continuing and traditional basis. So there's really nothing new here despite the attempts of the opposition parties and others to try to make it so.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Teachers' Labour Dispute

MS BLAKEMAN: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Teachers have no confidence in the Learning minister and will no longer support his ministry in any way, including marking achievement tests or diploma exams, preparing those exams, conducting field testing for exams, serving on any Alberta Learning committee, distributing any Alberta Learning material, piloting new curricula, and a whole multitude of other services. My questions are all to the Minister of Learning. Where is the minister going to go for help to complete these tasks?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Today we received formal notification from the ATA that services such as marking achievement tests, marking diploma exams, piloting new curriculums, field testing, these types of things, will be withdrawn by the Alberta Teachers' Association. I'd like to say at the outset that that's extremely unfortunate. I do believe that this will be to the detriment of students, and that is extremely unfortunate.

Mr. Speaker, when it comes to the actual question that the hon. member asked about marking diploma exams and marking achievement tests, we do have a considerable number of contingency plans under way. For example, where mechanical correcting can be done, that will be done. We are also looking at utilizing our existing staff and possibly some other staff in order to do it. I can assure Albertans that the diploma exams will be completed, that they will be marked on time, and that the students will achieve their final marks.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you. What plans does the minister have to regain the confidence of teachers?

DR. OBERG: Mr. Speaker, the one thing that I will say as well – and I do believe that this needs to be said – is that the whole marking thing is not a voluntary process. The teachers are paid to come in and mark, but they have withdrawn that.

When it comes to winning the trust of the teachers, I think that's something that is extremely important. It's very detrimental when the Minister of Learning and the Ministry of Learning lose that trust, but we will do whatever we can to bring that trust back, to move on with the learning system, to move in the direction that will make it a better learning system than it already is. Mr. Speaker, I must remind the Assembly yet again that this is the best public education system in the world bar none.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Does the minister believe that a policy of poisoning the teaching atmosphere will help students learn?

DR. OBERG: Well, Mr. Speaker, I don't believe that a policy of poisoning the teaching environment will help students learn. Absolutely not. What happened, as the Premier has alluded to already, is that the Alberta Teachers' Association through the president, Mr. Larry Booi, came in and met with the Premier. As a matter of fact, I have the ATA News right here, which says, "ATA proposes arbitration to resolve bargaining impasse." It's on the front page of the ATA News. We have attempted to resolve the salary dispute that has been out there. We have put forward a blue-ribbon panel to discuss some of the larger issues around the learning system such as pupil/teacher ratios, such as class size, such as hours of instruction. These very important issues will be looked at, and we have given the Legislative Assembly the go-ahead on that.

Mr. Speaker, the other thing I will say is that we are looking at starting this on June 1 of this year. We're looking at having it completed by Christmas, or shortly before, of this year as well.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Education System Review

MR. JOHNSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The consequence of the teachers' labour dispute is a heightened awareness of the many complex issues that are part of the learning system. More and more my constituents are seeking information on our learning system. Most recently I was asked questions concerning the role of school boards and their powers to collect taxes and what types of issues will be included as part of the broad review of the learning system as per the Education Services Settlement Act, Bill 12. My questions are to the Minister of Learning. Will the role of school boards be a part of this upcoming review?

DR. OBERG: Mr. Speaker, we are anticipating having an extremely broad review of the learning system. We're presently in discussion with many of the parties involved as to what exactly this review should entail. But in direct response to the hon. member, I would anticipate that it will include roles of the school boards, which may or may not include taxation as well.

MR. JOHNSON: Will taxation powers of school boards then be a part of this review?

DR. OBERG: Again this is something that we do need to look at. I will say that I am definitely not in favour of going back to the situation that we had before about 1995, where we had a situation that if the constituency had pipelines going under it, had a power plant in its boundaries, it would receive more assessment and therefore have more money for education. We had some situations where school boards were spending $3,000 per student, while other ones right across the line, right across the border, were spending $18,000 per student. Through to the hon. member, Mr. Speaker, I don't believe that that's a situation we can allow to have happen again. However, the school boards presently have the ability to tax every three years. At the time of a municipal election they have the ability to put forward a plebiscite. Whether or not that is changed could certainly be an element of the review that we are looking at.

MR. JOHNSON: Finally, to the same minister: will supports for students with special needs be a part of this review?

DR. OBERG: Well, Mr. Speaker, we've done a lot with special-needs students over the past two years. We put in a full review with all the stakeholders, and they subsequently brought back 66 recommendations which we have accepted and will be implementing.

Mr. Speaker, I continue to hear stories from teachers and from parents about issues with special-needs students in the classroom. So I think that I can confidently say today to the hon. member that that will be one of the things we are looking at, because it is an issue that is being brought forward by teachers and is being brought forward by parents, and we need to take a look at it. It's a very important issue. There are definitely two or three or four different sides to this issue, and we do need to take a look at it.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Closure of Acute Care Beds

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On January 12 this year the Minister of Health and Wellness said unequivocally – and I quote – that Alberta's public hospitals are not for sale to private interests. [interjections] I can see that many of his caucus agree. Yet last Thursday this same minister left the door wide open to the sale of public health care facilities in rural Alberta to for-profit corporations. To the Minister of Health and Wellness: does this minister deny to this House that he is aware of plans now being considered to close acute care beds in rural Alberta?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, regional health authorities throughout the province are charged with the responsibility of running facilities, some of which are hospitals and others of which are long-term care centres and so on. What I indicated in this House last week – and it's been consistent throughout – is that we have in fact allowed the sale of hospitals to private interests in the past. I'm not denying that we've done that in the past. So for the hon. member to suggest that I've somehow denied that that's ever happened, I confess that that has been in fact the case. But what is clear from our legislation and has been from the outset is that there will be no operation of private, for-profit hospitals in the province of Alberta.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there may be reasons to dispose of an existing facility if it no longer meets the needs of a community and it may be sold, but it cannot be sold to a private interest and then operated as a private hospital, to be clear.

DR. TAFT: I think I need to repeat the question, Mr. Speaker. Does this minister deny to this House that he is aware of plans now being considered to close acute care beds in rural Alberta?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, I'll be happy to entertain his question. However, I should note that regional health authorities are charged with this responsibility. The budget will be of course tabled by our Finance minister tomorrow. I'm certain that regional health authorities will look at the dollars which are allocated to them. They will do the best job possible for the people that they serve in their respective authorities. That may involve the changing of facilities. It may include the disposal of facilities. It may include the conversion of facilities. This is all hypothetical. We know not now of such plans, but following the budget, things can change and things should always change. We have to have a stable health care system, but it should never stand still. Our health care system should always seek to make the best use of the money we allocate to it so that it reflects the needs of communities and cities and towns and rural areas throughout the province. That is what regional health authorities are charged with doing, and this government will do everything necessary to help RHAs achieve that mission.

DR. TAFT: Well, given the minister's sidestep, I'll get more specific. Will the minister guarantee that no public health facilities in Provost, Coronation, Castor, Hardisty, Killam, Daysland, Wainwright, or Galahad will be sold?

MR. MAR: I cannot give such a guarantee, Mr. Speaker. I've already indicated to him that there are facilities that . . . [interjections]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister has the floor.

MR. MAR: I've already indicated to him, Mr. Speaker, that there are facilities throughout this province under the responsibility of regional health authorities. Those regional health authorities make decisions. Some of those decisions are tough; no doubt about it. But the fact of the matter is that there are facilities that may be outdated and no longer have the ability to meet current medical practice. There may be examples where the needs of the community are more focused on long-term care as opposed to acute care. So I'll give no such guarantee. Regional health authorities do have that ability. They will however bring any such plans to the Minister of Health and Wellness for approval.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Budget Briefings

MR. CENAIKO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With regard to tomorrow's budget presentation it's my understanding that government provides budget briefings for various people on budget day. My question is to the Minister of Finance. Could the minister advise me of what groups receive these briefings?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MRS. NELSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member is correct; we do provide budget briefings. It's been a tradition in our Legislature, as it is in a number of others. We provide a very technical briefing for our media, and they're in lockup, in embargo, until such time as we stand and give the budget speech within this very Assembly. There are other briefings that are given to stakeholder groups. Some of the opposition receive technical briefings and knowledge of the budget but again embargoed. Quite frankly, they've been very successful over the years. I can't think of a breach that has occurred from the embargoes and the lockups that have taken place.

MR. CENAIKO: Mr. Speaker, my first supplemental question to the same minister: can the Minister of Finance explain why her ministry provides a special briefing for its stakeholders?

MRS. NELSON: Well, I think, Mr. Speaker, it's important that people who are reliant upon the budget process to operate within the province – groups such as municipalities, universities, and hospital groups – have the opportunity to have detailed technical briefings as to what is in the budget document ahead of time so that they can in fact follow through on it, because the very next day or even that evening they are bombarded with requests as to details on the budget information.

Once again I will say that these people are embargoed. They are in lockup, and we have not had breaches of information before that budget document is released through this Assembly.

MR. CENAIKO: Mr. Speaker, my final question to the same minister: do other provincial governments in Canada provide similar briefings?

MRS. NELSON: Yes, they do, Mr. Speaker. In fact, it's the norm to go through lockup on confidential documents, and I think it's been successful. I did try to look back to see if there had been difficulties. With all the speculation that does surround a budget document coming forward, there's quite often lots of speculation, but actual budget briefings usually are very straightforward and very secure.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Low-income Support Programs

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans eagerly await the results of the low-income review that began in June of last year. Some programs, like assured income for the severely handicapped and supports for independence, desperately need increased funding for individual payments to some of Alberta's most vulnerable citizens. My questions this afternoon are to the Minister of Human Resources and Employment. Is the minister planning on combining AISH and SFI into one program and one payment?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. DUNFORD: Well, thank you very much. In fact, we did have a low-income review. We had an excellent group of MLAs that went throughout the province. They have not only sent in a report indicating what was heard from people throughout Alberta, but also, of course, they've made some recommendations. As far as the actual question, the response is still under consideration by the government, and when we do provide that response, of course the question would be answered then, at that particular time.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: how much will the minister be increasing the individual benefits for those who are clients of AISH and/or SFI?

Thank you.

MR. DUNFORD: Well, again the MLA committee that went out there – I don't know that they went to every corner of this particular province – did in fact hear quite a bit of information and tried to provide it as best they could in terms of what they heard. One of the things they did hear, of course, was that in the levels of support, especially in the area of shelter rates, there is quite a difference throughout this province, Mr. Speaker, as you're no doubt aware. So, again, in terms of crafting and drafting the government response, we'll have to deal with that, then, at the proper time.

2:30

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: will the minister, then, guarantee these Albertans at a minimum that supports will not go down for any of the existing clients and that there will not be any change in eligibility requirements which would exempt any existing clients from receiving support?

Thank you.

MR. DUNFORD: Well, let me deal with it this way. One of the things that makes Alberta extremely attractive to other provinces and to people in other jurisdictions is that we're not shy about performance measurements. One of the things that this government does that's unlike other jurisdictions here in Canada is that we do have measuring up documents where we say to the people of Alberta, we say to opposition members such as yourself: here is how we are willing to be measured. One of those measurements, Mr. Speaker, is the fact that Albertans who need assistance will receive our help, and they'll get it in the sense of a hand up rather than a handout, because we believe that's the proper philosophy.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, followed by the hon. Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert.

Assured Income for the Severely Handicapped

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Any time someone rises in the Assembly to question or criticize the assured income for the severely handicapped program, the government retreats into its message box mantra that we in Alberta look after the people better than they do in other parts of the country. Now, whether that's true or not, it completely ignores the real issue facing those Albertans with serious disabilities; namely, that they are falling farther and farther behind the cost of living. It has been three years since the last increase in AISH rates. An increase is long overdue. To the Minister of Human Resources and Employment: will tomorrow's budget include increases of monthly benefit levels for AISH to help Alberta's severely disabled citizens catch up on the rising cost of living, and if not, why not?

MR. DUNFORD: Tomorrow the budget will come down, and he'll see his answer at that point in time.

MR. MASON: It was worth a try, Mr. Speaker.

How can the minister justify adjusting AISH benefits levels only twice in the last dozen years when benefits levels for federal CPP disability pensions are adjusted for inflation every year?

MR. DUNFORD: The AISH program was designed after quite an extensive public review, and I'm surprised at the tone of the member's questions, because most people would acknowledge, in fact including, I would say, many of the AISH recipients themselves, that we have a very good program in Alberta. It looks after the basic needs of most of the particular individuals, and when we do have an individual case where the current level of AISH support payments won't provide for that particular need, then our staff works with that particular individual and we move them to another program where, then, we can get that assistance to them.

It's an excellent program, I think, by most measurements. Most people would agree – and I think you would yourself, too, perhaps away from this House – that it's a very, very good program and one worth supporting.

MR. MASON: Mr. Speaker, if that is indeed the case, then why doesn't this government establish a benchmark for monthly benefit levels to AISH recipients similar to the average weekly earnings index used to adjust MLAs' salaries so that severely disabled Albertans don't fall farther behind in their living standards? Why are we better than they are, Mr. Premier?

MR. DUNFORD: If I could answer that, although I'm not exactly sure if it was directed, I think that part of the low-income review is to look at all aspects of the AISH program. We have to look at benefit levels. We have to look at asset levels. We've taken some steps in terms of those AISH clients that actually want to work and can go out and work in a meaningful way. We've provided an opportunity for them, again, to do that, and we've reduced any sort of deduction we would make on that.

The member does bring up a particular situation that we have currently facing us that we're going to have to deal with, and that is: what happens to the eligibility of an AISH client when the Canada pension plan disability payment takes them beyond the $855? Then it's not the income level that's of particular concern, but it's the loss of that medical card. I do agree with the member. We need to have a look at that, and that would be part of what the low-income review would contemplate doing.

Foreign Animal Disease Control

MR. HORNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last week there was a rumour brought to my attention about a possible outbreak of foot-and-mouth disease in Kansas. I've since heard that the quarantine was lifted as results came back negative, but this does raise the alarming spectre of a possible foot-and-mouth outbreak in Alberta. My question is to the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. Can the minister advise us on the current status of foot-and-mouth prevention in our livestock in Alberta?

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, it is true that there was a quarantine in Kansas, and I think that raised the spectre of the devastation that could be caused by that disease if there were an outbreak. The United States and Canada have been free of that. What it does tell us is that the system works. The place was quarantined. The suspect came back confirmation negative, and that's good. However, we do have to continue to keep up our vigilance and our surveillance, and we're continuing to work with the federal government, the Canadian Food Inspection Agency, with municipalities, with our producer organizations to make sure that we are prepared in the event of an outbreak or, most importantly, on prevention.

We very recently had a foreign animal diseases emergency preparedness workshop, Mr. Speaker, and I'm pleased to say that as we speak, a detector dog and its trainer are working together in preparation to come to Alberta. They would be stationed at the Calgary airport. We are assured that this detector dog and its trainer will be here before the G-8 summit and will be there to help ensure that we don't have any wrong products coming into our country that could pose a threat.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. HORNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My supplemental is to the same minister. This is all good news, the things that she has brought up. However, could the minister tell us exactly what precautions will take place with foreign military coming into the province to train this summer?

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, the federal government is currently working with the British military on new procedures for military coming in that will cover the disinfection of supplies, equipment, and clothing. Canadian officials will continue to inspect vehicles, and we'll continue to have disinfectant mats in place at our airports, particularly during the G-8.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. HORNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The minister mentioned the foreign animal disease emergency workshops, and I understand that a plan has developed from there. Will Alberta stakeholders be given the opportunity to work with the government departments on this support plan?

MRS. McCLELLAN: Absolutely, Mr. Speaker. It was important that we have producer and industry groups take part when we had our workshop. It will be very important to us that they continue to work with us as we move forward on this. If we did have an incident of any foreign disease coming in, it would be the producers and the industry organizations that would be on the front lines, and it's incredibly important that they are a part of that work.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry, followed by the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Infrastructure Funding

MR. BONNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's road construction industry has been told: sorry; there's no more money. Despite record spending on infrastructure last year, now the government is canceling and delaying projects because they are poor fiscal managers. Some of the construction companies have written to all members of this Assembly detailing the staff they are laying off because of this government's fiscal policies. My questions are to the Minister of Finance. Will you please explain your government's roller-coaster funding for infrastructure projects to Alberta companies that are forced to lay people off?

MRS. NELSON: Mr. Speaker, I think we've all had meetings with the association and have heard the concerns expressed by the association. Clearly, the association recognizes that we were in a position where we had to take corrective action last year, and one of the places where we did look at correction was in the Transportation and Infrastructure ministries. They were able to help us through some difficult times as the economy turned downward rather quickly. We have a budget coming forward tomorrow, and as I say, I'm sure that most members in this Assembly have met with the association, and the opposition will just have to stay tuned.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: why do you continue to reject calls from industry and the Official Opposition to provide stable funding for infrastructure projects?

MRS. NELSON: You know, Mr. Speaker, I've heard members opposite talk about putting in place different types of funds and fashioning them after this fund or that fund, but I would remind hon. members that these last three years in the province of Alberta we have experienced the highest revenue levels in the history of our province. If we had adopted the theory from the members opposite, instead of having dollars going into health and education and some of our infrastructure and transportation programs, we would have been in a position where we would have been pulling dollars out and putting them off into a fund for later on. Naturally, you contribute to these funds when you have additional record revenues; you don't do it when you don't have those revenues.

So, clearly, planning is very important. Our goal has been to free up what I have called the dead expense, which is interest expense on our outstanding debt. By taking a billion dollars out of interest expense, we have freed those dollars up forever so that they can be used in core programs and core priorities throughout the government's responsibilities.

MR. BONNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister. The government's fiscal policies are costing Albertans jobs and causing cuts to essential services. Is it not time to change policy and implement a fiscal stability fund that will level out infrastructure investment and support small business and our essential services?

MRS. NELSON: Well, I don't know what page this hon. member is on, Mr. Speaker, but Alberta has just come out of a year where we've experienced – our Minister of Economic Development may want to supplement on this – the biggest growth in the economy of any place in Canada. We've had the highest consumer spending confidence in Canada. We have had the lowest unemployment in all of Canada. We have had the highest capital investment per capita in all of Canada. We've had the largest migration per capita in all of Canada of people coming to this province. It doesn't really get any better than what we have in the province of Alberta.

So we have to face some realities as a government. The support, Mr. Speaker, of Albertans and people outside of Alberta, as evidenced by their continual migration to this province, is that they support the framework that this government has put in place, the fiscal framework that provides for stability and a future and a government that does not intrude into the marketplace but in fact deals with the realities that are dealt to them. That's what Albertans want, that's what the people of Canada want, and that's why this province is still the envy of every jurisdiction not only in Canada but in North America. So stay tuned.

Merci, M. le Président.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

W.R. Myers Rebels Boys' Basketball Team

MR. JACOBS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to recognize and congratulate the W.R. Myers high school in Taber. This is the same school that a few years ago experienced a tragic event. But this is a happy story. On Saturday, March 16, the W.R. Myers Rebels won the 2002 4A boys' provincial basketball title. They defeated Lester B. Pearson high school 65-58 in a close, hard-fought game. Their head coach is Allen Matthews. The assistant coaches are Rob Rodgers, B.J. Bajowa, and Cory Matthews. The team is as follows: Brant Hansen, Justin Steed, Nelson Porter, Dustin Francis, Paul Garner, Mac Clements, Devin Bennett, Jon Harding, Jayson Barrows, Brandon Bullock, Henry Bekkering, and Brian Steed. The school and the community are extremely proud of the talent and commitment of these players. Also, we are grateful to the coaches, who have volunteered many hours to assist this team to attain this goal.

Again, congratulations to the players, coaches, and parents of these young men. Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Randy Ferby Rink Men's National Curling Champions

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to congratulate yet another championship team from the Ottewell Curling Club in Edmonton-Gold Bar. Skip Randy Ferby along with Scott Pfeifer, Marcel Rocque, and the sharp-shooting Dave Nedohin repeated as Canada's men's curling champions yesterday before a crowd of over 15,000 in Calgary at the Nokia Brier. The Ferby rink joins a long, distinguished list of curlers from the Ottewell club who have excelled at the provincial, national, world, and Olympic levels. Credit should also be given to the alternates from all these teams, for we all know that curling is made up of a team of five. I wish the Ferby rink on behalf of all members of this Assembly good luck at the world championships, April 6 through 14, at Bismarck, North Dakota.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

U of A Golden Bears Basketball Team

MR. LUKASZUK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday in Halifax the University of Alberta's Golden Bears defeated the top-seeded Western Ontario Mustangs to win their third Canadian inter-university men's basketball championship. The Golden Bears, led by this year's coach of the year, Mr. Don Horwood, made their seventh trip to the nationals over the last nine years and their fifth trip to the finals.

The Golden Bears' success in men's basketball in Canada over the past decade is a result of hard work and a strong team commitment. Mr. Speaker, these players have shown that great achievement is usually borne out of great sacrifice and is never a result of selfishness. I would like to congratulate the U of A Golden Bears, their coach, and all students at the University of Alberta and wish them all much success in their endeavours.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Randy Ferby Rink Men's National Curling Champions

MR. McCLELLAND: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I join my colleague the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar as, once again, an Edmonton member of the Legislature rising with the privilege of recognizing the championship achievement of an Edmonton-based team, this time representing Alberta. The Randy Ferby rink, curling out of the Ottewell Curling Club, claimed the national men's curling title, winning the Brier yesterday in Calgary. Edmonton, Alberta, and all Canadians join me in congratulating the skip, Randy Ferby, and his rink: Dave Nedohin, Scott Pfeifer, and Marcel Rocque. Members of the championship rink were quick to point out that it was a team win, with every member contributing, every member supporting the others. It was their combined abilities that resulted in the championship.

Representing the people of Alberta, it is my pleasure and privilege to formally recognize the individual and team achievements of this remarkable rink. Well done. Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

U of A Sports Teams

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In a theme today, if Edmonton is the City of Champions, the University of Alberta is the university of champions. The U of A Golden Bears and Pandas teams dominate the Canadian university sports scene like Wayne Gretzky once dominated the ice surface, except that the Golden Bears and the Pandas don't just dominate in one sport. They dominate in almost all. In recent years the Bears and Pandas have won more national championships than I can list here in the time available. In recent weeks the Pandas ice hockey team won their second national title in three years and the Bears won the national volleyball title, and on the weekend just past the Bears won the national basketball title. Next week the Bears hockey team has a good chance of winning yet another national title.

I'm sure all of us join together in congratulating the U of A for being the university of champions and helping make Edmonton-Riverview, where the university resides, the constituency of champions.

Thank you.

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

THE CLERK: Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 37.1(2) I wish to advise the House that the following document was deposited today with the office of the Clerk: return to the order of the Assembly MR2, asked for by Ms Blakeman on behalf of Mr. MacDonald on May 9, 2001, Hon. Mr. Smith, Minister of Energy.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, anything further?

MR. MASON: Yes. Mr. Speaker, I'm tabling five copies of postcards signed by 180 Albertans. These Albertans are asking the Premier and his cabinet to increase AISH benefits from $855 per month to $1,464 per month while "keeping intact a medical benefits package."

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have one tabling this afternoon, and that is a letter that I received at the constituency office. It is encouraging citizens to be quite aware of what supports there are for persons with disabilities in this province and what cutbacks have occurred.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With permission, I'd like to table the required number of copies of a letter from Hull Child and Family Services to a parent of a handicapped child. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Privilege

Appointments to Electoral Boundaries Commission

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last Thursday I rose pursuant to Standing Order 15(2) on a question of privilege. At that time I indicated that contrary to the Electoral Boundaries Commission Act, section 2(1)(b), which says,

2 persons, who are not members of the Legislative Assembly, appointed by the Speaker of the Legislative Assembly on the nomination of the Leader of Her Majesty's loyal opposition in consultation with the leaders of the other opposition parties represented in the Legislative Assembly, in fact the consultation with respect to the members, announced by you on that same day, had not occurred between the Leader of the Official Opposition and the leader of the New Democrat opposition. You indicated at that time that we ought to consult with the Leader of the Official Opposition and confirm if in fact that was the case, and if it was, that we ought to deal today with the question of privilege. We have done so.

The leader of the New Democrat opposition spoke with the Leader of the Official Opposition on Friday, and the Leader of the Official Opposition indicated that in fact we were correct, that no consultation had occurred, in contravention of the act.

The leader of the third party and I also met with the Leader of the Official Opposition and the Official Opposition House Leader this morning. Mr. Speaker, I have to say that in both his conversation with the leader of the New Democrat opposition on Friday and our meeting this morning, we appreciated the forthrightness of the Leader of the Official Opposition, who took responsibility for the situation. Yet the question remains: what is to be done to rectify the failure to consult? The advice received by the New Democrat opposition suggests that a very strong case exists that the privileges of our party in this Assembly have been violated. Section 2(1)(b) of the Electoral Boundaries Commission Act states that there is a clear duty on the part of the Leader of the Official Opposition to consult with other opposition parties in the Assembly.

The purpose of the Electoral Boundaries Commission Act is a very important one with significant implications for all members of this Assembly. What can be more fundamental than the drawing of boundaries for electoral divisions that we as members represent? Electoral boundaries are redrawn at most every 10 years. In other words, the boundaries that are established by the commission that was just appointed last week will be in place for the next two or three provincial elections. Therefore, an Electoral Boundaries Commission plays an important role in the electoral process in Alberta and impacts on the representation of Alberta voters. With this responsibility comes the corresponding obligation to ensure that minority interests are considered and taken into account. This is one of the reasons for requiring that the Leader of the Official Opposition is to consult with leaders of other opposition parties represented in the Legislature before making nominations to the commission.

Maingot in his book Parliamentary Privilege in Canada says on page 13 that to constitute privilege, there must be an important obstruction to the member in performing his parliamentary work in either a direct or constructive way. Clearly, a failure to consult constitutes such an obstruction and interference. On page 14 Maingot says that the failure to obey the lawful commands of parliament can constitute a question of privilege. On page 15 Maingot notes that the parliament has the power to punish for these types of contempts.

Mr. Speaker, the House certainly has charge of its own affairs, but members should be aware that significant case law exists on what constitutes the duty to consult. In particular, a 1997 decision by the Alberta Court of Appeal in the case of Lakeland College Faculty Association versus Lakeland College points to the same conclusion. This case law concludes that consultation must be more than a mere formality. It includes a duty to seriously take into account the interest of the party being consulted. It imposes a duty to fully inform the party being consulted of its own position as well as to be fully informed of the position of the party being consulted.

The result, Mr. Speaker, is clear. The Leader of the Official Opposition is required by the act to act in a nonpartisan fashion and to make a nomination in consultation with the leader of other parties. In other words, the nominations themselves must represent the interests of all opposition parties, not just the party of the Leader of the Official Opposition.

Now, Mr. Speaker, in the letter to you this morning I had first suggested that as per 114(2) of Beauchesne, if a prima facie breach of privilege had occurred, that matter be referred to a standing committee of the Legislature. I've had the opportunity since to discuss that matter further with the leader of the New Democrat opposition, and I would suggest, instead of referral to a standing committee, that you as Speaker, in recognition of the fact that requirements of the Electoral Boundaries Commission Act have not been met, rescind the appointments of the two persons nominated by the Leader of the Official Opposition and that a reasonable period of time, perhaps one week, be provided, during which real and meaningful consultation can take place between the Leader of the Official Opposition and the leader of the New Democrat opposition and that after this consultation takes place, the Leader of the Official Opposition resubmit the list of nominations to be appointed to the Electoral Boundaries Commission.

Mr. Speaker, in conclusion, I just want to say that we consider this to be a very, very serious matter. We do not wish to seek any sort of punishment in respect to the matter, but we want to see that our rights are in fact taken into account in the process. That is clearly envisaged in the legislation. The duty to consult is not in fact a mere formality.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In response I would just like to kind of give a little background in terms of the process that I followed in making those nominations. This process started in the fall last year when we were in the process of negotiating the incorporation of the changes in the Electoral Boundaries Commission Act into the Miscellaneous Statutes Amendment Act. We were trying to set up a process that would allow for some open discussion, and at that point in time I had written a letter to the Government House Leader and Attorney General, who was sponsoring that piece of legislation, and asked basically for two things. The first one has nothing to do with this, so I'll deal with the second issue, on which I asked for clarification in the letter.

That dealt with the issue of the nomination of individuals to your office with respect to the act. This letter was sent over on September 14, and we were asking for what constituted the options available to deal with that appointment. The clarification that we got back basically stated: I think there is little room for an interpretation other than that you and your caucus name those two persons. Mr. Speaker, I proceeded then, because part of the discussion that brought this up was: what constitutes an official party within the context of the Legislature? That was the discussion behind the request to the Government House Leader and Attorney General about how we interpret the act.

In effect, then, I responded to your office with the nominations, using the process that was kind of implied in that message back from the Government House Leader and Attorney General, which basically said that, in his interpretation, I would be the one who would on behalf of the caucus name those two persons. I guess the approach that I took was to follow that, and no consultation was undertaken with any other political parties about the process. I ended up, then, this week, in response to a conversation we had on the phone and your subsequent letter, forwarding my letter to you with the two nominees on it, asking that you consider them for appointment.

Mr. Speaker, I undertook that process in the spirit of trying to expedite the movement in the last week or so as we were ending up with some deadlines. The process has to be finished within the time frame of 18 months underlined in the act. So, basically, I was acting under those two premises: that I had the authority to make those nominations, and based on the clarification of the definition of responsibilities, I made those appointments to your office.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

MR. STEVENS: Mr. Speaker, we take no position with respect to the application per se other than to say that the membership of this particular commission has been established, that they have a time frame that must be met, that it's important that they get on with the business at hand, and that whatever transpires, it would be our preference to see the committee as struck continue with the work that they have before them.

THE SPEAKER: The chair would like to thank members for their contributions on this issue.

To review the matter. Last Thursday, March 14, the chair issued a news release appointing four individuals to the Electoral Boundaries Commission. Section 2(1) of the Electoral Boundaries Commission Act stipulates that a commission is to consist of "a chair appointed by the Lieutenant Governor in Council," two persons "appointed by the Speaker . . . on the nomination of the President of the Executive Council," and in clause (b),

2 persons, who are not members of the Legislative Assembly, appointed by the Speaker of the Legislative Assembly on the nomination of the Leader of Her Majesty's loyal opposition in consultation with the leaders of the other opposition parties represented in the Legislative Assembly.

Mr. Robert C. Clark was appointed chair by Order in Council 99/2002, issued March 12, 2002. The chair wrote the Leader of the Official Opposition and the Premier on March 13, 2002, asking for the nominees and reciting the appropriate sections of the act. The names of the nominees were received, and those individuals were appointed on March 14. It should be pointed out that the chair assumes that members are aware of their responsibilities and does not want to start a practice of cross-examining members on whether they have met the necessary preconditions on this or any other matter.

On the same day as the appointments were announced, the Member for Edmonton-Highlands stood in this Assembly and raised his purported question of privilege, based on his understanding that the ND opposition was not consulted about the nominees to the commission, as required by section 2(1)(b) of the act. As recorded at page 374 of Hansard for that day, the chair invited the member and his leader to have certain discussions about whether there was any consultation and, if not, to provide the appropriate notice two hours before the opening of the Assembly today, as required by Standing Order 15(2), which he did.

The chair must first consider whether the objection falls within the scope of parliamentary privilege. This is a very, very difficult question, on which long articles will surely and can be written. The question focuses on whether the Leader of the Official Opposition's statutory duty to consult before nominating individuals to the Speaker falls within the accepted categories of privilege or whether it constitutes a contempt. Let there be no doubt that in the chair's mind this is a very serious matter, whether it is technically a prima facie question of privilege or not.

During the debate on this purported matter few relevant citations were provided as to how this matter would breach a member's individual privilege or the collective privileges of the Assembly. In fact, the Assembly is not involved in the appointment process. The Assembly through the act has delegated that responsibility to the Speaker, who appoints people on the recommendation of the Premier and the Leader of the Official Opposition. A condition precedent for the nominations of the Leader of the Official Opposition is that they must be done “in consultation” with the opposition parties represented in the Assembly. This, as has been identified today by the Leader of Her Majesty’s Official Opposition, was not done.

Well, the Assembly itself is not involved in the appointment process. Actors in the Assembly are definitely involved by virtue of their offices. Accordingly, while it is difficult to see how this would constitute a prima facie question of privilege, it is something that is appropriate to be brought to the attention of the Speaker, and there is no better place to do this than in the Assembly itself. In fact, the chair welcomes the opportunity for these matters to be brought forward in an open and in a transparent manner. Furthermore, if the chair did not address this issue, then it might invite the courts to become involved in the matter and in matters that seem more appropriate for the Assembly to consider.

On this specific issue the chair is not convinced that the omission by the Leader of the Official Opposition constitutes a prima facie case of privilege, but this does not end the matter. As the statutory requirement for the Leader of the Official Opposition to nominate individuals in consultation with the leader of the other official parties was by his own admission not met, the chair will today rescind the appointments of Mrs. Bauni MacKay and Mr. Ernie Patterson made last Thursday. These appointments are therefore a nullity.

The chair sincerely regrets any inconvenience or embarrassment to those individuals and to the chair and other members of the commission. However, in the interest of fairness and compliance with the legislation the chair must do so. In the interest of ensuring that the commission can commence its work on a timely basis, the chair invites the Leader of the Official Opposition to follow the statutorily required process and nominate two individuals at the earliest possible opportunity and to advise the Speaker as soon as convenient.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, the items of business that would normally be conducted this afternoon entitled Written Questions and Motions for Returns cannot be dealt with today as these items of business have not met the notice of requirement of Standing Order 38.

head: Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: We’ll call the committee to order.

3:20 Bill 202 Environmental Protection and Enhancement (Clean-up Instructions) Amendment Act, 2002

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

MRS. JABLONSKI: Thank you, Mr. Chairman, for allowing me to begin Committee of the Whole debate on Bill 202. I was very surprised and honoured that this bill passed second reading unanimously. I would like to thank all of the members of the Assembly for their support and ask for their continued support at this stage as well.

I believe that this bill is important for Alberta. It’s not a massive change to our legislation, but it’s a small one that is sure to help our employees in the Department of Environment. Today I would like to talk about how the subsections of Bill 202 work on the ground level and in the field.

The support that Bill 202 received in second reading was of two sorts. On one hand, some members supported the bill as it stood. On the other hand, others wanted the word “must” in section 112.1(1) changed to “may.” The support of the latter group was conditional on this change. Mr. Chairman, I’ve considered the rationale behind this change, especially as it was explained by the hon. Minister of Environment and the Member for Airdrie-Rocky View, and I now beg leave to introduce the following amendment, that section 112.1(1) now read:

When the release of a substance has been reported under section 110, the Director may issue instructions immediately to the person responsible for the substance to restore the area affected by the release to a condition satisfactory to the Director.

There are several reasons why I’ve proposed this change. First, in second reading the hon. Minister of Environment expressed concern that the word “must” would create a make-work project for our Department of Environment. The minister noted a small situation where, in all common sense, no cleanup instructions would need to be delivered and asked a reasonable question: why should the department have to issue a letter in this situation, especially considering everything else they have to do in one day?

The Member for Airdrie-Rocky View raised an equally serious concern. She talked about her previous career in the biomedical waste industry and how companies were encouraged not to report spills because of the regulation and red tape tied up in dealing with a spill.

The implication was clear. Bill 202 as it stood was going to cause excessive red tape. This alongside the primary complaint from the Minister of Environment raises a concern. It is definitely not my intent to create legislation that would provide department officials with the incentive to shirk their duties, and I would certainly hope that this is not going on because of any laws that we have now. Red tape poses a tricky issue for any government but especially for a Conservative government committed to the maxim that small government is best.

Obviously, even Conservatives have to admit that some red tape is necessary. With regards to environmental concerns, a government cannot do its job without having a mechanism by which to hold those who have caused damage accountable for their actions. Whether we like it or not, that mechanism is red tape. The key here is whether we are tying people up in it or using it sparingly to guide their way. As a conservative individual I prefer to use it sparingly and only when it is necessary.

I introduced Bill 202 because I was made aware of too many cases where red tape became necessary. I have introduced this amendment because I see that the bill was targeting responsible Albertans that didn’t need to be targeted along with those who ignored the harm their actions are doing to the environment. Frankly, I have no problem with lassoing environmentally irresponsible people with red tape, but let’s also work with responsible Albertans who want to keep this province as pristine as possible. They don’t need our red tape.

I also would like to state that I agree with the minister that we have to be mindful of the employees’ position when coming up with legislation. We don’t want to force our employees to do things that they simply are not capable of doing because of time constraints. When we do this, we encourage shortcuts and run the potential of causing even more damage to our environment. The point is we have to worry about the workload that we put on our employees to ensure that they can do the job we ask and that the job we ask them to do is the right job for them to do. Their job, in my view, isn't to check out spills from oil trucks that were cleaned up half an hour before they arrived on the scene, and having them waste their time on that paperwork is counterproductive. This is why I've introduced the amendment.

The point is to focus on the spills that need to be cleaned up, and I do believe that this bill with the amendment retains the power to do that. I suggest that it does because of section 112.1(2). I think that there has been a bit of confusion about what the "must" actually refers to. For example, the Member for Edmonton-Strathcona stated that he would like to see the "must" remain because "in far too many instances voluntary compliance just doesn't work."

I brought forward Bill 202 because, as the member stated, in far too many instances voluntary compliance just doesn't work. I raised it because in fact a constituent of my own found himself in just one of those instances. While we're not taking as strong a step by amending the bill, we are still taking a step. I would like to call all members' attention to the wording in subsection (2).

When instructions are issued under subsection (1) and the person to whom the instructions are issued fails to comply, the Director shall issue an environmental protection order to the person responsible for the substance.

There's no ambivalence here. If you are told to do something, you've got to do it. No ifs, ands, or buts. The amendment does two things. First, it says that if you are cleaning things up, we'll leave you alone. Second, it says that if you are not, we'll take you to task.

Much is still left up to the discretion of the Department of Environment. In order for section 112.1 to become active, the department has to issue a letter, and I have faith in our department to properly issue letters to polluters. More importantly, I have a lot of faith in Albertan property owners. Nobody cares about a piece of property more than its owner, and that's just human nature. If we pass Bill 202, we can point out to them that we have a section in our Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act that will work for them if a letter is issued to anyone who pollutes their land.

Now, I'm not Albert Einstein, but I am a property owner, and if my property were polluted and nothing was done about it, I'd sure ask the Department of Environment: "If section 112.1 becomes operable once you issue a letter, why haven't you issued a letter? Let's get things on the go here." I'd keep bugging the department until my problem was solved. I'd have faith in our department, but if they were not rewarding my faith with solid action, I'd be on the responsible director like gangbusters to get things done.

So while I've proposed the amendment, the crux of Bill 202 still remains. The bill still requires polluters to follow the instructions of any letter issued under section 112. If they do not, they are subject to an environmental protection order and the penalties that are associated with that. The meat of the law is therefore still in place.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I would like to thank all members for their support in second reading. It's rare that we ever see such agreement in this Assembly, and I am humbled to be at the centre of it. I do hope that it remains through the committee stage. I would like to thank those who expressed concerns with the bill in second reading and sincerely do hope that the amendment has strengthened your resolve to vote in favour of Bill 202. To those who express worry over this amendment, I certainly look forward to hearing your thoughts on this amendment, both for and against. However, as I said to conclude the second reading debate two weeks ago, this isn't a giant step, but it is a concerted effort to repair what I see as a hole in our legislation. It's a conservative step but one that I hope members on all sides of our Assembly can see the logic of.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: Hon. members, the hon. Member for Red

Deer-North has introduced an amendment, and we shall refer to that amendment as amendment A1.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. On the amendment as before us there are a few points I'd like to address about the amendment. The Member for Red Deer-North said that this was a conservative step forward, and I would agree with her. We liked it a little bit better when it was a liberal step forward and stated "must" rather than "may," but it isn't that watered down that we can't support it.

AN HON. MEMBER: It's not polluted either.

MS CARLSON: Well, what we want is polluters to stop polluting. There's no doubt about that, and we've been advocating very strongly in that regard for any number of years.

The Member for Red Deer-North stated that she had faith in the department to properly issue letters to polluters, and so do we, Mr. Chairman. It's actually quite a good department overall. However, the biggest problem with enforcement in this province has not been the regulations and the goodwill and the letters going out. It has been the actual follow-up, and that's due to a lack of staffing, not due to a lack of intent in terms of what the department wants to do. So that continues to be a concern. I don't see that addressed here. Hopefully we will see that there is adequate follow-up in these instances, but that doesn't always happen.

The Member for Red-Deer North has been here now for just over a year, so she hasn't had an opportunity to see that most of the time the Official Opposition in this province does actually support what the government is doing. If we look at it statistically, I have to say that we vote 75 to 80 percent of the time with the government on issues of the day. When we step up to the plate and state that we see that there's something missing or wrong or that could be improved, certainly we're happy to very aggressively pursue that particular agenda. Sometimes the government actually listens and sometimes will adapt or adopt the changes that we recommend.

In this case, though, we've been quite supportive of this bill. As it has gone through, as I said, I'm a little disappointed that they changed "must" to "may," but when the minister stands up and says, "We've changed 'must' to 'may' or there'll be no 'must' in terms of supporting this bill," then the member did the right thing, because it's a step in the right direction.

So with that, Mr. Chairman, I will conclude my remarks and be happy to support this amendment.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. Member for Calgary-Cross.

MRS. FRITZ: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased as well to debate the proposed amendment to Bill 202 that's before us here in committee. I really think that this amendment as put forward by the author of the bill, my hon. colleague from Red Deer-North, is a thoughtful, insightful amendment. My colleague wants to change Bill 202 so it is workable not only in the best interests of our constituents but also in the best interests in our employees, and I strongly support my colleague with this intent.

Mr. Chairman, like the sponsor of the bill I believe that we have to look at the current abilities of the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act to effect positive change and build upon effectiveness rather than detract from it. I believe that leaving in the word “must” builds in a bureaucratic inefficiency that could in fact harm the environment in the long run. I really think that we have to look at the hard realities of the bottom line as well as a degree of reasonableness in how our staff members, who already, as was said earlier, work very hard in our best interests, function.

Our goal isn't to make the legislation so cumbersome that it requires unnecessary paperwork. People, I think, really should be allowed to do their jobs with the best interests of all Albertans in mind, and that's what my colleague is doing with this amendment, Mr. Chairman. She's permitting that to happen and allowing that to happen or working toward that intent.

To leave the word “must” would serve only, I think, to overutilize valuable manpower resources. In many cases that's not a required measure. It's not practical. This amendment gives the department the necessary flexibility to decide for themselves in any circumstances if further action is warranted. What a luxury to give to an employee, hon. colleague across the way, who said that there isn't follow-up, to allow the employee to actually follow through with what further action they see is warranted, and that's what this amendment does do.

The assertion that this would somehow limit the effectiveness of Bill 202 I find very questionable. The more legislation we have that micromanages the department, which is not what our employees are looking for, the more we're limiting their ability to prioritize department resources, to use good judgment, and to respect good faith arrangements with our public.

We have to recognize, Mr. Chairman, that our departments are trying to do the best job they can, and if we confine them to what they must do, we limit their ability to problem solve creatively, to save time, and to save ultimately taxpayers' dollars. But if we provide flexibility in the legislation, which is what my hon. colleague is doing with this amendment, then we can trust, I believe, that the spirit of the legislation will be followed.

The alternative is not trusting our employees to follow the spirit of the law, and that, I think, is just a formula for waste. We'd have to hire officers to ensure that other officers are following the letter of the law if it had stayed in, and you can see, Mr. Chairman, that taking, as my colleague said, the first step, saying that something must be done, leads to tacking on more and more staffing and monitoring requirements.

While we'd all agree that our environment deserves the best protection we can provide, we ultimately have to also expect voluntary compliance. Governments cannot be everywhere and do absolutely everything. We can only provide a framework to encourage compliance, and in my opinion that should not include an arduous process and a never-ending paper trail. By including the word “must,” we may be pushing levels of voluntary compliance and co-operation down while increasing the workload and reducing the productivity of our environmental officers, Mr. Chairman.

I'd like to give you an example of some of the other laws that use the word “may,” and I think that they're still very fair and evenly applied. If we look at the powers of officers under the Highway Traffic Act, nowhere in the text does it prescribe what the officer must do in the event of an infraction. In this case, the use of the word “may” allows the officer to use discretion, observe the situation, and then make an informed and rational decision about issuing a ticket, warning, or citation or arresting the violator. I hope I have that correct. We heard from our hon. colleague at a meeting that we were at here at the Legislature. Last week my colleague from Calgary-Buffalo said that in the previous occupation he had, that's what the officers do.

It really is ultimately an issue about trusting the officer to perform his duty in the best way he sees fit. The same is true, I think, Mr.

Chairman, for officers in our government departments. We need to provide the same kind of flexibility that would allow officers to perform their duties in the most efficient and reasonable way that they see fit. Rigid legislation would imply that extra staff is required to cross every t and dot every i, and I don't think that's reasonable. It would prove to be highly impractical, the very reason why I think that legislation should remain flexible.

Effectively, by saying what an officer of the government must or must not do, the legislation would be taking away, I think, the power of an officer's better judgment. Our departments are doing the very best they can to manage their time, to provide excellent service for taxpayers' dollars, and I know that we all believe that. Enabling them to use better judgment does not amount to a “loophole that you could drive a Mack truck through,” as the Member for Edmonton-Highlands so eloquently put it in earlier debate. There is no loophole, because the very capable staff in our departments are there to ensure compliance with the spirit of the legislation.

Mr. Chairman, the employees of the Department of Environment do work very hard to protect the air, water, and lands of our beautiful province, and implying that they require legislation that tells them exactly how to do their job I don't think is really appropriate. There are situations where legislative language has to be very firm, but I don't think this is one of them. This amendment to Bill 202 would allow the department to function with efficiency and discretion, and by telling the department what they must do, we are creating a situation where employees simply act without that discretion.

Mr. Chairman, the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act has done so much to add to the Alberta advantage. One of the principles of the legislation when it was introduced was that it would offer substantial ease by combining four acts into one concise, targeted act, and this single act provides environmental protection to our province's land, air, and water, as I said earlier, and, importantly, one set of rules to govern them all. It's important that the rules in the act remain flexible to allow the department to respond to situations as necessity and good sense dictate and not as stringent or inflexible legislation would dictate. That is the point of the amendment to Bill 202, and changing the word “must” to “may” will not dull the edge of the proposed legislation.

As I said earlier, the changing of the word will serve to make the bill even more effective and not waste valuable departmental resources. I believe that it's very much a matter of philosophy, Mr. Chairman. The government has set a standard of less is more, and that is to say, as we hear many times in the Legislature, that less government is better. Albertans do want specific, targeted services. I think Albertans have come to realize that the government is here to assist, not to interfere where they're not wanted. If complaints come to a department, employees do their very best to investigate and resolve any problems as quickly and as efficiently as possible. Each and every government department is doing all it can to achieve this kind of efficiency, and it's important that legislation not block these efforts.

Mr. Chairman, this is a discussion about what the core businesses of government are and should be. Should we be a safety net to ensure that Alberta's environment remains pristine and beautiful? Absolutely we should. So while the goal remains the same, to protect our environment, we must approach the matter with some finesse and flexibility, and this is the difference between “may” and “must.”

I strongly encourage all members of the Assembly to support the amendment that my hon. colleague has put forward, and more importantly please support the overall bill, Bill 202.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. Not to sound redundant, but I would like to rise today and speak in support of the amendment to the Environmental Protection and Enhancement (Clean-up Instructions) Amendment Act, 2002. The amendment that the sponsor of the bill has proposed here this afternoon speaks to the issue of flexibility, determining the wisdom of how staff should act in the face of a circumstance, and it also identifies the confidence that we should have in those who attend to a spill and are able to make the assessment as to whether it is or isn't being attended to and how it should be looked after.

The benefit, as I see it, of this amendment is that it will allow on-site staff that flexibility that I just mentioned. They will be able to see whether a cleanup process is under way. They will be able to then determine if that is adequate and is being addressed properly, and if it isn't, then they have the ability to call into force all of those resources that need to be done. The amendment also suggests that the department can allow that to continue, the inspectors, if you will, or the staff to continue with their work without having to be interrupted by the formality of filling out forms, of administration, of dealing with a process that perhaps would delay the immediate cleanup rather than having to look, respond, make a judgment, and encourage the cleanup as it would take place.

We all know that in looking at this amendment that is proposed, if a cleanup of a spill has not progressed to the satisfaction of the inspector, a letter can be issued that would ask the offender to do any one of a number of things. For instance, the letter could include that the request for cleanup and action immediately "measure the rate of release . . . of the substance" so that we would know what are the circumstances that are there. This letter could "minimize or remedy the effects of the substance on the environment" so you do get a proper assessment as well.

This letter could request the restoration of "the area affected by the release to a condition satisfactory to the Director," and in addition to that – again I'm pointing out that there are a number of recommendations that could be made – that letter could request that the site "monitor, measure, contain, remove, store, destroy or otherwise dispose of the substance," that all of those measures be looked at, to "lessen or prevent further releases of or control the rate of release of the substance into the environment." What I'm pointing to is that I believe the inspector who arrives on site and the team there can take a look at the particular site, again adjudicate what would be the most proper means to identify what is happening, and take action, if it isn't happening, to remediate the site.

The letter could also request the individual or the company responsible for the spill to "install, replace, or alter any equipment . . . in order to control or eliminate on an immediate and temporary basis the release of the substance into the environment." So, again, a proper understanding of what is happening on-site.

The whole purpose of this amendment is, quite simply, to suggest that the wisdom of those who are working on-site can be applied directly, immediately, and appropriately to the circumstances that they find as they observe the site, looking at the responsible protection of our environment that we all want so dearly for all of our sites, whether they be owned privately or whether they be part of another common usage, if you will, or rental.

Without saying much more, Mr. Chairman, I'd like to again highlight the fact that this amendment allows for flexibility of the staff who come on-site to recommend or to request or to encourage or to approve the process that is already in place, and if it isn't, then to take some action as it should appropriately be done. So I would encourage everyone in this Assembly to support this amendment to the Environmental Protection and Enhancement (Clean-up Instructions) Amendment Act, 2002.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar is rising on a point of order?

MR. MacDONALD: Yes, please, Mr. Chairman.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: Go ahead.

Point of Order
Distribution of Private Members' Bills

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much. I rise for a point of order under Standing Order 72, printing of bills: "every Bill shall be printed and distributed to all members before second reading." Also for your convenience, Mr. Chairman, I would like to refer to Beauchesne 644(3): "no bill may be introduced either in blank or in an imperfect shape." It is my view that both Bill 212, the Traffic Safety (Seizure of Vehicles in Prostitution Related Offences) Amendment Act, 2002, that was introduced earlier this afternoon by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, and Bill 211, the Marriage (Preparation Course) Amendment Act, 2002, by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview – now, the title page is Bill 211, but if you look in the inside, you have the amendment to the Traffic Safety Act, Bill 212, and I don't consider that to be suitable. It certainly is imperfect, as is Bill 211.

Now, we've had incidences here in the past, Mr. Chairman, where there was legislation introduced that obviously had not been read thoroughly by many hon. members of this Assembly, and I refer to the last term, with Bill 11. At this time I would seek direction from the chair, but in my view these documents certainly are not perfect.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. STEVENS: Well, this appears to be one of those cases where the point that the hon. member is making is self-evident from the documents he's referring to. The only comment I'd make is that we're in committee on some other matter, and I wonder whether this is the appropriate time to be raising this matter for your consideration, in Committee of the Whole. But certainly it does appear that the front page of those two particular acts is not in accordance with the body of them.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Yes. In response to the hon. Minister of Gaming and Deputy Government House Leader, I would like to say that it is my obligation to bring this to the attention of the Assembly as soon as possible. After question period today I thought I would read the legislation that was introduced by private members who are also members of the government caucus. It's my first opportunity to see this, and I think it's imperative that this be brought before the Assembly at this time.

Thank you.

MS CARLSON: Mr. Chairman, I would like to speak in support of my colleague from Edmonton-Gold Bar's point of order. There is no doubt that there are many precedents in this Assembly where we are expected to call to account members or positions taken or papers put forward by members at the earliest possible opportunity where we see an oversight. Here we have not one but two bills which have been mixed up in the printing schedule and have escaped somebody's eyes when they were reviewing them. So I do believe that there is a valid point here, and it needs to be addressed immediately.

MR. STEVENS: The only other comment I would like to make, Mr. Chairman, is simply this, that this is highly unusual. The Queen's Printer is responsible for the printing of these documents. As you are well aware, we don't see them until they hit the floor of the House. It seems to me that, upon reflection, the wisdom of the chair and the Speaker's office will come to some equitable solution which will maintain the standing of these good bills.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. LORD: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I just rise to make note that I've already sent notice to you that the bills have been mixed up inside. So maybe to settle this point of order, I can assure the members opposite that this has been drawn to the attention of the chair, and I am sure that it will be rectified as soon as possible.

Thank you.

MR. MASON: The only thing I can add, Mr. Chairman, is that we think that in some way this must be related to government cutbacks in some fashion or another.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: Hon. members, the chair would like to advise everyone on a couple of matters here. First, the appropriate timing for bringing forward a point of order would have been in Assembly and not in committee. However, having said that, the chair was made aware of the issue by the Member for Calgary-Currie. Upon reviewing both the bills that were tabled, bills 211 and 212, they were tabled with the Clerk in their appropriate format. However, the copy that was sent and circulated does have the misprint that has been identified. The appropriate people involved in the printing process have been advised, and the chair has been informed that a reprinted copy with the correction will be circulated in due course. However, for the record the official copies of bills 211 and 212 have been tabled as required.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: We shall proceed with the debate. The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

MR. CAO: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It is my pleasure to rise again and speak in this committee on Bill 202, the Environmental Protection and Enhancement (Clean-up Instructions) Amendment Act, 2002. I support the proposed amendment to this act brought forward by the hon. Member for Red Deer-North that would have the perpetrators of environmentally harmful substances be forced to remediate the spill according to the directions set out by the Ministry of Environment. I also support Bill 202 because it would help speed up actions to be taken to contain and control the source and the movement of contamination.

Since the second reading of Bill 202 the member has amended this bill to reflect the current need for some flexibility when dealing with environmental cleanups. In second reading of Bill 202 it was stated in section 112.1(1) that "the Director must issue instructions immediately to the person responsible for the substance to restore the area affected by the release to a condition satisfactory to the Director." The amendment to Bill 202 is that the director "may" issue the instructions immediately.

I agree with this amendment. I understand there is the need, when dealing with environmental spills and conditions, to ensure that they are appropriately cleaned up. However, the hon. Minister of Environment made an important point, that the words we use to legislate and regulate things in Alberta should be carefully considered so that they are not misinterpreted and are properly translated to regulate the way we mean it.

I agree, Mr. Chairman, that there is sometimes a need to be flexible. Though I agree with the amendment we are discussing within this committee, I have one small concern with it. I am concerned that this flexibility may be misused to allow people to delay their responsibility in cleaning up costly spills, allowing those who should have been reported to go unreported and slip between the cracks.

I continue to support Bill 202 because although it will be a small change, I believe it is a change that will make a difference. I believe if we work together as a government and as an Assembly to protect our environment, we can preserve the province for the health and enjoyment of our future generations.

No positive change is too small. I say this because I will be introducing a private member's bill that is complementary to this bill during this session – in fact, I have just introduced it this afternoon – which also proposes to make a positive change to the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act. Though I would like there to be greater environmental protection developed in Alberta, I know that it should not impede Albertans' economic prosperity and that changes, especially ones that we can work with, cannot take place just overnight. Steps in strengthening the acts which protect our environment, such as Bill 202 and the bill which I have sponsored in this House, will help serve to create more responsible guidelines, strike appropriate balances, and enhance environmental stewardship.

As elected representatives I believe it is our responsibility to design the most effective legislation we can to protect the quality of life for Albertans. The health of our constituents is at risk when harmful substances are not remediated properly or with not enough efficiency to control the damage. We all know that environmental accidents happen. When spills occur, the contaminants released could travel to a number of places which could pose serious risks to Albertans.

I support Bill 202 because I believe it will help expedite the remediation process and cut back on the amount of time that spills are left to continue contaminating the environment. Spills that are left too long could make their way into the groundwater we drink, contaminate the soil our children play with, and pollute the air we breathe. Albertans face greater problems when spills are left for longer periods, threatening our health and creating health conditions that are developed over long-time periods of exposure. The longer that hazards and spills are left, the more contaminants will be inevitably spread, steadily becoming a more serious problem to the health of Albertans and our environment. Serious health problems may occur due to the long- and short-term exposure to harmful, hazardous substances.

Bill 202 provides greater protection against harm to the health of Albertans by placing greater assurance on quick remediation efforts to clean up any environmental hazards that could be in their communities. It is often difficult to assess all the subsequent effects which will take place after a spill occurs or if the spill is left for too long before the area is remediated. It is important to know that. Some hazards leak into the environment, whether they be on the land, in the water, or in the air, and are not easy to detect without conducting many different tests. This is why I support the purpose of Bill 202. It will not allow spills which should have been remediated quickly to spread the other elements into the environment and cause greater damage to our land, water, and air.

The residential area of Lynnwood in my riding, Mr. Chairman, was contaminated through poor assessment and cleanup of oil refinery storage tanks. I have seen firsthand the effect of environmental carelessness on Albertans. Health concerns are always the number one issue that must be considered when discussing environmental accidents, because the health of Albertans is an important government priority.

Another consideration to be made is that remediation of spills is costly. It is most likely that the cost to properly remediate the land could increase exponentially if they are not reacted to within the appropriate time frame. Allowing spills to settle into the groundwater or to spread throughout the soil could easily turn into a greater expense and a much bigger problem with great responsible economic spin-offs through the greater environmental damage than the spill was in the first place. These increased costs usually do fall on persons or companies responsible for the spills, though there may be involvement by a resident or an Albertan that has been adversely affected by the irresponsible action to clean up the spills, because contaminants spread and can be ingested through contaminated groundwater, as could happen with petroleum tank leakage or spills, the inhalation of petroleum vapours from old oil storage and gas tanks. The monetary burden and time necessary to properly remediate the environment will become far greater than if it was addressed at the soonest possible moment.

Residents' lives may also be disrupted by remediation efforts. Everyone wants to see the accident fixed and the environment they live in restored as quickly as possible, but in order for some spills to be remediated properly, sometimes lengthy processes are necessary. The remediation processes are often extended, affecting the lives of the residents for longer periods, in some cases moving from their homes or having to cope for years with work crews. It's very inconvenient.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

MS KRYCZKA: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It is my pleasure to speak in favour of Bill 202 in Committee of the Whole today and to address the small but important amendment that is being proposed by the Member for Red Deer-North. Before I begin, I would like to commend the Member for Red Deer-North on her dedication to this issue. I think it is marvelous that she has been taking a stand on behalf of our environment with this bill. Bill 202 is a very good, solid bill that will serve this province well.

I would first like to address section 257. Section 257 is very important because it legislates a review of the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act every 10 years. I feel that this is a great step in the government ensuring that environmental law is kept current and updated. I believe that this section shows the commitment of this government to the environment and to keep up with our rapidly changing technology. It is a very valuable part of Bill 202, and I agree with the Minister of Environment when he said that all legislation should have a clause similar to this; that way we can be sure that all legislation is current.

I would also like to make a few comments in regards to the amendment proposed by the Member for Red Deer-North. The amendment is very simple but has far-reaching effects. By changing the word "must" to "may," we are giving directors the opportunity to use their discretion when dealing with contamination. Mr. Chairman, let me give the committee an example. Let us imagine, if you will, the tanker truck carrying gas which is to be pumped into a tank buried underground. The gas is being delivered into the underground storage unit, and no problems arise until the gas line is extracted from the storage tank, where it breaks and a little gas gets spilled around the area. This is where the amendment can be seen as justified. This spill is inconsequential and takes only a couple of hours to clean up through the use of some rags and some dirt. The mess is cleaned up, very little damage is done, and the company moves on after they notify the Department of Environment of the situation.

Under section 112.1 as it currently reads in Bill 202, without the amendment a director would have no choice but to issue instructions immediately to the party responsible for the spill. By now, though, the spill is already cleaned up, and the director is wasting a lot of his and the company's responsible time. By having the word "may" instead of "must," the director can use his or her discretion in whether or not to issue instructions. In the scenario given, the director would simply note that there had been a contamination and then make sure that the company had cleaned up the site. They do the required work and be done with it: no fuss, no muss. There would be no need to issue instructions to clean up a spill if the contamination had already been dealt with. The word change in today's amendment enables the director to use discretion. The environmental directors are trained to use proper judgment, and they have the knowledge of the hazards and nonhazards that spills cause to make the correct decisions.

Mr. Chairman, the amendment to change the word "must" to "may" can be looked at as a resource saver as well. With the word "must" in the legislation that would mean that directors would be dealing with every single spill that happens regardless of size or consequence, therefore causing more bureaucratic red tape. Companies have a tough enough time as it is dealing with red tape, so I don't feel that we should be adding any more for them to have to put up with.

As the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster mentioned in his debate in second reading, paperwork does not solve any environmental problem. The member was correct when he stated that the biggest problem that government has is that "we generate so much [paperwork] that we probably create more problems than we solve." This is probably what would happen if we did not accept the amendment that is being proposed today for Bill 202. Excessive paperwork leads to turmoil.

Mr. Chairman, the word "must" has to be changed so that the full extent of the bill can be realized. I do not feel that the bill is weakened because of this change; in fact, I believe it benefits all stakeholders. The word "may" will bring flexibility to the legislation. As was noted in second reading, there is no one solution that will fix all our problems with environmental contamination.

In second reading it was also addressed that we have to treat each spill differently. For instance, you treat contamination that happened last month differently than you treat contamination that happened 40 years ago. I believe that the amendment supports this. The word "may" will give a director the flexibility and authority to deal with each spill and contamination as he or she best sees fit.

As members of this government we should look for ways to make dealings with our departments and agencies as painless but as effective and efficient as possible. The Minister of Environment implied that the word "must" would complicate matters in the department by adding to the volume of paperwork. The last thing we need is a department confused and annoyed under the stress of more paperwork.

It is true that in most cases when a spill occurs, the perpetrators of the spill usually clean up the mess before any director from the Department of Environment can get to the site to check on the damage. If the word "must" was left in, then the director or inspector would have to go to the site more than once and also have to issue huge amounts of paperwork that will slow down the process and will not end up benefiting the environment at all.

Bill 202 is necessary, Mr. Chairman. Its objective is to strengthen existing legislation protecting our environment. Bill 202 reinforces the authority and the mandate of Alberta Environment by making those who pollute clean up after themselves. This should not even have to be debated. Companies should take and will take the onus to deal with the problems that they create. Bill 202 provides reinforcements to the legal framework of the legislation. The amendment to section 112.1(1) will go a long way in ensuring that companies do clean up their own messes and not have to dig their way out of a mountain of paperwork.

Passing the amendment to Bill 202 is imperative. It will allow the Department of Environment to act swiftly and decisively whenever a situation arises that requires the department to take action against polluters. It will enable the department to do this in a manner specific to each situation. The amendment will not tie the hands of the department; rather, it will give weight to the department's environmental regulations.

Mr. Chairman, I believe that this amendment will help this government further protect the environment without enacting unreasonable demands on the responsible corporate citizen. This amendment ensures that the companies that are law abiding will not be punished for their compliance with the current legislation. The amendment to Bill 202 would give directors the chance to issue instructions to those who cannot comply with the current regulations. The word "may" allows for discretion on behalf of the department, resulting in swift action by all involved.

The amendment to Bill 202 provides stakeholders in the industry an opportunity to work with each other to achieve the same goal; that is, to protect the environment while still developing the industry. Companies within the industry have shown us that they are responsible and that they will take care of their commitments to the environment. I hope that the Department of Environment, and Energy for that matter, will be able to work with the amendments proposed to the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act.

Mr. Chairman, polluters do have a responsibility to clean up the messes they make. I believe for the most part that most companies, in fact the majority of companies, do clean up their messes quickly and without any funny business. However, there are the select few that do need to be watched. I believe that the amendment to Bill 202 will allow directors to keep an eye on those who offend and not allow those who don't clean up after themselves to get away with it. I urge all members of the House to vote favourably for the amendment and for Bill 202.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I will be very brief on this, but it's clear, having proposed what was a progressive environmental bill, that something has happened in order to gut the bill and make it largely ineffective, and that is the substitution of "may" for "must," which of course turns it into almost a nonstarter as far as we're concerned. We thought that this bill had merit, and it showed that there were considerable signs of life on the back-benches of the Tory caucus. I think that there must still be life there, but somebody is trying to turn off the life-support machine here, and I think it's a shame. Obviously, some members on the backbenches of the other side have some good ideas, but they're being squelched. Here we see an example where a member put forward a good bill that had positive things. It was going to actually get tough on polluters. Instead of getting tough on polluters, now we "may" be getting tough on polluters, but it all depends on what side of the bed we got up that day, I suppose, or what the current political mood is with the government. Obviously this renders the bill almost without significant value, and I think it's a real shame. We were prepared to support the bill on the basis of its current wording, but with this particular amendment I don't think we'll be in a position to support the private member's bill, and I think that's too bad. We wanted to support the bill and swing our full weight behind it, and we would have done so.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

MR. YANKOWSKY: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It is my pleasure to rise today in Committee of the Whole and speak in support of the Environmental Protection and Enhancement (Clean-up Instructions) Amendment Act. I would like to start by commending the sponsor for taking the initiative to propose these thoughtful and innovative reforms to an act that certainly affects the everyday lives of people in Alberta. I also would like to thank the members of the Assembly for their thoughtful discussion and input regarding Bill 202 in second reading.

Using the success and innovation that has taken place in our resource-based industries as an example, it is easy to see that the people of Alberta are willing to put in the time, thought, and money to ensure that the environment is protected to the best of our ability. Through their efforts our citizens have sought to strike some kind of a balance between success in industry and practicality. Bill 202 reflects Albertans' desire for balance between economic advancement and pristine environment. This bill provides this by enhancing the Department of Environment's ability to ensure that the cleanup of toxic substance spills is initiated in a timely fashion.

The proposed amendment that we are discussing today will lend a sensibility to the bill by allowing the department to use its discretion when issuing an environmental protection order. In addition, the proposed amendments to the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act in Bill 202 will include a mandatory review of the act every 10 years. With continuous improvements and advancements in science and technology as well as changes in thinking that come about from the environmental community, a review such as this is a valuable inclusion in the act. If we can ensure that the latest ideas are reflected through our legislation, I think that would benefit all Albertans by maintaining our healthy environment while enhancing government accountability in environmental policy.

Mr. Chairman, the environment is something that we all must share. As a result, the responsibility is on all of us to share in protecting it. The Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act is the law that gives our government the power to manage and protect the environment. I believe that anytime we turn our attention towards improving this act as a Legislature, it is time well spent. In second reading members of this Assembly had an opportunity to put forward their ideas for improving this proposed legislation. The suggestions put forward by the members of the Assembly for Bill 202 displayed concern but reflected a general interest in this proposed legislation. I believe that the amendment will give the Department of Environment the chance to employ a flexible, practical approach in the implementation of this proposed legislation. When the sponsoring member introduced the amendment, it conveyed her willingness to listen so that her idea could work well for Albertans and for government. I think that the flexibility of the word “may” as opposed to the more stringent application that would be applied with the word “must” provides a recognizable benefit.

Mr. Chairman, Bill 202 would essentially give the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act sharper teeth. It would empower the government to better manage those polluters across the province who may not have caused damage that poses an immediate danger to the ecosystem but damage that may have the potential to cause significant environmental damage over time. Currently there is nothing in the act to force or enable the department to issue an environmental protection order upon report of a less-threatening spill. The director can only issue the order after the accused has demonstrated an inability or unwillingness to clean up the site. Therefore, the only way the enforceable time line for cleanup can be handed out by the department is through the issuance of an environmental protection order. Unfortunately, the only way a protection order can be issued is if negligence and ignorance have been practised by the polluter and they have not initiated the cleanup process. By giving the director the ability and discretion to take immediate action, Bill 202 will help to eliminate the wait-and-see policy currently applied to those polluters who feel that they can take their time with the environment.

Mr. Chairman, when Bill 202 was read a second time and debated, there were members on all sides who spoke on this bill and indicated to this House that they saw merit in the idea or felt that legislation of this type was necessary and, in fact, overdue. However, there were concerns expressed by many, including the hon. Minister of Environment, regarding the wording in section 112(1). Section 112 of the bill states that “the Director must issue instructions immediately to the person responsible for the [pollution] to restore the area affected.” What this means is that action on behalf of the Department of Environment must be initiated each time a spill of any magnitude is reported.

Mr. Chairman, if the word “must” is to remain in section 112, then every time an Albertan spills some diesel on a gravel road and reports it, Alberta Environment must present themselves at the scene and complete a report. Small spills occur in Alberta daily, and more often than not the person responsible has the ability and initiative to clean the site himself or herself without the help or guidance of the department. If the word “must” as currently included in the bill would require department officials to respond to all small and latent acts of pollution when such incidents are currently being taken care of and their presence is not required, then I would support its removal.

Additionally, it is the Minister of Environment who pointed out that the inclusion of the word “must,” which would require that action be taken every time a spill is reported, is overkill, which would create unnecessary paperwork and place a cumbersome burden on not only the officers in the field but also on the department office. Through his comments and the comments of others it became quite obvious that forcing the hand of the department to act on every spill would not be practical nor financially viable. This was reinforced by the minister’s comment about thousands of calls per year to the department to report rather benign toxic spills.

If by substituting the word “may” instead of “must” we can ensure that the spirit of this bill as intended by its sponsor is carried forth, then I will gladly support the proposed amendment. I’m certain that the sponsoring member had no intention of creating a mountain of unnecessary paperwork for the department but only sought to protect the environment in a manner that makes sense to all parties involved. However, if the insertion of the word “may” will render the bill ineffective, then I am hesitant to support it. If by amending Bill 202 to include “may” and not “must” we ignore the problem that this bill was drafted to address, then I question the necessity and practicality of its inclusion. If the word “may” simply gives the director the freedom to implement the policy idea, driving this bill in a sensible way, then I support the amendment. If, then, the department is able to acknowledge when industry or individuals have actually undertaken efforts to clean up spills or pollution and this will save the department the hassle, then I think I am also satisfied.

With the proposed amendment Bill 202 takes a step to protect the integrity of the environment in a reasoned and intelligent fashion, and I urge members of this Assembly to accept it.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. In addressing Bill 202, the Environmental Protection and Enhancement (Clean-up Instructions) Amendment Act, I’ve taken some time to go through the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act itself, and I have listened, actually, with interest to some of the comments from a number of people in the Assembly and have appreciated those comments. I might as well begin with what appears to be the most contentious aspect of this bill, which is the amendment which strikes out the word “must” and replaces it with the word “may,” a move that clearly illustrates the power of language. We’re taking a four-letter word and replacing it with a three-letter word and fundamentally altering the power and impact of this bill in the process.

I’ve listened to the concerns raised by some members of the Assembly that by leaving the word “must” in there in a sentence that would read, “The Director must issue instructions immediately to the person responsible for the substance to restore the area affected by the release to a condition satisfactory to the Director” – the word “must” in there is crucial in that it does place an unequivocal requirement on the director to take action, to take a stand. While there are concerns raised – and I’ve listened to them here – that this is simply an increase in the burden of paper on the civil service, I think that’s a problem that’s probably quite manageable. Common sense will ultimately prevail. If a couple of litres of diesel oil are spilled in an area where there’s some soil and the soil is cleaned up, I have no doubt that the director would be able to issue a standard set of instructions, probably on a single sheet of paper, and be done with it. So I don’t foresee an unmanageable increase in the burden of paper as a result of having the word “must” in there. If I contrast the drawback of having any extra paper required with the drawback of amending the word “must” to “may,” I see much greater concerns with the latter, with bringing in the word “may.”

What that does, to me, is raise questions about the fundamental integrity, almost, of the position of the director, the fundamental obligation on the person in that position to protect the environment. It puts the person in a position where they may be open to the reality of the perception of pressure to make certain decisions, so whether it’s fair or not, it’s easy to imagine a situation in which a spill occurs and the director decides, under this amended version, not to issue instructions and, as a result, appears to be favouring a particular company.

I think that there are times – and protecting the environment is one of them – when we want to be clear and we want to be forceful and we want to be unequivocal, and bringing the word “may” into this bill contradicts all those possibilities. I think the bill was workable and was strong and was desirable, and I think it is now no more workable and in fact may well be less workable. I can easily imagine directors now having to spend their time justifying to any groups why they didn't issue a report. So I don't think there's any benefit to the amendment, and it makes the bill weaker.

There are still some remaining strengths to Bill 202. I do like the fact that under the proposal to amend section 112 of the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act, putting in subsection 112.1(2), if a director does choose to issue instructions to clean up the area and if the instructions are disobeyed, "the Director shall issue an environmental protection order." So that does give the director legal authority for following up with people who do not obey his instructions and in fact ties his hands to do so. I can see that being useful to the director as well as to the general public, so that's a step in the right direction in this bill.

I also like the notion that this bill will require a comprehensive review of the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act within 10 years of it coming into force. Our concerns and our knowledge of the environment are changing year by year, and certainly 10 years is ample time for us to find out how the legislation is working and what its weaknesses are. Undoubtedly there will be extensive new knowledge on environmental problems and potentially environmental solutions, so I do think that a mandatory 10-year review of the act is a good idea.

So there are two good points that remain in Bill 202, but sadly perhaps the most important single point which would have required the director to act has been watered down to the point of it being entirely discretionary and, as a result, potentially useless. It presents a genuine dilemma of whether to support a bill that does a little bit good or to not support it at all and hope that a better bill might come forward. I guess in the end I probably will support it because one step forward is better than none, even though I'd rather have three steps forward. It's with a bit of disappointment, but I probably will support the bill, Mr. Chairman.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

MR. MARZ: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure to stand today and speak to the Committee of the Whole in favour of Bill 202, the Environmental Protection and Enhancement (Clean-up Instructions) Amendment Act, 2002. I'd like to begin by joining my colleagues in expressing my gratitude to and complimenting the hon. Member for Red Deer-North for her vision and insight in introducing Bill 202. This is a bill that will serve Alberta and Albertans well, not just today but also tomorrow. Bill 202 is a shining example of sound legislation, and with its proposed amendment it will also be practical and practicable legislation.

No matter how sound a piece of legislation might be, it will quite frankly be lip service at best and useless at worst if it cannot be implemented. The same thing if implementation becomes so cumbersome that it generates more paperwork, requires more overhead, or inadvertently creates an incentive not to adhere to the provisions of the law as it's written at all. Bill 202 with the proposed amendment will not fall into the category of lip service oriented legislation. It will not be excessively cumbersome to implement and will not provide a loophole through which violators sneak and disappear out of sight, and it will not give rise to excessive red tape. Bill 202, Mr. Chairman, will avoid causing all this while remaining true to its original intent: strengthening the existing body of law dedicated to safeguarding our environment.

Mr. Chairman, I don't think there's anyone among us here today who would actively support any form of environmental degradation. In fact, I know there's no one in this House today who wants to see our environment worsen. Common sense dictates that when a toxic substance is spilled on the ground or otherwise ends up somewhere it's not supposed to be, you clean it up. Most of us – and by that I mean most Albertans, indeed most people in general – know this and do this.

For whatever reasons some folks don't take the time or recognize that they have the responsibility to clean up after such accidents. Why they don't is beyond me. Perhaps they don't know the harm that can come from not cleaning up, perhaps they don't care, or perhaps they think in most cases that it's too expensive or just too much trouble. Who really knows just how expensive it is or how expensive it will be for the rest of us? For whatever reason, it's precisely because of such lack of responsibility and care that we have environmental legislation in place today, some of the best environmental legislation in the country I might add.

Perhaps if everyone took responsibility for their actions and cleaned up their spills, there'd be no need for environmental legislation at all. In a perfect world we wouldn't be here discussing this matter today. Alas, Mr. Chairman, ours is not a perfect world. We do what we can to get closer to it. I think Bill 202 is a good step, not just a little step, as my colleague the hon. Member for Red Deer-North keeps saying, but a good and solid step forward.

During second reading we were treated to a wide range of opinions on Bill 202. It seems to me that while all of us are here in support of the goals of the bill, concerns were raised by some about the manageability of the bill. In particular the hon. Minister of Environment and the hon. Member for Airdrie-Rocky View drew our attention to some very practical implications of passing Bill 202 without first amending it.

Mr. Chairman, the more I've thought about it, the more I've come to see and understand the wisdom of their comments. I believe that if we invest in the common sense of Albertans and have faith in their ability to know right from wrong, they'll pay us back by doing the right thing. We don't need to spell out every single little detail of what must be done. Albertans know what to do. There's not always going to be a need for the Department of Environment to supervise, let alone be present.

There are also practical reasons for why changing the word "must" to "may" makes so much common sense. As both the Minister of Environment and the hon. Member for Airdrie-Rocky View pointed out, you put the word "must" in there, and one of two things will happen. In the first scenario we end up with a situation where personnel from the Department of Environment must travel to each and every site where a spill has occurred. That's a huge cost, Mr. Chairman. After the spill occurs – that is, after the liquid or powder or whatever it is has spilled – it will have to be reported. After it's reported, someone will have to be dispatched to the site of the incident. Depending on where the site is, this may take some time. Then when they get there, they check it out, and they either have to clean it up or oversee the cleanup process, which we may infer here cannot commence until they actually arrive on-site and then head back to write up the incident report.

Presumably, Mr. Chairman, those who made the mess could have cleaned it up all by themselves much more quickly and in many if not most cases probably do without involving officials from the Department of Environment. I might add that for every call that requires department officials to make a trek to the scene of such an accident that really doesn't require their presence, well, there goes a few more tax dollars that we could have spent on something more important.

The other scenario I have in mind, Mr. Chairman, is one that I thought of after listening to the experiences of the hon. Member for Airdrie-Rocky View when she spoke about the life of the biomedical waste industry and how what constituted biomedical waste ranged all the way from body parts to finger paint. Well, that's quite a range, if you ask me. I have no difficulty imagining how mandating that every single spill from finger paint to whatever, something in between, that would have to be reported could quite easily lead to a situation in which companies where spills may occur with some frequency will be actually discouraging many people from reporting incidents of such spills. Why? Because of the red tape. The bureaucracy of such an endeavour will be staggering. If every single instance where a little spill occurs must be reported and documented, we'll have a situation on our hands that will provide incentive not to report it and as a likely consequence perhaps lead to an increase in the number of spills that aren't cleaned up at all.

Now, Mr. Chairman, this doesn't mean that the Department of Environment won't ever enforce regulations. Of course it will, and it has shown that it has in the past. However, using the word "must" can, as the hon. Member for Airdrie-Rocky View cautioned us, lead to situations where spills, whether serious or not, simply aren't reported. Conversely, use of the word "must" can in my mind quite easily lead to overkill and in the long term a depletion of departmental resources for that one incident that requires the department's maximum personnel, resources, and know-how. If we change "must" to "may," we bestow upon the Department of Environment the flexibility and discretion to apply the law on a case-by-case basis. Not all situations where a spill is a factor require the full force of the department.

Mr. Chairman, I'm in favour of protecting the environment and all in favour of doing everything we can to protect it. It's important not just for us but for our children and for our children's children that we establish safeguards and enshrine them in law to protect the environment. We have but one environment. It's not ours to do with as we please. At best we borrow it for the duration of our lifetimes, and it's our duty to leave it in at least as good shape as we first received it, so to speak. By changing the little word "must" in section 112.1(1) to "may," Bill 202 will become a very effective instrument in dealing with spills and the attendant cleanup efforts.

Furthermore, section 257 calls for a "review . . . within 10 years" and "every 10 years after that." Mechanisms like that are imperative to make sure that the legislation stays useful and valid and does what it is supposed to do.

Mr. Chairman, I'll conclude my remarks by urging all members of this Assembly to support the amendment substituting the word "may" for "must," and I also would like to urge everyone to also vote in favour of passing Bill 202. Thank you.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I have a few comments at this stage of debate on the amendment as proposed to Bill 202. I will be brief, Mr. Chairman, but I would like to caution all hon. members of this Assembly about voluntary compliance. I'm afraid by striking out "must" and substituting "may" – well, this is another way of giving voluntary compliance a second or third or perhaps even a fourth chance.

With the protection of our environment I am a firm believer that the law has to be upheld; the law has to be spelled out. There are too many examples in this province, whether it be the Swan Hills waste treatment plant or whether it be Hub Oil and the consequent fire and explosion in Calgary. Unfortunately, the city of Calgary grew at such a fast rate that it sort of grew up around this facility, which had been in place since before the Second World War, Mr. Chairman. There was no doubt in the documents that I received on that facility through FOIP that over the years there was soil contamination, there was groundwater contamination, and on occasion there certainly was atmospheric pollution by that facility. I'm afraid that now that the plant is gone, the site is still being used, as I understand it, for oil filter recycling. But this gets back as to what the Department of Environment can and should do. You know, we can all look at a five-gallon spill of diesel fuel as an example, but there are others that are very, very important, and that's why I would use the Hub Oil fire and explosion as an example of another facility that could have used very diligent enforcement by the Department of Environment.

The hon. member's original section 2 and the proposed section 112.1 I think is sufficient. At this time, because of what I have read about previous spills and vents to the atmosphere by industrial facilities, we should be very cautious, and we must give the director the authority to investigate.

With those comments, Mr. Chairman . . .

AN HON. MEMBER: Can you speak up, please? We can't hear a word you're saying.

MR. MacDONALD: If hon. members of this Assembly cannot hear me, perhaps they could have their conversations outside.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

MS DeLONG: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's an honour to join the debate in Committee of the Whole for Bill 202, the Environmental Protection and Enhancement (Clean-up Instructions) Amendment Act, 2002. The objective of the bill, brought forward by the hon. Member for Red Deer-North, is to strengthen existing legislation protecting Alberta's land, water, and air from hazardous spills. Bill 202 reinforces the authority and the mandate of the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act by making those who pollute clean up after themselves not at some arbitrarily determined date but according to a time line established by the department.

Mr. Chairman, we all know that the environment is vulnerable, delicate, and not ours to do with as we please. At best we are only borrowing it from our children, and what we decide to do with it, either ensuring its beauty and health or allowing it to deteriorate, will affect future generations. Therefore, the laws and regulations established today, such as Bill 202, will go a long way to giving our children and grandchildren access to a clean, healthy, and inviting environment.

As legislators we cannot allow violators of Alberta's rigid yet fair environmental protection legislation to stall and procrastinate from their duty as good corporate citizens to clean up any messes that they have made to Alberta's environment. Any company doing business in this province must also be aware that Albertans care a great deal about their environment. This government is committed to ensuring that it continues to have some of the most stringent standards for environmental protection in Canada and in North America. I believe that Bill 202 reinforces this government's environmental mandate. As members of this Assembly we all know that any environmental issue is also a very emotional and volatile topic. Therefore, we must be extremely careful to create laws that preserve the environment and do not bog down the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act with redundant paperwork.

Mr. Chairman, the amendment proposed today to Bill 202 would help prevent the corresponding dangers associated with doing things too swiftly and too decisively. I strongly support the amendment which changes the word “must” to “may.” The word “must” obligates people working in the department to issue an order even if it isn’t necessary. During second reading the Minister of Environment explained that by the time people from the department check out a spill and assess the damage, the cleanup has already been completed. Under Bill 202 as it currently stands, they would have to go back, issue an order, and outline cleaning instructions, even though the work is already done.

There’s no real way of predicting the full impact of this bill until it has been passed and used by the department and affected industries. I’m worried that two very bad things could happen if this bill were passed without the proposed amendment. First of all, the department and this government could face a bureaucratic logjam. I worry about the additional administrative workload that would be placed on a department that already covers a wide range of issues and industries involving Alberta’s environment. The members in this House should not decide what constitutes a nonhazardous spill as well as the time line for cleaning the spill. These decisions should rest on the wisdom and experience of the hardworking employees in the Department of Environment. Those same experts, specifically the director, will be the ones responsible for carrying out the rules decided upon in this Assembly. We should be careful not to introduce procedures that result in more work. Substituting the word “must” for “may” alleviates this danger.

The other concern I had with Bill 202 in its current form is the challenges with enforceability. During second reading the hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster explained how the desired result from this bill would be to give a person or a company the opportunity to take responsibility and action to clean up their spill. This way they can work with the department and hammer out a method and time line for cleaning up the spill. But, Mr. Chairman, if this desirable scenario fails, then the director can force the hand of the polluter. If the polluter does not achieve the objectives set out by the director, it is then the director’s duty to issue an environmental protection order under section 113 of the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act. So if a spill occurs, the guilty party has two choices. First of all, they can clean up the spill immediately and be seen as good corporate citizens who care about the well-being of the environment and the health of the people living in the surrounding area, or they can delay efforts to clean up their mess, hide from their responsibility, and be forced by the department to be treated like children who refuse to pick up after themselves.

Mr. Chairman, effective enforcement of Bill 202 is only possible if the department is able to work within their budget and manpower resources. In other words, people must be able to do their jobs without being forced to swim through a sea of needless paperwork. To me the word “must” connotes a demand. It’s like saying that you must register your firearms regardless of how you store and handle your weapons. The word excludes any sort of negotiation and demands action, and as we know, you can’t shake hands with a closed fist. I believe the word “may” would preserve the effectiveness of Bill 202 while at the same time allowing people within the department to do their jobs.

Let’s remember two things while we debate Bill 202. First of all, the sponsor of this bill is not proposing overwhelming changes to the current Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act because, quite frankly, drastic changes are not necessary. This bill is simply tweaking the system to give people in the department the ability to move more swiftly and decisively on delayed cleanups. We must also remember that this bill deals with nonhazardous spills. I agree that nonhazardous spills have an adverse effect on the environment, and I know that this government is serious about preserving the environment. I’m not trying to belittle the importance of a clean environment, but we must keep these two points in perspective before we go too far and pass legislation that has a detrimental effect on the Ministry of Environment and the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act. Sometimes good intentions do not always result in the best solutions.

If passed, Bill 202 will go a long way to prevent delinquent spills and to hold irresponsible companies accountable for their actions. If the amendments were implemented to Bill 202, it would be a reasonably enforceable bill and one that I would support. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

[Motion on amendment A1 carried]

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. Member for Calgary-Cross.

MRS. FRITZ: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I’m rising to propose a second small housekeeping amendment to Bill 202, and I’m making this amendment in consultation with my friend and hon. colleague from Red Deer-North. It’s hopefully going to be brief, I think.

You’ll note in this bill that if a polluter fails to comply with the directives that are issued by the Department of Environment, the department may issue an environmental protection order, but the overall act directs that environmental protection orders generally occur under section 113. In this act that we have, Bill 202, what’s referred to here are ones that would normally see environmental protection orders issued under that section 113, but when you look at the act overall and you read the legislation, you’ll see that Bill 202 doesn’t make any reference at all to section 113. So that’s why I think it would be helpful to state that the environmental protection orders would be issued under section 113 if polluters failed to comply with 112.1.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman – I know the amendment is being distributed here – I’ll read into the record exactly what it says when I get one.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The amendment that is being moved by the hon. Member for Calgary-Cross will be referred to as amendment A2.

MRS. FRITZ: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. So I’m moving, then, that section 2 is amended in the proposed section 112.1(2) by adding “under section 113” after “environmental protection order.”

As I said, this amendment is, I think, in the best interest of the bill overall. It’s in the interest of clarity, and I think that it would help people to understand where the bill fits into the Environment Protection and Enhancement Act. It also would assist our environmental directors with the administration of section 112.1 when Bill 202 is proclaimed.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

[Motion on amendment A2 carried]

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: On the bill as amended, Mr. Chairman, I want to compliment the Member for Red Deer-North on a good effort in bringing forward this bill, and I regret the amendment that essentially weakened her admirable piece of legislation. The hon. Member for Red Deer-North is a big improvement for that constituency.

[The clauses of Bill 202 as amended agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: Opposed? Carried.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. STEVENS: Yes. Mr. Chairman, I move that we rise and report.

Bill 204
Traffic Safety (Cellular Phone)
Amendment Act, 2002

[Adjourned debate March 11: Mr. Herard]

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Redwater.

MR. BRODA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today in response to Bill 204, the Traffic Safety (Cellular Phone) Amendment Act, presented by my colleague from Lacombe-Stettler. I think the intent is noble. However, I am opposed to this bill.

For one, Mr. Speaker, the bill says that it's to ban the use of handheld cellular phones during the operation of the motor vehicle; however, hands-free phones would be permitted. Even looking at Bill 204, which is a proactive measure that says that it may decrease casualty collisions on Alberta roadways, the word "may" does not convince me that it will. It's not that I'm opposed to any traffic safety. I certainly am not. I did introduce the bill that allows red-light cameras in this province, and that has gone over as a good measure because it's for the safety of our motorists, but I believe that Bill 204 may be interpreted as an intrusive and unnecessary infringement on Albertans' freedoms.

Mr. Speaker, we look at distractions of the cellular phone. I must say that I've had a car phone in my car probably since they first came out, and it goes back to the Aurora-400, which is close to 30 years that I've had it in my car. I'll tell you that that phone is no longer in use; new technology has come out. We've had new cells introduced, and of course we move along with new technology. I think that's great to see in this country, that there is technology movement.

We look at other communities, other countries. This province, when we look at the population that we have, is very small. The only state right now that has banned cell phones is the state of New York, but the population of New York is probably tenfold – I don't know what it is – tenfold of what Alberta has. I had the opportunity of being in Europe, in Italy, which has a population of 60 million people. The country of Italy is about the size of Newfoundland. Just about every individual has a cell phone, and the number of cars that are on the road, the autostradas themselves, where the speed limit posted is 130 but people are going at 160, 170, 180 kilometres per hour – the thing is that they don't have that law in Italy, and they have 10 times as many people, or double the population of all of Canada.

So, Mr. Speaker, I am certainly opposed to this bill simply because we already have laws in place that would allow a police officer to charge anybody under the traffic act with undue care and attention of a motor vehicle. I think that introducing this bill is a noble way of addressing some of the issues, bringing them to the forefront. However, I look at it as a cash cow, because all a police officer has to do is look and see if you've got a cell phone in your hand, pressed to your ear. He could stop you and charge you. I don't agree that we need to be that vigilant on every individual, because that's exactly what would happen.

When we look at if any accidents occur – and they could occur – is it a direct result of a cell phone? Just the other day I was driving and noticed next to me a driver driving his vehicle with a poodle on his lap, and the poodle was licking his face. Maybe we should look at banning that as well. How about coffee drinkers? How about smokers? All of a sudden a cigarette happens to fall in his lap, and he's looking down to see where that cigarette disappeared.

AN HON. MEMBER: How about coffee from McDonald's?

MR. BRODA: How about coffee from McDonald's – right on – or Tim Hortons or something that's really hot and it drops on your lap and causes an accident?

Mr. Speaker, when you look at some statistics here, just to read you an article that I've received, it says:

"From 1993 to now we went from 1.8 million cellphones in this country to 10 million cellphones and the number of collisions, traffic fatalities and injuries are down 10 percent in [the same] time frame," said council president Emile Therien in February following an accident [that happened] in Baltimore . . . an accident caused by a young driver using a cellphone.

Therien suggested that accident was probably due [more] to the driver's inexperience . . . [than it was to the use] of a cellphone.

So, Mr. Speaker, I certainly would encourage my colleagues in the House here to really think hard and look at the presentation of this bill and vote against it, not because I don't think that it has merit, but I still honestly do believe that it would be a cash cow. I think that right now we have too many infringements on our rights and that it only leads to more as we go along.

AN HON. MEMBER: What about farmers?

MR. BRODA: Next the farmers are going to be stopped on tractors because they're asking somebody to come and pick up a load of grain. The fellow is on his way already and has a phone to his ear, and they're beating the weather. He's driving along, and all of a sudden an officer is on the road and sees the fellow with a cell phone, stops him, gives a ticket. There was no cause for it. However, the bill would allow that to happen.

So, again, I would encourage my colleagues to not vote for the bill. With that, I will close and sit down and let somebody else speak, but certainly I would encourage everybody to not vote for the bill. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise in support of this bill. I want to speak very specifically to the fact that this bill will allow us to be better drivers. It will encourage us to be better drivers, and it will make provisions so that we will live according to the law and drive according to the law, which is a safer, more expedient way of driving.

I'm a person who has used cell phones in the car. For years in my previous occupation, which was selling real estate, we relied heavily on them, and the Member for Redwater knows that very well. I, too, had one of those apparatuses that was so big they literally took up the other front seat in the car. Through my previous business I relied on using it, and certainly I rely on the use of it as an MLA. I can tell you that a cell phone in the car is a great way to be able to contact people as you move from A to B, from meeting to meeting. It's an opportunity for us to use the time in conversation and to cover business requirements.

I would say that this bill, in saying that it is legislating against the use of handheld cell phones in the car, is a very wise move. I can tell you that I am perhaps one of the biggest offenders. I don't use the head clamp or apparatus, and I sit there and I try driving with one hand and dialing with the other hand and try to read the number, and if I had some legislation, I would obey it. I was not a person who used seat belts before, but now I do. I am a person who does use a handheld phone, and if this piece of legislation passes, I won't use it. I will make sure that I use the hands-free one.

I don't mean to make this just a personal reflection, but I want to speak to the safety features that this bill points to. When driving in my urban community, certainly we do need to have both hands on the wheel. We do have to be alert. But if we were to suggest that we are going to be drivers who do not hold any conversation with anybody, then I think we are not being realistic. With this bill we can still speak to someone who is not just virtually sitting beside us, but we can speak with those whom we wanted to contact and make the best use of our time. We can do it with the hands-free apparatus.

As I would just wish to continue to speak on the telephone under other circumstances, again I want to mention the fact that a few other members have addressed other behaviours of hands-free or, if you will, activities with their hands when they are driving, and I would say that they are equally as dangerous. However, I would also say that since the hands-free and the mechanisms that the phone companies can provide us with in order to drive safely and at the same time return calls, speak to family members, identify what we need to do in preparation for perhaps the next meeting that we are about to attend – hands-free attachments to our telephone allow us that opportunity to communicate and to continue to communicate while we are driving. It is a great opportunity to do two things at once. However, if we are going to hold the receiver and dial up or take our messages off and drive at the same time, then I think we as individuals need to have a piece of legislation that will give us guidance on this issue.

Having said that, Mr. Speaker, I feel that I would like to close debate on this issue, but in the meantime I would like to encourage everybody to vote in favour of this private member's bill.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: How much time do we have on this bill, Mr. Speaker?

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Well, the bill was moved by the hon. Member for Lacombe-Stettler, and she has to close debate.

MS HALEY: I think to adjourn as opposed to close, Mr. Speaker, because I, too, want to speak to this bill.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: I hesitate to interrupt, but under Standing Order 19(1)(c) I must now put the question on the motion for consideration of Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor's speech.

head: Consideration of Her Honour the Lieutenant Governor's Speech

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Monday, March 18, 2002 8:00 p.m.
 Date: 02/03/18
 [The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Please be seated.

head: Motions Other than Government Motions Financial Planning for Retirement

502. Ms Kryczka moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to take on a leadership role to encourage Albertans of all ages to assume personal responsibility for planning their financial security in retirement.

[Debate adjourned March 11: Mr. Bonner speaking]

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure to rise this evening to continue debate on Motion 502. Now, when debate ended on the last particular opportunity, I was talking about the contradictions that do appear to be happening and how, although I support this motion, it seems that it is at odds with what we as a government are doing right now when it comes to planning for our financial future.

We have in this province experienced just some incredible years of revenue generation over the last three or four years. Last year we did have the biggest surplus we've ever had. This year we are forecast to have the second largest revenue that we've ever had. Yet we are making cuts to essential services. Earlier today in this Assembly I talked about the road builders of Alberta and how, because we don't have sustainable, equitable, and predictable funding, that particular group is going to have to lay off a certain number of their skilled labour. They certainly are going to have some of their member companies in financial difficulty because there is not sustainable funding. We are going to have a situation where until they see the budget tomorrow, they certainly are not going to be able to do their planning and prepare for the upcoming construction season. Now, one thing that we are fortunate for: the weather has certainly co-operated in regards to holding up the construction or early construction this spring.

But to get more to the essence of the bill and why I do support it, it was of great interest to me when I was doing some research to speak on this particular motion that approximately only 30 percent of Canadians contribute to an RRSP, and I pointed out in the debate last week that for those contributing to RRSPs, certainly the more they earn the more they contribute. So a greater percentage of Canadians at upper levels of income contribute to RRSPs than those at lower levels. That certainly makes sense because those people who are at the lower levels of income, although they are a greater percentage of the population, their precious few dollars are spoken for many different reasons, whether to run households or whatever.

I certainly do support the fact that we are urging Canadians and particularly Albertans to get involved in some type of savings for their future. I certainly am encouraging them to start saving as early as they can, because when they do start earlier, they're going to have much more in savings for when they do retire.

With those comments, Mr. Speaker – and I see my time is out – I will take my seat and let others continue. Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Cross, in the few minutes remaining.

MRS. FRITZ: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to have the opportunity this evening to join the debate, even if it's a short opportunity, on Motion 502. I'd really like to commend the hon. Member for Calgary-West for taking the initiative to introduce this important, thoughtful motion.

Now, Mr. Speaker, some of the motions and bills we introduce in this House are aimed at effecting immediate changes which Albertans can and will experience in short order. Others operate along a much greater time line, and the intended results may not be felt for several years. The theory of Motion 502 is to help people in the long term, and it will have a very positive effect on people's lives. This motion is not dangerous. It is not scandalous. It is not a scheme, as the Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods would have had you believe, and the hon. Member for Calgary-West has good intentions in putting this motion forward. In general, current incentives and opportunities for savings are primarily present for those in middle- and high-income groups. Yet, as the hon. Member for Calgary-West told the House earlier, the ages of people retiring in 1966 were 58.5 for women and 61.4 for men, and the goal today for retirement for many is 55.

Mr. Speaker, my view of this motion is not, as the Member for Edmonton-Centre suggested, that it be enforced with punishment and fines. The beauty of this motion is that it is about educating people with financial planning for their retirement. It is a very positive motion, as it encourages people to be responsible and self-reliant, and the government's own research suggests that all Albertans could be doing more to save for their retirement. Moreover, anecdotal evidence suggests that Albertans need more information to help them to determine their financial needs and realistically plan for retirement. We can assist by taking on the leadership role necessary to encourage increased financial planning, and I am hopeful that doing so will not only have a beneficial impact on our province, but more importantly it will ensure that people have an excellent quality of life in their retirement.

It is for these reasons, Mr. Speaker, that I will vote in favour of Motion 502. To my hon. colleague from Calgary-West: I take my hat off to you for bringing this motion forward, and I would encourage all members in this Assembly to do the same and to support this motion.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: There being no other speakers, then, I will call on, in the few moments that remain and in the five minutes that is allowed, the hon. Member for Calgary-West to conclude debate on this motion.

MS KRYCZKA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First, before my own personal comments I would like to acknowledge and thank some of the many people who willingly assisted in providing information for the preparation of Motion 502: Frank Ostlinger, government members' research; Terry Chugg, assistant deputy minister, Department of Seniors; Bonnie Brooks, certified financial planner, CIBC Wood Gundy; Stephen Kushner, president, Merit Contractors Association; Joanne Abram, general manager, Alberta Insurance Council; Wayne Taylor, president, the Canadian Association of Pre-retirement Planners, or CAPP, Alberta chapter; and Mary Holder, lifestyle choice consultant with a professional retirement designation from CAPP. I also thank my colleagues who spoke to Motion 502: the MLA for Leduc, the MLA for Red Deer-North, and the MLA for Calgary-Cross.

To summarize briefly, Mr. Speaker, Motion 502 is all about preparing now for our future and maintaining at the minimum our present high quality of life of which we are so proud as our aging population increases as projected in the next 10, 20, and 30 years. Demographics is the driver, and it is a science. Seniors are now 1 in 10, or 10 percent of the population and by 2030 will likely be 1 in 4, or 25 percent of the population. Seniors are living longer, which raises very valid concerns. First of all, what kind of lifestyle do I really want when I finally do retire? Next, will I be able to save enough money? Lastly, will CPP and other pensions be adequate?

Alberta is seen as a leader in Canada in aging population work, Mr. Speaker. There are major reports: the long-term care review; the governmentwide study on the impact of an aging population; and presently the cross-ministry SPI, or seniors' policy initiative, that involves 18 government departments. These three initiatives support the need for Albertans to prepare for their financial security and that government should have a role to play. It is very important for us as government MLAs to realize that the government role Motion 502 advocates is not necessarily about more government money. In fact, there is definite potential for less government funding.

The government role is about policies and programs more than legislation and those programs communicated through the present government framework. It's about working with private and public sectors and with other levels of government, and it's about financial planning education using quality information, and government can lead by example and also can assist in a research dimension.

Before finally closing, I would like to recommend that government could innovatively address the needs of individuals with little or no access to private pensions or other retirement savings arrangements. I mention that Saskatchewan has the SPP, or Saskatchewan pension plan, which is voluntary and available to anyone 18 to 69 years old. Eligibility is not dependent on residency, income, employment status, gender, or membership in other plans. If and when this government should review the future of the Alberta heritage savings trust fund, a very small amount could start an Alberta pension plan, a plan that works for Albertans, but mostly it encourages lower-income Albertans to save for their future. Lone-parent families have the lowest median net worth, with an estimate as low as $17,900. Alberta needs a flexible, portable, provincial plan that can accommodate their ability to make payments if and when they are able to.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, there are two key advantages or outcomes of Motion 502. Motion 502 would maximize the number of older Albertans who live in dignity, are financially independent, are both mentally and socially well as a result, and who are willing to use their life savings in order to give themselves a better quality of life. Motion 502 would minimize the number of older Albertans who depend on government assistance for income; for example, the Alberta seniors benefit as we know it today and other pensions.

Mr. Speaker, I urge all members of this Assembly to support Motion 502. Thank you.

[Motion Other than Government Motion 502 carried unanimously]

Free Admission to Museums and Historic Sites

503. Mrs. O'Neill moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to offer free admission to Albertans one day each month to the province's museums and historic sites.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my great pleasure to begin the debate on Motion 503 today. Those of us who call ourselves Albertans are truly fortunate people. These days when we hear others and at times also ourselves praise our province, we are perhaps more likely to think about things such as how well we have weathered the current economic slowdown and that we have the lowest unemployment rate in the country. Maybe we are reminded of the vast deposits of oil and gas with which our province has been blessed, or maybe we feel buoyed by the recent successes of trade missions to faraway nations.

There is, however, another reason why we are a fortunate people, and that is Alberta's history. I can think of few Canadian jurisdictions that have such a long and truly fascinating history as Alberta does. Quite frankly, ours is a spectacular history. Alberta's history, of course, predates the birth of the land now known as Alberta. It goes beyond the European settlers, the missionaries, and fur trappers who began the process of taming this wild land. The indigenous tribes who came before them weren't the first either. No, Mr. Speaker, to fully understand just how long or old our history is, we need to look at a time whose unit of measure is millions of years, not just one or two million years but about 75 millions of years ago. That's when dinosaurs roamed the earth, and many of them, like we do now, called Alberta home.

At that time, Mr. Speaker, much of Alberta was covered by river deltas, swamps, and flood plains extending east to a shallow sea, but as time passed, mud, silt, and sand were laid down in layers, and dinosaurs, ancient plants, and other animals died and were buried in the sediments.

In the Drumheller badlands, however, the layers that originally buried the Cretaceous sediments are absent. They were stripped off by Ice Age glaciers, which left their own layer of sediments. Floodwater from melting glaciers carved out the Red Deer River valley 10,000 to 15,000 years ago. The erosion continues, creating coulees, rills, sinkholes, and hoodoos along the river from the city of Red Deer to the Saskatchewan border.

Mr. Speaker, the Royal Tyrrell Museum in Drumheller is, of course, named after Joseph Burr Tyrrell. It is but one of many museums and heritage sites throughout our great province. A few weeks ago I spoke about our provincial heritage sites on CBC's Provincial Affairs program, and during the program I said that each of Alberta's many museums and historic sites tells a story of its own and that together they all tell the story of Alberta. They tell us the story of our ancestors, and one day they will tell that story to our children and to our children's children.

It is because I believe our museums, our parks, and our heritage sites are vital to Albertans and because I would like to enable as many Albertans as possible to visit these sites that I have decided to introduce Motion 503. It is imperative that Alberta's history is readily available to all Albertans. By offering free admission one day a month to Albertans, the province's museums and historic sites would become more accessible to a larger portion of Albertans. Through Motion 503 the government would be able to foster not only an increased sense of community and pride in Alberta but also a renewed interest in provincial history. Obviously the Alberta government has an interest in preserving the province's history. Indeed, the stated goal of the historic sites and cultural facilities branch of Alberta Community Development is to improve the quality of life for Albertans through the preservation and presentation of, and promotion of appreciation for, Alberta's diverse natural, cultural and historical resources.

The government values these sites and has an interest in preserving our history for all time and for all Albertans. I believe we must also ensure that they are accessible to all Albertans and anyone else who's interested in our rich and varied history.

Mr. Speaker, what we're talking about here is enabling Albertans to gain access free of charge to the province's museums and heritage sites one day a month, 12 days each year. Twelve days out of 365 is not much. It represents about 3 percent. For those Albertans who due to economic circumstances might not otherwise be able to visit a museum or heritage site, one day a month would mean so much more. Indeed, for the institutions that would choose to offer free admission, Motion 503 could offer an opportunity to expand their markets by attracting segments of the population previously not in the habit of visiting the province's museums and historic sites.

The opposite view is that offering free admission one day a month would have a harmful impact on the institutions who would choose to do so. To me this is an overly pessimistic view. I prefer to take a more optimistic attitude and would like to suggest that by offering free admission one day a month, there will be a ripple effect that will be highly beneficial to patrons and the institutions alike. Quite obviously there will be no revenues from admission on the days when no admission is charged. However, people must eat, and if there is some sort of food service on the premises, it is likely that visitors would buy food and drink in the course of their visits. The income from food and beverage sales could more than offset the lost admission revenues. Moreover, when you consider how highly regarded our province's museums and heritage sites are, you know that people are going to have something to talk about when they leave. They're going to tell their friends and neighbours, and some of them will undoubtedly be intrigued enough to want to go to see for themselves what is so interesting, and they would pay admission. While visiting, they may also pick up a few souvenirs, further offsetting revenue losses.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta does have a unique and rich history, one which we can all experience today, millions of years after it first began, by visiting a local museum or historic site. Whether it is the dinosaurs from millions of years ago in Drumheller and Brooks or the Sixties exhibit at the Provincial Museum of Alberta in Edmonton or my favourite, Head-Smashed-In Buffalo Jump, designated as a UNESCO world heritage site in 1981, these and other museums and heritage sites and institutions are all part of Alberta's rich, unique, and vibrant history. We know their significance, their wonderment, and their magnificence. Let us make it possible for all Albertans to do the same and to make our past part of their lives. I ask for your support of Motion 503.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the Member for St. Albert having put the time and thought into bringing forward this motion. I'll just read it into the record so I've got it in my Hansard: "Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to offer free admission to Albertans one day each month to the province's museums and historic sites."

I can appreciate that the Member for St. Albert would like to encourage more Albertans to go to our provincial museums and historic sites. They really are quite wonderful. I certainly haven't been to all of them – I think there are 270 museums – but the ones that I have been to have been pretty neat. Each of them in its own way has found a niche.

Now, what is interesting – and I did a bit of research and called around to a few sources to find out whether this was feasible and whether it was needed. The reaction that I got was that most museums and historic sites already have some sort of free day, that was put through by their own board of directors or a decision made some time ago. So it's either a free day a month or a free day a week or an evening. I think at the Edmonton Art Gallery it was Tuesday evenings maybe.

So there has always been an understanding from the museum and the arts community that they wanted to be accessible to the general public and they didn't want to stop anyone from coming who really wanted to. There was always an opportunity presented for those that didn't have the personal finances to be able to pay the admission. Originally the admission fee was pretty low. It was 50 cents, $1, $1.50, and then it slowly had to get higher. I'm going to look at the current minister of agriculture and ask her to cast her mind back. I think we changed over the system to the friends-of groups, that that legislation was passed in 1998. No; she's not looking at me. I think it was in 1998 that in fact the management of our museums and historic sites changed through an act of legislation here in Alberta.

At the time I had a lot of concerns about it, and I still do, but essentially what happened was that the government used to run and pay for all of the sites that are there, and in this 1997 or 1998 legislation the management of the institutions was transferred to the friends-of groups. They would now be responsible for the hiring of everybody but the strictly technical staff. So, for example, at the Tyrrell Museum, which the Member for St. Albert brought up, the curator, the professional staff, would still be paid by the Department of Community Development, but everybody else, the people that take tickets and work in the gift shop and sweep the floors and do the bookkeeping, all of those positions would be paid by the friends-of organization, and the friends-of organization would take all of the revenue sources. So they took the gate receipts and the gift shop and the restaurant and the annual membership fees. Any of those possible revenue sources went to the friends-of, and that's how they were supposed to be able to pay for all of these other positions.

So there was sort of a downloading but also a switch in who was ultimately responsible for managing these organizations. Of course, at the point where the friends-of groups are responsible for keeping these museums open, they really had to be very tight about their revenue sources. The reaction I had back was a slight caution from some of them saying, "Well, how would we be required to do this, because these revenue sources are pretty important to us; for example, we wouldn't want to be asked to have a free day on, like, July 1," which is a big day for people attending these kinds of tourist attractions and family recreational opportunities. As I said, many of them have already set up and have been running – actually, ever since they started to charge admission, they've had a corresponding free day or free night or free part of the day where people could still get in and see the exhibit.

I'm hoping that when the member does her five-minute wrap-up – and I guess that would be possibly this week or, if not, next week – she can answer where the impetus for this motion came from. Was there a request from the community? Was there a particular museum that was asking her to do this? Many of the ones that I spoke to and even the umbrella organizations are saying: "It's already happening. We're managing it as it works for us. Why do you want to legislate it?" So that's the question there.

Again, I'll go back and look at the whole concept of management and money being earned. I'm looking to address a couple points that the Member for St. Albert made about expanding markets and revenue losses. Prior to the 1980s any of the museums and historic sites that we had had free admission. That's when these sites were really being developed. Some of them did introduce admission charges throughout the '80s, but as I said, there was always a corresponding time set aside where the admission was free. We have continued to charge admission fees, and those have increased.

I noticed that in one of the government documents – it could have been Measuring Up – there's actually a fee schedule where they're anticipating the increase in the admission rates for a number of their larger institutions and the family rates. I think that in a lot of cases the family rate would now be up to $20 or $25 for some of the larger institutions, and that would be considering that it was a family of at least four, and anything above that, then, makes it a deal. If you're under that, it's not such a deal.

Certainly some of the museums and historic sites have always offered discounts or incentives – two for one, or 50 percent off after 4 o'clock, that sort of thing – to encourage people to come in and take advantage of what they're offering. Again, they're wondering why there would be a kind of broad-brush approach suggested by the member when they're essentially already doing this or trying to deal with their finances. A number of them were really cautious about the effect on their finances, and when we now have these friends-of-groups that are responsible and have been put in a position of responsibility by the government, they're kind of nervous. They know that there's no more money coming. So, on the one hand, potentially if this motion were passed, the government would be telling them, "You're to give them a free day, but at the same time it's your responsibility to keep this organization or museum running in the black, and we're not going to give you any money if you're not in the black." So it puts them in a tough position. They would be mandated to give up some of their revenue, but they're still held responsible for not going in the hole. So you can see why some of them were a little cautious about this idea.

You know, I think everybody's first reaction to this is that people don't go to museums because it's too expensive and if we made them free or we made a free day, then more people would go. In fact, what I was getting back from some of the museum people was that there are these free days for people who really are too poor and who really do want to come, and they've always taken advantage of that. It seems to be more a matter of: do people have time in their lives to take the time out to go to the museum, whether it's an art gallery or the Red Deer museum? They've got a lot of great exhibits down there, really innovative ones, actually. I've driven to Red Deer to go to the Red Deer museum exhibits. It's very innovative programming there.

I went off on a tangent, and now I've totally forgotten where I was. I shouldn't get off on a tangent. Oh, time, do people have the time to go to these exhibits?

The second thing that was raised was transportation.

MS CARLSON: You've only 10 minutes.

MS BLAKEMAN: Only 10 minutes? Shoot.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

MR. MASKELL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to speak in favour today of Motion 503, provincial heritage sites accessibility. It's the intent of Motion 503 to increase Albertans' accessibility to Alberta's museums and heritage sites by offering free admission on one day of each month. By doing this, we can remove one of the barriers, the financial barrier, that keeps some Albertans from experiencing our rich and unique history. Equally important, it will also serve to get more people into our treasured sites and museums and revive those people's interest in the history of this province.

Mr. Speaker, I fully support Motion 503 because I think it gives this government a great opportunity to ensure that Albertans will realize the heritage of this province, especially, to me, the thousands of people that are moving into this province. It hopefully will encourage them to become more aware of this wonderful place.

I'm a proud fourth-generation Albertan. My grandmother was born in Edmonton in 1897 to parents who were here long before that. I was just recently reading some of Alex Mair's stories about Edmonton. My great-grandmother's name was Mowat, and it's going to be really interesting for me. It's a funny thing about getting older. You start to do this roots kind of thing, going back in history. During the Riel rebellion, when they were very nervous here in Edmonton about being attacked, a Mowat road by horse to Calgary to get the military up here. So I thought: my great-grandmother's name is Mowat, and this was a Mowat, and there weren't very many people in Edmonton at that time, so, my goodness, maybe it was my family that did that.

You know, people here don't know the history of this province, and that really saddens me. Also, as a longtime educator it's really bothered me that we haven't done enough in teaching our kids about the history of Alberta. So I think that this motion will serve to give the opportunity to educate Albertans on our beautiful province.

Alberta is a land of many tales, and I wonder how many in this room have read the McDougall diaries. You won't get over the excitement, the history, the tales. It just is riveting. And how many in here have read the biography of the great Chief Crowfoot? It again is an amazing story.

We're a land where once the dinosaurs ruled. The Member for Edmonton-Centre talks about Red Deer and the Tyrrell museum and where the First Nations people hunted and where the province began amidst great fanfare and triumph nearly a hundred years ago, where we held our heads high during good times and bad times and where we've risen above adversity. They talk about the Dirty Thirties – and I wasn't quite old enough to be there – to the world wars.

This is a rich province, a province rich in history, and I believe that we should offer 12 free days a year as incentive for people to get an experience of Alberta's past and to think about its future.

I was really interested in the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre's comments about the number of museums and sites now that do have something in their programs during the year to give people an opportunity to experience some of these places, but through this legislation we can do more. Some argue that if we pass this motion, this will hurt revenue from museums and other sites, but I disagree with this argument. People who take advantage of the free day will spend money just getting to the destination, and if they have children with them, they're going to spend money on food and in the gift shop and so on. I believe they'll ultimately bring more business for the museums and heritage sites.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that offering a free day will be one of the best advertising ploys and moneymakers that our heritage sites and museums can use. On the free day hopefully someone will go to a museum or a heritage site who usually wouldn't go there. When they experience the museum or site, they're going to enjoy it, and they're going to share the experience with their friends and recommend that they go. Hopefully there's that kind of spin-off with the rest of it. Their friends are going to go, and it goes on and on and on. They'll have a remarkable experience whether it's the art gallery or one of the great historic sites.

I believe that our museums and heritage sites will become far more popular and successful because of Motion 503. I know that the hon. minister for economic development and tourism – we talk about this all the time. This will hopefully be fulfilling the Travel Alberta theme. Right at home here we're going to be visiting our sites instead of leaving the province or going across the border to spend the Canadian peso.

Motion 503 gives Albertans the opportunity to develop a greater sense of pride for Alberta. That is to say, if a person goes to a historical site, for instance Head-Smashed-In Buffalo Jump, that person cannot leave the site without some sort of feeling of wonder and amazement. I wonder how many people in this room, in this Legislature, in this Assembly, have been to Head-Smashed-In Buffalo Jump.

Mr. Speaker, I think there are a lot of Albertans that do not take advantage of the museums and historical sites that are around Alberta. Motion 503 gives us an opportunity to get the word out to all Albertans that there are incredibly interesting places to visit in this province, and the knowledge that can be gained from them is immense.

I also feel that offering one free day a month will not only stimulate interest in Alberta's heritage sites and museums but also in the friends programs that are related to the sites. For instance, the Head-Smashed-in Buffalo Jump world heritage site has a friends society which raises money for the betterment of the establishment. The more people that belong to the society and contribute towards the site, the better it is for all organizations involved. If we encourage people to visit museums and heritage sites, more people will certainly become interested in joining the friends societies and contributing to the sites. This would increase the amount of funding that a site has to use for improvements. The benefits that could be reaped from such support could prove to be one of the best things that has happened to sites and museums around Alberta in a long time.

Funding for our museums and heritage sites is tight these days, especially with the economic situation as it is. Museums and historical sites need to get more people into their establishments so that interest will grow and the money will flow. The more people that experience our province, the better it is for our province. I believe that Motion 503 will be extremely successful in starting a new interest in our heritage and culture.

Mr. Speaker, there are a couple of other reasons why one free day a month would be beneficial. Some of the less fortunate people in society would be given the opportunity to take part in experiencing Alberta's rich history. I believe that a free day would bring in many people from all sorts of backgrounds, but I believe that most of the people who would take advantage of this day would be people who would not normally go to a museum or a heritage site, and these are the people we really want to come. That is one thing that we cannot lose sight of. Having one free day a month gives some people who might not be able to go on a regular day an opportunity to go out and see the history of our province. It gives all Albertans a chance to study our rich past and gives them the opportunity to ponder our future.

I would like to conclude with a quote from Confucius, "Study the past if you would divine the future." I am glad the Member for St. Albert is giving some the opportunity to study the history of our province. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd just like to make a few comments about Motion 503, the free admission to the province's museums and historic sites. This is a motion that I can certainly support. When we do look at the whole issue of tourism in this province and the fact that we want tourism to grow in this province to, I believe, somewhere around the $6 billion range by the year 2005, then certainly we have to look at more reasons than just this motion as to why people are not visiting our museums.

One of the major reasons – and I think that if we ask the hon. member from Lac La Biche, he would certainly tell us in a second exactly what the problem is in this province. It's the fact that with so many of these sites we have to travel such enormous distances to get there. I think back to when I was a grade 8 teacher and earth science was a major part of our curriculum. It was a three and a half hour trip for us to take our students down to the Royal Tyrrell Museum, and I can certainly say that our biggest cost was not the admission price. It was transportation. Of course, any of you that have ever traveled with any children know that the food costs are enormous, and I'm sure the museum did very well when we were there.

The biggest costs here are certainly not the admission costs, and if this is going to enhance our museums, if it is going to keep our museums operating and running, if we are not going to have a situation like we have in Cochrane with the Western Heritage museum, then, Mr. Speaker, I have no trouble supporting this motion.

We do have some incredible, incredible sites in this province. Some of them are heritage sites, and when we couple that with the gems we have for mountain parks, then certainly we do have a bright future when we look at tourism. As well, when we look at tourism, the challenges that face our museums are the same challenges that face tourism. We have in this province a number of gateway cities where people enter the province, whether it's by plane, usually by car, sometimes by train, but once we get out of that Edmonton-Calgary-Banff corridor, then it becomes our great distances that are the major stumbling blocks to us attracting people here.

We also know that it is very difficult to attract new tourists from within the province. Therefore I think what I would like to see as well, Mr. Speaker – and certainly we will find out tomorrow in the budget – is whether in fact we are going to be committed in this province to tourism, whether we are going to be committed as a province to keeping these fabulous facilities open and operating and affordable for all people, not only our own citizens of Alberta.

There are just some incredible circle routes that we can have in this province, and there are more and more being developed all the time. It's amazing when I look at this that, for example, we don't see any mention here of, you know, tourism up in Fort McMurray, again because we don't have the infrastructure there.

AN HON. MEMBER: We do so. The interpretive centre is there.

MR. BONNER: The interpretive centre is very good, but again it certainly has not been developed to the point that it could be. And, you know, through the St. Paul-Lac La Biche area of this province we have incredible history. I think that Lac La Biche as a small community in this province probably has more firsts than any other small community. I think this is where the first grain in this province was grown if I'm not mistaken. So we do have a very, very rich history, but we certainly do, Mr. Speaker, have to be committed to preserving it, and if this motion in any way will help to keep those museums open, then certainly I would support it.

As well, we also have to realize that there are trade-offs whenever we do offer free admission. Like, we still have to pay the staff that is there that particular day. We still have to pay the janitorial services. We certainly have to hope that if the food facilities on those sites are busier, some of those profits do go back into the facility.

We have a lot of challenges in our tourism industry, and in order for us to develop that industry, then we here in the Legislature have to be committed to putting those dollars in which not only are going to help sustain these facilities but are going to attract the necessary tourists to those facilities. So as I wind down my comments here on this particular bill, I would certainly hope that all members of this Assembly would support this bill. We have an enormously rich history, and apart from the Royal Tyrrell Museum in Drumheller, it is a relatively new history when we look at this province.

So with those comments I will take my seat and listen to other comments by other hon. members. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

MR. CAO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to have the opportunity to join the debate on Motion 503 this evening. As Albertans we are very privileged to live in a province of such unmatched beauty. My hometown is Calgary. To stand in the shadow of the snow-capped Rocky Mountains or to experience the tranquility of looking out over the rolling hills of the prairies as a chinook warms you makes you realize how truly fortunate we are to live in Alberta, to be Albertans, to behold the Rockies or to be swept away by the big skies of the prairies.

Mr. Speaker, this is only half of the story. The unmatched beauty of our province has a counterpart in Alberta's fascinating history. The more you think about it, you will realize our history is as diverse as it is long, as it is remarkable. The hon. Member for St. Albert has introduced a motion which I think is a wonderful initiative to enable more Albertans to experience our province's history. I applaud her vision and commitment to our heritage. We have a responsibility to make sure that our heritage remains vibrant. When a society's history becomes irrelevant to its citizens, it is all but a certainty that the society is headed for difficult times. To be without history is demoralizing for one. We all have a need to feel like we belong.

A week ago I had the honour of attending a luncheon hosted by the hon. Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations to welcome diplomats from Estonia. I was told that one of the first things that the Soviet Union did upon invading the countries that became its republic was to Russify those countries. This was done by moving large numbers of Russians to countries like Estonia, Latvia, and Lithuania, for example. They brought with them their own traditions, their own cultures, and in many cases ran the local culture off the road, so of speak. Lest we think that such things have occurred only in faraway places, Mr. Speaker, we must acknowledge that many indigenous tribes of North America have seen their culture, their traditions at odds with the traditions and cultures of many settlers and emigrants from all over the world. Lacking the grounding that a strong culture provides can and often has left individuals twisting in the wind.

To look at the importance of culture in society from a different perspective, I have been told that in political science terminology there is even a term "Canadianization." No. I'm afraid, Mr. Speaker, that it doesn't have much to do with what makes something or someone more Canadian. Au contraire. It refers to the systematic weakening of a country's culture and traditions to the point where it can be said that a country is lacking a national or cultural identity of its own.

Thus, Mr. Speaker, I would argue that Motion 503 is a step away from the Canadianization of Alberta's culture and heritage. Motion 503 is a means by which to strengthen Alberta's culture, to make it more accessible. Indeed, Motion 503 is all about creating access to the past for as many Albertans as possible. By creating access, we will also stimulate interest, and by stimulating interest, we will help build the community, our community. For some, admission fees are proving prohibitive barriers, thereby effectively preventing them from partaking of Alberta's unique and rich history. However, by offering free admission to Albertans once a month, the province will enhance people's ability to actively participate in the larger community. By enabling a large number of Albertans to learn more about Alberta's past, I firmly believe that Motion 503 would also help create a greater sense of community among our province's residents.

Mr. Speaker, a commonly voiced concern these days is how our society is disintegrating and becoming more fragmented. Some choose to talk about it in terms of family values, others talk about the loss of moral fibre, and yet others talk about how economics have transcended the family in terms of stature and importance. It may not be obvious immediately, but Motion 503 stands to counteract some of the ill effects of societal fragmentation. It offers a forum for a family to spend more time together while at the same time becoming active participants in our shared history as Albertans.

During the 2000-2001 fiscal year, which ended on March 31, 2001, the most recent year for which official figures are available, there were almost 1.1 million visitors to Alberta's historical sites and museums. During the period between April 1, 2001, and December 31, 2001, there were over 900,000 visitors, according to unofficial statistics. The Alberta government has an interest in preserving the province's history. In doing so, popular participation is invaluable. While the attendance rates are quite high for both museums in our province, it can be inferred that a large number of these visitors are from out of the province or from out of the country. I would like to see more Albertans and more non-Albertans alike go to our museums and heritage sites so that we can all see and learn more about Alberta's past.

Mr. Speaker, what the hon. member proposes in Motion 503 is a modest 12 days a year during which the provincial museums and heritage sites would not charge admission. I realize that it may cause some worry that such a free day will draw people away from the days when they would have to pay for admission. I don't wish to belittle such worries or concerns, but it is equally important to look at the bright side. All those people who previously might not have been able to visit the museums and the heritage sites will be able to do so. They will tell their friends, and friends will tell their friends, and so on. Word of mouth is really a cheap form of advertising, and there's bound to be a spillover effect. Quite frankly, not everyone will be able to go on the free day. Regardless of when people choose to go, they will perhaps pick up a souvenir of some kind or maybe they will visit the cafeteria for something to eat. Services like those will generate extra revenue and offset the losses, if any, the museums and heritage sites would incur as a result of having a free day each month.

Mr. Speaker, we are a rich province. We have the lowest unemployment rate in all of Canada. We have the strongest economy in all of Canada and the lowest taxes of all the provinces and territories. We have a history that is second to none. It is in our interest to have as many of our fellow Albertans partake in our rich heritage as can.

During her speech the hon. Member from St. Albert said something that really resonates with me. She said that each of Alberta's many museums and historic sites tell a story of their own and that together they all tell the story of Alberta and tell us the story of our forebears, and one day they will tell the story to our children and to our children's children. Mr. Speaker, what if our children or our children's children don't know the story of Alberta? If they don't know it, then who will tell them?

As a member of the Historical Society of Alberta and the Chinook

Country Historical Society, I don't want that to happen, Mr. Speaker. I'm sure that all of my colleagues in the Assembly feel the same way, so I urge all of you to join me in supporting Motion 503. Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It wasn't my intention to speak to this particular motion at this time, but Calgary-Fort has driven me to do so. This is a great warm and friendly, fuzzy kind of motion. Of course we want everybody to be able to enjoy all of the provincial facilities free of charge, but Calgary-Fort would let us think that this would solve some of the more significant problems we have in our society, and it certainly doesn't do that. I don't see how getting a free day will help fractured families heal themselves. What they need are good public transportation systems, a livable minimum wage, proper day care, life-skills training in how to get their families up in the morning, properly feed them, and shop for groceries. You have to address those kinds of basic issues first before we start to deal with some of the issues around fractured families. This is, from his perspective, a feel-good, bandage kind of solution, Mr. Speaker, that truly doesn't address the real issues, and like my colleague . . . [interjection] That's right. The government doesn't have to do anything. They can say that they've done something without actually having done anything, and that's mostly the route that they like to go.

My colleague from Edmonton-Centre earlier said that if being free meant something, then these galleries would be full, and we know, Mr. Speaker, from being here day after day, year after year that few people come to watch what must be the very lively entertainment provided by provincial politicians.

MS BLAKEMAN: You can see dinosaurs right here.

MS CARLSON: Yes, that's true. You can see dinosaurs right here for free. Some of them are gone now. I've seen many of them in my lifetime, though, Mr. Speaker; I have to tell you that.

While this is a good motion and has some merit for sure, Mr. Speaker, there are some real issues that need to be addressed in this province. I would have to point out that I do believe that this legislative time could be better spent dealing with the substantive issues that are there for people in this province at this time.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: I regret to interrupt the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, but the time limit for consideration of this item of business on this day has now concluded.

Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2002

THE CHAIR: Before I call on any hon. members, I'd like to explain for the benefit of those who've been in the gallery for a little while that this is the informal part of the Assembly, so the rules are changed. You can see that members can move around wherever they wish, although we try and maintain, occasionally with some notable exceptions . . . [interjections] Anyway, as I was explaining to those who are supposed to know better and those who are now about to learn, we only have one member standing and speaking at a time and try to stick to that rule.

Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be made with respect to this bill? The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

AN HON. MEMBER: Question.

MS CARLSON: Don't ask for the question this early, because we could go on for quite a long time on this particular bill if we're pushed on it.

MS BLAKEMAN: Every time you ask, it's another 15 minutes.

MS CARLSON: That's right.

Bill 17, the Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2002, is an interim supply request. It's my first opportunity to speak to this particular legislation, Mr. Chairman. What we're looking at this year is a total amount being requested by the government to finish out their spending requirements for the year of $4.090 billion. This is the second year in a row that this government has used this mechanism as a budgetary tool, and that's an issue for us in terms of the budgeting process. Last year they asked for, I believe at this point in time, over $7 billion. Last year that was about 36 percent of their total budget.

The problem, Mr. Chairman, as I see it, is that the government's reliance on this kind of a mechanism is additional proof that the government cannot budget properly. Instead, it spends and then slashes and then spends some more. We are always being portrayed as tax-and-spend Liberals, but in fact we haven't been in government in this province since about 1917, and this government, who's been in government for now over 30 years, has a policy of cut and spend, which can be, I believe, worse than tax and spend, because at least tax and spend gives you some sort of a framework to work within. Spending like mad fools and then cutting like mad fools doesn't do anybody any good and certainly doesn't provide a stable fiscal framework, which is what we would hope that this government would look for.

While it is not our intention to hold up this legislation, because the government does need moneys to operate, we do have serious concerns regarding the need to resort to this type of budgeting mechanism again this year.

MS BLAKEMAN: They could have called us into session in mid-February, and we'd be done.

MS CARLSON: Absolutely. There's no doubt that with a proper planning process, Mr. Chairman, we would see a legislative recall much earlier in the year. In January, February we could easily come back. Everybody else after the Christmas holidays goes back to work the first or second week of January. Not us. This government has a habit of dithering when it comes to budget-making decisions, and we've seen that particularly this year, when we're facing some budget cutbacks and a loss of their windfall revenue.

We saw last year the big payoffs coming because we were on the eve of an election, and the government wanted to look good and did so, but what's the excuse this year? Why another $4 billion this year? What was wrong with the process, which I know they start in the early fall in terms of trying to build the framework for the following year and can't get it happening? Even this year we started the legislative session in the third week of February. Here it is coming into the third week of March before we actually see a budget coming forward. We have a two-week spring break now, and then there are at least an additional two weeks of budget debate, where we debate departments in the afternoons and in the evenings, so it's at least another six weeks before we get budget approval. If they would start the legislative session earlier in the year and properly manage their budgets so that they're ready to present at that particular point in time, then we wouldn't have to come back for interim supply.

Once again, when we see this bill come forward, what we have is really a distinct lack of explanation of how the new spending will contribute to meeting defined outcomes and performance criteria in the government business plans. We note that this is the particular concern the Auditor General has year after year, that yes, we've got outcomes and performance criteria built into the budget, but the government never meets those outcomes, or the performance criteria doesn't actually measure what it is that the department is doing. So it's like looking at the budget documents and then wondering which country they actually apply to, because it certainly isn't this province. There's a real disconnect between what they build into the budget documents and the actual performance of their duties. At some point you would expect that the government would actually hit some of the benchmarks, but it doesn't happen in most departments most of the time. So, of course, that's an issue for us when we debate this kind of stuff. We would hope that the government would get better at this. They've been doing it for as long as I've been in here now – it was '93 when they first brought it in – and are still missing the mark, Mr. Chairman. So we hope that perhaps we'll see some better performance this year.

We also will be having a new Auditor General come into place. I know that the Acting Auditor General follows the same mind-set that the former Auditor General did, and that's good. I thought that he did his work, for the most part, with a great deal of diligence and helped to push and sometimes drag this government to where it needs to go.

MS BLAKEMAN: Kicking and screaming.

MS CARLSON: Kicking and screaming often. No doubt about it.

Hopefully the person that they will be finding as the new Auditor General will have the same kind of mind-set and won't be intimidated or bullied by anyone within government departments and will take a look at defining the same kind of criteria and perhaps even being a little tougher. That would be excellent.

What we could have seen in the business plans and the explanation of how this spending could have been done was a plan in terms of how the government would sustain public health care. What we see instead is leaked information stating that hospital beds will be closed, especially in rural Alberta, sometime in the future, dates yet to be announced. The health minister dodged that question very effectively today in question period, but, Mr. Chairman, he won't be able to dodge it indefinitely, and at some point he's going to have to come clean and tell us exactly what's happening there.

What they could have done was told us how they were going to use this money to solve the problems in education. This is one that this government is not going to be able to sweep under the rug, Mr. Chairman. I have never seen people so unhappy, and for people three years or four years before the next election to be coming forward at this point in time with lobbying tactics and election-readiness planning is quite a surprise. Also, I have to say, quite frankly, that it is quite a surprise they come from the teaching profession, because it isn't what we've seen. They haven't been all that tactical in the past in terms of election awareness and election readiness, but I think we're going to see some surprises there. It'll be interesting to see how they move forward with their planning and whether they can sustain the energy that they have right now. My money is on the teachers. I believe they have very long memories. I believe they are very good organizers. I believe that if I was on the government side of the House, I would be a little frightened of what could happen down the road.

What we could have seen in here, rather than just moneys being spent, was an actual plan of what would be spent on maintaining our infrastructure programs. We have talked repeatedly about setting up an infrastructure fund that would provide sustainable, consistent funding from year to year. The volatile kind of spending and funding patterns this government gets into because of the volatility of the kind of revenues we take in in this province cause havoc in private industry, and that kind of a structure ends up costing governments and everyone doing business with governments many more dollars than it should have to.

If we had stable, responsible spending, people and companies and municipalities could organize their own spending patterns and building patterns and growth patterns in sustainable kinds of frameworks that would exist more than 12 months down the road. That becomes very important when you're funding infrastructure because of the high cost and length of time it takes to put infrastructure in place in many cases. Instead of pushing down the boom or bust cycle that this government seems to be dependent upon and makes other groups dependent upon as well, we could have some stability. I would suspect to see some sustained growth resulting from that. I'm surprised, actually, that the Minister of Economic Development doesn't support that kind of a plan, because I know that he is certainly a huge cheerleader for Alberta and wants to see business grow in leaps and bounds. How can that best happen? By providing a framework for stable funding. So if he wants to see Alberta's economic growth be larger than what it has been and far outstrip what we've seen in the past year, then I would think that he would get on this particular bandwagon, too, because at the end of the day it will certainly make him look good.

MR. NORRIS: Well, we all need more of that.

MS CARLSON: Well, that's right. We do.

MR. NORRIS: That's a struggle at the best of times.

MS CARLSON: There you go.

So I think that this is a solution that that particular minister should be promoting and supporting at the cabinet table, and we'll see where it goes over the next couple of years.

There are some other areas that we should have seen the details on in this particular supply request in terms of where this $4 billion is going. Certainly one of them that has been top of mind for many of us for the last couple of weeks is the tragedies that we've seen with our young people under provincial care. What we see is a change in mind-set, even in the past couple of years, to what we had in the last five years, Mr. Chairman, with regard to how this government measures performance. In the past we saw it measured by whether or not they could balance the budget, but what we're seeing now is various departments being measured by how many people they take into the system on one end and how fast they can take those people and punt them out the other side. There's nothing wrong with the concept as long as the people going through the system get the kind of service, the kind of input, the kind of support that they require. What we're seeing is that government departments are kicking these people out and loose too quickly, that they're just running them through the system as if they were on a treadmill without ensuring along the way that needs have been met.

What does that mean, Mr. Chairman, when we talk about Children's Services? It means that when we pay managers and staff an incentive payment to kick kids out of the system, we are not necessarily meeting those people's needs. We're meeting the needs of the managers and the staff people who are receiving bonuses, because they're getting more money, but that shouldn't be the criterion those decisions are made on. It isn't how fast they get off the system; it's how effectively they are able to survive once out of the system. So if we haven't done the proper inputs, where we've given those people the skills to develop their lives outside of being supported by the system, then we've failed in the delivery of services to those people. So if you're going to pay people bonuses – and I am not an advocate of paying bonuses to people who work within government systems; I think that is contrary to what government services should be providing – clearly we need to change the framework under which the bonuses are funded. It needs to be not how fast they get through the system or how many you kick out of the system at the end of the month but how successfully those people re-enter a world that does not include the system, Mr. Chairman.

I think that is something that we definitely need to take a look at. Whatever they've done in Children's Services is showing to be becoming not only a total, dismal failure but tragedies in the making as we see children dying, freezing to death while in care. The other kinds of tragedies that are starting to slip through the system and the stress that some of the people working within the system are under in trying to adequately support these people is a sad statement on how this government is delivering services. I think that's something that needs to be looked at.

I sincerely hope that in this budget we're going to see tomorrow, we see those particular issues addressed in a way that can address some of the problems that we've seen within the system. If not, this government can be guaranteed that we will be on those issues and we will not let go of them until we see a change in mind-set. Something is definitely wrong in the Department of Children's Services, and this government holds the responsibility for the wrongness and also for solving some of those issues. I think that those are some of the places we needed to have had some explanation for when we took a look at the $4.9 billion being requested and some of the places where we didn't see an explanation. So that's a problem.

What doesn't go away in interim supply are some of the same issues that are outstanding, Mr. Chairman, when we talk about budget. Particularly with this government, the problem that doesn't go away is the lack of budget management. We see this illustrated in a number of ways. One of those is by the amount of unbudgeted spending brought in through the supplementary supply estimates over the past couple of years. We had one of those just about a week ago, Mr. Chairman. The problem is that if the Minister of Finance doesn't have reasonable controls over the unbudgeted spending, then how can we really trust this government when they say that there is no more money? We saw money for nurses and doctors and politicians, but we don't see any money for teachers. What changed, Mr. Chairman, between yesterday and today?

Well, this government will tell us that it's the oil and gas revenues. I would state to them that it's their inability to manage. In fact, they will still have collected over $21 billion in revenue for the course of the year. Twenty-one billion dollars in revenue to service just over 3 million people: that's a lot of cash. Clearly, there is enough money to go around. Clearly, if it's managed properly, there is more than enough money to go around.

Many of our government members are happy to state that they are fiscal conservatives. That's good, Mr. Chairman. I would say that I also am a fiscal conservative, because I expect to get a dollar's worth out of a dollar or a dollar's worth out of a dollarette, which is worth less than a dollar, and there's no reason why we can't get that kind of value for our money. Have we been getting it under this government's stewardship? I would put it to you and to the rest of the members of this Assembly that we have not. They have not gotten good value for the money.

What could they have in these budget processes that would help that? The same things we would put in place in private industry or not-for-profits, Mr. Chairman, things like efficiency audits. What is wrong with going through a department to decide how efficient it is? It isn't enough to say: my budget was X last year, inflation has increased by this amount, we've got a few new projects that we want to do, so what I need is this much more money. That's not the way to do it. The way to do it is to go through the department and say: are we being efficient in delivering the services that we're expected to deliver? What are those services? Clearly define them, and then follow the path of delivery.

What we had was a government who back in '93 just cut the money. It was like squeezing water out of a sponge at that time; they cut and shrank services down. But they didn't actually look for efficiencies. So what happened when a little money or a little water was poured back onto that sponge? It just alarmingly grew and became big and cumbersome again.

MS BLAKEMAN: Like a puffer fish.

MS CARLSON: Yes, like a puffer fish. Just like a puffer fish.

There were no efficiencies brought into that particular system. There are no economies of scale or efficiencies that we saw, just a huge expansion. So now people are screaming blue murder because budgets are being cut by 1 percent or whatever, but they still haven't got any efficiencies in place, Mr. Chairman.

Second Reading

Gaming and Liquor Amendment Act, 2002

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Gaming.

MR. STEVENS: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise today to speak to Bill 14 and to move second reading of Bill 14, the Gaming and Liquor Amendment Act, 2002.

Bill 14 proposes a number of amendments to the current legislation, the Gaming and Liquor Act, all of which add up to enhancing the integrity of gaming and liquor activities in Alberta. Mr. Speaker, integrity is paramount in my ministry. In fact, it's one of the key components of Alberta Gaming's mission, which is "to ensure integrity, transparency, disclosure, public consultation and accountability in Alberta's gaming and liquor industries." The theme of integrity ties in with our vision:

Supports the responsible use and enjoyment of gaming and liquor products, uses revenues derived from these activities for the benefit of all Albertans, and encourages service and competition in [Alberta's] liquor and gaming industries.

Mr. Speaker, the vision and mission of my ministry need to be at the core of everything that we do when we consider that gaming and liquor activities are big business here in Alberta. The third-quarter forecast reported government revenues of $495 million from liquor sales in this fiscal year. It also reported that more than $1.1 billion will be received by the government from gaming activities in the province and that all of these dollars will be used for charitable, nonprofit, public, and community-based initiatives through the Alberta lottery fund.

We've had liquor regulation in force in this province since the early 1920s. However, the introduction of the Gaming and Liquor Act represented the first provincial legislation to govern gaming in Alberta. Because of the fiscal impact of the two industries it's vital that the provisions of the act remain relevant and necessary to preserve and enhance the integrity of gaming and liquor activities. Albertans expect nothing less of us, and our commitment to this remains crystal clear.

Mr. Speaker, over the past five years the Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission and Alberta's gaming and liquor licensees and stakeholders have operated within the legislative framework provided by the Gaming and Liquor Act and gaming and liquor regulations. For the purposes of the regulatory reform initiative the Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission was required to undertake a complete review of the regulations. We also felt that it was an opportune time to review the act. By looking at the two together, we could ensure that the act and regulations continued to function together as the roadmap for gaming and liquor activities conducted within the province.

We also wanted to be sure that we heard from Albertans affected by our legislation, so last fall we conducted extensive consultations with all of our key stakeholders, ranging from police agencies to businesses in the gaming and liquor industries, regarding our proposed changes. We held an additional round of consultations early this past January. Where appropriate we incorporated the feedback we received in the final legislative changes I introduced on March 6 as Bill 14. As a result of our consultations, we believe that the proposed amendments to the act consider both current industry practices as well as the changes that have occurred in the gaming and liquor industry since 1996. They do this while maintaining and strengthening integrity. I know I've said this before, but I just want to emphasize again how important this is not only to my ministry but to all Albertans.

Mr. Speaker, under the Gaming and Liquor Amendment Act we proposed a number of changes that not only clarify terms, roles, and responsibilities for licensees and the AGLC but also will help the AGLC to operate more efficiently and effectively. Most of the changes are relatively minor, almost housekeeping, if you will, but there are several important ones that I'd like to specifically highlight to the members of the Assembly.

First of all, the board of the AGLC currently has no express authority to ensure that charitable groups use the proceeds earned from conducting a licensed charitable event for the purpose that they've identified. The proposed amendment specifies that the board would be given the authority to direct groups to use their gaming proceeds in an appropriate manner if the board has reason to believe that the group has not or will not use the proceeds in accordance with their licence terms, AGLC policy, the act, or the Criminal Code. By making this change, the board will be able to ensure that gaming proceeds are spent only on approved charitable programs. This adheres to Alberta's unique charitable model for gaming, a model whose fundamental purpose is to benefit charitable, nonprofit, public, and community-based initiatives. I think we can all agree that this model should be placed on a high pedestal, and the use of the proceeds amendment forms the base of that pedestal.

A second change deals with minors found in licensed casino facilities, which is currently only an offence against the licensee. The proposed amendment would also add racing entertainment centres alongside casinos and would make it an offence against the minor as well. This is consistent with the liquor provisions of the act, which make it an offence against both parties if a minor is found in a licensed premise. Mr. Speaker, this change will reinforce our message to minors that they are not allowed to enter casinos or racing entertainment centres, and we believe that by making it an offence under the law, it will be a stronger deterrent for minors. This ties in with our vision of the responsible use and enjoyment of gaming activities in Alberta, and we will continue to be vigilant in our efforts to ensure that minors do not enter these facilities.

The third change I'd like to highlight is a provision to make it an offence for liquor or gaming facility licensees to permit an apparently intoxicated person to participate in a gaming activity. As with the provisions dealing with minors, Mr. Speaker, this goes back to the responsible use of gaming and liquor activities. There's nothing in the current act to prevent someone who has apparently had too much to drink from participating in a licensed gaming activity. It is, however, an offence for a licensee to sell, provide, or permit consumption of liquor by an intoxicated person in a licensed premise. The proposed amendment will ensure that licensees take responsibility for preventing apparently intoxicated people from gambling, while continuing to promote responsible alcohol consumption.

A fourth change to the Gaming and Liquor Act has to do with casino facility licences. Mr. Speaker, as it now stands, if a facility licence is suspended or canceled, there's a risk that the facility may close down. If a facility closes down, a large number of casino employees are put out of work, charities are disadvantaged, and the government loses revenue. The proposed amendment would add provisions allowing the AGLC upon licence suspension or cancellation to apply to the Court of Queen's Bench to appoint a receiver to manage the facility's operations. This will prevent any unnecessary closure of casinos and will ensure that charitable groups continue to benefit from gaming revenues.

Mr. Speaker, another highlight is a change that was initiated by the liquor industry and is strongly supported by this government. Under the gaming and liquor regulation the board of the AGLC may not issue a retail liquor store licence to an applicant unless the proposed store is separate from any other business of the applicant. The Gaming and Liquor Amendment Act, 2002, will see this important provision move from the regulation to the act. This will ensure that the separate business provision is given a higher degree of permanence and profile, effectively reinforcing the government's commitment to our existing retail liquor store model. This model has proven to be extremely successful, so successful, in fact, that several other provinces are looking to Alberta as an example of how to privatize liquor retailing. With that kind of spotlight shining on us, we felt it was important to make our commitment abundantly clear.

Mr. Speaker, the last change I'd like to highlight is the reason this bill was introduced as a money bill on March 6. The AGLC is one of the very few commercial organizations operated within this government. The operating expenses of the AGLC are subject to an annual voted appropriation. This requirement can restrict the AGLC's responsiveness to changing market conditions and, therefore, could limit our flexibility to capitalize on unforeseen revenue-generating opportunities that may arise during a fiscal year. To allow us the ability to take advantage of these opportunities while maintaining our accountability to this Assembly and through it to Albertans, the Gaming and Liquor Amendment Act would allow us to use the revenue generated by the commission to pay its operating costs. All moneys paid out in this fashion will continue to be managed and accounted for in accordance with the Government Accountability Act and the Fiscal Responsibility Act.

As mentioned earlier, Mr. Speaker, gaming and liquor are big business here in Alberta. The revenues brought in by gaming activities are used to the benefit of all Albertans through support of charitable and public initiatives. Liquor revenues aren't as large as those from gaming, but our model of privatization has proven to be one of benefit to Albertans as well through increased jobs, product selection, and some of the best prices in the country. Going hand in hand with these revenues is my favourite word: integrity.

The gaming and liquor industries have undergone a fair amount of change over the last five years, and the proposed amendments are necessary to preserve and enhance the integrity of these two activities in Alberta. The Gaming ministry's mission and vision are clear, and Bill 14 will magnify that clarity with its provisions. Mr. Speaker, I encourage all of my colleagues to join me in support of Bill 14 and look forward to hearing their comments during the debate.

At this time, Mr. Speaker, I would move that we adjourn debate on Bill 14.

Bill 16

Racing Corporation Amendment Act, 2002

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Gaming.

MR. STEVENS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to move second reading of Bill 16, the Racing Corporation Amendment Act, 2002.

Bill 16 proposes a number of amendments to the current legislation, the Racing Corporation Act, and it is intended to give Alberta's horse racing industry an opportunity to restructure and revitalize itself.

Mr. Speaker, horse racing has a long and colourful history in Alberta, and the amendments to the Racing Corporation Act will serve to enhance the industry's ability to manage and promote itself effectively. The foundation of Bill 16 can be traced back to recommendations made by the industry in their horse racing industry review report. The bill now before this Assembly is a direct result of the industry collectively asking for legislative changes and government's willingness to support those changes for the betterment of the overall industry. With such a broad and diverse group of stakeholders affected by this legislation, I think it's important to note that all segments of the horse racing industry were part of the consultation process and that they collectively support the contents of this bill.

Mr. Speaker, in order to give the horse racing industry the framework it needs to succeed, Bill 16 acts on the industry's recommendations to change the framework that governs the industry while ensuring a smooth transition period going forward. Other changes in the legislation were initiated by government also in response to issues raised in the horse racing industry review report. These changes are focused primarily on increasing industry accountability and introducing performance measures to ensure positive future growth.

What it comes down to, Mr. Speaker, is that a strong horse racing industry has a rippling effect through the province, particularly within the agricultural community. Bill 16 is intended to provide industry the means to ensure that new and productive chapters will be written into the future history of horse racing in Alberta.

I would now like to highlight for the hon. members of this Assembly a few of the most important changes. Mr. Speaker, one of the main changes contained in Bill 16 is the renaming of the Alberta Racing Corporation. A change is often a refreshing exercise, one that signals a renewed sense of purpose and vision. To mark a new era of prosperity, the industry has requested that the Alberta Racing Corporation be renamed Horse Racing Alberta. This change goes deeper than simply renaming the corporation. Horse Racing Alberta will be an important new symbol that will represent a newly expanded, more effective governing body.

As part of the new governance structure, the board of Horse Racing Alberta would be increased in size from seven members to a maximum of 12. This increase would allow for input from additional members, from key stakeholder groups not currently represented on the Alberta Racing Corporation board. This would help create one industrywide organization that could act as one voice for the industry.

A final highlight from Bill 16 deals with reporting and accountability. Currently the Alberta Racing Corporation is required to submit an annual report to the minister, who must table a copy in this Assembly. The minister can also request other information. The changes proposed in Bill 16 would expand the reporting requirements to include ministerial approval of multiyear business plans and associated performance measures. These accountability tools coupled with annual reporting will serve as the new standard of measuring the vitality of the industry. Mr. Speaker, these expanded reporting requirements are necessary to satisfy the government that funds flowed to the horse racing industry as part of the racing industry renewal initiative will be used for priority purposes and are measurably helping to achieve the results expected. Introducing these strengthened requirements also establishes planning and reporting standards similar to those required of government grant recipients and increases the organization's accountability for use of the funds provided.

Mr. Speaker, in closing, I would reiterate that these changes were requested by and developed in consultation with all segments of the horse racing industry. These changes are necessary to help industry promote and grow horse racing in the province, and as I said earlier, a vibrant horse racing industry has a trickle-down effect throughout the entire province. I would encourage my colleagues, all of my colleagues, to support Bill 16, for it is indeed a very fine piece of legislation.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I think it would be appropriate to adjourn debate on this matter.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. STEVENS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that the Assembly do stand adjourned until 1:30 p.m. tomorrow.

[Motion carried; at 9:42 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Tuesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Tuesday, March 19, 2002

1:30 p.m.

Date: 2002/03/19

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

THE SPEAKER: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. Dear God, author of all wisdom, knowledge, and understanding, we ask Thy guidance in order that truth and justice may prevail in all of our judgments. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Visitors

MS DeLONG: Mr. Speaker, I rise with great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the Assembly a very familiar face. This is not only a constituent of Calgary-Bow, but this is the former MLA for Calgary-Bow, Bonnie Laing. This very dear lady very ably represented Calgary-Bow for many years, and she also contributed to the well-being of all Albertans: through seniors, through treatments for addictions, and especially for the homeless. If Bonnie would please rise in the Speaker's gallery.

head: Introduction of Guests

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

MRS. JABLONSKI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my great pleasure to introduce to you and through you to the members of this House 32 bright and curious grade 6 students from River Glen school in Red Deer. These students and their teachers are represented by myself because their school is in the constituency of Red Deer-North, but the majority of these students live in the county of Red Deer and are represented by the hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake. Their teachers are Mrs. Dempsey, Miss Thomas, and Mrs. Pozzolo. Their parent helpers are Mrs. Vincent and Mrs. Courte. I would now ask these well-behaved young students to rise and receive the warm welcome of the House.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

MR. OUELLETTE: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly two constituents of mine, Charlie and Janice Moore. Charlie usually likes to introduce himself to the people as the old hillbilly from Pine Lake, but I would like to tell you that Charlie is anything but and is very active in our community. Charlie is the president of the Alberta Association of Agricultural Societies, a director of the Crossroads Gas Co-op, president of the Innisfail-Sylvan Lake Constituency Association, a past-president of the Crossroads Ag Society, and a current member of numerous other boards. Charlie and his wife, Janice, have a grain farm, and Janice has a cow herd. Charlie has always said: never take on any more work than your wife can handle. Janice does a great job of looking after the farm and the cattle. Charlie and Janice are very good neighbours and very good friends of mine. I would like to ask Charlie and Janice to stand and receive the warm welcome of the House.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Economic Development.

MR. NORRIS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to introduce to you and through you what might seem like a bit of a shock but a lifelong friend of mine. We went through grade school and high school. We went to university in Antigonish, Nova Scotia, where the Hon. Guy Boutilier, Minister of Municipal Affairs, also attended. I see that my friend is here today. I'd ask him to rise, and thanks for being my friend. Phil Markovich, please accept the welcome of this House.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

MR. LUND: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me a great deal of pleasure today to introduce to you and to the members of the Assembly some 19 people from the property and supply management division, realty services branch of Alberta Infrastructure. These people do a tremendous job for the people of Alberta in the areas of maintenance in government-owned properties, the procurement and sale of surplus supplies, and real estate services. They are seated in the members' gallery, and I would now ask them to rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the House.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Revenue.

MR. MELCHIN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's with great pleasure that I am able to rise today and introduce a constituent of Calgary-North West who has become a very dear friend over these past few years. In the last year he has also been working in my constituency office three days a week. I'd like to ask Don Severs if he'd please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Economic Development.

MR. NORRIS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Lest we think there's a conspiracy going on today, another good friend has joined us in the gallery – two of them – so that makes all of them. I would like my good friend Mike Magathan to rise and please enjoy the warm welcome of this House.

MR. MASON: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to rise today and introduce to you and through you a group of social work students from Grant MacEwan College. They are, I think, outstanding students who are about to set out on a career of helping people in this province. They've taken a tour of the Legislature and are in the gallery observing the proceedings of the House. They are accompanied by their instructor, Ms Kathaleen Quinn, and I would ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

head: Oral Question Period

THE SPEAKER: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Children's Services Funding

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the Official Opposition tabled a letter from the executive director of Hull Child and Family Services. This letter informs the parents of a special-needs child that all support for their child is being withdrawn due to cost containment measures. My question is to the Minister of Children's Services. Since last fall's budget cuts how many letters like this have left families with vulnerable children high and dry?

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, first of all, there are no children in this province that are high and dry. There is $55 million for handicapped children's services in Hull homes. There are a number of realignments, redistribution of contracts and agencies so that we can identify children with special needs and get them help with the right provider.

Mr. Speaker, not two weeks ago I met with some of the children in Calgary with special needs from the Alberta children and youth network. We reviewed some of the issues they had either with the care they were being provided with or with other circumstances that evolved to bring them to the attention of child welfare in the first place. We are following up on every single case, examining every single placement, every single contact the child has had and doing our very best to follow through on every single item for children who have had needs, who have expressed those needs directly to me, and we have made a commitment to follow up on each and every one of those.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second question to the same minister: how can parents appeal these decisions given that Bill 9 will make this appeal process subservient to the minister's cost containment policy?

MS EVANS: Well, Mr. Speaker, such nonsense we're listening to this afternoon. Such nonsense. Right at the very beginning when we introduced Bill 9, the Bill 9 provisions are so that we provide a policy framework. We've given that understanding to all of the authorities, all of those people who are receiving children's services through handicapped children's services. In any kind of situation where there hasn't been policy, the panel itself is asked for some framework and some policy so that they are not all over the map in what they may or may not do.

Mr. Speaker, further, we have actually had people come to the Child Welfare Appeal Panel for very minuscule kinds of things that could be better delegated to supervisors or social workers on the front line, and it's time for that to stop. Simply put, it keeps people waiting too long. It keeps the process in a delay mode.

So, Mr. Speaker, there are needs for policy. We are working this year with those people that have children's needs in handicapped children's services. We've got an IBI review panel that has been structured to work on how the policy framework works for intensive behaviour intervention as well as some assessments of the Renfrew school and other handicapped children's services needs. So all of those policies will be in place, and no longer will parents be out there wondering how those things happen for them.

If I may, there are 85 cases that went to the Child Welfare Appeal Panel that received a total of $3.5 million of extra services beyond what their director had assigned. We have no intent to take those services away. They are currently in place. They will stay in place as long as those children need the service.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the minister. I just heard you say, Madam Minister, that you were providing a process to make sure that they didn't get services from your ministry that could be available other places. Why is it that you don't advise them of those other sources of funding for their needs instead of dealing with it by just cutting them off?

MS EVANS: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's very difficult to look at a child and anticipate what their needs are and who should deliver that service. Throughout our service delivery system, some are delivered through Health and Wellness, some are delivered through Learning, and some are obviously services delivered through Children's Services. Sometimes the stacking effect, if we weren't all co-ordinating our effort, could see a child seeing providers from each of the different ministries. So part of this is a matter of co-ordination, but in this review we have members of each of the ministry staffs that will sit on the review and make a determination of the appropriate policy.

THE SPEAKER: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: is it government policy to shortchange children now only to pay for it later, when the costs of providing them with service get higher?

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, when we had the cost containment measures last year, when we made reductions of 1 percent – let me go back to that $647 million. We had reduced about $6.7 million. We had then a certain amount of money that came back, $4 million from the federal funding for children who needed additional supports, predominantly aboriginal children. We also received some revenue from the national children's benefit, another 1 and a half million dollars. There have not been the significant, draconian cuts that the opposition would have you believe in Children's Services. We have had some notices that we're going to do things differently, contracts that will be managed differently, different kinds of service delivery systems, but in total the bottom line is that the cost containments are furthest away from the child, and we are working very hard to make sure that no child at risk is in fact placed more at risk by any of the cost containment strategies that have been put in place.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister provide us with a clear policy on which services her ministry is cutting from children?

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, even if one was not prepared to believe the things that I have been saying for the past several weeks on Children's Services, look at the facts. The throne speech identified that Children's Services would be a ministry that would receive some additional resources or receive at least no resources less than the year before. To the hon. member opposite I would say: wait and see what happens in the budget for Children's Services.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the minister: is removing those services that you've talked about consistent with your policy of trying to make cuts furthest away from the child?

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, I have not talked about removing services from children. I have been talking about working well with the child and family services authorities to realign service deliveries so we don't have circumstances with overlap in service delivery.

THE SPEAKER: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Windsong Child and Family Services Authority

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Caseloads in the Wind-song children's authority are up 25 percent, and the minister responds by cutting their budget. My questions are to the Minister of Children's Services. Has the minister responded to the hundreds of Canmore citizens who claim budget cuts are hurting their children? Have you talked to those citizens?

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, throughout the past few weeks and months we've been working very closely with the Windsong authority. We have been providing additional dollars so that they would not be without resources to continue their child welfare management. Sometime in November, when I met with that authority, they indicated that they had made some severe reductions of the numbers that were on the caseload, and I questioned: how could that be done so quickly? What happened overnight that would enable you to reduce the child welfare caseload? They said that they'd found a number of different ways, so we've been working very closely with them to make sure that those children would not have any impediments in service delivery.

Relative to Canmore, the Canmore people who have been drawing very frequently their concerns to the attention of their MLA from Banff-Cochrane have been focusing on the outreach worker position that has been part of what we have funded within the school in Canmore, pointing out the importance of this worker in the child welfare delivery system. Mr. Speaker, we continue to work within that authority and with that school authority to, hopefully, at some point be able to come up with a concrete agreement so that midyear these kinds of things don't occur. We did add in fact some additional dollars to the Windsong authority so that they could make some accommodation for worker provision not necessarily through the school that would hopefully bridge the gap.

DR. MASSEY: Again to the same minister: has the minister told Lawrence Grassi middle school in Canmore that the school drug and alcohol counselor and the student outreach worker are unnecessary? Have you told them that?

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member opposite makes the assumption that the minister directly relates to the school. In fact, the Windsong authority relates to the school, identifies priorities within their community, within the region, and works very hard to try and provide those services as a priority.

Let's come back to the fundamental reason that we have been faced with cost containment in the first place. That's because we have had a number of youth who are 11 years of age and older who have been, in my view, abandoned by their parents in terms of child welfare delivery and have placed an inordinate strain on this government to provide where parents have failed. Let's be clear. It is certainly a responsibility that the government backs up but one that the parents primarily have.

In terms of the alcohol and drug program, perhaps the hon. minister of health would wish to comment about the work of AADAC in that community.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you. Again to the same minister, Mr. Speaker: how does trying to off-load and download serve children in this region?

MS EVANS: Well, Mr. Speaker, we're not off-loading and down-loading; we're looking for new partnerships. Again, we'll have an opportunity later today to listen to the budget. I will then be very pleased to table with this Assembly tomorrow some of the very things that are going on, currently under way, that will continue to help support communities in child welfare delivery.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

Midwifery Services

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The minister of health claims to favour a team approach in modeling all health professions in health care delivery, yet this government is well behind other provinces in the integration of midwifery services into the health system. My questions are to the minister. Why does Alberta continue to relegate highly qualified midwives to the margins through ad hoc funding arrangements and pilot projects?

MR. MAR: Well, Mr. Speaker, we are concerned with the integration of health care professions throughout a number of different professions. Midwifery is one of them. We, of course, have had some successful pilot projects. I look as an example at the midwifery project that was done in the WestView regional health authority, one that many members of this Assembly would be well familiar with. I would say that we have looked at the issue of midwifery. There are 23 midwives in the province of Alberta, not a great number. They do a good job. In order to integrate them more fully into the system, I think that we need to go through the proper process that we've established through the recommendations set out in the Mazankowski report. It's our intention to do that but not just with midwives. All health professions must be evaluated in such a way so that we get the best value out of all our health professions.

1:50

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Will the current funding for malpractice insurance for midwives, which will expire on May 1, 2002, be renewed and put on a more stable basis? If not, why not?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, I don't think that I'm at liberty to speak to matters relating to the budget.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second supplementary to the minister: when can the parents who choose midwifery services for normal childbirth look forward to having this important cost-saving service available in all health regions throughout Alberta?

MR. MAR: The interesting question here, Mr. Speaker – and I don't have a good answer – is: does this save money? We know from research done at the University of British Columbia that when you take a group of low-risk pregnant women, the outcomes for having those women looked after by midwives versus physicians is the same. There's no greater or lesser risk associated with the use of midwives. When it comes to women that are pregnant that are high risk, then it would appear that it would make greater sense to use physicians. The issue as to whether or not the employment of midwives in this area saves money is not one which is entirely clear yet and, of course, one that we would want to investigate further.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Education System Review

MR. CAO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We know that the Education Services Settlement Act outlines a binding arbitration process to settle the contract dispute between the employees and the employers; namely, the teachers' labour union and the school boards of trustees. We also know that the act includes a commitment to undertake a comprehensive review of Alberta's learning system. More and more of my constituents have expressed interest in this review and want information on the process. My questions today are to the Minister of Learning. What will the review examine?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member is absolutely right; it is contained in Bill 12. We are presently looking at the terms of reference for this committee, but it is our anticipation that the committee will be an extremely broad-reaching committee that will look at all elements of the learning system in Alberta. There is no sense in limiting it at all, and indeed we'll look at everything. That's our plan at the moment, and we feel that the answers that will be brought back from this commission will be answers that will be beneficial for the total learning system, which is the reason we're doing it.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. CAO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental question is to the same minister. Who will be involved in this review?

DR. OBERG: Again, Mr. Speaker, we are just in the process of lining it up, but I would anticipate that there will be ample opportunity for teachers, for students, and for parents to have input into this system. We have not decided who is going to sit on it. We have not decided who is going to be in the actual formation. Actually, everyone in Alberta, regardless of their political stripe, will have the ability to have input into this committee. Again, as I mentioned in the first answer, it will be a very broad-reaching committee, dealing with all issues, whether it's pupil/teacher ratio, class size, hours of instruction. Anything will be looked at.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. CAO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My last supplemental question is also to the same minister. When will the results of the review be communicated to Albertans?

DR. OBERG: Well, Mr. Speaker, we're looking at attempting to set this review up as soon as possible, and probably we're aiming at around the first part of June. We anticipate that we will have a report back sometime close to the end of the year. Whether it's January or December is difficult to say. Realistically, if there is legislation needed following this report, we would anticipate bringing it in in the spring of next year. I'm not attempting to prejudge this at all, but we do need to be careful. If there is legislation needed, there needs to be time to do it in this House.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, followed by the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

Children's Services' Staff Bonus

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There have been many serious problems in Children's Services, from a notable lack of policy to toddlers perhaps being drugged in day care centres to children being left unsupervised in motels to a number of tragic and unnecessary deaths. Service contracts have been cut and staff squeezed to the breaking point. How does the Minister of Children's Services justify paying over $700,000 in so-called achievement bonuses to managers while frontline staff and services are stretched to the limit and there are so many profound troubles in her department?

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, perhaps I'm hearing the hon. member opposite question whether or not the staff in Children's Services are doing a good job and are worthy of being recognized for doing the jobs that they have been doing. I heard right now somebody challenge that the people that are working so hard for children and caregivers are perhaps not getting remuneration. There have been many things and many challenges faced in Children's Services – I'll guarantee that – but they clearly have been met honestly and directly by people with integrity who have done the very best work on the front lines. The fact that we have children who are fragile is a regrettable thing. When they die, those tragedies affect every one of us in the system. We gather those facts with heavy hearts. But it certainly doesn't deny that the business we're in, doing child protection and working in the best possible way for the advocacy of children, is a difficult job and that the workers and the administrators and, yes, the leaders within our department are deserving of being recognized for the achievements they've made.

DR. TAFT: I'm sure that the minister knows that the bonuses go to managers and CEOs.

Given that over $18,000 in bonuses went to the Slave Lake region last year, the same region where the Kerrigan twins were in care, how can the minister justify turning on her own workers when she was paying the region bonuses to achieve the results she asked for?

MS EVANS: If there's an oblique reference in the question, Mr. Speaker, to discussing further the cases at Slave Lake and the kinds of things that will be before an arbitration panel right now, I will not be tempted.

DR. TAFT: Well, then, will the minister continue to pay bonuses to authorities where children die unnecessarily in government care?

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, I've looked very carefully not only at the population increases but at the very tragic deaths of children within our system. As I've said previously, we receive the news about death within the system with a heavy heart. Essentially, there has been on an annual basis no disproportionate increase in the number of children in child protection, in child care, that have met with tragic circumstances. In other words, they are about the same this year as they were in the previous year. Perhaps, then, the hon. member is challenging whether anybody in Children's Services should ever receive a bonus. I'm very confused.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Highway Maintenance

REV. ABBOTT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We've been blessed with a lot of snow lately, especially at Drayton Valley-Calmar, which is great. However, the bane in this blessing comes in the form of snowplowing our primary and secondary highways. My question is to the hon. Minister of Transportation. Can the minister explain who is responsible for the plowing of snow on highways?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. STELMACH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The ultimate responsibility for removing snow on both secondary and primary highways rests with the Ministry of Transportation. However, the ministry has outsourced the maintenance of our provincial highways, maintenance I would describe as not only snowplowing but also crack filling, weed and grass control along highways, and the replacement of signs that might have to be replaced. The province of Alberta is divided into nine contract management areas. Those contracts hold those companies that won those contracts to the same provisions that we had when the government itself used to snowplow and maintain the highways. Each contract includes a blanket provision to ensure that the snowplows are out there immediately after a snowfall and to monitor, as well, snow removal and ice patches that may result from inclement weather.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

REV. ABBOTT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental to the same minister: how are these contracts determined? In other words, does the minister take into consideration the amount of equipment, the age of equipment, and the safety of equipment?

2:00

MR. STELMACH: Mr. Speaker, as you know, the province is pretty large from north to south and east to west. Yes, there are the same provisions in terms of safety in all of the contracts, but we do know that in certain parts of Alberta there will be more snow, and as a result more equipment is necessary to handle the level of snowfall, generally speaking, historically. However, in some of the areas that have been mentioned before, we have actually had to move even additional equipment, with good co-operation between some of the contractors, to ensure that we do maintain one of the best levels of service possible.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

REV. ABBOTT: Excellent.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final supplementary to the same minister: are counties and MDs allowed to bid on road plowing for the provincial government, and if not, why not?

MR. STELMACH: Mr. Speaker, all counties and MDs are encouraged to work with the contractors that do have the contracts for snow removal and highway maintenance in the individual contract management areas, and there are examples where various counties have partnered with the contractors to ensure an even better level of service. I'd like to remind the hon. member and, in fact, the Legislative Assembly that outsourcing of highway maintenance has saved the department roughly 20 percent over the last number of years, and all those dollars are reinvested back into the provincial highway system.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

Absolute Discretionary Trusts

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In Ontario a legal precedent was created for trusts for the disabled whereby certain assets, say from an estate, would not be considered an asset for the purposes of receiving benefits from the government under any disability assistance programs. Technically known as absolute discretionary trusts, they are commonly called Henson trusts. The Ontario government worked beforehand to prohibit such actions and even pursued it in court and then appealed, losing each time. My questions this afternoon are to the Minister of Human Resources and Employment. What action has the minister taken in Alberta for AISH clients and their families in light of the Ontario Henson case? Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. DUNFORD: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. The AISH program, of course, is an excellent program. We have areas of income that are exempt, partially exempt, and nonexempt, and of course we have provisions for trusts as well. As he's asking the question today, I would have to get briefed on where the Henson trust would stand in that matrix of examination, then, of whether or not a person is eligible for AISH. I, of course, will do that.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: given that answer, am I assured that the minister has not initiated action to provide that absolute discretionary trusts, or Henson trusts, are no different from other trusts so that benefits such as AISH can be withheld from individuals who have those trusts? Ontario did this very same thing, and they lost.

MR. DUNFORD: Well, as I stand here today, Mr. Speaker, I'm not aware of any sort of action that we've taken in this particular area, but that would be part of the examination, of course, that I would get into.

I just want to indicate to the hon. member and to other members that the AISH program is a very good program, and of course one of the things that we're trying to do is to look after the most needy people within our province. As this would relate, when you start getting into trusts and that sort of thing, certainly we'll want to have a look at it. Again, I think we need to be focused on the most unfortunate of us, not on people that have huge assets.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: has the minister's department prepared a legal case for withholding benefits from people in Alberta who hold Henson trusts?

MR. DUNFORD: I don't know what I can add to the previous answer. Again, it's part of the information that I've taken from the member. He provided me with a guest editorial from a publication just prior to question period. I've had a chance to quickly read it and, of course, will then seek more information.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Charles Camsell Hospital Site

MR. RATHGEBER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There exists within the Edmonton-Calder constituency a very valuable but vacant piece of real estate in the Charles Camsell hospital site. I understand that the province pays thousands of dollars with respect to this property for property taxes, heating, and other utility bills. My question is for the Minister of Infrastructure. What is the government's plan with respect to the Charles Camsell hospital site?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. LUND: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Some years ago the Charles Camsell hospital ceased being an acute care hospital. We had an appraisal done on the facility back in '99. It was subsequently listed with a real estate firm for sale. About two years ago we had an offer with a number of conditions on it, and the negotiations have been ongoing. There have been three extensions put on the negotiations. Each time, incidently, the proponent put down a nonrefundable deposit. The most recent situation is that the conditions have now been removed, and by the end of May we will be closing the deal.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member?

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Meridian Dam Study

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Recently Albertans were able to pay $100,000 for the Environment minister to research return on investment for the Taylor dam, money that could have been used to research how much groundwater we really have or develop essential conservation programs. My questions are to the Minister of Environment. Why does the return on investment carry more weight in your department than baselevel research?

DR. TAYLOR: Well, I think, Mr. Speaker, that she needs to get her figures and facts straight before she goes on with any further questions. The cost of the study was $100,000, and $25,000 of that was paid by the Saskatchewan government because they were partners in this study. They recognized the value of doing that study. Essentially, what has happened is that this dam has been talked about since the 1920s in this province, and we never had any hard economic facts on the dam. This study provided those facts and quite clearly proved, even to people in southeastern Alberta, that the dam was not economically viable.

MS CARLSON: Mr. Speaker, I'll ask the question again, because he didn't answer it. Why does return on investment carry more weight than baselevel research, which is what we need at this time?

DR. TAYLOR: The return on investment certainly is an important issue, Mr. Speaker. I believe that the member asked about any further environmental research, but to do the environmental side of the study, we would have had to spend a substantially greater amount of money in a further study. Since the economics simply weren't there to develop it, then it makes no sense to do the further environmental study and spend the money.

MS CARLSON: Mr. Speaker, does the minister have any serious plans for water conservation, as this is an essential component of any water strategy that he may come forward with?

DR. TAYLOR: Mr. Speaker, finally we can agree on something. The member has raised a very valid point that we've already talked about. I've talked about it publicly, and she's obviously been listening to me to give me an opportunity to expand on the water conservation issues. We're clearly looking at water conservation. We are doing this water strategy. We had a meeting in Medicine Hat last night which 84 people from southern Alberta attended. We had a meeting in Calgary last week. We had to turn people away that came to talk about water conservation and other issues, and we are establishing another meeting in Calgary to take account of all the people.

Certainly I'll give the member one practical example that people in southern Alberta are talking about. As you know, Mr. Speaker, we have pivots. Some urban members might not know what a pivot is, but a pivot is something that goes in a circle, shoots water up in the air, and waters a crop. One of the issues with pivots is that there's a lot of evaporation. If you go to something called a down-drip, that drops the water directly on top of the crops, you can save anywhere from 15 to 30 percent of the water that is being utilized for irrigation. So conservation is a huge part of what we're talking about, and I do thank the member for the excellent question.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, followed by the hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

MR. MASON: Nice pivot, Mr. Speaker.

Municipal Policing Support

MR. MASON: Mr. Speaker, a task force studying policing for the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association found that Alberta has the lowest level of support for municipal policing in the entire country. For the 63 municipalities that contract with the RCMP, these towns pay three-quarters of the cost from their own property tax base. Cities with their own municipal police force pay fully 100 percent of the cost of policing. My question is to the Solicitor General. How can the Solicitor General justify the richest province in the country spending the least amount of provincial dollars in support of policing services in our municipalities?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MRS. FORSYTH: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the question. The report that he is referring to I haven't seen yet, and I'm not going to comment until I do see the report. But what I will say is that the police in this province are well qualified, professional, and probably do the best job in the country.

MR. MASON: Mr. Speaker, what does the Solicitor General have to say to those people in municipal government who believe that the government's posturing about getting tough on crime is a convenient cover for the lack of provincial financial support for municipal policing?

MRS. FORSYTH: Again, Mr. Speaker, the report he's referring to I haven't seen, but I don't believe for a minute that this government is posturing. Our police in this province do a great job with what they have, and I'm very proud to be part and parcel of them.

Thank you.

MR. MASON: Mr. Speaker, when, if ever, can Alberta municipalities look forward to a reinstatement of at least some portion of the community policing grants that were cut in 1994?

MRS. FORSYTH: Mr. Speaker, the grants that he is referring to under the municipal grants were taken away and went to unconditional municipal grants through Municipal Affairs, and I'll have the hon. minister speak to that.

MR. BOUTILIER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member is very correct. Ultimately, we thought that what was most important was to allow local municipalities to determine where they can best use the resources that we give through the unconditional grant, such as for policing.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Fusarium-infected Grain

MR. OUELLETTE: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My constituents tell me that feed shortages in southern Alberta have meant an influx of feed corn from the United States into our province. This feed is cheaper in most instances because it comes from a highly subsidized area. Fusarium can be prevalent in corn. Fusarium, if it enters this province, can be devastating to Alberta's crops. My question is to the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. Can you tell me what the current status of fusarium-infected crops is in Alberta, and is the imported corn being tested for fusarium contamination?

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, with your indulgence I would just like to take a moment to explain that fusarium is something that causes a head blight in crops. It thrives in very warm, moist conditions, and infected seeds or plant materials can spread during the flowering stage, especially in wet weather. It's important to know that because fusarium infestations can have a very serious impact on the quality of the grain, it is not accepted by milling plants and/or the malting industry and subsequently then becomes a source of feed grain. The danger in cattle feed is not as high because tests show that it mainly dissipates or is destroyed by the digestive system of cattle, so that is not as large an issue. However, what is an issue is if some infected grain might drop off a truck in transit or be spilled or left on the truck, and that raises the issue as to whether it causes a problem. To this point corn isn't tested at the border, and there aren't any restrictions on importing fusarium-infected grain. It's simply a matter of grading.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. OUELLETTE: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental question is also to the minister. Can the minister tell us what initiatives are under way to stop this devastating crop disease?

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, I've had a number of meetings with producer groups and municipal districts on this issue. We've had a number of solutions proposed. One certainly was a zero tolerance policy to fusarium-infected grain coming into the province. One of the solutions might be a certification of grain, and that would require the seller of any grain to produce a certificate saying that it was fusarium free. I should point out that fusarium-infected grain has the possibility of coming in from Manitoba and Saskatchewan as well as the U.S.

We have spent about a hundred thousand dollars working with the Canadian Grain Commission and Ag Canada on a study as to what we could do on a testing program. Whether we could actually police that certification if we put it in place is the question that's at stake now. We're going to continue to work with those producer groups and determine whether indeed that would be a wise move.

MR. OUELLETTE: My final supplemental, Mr. Speaker: why are we allowing subsidized corn to enter Alberta in the first place?

MRS. McCLELLAN: Corn is a commodity that trades freely across our borders, unlike wheat and barley. Of course, we would like to see freer trade in wheat and barley and the ability for our producers of those products to move them freely across our borders. Unfortunately, that's not allowed under our marketing practices under the Canadian Wheat Board. However, Mr. Speaker, the fact is that because of drought in southern Alberta and certainly some parts of the U.S. there is a large demand for feed grains. It has put pressure on our feed grains, and our cattle producers and our feedlots have been forced to bring in corn from other areas.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-West.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government has spent 10 years and more than $2 million investigating the integration of midwifery services into the provincial health system.

DR. TAYLOR: We already had this question.

MS BLAKEMAN: Wait for it.

Out of five provinces that regulate midwifery, Alberta is the only one that has failed to provide this birthing choice in its provincial health insurance plan. My questions are all to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Why is the minister willing to consider allowing nonhospital surgical facilities to perform insured services even if they don't save money, but he won't cover midwifery services until it is proven conclusively to be more cost-effective?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, I believe that I've already answered this question in referring to the question of the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, the leader of the third party.

I have and I will table, Mr. Speaker, the study that I referred to earlier, which is entitled Outcomes of Planned Home Births versus Planned Hospital Births after Regulation of Midwifery in British Columbia. The lead researcher was Dr. Patricia Janssen of the department of family practice at the University of British Columbia. We are looking at this. I should note that in this particular study it does refer to the number of midwives practising in the province of British Columbia in 1999. There were 58.

Mr. Speaker, this is an area of great interest. Again, we do want to use our health care professionals to the full scopes of their practice. We are examining this particular issue. Of course, in response to the requests of midwives last year who were facing high insurance rates, we did respond positively to that. There are continuing pilots that go on in the province, but the issue as to whether or not the provision of birthing services is cost-effective as provided by midwives has not been satisfied.

MS BLAKEMAN: Once again I'll repeat the question for the minister. Why is the minister willing to consider allowing nonhospital surgical facilities to perform insured services even if they may not be saving money, but he won't cover midwifery services until it's proven conclusively to be more cost-effective? You're not being fair here.

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, with respect to the provision of services through private surgical facilities, we've relied upon the College of Physicians and Surgeons to indicate to us what procedures can safely be done within a private surgical facility. I think research like that which I will table later on this afternoon may be helpful in helping us answer that first question: is this something that is safe to do in a nonhospital environment or without the need for a physician? Research like this will be helpful in answering that first question.

The second question though, Mr. Speaker, is: is it more cost-effective? We don't know the answer, but when she's comparing this particular procedure to services provided by private surgical facilities, we do know that the ability to use private surgical facilities does allow us to use our public hospitals better. So even if saving money is not part of the equation, it is a better use of our hospital facility resources.

MS BLAKEMAN: Further to something else the minister said to an earlier question, is the minister saying that 10 years of study on the integration of midwifery services was merely waiting for a process to be outlined by the recently released Mazankowski report? All those 10 years just for the Mazankowski report?

MR. MAR: I can't speak to the issue of the past 10 years, Mr. Speaker, but what I can say is that this that is an area of interest. It does fit within the recommendations set out by the Mazankowski report for us to consider new ways of doing things: being able to do them better, more efficiently; providing a better service at the same cost; providing better access. In the process that's been set up pursuant to the recommendations in the Mazankowski report, the 44 of them that this government has accepted and is moving forward on, the issue of should midwifery be covered in our health care system is a legitimate question that should be answered by our expert panel review committee and should be considered in the overall context of the health care system and not as a one-off.

Environmental Priorities

MS KRYCZKA: Yesterday as an MLA and a member of the Bow River Basin Council I attended the Calgary Renaissance Emerald Irish breakfast in Calgary with guest speakers our hon. Minister of Environment and Robert F. Kennedy Jr., an American environmental attorney. Considering Alberta's many achievements in the area of environment, the most recent being William M. Mercer's annual quality-of-life survey results with Calgary being declared the number one city in the world over 215 cities, I found it baffling that Mr. Kennedy would see Alberta as a place to save from polluters. In particular, I found it very strange when, according to his own admission, there are many very serious realities or problems at home in the United States. My question is to the hon. Minister of Environment. Can you explain what your department may learn from Mr. Kennedy's area of expertise as it addresses Alberta's environmental priorities?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

DR. TAYLOR: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Let me say first of all that I enjoyed the opportunity to talk to Mr. Kennedy and the people at the breakfast and let them know some of the good things that are happening in terms of environmental protection in this province. Both Mr. Kennedy and I agree that there needs to be a balance between the economy and the environment, and where we differ is in how you reach that balance. There's a recent study out by the World Bank and the World Economic Forum that clearly shows that the countries that have the highest GDPs in the world also have the highest environmental sustainability index, so the U.S. and Canada have the highest environmental sustainability index. Countries with the lowest GDPs in the world have the lowest environmental sustainability index, so countries like Haiti, Ethiopia, and Eritrea are mentioned in the report and have very low environmental sustainability indexes. That very clearly shows that there is a necessary balance between the economy and the environment, and a healthy economy equals a healthy environment.

Now, Mr. Kennedy has a strong legacy in front of him, and he is an excellent storyteller, Mr. Speaker. In fact, he never lets the fact . . .

THE SPEAKER: Hon. minister, please. Please. There is such enthusiasm extolled by people who seem to serve as the Minister of Environment. However, what has any of this got to do with government policy?

DR. TAYLOR: Certainly I'm prepared to talk to that, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: Well, that's the only purpose of the question period.

DR. TAYLOR: What I'm going to say, Mr. Speaker, is that Mr. Kennedy never let the facts get in the way of his good stories, and what we can learn in Alberta from Mr. Kennedy is that all Albertans need to be aware of their environment, that all Albertans need to be involved in protecting their environment as we go forward. Quite frankly, his horror stories and fear tactics only present the worst case scenario and . . .

THE SPEAKER: Thank you. Thank you.

MS KRYCZKA: My first supplemental is to the same minister. Given that Mr. Kennedy criticized the Alberta government for not protecting the environment by not enforcing our own laws, can you please explain what Alberta is in fact doing?

DR. TAYLOR: Well, I'm very pleased to go on record again with this, Mr. Speaker. Alberta is recognized as having some of the toughest and most stringent environmental laws in North America.

MR. CARDINAL: And a good economy besides.

DR. TAYLOR: As well as, as a member points out, a strong economy.

I'll just give you some statistics, Mr. Speaker. In 2000-2001 we initiated 5,800 charges and 107 administrative penalties under various provincial environmental legislation, and that resulted in fines of more than $1.4 million.

Now, the goal is not to fine companies or fine individuals, because what that means is that there is a mess already there that has to be cleaned up. Our goal is to prevent the damage through education. Our goal is to prevent the damage before it happens so we don't have a mess to clean up. Unlike Mr. Kennedy, who is a very good purveyor of science entertainment, we are interested in science facts.

MS KRYCZKA: Thank you. My second supplemental is to the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. Given Mr. Kennedy's emotional rhetoric and scaremongering about so-called factory farms, could you please tell this Assembly and all Albertans what the definition of a factory farm is and whether Alberta does have any?

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, the term "factory farm" seems to be one that's popular to use in describing large operations. I should just tell the Assembly that in Alberta we have quite a substantial number of cattle and hog operations as well as chicken, turkey, and dairy, and almost all of those are run by farmers and ranchers who are members of a community, who raise their children, do their business in those communities. We don't call them factory farms. They are family-run operations for the most part.

The one thing I would like to point out, Mr. Speaker, is that this government has taken three years to develop a policy to ensure that the intensive livestock, or confined feeding, operations in this province operate under clear rules that, one, protect the investment of the operator but most importantly protect the air, water, and soil. I remind our members that the people who operate these farms are the people who make their living off the soil, who breathe the air and drink the water and in my opinion are the best environmental stewards we have.

head: Members' Statements

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

Constable Christine Diotte

MRS. TARCHUK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to rise today to join in solemn remembrance of an RCMP officer who was killed in the line of duty on Tuesday, March 12. Yesterday hundreds of police officers from across Canada, together with paramedics, firefighters, and other law enforcement officers, joined community members and grieving friends and family to pay tribute to 35-year-old Constable Christine Diotte, a dedicated officer, wife, and mother. After a service at St. Mary's Catholic church in Banff more than 600 law enforcement officers formed a procession in her honour with an RCMP helicopter flying overhead in tribute to her exemplary service to the RCMP and our communities. Christine was laid to rest in the field of honour at the Canmore cemetery, near her home, with full regimental honours.

Constable Diotte was investigating a rollover accident west of Banff when another vehicle lost control and struck her and her partner, Constable David Davis. Even though seriously injured, Constable Davis courageously attended the funeral and was helped by paramedics as he stood and saluted the passing motorcade.

Christine was a strong role model for youth and focused her career on drug prevention while serving for six years in Hinton and on the Bow Valley victims services unit and DARE program during her tenure at the Banff branch. Alberta has lost one of its finest young citizens, and for that we all share in the sadness of this tragedy. I know that the memory of Constable Diotte will carry on through those she loved, the lives she touched, and through the programs that she so passionately supported. As one of her colleagues stated so eloquently yesterday:

We are very thankful for the unselfish sacrifices Christine made in the service of her country, her determination, courage and personal commitment and enthusiasm she displayed in a job that she loved.

I would like to express my deepest condolences to the family of this great Albertan. My thoughts and prayers are with her husband, Mario, and daughters Ami and Gina during this very difficult time.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

National Farm Safety Week

MR. MARZ: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to recognize and bring attention to the National Farm Safety Week campaign, running from March 13 to March 20. This year the campaign will highlight the theme Livestock Handling Safety: Put Your Best Foot Forward.

Animal-related incidents account for about 30 percent of all injuries and deaths on farms across Canada. Alberta Agriculture, Food and Rural Development takes an active role in providing information and promoting farm safety year-round. Farmers are encouraged this week to take stock of their knowledge and expertise in handling livestock safely.

Other sources of valuable information and recommendations are the personal experiences of farmers from around the province. There's a dairy farmer in Camrose who sets a good example by ensuring that he is outfitted in the best of safety footwear after suffering a minor injury. There is also a farmer from High Prairie who leaves a note for his wife every day just so she knows where he is working on the farm in case of an emergency. Almost every farmer in Alberta could and should relay a safety-related story.

While we highlight safe practices during this national campaign week, we know that safety on the farm is a yearlong everyday necessity. The long-term strength of the agriculture industry and health of our farmers depends on it.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Calgary Aquamums Synchronized Swimming Team

MS KRYCZKA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I begin by sharing some personal thoughts I had while sitting in the Legislature last week. My thoughts were that in just 10 days my daughter Kelly would be leaving her husband and four young daughters for Christchurch, New Zealand, to compete with her team and duet partner in the 30- to 44-year-old category of synchronized swimming at the World Aquatic Masters Championships from March 28 to April 4 with a total of 2,800 athletes and that I wouldn't be going with her, but worse than that, I hadn't even considered what I might do to send her and the team on their way. I realized my commitment as an MLA, as with many of my colleagues, tends to distract us from relating daily to the very real lives of our families. But since then, I have acquired appropriate Alberta gifts, a very large Alberta flag, and those ever popular Alberta/Canada pins thanks to many colleagues. Maybe I'll just add some of mom's baked brownies.

Mr. Speaker, I do wish to recognize the Calgary Aquamums team, the masters' extension of the world renowned Calgary Aquabelles Synchronized Swimming Club. The team of eight are still very athletic women who have each made a personal commitment for the past year and a half to be reunited in a sport they all love. Raising children and doing community work or pursuing careers is very time consuming, but they have remained focused on doing something rewarding and fun for themselves.

Fourteen to 18 years ago as younger athletes they formally retired after competing and winning acclaim at provincial, national, and Olympic levels. They then got on with their lives with further education, careers, marriage, and children. But it was so exciting for me to join their families and their fans and to see them swim their competition routine Sunday evening at Lindsay Park centre.

After countless hours of practice but not as many as in the old days the return to superb fitness has indeed brought back the skill level that makes synchronized swimming such a beautiful sport.

I invite all members of this Assembly to join me in wishing the Aquamums team good luck at the World Master Aquatic Championships: Shirley Dawson, Carol Fitzsimmons, Raphaela Jablonca, Robyn Kaser, Myrna Kruger, Kelly Kryczka-Irwin, Michelle Paget, Nicole Sadinski, and coach Kim Strachan. They leave in just three days.

Your families and many Albertans are very proud of you already. Good luck in New Zealand.

Rural Quality of Life

MR. MASON: Mr. Speaker, I rise today to talk about the quality of life in rural Alberta. As our caucus travels throughout the province, farmers and rural residents tell us that struggling to maintain their quality of life is becoming increasingly more difficult. Although changes in rural conditions have many sources, the Conservative government continues to ignore pressing concerns. Once more this government's relentless pursuit of profits before people has seriously jeopardized rural quality of life. In fact, recent census figures show that many towns and villages in Alberta are facing slowdowns in their population growth while others have had actual population decreases. What was once a noble tradition of living close to the land can now become a hazard to one's health, and it is our rural communities which will suffer.

Mr. Speaker, I recently introduced a bill to eliminate all but emergency gas flaring in this province thereby reducing the incidence of disease and contamination faced by Alberta farmers. Instead of showing their concern for farmers and their livestock, the members of the Tory government showed their preference for the energy industry. They defeated the bill, thereby protecting corporations from their need to meet environmental responsibilities.

The same pattern holds for intensive livestock operations. We know that developing these massive projects has the potential to bring in sizable profits, but we also know that ILOs post tremendous threats to the quality of our air and water. The government continues to promote ILOs at the expense of family farms and neighbouring communities. Interbasin transfers are only the tip of the iceberg when it comes to this government's plans to manage our water supply. The Conservative government's disregard for water safety means that what oil companies don't pollute ILOs will contaminate.

Finally, I would like to voice concerns about the accessibility of health care facing Albertans in small towns and on farms. Albertans are now discovering the very real threat of acute care beds being closed in rural areas. The shortage of medical services will only be exacerbated as the government pursues its commitment to introduce profits into our health care system. People who need health care will have to travel farther and pay more.

These issues will not simply disappear, though Alberta's family farms and rural lifestyle may. The New Democrats are committed to taking positive steps to maintain and enhance rural quality of life.

head: Introduction of Bills

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

Bill 19

Veterinary Profession Amendment Act, 2002

MR. DANYLUK: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am very pleased today to request leave to introduce a bill being the Veterinary Profession Amendment Act, 2002.

Mr. Speaker, this act would amend the provisions of the Veterinary Profession Act that govern public membership, investigation, discipline, and appeals proceedings for the veterinary profession in Alberta.

Thank you.

[Motion carried; Bill 19 read a first time]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

2:40

MR. STEVENS: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I move that Bill 19 be moved onto the Order Paper under Government Bills and Orders.

[Motion carried]

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

THE CLERK: Pursuant to Standing Order 37.1(2) I wish to advise the House that the following document was deposited today with the office of the Clerk: return to order of the Assembly MR 12 asked for by Ms Carlson on May 23, 2001, hon. Mr. Norris, Minister of Economic Development.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

MR. MAR: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Earlier in question period today in answering a question directed at me by the hon. leader of the third party as well as the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, I referred to a research paper that was done that is found in the Canadian Medical Association Journal dated February 5, 2002. It's entitled Outcomes of Planned Home Births versus Planned Hospital Births after Regulation of Midwifery in British Columbia. It is prepared by a research team that was led by Dr. Patricia Janssen, department of family practice, University of British Columbia. I gave an undertaking at that time to table the same, and I do so now.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first is on behalf of the Member for Lethbridge-East, who has copies of petitions that are requesting help in stopping "the funding cuts to supports for children and adults with developmental disabilities." There are 425 signatures on this petition, which brings the total to 725 including the tablings he made last week.

The second tabling today is the appropriate number of copies of letters from Ms Kiza Holstead of Edmonton, Mr. Herbert Kariel of Calgary, Miss Wendy Adams of Calgary, Mr. Torsten Buckholz of Calgary, Miss Madeleine Oldershaw of Calgary, Miss Weslyn Mather of Edmonton, Mr. Jorn West of Calgary, and Mr. Melvin Dunford of Calgary. These Albertans want the government to take appropriate steps to protect the Bighorn.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have five copies of a letter written by Denis Chalifoux, who's a resident of Spruce Grove. It's a very thoughtful letter, and he is concluding with:

This situation has extended far beyond the realm of the teachers' strike and is eating away at the core of our democratic society. I am appealing to you to do whatever you can to put a stop to this current rant against teachers.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table for the information of all hon. members of this Assembly the actual posted pool price schedule from yesterday, March 18, 2002, of course, from the Power Pool web site. It indicates that last night at 8 o'clock the price of electricity in this province was 17.2

cents a kilowatt-hour. The temperature goes down; the price of electricity goes skyrocketing.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table the appropriate number of copies of some extensive analysis done by Mr. D.R. Hargrave of Calgary into the impact of the combined effects of the flat tax and the health care premiums, and it illustrates that the highest tax bracket in Alberta now is for people just over $32,000 income a year for a seniors couple.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first one is a letter of resignation from Doug Heckbert of Fort Saskatchewan. He was a member of the Attendance Board of this province until March 12 of this year, and he resigned in protest against the ill-advised back-to-work order issued by this government, first, and then, of course, the provisions of Bill 12, which in his own words he finds "disgusting, pathetic and dictatorial." That's the first tabling, and I hope the members of this House would like to read that letter.

The second is a copy of a letter from one of my own constituents, Ms Elizabeth Wall, asking me to urge the government to make midwifery services a funded service under the provincial health care insurance.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

MR. MASON: Mr. Speaker, I'm tabling five copies of a report prepared for the Parkland Institute titled Advantaged No More: How Low Taxes Flattened Alberta's Future. The report is calling for a major rethink of economic policy, including the abandonment of the single-rate tax in favour of a more progressive taxation system, repeal of the province's Deficit Elimination Act, and creation of a revenue stabilization act.

THE SPEAKER: Additional tablings?

Hon. members, following brief comments yesterday and pursuant to Standing Order 15, the chair did receive from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie an indication that the hon. member would like to pursue a purported point of privilege in the Assembly. I was advised yesterday of her intent to do it, but one of the hon. members who might be impacted by this purported point of privilege was unavailable, so we'll now proceed with it today.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Privilege Contempt of the Assembly

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today on a point of privilege under Standing Order 15 on what we consider to be a contempt of the House. On the issue of contempt, Marleau and Montpetit's House of Commons Procedure and Practice says on page 52 of the 2000 edition that "any conduct which offends the authority or dignity of the House, even though no breach of any specific privilege may have been committed, is referred to as a contempt of the House." It also continues on to say: "Contempt may be an act or an omission; it does not have to actually obstruct or impede the House or a Member, it merely has to have the tendency to produce such results."

Erskine May, on page 111 of the 22nd edition, in discussing misconduct of members, states:

The Commons may treat the making of a deliberately misleading statement as a contempt. In 1963 the House resolved that in making a personal statement which contained words which he later admitted not to be true, a former Member had been guilty of a grave contempt.

Mr. Speaker, on Wednesday afternoon, March 13, the Member for Edmonton-Centre asked the Solicitor General questions about changes to how certain criminals, including sex offenders, would be reporting to probation officers. The Solicitor General answered that sex offenders would still be considered high risk, when a document from her office indicates that some sex offenders would actually be downgraded to medium risk. The relevant portions of the exchange from page 316 of Hansard are as follows. Edmonton-Centre's first question was: "Can the Solicitor General confirm that her department has plans to reduce the reporting requirements of sex offender parolees?" In her answer the Solicitor General said, "No, we are not letting sex offenders out early," even though that was not the question. "They still will be considered a high-risk offender, number one."

This is very important, Mr. Speaker. She said that "they still will be considered a high-risk offender." Yet a government document says: sex offenders and violent offenders shall be considered medium until initial classification; the decision to reduce supervision from medium for sex offenders and violent offenders shall be carefully documented and must be reviewed by the responsible branch manager/supervisor. Please note that it says "reviewed" and "documented," not that the decision shall be made by the branch manager or supervisor.

Section 2 of the Corrections Act, though, states:

The Minister is responsible for correctional services under the jurisdiction of the Government of Alberta and in particular for . . .

(b) the provision of probation and parole supervision and counseling services to offenders against the law.

So we state that this is clearly within her responsibility.

The Member for Edmonton-Centre then said in her first supplemental question: "I'm asking about the frequency of reporting. Will there be a change in the frequency of reporting for sexual offender parolees?" The Solicitor General clearly answered no.

On Thursday afternoon, March 14, three sets of questions were asked to follow up on the previous day's attempt, to offer the Solicitor General an opportunity to clarify her knowledge of the issue. Instead, the Solicitor General introduced more contradictions. On page 364 of Hansard, in response to a question from the Member for Edmonton-Centre about high-risk offenders, the Solicitor General stated: "The Solicitor General does not make the criteria for the probation officers." She continued by saying, "They are the [ones] that determine the reporting requirements, when they are required to report to the probation officers." Perhaps they determine what time of day, Mr. Speaker, but the minister, the Solicitor General, is the one who is responsible for the policy direction, as was clarified in a question to the Premier yesterday. Her comments, clearly, again are in contradiction with the Corrections Act, which the Solicitor General is responsible for. Section 2(b) of the act states that she is responsible for "the provision of probation and parole supervision."

In an answer to a follow-up question, the minister tries to displace responsibility. On page 364 of Hansard she says: "Parolees are a federal responsibility. We deal with probation officers; the feds deal with parole and parolees." However, in the context of what we were discussing and had raised by then in over three sets of questions, she is wrong. The Corrections Act clearly states in section 4 when defining probation officers:

A probation officer . . .

- (b) is an officer of every court in Alberta insofar as that designation is consistent with the provisions of the Criminal Code (Canada) and this Act respecting probation or matters of a like nature . . .
- (d) is by virtue of that office a peace officer when appointed a parole supervisor under the Corrections and Conditional Release Act (Canada) . . .
- (f) shall supervise parolees paroled under this Act and placed under the probation officer's supervision;
- (g) shall comply with the instructions of the director of a correctional institution whenever that probation officer is attached to the correctional institution for the purpose of parole or probation investigations or for pre-release or community release or other program purposes that require the presence of a probation officer in the correctional institution.

The Solicitor General also told the House that "parolees are a federal responsibility." Still, it's clearly outlined in the Corrections Act that there is also a responsibility of the Solicitor General. Section 4(b) tells us that a probation officer is responsible for parolees and probationers. The minister is the one who is unwilling or unable to share this full information with the House.

Finally, when asked yet again about changes to the classification of criminals, the Solicitor General said quite clearly again that there was no change when, again, her own document shows that there was. In response to the question from myself that time, on page 364 of Hansard, the Solicitor General stated:

The sex offenders designated as high risk or high profile will be reporting with the same standards as they always have. Let me repeat that it's the probation officers that make that determination, not the Solicitor General.

Again, she has repeated two things that appear inaccurate to us: that sex offenders will report with the same standards – some maybe, Mr. Speaker, but not all of them – and also that she does not set the standards. It is within the responsibility of the Solicitor General to do so.

So based on this information and some additional information that I supplied to you yesterday, Mr. Speaker, in terms of comments made by the Solicitor General outside of this House, we find her to be in contempt and would ask you to rule on this matter.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. member, in terms of other, additional information, if the hon. member would table such in the Assembly at this time, I think that would be appropriate. All members should have access to such.

MS CARLSON: Thank you. I will do so, although I don't have the appropriate number of copies. We will make those shortly and table the information.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Solicitor General.

MRS. FORSYTH: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I welcome the opportunity to clarify my answers and provide the House with the facts. On March 13 I was asked if my department has plans to reduce the reporting requirements or the frequency of reporting of sex offenders. My answer was no. My answer was not intended to mislead this House. Most sex offenders are classified as high-risk offenders. In addition, many of these sex offenders who are serving a community sentence are on a conditional sentence rather than on probation. When I responded to the hon. member, I was referring to the sex offenders who fall into these categories.

Mr. Speaker, my ministry is planning a pilot project that would reduce the minimum mandatory reporting requirements for offenders who are on probation. All high-risk offenders on probation and all conditional sentence offenders are excluded from this pilot. For the purpose of reassuring this House, I would like to add that all young offenders who are under community supervision are also excluded from this pilot.

Mr. Speaker, the intent of the pilot project and of a second pilot project, that will use case aides, is to examine ways to give probation officers more flexibility to deal with growing caseloads. I should add that these suggestions were made with the input of probation officers themselves. I want to be clear that any offender considered by the probation officer to be high risk is not eligible for the pilot supervision standards. The proposed standards have not yet been implemented. We plan to introduce them in April for a six-month pilot in two of the 40 probation offices in Alberta, and their effectiveness will be carefully evaluated before we take any steps to implement them provincewide.

Mr. Speaker, I was asked why I have refused to hire 22 more probation officers. This is a target number for new probation officer positions that has been raised by the union representative. There is currently a governmentwide hiring freeze in effect. In addition, my ministry does not have the resources to hire more officers. While it is not possible to hire more probation officers, my ministry has reassigned experienced correctional staff into community corrections wherever possible. Over the past several years my ministry has reassigned 50 positions from correctional centres into community corrections. That practice will continue whenever possible.

Last Friday, Mr. Speaker, I met with probation officers in Calgary, and I made a commitment to examine the population in our correctional centres to see if efficiencies can be found to result in more transfers of correctional centre positions into community corrections. Clearly, since conditional sentences came into being in 1996, the trend in sentencing by the courts has been towards a greater emphasis on community corrections and less on incarceration. It is common sense that over time we will continue to deploy our resources in new ways to meet emerging needs.

Mr. Speaker, last week one of the hon. members asked if I had discussed at a meeting with probation officers changes that would drop dangerous criminals, including sex offenders, into groups that check in less frequently. My answer was no. My ministry has no intention to introduce such changes. As I have already said, the proposed pilot project will not change supervision levels of high-risk or dangerous criminals. I was also asked if the only criteria of these pilot projects is cost saving instead of the safety of women and children. I have already pointed out that high-risk offenders are not and never have been part of the pilot project. This pilot will not change the nature of the offenders who are already in the community by court order. Again, I must reiterate that as part of probation supervision, the pilot will not affect the mandatory minimum supervision standards for any offender who is assessed as a high risk, who is on a conditional sentence, or who is a young offender.

I would also like to point out that my ministry has a partnership agreement with the Edmonton and Calgary police services to monitor high-risk offenders. The hon. member also wanted to know whether other criminals with a history of violence – for example, offenders convicted of domestic violence or armed robbery – will no longer be considered high-risk offenders and will report less frequently. As I have stated, there is no plan to decrease supervision levels of offenders determined to be high risk. High-risk offenders are not part of the proposed pilot project. Mr. Speaker, for the record, I would like to table a letter from my ministry to all probation officers, dated March 7, 2002, that makes clear the proposed pilot project guidelines.

Mr. Speaker, I was also asked to provide guarantees that less qualified workers will not just rubber-stamp the files. Under the second pilot project I mentioned earlier, three case aides who are experienced correctional service staff will be transferred internally to community corrections. The intent of this pilot is to determine whether the use of trained correctional services staff who are hired to focus on specific lower risk cases will enable other probation officers to focus more of their time on high-need and high-risk cases. Mr. Speaker, this pilot, like the pilot on supervision standards for low-risk offenders, was suggested by probation officers. Until we have tried it, we will not know whether it will help address the problem of workloads. The pilot will also be carefully monitored and evaluated and will not be expanded to the rest of the province unless the results demonstrate that it has merit.

The hon. member contends that a document from my office indicates that some sex offenders will be downgraded to minimum risk. The document referred to is the Community Corrections and Release Programs Branch Policy Manual. The policy statement referred to has been in effect since 1997. The point in question in the policy manual reads: "All new probation cases, with the exception of violent offenders and sex offenders, shall be considered minimum until they are initially classified." Sex offenders and violent offenders shall be considered medium until initial classification. This is not a change to supervision standards. This policy has been in place since 1997. To make sure that we are absolutely accurate about this, I should mention that other sections of the manual were changed in 2001, but this particular section was not. The intent of the policy is to ensure that sex offenders and violent offenders who are sentenced to probation are seen by a probation officer for their initial assessment sooner than other offenders placed on probation.

Mr. Speaker, here is the process that's followed when someone is sentenced to probation. Anyone sentenced to probation is normally seen by a probation officer as soon as the court has signed his or her court order. At that time the probation officer explains the process and the penalties they will face if they do not abide by the terms of the probation. As I said, this normally occurs within a day or two after sentencing. The next step requires the probation officer assigned to the case to do an assessment based on the offender's crime and case history. As per the policy manual, all sex offenders and other serious offenders are classified as medium risk until the probation officer has assessed the offender's risk to the community as well as the offender's risk to his or her own person.

There is an important fact to bear in mind about offenders who are on probation or who have been given a conditional sentence. In both cases the court has determined that the offender does not pose such a risk to the community that he or she requires incarceration. Mr. Speaker, while we may not agree at all times that such sentences are properly handed down, the decision rests with the court, and the court bases its determination on the offence and the facts of the case. It is our job to manage this supervision within our community. In other words, the court has determined that the appropriate sanction for the offender is not time in a federal penitentiary and not time in a provincial jail. The court has determined that offenders on probation or on conditional sentence are a manageable risk within the community. Probation is one of the lowest levels of punishment available.

Let me explain how sex offenders on probation or conditional sentence in Alberta are supervised. An important fact is that sex offenders make up in total only about 5 percent of the probation officer's caseload, including offenders on conditional sentences and probation. The same policy manual I referred to earlier indicates under standard 2 that "all offenders shall be classified and supervised according to the standards outlined in guidelines for offender supervision." These guidelines state the lowest allowable frequency of contact. Probation officers have the authority to require the offender to report more frequently if they believe it is in the best interests of the public and the offender. Once a probation officer has classified an offender and has specified the frequency of contact, the offender is directed to report accordingly.

The hon. member has pointed to the example of a priest convicted of sex offences against children who has had his supervision standards set at medium. Mr. Speaker, because of privacy concerns I cannot speak directly to that case. However, I would like to state that I have advised my department to investigate the case. In general terms I can say that when a sex offender has completed treatment programs and has lived up to the terms of his probation over an extended period of time, it is possible that this offender could have his or her supervision standards set to medium. If offenders abide by their probation orders and if their probation officer determines that their risk level has decreased, they could have their supervision levels reduced. I must emphasize that this should not happen without a thorough and careful assessment.

Mr. Speaker, it has been suggested that I have blamed probation officers for changes in supervision levels. Section 2 of the Corrections Act of Alberta says that the Solicitor General is responsible for providing probation supervision and counseling to offenders. However, probation officers themselves determine the classification and the reporting requirements of offenders on probation. The Solicitor General is not required to personally perform their duties. That is recognized in Alberta law, a principle known as the Carltona principle. This says that where the exercise of discretionary power is entrusted to a minister of the Crown, it may be presumed that the acts may be performed not by the minister in person but by the responsible officials in her department.

The criteria for classifying offenders as high risk have existed in policy for a number of years. Policy guidelines outline high-risk criteria as follows: a high potential for violent or suicidal behaviour, a medical or mental health history that indicates a need for special attention, or offenders whose crime by its nature resulted in widespread public concern. You will note that the term "sex offender" does not appear anywhere in these criteria. Yet, clearly, any or all of these criteria could apply to a sex offender. The policy also clearly spells out that probation officers are required, based on their professional judgment, to accurately assess and classify offenders appropriately and to determine which offenders are high risk. Mr. Speaker, probation officers are given their responsibility because they are trained professionals, and day in and day out they do a very good job under very difficult circumstances.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member contends that I misled the House when I said that parolees are a federal responsibility. Part 3, section 24, of the Corrections Act of Alberta states that the National Parole Board has jurisdiction in Alberta under the federal act. Section 25 of the Corrections Act of Alberta enables the province to establish a provincial parole board. However, while Alberta has the right to establish a parole board, it has not done so. In addition, Alberta has not been responsible for supervising parolees since 1995. The federal/provincial community corrections exchange of services agreement between Ottawa and Alberta was terminated in 1995. While that agreement was in place, Alberta probation officers did supervise federal parolees. Since the agreement was terminated in 1995, Alberta probation officers have not been responsible for supervising federal parolees.

Mr. Speaker, I appreciate this opportunity to clarify my answers from last week. I would also like to confirm for the members of this House that I intend to continue working with probation officers to address their workload concerns. For the benefit of Albertans as well as the members of this House I would like to reiterate my commitment to preserving Alberta's safe communities. I hope that my work on the Protection of Children Involved in Prostitution Act and on the national sex offender registry will go some way to reassuring this House of my dedication to working on behalf of women, children, and all Albertans.

THE SPEAKER: On this purported point of privilege, the hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. STEVENS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish to make a few comments on this particular point. The complaint made by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie relates to questions that were posed on two days last week and is set out in a letter to yourself dated March 18, 2002. The hon. Solicitor General has just spent the last 15 minutes or so responding point by point to the various allegations that were made in general in that letter that you received and, from my perspective, has provided a great deal of information to the House that we heretofore did not have before us on a matter which by parliamentary standards is relatively unknown in question period or in debate in this House. I thank the hon. member for that.

It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie correctly stated the nature of contempt in referring to the various citations. The one point that was not underscored, which you do on a regular basis when matters of privilege or contempt come before the House, is that those matters are most serious and, indeed, are the most serious matters which we ever deal with. I would agree with the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie that deliberately misleading the House would be contempt, but I think that that is where we get into the facts of the case. The hon. Solicitor General, as I said, has spent some 15 minutes addressing the facts of this particular case on a point-by-point basis.

First of all, as you, Mr. Speaker, like to point out on a reasonably regular basis, all hon. members are indeed honourable, and at the outset of the Solicitor General's comments she quite clearly indicated that there was never any intention to mislead in the answers that she gave. Given the nature of question period, our responses are not complete, and indeed I would say that there is no way that anyone is expecting a complete response. What the hon. Solicitor General has done this afternoon is provide us with the complete response, which I'm sure has clarified matters, but from where I sit, in listening to the charge and in listening to the answers, it seems to me that that is in fact what this hon. member has been doing this afternoon. She has repeated and expanded upon the answers that she gave before to provide us all with a foundation of understanding on this particular point that will assist us going forward.

So, Mr. Speaker, the point of my comments on this issue is that, first of all, the hon. Solicitor General has indicated that her responses to questions and answers last week were not intended to in any fashion mislead the House, so there was no aspect of being deliberate. Secondly, the answers themselves, the elaboration, indicate a consistency with the response and would also be another ground for no basis of contempt being found this afternoon.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, I appreciate and thank all those who participated in this discussion this afternoon. There was a rather large-ranging amount of information, and I think that in fairness to all concerned, I will take the Blues, the text, study it this evening and tomorrow morning, and report back to the House tomorrow afternoon with respect to this matter.

House Business

THE SPEAKER: There are just a couple of other points, though, that I'd like to make, totally unrelated to what we've just done. Yesterday six private members' public bills were introduced. The members who held positions 217, 218, and 219 have chosen not to sponsor private members' public bills this session. Accordingly, the next bill to be considered by the Assembly after Bill 216 will be Bill 220. The Member for Calgary-McCall has Bill 213 on notice but has not introduced it as of yet. Also, members will note that standing on the Order Paper are government motions 13, 14, 15, and 17, all relating in some way to Bill 12. As Bill 12 has now received royal assent, the chair will have these motions removed from subsequent versions of the Order Paper as they are now not capable of being moved.

Finally, when copies of the private members' public bills were distributed yesterday, the front pages of bills 211 and 212 were reversed by the printer. A point of order was raised about this obvious printing error in Committee of the Whole. Although the chair does not usually comment on what occurs in committee, on this rare occasion the chair will comment as the matter should have been raised in the Assembly in the first place. The printing error was quickly noted, and the printer ensured that replacements for bills 211 and 212 were available to the Assembly by the time the evening sitting commenced last night. It's the chair's understanding that the replacement copies were distributed at that time, and this matter should now be resolved.

Social Care Facilities Review Committee Amendment Act, 2002

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

MS EVANS: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to make the following comments as we move second reading.

The proposed amendments will shift the focus of committee visits from inspections and investigations to service reviews. The definition of a social care facility will also be amended. The Social Care Facilities Review Committee reviews social care facilities in Alberta; in other words, a place operated by or receiving funding from the Alberta government, facilities such as family day homes, group homes, and alcohol and drug abuse treatment centres. The committee serves as a voice for clients. It ensures that the views of social care facility residents are heard and provides an ongoing mechanism for feedback. The annual report of the Social Care Facilities Review Committee provides a provincial overview of the committee's findings as well as a summary of its activities. It is tabled in the Legislature.

The intent of the amendments, Mr. Speaker, is to support government direction respecting the committee's new mandate. Consultation on the amendments has been done with the committee itself as well as other affected departments including Health and Wellness, Community Development, Human Resources and Employment, and the Persons with Developmental Disabilities Provincial Board. The current definition of a social care facility does not reflect the manner in which services are delivered today. The amendments will update the definition to include only those facilities under the direct mandate of the Children's Services ministry.

If the amendments are passed, regulations will be developed to designate facilities under other departments to come under the jurisdiction of the Protection for Persons in Care Act. These changes are necessary, Mr. Speaker, because the committee reports its findings and makes recommendations to the Minister of Children's Services, and as a result it is appropriate that the committee visit only those facilities under this ministry's jurisdiction. The protection of vulnerable adults cared for in facilities has been ensured with the proclamation of the Protection for Persons in Care Act. I remind the House that amendments to the definition of facility will not be proclaimed until a regulation under the Protection for Persons in Care Act is developed.

Narrowing the definition of facility fits with the review committee's new mandate to carry out reviews instead of doing inspections and investigations. In fact, since the committee's inception in 1978 the committee has primarily conducted reviews as opposed to investigations. A review involves meeting with service recipients and their families to obtain feedback about their satisfaction with the services being provided. How a program is delivered and client satisfaction will be of paramount concern in the review process.

An amendment will be made for the Minister of Children's Services to retain authority to direct the committee to conduct an investigation. Through Bill 18 the committee's accountability to the minister will be clarified and strengthened. The committee will be accountable to the minister through the chair, and the minister may give directions through the chair regarding the committee's roles and responsibilities.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Another new addition will be that the committee must submit a report to the minister upon completion of an investigation or review. This will clarify the reporting requirement respecting reviews and investigations. These changes are necessary to address the issue of overlapping jurisdictions and to update the definition of a social care facility. I ask for your support of second reading.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to have the opportunity to make a few comments about Bill 18, the Social Care Facilities Review Committee Amendment Act, 2002. At second reading we're concerned with the kind of principles that the bill is built on or, in this case, the amendment is built on. I think one of the major shifts is the shift from inspection to a service review. I think that that shift shouldn't be done without some questioning and without some concerns being raised.

The kinds of facilities that this bill refers to and encompasses are those that house children. As we know, because there are so many people involved in operating these facilities across the province, there's a wide range in the level of the service that's offered and there's a wide range in terms of the facilities that come under the purview of the act. We've had some rather devastating evidence of facilities, particularly day care facilities, not being adequate and the kinds of services available to children being less than satisfactory. There have been problems with medication, there have been problems with food, there have been problems with the facilities that have been provided for children, and there's a concern about the inspection role being downplayed and the total focus on service.

Now, one would hope that if the service review was being made, any shortcomings in terms of the facilities and any kind of a hard look at the facility itself would be done as part of that review, but there's still the concern that the inspection of the facilities will suffer. That rests, I guess, with another provision of the bill, and that is the loss of comprehensiveness. In the previous bill the direction to the committee was that they would visit each facility in the province from time to time, and that has been changed. The "all" has been taken out, so there's no assurance that at any time the facilities in the province will have been reviewed by the committee, and that has been raised as a concern to us by some of the advocates who are interested in these kinds of facilities. There has to be an assurance to the public that when there are children who are being financed by provincial government funds, those children and the facility they're in will be subject to inspection and that someone won't get away without having someone look at the facility at some time.

One of the other principles that seem to undergird the bill is the notion of the centralization of more of the decision-making into the minister's office. This has been a concern not just with this bill, Mr. Speaker, but with a number of actions taken by the ministry, and it finds itself evident in at least one other bill that's before the Assembly this session. I know the arguments are made in the interests of accountability from the minister's perspective, but I think it's viewed by some of those service providers as being a centralizing of power and a centralizing of decision-making that works against the interests of providing service to clients. So it's something that we've noted before and something that I think we have to be very careful of. I can understand the minister's concern. Certainly, the minister is held accountable when things go wrong and must feel at times somewhat put upon by being held responsible for actions that she doesn't seem to have any direct control over, but I think it still is an area where we have to proceed rather carefully to make sure that that gathering in of the power to the minister's office is really appropriate in trying to provide services for children.

I guess one of the other parts of the bill – and I would appreciate a response from the minister – is that the specific language about complaint-making has been dropped, and I wonder exactly what was considered in terms of a citizen who would like to make a complaint about a facility, a parent who has a youngster in a day care or who knows of such a facility. What is the process, and why was the mention of complaint-making dropped from this amendment? I think that that process has to be abundantly clear to people. Again, we've seen in this city day cares who come under severe, severe complaint from parents and from people interested for not providing appropriate facilities for children in terms of play areas and recreation areas and even the kinds of food that were served to youngsters. I think it's such an important issue that it has to be very, very clear to the public how such complaints are to be handled.

I think that with those comments, we'll be supporting the bill with some reservations, Mr. Speaker, and I'd appreciate, again, hearing from the minister. Thanks very much.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods has moved that we adjourn debate at this time.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Hon. members, in order to allow adequate time to prepare for the Budget Address by the Minister of Finance this afternoon, the House is recessed until 4 p.m.

head: Government Motions

21. Mrs. Nelson moved:

Be it resolved that the messages of Her Honour the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, the 2002-2003 estimates and business plans, and all matters connected therewith be referred to Committee of Supply.

[Government Motion 21 carried]

MRS. NELSON: Mr. Speaker, prior to moving Government Motion 22, I now wish to table the 2002-2003 offices of the Legislative Assembly estimates as well as the 2002-2003 government and lottery fund estimates.

In addition, Mr. Speaker, I am tabling the government's consolidated fiscal and business plans for Budget 2002 as required under sections 4 and 7 of the Government Accountability Act. Budget 2002 also includes business plans for each ministry, which must be made public under section 13 of the same act.

head: Budget Address

22. Mrs. Nelson moved:

Be it resolved that the Assembly approve in general the business plans and fiscal policies of the government.

MRS. NELSON: Mr. Speaker, Alberta is a place like no other. We are an incorrigible lot, fiercely proud, compassionate beyond words. We deliberately face into the wind every chance we get. That description comes from a recent history of our province, but it rings through my mind as I stand here to introduce Budget 2002.

Throughout our history of ups and downs, booms and busts, Albertans have shown an uncanny ability to stare down the worst possible adversity. When the storms of challenge and change gust through our province, we do not turn our backs nor search for corners to hide behind. We face directly into the wind. We tackle our problems head-on. We make the right decisions, and we move on, deliberately, decisively, and with our eyes firmly fixed on building a better future for our province.

As I stand here today, March 19, it's a year ago today that my colleagues and I were sworn into cabinet. Little did I know what this year would bring: the worst drought in Alberta's recorded history, forest fires raging out of control throughout the summer, a dropping Canadian dollar and collapsing stock market, mounting expectations and increasing costs, dramatic drops in the price of oil and gas, and Canada joining the war on terrorism. For the first time in many, many years we watched as a group of fine Alberta men and women went off to war thousands of miles from home. This is a different place than a year ago today, yet we've made it through.

We've faced each one of these storms, made the right decisions, and kept Alberta strong.

Mr. Speaker, these are challenging times not only in Alberta but around the world. It's a time of uncertainty, a time when great optimism for the future is bounded by the shock of September 11, the reality of lower oil and gas prices, and uncertain markets in the United States, in Canada, and around the world. Alberta is not immune. As much as we pride ourselves on setting our own course, we are once again facing forces that simply are beyond our control.

While Alberta's economy continues to be strong, dramatic drops in the price of oil and gas translate directly into a huge hit on provincial revenues. The harsh reality is that resource revenues fell by 44 percent last year and are expected to fall again this year.

Faced with these challenges, this is the promise we will make to Albertans. We will keep our vow to balance the budget. Alberta's budget will be balanced this year and every year. We will not compromise the future of our province by spending money we cannot afford. We will not take the easy way out. Albertans will continue to pay the lowest overall taxes in the country, and we will not stray from our legislated commitment to pay down Alberta's debt. A debt-free Alberta is a dream that continues to be within our grasp as long as we stay the course and keep our eyes on that achievable prize.

With Budget 2002, Mr. Speaker, we will do what Albertans expect from a Ralph Klein government. We will face the challenges head-on, and we will make the right decisions. Our goals are clear: to keep the budget balanced in spite of substantial losses in revenue, to sustain our commitment to health and education, and to build a future that undoubtedly will be bright for our children and our province.

For Albertans watching and listening today, they will see a mix of three strategies in Budget 2002. For the first time in seven years our government will take deliberate action to raise revenues. This is a measure we do not take lightly, but we simply can no longer shield Albertans from the combined impact of higher costs and lower revenues. Personal income taxes will not go up, and there will be no sales tax in Alberta. At the same time, though, people will pay more for health care insurance premiums, a pack of cigarettes, a case of beer, and a bottle of wine. And if you speed, you'll pay more in fines. In total, these and other revenue measures will raise $722 million. That money will go directly to maintain our priorities: a health system we can count on and a good education for our children. Even with these steps, total provincial revenues for 2002-2003 will still drop by 5.6 percent, or $1.2 billion, compared with last year.

Secondly, we will deliberately trim our spending plans to meet the size of our pocketbook. Lower than expected revenues have brought us all back down to Earth. We will continue to spend substantially more money on health, education, and programs for children and Albertans who need our support, but those increases will not be as high as some would like or expect. We simply can afford no more.

Following through on steps already taken last fall, we will continue to defer, delay, and substantially change some of the funding commitments announced last year or in previous years. That means a number of major capital projects will be delayed until we can afford them. Planned reductions in corporate income taxes will be phased in at a slower rate. A number of programs will be reduced, revamped, or eliminated entirely. In total, spending in 2002-2003 will drop by 8.1 percent, or $1.7 billion, compared to last year.

The third essential strategy is to never turn our backs on a proven formula for fiscal success. Alberta's tried-and-true formula includes balanced budgets, prudent forecasts, responsible spending, and deliberately paying down the debt. The formula works, Mr. Speaker. It has become the hallmark of our government and the envy of every other province in the country.

That's the big picture. Now for some details. Mr. Speaker, 2001-2002 was a difficult and dramatic year. After basking in the glow of the biggest resource revenues on record just a year ago, the harsh reality began to hit. Albertans understand how volatile the province's revenues can be. They know that when energy prices go up, they can just as easily come crashing down.

Last summer we began to warn Albertans that the winds of change were coming. Oil and gas prices were declining. Then came September 11, an event so devastating that it sent shock waves around the world. Without knowing the full impact, we took action, anticipating the worst. We kept our spending in check and prevented any chance of falling headlong into a deficit.

One of the challenges we face in Budget 2002 is balancing two very important but contrasting facts: on the one hand, a strong Alberta economy and, on the other, dropping provincial revenues. There is no doubt that Alberta's economy is strong. Our economy grew by 4.5 percent last year, leading the rest of Canada once again. Nearly 44,000 new jobs were created in the province. Talk to people in towns, cities, and communities across the province, and they're optimistic about the future. Things are good. People are working. More businesses and individuals are investing in Alberta. All signs point to continuing growth in the province's economy. In fact, we expect another 35,000 new jobs this year, and Alberta's economy is expected to grow by 2.5 percent. That's outstanding growth, Mr. Speaker, in the face of turbulent times.

On the other hand, Mr. Speaker, the province's revenues show a starkly different picture. We're now facing a situation where the strong, positive outlook for Alberta's economy does not translate directly into rapidly growing revenues for the province. This time last year we anticipated that revenues would start to decline, but the shock was how fast and how deeply they fell. Weaker energy prices, lower investment income, and lower corporate tax revenue resulted in a loss of $1.6 billion. To address that dramatic drop, our government is taking deliberate steps to raise revenues. We cannot and we will not force all of the adjustments on the spending side.

Health care insurance premiums will increase on April 1. Individuals will pay another $10 a month. For families the increase will be $20 a month. Mr. Speaker, if we want the best, if we want a high-quality, accessible health system – and we do – then we all need to share in its costs. The last time health care premiums were raised was in 1995, and at that time they made up about 16 percent of the spending on health. Since then, premiums have been frozen but health spending has increased by over 87 percent. With this year's budget premiums will now cover less than 13 percent of the cost of the health system. At the same time, we know that premiums hit some families harder than others. We will not pass on the burden of increasing costs to Albertans who can least afford it.

With changes in this year's budget over 440,000 individuals and families will benefit from the enhanced premium subsidy program. Our first priority is to help low-income families with children. With this year's budget 16,000 more Alberta families will pay no health care premiums whatsoever, bringing the total number of families who pay no premiums to almost 61,000. Over 28,000 families who paid the full premium last year will now only have to pay part of the monthly premiums.

Steps will also be taken to shelter low-income seniors from the impact of rising health care premiums. One hundred and eighty thousand seniors who currently receive subsidies will not be affected by the increases in premiums, and another 8,000 seniors will only have to pay a portion of the increases. Almost 165,000 Alberta seniors will pay no premiums at all.

Cigarette taxes will go up by $2.25 a pack effective midnight tonight, and other tobacco taxes are going up as well. This is a dramatic increase. Mr. Speaker, it goes beyond any desire on our part to simply generate more revenue. If we can stop one young person from starting to smoke, if we can stop young people from becoming addicted to tobacco, we can save lives in the future. We'll create healthier Albertans, and we'll help reduce costs in the health system for years to come.

Effective April 1 liquor markups are going up too. The increases will bring our prices closer to those in our neighbouring provinces. It means that Albertans will pay up to 45 cents more for a bottle of wine, 60 cents more for a bottle of liquor, and about 40 cents more for a case of beer. This will add $50 million to provincial coffers.

Taken together, these and other decisions in Budget 2002 will add $722 million to provincial revenues. While some will undoubtedly question these increases, the objective is beyond dispute: to protect priority programs and to balance the budget.

At the same time, let me make one message very clear. We cannot continue the spending track we have been on, a track that showed overall spending increasing at a rate of almost 8 percent a year over the past five years. While this year's spending levels will be down considerably from last year, that's primarily because onetime spending commitments will end and debt-servicing costs are down thanks to our deliberate steps to pay down Alberta's debt.

Spending on health and education, on programs for children and those who need our support will continue to increase but at a pace we can afford. For 2002-2003 our first priority is to put Alberta's health system on a sustainable track for the future. As promised by Premier Klein, we will implement the recommendations of the Premier's Advisory Council on Health. Comprehensive health reforms will begin this year. Overall spending on health and wellness will increase by 7.3 percent, or $468 million, by far the largest increase in spending in this year's budget. Regional health authorities will receive an overall increase of 6.7 percent.

In the coming years health budgets cannot continue to grow faster than long-term increases in provincial revenues. Targets for future increases will be limited to 4 percent, an amount we can afford on a long-term basis. Mr. Speaker, it's time to face reality head-on. All other areas have taken a backseat so we can continue to pay the growing price tag for health care. Things have to change.

Let me turn from health to one of the most important things we can do for Alberta's future, and that's to ensure that we have the very best educated young people. The young people in our schools, universities, colleges, and technical institutes will shape the future of the province. We owe it to them to make sure that they can compete with the very best in the world. In this year's budget support for basic and postsecondary education will increase by 4.7 percent. We'll spend just under $3 billion providing basic education to children in schools. Another billion dollars will go to universities, colleges, and technical institutes to help ensure that our young people get the education and the skills they need to succeed and contribute to Alberta's growing economy. Funding for scholarships and student assistance will also increase in this year's budget. Over the next three years spending on basic and postsecondary education will increase by 12.5 percent.

Mr. Speaker, in order to channel funding into health and education, difficult choices had to be made. As a result, corporate tax reductions will proceed but at a slower rate and over a longer time period. On April 1 tax rates will fall by half a point to 4.5 percent for small businesses and 13 percent for other businesses. The tax threshold for small businesses will increase to $350,000. The result is that Alberta businesses will save an additional $81 million in taxes.

We will also continue with plans to delay a number of capital projects announced last year. Over $700 million in infrastructure spending was deferred in 2001-2002 alone. This year a further $631 million in infrastructure projects will be put on the back burner until we can afford them. Later this month we'll look at the financial picture as the current year wraps up. If dollars are available, we may be able to advance additional onetime funding to support some infrastructure and transportation projects, but that's only if we can afford it. In the next three years our spending on infrastructure will drop to about $1 billion a year.

Mr. Speaker, let's put this in perspective. In the last three years Alberta's spending on infrastructure – on roads and schools and hospitals and other projects – grew to more than triple the average of other provinces. Since 1999 our government has provided an additional $3.5 billion in onetime accelerated infrastructure funding. That money supported highway construction projects and important capital projects for municipalities, school boards, health authorities, and postsecondary institutions. With the money already in their hands construction can proceed over the next few years. In the next three years we will spend $1.7 billion maintaining and upgrading Alberta's roads and highways. This includes $211 million in grants to municipalities.

Funding for community lottery boards will end March 31, and savings will be redirected to help support health and education. In future years the savings will go to existing foundations that support the arts and recreation, to the Wild Rose Foundation and to other community initiatives. These are difficult decisions, Mr. Speaker. We know the impact they have on communities and municipalities. In the longer term we are optimistic that municipalities and the government can work together to put important capital and transportation projects back on track, but this year's continued high levels of funding are simply not possible.

Mr. Speaker, in the face of difficult decisions in this year's budget Albertans understand how important it is to stay on track, to keep our eyes firmly fixed on a responsible fiscal course. As I mentioned at the outset, we do not know what tomorrow will bring. The office of the provincial Finance minister does not come equipped with a magic crystal ball. Those who dare to guess the price of natural gas for the next three years peg it anywhere from $2.65 an mcf to $4.60. Each 10-cent fluctuation means $163 million more or less for the provincial coffers. Oil price forecasts range from a low of $18 a barrel to a high of $26.50. For each dollar difference we could gain or lose $108 million.

Mr. Speaker, some would say: just wait and see; things will pick up. We can't. We won't take that risk. We can't base a budget on this week's oil price, and we will not put the future of essential programs and services at risk while we sit with fingers crossed wishing and hoping that optimistic forecasts will come true. This budget is based on the price of gas remaining at about $3 an mcf and oil hovering around $20 a barrel. Also, as required by legislation, we have set aside an economic cushion of $724 million for this fiscal year.

Our tried-and-true fiscal formula is the right course to take. It may be cautious. It may turn out that there is more good news to come. But, Mr. Speaker, if we stick to this formula, we will in the long run have the first debt-free province in the country, we will continue to have the lowest taxes in Canada, and we will build a great future for this wonderful province of ours.

In the coming months we'll also have the advice of a new Financial Management Commission to guide us in decisions about how to shape the future fiscal course of our province. I'm proud to announce that David Tuer has agreed to chair the commission. We look forward to his work on this commission and the sound advice that I know they will provide.

Mr. Speaker, one of the toughest questions a Finance minister gets asked every year is: what does this budget mean for an average Albertan? It's a tough question because it sounds so simple. It's so important, yet it's difficult to answer in simple terms. To me the answer lies this year in these important points. It means that some tough decisions were made to raise revenues, scale back spending, and delay projects until we can afford them, but in return this is what we'll get: a sustainable health system with new ideas and new approaches, a good education for our kids, continuing programs for children and people who need help. Most of all, I know that Albertans understand that in the face of challenging times their government has made the right decisions.

I quoted Winston Churchill in my Budget Address last year, and his wise counsel deserves repeating this year. Churchill said, "There is only one duty, only one safe course, and that is to try to be right." Trying to be right is the key. There is no certainty given the times we're in. We cannot guarantee that we will be right, but we have faced the uncertainty head-on and preserved what Albertans value most.

Mr. Speaker, as I said at the outset, Alberta is a place like no other. We do not duck or hide. We solve our problems today rather than pass them on to future generations of Albertans. Once again with Budget 2002 we are facing into the winds of change, facing the challenges head-on. Whatever storms and uncertainty the coming months might bring, I have no doubt that this time next year Albertans will bask in the glow of an even brighter, more solid, and prosperous future for our children, like my son Troy, and grandchildren. Albertans have put that responsibility in our hands, and, son, we will not let you down.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Adjourned debate March 19: Ms Carlson]

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to start by welcoming all the young guests to the Legislature, as the Member for St. Albert did. It's great that young people get a chance in the evenings to come out and see their government in action, I guess is the best way to put it. So thank you for taking the evening to come.

The opportunity that I get this evening to respond to the motion on the budget this afternoon gives me a chance to speak kind of in a broad way about the issues and the vision that this budget portrays for Alberta. As I listened to the Provincial Treasurer present the Budget Address this afternoon and in the little bit of time that I've had in the meantime to actually look through some of the departmental budgets and through some of the business plans, I guess the question that I keep asking myself is: what's the message that I would take out of this budget if I were an Albertan trying to get a sense of what was important for the government, what was the direction that the government was going to go? When I look at it, in trying to put together that message, it's done in the context of trying to determine if the kinds of messages that were delivered in the budgets in the last three or four years carry through into this budget, whether or not there's any kind of approach that is there.

Mr. Speaker, I guess if there's anything that comes up in it in terms of an action, the only action that seems to be consistent is the idea that the debt and the debt elimination is extremely important. A lot of the structure of the budget is designed to, in essence, again target a really high probability of increased budget surplus by the end of the year. The idea of having that budget surplus in it locks 75 percent of that into debt payment rather than into program delivery.

As we go through it, the other thing that comes up and that's important is that there's an inconsistency in this budget compared to what I was beginning to appreciate in some of the decisions that were being made in the budget the last couple of years, and that is the commitment to the people of this province, the commitment to the communities of this province. One of the things that really came out strongly for me in this budget, Mr. Speaker, was the fact that in the changes we look at in the budget, the real impact both positive and negative, and very small on the positive side, is really going to affect individuals in what I call the low- to middle-income range in Alberta. We talk about the importance of individuals having a chance to improve themselves, a chance to move ahead in Alberta, yet this budget in itself is really going to create some disadvantages or take away from a lot of those individuals some of the supports that were in place or were building in previous budgets.

We look at that in the context of the cuts to the support for housing, both through the seniors housing programs and the low-income housing programs. We look at it from the perspective of even a homeowner now at the low-income level. The government has increased the limit on taxation at the property level in support of education when they've been promising for years now that, if anything, they were going to try to phase out, maybe not completely but more and more, that reliance on property tax in support of education. This is what the school boards have been asking for. This is what the Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties and the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association have been asking for, because local property tax is their only significant means to raise revenues. What we end up with now is that the provincial government has stepped back in and said: we're going to take more of that into the provincial budget. In effect, we're downloading to individuals who are property owners what should have been a revenue developed through the revenue generation capacity of the province.

If we look at that from the perspective of what it means to these individuals, we basically see a situation where some of them now are going to have to make choices again about owning property. Do they pay their property tax? Can they afford to give up a rental property and try and purchase a home of their own? Even if they are renters, the rent that they're going to have to pay is probably going to have to be adjusted by the landlord. This, in effect, really compounds on them because they've already been hit by the health care premiums, and they don't have the options to divert those, in many cases, through employment, having their employer pay for it. So, you know, they are the ones who are really feeling the burden of the increased revenues that the government is going to try and raise through this budget.

The impact especially of the tobacco and alcohol tax increases for the upper-income levels is much less significant not only because of the demographics; you know, a lot fewer smoke at the upper-income levels. That's a statistical fact, so in that sense there are fewer of them that will be paying the extra tax. But will it really change their habits at all? Only experience will show that, and we hope that some of the statistics that are out there will show a reduction in consumption. It will be important.

While I'm on the issue of these additional taxes, Mr. Speaker, I guess I really need to question where consultation fits in with action in the sense that in the Mazankowski report there were very significant and very strong recommendations that the government increase the tax on cigarettes and use that revenue for new programs. I underline "new" because that was the strong emphasis of the Mazankowski report, that these revenues were supposed to be used for new programs to support tobacco reduction, to support healthy-living styles, to support the prevention programs in health care. If you look at the budget, the budget in those areas under the ministry of health didn't go up by an amount equivalent to the revenue that they report under the Ministry of Revenue in connection with those taxes. So, in effect, these taxes are not in response to the Mazankowski report. The Mazankowski report is an excuse or a reason or, in effect, gives the government permission to raise revenue to put into general revenue to spend anywhere they want, because the money didn't go where the Mazankowski report said that is should.

I hope the member over there is laughing at his computer screen instead of laughing at my relationship in terms of how the Mazankowski report has not been followed in that case, because it's very definite. If he looks at the numbers, he'll see that there is not an increase in those prevention programs equivalent to the amount of increase in revenue generated by those new taxes that are going to affect Albertans.

If we look at the health care premium tax as well, Mr. Speaker, what we have to look at – you know, there was a lot of discussion and we went through I don't know how many hours of debate in this very House about three years ago when we were talking about building up to and passing the legislation which came into effect a year ago that would put Alberta on a single-rate income tax system. How many members in this House stood up and talked about the fact that we have to have a taxation system that's fair, that we have to have a taxation system that is equal in burden on all Albertans? I can go back through the Hansard and pull out I don't know how many responses that we got from the Premier, from the minister saying that the mandate of this government was to make sure that taxes were fair for all Albertans.

Well, I have to ask: is a $120 increase per year in health care premiums fair? Is that equitable? Does that create a sense of equality for someone who's earning $25,000 compared to somebody who's earning $250,000? They both have to come up with $120. The burden falls on the lower income Albertan disproportionately to the philosophy that we heard this government talk about time and time again in the sense of how they had to have a tax system that equalized the burden for Albertans. What I'm seeing in terms of the actions is that fairness in the taxation system in Alberta means: "Let's reduce the taxes on individuals. Let's reduce the burden on individuals who have a high income, but let's not worry about it for individuals at the lower income level. Let's allow the burden, because we're using flat taxes down there. We're using head taxes. You know, each person pays a certain amount."

Mr. Speaker, I find that objectionable in the context of what the vision is that I think Albertans see for this province and the sense that Albertans have about their relationship to each other. The idea that people will pay in proportion to their ability is really critical, I think, for most Albertans, yet the health care premium deliberately is a regressive tax. It places a much greater burden on individuals with lower incomes.

Now, in the same vein, Mr. Speaker, or building on that, it's very, very kind of the government that they raised the level of exemption for some Albertans so that they no longer have to pay any health care premium, worked through the phase-in part of it. You know, that in effect is helping out the people at the margin level, but for the low- to middle-income Albertan this health care tax is really an unfair burden, because they are paying, relative to their ability, a much higher part of that tax or of that revenue. We think we should be looking at it from the perspective of: is that the kind of message we want to send to Albertans? Is that the kind of message we want to relate to in the context of how we deal with each other in this province? What's fair? How do they fit in with everybody else? I don't think it's the right message to send, and I think the government should recognize that was a mistake, that they should be reviewing how it's applied.

There have been a number of cases that I've taken the opportunity in this House to talk about. What kinds of messages are sent through pricing mechanisms? The government keeps talking about – they want to make sure that Albertans understand that health care costs are going up. They want Albertans to understand that there is a cost to them of using the health care system.

Well, you know, once again, Mr. Speaker, what we have to do is emphasize the fact that no consumer economic textbook will tell you that a flat fee affects a consumer decision. It doesn't happen. In fact, if you read sociology textbooks or some of the socioeconomic research that's been done, you'll find that a flat fee, in effect, creates a sense of entitlement. In other words, these individuals, because they've had to pay the fee, feel that they get a right to use it. So they don't think about it. Should I do it? Is it right to do it? Do I really need it? They just say: well, I paid, so I've got a right to it.

Now, you know, that attitude also carries over to when you pay for it through your taxes. It's a hidden cost, but the impact of a hidden cost is less entitlement-creating than a direct you have to pay type of a situation. I think we're kind of fooling ourselves, Mr. Speaker, if we really believe that we're going to send any kind of a message to Albertans other than we're not fair in making our decisions here – we're willing to penalize individuals with lower incomes, make them pay a heavier burden of our health care program than individuals at a higher level – because that isn't consistent with the kind of message that the government put out in the budget or in the debate on legislation over the last two or three years.

I guess the other thing that really bothers me when I look at this budget is the focus on the community. We keep hearing individuals across Alberta say that the one thing they want is to have a sense of community, to have a sense that the government respects their community just like it respects them as an individual, yet when we deal with this, we see that the government really has moved in to affect the community again and affect the community in a negative way. What they've done, Mr. Speaker, is they've removed the community lottery board's funding from the community so that we, in effect, don't get community participation in deciding where those dollars go to support their community. What we've done is we've rolled all the money back into the CFEP program, where some process in Edmonton, some process totally detached from the community once again becomes the deciding body in determining what community activities, what community facilities, what community reward or feedback they get out of the lottery dollars that come into the lottery fund.

Mr. Speaker, I find that really inconsistent with the kind of message that I hear as I go across Alberta, where people are saying: we want a say; we want to build our community. This action to me really creates a sense that we're stripping from those communities a sense of individuality, that they can make the choice on their own. We've, in effect, taken away an empowerment that we gave them through that community lottery board.

When I look at what impact this budget is going to have on the communities, I kind of say: gee, where's it going to go? We're also reducing the infrastructure grants to the communities through the municipal funding. This, in effect, puts a greater burden on the communities to handle it, but in the budget and in the Speech from the Throne there is no discussion about how we are going to provide those local communities with alternate ways to fund, different ways to fund, increased funding powers, whatever little phrase you want to put to it. You know, it would have been nice to have seen some reference to: we've got to provide more flexibility for these governments if we're going to take away the support that we give to them as a community through funding programs at the provincial level.

Mr. Speaker, the main focus that comes up, I guess, is that if we as a provincial government are going to make decisions that affect the individuals in this province, that affect the vision that the people of the province have for their community and the relationship that community has to the province, then as a governing body we should be dealing with it more in the context of consultation, in terms of making sure that they feel part of the result and that they are being treated in a way that's in some way really quite equitable towards other communities.

If we look at the real issue that comes up in terms of a lot of the public programs, I have to question the government's motives a little bit in terms of accessibility for those programs, in terms of the concept of universality that we have for our public programs. We're seeing a lot of pressure being put on our public health care system and our public education system, and how is that going to in a sense create a strong commitment to those public institutions? In this budget again I see that health care is rising by about 7 percent. When you go through again and adjust it for demographics and costs, it really is just going to sustain our health care system. If we look at the education commitment, another one of our essential public services, we're going to be in a position where the commitments being made this year are going to be very difficult to carry through with next year.

There's little freedom in that budget to start dealing with some of the issues that have been legislated out of discussion for this year's contract. When you look at it in the context of a 4 percent increase, next year in the education budget it doesn't really provide for much flexibility when you look at salary negotiations and grid movements, supplementary staff, salary commitments. There's little, if any, freedom for the school boards to make any kind of commitment to classroom size, the support technologies or the support infrastructure that has been part of the controversy and part of the strike action by teachers and part of the requests from the school boards. They, in effect, want to have the flexibility, and this budget doesn't provide them with any kind of flexibility to address that. It's still a top-down driven budget.

We see that the government has actually reduced the budget in a number of the Children's Services authorities. If we're trying to create a sense of community, if we're trying to respect the mandate that was given by the citizens of each of these communities who created the business plans for those children's authorities when they were asked to create actions around the four pillars, we had to make sure that, in effect, they had a sense that they could drive their programs to meet their communities.

If there was really a process here that was saying that the community funding model that was being used at the provincial level to allocate the big budget down into the children's authorities, what we should have been doing was looking at saying, "Okay; we're going to change the formula," and the outcome would be a change in dollars. But if that's really the process the government went through, Mr. Speaker, I would have expected that as part of the rationale for why some of those budgets at the children's authority level were being cut, there would have been an explanation that the formula was being changed. It doesn't show. So, in other words, this was just a claw-back by the minister to bring more of the dollars into the control of the provincial level process.

You know, even if we look at it from the point of view of consistency of programs, access to programs, if we're trying to give the communities a sense of determination, we shouldn't be doing it, taking it away, giving it back, taking it away, doing it again. That kind of budget doesn't create a sense of stability, a sense of opportunity where we can plan.

Mr. Speaker, if we look again at the messages that I started to talk about in the context of what I saw in the budget, I started off by talking about people in the province, what the budget would mean to people, and I found inconsistencies there. I found inconsistencies in the actions of the last three or four years and what this budget says about communities, but I also see some inconsistencies in the way we even deal with our own decision-making processes, because we don't deal with any kind of commitment to anything other than we have to pay down the debt and we have to make sure that we have a balanced budget.

But, Mr. Speaker, there are different definitions and different perceptions when you deal with how these processes should work and can work. What this budget tells us is it's just another budget that doesn't have any kind of predictability in it, that doesn't have any kind of sustainability built into it. Even in our discussions this afternoon we were told that, you know, we're almost at the end of the fiscal year but if we look like we're going to have much of a surplus built because we're now experiencing a little bit of an upswing in our oil and gas prices, if there's a little bit of a surplus before the end of the year, we'll spend it. I'm sorry, Mr. Speaker. What we should be trying to do here is put in place budgets that deal with critical decision-making. To say that if between the 19th of March and the 31st of March we end up with extra revenue, we'll spend it – what kind of plan is that?

It commits to my mind that the government doesn't have a plan, because if you can't put in place programs over the year that you've got the commitment to fund, then those programs, in what is in effect a 12-day window, in my mind and if I were Premier, wouldn't have priority to be funded in that short of a period of time. You can't justify that kind of spot decision-making in any kind of rational model of public finance. It just doesn't work, Mr. Speaker. We've got to make sure that if we go into budget processing, we do it in a way that in effect gives predictability, stability, and a rational reason for why we're spending those dollars. It just doesn't follow that we would be told this afternoon: well, you know, if any more money comes in between now and the end of the year, we'll spend it. That's what we were trying to get rid of from when many of us started in this Legislature in 1993. It was the idea that we had an obligation to spend money just because we had it.

I guess if there was anything said in all of the process that we went through today in learning about this budget, in getting information on the budget, that was almost as much of a surprise to me, Mr. Speaker, as some of the little line item changes that were in it. The line item changes don't really show or reflect the same kind of commitment to programs that I would have expected based on what we've heard either from the ministers in previous discussions in this session of the Legislature or in reports of their comments at meetings or speeches that they've given that we've read on their web sites. You know, there are so many of those little inconsistencies, but I'm not going to deal with a lot of those right now because those are, I guess, the bread and butter of Committee of Supply. That's where we go to deal with the line item issues that come up. Tonight's the night to talk about the issues that are important to deal with: how we perceive the budget, how we want to make sure that the budget fits with a vision for Alberta.

This budget, Mr. Speaker, I think appropriately gives more money to health care. Whether it's enough we'll only see based on the day-to-day decisions that we see in terms of how those dollars are allocated. Is that 7 percent going to actually make it so that individuals can get better access to emergency rooms? Is it going to make it so that individuals waiting for surgery can have their waiting list reduced? These are the things that we've heard the government talk about for the last four years when we began to re-evaluate the health care system, that they wanted to make sure those things were happening. They haven't been able to do it up to this point. When we look at the money that we spend as a province and we look at the money that's spent in a lot of other provinces and compare the base public services – health care, education, support for individuals and seniors – we're not spending a lot more than other provinces in those areas. Yes, we're at the top end of most of those expenditure areas, but we're not spending any significant amount more than other provinces, yet we spend more per capita as a total of the budget.

So what we're in essence not doing that other provinces are doing is making those critical decisions, making the critical decisions about: how do we support people, and how do we support communities at a time like this? If that's what we have to start looking for, if that's how we have to start making our decisions in this province because we don't have the revenues to basically meet the needs and the essential services, I have to question, Mr. Speaker, what that reflects in the context of the management strategy and the delivery strategy that we've built as a government. I can tell you that a lot of questions are coming up about why it is that we have to spend the amount of dollars that we do and what kind of commitment we have to the communities.

I guess the other area that I skipped over when I was going down my page here – and I'm going to go back to it right now – is the issue when I was talking about communities. Mr. Speaker, I spend a lot of time in and I really value our rural communities. You have to look at kind of the different message that this budget conveys to rural Alberta compared to the message that has been there for the last couple of years, you know, at a time when the minister has talked about the possibility of a significant infestation of grasshoppers in a much-expanded part of Alberta, infestations in the same areas as last year again. We're hearing more and more about possibilities of another drought. Never mind the snow we've had the last couple of weeks; that's not enough to replenish much of the subsurface moisture for a lot of Alberta. If you get out into east-central, east-southern Alberta, the snow isn't even there to give them much promise of a crop. So what we've got to do is kind of question why the government is cutting back so much in support for the agriculture programs that are there. How is this going to affect the rural communities?

It was interesting when this came up in the briefing provided this afternoon. One of the responses was: well, don't worry about it; if a crisis develops, we'll just do a supplementary appropriation. Again, Mr. Speaker, is that good planning? Is that wise decision-making? I would say no, because what happens, then, is the debate at the time becomes contingent upon the ability to fund rather than the need for the program. We've got to make sure that when we go into these kinds of programs, especially when we're making a commitment to businesspeople in this province, if we're going to put in place a program that has public involvement, we have to have predictability to it so that they can make their decisions and either:

yes, we can count on it, or no, we can't. The idea that it's ad hoc, that it's contingent upon both revenue and need – all that does is create a real environment where squeaky wheels get support.

You know, if that's what we're trying to develop across Alberta rather than a rational approach to program development and program access, I think we better really evaluate what we're doing, because to me that is not good decision-making on behalf of the province. We should have programs that are in place – tight programs, strict programs, participatory programs – but programs that are there when they're needed no matter what, because if we don't do that and we go ahead and have the kind of ad hoc programs that we saw last year – and Mr. Speaker, they were needed last year, they were welcomed last year, but they were needed last year only because we didn't have programs last year that covered the broad base of potential options that we had to cover in our programs.

What we've got now is a situation where this year we're going into it again and we're going to get halfway through the year and if we've got a drought, if we've got a grasshopper infestation, if we've got any kind of problem that doesn't meet the minimal part that's defined here, we're going to find ourselves once again back here trying to deal with onetime funding in support programs. That's not good planning. It's not good support for the rural communities, and I think that we need to really look at whether or not we can make that commitment. Again, Mr. Speaker, I'll elaborate more on that as we get into the Agriculture, Food and Rural Development budget in Committee of Supply, and if I don't get the message out, we'll do it when we start debating the bills on appropriation after Committee of Supply, because, you know, this is something that we've got to start taking seriously as budget planners and program planners for this province.

We've got to be able to deal with stability, predictability, and the idea that what we do at this level has to and does impact the decisions of a lot of other Albertans, and they need to know in advance so that they can make the right decisions. They need to know so that they can build it into their planning cycles: either yes, they're going to have support, or no, they're not. But when we're telling them that if the need arises, we'll consider supplementary supply, that sends the wrong signal. If that wasn't the intention of the government, those shouldn't have been the comments made this afternoon.

I guess, you know, one of the main things that I find really troubling about this budget, Mr. Speaker, is the fact that it does appear to be really kind of patched together. There isn't a flow through the whole budget that says: this is what we want to stand for as Albertans; this is who we are as Albertans. I think that if we look at it from the perspective of where we want to go on it, that's kind of the theme that I will be trying to get out as we go through the debate in committee and in the appropriation bill. That's kind of the theme that I'm going to try and raise as we question this budget. What does this budget say about who we are? What does this budget say about who we want to be? What does this budget say about where we want to be 10 or 15 or 20 years from now? And you know what? I can't find an answer that's acceptable to me to any one of those questions in this budget or in the words that the minister gave this afternoon when she presented her budget address.

So with those few words, Mr. Speaker, I will take my seat and allow us to move to further debate on this, and we'll deal with some of the specifics when we get to Committee of Supply. I thank you for your indulgence.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Hon. members, under Standing Order 29

we have five minutes for questions and comments for the Leader of the Official Opposition. There being none, the hon. leader of the New Democrats.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise and use the 15 minutes that are available to me to make some preliminary and very tentative comments on this very important document, the year 2002-2003 budget. The annual budget reveals the choices that the government makes, the priorities that the government has. So in my comments I will try to draw attention to the nature of those priorities and why it is that we find those priorities extremely questionable and to draw attention to the lack of foresight, the lack of appropriate kinds of commitments that the government seems to manifest or express in this annual budget.

Mr. Speaker, the 2002 budget contains no fewer than 70 hikes in taxes and user fees, and in doing so, it really imposes a terrible burden on seniors and average Alberta families. This budget is not about keeping taxes under control, preventing them from going up, or reducing taxes. It is primarily a document which is about shifting the burden of taxes onto the backs of middle-income Albertans primarily, including seniors and, of course, hardworking families, many of which have both adults or parents working in order to make ends meet and to generate the incomes that they have. So it is this group that will bear the brunt of the shift in the burden of taxes that is built into this budget and its priorities.

Mr. Speaker, in my view, Budget 2002 is a train wreck. It is by far the worst budget that has been presented to Albertans during my five years in the Legislature. This budget is dishonest. It has twisted priorities, and it will hurt middle-income average Alberta families and Alberta seniors in particular. Budget 2002 is dishonest because it breaks every commitment that this government made during last year's election campaign. At that time, the Premier and the Finance minister promised that the only way taxes in this province were going was down, yet Budget 2002 contains no fewer than 70 hikes in taxes, premiums, and user fees.

The worst tax hike in the budget has to be the 30 percent hike in health care premiums. Make no mistake, Mr. Speaker: health care premiums are a tax. It is a particularly unfair and regressive lump-sum tax, a tax that proportionately falls on lower and middle-income earners, but it's a tax nevertheless. Let there be no doubt about it.

Government fiscal policy is about making choices, Mr. Speaker. The Conservative government is choosing to shift the tax load from profitable corporations and wealthy individuals onto middle-income average Alberta families and small businesses. To make matters worse, in addition to the steep hikes to health care premiums, the budget eliminates seniors' dental and eye care benefits. The ink on the Mazankowski report is barely dry, the so-called expert panel on delisting hasn't even been appointed, and the government snatches away seniors' dental and eye care benefits.

The question must be asked: why is the government targeting middle-income seniors with a combination of health care premium hikes and delisting of dental and eye care? These are seniors who have worked all their lives. They've paid their taxes. They've contributed to society, put some money aside in a modest pension, and hope to enjoy their retirement years. Now they are being hit, on the one hand, with service cutbacks and, on the other hand, with tax hikes. To add insult to injury, the government is using the $23.7 million it will save by cutting seniors' health benefits, throwing another $1.3 million into this sum, and using the $25 million in total to start implementing the Mazankowski report. The Mazankowski report's core recommendations of delisting, user-pay schemes, and further privatization are definitely not in the best interests of seniors or anyone else for that matter, yet cuts in their services are being used to pay for it.

This budget is about priorities. It's obvious that this government has the wrong priorities. Its priorities are twisted. The wrong priorities, Mr. Speaker. How else does one explain the doubling of the public subsidy to the horse racing industry in this province? In the year that will come to an end in less than two weeks, the public subsidy is $15.9 million, just under $16 million. In next year's budget the government is providing a public subsidy of $33 million for horse racing. It's shameful.

Staying with Gaming for a moment, the government is eliminating the community lottery board grants. This program is likely the single largest source of funding for community-based organizations. These grants support many important core services for families and children. Decision-making was at the community level. That's likely one of the reasons that the community lottery grants were killed. In contrast, funding for the community facility enhancement, which is directly controlled by government MLAs, was increased. What a surprise.

This budget is bad news for low-income and severely disabled Albertans as well, Mr. Speaker. One year ago the government announced its low-income program review. This review, chaired by the Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs, consulted widely and heard a very clear message: low-income Albertans are falling further and further behind. Rents are going up, utilities are going up thanks partly to deregulation of power and the gas industry, and food is going up, yet monthly benefit levels for social assistance and AISH recipients have not kept pace. The low-income program review was supposed to report last October. The release of the report was continually delayed, and now we know why. It is because after raising their hopes, this Conservative government was once again preparing to crush the hopes of many of Alberta's most vulnerable citizens. Not only are there no increases in monthly benefit levels for social assistance and AISH recipients and no increases to widows' pensions, there are actually reductions in the skills training programs that low-income Albertans need to get jobs.

I really am disappointed, Mr. Speaker. Modest increases to enable low-income Albertans to live with some level of dignity are so overdue. AISH recipients have had only two increases in the past 12 years. Social assistance recipients, the vast majority of whom cannot work, had their benefits slashed in 1993 and for the most part haven't had an increase since. As legislators whose salaries are adjusted annually for inflation, we really ought to be embarrassed.

I want to talk briefly about children's services, Mr. Speaker, and remind members that children are poor because their parents are poor. I'm concerned about the reduction of almost 200 staff positions in the Children's Services ministry budget. I don't for a moment believe that all of these service reductions are in administration. Many frontline positions for those involved in child protection are being left unfilled. How many more Alberta children is this government prepared to put at risk through this reckless cost cutting?

Halfway through the past year the Conservative government imposed $38 million in mindless cuts, mostly to early intervention programs. These deep cuts hurt children, despite the claims of the Minister of Children's Services. In Budget 2002 the funds for early intervention are being partly restored. This roller coaster of up-and-down funding must stop. Programs and services benefiting Alberta's children need stable and predictable funding.

I will turn next, Mr. Speaker, to the budget of the Ministry of Learning. It's going to be an extremely difficult year, especially in K to 12 education, where the government has gotten itself into a completely unnecessary war that it has declared on the province's teachers. While the government claims that it has put the 50 million plus dollars it saved this year because of the teachers' strike into next year's school budget, how does it address the real problem of underfunding? The basic student funding for schools is going up by 3 percent next year, exactly the same amount as announced as the increase for next year in Budget 2002. What's missing, however, is the extra 2 percent for the teachers' salaries. It's mentioned there, but the whole issue of unsettled contracts is before us. How are the school boards going to cope with that mess that the government has created? Budget 2002 seems to have cut in education by 2 percent the funding promised last year in Budget 2001. This kind of fiscal slight of hand is definitely not the way to rebuild trust with teachers, with students, with parents, and with the school boards.

I want to conclude by touching briefly on the government's decision to significantly slow down the reduction in corporate taxes. I want to remind members that the New Democrat opposition has been calling for months for these corporate tax cuts to be canceled. We simply couldn't afford tax cuts of this magnitude at this time. It would have been irresponsible to have proceeded with these corporate tax cuts while hiking health care premiums and increasing a host of user fees for average Albertans. Can you imagine how much worse the tax hikes and service cuts would have been had the government not slowed down these tax cuts? Even here, however, the corporate tax reduction could have been done better had the government retained the small business tax cuts and not reduced the general corporate tax rate. They would have only given up $43 million in revenue rather than the $81 million in revenues that was given up in Budget 2002. The resulting savings of $38 million would have meant that the government would not have needed to eliminate seniors' health and dental benefits.

There are so many other disappointments in the budget. There are actual reductions in support of seniors' housing, and there's no additional money for affordable housing. Budgets are about choices. This government has clearly made some terrible choices. I certainly will look forward to the opportunity in the coming weeks to make some more detailed comments on the budget.

Thank you.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Under Standing Order 29 five minutes for questions and comments. Okay? We'll resume debate.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. STEVENS: Yes. Mr. Speaker, I wish to move adjournment of debate on this motion at this time.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

head: Government Bills and Orders
Third Reading

Bill 17
Appropriation (Interim Supply) Act, 2002

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. STEVENS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure on behalf of the hon. Minister of Finance to move third reading of this bill.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Official Opposition.

DR. NICOL: Mr. Speaker, I promise: no more than a couple minutes. I just wanted to talk a little bit about the process of this supplementary appropriation in the sense that it goes back to what I was speaking about a few minutes ago in the context of: how do we deal with making sure that our budgets have a business plan that encompasses the entire year? I recognize that a lot of what we're dealing with here was kind of act-of-nature-type increases in our budget, but if we're trying to deal with proper expenditure planning, we should have in place the appropriate types of cost estimates for those programs so that they are actuarially sound and deal with them from that perspective. Then if we ever have to come back and deal with these kinds of onetime expenditures or additional top-up expenditures, as a supplementary appropriation is, it's easier to justify to Albertans in the sense that we in essence are experiencing a program that's totally out of bounds.

I think that in many cases last year in both of our supplementary appropriations we had dollars for fire fighting because it was such an unpredictable year, that probably fell outside of any estimate for an actuarial funding model. But if we had those kinds of models in place when we're dealing with this, we would probably be able to eliminate the need for this and then create more certainty in our budgeting practices.

So I'm not questioning the appropriations here and the fact that these dollars are necessary to sustain our province. I just wanted those comments on the record saying that there's a better way to do this and we should be looking at utilizing these tools so that, again, stability and sustainability can be part of the message we give to Albertans.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader on behalf of the Minister of Finance to close debate.

MR. STEVENS: Question.

[Motion carried; Bill 17 read a third time]

head: Government Bills and Orders
Committee of the Whole

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: We'll call the committee to order.

Bill 3
Irrigation Districts Amendment Act, 2002

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: Are there any comments, questions, or amendments to be offered with respect to this bill? The hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Official Opposition.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I want to just begin by making a couple of comments. During second reading on the Irrigation Districts Amendment Act, 2002, I'd raised an issue about the wording of the bill and its relationship to timing of a process that was described, and I mentioned this in the context of that debate. I want to go on record as saying that the Member for Little Bow, who was sponsoring the bill, contacted me. We talked about this at length, and through his expertise on this bill and knowing the workings of it, they worked through this amendment, sent it over, and said: will this amendment fit with what you had in mind when you talked in second reading? Yes, Mr. Chairman, it does. It gets appropriate scheduling in the process.

I think that it's a good sign that when there's a real issue that's raised, the members are willing to address it, and I would just like to recognize the Member for Little Bow and his willingness to work with us to make this a much better bill. Also, Mr. Ring from the Irrigation Council reviewed it and made sure that it was consistent with the objectives of the Irrigation Council, and this is basically, I think, going to make the act better, because the public consultation occurs before a decision is started by the minister so that the minister has the information that will allow her or him at the time to make a much better decision. So, Mr. Chairman, I think this is the kind of thing that good legislative process is about.

Just in conclusion, the ability of the Member for Little Bow to help on this, to work with us, is greatly appreciated, and I hope now that everybody knows that we're all onside on this, we'll move ahead and vote for it because it makes the bill better.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: Hon. members, for the record of the Assembly we shall refer to this amendment as amendment A1.

The hon. Member for Little Bow.

MR. McFARLAND: I would like to call the question. To repeat what the hon. Leader of the Opposition has said, this amendment that the hon. leader is proposing simply puts the public meeting before the plebiscite. He and ourselves agree that this makes it a better bill. As he indicated, we worked together on it, and I'm pleased to ask that the question be called on this amendment.

[The clauses of Bill 3 as amended agreed to]

[Title and preamble agreed to]

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: Shall the bill be reported? Are you agreed?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: Opposed? Carried.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

9:10

MR. STEVENS: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I move that the committee rise and report.

[Motion carried]

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

MR. LORD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Committee of the Whole has had under consideration and reports with some amendments Bill 3. I wish to table copies of all amendments considered by the Committee of the Whole on this date for the official records of the Assembly.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Does the Assembly concur in this report?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Opposed? So ordered.

Third Reading

Bill 3
Irrigation Districts Amendment Act, 2002

MR. McFARLAND: Call the question.

[Motion carried; Bill 3 read a third time]

MR. STEVENS: Mr. Speaker, having made good progress tonight, I would like to move that we adjourn until 1:30 p.m. tomorrow.

[Motion carried; at 9:12 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Wednesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Wednesday, March 20, 2002

1:30 p.m.

Date: 02/03/20

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

THE SPEAKER: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. Though we as legislators of this great province and its people are taken from the common people and selected by You to be architects of our history, give us wisdom and understanding to do Your will in all we do. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Guests

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Clover Bar-Fort Saskatchewan.

MR. LOUGHEED: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to introduce today Mr. Arnie Duncan, a teacher in Ministik school, and his class of grade 6 students. I see he's also accompanied by bus driver Martin Rozema, I'd mention, a former student from Ardrossan days. Would you please rise and accept the traditional warm greeting of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to the Assembly three Albertans. They are Mary Bell, Isabelle Foord, and Robert Keulers. They are seated in the public gallery. These three guests are members of the AISH Network of Alberta, a nonprofit society committed to improving the lives of people on AISH. They're also active in the Poverty in Action Society, Edmonton Working Women, Edmonton Epilepsy Association, and Catholic Social Services. They have given hundreds of hours of their volunteer time in improving the lives of their fellow citizens who have continued to fall through the cracks because of the provincial government's social and economic policies. I will ask now these three guests to please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

MR. BOUTILIER: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is indeed my pleasure today to introduce two senior citizens from the oil sands capital of the world, Fort McMurray: one lady who has given the Premier some valuable information on the china in his office as well as another lady who is a huge supporter. One of the ladies who is here today happens to be over 91 years old, and she truly is a queen of the north. I'd like to ask Olive Woodward and Betty Williams to stand and receive the very warm welcome of all members.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Economic Development.

MR. NORRIS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Not to give the impression that there's a run on friends coming to visit this week, but I'd like to introduce to you and through you to the House the shining light of my family, my sister Colleen. We're a family of nine, and I would like her to report back to mom that some of us are doing okay. Would you please welcome my sister Colleen to the House.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm just delighted today to be able to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly Catherine Ryan. Catherine is a representative of the Alberta Council on Aging, and she's here today to observe the budget debate for the Seniors ministry. I would ask her to please rise and accept the warm welcome of the Assembly.

head: Oral Question Period

THE SPEAKER: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Provincial Fiscal Policies

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Premier promised Albertans that the only way taxes are going in this province is down. Yesterday he broke that promise. My question to the Premier: why has the Premier broken his promise to Albertans?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, relative to taxes generally – now, we're talking about income tax and corporate tax, business tax, and so on – they are indeed going down. Indeed, there was a reduction, albeit a small reduction, in corporate taxes yesterday. Admittedly we did raise taxes on cigarettes and alcohol and some of the things that are deemed to be damaging to people's health, hopefully to help offset the costs of providing health services for the use or abuse of those products, and I see nothing wrong with that.

Relative to health care premiums, premiums are precisely that: premiums. You might note in the budget – and I'm sure the hon. Minister of Finance will supplement – that great strides were taken to protect those in low-income brackets and seniors, especially low-income seniors, from increases in health care premiums. As a matter of fact, one MLA reported today . . . [interjections] Mr. Speaker, will you please ask the hon. member who's, you know, lip-flapping over there . . . [interjection] I'm not testy. They don't like to hear the fact that about 440,000 Albertans will be relieved of higher premiums, and in fact some of those people pay no premiums at all.

DR. NICOL: My next question again to the Premier: Mr. Premier, how many times have you said that there is only one taxpayer in Alberta, only one pocket that that money can come out of? Health care premiums and taxes all come out of the same pocket. You've broken your promise to them that you wouldn't go into their pocket for money.

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I'm not a masochist, you know, and I can tell you that. I'm not in the business for the big bucks. But we had to do what was necessary to face the financial realities of today. If the hon. leader of the Liberal Party will stand up today and say that he wants to reduce to the level they were before taxes on alcohol and cigarettes, let him stand up and say that.

DR. NICOL: Mr. Speaker, if I were Premier, I wouldn't be in this position right now and we wouldn't have had to raise those taxes.

Mr. Speaker, my next question again is to the Premier. When he put in place the single-rate tax, he promised Albertans that they would be treated fairly under our tax system. The taxes imposed yesterday discriminate against individuals with lower income. Why did he break his promise to Albertans?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, first of all, thank heavens the hon. leader of the Liberal opposition is not in my position today.

Relative to this province's position, understanding that there was no increase to personal income tax – there was a decrease to corporate income tax – in comparison to other provinces, Mr. Speaker, we are still the lowest taxed people of any jurisdiction in this country, and we plan to keep it that way.

MRS. NELSON: Let's be very clear. This last year, the fiscal year we're still in, we introduced a reduction in personal income tax of $1.1 billion that we put back into the pockets of Albertans. When this hon. member stands up and starts to criticize it, he forgets that we also have no payroll tax, no capital tax, and no sales tax in this province. In fact, we're the only one in Canada without it.

THE SPEAKER: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. But we also are one of two provinces in Canada that have health care premiums.

To the Premier: what faith can Albertans have in this government when a promise that was central to their mandate is discarded one year into the term of office?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, it wasn't discarded. Well, in one respect, and that is the sin taxes, the taxes on cigarettes and the taxes on alcohol. Premiums are premiums. If we didn't have premiums, then we would have to go to a payroll tax, which I would suggest is less flexible in terms of our ability to grant some 440,000 Albertans exemption to those particular premiums. Premiums also indicate to Albertans quite clearly that there is a cost to health care.

Mr. Speaker, I recall attending the Premiers' Conference where indeed the Premier of British Columbia indicated that because the Liberals in Ottawa have reduced health care transfers through the Canada health and social transfer to 13 percent, B.C. had to raise health care premiums. The Premier of Ontario said that in addition to a payroll tax they might have to introduce premiums – in addition to a payroll tax – for health care, and other provinces have indicated they might have to do the same thing. Health care costs are escalating at an unprecedented pace. The Mazankowski report recommended quite clearly an increase in health care premiums. It's no secret. This has been out there for some time. There have been figures that have ranged from 20 percent to 40 percent. Thirty percent is actually a saw-off, and it's an amount deemed reasonable. In terms of this government originally targeting 20 percent of insured health care services to be covered by health care, now we're at 13 or 14 percent.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Being out there doesn't make health care premium increases legitimate.

My next question to the Premier: given that you oversee the richest province in Canada, why is it that you had to break your promise and increase taxes?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, the only area where we have actually increased taxes is on the so-called sin taxes. Again I challenge the hon. Leader of the Official Opposition to stand up and say that he as the leader would recommend to the government to reduce those taxes back down to where they were. I don't think he's going to do that, because he understands the principles contained in the Mazankowski report and the rationale behind an increase in those particular taxes.

Overall we have kept our promise. There was a reduction in corporate income taxes. If the hon. leader of the Liberal opposition lived in British Columbia, he would be paying on average $2,105 more in income tax; in Saskatchewan, $1,642 – these are dollars out of your pockets – in Manitoba, almost $1,900; in Ontario, $1,121 more; in Quebec, $1,400 more; in New Brunswick, $2,486 more; in Nova Scotia, 2,400 and some odd dollars more; P.E.I., $2,700 more; and in Newfoundland, $3,251 more. So what is he complaining about, Mr. Speaker?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question to the Premier: given that Sheila Copps resigned after breaking her tax promise, will the Premier show the same integrity and resign?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, Sheila Copps resigned because she did break her promise on a tax, and it was called the goods and services tax. With a big T. I would remind you that she ran again and got re-elected with a larger majority than she had the first time around, I think.

THE SPEAKER: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenarry.

Municipal Financing

MR. BONNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is clear today that when the Premier said that taxes were going down, he forgot to add: except for municipalities. Not only has the government cut jobs and services while raising taxes, a truly amazing accomplishment; they have continued to download their fiscal disaster on our cities and towns. As one observer noted: this isn't a stab in the back; it's a full frontal assault. My first question is to the Premier. Why are you dumping a fiscal nightmare, which has been created by your lack of vision, on our local governments?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, the issue with respect to local governments isn't quite resolved. There may be other ways of skinning a cat. I can't be specific at this particular time, but I can tell you that the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs is having ongoing discussions with the mayors of both Calgary and Edmonton. I heard Mayor Bronconnier and Mayor Smith on the radio today. Well, they may be a lot happier tomorrow; who knows?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. BONNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: will the Premier explain to the mayors of Edmonton and Calgary why he chose to destroy their long-term infrastructure plans with yesterday's budget?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, we haven't. You know, municipalities are political creatures much like the province or school boards or any other elected body. I know the problems firsthand relative to municipalities. I know that he had his head in the clouds many, many years ago, but I was dealing with an issue where literally thousands and thousands of people were laid off, primarily in the private sector. They lost their homes and their dignity because the price of oil took a sharp decline. I remember as the mayor being called up to Edmonton and sitting down with the former Minister of Transportation, since deceased, Henry Kroeger, a fine, fine man indeed, who laid it on the line. He said: Mr. Mayor, you have great plans for your city and you want to extend the northeast LRT, but I'm going to tell you that there is no money. Not a reduction in grants but no money whatsoever. No money. And I said as the mayor: we'll go ahead. And we did it on our own. We did it.

MR. MASON: By borrowing.

MR. KLEIN: Yes, we did borrow, and interest rates were high. But I'll tell you what, Mr. Speaker; there was a problem in the city and people were looking for work and we kept people employed. We brought the project in a third under budget, but we did it on our own.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. BONNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Minister of Municipal Affairs. You talk about partnerships with municipalities. Will you please explain to the House what kind of budget negotiations you were involved in with your colleagues to sell out our local governments?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. BOUTILIER: Thank you. It's indeed my pleasure to answer the hon. member in this way. I'm very pleased to say, first and foremost, that the Municipal Government Act of Alberta is viewed as the top piece of legislation in this entire country, and we've been invited to speak relative to that. What I would like to say, though, relative to the Municipal Affairs ministry is simply this: the conditional and unconditional grants of $98 million that we gave out last year to municipalities will be given out again this year to the municipalities – $98 million, 100 percent – because of the important partnership we do have with municipalities.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Ralph's world, barely a year old, is crumbling around us, with big chunks falling on the heads of seniors and average Alberta families. Yesterday's budget contained no fewer than 70 taxes and user fee hikes, not the least of which is a 30 percent hike in the health care tax. To the Premier: what kind of government snatches away dental and eye care benefits for senior citizens in order to provide subsidies for the horse racing industry?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, there is no such thing in this province as a health care tax. Unlike other provinces we don't have payroll taxes and we don't have other oppressive taxes to support a health care system. We have a system of premiums in this province to demonstrate to people that there is a cost attached to health. Those premiums were adjusted to bring them more in line with the reality of meeting the costs of insured health care services. There's been no adjustment since 1995. An adjustment, in accordance with the Mazankowski report, had to be made, and that adjustment was made.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What kind of government imposes 70 tax and user fee hikes on average citizens while, at the same time, corporations benefit from a further $81 million in tax breaks?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, the only taxation increase, pure taxation increase, was on things that are entirely optional: cigarettes, alcohol. What was the other one?

SOME HON. MEMBERS: Speeding.

MR. KLEIN: Speeding. That really is optional. Those are optional, things that people want. You don't speed; you don't pay.

Mr. Speaker, I would ask the hon. leader of the third party: is he willing to reduce to where the fines used to be the penalty for speeding? You know, I would ask him that. If he doesn't want to answer it here, maybe he'll answer it in front of the media. Does he then think that speeding is a good thing? Does he not think that it's fundamental to the principle that those who break the law and those who use the system should pay the real cost of either enforcing the law or providing a service? That is fundamental to user fees and to fines.

DR. PANNU: Priorities, Mr. Speaker. What does it say about the government's twisted priorities that a $724 million budget surplus is deemed more important than providing a long-overdue increase in monthly benefits for social assistance and AISH recipients?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, you know, this hon. member has been in the Legislature long enough to understand what the law is. It's the law that a cushion has to be provided. It is the law. Is this hon. member telling us now that not only is it okay to break speeding laws but that we should break legislative law as well?

MR. CENAIKO: Mr. Speaker, today the mayors of Edmonton and Calgary are stating that they may sue the province over fuel tax. My question is to the Minister of Municipal Affairs. What does this say about the relationship between the province and the two largest cities in Alberta?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. BOUTILIER: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Of course I'm very proud of the relationship I have with Mayor Bronconnier and Mayor Smith. I spoke to both mayors yesterday. In fact, we're going to be meeting again on April 4 with the hon. Minister of Transportation and my MLA colleagues as well as the president of the AUMA as well as the president of the AAMDC, Municipal Districts and Counties. The reason we're meeting is because we do have a good relationship.

Let me just for a moment say this. When I used to teach at the University of Alberta in the school of business, they said that one of the key characteristics of any organization is flexibility, the flexibility to respond to the environment in good times and bad times. I want to say that the money that we have advanced municipalities, both the city of Calgary and Edmonton, the $255 million to Calgary and the $182 million to Edmonton, for transportation was important.

What I would like to do is ask the hon. Minister of Transportation to supplement on this very important positive initiative that's taking place.

THE SPEAKER: Well, we'll go with the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

MR. CENAIKO: My next question is to the same minister, Mr.

Speaker. Can the minister explain how he sees his council being able to solve problems like this for the municipalities?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. BOUTILIER: Yes. A very good question. As I mentioned earlier, the Municipal Government Act is viewed as one of the leading pieces of legislation in this country, and the minister's council on roles, responsibilities and resources, the first of its kind in the country – in fact, the Prime Minister's Urban Task Force has been inquiring about this positive initiative. What we see happening is that on April 4 we'll be meeting again with the mayors of Calgary and Edmonton. I think this dialogue is very important. We're going to continue to do that because as the environment changes, so does the relationship. One thing is for certain as we deal with both mayors: we're committed to serving that same taxpayer, because we are all not levels of government; we're all orders of government in serving that one taxpayer.

MR. CENAIKO: Mr. Speaker, again to the same minister: when will this government recognize the contribution that municipalities provide to the province and restore the funding to the appropriate levels?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. BOUTILIER: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. As the hon. Minister of Finance indicated yesterday, we have a fiscal blueprint that is so important relative to the future. But I think that what's equally important is that the province of Alberta has been able over the last four years – if I could use an analogy. When you buy a vehicle in the province of Ontario, say a $20,000 or $30,000 vehicle, you pay $2,400 on provincial sales tax. You don't pay 1 cent in Alberta, and I'm very proud of that. So what we will be doing in the partnerships with the municipalities is continuing to dialogue on some of the good ideas we've got from those representatives. I think that partnership serves all taxpayers very well.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, followed by the hon. Member for Peace River.

Health Care Premiums

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Premier promised Albertans that the only way taxes are going in this province is down. Yesterday he broke that promise. Perhaps for the next budget the Minister of Finance, instead of a new pair of shoes, should buy a new pair of flip-flops. To the Premier: what does this Premier say to Albertans when they elected members to his own caucus who ran on the basis that health care premiums would be eliminated and instead they have soared?

MR. KLEIN: Nothing has soared. The only thing that has soared is the tax on cigarettes, Mr. Speaker. That has soared; no doubt about it. If the hon. member wants to remove those taxes or bring those down to the level they were before, then I would say to him, as I said to the leader of the Liberal opposition, stand up and say so. Stand up and say: we want to bring taxes on cigarettes down so that cigarettes can become more accessible and readily available to all the young people, who later on in life might develop bronchitis or cancer or heart disease. You know, if he wants to stand up and say that, let him stand up and say that. That's the only tax that has soared, and I don't apologize for it.

DR. TAFT: I will stand up and say that I would like to eliminate health care premiums.

Given a 1996 cabinet decision that premiums would not be increased for seniors in the future regardless of any other increases to the public, how does the Premier rationalize to seniors who will not receive subsidies this broken promise?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, seniors are protected, especially low-income seniors. Indeed, when we did the adjustments back then, we wanted to make sure that those seniors who could afford to pay would in fact pay and that those seniors who were having a tough time of it would be shielded, as they are today and as are other low-income people.

DR. TAFT: Given that an esteemed member of his own caucus says that health premiums are a tax every bit as much as income tax, does the Premier still cling to the ridiculous position that health premiums are not a tax?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, a tax is a tax – as I say, a payroll tax. We could have gone that route, and I guess this is where the Liberals would want us to go. I don't know where they stand on this particular issue. If they would like us to have a payroll tax, or if they were the government, institute a payroll tax, maybe they can explain that to the media, or maybe the hon. member can stand up and explain it in the House. But I'll tell you that if we had a payroll tax, we couldn't have the flexibility to make the kinds of adjustments we made to protect and shelter seniors and shelter low-income families.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Peace River, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Funding Formula for Regional Health Authorities

MR. FRIEDEL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. In the budget tabled yesterday was a strong reminder that our government takes fiscal responsibility seriously. After a few years of high-rolling expectations reality can hit pretty hard. I fully support the concept of living within our means, but that should mean that everyone has to feel the pinch equally. There is, however, a significant appearance of inequity when the metro regional health facilities get an 8 percent, and in some cases plus, increase in their budgets, but the smaller boards only get 2 percent. I understand the basics of the funding formula, but these figures certainly put the issue of fairness to the test. I wonder if the minister could tell us just how much consideration was given to the concept that a basic level of health services must be provided to every region when this formula was first devised.

2:00

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. MAR: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I can assure the hon. member that my department's funding formula for health authority budgets is designed to ensure that regions are funded according to their particular health needs. What we don't want to have is a one-size-fits-all budgeting process, and we don't. What we do have is a population-based formula that does take into account the health needs of a particular region. The formula includes factoring in the demographics of the region and the data on the actual health care utilization in that particular area. It does take into account changes to regional populations. It also keeps regional funding relatively stable to make regional long-term planning easier.

Through this process of budgeting, we believe that it will help make our health care system sustainable into the future.

I should note, Mr. Speaker, that the process that we have has been internationally recognized as a fair way to budget for health care. We are one of the few provinces across Canada that fully uses this type of budgeting process. It's worth noting that the budget to each and every each regional health authority across this province did receive an increase. The hon. member is correct that the increase was as small as 2 percent and as high as about 7.5 percent, but it is a fair process.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. FRIEDEL: Yes, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: could he tell us how much consideration was given to the possibility that a reduction in the level of service in a smaller hospital might actually result in higher costs to both the system and the patient if they have to go to, say, a regional or a metro facility where the daily cost of a room is known to be higher?

MR. MAR: This is a very good question, Mr. Speaker. I should say that one of the challenges that smaller rural health authorities have is to try and retain people within their own regional health authorities. If individuals from smaller regions end up coming into the major metropolitan centres to get their services, the money for their treatment follows those individuals. Successful regional health authorities in rural areas have repatriated those types of patients to ensure that services are delivered right in their own communities, and I think that is a very important lesson for all regional health authorities that are trying their best to maintain a certain level of services within their area.

MR. FRIEDEL: Once more to the same minister, Mr. Speaker. I wonder if he could tell us what, if anything, is being done to ensure that a reasonable level of basic health services is going to continue to be available in the regions where traveling to a distant regional centre is not an acceptable option.

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, our starting point is this. If we went simply with a population-based formula without a recognition of some of these distance issues and these sparsity issues, if we went strictly on the basis of population, then there would be a number of regional health authorities that would have had significant decreases in the amount of funding available for them in the upcoming year compared to the previous year. So the fact that each and every regional health authority got some increase is a recognition of the need for stability with the current level of services, but we must compel and challenge our regional health authorities to do as much or more with what they're getting, with the inclusion of a small increase for each of them.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Bow.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Last year the Premier was making many promises. This year the Premier is breaking many promises. In fact, the Premier promised that the only way taxes are going in this province is down. Now, my first question this afternoon is to the Premier. Since the Premier said that taxes would only go down, why are vehicle registration renewals soaring in price by 27 percent?

Thank you.

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, that is to reflect the cost of doing business, and that's not a tax. Admittedly, taxes went up on cigarettes and alcohol. They did, and those adjustments were made and are complementary to the Mazankowski report, indeed were recommended in the report, at least as it relates to cigarettes. I don't know about alcohol. I think it's quite reasonable in light of society's concern about smoking contributing to increasing health problems and to the increasing costs of health care services. Relative to taxes, the only mention of a tax, other than on cigarettes and alcohol, was corporate income tax, and that went down, down, down.

MR. MacDONALD: Again, Mr. Speaker, to the Premier: since the Premier said that taxes would only go down, why are valid Alberta drivers' licences soaring by 38 percent?

Thank you.

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, that, again, is not a tax. That is the cost of doing business, and if he objects to paying the $11.25, don't drive.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Let's talk about family vacations, then, with the Premier. Again to the Premier: since the Premier said that taxes would only go down, why are families paying a 200 percent increase in registration fees for the family camper?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, again, those are user fees to reflect the cost of delivering the service. They are not taxes.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods. [interjections] The hon. Member for Calgary-Bow has the floor. [interjections] Hon. members, please. Please, hon. members.

Speaker's Ruling Oral Question Period Practices

THE SPEAKER: This is called question period. I believe that starting this afternoon, in a few minutes from now, we are going to begin a process in this Assembly called the budget debate. I believe, if I look at the schedule, that it will go through to May 7. That means that the members of this Assembly will spend their time in this House on a daily basis, starting today to May 7, going through every conceivable line in a budget. Today is question period.

Injection Drug Use

MS DeLONG: Mr. Speaker, recently an AIDS group issued a news release claiming that barriers to methadone treatment for drug addiction are helping to sustain a public health crisis in our province. My questions are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Can the minister tell this Assembly how large a concern injection drug use is in our province?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, we know that 47 percent of new HIV cases in the first half of last year were from injection drug use. Addiction to injection drugs is a serious concern in North America. It is a serious concern in our province, sir. Injection drug use is not only a tragedy, of course, for the individuals or the families involved but also for society as a whole, and it poses a serious health risk and expense to our health system. Every HIV infection averted decreases direct health care costs by $150,000. The indirect costs averted are in the range of $600,000.

MS DeLONG: Mr. Speaker, my final question is to the same minister. Since the human and health care costs of injection drug use are so high, can the minister tell us what the government is going to do to address the issue?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, the Alberta Alcohol and Drug Abuse Commission, or AADAC, has been working for some time to address the issue of injection drug use, and AADAC's voluntary opiate dependency or methadone program has been operating in this province for nearly 30 years and has an active list of 330,000 clients. This department is currently providing some $440,000 annually to support this program. We also contribute approximately $120,000 for lab tests associated with the program, and there is consideration by AADAC at this time to working with stakeholders to explore the feasibility of expanding the methadone program into southern Alberta, sir.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

2:10 Provincial Fiscal Policies

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans see no difference between a user fee and premiums and taxes. A year ago the Premier said that the only way taxes are going in this province is down. My questions are to the Premier. Given that the Premier said that taxes would only go down, why are traffic fines going up by 20 percent?

MR. KLEIN: Well, Mr. Speaker, it absolutely astounds me that the Liberal opposition would be opposed to increasing fines for breaking the law, a law that is there to prevent people from speeding so that they won't create accidents that kill and maim individuals. It absolutely astounds me that they would be opposed to an increase in a fine for breaking a very serious law.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you. Again to the Premier: given that the Premier said that taxes would only go down, why are court fees increasing threefold and some as much as $400?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, the answer is the same. It's to reflect the cost of providing the service.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you. Again to the Premier: can the Premier confirm that his tax increases will cost Joe Albertan a thousand dollars a year?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, if you don't smoke, it won't cost you. If you don't speed, it won't cost you. If you drive, it will cost you a very, very small amount more, which, you know, will go into the general revenue account and will help us deal with some of the problems of infrastructure and health and social services and education and all the other priority areas.

Mr. Speaker, I think fundamental to the question is how much money is still left in the pockets of Albertans as opposed to other jurisdictions. You know, if the hon. member believes that it's folly in Alberta to pay taxes, he ought to be in, well, New Brunswick. I'm assuming that this hon. member – and I don't know if he's married or not, but I think he is. If he and his wife, earning over a hundred thousand dollars a year, were living in Newfoundland, they'd be paying out of their pockets $5,486 more than they're paying in Alberta. Now, you know, it amazes me that the opposition would lament and complain about how bad things are here in Alberta when in fact if he and his family moved to Newfoundland, they would be out $5,486 just on taxation, not to mention the multitude of user fees that they have to pay in Newfoundland as well.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, followed by the hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills.

Financial Management Commission

MR. MASON: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Here in Ralph's world things are no longer excellent. Apparently, things have gone so far off the rails that Garth – I'm sorry – the Minister of Finance desperately needs some advice from a blue-chip panel on financial management. With the honourable exception of the former Auditor General of the province of Alberta, all members of this commission are businessmen with Tory connections. To the Minister of Finance: from amongst the 3 million Albertans to choose from, why couldn't the Minister of Finance find one qualified woman to sit on this commission?

MRS. NELSON: Well, the last time I looked in the mirror, Mr. Speaker, I'm a woman, and this committee is going to report through me. The Premier has put his faith in me to put forward a fiscal plan, and when I put forward the Financial Management Commission, I've asked people to come forward and give us some advice. I don't like to upset the hon. member opposite in the ND caucus of two, but the problem that you have is that the vast majority of the business community in fact do support the Conservative Party.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Now I know why they don't call it answer period.

Mr. Speaker, out of 3 million Albertans why couldn't the minister find one person who was not a white, middle-aged, male businessman?

MRS. NELSON: Well, Mr. Speaker, I asked people to come forward and volunteer to sit on this commission because of their background and their expertise. [interjections]

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, the hon. minister has the floor.

MRS. NELSON: It's amazing, Mr. Speaker. They ask the question, but they don't want to hear the answer.

I've asked for this commission to come forward to review our policies on accounting and how we present our financial plans to this Legislature, something we did 10 years ago which was very successful when we were in an environment where we were running huge annual deficits and building our debt, which was accumulating at an unprecedented rate. I've asked for this committee to come forward and have a look at our existing policies to give us some advice as to whether they are appropriate today. One thing I will say is that the Fiscal Responsibility Act, insofar as making sure that our budgets are always balanced, is not up for review. That will stay in place. But I've asked them to look at: are we dealing with issues such as capital in an appropriate fashion today? Is there a better way to deal with this, particularly if we enter into things such as public/private partnerships, and how would we deal with it?

The people I chose to go on this commission, Mr. Speaker, have had not only experience in the private sector but have been very creative in their own right, in their own corporate entities to put forward very successful plans, and I'm hoping we can draw upon that expertise. I've also included some retired people who have financial backgrounds, but also I've included the former Auditor General of our province so that he could in fact give an overview as to how this fits into public reporting and fits into the overall package.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Well, perhaps the minister will feel more comfortable answering this question. Out of 3 million Albertans to choose from, why couldn't the minister find one person who wasn't a Tory member, supporter, contributor, or backroom boy?

MRS. NELSON: Mr. Speaker, you just have to look at the distribution in this House to know that the vast majority of Albertans support the Conservative Party – they elected 74 members – and, quite frankly, the same with the business community, who has been very supportive of this party and of our Premier and of our government. So I didn't look for someone that supported the third party in this Legislature. I looked for people that were best qualified to do this job in short order. I've asked for them to come back and report to me by the end of June to give me some ideas of what we could in fact put in place, and I'm confident that they will give us the best guidance possible.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Olds-Didsbury-Three Hills, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

Agricultural Services Offices

MR. MARZ: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question today is to the hon. Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Development. The agriculture industry has been severely impacted over the last couple of years due to drought and low commodity prices in the grain sector, and although farmers have a very good record of adapting to the constant challenges in that industry, there are times that like other industries they need to look to government for some expertise and assistance. Agricultural district service offices have been there to provide a high level of service to farmers over the years, and now those same farmers are very concerned about the news of losing those district offices. My question to the minister today is: what specific services will be lost as a result of the restructuring of those 51 district offices?

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, it is certainly our contention that services will not be lost in the agriculture sector, that in fact services will be increased and enhanced. The hon. member suggests, and rightly so, that agriculture is a very dynamic industry in this province. It is constantly changing, which in fact shows by its growth in this province. In that change and in that growth so have the needs of the people in the industry, and how they access their information and make decisions has changed considerably. Our foot and phone traffic in our offices has changed. We know that to respond to the growing industry and to the development in the agribusiness industry, we have to change and grow with them. That is what these changes will accomplish.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MARZ: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: given that in the past there were instances where municipalities actually provided space in their offices for district agriculturalists and other types of government services, will the minister give consideration to allowing ag specialists to relocate to municipalities if space is available?

MRS. McCLELLAN: Certainly, Mr. Speaker, collocations are an option we're looking at. We're probably exploring about 40 of those now out of our 51 offices that we presently have. Certainly through ag service boards, through research associations and forage associations a variety of ways that we could provide those services are being explored.

The other thing that we're going to do, Mr. Speaker, is that on April 2 we'll be opening an expanded call centre which will provide information by a person to calls for extended hours, and if that person cannot answer the questioner's question, they will be put in touch with a specialist or somebody immediately.

So we're exploring all options. I've invited the municipalities, the ag service boards to provide us with their intelligence on this, and I'm confident that with the partnerships we have out there, we'll provide better service to our agricultural industry.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MARZ: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: with the seeding season just around the corner, can the minister assure farmers that no services will be disrupted during this whole reorganization?

MRS. McCLELLAN: Well, Mr. Speaker, certainly the reorganization won't be concluded by seeding time, but our expanded call centre will be in place. Our web site, Ropin' the Web, which is a very popular way to receive information, will be in place. Our publications continue to be in place. We have Ag Financial Services offices in many communities in the province, which have very knowledgeable people in them as well. So our intention is not to disrupt service to our ag producers at a very busy time of year.

Provincial Staffing Adjustments

MS CARLSON: Mr. Speaker, this government is spending more of Albertans' money in order to hire more people who will tax more Albertans more money. At the same time, the government will hire fewer people to provide fewer services to fewer Albertans. No wonder Albertans are calling in to talk shows in droves to complain that this government has ripped them off. My first question is to the Minister of Community Development. Why is this minister cutting 65 jobs at the same time that Revenue is hiring 28 more tax auditors?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There are a number of positions in Community Development that will be lost through attrition, and there are a number of other staff members, in some areas at least, who have asked for packages or early retirement. In the end, I think the hon. member probably knows that since the tragic events of September 11 we have done a lot of streamlining, and we're trying to make a better and more efficient operation throughout the department. But there will be some positions that have been vacant filled over the next little while as well, so there is a balance there.

MS CARLSON: This government cannot use September 11 as the excuse for every reason for cutting dollars in this budget.

To the Minister of Children's Services: why is this minister cutting 186 staff positions at the same time that Revenue is hiring 28 more tax auditors?

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, if I could just review, last year we had 475 new positions. During the past year there has been significant work, particularly in some of the child and family services authority regions. We have unfilled vacancies of about 160 at this moment, given some of the staffing realignments as well as some of the things that have been done in terms of our contract management. They are positions that are furthest from the child except where we have had difficulty retaining people to do the job, and they are positions which are not in any way putting children at risk. We believe that the staffing adjustments are very livable for this year. Through attrition we will also make sure that we are not going out and cutting, as the saying goes, any frontline staff or workers directly interfacing with children at risk.

MS CARLSON: Mr. Speaker, my final question is to the minister of agriculture. Why is this minister cutting 186 jobs at the same time that Revenue is hiring 28 more tax auditors? Who's speaking for rural Albertans over there?

MRS. McCLELLAN: Well, Mr. Speaker, I don't think I have to defend my position in speaking for rural Albertans out there. I'll let the actions deal with that.

However, on the issue of the 185 I would remind the hon. member – and I think she's been around here long enough to understand – that there is a difference in what is 185 FTEs or what is considered full-time equivalents.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I've stood in this Legislature and I know that it's not their norm to listen, but if they had, they would have heard that we are in the process right now of dealing with our staff. Under our labour agreements and out of respect for the valued work that our staff do in Agriculture, we will deal with them first. Some of them will choose to take voluntary severance, some of them will choose to stay in the job they are in, and some of them will choose to apply for another career opportunity.

Mr. Speaker, there will be changes. I have never made a secret of that. It is a restructuring that has been going on in Alberta Agriculture for the last three to four years. This is the last phase, and it is to represent the changing dynamics in the agriculture industry in this province.

head: Recognitions

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, I would ask that you join with me in recognizing the seven hon. members I'm going to identify who were elected to this Legislative Assembly 13 years ago, on March 20, 1989. First of all, the hon. the Premier, the hon. Minister of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development, the hon. Minister of Sustainable Resource Development, the hon. Minister of Infrastructure, the hon. Minister of Finance, the hon. Minister of Seniors, and the hon. Deputy Speaker. Thirteen years ago, March 20, 1989.

Now, today in Recognitions I have seven hon. members who've identified a desire on their part to participate. Something that is quite unique, though, is going to happen today, hon. members. You have been circulated remarks in English, and the remarks of at least five members will be in the original language of their birth.

So might I first of all call on the hon. Member for Calgary-McCall, who will give his remarks in Gujarati.

International Day for the Elimination of Racial Discrimination

MR. SHARIFF: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. March 21 has been declared by the United Nations as International Day for the Elimination of Racial Discrimination. Today a number of my colleagues are going to speak on this subject in the language of their origin. We are indeed very blessed to have such a rich diversity in our Assembly. [remarks in Gujarati]

In 1948 the world community came together under the auspices of the United Nations to proclaim the universal declaration of human rights. As the world struggled with the horrible experience of apartheid in South Africa, where innocent civilians were massacred because of their race, the United Nations once again, in 1966, declared March 21 as International Day for the Elimination of Racial Discrimination. From 1989 Canada has held this campaign on March 21 to raise awareness of racism and discrimination.

Since 1998 the Alberta Human Rights and Citizenship Commission has received over 80 cases annually citing complaints of racial discrimination. Despite the global efforts, this societal problem prevails in our midst. Together we need to work towards eliminating racial discrimination in our communities. [as submitted]

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

2:30

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-East will give his remarks in Arabic.

MR. AMERY: [remarks in Arabic]

The International Day for the Elimination of Racial Discrimination is observed annually on the 21st of March. On that day in 1960, police opened fire and killed 69 people at a peaceful demonstration in Sharpeville, South Africa. The Day for the Elimination of Racial Discrimination was proclaimed six years later, in 1966, and has been observed by the United Nations and member countries ever since.

The United Nations has targeted youth as the most important group that needs to hear the message against racial discrimination. The United Nations has brought forth a pledge for youth to help focus their goal of creating a society with equal opportunity for everyone. The pledge reads as follows:

As a young citizen of the world community, I stand with the United Nations against racism, discrimination and intolerance of any kind. Throughout my life I will try to promote equality, justice and dignity among all people in my home, my community and everywhere in the world.

These powerful words give youth a challenge to overcome the racism and a plan to act by. There are many opportunities to overcome racial discrimination in the world today, and this pledge recognizes that it all starts with the individual.

Today the push to end discrimination, prejudice, and xenophobia is more important than ever. Ending discrimination is key to achieving world peace and security, and tolerance is something that needs to be taught to our children. Some may say that Canada is too remote to have any effect on the serious problems of racial violence in eastern Europe, the Middle East, or Africa, but each Canadian must do his or her own part in promoting the end of discrimination here at home as well.

For a future of true peace and prosperity, there cannot be any racial discrimination or injustice, and the International Day for the Elimination of Racial Discrimination actively attempts to change the world for the better. I thank all the members that are joining me in recognizing this important day.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. [as submitted]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs will give his remarks in Polish.

MR. LUKASZUK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. [remarks in Polish]

Today is International Day for the Elimination of Racial Discrimination. This is a time to measure how far we have come, consider the obstacles that remain, and plan for how far we have to go in the fight against racism.

Canada has come a long way in eradicating racism and prejudice. Aboriginal peoples and immigrants play key roles in our economy, culture, and political affairs. Add as an example that I am of Polish descent and a proud member of the Alberta Legislature. However, as we reflect on this day, let's remember that much of the responsibility for eliminating racism lies with government. Legislation, education, and policies are the main tools to prevent discrimination in the future and build racial tolerance in the years to come. As Canadians and as Albertans we pride ourselves in being able to model to the rest of the world tolerance and acceptance of all.

Thank you Mr. Speaker. [as submitted]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort will give his remarks in Vietnamese.

MR. CAO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. [remarks in Vietnamese]

Mr. Speaker, the Alberta Human Rights, Citizenship and Multiculturalism Act states:

Whereas recognition of the inherent dignity and the equal and inalienable rights of all persons is the foundation of freedom, justice and peace in the world;

Whereas it is recognized in Alberta as a fundamental principle and as a matter of public policy that all persons are equal in: dignity, rights and responsibilities without regard to race, religious beliefs, colour, gender, physical disability, mental disability, age, ancestry, place of origin, marital status, source of income or family status;

Whereas multiculturalism describes the diverse racial and cultural composition of Alberta society and its importance is recognized in Alberta as a fundamental principle and a matter of public policy;

Whereas it is recognized in Alberta as a fundamental principle and as a matter of public policy that all Albertans should share in an awareness and appreciation of the diverse racial and cultural composition of society and that the richness of life in Alberta is enhanced by sharing that diversity; and

Whereas it is fitting that these principles be affirmed by the Legislature of Alberta in an enactment whereby those equality rights and that diversity may be protected. [as submitted]

Those are the translated words from the Alberta law, but nothing is as true and proven as the fact that today in the Legislature of our great province we can hear many elected legislators speaking in many languages on the subject of human rights, citizenship, and cultural diversity in our blessed Alberta. It is a great honour for me to join my colleagues to speak in Vietnamese.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Redwater will provide his remarks in Ukrainian.

MR. BRODA: [remarks in Ukrainian]

Thank you Mr. Speaker. I am very pleased to rise today and speak to you in Ukrainian. Today we have close to 300,000 people of Ukrainian origin in this province, most of whom are in the Edmonton area.

When our fathers, grandfathers, and great-grandfathers came to Canada, to this province, they settled in areas where other immigrants had settled. There were different ethnic groups: the French, English, Polish, German, Dutch, and so on. I know that when I started school, I could not speak English. My neighbours, who were French, also could not speak English. However, we played together and we respected each other. We learned to speak the English language. As a result, we learned to live and work together while maintaining our own culture, language, and traditions. This is what makes our country and this province a better place to live in today.

Thank you. [as submitted]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie will give her remarks in English.

Albertans for a Wild Chinchaga

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to recognize the outstanding work done by Albertans for a Wild Chinchaga. These Albertans have worked tirelessly to promote the importance of this northern ecosystem. They know that government's claims about having protected enough of the Chinchaga under the special places program is really just one more special excuse from the government. The government only protected the area that industry didn't want.

Albertans for a Wild Chinchaga have presented their case for protecting this area based on the needs of the animals and the plants, needs that must come before industrial and recreational demands. A protected area is more than little spots of green separated by gas wells. With Grande Alberta Paper finally put to rest, the government has a great opportunity to really protect the Chinchaga.

I congratulate the members of Albertans for a Wild Chinchaga and encourage them to keep making their voices heard.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona will provide his remarks in English.

Brian and Robin McKeever

DR. PANNU: Yes, indeed, Mr. Speaker. I am thrilled to rise today to recognize two great Albertans from Canmore. These two skiers, Brian McKeever and Robin McKeever, have brought considerable pride to Alberta. They represented Canada in the Paralympic Games held in Salt Lake City last week. They competed in four races and won two gold medals and a silver. Brian is the first Canadian male to win two gold medals during the same Paralympic Games.

Twenty-two-year-old Brian is visually impaired and his older brother Robin works as his guide. Proud of their New Democrat roots, these two brothers are not only accomplished athletes; they're also very active members of their communities.

Mr. Speaker, I would ask the Assembly to join me in congratulating warmly the McKeever family of Canmore for their great achievements.

head: Presenting Petitions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to present this petition to the Assembly on behalf of Mr. Darby Mahon from the constituency of Edmonton-Gold Bar. Mr. Mahon organized this petition, and it is a petition to express opposition to the provincial government's public emergency declaration that has forced teachers back to work without a contract or settlement.

Thank you.

head: Introduction of Bills

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Bill 20 Justice Statutes Amendment Act, 2002

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 20, the Justice Statutes Amendment Act, 2002.

This bill, Mr. Speaker, proposes amendments to eight pieces of Justice legislation, including the Civil Enforcement Act, which are amendments relative to the review of the Civil Enforcement Act that were promised and required when that act was brought forward; the Interpretation Act and the Motor Vehicle Accident Claims Act, with relatively modest amendments; the Limitations Act, with an amendment which essentially will clarify when the limitation period runs against a child or with respect to a child and corollary amendments to the Public Trustee Act to make that effective; and amendments to the Fatal Accidents Act and the Survival of Actions Act to clarify issues with respect to claims that can be made in the event of the death of a loved one; and then, of course, the Provincial Offences Procedure Act, which will put into effect the provisions which were raised in the budget yesterday with respect to the increase of traffic fines and the ability of the department to retain those increases for the purposes of processing those fines.

[Motion carried; Bill 20 read a first time]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Finance.

2:40 Bill 21 Alberta Personal Income Tax Amendment Act, 2002

MRS. NELSON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 21, the Alberta Personal Income Tax Amendment Act, 2002.

[Motion carried; Bill 21 read a first time]

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Fort.

MR. CAO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table a study and recommendation report from my constituent on the WCB tribunal for rehearing of claimants' cases.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings this afternoon. The first is the required number of copies of the program from the Canadian business leader award dinner held last evening, where Brian MacNeill was recognized as the 21st award recipient.

My second tabling is the annual review for the Alberta School of Business, where they are celebrating 85 years of excellence.

My third tabling is over 1,500 signatures from Albertans who wish the government to protect the Chinchaga wilderness area.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. At lunchtime today I was very pleased to attend an event, and I'd like to table five copies of the brand-new brochure on Edmonton's downtown churches. This was a partnership project from five downtown churches that have produced this brochure for everyone's information.

Thank you very much.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of 20 different letters written to either myself or the Minister of Health and Wellness from Albertans concerned about access to the drug cyclosporine for the treatment of aplastic anemia, and I am pleased to say that as far as I know, the department, working with the drug industry, has resolved their concerns.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table this information for all hon. members of this Assembly. It is the actual forecast from the Power Pool for yesterday, March 19. Now, prices range here from 6.1 cents to, incredibly, at 8 o'clock last night 21.4 cents a kilowatt-hour for electricity. Temperatures go down; electricity prices go up in this deregulated market.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've got one tabling today. I'm tabling a letter from Nicholas Chamchuk of Edmonton. Mr. Chamchuk is opposed to the increase in health care premiums, which he insists on calling a tax, and he's opposed to it because this premium will hit seniors and low-income Albertans "hardest and disproportionately." So these increases are opposed by Mr. Chamchuk.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling today a letter from the Canadian Bar Association president, Virginia Engel, addressed to the Premier. In her letter she expresses concern over the lack of resources being allocated to the Department of Justice, causing serious deterioration in the operation of the justice system.

THE SPEAKER: Additional tablings? The hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

MR. DUNFORD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to table with the Assembly the 2000 annual report for the Alberta Veterinary Medical Association and also the 2000-2001 annual report of the Association of Professional Engineers, Geologists and Geophysicists of Alberta.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, before we deal with the next item of business, which would be a ruling with respect to the question of privilege, might we revert briefly to Introduction of Guests?

head: Introduction of Guests*(reversion)*

MR. SHARIFF: Mr. Speaker, for the record, I am pleased to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly a group of 15 members of the Association of Professional Engineers, Geologists and Geophysicists of Alberta women's club who are visiting the Legislature today. Seated earlier on today in the gallery were Mrs. Sheila Mitchell, Mrs. Kathleen Brittain, Mrs. Mary Nichols, Mrs. Edith Barchard, Mrs. Mildred Dofka, Mrs. Susan Rudge, Mrs. Norma Robertson, Mrs. Marian Gray, Mrs. Anne Skone, Mrs. Betty Scott, Mrs. Hilda Ross, Ms Donna Watson, Mrs. Margaret Hiller, Mrs. Marie Slusar, Mrs. Frances Reynolds, Mrs. Marilyn Forbes, and Mrs. Herta Hooper. I would like all hon. members in this Assembly to recognize their presence.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

MR. YANKOWSKY: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to introduce to you and through you to this House four guests who had a very interesting quilt on display in the Legislature rotunda this morning. Named the Heart and Hands quilt, it depicts the heartache caused when grandparents cannot see their grandchildren. It is my pleasure to introduce Florence Knight, national director of the Canadian Grandparents' Rights Association; Mr. Bill Miller, representing Grandparents Unlimited; Annette Bruce, representing the Orphaned Grandparents Association; and Mr. Rolf Sandl of Sherwood Park. Our guests are all seated in the public gallery, and I would like to ask them to please stand at this time and receive the very warm welcome of this Assembly.

Privilege
Contempt of the Assembly

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, the chair is prepared to rule on the purported question of privilege raised yesterday in the House by the Official Opposition House Leader. Before doing so, the chair confirms that the hon. member has fulfilled the notice requirements under Standing Order 15(2) by providing two hours' written notice to my office, which was received at 11:30 a.m. on Monday, March 18.

The Official Opposition House Leader alleges in her purported question of privilege that the Solicitor General has deliberately misled the House in connection with statements made on March 13 and 14 relating to reporting requirements for sex offenders. As was correctly pointed out yesterday by the Official Opposition House Leader in citing Erskine May, 22nd edition, at pages 111 and 112, the House "may treat the making of a deliberately misleading statement as a contempt."

Members may recall from the chair's ruling last week on a similar issue raised by the Member for Edmonton-Highlands that the authorities are very clear that a matter of contempt proceeds in the same manner as a question of privilege. If the chair finds there is a prima facie question of privilege, any member may bring forward a motion not later than the conclusion of the next sitting day. The matter then rests with the House as to how it wants to proceed.

Before ruling, the chair would like to remind members that alleging that another member deliberately misled the House is a very grave matter. The chair takes an allegation of deliberate dishonesty very seriously. The test for determining whether a prima facie case has been made that a member has deliberately misled the House is outlined in Joseph Maingot's work Parliamentary Privilege in Canada, the second edition, at page 234.

Before the House will be permitted by the Speaker to embark on a debate in such circumstances (i.e. find a prima facie case and permit a motion to be moved), an admission by someone in authority, such as a Minister of the Crown or an officer of a department, an instrument of government policy, or a government agency, either that a Member of the House of Commons was intentionally misled or an admission of facts that leads naturally to the conclusion that a Member was intentionally misled, and a direct relationship between the misleading information and a proceeding in Parliament, is necessary.

To be clear, members, it is not the chair's role to scrutinize the accuracy of every word and statement uttered in this House. When statements made by a member are so inconsistent as to lead to the natural conclusion that the member has deliberately misled the House, then the chair must find a prima facie case of privilege. The chair has carefully reviewed the Hansard transcripts for question period for March 13 and 14 and would like to highlight the following excerpts.

On March 13, in response to a question from the Member for Edmonton-Centre as to whether her department was planning to reduce the reporting requirements for convicted sex offenders, the Solicitor General made the following statement to the House as part of her reply, at page 316 of Hansard:

No, we are not letting sex offenders out early. They still will be considered a high-risk offender, number one. The probation officers determine what they will do and where they will go.

On March 14 the Solicitor General made the following comment on the same issue, at page 364 of Hansard:

First of all, most of the sex offenders in this province that are on probation, not parole, are considered high-risk or high-profile offenders. That categorization has not changed.

I further quote:

The sex offenders designated as high risk or high profile will be reporting with the same standards as they always have. Let me repeat that it's the probation officers that make that determination, not the Solicitor General.

It is clear that the answer offered on March 13 indicates that sex offenders are considered high-risk offenders and will not be let out early, whereas the answer offered on March 14 states that most sex offenders are considered high risk and that there would be no change in reporting requirements for those sex offenders who have that classification. Clearly, there is a distinction between the two statements. The question then becomes whether this distinction amounts to the Solicitor General deliberately misleading the House.

It would be difficult for the chair to conclude that a contempt of the House arises every time a minister misspeaks or misstates department policy. Exactness in all answers to questions in question period would also require exactness in all questions. This would seem to amount to an impossible standard of perfection that would certainly go beyond the standard expected in any Westminster-style parliament. It is the chair's view that the statements on March 13 and 14 are inconsistent, and it would appear that the answer on March 13 was a misstatement regarding department policy. However, it is difficult to conclude that this amounts to a case of deliberate dishonesty so as to meet the test of a charge of deliberately misleading the House, particularly given that we have the word of the hon. minister yesterday in this House that this was not her intent. Accordingly, the chair does not find that this matter constitutes a prima facie case of contempt.

Before we proceed to Orders of the Day, the chair would like to remind the members of this House of a few basic parliamentary principles that seem appropriate in light of what has transpired over the past few days.

First, one of the practices of this Assembly is to allow for ministers to supplement or to provide clarification to answers in question period at a later date. It is unfortunate that the Solicitor General did not avail herself of this opportunity before the matter led to a charge of contempt.

Finally, the chair would like to remind the members of this Assembly that there is a concept of ministerial responsibility in the Westminster model of parliament. This principle is fundamental to our notion of responsible government, where the actions of the executive are scrutinized every day in this Assembly. The chair would like to quote the following passage from page 29 of House of Commons Procedure and Practice:

The principle of individual ministerial responsibility holds that Ministers are accountable not only for their own actions as department heads, but also for the actions of their subordinates; individual ministerial responsibility provides the basis for accountability throughout the system. Virtually all departmental activity is carried out in the name of a Minister who, in turn, is responsible to Parliament for those acts. Ministers exercise power and are constitutionally responsible for the provision and conduct of government; Parliament holds them personally responsible for it.

The chair is continuously hopeful that members of Executive Council will continue to heed this principle in responding to questions regarding their areas of responsibility.

head: Orders of the Day

head: Government Bills and Orders

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It would appear that in the drafting of the Standing Orders, there perhaps may be a misunderstanding with respect to the intention of the parties with respect to Committee of Supply on afternoons. I think it was the clear intention of all parties that Committee of Supply would last for the full afternoon and that the vote at 5:15 would conclude it unless it was earlier concluded by a lack of a member wanting to speak. I understand that the interpretation of the rules that we have been provided would suggest that a vote would be normally called after two hours rather than in accordance with that interpretation and that understanding that all parties I think had with respect to the way the afternoons would proceed.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, after not less than two phone calls and not more than two voice mails of communication with members of the opposition, I would seek unanimous consent of the Assembly to waive Standing Order 58(4) to allow this afternoon's consideration of the estimates of the Department of Seniors to go beyond two hours, with the vote on those estimates to take place no later than 5:15 this afternoon as per Standing Order 58(5) or sooner if no one wishes to speak.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. minister.

3:00

MR. WOLOSHYN: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. If I may, could you go through those estimates in the language of your choice, which you so eloquently used a few minutes ago?

Good afternoon. I'm pleased to be the first one up for the estimates. For close to a year now the ministry has been, I think, very effective in providing support for low-income seniors and households in the province through our programs. The new fiscal realities, however, have required that we make sure that our ability to continue with these programs is maintained. As a result, you will notice that our business plan is extremely focused on setting a direction for the ministry in the future. I must say that fiscal responsibility has to remain extremely important in our process, trying to maintain the balance between the fiscal realities and at the same time delivering the maximum amount of support that we can to the people in need.

Our expenses this year are projected to be $304.6 million, down from $307.5 million in 2001-02. The reduction is primarily due to the ending of the healthy aging partnership initiative, the housing program. Additional funds have also been transferred to the ministry to cover increases in long-term care rates, optical and dental services for low-income seniors.

The Ministry of Seniors business plan is "closely aligned to the Government of Alberta's core businesses of People, Prosperity and Preservation." The goals of the government are to ensure that Albertans will be healthy, independent, and that those unable to provide for their basic needs will receive assistance. The foundation of the Seniors ministry business plan centres around three core businesses: to "provide financial support and information services to seniors," to "support provision and management of seniors, family and special purpose housing," and to "provide planning and policy development for seniors and housing."

The Ministry of Seniors identifies several goals that ensure effective delivery of our three core businesses and meet the corporate goals of the government business plan. The first goal under seniors' services is to ensure that "seniors in need have access to financial supports that enable them to live in a secure and dignified way." These supports come in the form of income assistance programs like the Alberta seniors' benefit program. This income-tested program provides financial assistance to lower income seniors through a monthly cash benefit. This month over 125,000 seniors in Alberta, or some 40 percent, received cash benefits ranging from $10 to $235 per month. The seniors' benefit budget for 2002-03 is $154.1 million, an increase of $5.7 million over this last year's approved budget. The increase is $1.5 million to fund new seniors coming into the program, and the other portion was to increase the amount of support to the people in long-term care when the long-term care rates were raised.

The seniors' benefit program is also used to calculate the full or partial exemption of Alberta health care premiums. Currently over 165,000 seniors, some 52 percent of the total, receive full exemption on their health care premiums, and over 15,000, or 5 percent of the total seniors population, receive a partial exemption. With respect to the increase in health care premiums, I can assure you today that the low-income or ASB seniors will be protected. The partial exemption will also be extended to an additional 8,000 seniors who are just above the current income threshold for premium exemptions.

The special-needs assistance is for people with extraordinary cost pressures. We have what is called a special-needs assistance program. This program continues to provide financial support through lump sum payments to seniors on the seniors' benefit program who are experiencing financial difficulties. In 2001-02 this program was budgeted in the amount of $17.9 million. It will provide emergency support to approximately 9,300 seniors in Alberta. In 2002-03 the base budget remains the same. As we know, Alberta Health and Wellness has discontinued the extended health benefits program for seniors, and $9.2 million will be transferred to our ministry to assist low-income seniors currently on the seniors' benefit with dental and optical services and to partially compensate for the elimination of the health benefits program. I might add that that program did have many weaknesses, and the average payout on it was roughly $120 per person through Health, as I understand it. Hopefully, we can focus the money and get a bigger bang for our buck. The seniors' special-needs program will continue to be there for the people who need it.

I would say now that seniors who are on seniors' benefit and have emergency dental or eye needs should contact us through our information line, 1-800-642-3853, and we'll take applications. The program details are being worked on, and when they are completed, we will distribute them to the seniors on the seniors' benefit program. I might stress now that any senior who does have difficulty should not hesitate to call, and people will assess the situation and see what can be done.

The second goal of the core business is to ensure that "seniors and their families have access to information and educational material about programs, services and initiatives that are designed to enhance their well being." We do that through our seniors' information services. We're dedicated to providing provincewide "access to accurate, up-to-date, and relevant information" about government and community programs and services for seniors.

In housing, moving on to the second core business of the ministry: "Support provision and management of seniors, family and special purpose housing." The first goal of this core business is to ensure that "provincially owned and supported housing to meet the basic needs of low-income families and individuals, seniors and persons with special needs is effectively managed and coordinated." In compliance with the rent supplement program, we are committed to providing adequate social housing while adhering to fiscal responsibilities. That's through our rent supplement program, and you'll notice in the provincial budget that the rent supplement program remains unchanged at $15 million. It will take some creativity to try and meet the needs that are out there, and I do realize that rents are increasing and whatnot, but we are trying to work on some kinds of different approaches to help meet the needs of the people who are seeking support. I might say that a tenant in the rent supplement program is subsidized on the difference between a market rent and 30 percent of the household income.

From the rent supplement program we go on to the second goal of the housing division, and that's providing housing services. This goal is to ensure that "seniors, low-income families and individuals, and persons with special needs have access to a range of housing [that is] appropriate to their needs at reasonable cost."

With respect to homelessness, our first priority is "to ensure a range of housing facilities and support services are available to homeless people, including emergency shelters, transitional housing, and special needs initiatives." The provincial homelessness initiative will continue to provide the $3 million per year of funding to the seven major urban centres to assist them in implementing their community plans.

Those community plans were accepted by the federal government. We use them provincially and federally, and they are being used as a model by the federal government right across Canada. These same community plans have made it possible for Alberta communities to access 38 and a half million dollars in federal funds through the supporting communities partnership initiative. With funding support from all levels of government these community plans are the new standard in this country and have resulted in an increased capacity in support of an additional 1,100 individuals in emergency shelters and transitional housing, but with the growth of the province we are still in dire need of some more work in this area.

With respect to the federal affordable housing program, we're working and negotiating and trying to finalize a bilateral agreement with the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation. If we are able to reach an agreement, we may be able to access about $67 million in federal funds over a five-year period, which will go towards the creation of affordable housing in the province.

In recent years the province has directed its energies largely between seniors' housing through the HAPI and SSHIP programs, and in the past three years there has been approximately $15 million go through the healthy aging partnership initiative, or HAPI, and the seniors' supportive housing incentive program, more commonly known as SSHIP. As a direct result of these two programs, over 1,600 new supportive housing units have been developed. This is resulting in some areas getting their waiting lists for nursing care cut down because this is directed towards assisted living, and it's having a pretty good result. We've only retained a million dollars in the budget for this program this year. That's due to the restraints. However, I am hopeful that as the fiscal situation improves, we'll be able to reinstate those programs. We certainly have the wherewithal to implement them if and when that should happen.

Planning and policy. The third and final core of the Seniors ministry is: "Provide planning and policy development for seniors and housing." The goal in 2002-03 is to develop policies and plans that "effectively anticipate and address the needs of seniors and Albertans in need of housing supports." As part of the cross-ministry sustainable health initiative our ministry will focus on the implementation of the recommendations made by the Premier's Advisory Council on Health as they relate to healthy aging and seniors' wellness and supportive living and long-term care. We'll also continue the work begun in 2001-02 to develop and implement a long-range plan for the aging population in Alberta.

While the coming year will be a challenge, there is much that we can be proud of as we head into the 2002-03 fiscal year. The Ministry of Seniors will continue to provide low-income seniors with the supports they need to age in a secure and dignified way. The Ministry of Seniors will also continue to work with its partners at all levels of government and with the private and nonprofit sectors to develop appropriate, locally based housing solutions to effectively address the needs of low-income Albertans. Through the business plan and budget I presented today, our ministry will continue to ensure that both our present and future clients are afforded the opportunity to experience a quality of life to which they aspire.

Mr. Chairman, I'd like to have my staff stand up in the back. They come here because their coffee break is over. Would you folks stand up and receive the welcome of the Assembly, please? [applause] They're so enthused about you. That goes for the deputy minister on through to my EA.

I will say in conclusion that we'll take a choice. We'll answer questions, and if you have questions that need some research or they aren't legitimate questions on the budget, I'll have them back to you in writing. At this point I'll welcome any comments from other members. Again, I repeat, I may answer questions here or not now or may give them to you in writing if they're good questions.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thanks very much, Mr. Chair. The minister and I didn't have a chance to work out a format for this afternoon. So just to let him know, I'm probably going to speak for about 20 minutes now, and then I have at least four colleagues that also wish to speak. Of course, I'll be looking for a second and third opportunity.

Now, there are moments when I find time in this Assembly truly Orwellian, and this is one of them. I appreciate that the minister believes in what he's doing and believes that what he has brought forward with this budget is really going to help seniors. That's certainly what he said, and this is the moment of Orwellian experience for me, because that's not what I'm hearing.

In response to a question that was asked in the House this afternoon, the Premier responded that seniors had asked for this, that they wanted to do their share. They had asked to take their share of the burden. I'm wondering – that may have been the case when the cuts first happened in seniors' programs in '93-94 – if the government has actually gone back and had other polls or other focus groups to ask seniors since then if this is really what they had in mind, if this is what they really understood the government was going to do to seniors as a group and as individuals once the seniors had agreed that they were willing to help the government get out of debt. That's not the response I get. They're pretty clear with me that they expected their contribution to the cause 10 years ago to be given back to them, to have those programs restored, to have the cuts restored. We don't see that here. We see further cuts and further change.

One of my first questions to the minister is: does the minister only see this Ministry of Seniors as responsible to and responsible for very low-income seniors? Does he not see a relationship between this ministry and all the rest of the seniors in Alberta? Does he see no need for a two-way dialogue or for any responsibility for programming there, or is it just low-income seniors?

Overall, this ministry is down by $64 million, although to be fair, the actual programming dollars available for seniors is up by $15 million. The housing has astonishingly been decimated. It's down by 49 percent, from $160 million down to $81 million, I think. So they've lost almost $80 million into this.

Now, I also noticed that capital investment went from $336,000 down to $60,000, down by $276,000. I'm wondering what this is. What is this amount of money going for? It may well be amortization or something, but I'd like an explanation and a breakdown, please. If it's more than one project, exactly what is it?

When I look at seniors services, which is vote 2 in the budget, I can see that there are incremental increases in every line item. So it has gone up a little bit in every area. The minister didn't give us the kind of detail that I'm looking for, so I would like an explanation for what the increase in costs is for every line that I'm seeing under vote 2.

Now, under vote 2.2.1, the seniors' benefit, there's a small increase there of $3 million. I think I heard the minister say that this was a volume increase for demand for the seniors' benefit program and also included the additional costs to the ministry of people receiving seniors' benefits who are, in fact, resident in long-term care facilities. So as a resident, for their room and board portion of their stay they have to pay, and in this case when they're receiving money from Alberta seniors' benefit, that in effect is subsidizing that cost.

I'm wondering why the project grants have gone down by $50,000. Could we get a list of what those project grants went to in the past year and what the reasoning was for reducing them by $50,000 this year?

Now, what has been really interesting is the changes to the special-needs benefit program. What we've seen is a program under the Department of Health and Wellness that was a universal program, available to all seniors – it didn't matter their age or their background or where they lived in Alberta or how much money they had; it was available to all of them – and that was the extended health benefits program. That program has been cut, and the $23.7 million that funded it is gone, but what we do get is $9.2 million turning up in the special-needs benefit pot. We didn't get an increase specifically in the special-needs benefit. What we're getting is another program that has to be administered by that particular program. So there's no extra money in special-needs benefits except that the special-needs benefit now has to administer some sort of extended health benefits program to very low-income seniors. But the rest of the seniors lost that program.

I'm just going to loop back quickly here to my first point, about how Orwellian this is. I don't think the rest of the seniors in Alberta agreed to have their extended health care benefits taken away from them. I certainly didn't see them in any of my travels standing up and going: "Please take this program away from us. This is a universal program for seniors. Please take it away and just offer it to low-income seniors." So I'm interested in what kind of research and backup data, focus groups, polling was done to back up the government's claim that seniors, in fact, asked for that.

Now, the housing is down by $78 million, and my notes say: why? But I guess the minister has been very up front about it. This was the choice, it seems, of the ministry of where they were going to cut costs, and they took some $80 million out of housing. Once again, I take a step back and go: really? Did the seniors in Alberta really want or did they really understand that what the government was going to be doing was not give them back any of the programs that have been taken away, not fund the programs better but continue to cut programs?

In particular, when I look at the number of seniors that are already living in subsidized seniors' housing – and I'll come to more detail on this program a little later on when I sort of go line by line – it seems to me that what we've lost here is money to build or money that would go into grants that would help to build more seniors' accommodation and more accommodation for social welfare housing.

You know, it's interesting. This last weekend the Edmonton Journal did a full double-page article on the Royal Alex emergency room and how busy it was, and several times in the article it said: "Well, you know, we just can't get people out of the beds upstairs because a lot of them are seniors who are waiting for long-term care beds or other appropriate beds or residences to open up for them.

We don't have those, so we can't move those people out. So we don't get access to those beds, and thus we now have people in the hallways."

I'm frankly astonished that this is the choice that the minister and the department, I'm assuming backed up by the government, would make when we know that this is such an issue in the health care field and the solution to it was accommodation for seniors, and they've decided not to go there. They've just cut it. It's not going to happen.

Now, to be honest, there is a little bit of money left there. So what are you going to use the money for? I'd like to know exactly what you're going to use the money for. I'd also like to know whether this money has been announced before, if it's part of an announcement that came out in a press release last year and this is just your incremental payment into a given project during this fiscal year. So I want to know what the money that's left in that pot is and what it's being used for. I think there's not very much. There's a million left in the seniors' housing incentive grant program, and there's a larger sum of money left in social housing. But I want to know specifically what those plans are for.

I'm interested in how the vision of having Albertans live in dignity with the best possible well-being and independence reconciles itself with the choices that have been made in this particular budget, where we now have to have already disadvantaged seniors who will have to know or find out somehow that to get their extended health benefits – glasses and dentures and things like that, even foot care – they will have to know to go and apply to the special-needs benefit program.

Now, in the past the special-needs benefit program hasn't exactly been able to turn on a dime, and I think at one point the minister was almost six months behind in processing claims. So what has the minister done to that department and the staffing there and the processing that's able to be done in order to handle an additional $9.2 million of extended health care benefits that people are now going to have to apply for? I want to know what kind of public relations programs, promotion, and advertising programs the department is going to put in place to let those low-income seniors know that this is no longer a universal program for them. They will have to go through the department, phone the number that he mentioned in his response, fill out yet another set of forms, and get in line and wait to get these benefits that used to be a universal program.

One of the other things that I've noticed as I went through the government estimates for this particular department is key performance measurements. Now, I am really angry about this government's two-faced approach to performance measurements. We keep hearing that there's a business plan, we keep hearing that it's for three years, and I look down and what does it say? "Measure under development." Well, how long are you going to have these measurements under development? How on earth can you be measuring what your department is doing when you don't have a performance measurement? You know what? You didn't have one last year either, and you've managed to change performance measurements in this department every darn year. How can you possibly be measuring your outcome? You can't be. Now, the minister laughs. This is amusing to him, but I think it's important for people to be able to judge what the government is doing, and they have no measurements that the government is providing that they can look at from this department.

Even when we look forward into the future, what are the key performance measurements with a target of 2002-2003? "To be established." How long is this going to go on, Mr. Minister? This is what you presented last year. This is what you're presenting this year. When are we going to see what your actual plans are and what your targets are and what your key performance measurements are? This government blabs on and on and on about how transparent it is and easy to understand and how open it is in all these performance measurements. You don't have the performance measurements. They're not there. Why not? Why is this at least the second year for this ministry? You've only been in operation two years. You've only presented two budgets. Why is this the second year that I'm looking and there are no key performance measurements?

When I looked under, you know, "percentage of eligible seniors receiving Alberta Seniors Benefit," the measurement is "under development," the target "to be established." Then the rest of our key performance measurements are going to be on satisfaction of people. We're going to do satisfaction polls again to find out whether the programs and services that the ministry is offering are effective. Why does this government keep choosing to do some sort of popularity poll, People magazine's fave of the week satisfaction review, to be able to judge its performance? Those are very poor performance measurements, yet those are the other ones I see. Either you don't have them, or it's some sort of popularity poll that's coming out.

Now, the minister touched briefly on the social housing agreement with the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation, and I think this is the question that I asked the minister in the House here 10 days ago or so in which there was $67 million that was available for Alberta, but we have to put some money up. So where is that money in this budget that we're supposed to be putting up in order to qualify for this money? Are we just going to kiss this money goodbye and not have access to it, or is the minister expecting that this would all come to fruition next year, in 2003? Fine. I'm willing to accept that, but let's get the information on it. Although I will point out that waiting for the money until 2003, if that's what the minister's doing – that's another year that there have been no starts in housing for seniors, whether that's long-term care beds or whether that's specialized housing.

Here's another key performance measurement: "Satisfaction of housing clients with quality of accommodation, and services where appropriate." Well, the methodology was revised in '99-2000, so I don't have a lot to compare to. This is the other trick: either don't have a key performance measurement or keep revising them often enough that you don't ever accumulate enough data to be able to go back and look at whether there's improvement or not. I'm wondering with this particular key performance measurement why this is the choice of the measurement. Why aren't you measuring how many seniors need housing that got it? Why are we measuring the satisfaction of clients that got it? Why aren't we finding out how many need it that we're not able to serve? I think that would be a more useful piece of information to work with when we were looking at planning for future resources.

I can already see that my time is going to go very quickly, and I have barely stubbed my toe on the number of questions that I have for the minister. I will at this point recognize that he's not going to have time to respond to everything I've done plus what my colleagues would like to ask, so I would appreciate getting the responses in writing. I understand that I'm asking for the ministry to do work, and it's not easy to do a fast turnaround on these questions. But I'll be expected to vote on this budget on May 9, and I would really appreciate having the answers back to my questions prior to that.

DR. TAYLOR: How are you voting?

MS BLAKEMAN: I don't know how I will vote as far as the budget is concerned when I don't have the answers to the questions that I've asked. I want to see the kind of planning that I expect to see from this government with this kind of money, and I'd like to see those answers back before I have to vote. Don't you think that's reasonable, that I would have information?

DR. TAYLOR: Hurry up, Stan; get her those answers.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you to the Minister of Environment for his assistance in urging his colleague to get on with it here.

I'm assuming that the major strategy for 2002-2003 "Partner with Alberta Health and Wellness and Alberta Finance to support the cross ministry Health Sustainability Initiative" is where we see the transfer over of responsibility for the extended health care benefits. If that's not what's being talked about in this sentence, could I have an explanation, please, on what is being talked about, what the strategy there is hoping to accomplish, and, hey, what the heck, a performance measurement to go along with it?

When I look at the overall statement of operations by program, we have again disposal of capital assets. Could I get some information, please, on what was disposed of? That it made the ministry money, fine. I just want to know what it is that they sold off or got rid of. I think it's probably housing stock, capital gains of some kind, depreciation of some kind. Got to be something. We're talking $12.6 million, so it's got to be something. Let's find out what it is.

Now, I'd also like an explanation, please, of why it's anticipated that the revenue for the Alberta Social Housing Corporation is going to drop by $52.6 million. This must be a partnership or the government has – anyway, why aren't we getting the revenue? It's showing up in the books as dropping from a comparable forecast for the end of this year of $129.5 million to $76.9 million. How come?

I've just got a few seconds left. Maybe I'll break here. I'll see if there are any answers, and I'll let some of my colleagues get their questions on the records as well. I'll be back. Thank you.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. minister.

MR. WOLOSHYN: Yes. I normally would wait for all of this, but I think a few misconceptions have to be clarified. First of all, I never said, the Premier never said that we polled seniors and they asked for a reduction. That's an absolute statement that I cannot accept. However, having said that, I would not want to pay income tax, I would not want to pay property tax, I would not want to pay health care premiums, and neither would anybody else in this House.

DR. TAYLOR: I would.

MR. WOLOSHYN: He can.

The reality is that we are under some degree of financial stress, and we've tried to in the ministry target the people that are most in need.

When you speak of the extended health care benefit plan, I hope you are familiar with the plan. Here's what was eliminated. A provider for an oral exam charges $55; we paid $20. An X ray: we paid $5 towards it. The administration of this whole plan was cumbersome. It is gone for all seniors. That's a decision made by Alberta Health, and as the Minister of Seniors we approached them for support. They were kind enough to transfer some staff to administer and some money over to the budget, and we will be reworking the plan so that it gets more money, less administration, and has a bigger bang for the buck.

Would I have liked to see it applied to all seniors? Yes. Is that feasible at this time? No. So we will focus on the ones that are the most in need, the ones that we were supplementing before. I hope that misconception of the plan has some bearing on you. I believe from the information received from my colleagues in Health that the average payout was $120 per year total. Eyeglasses – I could go through the whole plan, hon. member, but I won't bother.

Your question on the decrease in the income and expenditure on the line on the Social Housing Corporation is a good question. That's flow-through money. There are debentures, if you will, I guess, against the approximately $2 billion worth of stock that the Social Housing Corporation holds, and Treasury determines how much is going to be a pay-down on it. They give that as income; we pay it down as an expenditure. So it's a flow-through.

That's one of the problems with this total consolidated budgeting that makes it appear that our budget has gone down considerably from last year to this year. Actually, that's not the case. It's just what was applied to it. You may want to know that we are involved with some 17 different agreements with Canada Mortgage and Housing that go back to 1972, and a lot of this triggers how those agreements work. But it's not a decrease nor an increase in the budget. It's a matter of how that's being addressed.

The other one. You're absolutely right; I did not put $67 million in the budget for affordable housing. That's a five-year program. That's a program that, yes, we want to access. When we access it, I'll go through the proper channels to procure the funding that we would need for this year, and we don't know at this point what it will be because we don't know where it's going to go. We have some very strong positions on how we want that to be done, and it's not going to be just a simple grant. We have to ensure that those moneys give us the greatest number of units for the dollar, which will mean that we'll be working through the housing corporations. This program is tailored to each province or each province negotiates its own, so we have to work it in with our needs, and I'm hopeful that we will have some sort of agreement with the federal government at some point down the way.

Comments that we're not doing anything in housing I think are irresponsible. In the last three years there have been some $50 million put into seniors' housing through the two programs that have triggered about an equal amount or more from the housing authorities, which has resulted in 1,600 additional units. Those are assisted-living units, which takes the pressure off of nursing units, which puts seniors in better care than they would be ordinarily. I think that's one heck of a good step.

When you go to the next portion and you look at what's happened in this province in homelessness in the last two years between ourselves and the federal government and collaboration between the communities, I think it's nothing short of remarkable, so good that the federal government uses our plans, our format across the whole country. The city of Grande Prairie, the hon. member who is there – their format is being used in rural Quebec, and Calgary is being used in all the cities. So for you to sit there and say that we're doing nothing I think is irresponsible or else you are totally uninformed. I don't mind your taking cheap shots at me, but be careful how much you shoot, because I have to react sooner or later.

With respect to your comments on this ministry not being responsible for all seniors, another irresponsible comment. We have the responsibility for all housing – homeless, social housing, seniors housing, and, yes, the seniors' low-income program. Where would you direct your attention? The affluent senior or the one in need? Where would you put your money? To the person who needs it or the person who wants it and may have other means to get by with?

We have chosen to direct our resources most appropriately to them. Would I like more in the program? Yes. Is it affordable at this time? No. Is it responsible to go and say we're going to get it? No.

I'm honest with you. We don't have a performance measure. I put it on paper. I don't make one up for you. Then you sit there and whine: why don't you have one? Give me a good one back that we can use. I don't mind. I'll take your suggestions if they're worth taking, but you read a document, you go through it – you probably don't even know that seniors are subsidized in their premiums as a couple up to $44,000. There are a lot of people in this province who have families and who are paying full premiums, and they don't make $44,000.

I'd like to say also that with health care premiums we've got some 400,000 people across this province who don't pay all or part of it. That's because we're trying to be sensitive to it. So, Madam Member, I don't mind answering your questions. If you have questions that are sheer questions on the budget, my staff will answer them out of Hansard. If they are ramblings on and criticisms with no merit, they'll go unanswered.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thanks very much. I'm really interested in how keen the minister is to get on this side of the House and to put me in his chair. So I really appreciate his support in constantly asking me how I'd prefer to run his ministry and to be on that side. So thanks very much, and hopefully it won't be very long.

A couple of questions coming directly out of his responses to me, and then I'll let one of my colleagues up. I would be very interested in exactly what was covered under the extended health benefits program, which is now being cut. The minister mentioned two things. An oral exam: is he talking about a dental exam? Is that what was on the list that's now going to be cut? Let's see what it is that's being cut.

In fact, if the justification for losing this was that the ministry was paying so little money, then how much money were they paying? I guess what I'm going to be interested in here is: how much are seniors now going to have to pay out of their own pocket? On top of the health care premiums now they're going to have to pay what? According to the minister, an extra $120 a year to make up for what the government was paying on average for the extended health care benefits. Well, the minister may think that that's a nominal amount of money and sniff at it, but I think that for a lot of seniors in Alberta that's a significant amount of money. So let's see what exactly was on that list and how much the government was paying for that they now say they won't be.

Finally, I'm really interested to hear the minister say that there are people that are making $44,000 a year that are receiving a full or a partial health care subsidy that are seniors. That is really interesting. If he can table, please, some concrete information about that – I'm obviously not asking for names or addresses but certainly a profile that's going to give us exactly who these people are. I'd be most interested, because I think that if there's misinformation being flung about here, that might have been some of it being flung.

Thank you, and I'll return later for other questions.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. minister.

MR. WOLOSHYN: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Just to make it clear. If I did not say that it was senior couples with $44,400 as of last year that received partial health care premium subsidy and downward to full, then that's the clarification: $44,400 for senior couples. Below that, they start to get support on the health care premium, and that will continue.

With respect to your other comments I'll just give you the printout from Blue Cross. For a complete oral exam – I assume it's a tooth exam; that's what an oral exam usually is – the cost would be $55; the plan would pay $20.84. For an X ray, $15; the plan pays $5.55. For cleaning below the gum line, $74; the plan pays $27.78. Complete upper denture may be up to $650. I think that is low. The plan would pay $246. For the partial standard lower denture, $250; we would pay $95. Then once every three years for single-vision glasses up to $57, bifocals up to $77.50.

Yes, I would like to have seen the plan perhaps enhanced or whatever, changed. What we're doing with it is we're going to focus the money so that the people who need it will get the payment that they require to meet the full service.

I think that's about what you had asked. We'll let other members have the floor.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton Mill-Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate the opportunity to make some observations and ask some questions about the Seniors estimates that are before us this afternoon. I would like to, I think, focus most of my remarks on the business plan that the ministry has put forward. I, too, I guess, am a little distressed at the rather primitive state we seem to be in terms of the department's development of performance measures. I'll be interested in the Auditor General's comments with respect to these performance measures, because I'm sure that his attention will be drawn to them.

The core business plan, number 1: "Provide financial support and information services to seniors." I was looking on page 331 at the kinds of goals, and I think that most of us would agree that they are worthy goals. I would like to ask about the kinds of measures that are being considered; for instance, 1.1.1, "work towards adjusting provincial income benefits for lower-income seniors, in particular to reflect the changing personal supports needs of seniors as they age." I think that's an important one in that it does get adjusted, and I would be interested in knowing how that's going to be done, what's being considered. Is it a basket of measures that the ministry is going to look at in trying to determine that level of support?

I think that relates to 1.1.2, the "development of a benchmark measure for 'sufficient retirement income.'" How are you going to go about determining what is sufficient income? How are you going to monitor that, and how will it change? As the minister knows, one of the problems with the social assistance plans and AISH is that it hasn't changed. So, hopefully, any measure that is put in place is one that will be responsive to changes in the cost of living and other expenses that seniors face.

In all of the performance objectives there are interspersed actions by the department, either agreements that they're going to be working on or plans that they're going to be working on or co-operative projects with other departments that they're going to be working on, so if I bounce around, it's because they are interspersed with those kinds of activities. Under 1.1.4, "simplify eligibility criteria and administration of Alberta Seniors Benefit to improve fairness and clarity of the program," again I think a goal that we all would applaud as worthy, I wonder if one of the criteria that they'll look at is adequacy. How adequate is the program? I think adequacy is as important in that program as it is in 1.1.5, to "improve the effectiveness of Special Needs Assistance for Seniors program" to make sure that those most in need are processed in a timely way. Again I think it raises the question of adequacy.

If there are measures being developed, I also think that it's important to look at the effect the programs and applying for those programs has on the applicants. I say that, again, from experience in our constituency office with people on social assistance programs and for some of them how very, very difficult it is to apply for assistance and the feelings that they get of not being worthy, that somehow or other it's their fault that they're forced into this position to ask for help. So I think that with how the applicants feel in terms of their treatment, doing it efficiently and quickly is important, but doing it with some compassion and some concern for the applicants is also important. There's a whole list of goals there, Mr. Chairman, that beg, I think, some performance measures, as do the rest of the goals.

If I look on page 332, in support of seniors, I look at 1.2.2: "To develop effective ways to ensure seniors, seniors' families, and seniors service providers are well informed about . . . programs." That, I think, for seniors is a particularly thorny problem. It's very, very difficult to ensure that seniors have the information that they should have to access programs. I was looking at the Ontario government web site and their business plan. I think it was the Ontario government. There's a measure that they use in terms of visits to the web site. They keep track of how many seniors log on to the web site. That is one measure that might be useful, but I say that knowing that it would be interesting to know how many seniors actually use the web to access information. Again I think it's a measure that gave them some indication of how widespread knowledge about their programs was and in terms of getting it to seniors.

I also noticed – I think it was again on that same web site – under 1.2.3: "Collaborate with other ministries and organizations to support provincial strategies to inform and educate seniors [et cetera] to protect themselves against fraud and other crimes." Again it seems hit and miss. The only time it really seems to be drawn to seniors' attention is when there is an actual case of fraud and it's reported in the media and becomes highlighted in their lives in that way. That's really a very incidental way to go about it. I wonder about the approach that was taken in Ontario, where they were actually using programs in schools to educate students about programs for seniors so that that knowledge would be in the family and the possibility of it being more widespread was made more possible. I thought it was rather a different way of trying to get information to seniors. But I think that whatever is put in place has to be systematic. It's not fair to leave it in terms of chance that seniors will be informed about ways that they can protect themselves against crime and that their personal safety can be enhanced.

The last one. I guess I look at the measure here, the "satisfaction of seniors with information provided." Again, you know, it's a satisfaction measure and somewhat important, but I think there are other measures in terms of actually affecting seniors and their lives in this performance section that are much more important.

Of all the actions in this ministry's mandate, I think those actions concerned with housing are of huge concern to seniors. In the last couple of years I've had the opportunity to look at a lot of seniors' accommodation, from what was available in Small Town, Alberta, to day care homes in this city to some of the private homes that seniors with means can access. One of the things that you come away from that experience struck by is the huge variation, the great variation in the living conditions for senior Albertans. You go from very, very cramped, one-room accommodations, where that room is shared with another senior, to suites where seniors are being able to subsidize and top up the accommodation. So accommodation for seniors is really an important issue. When they have to seek help, for a lot of them it means breaking up their homes and disposing of furniture and then looking at an appropriate accommodation. For those seniors, cost and availability and quality are really very important, and my fear is that sometimes cost and availability overtake quality in terms of what's available.

I'm not quite sure how you get at that, but I wonder if the department has or keeps track of the kinds of housing stock. The plan says that there are 36,000 housing units and that those are across a range of accommodation, from self-contained apartments to cottages and lodges. I wonder: is there an inventory of that stock kept, and is there a monitoring of it to see how it changes over the years? Again I recall seeing in a business plan of another province a monitoring of the stock showing how different classes of that stock are increasing or decreasing and are available for seniors. So the whole look at the stock that we have available I think is appropriate.

One of the things – and it's mentioned in a couple of places in the business plan – is the proceeding to transfer or to try to move the housing solutions to community-based housing organizations. Is it the intent of the ministry that that's the preferred way they would like to go, that they would like that taken over by organizations or community groups?

I'm sorry; I'm sort of bouncing around. I'm still on goal 2, at 2.1.6: "Revise the Rent Supplement Program to ensure that rent supplements are targeted toward communities with the greatest need" and that they can be operated. I guess the question is: how will that be determined? Will there be some sort of a measure developed so we can see that that is actually what's happening?

At the top of page 334 there are some performance measures where we get again another satisfaction measure. I think satisfaction measures, particularly for seniors, are important in terms of how they feel about things, because at that time in their life many of them are very vulnerable, and how they are treated I think is extremely important. I wonder if there isn't need here for some cost measures. What is the cost of some of the accommodation that's being supplied and again the availability measure? How much is available in different classes?

That goes to 2.2.4 at the top of page 335, "to increase the supply of low-cost housing within the areas of highest need." What is the stock? How is it changing? What is the condition of that stock? I'm sure that the department probably has that information at hand.

I guess 2.2.5 would almost require the same kind of a measure or monitoring to determine, you know, what kinds of housing solutions, what kind of available housing is there in remote communities, including the aboriginal communities, and what is the state of the housing stock there.

The same for 2.2.6. I think it begs information and some benchmarks being set in terms of emergency shelters. I think we have that information on emergency shelter beds in the province. I'm not sure we do about transitional housing and special needs housing, whether they are designated as such. It would seem to me that the ministry in the next year, as they seem to be serious about taking on the task of developing some performance measures, could really develop a set of measures that would be useful not just in monitoring what was happening to the housing stock in seniors' programs but that could be used as a useful planning tool in trying to determine the future directions of the department and future budgets.

I think that with those comments, Mr. Chairman, I'll conclude. Thank you.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. minister.

MR. WOLOSHTYN: Thank you very much. I do appreciate your observations, hon. member. I'll see if I can cover in general terms most of the questions that you've asked.

You made reference to the community groups. We did go out and respond to the various urban areas as they were telling us a couple or three years ago that they have a better handle on their needs than we do. I didn't dispute that. I think that was accurate. I'll give you Edmonton. We worked through the Edmonton Housing Trust Fund, for example. As the identifiers with it we flow a couple of million dollars a year or whatever it is through them, and we rely on them largely then to pick, if you will, again with the federal government, which has been generous, the projects that go ahead.

I'll give you a good example. We have been through some joint ones. I believe it was Grace manor by the Salvation Army that was CHIP money, that was homeless money. They do hard-to-house seniors, hard-to-house other people, and they were meeting a need. So we do work with these groups. We do have to work with them. Consequently, they would have to show, for example, before they pick a project that it is needed and that there is some source of operational funding so we don't get a whole bunch of projects up there and suddenly no way to operate them, because then that creates its own set of problems. We've done that, and it's variable across the whole province.

We've got numerous housing authorities which have some of their own stock and administer our own. For example, there's a new project in Fort McMurray that we were partnering as a province with the Wood Buffalo housing corporation. I think we're tripling the number of units that will be available for social housing. I could be wrong on that. We're roughly tripling the number of units for social housing by supporting them in making a very large – forgive me; I've forgotten the name of the project – social housing project on something that used to be referred to as river lot 13. What we're doing there is we have worked out an arrangement with them where we will move our rent supplement program from the private ones to these units as they become filled up. We have worked out with them a level rent so it doesn't drive it out, and quite frankly it will triple the number of units.

We're also working on some other areas, and if this federal money comes through, we'll go into the affordable housing market.

So that's how we try to work with the community groups, and it isn't the same across the board. I will not go, if we get the agreement with the federal government, on a per capita arrangement or anything like that because we have to address where the need is greatest, for one, and, secondly, where the groups are most able to do what they're doing.

You highlighted one area that I'm not very proud of. I had the occasion to travel north with the hon. Minister of Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development. We went to some remote communities with some people that were there, and quite frankly the housing conditions in some of these usually aboriginal, nonreserve communities are terrible. We have to do something there.

MS CALAHASEN: It's a shame.

MR. WOLOSHTYN: It is a shame. What was done previously in these sort of one-size-fits-all programs didn't fit. We need two things: first of all, we need a local solution, which may vary from community to community. We have to ensure that the people in the community do have a large input on what's there – and it may vary – and who occupies it. One aspect that is going to be somewhat of a change is that everybody who occupies will have to pay according to their ability to pay, as opposed to: we move in.

So I hope to get that. That will be largely contingent on if we can do a couple or three or four things. And it's not very easy. You don't snap your fingers and have it happen, because some of these communities are also members of a larger housing authority. For example, in the Wood Buffalo regional municipality we have the Wood Buffalo housing corporation. They are responsible for Fort McMurray and outside.

So we have to get partnerships going along the way, but the main thing is that we have to get appropriate housing. Now, just to give you a good example of what appropriate is, in the 1970s somebody put trailers into some northern communities. They had plumbing in them. They had propane heaters. They didn't have any water to hook up to nor sewer to go to, so you have a place plumbed up with nothing to hook up to. Some of them still are not hooked up. What's worse yet, they're living in the middle of a good source of firewood and they've got a propane heater. So these are the kinds of stuff that when I talk about a community and what's appropriate, you know, it's not just: here, go build a house or haul a trailer out. So that's something that we're trying to work on, and that was a good point.

The other thing that we've worked on within the government to see what's needed – you know that a lot of our clients are on AISH, as you referred to. There's supports for independence, if you will, and the people on that. We have single families on there. So we do have a whole host of them. We've done some things, albeit we didn't publicize it too much. For example, we moved in a direction with the housing authorities that the rents must be set for a year for people in the rent-geared-to-income housing, the stuff that we own, simply because if they haven't improved their status during the year, I want that money they make to go towards improving their living standard, not to rent. However, if their income rises – and we have the formula of 30 percent – then the next year, for which I believe the cutoff is September, at that point they would be reassessed and their rent will go up accordingly.

You say: what if their income goes down? Then the onus is on the tenant to apply, and it's an automatic approval if your income goes down by more than $35. Remember, it's 30 percent of your income, so it means a $10-a-month rent. If it goes down more than $35, they can apply to get their rent adjusted downward at any time. It can't go up; it can't come down.

We've taken and put caps on the seniors' rent-geared-to-income housing. The whole business of working with these authorities on the stock that we have, for example – we have a lot of stock. Some of it is in communities where they don't need it anymore. Because of agreements that we have with Canada Mortgage and Housing – and this is not laying fault; it's a reality that we're dealing with – we can't dispose of it very easily. When we dispose of it, I want to reprofile it, like you were indicating, where it goes into an area of need.

We have, for example, in Edmonton the Greater Edmonton Foundation, which administers our lodges and our rent-geared-to-income or self-contained seniors' apartments. They haven't moved into the assisted living concept. They're currently working with the Capital health authority and ourselves on a pilot project in a lodge that they replaced, the Ottewell lodge, to see if they can go into assisted living to some degree. Now, that's a big step for a lodge operator, but we do have a large number of people who are not appropriate in a normal lodge setting and are not appropriate for a nursing home. We're trying to fill the gap, and that's where a large amount is $50 million. It's so low it's not in the newspapers every day. A lot of good work has been done there through authorities right across this province. A lot of it is turning up, for example, in the David Thompson. I picked up an article in the Red Deer newspaper where their waiting list for extended care has dropped in a year from 102 down to 18. They attribute that directly to the fact that they've got some of these assisted living or supportive housing units that we worked with authorities to build. So there's a lot of activity there.

With respect to the room sizes, you're correct. You can go to different places and have different rooms. We've had the lodge assistance program in existence through what used to be public works and now is Infrastructure. Forgive me; I don't know the number per year, but they've upgraded lodges right across this province. You can go into a lot of them where they've taken and made the room sizes bigger, and yes, we're going away from the double-occupancy concept for a variety of good reasons: one, getting along, and room space also. You will find lodges that are smaller. The other interesting thing we found in a couple of lodges the authorities renovated is that people don't want to leave them. They don't want to go into better quarters. That's home. It was an interesting thing when you go and talk to them.

So we're continually trying to improve that business. We know what stock we have, and again we don't administer it, or very little of it, directly through the ministry. It's done by the housing authorities, and depending upon where they are and what their goals are, sometimes their desire to get into higher care may not be as great as I would like it to be, but then I can't fault them for that because they're staying within what they feel is appropriate.

I do want to add at this point, too, that the housing authorities in Edmonton and Calgary and other communities around the province do get significant support from the municipalities for the lodge programs, so it's a partnership right across the board. It's the housing authority; it's ourselves; it's the municipality. The housing authorities have done a very good job of administering those things, and as you know, they came into being in '92-93 or thereabouts. Prior to that they weren't there, and again it takes a little bit of creativity on the part of my staff to work with all these, because different groups want different things. There are different associations because they can levy that, and the different municipalities want to be in different housing authorities.

You also had a very, very good point when you referenced special needs and the hit on the people, the emotional impact, of having to ask for assistance. The staff that work with seniors are there only so long as they are compassionate, and I mean this quite sincerely. They are very, very good, and most seniors when they come to us are coming because they do have a very specific need. We may be the last resort, or are the last resort. They are treated with dignity. They are treated properly. Also, if they can't get out and they phone, we'll send staff out to their homes, so it's not a matter of you can't get in.

We've taken the initiative now to move some of our Seniors offices. I believe in Calgary we've got an arrangement going with the Kerby Centre because that's where the seniors seem to focus. In Edmonton the Standard Life building seems to be working quite well, so we'll leave that alone. We're working with a centre in Red Deer to see if they can help. In Lethbridge we've got an arrangement with one of the Lions' seniors' centres there. The whole reasoning behind it is that that's where the seniors congregate, and if we're working with communicating, if we have staff in place there, then hopefully the networking will go out and we'll get a greater number of them.

I do want to stress that when a senior makes an application – and yes, we have to have criteria or else there would be no limit on it – if they feel that they have not been treated properly, then we do have an appeal mechanism. Sometimes, although very rarely, because as minister I try to avoid that, if occasionally something else comes, I don't make the decision. I'll ask the staff to review it and see. The staff have been very good at, yes, following the guidelines but sometimes using a bit of heart and seeing how it works out.

We've got just stacks and stacks of letters and cards from seniors who have received support from special needs, and those cards are very, very heartwarming. You know, whether it be with teeth or a furnace or a roof repair or a bed or a new stove or a washing machine, the list is endless. But to them, to their quality of life, when we say we want their quality of life to be improved, we mean it. Yes, you can get a microwave out of the seniors' special-needs program if you can't afford to buy one. People say: "What? A microwave? It's a luxury." Not necessarily. It may be the difference between eating cold food and warm food, and you don't necessarily use a stove every time you want to cook a meal, although I don't promote microwaves for everybody. A television set: people call that a luxury, but if you're still in your own home and you're the only person there, is that a luxury or is it a need? We will get those. We get some criticism of: where are you going there? But the staff that look after it I say are very, very good, and they look at each situation individually.

The other thing that's happened – and I'm very proud of this. We had a long waiting list and not through a whole influx of staff – although there's a little bit of an increase in that – but through a desire to fulfill life, we've turned the time around. For some time it took months. If the application is done up where it flows through properly, we can usually get a cheque into their hand in a three-week turnaround, which is quite remarkable. You'll find people for whom it's a month, five weeks, or six weeks if you have to go back and forth to get clarification, but it's there.

The biggest problem with the program is, however, that some people seem to think that it should have no criteria around it. "It's there. I want it. I deserve it." We can't do that. There are limits to it. As you noticed in my presentation, I indicated that this year we've helped some 9,300 people.

This ties back to the extended health benefits. We saw, for example, that a good portion – and don't ask me for numbers, because I can't give them to you off the top of my head. We were assisting a lot of the seniors' benefit people with supplements for dental work. Now, with this program, which we have modified, if you will, with the dollars that we get from Health and Wellness – and hopefully they'll be sufficient; I don't know if they will or not – we'll probably be able to give better service to the senior. If you were listening to what I read out to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, there was always just one-third and two-thirds left over. So if you're broke, you don't have it. Then they would go through one program, come back to us. It was duplication; it was frustration. So although it appears as sort of, shall we say, a ripple, it may in fact – and we hope it will – be an improvement for the low-rent folks. Am I happy that the seniors above the thresholds won't get it? Of course not. But looking at the thresholds where they apply, we feel hopeful that it's not going to be too big of a financial thing.

There was another one. You had referenced the rent supplement program, and I think I explained that we do target that.

So, hon. member, that's roughly the way we go about some of those things. I do appreciate your comments. I think you've looked at the information well. I will not apologize for not having the performance measurements in place. I am very strict with the staff. If you don't have the tool that will give us the performance measure that we want at the end of the day, then let's not have any there and let's work on it until we get something. I can assure you that with the ones where we don't have it yet, we're working on them. So hopefully in time, whether it be next year or the year after – and I'm not going to promise that it's going to be next year – we'll have the ability to measure our performance with the kind of accuracy that the folks in this Legislature deserve.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: Hon. members, the chair just wishes to bring to your attention that as per Standing Order 58(3) the first hour is restricted to the hon. minister or a member of the Executive Council acting on behalf of the minister and members of the opposition. That one hour has now passed, so any other member wishing to speak may do so now. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I rise this afternoon to participate in the budget estimates debate on the Seniors ministry, and it is certainly a ministry which is very, very important to many Albertans.

At this time, Mr. Chairman, I certainly would like to express my gratitude on behalf of the constituents of Edmonton-Gold Bar for the co-operation and the diligence of the department in supporting the new Ottewell Place Lodge. There were a number of department officials present last fall at the grand opening, and I have heard from the residents and I've heard from management that it is an excellent facility. There was a lot of care and attention taken, I believe, in the design of this facility by the Greater Edmonton Foundation, but it would not have been possible without the support of this government and this minister, and at this time I would like to express my gratitude to the minister and his department.

Now, there's more work to be done with affordable, accessible housing for seniors, but I would encourage all the members of this Assembly, if they are interested, to please tour Ottewell Place. As I said, it is a well-designed facility, and the residents seem quite content with its layout. There are certainly other areas of the city and other areas of the province that need this, and again I would encourage the minister to make affordable, accessible housing for seniors his top priority, the top priority of the department.

There certainly are issues around the population and the aging of the population in this province. We are a young, vibrant province. There are demographic pockets within the province where there is a significant population that is 65 and over, but on average, Mr. Chairman, I remind all members of this Assembly that 10 percent of Alberta's population is 65 or over, so we do not have an aging crisis. An aging population is not driving up our health care costs. It is not ensuring that affordable housing is too expensive. None of those things.

There are pockets in the province in various constituencies, including the one that I'm honoured to represent, where it is above that 10 percent, but it is not the problem that some maintain it to be. If you compare us in this province to B.C., to Saskatchewan, to Manitoba, currently those provinces have over 14 percent of the population aged 65 and above. Here, again I emphasize, it's 10 percent and seniors cannot be blamed for our high costs of health care delivery in this province. We've got to make sure that when Alberta seniors need medical attention or care, they're not made to feel guilty about this. It's the furthest thing from the truth, Mr. Chairman.

I note that there was a study done, and it was released I believe 18 months ago. It was entitled Alberta for All Ages: Directions for the Future. This was a policy initiative, and I'm sure it is a document that is guiding the initiatives of the hon. minister and his staff. You know, it is fine to begin to prepare and plan for a population over the age of 65 that will be perhaps 14 percent of the total population, and it is my information that we're at least a decade out, perhaps a little bit more. It'll be the year 2015 before demographically, Mr.

Chairman, we have 14 percent of the population over 65. This sort of prudent planning I would certainly encourage the ministry to continue, to develop plans and prepare and use the document Alberta for All Ages.

Now, I would also encourage the minister to ensure that all our support programs are inflation-proofed, that they have a mechanism. I would like to see it reviewed annually. We certainly know that the cost of utilities, whether it be natural gas or electricity, the cost of apartments – as more and more people come to the city looking for work, costs are going up, and seniors' incomes are not going up at the same rate. I think this should be done annually. There should be a review of all benefits. It should be tied to the consumer price index, the inflation rate, or whatever. I would certainly encourage the minister – and it was reflected in a bill we had in the last term of this Assembly – that the disposable income of seniors should be set up so that it is rated at the inflation rate or consumer price index increases. I would really encourage the minister to have a look at that.

Now, anytime we talk about seniors, we need to look at what strategies are going to be put in place by the Seniors ministry to improve the efficiency and the consistency in the administration of the Protection for Persons in Care Act. Mr. Chairman, I believe that while the Protection for Persons in Care Act is well intentioned, well meaning, it is not adequate. I'm encouraging the minister in charge of seniors to have a look at this. As I understand it, last year the reporting line received 499 reports, to be precise, of alleged abuse. One-third of these reports were substantiated, and that is too many. That is too many. That's more than 130 cases across this province.

We need to have a look and a study to see if we can improve the Protection for Persons in Care Act. Perhaps it's time we had a uniform set of standards across this province for nursing homes. There should be a minimum set of standards, whether it's a private, for-profit or a not-for-profit facility, so that families can be guaranteed that their loved one is going to be cared for. This is an issue that I really think we should have a look at quickly. I would like to see it done immediately, but I realize that sometimes the wheels of government roll slowly. This is very, very important. As well meaning as the Protection for Persons in Care Act is, again I would stress that I do not believe that it is adequate. This, I think, is backed up by the fact that one-third of reports were substantiated. That's just frightening, that some of the most vulnerable citizens of this province are without protection.

Now, a number of strategies have been implemented in statistics on seniors, and at the risk of repeating myself, I would again remind all members of this Assembly that we do not have an aging crisis in this province, that our seniors are not driving up the price of health care and making it unaccessible, and that they are not a burden. They built the foundations off our current prosperity, and I think that should be reflected in government policy. There should be a set of rules in place for seniors that will not suddenly change on them and reduce their disposable income to the point where they have to worry and fret about making ends meet at the end of the month.

Now, this gets me to the Alberta seniors' benefit program. I believe as of last year there were 180,000 seniors receiving benefits from the Alberta seniors' program, and there were, as I understand it, about 125,000 seniors in the province who were not receiving the Alberta seniors' benefit. Of the 180,000 seniors receiving benefits, there was just a slight decrease from the previous fiscal year. But it is interesting to note that of those seniors, Mr. Chairman, 126,000 received a monthly cash benefit that averaged $110 per month. I would be interested to know if the ministry has any idea of what percentage that $110 per household would be on a monthly basis if you were to compare that – what percentage would it be of the monthly budget for that household?

There were seniors who also received full subsidy of their health care premiums. Now, there are 126,000 seniors receiving full subsidy of their health insurance premiums. That tells me that household income is not adequate, that statistic alone.

I understand that all seniors eligible for a cash benefit received an increase of over 10 percent beginning on April 1, 2000. That was a result of a review of the benefit criteria. Is there going to be another review? I was encouraging the minister to do this annually. When is the next review going to occur? We need to, I think, encourage at this time the minister to improve the Alberta seniors' benefit program, because you look at the number of seniors who are receiving the benefit, and the program certainly is warranted. I think it's money well spent so that people can have a secure and safe retirement.

There were almost 11,000 applications for the special-needs assistance program for seniors, and that was a 43 percent increase in applications over the previous fiscal year. Now, this program provided benefits to almost 7,000 senior households, for a total expenditure of 13 and a half million dollars. Close to 8,000 seniors received support from this program, and it's interesting to note that the number of seniors is greater than the number of grants because couples submit one application. Benefits ranged from $100 to $5,000, Mr. Chairman, and the average amount per benefit was $2,000. Whenever you see an increase of 43 percent from one year to the next, that is quite significant. There is a significant increase in the special-needs assistance grants this year. It's going from roughly $16 million to $27 million. What sort of an increase in applications does the minister anticipate for this year? Does this tell not only that minister and his department but all hon. members of the Assembly that perhaps there is a large gap in the income of some seniors for what they need to have a respectful, decent retirement and what they're currently living on? Now, if the minister could clarify that for me, I would be very, very anxious to receive his clarification. If at some point in the future the minister would like to correspond in writing, I can certainly wait for the answers.

In conclusion, I too have a few words. I must express my dismay and my disappointment at the Alberta Seniors' budget having lost extended health benefits, the universal program that provided over $23 million in benefits to all seniors. Granted, in here there has now been a shift in this money; it has been reallocated to the special-needs assistance program. Now, I could be wrong and the hon. minister will correct me, but if there was this huge increase in the number of applications, is the minister not taking money from Peter, so to speak, to pay Paul? I hope not. I certainly hope not, but it is worth noting that $9.2 million has been reallocated to special-needs assistance for seniors, and as a program, Mr. Chairman, people need it. I understand that there has been a $14.5 million saving in benefits to seniors, but I just hope this isn't an issue of acceptability and that we are making seniors jump through hoops, so to speak, to get what they need to have an independent, respectful lifestyle. When we look at this and compare it or couple it with increases in health care premiums, I certainly hope that the hon. minister is going to get a chance to work in co-operation with the Health and Wellness department in that respect to ensure that the priorities are there and the commitment is there to provide for our seniors.

Now, in conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I would urge the hon. minister to continue to look under every available rock for money to provide affordable and accessible housing for our seniors population. I know the hon. minister is a very busy individual, but at some point, if he has not already had a visit, phone the Greater Edmonton Foundation and perhaps visit Ottewell Place. This hon. member and the residents would be very delighted to see the minister pay a visit.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. minister.

MR. WOLOSHTYN: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Hon. member, I do appreciate your comments and your observations on Ottewell Place. They're very accurate, and the Greater Edmonton Foundation has over the past few years literally replaced almost all of their lodges and upgraded them, Ottewell being the last one.

With respect to Ottewell, there's one further step, and I think I did mention it to the other member, but perhaps I didn't. We in consultation with the Greater Edmonton Foundation insisted that they not take down the old lodge and try it for some form of new program. They chose to enter into a pilot project of which we are supportive and a part of, financially and otherwise, with the Capital health authority to see how they may get into assisted living. The Greater Edmonton Foundation offers a whole host of suites, if you will, in lodges. A lot of their people really are at the need level where they could be in assisted living, yet they haven't crossed that threshold in a formal way. Hopefully, the experience in Ottewell lodge, the old one – you know where the site is; you've been there – will be that once they get it running, as it's not operational yet, we'll move it over and will be perhaps coming up with some creative things in other areas.

Your observations on the special needs are perhaps not quite accurate. The extended health benefit program is canceled, yes, and I went through it just a little earlier as to what was on there. The special needs per se is not going to $27 million but is showing much of the transfer for teeth and eye glasses for the ASB, or seniors' benefit. The $9.2 million is part of that special needs and that budget line, which bumps it up. Special needs as they were still stay at the $16 million or whatever the number is there. So that doesn't show in your copy, but that's why the number is in flux. That is going to be set aside. The program is not developed yet, although we're not turning away anybody on the seniors' benefit plan – and I stress: on the seniors' benefit plan – who may have an emergent need for either teeth or eye care. They would qualify for special needs. But that will be set aside and administered totally separate so I don't lose one program or blend it into the other, and that's a concern that I have there.

With respect to the jump in applicants, there are two reasons for that. The first one is that we relaxed the criteria for accessibility for the special needs, and secondly, the program, as it continued, became more well known. Consequently, we had more applicants, and if they meet the criteria, we're trying to meet their needs, if you will. If you add to that the fact that they do get one time a year up to $5,000 – some get the maximum; most do not. It's based on a specific need that they have, and they can apply every year. Yes, you are right. It is $5,000 per couple. Per household is a better way of putting it. Rarely would you have that need. If there were two individuals in the same household who had a specific medical need, I know the staff would have a good look at it. So your observations there are good.

We have an ongoing review of our programs, and yes, I would like to tie it to some kind of a factor to go up. We did give it a pretty good boost there awhile ago, and when the fiscal situation is such that we can do it, we'll be looking at it again. In the meantime we want to ensure and monitor that it is working right.

The special-needs program does give us that bit of flexibility, and I might say that that program is the only one of its kind in the country. I can say nothing but good about it, because people who are desperate and without income have a place to come. Generally, for the most part, as you know by the applicants versus the approvals, they know the criteria quite well and they do come away with assistance. So that gives us a bit of breathing room. The other part, as you know, is that when you go into COLA programs or whatever, they become universal. On a limited budget I am one of these people who want to target it more to the higher need, and that's why, for example, we're not going to get in a panic mode and just rubber-stamp a program that I wasn't too comfortable with and get it rolling along.

Now, when you say affordability – and this is one that we could have a good discussion on, I guess – the full premium subsidy for a senior couple is at the $37,000 level. That's roughly what a first-year teacher gets I believe here and in Ontario. That's not that small when you consider the whole picture, so we're pretty generous here. But remember that the partial subsidy, albeit not as great as we'd like it to be, goes up to $44,000. That will be a little higher now with this increase. I don't know what the numbers are yet. They'll be cranked out. So really when you look at where our efforts to help cut in, those thresholds are not that low. Would I like them higher? Of course I would. If I could lift them up tomorrow, I would. We're working on it. Maybe I'll get some leverage and get it up there. So we feel that perhaps it is hitting pretty close to the right balance.

I do have a concern, and I'll be very frank with you. When you get a threshold, you always have people on either side of it that may have a bigger need than is perceived. That's one thing that's giving us a concern. We're trying to work and identify if, in fact, they are there and if they are there what we can do about it. We know every household has a different set of standards around it.

Your comments about the seniors not being a problem I really appreciate. I'm going to take you along sometime to help me with my speech. I sincerely believe that you are one hundred percent correct. I'd go one step further: seniors are an asset, a current asset. I think that's one of the myths that goes around. Yes, if you get older, you may have more of a need for medicare than when you were young like you. I had that experience just lately. I'm damned glad we had a good health care system, or else you'd have a different minister. Overall, we can't attribute rising health care costs and all that to seniors directly.

One area that I think we'll be looking at as we're reviewing health care – at least, I hope we look at it – is the whole area of whether we can become more cost-effective. This is where we're getting into assisted living, getting the continuum from lodge to assisted living to nursing home. Nursing home care is quite high. I do believe a lot of the people in there could be better served in an assisted-living environment, where they have more independence. It's also more cost-effective, but you can't compromise medical care to cost. So that's one thing that I hope, in terms of the reviews that are going on, will be looked at. Maybe we can do some work there. We are targeting that housing. We are chiseling money wherever we can.

As you are likely aware, the whole area with the Protection for Persons in Care Act is administered by Community Development. We have a very close relationship with them, and we do investigate, if you will, virtually every case that's there. I have a much bigger concern over that. Some of it hit the media a little bit along the way. It's one thing to have an institution monitored. That's far easier than dealing with the situations where you have individuals who are subjected to abuse up to the point where we seem to require shelters for seniors and this kind of thing. This abuse – emotional, financial, whatever – is usually inflicted by somebody very, very close, a family member or a good friend. That's an area that really concerns me.

We've tried to collaborate and work with various agencies that are involved in other areas – seniors' fraud, that kind of thing – with the Calgary police, the city police. You've got the Wise Owl program, all sorts of programs that are coming out. They're to protect seniors in some way. We try to be supportive where we can, but we don't want to be intrusive because we don't want to wreck a good program by getting too involved in it. There is a lot of work going on. We are constantly trying to, you know, keep ourselves up to date and be as helpful as we can where we can.

Let's face it. I do have one problem when it comes to the abuse of seniors, and that's the lack of criminal charges being laid. That's something that I'll be discussing with the police, with my colleagues, and whatever. I don't know why that's there, but if we're going to stop the abuse, whether it be financial, out of some other province through the electronic media or not, we do have to have a mechanism of charges, some kind of retribution to have others dissuaded from doing the same kind of activity.

So, hon. member, I do appreciate your comments. We'll look through Hansard, and if there's something that we can give an answer to, we'd be glad to do it. Thank you very much.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I want to note that I was reassured when the minister said that the seniors are an asset. Being one, it's good to hear that the minister says this. I hope he really means it too. Having said that, let me get down to a few questions that I have for the minister, but before I ask those questions, a few general remarks.

The minister and the ministry that he presides over are responsible for both seniors' services and, of course, the provincial housing programs for both seniors and nonseniors who need help. Overall, Mr. Chairman, the minister's good intentions notwithstanding, the current budget that we're discussing is bad news for Alberta seniors. Not all of this is contained, of course, within the Seniors ministry budget. For instance, a 30 percent increase in health care premiums is certainly quite serious bad news for seniors. The cancellation of eye care and dental care adds to this new burden for seniors. The accommodation charges for long-term facilities went up in this province by an average of 15 percent in January 2002. Looking at the numbers here, the budget doesn't really provide a commensurate increase in rent supplement, for example, which is reference 3.3.2, to help particularly low-income seniors who are faced with these increases. I'd like the minister to comment on this. Hopefully, he will comment on this.

There seems to be sort of a considerable robbing here of Peter to pay Paul in the budget. One example: the Alberta seniors' benefit payments are being increased to cover increases in accommodation charges in long-term facilities for some seniors, but the fact is that the middle-income seniors are being asked to pay more and more, including, of course, the new burden of health care premiums and the costs that they will have to incur now for eye care and for dental care. These are seniors who have worked all their lives and have paid taxes all their lives. They do look forward to a comfortable retirement. These seniors generally live on fixed incomes. The point has been made again and again, and I think all of us recognize this, yet more and more taxes, charges, and user fees are being imposed, which they have to shoulder.

The bottom line here, of course, is that the ministry's funding in Budget 2002 is being reduced from $340 million in 2001-2002 to $275.8 million in the current budget that we are debating. This is a 19 percent budget reduction, Mr. Chairman. When I look at the number of dollars that are being cut, it comes to about $65 million, $66 million less than was the case in last year's budget. I may as well pose this question here. Under Major Strategies and Budget Highlights for 2002-03 there is a statement there in terms of what the ministry proposes to do. I'm looking at one that says: "Finalize an agreement with the federal government that will provide access to approximately $67 million over five years to assist Alberta communities in developing low-cost housing."

Now, there is some money there. My question to the minister is this. This money, I guess, became available last fall. What are the roadblocks in negotiating an agreement with the federal government on this? Would you please make clear where the problems lie, what the conditionalities are, whether or not it's the matching funds condition that stands in the way? If that's the case, please do let the House know about it. I'm curious. It's a substantial amount of money, and although it's over five years, it's something that certainly will go some ways in compensating for the budget cut here that the seniors are facing now in this year's budget.

Let me go on from there. The biggest single reduction as a result of this cutback in budgets is in the seniors' supportive housing incentive program. That is really one of the things that I worry about most. What are the consequences of this going to be for seniors, and in what particular areas? Referring here to line 3.4.1, the seniors' supportive housing incentive grants certainly have been more or less eliminated, from $31.7 million last year to only $1 million here. I'm asking the minister to explain why this is the case. Is it that the need has disappeared, or is there some other reason why this cut has been made?

While I'm on that data, I have some questions about line 3.3.2, rent supplement. It's the same as last year. With increases in the order of 15 percent or more even for the poorest of seniors, how is this amount likely to be adequate in meeting the dire difficulties that rent increases are going to pose to seniors who are going to look for adequate rent supplements?

Similarly, if you go to line 3.2.1, lodge assistance grants have also been frozen at last year's level. What are the consequences of freezing those lodge assistance grants? Lodges usually have our seniors who have the lowest incomes and very, very limited means to support themselves.

Then going down to line 3.5.4, social housing. The cut there is quite dramatic, from $71.5 million last year to $20 million this year. That really is quite a devastating cut, as I can see, knowing the needs that both low-income Albertans and seniors have for housing. I'm not sure how these funds were divvied up between providing for the needs of the homeless who are not seniors and seniors who need housing because of their situation of a low income and situations that border on poverty.

Mr. Chairman, there's perhaps one other question, if I can quickly go to that. Otherwise, I'm going to sit down and perhaps ask the minister to respond to some of these questions. Many other questions have been asked by other hon. members, so I won't repeat those. But these are some that I think perhaps need addressing here by the minister.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. minister.

MR. WOLOSZYN: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'll just go through these as best I can. Line 3.5.4, that you're referring to: that's flow-through moneys that we get from Treasury to pay on the debentures outstanding on a $2 billion portfolio, and that'll go up and down depending upon what the requirements are from year to year. That's largely also governed by the 17 agreements we have with Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation. That's flow-through moneys. You can't count that as an up or a down. Next year it may be up higher or down lower. I think a year ago it was 120 or something. That bounces all over the place, and that's just the way we have to present our budget. It sometimes does give people the wrong impression.

With respect to the lodge assistance grants I do believe that the grants, if you'll notice a little further, if my memory serves me right, went up last year. We subsidize occupied units, so consequently if there aren't going to be any more units, there isn't going to be a need for any more. So we can predict that one pretty close, and it arose from the year before as some more units came onstream. Although I'd like to see that one jump quite a bit because that would mean we've got a lot more housing onstream, that is not a problem.

The one that is going to be difficult is the rent supplement program. It has been a problem because of the rising rents. Now, what we have to do is – and you'll notice that although Alberta's economy is still pretty good, it's sort of flattening out – find a way where we can get more bang for our buck. The rent supplement goes into a private situation, as you know, and it supplements between 30 percent of the income to the market value. I don't like to be held too much hostage there. In McMurray, for example, it will be cutting in this spring, I guess. We'll have close to 120 units where we actually will triple our units there and have it for the same funding. There are some places where we're asking the people, the management bodies, to go see, rather than just automatically the rent goes up and we pay you, if they could find suitable accommodation. So whether it will create a problem down the way, I'm not sure. We're going to have to monitor that one very closely. We had troubles. I can anticipate some problems there, but everything doesn't work in a perfect world. We try to serve as many people as we can with it.

With respect to the two programs, the supportive housing, these were onetime funding programs. SSHIP came through Community Development. HAPI came through Health and Wellness and then was transferred to Seniors, where it was more appropriate, and those programs have been expended pretty well. They've run out. So it's not that anything dramatic happened. The money is gone. It wasn't replaced. We have a million dollars left, and that's why it went up from the high number down to a million dollars on that particular line, whatever it was, because we've left a million dollars in there carried over as a contingency fund for what might happen there. I'm hopeful that as things in the province improve and if we are able to access more money, we'll be able to go back in and get some more programs similar to SSHIP and HAPI, because quite frankly those have been very, very good programs. They've put units on the market. They've put them under the management bodies that looked after it, and those have worked very well. I'd like to see more of that happening, and I could say that it's a onetime thing.

You asked the question with respect to why we haven't signed off with the federal government. I'd ask you this question, and you can nod yes or no. If you were presented with a program that said, "We'll give $12,500 and you'll give $12,500 and we'll give it to a private developer and in 10 years he can own the building without any reference to the rent," would you call that affordable housing? Just a straight donation to developers. That's what was presented in August.

The ministers from across the country met with the federal minister, and I do have to say to the federal government that I did appreciate their co-operation. They went back and revisited the program and have indicated that they would work with each province separately. Some went further. For example, I think British Columbia was on. They got some retroactive stuff because they were into it pretty big, and they're now a have-not province, as you know, so they signed on quickly. Quebec had some things going, and I believe they've signed on. The other two I'm not familiar with, but just to give you an example, Newfoundland and Labrador were not interested in any new units. They wanted repair money. Alberta supported their position. We don't need repair money, although we could use some. We need new units. We have to put the program together in such a way that it targets the areas of need. We don't want to have it per capita, and we want to ensure that if we need the affordable housing in Edmonton, in Calgary, or Red Deer, or wherever, that's where it goes.

There's also the other component to it, which we are working on with them. We want to work out a program on the remote housing side but also for the communities. Our definition of remote is something we're working on. We've drawn a line through the middle of the province, and it's anything north of this particular line.

Other programs – and this is not laying fault; this is trying to profit by previous errors – were just straight, unilateral programs. So now we've got housing, for example, where we're short in one community and want to dispose of it in another. Because of our tie-ins with Canada Mortgage and Housing and the agreements we have, we can't sell this house and take the money and put it over here very easily. Sometimes we can; sometimes we can't. We're trying to make sure we don't get into that kind of a situation again. I'm very optimistic that we will end up getting an agreement signed. I was hoping it would be done by now. When the agreement is signed, that's when the onus is on myself to take it through the channels of government to ensure that we do have whatever assets we need to match that. So, consequently, we are working on it. We want to get a program that is tailor-made for Alberta, and that's quite frankly what we're trying to do.

The other comments you had I don't think were quite accurate. The accommodation charges in the extended health facilities did go up, and they haven't been touched for five or six years. You know what's happened to room and board in between. It's a difficult thing, but I for one do not believe that room and board should be paid by Alberta Health, for example. We've directed the support to the individuals on seniors' benefits. Low-income individuals who can't afford the increases were helped. No problem. The ones who can afford it didn't get help. You have to appreciate that in their nursing care, they are also getting with that – and this is appropriate, and I support it a hundred percent – all their health needs, one hundred percent.

Some problems are created. I don't know what the solutions are, but sometimes you have the split, where one of a couple goes into care and the other doesn't, and we're looking at the effects of that, then, because that does have an effect, and we're aware of it. What the solution is I'm not too sure, but whenever those come up, we try and deal with them on a case-by-case basis. So that's where part of that problem is.

If you compare, for example, Alberta to other areas of the country, our extended care rates are still very, very low, and some places, would you believe, actually asset test them. I'm dead against that, although I'm in favour of income testing. Some provinces asset test before they help you out. I believe in the income test, which I think is quite fair, if you will.

So I think, hon. member, I did cover most of your questions, and, like you say, the capital programs we'll work on. When we get more money, we'll try and get them going, but so far we've had a pretty good run on them. We've just approved a series of projects, so we'll have a bit of a lag. If we get it fairly soon, we'll look at it, but we won't be hurt too badly.

DR. PANNU: Mr. Chairman, just a very short question I forgot to ask. It's an important one. To the minister. In my constituency we have a fairly large Francophone population, and there was an attempt made by the Strathcona community to set up a Francophone seniors' facility there. I did make a representation to you on that. I wonder if there is in the budget a particular line item or items that you can draw my attention to that might assist the community in moving forward on that project.

MR. WOLOSHYN: I'm familiar with the project that you allude to, and I must say that, yes, I do recall the meetings. We did help them acquire the land, and the way our programs work, which I stand by, they have to raise their portion, if you will, of the money before they can qualify. If we have another SSHIP or HAPI program and they've got their funding in place, certainly they'll be looked at like anyone else. We've had good successes with that, and they're working quite well. As a matter of fact, I'm scheduled to be meeting with that same group again fairly soon. They assured me that if we assisted them in the acquisition of the property – that was my previous ministry – they would have a stepping-stone for fundraising. We've done that. We've made it very easy for them, you know, around the whole business, as you're well aware if you've met with them, and certainly if there's a program in place and they meet the criteria, they'll be right up here with anybody else.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. I'm aware that the vote gets called in five minutes, so I will come back during the debate of the appropriation bill with additional questions and comments for the minister, but just in the few minutes I have left, perhaps I can give him some questions that can be answered in writing.

In the debate on the Seniors ministry a year ago I was asking about funding for seniors' centres, and the minister said at the time that he was considering it. I'm wondering what happened to that.

I'm also interested in whether there's been any policy development or any cross-ministry work with the Department of Government Services on life leases or legislation for life leases or policies for life leases or any consumer awareness material being produced or anything for seniors, anything at all, around information for life leases.

Also, I notice that there's a change in the FTEs, the full-time equivalents. I'm interested in where those went, and I'd like a breakdown, please, of the subvote and the program, how many FTEs in each of those.

Additionally I'd be interested in how many or in what percentage of the new long-term care beds that the government was funding in this fiscal year and next, if the money is carrying over, the money went to private providers or private corporations as compared to the percentage of funding that went to public or nonprofit providers like Caritas, for example.

I'm wondering if there's any information the minister is able to share on the Polish heritage seniors' site, which is a mixed-use site just north of the Prince of Wales Armories in Edmonton-Centre.

I took the minister to task and he took me to task on the performance measurements that are listed. I've gone back and looked, and there are five performance measurements that appear in the documentation that has been made available to me. I notice that for two of the five there's no performance measurement and for the other three of the five they're measurements of satisfaction. So the minister takes umbrage at my points, but I will continue to make them. I think it's important that we have something to measure against, and satisfaction polls aren't it.

I'm looking at your core business 1, "financial support and information services to seniors." It starts out by saying that "many seniors have private pensions, savings and other sources of income." I'm just wondering if in fact this has actually been studied by the department. Or are you using statistics from Stats Canada? How do you know how many seniors in Alberta have other forms of income? So if you can provide me with that information, please.

I'm looking at strategy 1.1.1, "work towards adjusting provincial income benefits for lower-income seniors." I'm wondering if this was in fact achieved or what work is anticipated. It says: work towards adjusting this. Are you anticipating achieving this within this fiscal year? What's the deal with that?

Under 1.1.4, "simplify eligibility criteria and administration . . . to improve fairness and clarity of the program," do you have a target or, hey, a performance measurement on what's a reasonable period of time to take to process these applications for Alberta seniors' benefit? I know there has been a struggle in the past with that. I'm interested if there's a target that the department is now working with or a target that they've set to process these in a certain period of time.

I will say, when I look at goal 1.2, "access to information and educational material," that this department does a good job. It does one of the better jobs of all of the departments in the government. Once seniors get pointed in the right direction and get the telephone number, when they phone, they get the information. It's there. They also produce a number of information pamphlets that are very helpful, and I've noticed that. Of course, I do a lot of work with seniors in my constituency, and that material has been helpful.

I asked about the funding of the seniors' centres already. Particularly when I look at goal 1.2.1, the strategies under that . . .

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member, but pursuant to Standing Order 58(5) I must now put the following questions. After considering the business plan and proposed estimates for the Department of Seniors, are you ready for the vote?

Transportation

THE CHAIR: Comments or questions to be offered? The hon. Minister of Transportation.

MR. STELMACH: Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman, and good evening to everyone. Before we get into this year's estimates, I'd like to introduce our department staff who are with me this evening seated in the members' gallery and publicly thank them for the excellent work that they've done this past year. With us tonight is our deputy minister, Jay Ramotar; our assistant deputy minister of transportation and civil engineering, Mr. Rob Penny . . .

DR. TAYLOR: I don't have that many people in my whole department.

MR. STELMACH: Yeah, because you gave us all the responsibility without any money; that's why.

. . . Brian Marcotte, the assistant deputy minister of transportation policy and planning. Seated next to him is Mr. Gregg Hook, who is the ADM of transportation safety services. Next to him is Mr. Mitch Fuhr, who is the director of driver records. Next is Gary Boddez, who is chair of the Transportation Safety Board; Cheryl Mackenzie, the acting director of communications. Someone that's been very busy the last few days putting numbers together, our executive director of finance, Winnie Yiu-Yeung. Seated next to Winnie is someone who is familiar to many people in the Assembly, Mr. Tom Hong, who is the executive director of business management, and hiding behind him is my executive assistant, Ron Glen.

It is both a privilege and a pleasure to serve as Alberta's Transportation minister, even though many members of the media still refer to me as the Infrastructure minister, a portfolio that I haven't had for about a year. Hopefully, our media friends will get it straightened out before the next shuffle. I hope our Minister of Infrastructure, Ty Lund, hasn't minded me speaking on his behalf on a number of occasions. Seriously, I'm proud to serve as Transportation minister because transportation is so vital to Alberta's economy and quality of life.

I'd like to share a few facts about transportation and the department with you. Over 60 percent of Alberta's economy involves export trade, so a safe, efficient, and effective transportation network is essential if the province is to remain competitive. On average, transportation makes up about 16 percent of the final selling price of all goods and services and reaches 50 percent for some commodities. The province's rapid economic growth, of course, is accompanied by a significant population growth, and this growth means more traffic and more pressure on Alberta's highways.

With the transfer of responsibility for former secondary highways and key primary trade highways through our cities the department now looks after approximately 30,000 kilometres of roads and about 4,000 bridges along the highway network system. The network has a total replacement value of about $19.2 billion. Hence, transportation safety and transportation infrastructure are the ministry's main businesses. Alberta Transportation is committed to enhancing traffic safety, improving the province's highway network, and protecting Albertans' investment in the network.

Another core business involves supporting municipal transportation and water/wastewater infrastructure through grant programs. Alberta contains close to 135,000 kilometres of rural roads and about another 8,800 bridges, along with urban streets worth approximately $17.7 billion.

A third core business involves managing the design, construction, and rehabilitation of major water infrastructure such as dams and canals.

To do all this, we employ roughly 820 people and have a total budget of just over $893 million for 2002-03. The 820 people is a significant reduction, Mr. Chairman, from approximately 2,800 people in 1994.

The year 2001-02 was a very trying year for the department, and the upcoming year appears to have some challenges as well. I thanked the staff here with me tonight in my opening remarks, Mr. Chairman, and this is not just a mere courtesy. They have done an incredible job considering what has happened to the department over the last couple of years, especially this past year.

Alberta Transportation deferred roughly $290 million in spending, which represents about 20 percent of the total 2001-02 department budget. When I appeared before you last year, I talked about a $1.5 billion budget. A few moments ago I mentioned an $893 million budget figure, which is about 40 percent less than 2001-02. But the department has a job to do, and we'll work hard to accomplish its goals with what's given.

Safety is Alberta Transportation's number one priority and a factor in everything the department does. To further this goal, the new Traffic Safety Act will be proclaimed into law during this fiscal year. The new act amalgamates four existing acts into one and will introduce the province's graduated driver's licence system. Graduated licensing puts restrictions on new drivers regardless of age to give them more experience in less demanding situations before giving them unrestricted driving privileges. Graduated licensing has significantly reduced collision rates for new drivers in those jurisdictions which have it. I'm confident the same will be true in Alberta. I believe that in Ontario the reduction is close to 30 percent, so that's a significant improvement. The department and our traffic safety partners are currently reviewing fines and penalties for various offences, some of which haven't been revised in over a decade, and this is the last piece of the puzzle in terms of developing the act's new regulations.

Staying with safety, the department will evaluate the fatigue management pilot program for commercial drivers and recommend further actions in this regard. Another initiative involves standardizing the process to license the inspection and repair of out-of-province and written-off vehicles by private-sector mechanics and facilities. Overall the department will spend $24 million on transportation safety services.

Improving highway infrastructure and increasing safety go hand in hand. For example, an interchange reduces collision rates at an intersection by 45 percent on average, and twinning a highway reduces collisions almost 50 percent. Unfortunately, we won't be doing as much construction in the coming year. The department will spend approximately $455 million on construction, rehab, and maintenance of highway infrastructure.

Now, about $91 million of this will be spent on further developing the north/south trade corridor. That's about half of the 2001-02 total. The corridor will be a continuous four-lane link running from the U.S. border at Coutts to the Alberta/B.C. border west of Grande Prairie. We had hoped to finish the corridor by 2007, but the deferrals will push the completion closer to 2011. Since 1993 Alberta's trade with the United States and Mexico is up 300 percent and 400 percent respectively, and there's no doubt that there is need to complete this corridor.

The department also is implementing the strategic highway infrastructure program, or SHIP for short. SHIP is a cost-shared program equally with the federal government and will inject $92 million over the next four years. Our share is around $46 million, and that's into projects along Alberta's portions of the national highway system. That would be highway 16 and highway 1. The program agreement was signed in August, and the first project approved under SHIP is an interchange at Campsite Road and highway 16, near Spruce Grove. This is one of the most collision-prone intersections in the province, and we're confident the new interchange will reduce collisions significantly. Further projects under this program, SHIP, will be announced as they're approved, and again this is a partnership program with the federal government.

The upcoming year marks the first full year of responsibility for building and maintaining former secondary highways and key trade corridors through cities. Assuming responsibility for secondary highways essentially doubles our highway network system from about 15,000 to 30,000 kilometres. We will spend a hundred million dollars on these activities in 2002-03.

Now, the department also supports municipal transportation infrastructure and water/wastewater systems. The year 2002-03 is going to be a bit difficult for our municipal partners. We are reducing municipal grant programs to approximately $114 million, and this will affect the cities transportation fund with Edmonton and Calgary; the basic capital grant for smaller cities; the SIP, or street improvement program, for towns and villages; the RTG, which is rural transportation grants; and the resource roads new industry program.

The wastewater partnership is not affected by these reductions. We will continue to administer the infrastructure Canada/Alberta program, or ICAP for short. It's again another program that's cost shared equally with federal and municipal governments and targeted to green municipal infrastructure programs such as water/wastewater treatment upgrades and improving energy efficiencies in municipal buildings.

The province of Alberta is the only province that has municipalities at the table to make decisions as to where this money will be invested, and we're very, very proud of that fact. Every other province has excluded municipalities in the decision-making process, and the provincial governments themselves were making decisions on where they wanted to see their money invested. In this province our municipalities are equal partners, and as a result our contribution is $171 million over the next six years, but collectively with the two other levels of government we'll have invested $573 million into green projects in the province of Alberta.

Now, we had hoped to advance most of our share over the first two years to encourage municipalities to undertake their projects sooner, but due to October's spending adjustments, projects will be funded on a progress payment basis similar to what the federal government is doing, and in this year for ICAP we'll provide $32 million.

As I mentioned earlier, the department is responsible for the design, construction, and rehab of major water management infrastructure such as dams and canals. We undertook that responsibility from Environment. We will spend approximately $29 million on major water infrastructure during 2002-2003, but we will adjust our budgets to reflect need and emergency. So if there are some communities in the province of Alberta that don't have any water, especially the small towns and rural municipalities, we will certainly prioritize those projects as to the quality of the drinking water.

The final highlight is proclaiming the Railway Act and its regulations during 2002. This act and its regulations really mirror federal safety standards and will help to ensure the safe movement of products and people in Alberta's short line, industrial, and amusement rail systems. Even the small rail lines in Fort Edmonton Park and Heritage Park in Calgary are all regulated by the province for safety.

Now, Albertans have told us in the past that they don't want to see deficit budgets, and that is a challenge, especially in times of significant revenue drops. I believe that our department is doing its share to keep the province's books balanced. Many of the budget decisions mentioned will be painful, especially for municipal partners and partners in the road building and consulting and engineering industries. My hope is that revenues can rebound and that the department can get back to making an excellent highway system even better. After all, transportation is a huge part of Alberta's advantage.

That brings my comments to a conclusion, and I'd certainly be happy to answer any questions that you may have. For those that I can't answer this evening or if they're very detailed questions, we'll respond to the hon. members either in a written or verbal form at a later date.

Thank you so much, Mr. Chairman.

THE CHAIR: Hon. Minister of Transportation, one of the other ministers seems to be wanting to supplement your comments, and that's not allowed in supply. So we'll take the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar . . .

DR. TAYLOR: I'm just trying to help.

THE CHAIR: . . . without interruption, hon. minister.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I would like to at this time express my gratitude to the Transportation minister for the work that has been done to not only maintain but to try to improve the safety of Alberta's highways. However, it is unfortunate, I think, for public safety that the Transportation department had to take such a major hit on budget day, whether it's municipalities, whether it's the big cities of Calgary and Edmonton that were planning on expanding their LRT systems, or whether it be a rural area that is not getting road upgrades. I think that at this time we have to recognize that we have perhaps some of the best highway and road systems in Canada, but we also have to recognize that there is strain on the system, particularly in the cities. Now, as I understand it, the mayor of Calgary has been quoted as saying that it's a cannibalizing of city finances. That's the mayor's description.

MR. MASON: But he's a Liberal.

MR. MacDONALD: Not only that, hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, but he's very disappointed in this budget. This gentleman had plans to improve the infrastructure of his city, and it's not going to happen.

Now, we know what was promised earlier with gasoline taxes.

Both Calgary and Edmonton at one time were going to get 5 cents off the 9-cent-a-litre gasoline taxes. That was adjusted as a result of funding cuts. That was to be adjusted by 1.2 cents a litre, but now the rebate has been cut. That's a loss of millions of dollars that both Edmonton and Calgary were counting on. To just get the 1.2 cents now is a significant loss, and it is almost a social contract, I'm afraid, that has been broken. It wasn't a good budget for the motoring public.

Unfortunately, we have to consider what will happen in Calgary. First, let's take Calgary and the LRT extensions north and south. Well, certainly there are questions as to whether those projects can proceed, and Glenmore Trail and 18th Street S.E., Crowchild Trail and 50th Avenue S.W., and the Deerfoot Trail extension. Some people when I go to Calgary call it the Deerfoot 500, and I can see why. There's a story that is shared that a gentleman was visiting Calgary, and he was actually overtaken on the Deerfoot by a cement truck. This gentleman was doing 120 kilometres an hour, and the cement truck – voom. So the cement truck must have been very anxious to get to the construction site. Surely it must have been a house that they were building and they really needed that load of cement, but one would have to question public safety there. But the Fish Creek Bridge, the Elbow Drive and Glenmore Trail interchange: these are all projects where funding is now in jeopardy.

In Edmonton there are any number of projects that are in jeopardy. We need to consider that just on Monday city council here was going to go ahead with a $109 million LRT extension, and the city of Edmonton was relying on $75 million in gasoline tax rebate to fund the bulk of that extension. The city of Edmonton is very well managed. It's been very well managed for a number of years now, and there was no plan to borrow money or raise taxes or find private-sector partners. This arrangement of the 5-cent gasoline tax going to the municipalities was a sound arrangement, and I would encourage the department to restore that funding. Now, the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenarry was questioning the Premier today regarding this issue specifically. As I understand it, there's to be an announcement maybe as soon as tomorrow, and hopefully the hon. member is going to get some answers to his questions. Also, whenever we think of Edmonton, I would actively encourage the minister to consider the Yellowhead freeway and accept full responsibility for the access to the city off the Yellowhead. That would be excellent for the city of Edmonton, and it's also an issue of public safety. There is need of extensive upgrades to that road through the city, and I would encourage, at this time, the province to have a good look at this.

Now, the department has taken significant hits, as I've mentioned, but when we look at the cuts to the roads not only in Edmonton and Calgary – we look at this budget that is close to $900 million, and last year, in the election year, it was at $1.24 billion dollars. I understand that all these projects are going to be deferred, and hopefully they're not going to be deferred until the next election year. There's the election season, and then there's the paving season. I hope this is not a trend that this government develops.

Mr. Chairman, over the next three years municipal transportation grants will decrease by 70 percent. Funding for local bridges is to be cut to $9 million from $14 million. There will be a $7 million reduction in funding for repairs to provincial highways. The highway construction program will see a 53 percent cut, to $99 million from $212 million. The hon. minister was discussing the north/south trade corridor, and there will be a funding reduction, as I understand it, of close to 50 percent; that's almost another $100 million decrease. So this means rural portions of the corridor won't be completed until at least 2011, and that is, I think, four years from the date that was indicated in last year's budget.

Onetime spending of $631 million planned for 2002-2003 has been deferred. With these deferrals I certainly hope there's not going to be massive spending all of a sudden whenever the next election is on. It could be that we are lacking stability. I know the Alberta road construction companies have a considerable coalition developed. They're very concerned about this stop-and-start construction, and they would like to see it proceed in a smooth and orderly fashion so that not only can the government and the department plan, but they can plan as well, whether it be the acquisition of expensive machinery or whether it be planning their labour force. The availability of labour is always an issue, but it is an issue that I think we are blessed in having to deal with. It's a pleasant problem, if I could use that term, to have to deal with that, because it means that everyone who is willing and able can seek and find employment.

Mr. Chairman, I have a couple of questions before I sit down and cede the floor to another hon. member. One is in regards to the water management infrastructure. I believe the hon. minister noted that it was $29 million. Is that for the next stage of the Little Bow project? If the hon. minister could answer that, it's referenced on line 2.4. I'm sure that is correct, but if you could confirm that, I would at this time be very grateful.

At this time I will cede the floor to a colleague.

8:30

THE CHAIR: Hon. Minister of Transportation, do you wish to respond to each member as it goes?

MR. STELMACH: I'm making notes right now, Mr. Chairman.

THE CHAIR: Okay. Thank you.

The chair would apologize to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenarry that he didn't call him first. That was my mistake. You are the critic for the Official Opposition, so I'll call you now, and following that, Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I would certainly apologize for being a little bit late for the minister's opening remarks, but I'd like to thank him for being present here this evening with all of his staff who have joined us to provide answers to the many questions that we do have in regards to Transportation. In light of the budget, he and his department face many challenges, and we certainly wish him the best, because of all the departments Transportation was one of the departments that was hardest hit by the cuts.

The reason I was late tonight, Mr. Chairman, was that I was at a DARE graduation, and it was at one of the schools in the northernmost part of my constituency. It's so far north that I was almost in the constituency of Redwater tonight. It was a beautiful program, and it continued for quite some time, so by the time I got out of there, I didn't have much time to get down here. I wasn't certain if the new fines were in effect yet, and I didn't want to test that, even though I know the department needs some extra money. So my apologies.

I'm moving along here, I can assure you of that. [interjection] No, they don't pay us enough. Actually, I'll retract that.

Moving right along here, Mr. Chairman, my questions to the minister on the first go-round will be on the business plan and the number of goals that have been set out. The first one of course is to "improve transportation safety." Certainly we all want to see safe highways. We want our families and friends and all others that leave home to return safely. I know that in his planning he has a number of objectives, this being one of them. So my first question would be that we are moving towards a graduated licence program, and I realize that there have been problems in regards to graduated licences in other jurisdictions, primarily in the area of not having enough qualified people available to do the testing. I would like to know how this department is going to address that issue. As well, as we start a new program, certainly there is an education component that goes along with any new program. If he could outline to us just how that is going to be implemented and what the cost would be of the implementation and the education portion of the new program.

Mr. Chairman, in regards to safety, I know that the minister did do a study on fatigue management. He did it as a pilot program. If he could give us some indication as to when we can expect to see the results of that particular program.

Now, then, another situation has arisen in my constituency, and part of that is because we are fortunate enough to have two high schools in Edmonton-Glengarry, and of course with the number of students who become of age to drive, we have a number of driving schools in Edmonton-Glengarry. Some of the questions they pose to me are: how does the department audit these various schools to determine the quality of program that these driving schools have? As well, when it comes to testing drivers, are there any sorts of checks and balances that are incorporated as a follow-up on people that test for driver's licences now?

Part of my constituency of Edmonton-Glengarry is separated from Edmonton-Castle Downs by 97th Street, which is a major artery to the north through our constituencies and divides our constituencies, and certainly we do have a lot of traffic through there. As well, just to the south of my constituency we have the Yellowhead Trail, and certainly we get a tremendous amount of east-west traffic in that regard. When we are looking at this particular situation, Mr. Chairman, what we would like to know – there have been problems identified with trucks from other provinces entering the province, and when an inspection takes place and they are in need of repair, if the minister could give us some type of breakdown as to how many of these vehicles require repairs, what is done in regards to this. Do we have to take court action to deal with this problem, or is it dealt with on a compliance type of nature? People want to know and we always hear stories of just how unsafe our roads are, and we hear rumours about how unsafe our roads are. So, again, we would like to know from the department what they have found out about the condition of the trucks on our highways.

Now, as well, in regards to goal 1 in the business plan it has been indicated that just over 80 percent of occupants in vehicles are wearing seat belts. If we could get some sort of a breakdown as to the percentage of drivers wearing seat belts in urban areas as compared to rural.

Goal 2 in the business plan is to “improve planning of the provincial highway network.” Last year one of the goals of the department was to evaluate long-term funding requirements for municipal infrastructure in conjunction with the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association and the Alberta Association of Municipal Districts and Counties.

If the minister could please provide us with the recommendations from this evaluation. I'm certain that it wasn't the major cuts that we saw today, but I know that those will be taken care of down the road.

Goal 3 is to “enhance operation and management of the provincial highway network”. I know the minister would like to get these projects back on course as quickly as he can. Are there any contingency plans as to, if there is surplus money, whether any, first of all, will be allotted to the projects that have been deferred? For example, a rumour that was floating around today was: if the Alberta heritage savings trust fund is liquidated to pay off the debt, there will still be in the neighbourhood of between $6 billion to $7 billion, I would guess. Could any of that, would any of that, has any of that been designated towards our provincial highway network?

Goal 4 in the business plan is to “work with partners to provide quality transportation and water infrastructure.” The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar has certainly talked already about the drastic cut to the fuel tax-sharing rebate program. I know that we will have certainly in regards to this a lot more feedback from the various communities which were hit by this. So I will look forward to those answers and those that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar has asked, as well as more information I know other stakeholders are asking the minister.

Now, last year the minister undertook to evaluate trends in rural transportation. If he could please share the results of those evaluations and let us know what type of action he'll be taking there.

Goal 5 was to “improve access to increase competitiveness in global markets.” I know that we want to promote the establishment of an efficient grain-handling and transportation system that is based on commercial principles. If he could please enlighten us as to how this particular plan is moving along. What objectives and targets has he specifically set for this project this year, and how much money is directed towards this project this year?

Goal 6, of course, is to “continue to develop organizational and service excellence.” If the minister could please inform us what competency model is going to be implemented for managers. Would this be on the bonus system? Would the minister please table a report showing all performance bonuses paid in his department and the criteria for these bonuses?

Now, then, Mr. Chairman, at this time I will take my seat and cede the floor to other hon. members. I will have some more questions later. Thank you very much for this opportunity.

THE CHAIR: Okay. The hon. minister is going to pass, so I'd call on the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate the opportunity to rise and address the Transportation budget estimates for the year 2002-2003. I want to start with a few general comments about the budget, and I will elaborate more on this when I have an opportunity to respond to the budget in general.

I think that the difficulty we see in the Transportation department budget is, of course, connected to various financial matters that have transpired over the past several years with respect to the policy of the government, generally, towards revenue and expenses. I see that the reduction in the Transportation budget is severe and will have the effect of severely impacting the partners of the province. Those are in this case the municipalities, and I'll deal a little bit later with the question of the municipalities.

Mr. Chairman, I want to put on the record our concern with the dramatic reductions in this department's budget and the reductions in some other ones. We need to look at the causes of this a little bit before we can go on to talk about the estimates more specifically. One of the things that the government has been doing is spending the surplus in different ways. Following the program reductions in the mid-1990s, it created a lower level of expenditure, and the way the resulting sort of conceptual surplus has been dealt with was to invest those savings in various tax cuts. In particular, we have been on record as being opposed to the flat tax and to the significant decreases in the corporate income tax. What that's done is seriously erode the revenue capacity of the government and make it more dependent on oil and gas revenues than it was previously. We know that those revenues are volatile, and the result has been as we predicted, but contrary to what was said by the minister at the time, Dr. West, the government cannot sustain program spending on a stable basis as a result of the erosion of its tax base. We've seen it in everything from highways to children's services. The results are very serious.

The other problem, Mr. Chairman, is that when the provincial government does get a windfall, as it did last year in oil and gas revenues, instead of putting it into some sort of stabilization fund, the government is putting it towards the debt, and 75 percent of the surplus goes towards the debt. That's part of the reason we're in the mess we're in today. The government is proceeding along a dogmatic path rather than a practical and enlightened financial path, and the result has been that that money is no longer available. That amounts to literally billions of dollars that is not available to meet the current demand because it has been applied excessively towards the debt. It's a little bit like doubling up your house payments on your mortgage and failing to fix your roof. You pay down your mortgage, but when it rains, the damage reduces the overall value of your investment. So you're paying off an investment, but at the same time that investment drops in value. We see the same kind of situation here. It's a one-sided approach to looking after the financial assets of the citizens.

Of course, the third issue, besides the taxes and the money going towards the debt, is the massive expenditure before the last election on various energy rebate programs. That amounts to, if you include the money that was raised on the auction for the PPAs, about $4 billion of money that is also not available now when we need it.

So, Mr. Chairman, if you take all of those things together, you see a pattern of mismanagement of the province's finances in the billions and billions of dollars. That is one of the reasons why today, with a booming economy, with the most rapid growth and the lowest unemployment in the country, we have a budget like we have. There is no other reason why a province in this economic position should have a budget like the one that was presented yesterday, if it hadn't been for a very, very serious mess created by the stewards of our financial house.

Mr. Chairman, with those general comments on the state of affairs, I'd like to raise a few questions related to this budget. The first one is the reduction in the fuel tax revenue to municipalities. Now, it's not often that the current mayor of Edmonton threatens the government. He's not known for getting his back up. He likes to get along with this government, and I was very, very surprised to see Mayor Smith of the city of Edmonton actually threatening to sue the province of Alberta. That would be, I guess, a very unique situation. The fact is that up to $115 million over the next three years intended for roads and light-rail transit won't be there. I appreciate the minister's wish to have a kind of transportation system that he can plan and sustain and is stable, but unless other people in the government and in the government caucus make the right decisions on an ongoing basis, this minister and every other minister will be unable to do that.

Now, we've already seen that in 2000 the provincial government pledged that both Edmonton and Calgary would receive 5 cents of the 9 cents per litre of provincial tax that's charged on gasoline sold within the borders of those two cities. For Edmonton it amounted to about $68 million annually to spend on transportation projects of their choice, but last October the province announced a reduction to 4.25 cents per litre beginning in April, and that was going to cost Edmonton about $10 million. In Tuesday's budget the government again reduced the city's portion of the tax further, this time all the way down to 1.2 cents per litre, and that will cost the city of Edmonton, according to city officials, $52 million annually. So it threatens things like the completion of Anthony Henday Drive – that's been delayed – delaying the outer ring road beyond 2006, and the plans to expand the Quesnell Bridge to six lanes. We all know, at least those of us who represent the city of Edmonton and, I'm sure, particularly those MLAs in the west end, the great problems that people have on the Quesnell Bridge and the traffic jams that apply there.

Now, the mayor of Calgary has also gotten into the act. He's not necessarily as close a friend of the provincial government as Mayor Smith is, but I think he's a prudent gentleman as well. He is also complaining very, very strongly.

I know that expansion of the LRT is threatened. As well, I know that for those MLAs in the northwest part of the city of Edmonton, including the Member for Edmonton-Calder and the Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs, I'm sure that they will be as concerned as I am that the new $56 million interchange at 184th Street and Yellowhead Trail is likely to be significantly delayed. That, I'm sure, is going to create significant concern for the constituents of MLAs in the west end and the northwest part of the city, because we all know the traffic problems and the delays that are engendered because of the lack of a proper interchange at that location.

Mr. Chairman, I just have a few questions as well. One is that I'm curious about the Premier's statement today in question period that the mayors will be pleasantly surprised tomorrow. My question is: if there's a major financial announcement that's going to be made tomorrow to the mayors or at a news conference at Government House, why has that announcement not been included in this budget? That would be very, very curious and, I think, quite improper. If the government doesn't include major financial elements – all major financial elements – in the budget that's presented to this House, then I think there would be a very, very strong case for contempt of the Assembly.

So I'm very curious about the Premier's statement and curious to see what tomorrow will bring, because certainly if there's good financial news for the municipalities from the government that involves any degree of government expenditure, it ought to be included in this budget. I would appreciate the minister, if he's able, shedding a little bit more light on that mysterious utterance of the Premier. I think that there is quite a bit of confusion on the part of municipalities. I know that the mayors of the two major cities were contacted by the minister by telephone, but I think there's some confusion about the effective date of the reductions, and I'd be curious to have the minister clarify when the effective date of the reductions is going to be.

Mr. Chairman, I just want to close with some comments that, overall, the expenditure for transportation projects, both in the cities and in rural areas, is a problem. When the province and its economy is growing, to suddenly jam on the brakes on transportation when we already have serious transportation problems throughout the province and serious delays, serious congestion, and serious safety issues doesn't make any sense. It doesn't make any sense. It's counterintuitive to jam on the brakes on the spending for transportation infrastructure when the province is growing rapidly. It's less than farsighted. It is severely shortsighted, almost, you might say, willfully blind. I don't hold this particular minister responsible for this state of affairs, but I do hold the government over the past several years and its financial policies responsible for the state of affairs, and I look forward to the minister's response. I'd like to hear his point of view on how Alberta is going to manage with a booming economy and a shrinking Transportation budget.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I have a few comments tonight on the Transportation estimates as we see them before us. As I begin those comments, though, I would like to first acknowledge in appreciation the staff that's here this evening. It's nice to know that the department takes what we have to say quite seriously even if the government doesn't often do so. So thank you for that.

DR. TAYLOR: We do, Debby. We do.

MS CARLSON: I know particularly that you don't.

DR. TAYLOR: Oh, but I do. I can't believe you said that, Debby.

MS CARLSON: Well, I'll say it again if it would make any difference, but I doubt very much that it would, Mr. Chairman.

Transportation is an interesting study in terms of where it's going in terms of priorities with this government over the past few years. It's quite horrible, actually, to see the kinds of decreases that we've seen here in the last couple of years. There's no doubt that this government is quite happy to move forward with deferrals in significant areas to meet their long-term objectives, which seem to be solely focused on debt repayment. The problem with that, Mr. Chairman, is that we create a huge infrastructure deficit, which is not the kind of legacy that I think we should be leaving for this province, and is, in fact, very short-sighted in terms of the kinds of dollars we'll have to spend down the road in order to build the infrastructure back up to a manner that is sustainable and that will actually help support economic growth.

So I am wondering why it is that we don't hear some of the other ministers who will face the consequences in the longer term of not having proper infrastructure funding, like the Minister of Economic Development. He's happy to talk about all of the trade that we're experiencing outside of the province and the kind of growth in our economy, but that is greatly dependent on the kind of infrastructure we have built in Transportation and our ability to get our product somewhere else. We don't have any ports. We're a long way away from the major trading regions. We are in a central corridor for the north to the south, and that requires support. It requires infrastructure support, and we aren't getting it and won't be getting it. A 42 percent decrease is what we're seeing for the upcoming year, and we saw a decrease in the budget before that.

So it greatly concerns me, Mr. Chairman, that we are seeing the Premier meet his mandate of early debt retirement on the back of infrastructure funding in this province, and I would hope that we see a few ministers in his cabinet having the backbone and resolve to stand up and say that if we don't properly fund some of the basic services in this province now, we'll be facing huge problems in the future.

I have a couple of questions for the minister that I would hope we can get answers to in writing, because I think that they require some detail in terms of the response. We'd like to see him on the record and his department on the record in terms of how they feel about the fuel tax cuts to municipalities. We've heard quite a bit of dust being kicked up in the last 24 hours about this issue. It is a significant downloading of costs in my mind, and I would like to hear how the minister justifies it or, if he can't justify it, how he defended municipalities in terms of the kinds of dollars that they should be getting from the fuel tax cuts.

In addition to that, I'd like to hear the minister's position on the fuel rebate cuts. We've had quite a few letters and meetings with operators throughout the province who depend on those fuel tax rebates in order to be able to make a profit, not a gouging kind of profit, but a minimal kind of return on their investment that is now in jeopardy. Some of these haulers – particularly I'm thinking of those in the forestry industry – are facing serious concerns about the future of their business and how they'll be able to support their business in the future. We know that what happens is that they have to cut back their bottom line to where their profit margin is reduced. They'll start looking for cuts in other areas.

So what does that mean? Do we start to look at more potential safety risks? Do we start to look at lower paid operators in the vehicles themselves, which generates a whole series of other problems? Lower pay generally means lesser trained, less experience. The potential for other kinds of costs to accumulate is huge, and potential disasters as well. Anybody who has watched some of those logging trucks roar up and down those hills and across bridges knows that we want those vehicles to be meeting the highest degree of safety standards and that we want really well-experienced, well-trained operators in those vehicles. I don't want to see anything jeopardizing that and particularly not the downloading effect of cost-cutting measures. So if we could get the minister to take a look at that.

When we see such significant cuts in a ministry, we have to wonder what it is that justified them. My question to the minister is: have they ever done efficiency audits within the department to see whether or not these particular cost-cutting measures actually meet their long-term criteria and the kind of benchmarking that they're doing in the business plans? It seems to me that you can't possibly cut 42 percent out of a budget in any given year and be meeting any kind of benchmarks or any efficiencies. There's a point of no return when you cut back in a particular area where you spiral down into inefficiencies and mismanagement through no fault of the staff, and we have seen examples of that in areas like Children's Services, where the cutbacks have created unbelievable kinds of problems in delivering services. My concern is that this could happen here as well, Mr. Chairman. So if the minister could address that, I would appreciate it.

I was interested to hear his comments stating that Transportation supports wastewater systems in the province, and I would like him to expand on this. I didn't actually realize this, and now that I know this, I will be paying a little closer attention to this from an environmental perspective.

He talked about a mandate of the department being improving energy efficiency and upgrades to buildings, and he stated in his comments that none of these kinds of programs will be affected by these cuts. It seems impossible to believe that that's true, Mr. Chairman, because in a department whose main focus is transportation and who is facing a 42 percent cut, it seems that something in this regard would be in jeopardy. So if we could get some information on that, on the programs themselves, on what it is they expect to be doing and how it is that these particular systems won't be affected by the cutbacks.

Also, if we could have a list of the green projects that they're looking at and what it was they were anticipating doing at the beginning of the year, before the beginning of January or last fall when they started the budget planning, as compared to what they're doing now given the direction they were given by the Premier to look at cutbacks in the department. He made some comments about that being stretched a little bit over time, so we would like some information on the justification for why those payments will be interim now and why they thought in the first place that the dollars up front would have been a really good idea. So if we could get that information, I would certainly appreciate it.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to refer back to a question that we heard in the House earlier this week. In fact, it was one of the silliest questions I've ever heard in this particular House, and it was certainly the biggest puffball of this session so far. That was the question that came from the Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar when he asked the minister if the minister could explain who is responsible for the plowing of snow on highways. The question itself was a very silly question, but the concern that I'm sure . . .

MR. MacDONALD: Snowplow know-how.

MS CARLSON: That's right.

. . . the member was getting at is a relevant one and something that we have discussed before in this House and that I have had a number of concerns about. The Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar should know very well that this government decided some years ago in cost-cutting measures to contract out the plowing of snow on highways. That contracting out itself was an area of contention at the time and, I believe, still continues to be an area of contention. In spite of what this government happens to believe, there are some things that government can deliver more efficiently, effectively, and cheaply in the long run, and it could be that this is one of those areas. We haven't seen any definitive numbers come out in terms of the cost savings related to customer satisfaction. I'm wondering if the minister can outline for us the number of complaints they get on the snowplowing and how the highways are maintained now since it has been contracted out.

There have certainly been many complaints coming to my constituency. My constituency borders Calgary Trail, which turns into highway 2, and it is an area of concern for many of the people who travel throughout this city. We get complaints from all over the place. I myself have seen on highway 2 snowplows driving in the wrong direction on the highway and in unsafe manners many times in the course of my travels. We hear all kinds of concerns from some of the outlying areas, particularly with regard to the timeliness of how often the snow is plowed.

The minister, in responding to the question, talked about the contractors having to be out there immediately after a snowfall and to monitor, as well, snow removal and ice patches that may result from inclement weather. So I guess the question here is: what does immediately after a snowfall mean, and how long do they have to clear off patches of the road? Certainly. . .

MR. MacDONALD: What happens if it's overtime on the day the snow falls?

MS CARLSON: That's right. Who pays for that? It's a very good question.

So the problem seems to be that there's a different interpretation of "immediately after a snowfall." There must be some sort of a framework that these contractors work within, and we would like to see that particular criteria that's given out to them. The minister talked about the contracts, that the companies who won the contracts are held up to the same provisions that we had when the government itself used to snowplow and maintain the highways. That may be what's written on the paper, Mr. Chairman, but it doesn't seem to be the actual practice. So if we could get some information on that.

Compliance, I think, is an issue here, so who monitors compliance? Who monitors the complaints, and what kind of standards do they really actually maintain as compared to what it was when the government was running that particular show?

The minister talked in his answer about the cost savings. He said roughly 20 percent over the last number of years. So is that a 20 percent saving per year? Is that a cumulative effect? If we could get that information, I would appreciate it. He then went on to say that all those dollars are reinvested into the provincial highway system, but we know that isn't accurate, Mr. Chairman, because of the kinds of budget cutbacks here. So what actually happened to those dollars? Were those the savings that the government was looking for when they shrunk this department's budget? I don't think those dollars were reinvested. If they were, we'd like to see where, and I hope it's true that that's where the money went, because definitely road maintenance is a very big issue and is something that we hear a great deal about.

I know that a number of my colleagues have some other questions, so I will cut my remarks short now. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I have a few additional questions for the minister at this time, and I'll start with the government and lottery fund estimates again for the Transportation department. I have a couple of questions. The first one is regarding line item 2.7.2, consumption of inventories. It's listed as a $15.5 million amount. If the hon. minister could answer in writing, I would be grateful. Is that consumption of inventories only salt, sand, and gravel? [interjection] Okay. That's exclusive. That's the entire amount: just salt, sand, and gravel? [interjection] I'm sorry. Okay. Thank you very much, Mr. Minister.

If we could please get a breakdown on the premiums, fees, and licences. There is targeted, to be precise, $14.46 million. What are all these premiums, fees, and licences that are collected as revenue by the department? I see a slight decrease from past years, and in light of what has gone on with Government Services and the skyrocketing fees or taxes that have occurred in that department, it's odd that one department would have less revenue from premiums, fees, and licences.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have some questions regarding the Driver Control Board. I understand that there were 7,335 cases involving drivers applying to have their suspended licences reinstated. Is the minister anticipating an increase in the caseload for this year? Also, in regards to the Motor Transport Board there were heard before that board 8,981 cases with respect to commercial carriers not meeting Alberta safety fitness standards. If there are close to 9,000 semis in this province that are not meeting our safety fitness standards, if I am interpreting this right, what number is the minister anticipating for this year? Certainly I hope to hear back that it will be a decrease.

Now, I have some questions regarding the performance measure on the "mechanical safety of commercial vehicles." I understand that there are two parts to this. There is a vehicle that is inspected if it requires the attention of a licensed mechanic. I don't see the word "licensed" in there, and I would really like to see that next year in the hon. minister's report: licensed mechanic. These are big, complex machines, and I don't think just anyone should be working on them. Also, the "percentage of inspected vehicles." As I understand it, in the last recorded fiscal year that this occurred, 2000-2001, there were 447 inspections. It is noted that there were "nationally recognized criteria" to perform these inspections. Could the minister please share with members on this side of the House those nationally recognized criteria and why there were 64 sites across the province used to conduct these 447 inspections?

I'm curious to know why only between the months of June and November. Those are the good driving months in this province, and I would like to know why there would be no inspections – and please don't tell me that it's because the weather is cold and the inspectors are delicate, because there are a lot of people in this province, whether they're farmers or working in the oil patch, conducting business between November through the winter months until the following June. I would be of the view that perhaps this inspection process is not really thorough if it's not done 12 months of the year.

Now, the next traffic safety measure that I would like to discuss this evening in budget estimates is the "involvement of drinking drivers in casualty collisions" in Alberta. I certainly hope, Mr. Chairman, that after the budget yesterday the minister is not relying on high liquor costs to deter and reduce drunk driving, because it is unfortunate. There has been a slight improvement in the number of fatal collisions that have occurred because of alcohol that has been consumed by the operator of the vehicle. Now, this has dropped slightly, but I think there can be significant improvement here. I would like to know what the hon. minister has planned to reduce this collision rate involving drunk drivers. Is it going to be a better driver education program or maybe new legislation that's tougher respecting impaired drivers? I think there can be significant improvement made to reduce the involvement of drunk drivers in fatal and injury collisions in this province. There seems to be modest progress, but I think that through work there can be more than modest progress made.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have a few more questions. As I understand it – and I've been looking in the budget estimates, and perhaps I can be guided – there was an agreement for the infrastructure Canada/ Alberta program, called ICAP. This program was signed a year and a half ago, in October of the year 2000, and the program announced $513 million to enhance the infrastructure in not only rural but urban municipalities in Alberta over the next six years. This is a program that is in effect, I believe, until 2005, our centennial year. Projects eligible under ICAP include green municipal infrastructure or water supply and treatment reservoirs and wastewater treatment facilities as well as infrastructure supporting transportation. Projects will be funded on a cost-shared basis that's one-third, one-third, and one-third. That's respective levels of government: federal, provincial, and municipal. I understand our contribution to this entire project was to be $171 million. Can the minister explain, considering the tremendous hit that the department took with this budget, how much if any of that $171 million budget will be jeopardized because of this boom/bust, binge-and-singe budgeting that we have experienced in this province?

This hon. minister may not be involved in this program, but I have a strong suspicion that the department is. Under the authority of the Government Organization Act the hon. minister is responsible for assisting in the provision of municipal water supply and wastewater facilities. I am curious as to what initiatives, in light of what happened in Walkerton, Ontario, the department is taking to protect our drinking water not only in Edmonton but across the province. It's very important, and we seem to forget very quickly just what a benefit a source of clean drinking water is, and we have such clean, affordable, accessible water in this province. In that way, too, we are blessed.

Now, my final question at this time for the Minister of Transportation. There are to be secondary highways, two-lane highways, to be acquired by the province. As I understand it, in this calendar year, in the fiscal year of 2002, Mr. Chairman, there are to be 11.12 kilometres of road acquired and to be maintained as well by the province. The province through the Ministry of Transportation assumed responsibility for the construction and maintenance. Now, where is this 11.12 kilometres of highway located, and is this deal going through?

Again, in conclusion, I would like to encourage the minister that now is the time to please the mayor and the councillors of this city, including a couple of former members of this side of the House, and help out with the management of the Yellowhead. Also, Mr. Chairman, I would urge – and it's only a little over a year ago that a new financing model was heralded for transportation for the cities of Edmonton and Calgary, and of course what was implemented was the policy of 5 cents per litre for all taxable gasoline and diesel fuel delivered for sale in both Edmonton and Calgary. This was to be provided to those two cities respectively in the form of grant funding. To provide this funding and then take it away is simply not fair after they had decided how they would like to spend it over a period of time. It's just not fair, and it is unfortunate that one level of government would have to go to court against another in this province. Hopefully it won't come to that. That was a program that everyone agreed on, and I think it should be reinstated.

With those questions, I will eagerly await written responses from the minister. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I just have a few more questions here for the minister. Local governments were very pleased when the province assumed responsibility for secondary highways. I think it was a good idea. The problem we now hear, as has been expressed by municipalities, is that they put in their priority list as to which roads they would like to see paved, yet when the approval comes, their priorities are not being granted in the same order that they prioritized their wish list. So if you could please give us some insight into what happens once they have prioritized which roads they would like paved. What happens when those requests go to your department and then come back out to them?

Now, as well, I have just a few questions here that I'd like to ask tonight, particularly on program 2, construction, upgrading, and operation of transportation infrastructure. On line item 2.1, transportation safety services, how many cases were heard before the Transportation Safety Board in 2001-2002? Do you have any forecast as to whether the caseload is going to remain the same, increase, or decrease in the year 2002-2003? As well, I see that the Traffic Safety Board is getting a fairly good boost, from $557,000 to $785,000. If we could get some type of breakdown as to where these extra dollars are going to be spent by the Transportation Safety Board.

As well, we've been hearing more and more talk about requiring the use of electronic on-board recorders for commercial vehicles. Has any more thought been given to the use of electronic on-board recorders? We also think that this would be a great asset in encouraging the safe conduct of commercial carriers and drivers.

As well, if the minister could please also give us an update as to where we are in regards to the number of hours that can be driven by drivers per day and per week. Are these going to be increased? And what are the new regulations in regards to weight restrictions? What changes are going to occur in this regard?

Now, then, on line item 2.2, could the minister provide us with an update on the accident statistics on the north/south trade corridor?

One of the questions that I was very interested in today that I heard asked of the minister was this whole idea of toll roads. I'm wondering if this big announcement that cities are going to get tomorrow is going to include allowing them or forcing them to implement toll roads.

For line item 2.3 I just have a few questions. One of those, of course, is that I see that – and I believe this is the first time that roads are being funded with lottery dollars. This seems quite ironic to me when we just saw in this budget that the community lottery boards were abolished – $50 million that went directly into communities, where they have priority over how that money is going to be spent – and here we see in this year's budget $15 million of new lottery money going into roads. Again, this reminds me of the onetime funding, part of the reason why we are in the situation we're in today.

Another area of concern is that when we look in the budget for resource roads, we see that the amount is going to be decreased from $33 million to $14 million. If the minister could provide us with a list of which projects are going to be cut and what industries these will affect. As well, have there been any negotiations and deals made with companies to have them build their own roads and perhaps get a tax break somewhere else?

Certainly, destroying the Alberta cities transportation partnerships by cutting it from $125,600,000 to $16,100,000 is totally unfair. The municipalities have been responsible and drafted long-term transportation plans. Now the government has put those in the shredder. Along with other tax increases this government has implemented, I think what the result of this is going to be is that certainly municipalities are going to face increased taxes.

I think with those and with the questions the other hon. members have asked of the minister this evening, Mr. Chairman, that concludes the questions that I have for the minister. Thank you.

THE CHAIR: I guess we'll call on the hon. minister for summation.

MR. STELMACH: Certainly. Having listened to all of the good questions from the hon. members and having heard that our members would like all of their questions responded to in writing, I will undertake to do that, Mr. Chairman, and will do it, of course, as expeditiously as possible.

I would suggest that we go to the vote. Thank you.

THE CHAIR: After considering the business plan and proposed estimates for the Department of Transportation, are you ready for the vote?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

Agreed to:

Operating Expense and Capital Investment $893,282,000

THE CHAIR: Shall the vote be reported? Are you agreed?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE CHAIR: Opposed? Carried.

The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would move that the Committee rise and report progress and beg leave to sit again.

[Motion carried]

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

MR. LOUGHEED: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of Supply has had under consideration certain resolutions, reports as follows, and requests leave to sit again.

Resolved that a sum not exceeding the following be granted to Her Majesty for the fiscal year ending March 31, 2003, for the following department.

Transportation: operating expense and capital investment, $893,282,000.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Does the Assembly concur in this report?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Opposed? So ordered.

MR. HANCOCK: Mr. Speaker, in light of the fact that this is our first day in Committee of Supply and we've made marvelous progress, I would move that we adjourn until 1:30 p.m. tomorrow.

[Motion carried; at 9:38 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Thursday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Thursday, March 21, 2002

1:30 p.m.

Date: 2002/03/21

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

THE SPEAKER: Good afternoon.

Heavenly Father, as we conclude this week's deliberations and return to our constituencies, we pray that we will be renewed and strengthened in our commitments to better serve our constituency and all of the people of Alberta. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Visitors

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Community Development.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As you and all members of the House are likely quite aware, today is recognized as the International Day for the Elimination of Racial Discrimination, and we do have one of three special guests here with us today to help celebrate and salute this occasion. Momentarily we will be joined by Charlene Hay, the program manager of the Northern Alberta Alliance on Race Relations, and also by Lan Chan Marples, a board member of that organization. In the meantime I want to introduce to you Mr. Nicholas Ameyaw. He is an education co-ordinator and consultant with our Human Rights and Citizenship Commission. I would ask Nicholas to please rise and accept our thanks for his excellent and outstanding work in this very important area.

head: Introduction of Guests

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

MRS. ADY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure this afternoon to introduce the president of the Alberta Roadbuilders & Heavy Construction Association, Mr. Allan Lowe. As well, he has with him Mr. Greg McCaughey, manager of Inland Cement, and Dennis Locking, manager of Volker Stevin Contracting, who is also one of my constituents. They are seated in the members' gallery this afternoon, and I would ask them to please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

MR. CENAIKO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly a choir that was here in the Legislature at noon and was singing to members of the public that were in the Legislature today. It's a high school choir from Muenster, Saskatchewan, who has traveled from Muenster to Edmonton for a field trip. They had the opportunity to take in an Oilers game last night as well as visit West Edmonton Mall, and they came by the Legislature today to provide their singing expertise in the rotunda. They're located in the public gallery, and they include teachers Mr. Peter Penrose, Mr. Glen Hepp, 46 students from the Muenster high school, and parents Mr. Tom Gossner, Mrs. Theresa Wassermann, Mrs. Colleen Bernhard, Mrs. Cathy Moorman, Mrs. Janet Kiefer, and Mrs. Anita Renneberg. I'd ask them to stand and have the Assembly offer a warm welcome.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today and introduce to you and through you to all members of the Assembly 15 guests, all of whom are seated in the public gallery. These guests are Alex Badre, Ghita Badre, Jette Badre, Kate Cartmel, Ashley Griffin, Margaret Griffin, Mary Griffin, Craig Harris, Rachel Harris, Amy Smale, Bobby Smale, Chris Smale, Christopher Smale, Devon Smale, and Coleen Taylor. It is Ashley's birthday today, and I take this opportunity to congratulate Ashley on her birthday.

These guests are diabetic children accompanied by their families, and the families are members of an advocacy group called Parents of Kids Experiencing Diabetes. I'd ask all these guests to please rise and receive the warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Rocky View.

MS HALEY: Thank you so much, Mr. Speaker. It's a real pleasure for me today to be able to introduce to you and through you to the Assembly two young people sitting in our gallery up here. One of them happens to be my researcher, Matt Steppan – he's number two in command of our PC caucus research, just a really incredible young man – and his fiancée, Pamela. They're getting married this spring, and I would like them to stand and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Community Development.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. International Day for the Elimination of Racial Discrimination is such an important day that it warrants a double introduction. Our guests have now arrived in your gallery, and I'd ask Charlene Hay, the program manager, and Lan Chan Marples, board member, from the Northern Alberta Alliance on Race Relations to please stand, along with Nicholas Ameyaw, and receive our collective thanks.

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, in the members' gallery today I have the pleasure of introducing to you three grade 6 classes from Westlock elementary school. I had a chance to meet with them earlier today, and they continuously invigorate one about the reality of the world. They're accompanied today by parent helpers Bonnie Arth, Tina Wold, Wanda Keyser, Tina Gatzki, Shannon Ching, Tami Hardie, Linda Bell, Val Quast, Shannon Ruth, Gerry Craig, Tammy Bell, and bus driver, Connie Lyons. I'd ask them to rise and receive the warm welcome of the hon. Members of the Legislative Assembly.

head: Ministerial Statements

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Community Development.

International Day for the Elimination of Racial Discrimination

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, I rise to recognize the International Day for the Elimination of Racial Discrimination, which is today, March 21. This is a significant day, indeed, but the most important thing to remember about today is that the elimination of racial discrimination is much more than one single recognition or much more than a onetime special event. It is, in fact, a lifelong commitment that we can make that will help to make our own life and the lives of others better in our communities, in our province, and in our country.

Alberta is truly a remarkable province because of the diversity of people who live here. Whether our ancestors were among the original peoples of Canada or came later, our heritage builds a landscape as diverse and rich as the province's geography. Albertans of all races, religions, and ethnic backgrounds contribute immeasurably to our communities, to the economy, and to the political, social, and cultural fabric of our society.

We all want and strive for a province where everyone is treated fairly. This means that we all need to work to develop a province free from racial discrimination. We have a challenge to teach ourselves and our children the skills and knowledge that will allow us to build a greater awareness for human rights and a culture totally free of racism and discrimination.

Through the Alberta Human Rights and Citizenship Commission and the human rights, citizenship and multiculturalism education fund the provincial government supports community initiatives that complement our own educational efforts to end racism and to uphold the fundamental principles of human rights for all. To this end, our government has supported many projects over many years, and during the last year these projects included such things as conferences, development of educational resource materials for schools, projects related to health care delivery, leadership programs for aboriginal and ethnocultural youth, and development of strategies on ways to prevent discrimination.

A few brief examples, Mr. Speaker, include funding provided for such projects to the city of Calgary Cultural and Racial Diversity Task Force, the Alberta Teachers' Association, the Alberta Network of Immigrant Women, Calgary regional health authority, Northern Alberta Alliance on Race Relations, Calgary Immigrant Aid Society, Alliance Jeunesse-Famille de l'Alberta Society, Boys and Girls Clubs of Edmonton, and the list goes on and on. These organizations throughout Alberta are the ones that are spearheading many excellent projects, projects that are committed to fostering racial harmony.

One such group, of course, is the Northern Alberta Alliance on Race Relations, some of whose members were just introduced in the Speaker's gallery. I commend NAARR, as they are colloquially known, and the many other individuals and organizations in Alberta who take daily action against racism and discrimination, help bring about change, and promote respect, dignity, understanding, and acceptance for all Albertans. I recognize also Dr. Celia Smyth, the chair of NAARR, for her excellent work in that regard.

Yesterday in this House, Mr. Speaker, in recognition of the International Day for the Elimination of Racial Discrimination five of our own government members spoke in the language of their birth – in Gujarati, in Arabic, in Polish, in Vietnamese, and in Ukrainian – as a symbol of the many languages that flourish and the many cultures that we so proudly embrace in this province.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, human rights, the prevention of discrimination, and the elimination – the total elimination – of racism are responsibilities for each and every one of us. Therefore, I encourage all members and all of Alberta's society to act very responsibly in this regard, and in the words of Mohandas Gandhi: "Be the change that you want to see in the world."

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to be able to respond on behalf of the Official Opposition to the minister's statement on the International Day for the Elimination of Racial Discrimination.

To start, I'd like to highlight the events sponsored by the community. There was a launch at St. Joe's high school, a family dance sponsored by Dickinsfield Community Partnership, a conference organized by Changing Together, A Centre for Immigrant Women, an interfaith prayer service at city hall, and events at the University of Alberta, NorQuest College, and Grant MacEwan College. Still to come are a visual art exhibit at the Edmonton Japanese Cultural Centre, and the annual Harmony Breakfast. Those, Mr. Speaker, are just the events in Edmonton. My thanks to the Northern Alberta Alliance on Race Relations for their organization and promotion of these events. The community is leading the way here.

I spoke at the Changing Together conference this past weekend, and participants challenged me on my asking them for patience and asking for the help of the community in making change. They were right. In only six short years in politics my version of a reasonable time to get things done has slowed to molasses. If I might make a few suggestions on how the government could show leadership in eliminating racism and welcoming new Canadians and immigrants: strengthen and update the foreign qualifications program, support programming like the Multicultural Health Brokers, give adequate funding to schools for ESL training, work with community-based nonprofits like the Mennonite Centre for Newcomers or the Catholic Social Services' settlement services to support the programs they already offer. Ask them what else is needed – they are the experts – and of course continue and strengthen the commitment to education on human rights. It is ignorance that causes much of the discrimination we see.

Colour Me Human is the theme this year, a challenge for all of us to be vigilant and to acknowledge our part in providing leadership and action to eliminate racial discrimination in Alberta.

Thank you.

head: Oral Question Period

THE SPEAKER: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Provincial Fiscal Policies

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to congratulate the Premier for now holding the record on the fastest budget flip-flop. Perhaps the one-year budget should be renamed the one-day budget. My questions are to the Premier. What motivated this government to flip-flop on its decision to provide funds to municipalities? Was it the threat of a lawsuit?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, there is no flip-flop or flop-flip. It was a decision that was made by the Treasury board to use the surplus from this year's budget, the 2001-2002 budget. It has nothing to do with the budget that was introduced by the hon. Minister of Finance just a few days ago. It refers to the 2001-2002 budget. There has been absolutely no flip-flop whatsoever.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Less than two months ago the Premier told teachers, parents, and children: get it through your heads; there is no more money. Yet today millions of dollars mysteriously appeared for transportation projects. How can Albertans believe anything you say?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, this is to fulfill the final year of a three-year commitment to the municipalities. Relative to education in 2001-2002 there were significant increases to the education budget. In 2002-2003 there are further significant increases for education.

While those increases have taken place, unfortunately funding to transportation has been cut. There have been no increases. There have been reductions.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: what kind of budgeting process do you have that allows for such a huge amount of onetime spending 11 days before the end of a fiscal year? Where's the stability in this?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, as I explained to the media yesterday – and the hon. leader was there – no one can predict, you know, with absolute 100 percent accuracy what the situation is going to be at any particular time. We saw a decline in revenues prior to September 11. Following September 11, the horrific events had tremendous impact not only on Alberta but on Canada and indeed the rest of the world, and adjustments had to be made. There has been a recovery, albeit slow, since that particular time, and it's anticipated that our surplus will be higher than projected when the fourth-quarter report is brought in at the end of June.

THE SPEAKER: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Heritage Savings Trust Fund

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday's announcement of the Financial Management Commission clearly states that part of its mandate is to review the planning and strategy of the heritage fund. However, yesterday the Premier told reporters that the heritage fund is not on the table. My questions are to the Premier. Is this another flip-flop, Mr. Premier? Is the heritage fund up for discussion or not?

MR. KLEIN: In terms of this caucus, the heritage fund is not on the table. That's not to say it might not be on the table in future years. You know, there is nothing wrong with examining the future of the heritage fund. It's an ongoing function of the Minister of Revenue, Mr. Speaker, but I can tell the hon. Leader of the Opposition that it has never been brought to caucus in a formal sense, at least not in recent times, relative to what this government might do with respect to the future of the fund.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that the Premier has blamed Mazankowski for his government's decision to raise the health care head tax, how can Albertans be assured that he will not blame the Financial Management Commission when he announces that he plans to liquidate the heritage fund?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I've heard of silly speculation in the past. You know, the media speculate all the time, but at least they do it in a reasonable fashion. This is the most unreasonable speculation that I've ever heard in my entire political life.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Is the Premier prepared to liquidate the heritage fund, that currently serves so many Albertans and is supposed to be for our children and grandchildren, just to establish his own legacy by paying off the debt nearly 20 years ahead of schedule?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, as I said before, the heritage savings trust fund is not on the table in the formal sense relative to its future or its use. That's not to say that people are prohibited from coming forth with ideas on how the fund should be used or how investment policies should be changed.

I know what the Liberals would do. They would reorganize themselves into the RBP – that's the really big party – and they would spend the money and have a really big party. That's what they would do.

THE SPEAKER: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Workers' Compensation Board

MR. MacDONALD: Under this government, Mr. Speaker, payroll taxes in this province are skyrocketing. Health care head taxes are going up by 30 percent, while WCB premiums increased last fall by 27 percent, and there's talk of another double-digit increase this year. Businesses big and small can only handle so much of this government. To the Premier: will the Premier disclose to the House the retirement allowance paid to the recently retired WCB CEO, Mary Cameron?

Thank you.

1:50

MR. KLEIN: Well, Mr. Speaker, I don't have those figures at my fingertips.

Relative to the preamble to the hon. member's question, he alluded to businesses and others being hurt and so on. Well, I would think that the Investment Dealers Association of Canada represents many, many organizations and businesses and individuals who invest in businesses. The Investment Dealers Association says:

We are encouraged by Alberta's commitment to sound fiscal management in spite of the difficult economic conditions of last year. The prudent planning assumptions of this Budget, combined with an enviable record on tax reduction and spending control, are setting the stage for continued strong economic performance in Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, I would believe and I'm sure every reasonable thinking individual would rather believe the Investment Dealers Association of Canada than the Alberta Liberals.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the hon. Premier: given that your reported half million dollar retirement package is public information, don't you think it's fair that Alberta businesses paying these skyrocketing rates have a right to know what the retirement package is of the CEO of the WCB?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, it's a matter that is adjudicated within the WCB. I would remind the hon. member that WCB moneys are not tax dollars. They are contributions paid in the form of premiums by businesses. Of course, there is a legislative responsibility relative to the operation of the WCB, but relative to personnel issues I don't get personally involved. Perhaps the minister can shed some light on this.

MR. DUNFORD: We don't get personally involved, Mr. Speaker, in that situation. The legislation contemplates that the board of directors will handle the operations of the WCB, which would include, of course, CEO salary and whatever sort of pension benefits would accrue from that.

MR. MacDONALD: Again to the Premier: considering that a little over a year ago the hon. Premier said that there might be room for political guidance over salaries and benefits and he also said that perhaps it was excessive, will he now take steps so that the retirement package of the next WCB CEO is made public before the contract is signed?

Thank you.

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, unfortunately, relative to various commissions, authorities, and committees that operate at arm's length from the government, we have no control over what those boards set and establish for their CEOs. But the hon. member is right: I have said that I'm shocked by some of the salaries that are being paid and some of the severance payments. They are far more than any MLA, including the Premier and the Leader of the Official Opposition, would ever get or even anticipate. I would appeal once again publicly in this Legislature to those agencies to be reasonable in setting salaries and to be reasonable in making sure that severance packages and payments are fair.

MR. DUNFORD: There would be a way for the hon. member, who is so concerned about this particular issue, to have some direct input where it would matter, and that is the fact that the WCB is going to begin to have annual meetings. Those will be open to the public, and certainly, then, the hon. member from Edmonton-Gold Bar or from any other place in the province would be entitled to attend that meeting and, of course, would be there to ask questions. So I think he can find the information that he needs at that particular time.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Municipal Funding

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Today's announcement of an extra $155 million for municipal transportation projects has made a farce of this Finance minister's budget before it's even two days old. It's clear that this minister has presented a budget which isn't even worth the paper it's printed on. Albertans expect and demand a budget which is an accurate projection of revenues and expenditures, not a budget that is changed before the ink is even dry. My question is to the Minister of Finance. Why did the minister present a budget which not only misstated the amount of last year's surplus but also the amount budgeted for municipal transportation grants by $155 million?

MRS. NELSON: Well, Mr. Speaker, on Tuesday we presented a budget in this Legislature. We clearly laid out a fiscal framework that has been applauded, quite frankly, as the Premier has already said, by the Investment Dealers Association of Canada and by another group of investment market players as well. The fiscal pulse group of Scotiabank said that "Alberta is perceived as the leader in fiscal repair among [all] the provinces." This was their quote on our budget. Also, the Investment Dealers Association said:

It is encouraging in this context to see that the government has incorporated prudent projections for economic growth next year and is contemplating further discretionary spending reductions to avoid a deficit and to continue on track with debt reduction. These commitments provide assurance of continued wealth creation, employment and sustainable economic growth in the province.

This budget was laid out, I believe, in a prudent and responsible fashion.

Today – and I hope the hon. member will understand – we're dealing with two different issues. Tuesday was the budget for the next fiscal year, which starts April 1. Right now we're in the current fiscal year. Last October when we had to take corrective action and pull back $1.26 billion, most of it came from Transportation and Infrastructure. At that time, we made the commitment that if in fact our fiscal situation for this current year – not next year's budget, which starts next month – improved, we would restore and proceed with some of those projects that were deferred or delayed.

Now, it's very important, Mr. Speaker, that . . .

THE SPEAKER: Hon. minister, it's three minutes that we're into this now.

The hon. member.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to ask the minister when Treasury Board approved the reduction in cuts to municipalities and why the Finance Minister or the responsible minister, in this case Transportation, did not disclose these changes to the budget of this year, this budget, last night when this House debated the Transportation estimates.

MRS. NELSON: As I was saying, last October, when we made corrective action, was when we had to make the decision to pull back on transportation and infrastructure programs for this current fiscal year, which ends next week. We have now received some – some, not all – of the preliminary final revenue numbers for the fourth quarter of this current fiscal year. We had said – and I even spoke of this in my budget speech – that if in fact those numbers were positive, we would honour the commitment that we had made last October to restore some of those projects that were deferred or delayed.

Those particular projects, based on the preliminary fourth-quarter numbers – remember, I won't have the final ones for probably another 60 days – were approved at a Treasury Board meeting today, this morning. So last night the Minister of Transportation in the estimates could not have put that before the House because Treasury Board had not approved that. This was the first opportunity, Mr. Speaker, that the Treasury Board had to come together with these preliminary numbers to see the request and look at what could in fact be done to meet the obligation that had been put forward last October.

MR. MASON: Mr. Speaker, given that yesterday in this House this Premier said that the municipalities would be pleased by an announcement to be made today, it is clear that the government knew that they were going to make these changes to the budget yesterday. I asked the Minister of Transportation last night, and he didn't tell us.

THE SPEAKER: Okay. We've now been six and a half minutes on this little series. I've been trying to keep this at three and a half to four, so brevity, please. Other members have an opportunity to participate too.

MRS. NELSON: Mr. Speaker, let's be very clear. I believe that Alberta's municipalities, including the two major centres, will be very pleased that we are able to proceed with this funding so that they can get on with their projects. This will carry them through to March 31, 2003. That was what was deferred and changed last fall. That has now been restored. Our budget, that was filed on Tuesday, will hold for the balance of that budget process.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Steel Exports

MR. LUKASZUK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first question is for the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations. At the beginning of March the President of the United States exempted Canadian steel imports from U.S. trade actions. As early as today other countries may be facing new import duties on steel in the United States. Can the minister clarify the situation facing Canadian and particularly Alberta steel exports into the United States?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, it is certainly correct that the United States government has imposed duties ranging from 30 to 8 percent on foreign steel coming into the United States. However, because of our membership along with Mexico and the United States in the North American free trade agreement, we are exempted from those duties. It is, I think, an example where the North American free trade agreement is working to our advantage in this province, and the sale of steel into the United States is continuing.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. LUKASZUK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My next question is to the same minister. Can the minister tell this House what actions the Alberta government has taken to safeguard Alberta's steel producers?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, the Alberta government has been involved in working with the Canadian steel industry, particularly the Alberta companies, to monitor this case and to make sure that as much as possible we would be exempted from these duties, and we have been. We've expressed our concern to the United States government. We've worked with the ambassador to the United States. I've written directly to him on this matter. In my correspondence I emphasized that the North American steel industry is an integrated market and that duties applied to Canadian steel would hurt the overall free-flow of product in this country and across North America and that it would also be a problem for U.S. manufacturers to not have that particular product available to them.

We've been in regular contact with the federal government. I've written to the federal Minister for International Trade on this matter. Overall our officials have been very much involved in contacts with the Canadian Steel Association, as I mentioned, and it's been a success story thus far in terms of our trading relationships.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. LUKASZUK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My last question is to the Minister of Economic Development. What is the overall value of Alberta's steel exports to the United States?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. NORRIS: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm delighted to answer this question. Given your earlier comments, I'll try and keep my answer short, but with so much good news to talk about, it's going to be very difficult. We have a thriving steel business in Alberta. In fact, AltaSteel, located in the hon. Minister of Children's Services' constituency, is a thriving business. They are a national leader in a rare grinding rod that is actually exported to the North American markets. In meetings with them yesterday, as a matter of fact, they wanted me to pass on their sincere thanks to the minister for his hard work and to this government for making the absolute best business platform in North America to operate from.

Because of that fact, the amount of exports is in excess of $193 million and growing.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Health Care Premiums

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The dictionary defines a tax as "a compulsory contribution levied upon persons, property, or business for the support of government." Let me repeat that: "a compulsory contribution levied upon persons, property, or business for the support of government." You can look that up in your Funk and Wagnalls. To the Minister of Health and Wellness: are health care premiums compulsory for Albertans above the low-income cut off?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, health care premiums are levied against Albertans, except of course those who are exempt, and there are numerous people in such categories.

But I want to give this quotation from Hansard:

I want to say that I think there is a value in having every family and every individual make some individual contribution. I think it has psychological value. I think it keeps the public aware of the cost and gives the people a sense of personal responsibility.

I'll be happy to table that quotation. I should note that it was said in a Legislature, not in Alberta's but in Saskatchewan's. It was not said in 2002 but in 1961. It was not said by the Alberta Minister of Health and Wellness. It was said by Tommy Douglas.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'll take that as confirmation that it is compulsory.

Again to the Minister of Health and Wellness: are health care premiums levied upon persons and businesses for the support of the government?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, it's clear that health care premiums are dedicated for the purposes of supporting our health care system in the province of Alberta. It is an important amount of money. For this year it will be approximately $680 million on an overall budget of roughly 6 and a half billion dollars. It's an important contribution that Albertans make. If Albertans suggest that their health care system and if Canadians suggest that their health care system is valuable and important, then expecting a contribution from Albertans to support such an important system I think is a very good thing.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. TAFT: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. It's a remarkable announcement that they don't support the government.

In any case, will the minister agree that according to that dictionary definition, health care premiums are taxes?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, this question has been raised by this member on a number of occasions. He has been reminded of the purpose of question period. It is not to engage in a debate over an opinion of what is a tax. It is for the purposes of asking questions about government policy.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

High School Credit Enrollment Units

MR. MASKELL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thanks to the creation of the CTS program, schools have been able to layer one-credit modules on top of three- or five-credit courses. Schools are able to bundle one-credit courses into packages that would give some students credits for the time spent on such things as leadership programs, performing arts productions, and athletic activities. This allowed many new enrichment opportunities for students. Some students do earn as many as 60 or more credits in a single school year. I've received questions from my constituents and former colleagues regarding an article in this morning's newspaper about changes to the high school enrollment credits, especially for grade 10 students. My questions are for the Minister of Learning. Can you please clarify what changes are being made?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

DR. OBERG: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member has raised a very important issue for us. What we see when we look across the province is some school jurisdictions that have an average of 33 credits for grade 10. We have other school jurisdictions that have an average of 47, and as the hon. member alluded to, there are roughly 200 students in this province who take over 70 credits per year. We felt that it's extremely important to give equalized funding to the school boards, especially for the grade 10 students. There was a very unfortunate story that came out in the newspapers today about capping it at 37 credits. That was not our intention at all, and if anyone anticipates that as being our intention, I will say definitely that it is not.

We are going to a per student grant that will be significantly higher than the grade 9 student grant, but we in no way want to limit the amount of courses that a grade 10 student can take, nor do we want – and I really hesitate to find a word for this, Mr. Speaker, because all of the school boards were doing it within our rules. I do, however, want to fix a situation where we saw a significant number of school boards receiving considerably more money for things that the hon. member has talked about: leadership courses, et cetera, et cetera. We will be going to a per student grant. The details of this will be worked out, but I really want to assure the House and I want to assure the general public that there is no cap at 37 credits.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MASKELL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There was a concern from people that for grade 10 students it may be 37.

Again, what calculations will be used to arrive at the appropriate funding for students, Mr. Minister?

DR. OBERG: Mr. Speaker, an average high school student course load is 35 credits. We recognize that there are a lot more opportunities. We recognize that a full course load, to utilize all the time, would be around 40 credits. So we are going to take a look in the 35 to 40 range. It will probably be closer to 40 when we come forward with a per student grant. But the key component is that we are not limiting the credits to 37. We will be coming forward with a per student grant, and in all likelihood there will be two categories, a part-time student and a full-time student, whether or not it's 30 credits or less or some variation thereof. Again I really feel this is important. I want to assure the parents, I want to assure the school boards and the school districts that there is no cap at 37 credits.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MASKELL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: why are these changes necessary?

DR. OBERG: Well, I alluded to it a little bit in my first answer, and you actually in your preamble alluded to the issue as well. When I see grade 10 students funded to the tune of something like $1,500 more purely because they're in one school jurisdiction over the other, I have a problem with that. When we see average CEUs in one particular area of the province at 33 versus the average at 47 in another for the same grade 10 student, I have a big problem with that, Mr. Speaker. What we want to do is bring forward a system that is fair to the school boards as well as to the student. What has occurred is in no way an indictment of the school boards nor the schools themselves, as they were completely within our rules.

The other very important thing that I will say, as well, is that this recommendation is in one hundred percent alignment with what the Alberta Teachers' Association put forward in their suggestions for the new funding framework, where they state: schools would receive an annual basic instructional grant for each full-time equivalent student enrolled in the first years of high school based on 38 credits. So, Mr. Speaker, the Alberta Teachers' Association were very wise in what they said, and we feel that this is an important element and an important way to go.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake.

Community Lottery Boards

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Provost Senior Citizens' Society, Sedgewick school PAC, and the Wainwright Youth Initiatives Society have all benefited from locally controlled decision-making, a process which allowed communities to shape their future through allotment of community lottery board funds. My questions are all to the Minister of Gaming. Why have you stripped the funding and local decision-making power from communities?

MR. STEVENS: Mr. Speaker, when the hon. Minister of Finance a couple of days ago gave her budget speech, she indicated that there were some difficult decisions that were made in connection with the preparation of that budget. One of those difficult decisions was the discontinuance of the community lottery boards program. I would say that there's absolutely no doubt that the community lottery boards program, of which there are 88 throughout the province, has been doing good work in our communities, and the volunteers who are part of that particular program are doing and have done very good work. But as the hon. Minister of Finance indicated, the priorities of Albertans are also important. The decision was made that the funds with respect to the lottery fund would be prioritized so that Learning, Health, Children's Services, and debt repayment, which are priorities of all Albertans, would receive increased funding.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Minister of Gaming: why have you cut the funding to community-based charitable organizations and failed to allocate it to any other locally controlled organizations when gaming revenues are increasing?

MR. STEVENS: Mr. Speaker, I'm very proud of the charitable model that we have here in Alberta. It's unique in all of Canada. In fact, I think it's important to spend a moment and talk about how charities in this province benefit, because I think perhaps it's not a well-known fact.

There are two ways in which our charities benefit. One is through the charitable granting of licences. That would be for casinos or bingos or raffles or pull tickets. In 1996 that provided to Alberta charities something to the tune of $109 million. In the last fiscal year, which was 2001, that was $183 million. This year it's probably more likely to be $190 million.

If you take a look at the funding for charities through the Alberta lottery fund portion, which is another component and which goes by way of grants to various foundations, five of which are in the Ministry of Community Development, one of which, the community facility enhancement grant program, is in Gaming, and you total that up with the charitable portion, some $190 million, you have around $275 million which this upcoming fiscal year will be available to charities in this province.

I would suggest to the opposition that they should check the other provinces and try and find someone who comes remotely close to providing the support to the volunteers in Alberta as we do.

MS BLAKEMAN: They fund them regularly up front.

Mr. Speaker, my third question is also to the Gaming minister. Given that this government goes on and on about getting decision-making out from under the dome, how does he explain this latest flip-flop in policy direction? Now you can have it; now you can't.

MR. STEVENS: The Alberta lottery fund was established as a result of the '98 gaming summit. What Albertans said to us is that they wanted us to establish a fund into which all government revenue from gaming would go so that there would be complete transparency with respect to how it was utilized. Albertans said to us that what they wanted was that the money would be spent on not-for-profit charitable community initiatives and that it would be spent on public initiatives. What has happened since that point in time is that all of the funds have been devoted in that fashion, and we have continued to maintain the trust that Albertans gave us in establishing that fund.

If the hon. members take a look at the lottery estimates, which are part of the material that forms the material on the budget, you will see that we continue to fund the community development foundations, that we continue to fund the good work that is done by our priority ministries such as Health and Learning and Community Services, arts and culture, and that we will be contributing approximately 25 percent of that particular fund in this upcoming year to the retirement of debt.

2:20 Industrial Development Regulatory Review

MR. OUELLETTE: Mr. Speaker, landowners have voiced concerns that it is difficult for them to understand and effectively participate in regulatory processes involving industrial development. They also feel like they get the runaround trying to find the right government department or agency that deals with this particular concern. The process they get caught up in can be both confusing and costly in terms of time and resources and might involve the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board, the Surface Rights Board, the departments of Environment and Sustainable Resource Development. Alberta Energy has in its current business plan a strategy to improve regulations and the approval process. Can the Minister of Energy clarify what is being done in this regard to help these landowners?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. SMITH: Well, thanks, Mr. Speaker. I know that when we sit and debate the budget and talk about estimates and all that – the hon. Member for Innisfail-Sylvan Lake has got to page 120 in the Energy business plan. He's got to goal 2.1, that says, "Advance the competitiveness of Alberta's energy and mineral resources," and it says, "Work with Alberta Environment, Alberta Sustainable Resource Development . . ." [interjections] No, no. Read the plan, guys. Just quiet down. Read the plan. It's a big book. You won't have any trouble with it. The print is small, though. It'll be tough.

Mr. Speaker, it says: to work with "regulations and approval processes for energy and mineral resource development, while maintaining and enhancing environmental and safety standards."

Mr. Speaker, the member makes a strong point. What we need to do is, one, look at it from the standpoint of efficiency. Those who spend some 20-plus billion dollars worth of capital in this province each year should have a regulatory agency that is as efficient as they are. Secondly, it's not a bad thing to innovate, to continue to find ways to be better, to be more efficient, and to be more responsive from a service perspective to those who interface with the government of Alberta and, lastly, to find always that appropriate balance between that of the landowner, that of the agricultural owner, that of the oil company, that of the environmentalist. That is one of the big jobs that we do as a government: find that right balance.

MR. OUELLETTE: Can you please outline for me, then, Mr. Minister, how you're going to achieve this?

MR. SMITH: Well, Mr. Speaker, we've worked hard on this initiative during the last 12 months with the departments of Environment, Sustainable Resource Development, and Agriculture, Food and Rural Development and the Alberta Energy and Utilities Board. The point man is one who knows a lot about this complex maze of regulations and one who has dedicated his career to balance. We've appointed Mr. Vance MacNichol, I think a name that's familiar to many around this House as a widely respected Albertan with extensive experience in the public and the regulatory sectors. The primary goal of the initiative is to ensure that all the parties can participate in this review so that we can find efficiency, innovation, service, and balance.

MR. OUELLETTE: Is this going to be a long, drawn-out affair? What is the time frame and expected outcome of this review?

MR. SMITH: We will move, Mr. Speaker, with dispatch and alacrity, and we see reporting back to this House in a 12- to 18-month time frame.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Budget Surplus

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Budget 2002, as presented by the Finance minister less than two days ago, said that the forecast budget surplus for this fiscal year, 2001-2002, would be $35 million. Yet less than 48 hours later the Minister of Transportation and then the Minister of Finance say: oops, we have miraculously found an extra $155 million to pay for infrastructure and get the cities of Edmonton and Calgary off our backs. Talk about fudge-it budgeting. My question, though, to the Premier: why won't the Premier fire the Minister of Finance for putting false information in Budget 2002, information designed to mislead Albertans by understating the size of this year's budget surplus?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, finance ministers are usually fired for overstating a case; in other words, when you say that you're going to have no deficit, knowing full well that you don't have the resources, and you do run a deficit. That's when not only ministers but governments get fired. You know, it sort of happened in British Columbia, when statements were made that they were going to eliminate the deficit and that indeed was not the case.

Mr. Speaker, as I explained earlier in this House, no one can predict with a hundred percent accuracy what the surplus is going to be. World economic situations change almost on a daily basis. Budget adjustments are made virtually after every quarter. The Finance minister saw that perhaps the budget surplus is going to be larger than anticipated. She cranked up some figures that are estimates at this particular time, took that matter to Treasury Board yesterday and got approval to make the appropriate expenditures.

MRS. NELSON: Today, Mr. Premier.

MR. KLEIN: Today went to Treasury Board; I'm sorry. These are expenditures that for the most part should make the municipalities happy. The only people unhappy about it are the NDs.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wish the government could tell yesterday from today.

Why does this government show contempt for the Assembly by allowing debate on the Ministry of Transportation to proceed yesterday evening when the numbers contained in those estimates were clearly in error and the government knew it?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, the debate that took place – and I assume it was the debate on the budget – was to debate the current budget, which is for the years 2002-2003.

DR. PANNU: Mr. Speaker, how does the Premier expect Albertans to swallow the $722 million in tax and user fee hikes, including the 30 percent hike in health tax, now that they know that the government is hiding hundreds of millions of dollars of surplus from them?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I know that the hon. leader of the third party is a university professor, and, you know, that makes him smart and educated, but it does not make him a crystal ball gazer. I would challenge him today to stand up in this House and predict with a hundred percent accuracy what the situation is going to be a year hence. You know, not even Professor Pannu can do that.
[interjections]

THE SPEAKER: Actually, hon. members, the World Wrestling Federation event was in Toronto this past week. This is the Legislative Assembly of the province of Alberta.

The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Regulatory Requirements for Secondary Suites

MR. LORD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Homelessness and the lack of affordable housing continues to be a serious concern in Alberta. At the same time, there are many barriers preventing thousands and maybe even tens of thousands of private citizens in this province from being able to create an affordable housing unit such as a secondary suite in their own homes. If these barriers were to be addressed through policy changes, it would not only largely alleviate the housing problems we now face, but it would also allow many Albertans to earn additional income, helping them with their mortgage payments and reducing pressures for government intervention in this area. My questions are to the Minister of Municipal Affairs. Is your department conducting any kind of comprehensive review or study to examine regulatory requirements for secondary suites?

2:30

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. BOUTILIER: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First and foremost, the safety of all Albertans is our main concern. Yes, we are doing a regulatory review. We're going to be consulting with many of our stakeholders, and at the end of the day we want to strike the right balance in protecting Albertans but, at the same time, alleviating some of the tremendous affordable housing problems we're having in the big cities and many other rural communities across this province.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. LORD: Thank you. Is the government going to be compromising the safety of Albertans if it allows this type of accommodation to be built?

MR. BOUTILIER: Mr. Speaker, absolutely not.

MR. LORD: Given that there may be residents who might have concerns regarding secondary suites, would the minister please elaborate on who is being consulted in this study?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. BOUTILIER: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That's a good question. In this regard we're consulting with municipalities: mayors and councillors and aldermen. We're consulting with reeves. We're dealing with developers, code-enforcing authorities. We're looking at a whole web of people that will play a part in terms of ensuring that safety. Let me conclude by saying this. It's presently known yet it's difficult to determine that many in the urban centres are having two and three families in the high-growth areas living in secondary suites illegally. We want to avoid that happening, so we're always looking at flexibility, ensuring the safety but also dealing with the demands of the ever growing number of people that are coming to Alberta and looking for the affordable housing that we provide in this province.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Child Care Workers

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This morning child care advocates met on the Assembly steps to plead the case of pre-five year olds. They feel that the government has abandoned those who work in the interests of those children. My questions are to the Minister of Children's Services. How can the minister justify the miserably low salaries paid to so many of these caregivers?

MS EVANS: Mr. Speaker, a number of times in the House in the last six months this sort of question has come forward. We have concerns about the salaries that employers, not this government, are paying to the workers. For that reason, we've done a study through KPMG not only on behalf of day care providers but more recently on behalf of family day homes. We do subsidize a significant number of parents and children – 12,147 children, I believe, last year and over $50 million worth of subsidies. Rather than subsidize the day care operators and then trust them to provide those dollars for the staff, we provide subsidies through to the families to benefit their children and to allow the families to look for the very best possible care alternatives within the day care community. We are very sensitive to the issues that have been raised in the last six months. Adding the day home to this examination I think will give us a clear picture.

One more comment, Mr. Speaker. If people review these budgets for this coming year, they'll note that there are significantly more dollars in the early intervention portion of our budget for work with the early child care community to ensure that the best interests of the child are maintained, and we are looking very carefully at those issues.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you. Again to the same minister: what action has the minister taken to prevent the bleeding away of students from early childhood programs due to the poor conditions in the field?

MS EVANS: Well, Mr. Speaker, it's much more complex than attributing it to poor conditions in the field. It is part of what has been a very buoyant labour market in Alberta where people can choose to move to other positions. It's been problematic; there's no doubt about it. But it is not exclusively the problem of the government. When people make choices to move on or to gain additional training, that is in fact their choice. We continue to work to try and develop programs, and more recently I asked the department to look at whether or not we can provide additional training for day care workers throughout the province in conjunction with the training we provide for social workers. So we're looking at ways of improving the opportunities for people working in the child care industry.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you. Again to the same minister: what actions has the minister taken to ensure that graduates of those early childhood programs actually end up in child care situations?

MS EVANS: Well, Mr. Speaker, there are a number of things that we have done. As I've identified already in previous responses, I think that over the next couple of months, as we come out with more comments about our early child development programs in conjunction with communities, there will be more program announcements that will continue to support and make this industry more appealing.

Mr. Speaker, this is not a phenomenon that is targeted only in Alberta. Throughout Canada early child care workers have had a significantly lower salary scale than other areas, and I have great confidence in what one worker told me recently. She said: I'm not here for the money; I'm here for the love of the children.

THE SPEAKER: To the six hon. members who advised that they wanted to participate in question period today and were unable to get in, my apologies.

Hon. members, there's a mood in the House today. I think we'll just give 30 seconds for those who feel excited about being elsewhere to actually leave, and then we'll start with Members' Statements.

International Day for the Elimination of Racial Discrimination

MR. PHAM: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is an honour to rise to recognize the International Day for the Elimination of Racial Discrimination, March 21. The United Nations first recognized this day in 1966, designated in memory of anti-apartheid demonstrators killed or injured in Sharpeville, South Africa, in 1960. Canada was one of the first countries to support this UN declaration, and it began recognizing this day on a national basis 13 years ago.

This issue is very important to all of us, because when a person is being discriminated against and prevented from reaching his full potential, we all lose as a society. In Alberta any form of racial discrimination is strictly prohibited. Legislation such as the Alberta Bill of Rights and the Human Rights, Citizenship and Multiculturalism Act are there to protect the human rights of all Albertans. Our government is very proactive in this area.

While it is our legal obligation to deal with any human rights violation in Alberta, we would prefer that none occur at all. That is why the human rights, citizenship and multiculturalism education fund was created. This fund provides financial assistance and works in partnership with community organizations and public institutions to ensure that everyone has access to social, economic, and cultural opportunities on a fair and equal basis regardless of cultural or visible differences. As chair of the committee I would like to thank the Premier, the Minister of Community Development, and members of the committee for their support. I would also like to thank the thousands of volunteers who have worked tirelessly over the years for a province free of discrimination, which all of us can proudly call home.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Teachers' Labour Dispute

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Teachers are the backbone of our civilization. To many children teachers present the only hope for the future. The tireless efforts of teachers to improve the minds not only of students who are bright but also those who struggle ensure that all young Albertans get a chance to make a success of their lives. I'm sure that almost all Albertans recognize the enormous gifts to society that teachers offer day after day. That is why the government's attack on teachers in the form of Bill 12 is an affront to those who value the teaching profession.

Most Albertans would want to see a conflict with teachers resolved peacefully with goodwill on both sides, but the government has other plans. Most Albertans would want the government to improve the conditions in which teachers work, which are also conditions in which our children learn, but the government has other plans. Most Albertans would object to their fellow workers in the teaching profession having their democratic rights stripped away, but the government has other plans.

The government's plan for teachers and everyone involved in our schools is to demoralize them until their spirits reach their lowest point in history. The government's plan is to allow classroom conditions to deteriorate until even the brightest students will have to struggle to stay ahead. In short, the government's plan, if carried out successfully, is to turn the best public education system in Canada into the worst.

I would like to say that I applaud the efforts of any teacher to continue their dedication to children under such conditions. The efforts of teachers will not go unnoticed by Albertans even if they go unnoticed by this current government.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Tartan Day

MS GRAHAM: Mr. Speaker, on April 6, while the Legislature is in recess, Tartan Day will be celebrated across Alberta, Canada, and many parts of the world. April 6 is important to Scots, for on that day in 1320 Scottish nobles including four Grahams gathered at the Abbey of Arbroath in Arbroath, Scotland, where they pledged to defend Scotland from persecution and foreign domination. The declaration of Arbroath, which the nobles signed, is written in the form of a letter to the Pope, and it is now recognized across the world as one of the first expressions by a people of the rights of all humanity to a peaceful, productive, and secure life. It has become a symbol of freedom from oppression and of democratic government and was used as a model for the American declaration of independence. I've provided all hon. members with their own copy of the declaration. It is an inspirational document to read.

Tartan Day is also a way of recognizing the symbol of Scottish culture and Scottish clans. It provides an opportunity to honour the very significant contribution made by the Scots past and present to Alberta society. Mr. Speaker, our history, our politics, laws, institutions, academia, business, and industry have all been very positively influenced by people of Scottish descent.

Today I am wearing the new Alberta dress tartan, which was formally endorsed by this Legislature two years ago as an official symbol of Alberta. It is a district tartan, which everyone in Alberta is entitled to wear. Whenever I wear it, it is well received, and I thank the Member for Calgary-Glenmore for sponsoring this bill. I also wish to thank the former Member for Calgary-Bow, Bonnie Laing, for establishing the tradition of recognizing Tartan Day in the Legislature.

I ask all members to join with me in recognizing Tartan Day for the meaning it has for Scots and non-Scots alike.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Civil War in Sudan

MR. BONNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. For nearly 18 years the government of Sudan has waged a brutal campaign of death and destruction. Over 2 million people have perished and 4 and a half million Sudanese have been driven from their homes, which makes them the world's largest displaced persons population.

Sudan's civil war and the Sudanese government's genocidal policies have taken a terrible toll on the civilians of that country. The situation is rapidly getting worse and must be seriously addressed before the scale of death and destruction increases. Until 1999 the government of Sudan was in default to the International Monetary Fund and other international lenders. In August of 1999 oil developed in south Sudan by foreign companies in a joint venture with the Khartoum government came onstream and has begun to provide windfall profits for the regime. Talisman Energy of Canada and the Chinese government's PetroChina are Khartoum's two major oil partners.

On November 8, 2001, in the Southern District of New York a class action complaint was filed against Talisman Energy of Calgary, Canada. The complaint charges Talisman with violations of international law for participating in the Sudanese government's ethnic cleansing of black and non-Muslim minorities in an area where Talisman is exploring for oil. In an article in the New York Times dated March 17, 2002, President Bush last May called Sudan "a disaster for all human rights."

About two years ago the Holocaust Memorial Day and Genocide Remembrance Act was passed in this House. It urged Albertans "to consider other times and incidents of systematic violence, genocide, persecution, racism and hatred that call out to us from the past or continue today." Mr. Speaker, the heritage savings trust fund continues to invest in Talisman. When Albertans buy shares in a company through the heritage savings trust fund, it is taking partial ownership of that company. With ownership comes responsibility, including social and ethical responsibility. I believe we should support the Holocaust Memorial Day and Genocide Remembrance Act and establish a policy of ethical investing for the heritage savings trust fund. Albertans deserve to know that their money is not being used by companies engaged in unethical activity such as human rights abuses.

Thank you.

Speaker's Ruling Members' Statements

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, I guess it is the day before a break in this Assembly or something, but one of the traditions about Members' Statements is that this was done as a result of a Standing Order modification in this Assembly by all members. The intent was very, very clear. In Members' Statements time a member would be given up to two minutes to express any views that they want on any particular subject that they want. It was also quite clear from the outset that there would be no points of order accepted, no points of privilege accepted, and it would be an opportunity for a member to voice their views as they feel it appropriate to voice them.

Now, it has actually worked quite well most times. In the past there have been members who have tried to rise on a point of order and interject, and the chair has said: no, there are no points of order accepted. From time to time there are some interjections from other hon. members. If an hon. member disagrees with what an hon. member is saying, take advantage of the next opportunity to rise and participate in Members' Statements. It would be quite accepted. If an hon. member feels that they're denied that and they're members of Executive Council, take advantage of the opportunity afforded under Ministerial Statements to make a statement. That is certainly a provision provided to anyone on Executive Council at any time.

head: Presenting Petitions

THE SPEAKER: I'm now going to recognize the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

MS GRAHAM: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As chair of the Standing Committee on Private Bills I now request leave to present the following petition that has been received for a private bill under Standing Order 93(2): the petition of Bishop Victoria Matthews and David Phillip Jones, QC, for the Synod of the Diocese of Edmonton Amendment Act, 2002.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Earlier today I introduced some guests. They're sitting in the Assembly in the public gallery. This petition speaks to their concerns and represents their interests. The petition is signed by 400 Albertans and reads as follows:

We the undersigned residents of Alberta petition the Legislative Assembly to urge the Government of Alberta to provide health care coverage for medical supplies for diabetic children under the Alberta Health Care Plan and provide financial assistance to parents to enable them to meet their children's necessary dietary requirements and cover costs incurred in traveling to Diabetes Education and Treatment Centres outside their own communities in Alberta.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

2:50

head: Notices of Motions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. ZWOZDESKEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise pursuant to Standing Order 34(2)(a) to give notice that on the Monday when next we meet, I will move that written questions appearing on the Order Paper do stand and retain their places.

I'm also giving notice that on the Monday when next we meet, I will move that motions for returns appearing on that day's Order Paper do also stand and retain their places.

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Environment.

DR. TAYLOR: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of myself and my hon. colleague the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development I am pleased to table five copies of a report called Compliance Assessment and Enforcement Activities. This outlines the assessment and enforcement activities that we engaged in last year. We laid almost 6,000 charges under our legislation last year, so it very clearly indicates that we are enforcing our legislation. I would encourage all members, particularly members opposite, to read this.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to table what is a letter, with multiple signatures on it, from about 600 people in southern Alberta who want to see increased support for persons with developmental disabilities. This brings to about 1,500 the total number of these letters that we've tabled in the Legislature to date.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table the appropriate number of copies of a class action complaint between the Presbyterian Church of Sudan and Talisman Energy Inc., and this is in the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first tabling contains five copies of 214 postcards addressed to the Premier and his cabinet requesting them to increase AISH benefits from $855 per month to $1,464 per month, keeping intact medical benefits coverage.

The second tabling is the February 2002 issue of the Parents of Kids Experiencing Diabetes newsletter. In this issue the Griffin family details their experiences with their diabetic child and how the Ministry of Children's Services appeal after appeal has failed to provide assistance to them.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to table this afternoon for the benefit of all hon. members of the Assembly the forecast and the actual price from yesterday, March 20, from the Power Pool web site for electricity costs in the province, and it's noted that at noontime yesterday the cost was 46.3 cents a kilowatt-hour and then at 8 o'clock last night it was 67.6 cents a kilowatt-hour. Surely these prices wouldn't be that unstable under a regulated electricity market. It indicates that as the temperature goes down, the price of electricity goes up.

Thank you.

head: Projected Government Business

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wonder if the Government House Leader would share with the Assembly the projected government business for the week of April 8.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, as members of the House will know, during the week of April 8 we'll be seriously into Committee of Supply, as has been scheduled and noted on the Order Paper. For the purposes of projected government business I would advise that on Monday, April 8, under Government Bills and Orders at 9 p.m. for second reading bills 14, 16, 19, 20, and 21; in Committee of the Whole Bill 11; and as per the Order Paper.

On Tuesday, April 9, in the afternoon under Government Bills and Orders day 4 of 24 on the main estimates, with the department of health having been designated, and as per the Order Paper, time permitting. At 8 p.m. under Government Bills and Orders on that day in Committee of Supply the main estimates for Executive Council and as per the Order Paper.

On Wednesday, April 10, under Government Bills and Orders in Committee of Supply the main estimates as designated by the opposition, Children's Services, and as per the Order Paper. At 8 p.m. under Government Bills and Orders in Committee of Supply the main estimates for Economic Development and as per the Order Paper.

On Thursday afternoon, April 11, under Government Bills and Orders in Committee of Supply the main estimates as designated by the opposition, Human Resources and Employment, and as per the Order Paper.

head: Orders of the Day

Government Bills and Orders

THE SPEAKER: Hon. Government House Leader, did you want to do something?

MR. HANCOCK: Why, yes, Mr. Speaker. I would be pleased to ask that the House consider the same request we made yesterday afternoon until we can regularize the Standing Orders to deal with estimates in Committee of Supply as we have all agreed they should be dealt with. We ask for the unanimous consent of the House to do the same thing exactly that we did yesterday: to allow this afternoon's consideration of the estimates of the Department of Government Services to go beyond two hours with the vote on these estimates to take place no later than 5:15 p.m. as per Standing Order 58(5) or sooner if no one wishes to speak.

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Committee of Supply

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: We'll call the committee to order.

head: Main Estimates 2002-03

Government Services

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. minister. [some applause]

MR. COUTTS: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman, and thank you to a couple of my colleagues here in the House for their support. It's a pleasure for me this afternoon to stand before this Assembly and have the opportunity to speak about the Government Services business plan and the estimates that are before it.

First of all, before I get into some of the details, I just want to take the opportunity to thank members of this House, particularly on the government side, for the time and the effort that they have put into the business plan that has helped us put forward the estimates of Government Services for 2002-2003. Their attendance at standing policy committee meetings and their attendance at other meetings has certainly helped us develop the way Government Services goes about and does its business. That support and their in-depth probing, their wise questions and support at the time is very valuable in helping to bring forward the business plan that we have.

I also want to extend my thanks to members of the opposition who have offered input from time to time to help us again in Government Services make the kinds of changes that are needed to make the service that we have available to Albertans a better one.

It's my intent today to provide an overview of our business plan and our financial plan, and then after the overview I'm certain that members opposite as well as, at an appropriate time, members from the committee can join in some questions, and I make this commitment: that for any questions that I can't answer or don't have time to answer today, I'll make sure that we go through the Hansard record and our department staff will supply the appropriate responses. That's a service that we've done in the past, and we will commit to doing that.

One thing we found out during our deliberations is that the Government Services' mandate is definitely a twofold mandate, and that mandate is outlined on page 234 of our estimates. We provide a great variety of licensing, registry, and consumer protection services directly to Albertans – that's directly to Albertans – and we also provide service improvement initiatives on behalf of the government of Alberta. So we have an internal service as well.

Specifically, our mission is to serve Albertans by "providing effective access to government information and services" but at the same time "protecting [people's] privacy and promoting a fair marketplace." Under licensing and registration services – that's our first and probably our most important goal – is to allow accessible and secure and competitively priced licensing and registration services to all corners of this province. Many of these services are delivered through neighbourhood registry agents or on the Internet, and we have a comprehensive accountability framework in place to ensure that service standards are achieved and clients are well satisfied. As a matter of fact, Mr. Chairman, our client satisfaction rates are very high, and they range anywhere from 80 to 93 percent satisfaction.

Recently, though, we have seen some news reports regarding forgery, and those were charges laid against registry agents' employees and particularly, just recently, in Calgary. These charges involve three of approximately 1,000 employees working in our registry agents' offices across the province. It's very regrettable that these things do happen but also a very isolated incident. One of the things that we do in our registry system and with the people that we have working within the department is we have a policy of co-operating with our stakeholders, and in these particular instances we co-operated with the Calgary Police Service on investigations. For example, our system makes it possible to tell us and to tell the police exactly which drivers' licences were changed by the clerks in question.

Thankfully, identification fraud is not an extensive problem in Alberta, but it is true that we must ever remain vigilant. The time is right to upgrade our driver's licence, and I will be presenting some ideas to the ministerial task force and security for keeping Alberta's driver's licence secure. Indeed, we have already taken measures like freezing the date of birth field on records so that clerks cannot make changes without authorization.

Now, this action in itself is going to slow up some of the service delivery at our registry agents' locations, and I'm sure that as a result of that, our satisfaction rate will go down next year. But this is a necessary thing to do in trying to provide the best service that we possibly can for Albertans but also a safe service.

We're also looking, working with our stakeholders, at improving a hiring policy that would implement criminal record checks or security clearance checks on all registry agent staff, and we're doing that in co-operation with the Registry Agents Association. We've already had a number of meetings on how we could implement such a policy, and we will be definitely doing that in the near future.

Another significant change in the estimates for this goal involves fee increases for motor vehicle services. Motor vehicle fees have not been significantly adjusted over 12 years despite the 29 percent increase in inflation over this period. Consequently, the fees have not covered the cost of maintaining the motor vehicle registry system. The fees will amount to an extra $45 million for 2002, which will bring Alberta's motor vehicle revenues closer in line with what's being spent in that area. Every effort was made to keep the new fees fair and equitable, especially when it came to services commonly accessed by Albertans. As such, although some of our fees admittedly are higher than the national average, many of our fees remain competitive or even lower. The cost recovery that we will achieve through these increases will free up dollars for other key priority items like health and education.

About $13 million of those fees will also be used to begin important upgrades in three of Alberta's registry systems. As I have discussed on previous occasions, these systems are 20 years old, and upgrades must begin now to keep up with the growing demands as well as to continue to provide the key government programs and superior services that Albertans have come to expect. With the addition of this new funding, our registry and licensing core businesses consume 79 percent, or $45.5 million, of our resources. However, it does generate revenue of $305 million.

Our second goal, Mr. Chairman, is to inform consumers and businesses about the high standard of marketplace conduct. Our call centre and our investigators go out into Alberta and deal with issues ranging from unfair trade practices, home renovations, loan and collection practices, things like Canada 3000, travel clubs, charitable fund-raising, and landlord and tenant concerns. This year we completed over 1,800 investigations and recovered more than $200,000 for Albertans. Our measure of success is based on client satisfaction, consumer education, and reduced telemarketing fraud. In particular, we have been very successful in keeping our customers happy, and we have attained over 80 percent satisfaction rate in this area. Consumer programs absorb 15 percent, or $8.4 million, of our resources.

Our third goal, Mr. Chairman, relates to the One Window initiative, which we believe, when unveiled, will increase Albertans' satisfaction with their ability to conveniently and easily access government services without having to know which ministry to contact. Based on consultations, we will now be calling this initiative Service Alberta rather than One Window. When this is fully implemented, the Service Alberta system will allow services to be provided through the Internet, telephone, mail, fax, and over the counter and will ensure that all customers receive the same information. Key success factors will be Albertans' satisfaction with their access to services and our ability to ensure their privacy and security no matter which service channel they choose. In June we will introduce phase 1 of One Window, or Service Alberta, through the integrated web site and our call centre. Albertans' needs and satisfaction will be closely monitored and will guide us as we move forward. This initiative uses about 2 percent, or $1 million, of our resources.

Our fourth goal is to deliver economical and efficient support services to all ministries of government through the Alberta Corporate Service Centre. In the upcoming year the Alberta Corporate Service Centre will begin to deliver services to such agencies, boards, and commissions. As well, ministries continue to increase the scope and volume of their service requirements, which is reflected in the increased budget for 2002-2003. Continuing to implement best practices and streamline the way services are delivered will be key to the Corporate Service Centre's success in achieving cost savings. To date these savings are at the $17 million mark with a further $4.2 million expected in 2002-2003. All of the Alberta Corporate Service Centre's costs of $152 million are charged back to ministries, so the net expenditure is actually zero to Government Services, as is shown on page 232 of the business plan.

Other support services that we have, which take up our fifth and sixth goals, are to provide efficient access to information, to protect privacy, and simply to reduce government regulations. Key initiatives relate to the preparation of private-sector privacy legislation and the review of the FOIP Act. As well, we continue to work with an effective information management framework as well as promoting effective ways of managing records by providing advice on standards and best practices, training staff, and encouraging co-ordination between ministries, the Alberta Corporate Service Centre, and the Provincial Archives. Lastly, work continues to ensure that regulations in existence prior to January 1, 1996, are reviewed by the end of 2003. The priorities in both of these goals, 5 and 6, take up about 4 percent, or $2.3 million, of our resources.

Mr. Chairman, that gives you an overdue overview – yeah, it is an overdue overview – of what Government Services does and some of the expectations for next year. In dealing with the financial restraints that we have in Government Services as well as the challenges that we have within the department to make sure that our service is safe and secure and that privacy is protected as well as making sure that the service is given to all Albertans as well as to ministries, I have to thank some people who helped me keep my job and put this together for me. These people work very, very hard on behalf of Albertans, and they're in the gallery today, and I just want to introduce the staff that helps me put this together.

My deputy minister, Roger Jackson, is right there in the middle of the first row, and right beside my deputy minister, Roger, is the assistant deputy minister of registries and consumer services, and I'll tell you: this lady certainly knows the registry system inside and out. She has been all across this province talking to registry agents and making sure that Albertans get the best possible, safe service that is available, and that's Laurie Beveridge, our assistant deputy minister.

Just to my left, to Roger's right, is the senior financial officer and the one who keeps all the books not only straight for the department but also has the additional responsibility of the Alberta Corporate Service Centre, and that's Sue Bohaichuk, our CEO of financial services. In the second row there I see a lady who has been the managing director of the Alberta One Window project and has worked very, very diligently with very, very little resources but has come up with a phenomenal response to this One Window concept, and Service Alberta is a success only because of Wilma Haas and her staff. Wilma is up on it.

Of course, I talked so much about the Alberta Corporate Service Centre and the savings that we've achieved because of the insight of the CEO of the Corporate Service Centre, Dave Rehill, there in the back row too. Another Dave sitting right beside him is my executive assistant in office 203. If you need something, Dave Keto, my executive assistant, certainly looks after you.

With that, Mr. Chairman, I make the commitment that if I am unable to get all the questions answered this afternoon, if there's not enough time, we will certainly do our best to review Hansard and get back to the questions that come from the opposition as well as any member of the Assembly.

Thank you very much for your time.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thanks very much, Mr. Chairman. I have prevailed upon my colleague the critic for this department to allow me to go first, because I just find this such an interesting department and there are so many pieces of legislation underneath it that really touch people's lives. So there are four areas that I'd like to touch on quickly and get some written responses back from you, because I don't expect you to know this off the top of your head.

There's an issue that has come up, and it's actually touching on two different pieces of legislation. What I'm looking for is whether there are any plans in the works to have a review, a public consultation, some research done to change the legislation. We're talking about a budget here. I'm looking to see if you're going to spend money around this issue, and I'll describe it.

ATCO Gas has offered a refund as a result of its sale of the Kinsella fields. When that refund goes to condominiums, which I have a lot of in my riding of Edmonton-Centre, and certainly the high-rise condominiums that have one meter and any condominium or high-rise apartment building that has one meter, they would have received one rebate cheque, which would have gone directly to the condominium board. What I'm hearing are a lot of concerns of owners that they are not able to have an open dialogue with their condominium board. People feel they should have had the rebate come directly to them, or if it went to the condo board, it should have been divvied up and a cheque gone to each of the owners. That's not what's happened.

So there's a question there about whether we could be looking at opening up the condominium act again – and I take a deep breath as I say this – to deal with the issue of the relationship between the condominium boards and the owners. One of the things I was talking about with someone this afternoon was maybe looking at having something in the act – and again you'd have to do the research on it – that would allow a certain percentage of the owners, if they got together, to call a demand meeting and demand a meeting with the condominium board, which would at least get them all in one room talking together. There really seems to be frustration and a lack of information from the owners in dealing with their own condominium board.

A further and an ancillary issue around that is the Societies Act. I have tracked this all the way through to the one person in your department that actually deals with the monitoring and enforcement of the Societies Act. Indeed, some of the condo boards that I was just talking about have constituted themselves as a society, and therefore they would fall under the jurisdiction of the Societies Act. But with the nonprofits again it's a question of the membership not being able to get their board of directors to respond to them. It's very frustrating when they do the right things. They go to the annual general meeting. They try and get something on the agenda. They try and have a look at the financial statements.

This is by no means happening with every nonprofit, but, boy, for the ones where it is happening, it sure affects their membership, and it really creates a very poisonous atmosphere. Again it's because people just can't get the information and can't compel their condo board to give it. Even if it's written in their constitution that they're supposed to supply this information, what does the group do if the condo board doesn't do it? And if you follow it all the way through to the lovely lady in your department, her answer is: I'm sorry; we do not monitor or enforce the Societies Act. So these groups have no recourse through the government, and seeing as the Societies Act is essentially a consumer protection piece of legislation, I hold the government responsible here. I think that they're letting down a large sector.

As we know, the voluntary sector, the nonprofit sector, is growing in Alberta and in Canada. It's huge. I mean, look at all the things that this government alone has downloaded onto the nonprofit sector. We really need to be giving these groups some backup and some legislative support, so I'm looking for the teeth here, and there hasn't been any so far. But when we look to the future, I seriously think that the minister's going have to get some teeth in there. So that was the condominium act and the Societies Act.

Third, when I'm looking at the fee structure, the planned fee changes, for increases, I wonder whether the minister had a legal opinion as to the Eurig decision. It was a mere few years ago that we were in this Assembly and having to respond to the Eurig decision. That is a decision that happened in Ontario in which the government was challenged as to whether the amount of money that was being charged for service was a fee or a tax. It was decided by the court that a fee is reflective of the administrative cost of delivering that particular service.

So, Mr. Minister, when I look at this and I see that the administrative cost of delivering a vehicle registration for a passenger vehicle is $48, what is the minister doing to justify that it's going up to $61? What additional administrative function is this department doing for that extra amount of money? What are we talking here? Thirteen dollars. Well, lots of people don't even make $13 an hour, certainly not day care workers, who make 8 bucks an hour. So I think there is an issue here around the Eurig decision. I'm wondering if he got legal advice on this. If he did, I'd like to know what it is. I'd like to know how he's justifying these increases. Some of these are whopping increases. And this is supposed to reflect the cost of the administration, so this is the paper pushing that happens to register a vehicle. So we're going from $48 to $61 for a passenger vehicle.

Now my favourite. I own a snowmobile, as you know. I'm a snowmobiler. So when I look at motorcycle and off-highway vehicle registration, it's going from $30 to $36. What on earth are you doing for an extra 6 bucks a year for my snowmobile registration, which I can only operate in this country, if I'm lucky, four months a year? This is a rip-off. And I'm now registering two machines, 30 bucks twice: 60 bucks you guys are getting off of me for two snowmobiles. What are you doing? It cannot cost you that much money. If we're just talking about paper pushing here, somebody that's taking a slip of paper and putting it in a computer or walking it across the hall or checking, whatever has to happen, then we're talking paperwork. Why does it cost $48 for a car – well, this is the current rate – and $30 for a snowmobile registration? It's paperwork. What additional paperwork are you doing for a car that you're not doing for a snowmobile? I'd just like to see the justification for that. [interjections] On behalf of snowmobilers everywhere.

MR. MacDONALD: Don't forget the trailer that you've got to pull the snowmobile with.

MS BLAKEMAN: Ooh, the trailer. You're absolutely right. Oh, yeah. This is where you're going get me again. It may be just a onetime fee, sir, but that onetime fee for a trailer pulled by a licensed vehicle is going from $30 to a hundred dollars. A hundred dollars. I didn't pay a hundred bucks for my trailer. It's going cost me more to register it than it did for the actual trailer. I mean, come on. What is the justification to move from $30 to $100? Except that the government needs money, and they're going to try to get it out of people's pockets anyway they can.

The last thing I wanted to talk about is life lease. Now, the minister and I have talked about life lease in the past, and I'm wondering if there's anything in this budget that is going to give us additional information, any better consumer protection, any pamphlets that are going to be produced that are going to explain how life lease work or if, in fact, the minister is considering bringing forward legislation.

I really think we need legislation on this. Life lease is the fastest growing kind of home ownership in Alberta today. This really affects seniors. It's an area of tremendous potential for good, but it also has potential for a great deal of grief. It is a totally new concept in residential living, and people don't understand what it is. I really look to the government to be supplying the leadership here in consumer protection, in the legislation which would give us a very clear definition and a very clear outline of everybody's responsibilities. I think everyone does have responsibilities around this: the purchaser, or lender in this case, the developer, the managing company, everybody. But it's a tough one to get a handle on if you don't know it. I think we need the rules in place so that everybody knows how to play the game.

Those are the four questions and the four issues I wanted to bring up with the minister. I appreciate the opportunity to ask him these questions, and I would ask if he could please supply his answers in writing to me. Thank you very much.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: Hon. minister, did you want to respond to these questions?

MR. COUTTS: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I've already made an arrangement with Edmonton-Centre. I understand that she has an appointment this afternoon, and I've committed to providing her personally written responses to her very good questions.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'll cover a handful of topics, as well, around which I have questions for this minister and his department. As with the hon. member who came before me, they touch on a fairly wide range of issues and areas.

The first one the minister himself referred to in his introductory comments in concerns over security and the heightened concern over identity theft and identity fraud which plagues any electronic system now. I think every member here would appreciate information on the steps being taken to address that concern.

In particular, there are questions I would like to know more about concerning the vetting of employees working in these registry offices and the precautions taken to ensure that the people working in these offices are honourable, are people who are going to respect security provisions and have been thoroughly checked out for background checks. From time to time we in the opposition hear rumours of employees working in registry centres who may or may not be the kind of employee we want in these centres. So I would appreciate clarity and firmness on the precautions taken in ensuring that employees of registry centres and people working with data are acceptable and have been properly vetted.

I also have questions around the sale of data from registries or from other aspects of the government's information systems. I come to this from several years of reading in the area of electronic security and the sale of data and the use of data, for example, for the use of marketing. A recent case investigated by the federal government looked into a complaint from a pharmacist that every time he wrote a prescription, the information on that was stripped of personal identifying information. Nonetheless, it was ultimately sold to drug companies, who were then able to compile the data and see their market penetration for their various products by pharmacists and use it to market to their pharmacists. This particular pharmacist was very concerned about that. It's one small example of the huge market there is for personal electronic data. It's big, big business. Credit card companies are constantly mining people's data for very detailed information on their interests, their behaviours.

So one of the questions I have is: is any data that's collected through registries resold? Even if it's stripped of personal identifying information, is it resold, for example, to automotive insurance companies so that a particular company could see and track its product or the drivers in particular areas of the province, in particular towns, or particular areas of a city? That would be one example, but the bigger question is: is any data collected by the government resold? Do we have absolute assurances that the data collected through private registries is not resold? Could they also be reselling this data in the same way that virtually all pharmacies resell data on patients? That's I'm sure an area that would be of real interest and concern for all Albertans. It certainly is for me, and you may have a very clear and straightforward answer. Either way I'd like to know what it is.

That moves me into the topic specifically of health information. I've recently had a complaint to my office from an Albertan who is in a prolonged struggle with a private health clinic that is not releasing information to the patient on the patient's pathology. In other words, the patient has asked over a period of almost two years now for her complete file from this private dermatology clinic, and they have not provided it to her. She's very concerned. I think that illustrates one problem we have with the whole question of health information and health privacy. This turns to an ongoing concern that I have which wouldn't just affect this department but others, that the Health Information Act I believe does not provide the same standards of security and privacy protection for private health care operators as it does for public facilities. I am very concerned about that, and I know I'm reflecting the concerns of Albertans by raising that issue here.

So that addresses questions of data collection and security and employee vetting and so on. I'd like to move on now to the structure of what perhaps we should call the wholesale marketplace for registry agencies; in other words, the mechanism through which agencies get contracts or are licensed by the provincial government to do the provincial business. The whole idea of a marketplace and the only way in which a marketplace works is if there's meaningful competition; in other words, in which you have many people competing to provide a service. I would hope that the provincial government as basically the purchaser of registry services, as I understand the system, from registry businesses ensures a very high level of competition so that registry companies A, B, C, D, and so on are all vying aggressively with each other to provide the best service at the lowest price to the department and through the department to all taxpayers.

I would be interested in indicators of effective competition such as how many agencies lose their privileges or their rights to provide their registry services in any given year. How competitive is the bidding process? What is the bidding process, or does it in fact end up being an ongoing renewal of a contract from the government to an agency? I'm afraid this would defeat the whole purpose of going to a private delivery system.

Related to that, I notice somewhere in the material the standard payments, I guess, or commissions provided to registry agencies for the services provided. So when somebody registers a car and they pay a fee, a certain amount of that fee stays with the people providing the registry and so on. I am curious to know if the department has ever done a business analysis or a business audit looking at the return on investment, or return on capital, that these private registries earn. Are these fees providing a very meagre return on investment to the companies owning the service? Are they providing a reasonable one or a very generous one? How has that been determined? I would be quite interested to know if the department has ever done a business analysis to ensure that they are paying a fair price and no more for the service.

Now I would like to turn my attention to matters of consumer protection, and I'm looking right now at the government and lottery fund estimates for 2002-03 on page 235. Goal 2 refers to "informed consumers and businesses, and a high standard of marketplace conduct," which I think is a commendable goal, and I wish all success to the department in meeting that goal. It's a very important goal if we're to continue to have a properly functioning economy in Alberta.

I'm concerned that in one very, very major area of the economy the marketplace is not working very well, and that's in the area of retail electricity. I'm sure many, many members here have heard complaints that the retail market for electricity is not working. It may well be, in fact, that the wholesale market for electricity is not working either. The wholesale prices seem to have no direct correlation to the cost of producing the electricity. For example, the cost of producing electricity in this province is at most probably 3 and a half cents a kilowatt hour, yet we have power trading at the wholesale level yesterday at, my goodness, 40 cents a kilowatt hour or even over 60 cents a kilowatt-hour. So there's a huge gap between the cost of producing the power and the wholesale price, and that's a key indicator that the market is not working.

At the same time, one of the promises of this government in its move toward electricity deregulation was that there would be a meaningful retail market developed, yet all of us as MLAs I'm sure have had complaints that there is not an effective retail market. There's no meaningful competition between electricity retailers, and in fact there are only two retailers in the whole province almost. For most customers there are only two retailers, and there's very little toe-to-toe competition between them. So I'm wondering if this department under its mandate to look after consumer interests, its mandate of consumer protection, and its goal of ensuring "a high standard of marketplace conduct" would ever or has ever looked into problems surrounding the markets, both wholesale and retail, for electricity. If so, I'd be delighted to see what steps to protect consumers are planned.

My last point is just a particular one that comes out of the minister's opening comments. He referred to the name change for the department's public access service from One Window to – what's the new name? – Service Alberta. I don't know if that's a good idea, a bad idea. I really don't know anything about it, but I'd be curious to know what the cost of that name change is and why it was regarded as necessary.

So with those comments, Mr. Chairman, I will wrap up and pass the floor to somebody else.

3:40

THE CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's a pleasure to rise this afternoon and participate in the debate regarding Government Services. I listened with interest to the hon. minister's opening remarks, and I wish the minister well as various programs are developed in the department.

Now, there certainly have been considerable problems in that department. They have been very well documented, Mr. Chairman. There have been the recent problems, of course, with the registry system in Calgary. There was the police uncovering the phony ID scam at an agency in Calgary. Two registry employees at the same agency, as I understand it, were determining the market value in Calgary of fraudulent ID cards and drivers' licences. That's shocking.

[Mr. Lougheed in the chair]

There were, of course, two incidents in Edmonton here, I believe since the new year as well, so I can't accept the view that this is an isolated incident. We need, certainly, to get to the bottom of this. Identity fraud, in my view, is a problem when you look at what one could do, Mr. Chairman, and the value of a fraudulent card, whether it's an ID card or whether it's a driver's licence. An altered card could certainly be used to obtain a false identity, and this may enable a user or a carrier of that card to avoid being picked up on police warrants. I certainly would like to understand from the hon. minister what complaints or what reservations regarding the integrity of the system have been delivered to the department by various police forces, whether it's a municipal police force here or whether it would be the Royal Canadian Mounted Police.

Unfortunately, the events of September 11, Mr. Chairman, have also added a great deal of cause for concern. I would at this time also remind the hon. minister of the conference that's planned in June, I believe, at Kananaskis: another summit, a big summit, the G-8. Not only for security reasons but for the prudent use of tax dollars, I would much prefer to see this G-8 take place at a secure military base, whether it's Cold Lake or maybe we could even go south to Wainwright or to Suffield. I think it would be much easier, much cheaper to have such a conference at a military base in light of what happened in New York City in September.

These fraudulent documents certainly could be used to aid in illegally crossing the Canadian border. I think that in light of security precautions that are needed in this country, if this is a problem, then certainly it's probably a delicate, sensitive issue. Is the minister concerned about the deficiencies in this system that would allow people to gain access to this country and then under a new, false ID travel through to Coumts, at the border between Montana and Alberta, and gain access to America that way? With the deficiencies in our system, surely the minister is not going to jeopardize the fact that law-abiding citizens of this province and of this country can take Alberta drivers' licences – in fact, the Minister of Energy could cruise up to the border and probably be across the border in two minutes just by showing his Alberta driver's licence. That's something that we need to ensure that continues to be the way we do business with our neighbours.

Now, there's that security issue, but there's also the security issue for financial institutions. One would only think that if a person is going to pay up to $500 for this false ID, the next step is obtaining credit cards. Yes, Mr. Chairman, credit cards. Then there's also the issue of taking the credit card and perhaps hiring a rental car, and this individual carrying the fraudulent card is perhaps a suspended driver. Now, you know, the fees – and I'm going to get to that in a minute. These are only examples of what can happen through the use of a fraudulent card.

I understand we're going to freeze the birth dates. This is a security precaution. The hon. member previous had questioned the security of the personnel involved and what sort of checks are being done. This is an ongoing problem with our registry system, and I'm afraid I can't be satisfied with the initiatives that have taken place. I would encourage the minister – and if it's a budget issue, which we will deal with later on this afternoon, relating to computer equipment to make the system secure, we need to hear from the department exactly how much money they're going to need. There was certainly some startling evidence left behind in last year's ministry annual report, and there were concerns raised not only about the security but the age and the condition of the equipment. This member is not convinced that these service contracts are the right way to go, and I'm going to get to that later this afternoon.

I'm just looking at the statement of operations of the department on page 239. We have been discussing in this Assembly and the public has been discussing the whole issue of the premium fees and licence changes and the skyrocketing costs and whether it's a tax or whether it's a fee or a premium, but we do know that it is very expensive. I believe there was a 50-cent per item increase in fees over Christmas. There was an increase in the transaction fees for registry agents during Christmas week. I saw that press release, and I thought that in light of the conditions, perhaps that was a prudent fee increase, but none of this money, as I understand it, is going into capital investment. Now, I could be wrong, and I would appreciate, if I am, a correction from the minister or the officials that are available from the department this afternoon. There's no doubt that the money has to go into capital investment, Mr. Chairman.

Now, another deficiency, as I see it, and another issue of concern is the land titles registry. This is supposed to guarantee the accuracy of property titles for all registered property in the province. I heard one of the researchers the other morning complaining. They had purchased a house, and the transaction was going so slowly. This individual and his family were quite excited and looking forward to moving into this house. At present the land titles system, the registry system, runs slowly and, I'm told, cannot handle many transactions during regular demand hours, during the hours from, say, 8:30 in the morning till 5:30 in the evening, Mr. Chairman, without risking system failure. I'm just going by what the researcher has indicated.

The researcher phoned the law office: how are things progressing?

“Oh, well, it’s not progressing as quickly as it should, but don’t worry. We will get everything in order, and you can certainly move into your house.” But whenever one is looking at the cost of this from the point of view of borrowed money – and sure, it’s only a week or it’s two weeks or perhaps at the outside three weeks – that money can add up. You know, that money can add up. I don’t know how diligent we have been. This is not on this hon. minister’s watch, but we have to get that system working better.

Should we expect to be able to maintain our current service level for turning around land transactions within, say, a day? I think that’s almost impossible, but certainly within three or four days. I think that would be better. A 24-hour period would be too much to ask. Now, if the data system were to crater altogether, I need to know if this government is liable or if they consider themselves liable for the losses that would be caused by the countless errors there would be. Who would be liable in this case?

Now, it is interesting to note that the land titles registry system safeguards over $270 billion in real estate and other registered interests. I don’t know whether this is on a yearly basis, but the value of the land-related transactions exceeds, I’m told, $17 billion. Last year – and we’re going to get to this, hopefully, later on – registry transactions themselves generated over $30 million in revenue for this province, and that’s going to go way up, naturally. I think it’s going to go up close to $70 million, $72 million, as sort of a real target for this department. I’m told – and I’m getting this information very graciously from last year’s estimates, which the minister provided. I would appreciate this year a more timely response. I don’t think I got the answers to my questions until the middle of the summer. I would appreciate a faster response. There was a $70 million figure or a $72 million figure in there quoted as what was needed.

I’ll have to look here, but I’m sure it was a $70 million figure that was needed to build a good, secure, safe, reliable system. We need to get this done. There were a lot of reservations expressed in the annual report about having money to do this, but we certainly need to get this done. Now, I would encourage the minister that before there are any further business delays, failures, and subsequent financial losses, a long-term replacement plan for the ministry, for the entire system, be a priority.

I don’t think that in light of all this information I’m much more comfortable and confident in the minister’s and his department’s ability to keep this information secure than I am with private providers. I know this government is into partnerships – some work out, and some do not – but I would like to see the minister and his department, them only, have complete control of this information. At this time I would urge the minister to reflect on that.

Now, of course, the third and largest registry system, Mr. Chairman, that needs replacing, as I understand it, is the motor vehicles registry. We’ve got the land titles and now the motor vehicle registry, which last year generated over $200 million in revenue. Over 70 percent of all registry services delivered to the public are for motor vehicle transactions. Earlier I talked about – and I’m not going to go into that again – my reservations about the security of this system in light of what happened in Calgary. I understand there is a study under way to improve the security integrity of our drivers’ licences. I would encourage the minister to proceed with that very quickly.

Also, vehicle registrations and renewals to Albertans. Has the minister or the department studied the whole issue of vehicle identification numbers and what they’re worth on the black market? I was startled to hear that a VIN number could have a value in excess of $2,500. Now, I don’t know if this is a widespread problem or not – and I certainly don’t have the time to research it very thoroughly – but I would like to know what the department has done to ensure that a consumer, when they buy a used car, is not picking up a VIN number from somewhere else. I don’t know how widespread this problem is. Hopefully it’s not. Hopefully they are isolated events.

We also need to ensure with this motor vehicle registry system that police forces, whether they’re municipal forces or whether they’re the RCMP, have maximum guaranteed access, so to speak, to the system 24 hours a day, seven days a week, to conduct their investigations in a timely and effective manner. This has to be essential for law enforcement agencies. I hope these organizations don’t have the same concerns that I have. Certainly if there have been any concerns expressed about this system and the slow response times, I think the minister is obligated to share them with the public.

The motor vehicle registry system is also very important to the Minister of Justice. Alberta Justice collects over $34 million, as I understand it, and it’s going to be a great deal more for overdue traffic fines. [Mr. MacDonald’s speaking time expired] I will cede the floor now to a colleague.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

4:00

THE CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I’m pleased to have an opportunity this afternoon to take a look at the estimates for the Ministry of Government Services. I’d like to start with a comment about the business plans. Over the years we’ve watched the business plans evolve, I think we’d all have to concede that the business plan for this department is probably one of the best in terms of being able to read through, to take the goals and objectives and then to match them up with performance measures and then to have actual measures that you can understand and that make sense in terms of the goals. I think the minister should be rightfully proud of the work of his department in putting together such a good set of business plans. I realize that there are still gaps that they are trying to fill in the measures that they’re taking. You can compare other business plans. For instance, I may compare it with Seniors, which is a new department, but if you look at that business plan and compare it with this one, it’s a world of contrasts. This one is infinitely better. So I appreciate the information that’s provided for us in the manner that it is in this particular budget document.

I wanted to start with a number of items. I thought I’d start on page 192 and go roughly over the business plan and highlight some questions that I have and then if I have an opportunity – and I suspect I will, Mr. Chairman – later in the afternoon come back and ask some detailed budget questions.

One of the concerns I have is with number 1 on page 192, and that’s the business of promoting consumer protection. I asked the question with respect to seniors. Yesterday we looked at the Seniors budget, and on page 332 there’s a concern in the Seniors budget “with models to improve delivery of in-person and outreach information services to seniors.” My question: is there help from the Government Services ministry to a ministry like Seniors in putting together those models? It seems to me that it’s an area that’s becoming increasingly important in terms of trying to ensure that seniors not only know the kinds of services that are available to them from government but that they are also made aware of the kinds of things they should do to protect themselves in the marketplace. If those two efforts can be co-ordinated, I think it would benefit seniors. It’s really a difficult problem, because you have many seniors living on their own in quite isolated circumstances, and they depend primarily on radio or television for the kind of information that they receive and may not in some cases even have access to a daily newspaper. So that targeting of seniors I hope would be a concern for the department in terms of protecting them from fraud and making them aware of the kinds of things that they should be doing so that they don't get into financial difficulty with firms.

Within that same item, goal 2, "informed consumers and businesses, and a high standard of marketplace conduct." With a growing economy in the province and businesses opening and closing, I think that this is an area that needs special attention. I've had some complaints from constituents about the unevenness or the differences, if you will, among merchandisers in terms of the return of merchandise. Some establishments make it abundantly clear that all merchandise is returnable. Others post signs indicating that they won't take back merchandise. Others say that they'll give you a credit but you can't get the cash back. So there are a lot of different ways of handling merchandise returns. The complaints I get are about firms that don't have the policy prominently displayed so that consumers know exactly what the situation is when they make their purchases. My question: has this been a concern raised in the department or to the minister? Is there anything that would encourage merchandisers to at least make clear to customers what their policy is?

On the same page, jumping down now to freedom of information and protection of privacy legislation. I have some questions here and some a little later about that. The result that they want is to have Alberta businesses "prepared for private sector privacy legislation." My question is: how is that being done? Just what are the kinds of steps that are being taken? Is there assurance that it would include all businesses, that there won't be businesses that will be bypassed in this effort and will be able to claim that they're unaware of their obligations under the legislation? I would be interested in knowing how the department is going about this particular task.

Page 193. My colleagues have already mentioned security concerns as they surround drivers' licences. We still get concerns in our constituency about high school students who have access to false identification in terms of purchasing liquor. I'm not sure how widespread that is, but it's a concern that periodically is raised and the response of underage purchasers in terms of how easy it is for them to secure identification that will allow them to go into a liquor store and make a purchase. I wondered what kinds of efforts the department is making with respect to that particular problem.

Page 194. The minister shuddered when my colleague talked about the Condominium Property Act and the possibility of reopening that and addressing some of the concerns, but I would bring to his attention again the huge problems that some condominium owners are facing. I brought to the attention of the department several years ago the problems that are faced by a complex in my constituency, where in a new building the floors started to rot, and mold invaded the lower floor suites. The homeowners were given really what could be nothing more than the royal runaround, and there was no recourse for them in legislation in terms of getting to the builder, the developer, or having the engineers take responsibility for what had happened. It was a whole series of breakdowns in the compliance system that led to this happening. City inspectors didn't catch the problems. The crawl space was one foot instead of the required four feet, and the drainage that was supposed to be in place was not there.

The bottom line was that these condominium owners were left with tremendous bills to have the problem rectified. They've been forced into the courts and the prospect of long, strung-out, and expensive court cases with the developer, the builder, some of the engineers involved, and even the architect. It's been a miserable mess for people. In that particular case, some of those were seniors who sold their homes and bought into the project, have that asset but limited amounts of cash. The kind of money that they are being expected to put up, because the problem has to be addressed immediately – they can't wait for court awards – just means that they've had to end up selling the place at a greatly reduced market value from what they purchased it for, and they've ended their lives in really kind of tragic financial circumstances. So as I said, opening the act may not be the solution, but there has to be some remedy for consumers who in good faith make an investment in those kinds of projects and find themselves holding the bag in terms of the costs to repair what is really work that didn't pass the test.

The minister talked about Service Alberta and the change of name. Oh, I'm sorry; before I go there, on the same page, page 194, I'd like to talk a little bit about the "plain language information about marketplace legislation." Is there a linkage between this activity and the writing originally of a legislation? So much of the legislation that comes forward to us in the Assembly is obviously so legal-bound and not written for ordinary laypeople to read and understand and obviously, then, requires an interpretation. But I wondered if that couldn't have been eased in the first place if there was some pressure on the drafters of the legislation to make it plain language legislation.

I go back, as I've said a number of times in this Assembly, that that was a promise that was made by this government in 1992, I believe, before they were elected: once elected, they would focus on generating plain language legislation. I think that for some of this, that's where it starts. The legislation is so difficult for people to read that you end up needing a translation. If it can be translated, then why not write it like that in the first place?

I'd like to skip over, then, to page 197 and to some of the performance measures. We're beginning to generate a list of items that can be compared nationally in terms of our fees, and again it's good to see that driver's licence fees are below the national average. Those are again, I think, really useful measures.

We have a list of some of the other proposed comparisons that are going to be made: the collection agency, the prepaid contractor's licence, the direct selling licence. I wondered if there's going to be an effort to look at renewals for some of the other areas. Just what is going to be on the list? Is this the limited list here, or will there be other fees that will be compared? There's such a huge, huge number of fees now being levied by the government. They were in the back of a document that we had here the other day, and there are actually columns of them.

Page 198. I applaud the effort to try to address telemarketing fraud, but the question I keep getting – and I'm sure everyone in the Assembly does – from constituents is: how can we just control the number of calls that keep coming into the residence without having to resort to a silent number? Just the nuisance of having call after call from telemarketers is really becoming a problem for some individuals, and I wonder if there has been any thought of how that might be curtailed or if it should be curtailed. It's an annoyance, and I don't propose that it's nearly as important as trying to control fraud, but it's something that I think has really gotten out of control. It's nothing to sit down for dinner and to be interrupted three or four times by telemarketers seeking to sell something or to have you subscribe to something. So my question is: has there been any consideration of trying to control that kind of activity?

The minister talked about – it's not One Window – Service Alberta, the work that's going forward. A number of years ago when the government moved to the RITE telephone number, was there any kind of follow-up study to see how people reacted to that that would give any direction to the kinds of activities that are being considered under Service Alberta? In the beginning, I remember, when the RITE phone system went into place, there were a lot of complaints, and I seldom get those anymore, but I wondered if there was ever an evaluation of the project and how it's going.

4:20

Page 199. I talked briefly about FOIP with respect to private businesses and what they're going to be responsible for and how they should prepare for it, but my question is: are there programs in place that give the general public a better understanding of what information they can legitimately receive under the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act? It seems to me, again, that I get calls from constituents who don't really have a very clear understanding of the kind of information that they can expect, and I wonder if there has been any kind of tracking in terms of people who are seeking information. Are they deterred for cost reasons? Are they being discouraged from proceeding? I have heard from at least one constituent that just sort of threw his hands up and said: "That's useless. I can't get the information. It's going to cost me too much money." I never did follow it up, but I wondered if that's not a concern. What is the public program that's envisioned to make sure that the public does know what their rights and obligations under that act are?

Goal 6 and the reviewing of the legislation. I have some questions about the secretariat and its relation to this. Is there any indication of how many regulations have been reduced?

THE CHAIR: The hon. Minister of Government Services.

MR. COUTTS: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I want to take this opportunity to respond to some of the questions that have come our way over the last hour and 10 minutes here regarding the business plan and the budget that's being put forward. Many of the questions that have come forward are certainly questions that are legitimate in terms of our registry agents network and some of the functions that that network performs and how it does so on a safe and secure premise for making sure that Albertans get the delivery of the service but at the same time have their privacy protected.

As well, I got a distinct impression from some of the members opposite that there were some concerns about security and the possibility of fraud and forgery. Some of that fraud and forgery seems to stem from some indication that the people that are actually under contract with the registry agents contract with the department. There's some uneasiness there. There's also some uneasiness with maybe some of the employees that are handling the information and that type of thing.

All told, though, I want to thank the Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods for the compliment on the business plan. We've certainly tried our best in the department, and I do have an excellent group of people to keep the business plan as simple as possible and as straightforward as possible so that it's read by Albertans. Albertans should know exactly what's in a business plan and exactly how much that business plan costs to execute.

In particular, with the service that's being provided, it's important to point out where their money goes, because it's the dollars that they bring forward in licences, in the fees that they pay for those licences, that goes back into the delivery of that system. I think they want to know that their dollars are being well looked after and well spent and, at the time same, as the concerns that have come forward, that it's done in a safe and secure manner. That's exactly what we're trying to do in the department, is take a system that was 20 years old, upgrade it, make sure that it's safe and secure.

I believe the Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar asked me if I was concerned. Yes. I'm always concerned. Every single solitary day that I wake up and come into this building, am I concerned about protecting people's privacy but at the same time making sure that the system is up and running? Yes, I am concerned, and that's why we've gone ahead and made the changes that we've had to make to make sure that our systems are going to be upgraded over the next few years. I'll talk a little bit more about that when I get to hon. Edmonton-Gold Bar's questions, and I hope to be able to answer some of his questions and alleviate some of his concerns about the future that I am taking and the department is taking in upgrading the system to make sure that it's not only safe and secure on the automotive side, but it's also safe and secure on the driver's licence side and the identification side.

I'd like to start off with the actual premise of a registry agent's office. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview was concerned about the actual privacy within a registry agent's office and how the contracts are let and how we go about expanding on the system or keeping the system to the needs of the public, whether it happens to be in a major city where there's a huge population – and as cities now grow and expand, how do we make sure that the service is going to be available to those city folks so that they can get their licensing properly done? How do we also make sure that in a small town or rural area we keep that service going?

Well, agents are chosen through a tendering process. Our department goes out and does an assessment of what the needs are in a community. We constantly monitor that assessment of whether the community is being served well by the local registry agent, and we make a decision whether to expand that particular service to that area or not. We're constantly doing that because Alberta is continuing to grow. If we feel that we need an agency in another area, we go through a tendering process. We have, again, this expansion policy based on customer satisfaction. If the customers are satisfied and the volume of the transactions and the potential growth are all taken into consideration, we won't add on to our system. If a contract does get let, no, we don't have a termination date of that contract, but we do audit the activities of a registry agent. Every single solitary day their activities are audited and monitored, and we go in once a year and audit how the registry agent goes about and does its business. So there are strict controls in place at our registry agents' offices.

How do we choose a registry agent office? The registry agent must go through a criminal check. They must have a solid business plan behind their proposal if they set up a new registry agent office. They must have the finances in place, because there is a commitment on behalf of registry agents for compatible workstations to tie into our system so that the service they provide is congruent with what the needs are of that community as well as providing the service for the government.

Have we had difficulty in the past? We've only had three agents who have been terminated in the last eight years. That's a pretty good record. Now, when we see organizations such as British Columbia and Saskatchewan coming along and taking a look at our registry agent system in Alberta and they want to try and take the best of what we've got and try and provide it to their constituents in those two provinces, that tells us that we've got a very, very good system working here in Alberta. Again, a thousand employees are employed at the 228 agencies across Alberta.

When we have a problem, yes, we go in and we solve the problem immediately, and I think we showed that this last December with an agent who has been charged. Again, I don't want to talk anymore about that, but we acted immediately in that particular case.

4:30

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview also talked about our agents' fees, and yes, we compare ourselves to other provinces. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods made reference to the fees in the back. They are there in the business plan for people to take a look at.

The Member for Edmonton-Riverview also talked about the retailing of electricity and asked, on the consumer protection side, whether our department got into dealing with wholesale and retail of electricity. Well, we don't actually get into that. On the consumer protection side, under the Fair Trading Act, we regulate the marketers of electricity and those electrical services. What we do is we regulate the marketers to a point where we say that if a marketer is going out to a community and wants to sell their product, they must be licensed, the company must have a million-dollar security bond, and they must comply with the 17-point code of conduct. When a marketer comes to your door or to your business, they must show identification and make timely and accurate and truthful comparisons in their presentations, and they must ensure that the data being used to support any of their claims is reliable. We have tip sheets available for what consumers might want to know about marketers.

That's the detail that we get into in terms of consumer protection. If we get complaints about marketers not following the contract lines or the contract regulations, then we do step in and make an evaluation, but we do not get into anything with the EUB, because they set the rates. Quite possibly, at another time the Minister of Energy can address that concern for you.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview talked about the cost of the name change for Alberta One Window, which we're now calling Service Alberta. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods made a comment about this very thing, saying that the RITE line when it was first put in, you know, wasn't really serving the bill so much and was presenting some problems, but it has improved over the years. It's an amazing thing. When we're talking about Alberta One Window and how it has progressed, it actually has progressed from the evolution of the RITE line and how well the RITE line has been accepted by the people of Alberta. The cost so far has been about $70,000 for this name change. Now, part of that was to go out and do some focus groups across this province. We went from the north right to the south, and that's where we found out what confidence people had in our RITE system.

As technology has progressed, we now can take that RITE system and we can put it on-line, but we can even make it better. We can even make it faster. We can make it available for people to get into a department, and they don't even know how it happens. When we unveil this over the next few months, we'll be doing some demonstration and showing how One Window can access a department without Government Services actually doing any of the managerial work of what people want to access. But we're just the facilitator. The $70,000 that we put into changing the name from One Window to Service Alberta will be well received by Albertans because that's what they told us, and they also told us that that's the kind of service they wanted. At the same time, it doesn't make us exclusively go on the Internet. It also makes sure that we have that same access to those same program deliveries in all of the departments across government by fax or by phone or by mail. It's truly a very, very good service, and my compliments to my staff for making that happen.

I'll go on to some questions from Edmonton-Gold Bar. I just want to talk briefly about how the systems differ in our registry systems. The $13 million that we have put into the budget to upgrade our systems for our registry agents – and I'll talk a little bit about this later – is strictly going to go to the upgrading of three items. Land titles and personal property will all be part of the first $13 million. It will be a three-year program. We're only going to be allowed to spend that $13 million on the upgrade to our legacy systems. We can't spend any of those dollars on anything else in the department, and those dollars come to us through the increase in the fees that have just been announced and as part of a three-year program that we will continue with. Our first priority is the personal property and then land titles.

Not included in that $13 million is the upgrade to our driver's licence or possible identification process that we're going through. That would be an additional cost that I will have to go to Treasury Board for in the future. But in order to know what you're going for, I have to know what kind of system we need to put in place, because we do have to upgrade our driver's licence system, our identification system. We've been discussing this with some companies that could provide us with the systems, and the bill is anywhere between $15 million to $25 million depending on what you want in terms of security features. That price doesn't even include anything like biometrics.

So we have to work with the Security Task Force, that is set up by the hon. minister of intergovernmental relations, and we have to know what their requirements are going to be not only on the national scale but also on the international scale. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar is absolutely right that we want to make sure that the security system that is in place allows the folks that don't have anything to hide to get through the borders quickly and effectively, to get on and do their business, but also to keep the crooks out. So that's what we're working on. That system will be over and above the $13 million. I want to make that very, very clear to the hon. member.

You know, in going about upgrading that system, we have to understand the incidence of forgery and fraud on our drivers' licences in comparison to all the transactions that we do across government in Government Services. We have to make sure that the numbers of incidents that are out there, although small – and just recently we've only seen two incidents, both in Calgary. They really and truly are small in comparison to all of the transactions that we do.

We need to make sure that as part of our security, particularly after September 11, those provisions that are required or needed after such an event come through and are done properly. We don't want to do our security system and have it not fit the bill both nationally and internationally and then have to go and spend money to do it right. If I'm going to do it, I'm going to do it right, and I'm going to do it right the first time.

That gives us about half of the answers. I'll be glad to stand and give the other half in just a few minutes, Mr. Chairman.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. At this time I would like to express my gratitude to the minister for those timely responses.

Just before I get started, for the record, I believe the minister was indicating that there is going to be a $13 million expenditure over a three-year period for $39 million. [interjection] Yes. Thirteen million dollars per year for three years.

Now, it is, I believe, a necessary expenditure, and it is a problem that certainly this hon. minister did not develop during his watch at this ministry. I believe it has been inherited, shall I say, Mr. Chairman, and I wish him well in solving these difficult problems at this time.

We cannot discuss Government Services without recognizing that Alberta Justice also relies on a timely system to ensure that child support is collected through the maintenance enforcement program. Driving convictions from Justice certainly are forwarded through the system, allowing for Alberta Transportation, another department – so all this is connected, Mr. Chairman – to administer its many traffic safety programs. High-risk drivers can certainly be identified, and we can make Alberta roads safer.

Now, we already discussed this afternoon the need for new equipment to create drivers' licences. If law enforcement agencies have concerns about security features, I would encourage them to bring them forward. Perhaps they're already working with the minister and the department – and I'm not aware of this – to reduce cases of counterfeit or fraudulent $500 licences. It's pleasing to hear that there are going to be some real changes made in the department, but I wonder what's going to happen with the motor vehicle registry system.

You know, Alberta One Window changed their name to Service Alberta. I believe that this was an open window. There was this big commitment made in the throne speech two years ago that the common window would make it easy for Albertans to have access to services and, of course, to information. For the One Window system, now Service Alberta, when we consider the web service, the phone, the fax service, and the over-the-counter service, how were the electronic forms developed that are going to be used in the web service? These forms, as I understand them, can be quite convenient. Now, was there private-sector involvement in the development of these forms, or was it completely done within the department? [interjection] It was completely done within the department. So my next question in this regard would be redundant, and that was whether it was tendered. But if there was no private-sector involvement, then it was just done internally. I'll be watching to see how all this works out, because certainly there's going to be a further increase in Internet service. Hopefully we're going to get a chance through the hon. Member for Edmonton-Caldor, with the committee that that member chairs, to best see how to address the whole issue of electronic transactions, commercial transactions, and the FOIP Act, the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act.

I'm sort of looking forward to working on that committee because it's certainly going to give this member a chance to learn more about that issue. I find it quite complex, and it is something I'm looking forward to. Sometimes I think, in recognition of the committee and its work, that perhaps the suggestions of that committee should be given a priority with the ministry. Now, perhaps this has already been worked out; I don't know. But the Alberta One Window is a closed window now, and it's going to be Service Alberta. I'm going to have to reserve judgment on that, Mr. Chairman.

Now, at this time I have some specific questions regarding the premium fees and licence changes that are in the fiscal plan tables on page 60. The corporate pass here for museums and historical sites is a new initiative. If the minister could please explain – and if not today, then in writing would be completely acceptable; it would be no problem – why there's a wide range here in this fee or licence or whatever you would like to call it from zero dollars to $10,000. I would like to know how this system is going to work. As I said, there's a wide range here, from a $1,000 to $10,000 in set price. Does this depend on the facility? For instance, at the Drumheller museum, do I just pay eight grand and I have access with my tour buses for the season there? How, precisely, does this work, and how is it determined what the fee is going to be? Because that's a real wide range, this business of a corporate pass for museums and historical sites. Perhaps it's a better question under Community Development, but was there any consultation regarding this with the Minister of Government Services? Was all this worked out in advance or is it simply an issue for the Minister of Community Development?

Now, the fees, premiums, and licences here. The name and address changes: this is again another new fee, $13. Is this member correct in understanding that if I'm a student and let's say I move from Calgary Varsity up to the University of Alberta and I need to have a change of address for my driver's licence – certainly an insurance agent would probably call for that – that's going to cost me $13? I would like to know how much money the minister is anticipating generating in revenue from this and if any concern has been expressed to the minister or to department officials regarding this fee being a disincentive to having accurate, up-to-date information on licences. Has any consideration been given to the fact that law enforcement agencies may not have confidence in the licensing system as a result of this? In my view, if a person is on a very modest budget and they move: "Well, my last address is good enough, thank you very much. I'm going to keep that $13 in my pocket." Perhaps the gain of the government is not going to be worth the headache for the police forces. I would appreciate some answers regarding that fee.

Also, I would like details, please, on the commercial trailer. There is commercial trailer by weight and class 1 or class 3 public vehicles by weight, and precisely how much money is the department hoping to realize in revenue?

Now, there are many, many fee increases here that certainly are high, and in light of the time and the other issues that I have to discuss with this department at this time, I'm not going to go any further into the fact that there have been significant fee increases.

Mr. Chairman, the minister discussed earlier – and I appreciate the response that the minister provided to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview. But last year when the ministry developed the electricity marketing regulation under the Fair Trading Act, this regulation, as I understand it, required the marketers of electricity to be licensed and set out disclosure and other requirements to protect consumers. Now, that's fine, and the tip sheet is a good idea. You know, improvements are coming there slowly. It was last year that members on this side of the House encouraged the Department of Energy to start publishing the daily costs of electricity, and that helped consumers make a reliable decision because they could see what the price of electricity was trading for. They just had to turn to their local paper on a daily basis and they could see any trends that were developing. A consumer can only make a decision, a sound decision, if they have all the information. The tip sheet is certainly a good idea, but I do have concerns regarding the electricity marketing regulation and this use of exit fees on power bills.

Certainly the minister had in my view a quick response to the whole issue of exit fees and natural gas marketers, and I appreciate the work that the minister did on that issue last year. At this time, in light of the electricity marketing regulation, I would like the minister and his staff to have a close study at the use of exit fees. I don't think they're fair on electricity bills. If one provider is going to give this price and another provider is going to give that price yet I can't shop around because of exit fees, I don't think that that is free enterprise. I would like to know what the electricity marketing regulation does or does not do under the Fair Trading Act in regards to that, because certainly, as I said, there was a quick response from the minister regarding the issue of natural gas and exit fees. As I recall, Mr. Chairman, I do not believe that the whole notion of exit fees for electricity or natural gas ever went forward. It was certainly proposed, but I don't believe it went forward.

Now, last year there was certainly a decrease in the revenue from land titles, and I would like to know from the minister what the projections are for the future regarding revenue from land titles transactions. When the minister tells the Assembly, Mr. Chairman, that there is going to be this three-year program of $13 million a year for personal property land titles, when we consider that Alberta Government Services and registries received $1.5 million in supplementary funding one year ago – this additional funding, it is noted, was provided for critical infrastructure requirements for the land titles information system in Alberta One Window. Other initiatives, unfortunately – and this is last year, so it is quite interesting what has transpired here – had to be deferred because the cost of providing these additional services was not included in the ministry's budget.

Capital initiatives were deferred also to fund operational costs, and this is why I say that this minister has inherited some pretty big problems. At least you've got to give him credit for trying to deal with them, Mr. Chairman. I don't know if these sky-high fees are the way to do this, because certainly many of the consumers of the province that are going to be affected here didn't devise this system. We had no money for a lot of these initiatives that were needed, and the minister is playing catch-up now. But we had an increase of service contracts, and I wonder what we're going to do with these service contracts now. You know, there was in the past data processing with key expenses of over $12 million, contracted services of $7 million. I don't know what the minister has planned for this year, but in the year 2000 there was $21 million, roughly, in service contracts. Last year that almost doubled to over $39 million.

I want to know what the future holds for us regarding these service contracts, because certainly EDS seemed to be a big partner with the ministry. There was certainly note of this, and this was going to be a partnership that was to be developed. As I understand it, the information technology services have been outsourced for several years to EDS, which was formerly Systemhouse. How much of these service contracts are going to that one company? There were certainly indications that this was going to be a partnership that was going to be extended, and I'm just curious because there's a lot of money here at stake. I want to ensure that our tax dollars are invested wisely and prudently, because the total investment in this department to clean up this system or to make it safe and secure and reliable is $70 million. That's a figure that I've been quoted here in the past, and that could include private partnerships. I want to know in this budget what sort of role these private partnerships are going to play, because certainly it is indicated that with computer hardware and software – the minister and his officials are absolutely right – the estimated useful life left is five years. So this cannot be delayed, Mr. Chairman. Other equipment has an estimated useful life of 10 years, but with this vital computer hardware and software five years is what's left in its service life. So I don't think we can wait any longer. At this time, before I go any further, I think that the land titles, motor vehicles, and personal property registries need the upgrading. It's proposed and the minister has . . . [Mr. MacDonald's speaking time expired]

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

THE CHAIR: Before I recognize the hon. Member for Airdrie-Rocky View, might we have consent to briefly revert to Introduction of Guests?

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Introduction of Guests
(reversion)

THE CHAIR: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. It's my honour this afternoon to introduce to the House, to you and through you to the members of this Assembly, some guests who are in the Speaker's gallery accompanied by a number of citizens who are in the members' gallery as well. I would ask that the members rise as I introduce them, and then we could extend to them the warm welcome of this Assembly. Seated in the Speaker's gallery are His Excellency Gaston Lasarte Burghi, who is the ambassador of the Oriental Republic of Uruguay; His Excellency Branimir Stoyanov Zaimov, who is the ambassador of the Republic of Bulgaria; and His Excellency Harcourt Turnquest, high commissioner for the Commonwealth of the Bahamas. They are accompanied by Mr. Jerry Sherman. They are here in western Canada and certainly northern Alberta on somewhat of an economic development tour of Edmonton and area businesses, and they are accompanied by visitors in the members' gallery: Gordon McCallum, Cam Schnek, David Goodchild, Vic Viens, and Esther Viens.* I would ask them all to please stand and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

Government Services (continued)

THE CHAIR: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Rocky View.

MS HALEY: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I wanted to get up very briefly this afternoon and make just a few comments about this department called Government Services. One of my predecessors used to be the minister of consumer and corporate affairs years ago. Consumer and corporate affairs has now been rolled into Government Services. I guess if I had a question for the minister at all, it would be specifically with regard to consumer and corporate affairs and as to what role they truly play, whether or not it's something that we can look at to ensure that we have a place for people to go when there's a problem, if Government Services in fact is equipped to really handle that type of thing, and if he has any plans, to elaborate on that a little bit in the future.

The other comment I wanted to make is specifically with regards to registries and what an awesome job our registry companies are doing. I'd like to refer specifically to Airdrie registries and what a pleasure it is to go there. Whether it's a corporate registration I have to do or getting my car licence done or my driver's licence renewed, I go in there and there's maybe one or two people ahead of me in lineups and everybody's happy. The staff are just incredible. The proprietor of the business, Mr. Hamilton, is just running an incredible business there, doing a great service for the people of our community and surrounding area, and he would be reflective of the types of industry that we have all over this province on this.

I used to work in one, so I know this for a fact. In March when everybody got their demand to go in and get their licence plates renewed, we would have people lined up not just inside the government office. We would have people lined up outside the government office. You could just write off the entire day because you knew that getting your plates done on the last day – because that's when we all did it – was going to be a nightmare. You know, it was one of those, I think, incredibly great things that we've managed to do in the last nine years: changing that to something that's responsive. It's now got a corporate culture around it.

The fee increases that the minister has had to impose will allow those same registries to update and improve all of their computer systems, which is absolutely essential for their next step, and the security of the system is all tied into that.

I guess really, Mr. Chairman, all I wanted to do was to say that I think our corporate registry, our licence plates, all the things that they do are so superior to the way that it was. The minister, I know, has worked very hard with these people in addressing their needs for a higher level of funding on their fees, and I'd like to congratulate him for that.

Thank you very much.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Minister of Government Services.

MR. COUTTS: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. In the few moments that we have left, I just would like to talk a little bit about some of the easier questions that were brought forward and give some responses. At the same time, I reiterate my commitment to all hon. members on questions. If we haven't fully satisfied you in my answers standing in the House here, we'll make sure you get a written response.

I think one of the most fascinating things when you're talking about consumer protection – maybe the hon. Member for Airdrie-Rocky View just mentioned it – is that sometimes you just don't know where to go if you've got a problem. Well, Mr. Chairman, that's one thing that Service Alberta is certainly going to help with by getting people to the point where they can actually access a department to find out what a program is, how they can get some help. If they feel that they have a question about the legitimacy of a business, they can call our call centre. We have a call centre that's up and running. It's state of the art. We have 20 people working in that call centre every day, and those ladies that work in that centre take over a thousand calls per day from Albertans on a whole series of things right from student loans to hospital questions to consumer protection, the whole bit. I don't have the phone number right in front of me, but it's a 1-800 number, and I'll certainly get it for all hon. members so that they can pass it along to their constituents and their constituency offices.

The comment made about our registry agents and the service that they provide: that service has just been enhanced. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar mentioned about the $2 increase that they got just the first part of the year. The $2 increase is not a government fee. It's for registry agents to compensate their employees better, to pay their taxes, to pay their heat bills, that type of thing, because they are carrying on a business. That fee is charged and they get to keep that to operate that business, and they don't come back to government for anything else. That is one of the successes of our registry system.

The other thing that I would just like to briefly talk about. Some of the questions that were coming from the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar lately, in this last session, were on outsourcing and the one-window incorporated into that and whether we did any outsourcing. That was all done in-house with the help and the co-operation of other departments. The departments that were involved helped put Service Alberta together. Yes, in some of our other areas on the databases we do some outsourcing. But we don't exclusively do it with one company; we do it with a number of companies. That outsourcing has worked well for us, but most of the work is done in-house.

The Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar talked about the land titles registry and better turnaround. We're shooting for a 48-hour turnaround. All we have to do is verify that the information on the registrations of land is accurate. Some are easy; some are difficult. We don't always make our 48-hour turnaround. Some of that is because of all of the transactions that are coming forward in this robust economy that we have. It's difficult to tell whether the future dollars will be there, because it's done on a demand basis. So we have to have a system that is in place to handle the demand, and that's why the upgrade is definitely going to happen on land titles as one of our first initiatives.

Stolen vehicles is a huge, huge issue. The member opposite talked about stolen vehicles, and that's been on the national agenda for many years. You know, we co-operate with all North American jurisdictions, and in this last year a committee was struck to help develop an action plan in Alberta. It's something that we're very, very concerned about.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods talked about protection for seniors in the marketplace. Our department works very, very closely with the Department of Seniors. We work together with other departments, on housing issues, certainly also with Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development, to talk about consumer protection in those areas. We target together. We don't target separately, because targeting separately is a waste of dollars. We want to make sure that the message goes out from one location, and we work very, very closely. As a matter of fact, our call centre number is put on fridge magnets, and we sent these out to people across the province so that seniors and folks that are at home can see our call centre, and if they have any consideration about whether a telemarketer is a legitimate telemarketer, maybe the next day they can phone and give the details of that telemarketer to our call centre and we can investigate.

Just one quick thing about plain language. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods talked about plain language. Our Fair Trading Act has been touted as the best in Canada if not North America. I think that one of the reasons is because it has to appeal to the business sector, and they're not all lawyers. We've tried our best to keep it in as plain language as possible and keep the legalese out of it, because it has to appeal to the business sector. One of our challenges is to get the content of that Fair Trading Act out to the business sector so that they know the legislation that controls them.

Mr. Chairman, in the last minute I just want to briefly talk about freedom of information and protection of privacy. There is a freedom of information and protection of privacy review going on at this point in time, and I'm pleased that the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar is looking at it as a challenge to bring up some of those concerns. I know that they're going out and doing some consultation at this point in time, and we look forward to participating in the upgrading of probably the best legislation on freedom of information and protection of privacy that there is in Canada. Alberta leads the way again in that area.

So with that, Mr. Chairman, I would like to reassure this House that I will make sure that anything that I haven't answered, I will answer with the help of my very capable staff, who I appreciate coming out here today and supporting our business plan and our budget and making sure that we provide as much information as we possibly can to the Assembly.

THE CHAIR: I now am required to put the following question. After considering the business plan and proposed estimates for the Department of Government Services, are you ready for the vote?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

Agreed to:
Operating Expense and Capital Investment $218,021,000

THE CHAIR: Shall the vote be reported? Are you agreed?

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Does the Assembly concur in this report?

HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Opposed? So ordered.

The hon. Government House Leader.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would move that pursuant to Government Motion 20 we adjourn until April 8 at 1:30 p.m.

[Motion carried; pursuant to Government Motion 20 the Assembly adjourned at 5:18 p.m.]

Mr. Michael Senych September 24, 1926, to March 27, 2002

THE SPEAKER: Hon. members, on Wednesday, March 27, 2002, Michael Senych passed away suddenly. Mr. Senych represented the constituency of Redwater for the Social Credit Party. Mr. Senych was first elected in the election held on June 17, 1963, and served until August 30, 1971.

During his years of service in the Legislature Mr. Senych served on the Select Standing Committees on Private Bills, Public Accounts, and Municipal Law and Law Amendments. He also served on the special committees on Automobile Insurance and the Centralization and Consolidation of Schools.

With our admiration and respect there is gratitude to members of his family who shared the burdens of public office. Members of Mr. Senych's family are with us today in the members' gallery. Our prayers are with them.

In a moment of silent prayer I ask you to remember the hon. member Michael Senych as you may have known him. Rest eternal grant unto him, O Lord, and let light perpetual shine upon him. Amen.

head: Oral Question Period

THE SPEAKER: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Community Lottery Boards

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Albertans have told this government time and again that if the government wants to take money out of the communities through VLTs, it must return some of that money to be used in ways that communities see fit. VLT proceeds are going up this year, yet funding for community charities is going down. When the government decided to disband community lottery boards because it had to make some tough decisions, it not only took away money from communities; it took away their power. My questions are to the Premier. Given that gaming revenues are expected to increase by more than $77 million this year, why did the government disband community lottery boards and take away $51 million from our communities?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, certainly media reports suggest that government is recommending or reconsidering the decision to end the community lottery board grant program, and some municipalities indeed have threatened to hold plebiscites to get rid of VLTs if the program is not reinstated.

First of all, there are no plans to revisit this issue at this time. As I indicated on Thursday before the break, if higher than expected revenues persist, funding for this program could be reconsidered at some time in the future under a different format. The Gaming minister also has pledged to look at the existing lottery-funded grant programs to see if some of the groups affected by the ending of the CLB program can be accommodated.

But I would remind the hon. member that lottery funds, including those lotteries that come from slot machines in casinos, the various lottery pull tickets, 6/49, VLTs, go to fund a lot more than community lottery boards: $25 million in family and community support services for children; $15 million to the Sport, Recreation, Parks and Wildlife Foundation; $122 million to the Supernet project, which benefits all communities, particularly in the educational sector; $10 million to seniors' lodges; $3.1 million to achievement scholarships; $500,000 for hosting the Arctic Winter Games; $2 million to the First Nations development fund; $25 million to the community facilities enhancement program, and that's $25 million a year for each of three years; $10 million to health service research; $50 million to health care facilities; $28 million in unconditional municipal grants; $15 million to water management infrastructure.

DR. NICOL: Mr. Speaker, let me help the Premier. Was it a tough decision to allocate $33 million for horse racing instead of maintaining the community lottery boards that fund scouts, victims' services, and kids' playgrounds?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, that is another lottery program. I'll have the hon. Minister of Gaming respond to your question relative to the specifics of that program, and how we've come about it is not by taxpayers' dollars.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. STEVENS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Premier is quite correct. This program has been in place since 1996. The funding for the racing industry is directly connected to racing entertainment centres which are connected with race courses and which have slot machines in them. It is part of the revenue from those slot machines which funds the racing industry, and I would point out that a significant portion of the funding from those slot machines also goes into the Alberta lottery fund to assist in funding many good projects for all Albertans.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: was it a tough decision to increase the commitment from the lottery funds on debt payment by more than 600 percent this year to $320 million instead of leaving that $51 million to support our scouts, our community playgrounds, and local community initiatives?

MR. KLEIN: I would remind the hon. leader of the Liberal Party that CFEP funds many of these projects, that the hon. Minister of Gaming will be looking at ways to fund these programs that fall through the cracks, so to speak; you know, the smaller grant programs. There may have to be some adjustments to the terms of reference to the community facilities enhancement program, Mr. Speaker, but we won't let these small groups be ignored. We will look after them, just as we are looking after the needs of the rest of the community through a number of the programs I have already addressed, including the additional programs: $36 million to the strategic and research investments program, $35 million in school facilities – of course, they don't want that – $10 million in postsecondary facilities; $5.9 million to the health innovation fund. Yes, there is a substantial amount, about $300 million, going to debt pay-down because this is what Albertans said they wanted. They said: get rid of the debt.

THE SPEAKER: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A follow-up to the Premier: can the Premier tell us who he consulted with across Alberta to get their okay to eliminate the lottery boards and put more money into debt payment? Who did you talk to in the community when you developed this budget?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, we sensed the priorities of Albertans. The priorities of Albertans are health, education, sound infrastructure, good fiscal and financial management, no deficits, debt pay-down, safe community, lower taxes. These are the priorities of Albertans, and the priorities of Albertans are also those that we identified in the budget with respect to the programs that are funded out of lottery dollars.

Mr. Speaker, I can tell you how the community lottery board program came about. A number of mayors wanted to meet with me in Bonnyville. I met with them, and they said, "Lookit, if you want our support on VLTs," understanding that there were a lot of plebiscites being contemplated at that time, the result of an initiative, we will put it, on the part of people who were really concerned about gambling, not about where the money was going – they wanted to get rid of VLTs, period. They said: if we had more local control over some of the money, we might not be as strong in our opposition to VLTs. We said: okay, we'll set up a system whereby there would be some local control over some of the funding. The mayors of course wanted the councils to be the keepers of that particular money so that they could perhaps dedicate some of those funds to potholes and other purely municipal services. We said: no; if it's going to be done, it has to be done in the community sense.

Hence, a committee was set up under the MLA for Lacombe-Stettler, who came up with a process to accommodate the wishes of the mayors, and as I understand, it functioned quite well. But when we were assessing our priorities in terms of where tight dollars should go – and this was predicated on the price of oil at the time and projections into the future – we determined that of all the priority areas for lottery money funding the community lottery boards were the least priority. So it was a matter of setting priorities.

Consultation? Tremendous consultation: 74 members of caucus, Treasury Board, cabinet, and now debate in this Legislature, Mr. Speaker. That's consultation.

1:50

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A moment ago the Premier said that he was going to look after these small programs. He said that he was going to look after them from this level. Why didn't he leave it at the community, where the community could make those decisions. Is this Ralph's world?

MR. KLEIN: Well, much better Ralph's world, I'll tell you, than Ken's world. I'll tell you that for sure, because Ken's world would be a world of deficits, a world of debt, a world of giving everything to everyone all the time, Mr. Speaker. That is Ken's world. Ask and you will receive. The more you stamp your feet, the more you yell, the more you scream, the more the Liberals will give. They want to be friends to everyone for all time, for all purposes. You name it, they will give it. I would rather be in Ralph's world, where we have to make tough decisions and live by tough decisions, than Ken's world any day.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In Ken's world they'd look after the communities, and they'd let the communities have a choice as well.

Out of the lottery fund, Mr. Speaker, why is it that only 6 percent of the gaming revenues are going for charities and for not-for-profit community groups, and 26 percent is going for debt payment? If you said that you believe in the communities, why are you not giving them more money than that?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, this goes back again to when there was a tremendous amount of controversy over VLTs, in particular, which are a main source, by the way, of lottery revenues. We listened, and we took a lesson from people like Mr. Rohr and Mr. Gray in Calgary. We said: yes, it is a problem. We capped them at 6,000, put more money into antigambling or gambling education programs. But they also said that there was also a feeling in the community – and we felt that quite strongly – that community dollars ought to go to community programs, yes, but that a large percentage of those dollars should also flow to high-priority areas like health and education and infrastructure. We listened to the people who said that to us, and we have done precisely that.

THE SPEAKER: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Albertans have been very loud and clear in their objections to the loss of the community lottery boards, the loss of money coming back into communities from gaming revenue and local decision-making. Overall, this government continues to budget less and less money for Alberta's nonprofit associations, communities, and charities. My questions are to the Premier. Is the government refusing to reinstate the community lottery boards with their full $53 million budget intact despite the damage done to communities by the cuts?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I don't think that that much damage has been done, and if there's any damage or any organizations that fall through the cracks, we will have a discussion as to how those organizations can be accommodated, those small organizations: pipe and bugle bands and, you know, various sports teams and so on. We will do our best to make sure that they are accommodated.

Relative to community programs, Mr. Speaker, I would remind the hon. member that $25 million, including a considerable sum to the hon. member's constituency, goes to community programs through CFEP. Significant dollars, about $15 million annually, goes to the Sport, Recreation, Parks and Wildlife Foundation. That's a community program. Three point one million dollars goes to achievement scholarships. I don't know how much goes to the Wild Rose Foundation; that's another one. [interjection] About $6 million to the Wild Rose Foundation. So there are numerous community programs that are supported by lottery funds; the community lottery board was one of those programs.

Relative to all the programs that are funded, I will have the hon. Minister of Gaming, the hon. Minister of Community Development, the hon. Provincial Treasurer supplement my answer. I'm sure that they can provide . . .

THE SPEAKER: Well, actually, there is a process under the Legislative Assembly for review of the estimates, including a review of the lottery fund estimates.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. To the Premier: given that the existing lottery programs are already oversubscribed, I'm wondering where in the budget this new program is that would have a local decision-making component to it in which these groups would be looked after. Where is it in the budget?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, it's not in the budget because the CLB program has been canceled, but we're saying that we will revisit the CFEP program. We will look at how these organizations can possibly be accommodated, maybe by the movement of funds within the lottery program, but we will find a way. We aren't going to let these organizations down. Yes, some will be refused. Some were refused under the CLB program. Some were refused under the CFEP program. Unfortunately, they don't qualify, and those are decisions that had to be made by the community lottery boards. Those are decisions that have to be made by MLAs, including opposition MLAs, who all share in the community facilities enhancement program. So, yes, tough decisions will still have to be made, but we will try to accommodate as best as we possibly can those communities, associations, and endeavours that are indeed deserving.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: if the Premier is anticipating putting more money into CFEP or AFA or Sports, Recreation, Parks and Wildlife or any of the other programs he's just rolled off, why doesn't he just put the money back into the community lottery boards, reinstate it?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, it's a priority. I'll answer the hon. member's question with a question. Do you want to take $35 million out of grants for school facilities and $10 million out of grants for postsecondary facilities? Do you want to take $122 million out of the Supernet project? Yes, that's what they want to do. Well, let's say 122 less 50. Do you want to take that out of the Supernet – that's 72 – to leave it with only $72 million? Well, you couldn't even start it for that. Does she want to take $25 million a year over the next three years out of the community facilities enhancement program? Do you want to take $36 million out of the strategic and research investments program? They've been crowing and talking about, you know, the lack of funding for family and community support services for children, yet in the same breath they're saying: well, just take $25 million out of family and community support services for children.

Mr. Speaker, they stand up there and they say one thing, you know, criticize us for one thing, and then when we do it, they have to find something else. They can't be pleasant about this at all. They've always got to find something to complain about. If you do it right over here and affect a program over there, then it's a problem. Their greatest resource is the columnists who say: oh, my gosh, this government is beating up on the poor little pipe and bugle bands and so on. Well, we aren't. We will accommodate these programs.

AN HON. MEMBER: How?

MR. KLEIN: She says, "How?"

THE SPEAKER: Please. Please. Hon. members. Thank you very much. We've had about 22 minutes now discussing something that has been designated for future discussion in the Legislative Assembly, and if all members would look on page 17 of the Order Paper, you'll see that the Department of Gaming has been designated.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. When it comes to transportation grants, the government flip-flopped. When it came to course options for grade 10s, the government flip-flopped, but when it comes to community lottery grants, which fund vitally needed programs in almost every Alberta community, the government stands firm. To the Premier: why has the Premier and the entire Tory caucus turned its back on community programs throughout Alberta?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, that goes to "how." As I said before, there is the opportunity to move dollars within the lottery programs and to amend the terms of reference of CFEP to accommodate some of these programs. As I've always said, there's more than one way to skin a cat other than the Liberal or the ND way, and that is to simply throw money at it, and when you can't throw money, I'm sure that they would love to buy a printing press and just print it, because that is the way they deal with virtually all situations.

Mr. Speaker, is this hon. member saying that we ought not to fund the municipal transportation programs? If he is, say it to the media. Stand up and say it to the media, that we take $50 million out of that program and put it into the community lottery board program. That's what he's saying. Well, maybe he would like to say it to the media after this session.

MR. MASON: Mr. Speaker, to the Premier: how can the Premier tell organizations such as the Forestburg Learn & Playschool Society, the Hardisty Healthy Communities, the Killam public school, the Killam and District Playground Committee, the Wainwright Association for Community Living, and the Wainwright Children's Centre that their programs are no longer worthy of government funding?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, first of all, if the hon. member will provide me with that list, I'm going to find out if they received any CFEP program funding, but I'm going to ask him a question. If he's honest, he will say whether they received CFEP program funding. Right? Now, if he's not being honest, then he'll refuse to answer. He'll invoke the privilege of the House.

Secondly, have they written the Minister of Gaming, in light of the current situation, to find out if there is any possible way or if there are other programs? Has the person talked to the local MLA, who will be a Conservative? You know, those who are complaining have obviously talked to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, who hardly knows where Forestburg or Wainwright is. He only goes out there when it's politically expedient, Mr. Speaker, but I'm sure this is a discussion we will have with the local Tory MLA once he's elected after 8 o'clock this evening.

MR. MASON: Mr. Speaker, I'll be pleased to table this document, which the Premier should have read because it's a government document. Has the government read this document which is called the community lottery board grant program, which has a list of 2,984 programs that are no longer funded by his government? Has he read it? Here it is.

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, this government has been in existence now for almost 100 years. It's not surprising that something like 2,000 some odd programs have come and gone. Times change. This government changes to meet the changing tides of time. The NDs don't, haven't ever, and never will.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Teachers' Withdrawal of Voluntary Services

REV. ABBOTT: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, I have received several phone calls from my constituents regarding the decision by teachers to cancel extracurricular activities for the remainder of this year. Now, this includes all after school sports and drama activities, and in some cases it is even stopping parent councils from meeting as they have no staff reps available. This action is nothing less than a punishment to students, and the teachers' union is hurting kids by suggesting such draconian measures. My questions are to the Minister of Learning. Is this something that is outlined within teachers' contracts?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. the minister.

DR. OBERG: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Just in starting my answer to that, I would completely agree with the hon. member that students are being hurt by the decisions that are being made. When it comes to the school council, under the School Act a teacher is mandated to be on the school council, and they do have to be there. So whether or not they have volunteered, whether or not they are actively on there, the school board has a responsibility to place a teacher on the school council. So in direct answer to the hon. member's question, yes, they will continue and, yes, there is a teacher that has to be on there.

The withdrawal of teachers' services is a very unfortunate event, but it is something that is being looked at. We are attempting to find a solution to this problem. But the bottom line, Mr. Speaker, was when I read on Saturday about the child with cerebral palsy who was not being dressed. Quite frankly it sickens me, and we are going to find solutions to this.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

REV. ABBOTT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Minister of Learning: is this an issue that can be resolved through the Education Services Settlement Act?

DR. OBERG: Mr. Speaker, it is not an issue that can be directly solved through the Education Services Settlement Act. We will have a place under Bill 12, under the Education Services Settlement Act, that will put in place an arbitration process that will solve the salary issues. When the contracts are settled under the arbitration, it hopefully will lead the teachers and the Alberta Teachers' Association to stop this nonsense that is going on with the teachers' services on the extracurricular side.

REV. ABBOTT: My last supplemental to the same minister: what alternatives are available to students to try and keep these activities going? For example, does it mean that graduation ceremonies will be canceled?

DR. OBERG: Mr. Speaker, over the last week there was a newspaper story or a television story that said that volunteers – that's parents – could not be involved. That is not true. The liability of the school boards does cover parent volunteers, volunteers who want to coach, volunteers who want to help, and from what I understand in talking to a lot of schools around the province, a lot of parents are digging in. They're helping their kids because their kids are important to them, and they're helping in such situations as graduations. So in direct answer to the hon. member, that is what is happening around the province today, and I would encourage that to continue until we can put this very unfortunate thing to rest.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods, followed by the hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Teachers' Arbitration Process

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The atmosphere in schools across the province has been poisoned by Bill 12. Even with very wise leadership and the best goodwill we can muster, returning our schools to normal is going to be a huge task. My questions are to the Premier. Will the Premier begin the task by removing the financial constraints imposed on school contract arbitrators?

2:10

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I'll have the hon. Minister of Learning supplement, but the financial constraints are reasonable. They're reasonable to everyone but the Liberals. The Liberals believe in deficits. They obviously believe in deficits. Make no bones about it. Because by removing the financial constraints, we are saying that school boards can go into a deficit position. This is a law that we've even imposed on ourselves, that we can no longer have deficits. Why would school boards have deficits? The only ones, the only people and the only organization, that want a deficit are the Liberals. Let's make that quite clear, and that's the only financial constraint.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

DR. OBERG: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Under section 6(2) of Bill 12 it states that the school boards will not incur a deficit or where there is a deficit, they will not incur a further deficit. It is our understanding through our legal counsel that that quite simply means that at the end of the day they cannot have a negative sign on their bottom line. How they arrive at that – the arbitrator has a lot of room to determine how that arbitration settlement will be performed. We are convinced through our legal counsel and I understand that the Alberta Teachers' Association is convinced through their legal counsel that that is what the implications of section 6(2) mean. Quite simply, at the end of the day the school boards cannot have a negative sign on their balance sheet.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that someone has to start if goodwill is going to prevail, will the Premier help the situation by restoring the working conditions that were wiped out of contracts by Bill 12?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, we have committed – and I think it's a major commitment – to undertake a review through a commission or a blue-ribbon panel project to look at all these issues but to take our time and to look at these issues in a realistic sense, not the one-size-fits-all approach that the Liberals seem to think is going to work; in other words, arbitrarily. It's 17 children per classroom; that is the ratio. That is cut and dried for the Liberals. What happens to the 18th person? I think the hon. minister of education has asked that. What happens to the 18th person? Is that person bused off?

There is no consideration amongst the Liberals for the socioeconomics, the demographics of a particular area. We've got to look at that. We've got to look at the issues of sparsity and distance, the whole issue of transportation, the issue of English as a Second Language, the issue of special-needs kids, those who are physically and mentally disabled. We have got to look at a host of issues, a multitude of issues, but we've got to do it in a reasonable, thoughtful way, not in the knee-jerk Liberal kind of way but in a thoughtful way, Mr. Speaker.

The issue that we can resolve – and we can resolve it quite easily through arbitration – is the salary issue. Once that issue is off the table, Mr. Speaker, then we can really set our minds, including good-thinking Albertans, to the blue-ribbon panel or the commission to address some of these long-term issues that speak to the fundamental problem of sustainability.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you. Again to the Premier: will the Premier foster goodwill by ensuring that the arbitrator appointed by the government will be truly impartial?

MR. KLEIN: No doubt about it, Mr. Speaker. Our arbitrator will be impartial. We have asked the Alberta Teachers' Association to appoint an arbitrator of their choice. We have asked the Alberta School Boards Association to appoint an arbitrator of their choice. I can think of no more an impartial process than the one that we have put in place relative to the selection of the arbitrators.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Chronic Wasting Disease

MR. JOHNSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Chronic wasting disease is an animal disease that affects deer and elk, both wild animals and those raised on game farms. Up until recently the disease had not been detected in Alberta. However, the Canadian Food Inspection Agency has determined that an elk raised on a game farm in northern Alberta was infected with the disease. I believe both Alberta Agriculture, Food and Rural Development and Alberta Sustainable Resource Development are involved in dealing with this issue, along with the federal government. My first question is to the minister of agriculture. What does the discovery of chronic wasting disease in our province mean to Alberta's game farm industry?

MRS. McCLELLAN: Mr. Speaker, it is a fact that for the first time a positive case of chronic wasting disease has been found on a farm site in our province, and this is indeed very, very unfortunate. However, the important thing is that we have a system in place that will deal with this issue in the best way possible. First and foremost, the member is right: the Canadian Food Inspection Agency as an arm of the federal government under the health of animals branch will take the lead in this. They do have a process: one, immediate quarantine of the site; secondly, they will be sharing the information, of course, with affected persons. They will be following and monitoring with us the movement of any animals, a surveillance of all herds, and of course the disposing of animals in the infected herd. These are very concrete steps that are designed to stop further cases from happening, and we think this is very important.

The other thing that's very important in this province is that we have had an import ban on cervids since 1988, and we've had a voluntary surveillance program in this province since 1996. We've tested more than 4,000 animals in this province. Of those, more than 4,000 animals have tested negative, and in that testing we have now found one positive. So we're going to continue to work with the industry to ensure that we can prohibit the movement of this disease.

MR. JOHNSON: My second question is to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. Since the discovery of chronic wasting disease in a game farm animal may also have consequences for Alberta's wild deer and elk, what steps are being taken to test for the presence of the disease and prevent its spread?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. CARDINAL: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. That's a good question. The chronic wasting disease has not been found in the wild in Alberta. My department has a strong surveillance program for wild deer and elk, and more than 12,000 animals, in fact, have been tested since 1996 and were all found negative so far. Our surveillance program was even expanded in the year 2001, and the fish and wildlife staff harvested over 200 deer along the Saskatchewan/Alberta border. Again there was no trace of the chronic wasting disease. The 200 deer were also negative.

Mr. Speaker, we continue to work with hunters also, who have been of great assistance since 1998. They have been voluntarily submitting deer and elk for sampling and testing. My department is now working with the Canadian Food Inspection Agency to get a better understanding of this particular case and what the concerns might be regarding the wild deer and also the elk in the area.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. JOHNSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question is to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. Will the discovery of chronic wasting disease have any influence on the government's current review of a proposal for establishing cervid harvest preserves?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. CARDINAL: Thank you very much again, Mr. Speaker. That's a very, very important and timely question. Jointly with Agriculture, Food and Rural Development we are indeed preparing a review of both the pros and the cons of cervid harvest preserves in Alberta. The Alberta government is definitely paying attention to the presence of the chronic wasting disease that was recently discovered. It will take, of course, the CWD into account as it considers the proposals for hunt farms in Alberta. Our government will certainly be weighing the pros and the cons in the process.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

Labour Relations Board

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Labour Relations Board, according to the minister's latest annual report, is an independent and impartial tribunal. All parties, if we are to have stable, balanced labour relations in this province, should have confidence in the members of that board to ensure its independence and impartiality. My first question is to the Minister of Human Resources and Employment. What is the minister doing to ensure the independence and impartiality of the Labour Relations Board when a current appointed member of the board advocates changing the labour law on behalf of his own special interest?

Thank you.

MR. DUNFORD: Mr. Speaker, one of the things that we try to provide in this province, of course, is openness and accountability, but also we want to provide the opportunity for people to express their particular views. What we have here in this particular situation, if I can read somewhat between the lines of the question, is that for the Labour Relations Board we do appoint people that have an interest from the employer's side and we appoint people that have an interest from an employee's side. To my knowledge, I've never denied a party from either interest group the fact that they could come and see the minister, they could make representations on any topic, whether or not they also happened to be a member of the Labour Relations Board.

MR. MacDONALD: Again, Mr. Speaker, to the same minister. Just this past January Mr. Stephen Kushner, a board member since 1999, stated, and I quote: we've seen a tremendous number of injustices in terms of the operation of the current labour code, end of quote. In light of these inflammatory comments, what steps will the minister take to ensure that the board remains independent and impartial?

Thank you.

MR. DUNFORD: Well, again by the very definition of how we bring people to the board – and I've actually tried to work with various stakeholders and interest groups around the province, whether it be the Labour Relations Board, whether it be the Appeals Commission, whether it be the Workers' Compensation Board, to perhaps not be so focused all the time, always having to get so wound up by the fact that we must have an employer interest represented or we must have an employee interest represented. I get very little help from the hon. member on this issue, as a matter of fact. So what does he expect, then, in turn? These are people that represent particular interests. Some of that's going to flow over into what they say in the public. The important thing is that when that member of the Labour Relations Board is acting at a hearing there be impartiality, and I believe there will be.

MR. MacDONALD: Again, Mr. Speaker, to the same minister: will the minister terminate Mr. Stephen Kushner from the board to ensure that it remains independent and impartial?

Thank you.

MR. DUNFORD: Well, certainly not on the basis of a question from the hon. member during question period when he has the benefit of saying whatever he wants here on the floor of the House. But if any member, whether it be somebody that's of an employer interest or somebody of an employee interest, is shown to be not using their impartiality requirements and responsibilities at a hearing, then of course we will deal with that as it comes up. So to answer the specific question: no, I will not.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Bighorn Wildlife Recreation Area

MR. CENAIKO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Bighorn area is a large and intact wilderness. It contains irreplaceable wildlife habitat, watersheds, and recreational areas. The Bighorn wildlife recreation area was designated in 1986 by the government of Alberta. Most of the area is designated as a prime protection zone under the eastern slopes policy of 1977 to 1984 and the integrated resource plan of 1986. This prime protection zone was created to protect watershed and aesthetic resources from industry and motorized use and to provide nonmotorized recreational opportunities to Albertans. My question is to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. Allowing motorized recreation into the prime protection zone will downgrade the protection that the eastern slopes policy is supposed to provide. What is the basis for downgrading the prime protection zone?

MR. CARDINAL: Well, Mr. Speaker, I just want to indicate to the member that, yes, the Bighorn area continues to be a very important part of Alberta's landscape. It covers approximately 4,000 square kilometres, in fact. It has a wide range of different uses and interests from environmental and recreation to industrial. As the member stated, most of the area is under the prime protection zone of the eastern slopes policy which was developed in the '90s. What is important to mention, though, is that in this area there are competing demands, and that seems to be the big concern. That is why the government took positive steps lately and developed the 15-member public committee in addition to six government department officials. Basically what this committee will do is find a balance between the interests of users for the region. I have faith in this working committee that they'll have the appropriate number of public meetings and appropriate number of consultative processes in order to arrive at a good plan so we can have a balanced approach toward these uses.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. CENAIKO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first supplemental question is also to the Minister of Sustainable Resource Development. The government is conducting an access management planning process for the area. His department has allowed five advisory group meetings and only one public meeting for making decisions that may overturn the eastern slopes policy, that was based on very extensive public consultations. Is this government willing to extend the planning process so that the advisory group can make sound recommendations?

MR. CARDINAL: Yes, again I'm very confident that the time will be allowed for this advisory committee to make the appropriate recommendations that are necessary so there can be a balance between environment, industrial, and recreation uses. We will allow the time that is necessary. After all, the process of land use in that particular region has been studied for a long, long period of time. It's not only last year. It's been going on for years, Mr. Speaker, and we have the capability, I know, to develop a good access management plan in that area.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. CENAIKO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My final question is to Minister of Economic Development. What work is your ministry undertaking for recreational use in this potentially unprotected area?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. NORRIS: Well, thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. At the outset we recognized in the department what a glorious opportunity for tourism and recreation this offers Alberta. As a result, we're working with the local advisory board. We're also recognizing the need to establish with other departments how the land is going to be used. So we're in a joint ministerial meeting to discuss how that land is going to be used, and to that end we're looking at also establishing a possible snowmobile committee to review that in light of the amount of excellent trails there are in the area. We'll be looking to set that committee up in the next couple of months.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Hospital Closures

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Does the Minister of Health and Wellness have any knowledge of planned announcements by rural regional health authorities to close health care beds?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, let me say, first of all, that health care is this government's top priority, and the 7 percent increase in health spending reflects that. It is a little premature to be talking about whether there will be bed closures or conversions in regional health authorities anywhere in the province. We know that regional health authorities are currently working on developing business plans that will show how they will best use the dollars that they have allocated to them to meet the needs of their particular constituents. Every regional health authority in this province, every one of them, got an increase this year in the current budget. All of them got an increase to reflect their growth, 1 percent as a minimum, and some got more.

Now, Mr. Speaker, about half of the increase to the Department of Health and Wellness budget, $247 million, will be going to regional health authorities. We will be reviewing the business plans that RHAs put together. We'll be looking at available facilities that are currently in place to make sure that they're being properly utilized and meeting the needs of the community.

So, Mr. Speaker, as we've often said, it is not just a question about how much we spend but, more importantly, how we spend it.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given the choice of the word "premature," will the minister reassure this Assembly that no requests have gone from the government to any regional health authorities to delay announcements of closures or cuts until after today's by-election?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, I gave regional health authorities a certain amount of time to prepare their business plans. They've asked for more time to prepare. The government has not asked them to delay those business plans. We've asked them to bring them forward as soon as they are available. So we have not given a direction for them to delay the preparation of their plans.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister repeat to this Assembly his public commitment of just three months ago that, and I quote, Alberta's public hospitals are not for sale to private interests?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, I have answered this question. This hon. member has a terribly short memory, I'm afraid. I would refer him to Hansard when he did ask this very same question earlier in this session. My response at that time was that there have been public hospitals that have already been sold to private interests, but they will not be operated as private hospitals, just to make that perfectly clear. He would be well aware of facilities like the Grace hospital in Calgary, the Holy Cross hospital in Calgary, as two examples, and previously the Camsell hospital here in the city of Edmonton. They have been sold to private interests. So I will not give him an assurance that that will not happen again, but I can assure him that in accordance with our legislation those privately owned facilities will not be used as private hospitals.

head: Recognitions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Ken Lamouche

MR. STRANG: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It gives me great pleasure today to rise and recognize one of West Yellowhead's constituents, Mr. Ken Lamouche. Mr. Lamouche served our country as a member of the 2nd Commando Airborne regiment for more than five years. His unit was part of the United Nations peacekeeping mission in Cyprus.

On March 21 of this year Ken was honoured with a Canadian peacekeeper's service medal and a Nobel peace certificate. This award came into being in 1997 and is awarded to all Canadian military, RCMP, and foreign affairs personnel who have served on peacekeeping, peace enforcement, and/or observer missions. He was also presented with an eagle feather, a powerful symbol of respect in the aboriginal community.

I would ask all members to join me in recognizing Ken's contribution to Canadian peacekeeping missions and wish him continuous good health and happiness.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Ann Keane

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday I met a woman who has a remarkable dream. Her name is Ann Keane, and her dream is to run from St. John's, Newfoundland, to Vancouver Island. She is a mother of two and a registered nurse with many years' experience. She is also an accomplished runner and hopes to average 50 miles a day on her cross-Canada run.

Ann's hope is that her run will encourage people to raise their eyes and open their hearts to the opportunities we all have to reach out and make this a better world. She will be raising money for the Canadian Association of Community Care and for the Hope Foundation. Ann's support is already building. An RV is being donated for the entire trip, she has a volunteer driver, the Royal Bank has arranged for donations to be made through a web site link, and a major shoe store is supplying shoes for her entire trip.

Ann leaves for St. John's this weekend and will start running next week. I'm sure that the entire Legislative Assembly of Alberta joins me in wishing this vivacious and determined woman the very best.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Redwater.

Michael Senych

MR. BRODA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Once again it's an honour to rise today and recognize a very special individual, the late Michael Senych, who passed away March 27, 2002, in a tragic automobile accident. Michael was a former MLA, teacher, principal, and most recently mayor of the village of Thorhild. He was very active in the community: involved in upgrading the rodeo grounds, renovating the community centre, making Thorhild the sunflower village. He has left a legacy, most recently the addition of 14 assisted living beds to be constructed at the Newthorad Lodge. He was a member of the Long-term Care Review Policy Advisory Committee, which I had the pleasure of chairing.

Michael was a positive thinker, a leader, a good friend. He will be missed not only by the community but all those who knew him. Thank you, Michael.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Spring into Spring Extravaganza

MS KRYCZKA: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, I'm very proud to recognize in this Assembly today the recent hugely successful eighth annual Spring into Spring Extravaganza, a performance held at the prestigious Jack Singer Concert Hall in Calgary. Who created this success? Well, nearly 500 senior and junior high school musicians or students performed in the program, students from schools in my constituency of Calgary-West: Ernest Manning high school, A.E. Cross junior high, and Vincent Massey junior high.

Ernest Manning high school is very well known in the Calgary school system for its successful music program, and the accomplishments are achieved through talent, hard work, and teamwork by many people: music directors, administration and staff, students, and the music parents' associations.

The eighth annual Spring into Spring Extravaganza was a truly unique collaborative event, an evening of exceptional entertainment by many talented musicians from the community and from three schools in that community performing in an incredible venue. My sincere congratulations for a performance superbly well done.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

Success by Six

MR. McCLELLAND: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to recommend to you and to other members and to recognize a marvelous production by Success by Six. The best recognition I can give to this booklet which has to do with measuring the economic and social status of children in this area is to read from the introduction to Edmonton's Children: Let's Start at the Very Beginning, a very good place to start. Our city's future depends upon the community's ability to nurture healthy and well-educated children who will grow up to be well-adjusted adults, productive workers, and responsible citizens. Success by Six champions the cause for all children in Edmonton, urging this community to do everything in its power to give all of our children the best possible start in life.

I would commend Carol Gilfillan and all of the community leaders of the Edmonton area for putting this wonderful booklet together, and I commend it to all members of the Legislature.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Mill Woods Cultural Society of Retired & Semi-retired

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Mill Woods Cultural Society of Retired & Semi-retired does an outstanding job of serving the social needs of senior immigrants in southeast Edmonton. The 19th anniversary of the society's founding is being celebrated this year.

Since inception the society has been blessed with outstanding leadership, and there has been great support from the community. The centre thrives on the work of volunteers. Some of those volunteers were honoured at founding day celebrations this past weekend. From caretaking services to help with filling out forms, volunteers have made the centre work. A visit to the centre finds new Canadians going about activities in dress that somehow seems symbolic of their new lives: turbans and tennis shoes. Seminars, self-help programs, and peer assistance keep a growing number of seniors busy.

The centre has been so successful that current and proposed programming can no longer be accommodated. A three-acre site has been secured for a new building. The original modest investment of lottery funds in the centre has paid off a thousandfold in enriched lives for seniors. The society exemplifies the best in people helping people.

We wish the president, Gurmail Singh Deol, and the society every success as they work to make their slogan Aging Gracefully with Dignity and Fun a reality.

head: Presenting Reports by Standing and Special Committees

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Banff-Cochrane.

MRS. TARCHUK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As chair of the Select Special Auditor General and Information and Privacy Commissioner Search Committee I would like to table five copies of part 1 of the committee's report, recommending the appointment of Mr. Frederick James Dunn as the Auditor General for the province of Alberta effective June 1, 2002.

Thank you.

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have a series of tablings today. The first is five copies of a letter from Anne Farris of Calgary, who wants the government to designate the Bighorn wildland recreation area as a wildland park using the 1986 boundaries.

The second is the appropriate number of letters from Bob Bartlett of Calgary and Ms Christyann Olson, who want the government to take appropriate actions to protect the Bighorn.

The following letters, two of them, from Christina Chase-Warrier and R. Goth, are both very concerned about how education is now being funded by this government.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings. The first is the required number of copies of a letter from Wynn Kline addressed to the Member for Calgary-Bow. Mr. Kline worked on this member's election campaign and expresses dissatisfaction with the way the government has handled the teachers' dispute.

The second is a petition signed by 59 Albertans concerned with the arbitration process that has been put in place and wanting immediate action to address classroom conditions to be undertaken and the funding of education to be improved.

The last one is a similar petition asking for the government to address the problems of underfunding of education in the province.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have three tablings this afternoon. The first one is a letter that I received from Mr. Hardy, the general manager of Brandt Tractor Ltd. in Calgary. This company is expressing their concern about the reduction in provincial government funding for highway work, which will undoubtedly put a substantial strain on their business and also on their employees.

The second tabling I have is an open letter to the hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment and myself from a gentleman named Mr. Paul Bokowski, and Mr. Bokowski states that "the marketplace effectively controls the unionized sector just like the non-union sector."

The third tabling that I have this afternoon, Mr. Speaker, is a petition supporting public and separate school teachers, and it states to all hon. members of this Assembly and the Premier and the Prime Minister that public education is very important. This petition is organized by Mr. Darby Mahon of Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. I have a series of tablings today. The first is from Karen Pirie from the Women's Centre in Calgary noting that the "community lottery board grants have paid for much needed equipment, printing a book, a communications audit and materials," and other critical programs and asks for restoration of the community lottery board program.

My second tabling is from Wendy Passmore, the artistic director of the W.P. Puppet Theatre Society, also in Calgary. With her concerns she's looking for the government to make "financial decisions that benefit all Albertans" and to restore the community lottery board program.

My third tabling is from Melody Jacobson. She works in one of the arts organizations in Calgary and is asking the government to rethink the decision to close the community lottery boards.

Finally, an e-mail from Dave Robinson, an aspiring Calgary filmmaker who is expressing his dismay at the actions of the government in taking away the community lottery boards.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table the appropriate number of copies of a report from the Students' Union of the University of Alberta called Students' Union Undergraduate Survey 2001. It's a very impressive document, and among other things the results of the survey indicate students' satisfaction with the students' union and widespread concern that tuition is unaffordable for many students and that the cost of education is a significant problem for a large portion of university students.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to table a letter from a school principal. Her name is Charlotte Corothers, and she has addressed this letter to her Edmonton-Whitemud MLA, declining her MLA's invitation to attend a meeting of principals of schools located in the Whitemud constituency. This principal feels dismayed and betrayed at the failure of her MLA and his government colleagues to take a stand on the issues confronting education, the democratic process in resolving labour disputes, and the misuse of power in the form of Bill 12.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first is a letter addressed to the Premier from Jim Wiesner, a senior in Edmonton. Mr. Wiesner is very concerned with the adverse impact that the 30 percent health care premium increase and the elimination of eyeglasses and dental programs will have on many seniors.

The second tabling, Mr. Speaker, is for the Premier's benefit. It is a list of the 2,984 organizations whose grants have been cut under the community lottery boards grant program.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

MR. STRANG: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm tabling the required number of copies today of a petition from West Yellowhead teachers requesting funding from the government for their employers, the school boards.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-West.

MS KRYCZKA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With your permission, I would like to table a petition signed by Patricia Lemire, a constituent, for the Operation Drivesafe program to reinstate access to the provincial motor vehicle operators' list.

Thank you.

Bill 202

Environmental Protection and Enhancement (Clean-up Instructions) Amendment Act, 2002

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

MRS. JABLONSKI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you for allowing me to begin third reading debate on Bill 202.

The support that Bill 202 has received from all sides of the Assembly has been exceptional. In fact, it has shown me several positive things about the environmental views held in this Assembly and where we need to go with regards to environmental law in this province. By this stage, Mr. Speaker, the bill itself is fairly well known to all members. The bill states that if directors in the Department of Environment issue instructions to polluters and if those instructions are not followed, the department must issue an environmental protection order to the polluter.

The amendments introduced in Committee of the Whole provide both clarity and flexibility to Bill 202. They make the bill less imposing to the Department of Environment but also keep the bill an integral tool for property owners to fight pollution on their property. By passing this bill, we will be saying to property owners that this government takes their property rights seriously and will act to ensure that their grievances are settled fairly. Mr. Speaker, I believe that this bill represents a step in the right direction for environmental law and perhaps opens a door towards a new way of thinking about how we should legislate environmental law.

Mr. Speaker, the scope of environmental problems often causes people to throw up their hands in wonder. When we realize that an action taken in Edmonton has the ability to affect ecosystems halfway around the world, we start to see that environmental pollution is a global problem with untold implications. It is said that when a butterfly flaps its wings in Tokyo, people in New York are affected.

It's fairly common for a lot of people to turn away from problems that seem too big, especially when those problems do not affect them. However, the problems still remain. It's usually when the problem affects us that we sit up and take notice and say, "Wait a minute; that's not right." As I said in the Committee of the Whole, that's just human nature. It isn't the job of a legislature to change human nature, Mr. Speaker, but it is our job to understand it and to make laws that benefit all of us regardless of human nature.

Mr. Speaker, it is time to look at environmental laws that protect private property rights. One of the best ways to protect all of our environment is to give people the tools to protect their own property. This means having mechanisms like those called for in Bill 202, but it also ought to mean more. I encourage all like-minded members of the Assembly to look into this area to see where we can take it not only to protect property rights but also to protect the environment.

Now, I'm not the type of person who believes that government can or should be all things to all people, but I do believe this: it is the government's job to protect the property of its people whether they own a small plot of land or thousands of acres, whether they make a lot of money or very little. Saying that Albertans can ask their government to look into environmental concerns and saying that this government will act on their behalf in situations of concern is simply doing our job. We will be saying that our government believes strongly in the right of citizens to expect compensation or redress if their property is unduly harmed by other citizens. When the property of any Albertan is harmed, especially through careless or negligent practices, our government must provide the tools for resolution. This is an important step, Mr. Speaker, and one that we as an Assembly should be proud to take.

Mr. Speaker, the condition of the environment will be a source of major debate throughout the next century and beyond. The statistics are exceedingly clear. The world's population is growing at an exponential rate, and as such we cannot help but use more of our natural resources and more chemicals to increase food production and to meet our daily needs. This in itself is not a bad thing. The history of man is one of using the Earth's resources for our needs to make our standard and quality of living better.

Scientists have noted that perhaps we ought to exercise more restraint to conserve our resources over the long term so our impact on the environment is minimal and our resources are here for our children and grandchildren. Perhaps they are right, but these are philosophical battles that won't be solved by the passing of a small piece of legislation like Bill 202. Rather, they will rage on and on as an important debate over the next decade. But what we can do by passing 202 is ensure that this government and property owners can work together to protect the environment and to clean it up.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I'd like to thank all members for their support of 202. Bill 202 requires immediate containment of a spill and then timely cleanup. This is a small step in legislation but a giant step for those who are affected. This cleanup legislation will help to protect private property and give private property owners a tool to help force the cleanup of their property and neighbouring properties. Alberta will once again lead the way in environmental protection and in supporting private property owners. I encourage all members to vote in favour of Bill 202, the Environmental Protection and Enhancement (Clean-up Instructions) Amendment Act, 2002.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We are generally in favour of this particular bill. We were a little more in favour of it when it didn't have quite so much flexibility built into it in terms of the process where companies now "may" conform rather than "must" conform to some of the new rules. But it's certainly a step in the right direction, and we applaud that.

I listened with great interest to the comments from the Member for Red Deer-North when she talked about a new awareness of environmental views within the Legislature and some of the perspectives she put forward. She talked about the government's job to be protecting property. I am sure that when she talks about property, her views extend to air quality and water quality, so I look very much forward in the near future to this member's comments on our water bill, which certainly will talk about preserving water quality in this province, and I will be very interested in hearing what the member has to say in terms of the Kyoto protocol and what steps this government should take from a leadership position to ensure that CO₂ emissions globally are reduced to the best extent possible. So I look forward to many environmental debates in the future, some of which I'm sure we'll share some common concerns on.

With that, I will conclude my remarks on this bill, and we will be supporting it.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw.

MRS. ADY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to have the opportunity to rise again to add my voice to support Bill 202, the Environmental Protection and Enhancement (Clean-up Instructions) Amendment Act. As Bill 202 has wound its way through the process from first reading to today, third reading debate, I have grown increasingly enthusiastic about this bill. Let me take a moment to explain why I believe in this bill. This may seem a bit elementary, but sometimes the best way to go is back to basics. All bills are aimed at accomplishing something whether we like the purposes or not. Sometimes we like the bill; sometimes we don't.

Sometimes we like the idea but not its application or the manner in which the bill seeks to accomplish its intended purpose. Sometimes we don't like the bill although we like its purpose. We might, for instance, agree that the bill highlights something that we feel is a very real problem, but in spite of that we do not feel that it's the government's role, right, or duty to enact legislation that would affect the matter.

However, Mr. Speaker, Bill 202 is a bill I genuinely like. Not only that; I believe in its purpose, I believe in its mechanisms, and I believe that it is our duty as elected representatives of all Albertans to enact legislation that will serve all Albertans today and tomorrow. Bill 202 will do that. It will enshrine in the body of law the very important principle that if you make a mess, you clean it up. If you pollute the environment, you take steps to undo the damage before it leaves permanent scars affecting all of us. At the same time, Bill 202 will not become such a cumbersome piece of legislation that it will cave in under its own weight.

The amendment to the bill that changes the word "must" to "may" is a small change involving two short words, but the effects of this change will go a long way towards accomplishing the goals of the bill without stifling progress in other areas, including the very area in which the bill will have the greatest impact. Mr. Speaker, it's very satisfying to me to know that we are all together on this one and that we all share a concern about the health of the environment and that we must make sure we remain vigilant when it comes to establishing means of environmental protection. Where we differ is in the method of enforcement.

Accordingly, we have discussed the implication of using either "must" or "may" in the bill. Those who favoured retaining the word "must" speak of loopholes that will be sealed by the use of the word "must." No more Mack trucks going through those holes; that's for sure. On the other hand, those who supported amending the bill by substituting the word "may" for "must" pointed out that too strict a wording might lead polluters to actively circumvent the law.

The consequences of too strict wording may be that people who cause spills might, quite frankly, be encouraged not to report them. As well, we've heard the argument that if every spill must trigger a departmental action, well, we won't be talking about just the obvious toxic substances but also everything from body parts to finger paint. Not only would this fail to consider Albertans' common sense, but it would also generate a bureaucracy and a paper trail that would be so costly that there may not be sufficient resources, whether in terms of funding or personnel, should a spill of real consequence ever become reality.

Let me say this right now. There is no question that when a spill occurs, it must be cleaned up. There also is no question that if someone spills a toxic substance and then fails to clean it up, he or she must be held accountable. But let me conclude my remarks by stressing that it is never a good thing to try and cover up toxic spills. In the court of public opinion – and lest we forget; the public is increasingly concerned about preserving the environment – shirking one's responsibility is a public relations disaster waiting to happen. I can think of few areas where the public's outrage and fury would exceed that which would be sparked by a polluter's effort to conceal his or her own misdeeds. Therefore, I believe that Bill 202 in its amended version is the right way to go for Alberta. It is the proper means by which to strengthen Alberta's environmental legislation and is the kind of legislation that will cause any would-be polluters to think twice before he or she decides to walk away from a spill that must be cleaned up or else.

Again, Mr. Speaker, I wish to congratulate and thank the hon. Member for Red Deer-North for her vision in introducing this bill, and I urge all of my colleagues in joining me to support her. Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Cross.

MRS. FRITZ: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I, too, am honoured to join the debate in third reading in support of Bill 202, the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Amendment Act, 2002. I also, like the former speaker, would like to thank the hon. Member for Red Deer-North for her work and perseverance in putting this bill forward, because ultimately it truly does protect the environment. That is just a wonderful goal, and that's what this bill will be doing.

The objective of this bill is to strengthen existing legislation protecting our land, water, and air from hazardous spills. Bill 202 will reinforce the authority and the mandate of the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act by making those who pollute be responsible for cleanup not at some arbitrarily determined date but according to a time line that's established by the department.

Mr. Speaker, the amendment to Bill 202, which was passed in Committee of the Whole, will help prevent the corresponding dangers associated with doing things too swiftly and too restrictively. I strongly supported the amendment which changed the word "must" to "may" when I spoke to it in Committee of the Whole. The word "must" obligates people working in the department to issue an order even if one isn't necessary. But I'd also like to remind members in the Assembly of the comments that were made by our Minister of Environment during second reading when he explained that by the time people from the department check out a spill and assess the damage, the cleanup may have already been completed. Without the amendment to Bill 202 our staff would have to go back, issue an order, and outline cleaning instructions even if the work had already been done, and that just simply does not make sense. I'm certain that most companies look after environmental mistakes whether they are hazardous or not, and most companies have trained staff and safety plans in place to deal with situations, but I'm also sure that they hope that they never have to use those.

Mr. Speaker, businesses have developed innovative technology and pollution prevention techniques that help protect our environment. However, accidents do happen, and more work can be done by the government to help preserve our environment and maintain its natural value. The passing of this bill with the amendments prevents a bureaucratic logjam by preventing an additional administrative workload that would be placed on a department that already covers a wide range of issues and industries involving our environment. I agree with members in the Assembly who have spoken to this, those that believe we should not decide what constitutes a nonhazardous spill nor the time line for cleaning up a spill. The decision should rest on the wisdom and experiences of the hardworking employees in the Department of Environment.

Those same experts, Mr. Speaker, specifically the director, will be responsible for carrying out the rules decided upon in this Assembly, and we should be careful not to introduce procedures that result in unnecessary work. Bill 202 is not proposing to reinvent the wheel, nor is it proposing wild and radical reform to our current and effective Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act. In fact, I'm quite confident that the amendments to Bill 202, which were passed in Committee of the Whole, will not cause any undue administrative hardship on our government, directors of the act, or industries that work on or around the environment.

Alberta's Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act does currently have a process to deal with industrial spills, but as the law stands right now, if a spill does not pose an immediate threat to the environment, the violator does not have to take responsibility until an environmental protection order has been issued. That can take some time, and during that time the condition of the land can deteriorate.

The goal of increasing the efficiency of Alberta's environmental protection legislation proposed in Bill 202 adds a small yet important element to an act that already manages a staggering number of environmental issues. The desired result of Bill 202 is to give a person or company the opportunity to take responsibility and action to clean up their spill. This way, they can work with the department and work on a method and time line for cleaning up that spill, but, Mr. Speaker, if this desirable scene fails, then the director can force the hand of the polluter. If a polluter does not achieve the objectives set out by the director, it is then the director's duty to issue an environmental protection order under section 113 of the act.

Mr. Speaker, the effective enforceability of Bill 202 is only possible if the department is able to work within their budget and manpower resources. In other words, people must be able to do their jobs without being forced through a sea of needless paperwork. With the passing of this legislation, it would be cheaper for a business or individual to clean up a spill as soon as it happens rather than wait and do it later. The longer it takes for it to be cleaned up, the more likely the possibility the violators will be fined and still remain responsible for the initial expense of cleaning the spill, and as the spill spreads as a result of neglect, there is more for the company to clean up. They are obviously better off by cleaning the spill immediately and avoiding any dealings with the director of the department or this government.

Mr. Speaker, the Member for Red Deer-North through the sponsoring of this bill is not proposing overwhelming changes to the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act, because quite frankly drastic changes are not necessary. This bill is simply enhancing the system by giving people in the department the ability to move more swiftly and decisively on delayed cleanup. We must also remember that the bill deals with nonhazardous spills, and I agree that nonhazardous spills have an adverse effect on the environment, and we must be serious about preserving the environment.

So, Mr. Speaker, in having spoken to third reading with this bill, I would like to thank the hon. Member for Red Deer-North. I agree with her, as she said to you earlier in her debate, that this is an important step, that it will protect the environment, and I would urge all members of the Assembly to support third reading of the bill.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Redwater.

MR. BRODA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to speak in support of the Environmental Protection and Enhancement (Clean-up Instructions) Amendment Act, 2002, upon its third reading in the Assembly. I would like to express my gratitude to the Member for Red Deer-North for the dedicated effort she has put forward to guide this bill through the legislative process to its present stage.

I think there are many others that would agree with me when I say that Bill 202 has changed for the better now that it has passed through the Committee of the Whole. As you may recall, the merit of this idea was quickly realized on all sides of the House. There were one or two details that were in dispute. Now that we have taken the opportunity to listen to the ideas from the members of this Assembly and applied them to the bill, we emerged into third reading with a solid and agreeable piece of legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to talk briefly about what it is that the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Amendment Act seeks to achieve and why that is important. This bill takes an important step towards a cleaner environment for Albertans. It proposes to limit the ability of polluters to drag their heels on cleanup efforts on contaminated land. Currently the department has to wait until the polluting party has displayed an inability or lack of desire to clean up a spill before it can issue an environmental protection order thereby forcing the hand of the polluter to act.

We heard several times over the course of the debate that this bill will give the department a bigger and swifter stick to use against negligent polluters. We heard from the Minister of Environment that he was in favour of the idea but wanted to avoid redundant inspections and unnecessary paperwork for his department's staff. Through debate and amendment in Committee of the Whole I believe that we as an Assembly have tried to accommodate both of those desires. When I look at Bill 202 now, I feel confident that we have achieved these goals.

There are several benefits to passing the bill that would ensure that the environmental cleanup is carried out quickly and efficiently under the department's direction and guidance. First, Mr. Speaker, quick cleanup is required if environmental and monetary costs of a reclamation are to be kept to a minimum. If pollution is allowed to cycle through the ecosystem, it can spread to unexpected and unwanted places. This creates higher costs in terms of both the potential for serious environmental damage and higher costs due to an extension of the reclamation area.

Second, through the amendments that Bill 202 proposes, the value and the environmental integrity of property in the province will be further protected. Property owners can rest assured that their property will be cleaned up quickly and efficiently if somebody else contaminates it, nor will they have to worry about the threat of neighbouring pollution spreading onto their property.

Third, this legislation will help protect small business owners who have property that is being contaminated by other persons, companies, or larger corporations. By amending the act, section 257 would ensure that costly legal channels can be avoided, because the department can issue an order of action immediately after the contamination has been reported. However, the bill is flexible enough to let responsible groups and companies clean up spills on their own.

Fourthly and finally, Bill 202 would require the government to open the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act every 10 years for review. This amendment will ensure that the government can apply the most recent and relevant policies and ideas regarding environmental science to the act. This policy reflects proactive thinking and is sure to provoke thoughtful environmental policy discussions on a regular basis.

To conclude, Mr. Speaker, I would like to reiterate my support for Bill 202, the Environmental Protection and Enhancement (Clean-up Instructions) Amendment Act and urge members of the Assembly to join me in supporting this bill. Through supporting this legislation, we can ensure that Alberta is a leader in environmental protection, cleanup, and policy today and in the years to come.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

MR. MASKELL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise to support Bill 202, the Environmental Protection and Enhancement (Clean-up Instructions) Amendment Act, 2002. We have all had an opportunity to provide input and even amendments to this bill, and I believe that after several drafts of Bill 202, we have chosen the appropriate words for this legislation.

I am pleased to have seen so many members rise in support of such legislation. As a growing and developing province I firmly believe we must work together to build a positive system that ensures we are protecting our province and environment for the future. I also believe that we have to make sure that the parameters we set for ourselves help us attain our goals. I believe the debate and discussion on Bill 202 has allowed the hon. Member for Red Deer-North to decide the most appropriate wording for her bill yet remain within the spirit and parameters of what she wanted to accomplish.

I support the amendment to Bill 202 debated in Committee of the Whole that changes the wording in the amendment to read that the director may issue instructions for environmental cleanup. Several colleagues stressed during the committee debate that in order to make the amendment to the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act most effective and work to our benefit, we must be able to work with some measure of flexibility within the parameters we set. I agree that the amendment to Bill 202 will provide the flexibility for our directors to make the decision on whether or not instructions are necessary to clean up an environmental spill. One hon. member mentioned that it would be inefficient use if officials were sent to investigate each reported spill. If we allow some flexibility, spills that do not require emergency instructions or can be cleaned up without any instructions will not require needless paperwork.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that with the new amendments made to Bill 202, it contains the best wording to ensure that spills are cleaned up and remediated in the most efficient time. I support the purpose of the bill, which is to make positive steps forward in protecting and acting responsibly towards our environment. I believe the amendments to the bill will enhance our ability to react appropriately to environmental spills.

Mr. Speaker, it is my belief that Bill 202 will help the remediation process in Alberta. In order to make positive changes through the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Amendment Act, we need to make sure that the legislation will actually do what we need it to do. I believe it will. As Alberta continues to grow and thrive as a province, I feel that it is important to make positive steps to ensure that the future of our environment will also continue to thrive. We depend so much on our environment, not only for the resources it provides us but the important contribution it makes to the health and recreational enjoyment of Albertans. I believe we must continue to make positive steps which complement the growth of our province. We should look for the best ways to balance the growth that we continue to enjoy by seeking efficient and effective legislation. Such improvements will show Albertans and the rest of Canada that Alberta is committed to maintaining the high-level environmental standards that we are known for.

I believe in the spirit of Bill 202: to provide greater environmental protection in Alberta. I also support the purpose of the bill: to make remediation time in our province more efficient. I also support the amendments to the wording of Bill 202 which allow for expert judgment and opinion on whether or not official involvement and directors' instructions are necessary.

I feel that this bill is important for Alberta and will truly help our environment as we continue to grow. I encourage all of my colleagues to acknowledge its importance as well and join me in supporting Bill 202.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

MR. LUKASZUK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to begin today by commending the hon. Member for Red Deer-North for bringing this legislation forward. I appreciate the tremendous amount of work that it takes to bring a piece of legislation like this before this House.

Having listened to the comments made by hon. members during the second reading as well as in Committee of the Whole, I believe that this legislation which is now before us today has much improved since it has exited the Committee of the Whole. As legislators with good intentions it is sometimes easy to overlook the importance of small words such as, for instance, "must" and/or "shall," but the impact of those words can be rather substantial in the implementation of the legislation. Mr. Speaker, the distinction between an act stating "must" rather than "may" entails the difference between an environmental official having to initiate a lengthy and time-consuming environmental investigation and an environmental official using common sense and/or his own discretion and good judgment to deal with situations at the local level. That only makes sense.

The amendments made to Bill 202 during Committee of the Whole recognize this distinction without compromising the spirit and the intent of this particular legislation and the sponsor's intent. That intent, Mr. Speaker, seeks to empower the Department of Environment to address local spills and less serious threats in both a timely and efficient manner. It allows the official on the scene, who is in the best position to judge the potential impact of any spill, the opportunity to determine whether or not he should issue instructions to clean up. If the situation has been adequately looked after, then the Environment official need not do anything further. However, if instructions need to be issued and are not followed, then the environmental protection order needs to be issued and the situation is dealt with accordingly. As legislators we need to develop environmental laws that respect the varying nature of environmental hazards and the unique circumstances that individuals and groups may find themselves in, but we also must be firm in our demands that once instructions from the officials in charge have been issued for the cleanup of a site, those instructions must be followed and carried out.

Mr. Speaker, this province can afford to be accommodating in looking for workable solutions for all parties involved in this sort of matter. Indeed, the records show that when spills do occur, most offenders act in a reasonable and responsible manner to ensure that the mess is indeed cleaned up, but this province must also be vigilant in ensuring that time and co-operative nature are not left open to abuse. Bill 202 with its amendments reinforces the principles. It empowers local officials to do their job and use their own good judgment. It does not overly hinder officials with unnecessary bureaucracy every time a spill happens, yet it also enforces the idea of environmental protection by clearly requiring the issuing of protection orders when cleanup instructions are not followed. As I said earlier, that simply makes sense.

As the hon. Member for Red Deer-North has indicated, "if Bill 202 is passed, Alberta once again will be seen as a national leader in balancing the needs of the environment with the needs of Albertans, property owners, and businesses." I believe that this is legislation that all hon. members can in good faith support. It reaffirms the environmental legacy of our forefathers by protecting the land for future prosperity. I would encourage all hon. members to support this particular bill and make the Environmental Protection and Enhancement (Clean-up Instructions) Amendment Act a reality.

I thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

MR. SNELGROVE: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to rise in the House today and speak in third reading regarding Bill 202, the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Amendment Act.

We have heard the many different arguments covering the many different aspects of this bill over second reading, the Committee of the Whole, and now in third reading, and I feel that this bill is appropriate in that it will address most of the concerns that Albertans have on both sides of the issue.

Bill 202 puts the onus on the polluters, Mr. Speaker. If someone makes a mess, they'll have to clean it up. Simply put, the department has the power to make contaminators responsible for their actions, and that seems to me how it should be. Through Bill 202 and its amendments contamination will be dealt with through the proper channels and will be dealt with quickly and without excessive red tape. So this bill is actually environmentally friendly in two ways: it deals with contamination issues quickly, and it'll save trees. Under Bill 202 an Environment official must issue an environmental protection order if his written instructions to a polluter have been ignored. The bill allows for the use of a protection order but also allows for common sense and the discretion of the director to prevail.

Mr. Speaker, Bill 202 is about accountability. It is about holding those who have disregard for the laws of this province responsible for their actions. Bill 202 is a small, progressive step forward for the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act.

I would also like to point out another very important part of this bill. This bill requires the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act to be reviewed every 10 years. I think that all new legislation should have a clause stating that it will be reviewed within a certain time frame. This way we can show Albertans that we will keep our legislation current and relevant.

Mr. Speaker, Alberta is growing at a fantastic rate. We must ensure that this growth is done in such a way that it is environmentally sustainable and done in an environmentally friendly way. Bill 202 ensures that the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act will continue to protect human health and the environment for generations to come.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North to conclude the debate.

MRS. JABLONSKI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to first of all thank everyone who has supported Bill 202.

By amending section 112, Bill 202 severely limits the ability of polluters to delay cleanup action. It forces them to follow the directions of the Department of Environment. This is a great first step in protecting our environment. Bill 202 would help Environment officials to convince polluters to remediate sites quickly and prevent polluters from delaying cleanup efforts. This increases the likelihood that releases will be contained and unable to cause further damage.

Mr. Speaker, I ask that everyone vote in favour of Bill 202.

[Motion carried; Bill 202 read a third time]

head: Public Bills and Orders Other than Government Bills and Orders Second Reading

THE SPEAKER: Before calling on the hon. Member for St. Albert to continue the debate on Bill 204, this is private members' afternoon, so there's a bit of private members' advice that I'm seeking from the Assembly at this point in time.

Now, hon. members, there has been a long-term tradition with respect to the decorum in this Assembly. As time has come and there have been ebbs and flows, certain things have been allowed to be happening in this Assembly and certain things have not. As an example, at one time, the time when I certainly sat in this Assembly, it was okay to have a cup of coffee at certain times of the day in the Assembly. You could do other things too. In fact, you could even smoke cigarettes in this Assembly at one time. Then the pendulum swung all the way, so now what we have in the Assembly, of course, is water. That's what hon. members can have in the Assembly: water.

Now, in the last couple of weeks we spent a little time trying to find you an alternative form to the terrible kind of coffee you used to drink in here, so you may notice that out there there are some new coffee machines. There is nothing that could preclude the having of a cup of coffee in the Assembly if the members wanted to have that, but I wouldn't want to say that we would change the decorum without seeking input from the members. After Orders of the Day were called, would any member object to seeing another member have an alternative to water in front of them?

AN HON. MEMBER: What's the alternative?

THE SPEAKER: Well, the alternative would be what is available: the coffee and the tea and the cocoa and the hot chocolate and soda water. One has to remember here about decorum. So it would have to be a common vessel that people would put the liquid in so that you wouldn't get, you know, that this has become the Coca-Cola/Pepsi kind of conflict. [interjections] Please work with me on this slippery slope. Would any hon. member have any difficulty with another hon. member having a cup of coffee in the Assembly after the point in time we call Orders of the Day?

HON. MEMBERS: No.

THE SPEAKER: Is there anyone who would object?

Okay. Let's proceed, then, and after Orders of the Day members can have such a thing in here. It may take a day or two for us to work out the common vessel that everybody would put the liquid in. In the meantime, you know, I don't want to say that we've got the different kinds of debate going on with different kinds of vessels.

Okay. That's understood then? Sergeant-at-Arms, you understand that? You will not evict a member. Pages, you'll now have to acclimatize your fingers for carrying something warm from time to time. Should there be a spill, please look to the nearest hon. member to assist you with the cleaning up of such things.

3:30

Bill 204 Traffic Safety (Cellular Phone) Amendment Act, 2002

[Adjourned debate March 18: Mrs. O'Neill]

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the few remaining comments that I would like to make about Bill 204, I would like to remind all members that we're not speaking about drinking coffee while driving, but instead we're talking about handheld cell phones. With that in mind, I'd like to urge everybody in this Assembly to consider the fact that it's the handheld telephone that the Member for Lacombe-Stettler is proposing in her bill be disallowed while driving the car.

[Mr. Shariff in the chair]

I would note that in the news most recently, one of the councillors from the city of Edmonton, Dave Thiele, has indicated that while he is in favour of the provincial initiative as proposed in Bill 204, should it not proceed, he would be looking into proposing such a bylaw before Edmonton city council. My point in noting this is the fact that I think it would be a lot easier to administer and it would be a lot safer if we blanketed the province in support of this bill against handheld cell phones while driving. I would point out again that this is not limiting someone's ability to communicate via the telephone in the car should it be a hands-free one.

With that, I would urge everybody to apply some reason to their vote in favour of this bill and to say: let's avoid the hazard that is presented to us when you try to dial numbers and to respond to voice mail by using the handheld telephone while driving. So I'd urge everybody here in this Assembly to vote in favour of Bill 204.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to speak in favour of Bill 204, the Traffic Safety (Cellular Phone) Amendment Act, 2002. I do so with some apologies, because I suspect that like many members of the Assembly, I too have used the cell phone on occasion in my car. I think I'm getting better now and ask people to give me time to pull over when I receive calls, but I recognize how dangerous it is. If you look at the appalling loss of life that we suffer in Alberta on our highways, if there is anything that we can do to make driving safer, I think it's incumbent upon us to do so.

In looking at the research behind the use of cell phones, I was drawn to the backgrounder put out by the Canadian Automobile Association in November of 2000. One of the pleas that they made in that backgrounder was that any legislation should be evidence based. That is, they would like the legislation based on sound research, and I think that that's a reasonable request. They also went along to provide an interesting set of statistics from the provinces and nationally on cell phones. In response, for instance, to the question, "Do you have a cellular phone?" 59 percent of Albertans that were polled responded that, yes, they did have a cell phone. That's compared to only 47 percent nationally. So Albertans, if you can believe this survey, are high owners of cell phones. When they were asked the question, "How often do you use your cellular phone while driving?" the responses were that 52 percent said they rarely used their cell phones while driving, 20 percent said some of the time, 2 percent said most of the time, and 1 percent said all of the time. So it's somewhat encouraging that over half of the drivers don't actually use cell phones while they are driving.

When asked their opinion on whether or not talking on the phone distracted from careful driving, 89 percent of Albertans who were surveyed indicated that, yes, it did detract from driving. I think that that's something we all know and have worried about, those of us that have used cell phones, and it's good that that recognition is there.

They further asked about the idea of pulling over and stopping when you need to use a cellular phone, and again the vast majority of Albertans said that that was a good idea; 88 percent of them agreed that that's what should happen. If you're going to use a cellular phone, then you should pull over and use it while you're parked.

The other idea that's mixed in with the bill is the distinction that's being made between cell phones, handheld cellular phones and hands-free cellular phones. You get quite a discrepancy between the two in terms of what people believe. There seems to be much more support for hands-free cell phones and their use. For instance, when they were asked, "Should only hands-free cellular phones be authorized for use while driving?" 54 percent agreed with that, and only 32 percent disagreed. So when it comes to hands-free cellular phones, there seems to be a great difference of opinion. As to whether there is more distraction with a hands-free phone, again there seems to be agreement by 70 percent of Albertans who were surveyed that a handheld cell phone is much more distracting than is a hands-free cell phone.

I think that whether we like it or not, phone communications from automobiles are going to be here to stay, and I say that having looked at some information from the States, where the Ford Motor Company I think have already announced that they are going to be putting universal cell phone capabilities in their automobiles, that they're going to be putting connectivity hardware into their cars that would allow owners to buy an aftermarket device or to use a factory-installed telephone as a hands-free option. So it looks like the automakers, who I'm sure have their pulse on public opinion, are going to take some actions that will certainly encourage the use of hands-free telephoning. I think, going back to the plea of the Canadian Automobile Association, that it would be useful to have evidence on the use of hands-free telephones and the kinds of accident statistics on the use of those devices before either legislation is undertaken or indeed before the automakers on their own decide that they're going to proceed.

I mentioned the Canadian Automobile Association statistics. There are other statistics around, a couple of more informal surveys that were taken in the States, and some big differences in whether or not handheld cell phones should be made illegal in terms of the age of the participants and in terms of their income. If your income is more than $50,000 a year, according to an ABC news poll, then you're much more likely to favour the use of handheld cellular phones, as are younger people, people ages 18 to 34; 42 percent of them in the ABC poll supported the legal use of cell phones. So a difference in terms of income and a difference in terms of age. It's interesting that 18 to 34 year olds are the group that have a high accident rate, and they are supportive of something that could be even more distracting to their driving.

So I think that with those comments, Mr. Speaker, there's a lot to be said. There are differing opinions. A number of states have already moved to pass similar legislation, and I'm pleased to support Bill 204 and the cell phone legislation for Alberta.

Thank you.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Rocky View.

MS HALEY: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate very much the opportunity to be able to rise today and address private member's Bill 204, the Traffic Safety (Cellular Phone) Amendment Act, 2002. I promise not to take very long because I know that many people want to speak on this issue in the time remaining.

It won't be a huge surprise to many of my colleagues to know that I'm opposed to this bill. I lean just a little bit more to less laws as opposed to more laws because no matter what you do or how you do it, at the end of the day you cannot legislate common sense. Passing a law that duplicates another law that is already on our books is not logical. The law that I'm referring to is driving with undue care and attention. This law encompasses many of the dumb things that we tend to do as drivers, that we do from time to time on the roads. It gives the RCMP and the city police many opportunities to remind us of our responsibilities and obligations when we're out on the highways driving.

The Canadian Wireless Telecommunications Association

indicated that education is the single most important aspect of dealing with concerns such as using handheld phones, and I agree with them. However, they also indicated that a recent report prepared by the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania Joint State Government Commission on Driver Distractions and Traffic Safety, that was published just last December, found that of all of the distractions identified as primary causes or contributory causes of crashes in Pennsylvania during 1999 and 2000, cell phones represented 5.2 percent of those distractions over that two-year period. Outside objects, persons, or events by far were the bigger problem, and I think that that was also confirmed at the University of North Carolina in a study commissioned by the American Automobile Association.

To go back just a little bit, I have raised two children complete with all of their antics in the back of my car when I was driving. I've driven their basketball teams, their volleyball teams, and their football teams. I'm one of those incredible sinners that has actually eaten in my car while driving. I've listened to my radio. I even rolled up my windows and sang with my CDs, Mr. Speaker. Yes, I've even answered the telephone. But I'll tell you, compared to snow, ice, blowing snow, dust storms, and other bad drivers who were not necessarily on a phone but were just acting like idiots, they got my attention an awful lot more than the person that I saw using a handheld cell phone.

My cell phone is installed. It has always been installed right from the very first day I got it, and I think that people logically and intelligently and rationally should be looking at ways of doing that. I don't believe that we need to pass a law to force them to do it.

It was always against the law in Alberta to drink and drive, but nothing impacted alcohol consumption and driving the way the commercials that AADAC and Mothers Against Drinking Drivers did when they did their advertising work in the province of Alberta. That had a much bigger impact on people in helping to bring home the seriousness of issues like that, and I believe that education is the answer here.

I also want to point out just a couple of statistics. You know, we talk about how terrible everything is and how dangerous it is to be a driver in the province of Alberta, but let's just get a little bit real. Passenger and motor vehicle registrations increased every calendar year from a total of over 889,000 vehicles in 1977 to just under 1.3 million vehicles in 1983. As of March 31, 2001, there were over 2.2 million motorized vehicles registered in the province of Alberta. I think you have to appreciate the magnitude of that. It has tripled in that period of time. I'm not advocating collisions and death here, Mr. Speaker. I'm just merely pointing out that in 1977, when we had 889,000 vehicles, 576 people were killed on the highways in Alberta, which is a horrendous tragedy. In 1974 my father was one of those statistics, so I do know the impact of road problems. In the year 2000, Mr. Speaker, with 2.2 million vehicles registered on Alberta highways, there were 364 fatalities, and I think that's pretty phenomenal, showing that traffic safety is a big concern of Albertans and the Alberta government on the way the highways are built.

A lot of things have improved, but so have drivers. You know, I guess sometimes when you have 2.2 million people driving those 2.2 million vehicles, from time to time things will get in your way, whether or not it's a cell phone or an elk or a moose coming out on the highway up at Lesser Slave Lake, which has happened to many people, or whether it's driving in that Ponoka/Innisfail block, where, for whatever reason, if the weather is going to be bad anywhere, it's going to be bad there and it's going to be on the highway, where you can't see where you're going or what you're doing. My cell phone is the least of my concerns on those days.

I'd really be grateful if this Assembly decided to opt . . .

MR. STEVENS: Because no one wants to talk to you on those days.

MS HALEY: Nobody wants to talk to me. This is true, Ron. It's because of my charming personality.

The truth is that we don't need another law. We have a law – it's called driving with undue care and attention – that the RCMP can enforce now if people are not driving properly on the highway.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would also like to make a few comments in regards to Bill 204, the Traffic Safety (Cellular Phone) Amendment Act, 2002. I would like to compliment the Member for Lacombe-Stettler for bringing forward this piece of legislation. It certainly is a reasonable piece of legislation and one that I will speak in favour of and support.

Now, then, what we're talking about in this bill is the distraction factor. It is the distraction factor of using a handheld cell phone. Common sense suggests, Mr. Speaker, that talking on the phone can distract a driver from the all-important task of driving safely. Research seems to indicate this, and there is a growing number of studies at universities, government labs, and corporations in the U.S., Canada, and around the world that show that drivers' reaction times do in fact slow down and that their judgment is impaired when they are using a cell phone while driving.

As well, Mr. Speaker, I have a press release dated June 28, 2001, indicating that New York state became the first state in the nation to ban handheld cell phones while driving. Now, I'm sure that if we looked at the population of New York state, we'd find that they have a greater population in New York state than we do in all of Canada. It's quite interesting to see the parallels in their legislation with ours that's being proposed in Bill 204. The highlight, of course, in their legislation is that it requires drivers to put down their cell phones and pay attention to the road.

"This new law will help make our roads safer and save lives,"

Governor Pataki said. "Too many families have suffered the tragedy of seeing a loved one injured – sometimes fatally – in an accident caused by someone who was driving while using a cell phone. This law will help to decrease confusion and increase safety for all who travel on New York's roads."

Mr. Speaker, an article in the Globe and Mail on February 5, 2002, indicated that five were dead after an SUV driver on a cell phone lurched over a median and landed on a minivan driven by some Quebeckers. In that particular case five people died, and I think, as well, that it forced everyone to take another look at this whole issue of driving and talking on the cell phone.

I see that in the New York legislation they also had some public awareness associated with their bill. The law included a warning period and a waiver provision as follows. The first provision was:

Between November 1 and November 30, law enforcement personnel may stop motor vehicles and issue verbal warnings to motorists driving while using a hand-held cell phone.

A second provision here was:

Between December 1 and March 1, 2002, the courts may waive fines if the motorist is able to supply the court with proof that he or she has purchased a hands free telephone or device that enables a hand held telephone to be operated hands free. This waiver provision only applies to a first offence.

So, again, certainly New York has taken a great leadership role in the whole idea of not using handheld cell phones.

The whole idea and suspicion about cell phones in cars were first studied five years ago, and the results of those findings were published in the February 1997 New England Journal of Medicine.

That study was conducted, Mr. Speaker, in Toronto, and they looked at 699 drivers who owned cell phones and had been in collisions. This particular study, the first one, concluded that when a phone was used while driving, the risk of a collision was between 3 and 6.5 times higher than when a phone was not used. It also concluded that the relative risk was similar to that of driving with a blood-alcohol level at the legal limit and that cell phones that allowed hands-free operation offered no safety advantage.

Now, then, certainly there have been a number of other studies that have looked at this whole idea of the distraction factor, and some of those have come up with very interesting findings as well. Last year a Cambridge Basic Research study found degraded steering performance among subjects dialing a phone manually but no such effect when the subject used voice dialing. So, again, evidence that would support this bill. About the same time, researchers at Miami University in Ohio concluded that the intensity of a conversation wasn't a special issue, although merely using a phone created longer braking reaction times.

Other studies, Mr. Speaker, have outlined the characteristics of the phone-and-drive population. These studies have found that some individuals are clearly better at multitasking than others. As well, these studies found that some get better with practice, though signs of impairment may only diminish rather than disappear. Finally, some of these studies have indicated that on the whole drivers under the age of 50 are less impaired by multitasking challenges than are drivers aged 50 or over.

Now, then, Consumer Reports also did some tests on the use of cell phones when people were driving, and their conclusion was: "Our evaluations demonstrate that talking or dialing the cell phone does affect driving behaviour to varying degrees."

So certainly, Mr. Speaker, if our goal here is to pass legislation in this Assembly that will make our highways safer, then I think that this piece of legislation here is a very, very good first step. I think that we can also strengthen this legislation as we move along, and I would urge all members of the Assembly to support this legislation, which will continue to allow persons to fully operate a cellular phone, car phone, portable computer, or fax machine that has a voice-activated or speaker system.

So with those comments, Mr. Speaker, I'll cede the floor and listen to other members who wish to join the debate. Thank you.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Buffalo.

MR. CENAIKO: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for giving me the opportunity to speak to Bill 204. I believe that it is time we had a law like Bill 204 in Alberta, and I commend the Member for Lacombe-Stettler for introducing it into the Assembly.

I can tell you as a former police officer that there's nothing worse than seeing a horrific collision scene whatever the cause. If the drivers and passengers aren't dead, they're usually beaten and quite bloody by the impact of two vehicles colliding or one vehicle smashing into another object. Fortunate and rare are those who can walk away from a collision unscathed, Mr. Speaker.

For those of you who have never experienced anything like this, it is very gruesome and often very tragic. Senseless vehicle collisions are something that we should never have to see, but the world is such that often we do. It goes without saying that the less collisions we have in this province the better, and I support Bill 204 because it will result in less collisions and, in the end, fewer needlessly injured or killed Albertans.

What Bill 204 proposes to do is make it illegal to use a handheld cellular phone while driving. Mr. Speaker, statistical and scientific evidence in study after study testifies to the fact that using a cell phone while driving is distracting, and study after study shows that distraction and human error are the leading causes of accidents on our roadways.

Mr. Speaker, the United States National Highway Traffic Safety Administration has reported that at any time 3 percent of motorists are using cell phones while driving. There are a full 3 percent of people on the road who are not paying full attention, and it's also an easy 3 percent that we can target with this legislation. We can say: drive safe or pay the penalty.

The study and investigation of the safety implications of wireless communications in vehicles indicates that cell phone use while driving significantly increases the dangers of a collision. It's stated that the overwhelming majority of handheld cell phone users were in the striking vehicle and that the use of cell phones in cars increased the risk of driver inattention. Other studies indicate a strong correlation between motor vehicle accidents and cellular phone usage in vehicles. When a prestigious journal like the New England Journal of Medicine reports that cell phone usage increases the likelihood of a collision by 4 percent, then it is incumbent upon those of us in this House to seriously consider that information. Driver inattention due to cell phone usage is therefore a serious problem, Mr. Speaker, and one that we ought to legislate because it makes sense to do so.

When we endeavour to make laws in this Assembly, especially those that govern personal behaviour, the primary question we ought to ask is: does this law accord with common sense? We don't want to make laws that in the end are going to either force Albertans to change their behaviour for the worse or force Albertans to change their behaviour for no discernible reason. Statistics show that using a cell phone while driving is a major cause of motor vehicle collisions, and because this is the case, then anyone who is thinking properly is not going to use their handheld phone while driving.

Some members may object on the grounds that a law like this is paternalistic. I have two replies to this objection. First, one of the target demographics we're going after here is new drivers, teenagers. We expect that new drivers do not have much experience behind the wheel and therefore may not see the inherent danger in talking on a cell phone while driving. As we drive more and more, we see more and more collisions and have more and more close calls. We start to appreciate the benefits of safe driving habits. Mr. Speaker, I believe that this bill would protect these young drivers.

Secondly, I know that when I'm on the road, I sure don't want the person in the car behind me talking into his cell phone. It's foolish of that driver to do so, and it endangers my life. So if that person is selfish enough to endanger my life, I don't mind being paternalistic towards them if it's the only way they'll act safely.

So in the end, Mr. Speaker, what Bill 204 does is reinforce the idea that Albertans ought to respect each other and should not endanger each other. That doesn't seem so bad; does it? Further, are we really inconveniencing people that much by asking them not to use handheld cellular phones while driving? Are they really going to tell us that their need or desire to hold a phone outweighs the risks that they pose to other Albertans? I'm as much for individual freedoms as the next guy, but that would be plain selfish. Perhaps a better idea would be to take those Albertans and have them witness a collision site, then ask them if their ability to hold a phone while driving is all that important. I suspect they might change their tune.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

Mr. Speaker, these are just some of the reasons that I ask all members of this Assembly to put down their cell phones and vote for Bill 204. Japan has done it, Switzerland has done it, and even the state of New York has done it. It's about time Alberta did it.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne.

MR. VANDERBURG: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to join in the debate on Bill 204. I'm very wary of supporting this bill, and even after hearing the comments from my colleagues around the table, I have decided that I will not support the bill. I do not want to needlessly tread on the freedom of Albertans or cause unnecessary costs or inconvenience to the people living in this province. But I do have to say that since the debate has started, I am more careful how I use my cell phone while driving. That's my personal choice, and I think that we should leave it that way.

It has been said many times that we have to address the larger issue of driver distraction. Addressing it piecemeal will leave some extremely distracting drivers' behaviours unchecked while we outright ban activities that cannot be proved as a cause of accidents, such as handheld cell phones. We have to be certain that a ban on cell phones is not based on a few scraps of anecdotal evidence or outdated study that is admittedly inconclusive. It's a fact that the responsible use of a cell phone is no more distracting than adjusting a radio, lighting a cigarette, or eating a candy bar.

I believe that Bill 204 sets a dangerous precedent for laws that imply that this Assembly knows what's best for Albertans, particularly when the law is based upon conjecture, scant evidence, and a bandwagon effect following other jurisdictions far removed from Alberta, like Japan and others that my colleagues have talked about here earlier. I'd think it would be extremely hasty to start interfering with behaviours of drivers that have a tiny effect on their performance behind the wheel.

Mr. Speaker, there are better ways to enhance the safety of our roadways than holding drivers to an arbitrary law that has not proven to save lives or prevent accidents. Bill 204 goes much further to undermine personal choices of motorists than it does to enhance safety, and this is why I oppose it. Although I value the safety and health of Albertans, these things must be balanced with freedoms, personal choice, and personal responsibility. We don't ban hockey or basketball even though there are thousands of injuries every year, and we shouldn't restrict cell phone use either. To me it's about respecting the fact that life is risky business unto itself, and that has to be managed and balanced by an individual, not by legislation.

I want to read a comment that came to me from an Albertan. He was so opposed to this bill that he took the time to write some comments, and I want to read from the e-mail that he sent to me.

I am writing to object to any proposal to limit the use of cellular phones in automobiles.

First, let me assure you that I do object to inappropriate use of these devices in automobiles. However, I am adamant that it is bordering on foolish to bring in such narrowly focused legislation. If government is going to start legislating what can or cannot be done while driving an automobile, let's get [the real issues on the table].

Let's consider a few of the other activities that produce accidents or near-misses while driving. I have witnessed the following:

- Rolling a cigarette
- Lighting a cigarette
- Eating
- Applying make-up
- Shaving

- Blow drying hair
- Reading a map
- Loading [a CD]
- Dealing with unruly children
- Heated discussion with a passenger.

The list goes on and on . . . I'm sure you get my point. Do you think that legislating against any of these specifically will accomplish anything? I doubt it.

Thank you for your consideration.

Just a point that I wanted to let you know, that there are Albertans out there that talk about this issue as well.

Finally, I ask my colleagues to respect the free will and good sense of Albertans by voting against Bill 204.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford, why I hesitate is that there are several members who are claiming to speak ahead of you. You've stood up twice in a row here and are the only person on my list, so I will recognize you, for sure.

MR. McCLELLAND: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was driven to stand to join this debate because someone had to answer to the drivel that came from just opposite a minute ago. I didn't want to join in the debate, but I was forced to when the member opposite was talking about putting makeup on when he was driving. [interjections] No wonder he wasn't speaking on his cell phone.

In any event, thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure to join in this debate to speak in favour of Bill 204. Now, there may be a few people who may hear this and say: well, gosh, I guess the thing that he's going to do on his way home is stop and pick up a hands-free. I guess I will be forced to do that, because although I know it's hard to believe, I may have been seen from time to time speaking on a cell phone. I may from time to time have been seen speaking on a cell phone. I volunteered to speak on this bill because I know that it is a distraction, and I personally have been distracted from time to time speaking on a cell phone, so I thought it was a pretty good idea. It's a pretty good idea not just in this jurisdiction, but there are many jurisdictions all over North America who have recognized this as a potential problem as well. As a matter of fact, in the city of Edmonton Councillor Dave Thiele brought before city council here in Edmonton a bill which would have the effect of banning cell phone use within the city limits of Edmonton, and that was put on the back burner pending the wisdom of this Chamber, of this Assembly's decision on this very issue.

So it would ban the use of handheld telephones. It wouldn't ban the use of telephones that were so-called hands free. Now, yes, obviously you're driving along and some people smoke and some people are eating french fries. People do all kinds of things when they're driving. Why would banning handheld cellular telephones be any different than any of the other distractions that come along when people are driving? Well, I guess, to be fair, there are some things that are certainly more distracting. Perhaps this is one of them. As a matter of fact, I've seen people driving reading maps. I've seen people driving along actually reading a newspaper. [interjection] Novels. Another person has mentioned a novel. So there are many things that we as drivers may or may not do which are safe and which may not be safe.

The use of handheld cell phones I think is – that is not to say that all the rest of the things that we do when we're driving are okay – a little bit different, and it's not the same as listening to the radio, because depending upon what the conversation may or may not be, there are different levels of concentration required in communication through a cell phone. So what's at issue here is not really so much whether or not someone lighting a cigarette is distracted from driving because they lit the cigarette. Their brain is not engaged in lighting the cigarette. It's a reflex action. It's just something that they're doing. There are those who might say that by definition if you're lighting a cigarette, your brain is not engaged. But if you're having a cup of coffee as you're driving along, it's a reflex action, or if you're eating french fries or something, it may be a reflex action.

However, let's just presume that that telephone call is your stockbroker, and your stockbroker is telling you: you remember when I suggested you buy the Nortel shares a few months ago? It's hard not to be emotionally engaged when there's something emotionally engaging on the other end of the telephone call. So that's why I was moved when my hon. colleague from Whitecourt-Ste. Anne, a man known far and wide for his common sense, his wisdom, and his knowledge – I was so disappointed and so surprised to see him standing speaking against this. As everyone in this Chamber knows, there are different dimensions of mental engagement in various life activities.

So that's why I would urge members present to vote in support of this bill. While it certainly isn't going to save the day – it's not going to prevent people from being distracted – it is a step in the right direction, and it is a step that has been recognized by many jurisdictions all over North America and, indeed, all over the world where accidents happen as a direct result of inattention. Everything that we can do to prevent inattention is going to be a positive move and a step in the right direction.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I'll take my place and invite others to respond.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

MR. SNELGROVE: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's so nice to be able to bring the discussion back up to a level of common sense after the dip we've just suffered. Let's be very, very real about this. If anything, it will make the art of enforcing driving harder to do: "I wasn't talking on a phone, officer. That's why I ran into the tree. I'm okay. I'm an idiot."

The hands-free bill is a smoke screen. It's nonsense, folks. The telephone call is the disruption, not whether you're holding a phone here or not. How would you justify the cost to this government alone in converting all of their vehicles? Which minister is going to stand up and pick up that tab? What schools should we shut so that we can all drive safely? I mean, it's just nonsense to use the argument: well, the city of Edmonton might pass it if we don't. Boy, they have been leaders in common sense; haven't they?

Let's just think about this. It is against the law now to drive at any time without using undue care and attention. It's against the law now. You don't have to prove they were talking on a phone or not. Would it be against the law to hold your phone here if it were shut off? Well, I mean, how could a policeman tell? How could they possibly know? Who is going to volunteer, "Yes, officer, I had my phone off, and I was just holding it here so that I couldn't see all the expensive billboards and advertisements that we put along our highways to distract you"?

There are a million things out there. The idea that somehow we're going to make the roads safer in any way, shape, or form by adding hands-free to a list of laws that thick – people don't always use the proper care they should when they drive. That's their fault, not ours. That's no one else's. They have to be responsible for what they do for whatever reason. If someone is driving with a hands-free unit and crashes, is he not just as guilty as someone driving with one up to his ear? Of course they are. Sometimes we have a tendency to forget that we have to make laws that are somehow enforceable. This is not in any way, shape, or form enforceable. It's just another way to make people think that we have nothing else to do up here but discuss other big issues. When we went door-to-door, was anyone saying to you, "As soon as you get the square dance in there, then look after them cell phones"? Not a chance, Mr. Speaker. This issue is a response to an unfortunate accident, which is not the reason to make laws. We talk about making laws because of close calls, and I can assure you that if it weren't for accidents, most of us wouldn't be here, but it has nothing to do with hands-free cell phones.

So, Mr. Speaker, I would ask everyone to come to their senses, consider this institution as an important one, one that should pass enforceable laws. Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Well, it was not necessary to interrupt the hon. member because time has run out.

The rules provide for five minutes for concluding comment by the mover or someone on behalf of the mover. Now, Edmonton-Norwood, were you trying to signal me that you were doing that?

MR. MASYK: No, Mr. Speaker. I was just trying to build on some more wisdom from the members for Vermilion-Lloydminster and Whitecourt-Ste. Anne. Just build on that wisdom.

Bill 205 School Trustee Statutes Amendment Act, 2002

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's an honour to begin second reading of Bill 205, the School Trustee Statutes Amendment

Act, 2002. Simply put, the intention of this bill is to clarify the circumstances under which the majority and possibly the entire board of trustees can discuss significant budgetary items and vote on them.

[The Deputy Speaker in the chair]

I would like to begin by explaining the three things that this bill is proposing to do and then elaborate on how these amendments will clarify the rules surrounding the governance model of Alberta's education system. First of all, Mr. Speaker, Bill 205 would ensure that individuals who would face a pecuniary conflict of interest in the course of their duties as school trustees are more than advised from seeking nomination.

Secondly, Bill 205 would also narrow the scope of individuals who are deemed to share a pecuniary interest with an employee to the employee's spouse. As an example, the School Act currently identifies a trustee's children, parents, the parents of a trustee's spouse within this category. This bill proposes that it be only the employee's spouse.

Third, at the request of those who are currently associated with ASBA, this bill identifies the requirement for disclosure by trustees after their election.

I am proposing the specifics of this bill with a perspective I gained through my experience as a trustee and as a teacher. The Alberta government through the School Act delegates authority for the governance of education to locally elected school boards for the benefit of students. Decisions made by school boards include adopting an annual budget to the school system, planning and setting priorities for the jurisdiction in light of available resources, making policy to guide the administration and employees towards district goals, adjudicating in policy disputes, and communicating with the community and staff on behalf of the jurisdiction.

In order to be nominated as a school trustee candidate, individuals should be able to perform their duties as school trustees to the best of their abilities and with the minimum possibility of conflict of interest in pecuniary matters. Mr. Speaker, this government depends on the wisdom and effort of trustees to offer the best opportunities for the schools in their jurisdictions.

Decisions involving the allocation of money are among the most significant and are often the most contentious that a school trustee faces. From my experience as a trustee and in consultation with other education stakeholders I know the work involving a school jurisdiction's budget comprises approximately 75 percent of the duties of a trustee. It is impractical for school trustees to frequently excuse themselves due to conflicts of interest from discussion and voting on these matters. It is also unfair to leave the weight of a decision resting on the shoulders of the less than complete complement of trustees at the decision-making table.

Conflicts of interest involve the abuse, actual or potential, of trust that people have while acting in their duties as elected officials. A school trustee may excuse herself or himself from the budget process if it is deemed that they have a conflict of interest. The problem with the current system is that a local board can shrink from nine members to two members simply because seven of the members have a child, a mother-in-law, or another relative who may be impacted by their decision. Bill 205 solves this issue by restricting people who would face these conflicts of interest from seeking nominations.

The School Act would be amended so that individuals who are employees should not be allowed to seek nomination for a school trustee position, which is an employer position. Bill 205 proposes that if a person is an employee of a K to 12 school jurisdiction, a private school, or a charter school, that employee should not be able to seek nomination for trustee.

The most common way people avoid conflicts of interest is to excuse themselves from the decision-making process. Trustees who have been deemed to have a conflict of interest simply step outside and refrain from discussion on contract bids or budget matters. The problem with the way the School Act, as it stands now, is interpreted is that trustees must excuse themselves if they have a relative employed in a local school jurisdiction. Although I'm sure this opinion was applied with the best of intentions to reduce the possibility of trustees with conflicts of interest, the scope of the deemed conflict, in my opinion, is far too broad.

Sections 62 and 73 of the School Act set out pecuniary interest prohibitions for trustees. Generally, those prohibitions are that a trustee may not take part in school board business if the issue being discussed is one which would monetarily and directly affect the trustee, the trustee's spouse, the trustee's children, whether minor or adult, the trustee's parents, or the trustee's parents-in-law. A trustee with a pecuniary interest in these circumstances cannot participate in collective bargaining, which includes sitting on the bargaining committee, discussing or voting on budget allocations, or voting on the ratification vote. The problem right now is that there are growing numbers of trustees who are not able to participate and are therefore unable to perform the duties they were elected to fulfill. As a former trustee and now a member of this Assembly I have seen instances where this loophole has diminished the effectiveness of local boards.

In cases where a trustee has a pecuniary interest in a matter, she or he is required to disclose the nature of the pecuniary interest before any discussion of the question takes place, abstain from discussing the matter, abstain from voting on any question relating to the matter, and in most cases leave the room until the discussion and voting on the matter are concluded. The trustee's abstention and disclosure of pecuniary interest are recorded in the minutes of the meeting. In practice this has led to cases in which the majority of a school board must disqualify themselves, and decision-making, particularly regarding bargaining for collective agreements, is left in the hands of one or two board members. Not only is this unfair; it is also restricting to the local school district.

What I am proposing in Bill 205 is that anyone who is an employee in a K to 12 school jurisdiction, charter school, or private school would be automatically disqualified from seeking nomination. The amendments proposed in Bill 205 are in the best interests of Alberta's education by continuing to allow effective trustees to perform their duties and thereby allow entire boards rather than a few members to make collective decisions.

One of the duties outlined in the trustee code of ethics is to resist every temptation and outside pressure to use their position as a school board member to benefit either themselves or any other individual or agency apart from the total interests of the school jurisdiction. Bill 205 proposes to help ensure fairness in Alberta's education system by restricting people who are employees in the K to 12 education sector from seeking election to be an employer in the education sector. This bill is here so that the expertise, the wisdom, and the vote of all trustees are at the table when making important decisions for Alberta's education system.

Bill 205 would further enhance the performance of Alberta's school boards by ensuring that all members of the board participate in the major policy and budgetary discussions and votes. Bill 205 also narrows the scope of a deemed pecuniary conflict of interest from most family relatives simply to an employee's spouse.

Mr. Speaker, to assume that an employee has a conflict of interest because their adult child, parent, or in-law is employed in the education system somewhere in Alberta is debatable. Based on my experience as a trustee and through consultations with other school board members, an employee with a spouse in their local education system is in a tough spot by having to balance the needs of their family with the needs of the school jurisdiction they are representing. I believe that having a spouse in the education system remains the only valid conflict of interest designation.

Mr. Speaker, as all members of this Assembly know, Albertans take their children's education very seriously. I believe we should continue to build on the effectiveness of Alberta's learning system.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the opportunity to speak against Bill 205, the School Trustee Statutes Amendment Act, 2002. It's very unfortunate that this bill is before the Assembly at this time. I think that it's being interpreted, and rightly so, as another slap in the face of the teachers and their families in this province. That the Assembly would single out a group of citizens and their spouses for disqualification is unfortunate. I think part of the problem is that it takes a very, very narrow view of the role of a trustee, and I'm surprised that the mover of the motion has not recognized that in bringing forward such a bill.

Trustees do many things. One of the most important tasks that they take on is the setting of school district priorities, and that, I think, is the core of their work, the setting of priorities and then trying to put in place programs and resources that will make those programs and those priorities a reality. Those priorities are what really drive the budget. Those priorities can be wide ranging. They can affect the budget in a number of ways, and certainly they have a great impact on the spending pattern of the board, but to exclude people from that discussion I think would be a mistake.

I served on boards where we had the spouse of a teacher. I served on a board where we had an ex-teacher of the school district, a disgruntled ex-teacher as a member of the board. I've observed boards elsewhere who have teachers from other jurisdictions on them. When I was on the board in Edmonton, one of our trustees sought legal advice about teachers sitting on the board and was advised at that time that legally it was not possible to exclude them. Not only was it not possible, but it was probably not very wise. I think that to exclude teachers and the kind of advice that they can bring a board is certainly shortsighted. I think that the contributions that teachers have made to trusteeships across the province have been great contributions, and to deny the school boards that possibility would be a mistake.

If you look at whose interest underlies the policy, I think you come up with some interesting answers. Just exactly whose interests are being served by this bill, and is it the interests of children and their classrooms? I don't think the answer to that is yes. I think that the boards would be poorer by not having the advice of teachers and former teachers as at least a possibility on their boards. I can't think of any members of the community who are more interested in schools and learning and education than that particular group of citizens, and it seems to me that the interests that are served by this bill are very narrow and that there may be motives other than making the boards' work easier behind the bill that we have before us. I think that the losses, as I've said, in not having those individuals on boards would be great, and the loss would be in our school programs and for the children, ultimately, of this province.

The problem that the bill I think pretends to solve is not nearly of the magnitude that the mover would have us believe. The school boards have been operating in this province for over 120 years, and to my knowledge this has not proven to be a significant issue. It's been raised from time to time but never, I believe, to such an extent that taking away the rights of a class of citizens has been seriously entertained by any of the trustee associations. I think that the whole notion that we could go after a group of citizens because of their professional association is a dangerous one, Mr. Speaker, and I urge members of the Assembly to defeat Bill 205.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

MR. HUTTON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure for me today to join in the debate on Bill 205, sponsored by the hon. Member from St. Albert. I believe this amendment to the School Act will accomplish many goals towards reaffirming the public trust in school boards while also making them more effective instruments of local school governance. Conflicts of interest, in particular pecuniary conflicts, are not to be taken lightly. The public interest and especially the interests of our children is something that should be held in extremely high regard. While I recognize that school trustees of this province have proven themselves to be trustworthy, community minded, and strong supporters of our education system, there must be safeguards to remove any potential conflicts from their field of view.

What Bill 205 aims to achieve is the removal of conflicts of interest from school boards at the time of their very inception rather than on a situational basis in their day-to-day business. Bill 205 will accomplish this by amending the School Act to ensure that individuals with any pecuniary interest be disqualified from seeking election as a trustee. In this way members of our communities would not be placed in a situation of conflict of interest. I believe it is a sensible precaution that employees of a school district be disqualified from school boards that could later be making decisions about those persons' pecuniary interests. While guidelines already exist by which individuals must recuse themselves from any decision in which they have a pecuniary interest, this practice is beset with problems.

First, I believe, and most importantly, that the trustee isn't able to do his or her job to the fullest extent possible. There is potential for individuals to be absent from many negotiations, standing votes, or deliberations of school board business dealings because they must recuse themselves from the proceedings. They still get paid, but they can't participate. This is ridiculous and is the exact scenario that Bill 205 is seeking to eliminate.

The second problem that the school boards have to face is an ethical one. Whether a trustee is part of a particular proceeding or not, he or she will still be a member of the board. This counts for something. The rest of the business conducted by the school board could affect situations where the trustee must recuse himself. I'm not saying that this happens in all cases or even in any case at all, but there is a potential for this to occur with the current system. Bill 205, proposed by the hon. Member for St. Albert, would eliminate much of the possibility of this happening.

The worry that some may have with Bill 205, although I do not share it myself, is that it would be eliminating candidates that have the greatest amount of expertise in educating our youth. Those persons with direct pecuniary interest presumably have a great deal of experience with the operation of district schools. I wouldn't argue the validity of this point, but I will dispute its relevance. The function of school boards is not to educate but to manage education. There is a world of difference.

The decisions of a school board, while having an effect on the student, are essentially business and policy decisions that can be easily handled by a community leader from a different field of expertise. It is unfortunate that the very expertise that educators have also affects their pecuniary interests and therefore their ability to do an effective job as trustees. While it's reasonable to trust their ability and their ethics, as we have for many years, it is unreasonable to say that other members of the community are not just as capable. Particularly when other nominees for the position face no conflicts of interest, it is arguable that they are far better suited to the position of a trustee.

Bill 205 seeks to eliminate the common problems by a two-pronged approach. A second element of the bill would limit the scope of individuals who can be considered to have direct pecuniary interest and the trustee's spouse. Formerly the parents and the children and the spouse and the parents of the spouse had pecuniary interests which caused a trustee to recuse himself or herself from the business of the school board. This is somewhat excessive and very much to the detriment of the board's operations. We cannot expect an optimal level of operation if some of the individuals on the board must intermittently recuse themselves from the business of the day. In some documented cases school boards have had half of their trustees removing themselves from negotiations on account of their direct and related pecuniary interest. This leaves the school board unable to make decisions that represent the entire community. This completely undermines the purpose of having elected boards in the first place.

Mr. Speaker, this bill is a major amendment and would bring the School Act into the 21st century by making school boards adhere to a higher ethical standard. It is time that we recognized the unnecessary potential for conflicts of interest on school boards and do something substantial about it. Conflicts of interest is serious business and can have major impacts on the efficiencies of public office. I know that there is plenty of good faith in this Assembly and that each of us believes in the good intentions and upstanding conduct of fine professionals that work for the school boards around the province. Nonetheless, the perpetual instance of having to recuse oneself from the negotiations of a school board truly limits the effectiveness of these individuals. It must be frustrating that an individual cannot affect the very system that they are elected to govern. I would wonder if that alone does not present a temptation for a trustee to become indirectly involved in matters that they must continually recuse themselves from.

While trustees must remove themselves from the discussion surrounding any personal conflicts of interest within board meetings, they can freely discuss board business. This presents a potential ethical conflict for which there are no safeguards and I think is a serious concern. I am not saying that this happens but only that it could happen and in fact quite easily. This situation presents an opportunity for an individual to seek election with the direct intent of furthering their pecuniary interest through an abuse of their influence as a trustee, which, while sounding quite Machiavellian, still isn't beyond the realm of possibility. I've heard it said that just because you're paranoid, it doesn't mean that they're not after you, and I think that it applies here.

We must establish safeguards against this abuse of public interest, which is exactly what Bill 205 proposes to do. The private sector has amply demonstrated time and again that conflicts of interest can happen anytime anywhere. One needs to look only as far as the Enron scandal to see how a few individuals with pecuniary interests ruined a company and sent waves rippling through the economy. The same was true of Bre-X in '97, which caused markets to tumble around the globe, or the savings and loan scandal of 1984, which ended up costing the U.S. government and investors more than a trillion dollars.

Now, we're not talking about that kind of money here. We're talking about something much more important. We are discussing the future of Alberta's youth and the faith trusted in our public offices. If we cannot establish meaningful standards to ensure that the public interest is upheld, then we are opening up a whole world of undesirable possibilities. Bill 205 closes that door.

Mr. Speaker, thank you for the opportunity to join in the debate on Bill 205, which I support without reservation, and I urge all members in this Assembly to do so as well. It is a strong bill with a well-thought-out idea and takes a commonsense approach to solving some of the challenges facing school boards in Alberta. This is an out-of-the-box idea for the new times and challenges that we face as a province.

I thank the hon. Member for St. Albert for bringing it forward, and thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you. I rise to speak on Bill 205, School Trustee Statutes Amendment Act, 2002, moved by the hon. Member for St. Albert. I'm going to argue strongly against this bill. A previous speaker, the one who just preceded me, made a reference to the 21st century and argued that this bill will bring the existing legislation to the standard of the 21st century. I submit to you, Mr. Speaker, that exactly the opposite is the case if this bill passes. It's undemocratic in nature. It takes away the right of citizens freely to choose who should represent them as school trustees on school boards. It is to tell them that we know better than them as to who is best qualified to represent them and their interests and the interests of their children on the boards of trustees. It's an arrogant piece of legislation. It's an insulting piece of legislation because it expresses mistrust, deep mistrust, in the ability of citizens freely to choose the people that they want to represent them. It's creating fire walls around the rights of citizens to exercise their very democratic rights and make their judgments based on their own experience. They are being told what's good for them, and that's what I find so reprehensible about this bill.

This bill, Mr. Speaker, joins the company of some other bills in this Legislature passed recently, certainly one, in attacking a particular group of citizens among us, citizens who are well educated, citizens who are dedicated to providing learning opportunities and learning experiences to our children. The very citizens to whom we want to be able to entrust the interests of our children as teachers are the ones who are being excluded. A proposal is being made by this bill to exclude them from being able to offer themselves to be nominated for school boards and to be elected. Not only does this bill prevent school employees, the vast majority of whom happen to be teachers – not only teachers, but the vast majority of them happen to be teachers – from being nominated and elected to school boards and becoming trustees and taking on those very significant responsibilities on behalf of their communities, on behalf of children, on behalf of their own children and families, but it prevents them from running for this position anywhere in the province. What is the problem? It's a problem that's been created as a straw man by this bill, by the proposer of this bill, to be solved by legislation that's not needed. Where is the crisis? Where have we heard from Albertans that this is such a serious problem that somehow we have to protect them from their ability to make their own judgments and screen out people that they don't want to elect to these school boards?

If you extend this logic of conflict of interest, Mr. Speaker, look at ourselves. Look at ourselves as MLAs. How are we going to protect Albertans from our own judgments with respect to our own salaries and benefits and pensions and all? We make those decisions ourselves. Isn't there a direct pecuniary conflict of interest? Yet we place ourselves above our own electors, our constituents. We presume arrogantly – at least this bill certainly makes that assumption – that we are above everyone else, that Albertans should trust us with our judgments, with our integrity, with our impartiality. But we in turn, then, want to disenfranchise tens of thousands of them just because they happen to form a certain category of people in the province, a category of educational workers that somehow some people in this Assembly – unfortunately, it seems, at least if you look at the recent record, the majority in this Assembly – find somehow suspect in terms of their intentions, in terms of their abilities, in terms of the value of the service that they render to all of us on behalf of our children and in the interests of our own well-being in the future.

It's a bill, Mr. Speaker, that must not pass this House. It's a bill that deserves to be defeated in this House. It's a very regressive piece of legislation. It will encourage young Albertans, men and women, who aspire to become teachers to think twice, because for them to choose to be a teacher may then mean to choose to lose some of their rights as citizens, that you are going to be barred from running for an important public office because you have made a choice to be a teacher. Who would want to become a teacher if he or she, a talented young person, knows that this is the cost that will be associated with his or her decision to become a teacher?

I think it's a bill which is not needed. No evidence has been presented or produced that suggests that there's a problem to be solved and that this bill will solve it. This is a bill which instead will in fact create new problems in terms of the recruitment of talented young people into the profession of teaching because the teaching profession somehow no longer is a profession that enjoys the support and the trust of the majority of the members in this House. I cannot be associated with that kind of view of teachers and their ability to make judgments which would be cast in doubt. I cannot associate myself with that kind of view of the situation, Mr. Speaker, so I will encourage my colleagues in the Assembly to dispassionately look at this bill, to look at the assumptions underlying it, to look at the sort of ideas that seem to be driving it. It's not an evidence-driven piece of legislation. It's not a bill that rests its case on evidence that's before us which compels us to take action. Not a word has been said about this.

Insinuations have been made that some trustees may find themselves in a situation where they have this conflict of interest that they have to face and confront. We want to protect some Albertans who have direct knowledge of the education system, who have not only expertise but have passion to serve their system. We want to protect the system from that class of individual, and these happen to be employees of the school boards. I think it's a baseless assumption. It's a terribly negative way of looking at the relationships between us as citizens and our institutions in which we serve, whether it's the Legislative Assembly, to which we get elected to serve, or whether it's the school board on which we sit to make decisions.

I want to rely on the good judgment of my constituents to see whether they consider me properly qualified to represent them in the Legislature. When it comes to conflict of interest, we have put in place in this Assembly ways to protect Albertans from the problem of conflict of interest, which necessarily arises because all of us have interests. We bring them into the Assembly, but we also know how to control them.

So, Mr. Speaker, I oppose this bill, and I ask other members to also speak out against it. Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Egmont.

MR. HERARD: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to have the opportunity today to speak to Bill 205, the School Trustee Statutes Amendment Act, 2002. I'm very pleased to see that a sensitive matter such as that addressed by Bill 205 is before this Legislature, so I wish to offer my colleague my congratulations for doing so.

Mr. Speaker, I'd like to mention that Bill 205 is the product of the hon. member's past experience as a school board trustee and chairperson of the St. Albert school district No. 3 and as past president of the Alberta School Boards' Association for Bilingual Education. Bill 205, in other words, isn't a mere outgrowth of someone's imagination. It's not just something that the hon. member has heard about, but it's a reflection of her experience and expertise. She has firsthand knowledge of this matter. Now, I know this hon. member's dedicated service and commitment to public education, and I find completely abhorrent the suggestion from members of the opposition that her actions can be in any way an attack on teachers. Give your heads a shake.

Mr. Speaker, we live in an age where we place a premium on accountability. The buck stops here could almost be any politician's motto. But part of any such commitment must include a commitment to steer clear of any conflicts of interest, both those that are real and those that are perceived. As public servants we have to adhere to certain laws and regulations in order to avoid finding ourselves in a conflict of interest situation. We are, of course, not alone in having to observe such laws and regulations. There is a longtime prohibition on what's often called insider trading on the stock market, for example. Physicians can't accept money from drug companies to prescribe particular drugs to the exclusion of others. Quite frankly, even referees in the NHL can't referee games where the teams and the referees are from the same cities, and the same goes for off-ice refereeing staff as well. So we have a lot of examples of concerns of potential conflicts of interest in our society.

Mr. Speaker, school boards are no exception in this matter. Bill 205 takes a two-pronged approach to streamline the circumstances and conditions under which an individual can become and serve as a school board trustee. First, it narrows the limits on who may serve as a trustee, and secondly, Bill 205 sort of nips in the bud any candidacy that might otherwise be plagued by conflicts of interest and particularly those of a pecuniary nature.

Being a school board trustee is a task that carries with it significant responsibility. To be sure, Mr. Speaker, it's a voluntary engagement, but beyond that, the person who is elected to the school board is entrusted with nothing less than creating and administering the best possible learning environment for our children. We already know that for a job fraught with such a high degree of responsibility, the pay is lousy. Trustees tend to be compensated for only the time spent in meetings. So why, then, would someone want to be a trustee? This is a job that not only involves a lot of responsibility, but it also involves making tough decisions, decisions which from time to time a lot of people will not like.

The reasons why someone would run for a position as a school board trustee are probably as widespread and as many as there are trustees, Mr. Speaker, but I think that, aside from the strictly personal ones, there is a core value shared by all trustees: they really care about public education, and they are really concerned that children in public education get the high-quality education they deserve. True, to be a school board trustee does not empower someone to shape the curriculum, nor does it bestow upon someone the responsibility to determine how knowledge is transmitted from the teacher to the student. That said, school board trustees are given wide latitude in several arenas within the framework established by Alberta Learning, and chief among them we find policymaking, communication, and finances. The public is most keenly aware of the work of school board trustees when their local school board votes on a budget. However, they do not make budget decisions in a vacuum. In a sense it's fair to say that the school board trustee acts as referee when it comes to the budget. Teachers and principals have their particular areas of concern and parents have theirs. To mitigate, the trustees come and visit the schools, ask questions, hold public meetings, and then make their decisions on what gets funded and by how much. It is here that Bill 205 will have a most positive impact.

Mr. Speaker, by establishing restrictions on who may serve as a school board trustee, Bill 205 would also limit the number of occurrences where due to pecuniary interests a trustee must recuse himself or herself from deliberations. Moreover, Bill 205 would establish parameters around the specific kinds of circumstances that would automatically be deemed to be in conflict for reasons of pecuniary interests. These parameters would not restrict the current provisions that trustees must disclose any pecuniary interests which might constitute a conflict of interest. However, the proposed amendments would provide clarity by describing certain situations that would be presumed to be in conflict of interest for reasons of pecuniary interest such as the situation where a trustee or his or her spouse is employed on an ongoing, permanent contract by any school district in the province.

Clarity, I think we can all agree, Mr. Speaker, is good and particularly so when it might help us avoid conflicts of interest or perceived conflicts of interest. Quite often it is how a situation is perceived that will yield a certain result, much more than the situation in actuality might. Considering that trustees of school boards tend to wear three different hats – those of policymakers, communicators, and those in charge of purse strings – it is vitally important that they and their on-job performance be perceived as squeaky clean. There's no room for misguided perceptions. We all know that regardless of how ill-informed a perception might be, it will usually stick.

I say this, Mr. Speaker, because I want to emphasize that it's my firm belief that the vast, overwhelming majority of school board trustees in our province are fully ready, willing, and able to separate themselves from the decisions they have to make and any personal benefits that would incur were they to make a particular decision in a certain way. I just don't believe that our school board trustees operate in such a manner, but someone else might. They might perceive that to be the case, and perception is often reality, whether we like it or not.

Breach of public trust is a very serious matter. It's not acceptable for anyone who holds an office to treat lightly the trust and confidence which the public has bestowed on them. We need not look any further than ourselves to know just how unacceptable that is. That's why, Mr. Speaker, it's imperative that all of us who hold public office at whatever level avoid conflicts of interest, real and perceived, whenever possible. In the case of trustees of school boards, the code of ethics of the Alberta School Boards Association states unequivocally that a trustee will resist every temptation and outside pressure to use his or her position as a school board member to benefit either himself or herself or any other individual or agency apart from the total interest of the school jurisdiction.

Mr. Speaker, our constituents, may they be young or old or in or out of school, deserve to have the protection that is afforded by Bill 205, and I urge all my colleagues to vote in favour. Thank you very much.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure to speak against this particular bill before us in the Legislature. It's a very tough time to be a teacher in this province. I have quite a bit to say about this particular bill, and most of it has been supplied to me by people who are completely outraged by the legislation before us at this time.

Mr. Speaker, there are a couple of points that I think we need to make right off the bat, and one is in terms of what's happened to school boards and what's continuing to happen when we see this kind of legislation before us. We see them being stripped of their ability to govern and to have any rights for decision-making. What we have seen just in the last very short while with regard to school boards is that they've lost their right to tax and they've lost their right to choose their own CEOs, in this case the superintendents. Now they can't put these people in place without actually having ministerial approval. Now we have a private member's bill before the Legislature that would take away the right from people to decide who could actually sit on their boards and make the decisions. This is very punitive in nature and simply unworkable.

It was interesting to hear the Member for Calgary-Egmont's comments when he said that he found it abhorrent that any members would say that the sponsoring member of this bill, the Member for St. Albert, would be putting forth an attack on teachers. Well, Mr. Speaker, I find it abhorrent that we could think that this was anything but a direct attack on teachers. That view isn't just shared by me. I would refer all members in the Assembly to the news release put out by the Alberta Teachers' Association dated the 4th of April where it talks specifically about Bill 205 and how this is an assault on the right of teachers, and this assault continues. In the news release they refer to the private member's bill being introduced by the Member for St. Albert, and that what it would do is strip employees of school boards and their spouses of their right to run in trustee elections anywhere in the province and, upon proclamation, would force the resignation of democratically elected school trustees.

I didn't see the Member for St. Albert address that specific issue in her discussions, and I hope that we'll see it specifically addressed before the vote comes up on this bill.

The press release goes on to say that this is likely to be debated this week, which it is, and a particularly offensive provision to the ATA is the part of the bill that states:

A person is not eligible to be nominated as a candidate for election as a trustee of a school board if on nomination day the person is employed by

- (a) a school district or division,
- (b) a charter school, or
- (c) a private school, in Alberta.

It goes on to talk about other provisions of the bill preventing persons "who might, by virtue of being related to a school employee, have occasional situational conflicts of interest from running for a position on their local school board." It states:

If the Bill was proclaimed law, currently sitting trustees affected by the Bill would be removed from office immediately because section 82(1) of the School Act prevents anyone who ceases to be eligible for nomination from remaining as a trustee.

Well, the Member for St. Albert is stating that that isn't the case, and I wonder what correspondence she has had with the ATA to tell them that that isn't the case, and if she could share that correspondence with the Assembly at this time, we'd certainly be interested in seeing it tabled.

Mr. Speaker, the ATA president, Larry Booi, goes on to say in the press release:

“Let there be no mistake . . . O’Neill’s bill is targeted primarily at teachers. It goes well beyond what is required to avoid conflicts of interest and makes anyone employed at any school in Alberta ineligible to be nominated or serve as a school trustee in any jurisdiction anywhere in Alberta, not just in his or her employing jurisdiction. It is a crass attempt to remove a basic democratic right from an entire class of citizens and would ultimately restrict the freedom of choice of all voters.”

So I think that very succinctly lays out the problems with this particular bill and certainly politely states the position of many of the teachers that I talked to over the weekend who were completely outraged by this coming forward.

I had occasion over the weekend to talk to a former member of this House, the former Member for Spruce Grove-Sturgeon-St. Albert. Colleen Soetaert, as many in this Assembly will recall, is herself a teacher and her husband is also a teacher, and they were particularly upset by the kinds of implications that would be felt in the future by this particular piece of legislation. One of the interesting points that Colleen brought up was: who better than those closest to students and who are experiencing classroom situations and changes than teachers and those related to teachers to bring forward the concerns and identify the issues and know the kinds of pressures on the system and have the knowledge and background to make budgetary decisions? And I agree with her. I think we are doing people in this province, particularly students, a grave disservice if we take away the rights of those people to participate at this level of government.

The only thing that the Member for Calgary-Egmont said that I agreed with was that trustees are underpaid for the kind of work they do. I believe that to be true. They work very hard, and they have some tough decisions to make, and they have in their interests the best interests of students and the future of our province when they make decisions. For us to continue to undervalue that kind of participation or label those who can and cannot participate in that process certainly is a basic democratic removal of rights, in my opinion, and it is completely unsupportable.

I think it’s very interesting what we can see here in terms of what kinds of precedents may be established because of this. What other kind of legislation will we see in the future if this particular piece follows? It stands to reason that if teachers or those who have teaching spouses are suddenly disallowed from participating as trustees, are we going to see the same kind of conflict of interest bill come forward for health authorities; for example, nurses, doctors, those in related professions? That will severely impact rural Alberta, where certainly many of the people who participate at that level are directly related to people in the health care industry. So I wonder how that kind of legislation would go forward. The Member for St. Albert is assuming, when she goes forward with this particular bill, that people in those positions won’t act with integrity and won’t remove themselves from the decision-making process, and I find that to be completely offensive.

Mr. Speaker, given the hour, now I would like to adjourn debate on this particular bill.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would now move that we call it 5:30 and that we adjourn until 8 this evening.

Free Admission to Museums and Historic Sites

503. Mrs. O'Neill moved:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to offer free admission to Albertans one day each month to the province's museums and historic sites.

[Debate adjourned March 18: Ms Carlson speaking]

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Medicine Hat.

MR. RENNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It's a pleasure for me to take a few minutes to discuss Motion 503 tonight. This motion is brought forward by the Member for St. Albert, and although I applaud the member for her initiative, for the very forthright attempts to help Albertans appreciate the wonderful history and character that are so prevalent in our museums and historic sites, I'm afraid that I'm not able to support the motion because frankly I don't think that the motion can possibly accomplish what the member is trying to accomplish here.

Let me give you an example. Many of the members may or may not be familiar with my past career. Prior to coming into this House and joining the members, I made my living in the flower business. I sold flowers, a very perishable product, Mr. Speaker. My grandfather also was in the flower business. I grew up in the flower business, and I learned a lot from my grandfather. One of the things that my grandfather always made abundantly clear to me is that if you give it away, they won't appreciate the value. I can remember many times going down to my grandfather's greenhouse, and on the grading room floor there would be hundreds and hundreds of roses. When you're a little kid, I mean, flowers are flowers. Most of those roses were actually quite nice, but they were culls, and that's exactly where they deserved to be: on the grading room floor. They were very beautiful flowers with minor little flaws, and those were culls.

We put them on the floor, and we didn't give them away; we didn't sell them; we threw them away. Once in a while we would have a sale. We didn't sell the culls, but we might sell the next-to-bottom culls. At that time we called them design grade. They were the worst-grade roses that we sold, and we would sell them once in a while, maybe once or twice a year – that's all – and the rest of the time even those ones went into the garbage. The reason we did that is because we wanted people to appreciate the wonderful quality that we grew. We were known as having quality product, not quantity of product, and the only way you can do that is to maintain those high standards.

Now, you might ask me, Mr. Speaker: how does this relate to museums in Alberta? Well, I'll tell you how it relates to museums in Alberta. When people see something for nothing, they believe that it's worth nothing. I don't think that's the impression that we want to leave with visitors in Alberta. I would suggest that unless you're prepared to spend far more than what you might possibly forego in lost revenue, this scheme would accomplish absolutely nothing. Probably three-quarters of the people who would show up at the doors of our museums would know nothing about the free day deal and would have come anyway, and it's sort of like winning the lottery: it's their little bonus for today. Many of the rest of the people who might be there because you've got a free day would be like many Albertans: a bargain is a bargain, and they're going to take advantage of it not because they can't necessarily afford to pay regular admission but because they appreciate a good bargain when they see one. My grandfather, God rest his soul, would have been right at the front of the line. He was the same guy that taught me all those lessons about the flowers.

What I think we have to see in all this is like with my grandfather. When my grandfather gave away flowers, he gave away the best flowers that he had. He gave away lots of flowers, but he gave away the best flowers that he had, and he made sure everybody knew that they were free and that he was giving them away. He did it highly visibly. In fact, he would buy advertising to let the world know that he was giving away his flowers. That's I think what would have to happen if we were going to have free admission to our museums. There's no point in having free admission to our museums unless we're going to advertise to the world and let them know that we're doing it.

Frankly, when we do that, we've heard many, many arguments throughout this debate about how that could possibly jeopardize the ability of these facilities to maintain operations. Unless the government – and I don't recall seeing a line item in the budget that would indicate the same – is prepared to compensate the individual friends of those that operate many of our historic sites and museums, then we are compromising their ability to provide the best and to provide the quality that we as Albertans and as members of this Assembly are so proud of. There is no doubt in my mind that the quality of the programs at our facilities is second to none, and I don't think that we should do anything in this Legislature that would compromise that quality.

So for a number of reasons, most of which relate to my grandfather and all the good things that he taught me, Mr. Speaker, I will not be supporting this motion this evening. Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton Gold-Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is a pleasure to rise this evening and speak to Motion 503 as presented to the Assembly by the hon. Member for St. Albert. I initially had reservations about this motion, but whenever one considers the increase in museum and historical sites that have occurred in the last budget that was tabled, I think the hon. member may be onto something very worthwhile, and it certainly has merit.

I don't know whether the hon. member has traveled to Paris and has seen the citizens not only of Paris but of France, Mr. Speaker, who attend on Sundays free of charge, as I understand it, the Louvre. The nation is very proud not only of their museums but also the contents of the museums. It is noteworthy that there are large, large crowds on Sunday afternoon of Parisians and citizens from France making day trips to the museum. If we could as a result of this hon. member's motion do the same thing for Alberta's museums and historical sites, then I certainly think it is worthwhile, and I would urge all hon. members to support this motion as presented:

Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to offer free admission to Albertans one day each month to the province's museums and historic sites.

I would also encourage that that day be just like what the French have done, and that is to have it on Sunday, sort of a family outing.

Whenever we look at the fee increases that have been imposed with the budget, Mr. Speaker, we see that for museums and historical sites for an adult it's going from $10 to $15, so parents could save themselves $30 by visiting on Sunday to, for instance, Drumheller. They could drive to Drumheller and, contrary to what the hon. Member for Medicine Hat said, support the local economy by providing a day visit to a location such as Drumheller. A $30 savings in admission fees would go a long way toward gas even at the current high prices of a trip from, say, St. Albert to Drumheller and then return. This is very worthwhile. And corporations, I note in here, to my astonishment, can have now up to a $10,000 fee, but that's getting off the subject of this motion, Mr. Speaker.

I would encourage all members again to have a look at this in light of the fact that family passes or family packages are going from $20 to $40 for a museum. If we were to have this free on Sunday, I think it would certainly add to quality time for all Alberta families and increase not only the public interest but also the number of Albertans that attend or visit our museums and historic sites.

Now, we all know, Mr. Speaker, that public funding of museums and historic sites has gradually reduced over the past eight years, and these agencies have had to seek private sponsorships and alternate sources of funding. I understand that there have been attempts made to locate alternate sources of revenue for the provincial museum, as I spoke earlier, in Drumheller. Fees went up last year. They're going to go up again this year, and I'm afraid that this increase in fees may restrict even further those who attend. On Sundays or on one day each month, if seniors or other low-income Albertans simply could not afford to attend and receive the benefits of what was once accessible public educational, recreational resources, then we should support the hon. Member for St. Albert's motion.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford.

MR. McCLELLAND: Thank you very much. In closing debate . . .

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Sorry, Edmonton-Rutherford. The Standing Orders provide for five minutes for the sponsor to close debate on motion.

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I just wanted in conclusion, in urging everyone here to support this motion, to reflect on the fact that the reason I introduced this motion into the House here and to the Assembly is the same reason for which I know a number of the other members introduce motions, and that is at the request of a constituent who has brought a matter to us. The origin of this motion was that I had a constituent – I still do – who lives in St. Albert who arranges trips for seniors, mainly seniors who live in seniors' housing in downtown Edmonton. This person said that it would be of great benefit to them if they could make trips to the Provincial Museum or day trips to museums in St. Albert, for instance, although that's free, and other communities on a specific day and plan it around days that might perhaps be days that are admission free in order for them to participate and to enjoy all of the artifacts and all of the learning, all of the repository of our province's history as they are portrayed in the museums and as they tell tales of our historic sites.

So it was in response to that constituent's request that I proposed Motion 503, but I'd also like to say that it's because of all of those kids who love the bug room at the Provincial Museum, for instance, and who love to go back to it as often as they can. For many of them and their families constant return trips are quite financially demanding on the family. Or the dioramas at the Provincial Museum, for instance. There is an awful lot that can be gleaned from that for individuals who like to return there each time. If we provided them with one day a month, then I'm sure that they would be hooked on them. As we say in private business, sometimes you need to have a loss leader in order to attract people to a facility or to your store, in an individual business' perspective, in order for them to see what riches are there, what top quality is there, how valuable those artifacts are that we would never throw on the floor as not being perfect, and we would never discard them. I know that in all of our historic sites and museums those top-quality artifacts are only of the highest value for the enjoyment and wisdom of viewing and understanding by the citizens of Alberta and, indeed, any visitors.

I'd also say to those individuals who would arrive at the facility on the day it is free that if it were a bonus and they could afford to, they could always throw their voluntary contributions into the boxes that are there. There is nothing stopping them. In fact, there's almost a hands out: if you wish to make a donation, if you're capable of making a donation, if you would like to contribute to it, please do so.

The other thought that I want to leave with everyone here in the Assembly is that when people return frequently to a facility, particularly of the quality of our historic sites and museums, they begin to take proprietorship, assume those rights, if you will. They then begin to say: this belongs to us; we're part of it. Then they change that sense of proprietorship that they have in knowing them and promoting them, so if you have visitors, families, friends, neighbours, you can talk to them about what riches reside and are kept so carefully in our museums and what stories are told by our historic sites. You want to take your friends, you want to take your family members there to enjoy them, and this would be the one initiative which would enable people to say, "Oh, I couldn't maybe otherwise," or "I didn't know about it, but if I'm able to go to a facility that is financed by my tax dollar," so it's really not free, "I would go there on the day that I didn't have to pay admission, I would find out how valuable and how wonderful a place it was to be, and then I would make sure that I had others come with me."

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Thank you.

8:30 Student Loans

504. Mr. Snelgrove moved:
 Be it resolved that the Legislative Assembly urge the government to study the student loan system in place in Alberta.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster.

MR. SNELGROVE: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I guess I approach this motion a little differently than most. I don't know what the answer is. Most of the time we have people bringing motions in, saying: this is a solution to a problem. It's a very complex problem, and so I think that's why it's so important we have this discussion. I do know that the current system seems to put more of an emphasis on how you get signed up and in than on what you're taking. For example, this is a student assistance application, and with the exception of number 2 on it, that says, "What's your student number?" there's nothing else that even asks them: "What are you taking? Are you going to be able to pay for it when you're done? Do you understand what costs may be a result?" This is what we ask the students when they leave. I think we've got the horse and the cart backwards here.

I think it's important that we spend the time with students before they sign up for an education that could be costly and maybe not exactly what they've bargained for. I just want to bring some examples to you from some of the questionnaires they've had students fill out. Aside from some of the other obvious ones, transportation costs are different. I mean, we have in our application: what do you drive? Quite honestly, that doesn't matter. If we're dealing with education, let's deal with education. I think that what someone drives is not that relevant if they're maybe a single mother living in Tofield and trying to drive into NAIT every day as opposed to someone living at home taking a bus. They're completely different. I mean, you're going to have huge expenses, and I don't think it would be very wise to have someone having to drive a vehicle worth less than $5,000 for an hour each way on the highway to fit some form. It doesn't make sense.

The other part – and I'm sure it'll come up with some of the speakers – is how we limit access to it. I don't believe that because you are a small business owner or a farm owner and it shows that you have assets, you should be required to pay 100 percent of your son's or daughter's education in that your business or your farm may not be able to produce enough cash flow to sustain that. There are many cases where four or five children are on a farm and simply can't pay, yet because they have the assets, they are deemed to be able to provide for that.

One of the questions from the evaluation, Mr. Speaker, was whether a university degree was required for the job they got. Thirty-two percent of the people said no. Now, it's still a pretty good percentage to say that 63.7 or 64 percent said yes, but I think that 32 or 33 percent is a huge number that have gotten themselves into an education that by their statements isn't required for what they're doing.

They asked many what they were doing with their job. Many of them said that this was only a stopgap. They were going to do this job for a little while, and then, they felt, due to the increasing information technology and highly competitive labour market, they were likely to come back to school and thus subscribe to the notion of lifelong learning, which is fine provided the system affords them the opportunity to obtain their education.

Some of the other statistics I think are very interesting. When they asked the people the relevance of their course in education, 33.9 percent were satisfied that what they took was what they needed; just about 50 percent weren't. When you get into the engineering field, 53 percent were satisfied; only 7 percent weren't. There's a whole list, but I think that students should know when they're signing up for these courses what the previous classes have learned and what they've done with their education from that point on.

They asked, "To what extent did your program of study provide you with improved chances of a good income?" I mean, that's an important question. We're talking dollars and cents here, an education that people try to make a life out of. In environmental design 74 percent of the people said that it had no effect or was neutral. Only 15 percent said that what they took had some relevance to what they did. You know, that's an astounding number, and I really think students signing up for that course should know that. No way would I say: look, because you can never get a job in that field or it's never going to pay that well, you can't take it. Far from it, but I think they should be aware of what the students ahead of them have found, what effect it has had on their lives.

"When you decided to enrol in your program, how important was it for you to acquire the skills needed for a particular job?" In the education field 76.2 percent said: very important. Then you drop down to the humanities. Only 10.2 percent said that it was important. In medicine 92.3 percent said that it was important. These numbers are there. We know what we're doing with these questionnaires. Let's let the students know. I think it's more important that we sit them down and say: we agree that an education is an investment, but maybe you should be making a better choice of investment. Bankers will take collateral and your education can be your collateral, but if you're putting your collateral in something that can't get you a job, you're going to have a hard time paying back your investment.

"How satisfied are you with the pay in your current job?" they asked them. When you look under the column of Very Satisfied, out of the dozen or so occupations or professions that they asked about, only one of them was over the 20 percent, 24.5 percent, and that was in general studies. Now, that goes differently than what you would expect when you look at the other information that, you know, this was relevant, that was important. Yet when it comes to if they are satisfied with the pay they got, which probably boils down to one of the most important aspects, only a quarter of them thought that was enough pay. When you get to the humanities, only 11 percent; education thought only 10 percent. I guess that's not a surprise, then.

"How related is your current job to the subject area knowledge you acquired?" In the humanities only 9.9 percent said: very related. I mean, it changes up and down. Medicine, 93 percent again. These are important numbers. If the course isn't targeting what the students need to know to do their job, then we've either got to change the course or let them know that some of the programs aren't relevant anymore. Education, by and large, hasn't changed a great deal over the years other than how we present it.

I just think we're working at it from the wrong end. We spend hours in the spring and summer with students out of school coming into our constituency office complaining about this application form. It doesn't fit what they need. Now, somehow we want to be committed to education. Well, then, we ought to have the time to sit down and talk to the students involved and to the parents ultimately who are paying for it and say: what do we need to do to make it fit your goal? I would love to see a plan that allowed students to sit down, to look at the course they're taking, to understand that they're going to have to pay back the money loaned to them but that they're only going to have to pay it back when they're earning enough income to do it.

Several other countries have investigated this: Australia, New Zealand. Unless the student gets to a certain level of income, they're not required to pay it back. Quite honestly we don't do ourselves a favour by putting someone into the poorhouse or by trying to take the meagre bit of income they're making at the start. So if they're aware that they're maybe not going to have to pay interest provided they're working in Alberta, have a degree or a diploma from an Alberta institution, then that's an investment we've made. Pay us back our loan over five or six years, and go on with raising your life. Be a contributor to Alberta. There are many numbers of ways, Mr. Speaker, that we can approach this.

I don't know. I don't think we need more money into the system. We spend a good proportion of Alberta's dollars on it, but I think we need to target them a little better, and I think we need to target them from the student perspective and from the perspective of: are we getting the educators we need for the next decade and for the next many decades down the road? I think we only do ourselves a favour by informing the students before they sign up as to what they're signing up for and what their potential income and expectations are.

So, Mr. Speaker, I look forward to the discussion here. Many of these people have a lot more experience in this field than I, and I would like to hear from them on the motion. But I would say that we don't want to go out of here tonight with 0 and 3, so keep that in mind when you vote.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm rather flabbergasted at some of the statements I've just heard, but I'm going to support the motion because I think it's badly needed for a lot of reasons other than the reasons that the mover of the motion gave us just a few minutes ago.

I think that if any study is done of the loan system, one of the prerequisites is that there be a large number of students involved and that it be evidence based, that there be a gathering of what the loans program actually does and means to students and that that evidence be very, very critical in any changes that are proposed to the loans program. I believe that the government has made some recent moves that have been beneficial and have certainly been supported by students. The move to have the provincial government . . .

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: Thank you, hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

Hon. members, I wonder if we might have permission to briefly revert to Introduction of Guests.

[Unanimous consent granted]

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder.

MR. RATHGEBER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A good friend of mine has joined us in the public gallery this evening. He's a constituent of my friend the Member for Edmonton-Norwood, but he manages a tavern in my constituency, and as a result he and I have had very many colourful political conversations. I'd ask my friend Bruce King to rise and enjoy the warm welcome of this Assembly.

head: Motions Other than Government Motions

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think that the students have applauded the government taking over the management of the loans program and are happy with that change. Now, that's an administrative change that they've been very supportive of, and it's very minor, I think, in terms of the kinds of changes that have to be instituted to make the loans program the success that it should be.

I think that there are a number of things that need to be examined. The whole notion that student debt is fine and yet public debt is bad irks a number of students. They feel that this is the lawmakers saying and acting one way when it's in the area of government finance, and then when it's their personal finances, those principles are abandoned. So I think that whole notion of the principles that underlie the loans program and the assumptions about students and the debt loads that they may sustain needs to be examined.

I think that one of the results of the current loans program and trying to make more loans available and trying to increase the loans amounts is that it takes the pressure off institutions and, ultimately, the government for controlling tuition. The reaction to students is that when tuition increases, we'll increase the loan limits and make them more easily available. It does take that pressure off in terms of controlling tuition costs, and I think that's an unintended consequence of the present loans program. The present loans program – and I've said it a number of times before; there's fairly good evidence around – frightens students from low-income families away from institutions such as our universities. The sticker price shock: they see the cost of the tuition, and they see large, large loans needed to cover those costs over the years. If you come from families of modest incomes, where huge debts are not even possible and are frowned upon, then you tend to choose postsecondary programs that are short and that are cheap, and that's hardly the criterion, I think, that we would want students using in selecting programs.

I think that there are some assumptions about family relationships that students continually point out are no longer true. A number of students 18 and 19 years of age are no longer living with their families. They're independent. Some of the assumptions that we make about parents and the obligations they have to support their students in postsecondary institutions work a hardship on students who don't have that kind of a relationship. So I think that the study that's proposed here is welcomed, and I hope that one of the things that would be done, should the motion pass, is that there would be a really close examination of some of the assumptions.

The economy has changed dramatically over the past number of years. The days when you and I, Mr. Speaker, could earn the money during a summer break to cover our tuition and our school costs for a year are long gone. It's just no longer possible, given the costs of education today. I think that in some cases we pretend that those conditions still exist. The student population has changed. I know that at the University of Alberta there are certainly more mature students attending that institution, and the whole nature of viewing the student population as mostly made up of post grade 12 graduates who immediately proceed to a postsecondary program is one that needs to be re-examined.

The mover of the motion really talked about two things that I think are quite different. One is the very specific items related to the loans program, but the second one was more philosophical, and that's embedded in sort of our notions of what education is for, why you proceed with further education. Certainly high on the list of most students' ranking would be: to get a job. But that isn't true for all students. I think that even for students that are very interested in getting a job, there are secondary motives, and that's wrapped up in what it means to be educated. To be educated, I think most would agree, you go past learning the specific skills for a particular profession and you taste the liberal arts. You take a wide range of courses, and you look for experiences that will broaden you as a human being. You learn to appreciate literature and the fine arts. That's all part of being a well-educated citizen and an informed citizen. So to make the assumption that the only motive for going on to further education and for putting yourself in debt for that education is to secure a job is an erroneous assumption, and I would hope that any study did not proceed with that as the basic underlying motivation.

The Member for Edmonton-Riverview tabled a study from the students' union earlier this afternoon that had relevance for the motion that's before us. It indicated that 50 percent of the students had been turned down for student loans because of the expectations from their parents. So I think that there already exists a wide range of studies and information about loan programs locally and nationally and internationally, and before any study would proceed, I think it would be necessary for that information to be gathered up and reviewed and put in some sort of form so that it would inform the investigation into the loans program.

I support the motion. With the mover's last comments I was heartened, and I look forward to his support when we get to Motion 576, which is our motion which would have a loan repayment plan that allows for repayment of a student's loan according to that student's ability to earn after they're out in the field.

So with those comments, I'd conclude. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

MR. MASKELL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for allowing me to enter debate on Motion 504, which has been proposed by the Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster. Motion 504 calls for a review of the student loan system in Alberta. I think that any review of the loan system ought to look at the job market facing students when they leave their postsecondary institutions for the world of work.

First, Mr. Speaker, if there's some way that we can make it easier for Alberta students to access student loans and then get them into the workforce to pay them off, then I'm all for it. A better educated workforce means good things for every Albertan, and that's what student loans help to provide us. The student loan system for the most part has worked. Indeed, throughout Canada more and more of our young people have found their way to universities, colleges, and technical schools of one sort or another. This has made Alberta more educated, more affluent, and a better place to live. We have a population with the know-how, skills, and brains to compete with any jurisdiction in the world.

Mr. Speaker, while universities are places to prepare students for work, they are also places for the expansion of young Albertans' minds so they can pursue any career they choose to make a go at. In this light we ought to see student loans as both tools to help out the economy and tools which help individual Albertans improve themselves and, in turn, improve our whole province. Really, Mr. Speaker, that's what this is all about: our young Albertans getting the education they need to become responsible citizens and the best educated workforce in the world.

It has become clearer and clearer that in order to have a great society and a great economy, we need all sorts of Albertans from diverse backgrounds with diverse interests and diverse educations and to pool these talents and resources to make this province a better place. We need to encourage all of our young people to get some education beyond their high school years. We saw just last session that Alberta is facing a shortage of tradespeople. This can be helped by encouraging our students to enter the trades.

We're even seeing that economic development is encouraging immigration to Alberta to fill open positions necessary to the development of many sectors of our economy. I'm all for immigration, but it would also be good to see bright young Albertans fill these positions. The more we train our young people and the more we make the postsecondary education system accessible to them, then the more these jobs will be filled by our young Albertans. What I'm trying to say, Mr. Speaker, is that education is the key to our success. Accordingly, any idea asking that we reform our loan system to make it easier for deserving, capable, and intelligent young Albertans to enter the education system is, at the very least, worth consideration.

Before I close, Mr. Speaker, I'd also like to address one more point on Motion 504. I've heard from many constituents that our young people are afraid to go into debt to get an education because of complications with paying off that debt once they are done with their studies. Alberta students are luckier than most. They can go to school, get an education, and then enter a thriving and robust job market, but we should not assume that all our graduates find jobs right away. We've all heard the stories of students having to work at minimum wage jobs after graduating because they couldn't find meaningful work in their field. These stories are not always myths, and that's why a lot of students are wary of getting into debt that they won't be able to pay off for years on end.

Perhaps while we're having this discussion we should also be talking about ways to help students land those jobs after they graduate so that the debt doesn't pile up astronomically. For example, while we're batting around ideas, why not consider making it mandatory for students to put in so many hours of volunteer work for a registered nonprofit agency if they want to access a loan? I suggest this for a few reasons. First, when you talk to most employers and employment counselors, they'll stress the importance of a degree or college diploma but will also say that employers are looking for people with real skills picked up in the world of work and volunteering. Requiring students to put in volunteer hours to qualify for a student loan helps them gain the skills needed to get that job. Further, volunteer work makes our communities better. We would see an initial return on our investment in our students. This is just one idea. I'm sure there are several arguments against it, but while we're talking reform, let's look at every angle we can.

I support this motion and urge all members of this Assembly to do so as well. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre in the minute and 49 seconds remaining.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you for just clarifying my parameters.

This is a very interesting motion that's been brought forward by the member opposite, and as I listened to him, he put a lot of weight on the student survey in relation to the motion he was bringing forward. I wish he had given a bit more information about that – I guess at this point I'll go and look it up myself – because it wasn't always clear why certain reactions have been received in response to the questions, and I understand that this was done sort of as an exit poll by students at the University of Alberta. For example, saying that a course was not useful in a given pursuit of some degree. Well, how was it not useful? Was it that the information wasn't going to further achieving that particular degree? Was the course an outdated requirement? How was it not useful? I needed a bit more information there.

I have a lot of students from the University of Alberta, Grant MacEwan College, NorQuest, and NAIT that live in Edmonton-Centre, so the issue of student loans and student finance is a really big one for my constituents. There are a couple of areas that I think we need to explore there. One is what I believe is an outdated notion of family, that assumption that families are going to save up and somehow pay for a young person's education. In my experience that is just not happening anymore.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member, but the time limit for consideration of this item of business on this day has now concluded.

MS BLAKEMAN: I will continue this next week. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Bill 19

Veterinary Profession Amendment Act, 2002

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul.

MR. DANYLUK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to rise today to move second reading of Bill 19, Veterinary Profession Amendment Act, 2002.

I would like to acknowledge the significant contribution of the veterinary profession in the development of these proposed amendments. Representatives from the Alberta Veterinary Medical Association worked closely with the staff of Alberta Human Resources and Employment to identify these amendments and improve the Veterinary Profession Act.

The Alberta Veterinary Medical Association supports the amendments proposed by this bill, and I would like to introduce three gentlemen if I can: first of all, Duane Landals, the registrar for the Alberta Veterinary Medical Association; also Clay Gellhaus, the deputy registrar, also from the association; and Adrian Pritchard, who is the senior legislative adviser for Alberta Human Resources and Employment. In addition, stakeholders from the government, private industry, other professional associations, and academic institutions also support the proposed amendments.

The proposed Veterinary Profession Amendment Act was developed to improve the quality of veterinary service in the province by improving the regulation of professional veterinarians. Ensuring the highest standards of veterinary practice contributes to the protection of Alberta's agricultural livestock and domestic animals. The proposed Veterinary Profession Amendment Act has 22 sections, which are modeled on the public member, investigation, hearing, appeal, and record retention provisions of the Health Professions Act.

Section 1 provides the authority to amend the Veterinary Profession Act.

Section 2 specifies the officers and committees authorized to investigate and consider complaints, clarifies the meaning of unprofessional conduct, and clarifies the definition of veterinary service to include administration and the sale of drugs.

Sections 3 and 4 specify the information and the tabling requirements for the Alberta Veterinary Medical Association's annual report to the Minister of Human Resources and Employment.

Section 5 specifies the percentage of public members appointed by the Lieutenant Governor in Council to serve on the association council and committee.

Section 6 requires the appointment of complaints and hearings directors and specifies the composition of the association's complaint review committee and hearing tribunal.

Sections 7, 8, and 17 replace the term "Discipline Committee" with the terms "Complaints Director," "Complaint Review Committee," and "Hearing Tribunal" where applicable throughout the act.

Section 9 requires regulations to be "approved in principle by a majority" of the association's membership and enables the council to make further text amendments provided they are "consistent with the approval in principle."

Section 10 specifies the association council's bylaw-making authority with respect to the administration of the complaint review committee and the hearing tribunal.

Section 11 replaces the word "Discipline" with the phrase "Professional Conduct" as the heading to section 26 of the act.

Section 12 defines "document" to include information contained in "written, photographic, magnetic, electronic or other form" for professional conduct investigations and hearings.

Section 13 replaces the word "Complaints" with the phrase "Complaint Process" as the heading to section 27 of the act.

Sections 14 and 15 replace all references to the "Registrar" with "Complaints Director" in investigating complaints and allows the latter to undertake investigation if there is reasonable suspicion of unprofessional conduct without a formal complaint being made.

Section 16 replaces the disciplinary sections of the Veterinary Profession Act with new provisions governing investigation, hearing, and appeal of the professional conduct issues and provides for the use of alternative complaint resolution in such matters.

Section 18 provides new provisions to assess members' incapacity, provide access to and maintain records of member information, and refer complaints to the provincial Ombudsman.

Sections 19, 20, and 21 provide transitional provisions to the Veterinary Profession Act and consequential amendments to the Pharmacy and Drug Act and the Ombudsman Act to allow the proposed amendments to come into force. Section 22 specifies that this act come into force upon proclamation.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, the amended Veterinary Profession Act establishes clear accountability requirements and provides authority for the Alberta veterinary profession to respond to public expectations through more transparent and consistent professional conduct requirements.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I listened with a great deal of interest to the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul in the summary of Bill 19. I now would like to express my gratitude to the hon. member and particularly his staff, who made every effort to consult this member regarding Bill 19, the Veterinary Profession Amendment Act. This bill, as I understand it, is certainly going to introduce changes to the existing legislation similar to what has been done to other professions as noted: the Health Professions Act, the Regulated Accounting Profession Act, and of course most recently the changes that occurred to the forestry professions.

As I understand it, this bill most closely resembles the Health Professions Act in its changes. The changes being made deal with a broad collection of items pertaining to the governance of the profession including, as was noted, public membership on the tribunals and review committees, investigations and discipline, as well as with the appeals proceedings or process. It introduces, as I understand it, a process for filing complaints, an investigative process, and an alternative complaint resolution process. There's also an issue here of appeals to the court, the Court of Appeal.

Currently, Mr. Speaker, there is a single discipline process that determines whether an issue goes to a hearing or not. This was determined often by only a few people: the investigator, the registrar, and the legal counsel. Now issues will be heard by a number of veterinarians and members of the public. There is a provision for 25 percent of members on either the hearing tribunal or the complaint review committee to be members of the public. It is noteworthy – and perhaps we can discuss this in committee – that there is a certain number set aside for farmers.

Now, I would be interested to hear other hon. members of this Assembly if they have any views on this. This new approach certainly allows for public representation that will provide a fresh approach to balance or counter the veterinarians' obvious professional inside knowledge that has been gained over years of study and practice. Also, the committee or tribunal will not have exposure to an issue before it hears it, so its general approach will be much less biased and will also take on a much fresher perspective. As well, a greater number of people involved in the process will provide for fair reviews and take the pressure off a few select people.

Possibly, from what I can understand in reading this, the biggest highlight in Bill 19 is the opportunity to mediate or have the alternative complaint resolution process that was described by the hon. member earlier. Previously, as I understand it, the Alberta Veterinary Medical Association has been accused of being overly hard on members. There was a strict formal process that often led to issues going to court, and there will now be a chance with this legislation to mediate in a more informal process where there might be more opportunities to resolve issues with a great deal less cost and hopefully a lot less frustration.

This bill has been in development, as I understand it, for over two years now. It was actually anticipated last year but was not introduced, apparently because of great differences in what was the expected intent of the bill and what was actually prepared. The bill was certainly drafted in consultation with the Alberta Veterinary Medical Association. There was a task force dedicated to the task, as was previously described, and as I understand it, the association has no outstanding contentious issues with this legislation. I will save my comments on the section-by-section analysis, Mr. Speaker, hopefully for committee, but the Alberta Veterinary Medical Association has been contacted by a researcher with the Official Opposition, and the association is confident in this legislation. They were a part of the drafting process and have no outstanding contentious issues left with the legislation, and they are certainly supportive of the legislation. They also, as I understand it, acknowledge the work that has been put into this bill by the hon. Member for Lac La Biche-St. Paul and his staff.

At this time I see no problem supporting this legislation. However, I do have one comment in conclusion, and that is that I would be most anxious, if the former Member for Vermilion-Lloydminster was currently in the Assembly, as to just what exactly he would have to say about this legislation.

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 19 read a second time]

Bill 20

Justice Statutes Amendment Act, 2002

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Calder on behalf of the hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

MR. RATHGEBER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to rise on behalf of the hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General for Alberta to move second reading of Bill 20, the Justice Statutes Amendment Act, 2002.

Mr. Speaker, this bill deals with eight pieces of justice legislation ranging from civil enforcement to the administration of traffic ticket fines. While many of the amendments to these acts are of a housekeeping nature, there is one aspect of it that has caused concern for some Albertans, and I would like to address these amendments in a little bit more detail. That involves amendments to the Survival of Actions Act. These amendments are proposed changes to the Survival of Actions Act and to the Fatal Accidents Act.

First of all, I would like to assure the House and all members that these amendments are not designed to unduly lessen or limit the amount of damages that families who have lost a loved one can receive. In fact, one of the amendments in the Fatal Accidents Act will actually increase the amount of compensation granted to family members who have lost a loved one. However, there has been some confusion as to what the amendments to the Survival of Actions Act will mean for those left behind after an accidental death. When it comes right down to it, this amendment does nothing more than clarify the original intent of the act. The Survival of Actions Act was designed to grant damages to the estate of a deceased person. By definition, an estate includes assets that one leaves behind at the time of death. Therefore, an estate cannot suffer damages because of lost future earnings.

Mr. Speaker, when the act was enacted back in 1978, it was thought that the loss of future earnings was understood not to be an actual financial loss, which is what is covered under the act. For example, if a vehicle is destroyed in a motor vehicle collision that caused the death, there is an actual financial loss. It is an asset with a defined market value. This changed after our Court of Appeal ruled in the case of Duncan estate and Baddeley. The Court of Appeal held in that decision that the loss of earning capacity was an actual financial loss under the act, and it's been interpreted as such ever since.

However, Mr. Speaker, this is not the case in other Canadian jurisdictions. In fact, British Columbia, Saskatchewan, and Yukon have legislation that specifically disallows claims for loss of future earnings, and the Nova Scotia Court of Appeal also recently found that loss of potential earnings is not "an actual pecuniary loss to the estate" and is therefore not recoverable in a Survival of Actions Act claim.

Duncan and Baddeley and a study by the Alberta Law Reform Institute were both carefully considered by the Nova Scotia court when it reached its ruling. The Alberta Law Reform Institute study recommended that our law be amended to reflect the original intention of the act and reflect what is happening in other provinces. We have accepted that recommendation and have put forward this amendment in response. Once again I would like to emphasize that this change will not – and I emphasize "will not" – limit a family member's right to sue for compensation arising from the death of a loved one who would have provided for that family. This function remains under the Fatal Accidents Act.

Under the Fatal Accidents Act Bill 20 also puts forward amendments to that legislation. There are two aspects to the proposed changes to this act, Mr. Speaker. The first deals with a constitutional matter raised by the Court of Queen's Bench regarding children who can be compensated under that act. The act initially only allowed minors or unmarried children who had not reached their 26th birthday to be compensated for the loss of a parent. The court determined that limiting the age of a child is not appropriate under the Canadian Charter, and this amendment is designed to address this issue. The proposed amendment would redefine which children can be compensated under the act as being minors or any child living with a parent who is unmarried and does not have a cohabitant regardless of age. This amendment will particularly benefit adult children with disabilities who are being cared for by a parent. Other amendments to the act will, as I had mentioned earlier, increase the compensation granted to family members for losses suffered as a result of a death.

We know that there is no possible way to put a dollar figure on the emotional loss felt by the family members of a deceased loved one, but the Fatal Accidents Act recognizes that people suffer grief and loss of companionship, guidance, and care and as such should be compensated for those losses. In fact, we are proposing that this entitlement be increased from $43,000 to $75,000 for adult survivors and from $27,000 to $45,000 for each surviving child. Mr. Speaker, family members do not have to go through the emotionally draining process of having to prove these damages in a court of law. In addition, as I said earlier, family members will also continue to be entitled to sue for damages to themselves over and above this amount, including future lost income of a breadwinner, for example. While there's no way to replace or truly compensate for the loss of a deceased loved one, I believe that the amendments to this act are indeed an improvement over the current legislation.

Next I wish to address amendments to the Civil Enforcement Act. Mr. Speaker, back in 1996 the Civil Enforcement Act came into force. This act provided a more effective process for the collection of judgments and privatized the sheriffs' offices in Alberta. As part of the process a review took place three years after the act came into force. The amendments that we're putting forth are a direct result of our stakeholder consultations.

One amendment of note requires bailiffs entering a residence without court order to obtain the permission of an adult who resides at that residence. This makes it clear, Mr. Speaker, that a bailiff cannot enter a person's residence through an unlocked door or by getting permission from a child or visitor. The remaining amendments clarify the legislation and improve the operation of the act.

Bill 20 also proposes to amend the Provincial Offences Procedure Act. Mr. Speaker, as the hon. Minister of Finance announced in Budget 2002, government will be increasing fines under the Highway Traffic Act by 20 percent, which increases became effective April 1, 2002. The government has decided to do this to address the rising administrative costs faced by Alberta Justice in processing traffic tickets. During the last seven years the number of traffic tickets has gone up by nearly 50 percent. In fact, there were 1.3 million traffic tickets processed last year alone.

Currently municipalities receive 100 percent of the ticket revenue for Highway Traffic Act offences which occur inside their boundaries. To offset the rising administrative costs the department faces in processing these tickets, the Provincial Offences Procedure Act is being amended to allow the department to keep a portion of the revenue collected for these offences. The dollar amount going to the municipalities will not change. They will still see the revenue from the tickets that they did before the 20 percent increase. For example, Mr. Speaker, prior to April 1 an individual charged with going 15 kilometres over the speed limit in Edmonton or Calgary would pay a fine of about $57. Currently this full amount is retained by the municipality. With the increases on April 1 a driver ticketed for going 15 kilometres over the speed limit would be charged $68. Alberta Justice will retain $11 for administrative costs while the respective municipality would still receive the same $57. I would just like to note before moving on that even with these increases, traffic fines in Alberta remain among the lowest in Canada.

Bill 20 also proposes to amend the Limitations Act and the Public Trustee Act. We are proposing amendments to the Limitations Act, specifically how the act deals with limitation periods involving minors. Currently, Mr. Speaker, the act makes distinctions between minors who are in the custody of a parent or guardian and minors who are not. As the act reads now, the limitation period runs against a minor if and only if they are in the actual custody of a parent or a guardian. This means that if a parent or guardian fails to start legal proceedings before a relevant limitation period expires, an injured minor could lose the opportunity to be compensated for that injury. However, under the proposed amendment limitation periods will not run against any minor until the age of majority is reached unless a potential defendant activates the limitation period by delivering a notice to proceed to the minor's guardian and also to the Public Trustee. As soon as the notice to proceed is delivered, the limitation period begins to run unless otherwise ordered by the court. If the minor has a guardian, the Public Trustee must then make inquiries regarding the guardian's ability and intention to act in the minor's best interest. After making these inquiries, the Public Trustee could then decide to leave the matter in the hands of the guardian or act on behalf of the minor with the guardian's consent.

We want to take reasonable steps to ensure the limitation periods will not run against a minor after delivery of a notice to proceed unless there is someone who is able and willing to act in that minor's best interest regarding the claim. Therefore, if the Public Trustee is not satisfied as to the guardian's ability and intention to act in the best interest of a minor or where there is no guardian, the Public Trustee may apply to the court for directions. The court could then direct the Public Trustee to act on behalf of the minor to pursue the claim or direct the Public Trustee to take no further steps in the matter. Mr. Speaker, if the court directs that no further steps be taken by the Public Trustee, it could either order that the limitation period will start to run or that it will remain suspended even though a notice to proceed has been served.

Because the Public Trustee will incur costs in responding to notices to proceed, potential defendants who deliver a notice to proceed will be required to pay a prescribed fee that reflects the Public Trustee's costs. In addition, Mr. Speaker, where the Public Trustee does pursue a claim on a minor's behalf, the Public Trustee will be entitled to be compensated out of any money recovered for the minor. This compensation will be determined by regulation.

I would just like to add that the legislation will not change with regard to any actions against a parent or a guardian or in cases of sexual assault. In these cases, the limitation period will not run until the child reaches the age of 18.

There is also one other minor housekeeping amendment to the act, and we'll be making some corresponding changes to the Public Trustee Act, Mr. Speaker.

We're also proposing amendments in Bill 20 to the Interpretation Act. These changes will allow a person to continue a hearing or investigation if their appointment to a board or a committee expires during the course of the hearing or that investigation. It will also ensure that appointments and delegations remain valid after the name of the ministry or office which made the original appointment changes. For example, Mr. Speaker, if the name of the Ministry of Justice and Attorney General was formally changed to be the ministry of the Attorney General, any appointments and delegations made while the ministry was Justice and Attorney General will still be valid.

Finally, Bill 20 proposes to amend portions of the Motor Vehicle Accident Claims Act. This act provides a mechanism through which victims of uninsured drivers or drivers that leave the scene of an accident and cannot be determined thereafter can receive compensation for their injuries. This act will be amended to allow lawyers for the government to question owners as necessary when there is a dispute as to whether an operator of a motor vehicle had the owner's permission to be driving. This change will only apply where consent to drive is an issue in the litigation.

Mr. Speaker, there are also a couple of housekeeping amendments to this act, including one that addresses the fact that while the administrator of the act is involved in lawsuits through the operation of the statute, he or she has no personal knowledge or documents about any accident or any personal injuries arising out of those accidents.

Mr. Speaker, in conclusion, these amendments are all designed to improve the administration of justice in the province of Alberta whether by clarifying legislation where necessary or by providing improved compensation to those who have lost a loved one or suffered actual loss. I encourage all members of this hon. Assembly to support Bill 20 at second reading.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Well, it's spring and the Department of Justice is doing a little spring cleaning. They're gathering together all the bills that they've been meaning to get to and give them a good shake and a little bit of a dust up and in some cases a bit of spit and polish, and in other cases they're kind of throwing out the stuff they should have thrown out last year. So what we've got here in this Justice Statutes Amendment Act is actually amendments to seven different statutes. So they are getting busy here. It's always nice to see when the government is busy.

MR. NORRIS: Doing Hancock's dirty work.

MS BLAKEMAN: Oh, I see that the Minister of Economic Development is managing to heckle enough. I'll be interested to see what he's got to say in the debate.

One of the things that I'd like to note here is the recent changes to the Standing Orders. We used to have 30 minutes to debate any omnibus bill like this one, where we're changing more than three statutes. With the changes in the Standing Orders that has now disappeared. We're limited in second reading, which is debating on the principle of the bill, and in third reading, where we're talking about the effect of the bill, to only being able to speak 20 minutes. That gets a little difficult when we are talking about amendments to seven different statutes. You won't even be able to get in three minutes on each statute in that 20 minutes, so we're going to have to spend more time in Committee of the Whole on this one. So I will likely run out of time, and I will have to return and unfortunately try and finish some debate on principles of the bill in Committee of the Whole.

So seven different bills we've got here. We've got the Fatal Accidents Act, the Interpretation Act, the Limitations Act, the Motor Vehicle Accident Claims Act, the Provincial Offences Procedure Act, the Public Trustee Act, and the Survival of Actions Act. Now, a couple of these acts have received media attention. They have some controversy attached to them. In fact, we actually saw the Survival of Actions Act before us in a previous Justice Statutes Amendment Act in 2000, and there was such a controversy raised at the time that in fact the Survival of Actions section was deleted from the Justice Statutes Amendment Act at that time. Now we have it back again. So those two that are coming in a pair that are controversial are the Fatal Accidents Act and Survival of Actions Act.

I think there are a couple of other areas that we need to be aware of. The Member for Edmonton-Calder has done a good rundown on the government's spin on these documents, and I think it's worth while kind of clipping that out and sticking it to your bulletin board, because in some cases it's fairly accurate and in other cases it's pretty imaginative. But, you know, it's spring and colourful and get a new hat and all of that sort of thing.

I think we need to look carefully at what's being proposed when we start talking about the pairing of the Limitations Act and the Public Trustee Act. In some cases there is an attempt to ensure that minors are being looked after, but I think there's also a potential here to squeeze children or to squeeze their guardians or protectors to get an action moving because whoever wants to commence the action doesn't want to wait until the minor has achieved majority age. I'm going to bring some questions forward on that for the government side to answer for me a little later.

The other section that's being amended here that I think bears greater scrutiny is the Civil Enforcement Act, which actually has a long list of changes, many of them quite minor, but some of them I think should be highlighted if for no other reason than that people are aware. I mean, Civil Enforcement affects just about everybody in Alberta, much more so than the likelihood of, for example, Fatal Accidents or Public Trustee. So I don't want to let that bill kind of slide through without some observations being made and perhaps some warnings happening as well.

When I actually start to look into these bills and the statutes that are being amended here with a bit more vigour, I'm going to start, because I know I'm going to run out of time here, with the more controversial ones, and those are the Fatal Accidents Act and Survival of Actions Act. I can come back later in committee, and it's also possible for people to refer to the comments that have been made by the Member for Edmonton-Calder in introducing the bill on behalf of the Minister of Justice as to what is the history of coming to this point.

Essentially what we have here is that the Fatal Accidents Act is looking to increase the amount of damages paid to a spouse or cohabitant of a deceased adult or to the parents of a deceased child, to raise the amount that's in the legislation now at $43,000 to a $75,000 amount, to increase the amount of damages paid to a child for a deceased parent from the $27,000 that is currently in the legislation to $45,000. Now, in essence, once you've borne the proof necessary here, then that amount of money is paid over. It's not necessary for people to go to court and prove a whole series of criteria to be eligible to receive this money. It is written in the legislation as money for bereavement and I think was originally intended – it was quite a minor amount when we first started, about $3,000 – to cover ancillary funeral expenses, perhaps some money for grief counseling of some kind. It was a fairly minor amount, and it has accelerated quite a bit to the point where we're talking about a $75,000 and a $45,000 settlement. In essence, this should be helpful to people who are placed in this awful situation, because they do not have to go to court. Once they have met the criteria that's set out in the legislation, they have qualified for it, and they don't have to go to court.

This does amend the Fatal Accidents Act so that the parents can collect damages from the death of a child and a child can collect damages from the death of a parent, regardless of the child's age, when the child is living with the parents and is unmarried and doesn't have a cohabitant. So, in other words, an adult child who's living at home would be captured by this change. As I said, these are damages for grief and loss of companionship, guidance, and care, and they don't have to be proven. Now, as was very carefully laid out by the Member for Edmonton-Calder, this does not preclude a survivor suing for other damages over and above this amount because the person who died was the breadwinner and others were dependent upon their income. They can sue, and that has not been removed from what's being considered here under this act. That seems to be a point of misunderstanding that we see.

Now, the Survival of Actions Act has got a long, sort of convoluted history of common law and other things, but essentially what I see the government trying to do is clarify that only the actual financial loss is covered by the act rather than the potential loss of future income. Essentially this does bring Alberta into line with other western jurisdictions and is appropriate.

This is interesting. I noticed in Saturday's Edmonton Journal there's this entire one-page ad in the back of the B section. That's a lot of money to buy a full-page ad in the back of a section in the Journal.

AN HON. MEMBER: Seventeen hundred bucks.

MS BLAKEMAN: Oh, I'm sorry. Somebody knows how much money it is. Seventeen hundred dollars. I was told that was much more.

So there are certainly people that are willing and wishing to get engaged in a protracted and public battle over changes to these two pieces of legislation.

I had to take a step back, because I'd commented on the Survival of Actions Act the last time it was up in 2000, and I've changed my mind since then in considering other things. I think that the right to sue is a very important part of law, but we in Canada have a different approach to what we would generally be suing for. I think what we're trying to do here as legislators is to write legislation that allows people to look after themselves and allows them to take steps, whether that's buying insurance premiums or life insurance or car insurance, in a way that allows them to look after themselves as best as possible. Where there is a failing of someone to do this, then, yes, we need some sort of legislation that's going to lay the ground rules for who ultimately picks up the tab, but we don't really want the tab to be borne by the taxpayer unless absolutely necessary.

What I think doesn't sit right with me is the opportunity for a windfall that's being contemplated by some people engaged in the public debate over this bill. Well, what do you mean by a windfall? I think when you start talking about the loss of future earnings of a young person, for example, who died, that is going to certainly come into play for those people who would be dependants. So you've got a breadwinner and a spouse or cohabitant and their offspring or children, and if they're dependent upon that money, then they need to find some way to recoup that. There's nothing that's happening here that would prevent that.

Where I start to struggle with this is where people want this act to be used as a venue for a larger statement, a punitive statement, on the loss of a family member, and that turns into, I think, in some instances a windfall where there are – how do I describe this? – too many ifs that just don't make sense to me. So if we have a situation, which is what's being proposed by some groups and some individuals, where the Survival of Actions Act is not changed and we have a parent, for example, who could sue an insurance company on behalf of an adult child who had died in, let's say, a traffic accident and they're suing for potential lifetime earnings, there's a gap in logic to me here that doesn't make sense. There would have to be an assumption that, one, that young person would have made an extraordinary amount of money; two, that young person, then, would have predeceased the parent who's now suing for this lifetime of earnings; and three, the young person would have willed that money back to their parent.

So all of those things are going to have to be assumed inside of this kind of action, and what's the point of this? The parent was not the dependant. The parent was not dependent on these earnings, and if they were, there are other ways to go about this that are being offered by these changes or are still offered outside of these changes through litigation through the courts.

I'm not comfortable going against the government in this case. I think what has been put together when we're talking about the Fatal Accidents Act and the Survival of Actions Act – I'm comfortable with what is being proposed by the government here. I'm comfortable that we are looking for the best way to help people look after themselves and, failing that, to have a set of ground rules that people can follow in order to try and find some assistance, and then we know that failing all of that, in fact there are social service programs that could kick into place to assist people.

It does not sit right with me that we would abandon this plan and look for something that in fact would be giving individuals who are not dependent on the earnings of someone who had died an opportunity to either cash in on future earnings or, secondarily, use this as a way of sending a message; for example, if it was a drunk driver that had killed a young person and using this as a way to send a message to drunk drivers: you shouldn't have done that; that was a bad thing to do. I think that if that's what people are seeking, then we need to be looking at pursuing the federal government to make changes in the Criminal Code so that we have either different charges or laws or penalties for people who drink and drive. If that's what we're trying to achieve, there are other ways to achieve it, not through refusing to amend the Survival of Actions Act.

Part of what bothers me about this is that I think to not correct or not amend the Survival of Actions Act as is being put forward here, we end up moving into a more litigious rather than a less litigious state for Albertans. Increasingly we're trying to get people to not have to use the courts to resolve their problems. There's great encouragement to use mediation or arbitration. There are agreements that are being worked by lawyers outside of court for divorce at this point, which seems to be a very successful program. So we're trying very hard to move away from putting people into that adversarial courtroom.

With that also comes a lot of cost. Now, that's not to say that we shouldn't take advantage of everything that the courts have to offer us if we need it, but in this case I don't think we do, and I don't want to see us get more litigious. I've always had a concern that women already have difficulty accessing the court system and justice, and I don't want to see anything that makes it more difficult for women to do that. So I think that's a real concern here.

I think that we also run the risk of much higher costs for everyone. When we start getting into these future earnings of people, you get economists and actuarialists and all kinds of administrators involved in trying to figure out how much this person might have earned had they lived X period of time before they were deceased so that they could give this money to their parents. I mean, it really does start to drive the costs up. And why? The insurance companies aren't going to pay these costs. It's going to be paid by you and me and everybody else that's, you know, on the roads or involved in whatever activity through an increase in premiums. It's not going to come out of the profits of the insurance companies. Let's be realistic about that.

Now, I'm aware that I didn't even get to most of the things that I wanted to talk about, and already my time is coming very short. I think I'll just try and recap briefly, then, before I get cut off.

I think that we do want to support this amendment for the Survival of Actions Act. It is following a recommendation that came from the Alberta Law Reform Institute. That is a credible and independent agency that has recommended many changes that we have been happy to support in this Legislature. Obviously at this point some people disagree with its findings, but I have found them to be quite credible in the past. I think that the amendment does bring Alberta in line with the approach that is taken by other provinces, and I'm happy with that position. I think that there has been an attempt by the government to balance and respond to public concern around cutting off this loophole in the Survival of Actions Act by substantially increasing the compensation that's available under the Fatal Accidents Act.

I'll have to return to this in Committee of the Whole. There's not enough time now for these omnibus bills. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I will endeavour to give some comments to the Justice Statutes Amendment Act, and I appreciate the opportunity to do so. This is, of course, a bill which amends a number of other acts. One of the main functions of this bill is to help Alberta Justice bring its legislation in line with that in other jurisdictions.

Currently section 5 of the Survival of Actions Act indicates that an estate or someone working on an estate's behalf can sue for financial loss when the accident was caused by someone else's negligence. The Duncan versus Baddeley decision in 1997 found that actual financial loss included loss that an estate would have earned and that anticipated income can also be calculated for people who have not yet entered the workforce. Duncan's estate – and he was 16 at the time of his death – was awarded $425,000. Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island, and Yukon are the only jurisdictions where the law has allowed such awards. Yukon has already amended the legislation there to prevent similar awards, and Nova Scotia might be making some similar adjustments.

There are several particular concerns regarding this legislation, and Alberta Justice has indicated that they feel that there is no role for punitive awards in civil law. I think that this is the nub of the case, Mr. Speaker. If there is a need for punitive action, then it should be dealt with in criminal law, according to Alberta Justice. The argument is also made that awards of this size are merely a windfall for the family of the deceased and have no real compensatory value. The amount given to the family of a fatal accident victim has been increased to assist in paying for the grief counseling and other grief-related costs.

Now, of course, there are a number of groups that are not in favour of this direction, and the most prominent among them are those who are lawyers involved in accident law. They of course stand to lose a considerable amount of money, which is often based on a percentage, if they can't get a portion of a large settlement. Now, that's not necessarily our concern with respect to the bill, Mr. Speaker, but we had understood from the minister that Mothers Against Drinking Drivers, or MADD, had been consulted. We understand that they have been, but they don't seem to us in our conversations to be particularly satisfied with the results of the limited consultation that has occurred. The position that they've taken in discussions with them is that the amount that a family receives when a loved one is lost should be decided on a case-by-case basis through the courts and not determined in legislation. So I think that there's a concern there, Mr. Speaker.

The question really comes down to whether or not there should be a punitive role in civil law or if all elements of that ought to be dealt with strictly through criminal law. Opponents have argued that the value of the life of a child can't be determined by an arbitrary amount through legislation but should be decided on a case-by-case basis in the courts, and they believe that this is not a windfall but fair compensation determined fairly through the judicial process. I think that the argument is made, as well, by people who oppose this bill that the main beneficiaries of the legislation will be the insurance companies, who will have to pay much smaller claims in some cases. We are generally of the view, I think, that appropriate legislative guidelines for compensation aren't necessarily a bad thing.

One of the things that the act amends in the Limitations Act and the Public Trustee Act is a time limit on how long a person can wait before they take legal action against another person. In the case of a minor the limitation does not begin until that person reaches the age of consent, and this legislation removes "minor" from the definition of a "person under disability" and establishes a section for minors. Basically it allows someone to start the clock if they feel that they may be a potential defendant in a case. They can file a notice with the Public Trustee or with the guardian of a minor, and that means that the decision to pursue a legal action is not postponed until the minor is an adult but is placed in the hands of a guardian where present. This change would mean that potential defendants aren't kept in limbo waiting for a claimant to reach adulthood before a potential action is taken.

According to the amendments, the Public Trustee must ensure that the claimant's guardian understands the process and the decisions they need to make. The trustee must also ensure that the guardians are giving the issue serious consideration. If the guardian is not meeting their obligations, the trustee may apply to the Court of Queen's Bench for direction. Now, the Public Trustee has expanded responsibilities. We think that particularly in this case it may in fact be a reasonable step to take, to place some reasonable time limits on the taking of actions on behalf of a minor. So that would be a piece that we could support.

Now I want to talk a little bit about the Motor Vehicle Accident Claims Act change. The amendment makes it clear that when the owner of a motor vehicle and the driver of that motor vehicle at the time of an accident causing injury or death are not the same person and if there's a question as to whether the driver had the consent of the owner to operate the vehicle, the driver and the owner have legally adverse interests. It also makes clear that the officer appointed by the minister to administer the Motor Vehicle Accident Claims Act cannot be examined in court. This doesn't represent any change in the current policy, Mr. Speaker, and we don't have any difficulty with this particular clause.

Now, there are some highlights I wanted to talk about in the Survival of Actions Act. Section 8(2) removes the clause allowing the actual financial loss to be awarded as damages. This is the clause that allows large settlements based on anticipated income.

The Fatal Accidents Act: section 2(2) increases the award for grief from $43,000 to $75,000 for children who were killed and increases the amount given to children of people who are killed in auto accidents from $27,000 to $45,000. We support this particular change, Mr. Speaker.

The Limitations Act: section 4(3) amends section 5 of the act. Clause 5.1(3) allows a potential defendant to cause the limitation period to run against a potential claimant; in other words, starting the clock, as I referred to earlier. That's also something we would support.

So, Mr. Speaker, I'm just not going to carry on with any great comments other than to say that the general approach and thrust of the bill is something that we feel we can support. Thank you.

Mr. Speaker, I would move that we adjourn debate on Bill 20.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Bill 21

Alberta Personal Income Tax Amendment Act, 2002

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Finance.

MR. MELCHIN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to stand and move second reading of Bill 21, the Alberta Personal Income Tax Amendment Act, 2002, on behalf of the Minister of Finance.

Just a couple of things with regards to this bill that we're debating. This makes several changes that really incorporate changes to the federal legislation to make them harmonious and compatible with the federal legislation. The proposed amendments do make several changes to the single-rate tax, including providing a lump sum adjustment to individuals that claim this adjustment on their federal tax return. For example, if an individual for whatever reason received CPP disability payments as a lump sum for past years, the amendment gives the individual the option to average that payment over the missed years or pay taxes based on the lump sum amount, whichever is preferred. It's an amendment that ensures that Albertans who are in unfortunate circumstances are treated fairly by the tax system.

The bill also clarifies that existing provisions to adopt previously announced tax policy changes will remain consistent with the terms of the tax collection agreement.

Another component of this legislation, one that has received a great deal of attention since the release of Budget 2002, is the provision for the NHL players' tax. The NHL players' tax levies a 12.5 percent tax on all NHL players who play games in Alberta. It was an initiative as a result of extensive consultation with both NHL teams in Alberta. The proposal is for a tax on NHL players who contribute to the team's long-term viability, and it does this at no risk or cost to Albertans and Alberta taxpayers.

Mr. Speaker, I'll close my comments on Bill 21, the Alberta Personal Income Tax Amendment Act.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. This bill tries to accomplish two main things. It certainly adds a subsection to section 6 of the original act, and it also adds the preliminary regulations for the new NHL players' tax. Now, the formula for calculating the tax owed by these individuals is contemplated, of course, under subsection (6) and division 2 of the act, and that is dealing specifically with the amount of tax that is payable. The subsection adds a provision for taxing Canadians from outside of Alberta who did not live in Alberta during the calendar year but did live within Canada during that period. These individuals no longer lived in Canada by the end of the calendar year. As I understand it, they were not resident in Canada on the last day of the calendar year but did have business income in Alberta during the taxation year. Now, the formula for calculating the tax owed by these individuals is consistent with the existing formula for calculating the tax of an individual who was resident in a province other than Alberta or a territory in the last day of the calendar year and had business income in Alberta. The other formula is contained in section 6(3).

It appears that the bulk of the remaining amendments are modifications to the existing regulation for the purpose of incorporating this new change throughout all relevant sections of the act, to clarify the language of the act, and to make it consistent, as I understand it, again with the federal act.

Now, the other major amendment involves the introduction of the NHL players' tax. The NHL players' tax is an attempt by this government to provide funding for Alberta's two major professional hockey teams without involving direct taxpayer money. This is coming forward at the same time as we eliminated the $53 million for the community lottery boards. Some would say, Mr. Speaker, that hay is for horses, but lottery board money is also for horses, because we certainly didn't forget about the horse racing industry when we eliminated or severed the actions of those boards in the community. But here we are, and whether it's a 50-goal scorer from Calgary or a 51-goal scorer and counting or just any other hockey player, there is an attempt being made to assist professional hockey in this province.

Now, I'm not going to discuss this evening my preference in all of that, and that is that if we're going to assist professional hockey, we should have the same perhaps shared revenue for minor hockey. The 51-goal scorer from Calgary certainly came from St. Albert and was very active in minor hockey there, and we have to ensure that there is a supply of professional players not only to stock NHL teams but to carry this country's flag in Olympic tournaments. However, one just has to look at the Calgary newspapers. Not so much in Edmonton where we have a much larger season ticket base, but in Calgary there is considerable dismay among many of the hockey fans in that city that the Flames may burn out or be extinguished and go somewhere like Portland, Oregon, one city that has been mentioned as a possible location. But with this bill and the amendment that's going to fall under part 1 of the Alberta Personal Income Tax Act, NHL players who provide a service to their team in a hockey facility in Alberta will have the income they earned for that activity taxed at a rate of 12.5 percent. This tax is expected to generate a total of about $6 million per full year, and it is to be split evenly, as I understand it, between the Flames and, of course, the Edmonton Oilers.

Now, administrative costs of this, I understand, are roughly $150,000, and these costs will be withheld from the teams to cover the cost of implementing the tax. This is to ensure that no Alberta tax dollars will go towards the teams directly. The hon. minister can inform the House of this, perhaps at committee. To conform with NAFTA, the North American free trade agreement, all NHL players must be subject to this tax, including those players in Alberta. However, most players will have the ability to deduct this tax from the tax they pay wherever they are residing. Mr. Speaker, as of yet there does not appear to be any objection to this tax from either the NHL or the NHL Players' Association. A similar tax exists in 13 of 24 American jurisdictions with NHL hockey teams, but this is the first such tax in Canada.

Now, the Americans, Mr. Speaker, I would like to remind all hon. members of this Assembly, have some unique ways of taxing and financing their professional hockey franchises. Dallas, for instance, with that fancy new stadium I understand is paying for part of it with a tax on rental cars in the Dallas-Fort Worth area. I asked this Texan how long he expected before they would pay off the new arena. He said: "Not long, but it's not the local folks that are going to be paying it. You all come to Texas; you all come to Dallas-Fort Worth and rent a car. You're going to pay for our arena." I found this a different way of financing an arena. Not only was this gentleman from Dallas, but he was a fan of the Dallas Stars. In fact, he was visiting this fine province and took his entire family to the Saddledome to see the last game between the Dallas Stars and the Flames. He marveled at the Saddledome, and he marveled at the LRT that had been made available to whisk him to the event. He was quite impressed with Calgary, this gentleman.

However, Mr. Speaker, other Canadian jurisdictions with NHL teams will no doubt be looking to Alberta's experience before deciding to implement their own version of this tax. The Vancouver Canucks certainly have lobbied the British Columbia government to implement such a tax, but that government has adopted a wait-and-see approach.

Now, the benefits of this tax are that Alberta teams get badly needed revenue without having taxpayer money put towards the teams. The players themselves will typically not see a difference in their taxes unless they are from a no-tax jurisdiction like Florida, in which case they will have to pay the tax. But given that they're not paying tax in that jurisdiction anyway, hopefully it will not be a big issue, and I'm certain Pavel Bure is not going to complain because he's with the Rangers now, right?

There appears to be general support within hockey circles for this plan as a way to help maintain the financial health of Canadian teams during this low-dollar period in Canada versus the American dollar, but I don't think this is a permanent solution, Mr. Speaker. I think the league is going to have to decide themselves as to a formal means of revenue sharing, similar to what the NFL does, if they want to protect small market teams. I certainly hope that professional hockey continues to flourish and to prosper not only in Edmonton but in Calgary as well.

10:10

In conclusion, again I have to say that it's quite ironic that we are debating this Bill 21, the Alberta Personal Income Tax Amendment Act, and making these arrangements for million dollar athletes at the same time as canceling the community lottery boards, $53 million, and some of this money would be going to small town arenas and to hockey associations from all across the province, not only hockey associations but I would assume curling associations as well, Mr. Speaker. I just find this quite ironic, and I'm not sure if this bill is an indication of a government that has complete control of its fiscal agenda.

Thank you.

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to speak to Bill 21, and I want to focus a little bit on the NHL players' tax that this bill deals with. I have a little bit of related experience in this matter, being part of the city council that negotiated the deal with the owner of the Oilers at the time, who was Mr. Pocklington, a well-known Tory, by the way. [some applause] Well, you can applaud, I guess.

I found the parallels to this kind of interesting, because when it became apparent that Mr. Pocklington at that time wanted to get financial support from various levels of government and in particular from the city of Edmonton in order to maintain the team and to make the changes to the coliseum, there was a big debate, a public debate, that took place about whether or not public tax money ought to be going into professional sports and trying to balance the priorities for tax money with the desire on the part of many people to keep the team in Edmonton. I'm sure that wouldn't be much different if that debate began in the city of Calgary. As we've seen, it's quite possible for Canadian cities in small markets to lose their hockey teams. We've seen that in Quebec City, and we've seen that in Winnipeg, and we could in fact see it with one or both of the hockey teams in Alberta some time in the future, and that's something that needs to be taken into account.

So it's laudable that the government wants to do something to keep professional hockey in Alberta, and it's a very interesting approach that they've taken by proposing a tax only to be paid by professional hockey players, many of whom are very, very wealthy people and all of whom are well compensated for their efforts. So there doesn't seem to be a political downside to a tax like this because you're not taxing ordinary Albertans, and the government can't argue, as it does, that it's not really a tax that affects everybody, because we all know the Premier's promise not to increase taxes on Albertans and how well he's done at keeping that particular promise.

Mr. Speaker, the interesting thing is that we found at the time that the city of Edmonton had the authority to levy a ticket tax. This would be a tax that could be added to the cost of each ticket sold in the Edmonton coliseum, and that money could be used, then, to compensate for changes to the coliseum, improvements for sky boxes and a number of other things that the team wanted. What happened was that there was really an argument about whether it was a tax, because you're taxing people who use the coliseum. There's a similar argument here. Is this in fact a tax, because it only is applied against professional sports people who come to play in our province?

One of the things that we determined at the time was that regardless of who is taxed, whether it's the general public or not, if the jurisdiction, in that case the city and in this case the province, uses its authority to tax, it is in fact a tax. So the question is: what do you get for the money? It's not a question of you can't possibly ever use tax money on these kinds of things but of what you get in exchange for providing public tax dollars. Even if it doesn't come out of my pocket or some member's pocket opposite, it still is our tax money, because our political jurisdiction has used its taxing power in order to get the money.

Should we be giving tax dollars to private businesses is really an interesting question, and I'm sure that it's interesting for many members on the opposite side as well. What was done at the time was that a deal was negotiated with the owner in exchange for the financial contribution that the city would provide using its taxing powers. That deal included a very strong contract that actually required the team, should it ever be offered for sale, to be offered first to local buyers. A ceiling price was set, and I believe that $75 million U.S. was set as the ceiling price. This was based on the argument that we ought not to be giving public tax dollars to a private business unless there is a public benefit received in return. This is, I think, the important distinction that allowed many people to actually hold their nose and support the arrangement that was made.

In fact, when that arrangement was made and Mr. Pocklington signed the deal, little did we realize that within just a very short period of time he would be trying to sell the team, just within a few years. An attempt was made to sell the team, and I still remember the headlines in one of the local papers, a giant headline saying: sold. As far as they were concerned, the deal was done, and that was certainly what Mr. Pocklington was suggesting and what he hoped, but in fact what happened was that the deal held up, and the team was not sold to Texas. The team stayed here, and that is because there was a solid agreement. In fact, the lawyers became involved very strongly in order to enforce the agreement because there was a serious attempt to sell the team, and Mr. Pocklington brought the owner up from Texas and had him convinced that he had the authority to sell the team. In fact, he did not, and the agreement held the team here.

Now, I think, Mr. Speaker, that the former mayor of Edmonton, Jan Reimer, who negotiated that deal, has not received her fair share of credit. If it had not been for her perseverance and her ability to negotiate where other, previous Tory businessmen had failed, that team would have been long gone. People around here don't want to accept that because it doesn't fit with their version of reality, but in fact that is what the reality is. I think that it's interesting that where a number of senior people involved in the business community with well-heeled Tory connections had tried and failed to make an agreement with Pocklington that would have kept the team here, this woman mayor of Edmonton successfully outnegotiated Peter Pocklington, and the team is still here to this day as a result of it. I think that is a little piece of history that people over here don't care to remember.

So I think it's very interesting, but the reason that I'm going on at some length about this is because I want to come back to the use of public tax money that is provided for in this particular act. Here, again, the government is using its tax power to collect money, albeit from professional hockey players who aren't here, and I'm not objecting to that part of it, hon. Minister of Economic Development. It still becomes the taxpayers' money, and what do we get in return for the subsidy? The arrangement currently in place that has kept the team here will run out within a few years. What has this government of sharp businesspeople done to ensure that when we provide financial subsidies to a private business from the taxpayer – even if it's professional hockey players, it's taxpayers – to make sure that that team stays here when that agreement runs out?

Mr. Speaker, they haven't done anything at all, and I can tell you that while the team may have been sold for $75 million U.S. – and that was the capped price in the arrangement and that's the price it sold for – it can be worth considerably more in a larger American market. The same is true of the Calgary Flames. Their potential sale value in an American market is considerably higher than their value here, so what is going to keep them here? Certainly not this government. This government is quite prepared to hand over tax money collected from professional hockey players to these teams with no strings attached, and that's the problem with the bill. That's the problem with the government. They are prepared to give money to their buddies, but they're not prepared to do anything for the long-term future of hockey in this province. I think that's a shame.

So we could be talking about Bill 21, the Alberta Personal Income Tax Amendment Act, but what's contained in the bill, Mr. Speaker, is more than anything a fantastic lost opportunity. Here's an opportunity to be proactive, to work with the hockey community in both Edmonton and Calgary to provide long-term futures for those teams in these two cities, and yet the province is just ignoring the opportunity as if it weren't there. It's not that on the basis of principle they're opposed to handing over money to private businesses. Just look at the subsidies that they provide for the private horse racing industry at the same time as they cut Children's Services and other needed programs. They've cut community lottery funding to nearly 3,000 organizations, and at the same time they have not sworn off handing over money to private business. So that's not even consistent with a true Conservative philosophy. I think that it's a shame that they're prepared to be involved in the business of business. Despite their constant promises to swear off it, they keep coming back to the stuff. They can't give it up. It's one of the biggest unspoken secrets in the province that this government is still in the business of business, and it can't get out. I'm saying: well, you know, maybe you can do something to make sure that professional hockey, which provides so many benefits to both cities, could stay here. I think that it's a shame that they haven't taken advantage of that opportunity, and that they've been shown up by the former mayor of Edmonton.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move that we adjourn debate on Bill 21.

[Motion to adjourn debate carried]

Speaker's Ruling Decorum

THE DEPUTY SPEAKER: The chair would observe that perhaps a number of members need to read the rules of procedure and courtesy in the House. One of those rules is walking in between the person that may be speaking and the person that's in the chair. Another one would be to be busily engaged in reading newspapers, which has long been banned.

The hon. Deputy Government House Leader.

MR. STEVENS: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. Given the hour, I'd like to move that we adjourn the Assembly until 1:30 tomorrow afternoon.

[Motion carried; at 10:26 p.m. the Assembly adjourned to Tuesday at 1:30 p.m.]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Tuesday, April 9, 2002

1:30 p.m.

Date: 02/04/09

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

THE SPEAKER: Good afternoon.

Let us pray. O Lord, grant us a daily awareness of the precious gift of life which You have given us. As Members of this Legislative Assembly we dedicate our lives anew to the service of our province and our country. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Visitors

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Medicine Hat.

MR. RENNEN: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my pleasure this afternoon to introduce to you and through you to all Members of the Legislative Assembly some distinguished guests who are seated in your gallery. This afternoon we have representatives from PNWER, the Pacific Northwest Economic Region. For your information and that of all members, this is a statutory public/private partnership composed of legislators, governments, and businesses in the northwest states of Alaska, Idaho, Montana, Oregon, and Washington and the western Canadian provinces of British Columbia, Alberta, and Yukon Territory.

Joining us for discussions with members of both the public and private sectors here in Alberta over the past couple of days are the president of PNWER, Representative Jeff Morris from Washington State Legislature, and Vice-President Barry Penner, MLA from the province of British Columbia Legislature. They're accompanied by Matt Morrison, executive director of PNWER, and Sukumar Periwal, who's with the intergovernmental secretariat with the government of British Columbia. Mr. Speaker, I'm very proud to introduce colleagues of mine in PNWER, and I would ask them to rise in your gallery and receive the warm welcome of all members of the Assembly.

head: Introduction of Guests

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I'm very pleased to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly four special guests from Ulan Bator, Mongolia, today. The senior officials from the city of Ulan Bator and the government of Mongolia are here to view firsthand some of our cold-climate facilities and technologies as they relate to urban development since Mongolia has similar climatic conditions to Alberta. An Alberta firm, Challenger Geomatics, is undertaking an urban development project in Ulan Bator which will provide basic infrastructure and services to urban poor. These visitors are here in Alberta at the invitation of Challenger. They are Mr. Badamjunai, Mr. Bat, Mr. Surenbayer, and Mr. Byambadorj. They are accompanied by Mr. Al Zaver from Challenger Geomatics. I would ask that they all rise and receive the very warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Environment.

DR. TAYLOR: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm very pleased to introduce to you and to the House a number of staff members we have observing the process so that they know actually what happens in here on occasion. We have staff members from both SRD, Sustainable Resource Development, and Environment. I hope I get their names pronounced correctly. They are Tanya Berube, Karen Henderson, Marlene Bruyere, Barb Ootes, Kent Ziegler, Jane Shaheen, Neville Ferguson, and Linda John. I'd ask them all to stand and please take the warm welcome of the House.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar.

REV. ABBOTT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is also my pleasure to rise today and to introduce to you and through you to all the members of this Assembly 60 visitors from the Calmar school. They are seated in the public gallery, and their teachers today are Jeanette Wilson, who is the mother of one of our pages, and also Andrea Cameron. The parent helpers today are – and you'll have to work with me here; my Ukrainian is not very good – Lynn Frank, Denise Van Meter, Darcie Kison, Darlene Chimera, Len Yamkovy, Dennis LaForce, Jenny LeBlanc, Sherrie Birch, and Doreen Fitzowich. I'm going to ask all these grade 6 students and their parents and their teachers to rise and receive the warm welcome of the House.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

MR. MAR: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly Dr. Merv Warren Hislop. For the last 12 years, sir, Dr. Hislop has served Albertans as the Mental Health Patient Advocate until his retirement in February of this year. The Mental Health Patient Advocate assists patients and their families to understand their rights and addresses their concerns about care and treatment issues. I want to thank Dr. Hislop for his dedicated and outstanding service to Albertans in this capacity. His work has made a positive difference in the lives of many patients and their families. Dr. Hislop is accompanied today by his daughter, Mylene McIsaac. They are seated in the members' gallery, and I would ask that they please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of this Assembly.

Yom ha-Shoah

MR. ZWOZDESKY: Thank you. Mr. Speaker, today I invite all members of the Legislature and indeed all Albertans to reflect on and to remember Yom ha-Shoah, Holocaust Remembrance Day. This day is recognized worldwide as a time to remember the senseless, tragic, and systematic annihilation of millions of European Jews between 1933 and 1945. It is also a time to remember other victims of genocide, of hatred, and of discrimination in many countries, victims from the past and, unfortunately, even in the present day.

In 2000 the members of the Alberta Legislature unanimously passed the Holocaust Memorial Day and Genocide Remembrance Act, as championed by our colleague for Calgary-Glenmore, now the hon. Minister of Gaming. Through this act we make this recognition day a formal and fitting way for Albertans to never forget the enduring lessons of the Holocaust and of other terrible and senseless acts which make us realize that democratic institutions and values are not automatically sustained, that they need to be appreciated, nurtured, and protected; that silence and indifference to the suffering of others and the infringement of civil rights in any society serve to perpetuate the problems; and that acts of genocide are no accident, that they occur because individuals, organizations, and governments made choices that not only legalized discrimination but allowed prejudice, hatred, and mass murder to occur even as I speak.

The Alberta government through this act and through this day of recognition applies the lessons of the Holocaust to human rights in our province. Within my ministry of Community Development, the Human Rights and Citizenship Commission upholds these principles, and the human rights, citizenship and multiculturalism education fund provides moneys to community groups working to combat discrimination. As the act states, Holocaust Remembrance Day provides Albertans with the opportunity “to reaffirm their commitment to uphold the human rights of [everyone] and to value diversity and the multicultural richness of Alberta society.”

Earlier today I issued an information bulletin commemorating the Holocaust Memorial Day and Genocide Remembrance Act. Tonight, at the invitation of the Jewish Federation of Edmonton and my longtime friend of some 20 years, Gillian Horwitz, I will be attending the memorial service at the Jewish Community Centre along with the MLA for Edmonton-McClung, now the hon. Minister of Economic Development, and numerous other colleagues.

Mr. Speaker, I would urge everyone to reflect on this occasion in their own way and through their own particular method of observance.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to respond on behalf of the Official Opposition to the minister’s statement on Holocaust Remembrance Day, which we observe today. As an individual I don’t know how to respond. How does one begin to mark, to observe, to uphold such a day of remembrance? It overwhelms me. But in this Legislature just over a year ago, in December of 2000, we passed the Holocaust Memorial Day and Genocide Remembrance Act to give Albertans a day on which to focus on what happened more than 50 years ago. My colleague Karen Leibovici, then MLA for Edmonton-Meadowlark and now a councillor for the city of Edmonton, gave a remarkable speech. In it she dramatically described in detail what happened in the extermination camps and repeated the phrase: “I have told you this story not to weaken you but to strengthen you. Now it is up to you.”

1:40

So now it is up to us. What do we do? Well, to quote Alfred Defago, Swiss ambassador to the U.S. in 1997,

We must honour and do justice to the victims of the Holocaust and their heirs. It is imperative that their dignity be restored to preserve our own dignity. We realize that the first step in securing a better tomorrow is coming to terms with our past.

Okay. We can do that. I can and you can learn the stories, research the history, be vigilant, and live our daily lives so that the horror Karen described will never be forgotten and never be repeated.

Thank you.

head: Oral Question Period

THE SPEAKER: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Community Lottery Boards

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday, after saying that the community lottery boards would not be reinstated, the Premier said, “If there’s any damage or any organizations that fall through the cracks, we will have a discussion as to how those organizations can be accommodated.” There is no need for these discussions since the Premier already has a way to do that. It’s called the community lottery boards, that were in place, and the only reason that the cracks need to be filled is that this government refuses to do the right thing and fund this valuable program. My questions are to the Premier. Why is this government searching for alternative ways of distributing lottery funds to communities when the community lottery boards were already doing a good job?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I might add that while the hon. leader of the Liberal opposition is almost completely right in his assertion, he is not absolutely correct. I said: those who are truly in need of support. Truly in need of support. I’m sure that we can find a way to look after those organizations.

One of the problems, of course, with parallel organizations – that is, an organization that is parallel to CFEP – is that there was a considerable, I understand about over 50 percent, amount of so-called double-dipping; in other words, people applying to CFEP programs and then applying to the community lottery boards for additional funding. It all came out of the same pot, ostensibly. But fundamental to the issue is the issue of identifying priorities, Mr. Speaker. I went through yesterday what this government considers to be the priorities relative to programs that should be funded through lottery funds, and I can go through that list again today.

Thank you. I see that you had enough yesterday, Mr. Speaker, and maybe the members of the Liberal opposition did as well, but it’s a matter of establishing priorities. We determined what the priorities are, and as it turned out, CLBs were near the bottom of the list.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: why is this government looking to lump the work formerly done by the community lottery boards under the community facility enhancement program, which deals with the construction or renovation of community facilities as opposed to small group program support and services?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, nothing is carved in stone, and we will have an examination of all lottery-funded programs. As a matter of fact, part of the Financial Management Commission’s mandate is to look at that, and part of that examination will be the CFEP structure and whether that structure can be changed or modified to accommodate some of these groups that, well, for lack of another phrase, slip through the cracks.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. How can the Premier justify forcing small groups in search of small amounts of lottery money for things like children’s playgrounds, computers, sporting equipment, and the hiring of youth outwork researchers with large projects like the Edmonton police helicopter?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, yes, CFEP does indeed accommodate some large projects but accommodates many, many small projects. I’m so happy that the hon. leader of the Liberal opposition alludes to playgrounds, because I’ve been involved in my own constituency and I’m sure that many other MLAs have been involved in their constituencies in funding through CFEP playground development both on schoolyards and in city-owned, publicly owned, playgrounds.

THE SPEAKER: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Government lottery revenue is on the rise, and the Premier seems to have sensed that the fine work done by the community lottery boards is not a priority of Albertans. Instead, we see $320 million going toward accelerated debt repayment when we know that taking $50 million out of that payment would not have had much of an impact on the remaining $6 billion in debt. Therefore, there must be some other reason why this government has decided to eliminate the community lottery boards. My questions are to the Premier. Is it the government's fear of adding another budget flip-flop to its record that is preventing it from doing the right thing by reinstating the community lottery boards?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, contrary to the impression that the opposition Liberals are trying to leave and contrary to the impression that we read about and hear about through the media, there have been no government flip-flops relative to the budget. There is no flip-flop relative to community lottery boards. There was no flip-flop relative to transportation funding for municipalities. That restoration of funding comes out of last year's budget, and if you need further edification and a clear and concise explanation, I will have the hon. Finance minister explain once again.

MRS. NELSON: Mr. Speaker, I'll take hon. members, particularly from the opposition side, back to October 18, when we came out with an economic statement of reality after there had been a tremendous change in the economy globally. Alberta was the one government in Canada that led the way by making a correction of $1.26 billion to our last year's budget. At the time, we said that because of the opportunity that was there to delay and defer some capital projects in Infrastructure and Transportation, we would be able to fit within our new forecasted fiscal realities. We did say at the time very clearly that if in fact our fiscal situation changed for last year, the first projects that we would look at would be those that had been deferred or delayed. Clearly, that was the case, and we honoured that commitment.

Now, the difficulty that the members opposite have is that we brought down a budget just over two weeks ago. We were approaching the end of our fiscal year, at which point we were able to look at some preliminary fourth-quarter numbers for last year – fourth-quarter numbers; only preliminary – and we were able to honour the commitment we had made in October, that we also mentioned in our budget speech, that if we were able to do that, we would restore those grants, which we in fact did do, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm not even going to touch that. There's so much in it.

My next question again is to the Premier. Was part of the decision to terminate the community lottery boards based on government MLAs wanting to receive more credit for the distribution of government funds?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, again, this was the subject of tremendous debate in caucus, cabinet, and Treasury Board. In the face of a tough budget – and it was a tough budget; there was plenty of warning from the Minister of Finance that the budget was not going to be pretty – some tough decisions had to be made. Community lottery boards, in light of the ability to finance certain projects through CFEP and other lottery programs, were deemed not to be as high a priority as other programs that are funded by lotteries.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: is it the position of this government that if communities do the things that they see best and the government cannot take direct credit for a program, then that program is not worthy of funding?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, the matter of credit, I think, is so far down the road. I've often said that I don't want as my legacy and I'm sure that other caucus members don't want as their legacy plaques on buildings and monuments created to the government. The legacy I want to leave is sustainable health and education and good infrastructure and a debt-free province. Yes, it is nice from time to time to be able to participate, and I think I've participated in maybe one a year – one a year – cheque presentation to a community organization that is doing good work, that has matched those dollars, that has put in sweat equity and has created something very, very nice and very beautiful for the community. For the most part I just simply don't have the time to take credit for these cheque presentations, but I'm sure that the Liberals with all the time on their hands take every opportunity to take all the credit they possibly can for cheque presentations.

THE SPEAKER: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

Municipal Funding

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. At the recent AAMD and C convention municipal leaders expressed concern about fulfilling their five-year business plans when the provincial government changes every three to five days – their words; not mine. The municipalities have a straightforward request: stable, equitable, predictable, long-term funding arrangements. My questions are to the Premier. How does cutting community lottery boards without consultation or warning support the call from mayors and reeves for stable, equitable, and predictable funding?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I would be very, very concerned and I'm sure the hon. member would be concerned if in fact community lottery boards made up part of any municipality's business plan. I remind the hon. member that when I met with municipalities back in Bonnyville about four years ago, precisely the councils wanted to have control. They wanted to be formed as community lottery boards; in other words, the councils would become the community lottery boards. I said at that time: "No. No, because we do not want these funds to be used for municipal purposes. We don't want them to be used for potholes and street maintenance and other things that you might deem to be important but which should be supported through the general property tax revenue and other forms of municipal revenue streams." So if municipalities brought CLBs into their planning process, that would be wrong.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. BONNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Also to the Premier: how does a $45 million property tax grab in your budget help mayors and reeves deal with the tax increases and service cuts caused by downloading?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, relative to the very complex issue of taxation I'll have the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs reply.

MR. BOUTILIER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. What should be mentioned in the comments made is this. This year the $45 million will be going towards a commitment of this government towards education property tax is what it is. It's interesting to note, though, that what was failed to be mentioned was that last year $135 million, in fact, went back to municipalities, and over 85 percent of those municipalities returned it to the rightful owners, the taxpayers.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. BONNER: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Premier: how does increasing Albertans' property tax bills by $45 million and pulling $51 million in funding for community programs, a combined total of almost $100 million, support municipal leaders and our communities?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, again I'll defer to the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

MR. BOUTILIER: Yes, Mr. Speaker. What's so very, very important, number one – and many of the council members and Reeves that I spoke with, the over 1,200 at the AAMD and C, talked about saying this: "We're in this together. We're working with municipalities." Furthermore, they said this: with the provincial government they appreciated the reduction of $135 million last year in the tax room, that they were able to pass on to the citizens. What was also important was this: they said, "We're willing." We're continuing to work with the strong relationship that we have with AAMD and C and the AUMA. Because we have that relationship, we're able to work together and, as we say, be in the barrel together as we get through these tough times, and that's exactly what we're doing with our communication.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-Currie.

Teachers' Withdrawal of Voluntary Services

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Alberta's students are understandably upset about the cancellation of extracurricular activities and the dumbing down of diploma exams, just two of the negative fallouts of Bill 12. In Alberta students also know who is to blame for the sorry state of affairs. They clearly blame this government for this mess. That is why students, proud of their democratic heritage, are bringing their protests to the steps of this very Legislature. Students are hoping that somebody over here is listening. My questions are to the Premier. Why does the government believe that its war on teachers is more important than students being able to participate in school sports and other extracurricular activities?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, we're vitally concerned about the welfare of all students in this province, and we're particularly concerned about their access to extracurricular activities. This has nothing to do with the arbitration process. It has to do with an attitude, an attitude that prevails unfortunately amongst some, not all but some, teachers. That is unfortunate. It has nothing to do with this government. This government has given no direction whatsoever to the ATA, to the teaching profession, or to the school boards to cut extracurricular activities. As a matter of fact, we're saying exactly the opposite: do what you must do, and do what you can do as teachers to accommodate the students.

Mr. Speaker, this is very important, because the hon. leader of the third party alluded to kids storming the Legislature, or words to that effect. Well, today the hon. Minister of Human Resources and Employment took it upon himself to call in some of these kids, you know, maybe some of the leaders of the group, the organizers, and to say quite frankly to them: "Lookit, we will give you our side, but please go back and talk to the ATA, talk to your teachers, talk to the school board. Do what you have to do as students to get all of the facts." Perhaps the hon. minister might share with this Legislature the results of that meeting.

MR. DUNFORD: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I did in fact have three students into my office. We had a discussion for probably about 40 minutes, I think, although I'm not sure it was being timed. Very articulate young people. We talked about Bill 12, of course, and their impression of it, and hopefully I was able to provide some insight to them now on that. We talked, in fact, about some of the other issues that were current in this dispute; certainly the wages and where we were working to bring teachers at or near the top of their profession throughout this country. We talked about the commission that's going to be set up and how it will look at classroom conditions. They asked whether or not the government was committed to such a process. We got Bill 12 out. We showed them the preamble of the bill, where the government is clearly committed to that kind of a process. You could see as we discussed that that sort of the heat was reducing inside the room. What is so tremendous about young people is that if you talk to them straight and if you give it to them straight, they'll understand, and that was the upshot of this meeting.

2:00

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Premier is in a state of denial. Why does he refuse to recognize what's obvious to students themselves; namely, that the cancellation of sports and music programs across the province is the fault of this Conservative government?

MR. KLEIN: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I am in an absolute state of denial. I deny; I deny; I deny. I deny that this government has anything to do whatsoever and I deny that this government is in any way responsible for the cancellation of extracurricular activities by teachers.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My last question to the Premier: instead of dumbing down diploma exams, why doesn't the Premier do the right thing; namely, repeal Bill 12 and replace it with a fair and impartial arbitration process?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, the arbitration process is fair, and it certainly is impartial, with the government choosing an arbitrator, the ATA choosing an arbitrator, and the ASBA choosing an arbitrator. What can be fairer than that?

Mr. Speaker, I take strong exception to the phrase "dumbing down." I heard the hon. Minister of Learning on the radio this morning talking about the kind of examination he had to take as a physician. The hon. leader of the third party should know – he's a university professor – that these exams are structured to ask hard questions, particularly of medical students who put the lives of people in their hands. He indicated that the test that he took – as a matter of fact, nearly all the tests he took were multiple-choice tests.

Mr. Speaker, this kind of examination has to be given to students because of the reluctance of some teachers to mark exams, but I can tell you that since yesterday Alberta Learning has received over 200 inquiries from individuals interested in marking diploma exams.

These individuals have indicated that they have a university degree or past teaching experience. Alberta Learning will be reviewing their resumes and confirming their qualifications as potential markers for the June exams.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Currie, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Amendments to Survival of Actions Act

MR. LORD: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I rise in regards to some ads that I've seen in local newspapers that I found very disturbing. These ads, which were apparently placed by a local injury law firm, basically accused this government of being unconcerned about the tragic deaths of young children killed in car accidents and of quietly passing legislation to limit the amount of money that parents might be able to claim if their child were to be accidentally killed in a traffic accident. My questions today are to the Minister of Justice and Attorney General. Can the minister explain what changes are under consideration that might limit the financial compensation paid out to families in these situations?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The member is obviously referring to Bill 20. Far from being quiet about passing legislation, the provisions that are in Bill 20 with respect to the Survival of Actions Act were introduced in this House some two years ago, and then when issues were raised about those provisions and concern was raised by some members of the community about those provisions, the provisions were held and not passed at that time. We then engaged in discussion over the past year and a half and have now brought them back. So far from being quiet, it's been a very thorough process.

Mr. Speaker, family members have always been entitled to compensation for losses suffered as a result of a deceased loved one, for great loss of companionship, guidance, and care since the initial passing of the Fatal Accidents Act. Families do not have to prove those damages. They're statutory damages, and in fact if liability is not an issue, they don't even need in many cases to engage a lawyer to get those entitlements.

Under the amendments that are being brought forward under the Fatal Accidents Act, we're increasing the amount of damages for pain and suffering, for grief, and loss of companionship. [interjection] It's not on the Order Paper today, so it's quite in order to deal with this question. The increase in entitlement is from $43,000 to $75,000 for adult survivors and $27,000 to $45,000 for each surviving child.

The reason for these changes, Mr. Speaker, is precisely as a result of the consultations and discussions we had with parents who were concerned about the changes in the Survival of Actions Act. As a result of those discussions, we moved forward to deal with the real issues, making sure that there's immediate compensation so that people can deal with their pain and suffering and their grief in a timely manner, and we're also moving into others areas to deal with that.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. LORD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm wondering how the minister would respond to suggestions that the financial awards granted to surviving family members are an important deterrent which ensures that the offender receives more than a slap on the wrist in cases such as drunk driving.

MR. HANCOCK: Mr. Speaker, that's a very important point, because in Canada, and certainly not in Alberta, the civil law has never been intended to be a deterrent factor. The civil law is in fact intended to be a way to compensate people for financial loss and put them back into the position they were before. The criminal law and other laws are there for deterrent factors, and if we're going to deter drunk drivers, which we should, we should be doing it under the provisions of the criminal law and driving laws and those sorts of areas. In fact, the Minister of Justice, the Minister of Transportation, and the Solicitor General have agreed that we need to work together to enhance our fight against impaired driving, but we shouldn't change the civil law and bring a punitive element into the civil law so that we have the runaway court cases that they have in the States in order to seek that purpose in this country and this province.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. LORD: Well, thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think the minister has adequately addressed my concerns, so that's all my questions. Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, followed by the hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

Out-of-country Patients

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The possibility has been raised that regional health authorities may be allowed to attract U.S. citizens to use our health care system as a way of raising revenues. This is happening at the same time that rural Albertans are facing hospital closures, bed closures, and barriers to using urban RHAs. My questions are to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Why is the government's committee on alternate revenue sources looking at bringing in U.S. customers at the same time urban RHAs are tightening their boundaries to rural Albertans?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, we will be prepared to consider all alternatives that can improve our public health care system either in terms of the quality of the services that Albertans receive or in terms of improving access to those services. We don't know what the results of an investigation looking at bringing in U.S. customers to use our health care system will be. Perhaps it makes sense; perhaps it doesn't. But surely to goodness everybody in this House can agree that we should look at ideas. We should consider all ideas and then make our proper evaluations about what will work and what will not and discard that which will not work and employ that which will.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that this initiative would require an excessive capacity in the Alberta system unless Albertans were going to have to wait longer, is the minister aware of some excess capacity in the system that everyone else is unaware of?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, I can say that there are many, many facilities in this province that perform outstanding services that are delivered to Albertans, but we can also say that there are outstanding facilities, recently built in some cases, that are not utilized to their full capacity. We have many facilities, for example, in an area like the East Central regional health authority, a place that services a population of approximately 103,000 people and has 14 acute care facilities. We want to make sure that we use our facilities as best as possible, to fully utilize them to ensure that we are operating not only an effective system, which we are now, but also an efficient system.

Mr. Speaker, this is a challenge for regional health authorities to find ways to employ excess capacity. In some cases it may make sense for facilities to be converted into different types of use. Many regional health authorities have already done that. They've taken acute care facilities, turned them into long-term care facilities, and it better meets the needs of the people that live in those areas.

DR. TAFT: Will the minister rule out the possibility that rural hospitals could be closed and then sold and then reopened as surgical facilities to handle foreign patients?

MR. MAR: Well, Mr. Speaker, this hon. member asked the question yesterday, and I'd refer him to yesterday's Hansard, issue 16 of the 25th Legislature, Second Session, dated April 8. He did ask the question whether or not facilities in rural Alberta could be sold to be used as private hospitals. I indicated to him that the answer was no; they would not be used as private hospitals.

However, his question today is slightly different. He is asking whether those facilities – and it could be in rural Alberta; it could be in urban Alberta – could be sold to operate as private surgical facilities. The answer, Mr. Speaker, is that they already have. That has already been the case, where we have sold in the past buildings that were previously operated as public hospitals to private interests that are being used as private surgical facilities. So if he's asking will we prevent that from happening in the future, the answer is no.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Long-term Care Programs

MRS. JABLONSKI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Two years ago the David Thompson health region had 102 seniors on the waiting list for beds in continuing care facilities. As of this month there are only 10 seniors in the entire region on the waiting list. The senior health region vice-president for David Thompson health region, Denise McBain, said, and I quote: the waiting list this year is unprecedented in our region. The waiting list for 10 seniors is all thanks to the dedicated work of the David Thompson health region staff in co-operation with provincial government programs. My question is for the Minister of Seniors. How was the provincial government able to assist in reducing the long-term care waiting list for the David Thompson health region?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. WOLOSHYN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. When I heard the news, I was also extremely pleased that David Thompson health region seems to have achieved our goal and that is accommodating seniors at all levels. We can attribute the success of David Thompson to two programs that the province has had: the seniors' supportive housing initiative program, commonly known as SSHIP, also the healthy aging partnership initiative. Through these two programs approximately $50 million has been dedicated to various housing authorities, both the public and also private nonprofits, which resulted in some 1,600 assisted living beds being created.

With respect to David Thompson specifically, communities that participated were Red Deer, Eckville, Olds, Lacombe, Sylvan Lake, and I believe Rocky Mountain House. So, Mr. Speaker, I can say that their success is attributed directly to our housing programs, which emanated, I might add, out of the Broda report.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MRS. JABLONSKI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: how can you continue these very successful programs with no money available in the budget?

MR. WOLOSHYN: I can't. But, Mr. Speaker, there is $1 million allocated as a contingency for the program, and I am very, very hopeful that as our fiscal situation in the province improves, our regular process programs such as SSHIP may be resurrected. I certainly hope they will be.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MRS. JABLONSKI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister: will seniors in Alberta then be able to count on enough long-term care beds and assisted-living beds for the future?

MR. WOLOSHYN: Through the Broda report and the impact of aging reports we are trying to get a handle on the situation with respect to that issue. I would like to say that in some areas, as is indicated in the David Thompson, it's under control. Other areas are not quite so fortunate, but at the end of the day, through good planning and a prudent allocation of resources I would hope to say that down the line seniors in this province will be properly looked after.

Workers' Compensation Board Health Care Spending

MR. MacDONALD: Mr. Speaker, last Halloween Alberta businesses got a scary trick from the WCB when it was announced that employer premium rates were increasing an average of 27 percent in 2002 in large part because of rising medical costs. Well, after receiving some information from the WCB through freedom of information, it is clear why. At the same time that public health care expenditures by the WCB dropped as a portion of health spending from 26 percent in 1997 to 19 percent in 2001, total health care spending ballooned by a shocking 78 percent. My first question is to the Minister of Human Resources and Employment. What studies have been done to justify the increasing use of expensive private health providers, that has resulted in an even greater increase in health spending by the WCB?

MR. DUNFORD: Mr. Speaker, the question that he is raising is a matter of operations of the WCB, and it is appropriate that that question be directed at the chairman or a member of the board of directors of WCB. WCB is an employer-funded insurance plan. It's there for the benefit of employers and employees. The board of directors that is in charge, then, of the operation of the Workers' Compensation Board has an act in this Legislature that they're required to follow. But any question like that, in terms of the operation of it, if you wish to write me directly, then I'll be glad to pass it along to the board chair, or because we're in Alberta and because we're open and accountable, if the hon. member wants to send a letter directly to the board chairman, he's perfectly entitled to do that.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: has the minister shared this appalling, expensive data with his Health and Wellness colleague, who is so bent on doing the same thing to our province's public health care system?

MR. DUNFORD: There's often a challenge in question period, as Mr. Speaker is no doubt aware, but when you attach dots in the way that has just been exemplified, I find it advantageous perhaps now to simply revert to my earlier answer. That is that his concerns need to be directed at the board of WCB.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the Premier this time: since it took only five years for the WCB's health costs to double as they moved from public health care providers to private ones, how long will it take for the same effect to take place in our province's public health care system? Is this the reason for the 30 percent increase in health care premiums? Are you already anticipating this?

MR. KLEIN: Well, Mr. Speaker, we anticipated this some time ago, and that's why we commissioned the Mazankowski report. That's why the Premier's advisory council on health care reform was undertaken. That's why we're undertaking the recommendations of that particular report, because not only are we anticipating those costs doubling unless we take very dramatic steps to bring those costs under control, but they have doubled – doubled – over the past five years already in the public health system. [interjections] There are moans and groans over there. That is the simple fact of life. This is bigger: double. You know, in 1995 $3.1 billion to over $6 billion today. To me that's double. That's double, and we don't want that to happen. That's why we're taking steps right now to achieve sustainability in the publicly funded health care system.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Peace River, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Energy Prices

MR. FRIEDEL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions are to the Minister of Finance. Recently we've been hearing that countries like Iraq are planning to reduce the amount of oil that they export, and some people have speculated that this could raise the price of oil and create a bit of a windfall for Alberta. On the other hand, I understand that the prices of natural gas are dropping, and one might expect that at this time of the year. So it seems that these circumstances could possibly offset each other. I wonder if the minister could tell us whether the current volatility in the prices of gas and oil are within the range that has been estimated for our current budget predictions?

MRS. NELSON: Mr. Speaker, this is, I think, a very important question in that we are in a situation that is very volatile within our resource revenue base. Last year when we compared the estimate to actuals from the previous year, we experienced well over a 40 percent reduction in resource revenues in one year. We're forecasting this year that we could very well experience somewhere to the tune of another 30 percent reduction in resource revenues.

Now, all that being said, as we know, in our budget we forecast for $20 a barrel for our crude oil, and we have been seeing some shifts take place to show that there is volatility within that marketplace. We've had swings in this past year from $17 a barrel all the way up to $30. Of late, of course, with the aggression that is taking place in the Mid East, we do see some impact of an up and down, that provides additional vulnerability to a volatile market to begin with.

Just a little point of trivia, Mr. Speaker, and you would remember this because you were in this Legislature when it occurred. When Desert Storm was starting to move forward, if you look historically at the impact that that had on the marketplace on oil, prior to the actual Desert Storm war breaking out, the oil prices spiked up dramatically, and then once the actual war occurred, prices dropped down just as dramatically.

Now, insofar as the natural gas goes, Mr. Speaker, natural gas naturally is a North American phenomenon. It's not influenced to the same effect as oil is because oil is worldwide. Again we have seen swings occur this last little while in natural gas. I will remind hon. members that we are ahead of budget on our natural gas prices, but we have seen in just this first nine days of this fiscal year a 40-cent differential in gas, and when you consider that a 10-cent change is about $160 million, if you have 40 cents, then you're looking at a fairly substantive swing, albeit we are ahead of budget.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. FRIEDEL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. To the same minister, and this will be my final question. Given the volatility in energy prices that she's just spoken of, could the minister tell us if there are any other additional risks that we might want to know about pertinent to the fiscal plan?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MRS. NELSON: Well, thank you very much. We always have to be cognizant of what's happening worldwide because we really have no ability to predict that or to have an influence on the world marketplace. So we do have to watch that, and I know that our Minister of Energy has a whole group that watches this every day throughout the day and reports back to us. We have been applauded for being prudent in our forecasting at budget time. In fact, Mr. Speaker, the CEO and president of the Investment Dealers Association of Canada, Joe Oliver, said that "the prudent planning assumptions of this Budget, combined with an enviable record on tax reduction and spending control, are setting the stage for continued strong economic performance in the province of Alberta." So I think that staying the course and watching how this evolves is the prudent way to go, and we do have the benefit for all members of quarterly updates so that as we move forward, we can see where the revenue forecasts are going.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Bingo Associations' Revenue

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The most recent budget shows how the government loves to write numbers, erase numbers, and generally change its mind every few days. It's not enough that they have cut community lottery boards, an important source of funding for many local groups, but now electronic bingo and keno games are being introduced, and the government wants to use them to hold back more profit for itself and less for the bingo associations. My question is to the Minister of Gaming. Why is the government planning on changing the return to bingo associations to only 15 percent of the money raised from electronic bingo and keno games?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. STEVENS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The process that we've gone to over the last two years is to consult with stakeholders, including the bingo associations, as to how we may bring in new ideas to improve all forms of gaming in the province. In the case of the bingo associations, they asked to have an opportunity to introduce electronic gaming into the bingo associations, and we have agreed with that. We are prepared to work with them in introducing those. They'll be voluntary. There are certain rules with it, but as I understand it at this point in time, the bingo associations are prepared to proceed with the introduction of electronic keno and electronic bingo.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you. Is the minister saying that the bingo associations asked the minister to cut their profits?

MR. STEVENS: Mr. Speaker, I believe that what I said was that the introduction of an opportunity for the bingo associations to have electronic gaming as part of the mix in the bingo associations was something that they asked for, and because they asked for it and we thought it was a good idea, we have put rules in place to allow that to proceed.

MS BLAKEMAN: Does the minister believe that it is fair to offer the associations 35 percent of the profits from some bingo games and only 15 percent from others?

MR. STEVENS: Like all matters within the Ministry of Gaming, Mr. Speaker, it's important that we consult with our stakeholders with a view to coming up with the right solutions, and in this particular case members of the AGLC are continuing to work with members of the bingo associations to ensure that the right mix is in place.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-West.

Provincial Fiscal Policies

MR. MASON: Mr. Speaker, in the last eight years actual government revenues have exceeded government estimates in its budgets by a total of $21 billion. The government lowballed revenues by an average of more than 2 and a half billion dollars a year. If that was a onetime occurrence, it would be understandable, but this is a clear pattern that is far from being mere fiscal prudence. Rather, it is clear that this is a deliberate strategy to justify spending cuts and tax increases while creating the false impression that the government is successful as a financial manager. How can the Premier justify hiking health care premiums 30 percent, thereby imposing tremendous financial hardship on middle-income families, small businesses, and seniors, when he knows that this government is hiding a huge budget surplus?

MR. KLEIN: Well, Mr. Speaker, like other budget decisions this was a tough decision as well, but, quite simply, the recommendation was made in the report of the Premier's Advisory Council on Health, chaired by Mr. Mazankowski. It's quite clear that when premiums were introduced, they were to cover 20 percent of insured health care services. That dropped to about 11 percent. We're now up to about 14 percent. It's deemed to be an appropriate number, relative to the cost of premiums, to provide insured health care services.

But relative to the fundamental question is the question of fiscal management, and that's what it's all about. Is this hon. member standing up and saying that it's better to proclaim during the budget process that we're not going to have a deficit and end up short and end up running into a deficit? The Minister of Finance doesn't simply look up into the sky and pull some numbers from the air. Well, it's unlike ND and Liberal accounting principles, and clearly the people in Wainwright saw through those principles last evening.

When we go through the budget process, there are some givens. We have a good estimate as to what we're going to receive through corporate and personal income tax, what we're going to receive through fees for services, what we're going to receive through premiums, but we don't have a firm grip on what we're going to receive through royalty payments and stumpage fees and so on and those other factors that depend on the economy. The minister spoke quite eloquently about the volatility of the economy. So we consult with organizations like the Canadian Association of Petroleum Producers, other associations, and major industrial leaders, and we ask them: what is an appropriate figure to budget for oil and gas? And on the basis of that sound advice and tremendous research we set a figure for budget purposes. That's how it's done.

MR. MASON: Well, Mr. Speaker, we had to give him a chance to talk about the by-election, but we know that 55 percent of the people voted against his government. I think that one of the reasons is that they want an answer to this question: how can the government say to Alberta communities that there's no money to fund community lottery boards when the provincial government gaming revenues are underestimated year after year?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, again, and as I've said so many times in this House, it was a matter of setting priorities. I went through a list of those priorities yesterday in this Legislature. I talked about our commitment to family and community support services for children. That is a priority: if he doesn't think it's a priority, stand up and say so. We see as a priority sport, recreation, parks, and wildlife foundations: if he doesn't think that's a priority, stand up and say so. One hundred twenty-two million dollars to the Supernet: if he doesn't think that's a priority, stand up and say so. Ten million dollars to seniors' lodges: if the hon. member doesn't think that's a priority, stand up and say so. Three point one million dollars to achievement scholarships for young people: if he doesn't think that's important, stand up and say so. Two million dollars to the First Nations development fund: if he doesn't consider that a priority, stand up and say so. Twenty-five million dollars annually to the community facilities enhancement program: stand up and say if you don't think that that's important. Fifty million dollars to health care facilities: do you think that's important? If you don't, stand up and say so. Thirty-six million dollars to the strategic and research investments program: very important. Universities, all our research institutes, those things that generate economic diversity in the province: if it's not important to you, stand up and say so.

THE SPEAKER: Actually, the time for question period left us about three minutes ago, but we'll just wrap this up now. Hon. member.

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm pleased to stand up and tell the Premier that I do believe that seniors' eye care and dentures are worth spending some money on. How can the Premier justify taking away these services to Alberta seniors when he knows that this budget has underestimated oil and gas revenues once again?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I'm going to have the hon. Minister of Seniors respond, but I can tell you generally that our programs for seniors are amongst the most generous if not the most generous in Canada. Relative to the specifics I'll have the hon. minister respond.

MR. WOLOSZYN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to point out that the program that he is alluding to was a very weak program, and a choice was made to redirect a good portion of the resources into a seniors' benefit special-needs area to assist the lower income seniors. I'd also like to point out that the seniors still have the universal program that covers the majority of their prescriptions, ambulances, also some other areas within that. So to indicate that we have taken away all the health care from seniors is strictly erroneous.

Teachers' Arbitration Process

MR. AMERY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A few days ago at 6:40 a.m. I received an e-mail from one of my constituents, a Brenda Newton-Wakely, and she expressed several concerns with regards to the teachers' wage arbitration that I feel needed to be addressed here today. I rise today out of respect for my constituents' right to voice their concerns. Her concern includes the binding arbitration of teachers' salaries; specifically, that a school board cannot be allowed to run a deficit, that there will be no additional tax dollars, and that the PTR is not being included in the collective bargaining agreements. She believes that the arbitration process will not, because of these factors, result in a fair settlement for teachers nor in fundamental improvements in the education system. She also feels that the current funding formula is unfair and inadequate and insists that teachers receive salary increases in excess of 12 percent to maintain parity with other professionals in the province.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to reassure the teachers in my constituency, of whom Ms Newton-Wakely is one, that teachers will all receive a significant raise in pay and remain Canada's highest paid teachers. Additionally, the Ministry of Learning has taken an extremely proactive measure to ensure that PTR and other classroom issues are being addressed. This government is a strong supporter of teachers, and we have many teachers in our caucus that all do their best to represent the interests of the education system. We value our teachers, and we want nothing more than for the arbitration process to end in a sustainable and equitable settlement for both school boards and teachers as well as students. I consider it of extreme importance that their views be heard in this Assembly and by our government, and I want to say that I have certainly heard their message. I will continue to represent the views of my constituents and thank this particular constituent for very clearly outlining her concerns. It is my hope that the current labour dispute is resolved fairly and we maintain long-term sustainability, accountability, and excellence in the education system.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Wetaskiwin-Camrose.

Lew Hutchinson

MR. JOHNSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Agriculture is truly a major contributor to the economic and social lifeblood of this province. It contributed in excess of $18 billion in economic activity this past year, yet we do not honour or recognize enough those who work so hard or give of themselves so freely so that those who follow are more successful as a result of their unheralded efforts and leadership. We can never do too much to recognize and honour these leaders or, better yet, our unsung heroes. Some try to do this.

The Alberta Agriculture Hall of Fame and the 4-H Hall of Fame each in their own way attempts to do this, and they do a very good job, but it is never enough.

Camrose and district has its own agriculture hall of fame, the agricultural wall of honour. When the county of Camrose held this year's inductions into the agricultural wall of honour on March 8 at the Camrose Regional Exhibition centre, they chose to induct Lew Hutchinson, a man whose name is synonymous with agriculture in Alberta, for his outstanding leadership and commitment to agriculture.

Lew Hutchinson homesteaded on the banks of the Battle River near Duhamel in 1900 and began his farming life promptly thereafter, developing an Aberdeen Angus purebred herd and raising high quality Suffolk sheep and Berkshire hogs. In addition to his farming activities Lew was an active and effective participant on numerous agricultural boards and committees. In 1923 he helped launch the Alberta Wheat Pool and served on its board for 30 years. He was president of the Alberta Federation of Agriculture from 1941 to 1946, chairman of the Advisory Committee of the Canadian Wheat Board as a representative of the Alberta grain producers, and a representative of the Alberta barley producers on the national barley commission. He was president of the Alberta Swine Breeders' Association for two years and president of the Alberta Aberdeen Angus Association.

Lew and his wife, Barbara, raised a family of 10 children. The Lew Hutchinson family has been an integral part of agriculture in Alberta for over 100 years, and family members continue to contribute to Alberta agriculture even on the original homestead near Duhamel in my constituency.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Women's Movement

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the last 35 years the women's movement has been very effective in generating sound social policy and influencing all governments in a positive way. The women's movement has successfully eliminated sexism in many sectors of society including the media, education, the sciences, and the legal profession. It has also started to break down established patriarchal power structures that serve to oppress and control women.

A brief review and a reminder to all hon. members of this Assembly of the achievements of the women's movement in the past 35 years includes the following. In 1971 the Canada Labour Code is amended to give maternity leave to female federal government employees. In 1974 women become eligible for enlistment in the RCMP. In 1977 the Canadian Human Rights Act forbids discrimination on the basis of gender and ensures equal pay for equal work. In 1982 women's equality rights are entrenched in the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. In 1983 the Canadian Human Rights Act is amended to include provisions on sexual harassment and to ban discrimination on the basis of pregnancy and marital status. In 1985 the spouse's allowance is extended to widows and widowers aged 60 to 64. The Indian Act is amended to restore the status and property rights of aboriginal women. In 1993 stalking becomes a criminal offence. In 1995 intoxication in crimes of violence including sexual assault is removed as a basis of legal defence.

I encourage all hon. members of the Assembly to reflect on these past achievements. We now need to develop policies and programs to reduce family violence and sexual assault and increase employment income security programs.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Alex Janvier

MR. DUCHARME: Mr. Speaker, on Sunday, March 10, the 2002 national aboriginal achievement awards were presented in Winnipeg, Manitoba. I am pleased to inform the House that this year's recipient of the lifetime achievement award is from Alberta: the renowned and admired Dene artist Alex Janvier from Cold Lake.

Recognized as an artist, educator, mentor, activist, and much more, Mr. Janvier has been at the forefront of aboriginal art in Canada for over 40 years and has works in at least 30 corporate, public, and government collections, including the Canada Council art bank, the Montreal Museum of Fine Arts, Shell Canada Resources, the Glenbow Museum, the National Gallery of Canada, and the Department of International Trade. Described as an original member of the Native Group of Seven, he is the first aboriginal person to use the language of modern art to tell his story and has sought to represent the fullness of life in his paintings. Janvier is an ambassador of aboriginal art with paintings exhibited in Canada, the United States, and Sweden. His 450 square metre mural Morning Star, that graces the dome of the grand hall of the Canadian Museum of Civilization, is a masterpiece.

Janvier is a giant of his time and has served as a major influence on the new generation of aboriginal artists. I invite Alberta to join me in congratulating and honouring one of Alberta's and Canada's greatest artists, who resides in the constituency of Bonnyville-Cold Lake.

Thank you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed.

MS GRAHAM: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In accordance with Standing Order 94, the Standing Committee on Private Bills has reviewed the petition that was presented on March 21, 2002, and I can advise the House that the petition does comply with Standing Orders 85 to 89. That is my report.

THE SPEAKER: Would all hon. members in favour of the report as presented by the hon. Member for Calgary-Lougheed please say aye.

HON. MEMBERS: Aye.

THE SPEAKER: Opposed, please say no. The report is carried.

head: Presenting Petitions

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to present a petition signed by 182 Albertans. They come from Edmonton, Duffield, Wabamun, and other places in the province. The petition was signed by these Albertans urging the government "to not delist services, raise health care premiums, or introduce user fees or further privatize health care."

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Introduction of Bills

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Revenue.

Bill 22 Tobacco Tax Amendment Act, 2002

MR. MELCHIN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I request leave to introduce Bill 22, the Tobacco Tax Amendment Act, 2002.

The amendments in this bill will legislate the increase in tobacco tax rates as announced in Budget 2002. In addition, several amendments are proposed to help prevent tobacco smuggling from gaining a foothold in Alberta. This action is in response to the recommendations from the report A Framework for Reform and is part of a comprehensive tobacco reduction strategy.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Motion carried; Bill 22 read a first time]

head: Tabling Returns and Reports

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Red Deer-North.

MRS. JABLONSKI: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I rise to table the appropriate number of copies of two documents. The first tabling is a letter from the treasurer of the Western Walleye Council, Mr. Terry Welty. This letter is to inform the Members of the Legislative Assembly that there is a petition available that now has almost 6,000 signatures from Alberta fishermen who are concerned about the collapsed status of walleye in most Alberta lakes and are requesting that the government of Alberta stock walleye in select lakes using fingerlings from stable lakes and the Cold Lake hatchery on a perpetual basis.

The second tabling is on behalf of the Member for Red Deer-South. I am tabling the appropriate number of copies of a petition with 466 signatures that urges the government of Alberta to use the power it has to amend the Planning Act and the Municipal Government Act to give municipalities authority to henceforth prohibit all performances in live peep shows that, in any form or manner, expose to the view of any member of the public, the genitals, buttocks, or female breasts.

As well, it urges the restriction of alcohol sales in said establishments.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to table the appropriate number of copies of the 2001 annual report from the Edmonton Arts Council. This was presented at their annual general meeting on April 3 of this year. The annual report is detailing the distribution of the city of Edmonton funding for the arts and also goes into detail on programs that are offered, like Tix on the Square and the artist trust fund awards.

My second tabling is a letter from Ken Cameron of Calgary, who is writing to me about the community lottery board and asks us to work hard for the restoration of the community lottery boards "so that VLT and gambling revenues can be put back to work directly in the community."

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first one is a petition that was organized by Mr. Darby Mahon of Edmonton-Gold Bar, and it is supporting public and separate school teachers in their struggle against the provincial government.

The second tabling I have is a letter regarding Bill 207, the Alberta Personal Income Tax (Tools Deduction) Amendment Act, 2001. This is a letter stamped from Johnson Onesty Automotive Ltd. on 70th Avenue and 50th Street in the constituency of Edmonton-Gold Bar, and the gentlemen that work in that shop are encouraging the government to have this act proclaimed.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to make four tablings today. I'm tabling the appropriate copies of four letters each expressing disappointment and outrage at the way the government is handling the dispute with teachers. The first tabling is a letter from Dan Huot of Calgary to the Premier. The letter says that Bill 12 is a "mockery of democracy," and "it is shameful that a group of so-called leaders of . . . this government have to stoop so far down."

2:50

The second tabling, Mr. Speaker, is a letter from Mary Ann Kurucz of Calgary, who expresses her outrage at the government's "high-handed, arrogant and brutally-repressive action in handling the labour dispute with teachers."

The third tabling is a letter from Linda Leiren from Sexsmith addressed to the Minister of Learning. She is disappointed with the way the government has treated the Alberta teaching profession.

The fourth tabling, Mr. Speaker, is a letter from Frances Shultz addressed to the Premier expressing her concern with the government's display of school bully tactics towards the teachers.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

MR. MASON: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I have two tablings today. The first is a letter from Don Fleming, the board chair of Edmonton public schools, addressed to me. Mr. Fleming is deeply concerned with the recent increase of 30 percent in Alberta health care premiums as this increase will add "a direct expense to Edmonton Public Schools of approximately $390,000 for the 2001-2002 fiscal year and a projected expense of $935,000 for the 2002-2003 fiscal year."

The second tabling, Mr. Speaker, is a document from me in response to the Premier's challenge yesterday in question period in which he suggested that community organizations in Forestburg, Hardisty, Killam, and Wainwright that I referred to might be double-dipping with CFEP grants. The document shows that none of these organizations that I referred to received a CFEP grant in the year 2000-2001.

MR. McCLELLAND: A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: Yes. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Rutherford on a point of order.

Point of Order Member's Apology

MR. McCLELLAND: Mr. Speaker, in checking Hansard I noticed that I had referred yesterday in debate to comments from the hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne as "drivel," and I wish to unequivocally and totally withdraw that remark. Even in jest I should not have used that term, and I apologize and withdraw that remark.

MR. VANDERBURG: I accept.

head: Orders of the Day

head: Government Bills and Orders

THE SPEAKER: I think we'll recognize the hon. Government House Leader at this point in time.

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Prior to calling the Committee of Supply, after continuing communication on this issue with the Official Opposition and the third party I seek the unanimous consent of the Assembly to waive Standing Order 58(4) to allow this afternoon's consideration of the estimates of the department of health to go beyond two hours with the vote on these estimates to take place no later than 5:15 this afternoon as per Standing Order 58(5) or sooner if no one wishes to speak.

[Unanimous consent granted]

head: Committee of Supply

[Mr. Tannas in the chair]

THE CHAIR: I'd like to call the Committee of Supply to order.

head: Main Estimates 2002-03

Health and Wellness

THE CHAIR: Are there any comments or questions to be offered with respect to these estimates? We might call on the hon. minister to begin this afternoon's deliberations.

MR. MAR: Well, thank you, Chairman. It's my pleasure to present the Alberta Health and Wellness budget for 2002-2003 for your approval. This is a transition year for health care in Alberta. This year we take control of health spending, and hence we will move forward with prudent increases that respect our fiscal reality and are sustainable over the long term.

This year, Chairman, we take health care into a deliberate and planned process of change based on more than a dozen years of public consultation that culminated with the Premier's Advisory Council on Health report. Our business plan for the three years to 2004-2005 integrates our action plan for reform. The Health and Wellness budget supports the business plan with the largest ministry budget and the largest single increase in the government.

The budget I present today represents almost 36 percent of all government spending. In 2002-2003 Health and Wellness will provide $6.8 billion to support our public health system. For this fiscal year our public health system will cost the public purse almost $19 million every single day. That is $468 million, almost half a billion dollars, more than last year and represents an increase of more than 7 percent.

There is an understandable concern over the size of this increase for public health care. The province's revenues are expected to be down and other public needs also demand attention. However, a public health system demands public funding. There is only one source of public funds, and the only options for health care are federal transfer payments, taxes, and premiums. Given our lower revenues, other public priorities, and our commitment to an Alberta tax advantage, we turned to health premiums to increase public funding for health care.

Premium increases of just $10 a month for singles and $20 a month for families will raise $184 million to offset the increase in public health funding. Premiums paid by the people we expect to attract to the province of Alberta this year will generate an additional $10 million. I would like to remind the committee that this is the first premium increase since 1995. During the same seven years public health costs increased by almost $3.2 billion.

Higher subsidy thresholds will protect more lower income Albertans, including an additional 8,000 seniors, and a new category of subsidy recognizes the additional financial pressures on families with children. We did not focus solely on raising funds. We also moved to reduce costs on the very basic and very fair principle that health benefits should be based upon need and not upon age. We eliminated the extended health benefits program that applied to all seniors. To meet the optical and dental needs of lower income seniors, we moved $9 million from this previous program to Alberta Seniors. However, those that can afford it now will pay for their own optical and dental services. We transferred the balance of $15 million saved to regional health authorities.

That outlines the money coming into health care. Now I will look at where the money is going. There are good reasons for the size of the increase for Health and Wellness. Compensation for physicians goes up $177 million this year to $1.4 billion. That is the cost to keep our skilled physicians in Alberta and to attract more doctors. Blood products will cost $16 million more for a total of $120 million this year. Tobacco reduction comes at a cost: $8.75 million in the first year for AADAC to co-ordinate a provincial tobacco reduction strategy. Acting on the Premier's Advisory Council on Health recommendations will cost $25 million in year 1.

But the biggest factor in rising health costs is our growing and aging population. The population growth that will fill the 35,000 jobs our economy will create this year also means more patients for Alberta's health system. Health care services are driven by population numbers and needs. We allocate funding to health regions using a population-based funding formula. The formula also considers differences by region in the needs of a higher seniors population, more lower-income families, or the lesser needs of an affluent and younger age group. On top of this, we allocate funds for nonpopulation-based items to cover expenses like operating MRIs in regions that have them and funding to rural regions to compensate physicians who are on call.

In Budget 2002 every health region receives a minimum increase that reflects its population growth plus 1 percent for inflation. Regional allocations differ widely based on local population growth, demographics, and the impact of services provided to residents outside their region. The bottom line is that health authorities will receive over half the total increase in health funding this year, $247 million. The Capital and Calgary regions also receive an increase of $21 million, or 5.3 percent, in funding for provincewide services for specialized care like heart and neurosurgery provided to all Albertans. In all, Alberta's health authorities will receive over $4.2 billion, almost two-thirds of the total health budget.

Even so, Mr. Chairman, regions across the province have been quick to tell us that maintaining facilities and services at current levels will be a challenge. If ever we needed any further evidence that our current health system is unsustainable, it lies in this reality. Some people have the notion that sustainability is making sure that the same services continue to be available, but it is actually about making sure that the necessary care continues to be available. Alberta's health authorities understand this. They've accepted the need for reform in this time of economic constraint, and I applaud their willingness to manage care and look forward to receiving their business plans.

Our own business plan sets a direction for health reform while assuring Albertans that our vision, mission, values, and principles remain unchanged. We remain committed to the principles of the Canada Health Act. We will continue to help citizens of a healthy Alberta achieve optimal health and wellness.

Goal 1 is to "lead and support a system for the delivery of quality health services." The first strategy is to implement our plan for health care reform. I will appoint an expert panel soon to review the scope of publicly funded services. My department will work towards a 90-day guaranteed access for selected procedures. We will work with the regions and health professions to implement new models of service delivery like primary health care reform. Together we will better align physicians' services with regional service delivery and remove barriers to practice for other health professionals. We will expand Telehealth and begin to implement electronic health records, conscious of the need to protect the privacy of personal information. Success will be measured by reducing wait lists and wait times for certain procedures by ease of access to services and the quality of care that Albertans receive.

Goal 2 encourages and supports healthy living. This, in my view, is the key to sustainability. It is the first theme in the Premier's Advisory Council on Health report. We will set 10-year targets for key health indicators. We will monitor and evaluate cervical cancer, newborn metabolic conditions, chronic and communicable disease management. We will work to reduce tobacco use and promote healthy aging. We will measure our success by Albertans' health status, by reducing injury and suicide rates, and by the rates for breast cancer screening, childhood immunization, and smoking.

Goal 3 supports and promotes a system for health with an emphasis on accountability and electronic access to health information. Under goal 3 we will integrate mental health services into the regions and achieve the potential of information technology. The MLA Task Force on Funding and Revenue Generation will identify and address barriers to cost-effectiveness and regional revenue generation.

Strategies under goal 4 will optimize the ministry's effectiveness in how we respond to Albertans and how we work across government on joint efforts like the Alberta children and youth initiative and aboriginal policy initiative.

Reform recognizes the realities of a changing world. Today we realize the remote reality of a terrorist attack. Our business plans include strategies to develop an Alberta plan for emergency preparedness and response to chemical, biological, radiological, and nuclear threats to public health and maintain a plan for the resumption of business in the event of a public crisis.

To conclude, medicare was founded on a vision that no one would ever have to choose between buying groceries or seeing a physician. No family would ever be bereft of a loved one for lack of medical attention. No one would ever face bankruptcy over personal health costs. Budget 2002 and the reforms it supports remain true to that vision. This is a year of transition to a more sustainable health system but one that serves the spirit and purpose of the original long into the future.

Members of the committee, I ask for your approval for the Health and Wellness budget for 2002-2003. Thank you.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate the comments of the Minister of Health and Wellness. It is a huge department, and it is, as I think we all know, the one that consistently comes in as the highest priority and the area of greatest concern for citizens right across the province. I appreciated the minister's opening comments. I will be putting out a series of questions, and I fully understand that most of them will require a written response. There may be some, though, that the minister is prepared to respond to just on his feet here in the House, and I'll ask him that from time to time. If he's prepared to do so, that'd be great, and if not, I'll accept a written response.

The discussion of the budget I think has to begin with an examination of the budgeting process, and a concern that is simply inescapable to me – and perhaps the minister can either help me understand it or else give indications of how the department might be addressing it – has to do with the timing through which the budget is developed. So we are today, on April 9, debating the budget, yet the regional health authorities, which account for two-thirds of the budget, are still submitting and preparing their business plans. The question to me is: how does the department go about preparing its budget when the regional health authorities, which account, as I say, for two-thirds of the expenditures, haven't submitted their business plans and their budgets to the department?

I may well be missing something here, but it would seem to me that if we rearranged the timing of the budget process so that the regional health authorities were expected to submit their budgets to the department perhaps by the middle of November or something like that and feed into the department's budgeting process in a more timely manner so that we're not caught in this position of debating a budget for which a huge chunk of the variables are not clearly settled – I don't know if the minister would be prepared to engage me right now or respond right now to the idea of rearranging the timing of the budget process so that the RHAs fed into the process in the fall rather than, say, in April or May. I'd appreciate that.

MR. MAR: Mr. Chairman, this is a comment that was made by the Auditor General when reviewing the operations of the Department of Health and Wellness, wherein he noted that the budgeting process for the provincial government actually was much earlier than the submission of business plans by regional health authorities. In fact, on previous occasions business plans would not be submitted by regional health authorities until half of the fiscal year had already expired, which didn't make the business planning process for regional health authorities particularly useful.

We are correcting that, Chairman. We do work very, very closely with the regional health authorities in assembling our budget, and we have a fairly good idea of what it is that RHAs require. Because we work closely with the RHAs, while we do not release specific data to the RHAs, our budget is assembled based on input from RHAs, and they do prepare business plans with multiple scenarios that may accommodate a zero percent, a minus 5, a plus 5, and so on. So regional health authorities will be submitting their business plans later on this month, and it much more closely coincides with the budgeting process set out for the overall government's spending plans.

DR. TAFT: I appreciate the minister's response there, and I would just throw it out for his and his department's consideration that they may well want to request the responses from the RHAs even earlier in the year. While the period of limbo, as it were, is smaller than it once was, it's still the case that we are debating budgets, and the RHAs are submitting business plans well into their fiscal year. I'm glad to see that we're headed in the right direction, and I encourage the department and the minister to carry on further along that direction.

The symptoms of the shortfalls of the timing right now I think do turn up in a number of the responses by the regional health authorities to the provincial budget. I fully understand that there's a lot of politicking going on here and negotiating through the media and I'm sure through the back rooms over what the RHAs should get as their budgets, but there is a clear sense that a number of the regional health authorities were caught somewhat by surprise by the budget that we are debating today and are looking at having to close beds or reduce services or even lay off staff and, of course, are unhappy about that and will be and already are letting all of us know about their unhappiness.

I am also concerned that the bases for the budget increases are not entirely fair, again recognizing that this is a tough negotiating process the minister and the department are engaged in, but when most of the regional health authorities are allowed only 1 percent for inflation when we all realize that even the general consumer price index measure of inflation is running at 2 or 3 percent, then that is in effect a cut. It's a cut of 1 or 2 percent, and that will translate into reductions in the regional health authorities.

I also am concerned that, strictly speaking, using the general consumer price index as a measure of inflation is not as good a measure as we should have of inflation in the health sector. The CPI can be broken down further into different subsectors, and one of those does relate to health. I'm particularly concerned that because of the very generous labour settlements of a year or two ago, the actual inflation rate in the health sector is much greater than 1 percent in Alberta. I would support the minister and the department in meeting the cost of inflation in the health sector in Alberta, not just a 1 percent inflation allowance. Otherwise, again we are effectively asking the health authorities to cut their services. This is particularly a problem because the settlements for labour were undertaken by the provincial government, and it therefore seems to me to put an onus on the department to provide the RHAs with enough funding to fully meet those labour requirements.

I'll also make another general comment, and that is a concern that I have and others have that the department itself is not muscular enough. It does not frankly have enough staff, enough budget to hold all the regional health authorities accountable as strongly as they should be held accountable. Well, I'm the opposition health critic, and if the minister were ever to come forward and say, "You know, I need more people in my department and I need more money, because for us to have a strong health care system in Alberta, we need a strong central voice to hold it all together," I would support that. The minister knows that I feel that we are more or less spending enough on hospital services and on physicians' services to have an effective health care system, but I am concerned that in important ways the regions, especially the two big urban regions, are running the system more than they should be. There's a sense in which the tail wags the dog. So I would be quite prepared to support any initiatives by the minister and his staff to strengthen their own department to hold the RHAs accountable. I've had some chats with the regional health authorities, and they will admit that that's probably a legitimate concern. We need the centre of the system to hold.

The minister in his opening comments described this as a transition year and as a year to take control, and I think building up his department is a way to do that. The department staff are now – I could be corrected on this – I think in number less than half what they were eight years ago, and that is a huge hit to take. I am concerned that we have in some sense 17 minidepartments out there, and that's not the way we want to go.

The comments the minister made on premiums as a way of bringing in revenue. He knows our opposition view on the premiums, and I won't belabour him with those again, but I think I can speak for all the opposition that we would prefer, clearly, to have seen the premiums phased out over the last few years. There have been a series of tax cuts brought in by this government over the last five or six years, and I think it's regrettable that this wasn't one of the taxes that was cut as opposed to some of the other taxes that were cut. So if in the future the minister or the government were to bring forward steps to reduce and eliminate premiums, we would wholeheartedly support that as an initiative.

The minister's comments on the budget also raised a question for me – I should know this, and I don't – on the funding formula through which the regions are funded. I'm not aware if that's public or not, and if it is, I'd be curious to know how it's worked out. I know that last year, last July, there was a $200 million adjustment made to the budget just six or seven weeks after we voted on it to adjust for a larger population and inflation. I assume that that formula has been sorted out in advance, but the funding formula that allocates the money to the different regional health authorities – if that's public, I'd be interested in seeing how it works.

With those general questions, then, I'll move to a series of more specific questions. I think we might as well start with the regional health authorities. They persistently get the most attention. Maybe they get more attention than they should, but that's how it goes, so I think I'll start there. Our assessment is that about seven of the regional health authorities are likely to run deficits or, to offset deficits, will be undertaking layoffs or program cuts in the proposed fiscal year. I assume that the minister and the department are very much on top of the RHAs' plans, so it would be useful for us to know in advance – and maybe we could even work with the minister on this – which RHAs will be undertaking cutbacks or layoffs or which ones will be running deficits and how they will be managing those deficits. There are, I believe, provisions under legislation for RHAs to actually issue debt instruments, debentures or bonds or that sort of thing. I don't know if that's ever been contemplated or if I'm understanding the legislation correctly. But if that's not allowed, then how would an RHA run a deficit? How would they manage that? As I said, it would be useful to know as soon as possible how many are expecting to run deficits.

Going back to the inflation issue, the 1 percent for inflation, I would be curious to know and I'm sure the RHAs themselves are curious to know: why did the minister and the department settle on 1 percent for inflation, knowing full well that inflation is running higher than that? If there was some rationale for that, I'm sure we would all appreciate that.

Reviewing the department's budget today as opposed to how it was presented quite a number of years ago in some ways is more frustrating than it used to be because it isn't clear as a province how much we are putting into labour costs in the health care system, how much we're putting into capital costs in the health care system, how much provincewide is going into long-term care, how much provincewide is going into acute care. It's somewhat more difficult to follow with the development of the regions. If the minister could provide a breakdown of how much of each regional health authority's budget goes to labour costs, that would be helpful, and even more so, how much goes to different subcategories, the biggest one, obviously, being the registered nurses but also the LPNs and lab techs and so on.

Of course, I'm sure I'm hoping for too much here, but it would be interesting for us to see the trends in those areas over the last several years. How much are expenditures on RNs changing – I assume they're going up, but I could be wrong there – in the regional health authorities? Are we seeing costs driven a tremendous amount by increases in RN salaries, or in fact is that a misperception? Are they being driven by other considerations? Of course, what's the mix between RNs and LPNs and so on?

We'd also be interested to know the population projections for the different regional health authorities, because as the minister made clear in his opening comments, population growth is a major, major driver of costs in some of the RHAs, in many of the RHAs. The projections used by the RHAs or the department would be useful to know. This may be an area – maybe this is happening – where the RHAs and the departments could work together. Do we have 17 different offices around the province and each RHA doing population projections, or do we have one in the department doing provincewide population projections for each RHA? I would prefer the latter idea, where there was a branch of the department doing that work, and maybe it is happening that way. If it's not, I'd be curious to know, and I'm of course curious to know what the projections are.

The year of transition, that the minister referred to, will apply to nothing more than it does to the mental health sector. As we watch the provincial Mental Health Board and its services being integrated into the different regions, the complexities of that process are enormous, and it would be useful to know – and the minister may be able to comment on this right now – how the budget for mental health services is going to be integrated into the RHAs. Has that already happened, and are those plans in this budget? Is it being phased in over a couple of years?

Do you want to respond to that now? Thank you.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

MR. MAR: Thanks, Chairman. As hon. members of this House know, one of the recommendations set out in the Mazankowski report that the government is embarking on and implementing is the regionalization of mental health services into RHAs. Perhaps I should say by way of background that the reason why the Mental Health Board was set up at the outset was to ensure that money that was dedicated to mental health was in fact spent in that area and not hived off to go to supporting acute care or some other important priority but was in fact kept in the area of mental health. It would be our intention that there would be some role for an agency to ensure that money that is given to regional health authorities for the purposes of delivering mental health services in regions is in fact spent in that area, so there will be an accountability function that will be required.

I should also note, Mr. Chairman, that there are probably some services that would not have happened in this province in the area of mental health but for the Mental Health Board, and perhaps telemental health would be one good example. So there may be some requirement still for certain types of mental health services to be governed by a provincial agency that would look after two things: one is those services which should be provincial in nature and also to ensure that there is an accountability that regional health authorities spend money devoted to mental health on those programs.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Thank you, Mr. Minister. There's an issue that was brought to my attention on the weekend, and again I felt like I should know it and I don't. I know there's a section in the business plan on aboriginal health, but it would be useful to know how services provided to status Indians off reserve, say in hospitals throughout the province, are funded. Are those services billed back to the federal government, or are they handled some other way? I don't think that's itemized in the budget, and frankly it's unclear to me how that particular issue is handled. There was some concern that the provincial government was being required to pay the full cost of health services to treaty Indians when those individuals sought health care in provincial facilities. Again, maybe the minister can correct me on that now, or maybe he needs to get back to me. I don't know the answer.

MR. MAR: I'll get back to you.

DR. TAFT: Okay. Thanks.

I'm going to return for a minute to the issue of premiums, because we might as well get more detailed information on that if it's at all possible. There is, as the minister knows, widespread concern among businesses and among municipalities and universities and school boards and so on that they face a direct cost increase because of the rise in health care premiums and the fact that they pay those premiums on behalf of their employees. So it would be very useful for us to learn how much in health care premiums is collected by the province, first of all, from itself, as it were, from its own employees, from postsecondary institutions, from the regional health authorities, and from the school boards. You can well see why the regional health authorities, for example, are concerned about this, because in effect, when they're paying an increased premium on behalf of their staff as a result of provincial government budget, it's a cutback for them in practical purposes. So it would be very helpful, I think, for the public to know and for all of us to know how much public money from universities, RHAs, municipalities, school boards, and the government itself is flowing back into government coffers, sort of moving money from one pocket to the other pocket without really a very clear purpose.

3:30

There are always of course concerns over the cost of collecting premiums and the impact of the very substantial premium increase on the number of people who will be defaulting on their premiums. If I were to dig through the numbers here again, I know there's a projected significant increase in the default on these premiums and the cost of collecting them. I can't lay my hands on that right now, but that's an area of real concern, and it would be interesting for us to know how much it is costing the government to pursue the premiums that are not paid through collection agencies and so on.

I've supported this minister and I will continue to support this minister and the government on the tobacco reduction strategy. I think it's commendable; I think it's a step in the right direction. I've taken some flak and probably all MLAs have taken some flak from tobacco users who are unhappy, but I think it's the right direction to take, and I think all of us in the opposition will support the government on this initiative. One of our members, I think the only one who used to be a smoker, has recently quit, so we are very supportive of that. She – I'll give you a clue – quit before your step, but she probably would have quit even more enthusiastically when the price went up.

But to be specific, how are we going to know if this program is working? What are our benchmarks to know whether the tobacco reduction strategy is having the effect we want? Are there some measures that have been established to determine whether the tobacco reduction strategy is having the effect we want, and of course is there any sense of the financial implications of those benchmarks being achieved? The tobacco industry has argued that in fact they're doing taxpayers a favour by killing off people who, if they lived longer, would need more health services. Of course, the humanity of that argument is a huge issue on its own. Has the department looked at all of the long-term cost implications of reducing the number of smokers in Alberta? I would be interested in that, and I'm sure many of the supporters of the government's tobacco reduction strategy would like to see that as well.

I think I will stop there. I've got many other comments, but I don't want to monopolize the whole afternoon. I could carry on for quite some time yet, but there may be other members of the Assembly who want to engage in discussion with the minister on the budget, so I'm going to take my seat, Mr. Chairman, and give someone else the floor.

MR. MAR: I can make a few comments in reply, Mr. Chairman.

I've carefully taken notes here, and I know that members of my department are doing the same in the galleries, and I will certainly take the opportunity to review Hansard to fill in any details that I may miss. Of course, some of the replies to these questions are not immediately at my fingertips, and I will take the time to review it and provide responses by written correspondence in due course.

Perhaps the one thing that I will touch on, Mr. Chairman, is the tobacco reduction strategy. I think that it is of important note that the first recommendation set out in the Mazankowski report is to promote wellness, and there can't be a more important area to act upon than the area of reducing tobacco use.

Tobacco use is the number one avoidable cause of death in Canada and here in Alberta as well, and I think it is important to note that the name of this department is the Department of Health and Wellness, not simply the department of health. It's for that reason, Mr. Chairman, that we are being aggressive in our tobacco reduction strategy, and we are using our very best efforts to rely upon credible sources of information to structure our strategy for reducing tobacco use in this province. We have looked at, for example, the Center for Disease Control based in Atlanta, Georgia, and I think to summarize, if I may, the types of programs that have been found to work to reduce tobacco usage is that simply increasing the cost of tobacco is insufficient as a long-term strategy. Simply having cessation programs and support and education by itself has not been demonstrated to be a long-term successful strategy. But those two working in combination have been found to be successful, and that's the reason why we have increased tobacco taxes and put in just under $9 million for our programs that will help educate particularly young people on tobacco use.

The interesting question that was asked by the Member for Edmonton-Riverview: how will we know that this is successful? We see in other jurisdictions where this type of two-prong strategy has been applied that there has been a measurable reduction in the number of people who smoke, and that is, I think, a good surrogate for other things which are ultimately the outcome that we seek, which is better health. Reducing the number of people smoking is a good surrogate for improving overall population health, and that, of course, is the endgame. So I think, Mr. Chairman, it may be difficult in the medium- or short-term to measure the health effects of smoking cessation, but reducing the number of people who actually smoke will be a surrogate that over the medium or longer term will demonstrate itself to result in better overall population health.

Mr. Chairman, we are going to be relentless in this effort to reduce tobacco use, particularly among young people, because our health care system in the long term cannot afford, cannot be sustainable, cannot deal with the number of people who will be using our acute care system with smoking-related diseases unless we do something today about the 23 percent of high school aged children in this province who smoke, and it is for that reason that we are aggressive on this and hope that that cohort of young people can lead much healthier lives than lives that are damaged terribly, at a cost that is difficult to measure, from smoking-related diseases.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. Thank you, Mr. Minister. I'll shift gears a bit. If we go to the business plan of the department, it talks about a target of reducing wait lists for long-term care, and I'm on page 206 of the business plan. You don't particularly need to look it up. It's a pretty straightforward target and a commendable target. I'm sure the minister is aware that the delay in people getting access to long-term care has all kinds of repercussions. It has repercussions through the community and for families who are struggling to look after people who should really be in facilities, it has repercussions for home care services, and it has serious repercussions for emergency wards. I'm sure the minister has been in a number of emergency wards touring – I don't mean as a patient but just in his role as minister – and has undoubtedly encountered patients who have been held in emergency wards for 24 or 48 or even 72 hours waiting for a bed. These are typically elderly patients who are there because of a fall or some other problem, and there is nowhere for them to go from the emergency wards.

The objective of reducing the waiting list for long-term care is a crucial one, and it would be useful for us to know how the minister and his department plan to meet that particular objective. I've already said it once today, and I've said it many times before. My sense is that we're probably spending enough on hospitals and doctors, but I'm not sure that we're spending enough as a society and as a government on long-term care. One of the ways we can improve the operation and the functioning of acute care hospitals is by actually spending a bit more on long-term care facilities so that we can place long-term care patients who are in hospitals and in emergency wards much more quickly in facilities where they need to be served and will be better served; i.e., long-term care facilities.

So I think this is an objective or a performance measure that will have huge benefits for the whole health care system and ultimately for all Albertans, and I would encourage the department to focus on that one and, indeed, to seriously consider increasing its financial support for long-term care in this budget and certainly in future budgets. There was a time when it was quite easy to track long-term care spending provincewide through the budget and through the financial reports of the government. It's become much more difficult now, but I'd like to know how that particular objective is going to be met. I would, as I say, support the minister if he were to seek more funding for that area of health care.

The concerns over drug costs is another area where I'm not convinced that we've actually budgeted enough. I don't know if the department is yet looking at a comprehensive pharmacare program, but there is a clear sense I have that we may be able to save money as a society by increasing the amount we spend as a government on pharmaceuticals. In other words, all health care spending comes down to coming from one pocket. It comes out of our pockets as individual Albertans, and I'd rather pay 80 cents out of my pocket as a taxpayer than a dollar out of my pocket as a marketplace consumer for pharmaceuticals. So if the department were to consider in its budget programs that lead us towards a comprehensive pharmacare system, I'd certainly be very interested in supporting those if they made sense, because I do think that they could ultimately save money and they could save money in more ways than just controlling costs.

One of the concerns that I hear repeatedly – and it's supported to some extent in the research literature – is that once patients are discharged from hospital and they go home and they are then responsible for their drug costs, they reduce their drug consumption. They will often, for example, cut their dosage in half because they can't afford the full cost of the drugs. Then, of course, they don't recover the way they should, and they end up back in the health care system. So that's an area where I think we could really take a tough and creative look at what we're spending on health care in this province.

Health care budgets, as we all know, are driven more by labour costs than by anything else, and there has been some controversy over the settlements of 18 months ago or so with the doctors and with the RNs and the cost implications of those. As we move now into a whole new round of labour negotiations that will unquestionably have an immense impact on the budget, I'd be very interested to know what role the minister or his department will be playing in upcoming labour negotiations between the health authorities and unions such as AUPE or the Health Sciences Association of Alberta or the United Nurses. How active a role does the department plan to take in those negotiations, and is the department prepared to meet the additional obligations the RHAs will face when those labour settlements are finally agreed to? If they aren't, then the RHAs are caught in an unacceptable bind. So some information on that would be anticipated. I'm sure that for negotiating purposes the province's position won't be made particularly clear to me, and I understand that, but any indicators would be useful on that.

Another area where there is concern – and I frequently get questions on it – is the area of overtime expenditures. It would be useful for the province to actually make clear both in its budget and then in its final accounts how much is spent on overtime through the regional health authorities and potentially through the department itself but, I think, especially through the regional health authorities. Certainly I've received questions often wondering how much is spent on overtime, and there have been informal indicators to me that overtime expenditures are very high because we are short of staff. So it would be useful to know how much is budgeted for overtime costs and what steps are being taken to reduce those, because those are frequently unnecessary costs. They're certainly in the long term a cost we would want to bring under control.

[Mr. Lougheed in the chair]

Now I'll shift to questions on something the minister knows is near and dear to my heart: the issue of contracting out services and potentially the role of the private sector in providing health services to Albertans.

DR. TAYLOR: You've had a change of heart, and you're going to support it.

DR. TAFT: I have had no change of heart on this particular issue, so I will remain vigilant in watching over how it plays out and what it costs Alberta taxpayers and what it costs patients in terms either of extra fees or in terms of issues around reduced services or potentially better services, although I'm a skeptic on that front.

I'll begin again by comparing a financial presentation of information today with that of, say, 12 years ago. There was a time when some private expenditures were actually itemized. For example, the allocation to private nursing homes was a separate item in the provincial financial statements. It no longer is, and I think it should be, and I think it should also be in the budget. How much of our $6.8 billion is going to private, for-profit providers of long-term care, of home care, and of other services? It used to be made very clear in the financial statements, at least for long-term care, and it no longer is, and I would like to see that. I'm also interested in knowing, of course, any cost-benefit analyses the department has done.

The minister has mentioned a couple of times recently in response to my perhaps repetitive questions the example of the Holy Cross hospital being, you know, a private, for-profit facility that's operating on a contract to the public system. Have there been cost benefits done of that facility, and what do they show? How much is the cost of cataract surgery at that facility compared to cataract surgery, say, at the Royal Alex hospital in Edmonton or the Lamont hospital or other public facilities?

On page 202 of the business plan there is actually a statement about – I'd have to scan through the page – the minister partnering with the private sector perhaps more and more. What does the minister envision and what does the department envision in terms of that public/private partnership? There is a strong lobby for public/private partnerships driven, of course, by the private partners, both the consulting firms and the companies themselves. On the other hand, there is evidence from Australia, Britain, and the United States, where these have been undertaken and evaluated, that they're not a particularly good idea and that they lead both to higher costs and reduced services. They also are frequently the cause of huge scandals. There are huge scandals in both the U.S. and Australia involving public/private partnerships in the health sector right now. So what is the minister's vision for the partnering with the private sector that's outlined in the business plans here that come along with the budget?

One of the roles, I guess, inevitably, and a justifiable role certainly in some cases, of the department is promotion and advertising, but it can become an expensive role, and it's not always clear what the benefits of the department undertaking advertising and public relations are. There was a news release, for example, issued a few months ago that the department was undertaking a million dollar public relations plan with its Health First initiative. How did that work out? Did that come in on budget, under budget? Is that turning up in this budget, or was that covered under last year's budget? How much was spent on TV and radio and print and so on? How much was handled through the Public Affairs Bureau? Were the Public Affairs' expenditures on that separate from and in addition to the department's, or how did they work out? What are the plans for the current year in terms of promotion and advertising? Will there be more promotion and advertising undertaken in conjunction with the Premier's Advisory Council on Health?

That moves us to the issue of the Premier's Advisory Council on Health itself. The budget has a wonderfully round figure in it of $25 million exactly for expenditures relating the Premier's Advisory Council on Health, but it's not very clear what that $25 million is going to go for. In fact, I don't think it's at all clear. How was that figure arrived at? It's such a marvelous number. It's amazing to me that it looks like it was pulled more or less out of thin air and that it was a pretty wild ballpark, but I could be wrong on that. Sometimes numbers add up to even figures like that. What will be spent on implementing the recommendations from the Premier's advisory council report, and how will it be spent? Is it going to the various implementation committees? Is it going to background research? Is it going to a lot more promotions and advertising? Does the government have any mechanism in place to measure the outcomes for how this money is being spent? How do we know that we're getting value for that $25 million? Do we have any mechanism in place to tell us that, yeah, that was well spent or that we could do that better the following year?

I've gone nearly my 20 minutes again on this round, so I think that I'll take another pause in the action and again see if anybody wants to engage in the debate. Thanks.

THE ACTING CHAIR: The hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner.

MR. JACOBS: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would like to rise today and make one or two observations regarding the study the committee is undertaking on the health estimates, particularly as it pertains to challenges that are being faced in rural Alberta by the costs that are being incurred by hospitals and regional authorities there and the revenue they're receiving.

[Mr. Tannas in the chair]

During the last couple of weeks I've attended several meetings in my constituency of elected officials and others, and because of the fact that the constituency I represent doesn't have a large population increase, their increase in funding is not very substantial. It's around 1.9, 2 percent, and that increase is not beginning to deal with the additional costs that the authority has incurred because of salary increases and other costs that have been incurred in the past year. So the fact that the Chinook regional health authority is going to be short a considerable amount of money, probably in the neighbourhood of $11 million, even after the increase in funding from the department – this is causing a lot of frustration among the people in rural Alberta, specifically in southern Alberta, as to the effects that budget reductions could have on the communities that will be impacted. There are several good-quality rural hospitals in my constituency, and they are all worried about what effect budget reductions might have.

For example – and this is in the southern papers this morning, I notice, so I will make this comment and ask the minister if he would care to respond to the question – at a recent meeting of the mayors and reeves in southern Alberta they apparently passed a resolution asking for the University of Lethbridge to undertake a study to see if there are other ways that could be found to address the funding challenges being faced by hospitals, regional health authorities, et cetera. They simply are frustrated by the process that we either have to close hospitals or reduce staff or whatever, which will impact communities and will impact health care. So they're trying to think a little bit beyond the normal discussion and have come up with this proposal.

They're doing this simply as a response to the pressure they're feeling from the people in the communities which will be impacted. If you live in a community that's a hundred kilometres from a regional hospital and then if you're serviced in that community by that hospital and you live another hundred kilometres from that hospital, putting you 200 kilometres from a regional hospital, and there's a fear that your hospital is going to be closed, even though you are only an eight-bed hospital, you can understand the frustration that's felt by people who will be impacted by a closure or a reduction of a small rural hospital. This creates a lot of tension among people and a lot of fear and a lot of frustration and a lot of wonderment.

Now, I understand the challenges faced by the department of health, and I'm not advocating that we spend a great deal more of our budget on health. But I'm wondering if there are other ways that we could look at reducing health costs, making the system more efficient, and specifically if the minister would care to respond to the idea of the mayors and reeves to go to the University of Lethbridge or some other facility to ask for help in looking at ways to make the system more efficient. Also, they obviously would look at more time to respond or to set their budgets should such an event occur.

So I raise the concern that's being raised by many people in rural Alberta: the impact that reductions are going to have. Their population increases haven't been great, so they're not going to get large increases. They're dealing with some severe budget constraints. Health authorities are being challenged. From the point of view of rural Alberta are there some other ways we can look at here to alleviate the problem, and specifically what about the study that's being proposed by the mayors and reeves? If the minister would care to respond, I would appreciate it.

THE CHAIR: The hon. minister.

MR. MAR: Thanks, Mr. Chairman. I was aware of this meeting that the mayors and reeves had from the area that is served by the Chinook health region, and I can say that, first of all, I am very understanding of the concerns of Albertans, not just in the area represented by the hon. Member for Cardston-Taber-Warner but throughout rural Alberta. I understand the concerns that Albertans have expressed during this time when health authorities are trying their best to decide how best to use their budgets.

Mr. Chairman, we need not fear change. There can be new ways to deliver services that will continue to meet our health needs. I might make this observation about regional health authorities that serve rural Alberta: those that have been successful are those that have managed to keep people in their area, getting service in their area, or, in fact, reverse the trend so that people from larger centres come to rural areas for services.

It is perhaps not a complete analogy, but the owner of a small department store, a Saan store, in a small town in rural Alberta came to me and said that the ability to operate a hospital facility in a small rural area was not unlike trying to operate a Saan store and that if people in the local community did not shop in their local Saan store and instead came to places like Calgary to do all of their shopping, then ultimately there would be no viability in operating the Saan store in this small rural community. Similarly, he concluded that for those regional health authorities that have facilities in places perhaps like Cardston or Milk River or Taber or Warner, there would have to be some way of repatriating people from that community to make sure they got services, because the money that is provided by the health system in Alberta follows patients to where they receive their services.

So, Mr. Chairman, I acknowledge that there is some angst, again not just in the area served by the Chinook health region but in other parts of Alberta where there are many facilities but perhaps not as many people. We have to ensure through our process that any changes that we make at the RHA level will continue to ensure that access to appropriate health care services by the right person at the right time and in the right place is delivered by regional health authorities.

So the need for a financial review, in my view, is not required. I would have to be satisfied that Chinook was not managing its finances appropriately or that its current funding would not support its existing services. The chair, of course, of the Chinook health region is the hon. Jack Ady, a former Member of this Legislative Assembly and a former minister of the Crown. The fact is, Mr. Chairman, that we do need to make changes. Providing greater funding through our funding formula would simply in my view delay the need for real change in our system so that in the future we can continue to provide the right services in various parts of the province in an affordable way.

It actually brings me a bit, Mr. Chairman, to the question which was raised by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview about the funding formula and how it works. It is a population-based funding formula. It recognizes that there are greater costs associated with dealing with lower income individuals and also greater costs associated with dealing with older people in the population, but if we were to get away from that basic funding formula, it would lead to a very strongly disproportionate amount of funding following patients to where they actually receive their services. This funding formula was extensively reviewed, I think most recently by our former colleague in this Legislature the hon. Bonnie Laing, who proudly served the constituency of Calgary-Bow for many, many years.

So, Mr. Chairman, I do acknowledge the concerns expressed by the hon. member. I do believe also that regional health authorities are engaged in the idea of solutions that will address the kinds of concerns that he and others have expressed.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: All right. I'll carry on then. Another question around waiting lists comes up. I talked a little bit about my thoughts on the long-term care waiting lists and the importance of addressing that and essentially a need for the budget to expand. The business plan also calls for a decreased wait list for MRIs, and I would voice a word of caution around unlimited enthusiasm for MRIs. I think it's a technology that is extremely useful as long as it's properly used, but I am concerned that there are pressures building in the public and perhaps in the medical community for an MRI for unnecessary things: you know, I need an MRI for this, or I need an MRI for that.

I'm concerned as well – and I have had this issue put to me – that there is a vested interest in some subsets of the medical community in maximizing the number of MRIs that are done, and we may want to turn to disinterested sources for an assessment of how many MRIs per thousand population or whatever measure we want to use are really necessary and at what point it simply becomes extravagant.

Of course, we would all support reduced MRI waiting lists for those that are genuinely necessary. There were times a couple of years ago when this was a real problem in Alberta, and I commend – boy, I'm in a good mood today I guess – the government for taking steps to address that issue. I now think we have an opportunity to really evaluate how much further we need to go with MRIs, and I would encourage the department to get an independent view of how many MRIs we need.

Moving through some of my notes here, again reflecting on the minister's opening comments that it's a year of transition and the initiatives taken in reaction to the recommendations of the Premier's council, I was a little bit surprised, if I'm reading the budget correctly, to see that the budget for strategic planning services in the department is dropping. It's not a big drop, but I am concerned that the ability of the department to plan for the whole health care system is, if anything, insufficient. So when I see the budget dropping, even if it's only by 1 or 2 or 3 percent, it concerns me that we may be being penny-wise and pound-foolish.

There is a profoundly important role to be played by strategic planning services, and I think we really could be shortsighted if we reduce that area too much, if I'm understanding the budget correctly. It raises the question – and I would be interested in knowing this – of what role, if that's been sorted out, strategic planning services will play in implementing the changes that will be entertained under the Premier's Advisory Council on Health in its report. Is the strategic planning services branch supporting the activities of the implementation committees, or will they be responding, or do they have any role at all in implementing the Mazankowski report?

I was also a bit surprised to see the expenditures under health information and accountability services dropping. I think this year's budget is $3.3 million lower than last year's, about a 7 percent drop. I'll admit openly that I'm of two minds on the whole issue of health information and how to handle that. It's quite possible to pour tens of millions of dollars down a sort of electronic sinkhole and never get any value for that. At the same time, it is widely recognized that we need to improve our health information systems, and that may well be a key to improving the effectiveness of the health care system and to controlling costs.

So I'm curious to know the explanation for the drop in the budgeted amount this year for health information and accountability services. It's still, of course, a significant amount of money, $43 million. How is that allocated? What are the details on that? How much of that money goes towards permanent salaried staff? How much goes towards contract positions? What are the outcome measures that we will be looking at to know if we've achieved some value for our investment in that area? As I said, it's almost a stereotype or a cliché to talk about computer systems that waste money, so I want to be cautious here, but we can underspend as well as overspend.

I'm also concerned around who ultimately owns the material that's generated under the health information services area. I don't mean the contents of the information; I mean the software. If we are contracting out for major software development in that area, will we as a province own that ultimately, or is the software going to remain in the ownership of the software development companies? That would be important to me.

I'm also concerned – and I've heard this as a real concern from both the RHAs and from researchers, and the minister may well have too – that health information that is collected by the RHAs and provided by the RHAs ultimately, I think, to the department then is sent to a private third-party provider that I think is based in Montreal, and then the RHAs have to pay to get that information back, and researchers have to pay even more to get that information back. I may be misunderstanding the situation, but it has been made very clear to me that health researchers who are looking at the trends in health care spending and health status of Albertans are actually facing huge increases in the costs of their data now that it's being handled by a third-party private provider. I've heard the same thing, that RHAs who turn this information over on a free basis are now having to pay for it from private providers. So how is that handled in the budget, and what precautions are we taking in the future to reduce and eliminate those obstacles to really understanding what's going on in our health care system?

I could carry on, but again I don't want to monopolize the whole afternoon, so I'll take my seat. I don't know if the minister wants to respond.

THE CHAIR: The hon. minister.

MR. MAR: Thank you, Chairman. Just a couple of comments in response. One that piqued my interest in particular was the comments that the hon. member made with respect to MRIs and trying to determine what is the right number. He correctly pointed out that it's possible to both underspend or overspend, and trying to find the right number of applications of this important diagnostic tool is a very difficult issue. His comments were quite constructive in this regard and thought provoking. I might suggest that one of the things we should be considering when looking at any procedure in our health care system, not only diagnostic tools such as MRIs, is this question. As a first inquiry, is it medically necessary? Then the second inquiry would be: is it medically beneficial? Now, I don't know if there are many people who would argue that an MRI would be a medical necessity, but whether it is medically beneficial in every circumstance is, I think, an open question.

Perhaps I can illustrate by a particular example. An individual goes into a sports medicine clinic and has an injured knee, and the physician examines this person's knee and concludes that it is one of two things: it is either torn cartilage or it is arthritis. Now, the particular circumstances of this individual are that the individual has no family history of arthritis and he's relatively young. He's in his mid-30s, let's say. The physician says: "Well, we can give you an X ray, and that will confirm that it's torn cartilage, because it's not likely that it's arthritis since there's no family history of arthritis and you're very young. But if you want to rule out that it is arthritis, then we can get you an MRI as well." I think we could probably agree that if an X ray was given and it was determined that it was in fact torn cartilage and not arthritis, then we wouldn't need to go the further step of ordering an MRI as well. So an MRI for examining knees may be a medical necessity, but for that particular circumstance it may not be medically beneficial. It may not disclose any further information than we could determine from another type of diagnostic test.

So in looking at all of the procedures that we do in our health care system, we should evaluate, first of all, whether they are medically necessary but also whether they're medically beneficial in all circumstances. That may lead, hopefully, to a better utilization of important resources, be they MRIs or any other procedure that we would choose to give.

With that, Mr. Chairman, I'll take my seat again.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Member for Airdrie-Rocky View.

MS HALEY: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate very much the opportunity to be able to just make a few comments on the Health estimates. I guess I want to preface my comments by saying that I understand the line item in the budget and the way that it's laid out, but from just an average Albertan's perspective, if you were picking up this business plan and you were going to try as an average Albertan to understand the magnitude and the scope of what close to $7 billion does in the province of Alberta from a health perspective, you probably wouldn't get a sense in here of some of the marvelous things that are being done, the number of surgeries that are being performed, the number of utilization visits to a doctor. I think we're at 30 million visits a year to doctors now. You wouldn't get a sense of how many doctors there are, 5,000, or if there is a growing number of doctors. You may not be able to find the issues in areas where we still need to improve.

You know, I don't mean it in a disrespectful way, but I think that this business plan could be enhanced a lot by putting some of that type of information in here. Even though I do know that it falls under regional health authorities, it's just that from an Alberta point of view, if you wanted to take this out and show it to your constituents, you wouldn't be able to just say to them that there are so many hospital beds or so many long-term care beds. I don't know, Minister. I'd just be really grateful if you could consider looking at some of those items for next time as a way to sort of enhance the information that is available to Albertans on a subject that's so incredibly important to all of them.

I know that for the close to 50,000 people that live in my riding, from a health care facility point of view Bethany Care has a long-term care centre there. They do a wonderful job, but it's only one. I have a community health facility that people can go to for public health care services, but I don't have a hospital, with 50,000 people. It is an issue in Airdrie, and for the last year and a half there's been a lot of study going on, Minister, with regard to what Airdrie needs and how best to serve those needs.

One of the issues that the Calgary health authority did come up with was a DAT centre, a diagnostic and treatment centre, for the south and for the north, and I've heard that it's delayed and then not delayed and then delayed again. Minister, I know that you and I share a common boundary for our constituencies. I know how much your riding has grown, and I know how much my riding has grown. We've probably got between the two of us well over 120,000 people in there with virtually no access to anything. I'm wondering if you can give me some insight as to where you think the regional health authority is on that issue, because I know it matters. It's very near and dear to the people that live in my area who cannot figure out why they don't have a hospital when I try to explain that we've got a regional system. It's imperative that we do a better job of just getting something done for them, for your area and for mine. That Harvest Hills area is huge and is still massively growing. So I'm hoping maybe you could shed some light on that as well.

As for the rest of my constituents, I guess they would like to know at some point in the vision for health care in Alberta on accessibility how you see us dealing with the 24-hour care issues where we don't have access to a hospital. The health phone system: are we making some progress on those types of issues? I know that this maybe doesn't fall specifically in your business plan, Minister, but once again I just wonder if you could give me some insight as to how you see us handling these huge high-growth issues in some parts of the province.

Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

MR. MAR: Chairman, these are important questions to be asked and have been asked by Members of the Legislative Assembly, on both sides of the House I might add. How will we deal with issues like primary health care reform? How will we deal with 7-24 care?

Let me make the observation, Mr. Chairman, that in the current iteration of the health care system we do not have enough physicians, we do not have enough nurses, but that suggests to us that there are two things we can do. We can either increase the number of doctors and physicians and nurses that we have, or we can make better utilization of the existing pool of such resources that we currently already have. I think that in looking at primary health care reform, in looking at how we will deliver health care in the future, it may not be in places like hospitals. We may be able to use technology in a manner that is much more effective and useful.

I will share another perhaps imperfect analogy but a story that is worth while repeating, I think, and that is of a friend of mine who is well known for his love of horses. He happens to live in the province of Ontario. He's a minister of the Crown there. He took his horse, who had an equine bone spur, to the local veterinarian. The veterinarian took a diagnostic image of this horse's foot, and he took a digitized image which he sent digitally to one of the world's leading experts on equine bone spurs, who happened to be in the state of Texas. The veterinarian in Texas looked at this bone spur and phoned back to the veterinarian in Mississauga and said: here's what you do, and here is how you do it. The total cost for this treatment and diagnosis was $1,500. This minister of the Crown from Ontario said: I hope that someday people will have the same access to affordable high-quality health care that my horse does.

Mr. Chairman, the growth in areas like Airdrie-Rocky View is mirrored in other parts of the province. I can't help but be reminded of the hon. Member for Calgary-Shaw, whose riding in the south end of Calgary is extremely large and growing rapidly. The idea is that we do need to meet people's needs. Whether those needs will be met by a physician in a clinic or in a hospital or whether they will be met in a different manner, such as the diagnostic centres that the hon. member raised in her comments, I think that is an open question. I think that regional health authorities are working hard looking at different ways of meeting people's needs. Of course, this province is well known for its innovation. It's not an overstatement to say that people have traveled from all over Canada and other parts of the world to look at centres like the Northeast community clinic here in the city of Edmonton or at the Eighth and Eighth centre in the city of Calgary. These are innovative ways of delivering health care. Also, another good example would be the 24-hour link line that has been set up by the Capital regional health authority. That link line now serves not only the city of Edmonton but Peace River and the Mistahia health region, which includes Grande Prairie. It has demonstrably reduced the number of unnecessary visits to emergency rooms in the jurisdictions that it serves.

Mr. Chairman, I can say that we don't have all of the answers as to how we deal with the kinds of pressures outlined by the hon. member, but I do believe that we are taking steps in the right direction and that we have a good sense of what our health care system is going to look like five and 10 and 15 years down the road. There will come a day when, if you are injured while on the highway in Pincher Creek, an emergency medical technician will by wireless communication be able to access your health record if you are a resident of the city of Calgary, find out that you are a diabetic, that you are on certain types of medications, that you are allergic to certain types of things, and govern the treatment accordingly. Your health record would be available to other providers of health care to you so that we know that you won't be given drugs that will either cause an allergic reaction or conflict with another medication that you already have. Your diagnostic tests will be available on a secure-access system so that a radiologist can take a look at your diagnostic image regardless of where they are in the province of Alberta. These things are ways that we will be able to improve access and quality of our publicly funded health care system in a way that will be, I believe, an envy to other jurisdictions throughout the world.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.

MR. BONNER: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. This is a massive budget that Health and Wellness has, and it certainly does reflect the priority that Albertans have for their health and for their quality of life and, as well, their concerns, particularly concerns when health care is going through a transitional period. It seems that we have been going through this transitional period for the last eight or nine years. Certainly I think that all Albertans would love to have that sense of security, that sense that somebody has taken control and that the public health care system will be there for them when they need it.

Now, then, I was looking at the business plans on page 205, and I noted that "Alberta Health and Wellness welcomes the opportunity to lead the cross-ministry Health Sustainability Initiative in 2002/2003 by developing, in partnership with Alberta Seniors and Alberta Finance," and we are looking here at "a government-wide strategic framework to enhance the sustainability of the health care system into the future." What I would like is if the minister could provide us with some of the details on this cross-ministry health sustainability initiative in 2002-2003 and if he could further elaborate on what performance measures have been laid out for the initiative and what part of the plan is in place.

In moving forward to page 206 of the ministry business plan, I notice that one of the goals and strategies here is to decrease the wait list, certainly a target that Albertans would want to see, that all of us would want to see, because there is nothing worse than waiting for medical attention. So if the minister could please outline in the business plan how the decreased wait list for long-term care facility admissions is going to work.

Now, then, as well on page 206, according to the business plan, "the Ministry collaborates closely with health authorities, agencies and other stakeholders," and it goes on to say that it also "demonstrates leadership in setting direction, policy and provincial standards.” Can the minister give us concrete examples of where the ministry has provided leadership to RHAs, how they collaborate with the RHAs, and how this whole issue, that some of our RHAs are predicting that they will be running deficits, can be addressed?

As well, when we were looking at the ministry’s business plan, the ministry is prepared to “establish more clearly, the accountability for health authorities and health providers for service provision, governance and management.” If the minister could please outline what concrete steps he is prepared to take to accomplish this goal beyond “the introduction of multiyear performance contracts and targets” suggested in the business plan.

Now, another area of concern that I do have, Mr. Chair, is with health care insurance premium revenue write-offs, and I notice here that in the year 2002-2003 the estimates for these write-offs are somewhere in the neighbourhood of $41.3 million. In the year 2001-2002 the forecast was $32 million, and the budgeted amount in the year 2001-2002 was $28.8 million. So, again, we are noticing that write-offs are expected to be 29 percent higher than last year’s forecast. They are also expected to be 43 percent higher than last year’s budget. I know that the minister has already indicated that he did not see Alberta families having difficulty paying the premiums. Would he further elaborate on why we are looking at more than $41 million in expected write-offs this year?

As well, Mr. Chair, if the minister could please inform us if the department has done any analysis of what effect the 30 percent increase in health care premiums will have on premium revenue write-offs. I’d also be interested if the minister could provide a detailed breakdown of the administrative costs of the administration and collection of health care premiums for 2001-2002 as well as the estimated cost for 2002-2003. If this information could include but not be limited to manpower costs, materials, supplies, equipment and postage, computing services, money paid to external collection agencies including the number of cases referred to external collection agencies, banking services, and income verification. Also, could the minister provide a copy of any directives or guidelines given by the Department of Health and Wellness or any other Alberta government department to external collection agencies who have undertaken the task of collecting overdue health care premiums? My final question in regards to health care premium revenue write-offs is: what is the number of cases of unpaid health care premiums that were written off in the year 2001-2002?

With that, Mr. Chairman, I’ll give some other member the opportunity.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I’m happy to continue in the vein that my colleague was speaking, and that’s with regard to health care insurance premiums, particularly the revenue side I would like to take a look at. First of all, I’d like to ask a general policy question, and then I have some specifics on the actual budget items. It’s my opinion that health care premiums as a user fee are a tax, and it would be my opinion and that of my colleagues in the opposition that this kind of a tax is a regressive tax and impacts low-income and middle-income people significantly harder than it does others in our society. So, in general, I would like the health minister to explain how it is that he feels that they can justify taxing people for health care.

Now, I have heard him say in this Assembly and elsewhere that he believes that Albertans need to appreciate some form of the cost of health care services, and I would suggest to him that we used to have a system in this province that worked very well at letting Albertans know how much their health care cost, and that was a yearly billing summary, that went out to them, that was the summary of the costs incurred on their behalf and on members of their family’s behalf for health care services used throughout the year. That was not a bill but a statement and listed those costs associated with their uses, and I felt that that was a very good way of bringing home to people in the province the kinds of benefits that they received through a universal health care system. I think that if you want to bring home the actual cost to people, that’s an excellent system to use.

If I remember correctly, that system was discontinued because of the costs incurred in sending the statements out, but it would seem to me that that was a small price to pay for keeping people fully informed of what the actual costs were. For instance, if you just had a few doctor’s appointments during the year or nothing, you would have very limited costs, but if someone in your family had received extensive care for some reason – had heart attacks, strokes, extended hospital visits – people got a full appreciation for the costs associated with providing that kind of service, and I think that that’s a benefit.

On the other hand, what we have now is a premium that is at best a token premium in terms of covering the costs of health care services provided. It’s a premium that is more heavily borne by those of lower income. Now, I know that the lowest income members of our province can apply for and receive subsidies or partial subsidies, but it doesn’t cover the working poor or the middle class in the province, and it significantly disadvantages, I believe, young families who are trying to get ahead in this society and often bear a high proportion of health care costs and other operating costs.

If the minister can explain to us his philosophy and his government’s philosophy in terms of continuing to pursue health care premiums over and above what he has stated in terms of their just bearing some costs of the services provided, particularly in view of the fact that we’re one of only two provinces in this country to pass on that cost, particularly in view of the fact that I would believe that we are the wealthiest province in this country and wonder why that’s the kind of cost we would pass on.

In addition to that, I’m interested in knowing what the administrative costs of providing that particular service are and, as my colleague from Edmonton-Glengarry stated, the collection costs and the number of delinquencies we have and exactly what they do to pursue those costs. I’ve heard of people being pursued by credit collections agencies, but I’ve also heard the flip side, where people have gone for absolutely decades without paying this service and have no intention of ever doing so. So if we could have some information on that.

Then with the addition of the latest increase in costs for Alberta health care premiums we’d like some descriptions of how those costs are being borne by different sectors of our population and industries and organizations. Also, the rationale for increasing those costs without having any direct consultation with those parties who would be directly affected; that being individuals, companies. There are a number of organizations throughout this province representing groups of businesses and organizations who I’m sure would have dearly loved to have been consulted about the potential for an increase and could have discussed with the government their rationale for going there and also express to the government the kind of burden that increasing those premiums would be for them. So, in that vein, I would like some specific answers, if I could.

Let’s talk about Alberta businesses first. If I remember correctly, about 40 percent of businesses collect health care premiums on behalf of their employees and also pay their premiums or some share of those premiums, not the least of which is ourselves. We pay a portion, and the Legislative Assembly pays a portion. So could the minister tell us how much Alberta businesses will have to pay for health care premiums in 2001-02 and 2002-03 so that we can get some comparison figures there? How much information does the department of the minister actually keep on the premiums that businesses pay in Alberta, and what's the cost of collecting that data? We'd also like to know that information. What was the total cost to the government itself? I see what the costs are for myself over the course of the year, but if we were to include all the members of the Assembly and the various government employees, let's take a look at what that costs. Were government departments given an allocation in this year's budget to cover those increasing costs? Nobody in the private sector was, so I'm wondering what happens there with the government.

For people who have organizations who have fixed their budgets in advance, this kind of an increase can be substantive and is a curve ball that many of them wouldn't have been expecting. Is the minister collecting data on how much postsecondary institutes have had to pay for health care for their various employees last year as compared to this year? How about RHAs? Could we get the information on that? That one should definitely be available.

I just heard from the ATA recently about the increase in costs that they're going to bear as a result of this change, and in a climate where they feel that they have been unfairly treated by the government and where they have certain restrictions on how their operating funds are administered, they now also have to carry the additional burden of health care premiums. I don't see the number readily at hand here, but if I recall, it was in the order of 300,000 to 400,000 additional dollars just on the increase in the premium. So if the minister could explain to us the rationale behind how he would expect them to pay for those increased costs. That amount of money is a significant number of teachers in the province or a significant number of textbooks. The pie is only so big, and they have to make some choices. We'd like to know how the minister would expect them to make those choices.

When we talk about answering the question of how much is spent in administering the health care premium department, particularly on the collection side, we'd like a specific breakdown on that, the number of employees and mailing costs. Exactly how are collection costs handled? Are they handled within the department? Are they subcontracted out to collection agencies? How long before delinquent accounts are sent out or sent to the collection component? What is their success rate? How much specifically do you write off in the course of a year, and are there two sets of write-offs? Sometimes organizations will write it off the instant they send it to a collection agency and then recapture whatever is collected into revenue. If that's the case, we would like that kind of breakdown done there too.

I would think that when the government came up with the idea of increasing health care premiums, there were some sorts of studies or work done in order to analyze the affordability of the increases in the premiums. If that information is available, would you share it with us, please? If not, would you tell us why that work wasn't done? Have you done in collaboration with perhaps Treasury or any other departments impact assessments regarding the impact on the economy and on businesses from the increase in health care premiums? Regressive taxes like this take money out of the economy and act as a destimulant, and we would certainly hope that the government acknowledged that and accounted for that when they went forward with this kind of increase, and we would like access to that information. If they didn't do this, we would like an explanation of why. I think that it is not responsible for a government to only look at their own short-term goals of meeting budget requirements but that they have a more long-term objective and should have a wider vision in terms of the impacts the decisions they make have on the people as a whole and on the economy in general. So if we can get that information.

That was all in program 2, and I would like to go to program 3 for a few minutes, if I may, Mr. Chairman, and talk about the Alberta Alcohol and Drug Abuse Commission.

It's very interesting to see the changes in this commission over the years that I've been in this Legislature. Initially the mandate of the commission was to deal with primarily alcohol and some other kinds of substance abuse. We have seen a very huge increase in gambling addictions over the years, which does seem to have a direct correlation to the open-door policy that the government has to gambling in the province now. So I'm wondering if they are tracking the increase in the addictions by type over the course of the years and if they compare that to the increase in gambling revenues and if they have drawn any correlations from that. If that information is available – and I want more than just a three-line answer. I would like access to some of the documented research. If you could tell us where we could find that, that would be very helpful.

Interestingly enough, AADAC finished last year under budget, 3.8 percent below budget, and if we could get some explanations as to why that was. I know that over the last year or so there have been some reorganization in terms of centralizing some of their centres, and I would like to know how that is done, if that's been a success or not. I know that initially some of the treatment centres were located in other regions of the city for a few reasons: access for people who lived in those particular areas and also because a lot of people that lived in large urban centres didn't want to have to come downtown for treatment due to many factors, not the least of which was that people whom they knew would see them and create other social problems for them. So if we could get some information on how that centralization has worked and how it's going in rural Alberta. Mr. Chairman, we'd like to have some of those answers. Has regionalization worked in that area? Are people getting access to treatment that need it? I'm sure they must be tracking the stats in the rural areas in terms of increasing or decreasing problems, and if you could share that information with us.

When we see such a significant decrease in funding like this $1.75 million – it's not big in terms of the global budget for health but big in terms of this department – it usually means that there was some sort of reduction in services or programs. If that was the case here, would the minister please share that with us. What are his expectations for this department in the future? Is it looking at increased costs, or does it look like they're going to be holding the line? If so, then what would be the justification for that? What do they determine to be success rates in terms of people who access the programs and who successfully complete the programs, and how many people repeat within the system and over what course of time? That would be very good information for us to have.

I wonder if the minister can also explain why the government doesn't increase funding for gambling addictions by an amount equal to the percentage increase in gambling revenue. It doesn't seem fair that as gambling increases in the province, it hasn't kept pace with the treatment. So if he could explain that.

When I look at the stats, we're receiving an increased amount of revenue and not a parallel kind of increase in funding for treatment facilities. Often we've heard in this Assembly ministers of health talk to us about how we've always had gambling in this province with bingos and so on and that the opposition has been on the bandwagon about increased funding for gambling addictions because gambling addictions have increased is just a smoke and mirrors exercise. In fact, if we take a look at the relative addictive factor of different kinds of gambling, we will find that forms like bingo are –

I won't say far less addictive, but it takes a person playing bingo a much greater time to become addicted than it does for someone playing a VLT.

All statistics I have looked at would state that the difference is phenomenal, that due to the very fast payoff and the sensory input of VLTs, people become addicted much quicker. It's pretty hard to spend the same amount of money on bingo as you can drop in a VLT machine in an evening. What we've seen as a result of that is people with just absolutely horrendous stories and living horrendous lives who have VLT addictions and end up spending a great deal or all of their paycheque there. The outcome of that is not only the gambling addiction but the side effect of all the social costs. We see the increased social costs. We see family breakdowns. We see neglect of families in terms of being able to provide the basics of food, shelter, clothing, school supplies. So there's a big cost.

Many studies have indicated that the costs to treat the side effects of gambling are $3 for every $1 that's collected by the government in revenues. So I would like to know what the minister's opinion is of that, and has he seen any parallel funding programs or support programs in the other areas – the children's services area, the housing area, education – to support the increased costs that we have seen from gambling?

In the time that I have remaining, Mr. Chairman, I would just like to talk about this government's tobacco reduction strategy. We saw a significant increase in costs for cigarettes. We've received lots of feedback. I'm sure that every member of the government has as well from those people who use the system. I'm not a smoker, and I'm happy to support programs that eliminate smoking, and I'm happy to see that the amount of smoking in public areas is being reduced. But for those people who are smokers and who are addicted to smoking, we see this significant increase in costs come about without any significant increase in support or help for those people to kick the habit. So is the minister addressing that? He didn't in the budget, but perhaps he has some plans that he could announce soon with regard to that.

Thank you.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

MR. STRANG: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It's a great honour today to stand and speak to the Committee of Supply on Health and Wellness. I guess a couple of items I'd like to display and get some answers on. Number one, I realize that with the Mazankowski report we have to make change. I looked at the aspect of change within my area, and what I've done is I had a meeting on April 3 to talk about the aspects of health and wellness within the rural setting. I had people from Jasper, Grande Cache, Edson, Hinton, and the Yellowhead county to discuss what was transpiring. I had very able people from the Department of Health and Wellness that gave us the outline of the 10 different facets that we're looking at for the total of 44 recommendations in the Mazankowski report. We broke up into different groups so that the people in the group would have a chance to discuss each one of the different items in there.

We assembled in the afternoon to talk about the different areas, and it was interesting to see how each person made their presentation, and then we culminated in the afternoon to look at the aspect, number one, of how we would rate each one of the different facets. It came up very strong. Number one was that we have to have sustainable funding while we're in the transition of change, because they wanted to make sure that was understood first. So I guess that was really the strong point that came out of it.

I guess the other thing that was sort of a strong understanding was the aspect of developing a rural health strategy. As you realize, we in rural Alberta don't feel that we are going to get the same services that we get in the Capital or the Calgary region. We realize that we can't do heart surgeries and that in our area, but I think we're looking at the core services. As you look at our region and if I go to the extreme western part of my region and you take the municipality of Jasper, what happens in the two strong seasons – the summer and winter seasons – in that community? That community doubles in population, sometimes even more, where we're getting really high in population. We have the need for that, so we've got to try and compensate for that. We have other areas in our region where we have the aspect of industry. We have a lot of oil and gas in our area. As you realize, with the way the basins are in our region, because they're drilling along the eastern slopes, they're very deep holes. Therefore, they're there for quite a while. It's a vulnerable industry.

We have the forest industry, which is also very highly mechanized now, but we need the core services in our area. I guess the other thing that I really want to stress is the fact that we have to have these core services in our area because then we don't entice industry to move into the area. As you realize, a lot of our industry is based on resource sectors, so we need that type of system set up.

I guess the other thing that I would like to really stress and stress fairly strongly is that if you take a look at our region, there are a lot of areas where we have operating rooms. We have the aspect of some surgeons in our area, but I still believe that doctors in the city of Edmonton, being that we're in close proximity to them, have the latitude to come and utilize our facilities, and patients I think are willing to travel to do that. Out of my group when we were discussing this, there was sort of agreement with one of the groups that came up that they'd be willing to travel for two hours to get services. So I think that's something that we have to really look at.

I guess the other thing that I really want to stress and to try and get an understanding of, if I may, is on ambulances. As you realize, in some of our regions we have foreign doctors, and because of the College of Physicians and Surgeons they're not allowed to practise some practices because they've got to keep up the accreditation. So there are some areas in West Yellowhead, namely Grande Cache, where nobody is allowed to have a baby. They have to either go to Grande Prairie or they have to go to Hinton. But these doctors have the accreditation from their other countries, and I fail to understand why we can't streamline something along that line.

I guess the other thing I'd like to stress and stress fairly strongly is the aspect of looking at some system on telehealth. You know, in the rural area I think we have to have people take ownership of aspects of their health. They have to look after their health. So if there is some way that we could get that in the rural area, they'd be able to get out and have the people take ownership of their own health.

I guess the last thing that I want to talk about today is the aspect of long-term care. I know we've all got different names, and I wish that we would take the initiative and get the proper definition on this. For long-term care in the region of Whitecourt-Ste. Anne and in the region of West Yellowhead we're going to have two facilities built. Hopefully they're going to be open this fall, but with our process that we have, we won't have any money to operate them, and that's operating capital. So I'm just wondering what we're going to do to try and derive a system so that we can go ahead and have that type of a system set up so we can facilitate these facilities when they're open. As you realize, with long-term care and what's transpiring in our region now, we have a number of lodges. What's happening with the lodges is we're having long-term care people in those lodges, whereas they should be in a long-term care facility.

Hopefully, when this fall comes, we are going to have those facilities to transfer them to. I think we have to have more of an insight on the aspect of total health, and we have to sort of co-ordinate it more.

I think that with those few remarks at this time, Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the time you allowed me. Thank you very much.

THE CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I just wanted to cover a handful of other points. The population health area is one. Again, it would seem to fit in with the priorities that the minister has struck and with some of the recommendations in the Mazankowski report that we support, yet I see that there is a drop in the budget for the population health branch of the department. So I'm interested, given that, I assume, that's a priority, in why we are spending less on it. Maybe I'm mistaking its function or mistaking priorities. That's one issue I'm interested in.

Another one has to do with practitioner services, especially the whole issue of alternate compensation strategies. This is a huge area, as the minister knows, a billion and a half dollars, and it has jumped significantly. So it's one that I'm sure is going to cause a lot of concern in terms of containing the expenditures in this area. I know that the minister has laid out a target – I'm not sure if it's in the business plan – of 50 percent of physicians being paid through alternate compensation strategies within three years, I believe. It's a very, very ambitious target. You know, we've supported an increase in alternate compensation strategies for physicians but nowhere near the ambitious level that the minister has laid out. We're wondering what provisions are in this budget and what strategies will be used over the next three years to implement that target. What are the cost implications? There are arguments to be made that in fact it could increase the costs of physician services. So some greater detail on how this budget and the business plans advance that goal would be very helpful to all stakeholders.

The minister in his opening comments talked about the elimination of the extended health benefits program and the transfer of $9.2 million to the Seniors department to offset some of that elimination. I'm wondering if the department has done any assessment of how many seniors will be affected by the elimination of that program. We'll be spending roughly $15 million or $16 million less. How many seniors will be affected? Frankly, what will the impact be on other programs? Will we see some of the people who are now short of services costing us more in other areas of the health or government expenditures?

Finally, my closing comment will address ambulance services. Ambulance services and the ongoing debate over how to best handle ambulance services are, I'm sure, for all of us a priority. There is a drop in the expenditures on ambulance services proposed in this budget. It's about, I think, a 3 percent drop, and I'm wondering how that's being achieved. Is that because of an efficiency, or is that because of some change in demand? What's the explanation for that drop in ambulance services?

Actually, I'm sorry. I did have one other comment here. For the Health Facilities Review Committee, of which I was actually a member at one time for eight years or maybe even nine years, way back, last year's budget was $560,000. The forecast for this year is an increase, up to $630,000, which is about an 11 percent rise. We're looking at dropping back to the $560,000 in this year's estimate. I'm curious to know what the explanation is for that up and down or down and up pattern. Is less being spent, or is it being spent more efficiently? Are the committee's activities properly explained and properly accounted for here, or will we be seeing a rise in their expenditures before the budget year is over?

So with those comments I thank you, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate the attention of the minister, and I've appreciated your back and forth comments here. I think they're constructive, and I hope our comments have been constructive too.

Thank you.

5:10

THE CHAIR: The hon. Minister of Health and Wellness.

MR. MAR: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I have appreciated the constructive comments made by all members of the Assembly who chose to rise to speak this afternoon. I confess that I'm ill able to write as quickly as the people from my department, and I am perhaps even less able than the people who work for Hansard and have recorded comments by all members. I will, as I undertook at the beginning of today's session, review the comments made by all hon. members, and where I have not replied, I will do so in writing in due course.

Thank you, sir.

Executive Council

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Chairman and hon. members, I am pleased to appear before this committee in my capacity as the minister responsible for Executive Council to discuss the 2002-2003 business plan. There are two main programs under Executive Council. The first one, of course, is the office of the Premier and Executive Council, which includes administrative support to the office of the Lieutenant Governor and the Alberta Order of Excellence Council and the Public Affairs Bureau.

Mr. Chairman, I'd like to begin my remarks with an overview of the goals and plans for Executive Council. The goals for Executive Council for the upcoming business planning cycle will continue to be the effective co-ordination of the government's overall goals and strategies and to maintain open communications with Albertans. Much of the work done by Executive Council focuses on teamwork, on ensuring that all government ministries are working together to achieve effective results, particularly in those areas that Albertans have identified as priorities.

Executive Council is also responsible for the Alberta Order of Excellence, which recognizes Albertans who have made an outstanding contribution to the province. Of course, the Lieutenant Governor serves as chancellor of the order.

Another Executive Council responsibility is the protocol office. It used to be under international and intergovernmental affairs but now is under the auspices of Executive Council. This office works to co-ordinate visits from senior international officials and dignitaries. A good example just recently was the delegation today from Mongolia and yesterday from Mpumalanga and various delegations that we've received over the past two or three weeks, including the president of the German Bundestag and many others. So we receive many, many delegations, and the protocol office performs yeoman's service. Of course, Executive Council will continue to ensure that that work is done in the most effective, efficient, and economical way possible.

Relative to the Public Affairs Bureau, Mr. Chairman, a co-ordinated, effective, and efficient service to Albertans is also a focus for the Public Affairs Bureau. The business plan for the bureau identifies four main goals. The first goal is to "increase communications with Albertans in the areas they identify as top priorities." I needn't tell this Assembly what those priorities are: certainly health, education, infrastructure, safe communities, and the list goes on relative to core government businesses.

The second main task is to "make government information more accessible to Albertans."

Third, the bureau strives to "improve the efficiency and coordination of communications across government." That is to make sure that we all know what one another is doing.

Fourthly, to "deliver products and services that allow us to meet or exceed revenue projections" and of course the needs of our customers, and those customers are, indeed, the people of Alberta.

With each of those goals you will find initiatives that bring effective, co-ordinated, and efficient communications to the forefront.

Initiatives listed under goal 1 highlight the work done in partnership across government to deliver priority programs including cross-ministry initiatives such as the aboriginal policy framework, the Alberta children and youth initiative, the economic development strategy, and the health sustainability initiative. Goal 1 also highlights communications efforts in a number of other priority areas such as fiscal reporting and taxes, workplace safety, education, infrastructure, transportation, and justice. The business plan offers a summary of some of the areas where the bureau's communications staff are assigned to ministries. They will focus their attention on matters pertaining to those particular ministries. This includes ensuring that priority initiatives and announcements are communicated to Albertans in a clear, comprehensive, and timely manner.

The bureau also participates wherever possible in key administrative initiatives such as the Alberta One Window initiative, the corporate human resource development strategy, the Alberta Corporate Service Centre, and the corporate information management and information technology strategy.

Mr. Chairman, I'd like to turn now to initiatives listed under goal 2 of the business plan. These goals are designed to both ensure that communications staff have the tools they need to communicate effectively and give Albertans quick and easy access to information. One of these tools, Mr. Chairman, is the Internet. As little as five years ago I don't think anyone could have guessed just how far the Internet would expand in terms of becoming a primary communications source. I'm pleased to inform members that even I have become a regular Internet user. Believe it or not, I said that this is the one thing I would never do, that I would never learn how to run one of those machines. I refused even to find out how to turn one on, but since I did turn one on and since I've learned a little bit about it, I have found it to be an incredibly valuable resource. Believe me, if I can do it, then I believe anyone can. So Albertans are proving that point. Today Alberta is the most wired province in Canada, with more than 60 percent of households using the Internet compared to 48 percent Canada-wide. Actually, we're a world leader when you consider that the Internet household rate in Alberta is higher than the average rates in the United States, Europe, and Australia.

The government is responding to that trend with projects like Supernet, some of the funding for which is coming from lotteries, and with an increased focus on Internet and electronic communications. Bureau communications staff have a role to play in that process as they help ministry clients improve and develop the Internet resources they have to offer Albertans. Bureau staff are responsible for maintaining and designing the Alberta government home page. This fiscal year the page received some 4.7 million visits. That's up from 4.3 million visits last year. That's an incredible number of visits by people who want to know what's going on in various government departments.

Bureau staff will also assist in the development of the Alberta One Window project, which is a project I mentioned earlier. The goal of Alberta One Window is to create a single point of access to government information.

Another direct source of information for government is Alberta Connects, and this is a program that includes both toll-free telephone and Internet resources to ask questions and to comment on government plans, various initiatives, and programs. Again, Albertans are showing an increasing interest in this direct form of communicating. For example, questions and comments through Alberta Connects online are up 60 percent from the year 2000-2001, and yes, even the opposition can use Alberta Connects. It is a wonderful way of getting factual information.

Bureau staff will continue efforts to increase public awareness and use of Alberta Connects as well as another staple communications resource, which of course is the RITE telephone system. This is a system that I think was put in place either in the early '80s or the late '70s, and it proved to be then a tremendous resource for Albertans to reach their MLAs and various departments of government, and it is today even with the advent of the Internet and other communications machinery. The RITE line is a toll-free, provincewide gateway to the Alberta government. Albertans can call RITE to be connected toll free to a government office. If they don't know the number of the office they need, any member of the public can call the toll-free RITE line for assistance from the operator. Last year some 1.3 million callers did just that, and their questions were answered by an operator at RITE's Edmonton and Calgary offices. Initiatives in this business plan will continue to build on RITE as a resource, including making RITE directory listings more efficient and more effective and ensuring that the RITE system is able to respond effectively to caller traffic.

Another central communications resource for Albertans is the Queen's Printer bookstore. The public can use the bookstore to access government legislation and other publications either on-line or through two locations in Edmonton and Calgary, and like other areas covered in the 2002-2005 business plan, the bookstore will focus on improving efficiency and effectiveness while ensuring that Albertans have easy access to the information they need. This includes looking at the possibility of making the Alberta Gazette available on-line, and believe me, it's a lot to read. I don't know why anyone would want to read it – no offence to the lawyers in our caucus and across the way – but it could be interesting reading for someone. It is there, however, in hard copy, and it is there on-line.

Improved efficiency will also come from combining the Calgary offices for RITE and the Queen's Printer bookstore. This move will reduce staffing by one temporary and one permanent position while allowing for more efficient staffing of both services. The change will not reduce customer service in either area.

Mr. Chairman, I'd like to conclude my remarks to the committee by giving a brief summary of the projected spending for Executive Council for 2002-2003. We're now in the estimates portion. Total spending for 2002-2003 for Executive Council remains at approximately $15 million, almost precisely where it was last year, give or take a couple of thousand dollars. As I just mentioned, the estimates also show a reduction in total FTEs for Executive Council. This includes the reduction of two positions from combining the Calgary RITE and the Queen's Printer bookstore offices as well as one position in print services that transfers to the Alberta Corporate Service Centre. I mentioned earlier that the Calgary reductions will not affect client service levels. The same can be said in print services. In fact, moving print services from the bureau to the Alberta Corporate Service Centre will allow for better co-ordination and integration with other purchasing services provided through the centre.

So, Mr. Chairman, that concludes my remarks on Executive Council's business plan for 2002-2005. I'd be glad to answer any questions or to hear any comments my colleagues in the Legislature may have. Thank you.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I'm pleased to be here this evening to discuss the estimates for Executive Council and would certainly like to thank the Premier for his attendance this evening. He has an incredibly busy schedule, and it's very good to see him here to listen to comments and to answer questions that we have on his department and to have him commit an evening. I know that it would have been more convenient for him to be available in the afternoon, but we try to save most of the afternoon department estimates for some of the larger and perhaps more controversial departments. So thank you for giving up one of your evenings.

In addition to thanking the Premier, we really need to acknowledge the Premier's staff, many of whom are here. Once again the Public Affairs Bureau has had a year of performing miracles, and I think that it's a department of wizards. We just wish that we had them on our side because they seem to be able to spin the government out of some of the most difficult areas.

AN HON. MEMBER: It's called telling the truth.

MS CARLSON: Well, given some of the missteps and how you still come out smelling like a rose, I've got to say that somebody there is helping you out, and I think it's the people sitting up here behind me this evening. So great job. If you ever decide that you want to see a change in government, we'd love to have you for just like two or three months. Then we could do some remarkable changes.

AN HON. MEMBER: Oh, quit dreaming. Quit dreaming.

MS CARLSON: Well, you know, they're pretty good. We think we have some real good ideas, and if they had some actual content to work with, imagine what could happen.

MS CALAHASEN: They do have content. Look at this.

MS CARLSON: Yeah. It's a little shaky, though, sometimes; I've got to tell you. [interjections] They're all awake now. You've got to admit that there have been a few missteps the last little while which are reflected in the polls, so that's interesting. [interjection] Well, yes. Let's talk about it. If you want to talk about the most recent by-election, the government . . . [some applause] And congratulations to your new member, who we will soon see joining us here in this Assembly. You can bet that we will be keeping track of those promises he made, if in fact he can actually deliver on them. I heard lots of those promises, and I tell you, he's going to need lots of help from you guys. So it will be interesting to see what happens over the next year. Particularly what I liked was the one where he said that if the Premier didn't listen to him, he was going to have at least 500 of his constituents phone directly and write letters to the Premier to say that he should acknowledge what he's talking about. So that's going to be very interesting. [interjections] Yeah, you all do that. I don't think so. Oh, this is part of the 4.7 million visits?

AN HON. MEMBER: That's the RITE line.

MS CARLSON: Now I get it. Well, good luck, you guys. It doesn't seem to be working. I don't think it's going to work too well for him either. Anyway, it will be interesting to see as we grade him on his performance in terms of compliance with promises, but of course he will have an excellent department to go to to help him communicate to his constituents why he can't actually deliver. So that will be interesting to see.

You know, when we talk about the missteps that we've seen the government go through lately, it's interesting to see the way the communications were delivered. I'm surprised that the dollars for Infrastructure that were given to Edmonton and Calgary within 48 hours of the budget having been announced were done in that fashion. I know, I understand the accounting principles in terms of why you did it very well, but what I don't understand is the communication plan that was used there, because clearly you knew ahead of time that there was a pocket of money. It makes me wonder if you weren't just waiting to see where the greatest problems or issues would be for the budget before you announced them. I would have thought that a good communication plan would have announced some days before the budget that there was a pocket of money that was going to be available at the end of the fourth quarter and that you would be assigning it to whatever. So it's interesting to see that you handled it the way you did, because it certainly did look like a flip-flop.

That was, I think, on your part unfortunate. People didn't like that too much. It does tarnish the credibility of the government to some extent. It also enhanced a belief in rural Alberta that this government has a highway 2 mentality, where they focus on those large centres that are on the highway 2 corridor and areas closely surrounding the highway 2 corridor and forget about the rest of the province. We heard a lot of that in the by-election, and it was reinforced by the way the money was distributed there. So I wouldn't mind having the Premier comment on that and on what kind of a communication strategy he thinks he'll implement in the future to address that problem, because I tell you, it was a very real concern. Those 3,000 government supporters that stayed home in the by-election were pretty vocal about their concerns.

There's also a boondoggle that it will be interesting to see how this government spins out of. Yes, a boondoggle, and that would be the Supernet. The Premier talked about that as being one of the great bonuses for the province, and I think the concept was a great idea, but the fact is that it's already obsolete. If you talk to many of the centres who have the Supernet in and accessible now, they're not using it, because it isn't the fastest or the best technology. I know that my colleague from Edmonton-Centre wants to particularly address that issue, so I will leave it for her more complete review. I expect that as we're probably going to recess quite early this spring, we will have quite a bit of time in the latter half of this spring and this summer to do some research. I know the Supernet is on my list to take a good look at, because I don't think we got the bang for the buck on that one. I would expect that your Public Affairs Bureau is going to spend some time developing a strategy to communicate how you could waste so many dollars on something that's obsolete and that in fact people aren't utilizing to any great effect in their regions. So it will be interesting to see how that goes.

I'd like to spend a few moments, if I can, on the Auditor General's report. This is the annual report from 2000-2001 that I'm taking a look at. When I went to take a look at this book, I was a little surprised that there is even anything more than a very cursory mention of Executive Council. The department is primarily a communications department, it seems like there wouldn't be all that much for the Auditor General to comment on. Surprisingly, there was an ongoing issue that the Auditor General referred to again that I would like the Premier or his staff at some point in time to comment on in terms of whether they've got full compliance, and that was with regard to academic health recommendations that were repeated in that year. The Auditor General talked about repeating "recommendations concerning academic health, previously reported under the Ministry of Learning" and repeating them here "because it is unclear [to the Auditor General] who should be responsible for implementing them."

That in itself is somewhat interesting because the Premier referred in his opening comments to one of the key mandates of this department being to ensure that there is effective co-ordination between the departments themselves so that everybody knows what's going on. Yet the Auditor General, who has a very key part in overseeing and being the watchdog of government, was unclear on who should be responsible for these particular recommendations, having gone to the Ministry of Learning and not having been able to have them satisfactorily complied with.

So in terms of the Council of Academic Health Centres of Alberta under the byline of governance and accountability, we have the Auditor General's recommendation 9 for this time period where he recommended that

Executive Council assign responsibility for implementation of our prior year recommendations that:

- those who manage and fund academic health activities acknowledge the full scope and magnitude of those activities and the consequences for the accountability of academic health centres
- the entity or entities responsible for academic health, and their mandates, roles, and accountabilities be clearly defined and, on this basis, the appropriate organization and governance structure be established.

So that's the recommendation, and he goes on to spend some time explaining the recommendation.

He talked about these having been included in the '98-99 annual report. In the annual report in '99 they were recommendations number 18 and 19, and for the universities of Alberta and Calgary in the last year's annual report, 2000, that was recommendation 39. He went on to state that "in both years the government accepted the recommendations," which is good. That's the first step in terms of compliance. But he goes on to state that he's repeating them again because he had "evidence of only limited progress in addressing the major risks in academic health." So that's quite interesting, that two years running we've got a series of three recommendations that were accepted in principle and then not fully acted on. Then to the extent that the Auditor General took those recommendations out of Learning and put them into Executive Council, which is the Premier's responsibility and really the communication arm of the government, that is interesting in itself. To me that indicates that the Auditor General found this to be relatively serious in nature, so I think it certainly warrants some concerns, and we would like to know how far along Executive Council is in being able to meet this particular recommendation. More than just accepting it, what actual actions have been taken, and is there full compliance at this time?

The Auditor General went on to talk about academic health as a partnership with a variety of councils and centres, medical facilities, academic physicians, and health authorities. He lists what they actually do and then goes on to talk about the serious risks that academic health faces. Those of us who knew this Auditor General knew that he was soft-spoken and not given to using strong language, particularly in the recommendations, unless he felt that there was some serious deficit. And when he goes on to say "serious risks," then we know that he more than perhaps other people should be taken very seriously and that he saw this as a concern that should be addressed.

When you go on to read the concerns that he listed, you'll see that they're the kinds of concerns that were very fundamental to his understanding of the necessary elements that government needs to have in order to comply with the kinds of outcomes that he expected from a government. One of those was a lack of understanding among stakeholders of the scope of academic health and a lack of transparency of funding. So both are quite interesting and quite serious in nature: the scope of academic health and the lack of transparency in funding.

Now, lack of transparency is a serious problem when you talk about governments, and this Premier has made a commitment to transparency in government throughout his mandate. It's interesting to see here that this wasn't a problem that was fixed during the course of the audit, which sometimes can happen. Transparency of funding was in fact a problem carried on for three years. So I hope that particularly that issue has been addressed, and we would expect some sort of answer to that.

Now, any of these answers the Premier may or may not be able to give tonight. Some of them are technical or more detailed in nature, and he may or may not have the actual information at his fingertips. We would be quite happy to have the information come to us in writing at some time in the future.

The Auditor General also listed lack of information on the financial status of these centres as being a problem, and that is surprising as well. I remember when I was first elected to this Legislature and my very first question in Public Accounts was to the education minister of the day. I asked him what his budget was, and that initiated quite a bit of to-and-fro between him and his senior staff because apparently when he came back to respond, he said that there wasn't really a budget. I said: "No, no. You didn't understand my question. What was your budget for the past year?" He said to me: "No, no. You didn't understand my answer. There was no budget." Well, this government – I have to give it credit – has come a long way from those days. We see budgets coming forth. We don't see budgets that last for a full 12 months. There are all kinds of surpluses built into the budgets and re-evaluations of how expenses are compiled, and what I would consider to be serious issues, but there are budgets and there are business plans, and that's a step forward. So it's interesting to see that in this particular area the Auditor General recommends that there was a "lack of information on the financial status of the centres." So we hope that that has been rectified and look forward to the answer on that.

"Inequities in physician remuneration." That's quite interesting as well. When we see human resources being a large component of this government's functions – and certainly there is some spillover of that in this particular department – it's very surprising to see that there are inequities in remuneration, because I would have thought that there would have been standard kinds of grids and information that was accessible that would ensure that these things were done in an equitable fashion. Not in this case, I guess, and we hope that that's also been rectified. If we could find out what exactly was the basis of the former problems in this area, that would also be helpful to us.

The fourth point that the Auditor General lists here, the final point, is: "dependence on external funding of activities that generate administrative infrastructure costs." We would like some explanation of that, Mr. Chairman, and also some information on whether or not this dependence on external funding is still there, what the reason was for having that, and what has happened as a result of that. That's very interesting information here, and we hope that it's been rectified this year.

The Auditor General went on to talk about the estimates of the 1997-1998 cost of academic health at $350 million, 70% of which was ultimately funded in various ways by the Province. Accountability for the use of this substantial amount of public funds is seriously lacking.

He goes on to talk about how some of the issues "have progressed" but that in fact "no one has assumed leadership" in this area. So we would like some information on what's happened there. Because of the lack of leadership which he expected, I believe, to have come from either the council or the Learning department, he has kicked the concern up a notch to Executive Council and addresses the recommendation to all the stakeholders through Executive Council. So I'm sure that the Premier has seen this and has made some progress in terms of this issue.

Also, very interestingly enough, the Auditor General had a reservation of opinion on these financial statements "because capital assets costing less than $15,000 are expensed and are not recognized as assets in the Ministry financial statements." That clearly is a breach of generally accepted accounting principles, so we have a few questions on that. Why does the department do that? Does it continue to do that? Can we have a list of the kinds of assets that normally would have been expensed rather than capitalized and some overall justification for their having done that? It seems very strange indeed. It's been a tradition not to really have capital investment in this department, but clearly there should have been.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre. [interjection] According to the Standing Orders, the first hour is allocated to a member of Executive Council and members of the opposition. In the second hour every other member is able to ask.

The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman, and thank you very much, Mr. Premier, for appearing and being present for our questions. I appreciate the time you're taking out of your schedule. I know it's a busy one. I will join my colleague from Edmonton-Ellerslie in welcoming and thanking the staff that's appearing in the gallery. They're a great bunch and they always do their work with good humour and great skill, and I appreciate that both as an MLA and as a citizen.

Now a couple of different areas that I would like to touch on. I'm hoping that I may be able to return after some other speakers and ask additional questions, but for now what I'd like to do is talk about the responses to the Auditor General's recommendations. I'd like to talk about the performance measurements and the targets that are set out, some discussion on the Internet and the web sites that are available, some points raised about the Public Affairs Bureau, and also your human resource strategy.

When I look at the Budget 2002 Fiscal Plan document, at the very back is the response to the Auditor General from the government, and when I look specifically at recommendations that were targeted to the Executive Council, I find a couple. Two of them are under Cross-Government. I know that my colleague has already detailed what the concerns were that were raised by the Auditor General, but here I'm looking at what the government's response has been to that, and I'm looking for a bit more detail on what's being anticipated here or in some cases has in fact already been completed.

The first recommendation on cross-government standards for business cases was that "Executive Council work with other ministries to develop standards for [their] business cases." This is usually the sort of "what if?" worst case scenario, and one of the examples I've used in the past is around the Supernet. You know, what happens if in all of your plans for the Supernet, the company that was going to run the wire or implement it all of a sudden went bankrupt and wasn't available to do the work? What was the business case that was developed to deal with that kind of scenario so that the government wasn't out too much in its planning or its money and everyone else wasn't inconvenienced? The government response in fact says that this recommendation has been accepted and that "standards will be developed and implemented with the assistance of the Deputy Ministers by March 2002." So in fact, according to this document, these standards for business cases have already been developed, and I would like to hear what they are. If that is too much detail to be asking for or to be expecting the Premier to know off the top of his head, I'd be happy to receive that information in writing.

Likewise, the other cross-government recommendation that was made also pertains quite specifically to Executive Council, and that was that the Deputy Minister of Executive Council, the Alberta Corporate Service Centre and Ministries take immediate action to develop and sign service level agreements that detail the services to be provided by the Centre, the associated costs and performance measures.

In fact, again there is a response from the minister. It says that the recommendation was accepted and that "revised service level agreements will be in place for 2002-03." So is that work in progress, or has it happened? What exactly is it?

Now, when I look further under specific recommendations that were made regarding Executive Council, there's really only one here, although it's a fairly intense recommendation from the Auditor General. Again, my colleague from Edmonton-Ellerslie has gone through this, so I really want to concentrate once again on the government's response to this. In fact, the government did accept the recommendation from the Auditor General, which is: "Responsibility for implementing these recommendations will be assigned and prior year's recommendations will be implemented by March 31, 2002." So, again, the work's been done. It must be available to the Premier and/or his staff at this point. Could I find out what that was exactly and what's come out of that? Again, it's certainly acceptable to respond to that in writing as it may be some detailed plans.

Now the performance measures. I've become a performance measure keener since I came here and once had a very good session with the Auditor General's staff, who were very good in explaining to me what we were trying to attempt by using performance measurements. I have to say that this government does provide an example for other governments both in Canada and elsewhere in the world in its attempt to move to an accountability model. Where performance measurements in fact are set out, there are targets to be achieved. My concern in what the government has done to attain this is that it's sort of ground to a halt. It came out of the gates, out of the chute in the mid-90s developing all of these performance measurements and targets and objectives. All of that was wonderful, but then nothing has ever proceeded beyond it. Performance measurements are difficult animals to get right, and they do require quite a bit of revision and evaluation and retesting, monitoring, and adjustment as they go along. Everywhere I look I see the same thing. The first performance measurements came out and, essentially, stopped. There doesn't seem to have been any attempt to fine-tune this in any way.

One of the methods that the government uses repeatedly that I find less than useful is this use of satisfaction polls, which does not provide us with the real information about whether the service that is trying to be provided in a given ministry is achieving what was set out. It's merely a measurement of whether somebody thinks they're satisfied. Well, you can set it up that anything is satisfied.

I was particularly surprised when I looked under the Public Affairs Bureau core businesses and found that I think every single one but one is satisfaction based. So under the core business of "help government ministries communicate with Albertans," we have a couple of goals, and the measures are "public satisfaction with government communications in priority areas" and "government client satisfaction." Again, this isn't really telling us whether there is good communication with Albertans. There has been some sort of survey, some kind of opinion poll that says: are you satisfied? Well, that's not giving us good information to work from, and I was disappointed to see that in fact that's still happening.

When I look further at how the targets are working under your key performance measurements, in fact I can link it to the same core business and goal. We had a target that was developed in '99-2000. The actual in that year was 66 percent, and again this is a sort of satisfaction level. The following year it dropped by some six points. For the following years, 2000-01 and 2001-02, the target was 75 percent. We don't have a forecast here on what was expected to have been reached by the end of the 2001-2002 year, and then we just continue to have the same target of 75 percent.

So I'm seeing that all the good work that was started to try and develop a measurement and evaluation system has sort of ground to a halt. You know, you had one measurement, the next year the actual dropped in percentage points, and then there's just been a straight, you know, going from 58 percent in 2000-2001 to a target of 75 percent from then on. Why was that done? Why is it considered that it could go from 58 percent to 75 percent and then stay there forevermore? What was being done? It's not a useful measurement, I think, for either the department or for the public to be looking at what's happened, and I don't find that satisfaction polls are ever useful. If we're really trying to measure whether there's good communication out into the public, helping the government ministries communicate with Albertans, well, are we looking at how many Albertans actually know what goes on in a given area? Are we finding out whether Albertans are having difficulty accessing anything, and therefore what could be done to make that access easier or better rather than just saying, "Are you satisfied with this"? You know, you give me enough incentive and I suppose I'd be satisfied with just about anything. If you phone me at suppertime, I'd be satisfied right away if you'd just get off the phone and let me go back to my dinner. So I'm urging the Premier with this department under him to go back to work.

MS CARLSON: What kind of polling should he have?

MS BLAKEMAN: Well, I don't think it should be polling. I think what needs to happen – and this is a long and I'll admit that it can be a very painful process in trying to develop a useful measurement tool. I don't think that opinion polls are a useful measurement tool for how a given ministry is doing its work at any time unless the goal of the department is to have, you know, a satisfied public, and even that doesn't tell you what they're satisfied about.

There are some interesting choices that are made here that aren't explained, so maybe I could get some explanation about the choices that were made. You notice that the RITE telephone system and the Queen's Printer bookstore measure is "linked to core business two and goal two . . . using the RITE telephone system to access government and obtain information" and also rates the ability to access information and materials provided and the "value of products sold" through the bookstore. Okay. So we go from 96 percent in the year '98-99. It drops to 95 the following year, goes back up to 96 – and that's an actual – and then it's targeted at 98 percent. Well, what does the ministry expect to do to raise itself by that 2 percent? That's not explained, and why 98 percent? If you're going for 98 percent, go for a hundred. I mean, there's just a lack of follow-through here. That's what's bothering me. You know, a lot of work was done and a lot of people worked really hard to develop a business plan approach to government in this province, and I'm looking for the follow-through that would give us the really useful tool in the end.

I could go through each one of these one by one, but I don't think that's useful at this point. I think I've made my point, and I'm sure that the Premier will get back to me, and I'm going to move on to some of the other areas that I had concerns with.

The Premier spoke about the Internet, and I'm wondering just on the record whether there are any consultations or plans or departmental work groups that are considering Internet regulation. I'd be interested to know what progress has been made on that, what kinds of considerations have been made by the government as to how it wishes to license or control the Internet. Maybe it's not interested at all. In that case, I'd like to get that on the record. As part of that and probably linking it across government way with the Department of Gaming, has there been a consideration about controlling of Internet gaming? I attended a conference on gaming indirectly sponsored by the government in early March, and there was a lot of talk there about Internet gaming. Of course, it's not tied down to any spot on terra firma, so how does one regulate it? Nonetheless, there are a number of countries now that are actively looking at how to regulate it just because it has such an effect upon its people, and some, in fact, have regulated it.

Now, the second thing I want to talk about – and again this was brought up by the Premier – is the Supernet. I'd be really interested in seeing a more full-blown report on the Supernet, because I'm getting increasingly suspicious. This whole project is beginning to look very large and very white and probably with a long trunk and a small tail, and it might even be particularly fond of peanuts. I am deeply suspicious about this one.

There are a couple of points around this. For starters, something that I had pointed out right from the beginning is that the province's commitment was to run the Supernet to the outside wall of the municipal buildings, libraries, schools, et cetera, throughout Alberta. That has always been a problem, because with the corresponding cuts to the municipalities, to the school boards, to the libraries, to the RHAs, none of these groups had the ability, had the extra cash to be able to take the wiring from the outside of their walls, drill through the walls, up the stairs, down the corridor, and to the computer. Then you have to start looking at the additional cost of the computer that's going to be of the technology to match the Supernet, and then you're going to have to have the software programs that go with it. So even at this point, if the Supernet's little wires were tickling the outside walls of a library somewhere in Irma, the library doesn't have the money to be able to make this work. So how effective is that?

MS CARLSON: Even if they could, it's better accessed by cable now.

MS BLAKEMAN: And that's the second part. My very clever associate from Edmonton-Ellerslie is just pointing out to me that there is now a real issue about whether the Supernet is obsolete in fact, whether we're not being better accessed through a cable system. At this point I guess my question is: how much money have we spent on this? I have serious doubts that the little wires are ever actually going to connect to any other little wires, so the whole Supernet will have been a very expensive . . .

MS CARLSON: Job creation program.

MS BLAKEMAN: Well, job creation, and I would have said public relations campaign as well with no concrete outcome.

I know that the government would not have gone into this without expecting to complete it, and obviously they were very proud of the whole concept of this, but I've been asking these questions. This is my third year now, and I have serious doubts as to whether we're ever going to see this.

DR. TAYLOR: I answered them in your first year, and you're still asking them.

MS BLAKEMAN: No, I didn't get an answer the first year. As usual we have the Minister of Environment loving to heckle into the debate without ever actually getting up. Actually, in about 10 minutes, as soon as I finish speaking, he will be able to join in the debate, and I look forward to what he has to bring to it.

So I would like some answers and some overview about what is happening with that Supernet. Is there a way to save it at this point? Can there be another way of approaching this, or has a whole bunch of money been spent and nothing is going to come of it? There were a lot of promises made. I think it is a good idea, and I think that in a province where we have concentrations of population as we do but then we have very vital centres out there in the rural areas that we want to communicate with and we want to have working with us and up to speed, so to speak – I don't want to see this project fail, but I have the feeling that it's going to. So could I get some information about that, please?

The Premier mentioned high usage in Alberta. Now, I've recently heard 61 percent. I'm not sure if I heard that from the Premier tonight but high usage definitely. Is the Premier aware of whether that high usage is in fact individual households or whether it's just usage, period, in the province? I wonder, given the amount of high-tech business that we're encouraging in the province and also the number of computers that must be used in those office towers in Calgary directing all that oil around . . . [Ms Blakeman's speaking time expired] I will come back and finish this.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: Hon. Premier, would you like to respond at this stage?

MR. KLEIN: Well, Mr. Chairman, some questions I can respond to, and others will be dealt with either in written form or when the appropriate ministers appear before Committee of Supply.

Relative to the so-called highway 2 mentality – although it has nothing to do with my estimates – no such mentality exists other than perhaps someone driving down highway 2, and if they get locked into a mentality relative to the highway, I guess that's one of the manifestations of driving, but it has nothing to do with politics whatsoever. If you will look at the 74 members of this caucus, they come from all corners of the province, and very few of them are along highway 2. As a matter of fact, they're all over, in every corner of the province. You know, I could say the same about the Liberal caucus. With the exception of one they must have an Edmonton mentality, because they're all confined to Edmonton. No, Mr. Chairman, we don't have a highway 2 mentality. We have an Alberta mentality. An Alberta mentality. That's why we're the government.

Relative to Supernet, I alluded to Supernet as a magnificent project to wire the province. The hon. minister will be appearing, as I understand, before the Committee of Supply and has indicated to me that he'll be very happy to answer all of the questions that have been asked relative to this particular project and respond to the allegations, I believe unfounded in many cases, with respect to the value and the worth of the Internet project. I'm sure that the opposition Liberals will have patience and await his reply.

Relative to the Auditor General's comments re the academic health issue, I have the report of the Auditor General here. It's quite detailed and it's quite lengthy, but I will undertake to get a written answer.

One interesting observation that was made alludes to the Public Affairs Bureau and their measuring of outcomes and recording the levels of satisfaction. It actually started in about 1998, and we started to do that as the result of the Liberal opposition of the day accusing the government of having no record or no list to show a measure of outcome, so this was developed. Indeed, it is very, very telling if you take some time to read the figures, especially going back to 2000-2001, and I'm talking about key performance measures relative to "public satisfaction with government communications in priority areas." Those priority areas are health and education, infrastructure, children's services, and so on, a number of other core businesses.

Mr. Chairman, this is very, very hard to assess, because everything that we do in this Legislature – in the Legislature – is political, and everything that we attempt to do is opposed. There is something very, very interesting in these figures, and figures are worth while if you take the time to read and interpret those figures. It says that in the year 2000-2001 there was 58 percent satisfaction with government communications in priority areas. One of those areas was health. I would remind the Liberal Party that in the year 2000, heading into the 2000 election, there was probably one of the most massive, deliberate campaigns of misinformation that I've ever experienced in my political life relative to Bill 11. Yes, we tried to get the facts out. We tried to get the truth out. We used all the mechanisms that were available to us to get legitimate facts out and bring some legitimacy to the argument. The emotional claptrap – I can't think of any other word – of the Liberals and the NDs was hard to overcome, but if you look at what happened as we neared the 2001 election, people started to believe. Of course, the manifestation of it all, of the misinformation campaign and the manifestation of a good, true, honest campaign of solid information, was the election in March of 2001, when this government got 74 out of 83 seats. That is effective communication, and that is the way you read figures. No wonder they don't like these figures, because those figures decimated the Liberal Party in 2001 to seven members. So the figures are valid. I can understand why they don't like the figures. I mean, if I were sitting over there, I wouldn't like the figures either.

Relative to the question vis-a-vis the Internet and Internet regulation, again, it's not in my estimates, but one of the hon. members alluded to it. We do indeed have consumer protection legislation as it relates to products advertised on the Internet and purchases made through the Internet. I understand from the hon. Minister of Government Services that the legislation that was developed in Alberta is being used as a template for similar legislation being enacted across this country, Mr. Chairman. I'm told that we do have more than adequate legislation and regulation in place to protect consumers from Internet scams.

So those were all the questions that were asked, and those are all the answers I have to provide. Thank you.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: Hon. members, for the rest of the hour any other hon. member of this Assembly is able to stand up and ask questions, and the hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar has indicated that he wishes to speak.

REV. ABBOTT: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I was just going to make a few comments on the record with regards to some of the comments from across the way. First of all, I'm glad that we also have this opportunity to rise and to talk in Committee of Supply and especially to address the areas of Executive Council. I would agree that it's great to see the Premier here tonight, and it's just too bad that the Leader of the Official Opposition isn't here as well.

MS BLAKEMAN: Point of order.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre is rising on a point of order.

Point of Order Referring to the Absence of Members

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I am aware that you may not have caught that, but certainly it's well known that in this Assembly we don't comment on the presence or absence of any given member. Perhaps he could be corrected.

REV. ABBOTT: Mr. Chairman, I apologize. That was completely uncalled for. Oh, look; he's coming into the Assembly now as we speak.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar has apologized. You can proceed now, sir.

Debate Continued

REV. ABBOTT: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I think it would be important, though, to point out that as the Premier talked about the $15 million budget and how that has either stayed the same or actually decreased, we see that there are a lot of efficiencies happening within the Executive Council. We see that as the efficiencies are happening, the satisfaction levels are going up. In fact, the members across the way did mention the excellent work of the Public Affairs Bureau. They mentioned what a good job they're doing, and I'm glad to see that they could mention that, because the fact of the matter is that most of what we hear from across the way is very, very negative. In fact, in the last year I have to stress my disappointment in how all that seems to happen, especially during Committee of Supply, is that all we hear is negativity and all we hear is just endless, endless talk about nothing. It would be nice to have an effective opposition that would bring up some serious points so that we can answer some of these questions.

But getting back to the topic, the performance measurements, as you can see, are very, very, high. That's one of the things that I really like about this Executive Council business plan here as I look at it. All the departments strive to meet the highest performance measurements. As we can see, over the past three years, the ones that we have recorded here, they've been able to meet those. These three-year plans also are something that I know the constituents of Drayton Valley-Calmar are very interested in. They like this. They like to know where the government is going. Again, it seems that we have either met or exceeded in many cases the performance measures that have been laid out.

I look into the estimates here in the area of goal 1, to "increase communications with Albertans in the areas they identify as top priorities," and see the eighth bullet, where it talks about:

Continue the dialogue with Albertans on all priority areas related to kindergarten to grade 12 and post-secondary learning; work with student groups to improve awareness, access to and planning for post-secondary supports; improve information provided to parents related to curriculum and other areas.

It's great to see this, and it's great to see this government and this Premier committed to education.

I know that this topic came up this morning in some of our discussions, and the Premier outlined the fact that he has completed his grade 12, that he's completed his college, that he's now in university, and that he personally is committed to improving his own education. In fact, he's even proven that in his great abilities that he has displayed and demonstrated in his use of computers, Mr.

Chairman. It's excellent leadership that I know many Albertans are following. I know that, again, the people of my constituency are glad to know that our Premier is committed to high-quality education and that he himself is a part of that process.

Mr. Chairman, I'm going to end with just a general comment on being wired, saying that our province is 60 percent wired. Again, I know that that leads the country. To hear that 4.7 million hits on the government web site through Alberta Connects and through the Public Affairs Bureau, et cetera, have happened is something great. I know, again, that it's the Premier's office that is leading the way in making those connections available, and as the Premier alluded to, the only highway 2 mentality that he holds is the two-way street on communications that he has very excellently outlined for us this evening.

So, Mr. Chairman, in conclusion I'd just like to say that I hope we don't hear further unfounded and unsubstantiated negative comments from the Liberals, because we know exactly where those are leading, and we know exactly what they have done for them in the past.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: Hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, are you rising on a point of order?

MS BLAKEMAN: No. I don't think that's necessary at this point.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The chair recognizes the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you very much. Well, that was very sweet from the Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar. I actually thought the Premier was doing very well in defending his department. I didn't think that he really needed a champion, but it was darn nice of the Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar to get up and just try and pitch strikes for his boss. [interjection] Yeah, hat tricks and flip-flops. That'd be interesting to see.

Well, just a couple more points that I wanted to make or questions that I had around what the Premier had raised already. I think we're doing very well as a government and as a Legislature with the information that we're putting out on the web sites. I know there's great competition between the different ministries about who has the better web site, and there are pools and bets and all kinds of things that go on about who has the best one. Fine. I'm finding this very helpful both in my constituency office and in being able to refer my constituents to get direct information off various ministry web sites. I think we've actually done a pretty good job in that.

I particularly am using and enjoying and very proud of what we've done on the Legislative Assembly web site. For the first time constituents, citizens in Alberta are now able to have a look at bills that have been proposed in the House within a 24-hour time period. They can go to the Assembly web site and pull down that menu and download and print off any bill that has been brought forward in the House, that has been tabled in the House, which is excellent.

I think one of the most important things that we do in here is find out what our constituents are thinking, what's important to them, and to get their feedback and establish a feedback loop with them about new legislation that's being proposed in the Assembly. This is excellent. I'm able to phone or send out an e-mail to different groups that have expressed an interest to me on a given subject in the past and say: "That bill is up now. It was introduced today. Go to the Assembly web site." They can print it off themselves and then e-mail me their feedback on it, which is excellent.

I'm certainly supportive of any attempt to get the Alberta Gazette on-line. I realize that this is not a particularly easy task. One of the issues that I have brought up many times in the past here and will continue to bring up is how difficult it is for citizens to access and to understand what's happening with orders in council and particularly with regulations being introduced and changes in regulations. If you're not part of this Assembly – and I think probably even for some people that are part of this Assembly – being on top of when regulations have been changed that affect the interpretation of a given statute is very hard. I think that to have the Alberta Gazette on-line would be a very valuable service, and I certainly encourage the department and the Premier to pursue that.

Two other points I wanted to touch on briefly. Another very useful program that Public Affairs Bureau had was the calendar that they produced, the special-days calendar. I notice that it's no longer going to be produced by Public Affairs Bureau. Now, perhaps I've missed this and it's gone to another department or someone else is doing this, but the last time I downloaded it, which was a couple of days ago – it used to come through visitor services – there was a little note on the bottom that says that Public Affairs Bureau is no longer doing this. This is the one where it says: this month is national lung cancer month and daffodil month, this day is soil conservation day, and this is such-and-such a week. I certainly used it a lot. It was a very valuable source also for other groups to be able to quickly access all of these bits of information about what special day it is. That seems to have disappeared, so I'm wondering why. Maybe I was the only person using it. I'd be interested in knowing if the service has been cut. If it has, why? What was the usage of it? If it went somewhere else, where did it go? I haven't been able to discover that.

Now, the last point I wanted to talk about. When we look under goal 3, "improve the efficiency and coordination of communications across government" – I'm on page 152 of the business plan – the second bullet is talking about building "on the human resource programs and supports available to staff" and achieving "goals set out in the Corporate Human Resource Development Strategy," and this is including the Alberta government ambassador program, training, and the corporate executive development initiative. I'm wondering if the Premier can expand a bit on any new initiatives that are taking place under this section, or is this carrying on with what was put in place previously?

I know that we're in an odd situation in that we need good people in our civil service to support the work that we're doing but more importantly to support and provide the programming and services to the citizens of Alberta, and at the same time the government is fighting against an impression that the bureaucracy is not an efficient deliverer of service, that there's red tape. You know, there are all kinds of negative connotations involved with the civil service there. So, on the one hand, we know that we need really good people, but it seems to have a very bad reputation right now. We've also lost, you know, the government has cut, a lot of staff positions. The Premier himself was just talking about dropping one or two FTEs, full-time equivalents, in this budget year. So these programs are put in place to start to turn that around and to highlight the good work that was being done. I'm looking for an update on this. Are we looking at any new initiatives here, or is this a stay the course sort of year that we're in right now?

Under the core businesses and goals that particular goal ends up with government client satisfaction as the measurement, which again is one that the target for 2001-02 to 2004-05 is 75 percent, and once again it's some sort of satisfaction poll, so this is not, I think, as useful as it could be both to the government department and to the public that is interested in monitoring this.

So those are the additional questions and points that I wanted to raise with the Premier, and I'm perfectly willing to accept the responses in writing.

Thank you very much.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It has been terrific to watch the debate so far. I'm sorry that I was a bit late. I was at a meeting at a school in my constituency. Actually, it's in one of the wealthiest neighbourhoods of Edmonton, and they were struggling over how they're going to afford computers to hook up to the Supernet when it arrives. So, anyway, I did miss . . .

MR. KLEIN: What school? I'm going to go there and find out.

DR. TAFT: The school is Laurier Heights.

MR. KLEIN: I'll make a note of that.

DR. TAFT: They'll be delighted actually. They asked me tonight to raise the issue, so I am delighted. I'll contact them tomorrow.

MS BLAKEMAN: Instant turnaround.

DR. TAFT: Yeah, that's performance. Thank you, Mr. Premier.

I'm not sure how we got into the Supernet discussion. I won't dwell on that, but it's a good concept. I, like my colleagues here, am concerned about the execution, and I'm hearing worries about how it's going to come off, but I'm sure that we will be reassured.

It was interesting also that the Premier raised Bill 11 from a couple of years ago and the role of the public communications branch in that and the expenditures and how the government was able to maintain a 58 percent approval rating, I think, throughout that process. I would be delighted to learn, if we can go back there, what the expenditures of the government were on its whole campaign around Bill 11.

MR. KLEIN: Nowhere near the expenditures of the unions, the Liberals, the NDs, and all the friends of who, what Title, and where and why.

DR. TAFT: Well, the people being held accountable tonight are the government. At least, we're trying to hold the government accountable. So that's one of my questions. I didn't initially raise Bill 11, but I'm interested in it. I always will be.

I'm now switching to the business plans, and just a few things have caught my eye as I've gone through the business plans for the Executive Council. On page 151 there is goal 1, which is to "increase communications with Albertans in the areas they identify as top priorities." The third bullet talks about:

Assist in the communications and promotion of key economic development plans included in the government's Economic Development Strategy, such as industry diversification.

We're all, I think, concerned about diversification in the Alberta economy and our dependence on the oil and gas industries for government revenues and for job creation in general. I'm concerned about the accuracy of some statements from time to time that have been raised on this issue, and I'm thinking back to a couple of very bold government statements made last year in terms of the idea that the Alberta economy was no longer reliant on the petroleum industry for stability, that we had outgrown the petroleum industry, and that it was no longer the core of Alberta's economy. In fact, I think that recent events have shown that it is. So I would encourage as much accuracy and precision as possible in the implementation of that particular goal.

Moving through some of the other issues here. I'm sure that the Premier still has a southern office, but I don't believe that there are any details broken out for that office in the budget here. So I'd be interested to know what the expenses are for the Premier's southern office, what they're proposed to be for this year, how that would compare to last year, and, along that line, how many FTEs were employed in the southern office last year as compared to how many are planned to be employed this year. Just to get a little bit more detail.

As well, on the issue of detail and clarity I haven't gone and compared it to every other department, but I suspect that it's the case. Every other department has a line item for the deputy minister's office in that department, but the estimates on Executive Council do not have details on the chief of staff office for the Premier. So it would be useful to have that information, and it would be consistent, then, with all the departments across the government. That would be a bit of useful information.

There's also curiously – surely it's the smallest number in the entire set of estimates. Under Revenue, page 175, premiums, fees, and licences for 2000-01 actual were $1,000. I'm just curious to know how the Executive Council would earn $1,000. Then the other category under that is Other Revenue, which is estimated at being $2 million for this year. Other revenue: other compared to what? There's no other here. We have no clue at all on page 175 what's included in other revenues. Normally other revenue is sort of a catchall after listing several categories. When other revenue is the only category, then it's just a very curious kind of entry. So if the Premier could tell us what other revenue is, that would be useful.

I think that that's enough. My remarkable colleagues from Edmonton-Centre and Edmonton-Ellerslie have carried the debate very effectively, and if we get answers to questions we've had, I'm sure we'll be delighted. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. the Premier.

MR. KLEIN: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I thank the hon. member for his questions and his comments.

Mr. Chairman, relative to oil and gas I have said on many occasions that our dependency on that resource is reducing and that we are no longer as dependent on oil and gas today as we were perhaps 10 or 15 years ago, when it used to account for about I believe it was 40 percent of the province's total revenue. That's down now to about 20 percent, and there has been tremendous diversification. That's not to say that oil and gas is not important to the economy. Indeed, it still is the engine that drives the economy along with agriculture. These are the two primary industries in the province of Alberta. But we are moving and making great strides to diversify our economy, including the oil and gas industry, by adding value to oil and natural gas products. The petrochemical industry: if you go through Joffre and see what's happening there or Fort Saskatchewan, if you see what's happening in the oil sands, you will see tremendous diversification as it relates to cogeneration relative to the development of power.

Oil and gas are extremely important to the province, but there has been tremendous diversification. Yes, relative to the revenues it still has tremendous impact, especially gas, and we saw the effects of that last year in particular, maybe a little over a year ago, when the price of natural gas went to I think an all-time high of about $10. So it has an impact on the economy, and it has an impact on our provincial budgeting, but we are diversifying, and we're doing it, I think, very effectively.

I'm so happy that the hon. member got around to the estimates, because that's what I thought Committee of Supply was all about: the estimates. He did ask relative to the southern office and who works there. I can only speak to the Executive Council staff. I do know that we donate a portion of the building as a government – and I would hope that the opposition has no problems with this – to the Calgary Homeless Foundation. They do very effective work out of that building. I know that the Alberta Economic Development Authority is headquartered at McDougall Centre, again under the Department of Economic Development.

I know that there are some support service people there at McDougall Centre relative to the staff of Executive Council. There are five people who are directly under Executive Council: the executive director, of course, Gordon Olsen; a secretary, Joyce Austin; receptionist Lea Roberts; a secretary, Helena Gryckiewicz; and a communications manager, Jim Law. All the rest are assigned to various departments including, I believe, Queen's Printer and some other storefront services and government services that are run out of McDougall Centre but are under the control and direction of other departments and ministries, Mr. Chairman.

With respect to the office of the Premier, the 2002-2003 estimate numbers detailed by type of spending are as follows: for the office of the Premier including the protocol officers – and I mentioned the protocol officers that have moved from international and intergovernmental affairs to Executive Council – there was a total of $3.6 million in salaries, wages, and benefits; $870,000 in supplies and services; $141,000 in financial transactions and other items. That includes the Premier's salary plus payments for agenda and priority members Carol Haley, Janis Tarchuk, and Yvonne Fritz. These are three private members, one of whom, of course, is the whip. It's been a dramatic change relative to how we deal with agenda and priorities. For the first time we've incorporated private members into that very important part of the planning process.

There are also salaries that have to be paid for the office of the Lieutenant Governor: $140,000 in salaries, wages, and benefits; $115,000 in supplies and services. Three full-time employees are assigned to the Lieutenant Governor's office.

The Public Affairs Bureau of course has a much larger budget: about $8.2 million in salaries, wages, and benefits; $2.2 million in supplies and services. That is for 127 full-time employees.

I don't have a breakdown relative to the salaries for each and every specific employee, including Mr. Elzinga – I know that the hon. member alluded to Mr. Elzinga – but I don't think that that's a problem. Virtually everyone's salary in government is public. At least I think it is; is it not? But I can tell you that in the Premier's office we have Mr. Elzinga; Joan Zowtuk, who is the secretary; the executive assistant to the Government House Leader, David Gillies; the deputy chief of staff, Jamie Davis; special assistant, Pam Livingston; director of my scheduling, Heidi Inkpen; my administrative assistant, Nargis Zaver; secretary in my office, Colleen Marouelli; receptionist, Colleen Borden; receptionist, Lynn Hall, who has been here, well, certainly since the days of Lougheed and maybe even before that. The list goes on and on and on. I mean, I could read the list.

We have people, of course, in the correspondence branch. We have people in the Premier's communications branch, including the director, Gordon Turtle; the assistant, Marisa Etmanski; the assistant, Linda Bates; and co-ordinator, Joanne Rosnau. The Calgary office I already alluded to. Then in the Executive Council's office there's also the Deputy Minister of Executive Council, Julian Nowicki, and the list goes on and on there. He's got 15 people working under him. Then in protocol, of course, there are six individuals. I don't have the breakdown and the salaries for each and every one of these.

What is the $2 million in revenue? I'm advised that it's sales from the Queen's Printer's various publications. The $1,000 in fees – I wish someone up there could write a little bit better. I have no idea. I'll tell you what. I'll just hand it over to you, and you see if you can decipher it.

Is the 60 percent Internet usage figure individual households? Yes, it is households. I can read that. Sixty percent of households use the Internet in Alberta. Okay. Thank you; I can read that. This other one, I can't make out hide nor hair, but obviously there is an answer to the $1,000. So I'll get someone to write clearer, and we'll get you a better answer.

I think those are all the questions, and I tried to answer them to the best of my ability. Thank you.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. We'd like to thank the Premier and his staff for some of those answers which were quite complete and some which we expect to be more complete as time progresses.

You know, I can't stand here, Mr. Chairman, without responding to some degree to the Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar's comments.

MR. KLEIN: Oh, okay. I've got the answer on that.

MS CARLSON: Would you like to stand up and give the answer now, and then I'll carry on?

MR. KLEIN: I don't know if you're going to like the answer. I finally figured it out. We earned this money through fees that were paid through FOIP requests and primarily by the Liberal opposition.

MS CARLSON: There goes our research budget. You're right; we don't like that answer very much. I certainly will include the fee schedules as a part of the FOIP review that we're currently undertaking. Certainly there's somebody else that you can get the money from, you know. [interjection] Oh, you know, that's actually a very good question. In fact, my colleague from Edmonton-Centre raises a very good point.

AN HON. MEMBER: That's a first.

MS CARLSON: Well, she raises a lot more good points than you do, but that's another topic which is good for at least a 20-minute debate.

While we really wouldn't want to say that we're all that similar to the government in the way we operate, for money transfers it is the same organization. So when you transfer from one party organization to another, it's a transfer technically, not really revenue. So that should probably be clarified in the statements.

A follow-up question on those statements too. That Queen's Printer revenue: is it on a cost recovery basis, or are there profit margins built into it? Now, I know from the FOIP requests that while we feel that the fees are often exorbitant, they aren't cost recovery for the most part. But in terms of the other revenue that was generated there, if we could have that question answered.

Before the Premier could figure out how to read the notes, I was just going to refer back to some of the comments made by Drayton Valley-Calmar. We are definitely going to put him on the Christmas list for a pair of pom-poms. In my experience watching what goes on in this Legislature, that kind of cheerleading is not an instant move up to the front benches. He's trying hard, but I'm not sure how successful he's going to be. [interjection] Yes. Well, that's right; he really didn't need to defend the Premier. The Premier did a very good job of that on his own, including one of his occasional pastimes, Mr. Chairman, which definitely would be Liberal bashing. Some of the stuff that he said was in terms of everything that happens in here is being in opposition, and Drayton Valley-Calmar picked up on that by saying that we didn't have anything good to say. Well, in fact, we did have some compliments in the first parts of our discussions where the Premier and his staff and the department were deserving of them. In fact, I would like to remind the Member for Drayton Valley-Calmar that we have brought forward some very good ideas in this Legislature over the years.

AN HON. MEMBER: Name one.

MS CARLSON: Well, let's talk about a stability fund for one of them. Let's talk about Alice Hanson's bill that ultimately got passed as a government bill in this Assembly. Let's talk about freedom of information, which was the Premier's very first bill in one session. Let's talk about things like benchmarking, which was first part of Laurence Decore's political platform. Let's talk about some of the things that this government has entertained over the years, like talking about best practices and efficiency audits. Those were the kinds of ideas that came from the Official Opposition. So everything that we say isn't in opposition. In fact, you know, if that's your belief, we're going to keep a little closer track and remind you of every time we vote with the government, because according to the calculations I have here, 75 to 80 percent of the time we actually vote with the government at the end of the day on the bills.

9:40

What do we bring forward? The concerns that we hear from people and efficiencies and ways of improving. How do we make them heard by this government? Sometimes you need a two-by-four to hear any opposition, and we have often seen – in fact, there was just an ag bill that came up that we passed in the last week before we recessed for the spring that our leader made an amendment to and that was accepted by the government and was passed under his name. So don't say that all we do is oppose what happens in here, because our goal is to strengthen what happens, and in fact most of the time we end up voting with these folks, except when they are completely out of line on some of the issues. Then it is our responsibility to keep their feet to the fire and to bring up dissenting views in the province. I bring that up because the Premier talked about it, and it certainly is within the mandate of the review of estimates to respond to any statements made by the ministers or the Premier or comments in rebuttal.

I do have a whole list of questions that I wish to get through before our time limit is up here for this evening, so I'll start with them, and then I intend to come back to some of the comments that were made, not the least of which is those satisfaction polls, which still seem to be of concern. The web page visits and the protocol office are some other issues that I want to talk about.

First of all, one of the things that we saw in program 1 is a title change from the office of the Premier/general administration to office of the Premier/Executive Council. It's not often that titles are changed like that. Does this mean that there is some internal change in focus? What would the reason be for having done that? So if we could get that.

The Premier kindly provided some detail in terms of salary expenses, but there's quite a bit more there that he didn't have and that we would appreciate receiving in writing at some point, and that's the gross operating expenses of $4.616 million that is directed for the Premier's office and Executive Council. So we got some breakdown of wages, but the other items within that framework we would like to hear about, specifically travel expenses, advertising, telephone and communications, contract services, professional technical labour services, data processing services, hosting, and other purchase services.

The Premier talked about the movement of the protocol office out of international and intergovernmental affairs, and it's probably a good idea. Drayton Valley-Calmar, are you listening? I said it's probably a good idea to have done that. No doubt, visiting dignitaries would always want to meet with the Premier. That's the main focus of their coming here: to meet with the government. They also like to come and see what's happening in the Assembly. I know that the number of visits increases significantly when we are sitting, and likely it is better handled through Executive Council instead of through international and intergovernmental affairs. But I don't see any specific dollar allocations there or staffing. I'm assuming from that that the staffing requirements, the additional roles, have just been absorbed into the existing complement. If that isn't the case, could you let me know? Do those costs come under hosting, or are they combined with some other expenses? If we could get a breakdown of those, that would be helpful for us.

In terms of really understanding what goes on in the office of the Premier, it would be helpful for us if we could know the types of weekly and monthly reports that are prepared, particularly with regard to tracking the views of Albertans, particularly on the key hot buttons, which for as long as I've been elected certainly include public health care and public education. Also, in terms of private clinics and private hospitals policy and tax reform, that would be information that would be helpful to us. Now, we know that there is a lot of correspondence with the Premier on these issues and that there are a lot of phone calls. We know from the feedback we get that people aren't always satisfied. They seem to think that the correspondence goes into some big room where the door is opened, the correspondence is tossed in, and the door is quickly shut, and that's the beginning and end of it. Lots of the comments we get back are that the information doesn't seem to have been responded to. So if we could get some comments on that. Does the Premier reply to every letter that's sent to him, or if not, is it tracked in some fashion? Is that information shared with the sender of the letter? Also, the same goes with phone calls.

It's interesting to note that the Premier talks about – and we see it documented – the high satisfaction levels. Particularly, the Premier talked about – I believe I wrote this down right – 58 percent satisfaction, with one of the areas being health. We get lots and lots of complaints from people who say that they can't get through on the phone lines or that sometimes the people who answer the phones are rude. I was going to say not polite, but I think rude is even a nice way of saying what people share with us. They get handed off, and they're not satisfied with what happens there. Clearly, there's some sort of a communication glitch in that office. So if we could get some information on how that is handled. Do they have a phone bank for times when hot issues are the topic of the day, when there may be an overflow of calls or communications? Anyway, if you could give us some detail on what happens there, how that's handled, and how those particular complaints fit into the client satisfaction criteria that the government has developed. When we see those numbers, there seems to be some disconnect between what's recorded and what we're hearing. You know, even if we're only hearing from 1 percent of the dissatisfied people, that's quite a few people. So if we could get some information on that.

In addition, some more detail on the steps that are taken by the office to follow up or respond to concerns that are expressed by Albertans through monthly and weekly reports. It seems to us from questions asked in the Assembly and information available out in the general public that there was inadequate tracking of correspondence received regarding the year 2000's Bill 11 as well as the policy that was released prior to the bill's introduction. It's still an issue of importance to people, and there don't appear to be any documentation or records from the Premier's office regarding the correspondence received. Now, maybe there is, and you just don't want to share it with us. Let us know, at least.

The Premier referred to the vast amounts of money that were spent by various groups in the Bill 11 debate for what he said was misinformation. Well, of course, from our perspective there wasn't a great deal of misinformation there, and I have to tell you that between our offices and our party less than $100,000 was spent on the total information we had. This government keeps opposition in this province on such a tight financial leash that we can hardly breathe, never mind have access to dollars to mass any kind of huge marketing campaigns. That has been the sole ability of the government with their advertising budgets. So, once again, I add my voice to the voice of my colleagues who have asked for some detail on how much money was really spent there in communications.

So let's talk about communication from here and all the cross-communication that was done through a variety of departments, because no doubt this is a David and Goliath situation in this province in terms of the ability to spend dollars on marketing. We know in this time that we live in that to have your voice heard requires a lot of money and a lot of marketing expertise, both of which are in short supply on our side and in large supply on that side. So I certainly am not very pleased with the Premier's comments on how much money was spent. I have no clue how much was spent by other people, but I know that from our perspective it was very, very, few dollars.

Could the Premier or his staff tell us how much of the $4.6 million in expenses will be allocated to policy co-ordination and business planning? You know, if there is a shortfall in this government, it certainly is their ability to do long-term strategic planning and to do the follow-through. We've heard some comments about that in terms of meeting the benchmarks in the business plans, and definitely this department, that is so good at communicating, I think could do a great service to the government in general if they were also to put a little heavier focus on strategic planning, implementation, co-ordination, and actual business planning, business planning in terms of business models, not the framework that this government has built that doesn't actually have the accountable benchmarks and benchmarks that are tied to actions that are implemented by the government, which has of course been an ongoing concern of the former Auditor General as well.

Also, I am wondering if there are any dollars allocated specifically to supporting standing policy committees. That's always a contentious issue with us. We believe that standing policy committees should be all-party committees because committees that are paid by the taxpayers of the province should be open, accountable, and accessible to all elected officials, as they are in other jurisdictions and certainly at the federal level. The outcome of that is policy that can only be strengthened, because we do sometimes have some good ideas. Anyone in a business planning model will know that when you surround yourself with people who think like you do, you don't always get the very best results. You need a little contention. You need the occasional dustup. You need somebody to challenge the thinking processes. The outcome of that is much better policy and, I would think, a more effective government. It isn't like we would be able to overturn any government decisions – we would be so few in numbers – but what we would be is another thought process at the table. Instead, this government chooses to run the standing policy committees like extensions of their caucus, and if that's what they want to do, then people on those committees should not be paid. That is just a flat-out abuse of taxpayers' dollars, and they need to change it. If you want them to be internal caucus policy development committees, then don't pay the people on those committees with taxpayer dollars. Pay them out of your own budget if you want to but not from taxpayer funds. So that's, I think, my point on that.

The Premier answered the questions that I was going to ask about the office of the Lieutenant Governor, and I thank him for that. Also, I think he answered how much is allocated to the chief of staff for his office. I know he talked about salaries. Is that public information? If so, we'd like to know it.

Some more questions on the chief of staff. Does the chief of staff have the same rein and responsibilities that a deputy minister has? If not, what exactly would those responsibilities be? How, in fact, does the Premier define the role of the chief of staff, and what is his mandate?

I'd like to spend a little bit of time talking about the Premier's Advisory Council on Health. This year that controversial report was released talking about the introduction of changes to the health care system that certainly will see a promotion of privatization and a downloading of costs on individual Albertans. Some of that we saw already implemented in this budget. But in spite of the huge impact that this is going to have on Albertans over time, we don't really know very much about the council and its proceedings, so could we have a breakdown of the costs to Executive Council regarding the selection, proceedings, research, and public relations for this advisory council on health? We know the costs to the department of health, but we don't know them in terms of this department. So if we could have that.

Also, will the Premier provide a breakdown of the costs on this council for any outside firms hired or retained by Executive Council to provide services of any kind for this council? We would like copies of any polling, focus group testing, or public relations exercises conducted by or for the Public Affairs Bureau regarding health care in Alberta and copies of correspondence between Executive Council and members of the Premier's Advisory Council on Health, including its chair, Don Mazankowski. Now, of course, the problem is that you're never going to give it to us, and we're going to have to FOIP it, so we're going to be transferring moneys back into your department. But it's fair to ask for this information, it's fair for the government to provide it, and we would hope that that would happen.

Could we also have a copy of the goals, mandate, and directives given to this council by Executive Council? It would be very helpful for us to know that. We need a breakdown of any work – a cost breakdown is particularly what I'm looking for – done by the Public Affairs Bureau for either the Premier's Advisory Council on Health or the Alberta government's Health First initiative.

THE DEPUTY CHAIR: We have three more minutes left. Does the Premier wish to make any remarks?

MR. KLEIN: Well, I can just make a few remarks relative to my chief of staff, Mr. Elzinga. I've already alluded to his salary. I just don't know what it is, but I'm sure it's public information, as are the salaries of all senior public service employees.

Relative to his duties the list is almost endless, Mr. Chairman. He looks after just about everything. You know, as much as I appreciate the public service and have great appreciation for public service employees, people don't know them. They don't know the public service employees like they know the Premier's office, and that's why I get stacks and stacks of mail. They don't write to, I would even say, the Liberal opposition as much as they write to me, and I deal with literally a dozen or more issues, different issues, entirely different, each and every day. I can't possibly – there simply isn't enough time – address each and every one of those issues personally.

So Peter and I go over the list of issues. He then contacts the appropriate person within the administration, within the minister's department, or perhaps the minister directly or the minister's executive assistant to make sure that there is follow-up and there is action on these concerns that are brought to my attention. In addition to looking after the concerns that I bring to him, there are countless hundreds of people who have access to Peter who phone him directly and say: "Can you check this out on my behalf? Can you do this on my behalf? Can you do that on my behalf?" So I would like to see anyone in the Liberal opposition come up with any person who works half as hard as Peter Elzinga on behalf of the people of this province to address their concerns.

Relative to the other issues, Mr. Chairman, I could go on at great length, you know, with respect to the Premier's Advisory Council on Health and some of the issues and questions that were brought up by the hon. member, but they will be well recorded in Hansard, and we will attempt to get her the appropriate answers.

Thank you very much, sir.

Second Reading

Bill 14
Gaming and Liquor Amendment Act, 2002

[Adjourned debate March 18: Mr. Stevens]

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thanks very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm rising to speak in second reading on Bill 14, the Gaming and Liquor Amendment Act, 2002. I will be speaking on the principles of what's being brought forward in this bill. I haven't decided yet whether or not to support the bill. There are certain sections that I do support. There are other sections that I have some real concerns about. I have sent the bill out into the community and through the various stakeholder groups to see what they have to say about it. Some of that I've received back. So I will be putting forward some questions, and I'm sure that the minister will make note of them and get me a response as soon as possible.

There are three issues in this bill that I want to talk about tonight. The first is around some of the sort of housekeeping changes that are being brought forward here, and some of those have come about basically through experience with the Gaming and Liquor Act up until now, just things that we've learned or that operators have learned or the AGLC has learned while this legislation has been operational, and therefore the changes are being asked for as a result of that. I think there's also an expansion of gaming here, and I also have a concern and some questions about moving away from a charitable model.

It's put out here that the changes that are being brought about by this bill are a result of the gaming review that was held by the department. I'm still interested and still awaiting a more thorough list of exactly who got consulted with. I've been told things like, you know, bingo groups but without being told where they were or who they were. I know it's of interest to me. There's some controversy in what's being proposed here, and I am aware of people in Edmonton even – some of them would argue one way and some would argue the other. So I'm interested in the choices that the minister has made here.

I hear the minister say repeatedly that the government is controlling gaming and it's making changes to control gaming, but really what I see are changes being made to expand gaming and not to control it at all. Perhaps that's just a difference of opinion on wording that the minister and I will always have. We'll see by the end of this bill.

Now, the sections that are the sort of we've learned from experience and want to change and update some of these are around things like minors and licensed facilities. I've got a couple of questions around the issues being brought up here. One of the ones that we've already heard and that was in the press release from the minister when the bill was introduced was that the staff would be held to a certain standard about not serving intoxicated persons. I actually had someone phone me and say: why is the staff being held to a different standard in this case than in any other case? Now, this is not about minors drinking but about intoxicated persons in gaming facilities. Why are these staff in the gaming facilities being held to a different standard about serving intoxicated persons than would be the staff, for example, in a pub or a bar? There is a different standard here. Why is there a different standard? Was that intentional or was it accidental on behalf of the ministry?

We also have some sections about permitting minors to be in licensed facilities like a casino or a racing entertainment centre. I want to come back to this definition of a racing entertainment centre. That's partly arising because we can't seem to quite decide what we want to do about minors and gaming. On the one hand, we seem to have a desire from some charitable groups that they want to be able to have minors as volunteers, for example, working their bingos, but then there's an abhorrence generally to exposing children to gaming. So, in that sense, we still look upon gaming as not a good activity or not a healthy, positive activity for children. I think it speaks volumes that charitable groups would still be looking to have minors working at their bingos, for example, because they really need the volunteers, that they're so desperate for volunteers and to keep their charitable status and to get that money coming in through the bingos that they would have youth on the floor.

An issue that has come up under this that was a real problem for some of the people I've spoken to is the whole thing of paying gaming workers, in essence, in the bingos. I know that that's been discussed by the Federation of Community Leagues. I've heard from some small theatre groups as well. An artistic director phoned me and said: "Why should I have my staff, who should be working on plays, out there working a bingo all afternoon once or twice a week trying to raise money when they should be in the theatre doing what they're actually trained to do? Let me hire and pay a worker five bucks an hour to be working these bingos and raising the money." On the other hand, I have the Edmonton Federation of Community Leagues saying: you know, this is money out of our pockets.

If this is allowed to happen, the feeling was that it would very quickly move to an accepted standard that there would always be more paid workers on the floor and that this could amount to a substantial loss of the revenue that the bingo associations would be taking in. We're talking millions of dollars, $6 million to $10 million, up to 20 percent of the total profit of all of the bingos in Alberta if we looked at using the figures from 2001, which were $51.1 million estimated profit on bingo in that year.

So I'm looking for a bit more detail from the minister on why that choice was made. Knowing who was lobbying him from both sides on that, why did the ministry make the choice they made to go that direction, and what do they think the long-term effect of that is going to be? For some groups who don't want to end up paying all of their floor workers, will they be able to maintain five years from now that way of doing things?

I'm just going to go back to the clauses that are in here about the workers in the casinos being held to a different standard than other food and beverage workers; for example, those working in a bar or a hotel or a restaurant. I'm wondering if there's an expectation, then, that there would be some other kind of law come into play here. What are the enforcement provisions that it's anticipated will go along with that? In other words, what citation is the police officer going to be able to give when they walk in there to deal with this episode after it's gotten out of hand? You know, who's going to get charged here and under what provision? Also I'm interested in how the enforcement is going to be paid for. Is it going to be paid for by the casino? Is it going to be deducted off the profits prior to the division of the profits between the casino and the charity? How is it anticipated that this is all going to be paid for?

Now, the minister and I both attended a conference on gaming that was put on by the Gaming Research Institute five weeks ago here in Edmonton. I know he wasn't able to attend the whole conference, but there was quite a bit of discussion about how little effort and staff power and financing we put into inspecting and monitoring our casinos. One of the major examples that was made was that New Zealand, for example, has an entire police detachment on-site. They also have a full contingent of gaming inspectors that are on-site in each of their casinos, and this can amount to up to 60 people that are looking at all of this. Maybe we're innocent or naive here in Alberta that we haven't looked at that. Are we being naive? Certainly there are examples in other parts of the world that we can look at, and they definitely have a lot more on-site inspection and enforcement than we do. Why are we making different choices here?

So I talked about some of the housekeeping changes and some questions that I had there. They don't all seem to be as innocent and straightforward as I was led to believe. I'd like to talk a bit more about expansion of gaming and moving away from a charitable model, and I think there are a number of things that come into play under this. One of the first things that I started to notice was the extension of hours in the casinos. Because we are supposed to have a charitable model in Alberta, that means that our nonprofits and charities supply volunteers to be the workers in casinos and bingos. That was an onerous enough task, to round up 60 volunteers from your group that could go in over a two-day time period to work a casino for you, but you raised a lot of money.

Now, it has pretty much always been the case that the waiting list between casinos was two years and sometimes more, so you had a lot riding on your one casino. When I saw that we were expanding the hours that the casino was open from midnight until 2 – and I think we're now up to 3 o'clock in the morning – I think this was to me marking the beginning of moving away from a strictly charitable volunteer model, because it became increasingly difficult to get your membership, those average citizens in Alberta, to volunteer practically all night long to work in your charitable casino. Really, especially for those people that were in the count room, which was often a dozen people, they didn't start counting until the casino closed, and if it closed at 3 o'clock, those people weren't walking out the door until 5 a.m. At the time I thought: hmm, I wonder if this is a way of pushing everyone towards having completely paid staff, because we just won't be able to muster the volunteers. Charities are still mustering the volunteers, but it is much more difficult than it used to be. You're practically having to ask someone to take the day off work in order to work those night casinos for you, so it's becoming even more of a donation from your supporters.

I'm putting it on the record that I have a suspicion that a negative outcome of all of this could be a couple of years down the road when the government turns around and says: well, you know, your group doesn't really have that many volunteers that are on the floor anymore; therefore, we think you shouldn't be getting as much of the proceeds out of this casino or bingo as you were. Certainly that comes into play with what's being put into this legislation, where we have the likelihood of the bingo workers being paid staff. Now, it's saying that the key workers will still be from the volunteer organization, but for those of you that have worked the bingos, we're talking about a paymaster here and probably the bonanza chairperson, and that's likely to be it. Those are the two people that are supposedly overseeing the money sort of coming in and out there.

That's a real fear for me, that my friend with this small theatre who wants to hire people because his own staff are needed to make the plays is therefore going to pay people 5 bucks an hour to work his bingos for him. Five years from now he's told: well, sorry; you used to make $1,500 a casino, but we're only going to allow you to have $750 now because it's not really a volunteer casino because you don't really have your volunteers out on the floor. I'm looking for an assurance on the record from the minister that that is not anticipated in a long-term plan. I think that if we're really going to stick to a charitable model and the minister really means it, he can put it on the record that there's no anticipation that things would flow in that direction, because to my eye they are flowing in that direction.

Another part that comes up in this legislation is the granting of facility licences. Now, previously those facility licences were very clearly granted to the bingo association, which was a conglomerate group of every club or nonprofit association or charity that joined together to form a given bingo association. But it was the bingo association that the licence went to. Therefore, all of those groups were in on the decision-making. That was appropriate, and the groups were willing to carry that workload. We're now anticipating in this legislation – and when we get into Committee of the Whole, I can talk about this sort of clause by clause – allowing the granting of that to an individual. In other words, you could have a manager or one club only that would be able to control the facility, and there are concerns being raised from the community about that.

Now, when we talk about control, one of the things that I've seen happen here – and it's been much in the media in the last few days, so the timing of this bill is most interesting. I thank the minister for delaying the debate on it so that we could in fact incorporate what is happening with the community lottery boards into this debate, because in fact the two do mesh here. We go back and look at what resulted from the 1998 municipal plebiscites around removal of VLTs from the community and the corresponding commitment from the government that there would be local decision-making and an amount of money returned to 88 regions in Alberta so that they would get some of the money that was being vacuumed out of their communities coming back to their communities by way of these community lottery board grants. I think that now that those community lottery boards have been completely cut in this budget, it does bring what's in this legislation into an entirely different light, because I think this does uphold my concern that we're really talking about expanding gaming and expanding gaming revenue for the government rather than controlling it on behalf of the citizens.

I'm going to run out of time right away, and I'm most interested in continuing this discussion. I will look to speak more on it in Committee of the Whole. Twenty minutes isn't enough to deal with this bill.

What I'm really seeing the minister do is not so much controlling gaming in the case of VLTs but expanding the opportunities for it. His response to the gaming review was to move VLTs from less well-producing locations into higher producing locations. This was his example of how he was controlling VLTs. That really lit the lightbulb for me about how this particular minister's take on controlling gaming was going to play out, which is why I'm looking for the assurances on the record. I'll return to this.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am quite happy to have an opportunity to respond to Bill 14, the Gaming and Liquor Amendment Act, 2002. It's nice to get this bill up and debated so that we can have some of the issues brought about and discussed in the Legislature.

Every time I see a bill that has to do with gaming and liquor, then I have some concerns, Mr. Speaker, because in the years that I've been in this Legislature, gaming revenue has contributed an increasing percentage of the revenues that this government uses to operate their budgets on. In fact, I believe it's reached such a percentage that it's an irrevocable piece of the inflows of revenue. We couldn't reverse the decisions in here even if we wanted to, and there is really a very good argument for reversing some of those decisions.

Liquor is the same thing. You know, we've seen some dramatic changes occur in this province since '93 both with regard to how gaming is organized and how liquor is organized in the province. I'll be the first to admit that I opposed liquor deregulation when it was first brought forward and the first to admit that in fact we were wrong about that. It's worked out quite well. I was very concerned at the time that the cropping up of all of these small liquor stores in the province would deliver unreasonable expectations for the business owners, because there would be a huge influx in the marketplace and I was very worried that they wouldn't have enough revenue generated in order to be able to stay in business over the long term. That turned out not to be true. It seems like Alberta has an unlimited capacity for corner liquor stores, and in fact they are on practically every corner. Certainly in my constituency this is true, and that leaves open a number of concerns in itself.

Talking about the changes that happened at that time, one of the biggest concerns that we faced and is still a concern for me is that in the course of privatization a number of the provincially owned buildings were sold for much less than their value. There were concerns raised at that time about who profited from that. Who was in line to be able to pick up those buildings at bargain-basement prices? For the most part, it seemed to be people who were a little better connected than others who got that first priority.

That raises a concern always when you talk about gaming or liquor revenues. Traditionally in a North American model these are the two areas that have historically been open to the greatest amount of abuse and have opened the most number of doors to criminal activities and those kinds of revenues. So we must always be vigilant when we talk about these issues, Mr. Speaker, to ensure that any changes made to legislation increase the degree of scrutiny, increase the reporting abilities, increase the legislative arm in these areas rather than decreasing them. This is an area where an eagle eye is required at all stages so that we can prevent the kinds of abuses that we have seen in these two industries in many jurisdictions and I daresay in this jurisdiction as well.

So every bill that comes before this Legislature dealing with gaming or liquor, particularly dealing with both, deserves the highest degree of scrutiny from this Legislature, and I would certainly hope that we are going to see the kinds of points raised that would parallel my thinking on this by other members in this Assembly. It has become the habit of all private members to participate to some degree in debate, and this is a bill where I very much look forward to seeing that kind of debate proceed, because it is an area that we very definitely have to be vigilant in our scrutiny of because there are some fairly substantive issues being discussed here, not the least of which are the offence provisions. I think those look like they're actually a good idea.

I'm not quite as thrilled with the new definition of the video lottery terminals, slot machines, and other gaming machines as gaming terminals. It's one of those situations where you wonder what the end intent is.

I still am a little unclear about the objectives that the government had in the changes they made for the Alberta Gaming and Liquor Commission to become part of the Ministry of Gaming and it acting as an agent of the government of Alberta now with both a board and a corporation. Is this operating like a Crown corporation would? They're stating that it's accountable to the Ministry of Gaming, but traditionally when we've seen other entities like this, the government has taken a very strong stand in terms of ditching any responsibility when problems arise, and problems always do arise. So is that the intent in going into this kind of a model? I think that that's a question that should be answered.

I would also like to know the criteria under which the board were named, because as I look at this list, Mr. Speaker, they look to me like a very interesting list of people who are friends of the government. It's not that they may not be qualified for the positions that they're fulfilling, but I certainly would like to see the criteria that existed for their recruitment. If we're going to have such a very important board overseeing what are logically going to be huge dollars and important decision-making occurring over the next few years, I think that it is incumbent upon this government to have ensured that the people who will be making these decisions are well qualified in terms of having the right kind of technical background to make the decisions. I know from reading this list that most of the people, I believe, have the expertise in terms of the size of organizations that they were with and the level of decision-making they had in previous lives, but it's a little bit of a concern for me on the technical side. So if the minister could provide that information to us in writing, it would be very helpful.

I'm not clear on the exact mandate of the board and the corporation, and I would like a little more information on that. As well, why a corporation? It's not a usual kind of framework to build. We're more commonly used to the delegated authorities, and this is a little different setup, so I'm wondering if the minister could comment on that.

Now, second reading of a bill is reading in principle, so the majority of the . . .

DR. TAYLOR: Please, Debby, please.

MS CARLSON: You get a full 20 from me tonight. There's no mercy on this bill. It's a big bill. I guess a full 15 actually. Being the second speaker, you get five minutes to ask me questions, so I look forward to anything you have to say on this. [interjection] There you go. Then I'm sure that my colleague is also quite interested in participating on this particular bill.

DR. TAYLOR: Do it tomorrow.

MS CARLSON: Well, you know what? I'd love to do it tomorrow, but in fact your House leader didn't keep his agreements last night, is not keeping them this night, so we're here as long as it takes.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Hon. member, please speak through the chair.

MS CARLSON: Yes. I'm sorry, Mr. Speaker. I was provoked but felt that it was really important to outline some of the reasons why we are here so late this evening through no fault of our own. [interjection] That's right. A deal is a deal. When we make a deal with the House leaders, we expect those agreements to be kept. When they are not, the only recourse we have is to extend the debate, so you're the lucky people today.

What happened last night, Mr. Speaker, was that the government was supposed to adjourn debate on a bill that our leader was the critic for and didn't do that, so that opened it up for further debate and further discussion, and it was greatly prolonged. [interjection] That's exactly right, and that's why we're staying here extra long tonight. So you can take it up in your caucus meeting.

Back to the issues of this particular bill that we're not very happy with or have some concerns about and feel should be debated at greater length. The first one that I would like to address is one of the issues that my colleague from Edmonton-Centre talked about, and that was to deal with the changes with the charitable models. I'd say particularly to deal with casinos but also to deal with bingos.

We've seen that gaming here in this province has shifted very far away from the charitable model that was one of the reasons for the initial introduction of gaming in this province in the manner in which we see it today. This government stated that by bringing in casinos and expanding bingos beyond the church basement kind of variety, we would be opening up a revenue stream for nonprofit organizations and for schools and for organizations like that to generate operating funds. This revenue stream would be something different and separate from what was currently available through government funding and would give an opportunity to those organizations who wish to fund-raise to do so by providing volunteers to provide basic services.

While some churches and other organizations decided that they would not participate at the casino and bingo volunteer level because they felt that there was a conflict of interest for them in terms of living off the avails of gaming, which I don't disagree with, in fact most organizations found that in order to get any kind of revenue stream, they just had to participate, so this occurred. In the initial stages casinos were windfall revenues, because by having 30 or 40 workers for two-day shifts, that were relatively reasonable shifts – you showed up at 11 on one day and you were gone by 2 or 2:30 at the outside on that night; most organizations ran two shifts of workers for two days – you could generate a lot of money, $60,000, $70,000.

Bingos, similarly, were about a five-hour commitment from volunteers. You show up with 20 volunteers, they work the floor for the five hours, and your organization could generate a minimum of a few thousand dollars to a maximum sometimes of $15,000 or $20,000, so that was a great way of getting dollars into the hands of organizations at a grassroots level. But what has happened over time is that this government has expanded the number of licences to such an extent and expanded the scope of gambling in this province to where it really doesn't have the same kind of benefit for grassroots organizations anymore.

I was just at a meeting of the Presidents' Council of Mill Woods Community League last week, where a report was given. It was a report that was given on behalf of the Federation of Community Leagues of Edmonton, where they stated that in a review of bingos in the greater Edmonton area, bingos had in fact become not profitable, that by the time the organizations got in and reimbursed workers for their food and their share of expenses, as has been dictated by the rules and regulations, there wasn't any money left over. So these volunteers are working for nothing or sometimes going in the hole and sometimes with very small profits. It's really because of an oversaturation of the market. It's just a supply and demand problem. Plus, people are gravitating towards the satellite bingos because those are the big payoffs. [Ms Carlson's speaking time expired] Not done. I have to come back at committee.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'm delighted to speak to this bill. I know that other members of my caucus would like to address it as well. They were here last night when it was on the Order Paper, and I hope they'll have a chance again to speak to it at this reading.

Well, we might as well start at the beginning here. The bill has a new definition of VLTs and slot machines and other gaming machines as gaming terminals. Anytime we see a change of language like that, the question is why and what's the necessity of it. What's being achieved by the changes in the provisions making it an offence on the part of licensed facilities to allow intoxicated people to gamble? It makes provisions for minors to be fined for being on casino or racing entertainment premises, and it ensures that retail liquor store licences are separate from other businesses. There's also one other interesting aspect to this act, which is the addition of a privative clause.

There are aspects to the bill that are probably well worth supporting. It's just a matter of fleshing those out and understanding them and making sure that the public has the opportunity to have their say on it, to review the debate and decide on how things have been handled.

There's a lot of background to this particular bill. Going back some years, of course, gambling has been for many decades, I suppose, a very controversial issue in this province. The controversy around it has risen dramatically in the last eight years as the gambling industry has expanded and as we've seen casinos and VLTs and all kinds of other facilities grow across the province in our cities, in our towns throughout the province.

As a result of that growth, there were several plebiscites on the removal of VLTs. In 1999, of course, this all ended up, I suppose predictably enough, in the courts. The court cases have ended up delaying the enactment of the plebiscites. Communities that have voted on the removal of VLTs have not had their wishes fully recognized because action was taken in the courts, and the results of that action, as I understand it, are still pending. So there has been no decisive action on VLTs and the removal of VLTs as a result of the local plebiscites. That sort of turmoil sets the stage for this bill and for the ideas and principles and rationale behind the bill.

Now, among the many issues stimulated or raised by the bill, I'll just go through a handful this evening. One of the most serious has to do with the law-and-order approach that the bill proposes for controlling what occurs around gambling machines and who's allowed to play them, what condition those people need to be in when they play them. In particular here I'm referring to the sentiment, one might put it, of saving intoxicated gamblers from themselves. I'm sure all of us here probably have seen people sitting in lounges or restaurants playing gambling machines and drinking alcohol at the same time. Undoubtedly there are many situations in which the gamblers are not as sober as they perhaps should be for putting their loonies one after the other into these machines. So I can well understand the sentiment of controlling the amount of alcohol consumed and the level of intoxication achieved by gamblers in gambling facilities. So I think that's a step in the right direction with this legislation.

I also think that controlling the access that minors have to gambling is the right idea, and fining minors who are caught on premises or caught gambling is certainly worth serious thought and worth more debate in this Assembly. It's a curious reflection of the ambivalence we have as a society towards gambling that we don't allow minors, we don't encourage minors to be gamblers. I think it's an acknowledgment that gambling is at times a problem, certainly a problem for many adults, and if we aren't careful, it becomes a problem for children as well. Children who are exposed to gambling at a young age probably – I haven't seen the research on it – I would think have a higher rate of gambling problems as adults. Certainly there's a concern with that. Children who smoke, children who consume alcohol or drugs: it may well be – the AADAC people could advise us on this – that the same pattern holds for children who gamble.

The fact that we're having to bring this into legislation raises the question about possible changes in the face of gambling in Alberta. As gambling becomes more widespread, are we seeing more social problems with it? Are we seeing more people gamble when they're intoxicated? Are we seeing more minors trying to get into gambling establishments to play the machines? Is there a trend there that we are trying to stop, or are we moving quickly enough through this legislation that the trend never really got under way? In either case, there are steps I think that we could all probably endorse and support. So good ideas here.

It would be useful as backup to this legislation – and maybe it has been undertaken by the minister, by his department, by AADAC, or by other groups – to look at the social costs of gambling – the costs on families, the costs on communities – and whether this legislation is going to reduce those costs or have any effect on those costs and what we're trying to achieve through this legislation in terms of those costs. Do we have any background research or business plans that are laying out benchmarks that we're hoping to reach through this legislation in terms of reducing the social costs of gambling?

There's also the notion here that we are taking steps maybe not to protect people and maybe not to protect minors or protect society but mostly to protect a revenue stream from unsavory public attention, the kind of unsavory attention that gambling was getting a few years ago in this province when there was so much controversy over VLTs. So are we really here motivated by preserving and protecting a stream, an immense stream of money, or are we motivated by building a better society? I think that our motives are important as to how we approach these issues and how we enact this kind of legislation.

There is no mention in the bill and I'm not sure that there's any provision at all in the bill for allocating a percentage of revenue to addressing some of the social problems or personal problems that are caused by gambling. Those are some concerns in terms of the revenue stream coming from gambling.

The minister as a lawyer undoubtedly will have a much more extensive knowledge of the nature of privative clauses than I do. My knowledge is limited to a very limited bit of reading, but my sense is that the nature of that sort of a clause is to try to hive off an activity or an area from intrusion from the courts and to set a particular area aside and protect it from the inquiries of the courts. I think that we need to be careful of that. I think that it's probably worth reading into Hansard a few statements on privative clauses. The addition of a privative clause in legislation is cause for concern. Quoting Halsbury's Laws of England:

Statutory provisions giving jurisdiction to inferior courts, to government departments or to bodies created ad hoc must be strictly construed, and the procedure prescribed must be exactly followed where it is important to do so having regard to the general object intended to be secured by the statute.

So I think it's incumbent upon this government to justify, hopefully through engaging in debate in this Assembly, the necessity of this sort of a clause in this legislation. In fact, there are many words written on privative clauses. Again quoting here:

It is no secret, the effort has been ongoing for quite a number of years now, legislatures have attempted to shut out the courts [in particular areas] claiming, in certain matters, full power for [themselves].

In other words, the Legislature wants to set aside an area, saying:

this is ours and ours alone, and the jurisdiction of the courts should be limited. This sort of thing is done by inserting a privative clause in the legislation.

It is a clause which forbids the court to involve itself in questions of what is right and what is wrong, where a resolution can be had from the mechanism which exists in the legislation itself.

For example, a statute might establish an arbitrator such as a board or a tribunal.

Now, I'm sure in some cases this is justified, but the courts historically have never liked such clauses and for probably understandable constitutional reasons. After all, the Constitution in many ways is a balancing act, a set of rules that is intended to create a constructive tension among different institutions in our society: on the one hand, the Legislature; in another area, the judiciary; and in a third area, the administration. Those institutions should be, as I say, in constructive tension, and when you have one of them trying to close itself off from that tension, from accountability, from balance, from the others, then we may find that the fundamental principles of a functioning parliamentary democracy are threatened. So we need to be very careful about privative clauses.

Again quoting from some rulings relating to privative clauses, "There can be no doubt that a statutory tribunal . . ." [Dr. Taft's speaking time expired]

THE ACTING SPEAKER: Any questions for the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview?

MS CARLSON: Mr. Speaker, my comment to the Member for Edmonton-Riverview is that I'm sure he is unaware that the Minister of Gaming is in fact invoking closure on this bill by demanding a vote at second reading this evening. It is a substantive bill. All of our members wish to speak to it, and in spite of it being on the Order Paper many times over the past few weeks, this is the first opportunity to speak to it, and the Minister of Gaming is demanding a vote on it this evening.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: A question to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview from Edmonton-Centre.

MS BLAKEMAN: Yes. I, too, am wondering if the Member for Edmonton-Riverview is aware of the situation that has occurred tonight. There's a strong difference of opinion here, with the Minister of Gaming insisting that . . .

DR. TAYLOR: Are you suggesting that he's not bright enough to be aware of it? He's got to be a genius.

MS BLAKEMAN: I'm sorry; perhaps you could help him then.

What's at dispute here is that essentially the minister is insisting on closure and only allowing three members of this caucus to speak in second reading to this bill. In the past anyone that has ever wanted to speak would be allowed to, and this is being cut off tonight. In private conversation the minister has indicated that he felt that I was delaying this bill coming up, but I've already sent him information that shows that in fact it was on the Order Paper, and I was here and ready to speak to it. So I think that this is a very bad sign and another form of closure that the government and their ministers have decided to use.

THE ACTING SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Gaming to close debate.

MR. STEVENS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. First of all, I'd like to thank the hon. members, all of them that chose to speak this evening. I appreciate that not all of them did, but they obviously chose to remain in their seats notwithstanding the urging of the hon. members for them to rise. So I can only assume that they'll have an opportunity in one of the later sessions. I do however appreciate the comments that the hon. members have made, and I intend to respond to those in my opening comments in the next stage, Committee of the Whole.

At this point in time I would ask that we proceed with the vote on second reading.

[The voice vote indicated that the motion for second reading carried]

[Several members rose calling for a division. The division bell was rung at 10:57 p.m.]

[Ten minutes having elapsed, the Assembly divided]

Legislative Assembly of Alberta

Title: Wednesday, April 10, 2002

1:30 p.m.

Date: 02/04/10

[The Speaker in the chair]

head: Prayers

THE SPEAKER: Welcome.

Let us pray. O God, grant that we the members of our province's Legislature may fulfill our office with honesty and integrity. May our first concern be for the good of all our people. Guide our deliberations this day. Amen.

Please be seated.

head: Introduction of Visitors

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly the new Chinese consul general in Calgary, Mr. Xizhu, and his wife. They are accompanied by the vice-consul general, Mr. Tian Yuzhen. Alberta has long been one of Canada's most active provinces in China. China and Alberta have a mutually beneficial relationship covering a wide variety of areas from trade and investment to culture and education. Nearly 150,000 Albertans are of Chinese descent, and they make tremendous contributions each day to our province. The Chinese consulate in Calgary does a great deal to advance Alberta/Chinese relations and to support the province's Chinese community. We have had an excellent working relationship with the consulate ever since it opened in 1998, and we're looking forward to continued strong relations under the leadership of Mr. Xizhu. I would ask that our honoured guests please rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

head: Introduction of Guests

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

MR. BOUTILIER: Thank you. It's my pleasure today, Mr. Speaker, to introduce very good partners of this province, and they're the executive of the Alberta Urban Municipalities Association, known as the AUMA. Today we have in the Speaker's gallery, your gallery, the president. He is the mayor of the city of Leduc, George Rogers. As well, we have the vice-president and director of towns, Mayor Ernie Patterson from the town of Claresholm. As well, we have the vice-president and director of cities, Alderman Bob Hawkesworth from the city of Calgary. I would also like to make an honourable mention of a former mayor who recently was tragically killed, as we all know, in the village of Thorhild. He, of course, was a very avid member of the AUMA executive, Mayor Michael Senych, and he was the vice-president and director of villages on the executive. I would like to ask the distinguished gentlemen to all rise and receive the very warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Infrastructure.

MR. LUND: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a great deal of pleasure for me today to introduce to you and through you to members of the Assembly some 45 very enthusiastic, brilliant young people from the elementary school in Bentley. They are accompanied today by their teachers Mr. Merv Leidl and Mrs. Diane Scarlett and also parent helpers Pat Wiggins and Rod Koetke. They are seated in the members' gallery, and I would ask that they now rise and receive the traditional warm welcome of the Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Children's Services.

MS EVANS: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure today to introduce to you and through you to the members of the Assembly three distinguished guests representing the Alberta College of Social Workers here today, no doubt, for the fact that we're presenting the Children's Services budget in Committee of Supply. May I introduce with pleasure Mr. Jake Kuiken, Mr. Arnie Thiessen, and Mr. Rod Adachi. If they would rise and the Assembly please duly recognize them for their work.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for St. Albert.

MRS. O'NEILL: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It's my honour today to introduce to you and through you to members of this Assembly two wonderful citizens of St. Albert, Maura and Aidan McGarrigle. They are wonderful musicians. They play at church and in pubs and a number of other places around. They are also wonderful volunteers in our community. They are seated in the members' gallery, and I would ask them to please rise and receive the warm welcome of this Assembly.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I'd like to introduce to you and through you to the Assembly Ann Keane, who is seated in the gallery. I'd like to ask Ann to rise. Ann is leaving this weekend for Newfoundland, where she will begin a run across Canada to be completed on Vancouver Island at the end of August. Ann will be raising funds for two charities, but it is her underlying purpose that is so inspiring, and I quote from her web site, powerofpeoplerun.com: to raise the awareness of Canadians that they have a choice in every moment to help make this world a better place or not. Please join me in offering Ann best wishes.

head: Ministerial Statements

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

Child Pornography

MR. HANCOCK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise today to speak about a very troubling issue. As Justice minister I take great pride in the work that this government does to ensure that our communities are safe and our children have every opportunity to grow into well-rounded and contributing members of our society. Two weeks ago, while this Assembly stood in recess, the British Columbia Supreme Court made a ruling in a child pornography case that I found deeply disturbing, as I'm sure did most Albertans.

The case involved a man who had previously fought for the constitutional right to possess child pornography right up to the Supreme Court of Canada, which thankfully ruled against him. At the time, however, the Supreme Court of Canada outlined various examples of defences that caused us concern and one which the man subsequently availed himself of in his defence. I must say that this man is a man whose actions and views on child pornography are upsetting and abhorrent to most, if not all, Canadians. We had faith that the court system would rule against him and demonstrate to the accused and to all Canadians that child pornography in any form is unacceptable and has absolutely no place in our society, but sadly, Mr. Speaker, that was not to be the case. The defendant, although found guilty on two other counts of possession of child pornography, was acquitted of two charges that related to his writings. His legal arguments were based on exceptions in the Criminal Code which state that an individual may be found not guilty if materials are deemed to have artistic merit.

This is a decision that surprised me as Attorney General and shocked and upset me as a father. The broad interpretation of artistic merit suggests to me that this legislation has weaknesses that may not allow us to protect Canadian children to the best of our ability. Although the decision is not binding in Alberta and has only persuasive value in cases before our courts today or in the future, it does set a dangerous standard. Possessing child pornography is not a victimless crime. It degrades, dehumanizes, and sexually exploits children. The demand for child pornography leads to its continued production and distribution, and to suggest otherwise is naive and absurd. The idea that possession of one's own pornographic writings is harmless, especially in this electronic age of easy transmission and where publication of material on the Internet is difficult if not impossible to control, simply ignores modern realities.

Some say that we must be careful not to restrict freedom of expression. I say that if there is any place that cries out for society to say no, it's in the area of child pornography. We do not accept, Mr. Speaker, the concept that people should be free to defile children either physically or in writing. We do not accept the concept that there can be artistic merit in the victimization of children, and we do not accept the concept that the intention of exciting or titillating a passion for that which is illegal, immoral, and in all fashion and form reprehensible to a civil society is acceptable in any form, even if it is based on the rather far-fetched notion that the creators of such offensive material will not share it with others and will keep it only for themselves.

I want to remind Albertans that the prosecution of child pornography offences is an essential part of Alberta Justice's responsibility to protect children and promote safer communities. Our committed and professional team of Crown prosecutors will prosecute these cases to the fullest extent of the law.

A similar defence, Mr. Speaker, based on artistic exceptions outlined in the Criminal Code could be made here or elsewhere in Canada. While prosecutors could argue against such a claim, it's ultimately up to the court to determine whether materials have so-called artistic merit. This government will not wait for similar court rulings elsewhere in the country that may further weaken our ability to protect Canadian children. As Minister of Justice and Attorney General I have written to the federal Minister of Justice and have urgently requested a nationwide examination of the child pornography provisions of the Criminal Code to help ensure that they reflect the values of Canadian society and protect the interests and safety of Canadian children. I have already assigned staff from my department to examine all available options and alternatives and report back to me. I intend to bring forward for discussion with my provincial and federal counterparts some viable options as soon as possible.

In my letter to the federal Justice minister I also renewed Alberta's request to raise the legal age of consent for sexual activity from the present 14 to at least 16 years of age. This is a request, Mr. Speaker, that we have made persistently. In fact, a motion making the same request was passed by this Assembly in March of 1999, and we've taken that request forward to the government each and every time we've met as Justice ministers. I am convinced that raising the age of consent will provide yet another tool to ensure that our children are protected from sexual predators, and I will continue to push for this change in the law.

Protection of society's most vulnerable members is our most important duty as a government and as a society, and ensuring that our children have the opportunity to be the best that they can be is our primary function. It is only through the protection of our children and the promotion of their successes that we can defend against and defeat so many of the ills that exist in our society, be it poverty, domestic violence, or criminal activity, and which cost our society enormously both in human and economic terms and serve to clog our courts and our prisons.

Mr. Speaker, the government of Alberta will do everything it can to protect the children of this province and this country. That is a commitment that we make proudly to the members of this Assembly and to all Albertans.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Mill Woods.

DR. MASSEY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. On behalf of the Official Opposition I'm pleased to respond to the minister's statement. The Official Opposition joins the Minister of Justice in a call for a national review of the child pornography laws to help ensure that they reflect the values of Canadian society and protect the best interests and safety of children. We believe that keeping children free from harm by protecting their innocence and safety must be primary principles governing the laws of this land.

The issues raised in the Sharpe case need public discussion. His acquittal on two charges related to his writings based on artistic merit has raised some serious questions. Do we as a society support artistic merit as a principle that should take precedence over harm that may be done to children? As a father and as a grandfather I can appreciate and share the minister's anger and outrage. However, as with most questions that appear before the courts, issues are not always as black and white as they initially seem. For instance, should possession of Romeo & Juliet be a chargeable offence? Juliet, after all, was a minor.

The current child pornography laws were hastily written prior to a federal election. Expectations that they would subsequently be reconsidered in the light of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms and be amended, if needed, have not been realized, and we think they should be. Canadians need to clearly settle any perceived tension between children's rights and adult freedoms on the side of children. The government has rightfully called for a national debate.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

head: Oral Question Period

THE SPEAKER: First Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

Swan Hills Waste Treatment Facility

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first question is to the Premier. Do Alberta taxpayers own the Swan Hills waste treatment plant? Yes or no?

MR. KLEIN: Yes.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Given that Bovar was paid to take the plant off the government's hands and now it's back in our hands, will the Premier bring that deal and the arrangements that have been made with Sensor before the Assembly and the people of Alberta?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, this is a somewhat complex situation relative to the ongoing operation of the plant. There are reasons to keep it open and to keep it operating. One of those reasons is the collection of toxic garbage here in the province of Alberta, which would otherwise have to be gathered up, containerized properly, and shipped to some other waste disposal plant at taxpayers' expense. We would try to charge, certainly, the creators of this garbage to the best of our ability, but you have to understand that there are many circumstances, many instances where we can't track down the original owners or the people originally responsible for the pollution violations or the creation of this toxic waste.

Relative to the details and the complexities of the negotiations and the ongoing operation of the Swan Hills plant, I'll have the hon. Minister of Infrastructure respond.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. LUND: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Over the last year we were attempting to sell the plant. We had a call for proposals, but at the end of the day we were concerned that, in fact, as the Premier has indicated, it was very, very important that that plant continue to operate and be there for the destruction of waste within the province.

When you look at what the plant has done over time, it has basically cleaned the province of PCBs. We have a lot of other very toxic materials like dioxins and furans, and this plant is a location where they can be handled. When you look at the industry that's within the province, there is always going to be a generation of materials that we are very concerned that they don't be land filled, that they be treated in a proper manner. It's really interesting when you look at the capacities of that plant. It is the only plant in North America that can handle and completely neutralize and destroy these toxic materials – the only plant in North America. So it's really a gem for the province, and it's something that we need to maintain and protect.

As far as Sensor is concerned, we have an operating contract with them. We are going to be going out for a long-term operator contract, and we will be, probably in May, putting forward the calls for proposals for that operator.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question didn't deal with the technical aspects of running the plant. I asked the Premier: will you bring the financial commitment of this province in operating the Swan Hills plant before this Legislature?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I have no problems providing that information. As a matter of fact, if the hon. leader of the Liberal Party wishes to bring forward a motion for a return, I'm sure that the hon. minister will provide him with all the information he seeks.

MR. LUND: Well, Mr. Speaker, certainly the budget process demonstrates what the commitments are, but those kinds of details of the costs and the return that we are getting for the destruction of the toxic materials, we have no problem with bringing those forward.

THE SPEAKER: Second Official Opposition main question. The hon. Leader of the Official Opposition.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My next question is to the Finance minister. Have provisions of the Financial Administration Act been changed to allow for the government to get involved in this plant again?

1:50

MRS. NELSON: Well, Mr. Speaker, we have been involved in this plant for quite some time, right from the very beginning of 1984, when we first made the decision to deal with the disposal of hazardous waste within the province of Alberta. We recognize that the plant has done I think a top-rate job in the province, as was enunciated by the Minister of Infrastructure, and we are committed to making sure that we have an environmentally clean province here in Alberta. Is the plant costly? Yes. Would it be costlier if we didn't do this? You bet it would. We have to have a clean province. We have to have economic development go forward in an environmentally friendly way. This plant ensures that that occurs. There isn't another facility like this plant in North America, so we have to be able to dispose of hazardous wastes.

The Minister of Infrastructure has already explained that with the nature of the development that occurs within this province, there is always going to be the concern over the disposal of waste, so we have a facility that we are proud of, that has done the job, that has virtually made us PCB free in this province, that has given us the enviable position of all other jurisdictions of economic development within Canada and North America. So we are involved in this plant, yes. We have had outside operators, yes. We will continue to be involved with this plant to make sure that it does in fact dispose of hazardous waste from the province of Alberta.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader.

DR. NICOL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Minister of Finance: will you bring the financial dealings of this plant before this House, as required by the Financial Administration Act?

MRS. NELSON: I believe that the Minister of Infrastructure has already answered that question, Mr. Speaker.

DR. NICOL: Mr. Speaker, I did not hear from any of the three people that have answered a response to this question: will they bring it forward? Mr. Premier, will you commit to having that material brought to this House?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I think that we did answer the question. We said that we would make all the information that we can available to the Legislature. I asked the hon. leader of the Liberal Party to bring forward a motion for a return to outline specifically and precisely what information he requires, and we will answer that motion to the best of our ability.

THE SPEAKER: Third Official Opposition main question. The hon. Member for Edmonton-Ellerslie.

MS CARLSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In June 2001 Sensor Environmental, the company currently running the Swan Hills Treatment Centre, spilled between 200 and 300 litres of PCB-contaminated water. The report on this incident says that recommendations for improvements would be made. As this information was filed with Alberta Environment, my questions are to that minister. Why did Sensor only receive a warning letter for this spill?

DR. TAYLOR: Well, Mr. Speaker, we have a number of procedures that we do follow under the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act, and one of the things that happens depends on how a company responds to the spill. If they notify us, as is appropriate, and if they clean up the spill, as is appropriate, we have a number of actions that we can take. One of those actions is sending a warning letter, and that's the action we took.

MS CARLSON: When will information be available to this Assembly and to Albertans about further action that they're taking with Sensor on this particular incident?

DR. TAYLOR: Well, it's my understanding that at the present time the spill has been cleaned up to an appropriate level. I will check on that and make sure that that is in fact the case and will then inform the member appropriately.

MS CARLSON: My final question is to the Premier. Mr. Premier, this plant is an environmental and financial nightmare. There is better, less expensive technology available. When will you close the plant down and stop Alberta taxpayers from subsidizing PCB imports from other provinces?

MR. KLEIN: Quite to the contrary, Mr. Speaker, the plant is an environmental asset. To put it into perspective, throughout this province we have landfill sites. We have municipal landfill sites and we have regional landfills. The Minister of Environment knows all about this. These are facilities to collect garbage. The Swan Hills plant is a facility to collect garbage and dispose of a very special kind of garbage in a very specific and controlled manner. No other jurisdiction in this country has a plant of that nature, perhaps even in North America. Quite simply, if we did not have the plant to dispose of that very toxic, very special garbage here, we would have to, as I said before, gather it up, put it in special containers, find a way to ship it outside the province at great cost, and have it destroyed elsewhere. What better opportunity than to have the facility right here to make sure that this province can be free of toxic and dangerous waste? It's an asset, not an environmental nightmare.

DR. TAYLOR: I might just add to my comments. I can tell the member that the spill that did occur was under a collecting pad, and it has been 100 percent cleaned up. It was spilled by Bovar. Bovar has been charged, and Sensor has cleaned up that spill 100 percent.

MR. LUND: Well, Mr. Speaker, leading from the question that the hon. member asked, you know, I find it so frustrating when she pretends to want to protect the environment. The Premier has clearly stated how important this is to make sure that our environment is kept clean. And as a matter of fact, if you want to talk about the cost, for every $250 in our department only $1 goes toward the Swan Hills plant. Now, if that is too much money to spend to keep our environment pristine, then I'm sorry; I don't agree with you.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. leader of the third party, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark.

Royalty Rates

DR. PANNU: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. There has been recent criticism of Alberta's royalty rates for our nonrenewable oil and gas resources. Some have suggested the need for a public review of this matter. Despite its claims to be out of the business of business, the government continues to operate a royalty tax credit program that exclusively benefits a single industry; namely, oil and gas companies. The government also gives away hundreds of millions of other revenue dollars every year to various royalty reduction programs. My questions are to the Premier. Why has the government failed to conduct a thorough public review of provincial royalty rates and policy to make sure that Albertans are receiving a fair economic rent for their nonrenewable resources.

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, I'll have the hon. Minister of Finance supplement my answer. The Minister of Energy is not with us today and perhaps can reply more appropriately at a later date. I'll take the matter as it pertains to the Minister of Energy under notice.

With respect to royalties and with respect to an ongoing review, this is a subject of ongoing review. It is reviewed, I believe, on an annual basis and perhaps even more often with the Canadian Association of Petroleum Producers. There are analysts within the Department of Energy and, I'm sure, within the Department of Finance who are continually reviewing the fairness and the appropriateness of royalties that are paid by the oil and gas companies. Relative to whether they're fair and the process for review, I'll have the hon. Minister of Finance supplement.

MRS. NELSON: Well, Mr. Speaker, actually I'm delighted to get up and supplement the answer. I did have some background in this area at one point when I was in the private sector and then when I was in the portfolio a few years back.

The royalty program in Alberta is a program that brings in roughly between 25 and 35 to 40 percent of the revenue base for the province of Alberta. This is a very important program, because it's a program where we charge on average just over 21 percent to companies to contract to us to produce the natural resources within the province. This program is reviewed on an ongoing basis, but obviously with the activity level that is in place in the province of Alberta today and has been here for a number of years and seems to increase, the framework that has been put in place is one that is working. In fact, the development and the drilling activity continues to increase on a year-to-year basis.

The hon. member alluded to a group of royalty holidays. There really is only, I believe, the one royalty holiday that still exists, and that is the pure exploration holiday for one year. The other holidays have been eliminated because the framework is conducive to development, not to holidays. The program is very fair. It brings in the lion's share of the revenue base for the province, and it's been most successful. Quite frankly, for a province of this size to have drilling activity anywhere between 12,000 and 14,000 wells in a given year is a phenomenal testament to the structure that's here.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My second question to the Premier: why does the Premier believe that a royalty policy review and a rate framework should be developed behind closed doors in government or corporate boardrooms while freezing out the owners of Alberta's oil and gas resources, namely every Alberta citizen?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, that's hardly true at all. The negotiations are taking place with industry, with associations representing industry, like the Canadian Association of Petroleum Producers. The amounts that we collect from royalties are reported in various budget documents.

I think that what the hon. leader of the third party is alluding to is this report by the Parkland Institute, and what he's driving at is that royalties are less today than they were during the 1970s. But what this think tank failed to take into consideration, Mr. Speaker, was the simple fact that oil and gas production back in the '70s was a lot simpler then. There was a lot more oil and gas, and it was a lot easier to get at than the kind of technology that is being used today to go in and drill tertiary wells, to use horizontal and slant-hole drilling, to develop the technology that is needed for tar sands development.

Mr. Speaker, the costs today to recover oil and gas are far different than the costs were back in the 1970s. This is why there is an ongoing examination, an ongoing review, and an ongoing assessment as to what is fair for industry and what is fair for government. That's what it's all about, and the royalty regime we have in place today is fair to everyone.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. PANNU: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Parkland Institute enjoys a high reputation and great support from lots of Albertans.

My question to the Premier, the last one: what objections does the Premier have to conducting an open, thorough, public review – public review – of the policies that he's so ready to defend in this Assembly?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, the public review is done about every four years or so. This is when the people come to the polling booths to elect a government that will represent their interests. And guess what? They elected 74 of us and two of them.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Meadowlark, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre.

Teachers' Arbitration Process

MR. MASKELL: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I've received many calls from my constituents, from former teacher colleagues, and I've heard many comments from the media stating that the arbitration process listed under the Education Services Settlement Act is unfair. My question is to the Minister of Human Resources and Employment. What is he doing to ensure that the process is fair?

MR. DUNFORD: Mr. Speaker, I should mention in beginning that I, too, have received the same types of calls, and because of the situation I think it was incumbent upon us as a department to be very, very careful throughout this entire process about making sure that we can be as fair as we possibly can to all of the parties concerned.

Now, just before question period today I made the announcement of the tribunal panel that will be looking into disputes between school boards and teachers, and I'm pleased that we were able to name a Mr. David Jones as the third arbitrator and the one appointed by the government. Many within the sound of our voices today and perhaps members even here in the Legislature will be aware of Mr. David Jones. He has impeccable credentials as an arbitrator, has extensive experience, and in fact has dealt with teacher disputes in the past. We also announced today the other two members of the tribunal, and I would want to indicate to all members that the Alberta School Boards Association has named a Mr. William Armstrong as their arbitrator, and the Alberta Teachers' Association's nominee is a Mr. Lyle Kanee, a lawyer here in Edmonton.

MR. MASKELL: Mr. Speaker, again to the same minister. I've also heard concerns that Bill 12 places unfair restrictions on the arbitrators. How could the minister allow these terms to exist in the legislation?

MR. DUNFORD: Well, Mr. Speaker, all of us I think have been troubled by comments that somehow the arbitrators' hands would be tied, but I would just want people to know and understand that it would be perfectly reasonable even in a private-sector dispute that no arbitrator is going to assign an award under a binding arbitration situation that is going to put that employer into bankruptcy. It just simply doesn't happen. So I can say, then, that they will deal with the wage issues in what I believe will be a fair and proper manner, and then as far as the classroom conditions are concerned, we're all aware that through a request from the ATA and a request from the School Boards Association, we're going to deal with pupil/teacher ratios and other matters that deal with the classroom in a commission that should be up and running sometime this year.

MR. MASKELL: Again to the same minister. I've heard you say that there have been settlements since the legislation was introduced. How has Bill 12 affected the teacher wage settlement?

MR. DUNFORD: I think it's fair to say, Mr. Speaker, that first of all the passage in the Assembly of Bill 12 but also then the announcement that an arbitration panel would be put together has stimulated in some cases local negotiations. After all, this is really what all of us want. We want as many of the local agreements as we possibly can have to be done at the local level, and the announcement today of the arbitration tribunal does not stop that kind of a process. I would hope that any member in this Assembly that's still receiving calls about whether or not local boards and whether or not local ATA union representatives can get together to continue to negotiate local agreements – I want to assure them that, yes, they can. I think Bill 12 and the arbitration panel has actually been a stimulus to the situation. Seven months of activity and what did we have? Maybe five agreements. We've had nine more agreements since the announcement of the arbitration.

So, again, the arbitration panel is going to be there to deal with the salary dispute of the teachers. They'll go dispute by dispute by dispute, but there's nothing today that would prevent any of the school boards, any of the ATA locals out there from getting back to the bargaining table and doing their own deal.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Centre, followed by the hon. Member for Calgary-West.

2:10 Lottery Funds for Community Development

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My questions today are to the Premier. Does the Premier think it's important that communities have a direct say through local decision-making in decisions on how lottery funds earmarked for community development are spent in their community?

MR. KLEIN: Yes, I do, Mr. Speaker. That's why we have programs such as the community facility enhancement program and Wild Rose and a number of other lottery programs: the Alberta Sport, Recreation, Parks and Wildlife Foundation, various ag boards, and so on. All of these are community-based organizations that gather to determine what they need for their communities and then set out to raise the money, making applications through CFEP and some of the other lottery programs, approaching various components of the private sector to match dollars, and getting community members involved in providing sweat equity and various other kinds of donations to the particular project.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the Premier: well, given that those foundations that he mentioned do not have local decision-making as a part of their process, can he ensure that an open and transparent process would be used to obtain direct input on funds under a new CFEP program? Or will the decisions be made under the dome or with a bureaucrat?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, as the hon. Minister of Finance would say: hello? Do you think that this government goes out and says to a community, "You need a playground," or "You need an ice rink," or "You need this," or "You need that"? No, we don't. You know, it comes from the community. These are community organizations that get together and say: "We need a community hall. We need an ice rink. We need a playground. How do we go about getting it?" Well, they check the various sources of information and they find that there's a program under CFEP. They find that there's a program here. They find that perhaps they can hold a bingo or have a casino. They find that they can get various members of the community together to provide sweat equity and maybe some materials and some talent. That's how the decisions are made. When it comes to government, we say: "Lookit, are all these things together? Is the community involved? Will there be private-sector dollars? Is there going to be a sharing?" On the basis of that, we make a decision as to whether they will get a grant under various lottery programs.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MS BLAKEMAN: Thank you. When these groups apply for these grants, Premier, who makes the decision? It is not a locally based decision. Who makes it?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, there is a criteria, and the criteria is really quite simple. The hon. member should know what the criteria is because her constituency is involved, as is every other constituency in this province. The criteria is that if there are matching dollars and the project is deemed to be of community benefit, then it usually is approved.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Calgary-West, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar.

Seniors' Extended Health Benefits

MS KRYCZKA: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Because many seniors by and large live on fixed incomes, except for those who continue to pursue employment, many seniors become concerned whenever the government makes changes to any programs for seniors. I have received many calls of concern from seniors in the past three weeks regarding the increase in health care premiums and the cancellation of the extended health benefit program. My question is to the minister of health. Why did the extended benefit program end?

MR. MAR: The extended health benefits program provided very limited coverage for eyeglasses and the costs of dental services and dentures to seniors regardless of their income level, and in developing our budget this year, we were always compelled to examine the effectiveness of each area of expenditure including extended health benefits. We determined that the funds, which were in the magnitude of $25 million, that were in the program for EHB would be better used and more effectively used if given to regional health authorities to help them provide services within RHAs. But we did recognize, Mr. Speaker, that lower income seniors would continue to need assistance in the coverage of costs associated with dentures, dental care, and eyeglasses, so we did transfer $9 million and three staff to the Ministry of Seniors to help them administer assistance for dental and optical costs for lower income seniors. Finally, I note that we've also adjusted the time line for the end of the program for denture work that was started prior to the budget to the middle of April, as completing this work takes longer than the completion of other services covered by extended health benefits.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MS KRYCZKA: Yes, thank you. My first supplemental is to the Minister of Seniors. With that transference of dollars, what is the possibility of adequate replacement assistance to lower income seniors, in particular, with these optical and dental needs?

THE SPEAKER: The hon. minister.

MR. WOLOSZYN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We've always been aware that dental and eye care is a serious wellness issue for seniors. Obviously, if you don't have good eyesight, you can end up getting injured. If you don't take good care of your teeth, you have other health problems. So we have been supplementing the extended health care program up to this point. As the minister of health indicated, it wasn't a very broad coverage, and it did receive an awful lot of support. We are currently working on a program that hopefully will adequately take care of the needs of seniors who are on the Alberta seniors' benefit program to ensure – and I stress to ensure – that their dental and eye care needs are met.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MS KRYCZKA: Thank you. My second supplemental is back to the Minister of Health and Wellness. Can the minister explain why continued funding for chiropractic and podiatry services to Albertans is under consideration?

MR. MAR: Of course the government has accepted the 44 recommendations of the Mazankowski report, the report prepared by the Premier's Advisory Council on Health. One of the recommendations laid out in that report, Mr. Speaker, was to establish a permanent expert panel to review and make recommendations to government on what services and treatments should be publicly funded. I think it's worth noting that chiropractic and podiatry services are outside of the Canada Health Act but like many other health services are covered by the Alberta health care insurance plan.

At this time the Department of Health and Wellness is reviewing applications for positions on the expert panel referred to in the Premier's advisory council, and I hope to announce the composition of that panel soon. When it is composed, the panel will consider all health services currently covered under the Alberta health care insurance plan, and that will include chiropractic and podiatry.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Gold Bar, followed by the hon. Member for Whitecourt-Ste. Anne.

Electricity Deregulation

MR. MacDONALD: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The economic losses suffered by Albertans due to electricity deregulation continue to climb. My first question is to the Premier. Does the government consider electricity a good or a service?

Thank you.

MR. KLEIN: We would consider it a good service.

MR. MacDONALD: Mr. Speaker, I would call it now, with deregulation, a good expensive service.

Again to the Premier: what is the government's policy on electricity exports to the United States?

MR. KLEIN: The policy is quite clear. It's being developed; in other words, the details are being ironed out. Fundamentally, the policy is that power can be exported to the United States providing all the regulatory requirements are met and providing the needs of this province are met. In other words, only surplus power can go for export, Mr. Speaker.

MR. MacDONALD: Mr. Speaker, again to the Premier: who is to pay for future expansion of our transmission system within Alberta?

MR. KLEIN: Mr. Speaker, those who generate and sell the electricity would be responsible for the transmission of that electricity and the construction of the lines.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Whitecourt-St. Anne, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview.

Softwood Lumber Trade Dispute

MR. VANDERBURG: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My first question is for the Minister of International and Intergovernmental Relations. Industry representatives from the forest industry in Whitecourt-St. Anne have been very involved, and after several months of negotiations talks to settle the softwood lumber dispute between Canada and the United States broke down. As a result, the U.S. Department of Commerce has made final determinations in its countervailing and antidumping investigations of softwood lumber. Can the minister tell the House what this means for Alberta's softwood exporters?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, we are extremely concerned about the rulings of the Department of Commerce in the United States regarding our Canadian lumber producers' exports. Their determination that there are subsidies involved in the production of our lumber and timber products in Alberta and across, of course, the whole country is a national issue.

I would however like to indicate in direct response to the member's question that at this particular point in time there will be no direct duties charged against the companies involved, albeit they do have to post bonds to indicate that if and when those duties click in, which now is scheduled to be, depending on the final determination, in mid-May, they can in fact pay the duties that will be charged.

I think the overall impact that this will have on the industry will of course be very negative. There's no doubt about that; there's no getting away from that. But the specific impact will depend upon markets within Canada at that particular point in time, the size of the potential final duties that will have to be paid, the number of housing starts that are taking place within this country, and what other markets there are for wood.

So we have here, Mr. Speaker, a very serious situation, one that the government takes very seriously and is doing further work on, but that's the situation as we see it right now.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. VANDERBURG: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again to the same minister: can the minister tell the House and the industry players in this province what the province is doing to find a solution to this dispute?

MR. JONSON: Well, Mr. Speaker, we are continuing to work with our own lawyers as well as with the Alberta industry to defend further against the U.S. industry's subsidy allegations. We are co-operating with the federal government and through the federal government and also directly with the other provinces in terms of continuing to work on this matter and continuing to work on an overall strategy. We are assisting the federal government in its World Trade Organization challenge, and we are also working with respect to the submissions and information that we provided to the North American Free Trade Agreement Panel in May.

MR. VANDERBURG: Well, I guess, Mr. Speaker, that doesn't quite answer the question. Specifically I'd like to know: what are the next steps? What can I go home this weekend and tell my industry players? What are we going to do next?

MR. JONSON: Mr. Speaker, I do certainly appreciate the seriousness of the situation for the hon. member's constituency as it is a centre of lumber production. We are working with the industry. We will be following up on an industry meeting that, as I understand it, took place a few days ago where some 50 different companies or people involved in lumber production were involved. We will be taking the views from that particular meeting into our further discussions with the other provinces and the federal government. We will be looking at a further strategy in this regard. I have already mentioned that we will be pursuing our appeals to the World Trade Organization, et cetera – I won't go through the whole list again – because there are avenues of appeal beyond the determinations being made by the United States Department of Commerce, and of course we'll be making representation to the panel under the Department of Commerce process. We'll be making further submissions there before they make their final determination.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, followed by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands.

Rural Health Services

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. This government seems to be particularly tough on regional health authorities in rural Alberta. Several rural RHAs are facing bed closures, layoffs, or worse. To the Minister of Health and Wellness: why is the government cutting rural RHA budgets by only allowing 1 percent for inflation when inflation clearly is more than double that?

MR. MAR: Let me say first of all, Mr. Speaker, that health care is the top priority of this government. The 7 percent increase in the budget just recently tabled reflects that. I think, as I've said earlier in replying to the hon. Member for Edmonton-Riverview, that it is too early to talk about whether there will be bed closures or conversions in rural facilities throughout the province. Health authorities are working on their business plans. I expect those business plans to be in by the end of this month. I believe the 29th of April is the date that's been set. We will review those business plans. We will make sure that available facilities are being used appropriately in meeting the needs of communities.

Mr. Speaker, the overall message is this: health care is not simply about how much money you have but how you spend it. I have confidence in the regional health authorities throughout this province, both in urban and rural areas, to do the right things. Where there are underutilized facilities, then perhaps those facilities can be converted into long-term care.

The hon. Member for Redwater prepared a report, that is referred to as the Broda report. It has a number of important points and recommendations that can be applied by regional health authorities for meeting the real needs of the people that they serve.

Mr. Speaker, we will move forward on the Mazankowski report and its recommendations. We can maintain the quality of health care in this province, improve the access, and we can do it in a way that will be sustainable for now and into the future.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. TAFT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Again addressing the issues of rural RHAs. Given that high ambulance costs, which are a fact of life in rural Alberta, contribute directly to RHA deficits, why hasn't the department made the commitment to rural Albertans to fully cover ambulance services?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, I am reminded by the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs that a good report is forthcoming. Right now ambulance services in this province vary dramatically. Some are very excellent. Some are less than average. The issue of ambulances and many other issues faced by rural health authorities speak to the need for collaboration and innovation in both the services that are provided and the delivery of those services.

MS CARLSON: Answer the question, Gary.

MR. MAR: Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member of course knows that I am answering the question. We are working with an important committee, that will be chaired by the hon. Member for Edmonton-Glenora, on collaboration and innovation so that the services that are required in regional health authorities in rural Alberta do meet the needs of people that live in those areas. We are focused on making sure that we make the best use of the facilities and the resources and the dollars and the people that provide important services to Albertans in health care.

2:30

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

DR. TAFT: Thanks, Mr. Speaker. How does the government expect rural RHAs to cover the higher costs of labour contracts that the government itself negotiated when its funding increases to them are so low?

MR. MAR: Mr. Speaker, last year, in order to allow regional health authorities to cover the cost of increased contracts, the base budgets were added to, and the amount that was added was $200 million on a onetime basis. That $200 million has been annualized and is now part of the base budgets for regional health authorities, and that is what will cover the increased costs associated with those contracts.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Highlands, followed by the hon. Member for West Yellowhead.

Natural Gas Venting

MR. MASON: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. During the recent Legislature debate on Bill 203 government members engaged in a great deal of self-congratulation about the reductions that are being achieved in gas flaring in Alberta. But what these members may not be aware of is that while gas flaring is being reduced, the venting of gas, which is far more serious, is going up sharply. In fact, there has been a 50 percent increase in the venting of gas between 1999 and 2000 so that the increase in the volume of gas being vented more than fully offsets the reductions in gas flaring. To the Minister of Environment: how can the minister stand idly by while the volume of gas being vented in this province is going up by 50 percent in a single year?

DR. TAYLOR: Well, in the first place, Mr. Speaker, we are not standing idly by, and I want to correct that assumption. We do have an ongoing working group that is working with the EUB and other stakeholders. In fact, it's being worked through the Clean Air Strategic Alliance group. That's a nongovernmental group that's made up of industry, that's made up of environmental groups, and it's made up of government representatives as well. There's an ongoing working group that is looking at and investigating this whole flaring/venting issue.

It is correct, Mr. Speaker, that a lot of work and a lot of reduction has been made in the flaring part of it. For instance, in 1997, I believe it was, the goal through the CASA, Clean Air Strategic Alliance, process was to reduce that amount of gas that was flared by 25 percent, but in fact by the end of 2001 that had been reduced by 50 percent. So what it clearly shows is that the Clean Air Strategic Alliance process works.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. member.

MR. MASON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Could the minister, then, tell the House what, besides studying the issue, they are actually doing to reduce the amount of venting taking place, which is a far more serious thing than the flaring of gas?

DR. TAYLOR: Well, I'm not sure that his assumption, again, is correct, that one is more serious than the other. We've had very good success in reducing flaring, and there's an ongoing working group with industry and CASA looking at ways of reducing venting as well. In fact, this government is spending in the neighbourhood of $14 million looking at the effects of flaring and venting on animals and humans as we go forward. So this government has committed resources to this, and the CASA working group will continue to work on this process.

MR. MASON: Well, Mr. Speaker, I would be very interested in the minister answering the question and telling us what exactly is being done – actually being done – to reduce the amount of venting of natural gas. The minister also should be aware and I would like his comment on the fact that natural gas is a far more aggressive greenhouse gas than CO₂.

DR. TAYLOR: Well, the member has pointed out something that is crucial: natural gas is a greenhouse gas, and we need to control it. But one of the difficulties, Mr. Speaker, with the federal government's approach to it in the Kyoto agreement is that Kyoto only looks at CO₂. CO₂ is not a pollutant. So we need a broader mandate, and this has been the Alberta government's position on Kyoto. It needs to have a much broader mandate and needs to be technologically driven as we go forward. The venting issue will be dealt with in the same way the flaring issue was dealt with. It will be reduced, and it will be done through the use of technology.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Castle Downs.

Her Royal Highness Queen Elizabeth the Queen Mother

MR. LUKASZUK: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Today I would like to recognize the passing of Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth the Queen Mother. Yesterday the Queen Mother was honoured at Westminster Abbey, and many Albertans along with millions of people from other Commonwealth countries joined the royal family in the loss of one of the bravest, strongest, and most dignified women of our time.

Canadian Military Contributions

MR. LUKASZUK: Mr. Speaker, as we join Britain in the mourning of our loss, let's also remember the loss of 3,600 Canadians at Vimy Ridge 85 years ago. On April 9, 1917, 10,000 Canadians were part of the British army that captured Vimy Ridge, a hill in the north of France, during a horrible snowstorm. The Canadian troops captured more land, guns, and prisoners than the British during their earlier attempts. Although Canada suffered great sacrifice, the battle at Vimy Ridge remains one of the proudest moments in Canada's military history. Canada's military contribution continues today as over 2,000 brave men and women join a coalition in Afghanistan to help a country torn by war to repair and rebuild itself. I would like to thank them and all the men and women that are in Afghanistan on our behalf and wish them a safe return.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Beverly-Clareview.

Grandparents' Rights

MR. YANKOWSKY: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I rise to recognize the work of the Canadian Grandparents' Rights Association, the Orphaned Grandparents Association, and Grandparents Unlimited. These organizations exist for the purpose of promoting, supporting, and assisting grandparents and their families in maintaining or re-establishing family ties and family stability where the family has been disrupted, especially those ties between grandparents and grandchildren.

On display in the Legislature rotunda on March 20, 2002, was their current project dubbed the Hearts and Hands quilt, also known as the Heartache and Tears quilt, consisting of some one hundred 14 by 14 blocks and growing. Squares with hearts represent children who are denied access to their grandparents. Squares with hands represent grandchildren being raised by their grandparents. Attempts to rectify this sad situation have been made by different levels of government including the Alberta government, but the heartache continues, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

The Holocaust

DR. PANNU: Mr. Speaker, during the Second World War a wave of mass murder swept across Europe. By the end of World War II the death toll had risen to approximately 6 million people, mostly Jews, which included 1.5 million children who perished at the hands of the Nazi murderers. When the war ended, those who survived were released from the concentration camps or came out of hiding. To survivors the Holocaust remains real and ever present. Their stories continue to be told. Year-round we try to teach and inform others about the horrors of the Holocaust. We confront the questions of what happened and how and why it did happen. We attempt to fight against ignorance with education and against disbelief with proof. One day a year we make a special effort to remember. The purpose of the Holocaust Remembrance Day is to ensure that the horrendous crimes against humanity committed during the Holocaust are never forgotten and its relevance for each new generation is understood. We stand in remembrance of the deceased and the survivors.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE SPEAKER: The hon. Member for Edmonton-Glengarry.
